A New Year's Greeting.

BY M. S. FANNING.

We come to greet you, sisters!
We come in Jesus' name—
And, by our sacred kinship,
Your heart's attention claim.
Here, standing on the threshold
Of dawning "eighty-four,"
Shall we clasp hands, resolving
To love and labor more?
To love with true devotion,
The dear Redeemer's cause,
To govern word and action
By his all-perfect laws,
By living true and humble,
Reflect a light abroad,
Constraining wandering sinner
To love and honor God.
We feel the kindly pressure
Of many an earnest hand;
Dear "loving Marys" thronging
Press in from every land!
A host prepared to struggle Against the fearful tide
Of fashion, vice, and folly,
And conquering "worldly pride!"
We hail you, loving sisters!
And offer heart and hand.
Go forth, dear, earnest workers,
For Jesus firmly stand;
Your mission's grand and holy,
Extending far and wide;
Including high and lowly—
Each soul for whom he died.
You may not fill the pulpit,
Nor grace the "lettered page,"
Nor wield the sword "polemic,"
In this transforming age.
But, dearer "portals" waiting,
Invite with sweet accord,
The mother, sister, daughter,
To labor for the Lord.
Sweet home—the center circle—
The kingdom of the soul—
The world in smaller volume—
Is waiting your control.
'Tis yours to mould the power
That rules the world abroad;
To breathe the inspiration
That draws the soul to God!
This holy, "inner temple,"
O woman! still is thine;
And thine its priestly office
Conferred by right divine.
Oh! build its sacred altar,
And light the sacred flame,
Till from its glowing center,
Sounds out "Messiah's name."
'Twas woman's love that lingered
By Him who came to save;
'Twas woman's tears that watered
His consecrated grave;
'Twas woman's voice first published
The pealing note of joy,
"The Lord is risen!" Oh! woman,
Be this thine ever dear employ!

What a history in the above expression! And yet how few stop to think or study over the character of that history. The nations of the world have generally counted time from some noted event in their history. The ancient Grecians counted time by Olympiads, beginning with the first noted Olympic game, and thence forward they measured time by the recurrence of these, which was once every four years. Each four years was an Olympiad. But we count time by the regular succession of years, beginning with a period so far back that this year makes the 1884th. Why count thus? Why not count from any other time, or any other event, just as well? Infidels may answer if they can.

When we count back 1884 years, it brings us to one of the most important events recorded in the history of time: that is, the birth of the Savior into this world. How could such a method of computing time ever have started, had not such an event occurred? For when we start back in the history of the past, the nearer we reach that event, the easier would have been the task of infidels to have overthrown the whole story of Jesus—his birth, his life, and his death—had not those events been real facts. It is a very easy matter now, at the end of over one hundred years, to establish in the history of our country the declaration of independence, which was made on the 4th of July, 1776. The fact that such a declaration was made at that time, no one has the hardihood to deny. But go back fifty years from now, and it would have been much easier to have made out a matter of fact testimony regarding the matter then, than now. But go back seventy-five years, and at that time there were living witnesses that knew personally whether such an event occurred or not. And had no such an event occurred, how could the fourth of July have been established and set apart as the memorial of the declaration of independence, had not that event been a known fact? Then go back twenty-five years more, making one hundred years, and that brings you within just a few years of the time the event commemorated by our fourth of July, is said to have taken place. Upon the consideration that the declaration was made, the nearer you get back to the time, the easier it was to find matter-of-fact testimony in the case. For then you find hundreds of living witnesses, many of whom were present at the time, besides the signers of the document themselves, and the testimony would have been irresistible. The whole country then was in a perfect ferment in regard to that matter. It was the one all-absorbing and exciting theme of the times. It was on everybody's tongue, and in everybody's mind, from one end of the land to the other. No one could dispute it. No one thought of doing so, and no one did do so. Hence there is not one voice from all that section where the declaration was made, nor in that entire age, to say that no such an event transpired. The whole thing was a matter of fact, about which there was no possible room for deception. Matters of fact of this sort could not be palmed off upon people, in any age or country, had they not been true.

But on the other hand, suppose the whole matter to have been a fabrication—that there was nothing of the sort ever done; then the nearer back to the time you go, the better the chances to have detected the falsehood. There would, in that case, have been nothing said or done, nothing of the sort even thought of by the people. And the man who would have had the hardihood to have stated such thing in a few years afterward, and called upon a whole nation to observe a certain day in each year as the memorial of a grand national event that had never occurred, would have been pronounced crazy, and put into a lunatic asylum.

Just the same thing is true regarding Christianity, and the birth of Christ. Count back seventeen hundred years ago, and it is an indisputable fact that there were thousands of people that believed on Christ as an actual person, and believed that he was born in Bethlehem at the time he was said to have been born. These people living so near back to the time locating that event, certainly had a remarkably good chance to have detected the falsehood, had it been one. Then besides, there were many then who were attacking the truth of Christianity in every shape and form that they could. Now had it all been a fable, could they not have demonstrated it to be so? And yet, strange to say, none of the opposers of those times pretended to say that such a personage as Jesus was not born at the time and place claimed, nor did they pretend to deny that such person lived and died in the time claimed by the friends of Jesus. And does not every body know that if the enemies of Christ could have shown that such a man was not born into the world, and did not live and die at the times and places alleged by his friends that they would have done so? And is it not equally clear that they could have shown the falsehood of the whole affair, had it been false? Then go back a hundred years more, and then you are in eighty-four years of the time laid for the birth of Christ, and within about fifty years of his death and resurrection from the grave. And it is a historical fact, as well attested as any fact recorded in history, that at that time, eighteen hundred years ago, there were tens of thousands of people, and many of them too, in the most noted cities of the world, who heartily believed all the New Testament says of the Son of God. In Jerusalem, in Antioch, in Corinth, Ephesus, and throughout Asia and Macedonia, and almost over the whole world, there were thousands and tens of thousands of the most enlightened people of the whole world that not only believed the facts that were given in the New Testament regarding the Son of God, but were ready to seal that faith with their own life's blood. It is also true that many, both of the friends and enemies of Christ, were still living, who also lived at the very time Christ was said to have wrought so many miracles, and in the very country where these things were said to have occurred, and yet not one voice comes down to us from those times to say that no such person lived, or that no such things were enacted. His death was located at Jerusalem, the most noted city of antiquity, and placed at a time when vast numbers were assembled at one of the annual Jewish feasts, and thus at the time we are speaking of, there was every possible opportunity to have detected the falsehood if it had been false.

Yet there is not one word of testimony that comes to us from that time to tell us there was no such personage there at that time. Who does not know that if these things related of Jesus had not been true, that the enemies of Christ would have crushed out such an idea at once? Would they not have risen up all over the country and said, we know these things are not true? they would have said we lived at that very time, we were in Jerusalem at the very feast of the passover when Christ was said to have been crucified, and when the sun was said to have been darkened at noon, and the earth said to have quaked, and we know that these things did not occur. In fact there never has been anything reported to this world of a character to have been more easily refuted than the story of Jesus of Nazareth, had it not been true. Then go back fifty years more, and you find the apostles preaching right in the city of Jerusalem, at headquarters of the history of Jesus and his crucifixion, and you see and hear them stand up and briefly give the history of Jesus, of his life, his death, his burial and resurrection, and vast multitudes of grown up men and women, both in Jerusalem, all Judea, Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth believed these things, embraced them, and many of them died in attestation of them. Every sane man that will just think these things over a little, will know that it would have been impossible to have established them, to have induced the people to embrace and die for that which they knew to be false. For if they knew it to be false, then there was no inducement in the world for them to embrace it. To them there was no hope in it for the future. There was no money in it, no honor, no earthly reward of any sort before them when they knew it to be false, which they did know, if it was not true. Why then should so many embrace and die for it, knowing it to be false, to say nothing of the apostles themselves, who knew it was all false, and yet suffered the loss of all things and their own lives to propagate it. The thought is too absurd to indulge for a moment. Such is the character of the testimony that we have that Christ was born in Bethlehem, eighteen hundred and eighty-four years ago, or about that time.

Every time we write 1884, and date all our business transactions, measure all past time back from it to the beginning of these years, we have before us in living characters, strong and indubitable testimony that Jesus, the Son of God, was born at the time indicated. Let us then work with renewed energy during this year for Jesus and his cause, and for the salvation of our race. Let us strive to do more than in any former year of our lives, if possible. It is very easy to resolve and not perform. But let every child of God labor earnestly to do the will of the Master, and only eternity will reveal the good that shall be done. We have preached to larger audiences through the ADVOCATE during 1883 than ever before. And we hope, by the aid of the brethren, to preach to still larger ones this year. And now brethren, accept our earnest wishes and prayers for a prosperous and useful year to you in the Lord's vineyard. E. G. S.

MEN PARTAKE OF THE SPIRIT UNDER WHICH THEY ARE TRAINED.

The above caption forms an insurmountable reason for correct training from the start, and all the time. Those who are educated under Catholicism, and are disposed to be religious at all, accept Catholicism as true, and partake of its spirit. And the more devotional they are inclined to be, the more devoted they are to all the claims and ends of Catholicism, as a system of religion. And the longer they work in it, and under its training, the stronger their convictions of its truth. When men have been trained and reared under Mohamedanism, they have no idea that any religion is true but that. And such are ready to take the sword and lay down their lives in its defence. A Mormon who has been born and raised in Salt Lake City, and has imbibed the principles of Mormonism from his cradle up, scoffs the very idea of anything being true but that which Joe Smith invented, and Brigham Young more fully formulated and enlarged; and Christianity, in its purity, would seem as nonsense or an idle dream to him.

And upon the workings of the same principle, those trained up under Methodism are Methodists, and those trained under Presbyterianism are Presbyterians, and so on to the end of the list. Then again it is equally true that those raised up under, and educated in the plain truth as given to the world through Christ and the apostles, will be Christians in the true sense of the word, and only Christians. They will accept nothing as a rule of life but the plain word of the Lord, and will regard every invention of man as a mere innovation by human wisdom upon God's divine arrangements. When men have been educated and trained up under the get religion system, it is no use to preach obedience to the word of God, the gospel of Christ, to them, for they will not believe nor accept its sufficiency. And when men have obeyed the plain word of the Lord, and have become Christians, if they are then trained up under the habit of going to meeting every first day of the week and hear preaching, and not to go when there is no preaching, they soon accept the idea that a church cannot live without regular preaching. The worship of the Lord's house as such, the reading of the word of God, the singing, the prayers, the exhortation of plain earnest men, the contribution and such like things, have no charms for them, and to such assemblies they will not come. With them there must be preaching, must be a sermon, oration, or something to entertain the ear, or there is nothing worth their attention.

While, on the other hand, those who are raised up and educated where there is but little preaching, and who learn to love the worship of the Lord's house as such, never stop to ask whether there will be preaching or not when Lord's day comes. They know their brethren will meet to break bread, to read, sing, and they delight to go. We have known of men so thoroughly trained up to the simple worship of the Lord's house on the first day of the week, that they would go regularly on foot four miles to, meet with their brethren and worship with them. Such as those do not need the attraction of an entertaining sermon to carry them to the house of the Lord. Their love for the Lord and his cause, and their love for the brethren, and for the genuine spiritual food to be enjoyed there, is enough to draw them; and go they will, unless providentially hindered.

I know that people in cities claim that their surroundings are different from the country, that the very surroundings demands regular preaching, while those in the country do not. But any one that will study these things, will soon see that the difference is far more in the education and training, than in their actual surroundings. People can meet and worship the Lord as well in cities without preaching as they can in the country, if they were trained up to it. The trouble is that in cities the denominations all have their regular preachers, and the most popular ones they can get at that, and our brethren, like the ancient Jews, when they demanded a king, want to be like the nations, want to be like the denominations. They tell us if they do not have preaching regularly, their young members, and some of the old ones, will go where there is preaching; will go to hear the denominations. And perhaps in many instances this would be true; for no doubt there are many in the church that do not love the Lord or his cause, do not love to worship and serve the Lord because he first loved us, but must be pleasantly entertained. This class, perhaps in many instances, would be led off, and perhaps abandon the cause. But the cause of truth and of God would not lose much, if they did. Such as these are without love, and Paul says such as have not love are nothing, are as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

But these things show clearly that people, as a rule, fall into the system of things they are trained up under; accept as true and right the things handed down from their fathers.

Many of the churches in cities have been built without preaching every Lord's day. And if churches can thus be built up, and grow until they become self-sustaining, as it is called; become able to provide themselves with weekly preaching; why could they not continue to live and prosper in the same way; The building up of a congregation in this way is certainly about as hard work as keeping one up after it has been built up. Surely the order of work that will build up, will keep up that work after it has been built up. Hence constant preaching is not essential to the growth of the church, either in city or country. As a rule, those churches in cities that have preaching every Lord's day at their own place of meeting, do very little evangelizing work outside of their own congregation. It takes all they feel like they are able to pay, to sustain their own preacher. There are many churches in cities that pay from one to two thousand dollars, or more, that do not at the same time expend one hundred for evangelizing outside; nay, some of them do not spend ten that way. They have been educated to think they cannot themselves live without constant preaching, and that from the best preachers they can get. And in this way most of the very best preachers are engaged all their time preaching for congregations already established, while, in a great measure, only young men just starting out, do the evangelizing, do the building up.

Suppose that all these city churches was to sustain each one a good preacher all the time, and decide that one half the time they would meet and worship without a preacher, and send him to destitute places to preach one half of his time; what an immense amount of preaching would be done in one year in new places, and to week congregations, struggling for existence. If all the congregations that employ regular preaching would do this there would be more missionary work done in this way than by all the missionary societies in the whole country. And our judgment is that the churches themselves would do even better than they are doing in the present order of things. We know of some congregations that are sending the preachers they employ, half or more than half of their time, to new and destitute places, and thus new congregations are springing up all over the land. Why could not all the churches, both in city and country do this? Eternity alone would reveal the good that would be done by it. Suppose they, for a year, will break up this long cherished custom in which they have so long been trained and to which they have yielded themselves with such readiness, and see what will be the result. In this way, all of our strongest and best preachers would be half their time in the field, doing the work of evangelists, would be giving their talents and their most mature knowledge of the word of God just where it is most needed. Young preachers generally know how to preach the gospel, and bring people into the church; but they do not always understand how to instruct and start them into the practical work of the church. Men of much study and experience are needed for this sort of work. In the pioneer days of the cause of truth in this country, the very best talent, with the most extended knowledge of the word of God, were out in the field evangelizing, and building up churches, and training them into the worship of the Lord all their time. None of them were then confined to preach all their time to a single congregation. And that is one reason why the cause prospered and grew so much more rapidly in proportion to means and members then than now. Tying down all the best preachers to labor constantly with single congregations is suicidal to the growth of the cause. Let the present habit into which the churches have so readily fallen, be changed. We mean that they should not pay any less than they now pay, but only let them send out their preachers for half the time they employ them, to evangelize, to make new converts, and to edify and strengthen weak ones, and God will bless them in this work.

We have not said all we set out to say in this article, and have said some things we did not have in mind when we began. But we think these things of so much importance to the prosperity of the cause, that we have no disposition to change it now. We think the churches have fallen so deeply under the influence of denominationalism, that if they go much further with it, we will soon be but a denomination ourselves. We are gradually falling into the channel of things that some of our forefathers, spent their lives in opposing. Many of the churches, instead of sending out the gospel themselves, have fallen into the hands of societies, conventions, and such like, which take half or more of the money raised to grease the wheels and keep up the machinery. These things are imbibed from surrounding influences, from the tide under which people are trained up. They are not learned from the Bible. Not one word about any such organizations found there. Let all, therefore, break loose from these habits, from the course of things which we have learned and adopted from our surroundings; and let us take hold of the word of God, and practice its requirements, and them alone, so these things will become habitual, and we will pursue them with greater pleasure and success than we pursue the present order of things. But it will require an effort, as it always does, to break up any fixed and cherished custom. But that it can be done, and that it ought to be done, there is no sort of doubt.

PREST. C. L. LOOS

Spent the Christmas holidays with his son, W. J. Loos, in Edgefield. He spoke for the church in Edgefield in the morning, and the Church Street church in the afternoon, of December 23d. We heard his morning discourse. It was my first meeting with him. He was not so commanding and dignified, or seemingly so full of force and energy as his likeness had led me to expect. But this failure (?) was much more than compensated for in a benignity of countenance, simplicity of manner and speech, and a general directness and earnestness in what he said and did. He has the simplicity of manner and speech that pertains to true learning and greatness. He possesses the directness and artlessness of manner that especially mark the educated European, but that are so often drowned out by a swelling pomposity and effort at ornate elegance in the educated American. We presume he had not uttered a dozen words, before every one in the audience felt that he was a man that anyone could freely approach.

His theme was one that naturally grows out of his calling, and indicated that his heart is in his work of moulding the character of the young for true success, through bringing them into full harmony and communion with God. That through this union the only true success that comes to man, may be found. He contrasted the divine idea of the matter and manner of God's teaching with man's.

Man, in making a revelation, would doubtless reveal with fullness and exactness of detail, the work of creating the "worlds and all that in them is," and would give wise philosophies and reasoning, as to the wherefore of things. God gave only a few verses to the whole history of the creation of "the worlds and all that in them is," yet devoted chapter after chapter to the development of the life and character of one man. Evidently the life of Abraham, God's dealings with him, his walk with God, was greatly more important to the world than would have been a minute and scientific detail of the whole history of the creation and the workings of the heavens and the earth. So God saw it, but man would not have so thought.

He insisted that the idea that the young were simply to be nursed and coddled and borne with in the church, and to be borne along and helped on by the older members, and that just so they barely escaped the hand of discipline, they were doing well, is a most hurtful idea. He insisted the young ought to develop positive characters, ought to engage in active work, in self-denying service, for God; that they ought to have firm standards of right; that they ought, with true, heroic devotion, to train themselves to stand for the right. This is the only way to true success.

He took it, he said, that the manly spirit in the young and the old scorned the idea of being merely tolerated, borne with in any position; that they would scorn the idea, after God's mercy had so opened the way, of merely gaining heaven by forbearance of God still; that they had crept into heaven on merely negative grounds. But that, on the other hand, all would delight to feel that through and in appreciation of the grace of God that enabled them, they had, by valiant and earnest service, won the crown of righteousness, and by well doing had deserved that "an entrance shall be ministered unto them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." That they should be accepted, not as idle servants, tolerated through the forbearing love of God, but should be received with the joyous plaudit from the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

He gave examples then of those who gained success with God, and through success with God, permanent and real success with men. He showed the means through which the success was gained. Abraham could break all earthly ties, surrender all human prospects, cut loose from all those to whom man looks for help and advancement, to follow God, he knew not whither. He succeeded. Isaac was a character with fewer faults than others presented in the Bible. He was one given to "meditation," to communion with his own heart, to self-examination; and this meditation and self-examination always flowed out into communion with God. Man's closest, most natural communion with God, is in prayer.

David, the shepherd lad, was chosen to be king. When Samuel went to anoint one of Jesse's sons king, he ordered him to bring them before him. To all human appearance David was so little fitted for it that he did not have him called. Beginning with the first born, Eliab, of commanding mein and portly stature, and skilled in war. Certainly, said they, this is the one. The Lord said, "Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature. * * * Men looketh on the outward stature, God looketh on the heart." The seven passed before him; all were rejected. Samuel had to inquire, "Are these all?" Jesse told him, "The youngest is only a shepherd lad, with the sheep." "Send for him," says Samuel.

When he came the Lord said, "Arise, anoint him, he is my chosen." God seeth not as man seeth.

The trusting, courageous faith of David, led him to fight the battle with the giant, for the Lord's honor. He refused the humanism of Saul's armor, his buckler, his cuirass, his helmet, his sword; he asked no other shield than the name of his God,—he would use no other weapon than the shepherd's bag, and the stones from the brook, approved of God. He fought in God's name, with God's weapons, for God's honor and God's glory. His courage came through faith in, and communion with God. God's strength was his strength. David was preeminently a man of constant, earnest, unfaltering prayer. David succeeded.

Daniel was another example of success. He was a boy—a slave. He was brought into the king's household, away from friends, advisers, counsellors. Rich viands from the king's table, the stimulating wine was offered him, he had the courage, when a boy, to reject the enticements of these royal luxuries, and live upon the bean pottage. He was advanced in place and power, he had the courage to withstand the king's commandment, to enter the lion's den, rather than to dishonor his God. He succeeded not by courting men's favor, not by winking at the crimes, not by flattering the pride, not by catering to the prejudices or fawning upon the great, but by the stern integrity of purpose, and the true courage that is born of faith in, and fidelity to God,—especially does it come of that close communion Daniel ever maintained with God, through bowing the knee to him in prayer, three times in the day. Here was success with men, through success with God—a permanent, lasting success.

He referred to Paul as one who more than all the apostles, has left his impress upon the ages, that must go down to eternity. He was a man of faith in, and fidelity to God. He was brave—courageous—he had the patient, the enduring courage, that standing firmly to the right, can suffer and wait. He prayed constantly—he prayed for this church, for that church, for all the churches, for this individual, and that individual, and seemingly for all the individual Christians he knew. He must have done what he expected others to do, "pray always, pray without ceasing; lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting."

The Son of God himself sought the seclusion of self-communion, and of prayer to God. These were means of his union with God, and of his strength in and through God. The exhortation was to all, especially to the young, to seek the strength, the courage, the manhood that alone can succeed by harmony, union and communion with God. By walking in the right, knowing that only the right can succeed, and can succeed not by the wise devices of humanity, but by a trusting use of God's appointments. We have not attempted to give an idea of the style of the speaker or his verbiage, but as he said of inspiration on David, we have aimed to give the impressions his speech left upon our heart. His speech would not have been considered eloquent or a great sermon, but it was very helpful to the heart, conscious of its own weakness and infirmity, anxious for the help that God alone can give.

Pride stops up the conduit of divine communication. If the heart begins to swell, it is time for God to hold his hand, and turn the flow; for all that is poured on such a soul, runs over into self-applauding; and so becomes as water spilt, in regard to any good it doth the creature, or any glory it brings to God.—Ocean Grove Record,

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

THIS LIFE ONLY.

Every life carries its own burden, however gay it may seem to others; and the universal history of man attests the fact that there is no perfect happiness for man here. This life, abstractly speaking, is not worth the living; only as it has reference to another, and a better life, can it be even tolerable. The shadows are so dark, and the sunshine so fleeting, that almost the whole of life is spent in the deep shadows of the unlooked for and unexpected present, looking and hoping for the bright to-morrow—the deferred blessing which never comes. We reach forward from childhood to manhood, fondly dreaming of the joys that await us at the top of the hill of life. The road seems long, and to us manhood offers the only good, worthy of the race. In manhood we find ourselves constantly engaged in a hand-to-hand fight with the cares, and anxieties, and hopes, and fears of a busy, earnest life. We fondly hope at last, that old age may bring the peace of life, which we have missed in the race for its pleasures. Old age comes on, and we look back with regret to the childhood we might have enjoyed, but wasted in our rush for man's estate. And now, the only pleasure we find is in recounting the few childish pleasures we did snatch from time, in our haste up the hill. While we realize that life, viewed only in the light of time, is a most consummate failure. Happy they who have wisely used the present as preparatory only to the next life, which is eternal.

SHORT OF BIG MEN.

The Methodist church must be short of "big men," judging by the way their papers puff and blow over the fact that they have caught Bob Toombs. Now, who is Bob Toombs? Is he any better, or any greater, in the eyes of God and the angels, than the poor farmer from whom you buy your winter wood? Do angels fly on swifter wings to report the conversion of big politicians, than of the humble laborer? In the eyes of God, there is no respect of persons; but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him.

This catering to the pomp and show of the world is abomination in the sight of God. Bob Toombs, with all his eloquence and his political prestige, is worth no more than the humblest Christian. Perhaps not so much. The gospel has the peculiar faculty of bringing all to one common level. It brings up the poor, and the rich down, and makes them one in Christ. No rich, no poor, no great, only as they become servants of all.

Dear Bro. Poe: Bro. Pennington's letter in reference to his work at San Antonio, and the failure of the churches and brethren to fulfill their promises, together with a talk from Bro. C. M. Wilmeth, on last night, in behalf of the San Antonio mission, induces me to offer a few suggestions in reference to this kind of work. It has been customary for our preachers to go to a field of work, under the promise of a church, or churches, to pay a stipulated salary for a given length of time, which salary is to be raised by, or before, the expiration of the time for which the laborer was employed. In a great majority of cases a failure is the result. The work may have been done faithfully and effectually, but lo! the cry comes up that the promises of remuneration, to a greater or less extent, have in the Lord's instructions for the support of the laborer? Or was it because the Lord's instructions were not heeded? A preacher can safely work under the guidance of the Great Teacher.

1. He can be sent by a church, or churches, and when sent, the church, or churches, thus sending him, are in duty bound to sustain him in the work, as he hath need, out of the Lord's treasury, which is kept supplied by the weekly contribution of the saints as the Lord has prospered them.

2. Under the divine mandate, "Go preach the gospel," with his heart aglow with Christ-like zeal, his walk upright and manly, his mind and heart tempered with a knowledge of God's law, and a faithful trust in the unerring promises of God, he can confidently go out on his mission of love, having on the whole armor of God, and with the sword of the Spirit work manfully for the Great Captain of Israel's hosts, till God shall reward him with an unfading crown as an heir of immortal bliss. The church, or churches, thus moved to action by God's law, and the preacher that thus labors, will never become "entangled with the affairs of this life," and the cry of indebtedness because of unfaithful brethren or churches, will no longer be published to the world, to the detriment of the "plea for a return to the primitive order of things."

I have been amazed at listening to preachers start out with declarations to the effect that our acts, as individuals and churches, must be circumscribed by God's word; that we must "speak where the Bible speaks," and "be silent where it is silent," and then see them conclude with unscriptural practices. The hat must be passed around to a promiscuous assembly to gather the offerings of a generous people to assist in sustaining a preacher put to work by a convention.

Dear brethren, let's be sure that we work scripturally, and then with heart to heart, and shoulder to shoulder, we can confidently move forward under the blood stained banner of the prince of peace. We will then no longer hear the cry of progressiveness, for none will have progressed beyond the orders of the captain. We will no longer hear the cry of leaning backward or leaning over, for all will stand erect with faces Zionward, "having on the breastplate of righteousness."

A STRUGGLE.

Dear reader, did you ever watch the light of morning, as it struggled with departing night, and mark the shadows, disappear before the light of a coming day? If so, you had then before you, an illustration of the earnest effort upon the part of our more unfortunate and wilder brethren at this time to drive away the shadows of superstition and belief in omens from them, in order that they may rejoice in the light of Christian civilization. Their chief is hopeful, "already" he says to his people, "we are being baptized into the blessings of civilization." True, he adds, "it is a baptism of blood to some of our wilder brothers, but in God's own time our destiny will be worked out, and we will take our place among the intellectual and good of the earth." Queen Esther, in the fullness of her earnest soul, went before the king with supplications and strong crying for her own, and the life of her people. Patrick Henry, with burning words from his liberty-loving soul, quivering upon his lips, stood face to face with the Virginia court, and confronted religious tyranny, argued the rights of free-soul liberty.

But I am not going to plead for the life of Esther, or the ancient Jews. The queen overcame the king's heart, and she and her people went free. Nor do I ask for religious liberty in our own God-favored country. Patrick Henry melted the heart of the court, made out his case, won the suit, and we are blessed, may we not hope, forevermore. Behold, on what small hinges great doors turn! But I come in the name of Jesus, who "being made perfect, became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," and said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. * * * Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," and ask you to help us with public or individual contributions, so that we may be able to go on with the good work already begun in Chickasaw nation. We have begun, and dare not, cannot "come over and help us." The Lord Jesus Christ says go; shall we not hear their call and obey our Lord's command? Some of the churches have responded, others say they will. The S. S. of Commerce St. church, Dallas, Texas, sent by Bro. S. Y. Trice $3.00 to help in the work. May the God of love bless that Sunday-school, and may others follow the example.

We have $38.35 of Indian mission fund in the bank in this city. One thing you may be sure, all money sent for Indian mission will go directly for that work. While we are not disposed to cast a shadow upon mission work by any means, all men and things must stand upon their own merit, and if it be of God it will stand, and if not it will fall. But we are justified in stating that there is no agent, mission board or anything else to spring a leak in funds sent for the building of a house in Chickasaw Nation. It goes directly to that work. Now, brethren, don't lay this matter aside and forget it, make up your mind and do what you can for the work, and remember, that we have not a mission or missionary in the Nation. If each one who reads this would send one dollar, we would be able to go to work at once. Old Path Guide and C. Messenger please copy.

FAITH ALONE.

Faith only, James says, will not save a man, but is dead. He says the devil has faith alone. He is totally depraved, therefore cannot be saved. So a man who is totally depraved cannot be saved. A man who is totally depraved is spiritually like a rotten carcas physically. All the antiseptics in the world cannot restore it to be sound flesh. So the old world were totally depraved, therefore God destroyed them. I do not like alones; faith alone, confession alone, repentance alone, nor baptism alone cannot save. I do not like the term baptism for remission of sins. We had best say obedience to the gospel for remission. That includes all. A man who has obeyed the faith of the gospel is pardoned, saved, sanctified, redeemed, and is a new creature.

I will not try to hinder my brethren sending the gospel to heathens; but we have heathens in our own land. I only say, brethren, see that all is done according to God's plan. So may we all do.—[James L. Thornberry, Scyene, Dallas Co., Texas, Nov. 27, 1883.]

PROPOSITION.

How many preachers will resolve by the help of God not to do or sanction anything in the service of God unless we have Bible precept or example for it? And also determine not to preach regularly for any church unless they meet every first day of the week if practicable? And also meet early, and in place of Sunday-school, let brethren invite in neighbors and children. Then let overseers conduct the study of the Bible, preacher and all in the class. Then let overseers conduct the remainder of the service. Then let the preachers preach the word. This will end the one man pastorate, and make the church and not other outside societies, but the church the "light of the world."—[James L. Thornberry, Hill County, Texas, Nov. 27, 1883.]

The Farmer's Most Active Enemy.

The destroyer of the farmer's hard earned savings is on every farm, in every house, and never leaves us day or night summer or winter. It damages at midnight, and destroys at noonday. The marks of its teeth may be seen on the pasture fence, it is wasting the barn sills, and pegging away at your sulky plow. Even iron and steel are not exempt from its ravages. The plow comes in from the field bright with use; next week it needs several hours of work and worry to make it scour. You lend your new bright handsaw to a neighbor, who kindly leaves it lying on the grass a night or two, and its condition when returned mars its usefulness, and lessens your faith in human nature. A careless farmer leaves his new mower in the field, or the fence corner until next summer, by which time this fell destroyer has damaged it one-third of its value. The sections are black with rust, the journals are all gummed, and the wood-work is penetrated and weakened in every part.

Those who have read thus far, will have recognized this enemy as rust, rot, or decay, the most active promoter of which is OXYGEN. This invisible gas forms one-fifth of the entire bulk of the air, and eight-ninths of the weight of all the water on the globe. While of the greatest value in the economy of life, it is also a destructive agent of the most untiring kind. Yet its ravages are easily checked in many instances. A thin covering of some oil will perfectly protect steel and iron from its action. A coat of paint good enough to keep water from soaking into wood, will protect it from decay almost indefinitely. In the far West, where building is somewhat more expensive than in the East, farmers are disposed to leave their farm-tools out of doors the year round. Such men are making a great mistake. If they are not able to afford shelter for their tools, they can buy a gallon of paint, which, if carefully applied to the wood-work will go a long way towards protecting it from decay. It is certain that if the farmers of any State would expend one thousand dollars for paint next year for this purpose, they would save ten thousand now likely to be utterly lost. If any one thinks this overstated, let him look around among his neighbors, and see the hundreds and hundreds of dollars' worth of machinery that is going to ruin from decay, which a little paint would prevent. Here at least in the protection of farm implements a penny saved is as good as a penny earned.—Prof. S. R. Thompson in American Agriculturist.

He that has no bridle on his tongue has no grace in his heart.

Tell Your Mother, Girls.

Wonder how many girls tell their mothers everything. Not those "young ladies" who, going to and from school, smile, bow, and exchange notes and pictures, with young men speaking in a way that would make their cheeks burn with shame if they should hear it. All this, most credulous and romantic young ladies, they will do, although they will gaze at your fresh young faces admiringly, and send or give you verses or bouquets. No matter what other girls may do, don't you do it. School girls' flirtations may end disastrously, as many a foolish, wretched young girl could tell you. Your yearning for some one to love you is a great need of every woman's heart, but there is a time for every thing. Don't let the bloom and freshness of your heart be brushed off in silly flirtations. Render yourself truly intelligent. And above all, tell your mother everything. Be not ashamed to tell her, who should be your best friend and confident in all you think and feel. It is strange that many young girls will tell every person before "mother" that which it is most important that she should know. It is sad that indifferent persons should know more about her fair young daughters than she does herself.—Ex.

Childhood is like the mirror, catching and reflecting images all around it. Remember that an impious or profane thought uttered by a parent's lips may operate upon a young heart like a careless spray of water thrown upon a polished steel, staining it with rust, which no after-scouring can efface.

RE-BAPTISM.

Dear Bro. Poe: I see that Bro. Lipscomb, in advertg to what I said about the Campbells, Scotts, Franklins and Fannings, flew off at a tangent. I never said anything in regard to the practices of any of these honored dead in relation to the subject of what is called "re-baptism." I said, in substance, that if Methodists, Baptists, etc., could do valid baptizing, while any body else could not, then these revered dead had wasted their lives to no purpose. So Bro. Lipscomb's gratuitous, and dissociated remarks about the "sense" of these heroic old soldiers of the cross, or their converts was wide of the mark. I love the memories of these sleeping heroes "of the faith." To the work left by one of them, in his masterly effort, and marked victory over Robt. Owen, a reputed chief against the Christian religion, I owe, and shall ever have a heart-felt gratitude for the first ray of sunshine that ever darted athwart my dark horizon of unbelief, something more than two years ago; and I should be an ungrateful wretch to impugn his motives or under value his great intellect; yet I do believe with my whole heart, that immersion without a previous preparation of the heart, though it may be done to "obey God," is no more the one baptism spoken of by Paul, than any mode of affusion "to obey God" would be, except that the action is externally the same. Our brethren preach lustily that "all the water in the ocean would not save a soul," but that it is the obedience that saves. This is all true, but it is the obedience of what God has commanded through His Son and His apostles, step by step to the watery grave, and then into it, that saves us from past sins.

"There is one baptism." My brother, this oneness does not consist wholly in the action, but it is a oneness more comprehensive than this. It is a oneness of antecedents, of design and of action—a three-fold oneness. It has two inward and two outward offices. These inward offices are faith and repentance in, or with the heart. The outward are confession "with the mouth," and the action representing the "burial" of our Savior. This is all for the remission of sins. It is thus that we gain heirship. Take Paul's language to the Roman brethren: "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Put this language along with what Philip said, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest," after he had been asked, "what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Reconcile Paul's and Philip's language who can, without fixing the confession as of divine appointment, and as immutably as God's apostles can, fix any fact. I don't mean that Philip was one of the twelve. "Go teach" etc. The moment any one says "I believe that God, for Christ's sake, has pardoned my sins," before baptism, that instant, that one betrays a lack of "teaching," that as utterly unfits him or her for the "burial," as a chunk of wood. Yet it is held, that as they do it "to obey God," it is scriptural. Away with such illogical, unscriptural ideas of Ashdod! I verily believe, that the recognition of such "stubble" on the one foundation, has let into the camp of "Israel" foreign element, that after boiling and seething away for years, has come to the surface in missionary conventions and Island Park ordinations, and is threatening the peace and unity of the church of God. I do not mean to say that all who have come from the sects, are in sympathy with these threatening innovations. I know some who are with us on their sectarian baptism, and doing valiant service against these infringements; but through this side-door the despoiler may have entered, and from my heart I believe it; for there is something wrong, and radically wrong, when the truth as God furnishes it, will not restrain our people in their wild rush to new inventions. God told the children of Israel that they should "make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars." But they did not obey God, and He said, "I will not drive them out from before you, but they shall be as thorns in your sides." Now, we are told, that "whatsoever we do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. Paul says to the Corinthian brethren, "What agreement hath the temple with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God, etc." "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Now if we take idol worshipers into the "body" and use any of their modes of worship, these people will become "thorns in our sides," too. The more nearly any counterfeit approximates the genuine, the more dangerous it is. I wonder if those disciples that Paul found at Ephesus, who had "not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," were baptized in the first instance "to obey God?" If they were, it seem that Paul did not, in that case, act as Bro. Lipscomb would now act. I believe Paul was right. And we will add, "that it is not the lack of sense" that keeps a certain "convert" of one of the illustrious names that we have mentioned from seeing the insecurity of sect baptism. No, not; but it is his failure to give free, impartial exercise to what he has that keeps him from seeing his inconsistencies. So incalculable mischief is done when good is intended. I love Bro. L. for his work's sake, and consider him to-day, the ablest man in the church, so far as I have read after our living leaders, but he is wrong on this subject, and I know it, and intend to stand with my feeble efforts for the maintenance of those things that consistency and reconciliation of apostolic writings demand, even if it forces me to deny what every man this side of the apostles have written. God grant that we may all be willing to accept the truth. A. MCGARY.

We do not think a discussion of the question of re-baptism of much profit, from the fact that the question at issue is always assumed, and the brethren look at it wholly from a prejudged standpoint. But we make a few suggestions on the subject of baptism that we hope will be profitable.

When any one assumes that Baptists never teach the Scriptures on the connection of baptism with the remission of sins, he errs. During the last summer, the second chapter of Acts came within the International Sunday-school Lessons. We were careful to note the explanatory notes that were given on this subject in at least a dozen Baptist papers, embracing the leading ones,—Boston Watchman, New York Chronicle, National Baptist, Religious Herald,—and every one of them gave the true exegesis and interpretation of the passage. It is true that when the partisan spirit is aroused, they controvert the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins. But my conviction is, only a few Baptists believe that persons who wilfully or indifferently neglect baptism, are in a saved condition. It is true they attach a different meaning to the remission of sins, from what I believe the Bible does; and will say they are converted and their sins pardoned, when they really mean only that they have been brought to trust the Lord. They take this as an evidence of pardon, and here mistake.

But I have believed for years, that an undue prominence has been given to remission of sins as the design of baptism. Not that baptism has been too earnestly insisted on as a condition of remission of sins; but to say remission of sins is the design of baptism, is to say either that it is the only design or end of baptism, or that it is pre-eminent above all other designs, ends or purposes, effected by baptism. We do not believe either proposition. Many results flow from baptism properly submitted to, (and we speak of no other as baptism.) Remission of sins is only one among a number of blessings to be received. We doubt if a man submits to baptism only for the purpose of having his sins remitted, whether he is properly and acceptably baptized. To be baptized for the remission of sins as the only design—that is, if we do it, moved alone by the desire of securing the remission of sins, the design is wholly a selfish one. I do not believe that men baptized by a design purely selfish are acceptably baptized. It is said we are baptized for the dead. This is a design of baptism as well as the remission of sins. Why is it more important to understand one of these designs than the other? Does Bro. M. understand, what baptism for the dead means? Did he understand, when he was baptized, that baptism was for the dead? If a failure to understand one design renders his baptism invalid, why not the failure to understand this design?

Then in the commission, as announced by the Savior, nothing is said of the remission of sins. It is embraced in the being in Christ. But then all spiritual and true temporal good are likewise embraced in this. Christ commanded them, "Go teach all nations, baptizing them eis (into, or to put them into the names,) of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit." The eis, into, indicates the object, or end, or design, for or into which they were baptized. To put a man into Christ, is oftener presented in the Scriptures as the end or purpose for which man was baptized, than any other. "As many of you as were baptized into Christ, were baptized into his death." Acts viii: 16. "They (the Samaritans) were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." Acts xix. Paul asks those disciples at Ephesus, "Into what were ye baptized? They say, Into John's baptism. They were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." Revised Version. This explains why they were re-baptized; they were baptized into John or John's baptism after John and his baptism had vanished away. The trouble was not that they failed to understand any matter, but they had not been baptized into Christ. Paul asks the Corinthians, "Were ye baptized into the name of Paul? I thank God I baptized none of you save Crispus and Gaius, lest any man should say that I baptized into my own name." Implying they ought to be baptized into Christ or Christ's name. Paul says, (x: 2,) "The children of Israel were baptized into Moses in the cloud and sea." xii: 13: "We are baptized into the one body, that body is Christ." Gal. iii: 27: "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put him on." The word eis, or its English into, denotes object or end. These Scriptures explicitly declare that the great end, or object, or design, or purpose of baptism, is to put men into Christ.

Remission of sins is one of the fruits of being in Christ, but is only one out of a number of fruits to be enjoyed through entrance into Christ. It is referred to as resulting from baptism in three instances only in the Scriptures. In each of these cases the individuals were laboring under a deep sense of guilt for specific sins of which they had been convicted. On the day of Pentecost they were convicted of the murder of the Son of God. Under a sense of guilt for a crime so heinous, they are anxious to free themselves from the guilt and the condemnation resting on them for this crime. To relieve them, Peter tells them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Christ Jesus, and your sins will be forgiven you." In the third chapter, others of the same murderous crowd were convicted of their crime, and were told, "Repent and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out." Paul, with his hands red with the blood of the martyrs, and still with bloody intent pursuing them to foreign lands, is converted, is convicted of persecuting Jesus. He is told, "Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins, calling on the name of the Lord." In other words, the forgiveness of sins is singled out as a prominent end to be gained through baptism, only when the parties are convicted of heinous and flagrant sin, and are keenly anxious to escape the penalty of that sin. The Samaritans, living with ordinary fidelity to the light they possessed, were baptized, but remission of sins is not singled out as the end. So of the Eunuch, so of the house of Cornelius. Living up to the light they possessed, they are made conscious that they were in an unsaved state, were commanded to be baptized into Christ, to get into him, but the remission of sins is not singled out as the specific end. So of each and every other one.

We think a fair deduction from a study of the commission, and the examples of baptism, in the Acts of the Apostles, and of the reference to baptism in the epistles, will satisfy any one that remission of sins is not held forth as the exclusive, the sole end, the chief design of baptism. But that entrance into Christ is the great end, embodying all other objects proposed by God. That remission of sins is only one out of a number of blessings that comes to man as the result of being in Christ. That remission of sins is mentioned as a blessing to be enjoyed through baptism only when the persons were laboring under a sense of crime, of which they felt guilty, and were anxious to know how they could be free from the condemnation. Then the Holy Spirit, to quiet their fear, told them their sins would be remitted. It is mentioned in the commission as recorded by Luke, because repentance and remission of sins were conditions essential to dwelling in Christ.

To single out one result of the entrance into Christ, through baptism, and hold it up as the design, either the sole or the chief design, to the overlooking of other results, and to the obscuring of the great end which embraces all fruits and results, is to do violence to the order of God.

To single out any purpose or design, God proposed to accomplish for men, and make the understanding of this purpose of God necessary to acceptable obedience, when God has not done this, is to presumptuously add to the requirements of God, and to fall under his condemnation.

The purpose God may have in view, the blessing he proposes to bestow through an act of obedience, is one thing, and the motive that leads men to that obedience is another. God intends to bestow remission of sins, clearly as one of the fruits of entrance into Christ, through baptism. But if man comes to baptism only with the design of securing that selfish good, his service lacks the spirit that renders it acceptable to God. He comes to honor God, to depreciate self, to die to self, to pass out of self, to obey and honor God in the obedience, and to enter into Christ, and in Christ, love and honor God.

No man can come to baptism in order to obey God, without possessing the true qualifications of faith in Christ and a desire to obey God. He might desire the remission of sins without these qualifications, but he cannot desire to obey God without them. Hence God has made our obedience to him, the test of our love to him. This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments. This is not depreciating the office or the importance of baptism, but a magnifying it to its true position. It is making submission to baptism necessary to enjoying not only remission of sins, but all blessings that are enjoyed in Christ Jesus.

I think it not certain the impression intended to be made by our brother's reference to the confession, is strictly correct. "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation, and with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." That this is intended specifically to refer to a verbal confession at or before baptism, we doubt. We think it rather a reiteration of the principle laid down by the Savior, "If ye confess me before men, I will confess you before my Father and the holy angels." That language was clearly directed to those already baptized and recognized followers of the Savior. There is necessity at every step we take in the Christian life for faith to lead to righteousness, and of a constant and open confession of our faith in Christ, as a help to our salvation. This was especially true at the time of the writing of this epistle to the Christians at Rome, under the persecution of Nero, when the temptation was to deny faith in Christ to escape the pangs of death.

The confession of the Eunuch is generally accepted as an interpolation, but if not, it was made not because a confession with the mouth was necessary to baptism, but because faith was necessary, and the confession was made to give assurance that he did believe. We always take the confession unless a clear evidence of faith is otherwise given, because the confession is the evidence that the person believes. I do not believe that on the day of Pentecost or in primitive times a formal confession was required in order to baptism. Then every man who says, before or after baptism, that he believes God for Christ's sake has forgiven his sins—confesses his faith in Christ as the Son of God, the Savior of sinners.

We think clearly then, that the leading object of baptism is to put a man into Christ, that his sins may be remitted in and through Christ, that he may enjoy all the blessings of a child of God in Christ. That is the purpose or design of God in bringing men to baptism. But is it needful to understand the purposes, motives, designs of God in ordering us in a certain walk, to enable us to acceptably obey God? Abraham followed God without knowing whither he led. It was regarded as a manifestation of strong faith. Certainly no one will say it is necessary that men should stop and inquire the why or the end of God's commandment now, in order to please God. The design on man's part must be to honor and obey God in doing his will, and to subject himself to the authority of God in all things. When this is done, it is worse than folly to say the obedience is not acceptable. If we must understand all the fruits, results, benefits that God intends to bestow in and through baptism, before it is acceptable, neither Bro. McGary nor myself are yet fit subjects for baptism, nor was Tolbert Fanning or A. Campbell at their death.

THE SUNDAY LAW.

Much is being said lately regarding what is called the Sunday law, especially in cities. There has been for some time an effort to put down, as far as possible, all traffic on the Lord's day, and especially to allow no intoxicating drinks to be sold on that day, by forcing all saloon-keepers to close up throughout the day. In this contest we have nothing to say, as we take no part in things of that sort. But, as is usual in every political question that comes up, preachers are putting in, all over the land, trying to show that the law ought to be carried out. The basis of their claim is, that God has "required man to rest one seventh of his time; that is, one day in seven." Now, we are a little curious to know where any such requirements are found. It is very true that God required the Jews to rest the seventh day; but never, since time began, did he require man to rest one day in seven. The Sabbath, which was the seventh day rest, was done away, at the same time the law of Moses was done away, as a part of the law. The first day of the week has no connection with the Sabbath day, and never did have. There is not one syllable in the whole Bible, to indicate that the Sabbath was changed, as preachers claim, from the seventh to the first day of the week. This first day of the week is the day on which the Holy Spirit requires the Lord's people to meet to break bread, and to attend to the worship of the Lord's house. But this is in no sense of the word, the Sabbath. The preachers ought to learn a little more of the Bible before they put their tongues and pens into every political question.

If the law of the land wants to prohibit men from secular employments on the first day of the week, that is all well enough. But that is purely a political question, and not religious; and therefore a question for politicians and law makers to settle, not preachers. Christians are required by the Lord to meet on that day to worship, and this they must do, if they would be loyal to their king, the Son of God. This obligation upon Christians depends in no sense upon human law, but upon the law of the New Institution, the Church of God.

The human law, in prohibiting men from labor, from engaging in any secular employment on the first day of the week, affords a good opportunity for the people of the world to attend the meetings of the Lord's people, and in this way to learn and embrace the gospel themselves also. But to enact, and carry out this law is purely the business of the world, and not of the church, and the world would get along in this matter just as well, and a little better, without preachers than with them; especially so since God has not made it the duty of his people to make laws to govern the world. The church has never yet added any glory to itself, either by making or enforcing human laws. God can only be honored by his own laws, through his own appointments. And he has promised to bless and care for his people if they will do his will. Let preachers, therefore, spend their time in efforts to teach and enforce the laws of God, the Christian religion, upon the hearts and lives of men, and let the world make and enforce its own laws. And, by all means, if the preachers will meddle whether or not in these worldly matters, let them not torture and pervert the word of God in such efforts as they have done, and are doing continually on this Sabbath question.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM UNCLE MINOR.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Almost Christmas, and by the time many of you read this, it will be "Christmas week." As it is a time in our country when boys and girls usually have fun, if you will come and sit down by me I will talk a little while and possibly tell you how you can have more pleasure than usual. But first, I want to tell you that I have been south all this winter and have enjoyed the sweet sunshine, the warm days and blooming flowers; but then all the pleasure is not to be found in the south in winter time, for the boys and girls in the North have just as much fun and pleasure in sleighing, coasting and skating as they do in the south hunting rabbits, squirrels and possums, or gathering flowers and evergreens from the woods or gardens.

Christmas, what is the meaning of the word? get your dictionaries and find out. Don't like the word. Yet the object of celebrating the day is good. It is intended to celebrate the birthday of Christ. No wonder it should be celebrated as a day of thanksgiving, praise and pleasure. When we are told in the Bible that the angels in the upper world came down and sang praises and rejoiced; saying, "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth and good will to men."

While so many of you have such happy good homes, and so many comforts, let us think about the poverty of Jesus, who was rich in glory with his Father, yet became poor for your sake. He was born in a stable where the ox and campbell were fed. No costly gowns adorned his person as is the case of many new born babes in this day; but plain coarse garments were wrapped about his person. The wise men came to do him homage from afar, led by the star of Bethlehem which overhung the place where he lay.

Think of the boyhood days of our Savior, he ran and jumped and played possibly as other boys did, was obedient to his parents, and even at thirty years old had not accumulated a fortune of worldly goods, for on one occasion when one wanted to follow him and share his home and fortune, he turned and said in piteous tones: "The foxes have holes and the birds have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head." How poor, yet how rich.

But I am forgetting myself, this sounds too much like a sermon, I started to write something for the children. I hope you will all have a merry, happy time this Christmas, and will only engage in those plays and sports which will bring pleasure and happiness, not only to you, but also to others. I love to see young people have fun, laugh as long and loud as they please at the right time and place. But then remember others have rights as well as you. I have been a pretty wild boy myself and I know now where I did wrong. For a Christmas trick I used to load up old Uncle Farrow's (our colored man's) pipe with fine tobacco and put a little powder in the bottom, then stand off and watch him puff away until the powder would ignite, bursting his pipe, and almost putting out his eyes. This was fun for us boys but not much for him. Poor old man would almost cry and say, "What have I done young massa, that you want to put out my eyes and kill me."

As I grew older I learned better, and am very sorry that I ever had what we thought was fun at other people's expense. If you will just think a moment, you can have more pleasure in engaging in those sports that will be innocent and helpful to others, than in cruel mockings. I am not one of those who carry a long face and think it a waste of money to buy little toys or even fire crackers for children; they bring pleasure, real happiness to them. In selecting presents, however, a great deal of care and judgment should be used. I would say to the boys never buy toy pistols, they are too dangerous.

I knew of two little boys who made a slight wound in the hand with one of these pistols and both died with lockjaw. I also saw it reported in a Boston paper that there were sixteen deaths in that city last Christmas from the same cause. It appears that there is some kind of poison used in the manufacture of ever paper caps, that when getting into the blood so poisons it that it is almost sure death. So boys, my advice is to buy something else, and not pistols. Those of you who are older, be sure and put some little present, if it is only some nuts, popcorn, candy, orange or apple in the stockings of your little brothers and sisters, this will make them love you more and remember you long after you are dead and gone. I like to see brothers and sisters make each other little presents, it shows they love one another. And then, too, you must not forget your dear mother and father. O, how they love you! If you have no money to buy them a pair of specks, or a nice new gown or a good book, steal softly into their room before they are up, and throw your arms around their necks and imprint a kiss of love upon their cheek, and promise to be faithful and true; this is worth to them more than gold.

Remember too, the dear children who have no kind father and mother—orphans—no one to make them little presents of love, divide with them and make them happy. God will love you for it. And now dear, good children, I hope you will have a merry, good time, Christmas. And may the blessing of God be with you all.

UNCLE MINOR.

FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

At the request of A. McLean, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, we publish the following:

George Darsie, in the annual address, emphasized the thought that what our people need first and foremost on the missionary question, is light. The dying words of Goethe, "More light, more light," express the need of the hour. Competent judges believe that the only thing necessary to interest the entire brotherhood in this cause is a knowledge of the facts. This statement has been prepared with this thought in mind. Its aim is first to set forth what has been done by the Society; and secondly, to outline the work of the present year.

I. What has been done since its organization in 1875. Eleven missions have been established under its auspices. These missions are located in England, France, Denmark, Turkey, India, Japan, and on the Isthmus of Panama. Since the Convention, Garabad Kevorkin was sent to Tokat, in Asia Minor. He is a physician as well as a preacher. A total membership under its care is about 1,300. It has five chapels in England, worth in all, $80,000. Its receipts from the first amount to $97,000. Last year they were over $25,000. Several of these missions will soon be self-supporting, and will become sources of revenue. The efforts put forth thus far have been signally blest. The results have far exceeded all expectations.

II. The work proposed for the present year. It is briefly as follows: 1. To send three evangelists to England. 2. To strengthen our present missions in France and Denmark. 3. To send a physician to India. 4. To build a home costing about $4,000, for our missionaries in India. 5. To establish one or two new missions. We may have to revise and enlarge our plans as we go on. Our policy from the first has been to follow the leadings of Providence.

To carry out these plans we will need a dozen missionaries. We will need besides $60,000. We can afford to raise this sum, and at the same time give double as much as in any previous year for all home enterprises. The Disciples of Christ ought to pay $0.10 a member, when the Methodists pay $0.20, the Baptists $0.40, the Presbyterians $1.00, the Congregationalists $1.20, and the Moravians $5.19. It should be born in mind that only one-fifth of the sum pledged at the Convention is payable this year. This is a very small part of the amount that will be needed.

There are now one hundred great societies in existence. They spend annually $7,000,000. They have 2,000,000 converts under their care. They have translated the Bible into the language of four-fifths of the race, and yet it is the conviction of some of the wisest and best men living that the Christian world is only playing at missions. The American people pay more for dog tax than for the conversion of the heathen. They pay more for liquor weekly than for missions annually.

From our doctrinal position we ought to lead the world in missionary activity. We believe, as no other people, that faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. We believe that men cannot believe in him of whom they have not heard; that they cannot hear without a preacher. With us it is a cardinal maxim that in conversion the Spirit operates through the truth. To be consistent we ought to surpass all others in zeal and liberality. We are not doing a tithe of what we are able to do. As a people we are not giving as the Lord has prospered us. Very many are doing nothing at all. May the day come speedily when our efforts will be commensurate with our numbers and resources. This cause needs the hearty support of every member of the brotherhood. May we not ask for yours?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bros. L. & S.: Thinking that your readers might be interested in matters pertaining to the cause of Christ in this portion of the vineyard, I take the liberty of writing you.

The population of Atlanta is composed largely of those who have come here from other points, and in consequence of this fact, nearly every degree of life, either of a religious or social nature, is represented. The population now is nearly 50,000, is being constantly augmented by a steady influx of all classes of people; but the majority of those are young men. It is estimated that there are 10,000 young men in the city to-day.

The brethren here have a comfortable House of worship where services are held every Lord's Day; also a prayer-meeting Wednesday night. A flourishing Sunday-school is connected with the Church. Bro. A. C. Bruce, formerly of Nashville, is our efficient Superintendent.

Dr. A. G. Thomas is the pastor in charge. He is a very earnest Christian laborer for the cause of Christ. He brings into the work a mind richly stored with the blessed truths of the Gospel, being a graduate of Bethany College, and after finishing the regular course, had the additional advantage of being a private student of Alexander Campbell for two years.

The congregation worshipping here is not very large, but is steadily increasing.

On the first Lord's Day in this month a new House of Worship was dedicated at Austell 18 miles north west of Atlanta. About fifty of the brethren accompanied Dr. Thomas from here, and a very enjoyable day was spent.

On the 7th inst. a protracted meeting was begun here, which is still continuing. Much good has been done, and the prospects are very favorable that ere the meeting closes, many sinners will be brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord.

May the power of the truth continue to be felt till the whole world shall be converted to Christ. Pray for us, brethren, that the labors here may be attended by glorious results.

Your Brother in Christ,

W. H. FAIRBANKS.

"I WAS GOING TO."

Children are very fond of saying, "I was going to." The boy lets the rats catch his chickens. He was going to fill up the hole with glass, and to set traps for the rats; but he did not do it in time, and the chickens were eaten. He consoles himself for the loss, and excuses his carelessness by saying, "I was going to attend to that." A horse falls through a broken plank in the stable, and breaks his leg, and is killed to put him out of his suffering. The owner was going to fix that weak plank, and so excuses himself. A boy wets his feet and sits for hours without changing his shoes, catches a severe cold, and is obliged to have a doctor for a week. His mother told him to change his wet shoes when he came in, and he was going to do it, but did not. A girl tears her new dress so badly that all her mending cannot make it look well again. There was a little rent before, and she was going to mend it, but she forgot. And so we might go on giving instance after instance, such as happen in every home with almost every man and woman, boy and girl. "Procrastination is" not only "the thief of time," but is the worker of vast mischiefs. If a Mister "I-was-going-to" lives in your house, just give him warning to leave. He is a loungeur and a nuisance. He has wrought unnumbered mischiefs. The girl or boy who begins to live with him will have a very unhappy time of it, and life will not be successful. Put Mister "I-was-going-to" out of your house, and keep him out. Always do things which you are going to do.

On the edge of a slate quarry a thrush had made her nest. It was so close to danger that when the rock was blasted a piece of falling slate came almost into the nest. At the ringing of the bell the bird saw the men run. She left her nest too, and after the explosion she returned. This the thrush continued to do whenever a blast was fired. The men rang the bell to hoax the bird, but she only peeped over the nest, and as the men did not run settled down again."

Thus it is with our "moderate drinkers" and their associations; they may cry "Danger in the cup" all they please but as long as they do not fly from the hating thing themselves, the common drunkard and the young men and women about them, will follow the example in preference to heeding their precepts. ## KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM
ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

THE TENTH.

Bro. Harding: In an article headed, The Churches and the Societies—A Contrast, you admonish us to live in accordance with the divine will; which I accept and try to do. But in the next sentence you say, "I am satisfied that the Christian should give a tenth of his income at least." Now I want the chapter and verse in New Testament that satisfied you of this. You say the Jew did more: he gave the tenth of all that he made. I admit that to be true; but we are not Jews. Neither are we under the Jewish law, but under a new and better one. You say, "Everything seems to indicate that the tenth is the proper amount to give." Now, Bro. Harding, I do not see the tenth indicated in any of the apostles' writings. I think the New Testament thoroughly furnishes Christians to every good work, but have never found in it a command to give the tenth. I want to obey the Lord in everything, and for the benefit of myself and others, please turn to the last will or law of God to man, and show us where he ever intimates that we should give the tenth. With brotherly love, in the one faith, I am Astoria, Texas. JAS. W. THORNTON.

Bro. Thornton very much misunderstood me, if he imagined that I thought the Christian should be satisfied with giving the tenth. If he wants the chapter and verse for giving, let him read Mark x: 21; Luke xii: 33; and Romans xii: 1. These verses teach clearly enough that the Christian is to give all. We are to regard ourselves as stewards of God. All that we have belongs to the Master; and it is our duty to use what he commits to us—all of it—for the benefit of his creatures, and the advancement of his cause. Not only does the New Testament in many places forbid the accumulation of money, but the golden rule, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," forever stands in the way of increasing in riches. Christ has bought us, with all that we have. But now with regard to the Lord's day contribution: Paul commanded the churches of Galatia, and the church at Corinth, saying, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." This is the only intimation that we have as to how churches should raise money for any purpose. The churches need money now for sustaining elders and evangelists, and for ministering to their poor. How shall they get it? I say, let each of us lay by him in store, upon the first day of the week, as God prospers him. But if we lay by as God prospers us, that is, in proportion as we are prospered, we must either give some per cent of our prosperity, or else we must give all that we make, above a living. But Paul says, in talking about this collection, "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." I conclude therefore that we are not expected to give at this Lord's day contribution all that we make, but some per cent of it. How much then shall we give? In talking about this question, I did not profess to specify the amount. The Scriptures do not do so. But I did argue that it is no more than reasonable that we should do as much in supporting Christianity as the Jews did in sustaining Mosaism. Is not Christianity as good as Judaism? Has it not a much wider field in which to work? Shall we do less for Christ, since he has died for us, than they did before they knew of his wonderful love? That a nation can give much more than the tenth, and yet be very prosperous, has been demonstrated in the history of the Jews. Ought we not to do what we can? By thus giving, the Jews were enabled to support one tribe out of the twelve, while it devoted itself wholly to the work of the Lord. By our giving as much as they did, every twelfth man among us could devote his entire time to the ministry of the word. But if a man does give the tenth as a regular contribution from week to week, he will then, perhaps, fall in love with giving. If he does, he will have no trouble, if he will keep his eyes open and remember the golden rule, in disposing of whatever cash may be left after providing for the daily needs of his family. Bro. Thornton was needlessly alarmed if he supposed that I thought the Christian should give only a tenth. I think he should give at least that much in the Lord's day contributions. This collection should be, as we purpose in our hearts; as God prospers us; not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. Bro. Thornton thinks "the New Testament thoroughly furnishes the Christian to every good work." The Bible does not say so: neither is it true. The Holy Scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God for every good work. Without the Old Testament the New cannot be properly understood and appreciated. While our law is found in the New, the Old is just as much the word of God. There are many grand lessons in it that are not so fully set forth and illustrated in the New. Were it studied as it should be there would be more faith and more self-sacrifice in the church.

WILL WE DIVIDE.

Bro. Rowe in a recent editorial in the Review intimated that it might become necessary for "those who stand exclusively upon the Bible" to meet in mass-meeting, and there reproclaim the fundamental principles upon which the reformation started. "Let our men of faith," said he, "be in frequent consultation, and if need be, meet in public conference, and republish to the world our platform of gospel principles." Whereupon the Standard hastened to publish a certain rumor it had heard about a "convention to create division among us." This combination, the rumors said, is headed by Rowe, Kincaid, Holloway and Elmore. That the rumors were just so many lies, I did not doubt at the time of reading the Standard article. Since then the charges have been denied, in part and in whole, by Bro. Rowe; and the Standard has made an ungracious and insulting retraction, in reply to which, Bro. Rowe has written one of the best editorials of his life. In this article I desire to call attention to some lessons to be drawn from the controversy. (1) Bro. Rowe evidently spake unwisely in suggesting that the lovers of the primitive order might find it necessary to meet in mass-meeting to reaffirm the principles of the reformation. He has been for years opposing these conventions—mass-meetings—as unscriptural. Some one accounted for his suggestion on the principle that "what kills, cures." Certainly there is as much divine authority for the General Convention, as there is, for such a mass-meeting. (2) It is clear that if division comes in the ranks of this reformation, it will come through the conventions. Were the anti organ, anti-missionary-society men to do what their opponents have already done, that is, were they to meet in such mass-meetings, an organic division would inevitably result. Such a division could not take place without the conventions. There would be nothing larger than a church to divide; for there would be among Christians no other organization than the local congregations. (3) Observe the tendency to sectarian forms of speech among the scribes. They talk about the division of the reformation, and call it the division of the church of Christ. The reformation is not a church of Christ, nor is it the church of Christ. Whenever it becomes sufficiently "organized" to divide, it will be a schism; and then it ought not only to be divided, but smashed to atoms. The congregation is the largest religious organization the Father has seen fit to give us; and the wisdom of his work is more and more evident every day, as we see the folly of those who try to add to it, or improve upon it.

There is a division, however, that we have not been sufficiently active in keeping up; that is, the division between the church and the world. There are many whom we are told to "Mark," and "avoid," men from whom we are to "withdraw" ourselves; men who trouble the churches of God by forcing upon them untaught questions; who gratify their own tastes by forcing organs and other such things into the worship, thereby driving numbers of the oldest and best members out. From such let us turn away.

It is worthy of remark that the things that are troubling the churches, are the inventions of men; the organ, the human missionary societies, the suppers and festivals for raising money, etc. are the bones of contention. And thus once again in the history of the church is illustrated the lesson that we must respect the silence of the scriptures if we would preserve the unity and harmony of the people of God. Did not the apostles get along without missionary societies? Yes! Did they not get along without the organ? Yes! Are not these things divisive? Yes! they have rent more churches, alienated more brethren, and caused more heart-aches among the children of God than any other things that have troubled the Zion of our King in this century.

Nevertheless, even Bro. Allen, after saying that the conventions are "unwise," "unsafe," "unjust" and "unscriptural," as they now exist, after he sees that they are causes of division and strife, that they are doing more to rend the brotherhood asunder than any other cause, after he has written articles on "our plea," showing that we must return to apostolic teaching and practice; if I understand him, he is for them anyhow. I don't know when anything ever astonished me more. When he wrote, showing that the General and Foreign Conventions as they exist, are unscriptural, unjust, unsafe and unwise, I thought he will surely oppose them, and if he cannot remove them, he will desert them forever. But not so; he is for them. Of one thing I am sure: if we would all strive to teach what the apostles taught, and to do as they did, we would draw nearer together instead of drifting farther apart, as we are now doing. Of another thing I am certain, viz. that we would not displease the Heavenly Father in so doing.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

A man who is more anxious to correct errors in others, than in himself, is not a true man. A man who is more anxious to expose the errors of his neighbors' families, than to correct those of his own, is not actuated by good motives. A man who looks upon the evils of others, and conceals the growth of the same in his own household, the world pronounces a hypocrite. So the preacher or church member that is fond of discussing and exposing the errors of others, but is opposed to the discussion and correction of errors growing up in his own church, makes himself a mere sectarian, and loves the triumph of party more than the prevalence of truth.

D. L.

It is not often we feel thankful for a dirty floor, but we are thankful that the pulpit floor of the Edgefield church was dirty on last Lord's day. Almost all of our preachers from North of us take particular pains to ask the audience to stand in prayer. Some of them complain that their congregations kneel when asked to stand. They persist in it, knowing it is contrary to the customs of the churches, and ought to know it is contrary to all the examples of the Bible. We knew Prest. Loos, believed that kneeling, or the prostrate attitude is alone recognized in the Scriptures as proper, when persons take position for prayer. But we did not think to notice him when the congregation was asked to engage in prayer. But the dusty floor advertised to the congregation that the learned Prest. had kneeled in prayer to God, even on a dirty floor. We are glad of the example—we are glad of the dust that called attention to it. But this is natural; true learning is humble, true dignity bows to the authority of God. D. L.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

The spring term of my school will open January 28th, 1884. W. LIPSCOMB.

Married, at Sulphur Springs, Lincoln County, Tenn., Mr. Thos. H. Harris to Miss Alice E. Massey, by T. C. Little.

Married, December 18, 1883, at the residence of brides mother, near Bellwood, Wilson County, Tenn., by P. W. Harsh, Mr. J. T. Srun to Miss Maggie Ragland.

Bro. J. Harding was in the office last week, just from his Portland Avenue meeting, Louisville, and reports fifty-three additions. His address is South Tunnel, Tenn.

Bro. J. L. Sewell has so far recovered as to be able to return from Lebanon to his home near Viola, Warren County, Tenn., and is still improving, but has not fully recovered yet.

If a man is just rich enough to own a horse and wagon, the law will prevent him from hauling freight on Sunday; but if he is rich enough to own a railroad he may haul all he pleases.—Ex.

Married, December 18th, 1883, at the residence of the bride's father, near Valdosta, Ga., by Elder J. S. Lamar, Dr. Edward Charlton, of Wingo, Ky., to Celia D., youngest daughter of Elder Richard Wisenbaker.

In Bro. Poé's department, he publishes price of "Hand-Book of Christian Evidence" as $2.50 instead of $1.50, as it should be, and $2.00 for it and the "Mooted Question." Lawrence W. Scott, 717 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.

LOOK OUT.

Should any one whose time is not out at the end of 1883, fail to get the first number, they should write to us immediately. And as the ones for whom this is intended may not see it, we hope others who do see it will tell any that they may hear speak of it.

We were delighted at the pleasure of a call from Bro. C. L. Loos, president of the Bible College, Ky. University, Lexington, Ky. He is truly a pleasant and interesting Christian gentleman. He has been spending a few days in the Christmas holidays with his son, W. J. Loos, who preaches for the Edgefield congregation.

Elder J. C. McQuiddy, pastor of the Christian church at Columbia, and bride, nee Miss Emma Bell are at the Nicholson House. They were married yesterday afternoon, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Geo. W. Bell, near Bellbuckle.—Nashville Daily American, December 25, 1883.

Bro. R. Lin Cave performed the ceremony, and reports our Bro. McQuiddy happy and justly proud of his Christmas gift.

We add our most hearty wishes for the prosperity, happiness and usefulness of both husband and wife.

MARRIED.

Sutton—McGlasson: Thursday, December 20, at 4 o'clock, p. m., at the residence of the bride's father, Newton McGlasson, Spencer, Tenn., L. L. Sutton, of Farmer's Exchange, Tenn., was married to Miss Lou McGlasson, A. B. Herring officiating. The happy and promising couple leave quite a number of friends in Spencer, and will take up their abode at the groom's house in Hickman County, where they will be welcomed with delight by all who know them.

APPOINTMENTS.

E. G. Sewell will preach at the following places, and at the times given below, the Lord willing. At Philadelphia meeting house, Warren County, Tenn., Saturday and Lord's day, 12th and 13th of January, which will be second Lord's day of the month. At Antioch, near Viola, Monday, 14th, and possibly Monday night or Tuesday morning. At McMinnville, Tuesday night and Wednesday night. At Holum, in Warren County, Thursday and Friday, January 17 and 18. At New Smyrna, Saturday and Lord's day, January 19 and 20. At Bethlehem, in White County, near Simpson's Mills, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 22nd and 23rd. At Sparta, Wednesday and Thursday night, January 23rd and 24th. Thence home, and preach at Bethel, near Olmstead Station, Ky., Lord's day, January 27th. And if in my power, would be glad to be at Spencer on Monday night, January 21st. This, however, will depend upon my getting conveyance from New Smyrna to Spencer, and from Spencer to Bethlehem.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"Furman's Farming, or a Series of Letters on Intensive Farming." The author gives experiments on fertilizers for cotton, on Georgia lands, where he lived. Send to Home and Farm, Louisville, Ky., for it. Price 10 cents.

"An Eclectic Commentary on the International Sunday-School Lessons for 1884." By J. W. Monser. Published by John Burns, St. Louis, Mo. We regard it an excellent book, especially for Sunday-school teachers. Bro. Monser gives first on each lesson a brief history of the place, or leading events of the lesson. Then he gives the lesson, both in the new and common versions, and then the comments, and lastly, miscellaneous remarks on the principles and general teaching of the lesson. We think upon the whole, that the work of Bro. Monser is well done, and that the book will be found a valuable aid to Sunday-school teachers and workers. The book has over 350 pages, neatly bound in cloth, we believe at one dollar, but not sure. Send to the publisher as above, for a copy. E. G. S.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE.

For 1884 is an Elegant Book of 150 Pages, 3 Colored Plates of Flowers and Vegetables, and more than 1000 illustrations of the choicest Flowers, Plants and Vegetables, and Directions for growing. It is handsome enough for the Center Table or a Holiday Present. Send on your name and Post Office address, with 10 cents, and I will send you a copy, postage paid. This is not a quarter of its cost. It is printed in both English and German. If you afterwards order seeds deduct the 10cts. Vick's seeds are the best in the world! The "Floral Guide" will tell how to get and grow them.

Vick's Flower and Vegetable Garden, 175 Pages, 6 Colored Plates, 500 Engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1.00 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 Pages, a Colored Plate in every number and many fine Engravings. Price $1.25 a year; Five Copies for $5.00. Specimen numbers sent for 10 cents; 3 trial copies for 25 cents. JAMES VICK, Rochester N. Y.

THE DANGER CLIFF.

There was once a gentleman, it is said, who was wealthy. He had a large family of beautiful children; and he loved his wife, and sons, and daughters very dearly, and daily he would make his coachman take them out to ride.

Away they would go through the country and city, and forest and park. But near one of those pleasant drives there was a deep chasm, and its sides were rocky and steep, so that to go too near it would be almost certain death.

But the coachman would often see how very close he could drive to the edge of the abyss without dashing his precious load to destruction. This he continued to do day after day, though he did not mean any harm. He only wanted to show how near he could come to danger and yet escape. But one day he came just a little nearer, when in an instant he became dizzy as he looked down in the dark chasm and was gone.

But the horses, coach and family all escaped, and came safely home.

Then another coachman must be found; and the gentleman sent word all about, and advertised for a good, safe, skilful man. And many came, and he questioned them, each by himself, in order to get the right one.

"How near can you drive to Danger Cliff"—so that chasm was called—"without driving over? asked the gentleman of the first who came.

"Ah, your honor, it's not every coachman that can do the likes o' me. Sure I've driven as near as your finger's breadth minny's the time, and 'twas as the sim as though 'twas a mile or more. I've never hurt a hair o' the hide."

"You may pass out," was the answer, "I do not wish your service."

Then came another, and he was asked the same question about driving near the chasm. And he said he could come within six inches, but feared to go any nearer.

"I do not wish you," was said, and he passed out, and wondered how near the gentleman wanted his coachman to drive to this place of danger.

So they all came and went, till one answered, "Sir, I think I could drive very near, even to the edge if necessary; but I always make it a point to keep as far away as I can."

"And you are the very man I wish, sir. Keep as far away from that and all other dangers as you drive the coach about the country. Remember my family is in your keeping, and for their sakes, as well as your own, do not take one risk unless you must."

Many's the boy who has said, "I'm not afraid to taste cider, or beer, or wine, just this once. I know where to go and where not to go, and what I can stand. And I don't need any pledge. And if I want to smoke a cigar I can smoke one, and there stop. And I can read one bad book, and no more, if I set my heart upon it. And I can spend an hour with Jim Brown and not swear, even if he does. What's the use of a fellow's going to excess every time? Why cant he have a little of these things, even if they are not quite so good, and stop just where one wants to?"

Yes, but nine chances to one the boy will keep coming nearer and nearer to Danger Cliff, and then in an instant his head will whirl, and over he will go, and disappear in darkness forever.

Yes, but who ever plunged over Danger Cliff who kept as far away from it as possible?

Keep far away as you can from every Danger Cliff.—The Pansy.

SAVED IN A BEAR TRAP.

It was nearly midnight, and Ben the trapper sat by his cabin fire, enjoying a pipe before retiring, and his old yellow dog "Rags," curled up in a fox skin by his side. "Well! Rags, old boy, I think it is time we were turnin' in for the night," he had just remarked, when a low tap made the dog prick up his ears. "Who can that be!" cried the trapper, crossing to open the door, and starting back as he confronted a dark Indian face, that looked ashy in the fire light. "Ogla!" he exclaimed, "what is it, anything wrong at the fort?" "Miss Daisy! the captain's little pale-face Daisy! I can't find her!" gasped the man. "What! Daisy Carlton lost, this winter night?" asked Ben. "Yes, I tell her wait by lake. I go smoke, drink with Reservation Indians, I come back, no Miss Daisy! Oh! Ogla 'fraid to go home and meet captain's eye." "No wonder!" growled Ben, "and there's no time to be lost! These Injuns are never to be trusted!" Hastily drawing on a great coat, taking his rifle, and lighting a lantern, he was ready to set forth, accompanied by Rags, who ran ahead, leaping gaily through the drifts. Almost in silence the two men waded through the snow towards Moose Lake, occasionally shouting, in hopes of a response. "I fear she is buried under a drift," said Ben at last: but just then aloud, joyful barking from Rags attracted their attention. "I declare, if that 'ere dog ain't a diggin' at the bar-trap, and I believe there's a bar in it," and he hurried in the direction. Sure enough the box had fallen, and Rags was scratching around it with might and main. "I must have a peep, if I'm shot for it!" said the old man in great excitement, lifting his lantern and peering through the wires; but at the first look he almost fell back in the snow, as he cried, "If there ain't them blessed babes in the woods, safe and sound in old Ben's bar-trap!" A loud whoop of joy from Ogla rent the air, and then both lifted the heavy box, and gently raised the two children from their cold resting place. Daisy awoke bright and well, and so surprised to find herself out in the woods in Ogla's arms; but old Ben shook his head sorrowfully, as he laid the still unconscious Jack by his cabin fire, and tried to rub a little warmth into his stiffened limbs but it was long before the boy opened his eyes, and came slowly back to life. "Another half hour and he would 'a bin frozen deader than a door-nail," said Ben. —Agnes (Carr) Sage, in American Agriculturist.

THE SENSE OF HONOR IN BOYS.

There is great confusion in boys' notions of honor. You should not go to your teacher with tales of your schoolmates, but when questioned by those in authority over you, parents, guardians, or teachers, it is your duty to tell who did mischief or broke a rule, no matter what result to yourself, or how unpopular you become.—Boys have a false honor which hides mean and skulking actions in each other, which ought to be ridiculed out of them. The most cowardly injuries and injustice among boys go unchecked, and the weaker are abused and bullied in a way every decent boy should resent, because this false notion of comradeship leads them to prevaricate, or keep silent to screen the guilty. Teachers and parents ought to put down this ignorant, petty "sense of honor" for something more intelligent and upright. When you know a wrong, and keep silent about it when asked, you become a partner in the wrong, and are responsible for the original meanness. It is a pity that boys and grown up people do not carry the same strictness of principle they show in screening bullies and frauds into points of genuine honor and courage. —Wide Awake.

TWO WAYS.—Fred and Joe are boys of the same age. Both have their way to make in the world. This is the way Joe does. When work is before him he waits as long as he can—he hates so to touch it! Then he does not half do it. He is almost sure to stop before it is done. He does not care if fault is found. He says, "I can't help it," or "I don't care."

Fred's way is not the same. He goes straight to his work, and does it as soon as he can and as well as he can. He never slights work for play, though he loves play as well as Joe does. If he does not know how to do a piece of work well he asks some one who does know, and then he takes care to remember. He says, "I never want to be ashamed of my work."

Which boy, do you think will make a man to be trusted?—Ex.

Let your promises be sincere, and so prudently considered as not to exceed the reach of your ability. He who promises more than he can perform is false to himself, and he who does not perform what he has promised is false to his friend.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

On Christmas-day, having exhausted somewhat the contents of their stockings, the children begged Uncle George to tell them a story.

"A really, truly Christmas story, Uncle George!" cried Mattie; and "Yes! yes! a Christmas story!" chorused the rest.

Uncle George cleared his throat, smiled on the eager children grouped about him, and began:—

"One cold Christmas eve, many years ago, a small boy, in ragged clothes, old shoes that were much too large for him, and slipped around his feet at every step he took, shuffled down the busiest street of the city, and stood before the lighted window of a large store, in which the articles were all showily arranged to attract the attention of the hurrying throng intent only on Christmas purchases. Into the store a good share of the crowd were passing; and the little boy, standing out in the cold and taking in with his hungry eyes all the contents of the window, could see the happy fathers and mothers, with arms full of packages, deciding what their darlings would like. O, how lonely and cold he felt, and he murmured:

"Mother said that the good Father would not forget the orphan, but I guess he has forgot me. O, mother! mother! if you had not gone away!"

"Just then he heard a childish voice say:

"Papa, see that poor little boy," and turning he saw a gentleman and a little girl looking at him.

"What is the matter, my boy?" asked the gentleman in a kind voice; "why don't you go home? Don't you know it is Christmas eve?"

"I have no home," answered the boy.

"Where's your mother?"

"I have no mother nor father, and I stay anywhere since mother went away," said the boy, in a dejected tone.

"After a few more questions, the gentleman learned that the child's parents were dead, and he, having no home, wandered about the city.

"Poor little boy!" cried the gentleman's daughter. "Papa, he looks so hungry." So the gentleman took him into a bakery and gave him a hot supper; then he took him home. When his wife saw the boy she went to a trunk and brought out a suit of clothers that nearly fitted him; then he was told he could stay there all night; and, as he left the room, he heard the lady say, "Poor little fellow! he is just the size of our dear Ralph!" and then she choked back a sob.

"The next morning the gentleman asked him if he would like to stay there and be their boy. The lady cried, and said something about him being sent to take the place of her Ralph. So the boy stayed and went to school; and, children, he is now a grown man, but he never forgets what he owes to the kind gentleman and lady."

"Nor to the little girl," said Aunt Lou, archly.

The children cried, "Who is the little boy, Uncle George?"

Uncle George laughed; and Belle, looking at grandma, who was quietly wiping away the tears, said: "O, I know; it's Uncle George!"

"Yes," said grandma, "it is your Uncle George, and I have never ceased giving thanks for that Christmas."

"And where is the little girl?" asked the children.

Uncle George laughed, and pointed to his wife — Aunt Lou.

"GO AND DO IT."

Don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study whatever it is, take hold at once and finish it up squarely and cleanly; then do the next thing, without letting any moments drop between. It is wonderful to see how many hours those prompt people contrive to make in a day; it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost.

And if you find yourself where you have so many things passing you that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret: take hold of the first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file, and follow after, like a company of well drilled soldiers. A man was once asked how he "accomplished so much in his life." "My father told me," was the reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret.

Cure For Croup.

That most dangerous and dreadful disease, so fatal in many cases, quickly cured by DR. DUNCAN'S COUGH BALSAM.

Dr. KLINE's Great Nerve Restorer is the marvel of the age for all Nerve Diseases. All fits stopped free Send to 931 Arch Street, Philada, Pa.

Our Progress.

As stages are quickly abandoned with the completion of railroads, so the huge, drastic, cathartic pills composed of crude and bulky medicines, are quickly abandoned with the introduction of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are sugar coated, and little larger than mustard seeds, but composed of highly concentrated vegetable extracts. By druggists.

Extract of Report from the Celebrated Physicians, Erasmus Wilson, of London, Eng.: "Several severe cases of incipient Consumption have come under my observation that have been cured by the timely use of Golden's Liquid Beef Tonic. (Remember the name, Golden's—take no other.) Of druggists.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For sick headache, constipation, impure blood, dizziness, sour eruptions from the stomach, bad taste in mouth, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidney, internal fever, bloated feelings about stomach, rush of blood to head, take Dr. Pierce's "pellets." By druggists.

"Every epileptic suffering ought to try Samaritan Nerve at once," says Rev. J. T. Etter, of New Glarus, Wis. "It's a never failing remedy"

Ladies and all suffering from neuralgia, hysteria, and all kindred complaints, will find without a rival Brown's Iron Bitters.

Farmington, Ill.—Dr. M. T. Gamble says: "I prescribe Brown's Iron Bitters in my practice it and gives satisfaction."

Catarrh Cured.

A Clergyman, after suffering a number of years from that dreadful disease Catarrh, and after trying every known remedy without success, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Dr. J. A. LAWRENCE, Brooklyn, N. Y. will receive the recipe free of charge.

PARLOR ORGANS { ONE YEAR'S TEST TRIAL. } ONLY $88.00

It is by far the sweetest toned and most powerful Organ yet made. The case is manufactured from the choicest of seasoned and kiln-dried Black Walnut, built neat, so as not to absorb dirt or dust. It is manufactured on a new and scientific plan, so as to render sound of reeds PIPE-LIKE in tone. The Pipe Tube Cells enable this Organ to imitate a Church Pipe Organ that would cost from $500 to $1,000. The Scotch BAGPIPE, ALPINE HORN, CHIME OF SWISS BELLS, EUROPEAN FLAGEOLET, ORCHESTRA, BRASS BAND, OLE BULL VIOLIN, MUSIC BOX, the HUMAN VOICE, ANGELIC HARP, NIGHT HORN, CATHEDRAL PIPE ORGAN, are all exactly imitated in "Beatty's Best." Only $88; providing order is given and remittance made within 25 days after date of this newspaper. If ordered within 13 days, $90.00, or if order is given and remittance is made within 9 days, only $75.00 cash will buy this magnificent $200.00 Parlor Organ, including a very handsome Bench (or stool), Book and Music. The reason why this limited time price is given is to induce you to order as early as possible, thus introducing this sweet-toned instrument immediately. IF YOU CANNOT BUY NOW, WRITE, GIVING YOUR REASONS WHY, AS I WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU ANYWAY.

BOOKS.--Victory--Vox Populi.

On which side lies the final victory in the desperate "Battle of the Books," the following extracts, characteristic of tens of thousands received, signify:

"I am amazed at the cheapness and excellence of your books. Your enterprise is a public benefaction of the highest kind."—Rev. Dr. Shephard, Santa Rosa, Cal.

"I am delighted with the books. They are marvels of cheapness, beauty and utility. Inclosed find $33.00 in payment." Rev. Mason W. Trevelly, Chester, S. C.

"Your efforts toward extending useful information to all classes, are the most extraordinary yet witnessed by any age or country. They ought to render your name immortal."—Gen. J. W. Phelps, Brattleboro, Vt.

"Having been connected with the State Library for several years, and accustomed to buying books, I cannot help but wonder how you can sell so cheap; or else, wonder how others can sell so dear. Accept my thanks for promptness."—W. E. Sterne, Topeka, Kansas.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

STANDING FOR THE TRUTH.

Bro. Allen insists that he occupies a medium ground between two extremes on the Society question. We have never been anxious to be known as a compromise man, or as occupying medium ground on any question where divine truth is involved, or the integrity of divine institutions is at stake. Our wish is to stand squarely upon the truth of God, as far from all error as possible.

If societies are right, they ought to be advocated with zeal, with earnestness, with pen, and voice, and purse. We always respect the man who, believing them right, does this. If they are not right, as I firmly believe they are not, they ought to be opposed, earnestly, zealously, in theory and in practice. We can see no medium ground on which to stand. Of course, if the Societies are right, they may be conducted in a wrong way, and so may be criticised by friends of the Society. But, if they are wrong, there is no right way of conducting them. There is no right, or just, or wise, or safe, or scriptural way of working in an institution that "is unjust, unwise, unsafe, or unscriptural." There is no way for a man to uphold or promote God's government in an institution that violates the divine government.

The wrong road is a broad road, because all ways of doing a wrong thing are wrong, and all wrong ways of doing a right thing are wrong. The true way is a narrow way, because no wrong end can be sought in this way, and because right things can never be done in a wrong way. Only the right thing in the right way belongs to the narrow road of truth. Whenever a man concludes that he can do a thing in a way that violates the divine government, because the proposed end is good, he concludes that he may do evil that good may come,—a thing the Spirit of God specifically condemns.

Of course there are ways of doing things that involve no principle of right or wrong—that are purely within the limits of expediency—in reference to which God has given no rule, and which do not affect any institution or law of God. Matters which he has left to human judgment. Here, man may act as his best judgment dictates. He may defer his judgment to that of others; he may here compromise his convictions. But, as Bro. Allen has stated the case, the plan of operation here is unjust, unsafe, unscriptural; it violates the divine government. And yet he proposes simply to protest against it as wrong, yet walk in the wrong way with the wrong doers. A protest is only a statement that he believes it wrong; yet he, knowing it wrong, will do the wrong. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Let Bro. Allen read his own clear exposition of this passage in his controversy with Bro. Hobbs, on the organ question, and apply it here.

There are two ways of conducting Societies. One, by church representatives, or delegates, assembling to represent the churches, and so form a representative association; the other, by individuals of different churches choosing to associate together, without reference to their church relationships, form an association among themselves for carrying forward the work of preaching the gospel in destitute places. The Standard, at least its chief editor, prefers this latter plan; Bro. Allen, the former.

In both of them the money basis of membership has been adopted. This basis, whether for individuals or churches, has always seemed to me so repulsive to the first and foundation principles of the Christian religion, that we have never been able to see how persons having the slightest regard for Christian principles could tolerate it. The principle gives influence to men in controlling the matter of evangelizing the world, according to the amount of money they may possess, or be willing to give to the association.

A man that has been a devoted, self-sacrificing Christian; that has given to the Lord as he has been prospered; that has not hoarded money, that enables him to give large sums to purchase life memberships and directorships; no matter what his wisdom, devotion, zeal for the cause of God may be, is excluded from all voice, all participation in directing a cause that is dear to every Christian heart. The principle would have excluded Jesus Christ, all of his twelve apostles, (save possibly Judas,) Paul and his devoted fellow-helpers, from all voice in directing the spread of the gospel, and would have placed it in the hands of the Judases, Ananiases, and Sapphiras, and those who cling to this present world, in preference to sacrificing for the cause of God. The principle is so revolting to the true principle of Christian fidelity and love, is so obnoxious to the life, the Spirit, the teachings of the Savior, and the Holy Spirit, that it is difficult to conceive how one claiming fealty to Christ and his religion can tolerate as allowable the faintest approach to its recognition as a principle of action among Christians.

The amount of money a man pays, gives weight to his voice in things religious? The Savior said the woman who gave two mites gave more than all the rich, who, of their abundance, much cast into the treasury. These Societies say the man who gives the most money, regardless of what he has, shall have the most influence. This principle is not less offensive to the whole Spirit of Christianity when applied to churches, than to individuals. To say, because a church is composed of poor persons, it is to have no voice in matters that are as dear to them as others, cannot be tolerated as of the Spirit of Christ. To say a church shall have a controlling voice in a common interest of churches, because it has more wealth in its membership, is not according to the Spirit and teaching of Christ. Nine times out of ten the poorer churches are less corrupted by the world, are more faithful to God, sacrifice more according to their ability.

It is true that this monied membership is not essential to the existence of either church or individual Societies. The Societies and their friends claim it is essential to their success. Indeed the Standard and Bro. Munnell announce that monied individual membership is necessary to the success of the Societies; which means that the contributors to these associations are not willing to give for the good that is done, not willing to give even that their home churches may have the credit of giving; but it clearly indicates that they are willing to give only as they may obtain, either the honor that is attached to the giving, or the power and honor they receive through it. That is, they are prompted by a selfish, honor-loving, power-seeking spirit. They are not willing to honor the church of God by giving through it; they are not willing to trust the God-appointed rulers of the church with the direction of their contributions. They must have the honor of it before the world. They must control it. This selfish, worldly spirit, becomes a substitute for the self-sacrificing spirit that seeks honor of God alone in giving. This is the representation of the friends of the society. It is not mine.

It is plainly acknowledged that these Societies are necessary, because zeal and devotion are lacking in the churches of Christ. Will the yielding to this spirit of indifference correct it? Will not the yielding to it, and finding substitutes for the true spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice, still further destroy and weaken and drive out the spirit of zeal and devotion? and do not the substitutes themselves spread a lukewarm, lifeless, inactive type of the Christian religion? "Like priest, like people," is an old adage. It is a lukewarm, indifferent, untrusting preacher, that awaits for a human society, or any one else, to send him. The Spirit of Christ is, Go to the dark recesses of earth with the light of the gospel, though a crown of thorns and a death of the cross await you. He who awaits to be secured of a comfortable living before he goes to preach, will make converts that will imbibe his spirit and regard a comfortable living of greater importance than living the life of a Christian. This is not saying the teacher ought not to be aided in his work. It is saying that every convert ought to have that example of self-sacrificing devotion to God, set before him by his teacher, that will lead him to sacrifice all earthly good for the conversion of the world. When such converts are made, the teachers will not be left to suffer. Every human substitute is cheaper and inferior to that divine ordinance for which it is substituted. If this were not true, the substitute would not be made. Then in these substitutions the tone and spirit of the Christian religion are lowered. Violence is done to the word of God, and the church is defiled. One earnest, true, devoted Christian, is worth more in every way than a thousand lifeless, pleasure-seeking, fashion-loving, wealth-worshipping professors of Christianity. That one brings more honor to God than a thousand worldly-minded professors. He will be instrumental in converting more persons to God. His converts, as a rule, will be like him in zeal and devotion. The other classes are hindrances and dead-weights to the church, and their converts will be like them. Like begets its like. It is desirable that only earnest, self-denying Christians should preach. Then the members would be more self-denying. God has made no provision for spreading a lukewarm religion, because he did not desire such to be spread. Such religion should die out, and give place to a better.

SWEAR NOT AT ALL.

Bros. L. & S.: In December last, by request of a number of brethren and sisters, I wrote a short dissertation upon the subject above named, which appeared in the Advocate. In April following, there was published in numbers 16 and 17, current volume, an elaborate review of my article, and presentation of the other side of the question, by Bro. B. W. Lauderdale. My sad domestic affliction, kindly alluded to by Bro. Lipscomb in the Advocate, recently, and well known to its readers, prevented the attention to Bro. Lauderdale's article that his merit deserved. He kindly invites any brother who thinks his conversion worth the trouble, to undertake it, and suggests that I will probably do so. I do not know that I can convert Bro. Lauderdale from the error of his way, but will do the best I can; and if I fail on him and save some other brother or sister from like error, my reward will be abundant.

I cannot but admire the spirit in which Bro. Lauderdale writes, and do not consider him a hopeless case; for we read in Acts, 18th chapter, of Apollos, "an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures," whom humble Aquilla and Priscilla took, "and (to him) expounded the way of God more perfectly."

To answer Bro. Lauderdale will require some repetition of former arguments, for which we ask the readers' kind indulgence. The proposition briefly stated, is this: The Savior, talking to his disciples, said, "Swear not at all." His inspired apostle, James, said, "Above all things, my brethren, swear not." I take the position that the Savior meant what he said, and said what he meant, simply giving his followers for all time a plain, positive rule to guide them; and that James, by direction of the Holy Spirit, simply sought to make impressive the same important lesson. Bro. Lauderdale takes the position that the Savior did not mean what his language plainly teaches, but something else, which requires much fine-spun logic to elucidate. He divides the subject into two divisions, which are indicated by his head-lines as follows: "OATHS—FIRST JUDICIAL, SECOND VOLUNTARY. SHOULD CHRISTIANS TAKE THE FIRST? MAY CHRISTIANS TAKE THE SECOND?" After introducing many Scripture quotations and quite a number of arguments, Bro. Lauderdale answers both questions in the affirmative. In the light of God's word it seems to me perfectly self-evident that both answers are erroneous, one being as much so as the other. The hardest task imposed under the rules of logic, is to make clearer to the understanding a self-evident proposition; hence my duty in this regard is a difficult one to perform. Why do I assert the proposition I insist upon, is self-evident? Swearing is the subject upon which the Savior is talking when he uses the language under discussion. He announces the old rule as it existed under the law of Moses, which was, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths," and then right along in the same connection announces the new rule, the rule that is to govern his followers: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the Great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than this, cometh of evil" (or the evil one.) The Savior nowhere modified these words by way of command. It cannot be denied that this is a command, put forth in strong, plain language.

The only allusion in the New Testament to the subject, by way of command, after the speaking of these words by the Savior, is recorded in James v: 12, in which the sacred writer, as if to impress by emphasis the command of the Savior, says, "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath, but let your yea be yea, and your nay be nay, lest ye fall into condemnation." In both instances the language is pointed and without ambiguity. The Savior says, "Swear not at all." James says, "Swear not." Can anything that I can write by way of illustration or argument, make these words of inspiration plainer to the understanding of men? If then the Savior and his inspired apostle, James, are all that taught upon this subject in the New Testament, and they taught in plain, unambiguous language, such as ordinary minds can readily understand, the proposition is self-evident and needs no argument to sustain it.

One of the distinctive pleas of Bro. Alexander Campbell and his compeers and those who have since lived and taught and are now pleading for the restoration of the church of Christ according to its primitive organization, is that we take the plain, simple word of God as it is written in the Bible, without mystification; giving to words and sentences their natural meaning according to the laws and rules that govern language. Why not adhere to this rule on the subject under consideration, as well as upon faith, repentance, baptism, or any other about which we contend so earnestly?

But Bro. Lauderdale and those who are of his way of thinking, are of opinion that the language of the Savior and apostle James does not mean exactly what it says, but something else—that it must be modified, explained and taken with limitations. We concede to Bro. Lauderdale honesty of motive, so with high regard for him personally, we shall endeavor to notice and show the fallacy of his arguments.

He takes the position in the first place, that I am mistaken in my position, that Christ was speaking of the Judicial oath in the quotation from Matthew. While it is perfectly clear to my mind that the promises heretofore defined, are correct, I am willing to grant, for the sake of argument, that Bro. Lauderdale is right and the Judicial oath is not meant, and still the same conclusion is inevitably reached, because the Savior says "Swear not at all." If we are not to swear at all, but upon all occasions simply to stand upon the verity of our word, "yea," the proposition is true; "nay," the proposition is not true, are not both kinds of Bro. Lauderdale's swearing, judicial and voluntary, included in the Savior's prohibition? When the Holy Spirit, speaking through the apostle James, says, "swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath," could language be more comprehensive? Does not this include Judicial, voluntary, and every conceivable kind of oath? If it does not, God has not given me sufficient intellect to comprehend the difference.

In support of his theory Bro. Lauderdale quotes various passages from the law of Moses, including instances from the Old Testament, where oaths were taken by authority of said law. I deem it unnecessary to answer in detail the argument drawn from these passages; but as pertinent to our investigation present the inquiry, do we live under the Mosaic, or the Christian dispensation? Are we bound by the old or the new covenant? Are we under the law that governed the Jews, or "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus?" If under the former we ought to discard Jesus and his doctrine altogether, as the Jews do, and live up to the whole law, practice its forms and ceremonies, offer sacrifices of flesh, and do every thing required by the law, and not hunt up isolated requirements, such as these relating to oaths and leave off the balance. This is the logical sequence of Bro. Lauderdale's argument. In fact he seems fully to recognize it, for we find in his article immediately following these references to the law of Moses in support of his theory, the following strange language: If the law requires the oath and Jesus as a teacher rejects the oath, then he rises up against the law and stands self-condemned." He seems not to realize the great truth that the blessed Savior fulfilled the law in his death, "blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." Col. ii: 14. "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Rom. x: 14. Do we live under the law of Moses, or "the perfect law of liberty," spoken of by James, i: 25? Shall we obey and be judged by the law of Moses, or would it be more in accordance with our duty as Christians, to follow the admonition of James, ii: 12 "So speak ye and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty?"

Before leaving this part of the subject, let us, by way of illustration, and comparison, examine the paragraph in Matthew immediately following the one about which this controversy has arisen.

Matthew v: 38-39: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." This law, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," was part of the law of Moses. Ex. xxi: 23; Lev. xxiv: 20; Deut. xix: 21. Will Bro. Lauderdale contend that this law of personal revenge is still in force for our government, instead of the law of Christ, which says, "Recompense no man evil for evil?" And again, "dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, vengeance is mine: I will repay saith the Lord?" Rom. xii: 17-19. Bro. Lauderdale's logic leads to no other conclusion than that the law of "eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe," (Lev. xxi: 24-25) is now the law to govern Christians, because he says, "Jesus binds on his disciples every precept of the law, oaths, and all. He looses not one." Followers of Christ will certainly be slow to accept this doctrine of revenge, and yet it is no more unreasonable than the doctrine that Christians ought to swear, viewed by the light of the Scriptures. Bro. Lauderdale accepts one, the doctrine of swearing. To be consistent, he must take the other, the doctrine of revenge. This would sap the very foundation of Christianity, and Christ would have died in vain. Paul, for whom Bro. Lauderdale expresses such high regard, and for whom he fears I "will not now have much respect," says in Gal. ii: 21, "I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness came by the law, then Christ is dead in vain." I leave it to those who may read this article to determine for themselves, which has the highest respect for Paul and his teaching, Bro. Lauderdale or myself, it being a side issue, which illustrates no point in this controversy. Kind reader, draw such conclusions as are warranted by the plain teaching of the word of God, without hunting up extraneous arguments to establish some far fetched theory, and you will then be upon safe ground.

Bro. Lauderdale next argues that the Savior, when on trial for his life, took the judicial oath and quotes Matt. xxvi: 63-64, where the high priest, sitting in judgment, said to him, "I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ; the Son of God. Jesus saith unto him, thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you, hereafter shall ye see the son of man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven." Admit for the sake of argument that "adjure" in the above passage means to swear, and that the high priest meant to administer to the Savior an oath as to whether or not he was the Son of God, and then the passage proves my position instead of Bro. Lauderdale's, if it proves anything about either—that is, it shows that the Savior refused to swear. The high priest says, I adjure (or swear) you by the living God to tell us if you are the Son of God. Jesus answers, "thou hast said," Mark and Luke have it, "thou sayest," John, "thou sayest that I am a king, nevertheless I say unto you, etc.," not "I swear"—as much as to say, "You, the high priest, have repeated your oath, but I will not take it. I simply say." You have my word. That is enough." Suppose our Circuit Judge was to say to a defendant or witness brought before him, "I adjure you, or swear you (if you please) to tell me if you are the son of John Smith." The defendant, or witness, gives no assent to the oath, but replies, "you, Judge, have said, that is, repeated your oath, but I say, hereafter you will ascertain that I am the son of John Smith, that is, 'yea,' I am, or if not, 'nay,' I am not." Would any one say that this man took the oath before the Judge? Certainly not; neither did Jesus take any oath before Caiaphas. But adjure does not mean always to swear a person, as in a judicial proceeding. It means "solemnly to command or urge—to command under penalty of a curse, to charge earnestly, or solemnly."—Webster. A Scriptural example will show the meaning of the word in this sense. See Joshua vi: 26: "And Joshua adjured them at that time, saying, cursed be the man before the Lord, that riseth up, and buildeth this city, Jericho." It requires the assent of two persons in law to perfect an oath, unless the person taking it voluntarily assumes it—that is, the administrator of the oath and the person sworn. It requires the assent of both. Jesus never assented to the adjuration of the high priest, if it indeed was an oath, but taking all the circumstances together it seems clear that it was only a solemn charge, under a curse, as was that of Joshua. This cannot then do away with the positive command of the Savior, "swear not at all."

Bro. Lauderdale next argues that Christians ought to take the judicial oath because the laws of our country require it, and quotes Paul's declarations, "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers." "Be in subjection to the authorities, etc." Bro. Lauderdale here shows that he is not informed as to what our civil law does require. For his information we here state, it simply requires a person when called upon to testify, to tell the truth—to tell it under oath if he have no objection; under affirmation if he believes he should "swear not." Bro. Lauderdale here makes another mistake. He says that to swear and to affirm is the same; that either is an appeal to God. This is incorrect. To affirm, is simply the "yea" and "nay" which Christ says is sufficient. The oath is an appeal to God, and an implied imprecation of his vengeance and renunciation of his favor, if the statement is false. An affirmation is simply a solemn promise to tell the truth, or a statement that the thing stated is true. In our country there are two forms of oath. One is administered with the hand upon the New Testament as follows: "You do solemnly swear upon the holy Evangelists of Almighty God, that you will state the truth, etc., so help you God." The other with uplifted hand, "You do solemnly appeal to God as the witness of truth and avenger of falsehood, as you shall answer for the same at the great day of accounts, when the secrets of all hearts shall be made known, that you will state the truth, etc."—concluding as the other form. The affirmation is simply this: "You do solemnly affirm that you will state the truth about the matter under consideration, and this you do affirm." This is equivalent to the "yea" and "nay" as required by the Savior and as taught by the apostle James, already quoted. The Christian or any other person who wishes in this particular to obey the law of Christ, can thus comply with the laws of his country, being at the same time subject to its penalties, and to the wrath of God, if he willfully tell an untruth, to use a common expression, the same as if he were to "swear on a stack of Bibles as high as a house." It contains no appeal to God—no invocation of his wrath and vengeance, but places the Christian character upon that high plane upon which the Savior intended it to stand when he said "blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." It is in strict harmony with his whole law, as well as that already quoted, which is the only safe guide for the Christian to follow.

Bro. Lauderdale insists that Paul taught swearing by example and cites in proof the following: "Moreover I call God for a witness on my soul, that to spare you I came not to Corinth. 1 Cor. i: 23. "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is blessed forevermore, knoweth that I lie not." 2 Cor. xi: 31. "Of the things I write unto you, behold before God I lie not." Gal. i: 20.

These, like the balance of Bro. Lauderdale's proof texts, fail to establish the correctness of his position. In the first place, the declarations of Paul quoted, do not amount to taking an oath, or swearing, in the sense in which Jesus spoke, when he gave the law on the subject, nor does it fill our accepted definition. Webster defines oath as follows: "A solemn affirmation or declaration made with an appeal to God for the truth of what is affirmed. The appeal to God in an oath implies that the person imprecates his vengeance and renounces his favor, if the declaration is false; or, if the declaration is a promise, the person revokes the vengeance of God if he should fail to fulfill it. A false oath is called perjury." It is certainly a strained construction of language to say that Paul's words quoted amount to an oath under this definition, that he would have been guilty of perjury had they not been true. No judicial tribunal in our country would so hold. They simply amount to strong declarations of truths to be impressed, emphasized by the apostle by calling attention to the facts that God knows they are true. I have seldom heard a preacher deliver a discourse without using expressions of similar import, and yet never dreamed that he was swearing to his sermon or any part of it.

But for the sake of argument take it as Bro. Lauderdale contends—that is, that Paul swore to his words, and still this does not prove that Christians in our day, should swear. Paul was a divinely appointed witness and minister for God the Father unto all men, to teach the things he had seen and heard and the things that should appear to him, (See Acts xxii: 14-15, also Acts xxvi: 16-17-18). Being thus divinely appointed and endued with power from on high, he could do many things that we cannot do. Being a witness from God to man, he may have had the right, and did have it, if he used it in that sense, to voluntarily call on God as a witness of the truth of his teachings.

The final argument of Bro. Lauderdale is based upon the fact, as he insists, that God set the example to man when he "swore by" himself because he could swear by none greater." This cannot be taken as a guide to man in the face of the plain teaching of the Son of God. Our heavenly Father is an example to us in his mercy and goodness and love, but he never intended us to assume his prerogatives. The most subtle beast, the old serpent, deceived Mother Eve by telling her a story that flattered her vanity; that if she and her husband would eat the fruit of the tree that was in the midst of the garden, their eyes would be opened and they would be as Gods. They drank in his words, and partook of the forbidden fruit. All know the direful consequences that followed. God did many things in ancient times, and yet does many things that man cannot and dare not attempt to do. The history of our race, sacred and profane, attests the truth of this proposition. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Isaiah lv: 7-8.

One great hindrance to the progress of Christianity is that man forgets to keep up the distinction between his work and God's work. He undertakes to do something for himself that God has already done for him, and leaves undone the things that God has required him to do. He takes "uninspired comment," to use Bro. Lauderdale's language, and following a line of ingenious reasoning of his own, comes to a conclusion that is more in harmony with his ideas of propriety than the plain commands of God. Thus the divisions in the religious world are brought about and kept up.

As a conclusion to my already too lengthy communication, I submit a simple proposition. If there is some ground to doubt as to who is right about this matter, and room for plausible arguments upon both sides of the question, (which I do not admit,) as the municipal laws of our country do not require us to swear, would it not be safest to give the words of the Savior and of James the benefit of the doubt, and "swear not at all?" Reciprocating Bro. Lauderdale's expressions of love, I remain,

Yours in hope of eternal life,
Gainesboro, Tenn. GEO. H. MORGAN.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: Some of the statements in your reply to my queries about missionary work by the churches in Tennessee, unintentionally put me in an improper light. I have not been, neither am I now the teacher of the churches in the section to which I allude, only to a limited extent. My labors have been mainly in destitute places, and with weak churches which were in need of help. Where I have been the teacher of churches that were well established, I have uniformly urged them to do their own work, to sustain their own teachers and thus enable them (the teachers) to look after the interest of the church, and to proclaim the gospel in the regions around. As I find plenty of work to do, I do not go among the churches only as my labors are solicited; and that, too, where I feel I can accomplish good.—[J. D. Floyd, Flat Creek, Tenn., January 2nd, 1884.

Christians inherit their name from Christ; and it is very meet that as they inherit his name, so they should also imitate his holiness.

A PREACHER PROTESTS AGAINST CHURCH FAIRS.

At the Second Christian Church, corner of Dolphin and Etting streets, the Rev. D. R. Wilkins preached yesterday on the methods of raising money for Christ, and took for his text I. Timothy, iii: 15: "But if I tarry long that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of the truth." Christ said that Moses, because of the people's hard hearts, suffered them to do that which was not intended from the beginning. I believe to day that there are a great many good preachers who feel that the present methods of raising money for Christ by the church are sinful and disgraceful to religion; but custom and circumstances forbid their protest and command them to go forward and do as others, to which they feel bound to render obedience. It is my purpose to notice a few of the disgraceful feats of the church in raising her needed cash. I notice first that of begging. The church, which should be the most independent institution on earth, has become a constitutional, habitual beggar, and more time is taken up in begging the congregation for money in some churches than in actual worship. Children who desire to do something for the churches are taught that the best service they can render the church is to take the jug and go out begging, and the greatest beggar wins the prize. Young and modest ladies are sent out to beg of all classes supposed to have money, and are often grossly insulted by the wicked. We do not allow our members to gamble or play policy. This is right. But some very bad gambling and policy-playing are done for the church and by the church, to raise money, under the name of "cake-walking," "fish ponds," "gold ring in a biscuit," "the most popular lady," "the prettiest girl," etc. Look at our broom drills, wherein our modest young ladies are made to prance up and down the halls like so many knights at the command of some sharp tactician who is too religious to dance. At our festivals and fairs, where the Christian gets down to business for his church, candies are bought for 8 and 12½ cents per pound and sold at 25 and 40 cents, and other things on the same scale. If we catch a member on the streets or markets at this business, we rightly brand him as dishonest, and shun him as an adder. But what shall be done with the church, and this all in the name of the Lord? We cry aloud for laws to preserve the sanctity of the Lord's Day; and when the church wants money we grossly violate those laws with our Sunday excursions, compelling railroad and steamboat employes, to which we should go with our Bibles, to labor hard all the day; with our camp-meeting tables, etc. Shame! shame! shame! on the church; shame on the ministry, and pity the people. But we have a new thing under the sun. The churches, I am told, are swinging wide their sacred doors to the world and are making the house of God a 15-cent museum. The wonderful frog baby is now being exhibited by some of our churches in the churches for money for the churches. If the Christian can be saved after this fashion, where shall the sinner and the ungodly appear? The churches must reform, and the question is, Who is strong enough to lead off?—Baltimore American.

LETTER TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: As I have never seen a letter from this part of Texas, I write you a few lines. I am a little girl, thirteen years old. I have thought for a long time I would write to you, and now I am going to write. My papa and mamma have been taking the Advocate for about seven years, and would not do without it, I like it very much. I am always glad to get an Advocate, and am always glad to see a letter from Uncle Minor, I have eight sisters and two brothers. My oldest brother is going to school at Add-Ran College. There is a school close to here now, but I have not been going any yet. I have been sick. When I do go I study history, geography, writing, arithmetic, dictionary, composition, and grammar. I had better stop this letter, or it will not be published. So wishing you a kind good bye, I will close.

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

To what has already been said in answer to Bro. Poe's question concerning the medium of antediluvian history, I will add Methuselah alone could give the entire history of that period, 1656 years. Methuselah was contemporary with Adam 243 years, and could learn from him the history of the world for over 900 years. Methuselah was also contemporary with Shem 98 years, and could transmit to him the history of the world for 1656 years. Further, Shem lived 502 years after the flood, and was contemporary with Abraham 149 years. (Abraham was born 352 years after the flood.) Hence only two persons, Methuselah and Shem, are necessary to transmit the history of the world for 2,000 years.—[B. W. Lauderdale, Bailey, Tenn., December 25th, 1883.

I think I have found the answer to brother Lauderdale's question in the seventeenth of John. At least we should all study John xvi:20: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one in us—that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

ELIZABETH H. EDDINGS.

Wisner, Bedford county, Tenn.

Dear Bro. Poe: I herewith send answer to Bro. B. W. Lauderdale's question in GOSPEL ADVOCATE of December 12th. "What chapter in the New Testament has four phrases, not verses, with words identical? I find answer in second chapter of Revelations. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. I will also ask a question: In what chapter of the New Testament is found six phrases containing seven words each, which are identically the same.—[E. L. L.

Dear Bro. Poe: I greet the Bible Class with "a happy New Year to each of you." I am glad to see the interest growing. Several have addressed answers to questions to me. I have written such to send them to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE office. Bro. Gowen's answers are correct, but he should have stated how he learned that Jacob was 90 years old when Joseph was born, (I make it 91,) and 76 years old when he fled Padan Aaram, (I make it 77.) I suggest that hereafter the how of an answer be always given, with chapter and verse. This is necessary that others may learn.

1. How old was Terah when Abram was born?
2. How long did the children of Israel sojourn in Egypt?

3. About how many persons went out in the Exodus?

4. What was the rate of increase by generations during the years of sojourn?

Answers to these questions will require thoughtful reading of the Scriptures that bear upon them.—[B. W. Lauderdale.

P. S.—In the future, shall I send questions to you, or to the ADVOCATE office, to be inserted in your department.—[B. W. L. Bailey, Tenn., December 27, 1883.

Dear Bro. Poe: I spent last week preaching at night in Clarksville, four additions. The churches to which I have been preaching the past year, have paid me all they promised, so I am prepared to go to work next year out of debt, and a little ahead. The church at Shelbyville, Tenn., called me back to Tennessee to preach to them next year, but I had promised my time to the church here. My love for the brethren of Shelbyville is as strong as gravitation; but my promise was here.

I found a challenge from a Baptist preacher on my return. I listened to the same man in a debate, and I must say he is a man of power. He overwhelmed the congregation. His eloquence is after the fashion of Sampson's; you remember he overcame his Philistine audience with jaw. When he argues he only butts, and when he butts, he shuts his eyes, he caught the mantle of B. F. Taylor's man who he says would do for ballast if he would only keep still. He is a knowing looking gentleman. I can't meet him.

Received from sister Jennie Wilson, of Chapel Hill, Tenn., three dollars for Indian Mission, many thanks.

I am glad, thankful, rejoiced to announce the fact that my wife's health is restored. She is doing her work. Had one hundred and thirty-six additions during the past year.—[R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas.

Dear Bro. Poe: Christmas has come and gone. I never have, in all my life, witnessed a more quiet and pleasant Christmas. No drinking, or fighting, and a most lovely day. My attention was called to the fact of its near approach, about two weeks ago, by finding a twenty-five dollar overcoat addressed to me; next, a fine hat, then a drop letter in Post Office, containing ten dollars, to my address, signed "from a friend." Next came a fine, large office chair, with a splendid studying gown, followed by a box of good things to my wife, and many pretty things along with it. But now it comes, and what shall I do about it? A solid gold chain to go with the watch presented one year ago. I spend next week in Chickasaw Nation, in the interest of our Indian Mission. I will give all of my time here next year. Many thanks to Bro. George Faris for his last article in GOSPEL ADVOCATE, "come again," George. I will answer my father, N. B. Wallace, letter on my return from the Nation. I know he wants to hear from that tried, and true soldier, M. Askew. May the good Lord give us all health, strength and will to do much good work during 1884.—[R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas, December 26, 1883.

Dear Bro. Poe: Sorry to learn of the serious illness of your daughter. I trust she is much improved ere this. Since last report, have added thirteen, making in all sixty-seven since the first of August. I expect to evangelize next year. We are hoping for good results. Am much pleased with your department of the paper.—[D. A. Leak.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

My request for letters from the preaching brethren of the State of Alabama, was answered by a few very interesting letters. I have answered most of them, and promised a more extensive discussion of the matters contained in them. Several of the brethren call for a State meeting. I would enjoy meeting in convention with the brethren of the State, preachers and all, but what would we do after meeting? Few would go except the preachers. They are doing most of the work. They are making the greatest sacrifice now, and what would we do after meeting? Devise a plan of operation? A plan is not so much needed as money, to carry out the plan. The best way to evangelize is to preach with all the might; preach in earnest, and do it in the spirit. If we will sow the seed as industrious husbandmen, God will give the increase. We need money. Let our strongest men strike in concert (not less than two at a time) our largest cities. Let them lay siege. A short campaign will not consummate the work, but we must do like Paul, remain for some time and all the time, works in season and out, night and day. In these days of steam, gas, and electricity, men want to move everything in the fast way, but it will not work when men are moved to righteousness. Let us mark three cities for work, Montgomery, Birmingham and Tuscaloosa; we might add Mobile, and will in time. Can we raise money enough to begin work in one at a time? We have well-to-do brethren in the State; we have some wealthy ones, all can give something to this work. Will they do it? I do not believe that one in a hundred would refuse if the matter was properly set before them. Who will do the work? A man can be selected to go around and get up money. The deacons could do it, the preachers will have it to do I expect, but it is said that they must turn to serving tables. I received letters from Bros. Daffel, Golagan, Tipton, Reynolds, Albritton, Joinder, and if there be others, their names have escaped my mind. Now these are not all who are interested in this work, but I have not heard from them. If the brethren prefer we will have a meeting. I would love to see the brethren face to face, make their acquaintance and talk much with them. This would be the course I would suggest, were I to consult my likes and dislikes. But if work is to be done, I do not believe that is the best way to do it. It would cost, say an average of five dollars apiece to go to the convention. Say twenty went (and I doubt that many going) that would be one hundred dollars. Would not that amount be better appropriated in preaching than anything else. You say that amount of money would not be given to the work. It does seem that we should be more zealous in preaching than anything else. You say that amount of money would be more than overbalanced by the great zeal stirred up in the meeting. Then by all means let us have the meeting. We want the zeal, we want the money, because we could have the preaching done. Will any man say: "Oh! I want preaching done in my own town or neighborhood?" I know of no better way of doing this work than by first becoming strong in the cities. It is rather to be expected that affluences will radiate from cities into the country, than from the country into the cities. We have neglected our cities. I trust the Alabama preachers will not pass this matter by in silence, but cheer it with word and work. How many will attempt to raise money to sustain work in the three cities I have mentioned as a beginning effort? I will; yes, I will try and raise all the money I can. I will preach without remuneration six months in the year, except a little time with my family. I will pay my own traveling expenses, and as soon as I can recover a little from my burn-out I will do more, if the brethren will come to my rescue. Now who will show zeal in this matter? Speak out. The ADVOCATE is open to us. A postal card only costs one, and a letter two cents. We can inter-communicate without much trouble or expense.

Since writing the above, I have received a cheering letter from Bro. C. S. Hamilton, of Christiana. He is in favor of evangelical work in Alabama. We have preachers and brethren all over the state, and can do much if we will unite our strength. Shall we do it? Bro. Poe has written me to meet him at some time next year at Northport, which I understand is just on the opposite side of the river from Tuscaloosa. Of course I shall answer I will do so, the Lord willing. Now I place myself upon the record. I will meet my brethren in convention, or I will go to work to raise money so we can begin operations as I have suggested. Let us talk the matter over through the ADVOCATE, and by letter, and by all means let us preach the gospel all over Alabama, J. M. BARNES.

P. S.—Dr. A. C. Henry has added another interesting and zealous letter to the list. He is willing to have a meeting, but fears the brethren will not respond if called upon. J. M. B.

REPORT OF ADDITIONS.

The following is a report of additions in Tennessee from all sources, for the current year, as gathered from the ADVOCATE:

By Baptism, 1,752; from the denominations, 78; re-claimed, 100; total, 1,930.

Is not the above figures grand for the gleanings of one paper? Doubtless a goodly number report to other papers, and some not at all. A suggestion: Brethren, in reporting the number of accessions should also give the number withdrawn from. In hope,

Minor Hill, Tenn. ROBT. C. ABERNATHY.

How Far Shall We Go?

"I am very much troubled," said a lady to us to-day. "I have been visiting a family thoroughly radical in religious belief, and I wanted to do them good; but I have been to the theater with them, and been so desirous to please them that I fear I have not shown my true character at all. I wish I knew how far to go."

And this a question thousands of Christians have asked themselves: Is a Christian liked any better if he conform the world?

In a church not a thousand miles from here some young people who had just professed conversion could not give up dancing, and at one of the fashionable assemblies they slipped in at a side door so as to occasion, as they hoped no special remark. The non-professors made no hesitancy in expressing their minds about the matter. They said; These new Christians are no better than we are, and why do they join the church? Many of the other members, sorrowful, said little, but thought how dearly were its young people paying for their experience.

And yet we have never seen a godly man or woman whom the world did not deeply venerate. The world, indeed, calls for the highest honesty, the strictest observance to the Sabbath, the purest every day life from professing Christians, asking quite as much of such as the church asks of them. It seems clear that Christians cannot go far into questionable things and retain influence. Indeed, the question is not how far can they go at all? The safe path is always the better one.—Congregationalist.

Must be Taught Young.

The facts stated in the following extract, painful interesting as they are, only enforce the necessity of beginning the work of Indian education with the young,—that the twig may be bent the way we wish the tree to be inclined.

"The Indian may dwell with the Caucasian for years, and live as the white lives, but on returning to his tribe he will fall into the habits of savage life, and will prefer that life," Indian Agent Gardner said, in an interview with a reporter for the Denver Tribune. And he instanced Chipeta, the wife of a Colorado chief Ouray. She had little communication with the whites, but her husband taught her to live as they do. Her house was well furnished and provided with many conveniences that are luxuries in border life. She always had her cook, and her table was supplied with good food, well cooked, served in an elegant platter, and eaten with knives, forks and spoons. Ouray died in 1880. About a year ago Chipeta married again and returned to the old ways of her childhood among her tribe. She has three trunks full of valuables stored away in the agency storehouse. One of them is filled with silverware presented to her by the ladies in the city of Washington. For these she has no use."

No Room in the Inn.

When our Lord was born, St. Luke tells us, the Virgin Mother wrapped the infant Savior in swaddling-clothes, and laid him in a manger-cradle, "because there was no room for them in the inn." This fact is significant. It was not by accident, but by divine foreordination, that such was the case. Thus our heavenly Father would especially teach us that the fundamental law of the kingdom of Christ is to deny self, and, in the exercise of pure love, to serve others.

In the inn of Bethlehem we have a striking type of the heart of man, when wholly occupied with self, or filled with worldly cares and pleasures. In such a heart there is never any room for Jesus. The truth may come to it through the preaching or reading of the word of God, or the startling events of his providence, but only as Joseph and Mary came to the caravansary in the City of David, to be turned away to find a lodging-place elsewhere. Only in the humble heart that is emptied of self, and in which the cares and pleasures of this present life have but a secondary place, is Christ born and the true Christmas joy experienced.

Queen Victoria expects to be obeyed by her children even after they have reached mature years. At one time the Prince of Wales was visiting St. Petersburg during a series of fees, and telegraphed to his mother to ask if he could attend a court ball on Sunday. The answer came flashing over the wires: "Decidedly, no!" and to his credit he stayed away.

CONTRIBUTIONS—CHURCH AND INDIVIDUAL.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: Please answer the following questions through the ADVOCATE:

1. Have I a right, as an individual Christian, to give my money to a brother to preach the gospel, without giving it to my congregation, or through it, or in its name?

2. Is every Christian under obligation to pay his money (according as he has been prospered) to the support of the gospel, regardless of what others may do?

By answering the above questions, you will greatly oblige Your brother in Christ,

C. McPHERSON.

Waxahachie, Texas, December 28, 1883.

Christians are required to act in a two-fold relationship. They are to act as components of the church of Christ, and they are to act as individuals. They are to contribute regularly of their means, as the Lord prospers them, to the treasury of the church, for the carrying out the work of the church,—the work the church, in church capacity, is to do. Paul said: "Know ye not, that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? Even so, hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." The living of the things of the temple, was living from the offerings to the Lord, brought into the temple. Paul clearly teaches that the preaching of the gospel would bring offerings into the church of God; and of these offerings, those who preach the gospel shall live. I have not a doubt that this is the regular divine provision for the support of the preacher. This would obviate one great evil of the present order; that is, the rich, use their gifts to influence and control the teachers. Many teachers have their judgment warped and the discipline is perverted by the dependence of the teacher upon the rich for his support. If it is placed into the treasury as an offering to the Lord, this influence is, at least, not so direct. It would also remove the temptation from the preacher to court the favor of the world, to secure his support from it.

Clearly the Christian is required to contribute regularly and freely of his means, as he is prospered, to the church; and of this, he who preaches the gospel is to live, and out of this all the need of the church is to be supplied. But outside of this, we must do good to all men as we have opportunity, especially to them who are of the household of faith." Gal. vi: 10. This last duty refers to obligations that rest on us as individuals. This requirement frequently cannot be performed through the church, as a whole. An opportunity is a favorable or fit occasion. To meet a person needing help, is an opportunity to help him. A person needing help, and an ability to help, constitute an opportunity to help. Whenever an opportunity of doing good to a man occurs, the Christian is to use the opportunity and do the good. To wait to do it through the church, is, frequently, to let the opportunity slip, and to fail to do the good. This doing good is not always giving money. We can frequently do more good by personal service, than by money. We are just as much under obligation to bestow the personal service, and so do good, as we have opportunity, as we are to bestow money, when with it we can do good. But that personal service cannot be done through the church, in the sense we are speaking of. Then it is legitimate and necessary to do good as individuals without its being done through the church. But if it is legitimate to use our labor, or our property to do good as individuals, it must be just as obligatory to use money in the same way, when we have the money and when the money will serve the end as well as, or better than the personal service. It certainly is right to do good, as individuals, when opportunity offers, in addition to what we do through the church.

The requirements of the Mosaic law correspond to this. A tithe (tenth) of all must first go into the sanctuary or treasury of the temple, and still "the poor shall never cease out of the land, therefore I command thee thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy in thy land." Deut. xv: 11. This double relationship with its double duty exists under the Christian dispensation. Is it the duty to give to preaching in this way? Taking care of the poor and preaching are both made the duty of the church. If it is right to do the one as an individual when opportunity demands it, it is equally right to do the other, when the opportunity offers.

It is our duty to give regularly, cheerfully, with a free heart, glad of the opportunity, a certain portion of our gross income to the church. With this the regular work of the church should be done. Take the teachings of the New Testament in its connection with, and as the outgrowth of the Old, and God cannot be well pleased, with less than the tenth. It ought to be the first fruits—best of our means, the brightest dollars that are consecrated to the Lord. To rightly divide the word of truth, we must observe the connection of the two Testaments, as well as their distinction. After giving to the church, in the providences of life, many occasions will present themselves, in which we can do good in helping the poor, in teaching the word of life, in helping a teacher needing help, to preach the gospel. This should certainly be done as "we have opportunity," without waiting to do it through the church. Paul tells of the church helping him; of its sending persons to minister to his necessities. He tells of individuals who met with him, or fell in with him, and ministered to his necessities.

But must we do it in the name of the congregation? Our life ought to be earnestly, heartily, identified with the church—the congregation. It is the body of Christ,—and he a member of that body. Whatever the member does the congregation does. Whatever the hand, the ear, the foot does, the body does through that member. Then the church is the body of Christ. All that we do, we must do in the name of Christ. This does not mean that we shall keep a continual parade of our profession of religion, and every time we do a thing norate that we do this in the name of Christ. But our lives are to be so completely identified with the church of God, and with the religion of Christ, that we will be recognized as wholly consecrated to his service, and doing all that we do in the name of Christ.

Members of a church are members of the body of Christ, and all must perform their respective duties, if the body prospers. If one member refuses to perform his duties, the body suffers—all the members suffer with the body. If the eye, the head, the foot were to think, the liver, the lungs, the bowels, useless, sluggish, hindrances to the body, and determine they would refuse to act in this body, but would join with similar, active members of other bodies, to form a new organism without these cumbrous members, all would see that the bodies would perish, and with the bodies these members themselves would perish. Their over anxiety for freedom from encumbering members, and for association with active members, would destroy the body and themselves, and thwart the very end they are seeking to attain. Just so if active members in the church tire of the burdens of these unwilling and unable to give, transfer their work from the church and combine with similar, active members of other churches, so work through a new organism, the body of Christ perishes and these members perish with the body through which they receive life.

2. It is undoubtedly the duty of every member to do what he is able, regardless of the failure of others. Indeed the failure of others ought to quicken his zeal, and excite his energy that he may provoke them to activity; and that he may preserve some life in the body. There are other things I would like to say on the duty of members when the church refuses to use the means contributed according to the will of God, but this must suffice for the present. D. L.

WANTED.

Some competent person acquainted with the Hebrew and Greek languages, to give in a small pamphlet (in dictionary form) the Hebrew and Greek words for which the English words "Spirit" is used in the sacred Scriptures—dividing the English word "Spirit" into classes according to its use in similar connections, something after this style: (1) The Hebrew word—its full meaning. (2) The Greek word. Then all the passages in the Scriptures, where the term Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit is used or ought to be used.

Then the Hebrew and Greek words for the term "Spirit" or soul of man (if the same) etc., with all passages where it is used.

Then the Hebrew and Greek words for the term "Spirit of beast," etc., etc.

Then the Hebrew and Greek words for the term "Spirit" as used in Job 4:15, and Luke 54:37-39, and similar passages.

The Hebrew and Greek words for the term "Spirit" of Infirmary—Life—World, etc., etc.

I deem this sufficient to explain my idea of what I think is badly needed by the common English reader, inasmuch as the term "Spirit" carries (to some extent at least) the idea of the Holy Spirit—or such as passed before Eliphaz, the Temanite—Job 4:15. See also Luke 24:37-39. In fact the "Spirit" of confusion prevails in the "Spirits" of men and women, whenever the word "Spirit" is used, as they see (in their minds) a "Spirit" or Ghost. That darkens the "Spirit" of their understanding, so that the "Spirit" of Strife, Disunion, and Disloyalty, abound in the Spirits of the professed followers of the Holy Spirit.

Who will undertake the explanation needed, and I believe, wanted? J. K. B.

Strength is promised according to your day, but not according to your morrow.

SOME CURIOUS SPECIMENS OF BAPTIST DOCTRINE.

Dear Brother M:—When I saw you last, you requested me to give you certain extracts from Orchard's History of the Baptist. The first thing to which I will call your attention is the people who are described and claimed to be Baptists in this History. In the introductory essay, written by J. R. Graves, in 1853, we have the following: "The ground of unity and denomination claim to the people whose Christian characters are detailed, is not the harmony of their creed or views. This was not visible or essential in the first age: but THE BOND OF UNION, among our denomination in all ages, has been FAITH IN CHRIST; and that PUBLICLY EXPRESSED, by a voluntary submission to his authority and doctrine in baptism. Where this conduct is evident, we claim the disciple as belonging to our communion, and of Primitive character, at the same time leaving his mind in the full enjoyment of his nations and purchased freedom. And in establishing his association, we find no difficulty or dishonor, since almost every denomination has, from their honorable and holy characters, claimed affinity to them in faith and practice, though such claims are not supported by family likeness."—Page 14, Introduction to Orchard's History.

These are the passages you wish, or some of them. "We now turn to the writing, next in importance to the sacred oracles, in order to ascertain the views encouraged by the early fathers on baptism."

"Barnabas, Paul's companion, (Acts 13:2) and like him, sound in faith. This worthy minister says on baptism: "Consider how he hath joined both the cross and the water together; for this he saith, blessed are they who putting their faith in the cross, descent into the water."

"Again we go down into the water, full of sin and pollutions, but come up again bringing forth fruit, having in our hearts the fear and hope which is in Jesus."

"Hermes, whom Paul salutes in the church at Rome. Rom. 16:14. Writing about A. D. 95, speaking of baptism and backsliders, says, "They are such as have heard the word, and were willing to be baptized in the name of the Lord; but when they call to mind what holiness it required in those who professed the truth, withdrew themselves." "Again, before a man receives the name of the Son of God, he is ordained to death, but when he receives that seal, he is freed from death and delivered unto life. Now that seal is water, into which men descend under an obligation to death, but ascend out of it, being appointed to life. Baptist Hist, Orchard, page 12-13. On page 14, we have the following: "Dr. Mosheim says: Who ever acknowledged Christ as the Savior of mankind, and made a solemn confession of his confidence in him, was immediately baptized and received into the church." Again, this food we call the encharist, of which none are allowed to be partakers, but such only as are true believers, and have been baptized in the lover of regeneration for the remission of sins, and live according Christ's precepts." (Justin Martyr) Baptist History Orchard, page 24, this was in A. D. 150. Origin says: They are rightly baptized who are washed unto salvation, He that is baptized unto salvation, receives water and the Holy Spirit. Such baptism as is accompanied with crucifying the flesh, and rising again to newness of life, is the approved baptism.—Baptist History Orchard, page 35.

A. D., 280, Arnobius, professor of Rhetoric at Sicca, says, "Thou art not first baptized, and then beginnest to affect and embrace the faith; but when thou art to be baptized, thou signifyest unto the minister thy desire, and makest thy confession with thy mouth." The most respectable historians affirm that no evidence exists as to any alteration in the subject or mode of baptism during the third century; ibid, page 35. A. D., 360, Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, says, "Our Lord did not slightly command baptism; for first of all, he said, teach, and then baptize, that true faith might come by teaching, and baptism be perfected by faith."—Baptist History, O., page 39. Basil, bishop of Cesarea, A. D., 378, says, "Faith and baptism are two means of salvation nearly allied, and inseparable; for faith is perfected by baptism, and baptism is founded on faith: * * * and the confession which leads us to salvation goes before, and baptism, which seals our covenant, follows after."—Baptist History, Orchard, page 40. Such are some of the Baptist guide-posts back to the days of the apostles. Baptism with faith is a means of salvation, is not quite orthodox with Dr. Graves at this time. We might very easily increase these quotations from Orchard, History. The italics in the above are from the editor as well as the text. Would the Baptist recognize Basil, the last quoted a Baptist preacher. A. ALSUP, JR.

CHURCH NEWS.

The church at Green Spring, Lincoln county, Tenn., have decided to dispense with the subscription plan for raising money, and to raise all funds for the church by the weekly contribution, giving as the Lord prospers them. One third of all contributions to be used for missionary purposes.—[T. C. Little.

I have been preaching for three churches this year, the rest of the time since crops were laid by, I have been traveling and preaching in Monroe county, Ky., and Clay county, Tenn., near the line of Cumberland county, Ky. I have had about two hundred additions to the church, and I want the brethren to know that I am yet at work. On the third Lord's day in September the brethren of Cumberland county, Ky., met in Burksville, and called me to work as evangelist in this county, and I have now commenced the work. Cumberland county is a hard field to preach in. We have about seven churches in this county; the sects have the sway here, but if the brethren will help, I think our work will prosper.—[Robert Kirby, Leslie, Cumberland, County, Ky., December 21st, 1883.

I send you what I denominate my annual report from McMinnville, Warren county church. The McMinnville church met every Lord's day. We have about one hundred scholars in Sunday-school. J. C. Martin is our Superintendent, and a better one would be hard to find in the State. This Church has over two hundred members, sixty being added this year—six preachers, who preach on Lord's days, and earn their bread by the sweat of the face during the week. Four other churches in the county meet on Lord's days, and all of them have done well this year. The growth in knowledge and zeal has been good. We have established one new church, and added to the army of the Lord one hundred and eighty souls—under the labors of T. B. Larimore about fifty-two; Elijah Preston, about fifty; Rice Sewell, about thirty-five. Balance came in under the labors of Gilentine, Kidwell, P. G. Potter and myself. We congratulate ourselves on the good work done, but more could have been done, and should have been done. Dear brethren, let us, by the help of the Lord, be better, and do more in the coming year. With the means, and the intelligent men and women in our ranks, with the whole truth and nothing else, we can do more, and the Lord helping us, I believe we will. Bro. Todd, of Eminence, Ky., is with us, and doing much good work. We hope he will locate with us.—[W. H. Walling, McMinnville, Tenn., Dec. 31st, 1883.

—PREACHING IN ALABAMA.

In response to a call I made upon the preachers and other prominent brethren in Alabama, brethren Daniel, Gahagan, Tipton, Reynolds, Henry, Allbrittain, and some others wrote to me. I promised to write to those who noticed my call, which I did. I also sent a communication to the ADVOCATE with my answer in full. I have never seen it in print. As I promised the brethren to write on the subject, I fear they will think me remiss. The article may have been published, but I never saw it. A few months ago the paper failed to reach me. I am unwilling for so important a matter to be dropped without further discussion. All the brethren, or nearly all, who wrote, called for a convention. In answer to this, I agreed to the convention. I confessed, however, that I did not see anything the convention could do, which could not be done as well at less expense. We should not remain idle. There are enough brethren in this State to keep two or three evangelists at work in our large cities all the time. Many are willing and anxious.

Others could be easily aroused to the importance of this work by the proper effort. Still more would fall into line if the subject was agitated. But who is to do this work? Would a convention do it? If a convention were called, would it not be moved, seconded, and carried, that a man or men and women be sent out to arouse the churches to give to this work? I now call upon all the brethren and sisters to do all they can for this work. Our brethren are scattered all over Alabama. Some will read this, some will not. Will those who see it send it to others, and visit them, and say to them, we have the opportunity of doing a grand work in the Lord's harvest field, let us do it? If we do not, others will come in and do it, and reap the reward, for the Lord has certainly much in store for those who will work zealously in poor, forsaken Alabama. The authority for conventions is now under discussion among our brethren. There is certainly one thing true, that power makes men dictatorial, as has been shown among the convention brethren. Still as we are not going to have any great perpetual convention, I would be willing to meet the brethren. The thing we want is concentration of strength. If our forces could be rallied by a convention, or if an interest could be awakened by meeting together, by all means let us have it. It is now the first of 1884. A little given from all, would make us able to lay siege to many of our cities. Shall we give? Shall we have the work done? I am going to work, the Lord giving me strength. Let us take Birmingham, or Tuscaloosa for the field in which to begin. Bro. Poe has promised to be at Northport, which I is the across-the-river-part of Tuscaloosa. I would like for the brethren to express themselves in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE on this Alabama work. If it is worth doing let it be done by all means. I have said that I would meet my brethren to talk over the work. At the same time I am well aware that all who would go to the meeting understand the importance of preaching in Alabama. It is those who would stay at home that we wish to arouse. A good deacon is a very useful functionary in the church. If we had them in every congregation, and they would work properly, then there would be little trouble in raising money. They should educate the members in reference to giving. Brethren, let us hear from you. Say you will raise a certain amount of money, and go right to work and get it up. Women can work at this as well as men. I will wait until I hear from some one else. J. M. BARNES.

The disciples at Mayfield, Ky., have recently been engaged in a protracted effort to save sinners and reclaim the erring. They secured the services of Bro. Jas. A. Harding, Winchester, Ky., for the occasion. This was a very fortunate selection for the brethren at Mayfield. They and the public generally enjoyed the preaching, so rich in edification of saints and instruction and warning of sinners. We never heard a series of sermon more powerful for good—logical, scriptural, and full of feeling. Large audience of eager listeners gathered before the speaker every night. The greatest objection is that four weeks was not long enough. Bro. Harding impresses all who hear him with his sincerity and depth of conviction. We all may forget many of his grand sermons; but we never can forget that he wants nothing but the Bible as his rule of life, and nothing but the church for his society for religious work. There is less speculation and imagination in his preaching than in that of any man we ever heard. The simply gospel as testified to by the apostles is the all-sufficient power with him for attracting attention as well as for salvation. The immediate result, in the way of additions, was fourteen added to the congregation—all of whom were grown persons, and one of them quite venerable gentleman, who had long been in the enemy's ranks. He now takes a front seat in the assembly of the saints—an entirely new man in Christ. We hope the brethren and sisters will never forget the fervent exhortations of Bro. Harding.—W. S. Butler, in Apostolic Church.

Bro. Lipscomb: In explaining the meaning of "scrip" and "staves" of Matt. x: 10, in a recent issue of the ADVOCATE, you stated that "scrip" meant money. McGarvey and Clark both say "provision bag."—[Geo. Gowen, Flat Creek, Tenn.

Obituaries.

Died, at the home of his brother, Mr. R. R. Moore, three miles West of Somerville, at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, August 30th, 1883, of typhoid fever, Mr. Cecil C. Moore, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. He was buried in the Somerville cemetery Friday evening; a large number of his friends and acquaintances attending the burial. Religious services were conducted at the grave by Rev. E. Windes, pastor of the Baptist church. I send you a notice of my brother's death, although not a member of the Christian church, but a reader of the ADVOCATE.
 MRS. E. S. PRICHARD.
 December 20, 1883.

Fell asleep in Jesus, October 20, 1883, J. R. Hutcheson, in his twenty-fourth year. He united with the church of God at Cold Springs, Tenn., in 1876, and was immersed by Bro. W. Y. Kuykendall. He had been married scarcely one year, when God called him home. He was ill for thirty-seven days, and his sufferings intense to which he was calmly and perfectly resigned. It seemed that death possessed no terror for him. He was beginning to preach, and his life was an exemplary one. He left a wife and many friends to mourn his loss. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord;" yes, he rests from his labors, and his works do follow him." Sleep on dear brother, a few more days, or years at most, and we will join you in the spirit land.

HEAD LINES FROM JOHN WESLEY.

John Wesley, speaking ("on the fall of man,") of the corporeal frame—the body, uses this language, "Such was man with regard to his corporeal part, as he came out of the hands of his Maker. But since he sinned, he is not only dust, but mortal, corruptible dust. And by sad experience, we find that this corruptible body presses down the soul. It very frequently hinders the soul in its operations, and at best serves it very imperfectly; yet the soul cannot dispense with its service, imperfect as it is. For an embodied spirit cannot form one thought, but by the mediation of its bodily organs. For thinking is not (in this case) the act of a pure spirit; but the act of a spirit connected with a body, and playing upon a set of material keys. It cannot possibly, therefore, make any better music than the nature and state of its instruments allow it. Hence every disorder of the body, especially of the parts more immediately subservient to thinking, lays an almost insuperable bar in the way of its thinking justly." (See Wesley's sermons, Vol. I. page 341.) I have made rather an extended quotation, but I desire the reader to have the connection, in which the language I desire to comment upon, is used. And I repeat, does he mean it (?) when he says, "Yet the soul cannot dispense with its service, imperfect as it is. For an embodied spirit cannot form one thought, but by the mediation of its bodily organs. For thinking is not (in this case) the act of a pure (disembodied) spirit; but the act of a spirit connected with a body, playing upon a set of material keys." Is it true, (does he mean) that "an embodied spirit cannot form one thought," only through the organs of the body? Is it true, "that thinking (so far as man is concerned) is not the act of a pure (disembodied) spirit, but the act of an embodied spirit? If these be true, they must harmonize with the Scriptures of divine truth, and should harmonize with the theory and practice of men (these embodied spirits) in communicating thoughts, desires, and all affections pertaining to each other in this life.

Let us see the harmony to this idea in the case of men. My embodied spirit, with the aid of the fleshly organs that pertain to it, has "formed a thought that would be very beneficial to a particular embodied spirit—a particular friend,—now how shall I proceed to impart this thought to that friend? My spirit desires his benefit, his spirit must comprehend the thought, to some extent at least, in order to reap the benefit. What is the process? My spirit through the fleshly organs give words or other equivalents, the signs of certain ideas, (understood by both spirits,) to the spirit of my friends, through the organs of reception that pertain to his spirit, and he is influenced to act in accord with the thought received, and saves himself from a calamitous accident. There we see each "embodied spirit" "playing upon a set of material keys" pertaining to them, and without these "material keys" any spirit never could have operated upon the spirit of my friend. Hence we may infer that no embodied spirit can operate upon another "embodied spirit" without the fleshly organs—the channels of communication between them. Now what, by close inspection, do we find? First, that two spirits must possess, to some extent, a common stock of ideas. Second, they must have some common signs of these ideas. Third, that the fleshly organs necessary to produce these signs, must be used before any impressions can be made. And this accords with the practice of men. They reason, they plead through words and signs, and thereby make the desired communication, and influence others to act. And never has it occurred (that I am aware of) that one "embodied spirit" ever formed a thought, nor communicated a thought to another "embodied spirit," without the use of the fleshly organs—the keys—through which these spirits operate. And we must infer, that if any superior spirit should desire to move an embodied one, he must approach him through the keys belonging to him.

Now we come to test the matter of harmony with the Scriptures. And to make a plain proposition, we may state it thus, "Do the Scriptures teach that God approaches man through the fleshly organs, the material keys of his Spirit. We will state the process of communication between embodied spirits as before enunciated. First, that the two spirits must have a common stock of ideas. (Not necessarily to the same extent.) Second, they must have common signs of these ideas. Third, that fleshly organs must be used to communicate and receive these ideas. And to make the proper addition as to God, we may state that he as a superior Spirit, must approach man, an "embodied spirit," in that way and manner that an embodied spirit can be approached, can comprehend, through these material keys. Now does he this? Let the Scriptures answer. In Genesis i: 27, we have this language: "So God created man in his image, in the image of God created he him." In whatever else this image consisted, we feel sure that knowledge and other attributes of God were a part. (See also chapter v: 1.) Job xxxii: 8, says, "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them (it or him) understanding." See Zech. xii: 1. Jesus said to the Samaritan woman, "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." John iv: 24. Now we have the Spirit-God and the spirit-man to make and receive impressions. How is this done? Gen. i: 28-29-30-31; and ii: 15-17, we find that God talked with Adam, that is, he used signs of ideas that Adam understood, and that influenced him. Satan approached Eve through the "material keys," she comprehended, she was influenced, she acted, and she in turn approached Adam, he was influenced, he acted and we know the consequences. So we might pass on and on, through the Old Testament, through the New, and we find this the principle. God's Spirit communicating with man's spirit through words and symbols, the signs of ideas, and men receiving the "things" communicated, and acting in accord with them or rejecting them.

But the question may be put thus: while the Scriptures teach this is the ordinary process of communication, do they not teach, also, extraordinary processes? This we will now examine. We will notice just here that we have found no other process of communication of human spirits; and if there be any other process between the divine and human, the divine Spirit must explain to the human spirit why, and for what purpose this extraordinary process is pursued, and whether it is to be a continual and a universal (that is as to time and all nations,) process, or for a limited time and to particular persons and purposes. Moses complained to God of his inability to bear all the people's burdens. God said to him, Gather unto me seventy of the elders of Israel, and I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee; and I will put it upon them, and they shall bear the burden of the people, etc." Num. xi: 47; see also 24th to 30th verse. Here is an extraordinary proceeding; was it universal? no; only to the seventy. What was communicated? Extraordinary power for a particular purpose. How do we know? God talked with Moses and told him so, "and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not alone." 17th verse. So we might pass through the Old Testament cases of extraordinary proceedings of the Spirit of God, and we will find that it was a special occurrence for a purpose of qualifying the receiver to perform something beyond the ordinary, that there might be no doubt in the testimony that was being presented in the ordinary way. So in the New Testament, Jesus, the apostles and first disciples, received extraordinary communications for extraordinary purposes, that they might confirm the truths delivered in the regular way of approach to the "embodied spirits."

But now we come to a passage of Scripture that is often quoted to show that there is a supernatural process of operation upon persons to make them sons and daughters of God, viz: "The Spirit itself beareth witness, with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Romans viii: 16. The point is, "that we are the children of God." This revelation to God every saint enjoys. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the children of God." Verse 14. "But ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby (or by which) ye cry Abba Father." Verse 15. They once had the spirit of bondage to sin. But not so now. But "because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son unto your hearts, crying Abba Father." Gal. iv: 6. The Spirit was sent into the Galatian's hearts, not to make them sons, but because they were sons, bearing witness with their spirits that they were sons of God. Does this teach a supernatural process of a divine Spirit communicating a fact to an embodied spirit? Did not these Galatians know this fact until the "Spirit of his Son" was sent into their hearts? Did Paul tell them they were not sons until they had received the Spirit "bearing witness with their spirit that they were the children of God." If I bear witness with another, are there not two witnesses? If I bear witness to another, is there but one? Are there two witnesses to this fact, or but one? Were the Galatians made children of God by the reception of the Spirit of the Son of God? No, no; "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put him on." Gal. iii: 26-27. Baptized into his name, and are therefore children. "And because ye are children, God hath sent forth his Spirit into your hearts, etc." We might notice other passages used to show some supernatural process of communication from our heavenly Father to mortal men—"embodied spirits"—teaching them glorious realities of the present and future life. But so long as it is recorded that these things are revealed to us and to our children, by the Holy Spirit, through words that our spirits can receive through the "material keys" belonging to them, it is but a needless task for the present.

CHURCH NEWS.

Made a trip recently to Perry county. Spoke in Centerville going and coming. In this place we have some warm-hearted brethren and sisters, who seem to realize that there is a work for each of them to do. They have an interesting Sunday-school, in which, I think, much good can be accomplished. From Centerville I went to Linden, Perry county, where I found Bros. Land, Litton and Brown engaged in a meeting. They had had one confession. Spoke three times in Linden. They have lately organized at this place. Prospects good for a large congregation in the near future. Went from Linden to Farmer's Valley. Spoke six times. Immersed two. Others were almost persuaded to be Christians. Since then I have spoken at South Harpeth, Mount Hope, Riggs' X Roads, Owen's Chapel, and Phillippi. At these places I find some zealous Christians, and others—as at all other places—who seem to think there is nothing for them to do. Spoke nine times at Morton's school-house. Notwithstanding the cold weather, we had good attendance and good interest. Immersed nine. One reclaimed. Bros. Beech, Luther and Litton visited us at this place. Bro. Luther spoke twice; Bro. Litton once. I have several appointments to fill before my year's work is done. Aim to return to Mars Hill after Christmas to attend school six months. Then I aim to return home and labor in Tennessee.—[Brown Godwin, Boston, Tennessee.]

Don't drink anything intoxicating—eat moderately, go about your business, after you eat your breakfast—lounge a little after dinner—chat after tea—and kiss after quarreling; and all the joy, the peace, and the blessings the earth can afford shall be yours, till the grave closes over you, and your spirits are borne to a brighter and a happier world.—Ex.

Some heathen, are not as much of the heathen as we think, read a Mahometan proverb, "God has bestowed the good things of this world to relieve our necessities, not to reward our virtues; these will be rewarded in another world." We know of no greater necessity to be relieved, than a stubborn cold, and we know of no better relief than Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

BRO. BUTLER ON THE PROPER PLAN OF CO-OPERATION.

In the December number of the Apostolic Church Bro. W. L. Butler considers the "three leading plans" of co-operation in missionary work, now advocated among the disciples of the reformation. They are, (1) "a missionary society under the individual co-operation plan;" (2) "a missionary society under the church co-operation plan;" and (3) "the go anyhow plan, without sending." He objects most resolutely to each and all of them, saying that "they are all radically contrary to the scriptures and subversive of the work of the churches." That his judgment is correct in regard to the first and second methods is perfectly clear to my mind; but that he is wrong about the third is equally evident. But, that there may be no misunderstanding, let me set forth this third plan in my own words, as I do not altogether like Bro. Butler's way of expressing it. It is, in brief, this: The Christian (i. e. the lover and servant of Christ), who has the ability to publish the good news, should do so with all diligence as he has opportunity, praying God to guide him and support him, and to fit him more and more for the work. Individual Christians and the churches of the Lord should contribute to the support of such men.

Is there anything "radically contrary to the Scriptures and subversive of the work of the church" in that plan? Certainly not! indeed it was by this plan that the evangelistic work of the first ages of the church was done. Thus the apostles and their coadjutors co-operated in extending the kingdom through the world. The Lord sends the preacher, and the Lord promises to sustain him. Jesus commanded the eleven to preach, and they obeyed. There is no record that any of them, at any time afterwards, was sent by a church or a co-operation, to preach the gospel. Neither did any one of them ever bargain for a salary, or wait to be promised a support. Jesus said, "go," and they went. The churches ministered to them, as it was their duty to do. But it was their duty to preach whether any contributions were made for their support or not: for the Master had commanded them. Afterwards, when Paul was converted and called to the apostleship, he waited not to consult with flesh and blood, but went immediately about the work. There is no evidence that any salary was ever, at any time, offered to him, or that a support was ever guaranteed to him, except by the Lord. If it be said that about ten years after his conversion, the church at Antioch sent him and Barnabas on a mission, I deny it. The facts are these: He and Barnabas and other teachers were in the church at Antioch. "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, 'Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.' And when they had fasted, and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Selucia," etc. It is evident from this account that though the teachers fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, it was the Holy Ghost who sent them forth. There is no proof that the church as such had anything to do with it. No promises of pay was made to them; nothing is said in connection about their support. When we look carefully into the matter, we do not find proof that any apostle was ever sent on any mission by a church, or a co-operation of individuals, or of churches. The Lord authorized them to do the work, and they did it. That is all there is of it. It is sometimes said that the church at Jerusalem sent Peter and John down to Samaria (Acts viii: 14,) and that therefore churches should send out preachers to preach the gospel; but to this it may be replied, [1] that they were not sent down to Samaria to preach the gospel, but to bestow miraculous gifts upon those who had already received and obeyed the gospel; and [2] that they were sent by the apostles, and not by the church. If therefore we draw our conclusion from the history of the apostles and their work, we must decide that the Lord Jesus, instead of the churches, sends the preacher to preach the gospel. Hence Paul says, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel."

But Bro. Butler thinks this "Go anyhow Plan" is "radically contrary to the Scriptures, and subversive of the work of the church." He thinks the congregation should send out the preacher. We have just seen that no congregation, or congregations, sent out the apostles. What churches sent out Timothy, or Titus, or Silas, or Mark, or Luke? I know that the churches sent men, at different times, on missions; for example, the congregation at Philippi sent Epaphroditus to Rome with supplies for Paul; the church at Jerusalem sent Barnabas to Antioch to comfort, encourage, and exhort the young church at that place—a church composed almost, if not altogether of babes in Christ; the churches of Macedonia and Galatia and Achaia, sent their bounty for the poor saints of Judea to them by messengers; but there is no unmistakable proof that any church in the apostolic age sent out a preacher to preach the gospel. It seems that the commission of our Lord was deemed sufficient in so far as sending evangelists was concerned. Nor do we find the churches directing the labors of the evangelists in their preaching. They traveled under the guidance of the Lord, not under the commands of the churches. What the churches had to do in the matter was to contribute to those who did the work, while they were doing it. The preacher was responsible for the performance of his duty, and the congregation for the doing of theirs; but neither was excusable on account of the negligence of the other.

Although Bro. Butler thinks this "Go anyhow Plan" is so unscriptural, it is certain that the twelve, Paul, the Jerusalem church upon the dispersion, Philip, Mark, Silas, Timothy, Titus, Luke and the others operated according to it. The plan that he advocates, if I understand him, is this: The church should select and send out the evangelist, promising him a support and directing him in his labors. If his life depended upon it, he could not find an example of such a procedure in the New Testament. But the plan to which he so radically objects is illustrated times without number, from the beginning of it to the end. When a man full of the love of God, and burning with a desire to save souls, goes forth preaching the gospel, as God opens to him doors of utterance he does what all of the apostles and apostolic men did; when churches furnish supplies for temporal wants of such men, they do what churches in the ancient days did. Can it be that Bro. Butler thinks such a course "radically contrary to the Scriptures, and subversive of the work of the church?"

The plan is all right, if Christians would but work by it; for then all the preachers would preach the gospel with all their hearts, going from day to day where they believe they could do the most good, spending and being spent in the grand work; and the churches, full of the love of Christ, with large-hearted liberality, would contribute to their support, while God's loving care and providential guidance would be over them all. The trouble is not with the plan; we won't work. The preacher is unwilling to walk by faith. He wants to see his way to the end before he starts. Responsible parties must promise to pay the money, or he will not undertake the work. At least this is too generally the case. On the other hand, the churches are not as liberal as they ought to be. They do not seem to realize that they are stewards, and that God will call upon them to render an account of all that he has committed to them.

I am glad, however, that Bro. Butler and I are heartily agreed upon the great fundamental matter; viz., that the Bible is the rule which is to guide us in obeying our Lord, and that it is sufficient. We agree that no society is to be tolerated for the performance of his work, except those therein set forth; that no plans are to be followed in publishing the gospel, except those under which inspired men operated. With us it is simply a question as to what is the Bible way. We are looking into its pages for guidance. May the Lord grant to us wisdom to understand; for in this day of inventions, innovations, and expediences—this day of indifference to apostolic teaching and practice, it behooves all Bible men to stand together with one heart and one soul in contending for the old paths, in which are prosperity and peace.

THERE AS "AN ENEMY."

By some means I failed to read the "Convention Items and Personals" of the Christian Evangelist, till a day or two ago an old copy of that paper, by accident, fell into my hands. In speaking about the representatives of the press who were at Cincinnati, Bro. Garrison says:

"We learned also, that the GOSPEL ADVOCATE was represented by J. A. Harding, but we did not have the pleasure of meeting him. We saw from his own pen that he intended to be there 'as an enemy,' and we had some curiosity to look into the face of a man who could conscientiously be 'an enemy' to such work as was done in Cincinnati last week. A vast misconception must necessarily underlie such a statement."

In saying that I would be there as "an enemy," I did not mean as an enemy to evangelistic work. The Lord forbid! I was in the field for more than three hundred days last year, and preached more than five hundred discourses, and that, too, without the promise of a support from anybody except the Lord. I intend to give my life to the work, if the Lord wills, pay or no pay; (but the Master always pays.) It is one thing to be an enemy to a society of which an outsider is a life director, and children who are not members of the church are life members—an institution whose members and directors become such by the payment of so much money—an institution which the apostolic churches did not need—an institution, the support of which compels us to forsake our plea for the union of God's people upon the word of God, and which is now doing more to divide and destroy this reformatory movement than any other one cause,—I say, it is one thing to be an enemy to such a concern, and quite another thing to be an enemy to evangelistic work. If any of the society men do more evangelistic work than I do, it is because they are able to do it; they do not love it more. If their plan is better than the plan which we of the ADVOCATE favor, it is because they are wiser than the inspired apostles of our Lord; for we desire to do the work just as they did it. It will not do to say that the way in which they worked is not revealed, for the book of Acts is a history of evangelistic work, and the epistles to Timothy and Titus are written to evangelists telling them what to do, and how to do it. The Bible way is plain enough; but it don't suit most folks.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

"LET EVERY MAN BE SWIFT TO HEAR."

This expression is found in an inspired address to Christians, and places them under obligations to hear, to hear swiftly, anxiously, eagerly, the word, which the same apostle declares is able to save the soul. It is not enough that we hear carelessly the word when occasionally presented by a preacher, but we must be swift to hear, anxious enough to cause us to take pains, and make sacrifices in order to learn our duty as children of God. If earthly treasures are to be revealed, we would take any trouble, go to any expense to learn how to reach it. And upon learning where treasure may be found on earth, we would go to the ends of the world to obtain it. Why not act thus regarding the most important matter to us in this universe, the salvation of our souls. Why should we be so slow to hear and learn what God would have us do in order to obtain lasting, eternal treasures. Christianity offers us the highest degree of happiness attainable by humanity on this earth, and in addition, eternal happiness beyond the grave. And yet we reject these kind offers of our heavenly Father, and sport our lives away after the fleeting pleasures and treasures of this life, all of which are fleeting and uncertain, even while life lasts, and must be left behind when we come to cross the dark river. Why then should the children of God follow phantoms and dreams, when such glorious realities are at our doors, and we only have to reach forth and partake. Christians should be swift to hear the word of God, to hear those things that will make us happy beyond the river.

THE MORAL LAW—WAS IT ABOLISHED?

The seventh day Adventists claim that the ten commandments, spoken by God himself at the foot of Mount Sinai, constitute the moral law, and that these were not taken away with the law. There is not one word in the Bible to justify such a distinction. One part of the law had about as much morality in it as another. To take the ten commandments and call them the moral law, and not call other precepts moral, which involved man's duty both to God and his fellow-man, is simply a distinction made by men, without one word in the Bible to justify.

But suppose we grant what they say, that the ten commandments, including the command regarding the Sabbath day, constitute the moral law, in contradistinction to other commands given through Moses; then what? Does that prove that these were not set aside at the death of Christ? By no means. The ten commandments were written upon the two tables of stone. When Moses had broken the first tables that God gave him, he was afterwards told to hew out other tables like the first, and carry them up into the mountain, that the Lord might write on them. This he did, as we learn from more passages than one of the Old Testament. We here give one: "And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." Deut. iv: 13. See the same also in Exodus xxxiv: 28. It is, therefore, a positive certainty that the ten commandments, the moral law so-called, were written upon the tables of stone.

Now, the only question is, as to whether these commandments thus written on tables were taken away or not. We will see. Paul, in third chapter of 2 Corinthians, shows plainly that they were done away. "But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away." 2 Cor. iii: 7. This shows that the part of the law written on stones was to be done away. Then, in the same passage, speaking of the same thing, we read: "For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." 2 Cor. iii: 11. This shows as plainly as language can express anything, that the things written on tables of stone were done away. And we have shown by the Lord's own word that the ten commandments, commonly called the moral law, are the very ones written on these tables. Therefore it is most positively certain that the ten commandments, the moral law so-called, were done away. The Sabbath, the command to observe the seventh day and keep it holy, was one of the ten. Therefore the Sabbath law was done away.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. Barnes reports his school doing well.

Bro. W. J. Shelton, of Union City, has removed to Franklin, Tenn., and begun labor with the brethren.

The brethren of Leiper's Fork, Tenn., would like to know the address of Bro. Jesse Owen, the music teacher. He can address William J. Moss at that point."

Married, Thursday night, January 3rd, at the residence of the bride's father, near Owen's Station, Tenn., by Bro. Wm. Lipscomb, Mr. Jno. W. Beasley to Miss Mary Eliza Owen. The young couple have our best wishes for success.

The church at Washington City will be opened for service on Sunday, January 20th. W. K. Pendleton, President of Bethany College, will preach in the morning; C. L. Loos, President of Kentucky University, will speak at night.

We are sorry to learn that Bro. Land, of Perry county, is in ill-health. He has not been able to attend quite a number of his appointments, on account of ill health. We trust he will recover his health soon. He is one of the most useful teachers in his section of country.

We learn that Bro. Wm. Hooten, near Bellview, Tenn., is in a very feeble state of health. He has for several years, through age and disease, been unable to preach, and a great portion of the time unable to attend church. He was one of the pioneers in preaching the gospel in Alabama, Middle and West Tennessee. We sympathize with him in his increasing feebleness, but hope he will be restored to his usual health, and yet have years of a happy old age on earth.

APPOINTMENTS.

E. G. Sewell will preach at the following places, and at the times given below, the Lord willing. At Philadelphia meeting house, Warren County, Tenn., Saturday and Lord's day, 12th and 13th of January, which will be second Lord's day of the month. At Antioch, near Viola, Monday, 14th, and possibly Monday night or Tuesday morning. At McMinnville, Tuesday night and Wednesday night. At Holcum, in Warren County, Thursday and Friday, January 17 and 18. At New Smyrna, Saturday and Lord's day, January 19 and 20. At Bethlehem, in White County, near Simpson's Mills, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 22nd and 23rd. At Sparta, Wednesday and Thursday night, January 23rd and 24th. Thence home, and preach at Bethel, near Olmstead Station, Ky., Lord's day, January 27th. And if in my power, would be glad to be at Spencer on Monday night January 21st. This, however, will depend upon my getting conveyance from New Smyrna to Spencer, and from Spencer to Bethlehem.

Bro. D. M. Breaker gave us a call on January 4th, on his way to Madisonville, Ky. He will labor in the section around Madisonville the present year. He has been laboring for some weeks in Hall county, Ga. At Gainesville and Bellton, eight Baptists united on the Bible, including one preacher, J. H. Key, and agreed to begin worship as a congregation of the Lord. Bro. Breaker reports the Baptists and others in this section of country willing to hear the truth, but destitute of teachers who know the Scriptures.

We have received of Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, New York City, the life of the Swiss Reformer Zwingli. He was the compeer of Luther, and in one sense his coadjutor in the work of destroying the blighting influence of the papal hierarchy in Europe at the time of the reformation. He and Luther disagreed in some things, and Zwingli, although appealing to the sword and dying by the sword, was the more tolerant, and bore himself with the better Christian spirit in some of the controversies in which they were involved. This is a good time to study the lives of these sturdy old reformers, and learn lessons that will profit us. It contains 200 pages; price, twenty-five cents.

Mr. Beecher said: "I have felt more and more as the years go by that I was losing my power in the church and that my usefulness was rapidly giving out. Under the circumstances, I could not help thinking what was to become of Plymouth Church if I should die or go away. It would then be spoken of as the church that was. This has given me many discouraging thoughts. The idea of having to leave it to become dilapidated has been a constant trouble to me, and I often pray to God to make it more cohesive before He calls me."

This is true not only of Mr. Beecher's church, but of all churches whose only centre of influence is the attractiveness of the preacher. Our churches are all becoming very much clubs to support a man to entertain them and look after them in a social way. When Christ is the centre of the church, and the church meets to worship the Father through him the death of the man or that will not affect the life or work of the church.

General News.

The Lower House of Congress with a strong opposition appointed a select committee to collect facts and report on the alcoholic liquor traffic. —Notwithstanding the adverse decision of Judge Reid, of the Circuit Court of Davidson county, as to the constitutionality of the Sunday law, it has been rigidly enforced by the board of public works, with much improvement to the peace and quiet of the city. During the twenty-four hours including Sunday last, there were but three arrests by the police—two for drunkenness, one for theft. This during the week of Christmas is certainly remarkable.—There is clearly a movement all over the country toward the suppression of the sale of liquor on Sunday, as witness the following concerning New York City: "For the past Sunday or two the restrictions on the sale of liquor have been more rigidly enforced. It is worthy of note that considering its size New York is one of the strictest cities of the country in the observance of the Sabbath. No procession with brass band goes through the streets, there is no shouting of newsboys, and in many respects it is much more quiet and orderly than the smaller cities. This is in great part owing to the influence of the New York Sabbath committee. New York is a great city in its good elements as well as its evil.—South Carolina has a local option law which applies to incorporated cities, towns, and villages. When a place votes in favor of prohibition it is said to have gone "dry," and when another votes for license it is said to have gone "wet." More than twice as many towns have gone "dry" as have gone "wet."

The Snow-Storm.

The old Earth lying bare and cold,
Beneath the winter sky,
Beheld the storm-king marshal forth
His battle-force on high,
"Ah! soon," she said, "beneath the snow Full warmly I shall lie."
The wind unfurled his banners
And rushed into the fray,
The round moon hid her jolly face
Within a cloud of gray,
And not one single star peeped out,
To drive the gloom away.
The snow, encamped behind a cloud,
Sent flying, here and there,
Its white-winged heralds to proclaim
Its presence in the air;
Until, at last, the fairy host
Burst from its cloudy lair.
The snow-flakes rushing downward,
Each in a whirling dance,
Before the winds are driven
Like armies by the lance;
But still, upon the waiting Earth
The shining hosts advance.
The wild wind, shrieking as he goes,
Flies fiercely to and fro,
And strives, with all his mighty force,
To sweep away the snow;
But bravely still the soft flakes fall
Upon the earth below.
All white and swift it settles down,
Though Boreas howl and storm,
Till soft as Summer's green the robe
It folds about her form;
No drapery of leaf and flower
Could make the Earth so warm.
It charges with no battle-cry;
But, pure, and soft, and still,
It falls upon the waiting Earth,
Its promise to fulfill:
And fells the angry, shrieking wind
By force of gentle will.
The foe has furled his banners,
And hastened from the fray;
The round moon peeps with jolly face
From out the cloud of gray;
And all the stars come twinkling out
To see who gained the day.
There all the earth lay shining,
In garments pure and white;
The snow fulfilled its mission,
And, conquering in the fight,
Had warmed the old Earth to the heart,
Beneath its mantle white.

"DAYS TO COME,—NONE."

"Why, Aunt Betty! that's too bad. Can't you see a bit without 'em?" and Proctor looked up into the poor old lady's face with a heart full of sympathy.

"I can't see to read, I mean, child," she replied; and it's this day week since I lost 'em. I've looked most everywhere, too."

"Perhaps I could help, Aunt Betty. May I look all round in the corners?"

"Bless your little heart, sonny. Your bright eyes 'll be sure to spy 'em out for me."

"There they are, the first thing, Aunt Betty; round behind the leg of the settle. Give me the poker, please."

"No, no; we'll move it out," said Aunt Betty. "Here, they gently drew the heavy settle from its place, and Proctor picked up the long-lost glasses."

"Oh, dear! Aunt Betty, they're all bent up too."

"The Lord's will be done," said Aunt Betty, while the tears streamed down her aged cheeks. They must have got jammed, when I pushed back the settle, sweeping-day. Maybe I sot my heart too much on them specks, sonny; but then I can't read a word o' the Bible without 'em you see."

"Sure enough, Aunt Betty," said Proctor, "I wish I were a rich man, and I'd get you a new pair right away."

"Procl Proc Henderson!" shouted his friend Alfred, who was tired of waiting outside.

"Good-by, Aunt Betty. I'm awful sorry," said Proctor, and taking up the pail in which he had brought broth for her dinner, away he ran.

But the poor old woman's words and tears had touched his kind heart, and he told the whole story to his mother.

"I declare; it's too bad!" he said. Then a bright thought struck him.

"Couldn't I earn a pair for her Christmas, mother, don't you suppose? I guess I've got money enough for all my regular presents already."

"Perhaps you could, Proctor. I'll help you think of ways of earning it, if you are really in earnest."

"Yes, mother. Well,—here goes! How would you begin to earn? I tell you what,—it's beginning to snow this minute. If I'll get up early and shovel before school, will you pay me?"

"Yes, indeed, my son;" and the next morning at half past eight o'clock, Proctor started off to school in the happy consciousness of having earned a bright half-dollar towards Aunt Betty's new glasses.

Proctor was a kind-hearted boy, as everybody knew, but he wasn't persevering, and his great fault was to put off, and put off, and think there was plenty of time. So it happened that although his mother reminded him of many ways of earning more, something always seemed to prevent; and when Christmas came, the half-dollar was still alone in his box, and Aunt Betty had no idea how near she came to having the Christmas gift.

"Never mind! I'll do it right away after Christmas is over," thought Proctor, but the new skates and the "Zig Zag" book were too much for his good intentions. He thought no more of Aunt Betty until the day before the New Year. Coming down into the dining-room, he looked at the Scripture calendar, to read the text for the day. But the words in the corner caught his eye.

"Days to come,—none." "I declare! suppose there shouldn't be any more days, never!" he said aloud, not thinking any one was near.

"Of course you know that means no more days this year," said his mother as she came in. "But suppose there never were to be any more, Proctor; what then?"

"Why, then I should wish I'd earned Aunt Betty some glasses before now," answered Proctor. "I say, I wish I wasn't such a put-off-er, mother; I mean to saw like anything to-day. This is the last vacation day. Do you suppose I could earn it all to-day?"

"I think you could, my son," she replied.

Proctor did work that day as though he thought he never should have another chance. And the next morning he had the pleasure of wishing Aunt Betty a happy New Year, and putting a package into her hands, saying:

"I earned them all myself, Aunt Betty, so that you won't have to go without reading the Bible any more.—Lilian Payson in S. S. Times.

THE SWEETEST JOYS.

Very many of the sweetest joys of Christian hearts are songs which have been learned in the bitterness of trial. It is said of a little bird that he will never learn to sing the song his master will have him sing while it is light in his cage. He learns a snatch of every song he hears, but will not learn a full separate melody of his own. And the master covers the cage, and makes it dark all about the bird, and then he listens and learns the one song that is taught to him, until his heart is full of it. Then, ever after, he sings that song in the light. With many of us it is as with the bird. The Master has a song he wants to teach us, but we learn only a strain of it, a note here and there, while we catch up snatches of the world's song and sing them with it. Then he comes and makes it dark about us till we learn the sweet melody he would teach us. Many of the loveliest songs of peace and trust sung by God's children in this world they have been taught in the darkened chambers of sorrow.

A moral poetess had begun a poem in unpromising blank verse on the degeneracy of man:

"God made man in His own image; but he—" and here she was compelled to leave it. A degenerate one came in, and took the liberty of helping her forward a little:

"Would probably have remained so; but she—"

A lady was reproaching Mr. William Warren at a recent reception for going into society so little. "You ought to let us lionize you a little," she said. "I never heard of but one man," replied the veteran actor, "who was not spoiled by being lionized." "And who was he?" "Daniel."

LETTER-WRITING.

I suppose there is not one of us but has again and again resisted the impulse to write to some friend; others of us have even gone farther than this,—written the letter, and then, from shyness or pride, never sent it. Now, what may be perfectly right in one case is sin in another, and if it is sin, it separates us from God; so let us look at this matter a little more closely.

There are times when it is best to resist the impulse to write a letter; household duties must not be neglected for less important calls, and so, in many cases, we would be wrong to lay aside our duster or needle, and take up the pen; but not in all. Have you a thought from God to give your friend? Remember, the tide of love in your heart must flow out, or it will not flow in; so if God whispers some message, fail not to deliver it, even at the risk of apparent neglect of a lesser duty. Perhaps an illustration will help you. An earnest Christian woman lay awake for several hours one night, and again and again the words rang in her ears, "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life;" suddenly she realized, as never before, that it is not only in the future that we are to look for God's goodness and mercy, but in the past. As she thought, a friend's life flashed before her,—a dark and sorrowful life, most would say,—but how clearly, on looking back, could one see the goodness and mercy that had followed! Now, she had not had a thought of this friend for some days, and did not "owe her a letter;" but she felt that God had given her a message for another of his children, and asked him not to let her forget it. She is a very busy woman, and might well have put off writing; but before she ate her breakfast, after "putting up" lunches, buttering bread, and cutting up meat for the little ones, she managed to write a few words, and send on the thought that had been given. "Don't feel discouraged if you do not see the goodness and mercy ahead of you, dear," she wrote; "but just look back—how wonderfully God has sustained you! How much more you know of him because of your trials!" There was no time for any news-telling—only one page was covered.

That note reached the one to whom it was sent just when a new wave of trouble had swept over her soul, and, like a swimmer in the sea, she seemed dragged under by the current. It was as if a strong hand had reached down; she seized it, and was drawn out of the strong sea up on the Rock. Ah! suppose her friend had resisted that God-given impulse.

Your message may not always be a direct word from God, but remember, "love is of God." Take time, then, to write a cheery, newsy letter to that friend who is supporting herself among strangers; take care that your absent sister has a loving word from you, and a peep at your home, even though you have to rise a half-hour earlier to give her the love which God has given you.

But a word to those who do not get the written word of love they long for. Has not God given better things for you, my friend, if you will but listen? Turn to him when the postman, so eagerly watched for, has gone by with a shake of his head, turn to him, and ask him to speak to you. If we did but believe that he is "more ready to hear than we to pray," and is, indeed, "wont to give more than we desire or deserve," how many times we would turn to him when our friends disappoint us, and receive such a blessing that we could not contain it, but should have to let it flow out to others!

And one thought more as to letters,—let us not forget that we are "living epistles, read of all men." What are they reading? Records of God's power and grace? Of his ability to carry us triumphantly over places where, without him, any one must stumble? Or do they read a record of starvation, of failing strength, and love and faith, and, so reading, misinterpret our heavenly Father? Let us question ourselves, and begin a new record,—spotted here and there with sins, it may be, but shining with his grace.—Hope Ledyard, in S. S. Times.

Christian content opens all lawful avenues of enterprise, bids us use all our faculties and make the most of them, and, when we have done our best, gratefully accept the results God sends.

BOOKS.--Victory--Vox Populi.

On which side lies the final victory in the desperate "Battle of the Books," the following extracts, characteristic of tens of thousands received, signify:

"I am amazed at the cheapness and excellence of your books. Your enterprise is a public benefaction of the highest kind."—Rev. Dr. Shepherd, Santa Rosa, Cal.

"I am delighted with the books. They are marvels of cheapness, beauty and utility. Inclosed find $83.00 in payment."—Rev. Mason W. Fressly, Chester, S. C.

"Your efforts toward extending useful information to all classes, are the most extraordinary yet witnessed by any age or country. They ought to render your name immortal."—Gen. J. W. Phelps, Brattleboro, Vt.

"Having been connected with the State Library for several years, and accustomed to buying books, I cannot help but wonder how you can sell so cheap; or else, wonder how others can sell so dear. Accept my thanks for promptness."—W. E. Sterne, Topeka, Kansas.

"The world's greatest benefactor to-day is John B. Alden, the bold and original publisher, who is successfully placing standard literature within the reach of everybody who cares to read."—Star, Bradford, Pa.

"Two sets of Waverley just received. All my friends are wondering how I get such bargains. I explain, and these (further) orders are the result."—H. McLallen, Farmers' Bank, Columbus City, Ind.

Find inclosed $30.75. Every one that sees the books, says: "What a marvel of cheapness," and "I want some of them." I will try to be a sort of walking advertisement for you.—L. A. Noel, Beaver Dam, Va.

RE-INVESTIGATED.

A Remarkable Statement Fully Confirmed by Three Important Interviews.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y. Democrat and Chronicle was published in this paper recently and has been the subject of much conversation both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days since, which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion at his residence, when the following interview occurred:

"That article of yours, doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull, indefinite pains, and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's disease which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are the sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them, and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement, doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of so-called diseases are torturing people to day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some one of its many forms. It is a Hydra-headed monster and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly open in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, at the University. If you want facts there are any quantity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symptoms, and there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter bade him good-day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very pleasantly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishops, Haven and Peck, and others. This is terrible, and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It should be plain to every one that something must be done to check this increase or there is no knowing where it will end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to my notice. A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis, and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to show the contrast between healthy and unhealthy fluids, he had provided a vial, the contents of which were drawn from his own person. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him, and in a trembling voice he said 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys,' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe, then, that it has no symptoms, of its own and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own, and very often none at all. Usually no two people have the same symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indication of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I know what I am talking about, for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"A very prominent case but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from the experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty, I thought there was little hope, and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying, 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."

"And this caused you to manufacture it?"

"No, it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities, saw physicians prescribing and using it and I therefore determined, as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach, and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements and next paid a visit to Dr. S. S. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of

Heath, of which he is one of the analysts, courteously answered the questions that were propounded by him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No sir. I did not think it possible. It was seldom, indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it, and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing and that it can be cured.

CHAPTER I.

"I was taken sick a year ago With bilious fever." "My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I Could not move! I shrunk! From 228 lbs to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains all left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after using several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign, but weigh more than I weighed before. To Hop Bitters I owe my life." R. FITZPATRICK. Dublin, June 6, '81.

CHAPTER II.

"Malden, Mass, Feb. 1, 1880. Gentlemen— I suffered with attacks of sick headache.

Neuralgia, female trouble, for years, in the most terrible and excruciating manner.

No medicine or doctor could give me relief or cure me:

"The first bottle Nearly cured me: The second made me as well and strong as when a child.

And I have been so to this day." My husband was an invalid for twenty years with a serious Kidney, liver, and urinary complaint,

Pronounced by Boston's best physicians—

"Incurable!" Seven bottles of your bitters cured him, and I know of the "Lives of eight persons"

In my neighborhood that have been saved by your bitters, And many more are using them with great benefit.

"They almost Do miracles"—Mrs. E. D. Slack.

How to GET SICK.—Expose your self day and night; eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know how to get well, which is answered in three words—Take Hop Bitters!

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

Uses of Adversity.

If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender.
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss, indeed,
Its sweetest consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish were granted,
Patience would die and hope depart,
Life would be disenchanted.

FANNING ORPHAN SCHOOL.

After delays that are needless to explain, ten thousand dollars in cash and in good interest-bearing notes and bonds, have been secured and are now in the hands of the treasurer. Mrs. C. Fanning has made a deed to the school of one hundred and sixty acres of land, including Hope Institute.

During Christmas week the trustees held a meeting at Hope Institute and made a thorough examination of the premises. They found the buildings and farm in better condition than they expected. An expenditure of between two and three hundred dollars, in repairing the buildings, will put them in good condition for use. They are ample to accommodate seventy-five or eighty pupils, with the teachers. The out-buildings and fencing, with slight repairs, will answer for a time. The property thus conveyed to the school is well worth sixteen thousand dollars. Elder T. Fanning paid $17,500 for sixty acres of this land, including the buildings in the year 1867. The purposes of this school are set forth in the following clause from the deed of conveyance:

"The purpose of this conveyance is to establish a school under the management of said corporation, where white orphan girls may be instructed in books, and trained in habits of industry. I am a communicant of the Christian church, and I wish every person officially connected with the management of this trust, to be a member in good standing of said church.

The trustees of said corporation may admit to the school so many destitute orphan girls as the means at their command will allow. The trustees are vested with authority to adopt all needful rules and regulations for the government of said school, but I require that the Bible shall be made a regular text-book, and shall form a part of the daily study of all the pupils.

The pupils must be instructed in household duties, and must be required to perform service as cook, dairy-maid, laundress, house keeper, etc., so that they may earn in such employments, if necessary, an independent and honest living. The trustee may admit white girls, not orphans, in destitute circumstances, as pupils upon payment of tuition, but no such pupils are to be admitted, if such an arrangement should in the least interfere with the training and instruction of the destitute orphans, who are the special object of my solicitude.

The object of the institution is, to afford a school to train girls, without means or friends to care for them, for virtuous, useful and Christian lives. The effort will not be to make scholars of all, regardless of aptitude or fitness, but to train them in all useful labor, suited for women, so they may be fitted for whatever station they are called upon to occupy in life.

While doing what they are able with the means at their command, the trustees propose to furnish a school at which individuals, churches and associations charitably inclined, may be able to educate destitute orphans in most favorable surroundings at a minimum of cost. Their purpose is to secure managers and teachers of first class qualifications, as regards education, refinement and true Christian character, that all the associations of the pupils may be elevating and purifying in their nature.

The repairing of the building is now under contract. The chief difficulty with the trustees is lack of means. The rentals of the farm and the interest on ten thousand dollars constitute the only resources at their command. They ought to have an endowment at once, of at least twenty-five thousand dollars. They need, also, furniture to furnish the house, kitchen and laundry, farm utensils, horses, and milch cows for the use of the school. It will take from one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars to supply properly these needs. This is a work that ought to commend itself to the conscience of every man and woman that desires to help the innocent helpless, and those exposed to ruin from no fault of their own, as well as of all who desire the moral and material well-being of the human family. The trustees intend no importunate begging, no appeal to fairs, festivals, lotteries or other means of doubtful morality, for raising means, but will be thankful for all help that the charitable will furnish to aid in this work.

They are taking subscriptions for endowments in cash or in interest-bearing notes, payable in five annual installments. Will gladly receive household, kitchen and laundry furniture, farming implements or stock suitable for the use of the school.

THE SPIRIT OF ROMANISM.

The Catholic Herald is not partial to that army of evangelists which is ever striving to correct the errors of Romanism, and in its last issue it has the following allusion to the noisome band:

If the "evangelicals" who are so anxious to preach to benighted Catholics in Ireland would only betake themselves to India and try to convert the Miss Pigots and other Scotch missionaries in that part of the world, and show them the depth of wickedness into which they have fallen by their gross immoralities, they would do a good work, which would be better still if they could succeed in converting the rascals that are making religion a by-word among the heathen.

But instead of being practically inclined that way those "evangelical"—what a terrible travesty of a name—will persist in going among Catholics lampooning their religion, insulting them by caricaturing objects which the people venerate, and so conducting themselves as to excite bitter feelings which can terminate only in a riot.

The Irish people have borne the brunt of those "evangelical" assaults until they have found that patience is no longer a virtue. For nearly three-quarters of a century the people of Ireland have had to contend with the vilest forms of "Soup-erism," and now they are determined when these things appear to stamp them out just as they would the foot and mouth disease among their cattle.

An American "evangelical" humbug named Major Whittle from Chicago, took it into his head to proceed to Ireland, and on last Sunday he held forth in the theatre in Wexford. He was aided by some neophytes and the people very properly threatened to pitch the whole crowd of them into the harbor and give the fishes a feed if the finny tribe could stand it.

During the tithe agitation in Ireland one of these "evangelicals," presuming on the safety then attending the proselytisers, approached a sturdy young farmer who was quietly digging potatoes in a field, and finding that he could not "convert" him, held up before his eyes a tract with a woodcut showing a priest celebrating mass, "and a mouse scampering over the altar with the blessed Sacrament in its mouth?" In another moment the Souper was lying on the ground and the prongs of a handy pitchfork letting in the day-light in the darksome places of the Souper's abdomen!

If this Chicago Whittle got his thick skull well cracked for his pains it would serve him right.

It is about high time the people of Ireland put down this "evangelical" craze, and as there seems to be no way of doing the work properly but one way, that way should be adopted whether the Whittles can swim or not.

The Catholic Examiner quotes with approval from the Catholic Herald, the above, which shows clearly that the old persecuting spirit of Romanism has not been changed by the atmosphere of the nineteenth century, nor by transplanting it to American soil. This is simply advice to murder protestants who go to Ireland, or any Romish community, to advocate the protestant phase of religion. What would these people think of such counsel on the part of protestant papers to protestant communities, when they send their proselyting agents among them? Suppose some protestant paper were to advise the murder of M. Capel in his town in this country. His object is precisely the same as Mr. Whittle's in Ireland. Those who would murder contrary to law, would certainly murder by law, if they had the power. While we have but little sympathy with the phase of religion taught by Mr. Whittle, he is as inoffensive in manner as any Romish emissary. The same paper says:

The Church Progress thinks that America is to be the stronghold of Catholicity. So do we.

Which is a confession that Romanism has lost its hold in Europe, where it has preyed upon the people and kept them in ignorance for centuries. Those who have been kept in bondage by its power, have lost all moral and intellectual activity, and have sunk into hopeless lethargy. Those who have retained their mental activity have gone into infidelity. The Romish people very frequently taunt protestantism with the infidelity to which free thought and private judgment lead. But those countries that have adhered to the Romish church, have been the hot-beds of infidelity. France and Germany have been the source whence infidelity has flowed forth over Christendom. The tide of infidelity that swept over our country soon after the Revolutionary war, was of French origin. That which now infects our people is of German origin. It exists very greatly among us to-day, in the German Catholic portion of the population. We say this, having but little sympathy with protestant denominations.

CHURCH NEWS.

We had a good prayer-meeting last night, notwithstanding the cold. We have bright prospects before us for another year. Let us move up at this end of the line.—[F. B. Srygley.

On Saturday night before the first Lord's day in December, we began a meeting at Altamont, and continued over till second Lord's day, with ten added—two from the Baptists, four immersed, and four took membership. We think much good was accomplished. Preaching by Bro. Abner Daly, of Neodesha, Kansas, assisted by Bros. L. N. Judd, F. Harmon, by prayer and singing. The brethren and sisters much encouraged and built up. Brethren, I call your attention to an article in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, page 770, volume 25, headed, "I Must Pray More." Let us resolve in the beginning of this new year, to live more submissive and closer to God than we have ever done; for we have abundant reason to thank God for his great blessings that we have received the past year. And let us pray more and work more for the advance of the Redeemer's cause during the present year.—[W. H. Thompson, Altamont, Kansas, January 2, 1884.

Report of my work to the brethren at Boston, Tenn. Since I left you in June last, I have spoken one hundred and twenty times; have immersed eighty-four persons, claimed one from the Baptists. Have visited eighteen congregations, and found them generally in working order. Organized or set in working order a church at Linden, Perry county, Tenn. I expect to start to school again to-morrow.—[Brown Godwin, December 28, 1883.

The above is Bro. Godwin's report of his labors for about six months. We induced Bro. Godwin and Bro. Charles Sparkman to go to the Bible College at Mars Hill, and we think they are both doing tolerable good work for boys first beginning. Bro. Sparkman has been teaching school most of his time, but he has held two or three protracted meetings with good success. They are both back at Mars Hill. Bro. Godwin traveled all the time since he left school without the promise of pay from the church at home, or any one else, and he is perfectly satisfied with his labors and his pay, and is willing to work the same way again when he leaves school.—[Seth Sparkman.

By the request of some of the brethren, I give a short account of my work last year in this part of the Lord's moral vineyard. I commenced the first of January, 1883, preaching in destitute places. Wherever I could get a house, I would preach in it; if no house, I would take a brush arbor by the side of some little rippling brook. Five times I have been shut out of church houses—four times by the Methodists, and once by the Baptists. Twice I have received letters from the Methodists, forbidding me to come or preach in their houses. Often they have misrepresented the true teaching of the gospel, and lied upon me. But none of these things hindered me. I had good news to tell, (the gospel,) and was determined to tell it. I continued till I preached two hundred and eighty-one discourses. Had one hundred and nine additions, (some of them are not yet baptized at this writing.) I have five young congregations started. Have had three Sunday-schools going on. I have disposed of a thousand or more books and tracts. I have had good health, and feel like doing as much this year, the good Lord being my helper. How many congregations and brethren are going to help push the good work on this year? Remember that Mars Hill congregation is the only one that has done anything much of this kind in this part of the country. There are congregations and brethren enough to keep out two or three evangelists all the time. Brethren, go to work. Give the good Lord all the praise; it is just a short journey through life that we have to work. If we work right, the reward is ours. Eternal life with our blessed Savior and glorified millions be found.—[H. H. Turner, Florence, Ala., January 1, 1884.

In addition to the above, we wish to say, the church at Mars Hill, as we learn, undertook to partially sustain Bro. Turner, and placed him in the field to labor in destitute places. The above is the result. It certainly should encourage others to work in the same direction. If we ever do anything as Christians, we must educate ourselves; every member of the church of Christ must be educated up to the point that he will regularly consecrate a per centage of his earning for the cause of God. It will take time, it will take perseverance, but it can be done, it must be done, or we are lost. There is now a regular and steady growth in that direction, and all churches ought to persevere in the work. In the next place, while we believe in carrying the gospel to all the benighted children of humanity, and rejoice in the spirit that consecrates itself to the salvation of the world, those at our doors have the first and highest claims upon us. Christ sent the apostles first to all the cities of Judea, and Paul went to a foreign land from his field of labor, only when he "found no more place in these parts." The church at Mars Hill, we think, acted wisely in first evangelizing its own section of country. This and the Boston congregation sending Bro. Godwin are examples of the churches doing work for the destitute.

HONOR THY PARENTS.

I was asked, last night, why it was that Ham was so seriously cursed. He did not do much. His father was drunk, lying naked on the floor of his tent. Ham saw him, went away and told his brethren what he had seen. Thus the case is told, and it appears that the punishment is severe for the transgression. Thousands of sons in our time do much worse towards their fathers, seemingly. Is there no curse upon those who thus act? Many daughters treat their mothers and fathers much more shamefully, and little is thought of it. I have been wont to look upon Noah with little patience, not as much as I would the ordinary drunkard. He had many, very many years experience, and should have laid Ham a better example, thought I. But Adam Clarke has rather modified my idea about the patriarch's conduct upon this occasion. He thinks this is the first time wine was made, and Noah did not know its nature. Whilst sixteen hundred years is a long time for the world to exist, and not know how to make wine, and what are its effects, still this explanation is very much in harmony with the character of the "perfect man in the sight of God." It does not seem reasonable that one would be called "perfect," who, by lust for strong drink, got beastly drunk. All we need then is a reasonable explanation of this case of drunkenness, knowing the reputation of Noah. Again, it does not seem at all reasonable that God would put his spirit into a man who had just roused up from a fit of intoxication, and made known what had been done.

Now, we are prepared to consider further. We have in the patriarchal age some of the strongest and most striking examples of a pure and refined life. I defy the world to produce more hospitable men than Abraham and Lot, and more of real genuine politeness. Abraham was a polished gentleman. Then he was not avaricious, but understood that others have rights, as was evinced by his disposition of the spoils after the battle of kings. In this case of Noah we learn not only how good men of old, but how God himself regarded good and bad sons, respectful and disrespectful ones. A nation of descendants was cursed for disrespect to the father. Could it be put more forcibly? The relations of the family are closely bound by Jehovah. Husband and wife, father, mother, sons and daughters, are linked in bonds stronger than iron chains. The well-being of society depends upon the keeping of these in the place God ordained for them. That family, neighborhood, nation, is best and purest which regards them. It is always interesting and pleasant to be in the company of those who respect father and mother. I do not like to hear sons say "old man" and "old lady" when speaking of their fathers and mothers. I never did it. When men grow gray it is still an act of childish sweetness for them to heap up honor and attention upon their sires, now weighed down with years. What sight more beautiful than the white-headed mother leaning upon the arm of her boy in his strong manhood! It is indeed sweet music to hear all the members of the household speak to one another, and of one another, in gentle accents. Has God no law now on this subject? Eph. vi: "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth." Let me say to parents, Be certain to act in such a manner, and so live that you will be an object to be honored. In case Noah was drunk from carelessness, or from following his appetite, then we have an example which calls for honor on the part of the children, under all circumstances. This is best any way, sons and daughters. J. M. BARNES.

Dear Bro. Poe: In the ADVOCATE of December 28th, I wrote an article trying to show what seems to me to be an inconsistency, viz., the advocacy of ordination, by the laying on of hands, by any person who opposes re-baptism. I used in that article, as an example, a circumstance that had been detailed to me, by another brother, of a certain "talking elder." Soon after the appearance of that article in your paper, I received a letter from a brother inquiring of me if he was in my mind at the writing of said article. I replied that he was, also enclosed to him a letter from my informant, giving him his authority for the circulation of the report of his (the elder's) having gone off to find an ordained evangelist to baptize those who had confessed. I write this at the request of all parties alluded to above, (some of whom are your subscribers,) to state that they have met to-day, and have learned that said "talking elder" did not refuse to baptize the parties upon that occasion, or any where else; and that while he does prefer that others should baptize, he has no doubts as to his or any other brother's qualifications to act as administrator of that rite. The mistake made was found to be due to the misunderstanding on the part of my informant and his, which was amicably settled, and the wounded brother expressed himself as perfectly satisfied that none of us had aimed to do him injustice. God grant that we may all strive to "keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." A. McG.

We simply publish this letter as a specimen of many that we are forced to throw into the waste basket. Not but it is well written, and well intended, but as having no sort of interest to the public. No names were given in the former article, and no one outside of the home circle knows who the elder is; and the home circle know it is fixed up. But to please somebody among the home folks, Bro. McG. has been forced to write, and we to waste space, with that which does not, and cannot, interest a dozen readers. Don't you see? Now, we hope Bro. McG. will see what we aim at; viz., to show the parties how unnecessary for him to have to publish, since no names have been printed. J. T. POE.

This belongs properly to Bro. Poe's department, but it had gone to press before the reception of this, so we put it in the second form. We join with Bro. Poe in saying the necessity of publishing matters when no names are called, is all imaginary. Nobody at the office have the least idea who is meant, and I presume not a half dozen persons anywhere. D. L.

A WARNING.

To the Christian brotherhood before whom these presents may come, we would warn them against one W. W. Gilley, formerly a Christian preacher, as denying the one faith of the Lord and his Christ. He was at one time a member in good standing in this (Newhope) congregation, from whom we withdrew fellowship. He has in his possession credentials as an evangelist, done by order of the church of Christ at Newhope, on the second Lord's day in December, 1883.

TO THE FRIENDS OF BETHANY COLLEGE.

This institution is now in the midst of the forty-third year of its useful career. It was founded by Alexander Campbell in 1841, and was presided over by him till his death in 1866. Since then it has been under the presidency of W. K. Pendleton, who was one of its original faculty, and has rendered continuous service to it for forty-three years. We need not remind those familiar with the writings of Alexander Campbell how earnestly he labored to build up this most cherished of all the varied means which he so actively employed and relied upon for the growth, support and enlightenment and educated defense of the great work of reformation which, under providence, we all recognize he was called to inaugurate and establish. He said that, in an age of general popular education and ever advancing scholarship, the Church must lay hold of these instruments to advance and defend the claims and principles of apostolic Christianity; and, with the characteristic promptness and resolution of his great and devoted heart, he proceeded at once with his own means to erect the necessary buildings, employ a competent faculty, and so to begin the great work which we recognize to-day as the invaluable result of this movement.

The matriculates of the college count by the thousand, and, at the end of this current year, the number that will have taken full degrees will be over six hundred. It is not too much to say that they constitute the large body of regulative and controlling mind in our ranks. They occupy, in a good degree, our most commanding pulpits, fill our editorial chairs, man our colleges and academies, carry our plea abroad as missionaries, write our literature, conduct our discussions, oral and written, in defense of our position, and ennoble and adorn, by their Christian virtue and culture, every walk of social and public life in which they move. Through them, the college fulfills the noble ministry of the gospel, in diffusing its leaven throughout all the ranks of life.

In this essentially Christian service it has never done better or more thorough work than it is doing to-day. It has a complete and competent faculty, comprehensive courses of study, thorough and faithful instruction, and a class of students capable of high development and inspired by noblest motives of public usefulness. Its senior class is characteristically large, and will add about twenty to the distinguished corps of licensed workers already in the field from its halls.

The church was never more in need of the services of Bethany College, than now. The congregations, all over the land, are calling for reapers for the ever ripening harvests. Our most promising students are sometimes tempted to go forth under the urgency of these calls before they have finished their college studies. Bethany College should be enabled to furnish ten times the number to meet this want that it now supplies. The great duty the church owes to herself is to fill the fields with skilled and proved laborers. No thoughtful Christian can shut his eyes to the fact that this must be done largely through our colleges.

Alexander Campbell used to say, "If the brethren do not support Bethany College, its great work must cease." This is true. It has no means of meeting its expenditures, save those which come from the free will offerings of the Disciples. It was founded in the interest of the Church and depends upon the appreciation and liberality of its members. It has always been so. It has never been independent of the brethren. We believe it is true of all our colleges, that they have been compelled to stand in the attitude of perpetual beggars. This is no reproach to the colleges—humiliating as the necessity may be. They must do this, or give up this good and necessary work.

We acknowledge with gratitude the fact that this support has never utterly failed Bethany College. It has enabled its trustees to erect the largest and most creditable college building owned among us, to equip it with suitable apparatus, and for near half a century to pay a meager support to its faculty, and to retain a small nucleus of endowment. But for the last ten years the income from all sources has fallen short of the expenses of the most economical management. Previous to that time a large part of the income was derived from interest paid annually on notes given by friends to the college, but the principal of which had never come into the hands of the trustees. The wide-spread financial disaster which swept over the country in 1873, not only destroyed our hope of getting the principal, but also cut off the payment of the interest. This fact was stated to the friends of the College, and they were called upon to come to its aid in annual contributions of small sums for current expenses. This call was met with a liberality that saved the College from immediate suspension, and it has been in this way that it has been enabled to continue its services till now. But the time has come when this can no longer be relied upon, and we feel constrained to make the fact known to the hundreds of thousands of disciples who do not mean that Bethany College shall be deserted.

The building of Bethany College, which for architectural beauty and adaptation is a monument worthy of its great founder, needs repairs, and the increasing attendance of young ladies demands a suitable boarding-hall for their accommodation. Above all, the faculty must be provided for. It is known to many that our president is giving gratuitous service in his arduous and harassing position, and that none of the faculty is receiving more than a bare support. From time to time we have been compelled to give up our able and approved professors, because we could not compete with other and younger, but better endowed, institutions, in the matter of salary. Men who, in Bethany College, had built for themselves a national reputation, we have been mortified to have taken away from us, simply because we could not pay them a reasonable support, or as much as was offered them elsewhere. We believe that the friends of Bethany College will say this ought not, and must not, continue to be, and therefore we make this earnest appeal to them for aid.

We would not be understood as disparaging any other educational interest among us. Bethany College cherishes no spirit of rivalry with its many daughters. It rejoices in the prosperity of all, and would be gratified that they were all free from embarrassment, and enabled to work on a larger scale of usefulness. We trust this plea will be felt by the faculties and friends of other colleges, to be not unreasonably addressed to all. As our oldest institution and the alma mater of many of our most distinguished professors in our other colleges, it has a claim upon their gratitude and fostering care that no generous heart can ignore. We expect that this will be promptly acknowledged. It is proposed, therefore, to make this appeal as universal as possible. We wish to have it personally presented to the members of every congregation in the United States, and wherever the memory of Alexander Campbell is revered or his great work is appreciated, we expect to have it liberally responded to. It will come to some who have already given us something, and to others who have given us pledges that are not yet paid. To the former we return our thanks, and earnestly request them to remember our wants still once more; to the latter, we trust it will be a sufficient inducement to make good existing promises. But we expect it to reach tens of thousands who have never contributed a cent to Bethany College, and to those we say, give; if it be only a small token of your interest in Bethany College, still give something. If three-quarters of a million of Disciples will do it promptly, Bethany College will be relieved of her financial difficulties, and permanently secured against future want.

We appeal to six hundred alumni, to five thousand matriculates, to five thousand one hundred churches, to three thousand seven hundred and eighty-two ministers, and to five hundred and ninety-one thousand, eight hundred and twenty-one Disciples of Christ to give us each and all something, and give it promptly.

College.

P. S.—The foregoing statement and appeal of the Executive Committee of Bethany College is sent forth with my most hearty approval and fervent prayers. I trust it will not fall unheeded. I have given all the years of my public life, directly or indirectly, to the interests of Bethany College, and there is nothing which I cherish with so earnest a hope as that I may be spared to see it permanently and adequately endowed. I have asked the trustees to relieve me, after this year, of the daily drudgery of teaching, but I trust to be able only the more usefully to serve the college in other ways. The present necessity is an adequate provision for the support of our faculty. This, and a large attendance of students, we must work for. Our friends must help us. If there be any veneration for the memory of Alexander Campbell, let it be shown to the college he founded; if any appreciation or approval of my life-long services in its halls, let my friends help me to accomplish this most earnest desire of my heart, and lend me generous and speedy aid in endowing Bethany College.

W. K. PENDLETON,
President of Bethany College.

It cannot be too deeply impressed upon the mind that application is the price to be paid for mental acquisitions and that it is as absurd to expect them without it as to hope for a harvest where we have not sown the seed.—Selected.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

TO THE CLASS.

Now I am going to puzzle some of you Bible students next week, if I can. So look out. And don't you answer before you think either, else you may find yourself wrong. You know, almost any one can ask hard questions, but sometimes it takes very wise heads to answer. Now, I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll give a prize of a nice Bible to the girl or boy, under twenty years of age, who answers most of the queries correctly, as they appear in the ADVOCATE this year. And then, I will give another to any one over twenty years of age, male or female, who answers most queries correctly. I will keep a record, and will always publish one answer—the one I think shortest, and most pointed. Now look out next week, for I am going to put you to work.

THE BIBLE CLASS.

Our experiment of running a Bible Class has proved a success, and we expect to continue it. We want the publishers to set aside our column for our class weekly. Now for the class. Here comes W. T. Elliott, of Life Spring, Texas, and says, "Put me down as a life member in Our Bible Class." Of course we will, and glad to have you. He then proceeds to answer Sister Walker's queries, same as already answered and sent forward. Next comes Sister M. Z. Evans, from away over in Williamson County, Tenn. She, too, sends correct answers. Next comes Bro. Gowen again, and says, "Let the good work go on, etc." Here is his query for the class. We call it No. 6:

Dear Bro. Poe: Let the good work of the Bible Class go on. Please give the following question: "Before man was made I was created, without hands, without feet and without a soul. But in due time, God gave me a soul and afterward required that soul of me?" It is susceptible of two correct answers.—[Geo. Gowen.]

Dear Bro. Poe: I submit the following answers to Sister Walker's queries in last week's ADVOCATE:

1. Jesse had eight sons. See 1 Sam. xvi: 10; xvii: 12.
2. The inhabitants of Ammon, and particularly those of Bashan were the tallest people of which we have any record. "Whose height was like the height of cedars." They are thus described in Amos ii: 11.
3. Og, king of Bashan, slept on the iron bedstead. It was over sixteen feet long and seven wide.
4. Baptism is for the remission of sins when it is submitted to, by a penitent believer, in obedience to Christ's command.
5. I will let Paul answer No. 5. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." (Rom. vi: 4).—[Geo. Gowen, Flat Creek, Tenn.]

Rev. J. W. Cox, one of the editors of the Apostolic Times, a Kentucky "Campbellite" paper, retires from connection with it, because he no longer believes that baptism is in order to secure the remission of sins. Now if he believes in the operation of the Holy Spirit in the sinner's conversion, he had better quit his sect also, for the belief of the one and the denial of the other are about its only peculiar phases of faith—Texas Baptist Herald.

We dislike very much to accuse men like Bro. Link, of malicious misrepresentation, but his chances to know better than what he says here, puts it out of the question to say he is ignorant of the facts in the case. He certainly does know better. If not, he had better inform himself of the teaching—the doctrine advocated by the people he vulgarly calls "Campbellites." There is a religious reformation going on around him at this moment, of such giant proportions that his sneers and misrepresentations will never be able to shake it a particle. Baptists had better admit the facts at once, and meet us in a fair, scriptural, and logical examination of the things taught, and thus all be able to arrive at truth. No great minded man will stoop to misrepresent those who differ with him. A resort to this denotes littleness of mind.

If there is one truth taught plainly and unequivocally by our brethren, the operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion, is that truth. "Every case of genuine conversion, must be, begun, carried on, and ended by the Holy Spirit." This proposition is preached from all our pulpits, printed in almost every book, and yet Mr. Link, editor of the Texas Baptist Herald, says we deny the operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion. If ignorance led him into this error, we ask him to retrace. If otherwise, then we don't blame him for holding to the doctrine of "Total Depravity," for we think he has it bad. We were once totally depraved in the same way, and sympathize with Bro. Link in his benighted condition. But we can direct him to a guide out of all this ignorance, and wickedness—we refer to truth. Read your Bible, Bro. Link, without Baptist spectacles awhile, and you may yet come out safe.

My daughter still lingers with typhoid fever; has been sick now nearly three months. She seems no nearer well than she did two months ago. Temperature to-day, 104½. This will account for poor editorial work in Texas Department.

ARKANSAS ITEMS.

AN APPEAL.

To the disciples of Christ in Arkansas: Dear brethren:—I take this method of appealing to you in behalf of the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, one of the very best papers now published in the interest of pure, primitive, apostolic Christianity. The editors and co-editors of this paper have been too long before the public, and are too generally and favorably known, to need commendation from me. I simply appeal to you to aid me in an effort to increase the circulation of the ADVOCATE in our State, and thereby widen its influence for good. I firmly believe the ADVOCATE to be, in every way, worthy of a hearty support by the Christian Brotherhood of Arkansas, and that an increase of its circulation in our State will result in great good in the way of advancing the truth and building up the Master's cause in our midst. Hence I appeal to you to aid me in the good work. I need not stop to argue the necessity or importance of this work. Infidelity, sectarianism, and progressionism are rapidly on the increase in our land, and it behooves all who love pure, primitive, apostolic Christianity, and who desire to see it triumph over error of every name, and by whomsoever held, to strive earnestly together for the faith once delivered to the saints, and to stand firmly by and heartily support our editors who have given no uncertain sound upon the great truths of the gospel. What do you say, brethren? Shall we have your support? Can you not help us to raise a thousand subscribers for the ADVOCATE within the next twelve months? Will not every old subscriber who has not renewed, determine at once to do so, and get as many new subscribers as possible? All names and money sent to me at Woodlawn will receive prompt attention.

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfectly furnished unto all good works. 2 Tim., 3:16-17. From this it is evident that anything done as an item of religious service, not taught in the scriptures, is not a good work, and should, therefore, be avoided. If this rule should be applied to the missionary societies, conventions and other innovations, what would become of them? Let us stick to the book. It is the only safe and all-sufficient rule of life.

DESIGN OF THE GOSPEL.

"Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved": Mark 16:15-16. When the Savior gave utterance to this language, he had an end in view, which he designed to accomplish by the work which he commanded to be done.

This end is clearly stated by the apostle, thus: "When after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe: 1. Cor., 1:21. The end to be accomplished is "to save them that believe." Salvation. But what salvation is meant? The salvation which the apostles preached in the name of Christ. "Thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remissions of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem:" Luke 24:46-47. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins:" Acts 10:45. Remission of sins in the name of Christ is the salvation meant. This is evident from the scriptures just quoted.

We are now prepared to conclude that (1.) The design of the gospel is Salvation; (2.) The Salvation is "remission of sins in the name of Christ;" (3.) To accomplish this, it is necessary for the gospel to be faithfully preached, believed and obeyed. In other words, those who believe the gospel, repent of their sins, and are baptized in the name of Christ, "are the children of God, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," have "promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come"—have "passed from death unto life." How plain is all this. Yet it is heaven's method of saving men from their sins. No other method can possibly save men from their sins in this life, or from eternal condemnation in the life to come. O that men would turn away from their human systems, and be saved through the gospel of Christ. W. T. BRENDLOVE.
Woodlawn, Ark.

NOW, THEN, ALL TOGETHER.

The old year has gone, and we trust that the new one will be the better. Let us forget the things that are behind—our failures, disappointments, troubles, and even the good that we have done, and press on to the things that are before. Forward! forward!—"Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward."

The Christian Sower Tract Fund enters upon its third year. The second annual report of the work which was done in 1883 is now in the hands of the printer, and will be out in due time. I am anxious to bring out some new tracts early in 1884. Will you help me to do this? The seven kinds of card tracts now being printed are in such demand that, without increased contributions, I will not be able to supply all the destitute fields applying for them, and bring out new tracts. Suppose you begin the new year by sending me a liberal contribution. If you cannot do this, urge your congregation to take up a collection and send it as a New Year's offering to this Fund. Do not neglect it. Every cent received will be devoted to this work. If you cannot do this, send for some tracts and put them to work. Remember, the main object of this Fund is to give away tracts to those unable to buy.

Now, then, all together! and we will be encouraged to work in the new year.

Address, J. W. Higbee, Madisonville, Ky.

My list of marriages for the Christmas, and just before, is as follows: Clarence Hobbs to Miss Willie Branch; Robert Warden to Miss Mattie Kersey; Joe Lee Bates to Miss Sallie Stokes; J. R. Evans to Miss Sallie Boatright; M. C. Braden to Annie Boatright. J. R. BRADLEY.

A Chance to do Good.

I have frequent calls from Baptist preachers and others for "something that will explain your doctrine. The request is one that I am always glad to comply with; and I have already spent a good deal of money in this way. But I cannot meet the demand without help. I therefore ask the brethren-publishers, preachers, and others, to send me any books, tracts, or other literature, new or old, they are willing to donate for this purpose, and I will distribute to the best advantage. Please send at once by mail to D. M. BREAKER. Madisonville, Ky.

Our new house of worship in Washington City, will be dedicated on January 20th. The Church will be glad to welcome as many brethren from a distance as may desire to be present. Those who may wish the hospitality of the congregation, will oblige us by notifying us by letter, if possible, and by reporting at the church, Vermont Avenue, between N. and O. streets, where a committee will be in waiting to receive them.

Mr. Downing's Choice of Peaches.

With their sweet, rich, juicy, melting flavor, peaches are very pleasant to most tastes; some of the varieties, the yellow-fleshed ones in particular, are more or less vinous, which makes them especially acceptable to many persons. Modern facilities extend their season, too, large quantities being preserved each year by drying, evaporating, canning, etc. For marketing fresh the later kinds are preferred in this locality, but the list I venture to give will afford a succession of crop from the middle or last of July till the 1st of November:

Alexander, or Amsden, Early Louise, Large Early York, Yellow St. John, George the Fourth, Early Silver, Mountain Rose, Oldmixon Freestone, Morris White, Crawford's early, Foster, Wheatland, Crawford's Late, Steven's Rarripe, Stump the World, Steady, Salway.

The peach wants good soil and clean culture—two requisites within reach of industry; and must have hot weather—a summer condition which Providence generally supplies. Then, especially if large specimens of extra flavor are desired, there must be judicious pruning of the branches and thinning of the growing fruit. Also, be watchful against the borer, and hope that the mysterious blight of "yellows" may not come near.—Charles Downing, Orange Co., N. Y.

Rev. Phillips Brooks, in his lectures on preaching says that sentimentalism in religion is the result of a more or less defined skepticism; that when the foundations of faith are shaken in men, the impulses of reverence and worship remaining strong, a certain religion of sentiment grows up. Hymns which though beautiful are weak, and prayers that have no thought in them are illustrations. This sentimentalism is dangerous, because it claims for itself that it is religion, while asserting that religion belongs altogether to feeling, and that there is no truth but love. Sentimentalism and skepticism go together, like the fever and the chill, and need the same medicine of deeper faith, and more conscientious attention to duty. This is Mr. Brook's view. And, no doubt, sentimentalism is very prevalent among those who are somewhat skeptical. But we have often observed another sort of sentimentalism, which is not the result of skepticism, latent or conscious, but of religious emotion, divorced from a thoughtful study of the Scriptures.—S. S. Times.

It is Christ's grave that renders blessed the house of mourning; and so much is this thought for our soul's health, that in order to withdraw us from the stir and business of the world, God has appointed the continual return of night, wherein we may be in the grave; in darkness, stillness, and solitude. For night is nothing else but the due and necessary preparation for the morning, and that morning is the great Morning of the Resurrection and the coming of Christ. Let us throughout the night of this world be buried with Christ, and watching for his return.—Isaac Williams.

As the rushing torrents leaves behind it diamonds and rubies, so do the surging tides of judgment leave in their track graces more precious than costly stones.

BISHOPS, DEACONS, EVANGELISTS.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: One of our preaching brethren, in our community, has taken the position that elders and deacons, as spoken of in the New Testament, went out of existence at the same time, and in the same manner, as did apostles and prophets, and therefore they should not exist in our congregations now. He based his argument on Eph. 4th chapter and from 8th to 16th verse. Does "pastors" in eleventh verse mean same as elders and bishops in 1 Tim. 3rd chapter? He claims also that the work of the evangelist, as performed by Timothy, is not necessary now. Is he right? He is overthrowing the faith of some. I think something from you on the above subject would do good in our community just now.—N. A. Bestick, Comanche, Texas, January 1, 1884.

The preacher is clearly wrong in reference to elders and deacons, inasmuch as it was about the time the apostles and other inspired teachers, passed away, that the elders and deacons were recognized as those to whom the oversight of the church was committed. Timothy was to commit the word he had received to faithful men able to teach others. The qualifications of the elder were given to him and Titus, as they were to ordain the elders in the various cities and countries. This was near the end of Paul's life. The burden of all the churches had been resting on him. The teachers had been inspired. But these inspired teachers were dying out, the spiritual gifts were gradually fading from the church. That which was, in part was being done away; that which was perfect, the full will of God, the completed revelation was about being delivered to the churches, and the permanent ministry was ordained. The apostles sent the inspired teachers to ordain elders, place the elders properly to work in the churches, and to see that the churches were not neglecting any work. This was the last thing the apostles did for the permanent work of the church. If these are not permanent, the church itself is not permanent. They did not co-exist with the miraculous gifts, but were ordained for the continuity of the church after the gifts failed.

The pastors, mentioned in Ephesians iv, were doubtless, from their association, inspired teachers to look after and teach the flock until the perfect revelation should come. That they filled the position in the church mainly, that elders afterward filled we would judge from the meaning of the term, probable. If so, only the miraculous gifts connected with them were lost, and the work remained for the elders and deacons, under the completed law of the Spirit. Exactly what is meant by the "work of the ministry, as performed by Timothy," is not clear. Timothy and Titus were inspired, had miraculous gifts imparted to them by the imposition of hands. They did a work and exercised an authority by virtue of this inspiration, that no evangelist since can do or exercise. But the work of evangelizing is of the essence of the Christian religion itself. And no one can imbibe the Spirit of Christ without imbibing the evangelistic spirit.

That spirit is a desire to give the knowledge of the truth to those ignorant of it. One not possessed of this spirit is no Christian. Every one then is an evangelist to the extent that in his relations in life and to the extent of his ability, he imparts the knowledge of the truth to the world. If he is not able to go himself with the message of light to those who sit in darkness, he will help another to go who can. There is no doubt here. Unless a man is anxious to help send the gospel to those in darkness, he has not the first impulse of the Spirit of Christ. "If a man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

But in this work we are to be subject one to another, the elders are to a goodly extent the judge of the fitness of the members to do work in a field, and are to encourage the timid, the modest, the diffident, those who feel a sense of unworthiness, and are to restrain the forward, the unworthy, the self-confident. This amounts to a selection, a choosing those fit for a work. This certainly is recognized as right in the Scriptures. The apostle told them to choose messengers, these that seem good to them, to carry the temporal gifts to the needy, much more those to carry the word of life to the lost. These constitute the regular evangelists of the churches, who do the work of teaching the destitute. So far as Timothy and Titus did this work, the evangelists to-day and to the end of time must do the same work. No man ever planted a church but felt a desire to see that church do well, as naturally as a father corrects his children, he will strive to correct their wrongs, and teach them more perfectly the way of the Lord. In doing this, he does a work performed by Timothy and Titus.

Please give your views on the Lord's supper, whether we as Christians, should commune with members of other churches, and invite them to commune with us? Please answer at length through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.—[W. J. Dabbs.

We could not participate in the supper set forth by a body of unbaptized persons. We never invite any one to participate at the Lord's supper. Where the Bible teaching is not well understood, I always tell what it is. The Lord's supper was established for the Lord's people. Only those are his people, who have believed in him, have repented of their sins, and who have been buried with Christ in baptism, and are striving to live a godly life. If others partake, then the responsibility is theirs.

Bro. Humphreys, of Gadsden, Tenn., asks for the meaning of the sentence, "Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

Money is here called the Mammon of unrighteousness. The admonition is to so use your money as to make friends, that when ye fail here, they will receive you into everlasting habitations. That is, use your money to make a friend of God.

REVIVALS.—HOW TO PROMOTE THEM, as taught and exemplified by Bishops McIlvaine and M. Simpson, Drs. L. Beecher, A. Barnes, J. A. Broadus, T. L. Cuyler, R. W. Dale, J. Dowling, C. G. Finney, J. Hall, E. F. Hatfield, G. H. Heworth, J. Hoppin, J. Knapp, J. McCosh, A. Park, A. Phelps, E. Pond, W. B. Sprague, G. Shepard, C. H. Spurgeon, T. DeWitt Talmage, W. M. Taylor, J. Todd, and others. Edited by Rev. Walter P. Doe, New York. E. B. Treat, 757 Broadway, office of The Pulpit Treasury. 1884. pp. 443. Price $1.50.

The above is a useful book to the young man or the old one engaged in preaching. Its title is somewhat misleading in this day of sensational revivalism. It has no reference to that work, but is more properly suggestions by the successful preachers mentioned above, as to how a man may become a strong and useful preacher, and in this way a successful one. We know of no way in which, for the same amount of money, more helpful suggestions can be found than in this work.

Bishop Robinson (Protestant Episcopal), of Missouri, is quoted as saying, "For some time past almost all our accessions by ordination have been from other religious bodies. It is difficult for me to recall when we had a candidate who presented himself from the families of our own people." The fact has, strangely enough, been sometimes made a ground of self-gratulation,—as if unfruitfulness of men for ministerial service were an honor.

That shows two things; (1) That the failure of a regular support and large salary, and the lack of high social position are not the causes of the decrease in candidates for the ministry. As the Episcopalians pay better than any other denomination, and their ministers occupy high social positions. (2) It shows that the Episcopal churches, as now managed, could not exist were it not that others supply its ministry. That is, were it not for the existence of the sects opposed by Episcopalians, the Episcopal church would perish for the lack of teachers. We have long been satisfied that no church can be regarded as on a substantial basis, not even a congregation, that does not develop in its own membership talent and desire to do all its work, and to supply all the necessities of the church.

Bro. Allen complains we misrepresented him in saying he was opposed to societies or conventions. On reading our article over, we think there is some ground for the complaint. We did not intend to say Bro. Allen was opposed to societies or conventions. We knew he was not, but to the societies as organized and conducted, he applied the epithets quoted. While we were not specific enough in stating this, we think our article will bear out the idea that this was the impression we desired to make as to his position. If the reader will just re-read the articles and place the before societies, meaning as they now exist—he will get the idea that we wished to convey, and one that I think Bro. Allen will not complain of misrepresenting him. We certainly did not intend to misrepresent him.

Bro. H. F. Williams, from Cyruston, Tenn., says, "Nearly all the leading brethren here take the ADVOCATE, but very few of them study it. However, the women and children are furnished with wholesome, mental and spiritual food, and no doubt it is thus that the spark is kept alive." Is it not too much the case everywhere, that the men give themselves up to the things of the world, and depend upon the religion of their wives and children to study not only the ADVOCATE but the Bible also to help them to the better land. D. L.

THE WORK OF FAITH.

The work of faith is work promoted and brought out by faith. And since faith comes by hearing the word of God, nothing can be strictly and scripturally a work of faith that is not required in the word of God. This is true, both as regards conversion, and the practical work of the church. Nothing done for the conversion of sinners can be called a work of faith except such things as are set forth in the word of God, the gospel of Christ. Those therefore who pray for the direct operation of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of sinners, are by no means doing a work of faith, for there is no promise or example of any such thing in all the oracles of God. This work is wholly and essentially human in all its parts. Those who pray for the Lord to pardon sinners directly without obedience to the gospel, as is done in the prayer-system of conversion, are in no sense doing a work of faith, because there is neither precept nor example for anything of the sort to be done. The whole thing originated in human wisdom, and is carried on by human wisdom. There is not one example of anything of the sort in the word of God. No human creed or confession of faith in existence, is a work of faith, since there is not one word of authority for them in all the oracles of God. In fact, the word of God is openly, plainly and pointedly against every thing of the sort. Jesus said of the Jews, "in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Nothing of human wisdom can honor God, nor benefit man. Whatever of the word of God these creeds may have in them that is given in its proper connection and application, is only what that same word is in its own place in the Bible, and is valuable only because it is in the Bible. And whatever is in these creeds not found in the Bible, is as essentially human as the book of Mormon or the koran, and has just as little power to save. And it is very certain that there is very little of the word of God in any human creed, in its proper connection and applied as it is in God's own book. But on the other hand, there is more or less in every creed in the land that is palpably contradictory to plain statements in the word of God, and are therefore subversive of the word of the living God. Those therefore who follow, or in anywise subscribe to human creeds, are not doing a work of faith, but are working against faith.

Those Christians who idly or indifferently stay at home, or go elsewhere on the Lord's day instead of meeting with their brethren to break bread, are thereby refusing a work of faith. Those who simply go to hear preaching on that day, that would not go to break bread if there were no preaching, are acting upon human wisdom, human preference alone, and not upon the word of God. There is not one command nor example in all the New Testament for Christians to meet on the first day of the week to hear preaching. Yet there are large numbers whose names are on the church book, who go to meeting on Lord's day when there is to be preaching, but who stay at home when there is none. These are not doing a work of faith in so acting. There are many who claim to be Christians, who spend days, weeks, months, and even years, who never pray, either in the family or elsewhere. They know the Savior said "men ought always to pray, and not to faint." They know that Paul charged Christians to pray without ceasing, to pray everywhere, and for all men, for kings, and for all in authority. They know, too, that the word of the Lord says, "the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers," and that God in all ages has regarded the prayers of his people, and still they will not pray. They know that the Lord's people have, in every age, been a praying people. They know that David, Hezekiah, Daniel, and Nehemiah were praying men, and that God heard and answered their prayers. They know, that Christ prayed; that he even spent whole nights in prayer to his Father; that he taught his disciples to pray, and gave them a form of prayer. They know that the apostles and early Christians prayed often and earnestly; that Paul commanded Christians to pray always, with all prayer and supplication, and still they neglect to pray. Many even tell us, after all these passages named, and many more of the same sort, that prayer is of no avail, that God does not hear and answer prayer, but that everything is controlled by fixed laws, and that, therefore, prayer is useless, that it brings no blessing from the Lord. Such Christians are not doing a work of faith in this matter. They are following the wisdom, the opinions, the vain reasonings of men, while at the same time they are rejecting the word of the Lord, and refusing to bring their lives under its controlling influence. They are exchanging the word of the Lord, the wisdom of God, and adopting the ignorance and folly of faithless and rebellious men instead thereof. These men, though claiming to be Christians, are not walking, are not working by faith, and have no claims on the promises of God to his people. Let Christians, therefore, see that the actions of their entire lives are governed and controlled by the word of God. Many Christians fail to look after the poor, and even when cases of suffering come right before their eyes, they close up their eyes, stifle sympathy, disregard the word of God, and leave them to suffer on, or obtain help from others as best they can.

Thus they shut up their bowels of compassion against the suffering, the poor, and prove that the love of God does not dwell in them. No work of faith in such a course of life. Then again, when old and wealthy congregations employ the best preachers they can obtain, and keep them preaching for them all the time, and neither send them nor any one else out to preach the word of God to the weak and destitute, such congregations as these are not walking by faith, are not sounding out the word of life to a perishing world. Such as these wrap themselves up in their own selfishness, attend to their own wants, and leave others, even their own neighbors frequently, to perish for want of the pure bread of life. Why will not Christians walk by faith, work by faith, live by faith, and thus be ready to die in the triumphs of a living faith?

PREACHERS WANTING PLACES.

Bro. L. L. Carpenter reports from Indiana that he has the names of one hundred preachers that want locations. On the other hand, the cry is often coming up, from various quarters, where can we get a preacher? The harvest is great, but the laborers are few. What a pity that the one hundred preachers reported by Bro. Carpenter cannot find some of the above harvest fields yellowing for the reaper. There are troubles both with preachers and churches, regarding the work of the Lord. Preachers are watching around for good places, already built up, to sustain them. This class of preachers never think of going as pioneers, into new fields, to make their bread in part or in whole by tent-making while on Lord's days, and at nights in the week, they might build up congregations. When would the cause of truth have been established in this country, had our old pioneer brethren acted thus? Suppose brothers John Smith, J. T. Johnson, Samuel Rogers, Jacob Creath, and a host of others as good and great, of their day, had acted thus! That class of men have done the work of establishing the cause all over this broad land, very much of the work done at their own charges. But now young men, making preaching a profession; want to step into these churches, ready built to their hands, and make an easy living by furnishing entertainment for them. If the building of new churches depends on such men as these, it will never be done. These men want to step into places others have provided for them, and thus obtain a living out of Christianity without any self-sacrifice. We venture to affirm that there are good fields for building up new churches within reasonable reach of every one of the hundred preachers mentioned above, if they were only willing to do the work.

While we know the Scriptures teach that they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel, we are at the same time quite sure that the preachers that hang back, and advertise themselves, and will not preach till a living is insured them by others, will not do much good when they are employed. Churches that spend their means on this class of men will find that they have spent their money to little purpose. But those preachers whose heart are yearning for the salvation of souls, and who rush into the field and work whether men assure them any support or not, are the very men that are sought after by thoughtful churches. This class of preachers will find work, and be provided for, while they that wait, and growl about the stinginess and illiberality of the brethren will be left out to starve, or make their living some other way. We have never known a man whose heart was in the work, and who was competent to be useful, to suffer, who would rush into the field and work, pay or no pay. Earnest hard work is the best advertisement a preacher ever made of himself. Such men will always be in demand, and locations will hunt for them, more than they can fill, when they work awhile, and show that they can work. Young brethren, go to work. Preach some and make tents till you prove what you can do, and if you do any good, and prove that you can work successfully, positions more than you can fill will soon seek you. But don't stand off, and advertise, and tell what you can do, and still not do it. Then again there is a fault frequently among churches in these matters. They are too ready to take up and employ preachers that advertise themselves well, and put on a good outside appearance, without knowing what they are, or what their influence will be, whether good or evil. Many churches have passed by plain plodding men to employ flippant and smooth talkers, and have thereby almost blotted themselves out. Churches are too much inclined to call men from a distance, and overlook much better men near by. Then again churches are too much inclined to employ preachers to preach for them, and do not send them into new fields, or to weak churches, and thus fail to extend the cause beyond their own limits. Christians should not be selfish in any matter. And especially not so in the gospel of Christ. Souls are too precious for that. Every church that is able to employ a preacher and sustain him should send him out a liberal portion of his time to preach to the destitute. But we think churches should always be careful about employing strangers, because they are well advertised, and have flowing recommendations. Any body can get recommendations. And if preachers want to work, the way is always open for good to be done.

Obituaries.

Sister Maria Todd, of Auburn, Tenn., walks in the shadow of sorrow, for her husband has fallen asleep. It must be hard to say the last farewell to one's life-companion, the sharer of life's joys, sorrows and burdens. The children are wrapped in grief, for their father is no more. Oh! how sad it is, to say good-bye for the last time to a father! How our hearts are touched with sympathy, when we behold children weeping over the remains of a departed father. This is right; the human heart asks for sympathy. Jesus wept with the bereaved Mary and Martha. Paul exhorts Christians to "weep with them that weep." In this land of shadow, sorrow and bereavement, there is need of help to bear life's burdens; there is need of sympathy and love. Brother J. A. Todd was born January, 1839. Some time during his youth he became a member of the church, but for some cause he went back into the world. But, in that state, he loved to talk about the plan of salvation. So he was not satisfied in that condition. And in September, 1883, he came forward, desiring to live for God, and to contend for the faith that was once delivered unto the saints. He died the 24th of December, 1883. Those who knew him loved him best. For many years did the heart of his wife safely trust in him, and his children rose up and called him blessed. He was a good husband, and the praise of his wife; a good father, and the joy of his children; he was a kind neighbor and friend; he was the Lord's servant. His wife, children and friends, sorrow not then as those who have no hope. They only look upon him as resting from his labors, while his works do follow him. May they then rejoice in the promises of God, believing that all things work together for good to them that love him. May mother and children be faithful Christians till all meet once more and forever around the great white throne. R. S. ROBERTSON, JR.
Auburn, Tenn., December 29, 1883.

We are called upon to record the death of Sarah G. Miller, the widow of brother Isaac L. Miller. Sister Miller's maiden name was Hawking. She was born January 18, 1823. She became the wife of Is. L. Miller October 16, 1845. After her marriage, she joined the Baptist Church with her husband, and lived a devoted and worthy member of it until brother Abell, through his labors, caused sister Miller and her husband to re-examine the ground of their hope, by reading the Bible; they saw the truth and turned to it. They left many old friends and pleasant associations and became Christians, and only Christians. From that time no doubts disturbed their repose. The Bible being true, they were confident that they were pardoned, were children of God. Brother I. L. Miller died soon after his becoming a member of the church of Christ. Sister Miller remained behind until September 27, 1883, when she sank to the sweet and peaceful sleep of those who rest in Christ. She was calm, self-possessed, and uncomplaining in her last illness. She leaves two sons and one daughter to mourn her loss. Many friends are grieved to know that she is gone—no more on earth to gladden their social circle. Sister Miller died in the triumphs of the Christian faith. No cloud obscuring the bright future. She died at her son's, Newton Miller, at the old homestead near Rucker, Rutherford County, Tenn. Bro. James Scobey preached her funeral from Rom. xiv: 18. A. ALSUP, JR.

THE CARE OF YOUNG CONVERTS.

One phase of Church-life and work to which it were well to give especial and earnest thought in these days, is the care and culture of young Christians after their conversion. It is not enough to lead them to Christ and to the door of the Church, with all earnest love and gentle aid, and then instantly withdraw every helping hand, leaving them to go on alone after that. The points of struggle and of danger are not all past when conversion is reached.

One of the arguments used in pressing upon the disciples of Christ the duty of public confession and affiliation with the Church, is their need of Christian sympathy, and that help which comes from the mutual association of Christian people. They are assured that the church will thus be to them a pillar of strength, that the love and cheer of its members will be to them a source of continual inspiration.

When they are publicly received into the church, it is customary to pledge them affection, interest, sympathy, and care on the part of all the members. They are told that they are now taken into the family, and may depend upon receiving all the help they need. The church will be to them a cherishing mother. If they are weak, she will put her own strength under them. If they are in sorrow, she will bring them comfort. If they are sorely tempted, she will shelter them. If they are overcome, and fall, she will lift them up, and, without chiding, will seek their restoration. * * *

Now surely every young Christian has a right to expect that these pledges shall be kept. He has a right, because the pledges have been given, and the church surely ought never to break faith with its children; then he has a right, because it is the very business of the church thus to be to him a cherishing mother. His church-membership should be a help and a blessing to him. Entering as a young Christian, he should not merely be welcomed at the door, and then be left to care for himself, but he should receive encouragement, sympathy, and fresh impulse at every step. There should be a mutual interest among the members in one another. * * *

The church tie, next to that of the home, should be the closest on the earth. When one, two, or five hundred Christian people are associated together in the same church, no guild or fraternity in this world should be so closely knit as that society, or compose so real a brotherhood. It should be in the truest sense a mutual help association. Each member should know that if he is sick he will receive such ministrations of kindness as he may need; that if he is in trouble he will be sure of sympathy and aid; that if sorrow comes to his home he will have all the comfort the most tender human friendship can give; that if he is in sore stress of any kind he will not be left to sink beneath his burden, but will find brotherly hands outstretched to him.

Every young Christian should be sure of finding in the church a shelter and a home. He should find so much that is helpful in his new relations that the associations of his old life will have no power to tempt him back. It is sometimes said that the world is drawing men away from the church; that other societies are proving stronger in their influence than the church. The way to win men and hold them is to make the church-life so much warmer, better, more helpful, more inspiring, that the world cannot compete with it. A gentleman found that his well was dry. Seeking for the cause, he discovered that his neighbor had sunk a shaft ten feet deeper than his, and of course the water had flowed to him. The society or association that goes the deepest, that perceives and best provides for the wants of human souls, that really does the most for them, will always the most strongly draw men to it.

The way, therefore, to bring men into the church, and keep them in it, is to make the church a true help to them. In no way can this be done so effectively as by realizing in all its fullness and blessedness the New Testament ideal of Christian fellowship. When the members of the church truly love each other, when they are indeed knit together as one family, when each is carried in the heart of all the others, and are ready to lay down their lives for each other, then no member, sorely tempted or tried, shall ever need to utter the cry, "No man careth for my soul!" Then no one will sink down and be allowed to lie and perish where he fell. The pastor of such a church will not need to say that he dreads to bring young converts into his church because it is so cold, or because there is no provision for their growth and nurture after they have been received.—Washington Teacher.

PORTLAND AVENUE CHURCH

Is in the western part of the city. The field of labor is large and difficult. The Church owns a handsome lot, but the house is very indifferent, and owing to dampness, which we have tried in vain to remedy, unhealthy. It was first a stable, then a tobacco barn, then a Methodist church. My first meeting was held in it when it belonged to the Methodist. The Church has now one hundred and twenty members. It has never been strong financially, is not now, but has always been liberal, giving more proportionately, than any other congregation in this city, so far as I could learn. It is true that a few of the members bear the money burdens. The majority are willing but not able to do much. Some few are able but not willing. In my labors in various cities & schools, I must put on record that Portland Avenue has the best teachers, and the best taught school I ever saw. A large number of the additions were from the school. As brother H. planted quite a number of copies of the Advocate in the Church, I have a few words for

OUR NEW MEMBERS.

You have simply made the start; the race is yet to be run, and the crown to be won. That you may run the race and win the crown, you must train regularly with the church. Do not be like the digit "9" with its tail cut off. Prayerfully desire to be of some account in the church.

Attend regularly all the meetings of the church; read your Bible and esteem it a privilege to give of your means, however small, to aid in the work of the Lord. Avoid theatres, saloons, etc., as you would malaria. These things mean death to your spirituality. Avoid gossip, tale-bearing, etc. We have enough funnel members now. They retain nothing, and but serve to transfer gossip from one member to another. Their tongues are set on fire of hell, and their work tends to the destruction and death of the church. It will soon be evident by your works, whether you joined brother Harding or surrendered your hearts to Christ. I am glad to know that the brethren deeply feel the responsibility placed upon them in caring for these newly made members. My earnest prayer is that each one may lead "a sober, righteous, godly life," and be eminently useful during life, and supremely happy in eternity. R. B. NEAL.

CHURCH NEWS.

I send a short report of the labors of our beloved evangelist, E. H. Rogers, of Wilson county, in this Valley and adjoining counties. Beginning in July, he held his first meeting at Shell Mound. Continued one week, and the immediate result was eighteen noble souls added to the saved. The following Lord's day they all came over and united with the congregation at Jasper, and it was truly a red-letter day with the little struggling band of disciples at this place. There were seventeen additions at Washington, Rhea county, and twenty-five at Crossville, Cumberland county. The field is very large, extending over portions of seven counties. There have been one hundred and seven additions in all, and two congregations organized, and one or two resurrected, and the prospects are very encouraging for the future. Bro. Rogers has labored in this field nearly two years, and he has been blessed with much success in out-of-the-way places where the ancient gospel had never before been heard. He has been preaching only a short time, but he handles the sword with the skill of a veteran, and he enjoys to the fullest extent the love and confidence of the brethren wherever he goes. May the Lord bless him abundantly in his labor of love for the grandest cause the earth has ever seen.—[Mrs. W. H. Walker, Jasper, Tenn., January 1st, 1884.]

Our little band of disciples worshipping at Union Hill has finally secured the services of a preacher (J. B. Davis, of Arkansas,) to labor one-half of his time in this (Bossier) parish, next year. Union Grove church, in Claiborne parish, controls him the other half of his time. This parish has been given up to sectism for years, with the exception of Union Hill, and prejudice runs high; but we have some hope of a better feeling ere long. Bro. Davis is a good preacher, one that we can depend upon to stand firm for the faith once delivered. I went six miles to-day to hear a Baptist preacher explain the difference between the Baptist church and the "Campbellite" church. He said they taught that a man out of the church was nowhere in the New Testament, commanded to pray; that giving in an experience was not scriptural; that baptism is for the remission of sins; that faith obtained by hearing of Jesus through the written word, was saving faith, and that the Holy Spirit did not act in the conversion of the sinner except through the word. He labored nearly two hours to prove to the contrary, but I am persuaded that a great many will not take his word, when the word of God is so much to the reverse. To prove the mourner's bench system, he referred to "Blessed are they that mourn." To prove that sinners should pray, he referred to Paul and Cornelius. To prove that faith through the word alone was not saving faith, he referred to his own experience. Notwithstanding Christ's language John 17th also John 20th. The gist of his remarks on baptism was that, "It is not for the remission of sins." A few remarks from you on the same subject would be gladly read by many, I think, and a few copies of the Advocate to hand around might be of some benefit. After preaching I disposed of two copies of the Advocate, and some of Bro. Higbee's card tracts.—[H. H. Montgomery, Rocky Mount, La.]

Grace came by Jesus Christ, or in other words, all the blessings that come from heaven come through Jesus Christ. I do not believe a man can get anything from God the Father unless he takes it through his son. As it was with the people who went into Egypt for corn, if they went to Pharaoh he sent them to Joseph, so all the gifts we get from heaven must come through Christ, the one man that God has sent into the world to save the world; and if we reject Christ we cannot have the blessings of heaven.

The faults, the sins, the imperfections that men see in us, or we feel in ourselves, are indeed our burdens, which we must bear for ourselves, and should bear for each other, humbly, but without discouragements; waiting till the new man be grown up to the fulness of the measure of the stature of Jesus Christ.—Caroline Fry.

WHAT IS IT THAT UNITES?

The following clipping is from the "Budget" of the Christian-Evangelist. It seems to me to furnish so good an argumentum ad hominem that it deserves a place in the ADVOCATE.

"If a claim to take the Bible alone will secure a union among the tribes of Christendom," says the Baptist Flag, "why are not the Lutherans and Campbellites (Disciples) united?" "A claim to take the Bible alone, and being governed by it in all things is another and very different thing. 'Tis the latter, not the former, that unites. Do you see, neighbor?"

Just so, brother Evangelist.—All those people who take the Bible alone and are governed by it in all things are united. And in so far as divisions exist among the children of God, they arise out of a neglect of this rule. If Christians would be content to lay aside their opinions, and to be guided strictly by the inspired word, walking in the footsteps of Christ and the apostles, divisions would necessarily disappear from the midst of them. This is true because the Bible is a "perfect law of liberty;" and James says that whoso looketh into it, and continueth therein, being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his doing. Paul says of it that it thoroughly furnishes the man of God to "all good works." It is a perfect guide to the Christian through the wilderness of this world to the city of everlasting rest. Those who follow its teachings never walk in different ways, for it was given to guide us along the "narrow way" that leads to life. It leads us into Christ, and keeps us in him, while we follow its teachings; but to continue in Christ is all that is necessary; for, says Paul, "Ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power."

Well does the Evangelist say, "A claim to take the Bible alone is one thing; taking the Bible alone and being governed by it in all things is another and very different thing." Do the editors of the Evangelist and the many readers of their paper who sympathize with them and sustain them in their work take the Bible alone and submit to be governed by it in all things in their religious work? I don't believe that they themselves would claim that they do. I presume a very great majority of them, certainly very many of them, favor instrumental music in the church, and use instruments in their worship. Do the scriptures lead them into this? Are they governed by the word of God in thus adding to the worship? No, indeed! They know well enough that though under Judaism the Israelites used instrumental music in the worship of God, and the Gentiles also in their idolatrous service, both Jew and Gentile left their custom behind them in coming into the church of Christ. When God desired this service, he commanded it, saying "sing" and "play upon instruments;" this was under the former dispensation; in the New Testament he commands us to sing. What right has any man to assume that our Master will be pleased with the musical service of the former days now, when he has changed the command? Did he mean nothing by the change? When the Campbells began their effort to restore primitive Christianity, they left the instruments out of their congregations. For many years we had no trouble on the music question; but of late organs have been introduced into many churches, and many divisions have resulted. Men who believe that God meant something by omitting the instruction to "play upon instruments" from the New Testament are constrained to oppose this innovation, and hence the divisions. Does not the Evangelist know that if the churches had been content to take the Bible and be governed by it in this matter, the divisions would have been avoided? Is it not sinful to depart from the teaching of the word and thereby to divide the churches of the Lord? Are not those who bring in this innovation guilty? Are not those who encourage and comfort them in their sin equally guilty?

Again, there is great division among the workers in this reformation about societies for sustaining ministers in publishing the gospel. It is an undeniable fact that there are two wings to this reformation, and that they are drifting further and further apart. The missionary society question seems to be the greatest cause of trouble in bringing about this separation. The Evangelist favors these societies, working for them with all of its might; it stumbles not at their constitutions and by-laws, their presidents, vice presidents and secretaries, their evangelists general state and district, their managing boards, etc. All these are humanisms about which the Bible is perfectly silent. Missionary work was done, under the direction of inspired men, for seventy years, without them; they are causing strifes, alienations and divisions among the disciples of our Lord; nevertheless the Evangelist is for them with all of its might; and those on its side of the question, as a general rule, are disposed to sneer at those who contend for the simple, apostolic way as idle, stingy croakers. If we would be content in this matter to take the Bible and to be governed by it in all things, would not the divisions on this question cease? Our brother editor can tell readily enough why it is that the Lutherans and "Campbellites" are not one people though both claim to take the Bible alone as their rule of faith and practice; can he tell why it is that the people nicknamed Campbellites are themselves divided on the question of church music, missionary societies, etc? His own words answer the question well: "A claim to take the Bible alone is one thing; taking the Bible alone and being governed by it in all things is another and very different thing. 'Tis the latter, not the former, that unites." Don't you see, brother? We call upon the world to unite upon the Bible alone; we tell them it is an all sufficient rule; we say no divisions can exist while we cling to it, closely follow its teachings in all things; let us then act as we preach, or else give up our plea for union on the Bible. Many of the disciples have already practically given up that plea. They should repent, or quit preaching it.

DOES THE LORD TAKE PLEASURE IN US?

"The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy." Ps. cxlvi: 11. It matters not what men may think of us, say about us, or do to us, if God takes pleasure in us. Though all the world say of a man he is foolish, if God considers him wise, happy is he; though all call him wicked, if in God's sight he is righteous, blessed is that man. If God takes pleasure in us we are indeed enjoying true prosperity; but "the Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him," says the psalmist as quoted above; it is pleasing to him that we should hope in his mercy."

Not only is it true that God delights in having us fear him and love him and trust him, but he is provoked to anger when, instead of fearing, loving him and trusting, we forget him, and act as though his eyes are not upon us. Hence he cries indignantly, "Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number." (Jer. ii: 22). The maid does not forget her ornaments; no! no! when she makes her toilet in the morning she thinks of every one of them, and puts it in its place. When did a bride ever forget her attire and go in to the wedding in her ordinary dress? How many times have you, dear reader forgotten God at morning, noon and night? Do you never neglect your prayers? Do you not sometimes do things that are wrong without fearing his anger? Do you not sometimes, when you are doing your duty, fear about the result? It is wrong not to fear the consequences of a wicked deed, or to dread, the results of a righteous one. A want of faith is displayed in both cases. We should so fear him as to be deterred from doing wrong, and so hope in his mercy as to be joyful in the performance of that which is right.

Isaiah says, (Isa. i: 3), "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." They did not display as much faith and trust as these brutes, the ox and ass. Instead of turning to their Lord in their times of want and distress, they turned to the nations around about them, or to the idol which their hands had made.

WE MUST DO IT.

That is, we must read the Bible. There is no such thing as living the Christian life without the word of God in the mind and heart. Those who think that Christianity consists merely in refraining from doing acts of evil are sadly mistaken. "Oh, he is one of the best Christians in the world!" exclaims one of his neighbors. Why does he consider him so good? "Because he does not steal, nor lie, nor defraud, nor in any wise hurt anybody or meddle with anybody's business. He attends to his own affairs, and lets other people alone. Nobody ever speaks evil of him."

All this may be very true, and yet the man may lack a great deal of being a Christian. Indeed, if it is all true, it is certain that he is not such a Christian as he should be. For the Christian's life is a warfare; and no man can engage in a war, and at the same time attend to his own business and let other people alone. Such a soldier would not amount to much in any army. The spirit of Christianity is bold, resolute and aggressive—a spirit of vigorous activity. This activity, in order to be in harmony with the will of God and well-pleasing to him, must flow from faith; and faith comes from the study of the word of God. If, therefore, we would be Christians, we must read the Bible, we must study the Master's word. As faith in God and a knowledge of his will necessarily precede all obedience, (for we cannot obey one in whose existence we do not believe, nor one whose will we do not know) the study of the word, by which we obtain faith and knowledge, seems to be the most important matter of life; far more important than eating, or drinking, or sleeping. Hence Job said that he had esteemed the words of God more than his necessary food, Job xxiii: 12, and David tells us how blessed is the man who delights in the law of God, who meditates on it day and night.

In addition to the study which the preparation of articles for the press and of discourses has required of me, I have thought it wise to keep up a regular, daily reading of the Bible. Sometimes for weeks I would read many chapters daily, and then again being very much pressed for time by a debate, or by an extensive correspondence, or by some other cause, I would fall back to one chapter per day. And I have invariably observed that as I grew careless about the reading of the word I lost energy and vitality in the service of the Lord. About everything we should attend to the reading of the word. We may not, on some account, have time to eat three meals per day, we may not have time to visit a neighbor, or to make a few dollars we would like to have, but we must find time for this reading. It is of too much importance to be omitted or overlooked. Our destiny during the endless cycles of eternity depends upon how we walk here for a few days. The Bible is the lamp for our feet, the guide for our pathway; hence we cannot do without it for a single day without losing something in the journey. He who studies diligently and prays faithfully will most certainly understand and do; and those that do his commandments thus wash their robes and make them white.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. J. B. Briney appears as one of the editors of the Times.

"Of all the defects of utterance, the most serious is having nothing to say."

Bro. W. J. Loos has been ill. Was too ill to preach on last Lord's day, but we are glad to learn he is better.

"Proper Division of the Word" is out of print. If another edition is gotten out, notice will be given. Bro. Breaker's tract is also out. Please do not send for these.

The Houston Post, speaking of the "fifteen Mormon missionaries" soon to be sent to Texas to make converts, quietly advises to "send no men that cannot be permanently spared."

The Christian Advocate quotes this as though it approved it. Does it approve the spirit?

Saturday night, January 9, on the plantation of W. G. Taylor, Lenoir county, N. C., an entire family of negroes, William Croom, wife and six children were burned to death. The weather that night was the coldest in twenty years, and it is supposed that a large fire was made before retiring and the house caught from brands rolling on the floor.

Married at the residence of the brides father, H. T. Arnold, East Nashville, January 10, Sanford Duncan and Sallie Arnold, by E. G. Sewell. The happy young couple started immediately to the depot, carrying the congratulations and good wishes of many friends. May length of years, happiness and usefulness be theirs.

At Bellville, Ill., a Catholic Convent was burned. There were sixty-three persons in the convent at the time of the fire. Of these, twenty-six were Sisters, twenty-two of whom were saved, and four lost. Thirty-two were boarding pupils, ten being saved and twenty-two lost. The five candidates were all saved. Of the scholars, seven were saved and twenty-six lost.

Please say in the ADVOCATE that J. Harding, of South Tunnel, Tenn., on his way back to Ghent, stopped and preached six discourses, and seven were added to the congregation, 25 Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky. A happy meeting. Say to the brethren in Texas, I think of visiting them soon, those that want meeting. My address, J. Harding, 251 Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

Bro. Jesse Sewell was in the office twice during the last week. We were glad to see him looking as well as he does. He complains of weakness yet. He was on his way to Lebanon to look after the condition of a dwelling he owned there, that had been burned down a week or so back. We are glad to say it was insured for two-thirds of its value, so the loss will not be so heavy on our brother.

Bro. Granville Lipscomb has begun work in Nashville, to labor in South and North Nashville, and other points promising good, and to look up the scattered, indifferent and neglected disciples, and induce them to meet together and worship. He will labor in this field through the winter months, at least.

The cold weather of the past week has been the severest for a number of years,—in some places, it is said to have been the coldest for forty years. The thermometer through this State ranged from 5 to 12 degrees below Zero. In the Northern States, it is reported as low as 40 degrees below Zero. The snows have been the heaviest for several years.

"Please correct two errors in marriage notice in this week's issue. Instead of December 18th, it should be December 19th; instead of Mr. J. T. Srun, it should be Mr. J. T. Green, to Miss Maggie Ragland. I suppose the mistake is attributable to my careless writing."—[P. W. Harsh, January 4, 1883.]

Our brethren must learn to write proper names very plainly. Attention was called to this name in the proof-reading, and on examination, all parties concluded it was as printed. D. L.

The Missionary Baptist has removed its place of publication from Lebanon to this city. My old friend, Elder G. W. Griffin, is booked as associate editor. The elder knows more Scripture truth, and has more independence in declaring than the great majority of Baptist preachers and editors. We hope he will be able to revise the style of the Missionary to that of fair discussion, instead of the unfair, one-sided thrusts and misrepresentations of those it opposes. At the same time that it moves here, Elder W. H. Stirckland, of this city, became associate editor of the Baptist Reflector at Chattanooga.

BETHANY COLLEGE.

We direct attention to the appeal of Bethany College, in this number of the ADVOCATE. The purposes of the appeal are stated in it. The executive committee desire that the appeal should reach all the brethren, and that all friends of Bethany College may have an opportunity of giving much or little to put it on a firm basis. Bethany has an honorable record as an educator among the disciples. Its many graduates and their friends doubtless feel an interest in placing it upon a firm foundation for present and future usefulness. Many of our truest and best men, and most scholarly teachers and preachers, are of the number of its graduates. Among them, Bro. J. A. Harding, our associate editor. The schools and universities that stand faithful to the Bible in this day of educated infidelity and scientific skepticism, ought to be sustained. We know of none that do this more faithfully than Bethany College. Any means sent to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE will be forwarded to the trustees at Bethany College.

We direct the attention of the readers of the ADVOCATE to the circular of Fanning Orphan School in this number. This is a good work. It does not assume the work of the church. It affords means for the church doing its work—the work of educating and training orphan children under favorable circumstances and at small expense. If the school is once on a self-sustaining basis, we expect many individuals and churches to care for and train orphans for virtue and usefulness here, and for heaven hereafter, that would else be left to go down to degradation here and to hell in the world to come. What the trustees need now is means sufficient to put the school in condition to afford the needed facility for the Christians and churches to do this work.

It seems to me that the mere knowledge of the fact that means are needed, should prompt every one able to give, to do it at once, without waiting to be begged to do it. The money that a Christian withholds from work like this will never bring good to him or his family. There is money enough now sinking the children of Christians down to ruin, to at once supply all the need of this work.

D. L.

CAUGHT IT.

Recently there seem to have been quite an epidemic of calling hard names among our papers. The Standard applied very ugly epithets to us, and withdrew the light of its countenance from our sanctum, then to the Review, now to the Old Path Guide. The Old Path Guide retorts in kind. The Times and the O. P. G. have exchanged not very loving epithets, and the Times use words not soft toward the Kentucky Department of the ADVOCATE. Our readers all know how weak the ADVOCATE is. All the while the C. Evangelist and Standard have been eyeing each other with watchfulness, showing they would feel much better to speak out and free their minds. All this animosity and wrath have come from the Societies. But now the Baptist papers seem to have caught the infection, and the last number of the Baptist Reflector has an article on the Reliquos Herald, bristling with the epithets of slander and slanderer. Strange enough too, the conventions are made the occasion of this outburst of bitterness. But we only intended to advise our Baptist brethren, if they must copy our example, do it in some more worthy feature than this. Free thought, free speech, free discussion, frequently breed free quarrels and ugly manifestations of temper and language among those enjoying these franchises, but there are other things among us more worthy to be copied by our neighbors.

THE CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY FOR JANUARY

Is at hand. Its table of contents is as follows:

(1) The New Testament Greek, Pres. C. L. Loos; (2) The Controversy Between Science and Religion, Pres. W. K. Pendleton; (3) The New Testament and Righteousness, R. T. Matthews; (4) The Genuineness of the Pentateuch, by Thos. Munnell; (5) Christians Missions, by F. M. Green; (6) Spirits in Prison, by H. Christopher; (7) Wilford Hall's Reply to Clark Braden; (8) Revised English Testament, by H. Turner; (9) Among our Exchanges, Editor; (10) Book Notices, by the Editor.

The first of these articles is an interesting and instructive one to those who will study it, on the elements and derivation and the proper translation of the New Testament Greek. The second is a clear statement of the true relations of science and the Bible, with the assurance there can be no conflict between the two. It is only the Bible misapplied, or science falsely so called, that can conflict. While the Bible is a revelation of God's will, and not of scientific truth, and in its language adapted itself to the state of knowledge on other subjects of the people to whom the revelation was made; no statement of truth in the Bible can contradict any discovery of science. No such contradiction has been discovered. The man of faith may rest sure none ever will be. The trouble is, men make their ideas of what the Bible teaches, the standard in religion, and weak men hasten to make crude conclusions drawn from misconceived facts, the decretal of true science, and show more anxiety to oppose the Bible than to know the truth of science. The article on "The Spirits in Prison" is a close translation and exegesis of the Greek text, showing plainly, that "the days of Noah" was when Christ, by his Spirit, preached to the Spirits now in prison—in Hades. The other articles are interesting.

Discontent.

BY AILENROC.

[For the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.]

A poor stone-cutter, at his work one day,
Was grieved to see a rich man pass that way—
A rich man, in his costly garments dress'd,
His proud heart beating 'neath a silken vest.
'Oh! would that I were rich!' the poor man said,
"That I might take my ease on silken bed,
Or walk abroad in garments soft and fine,
And menial labor never more be mine."
An angel heard him and, in pity true,
Said, "Thus it shall be granted unto you."

Joy thrilled his heart; a rich man now was he,
His glowing eyes his grand possessions see.
In brodered, silken robes his limbs he dressed,
On soft and perfumed couch he took his rest.
But lo! on looking forth one balmy day,
Hesaw the mighty Emperor pass that way.
The haughty ruler of a goodly land,
Whose word was law—whose nod a high command—
Slaves ran to wait on him at beck and call,
And held aloft the golden parasol.
"Ah!" said the man, and spurned his silken bed,
"I would I were the Emperor, that o'er my head
That great and golden parasol be spread."
While yet he breathed his bold aspiring prayer,
"Thy wish is granted," echoed in the air.

He was the Emperor, and looking 'round
He saw his subjects bowing to the ground.
His august will no living man defied,
And servants followed him when in his pride
He sallied forth, and high above his head
The royal, golden parasol was spread.
But lo! the sun sent down a burning ray,
And blistering heat beset the royal way.
The mighty monarch gave a fretful cry—
"I would I were that blazing orb on high!"
And lo! ere yet his boastful wish was done,
He felt his being change—he was the sun.

Full of his power and heat he shot his beams
To north and south—to east and west his gleams,
And cried, exulting in his strength and light,
"Where is the thing that can withstand my might?"
When lo! just shaping in the hazy blue
He saw a cloud, and sought to pierce it through.
But vain the effort; as the cloudlet passed,
Dark shadows on the earth beneath were cast.
Hot grew the sun in anger, in dismay said he:
"Can watery masses interfere with me?"
If so, kind angel," then he called aloud,
"Grant my petition, let me be a cloud."
The indulgent angel harkened to his prayer—
He was the vaporous mass floating in air.

Above the earth he rolled his course along
And saw the workmen—heard their merry song;
Saw them look up to scan the darkening sky,
And shook with laughter as he watched them fly;
Saw frightened herds forsake the grassy plain,
And children scamper from the coming rain.
"Now here is strength," he cried; the torrents poured,
The lightning flashed, and swollen waters roared;
The earth seemed reeling 'neath the mighty shock,
But lo! there barred the way a massive rock.
Silent and grim, unmoved by storm it stood,
While 'round it seethed the roaring, boiling flood.
Enraged that anything his power should mock,
He cried: "I would I were this solid rock."
Harder he grew, hard as the granite stone,
And on the plain lay silent and alone.

He was the rock. Green mosses on it grew,
And scarlet berries peeped the green vines through.
Unmoved by storm, unwarmed by sunny ray,
Silent and still the ages through it lay.
But lo! a workman at the stony foot,
Where grasses grow and clinging vines take root;
And as his chisel sharp the workman plies,
The stony fragments all about him flies.
The rock was smitten with a swift alarm,
Viewing the strength of that uplifted arm;
Hearing the ring of metal at his side;
Feeling the fissures made both deep and wide.
"I'm powerless," he cried, "my strength is gone;
My day is past, and I am all undone."
Again, his wishes to the stronger ran,
"I'd be contented if I were a man,"
And lo! he was, as he had been before,
A simple workman, ignorant and poor;
But one excelling in his freedom now,
And in the stamp of manhood on his brow.
In humble, grateful prayer, his knee he bent,
Crying "what e'er my fate," I am content;
Dissatisfied no more with my hard lot,
Though mine the meagre fare, the humble cot,
Since I am part of His almighty plan—
The noblest work of God, a man!
Watched by that sleepless, tearless eye,
And given a spirit that can never die.

HOW GAMBLING BEGINS.

A PLAIN TALK WITH YOUNG MEN.

How gambling often ends is illustrated by the recent suicide of a young man of high social standing who was well known in the "sporting" circles of New York. Tampering with cards and the roulette-table had aroused in him the same insane furor which tempering with the bottle arouses in the victims of strong drink. We are told that this wretched young man married; but "even marriage did not cure him of what had become a positive disease. Little gambling parties in his room at the hotel, and reckless plunging at the public tables soon ran away with his winnings, and with the greater part of his fortune besides. At least, a few months ago, he found himself ruined. His former friends fought shy of him; and in a pitiable depressed frame of mind, he said: 'I'll go to Philadelphia, and either make or break myself.' To Philadelphia he went, with a revolver in his trunk. He played nearly the whole time he was there. The record was monotonous. His old luck had deserted him; and one night he went to his room at the hotel and put a bullet through his brain."

Such is one of the latest tragedies perpetrated under the insane infatuation of the gaming-table. But their number is legion. Many of the mysterious suicides which fill the records of the morgues, or haunt the depths of the rivers around our cities, would tell the same story. Gambling is prevalent to a degree, which sober, quiet people never dream of. It is practiced—often, indeed, in a small way and for moderate stakes—by thousands of young men in all our cities; practiced in the privacy of their rooms at their lodging-houses, as well as in houses for "professional" play. Employers little suspect—alas! fathers and mothers little suspect—what devilish mischief is going on under the cover of secrecy. Many of the larcenies committed in stores, counting-rooms and banks (some of which are "hushed up" in order to save reputations) are committed in order to cover up the losses at the card table. On the other hand, the illegitimate winnings at the same tables will account for the fine equipage or showy turn-outs of certain fast men whose legitimate income is too slender to maintain such extravagance. Gambling is a moral pestilence that "walketh in darkness," and therefore its terrible prevalence escapes public observation. It is not decreasing.

This perilous practice, which so often becomes fatal to character and to the soul, begins, just as drunkenness begins, with playing with fire. At the bottom of the first glass of wine which the tippler tampered with lay an adder. Underneath the first dime that is ever thrown down in a game of chance is concealed a serpent. When a young man makes his first bet, or puts up his first wager on a match or a race, or when he risks his first penny at a card-table, he puts a coal of fire into his bosom which is not easily extinguished; it may kindle into a conflagration which, in the tremendous language of Scripture, "will burn unto the lowest hell." The step that costs is the first step. Gambling for a penny is as essentially a sin as gambling for a thousand pounds. No sin is a trifle. My young friend, the moment that your conscience excuses the slightest departure from absolute right as a "mere trifle," that moment you have let the enemy slip in his little finger. It will not be long before you are in his grasp. When you lay down your first stake, even it is only "in fun," you are actually gambling. Remember that there is always a first inch at the top of every precipice.

I am not addressing these "plain talks" to young men as an extremist or a fanatic. What I said about the prevalent impurity of the theater has called forth many confessions from the public press (even from apologists for the stage) that my charges were quite too true. I do not affirm that every one who ever plays a game of cards is a gambler, any more than every one who drinks a glass of wine is a tippler. But it is equally true that he who never touches an intoxicant can never become a drunkard, and he who never plays a game of hazard can never become a gambler. My own personal practice, at school, college, etc., was one of entire abstinence from cards as well as from wine-cups; and I have never repented of it, either. All games of chance, when played in earnest, have a dangerous fascination. As Canon Farrar well says, "there is a gambling element in human nature," and we have got to watch against it just as we must watch against in-born sensual appetites. With the excitement of a game of hazard comes the strong temptation to risk a stake on the game; as soon as the first stake is laid down, conscience goes with it, and literally the Devil has a hand with you in the game. So strong is the fascination of this spell of sorcery that I have seen—in the public "Conversazionhalle" of Baden Baden well dressed ladies watch the roulette-table until they became so bewitched with the play that they would furtively toss a gold Napoleon over on the table from behind the crowd; the "gambling element" in them had taken fire. Now just here lies the peril with you, my young friend; the excitement of games of hazard sets you in a flame; then comes a small stake; then a larger: If you win, you play to win more; if you lose, you play on to make up your losses. Before you know it, you are a gambler. The only safe and sure way is to stop before you begin.

But it is not only from card-tables and farobanks that mischief is to be apprehended. Many young men are tempted to "take a small risk" in mining-stocks or other volatile stocks that were playing up and down in the market. I have known a half dozen mere lads to "pool" their earnings or their pocket money in a venture on a share or two of stock. This rage for dabbling in stocks turns hundreds of respectable young men into actual gamblers, although they would be shocked if the ugly name were applied to them. They are not shocked at the thing itself. Instead of felling that only the money honestly earned is honestly got, they are seduced into hazardous ventures, which, in God's sight, are as genuine gambling as any that is perpetrated behind the locked doors of one of those "hells" that defy the laws.

The dangers to young men are increasing from three causes. (1st.) There is a growing passion for getting rich suddenly and easily. (2d.) The gambling element is insinuating itself more and more into the trade of the country; the immense sudden gains or losses by "cornets," "pools," etc., evidences of this. Old-fashioned slow and sure methods of business are sniffed at; and he is accounted the smartest man who, by a sharp "operation," wins in a month what solid sensible men used to earn in a life-time. (3d.) The rapid increase of self-indulgent and luxurious living breeds and inflames this gambling spirit. That word luck is a dangerous word. Don't trust it. A life ordered according to God's laws is not a game of chance. Every dollar got by any other method than inheritance or honest industry makes you poorer. Let it alone; or it may eat into your soul like fire. The awful tragedy described at the opening of this article began with the first dime laid down in a game of hazard.—Theo. L. Cuiler, D. D., in Independent.

READ THIS, GIRLS.—Learn to darn stockings neatly, and then always see that your own are in order. Do not let a button be off your shoes a minute longer than needful. It takes just about a minute to sew one on, and O how much neater the foot looks in a trimly buttoned boot than it does in a lopsided affair with all the buttons off. Every girl should learn to make the simple articles of clothing. We know a little miss of seven who could do all this, and who also made the whole of a blue calico dress for herself, and pieced a large bed-quilt. She was not an over-taxed child, either, but a merry, romping, indulged, only daughter. But she was "smart," and she did not die young, either. Indeed, we have seldom known children "too smart to live." Very few die of that complaint, whatever their grandmothers may think.—Vermont Christian Messenger.

For the information of an anxious inquirer, we will state that Mason and Dixon's line is the invisible boundray between the titles of judge and colonel. Whenever you hear a candidate for Congress called judge, you now he hails from a Northern State; if he is called colonel, he hails from the South. You will find this an infallible guide.—Chicago News.

A coquette is a woman 'thout any heart that makes a fool of a man that ain't got any head.—The Continent.

Will-power is to be cultivated. It can be strengthened, like the memory, by unceasing practice.

BOOKS.--Victory--Vox Populi.

On which side lies the final victory in the desperate "Battle of the Books," the following extracts, characteristic of tens of thousands received, signify:

"I am amazed at the cheapness and excellence of your books. Your enterprise is a public benefaction of the highest kind."—Rev. Dr. Shepherd, Santa Rosa, Cal.

"I am delighted with the books. They are marvels of cheapness, beauty and utility. Inclosed find $33.00 in payment."—Rev. Mason W. Fressly, Chester, S. C.

"Your efforts toward extending useful information to all classes, are the most extraordinary yet witnessed by any age or country. They ought to render your name immortal."—Gen. J. W. Phelps, Bratton, Vt.

"Having been connected with the State Library for several years, and accustomed to buying books, I cannot help but wonder how you can sell so cheap; or else, wonder how others can sell so dear. Accept my thanks for promptness."—W. E. Sterne, Topeka, Kansas.

"The world's greatest benefactor to-day is John B. Alden, the bold and original publisher, who is successfully placing standard literature within the reach of everybody who cares to read."—Star, Bradford, Pa.

"Two sets of Waverley just received. All my friends are wondering how I get such bargains. I explain, and these (further) orders are the result."—H. McAllen, Farmers' Bank, Columbus City, Ind.

"Find inclosed $30.75. Every one that sees the books, says: 'What a marvel of cheapness,' and 'I want some of them.' I will try to be a sort of walking advertisement for you."—L. A. Noel, Beaver Dam, Va.

"As much distinguished for neatness of appearance and general typographical excellence as for cheapness."—Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia.

WOMANLY WISDOM.

An American Lady Discovers a Secret Which She Reveals for the Benefit of Women.

(New York World.)

Several years ago the American public were aroused by the entree upon the stage of a little lady who had been previously but little announced. She was one of an innumerable number of aspirants for public favor and had no instrumentality, aside from her own talents to cause recognition. In spite of this fact, however, she quickly achieved a warm place in the heart of the public which she has continued to hold ever since. When it was announced, therefore, that Miss Maude Granger would star the coming season in the play "Her Second Love," written by Mr. John A. Stevens, it was only natural that unusual interest should be manifested not only in theatrical circles, but in other branches of the community. This was specially the case, as it was known that Miss Granger had, for the past year, been in exceedingly delicate health, and the determination to stay in a strong emotional play was surprising. One of the staff of this paper was accordingly deputed to see the popular lady and verify the rumor or announce its incorrectness.

Miss Granger's countenance is familiar to nearly every one in the United States. It is a face once seen never to be forgotten. Features remarkable in their outline and contour are surmounted by a pair of large and deep eyes indicative of the greatest soul power. It is easy to see where Miss Granger obtains the ability to portray characters of the most emotional nature. She possesses within herself the elements of feeling without which no emotion can be conveyed to an audience. The man of news found the lady at her home in this city and was accorded a quiet welcome. It was evident at once that she was in greatly improved health, which the expression and color of her countenance both indicated.

"Is it true Miss Granger that you contemplate a starring tour the coming season?"

"Yes, indeed. My season begins in Chicago on the 16th of July. From there I go to San Francisco and then play the remainder of the season through the eastern and western states."

"Are you confident your health will permit such an undertaking?"

A ringing laugh was the first reply to this question, after which she said:

"Certainly. It is true I have been ill for the past two years, but now I am wholly recovered. Few people can have any idea of the strain a conscientious actress undergoes in essaying an emotional part. It is necessary to put one's whole soul into the work in order to rightly portray the character. This necessitates an utter abandonment of one's personality and an assumption of the character portrayed. If this is an emotional part it is necessary to feel the same emotions the part is supposed to feel. For more than a year I actually cried each night in certain passages of a part I was playing. The audience considered it art. Probably it was, but those were none the less real tears and the effect was none the less trying upon my health."

"But do you anticipate avoiding this in the future?"

"Not in the least. I expect to have just as great a strain as before but with restored health and a knowledge of how to retain it I do not fear."

"You speak of a knowledge of how to retain health. Will you please explain what you mean by that?"

"You must be aware that women by their very natures are subject to troubles and afflictions unknown to the sterner sex. The name of these troubles is, legion, but in whatever form they may come they are weaknesses which interfere with every ambition and hope in life. I believe thousands of noble women are today suffering agonies of which even their best friends and relatives know little or nothing, and when I reflect upon it I confess it makes me sad. Now all this misery arises largely by an ignorance of the laws of life or a neglect to carefully observe them. I speak from the depth of a bitter experience in saying this, and I am thankful I know the means of restoration, and how to retain perfect health."

"Please explain more fully."

"Well, I have found a remedy which seems specially adapted for this very purpose. It is pure and palatable and controls the health and life as, I believe nothing else will. It is a remedy invaluable and if all women in America were to use it I am quite sure most of the suffering and many deaths might be avoided."

"What is this wonderful remedy?"

"Warner's Safe Cure."

"And you use it?"

"Constantly."

"And hence believe you will be able to go through the coming season successfully?"

"I am quite certain of it."

"A few questions more, Miss Granger. Will you please give me a list of the parts you have created and the plays you have taken part in since your first appearance in public?"

"I first played for some time with the amateurs in New York and Brooklyn. I then went to the Union Square theater for two seasons, after that to the Boston Globe for one season and then to Booth's theater in this city. Next I supported John McCullough and afterwards started in Juliet, Camille Rosalind, etc. Subsequently I created the part of Cicely Blain in the Galley Slave and also starred Two Nights in Rome, playing the part of Antonia. The past year I have been playing in the Planter's Wife and the coming season as I have said, will be devoted to Her Second Love."

As the writer was returning home he fell into a train of musing and wondered if all the women in this land who are suffering could only know Miss Granger's experience and the remarkable results achieved by the pure remedy she used, how much suffering might be avoided and how much happiness secured.

The spring term of 1884, of this school (heretofore Beech Grove School) will open on Monday, January 14, 1884, under the supervision of Wm. Anderson with necessary assistants. The new buildings, just erected, are situated immediately on the Carter's Creek Turn Pike, two miles North of Carter's Creek Station, in a beautiful and healthy country; convenient to church, and with as good surroundings generally, as could be desired.

The course of study is as thorough as in any school of like grade, embracing the Natural Sciences, the Latin and Greek Languages and Mathematics. Good morals and gentle manners specially guarded. Boarding in three hundred yards of school, dry walks, etc. Miss Emma Slayden, of Pinewood, Tenn., will have charge of the music class.

—TERMS:—

Boarding, including lights, washing, etc., per term of twenty weeks, $50.00. Tuition from $7.50 to $20.00; incidental (in advance) $1.00; Music, Piano or Organ, $18.00 per term; use of instrument $5.00; Vocal Music, free. No deduction except in cases of protracted sickness.

Loss and Gain.*CHAPTER I.

"I was taken sick a year ago With bilious fever."

"My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I

Could not move!

I shrunk!

From 228 lbs to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains all left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after using several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign, but weigh more than I weighed before. To Hop Bitters I owe my life." R. FITZPATRICK.

CHAPTER II.

"Malden, Mass, Feb. 1, 1880 Genmen—

I suffered with attacks of sick headache.

Neuralgia, female trouble, for years, in the most terrible and excruciating manner.

No medicine or doctor could give me relief or cure me:

"The first bottle

Nearly cured me:

The second made me as well and strong as when a child.

And I have been so to this day."

My husband was an invalid for twenty years with a serious

Kidney, liver, and urinary complaint,

Pronounced by Boston's best physicians—

"Incurable!"

Seven bottles of your bitters cured him, and I know of the

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

There is ever a charm in what is not here;
As hither and yonder the shuttles slide
With the thread of seasons, we ever see
The fairest light at the farther side.
In the dead-gold bloom of the harvest-sheaves
Is a promise wrought that shall not depart;
Yet we waiting sigh for the autumn sheaf
Of flame in the chimney's heart.

STRANGE DEVELOPMENTS.

Nothing indicates the wide departure from the landmarks of truth more clearly, that is taking place among those who started out to restore the ancient order, than the loose views that are put forth by some of the accredited teachers among them in reference to the authority of God. These show that the old standards have been set aside and new ones adopted. That rationalism has taken strong hold on many, and that the Scriptures are not regarded as an only and all sufficient rule on other subjects than the question of how to spread the gospel.

We give some samples of this tendency to look to something else than the word of God as a guide in religion. We quote first from a book entitled "Missouri Christian Lectures," a notice of which was given in the ADVOCATE some time ago. The first lecturer was our old college friend, A. B. Jones. He heads his lecture the "Two Revelations." These two he defines to be man's own intuitions and the revelation contained in the Scriptures. In this lecture, he says, "Our safety lies in our fidelity to our spiritual intuitions." "All truth is harmonious with itself, so is every moral being, when true to its own nature, in harmony with all truth." "Every moral being recognizing God as a Creator and Father, finds in the laws of his own nature a revelation of the divine mind." "If then the Divine being has made to man an external revelation, it must be the correlative of man's moral and spiritual nature." "The light that is within thee, refers to man's intuitional nature." "Every such (external) revelation must be subordinated to this oracle within, in the sense that it must be addressed to man's spiritual understanding and be in accord with it." "That these things which cannot be shaken may remain." Paul here intimates that there are some things common to all forms of religious thought and life, things essential in man's moral consciousness, and in revelation, and which will survive the revolutions of theological dogmas and ecclesiasticisms,—things which cannot be shaken. These are the things which "the eyes of the heart" see; these are the things which make the light that is in you; and these are the things in harmony with which every thought in the spheres of reason and revelation must be brought."

The writer to the Hebrews who used this language, explains it clearly when he says, "we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved," referring to the church of Christ in contrast with the temporal reign of Judaism. But our author ignoring this explanation, refers to some intuitional knowledge, which is to outlast the revolution of theological dogmas and ecclesiasticisms. He clearly refers to the dogmas and ecclesiasticisms established through the Scriptures. "Religion is germinally involved in man's moral organization, is indigenous and spontaneous in the human heart, and to understand it we must first look within."

He makes "the word that is to be nigh thee and in thy heart" "the law of man's moral constitution." "This outward revelation (the Scriptures) is to the hidden man of the heart, as the staff that supports the unsteady steps of the feeble man; or better still, it is to the eyes of the heart," as glasses are to our physical eyes, it serves to magnify and make more distinct the objects of our view, and to focalize our vision." We might fill a number of pages with quotations of like import. We quote the last sentence of the lecture. "The possibility of establishing 'the kingdom of God within you,' of transferring the external law to the sphere of the internal life so far as to lose all consciousness of outward authority, and yet to move forever onward and upward amid the harmonies of a divine and endless life—this possibility is before every man." This must mean that man can so perfect and develop his own moral nature, that he ceasing to look to the Scriptures of God for direction, or without recognition of God's authority, may follow the intuitions of this nature, and in these alone can find the guidance to an endless life. He would then surpass the moral excellence of the Son of God, for he ever held before him the authority of his Father, and in keeping his commandments abode in his love. He appealed even to the authority of the written Scriptures as his guide.

Of course Scriptures that declare "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." "He that trusteth to his own heart is a fool." "Ye shall not do every man whatsoever seemeth good in his own eyes." "The world by wisdom knew not God." "The natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit, neither can he, for they are spiritually discerned." "Blessed are the poor in Spirit," and almost a thousand other texts that might be quoted, go for nothing.

Nor was Elder Jones alone in holding this idea of the subordination of outward revelation to the intuitions of the soul. In commenting upon this lecture, M. M. Goode said, "if he understood the lecture he endorsed it." A. Proctor said, "God and man are one in nature. They have the same natures. Both think, love, understand alike." E. B. Cake said, "The soul is the greatest thing in the universe. God talks to himself when he talks to man," and of course when man talks, God talks.

At the same Institute, Isaac Errett delivered a lecture on Inspiration. Lest I be thought to let my personal feelings do injustice, I quote McGarvey's rejoinder to him, made in his presence, "I was pained to hear from Bro. Errett the concession that the Scriptures are not infallible. In arguing the necessity of this concession, he really argued a totally different question." Errett in response to this, said, "What I said was, that they are not absolutely infallible; that when we assert their infallibility, it must be subject to the limitations growing out of the imperfections of human language, its incompetency to convey thought with absolute correctness and perfection, especially concerning things invisible and infinite," as if God would use language through which it was impossible to convey his ideas with certainty to man! He used language that might convey the idea to man that he desired, or it might convey some other idea. God was so poor in resources as to leave a doubt, after he had given his Son to die to reveal his will, as to whether he revealed it or something else.

The word infallible is not a word that admits of degrees of comparison. If a thing is not absolutely infallible, it is not infallible at all. Of course many excellent things are said of the Bible in this lecture, but there is the entering wedge that destroys its authority. A catering to the rationalistic tendencies of the age. There are other developments of this character that we desire to present to our readers, that they may see the true tendencies among many of the leading teachers, and know what must be met. The great trouble is, there is a rationalistic wave sweeping over the land. That is, man's reason is exalted at the expense of revelation. Man himself, at the expense of God. It is difficult to retain a footing and keep from floating with the current. This substitution of human devices for the divine order in the worship and work of the church, is the manifestation of this tendency. But no human mind can depreciate or reject the divine order at one point and retain respect and honor for the same order in other points. Baptism is nothing, but the spirit that would reject the command of God to be baptized, is rebellion against heaven. The eating of the apple was nothing, the rejection of God's word in eating was the ruin of the world. The organ is nothing, the spirit that would add to the appointments of God's worship, is rebellion. And the spirit that would add to or detract from the word of God, never stops at rejection in one single point. One step out of the straight path marked by divine revelation, is only an assurance of another, and is a point whence to take a longer stride in the path of divergence. The only safe ground is to stop before you take the first step of departure from divine law.

PHILIPPIANS 2.

There is always safety in wise counsel. Wisdom comes from above. Unity of spirit, and harmony of action are necessary to healthy growth and permanent good. Peace, happiness and prosperity, depend upon union in object, aim, and effort, and these must be legitimate. The honors and emblems of the kingdom of Christ do not come by inheritance. They are the result, rather, of character and fitness. No man may safely seek them of men. 1 Cor. x: 20: "He who would be first must become servant of all." "Jesus made himself of no reputation," etc. Phil. ii: 6-8. No one in the church is permitted to put a stumbling block in the way of his brother, neither can he afford to give offense. Let us not be high-minded, but fear. Lowliness of spirit, and humility of heart, are characteristic of the Christian. There is no institution which is more worthy our strong and undivided support than the church. It is that which Jesus died to establish, it is that which he now loves; and if we have the mind or spirit of Christ, we will, at all events, love the church. Eph. v: 25-27. Want of a proper appreciation of the demands of the church, is the great evil which afflicts us to-day. "All men seek their own." Phil. ii: 21. We cannot afford to be selfish. The church is the light of the world, the pillar and ground of the truth. How, then, it should be magnified. Every one should be willing to become a sacrifice and service of the faith of his brethren, and should rejoice. Phil. ii: 17-18.

THE REAL ISSUE.

In the defense of Missionary Societies, it must be kept in mind that, like the church made up of men, they are not every whit divine. The church for which Christ died, is composed of erring human beings. If we cannot always defend churches in what they do, neither can we venture to defend societies in everything. It is not, therefore, held that all societies are right, or that any one society is right in all things that it has done or may do. The church is divine only in so far as it reproduces in the conversion of the world, and in the sanctification of the saint, the divine ideal found in the teaching of the New Testament. The divine church is more ideal than real. If God reveals no way to combine a number of churches to evangelize the world, there can be no divine ideal for co-operation. Now it is admitted that "inspired men worked in spreading the gospel for nearly a hundred years, as teachers and evangelists and leaders of the churches," and that no explicit declaration for the organization of societies is left on record. But from this concession it does not follow that everything not explicitly authorized in the Bible is wrong. It can not be assumed that the New Testament contains detailed statements and directions necessary to secure every element of strength in the spread of the gospel. But this is just what all opposition to conventions and societies does assume. It is the root error in every effort to suppress co-operative work. This is the cardinal issue between Bro. Harding and the writer. True, it is asserted that "his position is that every Christian should consider himself the servant of the Lord, bought with the blood of Christ, and that he should therefore make it the great leading, overruling object of his life to advocate his Master's cause, he should remember that he is a steward, and that he will have to give an account for every dollar that he receives, for every day that he lives."

Who denies that such is his position? Certainly we do not. But let not the reader infer that such is not my position. It is the exclusive property of neither. It is not the issue, or any part of it. The sentiment is most heartily endorsed, and commended. There is a loud amen for the exhortation to give regularly and liberally, even to at least one tenth of our income. Here is no issue, and neither of us can claim all exhortations and directions to incite liberality as his peculiar property. We agree as to the necessity laid on us to preach the gospel. We agree as to the obligation of every soul to do something. We agree that without the spirit of missions, a man has not the Spirit of Christ. We agree that the chief end of this life is to spend and be spent for Christ. It is not, therefore, a necessary consequence flowing from either his position or mine, that a man is stripped of all liberality, or that the dome of the current reformation is about to collapse. Bro. Harding stands on one side of an opinion or human judgment and we on the other. It is hardly necessary to tell the readers of the Advocate that Bro. Campbell belonged to, and encouraged one of these human organizations. If, "to do thus," as Bro. Harding argues, "is to depart radically from our plea for union upon apostolic teaching and practice, if it is to sow the seed of discord and division among the people of God," it is strange that he did not abandon these expedients. The fact is, any human expedient may be unwisely and unrighteously exalted into a test of fellowship. The minds and hearts of the people may be withdrawn from the great center, Jesus Christ, and fixed upon the discussion of plans till the soul loses sight of the faith and hope and love which are to abide forever. In this discussion, therefore, we wish to cast out all that is irrelevant and let a clear, clean cut issue stand before the reader, and to have it understood that the issue involves nothing beyond a better method for gathering together the fragments of benevolence from every church for the spread of the gospel.

"The divine society," to which Bro. Harding refers with so much relish and with such frequency, is not all his own. Am not I a member of the church of God? Is it not mine as much as it is his? He assumes that the society destroys the church. Or, to put it in another form, he assumes that the church in its essential principles forever excludes and forbids the existence of societies. In his assumption, the church of God and a co-operative organization to spread the gospel are as much at war with each other as the Lord and Mammon. Now we kindly suggest that this needs proof, and that the thinking mind will repudiate the assumption and the unwarranted appropriation of the church as his exclusive property as a missionary society. The local church, we agree, is, and ought to be, as far as in it lies, a missionary organization. It is the pillar and support of the truth. This is equally held by each of us. But when the question of co-operation emerges, he says the Bible reveals no plan, and yet falls back on the church as a divinely organized co-operative institution. Moreover, all co-operative movements are like so many vulturous innovations flying on the black wings of death to prey on the vitals of the church. We beg pardon. This assumed conflict between the local church and societies is not right.

The society which usurps any function of the church is not on trial. No defense is set up for any organization which prevents the church from continuing to be the pillar and support of the truth. Let the church, as it came from the hands of God, stand unmarred in all its essential features. The ideal church of the New Testament must forever remain intact. But we claim that the principles of the New Testament and the facts in this age warrant the necessity for the organization of societies, the combination of effort, the union of the rivulets of strength, for the spread of the gospel. What these shall be, is left to human judgment. We know that the churches are largely remiss in mission work. We know that few, if any, congregations do, or can sustain a missionary singly. Can we combine? Bro. Harding says, in effect, no; for with him all must be done through the local church, "the New Testament plan." Since this makes no specific direction for co-operation he has none. If he says, let all these different and separate organizations meet at some central point, that may be impossible. But if possible, there is a convention. If he says, let the elders of these separate churches meet at some convenient point, then there is a convention. If he says, let an Epaphroditus go from church to church to determine what each one will do, then there is no specific divine warrant to do this. There is inference, common sense, just what we claim as the basis of societies. Bro. Harding admits that there is inferential authority for such work. "Looking at the matter from Bro. Harding's standpoint, I should think he would conclude that those first Christians were very poor at inferring, or else that they were sadly deficient in common sense." If these words apply to my position, they destroy his, yet I think them inapplicable to either. The apostles neither lacked common sense nor the ability to infer. In questions of opinion, they never expected perfect unity.

An unnecessary prejudice exists against societies on the ground of expensiveness. Admit that some extravagance has been practiced, it is not therefore wrong to have societies. Churches are sometimes extravagant in their expenses. Must we then abandon them? Correction, not destruction, is what is wanted. Suppose that it costs 25 per cent to raise money to send out missionaries, is it then wrong? If Epaphroditus gives his whole time to raising from five to six thousand dollars annually, is he a laborer worthy of his reward? Will you muzzle him, and not muzzle the ox? Economy stands aghast at the expense incurred in coming together from different sections to hold conventions. Is it not strange, that God the author of tithes so heartily commended by Bro. Harding, did not see that the Jews would be consumed in keeping up the Passover, Pentecost, and tabernacles, which required every male to come to Jerusalem thrice each year, full-handed, with an offering for the Lord? Achan, Gehazi and Annanias, stand ready to pick up all objections urged against benevolent work by good men, and they become arrows in the quiver of covetousness.

We repeat that opposition to the societies which to-day have missions in Japan, India, Turkey, Paris, England and Jamaica, is the destruction of what is being done, and the substitution of nothing in its stead. Where is a single church acting as Bro. Harding claims upon the New Testament plan, and sustaining a missionary in foreign lands? Where? Show us your faith by your works. If you claim that "the foreign work that has been done without the societies is greater by a hundred fold than that which has been done by them," that, if true, is no argument against societies, since they are not necessarily opposed. Moreover, this work does not touch one fourth of the church. If you cannot work with us, do not work against us. If you can co-operate without conscientious scruples with Bro. Lipscomb in the human expedients of preaching the gospel through the Advocate, permit us to exercise our judgment in devising means to utilize all the strength of the churches. Instead of opposing plans as innovations destructive of our reformation, would it not be better to expel avarice from the church of God? Let us strive to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace by minifying opinions and magnifying the word of God. Sin, the violation of plain duty, is the foe to be routed. We are brethren, and though we differ as to methods of work, we can still contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. B. JONES.

FAITH ALONE.

Brother L. & S.: I propose, through the medium of your paper, to dot a few thoughts upon the subject of faith. There is much controversy between the sects and ourselves upon that subject. Not long since, a Baptist preacher remarked in the pulpit, that "he was surprised to see so many poor, ignorant creatures contending that faith comes before repentance." Well, of course, your readers will know that preacher was ignorant; for an intelligent man would not use such language in the pulpit. It is about all the argument such an ignoramus can use, and I would not write for the benefit of such men, for they are steeped in the meshes and dregs of partyism to such an extent, as to be beyond remedy. But there are many on that side of the question, whose intellect is capable of grasping an argument, and whose honesty will require them to exercise common sense and scriptural precedent.

Another Baptist, though not a preacher, (but bright school teacher) giving an exhortation in a protracted meeting, referring to his feelings when he obtained pardon, said, that "if he had to give up his feelings, or the Bible, the Bible would have to go." Now I would not write for the benefit of such a man as that; he is beyond hope of remedy. But what of intelligent leaders, who indoctrinate their pupils into a system that will not permit them to exercise common sense in recognizing the word of God as the one only and final arbiter of all questions pertaining to salvation and godliness? I leave that for another to answer.

The word, faith, sometimes occurs in the Scriptures in reference to a system or institution, and not to an act of the creature, or personal faith, or belief of the truth. As an instance, see Gal. iii: 23: "But before faith came we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith that should afterward be revealed;" and verse 25: "But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster," (the law.) Here reference is plainly made to the institution of salvation by faith in contradistinction to the law. Faith is as much an institution of God as is the law. The one for salvation, the other never was for salvation, but a teacher for the Jews, while they and all nations were kept in ignorance of the one only institution for the redemption of man, "shut up unto the faith that should afterward be revealed." And as "it is impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to put away sin," so no sins have ever been put away by virtue of any other institution than that of faith, which came by Jesus Christ. Then when we confine our thoughts to faith as an institution, as compared with all other institutions, we may safely say, we are saved by faith only, for there is no other system or institution known to us, by which God ever did, or ever will, save from sin, and raise to life from the grave one soul of Adam's race. This is the sum and substance of the great covenant God made with Abraham, that in his seed all nations should be blessed. Now will the sects, if they must have faith only as a doctrine, confine themselves to faith as an institution? If so, we are agreed, and then I think we can agree upon faith as a personal matter—the belief of the truth.

We now come to speak, not of what God has done for us in his great institution or system of salvation, but of what God requires of us. God requires of man a personal faith, or belief of the TRUTH. But what is truth? Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." How shall we hear about Jesus? The gospel tells us. When we believe the gospel, (good news, glad tidings of good things), of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, as the Son of God, and his glorification on the throne as a king and Savior, having power to grant salvation upon repentance; when we believe this, we believe Jesus the embodiment of the TRUTH. For he commanded these things to be preached, and when we believe them, we believe him; when we believe not them, we believe not him; this is self-evident, needs no proof. But what about the belief of the truth or gospel? Will this alone save a person? No, says every sect. Then we are agreed again; we cannot be saved by this kind of faith only. Then what kind of faith only will save anyone? Will some one answer and tell us what it is that we can believe, constituting a faith which alone saves us? If we are wrong as to what the faith is, we are lost world without end. For how can we be saved if we do not know anything about the faith that saves? Somebody is mightily muddled just along here as to what the faith is, and we would like for some one to come along with a "Grub-Axe" that would dig us out of the mud if we are in it. Will one answer, it is to believe on the Lord? Well—yes, we knew that before. But how can I believe on the Lord? Who is he? Where is he? What has he done? And what does he promise to do? When these questions are scripturally answered, it will be by one who is not afraid to do for us what Paul and Silas did for the jailor and his household, speak unto us the word of the Lord as in Acts 16.

But that will just present to us for our belief the TRUTH, as above stated, which we agreed could not alone save us. We have that belief, it is our faith, it came by hearing the word of the Lord preached to us. See Rom. 10. But we are said not to be Orthodox, not sound in faith, that our faith is heterodox; if so, we want the sound faith; how does it come? Pray for it. Pray to whom? To the Lord Jesus. Why not to Beelzebub? Oh! he is a devil. Well, why not to Paul then? He is not the Lord Jesus. Well, how, if we pray to the Virgin Mary? That will not do, she was not set forth to be a Prince and a Savior. Well—yes, I begin to see my way out of the mud now, I must pray to one, or in the name of one, that has been set for a Prince and a Savior. Well I believe that Jesus of Nazareth is that Savior, the Son of God. I loathe sin. I love righteousness; with penitent grief I turn from sin and seek salvation, what lack I yet, as to faith? You must believe on Jesus as your personal Savior. I believe on him as the Savior of all who obey him, and I want to obey him, what must I do? Pray on, I am afraid you are skeptical. Then you can't tell me how to get that saving faith only to pray for it, a thing nowhere said in the Bible.

The reader will understand the foregoing interrogatives as intended to present the perplexities presented to the mind of a penitent seeker of intelligence, under the influence of such teachers as teach the faith alone system in reference to a personal faith. To believe the truth—the gospel—that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that this faith precedes repentance, is what every body believes who believes the Scriptures. There is not one who will deny; and not one who will say, or believe, that a man is justified, or saved, by this faith alone, but that it must be followed by obedience, and that repentance is one of the acts of obedience. Then it follows, as a clear logical conclusion, that the precedence of the one or the other, (of faith or repentance) is not the ground or basis of our difference. The fact in the case, is, that what we call a faith that saves, or leads to salvation, is different from something that the sects call saving faith. But I have never yet heard one of them define their faith in a more tangible form than this is done in the above interrogatives and answers. The whole thing is wrapped in mystery, and befogged by a persistent determination to teach that faith is a direct, immediate gift of God, saving the soul by such faith the instant one believes; and to avoid the absurdity of teaching salvation without repentance, assume that repentance is before faith, or that one must repent before he can believe.

A very grave and important question comes up at this point. It is this: Can a man afford to barter the genuine faith for something indefinite, a thing that cannot be defined? And all that is got in turn, is a theory that never saved a solitary soul. Viz.: That faith alone saves, and that it follows after repentance. Now what of such theology, if it were true? The advocates of it themselves will all and every one admit that a man may be saved without believing it. Then aside from the absurdity, there is nothing saving in it. Now I aver that every church of professed Christians in the whole world, of whatever party name, stands solely upon the belief that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. Upon that proposition the whole Christian system stands; and to-day, if every body in the world were to become confirmed unbelievers in the truth of that proposition, to-morrow every church would be dead. After mature thought, no one will deny what I have here affirmed. Then is there not danger, might we not say, to the man that would detract from the power, magnitude and importance of that proposition, the belief of which, perfected by obedience, constitutes our faith, as a personal matter. If we attach more importance to the belief of anything else, we detract from it. And if that faith does not save, and some other does, then some other is more important.

NOTES FROM ORCHARD AND JONES.

Bro. M.: My first article presents a selection of guide-posts before the close of the third century. In A. D. 251, it is said that Novatian, (a Baptist preacher,) in a race for the pastorate care of the church in Rome, was beaten by Cornelius. That defeat resulted in a split. Novatian set up for himself. That party from which he separated was, or became, the Catholic church. We will now hear from Mr. Orchard. He says: "We have endeavored to detail, in the previous pages, the features of the Christian churches generally, while the interests of religion retained their scriptural character. * * * The churches during this early period were strictly Baptist in their practice and constitution." Orchard, page 51.

The party of Novatian is claimed as Baptists. What did they teach? A. D. 380. "About this time Pacianus, Bishop of Barcelona, wrote some treatises against these people. He observes to Sempronianus, one of the Novatian ministers, 'You have forsaken the traditions of the church, under pretence of reformation: likewise you say, that the church is a body of men regenerated by water (?) and the Holy Spirit who have not denied the name of Christ, which is the temple and house of God, the pillar and ground of truth. We say the same also.' Orchard's History, page 59. It would be a curious sight now to see a Baptist church that claimed to be regenerated by water and Spirit. This is a guide-post of curious workmanship, but it is "a long ways" back to it.

Sixty years after the rise of the Novatians, the Donatists arose in Africa. Of them Mr. Orchard says: "The Donatists and Novatians very nearly resemble each other in doctrine and discipline." Page 87. If so, then the weary traveler, from our day to that of the apostles, can read on the face of this guide-post of the Baptist church. A. D. 700. "That the church is a body of men regenerated by water and the Holy Spirit, who have not denied the name of Christ, which is the temple and house of God, the pillar and ground of truth." Page 59.

The Waldenses are said to be another link in the chain of succession. Of them Mr. Jones says (another Baptist preacher of note): "They (the Waldenses) hold all oaths to be unlawful, and to be a mortal sin; yet they dispense with them when it is done to avoid death." Jones History, page 239.

Again, "Such as are teachable and eloquent among them, they instruct to get the words of the gospel, as well as the sayings of the apostles and other holy men; by heart, that they may be able to inform others, and draw in believers, beautifying their sect with the goodly words of the saints, that the things they persuade and recommend may pass for sound and wholesome doctrine, thus by their soft speeches deceiving the hearts of the simple." Page 240.

Again, "They condemn the custom of believers communicating no more than once a year, whereas they communicate daily." (Every Lord's day, says Mr. Jones, in a foot-note.) Page 243.

Again, "Whatever is preached without Scripture proof they account no better than fables. They despise the doctrines and the sayings and expositions of holy men, and cleave only to the text of Scriptures. They contend that the doctrine of Christ and his apostles is sufficient to salvation without any church statutes and ordinances, and affirm that the traditions of the church were no better than the traditions of the Pharisees, insisting, moreover, that greater stress is laid on the observation of human tradition than on keeping the law of God." Page 244.

"They think that all swearing is sinful, because Christ says, (Matt. v: 34.) 'Swear not at all; but let your communication be yea, yea, nay, nay.' They are against punishing malefactors with death, which they found on Rom. xii: 19. They say, 'That every one has the liberty to preach (or instruct.)' Page 242.

Jones give the history of the Waldenses from A. D. 1160 to 1360. For two hundred years at least, they stand as a guide-post on the road to the apostles. We can appreciate all this when we hear the following from the introductory essay to Orchard's History, by Dr. Graves. "Are not these then questions of paramount concern to all denominations. Since, if not from the New Testament, certainly from the history of these (churches) the form, subject, ordinances and doctrine of the true churches of Christ can be learned?" Introductory essay to Orchard's History, page 5.

CO-OPERATION OF CHURCHES.

Brethren L & S.: In answer to the call made in the ADVOCATE last year, for the churches worshipping at Lafayette, Tenn., and Gamaliel, and Flippen, Ky., to co-operate in sending out an evangelist this year, the church at Lafayette and Gamaliel have secured the services of Bro. E. H. Rogers, who has been evangelizing in Sequatchie Valley for the last two years. He will travel and hold meetings in the destitute places around us, and will begin the work as soon as the weather moderates. He authorizes me to state that the brethren in the valley want a preacher this year. Any one desiring the work can address E. H. Boyd, Sequatchie College, Bledsoe Co., Tenn. Bro. Rogers takes the work here more on the account of being my companion in study and holding meetings than any thing else. He having almost lost his eye sight, can learn only through the sense of hearing. The Lord willing, he will be at Gamaliel the first Lord's day in February. May the Lord bless our labors this year.

ITALIAN PEASANT LIFE.

Really poor people rarely exist in this part of the world, every man living in his own freehold house, descending from generation to generation, to which is attached a little plot of land, which suffices for his wants and the wants of his family. The life these people lead reminds one of the patriarchal life which we read of in the Bible. Everything is made at home by the people; the women even make their own linen from hemp grown on their own ground. In one way or another they are at work (men and women) from sunrise to sunset. Those people who call Italians idlers should come here to see how they work. The Marche province, however, may be called the Switzerland of Italy. It is cultivated as well, and the people are as industrious, and at the same time more genial and generous; for, if a countryman meets the veriest stranger in his walks, he invites him to return home with him and partake of what fare his hut can give. The Marche laborer or peasant works without wages. He shares half the crop with his master. He lives better than the laborers and country people in other parts of Italy. Indian corn, however, is still their chief food, even here, and they drink vinegar and water except on great occasions. These people who content themselves with Indian corn and and vinegar and water for themselves, have fowls and wine for their masters whenever they go to visit them—as when the Indian corn is shelled or cut, or new wine made, or other similar occasions. They are a happy, cheerful and contented people, and very religious.

WHAT CONSTITUTES BAPTISM?

A short while since, we asked "What is baptism?" Several answers have been received; among others, this, "Baptism is a burial in water, etc." Now I deny this, and proceed to say, that a burial in water is not baptism. This is part of it, but not all. Nor will a burial in water, and a resurrection from the watery grave constitute Christian baptism. This is part of it, but not all. You cannot have Christian baptism without these, but these alone do not constitute baptism. A man might be immersed a thousand times, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and yet not receive, nor enjoy Christian baptism. Baptism—Christian baptism—has its antecedents as well as its consequents. There must be something which precedes and prepares us for the burial in water as surely as the resurrection from the water, brings us to the happy consequences to be enjoyed. Baptism is for a purpose. That purpose, or object, is to introduce the penitent believer into Christ, or into his kingdom, church, or body, and into pardon. For, it is in Christ, God has promised the pardon of sins. But, the reader will observe, none but those previously prepared, by faith and repentance, can be baptized. Baptism is for penitent believers, and for none others. This being true, water alone cannot constitute baptism. Faith and repentance must precede it. Hence, no unbeliever can be baptized, nor can an impenitent believer receive Christian baptism. To constitute Christian baptism, there must be (1) faith; (2) repentance; and (3) immersion into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. This brings to the pardon of sin, and the enjoyment of God's love in Christ. Hence, we do not believe, like Roman Catholics, or pædo-baptists, that water itself has any saving efficacy. They certainly do believe so, for they insist on sprinkling small quantities of it on little, unbelieving babes, who know not their right hand from their left. Baptists have no use for baptism, but to make of Christians, Baptists. This is pretty good material to make Baptists, or anything else of, provided they can prove that their subjects are Christians. If the Lord instituted baptism to make Baptists simply, neither he nor his apostles ever told us so. We have a scriptural use for it, when preceded by, and joined to, faith and repentance. When this is the case, it is Scriptural and right. Baptism is the immersion of a penitent believer, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. And is to introduce such subjects into Christ.

Dear Bro. Poe: I wish to ask the churches, when a member is to leave for another country, to write to the elders or preacher, so that the brethren may have warning of the coming of the strange brother or sister. In this Western country it is a great advantage. Many come West with a letter in their pocket, and in some instances, do not make themselves known. Elder M. Askew is very sick of fever. I returned from Indian Territory last Saturday. Big fire at Whitesboro on the 28th of December, $30,000 loss; $10,000 insurance. Snow three inches deep here.—[R. W. O., Paris, Texas.]

THE BIBLE CLASS.

In answer to question by E. L. L. to Bro. Poe's Bible Class, "What chapter in the New Testament contains six phrases with words identical?" I answer, Matt. xxiii: 14-15-23-25-27-29: "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!"—[Mary C. Lauderdale, Bailey, Tenn.]

EDITORIAL MENTION.

Bro. Hall's pulpit, at First Church, St. Louis, was recently damaged considerably by fire, but the injury has been repaired and the pulpit is now much better than before.—Old Path Guide.

Does the Old Path Guide intend to insinuate that Bro. Hall set his own pulpit on fire, in order to get a better one? Better look out there, or you may find your tripod on fire, with no prospect of a better one beyond the blaze. But suppose it had burned up entirely, what has that got to do with Bro. Officer's Indian Mission, or building up Orphan Home? Send on your money—pulpit or no pulpit.

THAT YOUNG LADY.

"There is a young lady in our county who was once a Baptist, and afterwards joined the Campbellites. After remaining with them a year, she concluded that all was not right, and had them to baptize her. She says that she was first baptized to make her a Baptist, and the last time, she was baptized to make her a Christian. Her father and mother, together with many others, have been baptized by the Baptists, and have been received by the Campbellites on their Baptist baptism. Now the question with me is, if she was made a Christian by her Campbellite baptism, what are those received by the Campbellites on their baptism? The man that will satisfactorily answer this will certainly be entitled to the L. L. D., whether he ever gets it or not."

The above from the pen of Mr. W. H. Smith, of Macon County, appeared in the Missionary Baptist, published at Lebanon, Tenn., December 19, 1883. The article contains some facts, and about as many false statements. "There is a young lady in our county who was once a Baptist," but she did not join the Campbellites, as there is no such organization in this county, and I presume that no one but some one who loves to misrepresent, rather than tell the truth, will say so. She did say that she was baptized to make her a Baptist, and that she wanted to be baptized to make her a Christian. She did come to the conclusion that all was not right, just as all others who were baptized to make them Baptists will do, if they will follow her example, and while resting from sewing or other work spend the resting moments in reading God's word with a determined resolution to put the same into practice as fast as it is learned.

"Her father and mother, together with many others have been baptized by the Baptists," but they did not join the Campbellites, and he who says they did, is guilty of misrepresentation and slander, and will have to account therefor in that day when the secrets of all men's hearts will be made known. I have known several to join the church of God, but not on their "Baptist baptism," for there is no such thing mentioned in the Bible. They came in on their baptism because they were baptized to obey God, and not man. They do not claim that their baptism is valid because administered by a Baptist preacher, but alone on the ground that they submitted to it to obey God. Baptists in this country teach that baptism is a nonessential, and that men can get to heaven as well without it as with it, yet no one can get into the Baptist church without it. This is what we understand to be "Baptist baptism." It certainly must be, for it is not the baptism taught by Christ and his apostles.

He says, "the question with me is, if she was made a Christian by her Campbellite baptism, what are those received by the Campbellites on their (Baptist) baptism?" Men who are given to long-winded tales often get into trouble by concealing the facts. She was not made a Christian by her "Campbellite baptism," but by her Christian baptism. (Faith, repentance and the confession, of course, preceding it.) If he had thus told the whole truth he would not have had trouble. But "what are those received by the Campbellites on their baptism?" Now if any one were to join the "Campbellites" on their baptism, or otherwise, they would be "Campbellites," but if a person joins the church of God they are simply Christians. We do not think that it takes an L. L. D. to answer such questions as these, any of us little a, b, c, fellows can attend to the Macon County Smiths, or any other preacher they may have in the county. The trouble in this is that Smith is like the old fable about the dog with a bone. He would not eat it himself, nor allow anything else to eat it. Smith will not wear the name Christian himself, neither does he want any one else to wear it. But in spite of all their efforts to make us like themselves in wearing a human name, let us honor our King by wearing his name, remembering that Jesus has said: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." "And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved." W. H. CARTER.

"SEE THAT NO MAN RENDER EVIL FOR EVIL UNTO ANY MAN."

The above is found in a letter (Thess. iv: 15) Paul wrote to the church of the Thessalonians. He told these people of God to see to it that none render evil for evil unto any man. When man is injured, the first thing that occurs to him is to have revenge. He has this spirit in common with the brute beasts of earth. The horse kicks, the bull hooks, the dog snaps, the wasp stings, and the tiny little ant bites, as a free-will offering in return for injuries inflicted. Man can imitate those, and he alone, of all God's creatures, can control himself and act otherwise. The wicked man takes God's name in vain, still our heavenly Father pours out blessings upon him, and he thrives right in the midst of his wickedness. The same is true of all other evil doers. God withholds no earthly blessing from them. He has given us an example in this matter as well as precept. Hear his teaching: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain upon the just and the unjust." If we are the children of God, we should be like him. He loves the wicked and the righteous; we should do likewise. He does good to all; we should do the same. To seek revenge is selfish; it shows we think of self only. Christianity shows its great excellence in that it kills out inordinate selfishness. It is only God in the man that can forbear the creature who does him harm. This supernatural power our heavenly Father gives freely to all who ask him. But we must hunger and thirst after it before we will be filled with this kind of righteousness. When Christ wept over Jerusalem, it was because he loved the wicked rebels. He loved them in their sins. What an example! How apt we are to talk of the wicked, shun them, speak evil of them! It is better to talk to them of their wrongs. They will get mad, you say. It is difficult to find a man who will get angry with him who he thinks is in love with him, and trying to do him a real favor. To love those that love us, and to do good to those who do good to us, are no hard tasks. But to fall deeply in love with those who are nothing to us by ties of affinity, consanguinity or propinquity, is a lesson we must learn from heaven. Still more, to look to the interest of those who despise us and would harm us, shows that God has raised us high above the carnal and human. The Spirit has given a lesson to all churches. Would they would heed it. "See that none render evil for evil unto any man." Few know how to take vengeance or revenge. We are so deeply interested, our partialities so strong, and our judgments so weak, that we are unfitted to decide what is really necessary, especially in cases in which we have suffered. God knows this, and says, "Vengeance is mine." He has other work for his church and has called them to feed the poor, visit the sick, entertain strangers, preach the gospel, keep unspotted from the world. J. M. BARNES.

We often pray for comfortable feelings instead of conformity to the divine will; we would be put to sleep in our sin and sloth rather than startled into higher activities and more earnest seeking after God.

It is one great characteristic of genius to do great things with little things.—Reads.

The Sham and the Real.

Every good thing has its host of imitators; every genuine article its counterfeits. Bad manners and wicked habits have theirs also; but he who shams the bad, never boasts of it, while they who ape the virtues of the good or simulate the genuine never hesitate to place the counterfeit before the public in their most alluring tones. When these people imitate they always choose a pronounced type or popular subject to copy from; and when they claim to be as good as "so and so," or to sell an article equal to "So-and-So" the public may depend upon it that Mr. "So-and-So," and his article are always the best of the kind. Thus the sham is always proving the genuine merit of the thing it copies. A firm of enterprising gentlemen produce and popularize an article of household use, such as the Royal Baking Powder, whose convenience, usefulness and real merit make for itself an immense and universal sale. A hundred imitators arise on every hand, and as they hold out their sham articles to the public, yelp in chorus, "Buy this; it's just as good Royal, and much cheaper?" The Royal Baking Powder is the standard the world over, and its imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as good as Royal" are all the time emphasizing this fact. In their laborious attempts to show by analysis and otherwise that the "Snowball" brand has as much raising power "as the Royal; or that the "Resurrection" powder is as wholesome "as Royal;" or that the "Earthquake" brand is "as pure as the Royal," as well as by their contortive twistings of chemical certificates and labored efforts to obtain recognition from the Government chemists and prominent scientists who have certified the superiority of the Royal over all others, they all admit the "Royal" to be the acme of perfection which it is their highest ambition to imitate. But the difference between the real and these imitations, which copy only in general appearance, is as wide as that between the paste and the true diamond. The shams all pay homage to the "Royal."

Behavior in Church.

A well known English clergyman who had preached one morning in a magnificent New York church, watched the congregation defiling out of the aisles.

"Do American ladies, then, go to some place of amusement after church?" he asked. "They are dressed for the theater."

Dr. Nowton, an Episcopalian minister, called attention lately to the common breach of good taste in the showy style of dress adopted by would be fashionable women at church.

It is the custom in the higher circles of all our Eastern cities to wear plain, quiet costumes when going to the house of God. Display of rich clothes, jewelry, etc., is kept for the reception-room and places of amusement. An overdressed woman who enters a church is supposed to be either singularly deficient in good taste, or to have no other place where she can exhibit her finery.

There are other peculiarities in the behavior of Americans in a place of worship which would startle and surprise a European. Among these is the modern habit of remaining seated during the whole service. That is due not to any religious scruple, such as that of the Friends, to outward form, but to simple laziness.

Thirty years ago in the same churches the whole congregation knelt or stood while engaged in prayer. Now the grotesque and indecent spectacle is presented of a single man in the pulpit addressing Almighty God on behalf of a mass of people who sit bolt upright, staring at each other's bonnets, or at him, as if he were a preformer in some kind of a show for their amusement.

The man or boy who would bend his body and uncover his head to a passing acquaintance will not, by a sign or gesture acknowledge the presence of his Creator in his temple.

This may be regarded as a trifle, but it is of importance as one sign of importance as one sign of that growing neglect of all outward religious habits among our young people.

A man is not necessarily a Christian because he goes to church, or kneels to ask God's protection at night or morning. But these habits are defensive. He is not necessarily virtuous because he keeps his face clean and his hair in order; but if ceases to wash his face and comb his hair, he will have made it easier for virtue to escape him.—Youth's Companion.

SAUL AND DAVID.

The careful study of the lives of men whose histories are given in the Bible, is immensely valuable. From the Bible we learn men just as they were, without any polish added, or any deduction from their real merits. There is not one word of whitewashing on account of high position or birth, for any man that did wrong, nor one word of underrating on account of humble birth, obscurity, poverty, or anything of the sort. And the Bible is the only book in the world that does these things. Men that write biographies never carry out this principle. They never give the full history of men. They are always prejudiced one way or the other,—either in favor of, or against, the person whose history they write. If they write of a friend, whom they specially loved, they seek to show up all his good qualities, and leave out all the bad. But if they are prejudiced against the man about whom they write, they take special care to show up his bad qualities, without giving his good qualities a fair presentation. But the Bible gives men precisely as they were, without any exaggeration of their virtues, or any overdrawing of their vices.

By studying the lives of men as given in the Bible, we not only learn human nature as it is, but we learn precisely what characters God loves and approves. And in this way we may learn how to govern and control our lives in such way as to gain the favor of God, as did godly men in olden times. We can ascertain just what sort of characters to cultivate in ourselves, that God, with his all-searching eye, may approve. For we may be sure that he looks upon men and their characters now, just as he did then. He approves the same sort of characters now that he did then, and condemns the same sort that he condemned then. God has always approved and accepted the humble, the pure in heart, that trembled at his word; while, on the other hand, he has always condemned the proud, the self-willed, and the rebellious.

We have very forcible examples of these things in the lives of Saul and David. Saul was a self-willed man, always desiring to appear in the right, though he knew he was in the wrong. In order for him to do this, he would apologize for, and strive to justify sin, rather than confess it with an humble heart, and turn at once from it. But David, though a man of strong fleshly impulses, was an humble man, and always ready to confess his sins and turn from them; and thus he was ever ready, through his whole life, to justify God in condemning sin. We never find David apologizing for, and defending sin. But this was one of the prominent traits of Saul's life. When he was first made king over Israel, Samuel commanded him to tarry for him seven days at a certain place, Gilgal, till he should come to him. When the seven days were about out, he grew impatient, concluded Samuel was not coming, and so he went to work to make an offering himself, without waiting for Samuel. And so about the time Saul was through with the offering, which he made contrary to the will of God, Samuel came, and Saul went out to meet him and salute him. "And Samuel said, What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou comest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at Michmash; therefore said I, the Philistines will come down upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made supplication to the Lord; I forced myself, therefore, and offered a burnt offering." 1 Sam. xiii: 11-12. Saul knew well that in this matter he had violated the word of God through Samuel. But he was not willing to own up, and hence went to work to justify himself, which was virtually to apologize for sin, for rebellion against the word of God. This was more than doubling his crime. It was an effort to justify sin, which was worse, and showed him a far worse man than the sinful act would have done had he not set to work to justify, and apologize for, and excuse sin. It proved him to be deliberately stubborn and rebellious, that he would rather defend sin than to appear a sinner himself, and acknowledge his own sin, and turn from it.

A man cannot very well show a worse trait of character than this, or one that will more certainly bring the displeasure and condemnation of God upon him. It proves that a man is not disposed to try to keep himself in harmony with the will of God. It shows that he sets up his own will and wisdom against the will and wisdom of God, that he loves himself and his own will better than he loves the will of God. No man can be a faithful servant of God while he cultivates this disposition. All such are earthly, sensual, selfish, sinful, and could not be contented with heaven, if they were there. Those who are truly humble, truly submissive to God, are always ready to condemn sin everywhere, in themselves or any one else, and ready to justify the will and ways of God.

We should learn an important lesson from this one item in the history of Saul. It shows him in his true character, shows him up just as he was, and shows us the great danger of being like him.

But hear next what Samuel, the prophet of God, says to him: "And Samuel said to Saul, Thou hast done foolishly; thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee; for now would the Lord have established thy kingdom upon Israel forever. But now thy kingdom shall not continue; the Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee." 1 Sam. xiii: 13-14. This sentence shows how thoroughly God condemns sin, condemns rebellion in every shape, and form. Had Saul humbled himself, and had confessed and condemned his own sin, and shown a disposition to respect, love, and submit the will of God, he would certainly have been forgiven. But instead of this, he proved himself in love with sin, and in very deep rebellion against God. And his whole after life was of this same character, manifesting a love for self, a disposition to go his own way, and then trying to justify it instead of confessing his sins and turning from them. Hence, after this, when God sent him to destroy the Amalekites, he rebelled again. God commanded him to destroy them, and to destroy all that they had. But he and the people with him, all by his knowledge and consent saved the best sheep and of the oxen and brought them with them, and brought the hing also alive. And when Samuel went out to meet him, he came up boasting, and claiming that he had done the will of the Lord. He delivered himself in these words: "And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul said unto him, Blessed be thou of the Lord; I have performed the commandment of the Lord."

Now, Saul knew just as well when he made this utterance that he had sinned, had disobeyed God, and that he was falsifying, as he ever knew it afterward. But he was proud-hearted and selfish, and determined to justify his own course again. Hence Samuel said to him in reply, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" Saul then tried to throw the blame upon the people, and said, "They have brought them from the Amalekites; for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed." Samuel then chided him again for his disobedience, and he made another attempt to justify himself, as follows: "And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord sent me, and have brought Agag, the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal." Saul knew all this time that he had not obeyed God, but he was too stubborn to acknowledge and repent. He was ready to throw the blame on others, or anything rather than acknowledge and condemn his own sin, and turn his back upon a sinful life. What an awful mistake he made in this!—a mistake lastingly and unchangeably fatal to him.

Samuel saw from this stubborn effort to justify his sinful course, that his case was hopeless, that he was too far gone to be reclaimed, reformed, and made submissive to the will of God. Hence he turned upon him with this withering reply: "And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold! to obey is better than sacrifice, and to harken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." All this is found in fifteenth chapter of first Samuel.

This searching rebuke of Samuel shows up Saul's character in its true light, and tells exactly what he was. It shows that he was not only rebellious, but determined to sustain himself in his sinful course. And in this case, like the other, his stubbornness in trying to justify his course, was more than the act of disobedience itself. It shows him in love with sin, deliberately, persistently, shows him trying to justify sin, by trying to sustain himself in it. Never did man attempt a more dangerous course than to try to justify himself in a sinful act, either by trying to persuade himself or others that he did right when he knows he did wrong, or by laying all the blame upon others, when he knows he is at fault. We must be sincerely honest with ourselves and with others, if we expect to stand acquitted at the judgment seat of Christ. When Saul saw what a difficulty he had placed himself into, that he was rejected of God, and about to be abandoned by Samuel, he then began to whine out a confession of his sin, saying, "I have sinned; for I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord, and thy words: because I feared the people, and obeyed their voice." But this came in too late for him. He saw that he was caught, that he was found out, and then pretended this confession of sin, that he might retrieve himself from the dilemma. The whole history of the case shows this to be true. He knew his sin at the start as well as he did at the end, but he thought he could dodge out of it and sustain himself. But when he found that he failed in this, he made a confession, to try to induce Samuel to forgive him and remain with him, that he might go on and be honored as king.

Had he come up at the start, and made an honest, open confession, showing himself to be heart-sick over his sin, and had manifested a determination to reform his life, and to do so no more, his future history would doubtless have been very different from what it is. But his future life shows that he was not sincere in his confession. For he did not reform his life. He did not turn about, and give the rest of his life in humility to the service of God. But he went on from bad to worse, until when God would communicate to him no more, he applied to the witch of Endor, and was there told of the awful fate that was immediately to befall him and his son, which came to pass to the very letter. Thus he ended his life in rebellion, in sin, in ignominy and disgrace, and thus leaves to us an example of the terrible end of sin. Let every Christian strive to profit by his example. Let us all be strictly honest, and never apologize for sin for one moment, but be always ready to confess and abandon it, showing our own hatred for sin, and our love for God and his laws, and for the pure and holy life that he requires us to live. We have an example of the very reverse of Saul's life in that of David. But we shall have to wait till another number to give David's history.

LETTER TO N. B. WALLACE.

My dear father in the gospel:—I had answered yours through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE; but today's mail fills my wounded heart too full; I must find relief by writing to you. Bro. Ascue is dead. No, not dead, but absent from the body. I am lonely, I am sad. My heart bleeds, and my eyes refuse to be dried. My father, I would not stir the quiet of your soul, but it is too much to bear alone. I left him last Thursday; he was better, and talked often of you, and agreed to go with me next year to see you, and visit the churches. He loved you, and I am impressed of the fact that the "words of dying men enforce attention like deep harmony." His words were scarce, and hence not spent in vain. His request was that when he had finished his course, you should write his abituary.

The dark "cave of eternal night," I will not believe is the end of his journey. When this great world is but a piece of ruined nature, he will unfurl his utmost sail towards a better land, where death can never come. "His tongue is now a stringless instrument," unstrung only to catch the tune of endless praise in harmony with the immortal songs of the redeemed. Amen.

He has felt the worst of death's destroying wound. How many would have given their honors, and their wealth this very day to have saved their carcasses from a starless grave, and their spirits from outer darkness, but they died too. I am charmed in the midst of my own sorrow. Our Father, the tried soldier, did not find death where I heard him groan, nor feel him where he struck. To believe he shall live again is worth the world to me now. When I remember the multitudes whose lives have been mellowed by his persuasion, and caused to surrender to the king immortal, I will not mark the place where the broken casket has fallen with a monument, I helped him while he lived and labored. Now he rests from his work; a monument is left by the impress of his own noble manliness deep in the core of my heart to his memory, and shall not be mocked by marble which perisheth. Thank God, his lofty spirit is held from falling by so light a touch as that which is called death. To him it is but a dream of pleasant groves and cooling fountains. So be it.

Abraham's daughter refused to be comforted because her children were not. I must confess that I have been brought up in a different school to that. Though our Father be dead, (separated from the body,) yet he shall live again. My tears have turned back, my heart is less sad. We shall meet again when the war is over.

Your son in the Gospel. R. W. OFFICER.

Close up the ranks, soldiers. There fell a noble warrior. We will imitate him and die with armor on, and as we fall, the angels will bear us to our resting place:

*They come! on the wings of the morning they come!
Impatient to lead some poor wanderer home;
Some pilgrim to snatch from this stormy abode,
And lay him to rest in the arms of his God."*

Walter Scott, in his life says: "Partook of the Lord's supper with the brethren. It is usual with me or Bro. Church to call on a brother to address us at that solemn moment, but I do not approve of it. Experience is against the custom. No one who is invited, sympathizes with the occasion, or is equal to it. The preaching is about whatever is in the mind, and that is never the supper. This is unsuitable, and, to me, very annoying. If the subject were Gethsemane, the house of the high priest, Pilate's bar, or the Praetorium, if it were the nailing him to the cross, his elevation on that accursed tree—his groans, cries, death, burial or resurrection, it would direct the mind to the Son of God. If the Supper were spoken of as a memorial of his death, its character as a symbol of union among brethren, or any of its other meanings, it would be in union with the occasion; but this is never done." How often the mind is led from the Savior, instead of being filled with the deepest tenderness for his suffering and love to the frail beings of earth.

FROZEN UP!

The printing office where the second annual report of the Christian Sower Tract Fund was being prepared, the pocket books upon which this Fund depends for a living, and the fields we had hoped to have seen thickly sown with Tracts during this, the first month of the new year, in short, everything seems have bowed to the dominion of the Ice-king except the order of the Trustee. "Bide a wee and dinna fret," friends, we cannot always have things just as we want them. It will not be a great while before everything will be in running order. To the work! In the Lord, J. W. HIGBEE, Madisonville, Ky.

WOMEN AS INVENTORS.

The conclusion advanced by some prominent authorities in metaphysics, that woman is endowed with no creative faculties and is therefore incapable of originating anything in the line of practical invention, is not borne out by the facts. The Burden horseshoe machine, turning out a complete horseshoe every three seconds, was a woman's invention. At a renewal of the patent in 1871, it was claimed that $32,000,000 had been saved to the public during the fourteen years of its use. A San Francisco lady, inventor of a baby carriage, received $14,000 for her patent. The paper pail, the invention of a Chicago lady, yields a large income. The gimlet-pointed screw, the idea of a little girl, has realized millions of dollars to its patentee.—Miners' Journal.

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE is worth as much in a family as a preacher. I have tried both.

Died, Mr. Madison Klyce, a few weeks gone. He was a well-known citizen of Crockett county.

Let us in this, the beginning of a new year, resolve what we ought, and perform without fail what we resolve.

"The Bible has mitigated the horrors of war; it has given effectual obligation to the nuptial vow."—G. Spring.

On account of inclement weather, I failed to fill my appointment at Miller's Chapel on the first Lord's day in January, and at Finley on the second.

"My mouth shall speak truth. Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth. God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. I have walked in the truth."—The Bible.

Our venerable brother, D. A. Whitelaw, of Haywood county, is not expected to live long. He has been suffering many years with a disease of the bladder. Bro. Whitelaw is one of many whom we love in the truth.

Bro. R. A. Cooke will preach this year at Fulton, Mont-Rose, Concord and Milan. Bro. J. R. Farrow at Bell's. We would be glad if all the brethren in West Tennessee and North Mississippi would let us know something of their fields of labor for this year, that we may publish them. They would be read with interest by many.

In the month of December, on account of the inclemency of the weather in part, I preached only ten public discourses. I preached at Agee's School-house; Crockett Mills; Lamalsamac; Bro. Oguin's, near Rutherford; Edgewood, near Newberne; Finley, five miles West of Dyersburg; Newberne; Cairo, Crockett county; and again at Crockett Mills. The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

A young man wrote Dr. Prime for advice about the way to get an education. Said the doctor: "The way of the world now is for you to look about and see who will help you to get it. This is not the right way. Look about and see what you can do to help yourself. Grind your own axe. Support yourself by honorable industry, and earn your bread while you improve the odds and ends of time in study. When you get something ahead, use it to support yourself while you learn. Ten thousand men are now serving their generation with usefulness and honor, who never asked anybody to grind an axe for them."—Well-Springs of Truth.

Obituaries.

Fell asleep in Christ, December 15th, 1883, Sister Sinsy White, consort of Elder Geo. White, of Crenshaw county, Alabama. Sister White was the second wife of Bro. White, who is now in his 84th year. Bro. White is truly a father in Israel, having been a consistent member of the church of Christ for more than half a century. Our sister was attacked November 20th with paralysis, and bore with Christian patience her suffering for about twenty-five days. She was aware of her departure, and passed away in a full assurance of faith, and a bright hope of a glorious immortality. Sister White united with the church of Christ September 1860, under the teaching of Elder Wm. Kirkpatrick, who was gathered to the fathers several years since. Sister White was loved by all who knew her, and hers was the home of the Christian, as she greeted brothers and sisters in a way that caused them at once to feel that they really was at home. Bro. George White and sister White were married November 3rd, 1842, and lived quietly and happily together for forty-one years. Our aged Bro. is with Christian patience awaiting the bidding of the Master. Sister White leaves eight children, all grown and married, and all but two, members of the body. May they bow meekly to the will of our God, and strive to meet their mother on the shores of sweet deliverance.

Our better home, how sweet to think,
When torn from those we love,
No sad farewell can ever reach
Our better home above.

HEAD LINES FROM JOHN WESLEY.

NUMBER II.

John Wesley, in speaking of "The New Birth," uses this language, (Sec. 4, part 2,) "From the preceding reflection, we may, secondly, observe, that as the new birth is not the same thing with baptism, so it does not always accompany baptism: they do not constantly go together. A man may possibly be born of water, and yet not be born of the Spirit. There may sometimes be the outward sign, where there is not the inward grace. I do not now speak with regard to infants: it is certain, our church (the church of England) supposes, that all who are baptized in their infancy, are at the same time born again. And it is allowed, that the whole office for the baptism of infants proceeds upon this supposition. Nor is it an objection of any weight against this, that we cannot comprehend how this work can be wrought in infants. For neither can we comprehend how it is wrought in a person of riper years."

I have made another long extract from the father of "Methodism," that the reader may have the portion I design using, in the connection in which the author placed it. He observes that baptism and the new birth, "do not constantly go together." That "a man may possibly be born of water, and yet not be born of the Spirit." But "it is certain, our church supposes, that all that are baptized in infancy, are at the same time born again; (born of the Spirit.) And it is allowed (conceded) that the whole office (authority) for the baptism of infants proceeds upon this supposition." Now what do we find recorded here?

1. That not every person of riper years, who is baptized "is born again."
2. "Our church supposes that all infants who are baptized, are at the same time born again."
3. That the whole authority for, and use of infant baptism, is this supposition."

The first proposition is sustained, by quotations from the "larger catechism" of the "church of England," and the following; "But indeed the reason of the thing is so clear and evident as not to need any authority. For * * * one is an external, the other an internal work, * * * one is a visible, the other an invisible thing; one being an act of man purifying the body, the other a change wrought by God in the soul." Now the trouble to my mind on this proposition is this: If the new birth does not always accompany baptism, it may accompany baptism sometimes. (And this is the meaning of Mr. Wesley, I infer, from the connection of his reading.) How then is a person to know whether he is born again, before his baptism, at his baptism, or after his baptism, or at all? It is evident from the Scriptures that a person "of riper years" must be born of water and of the Spirit, before he or she is a child of God. And hence it seems to me, according to the reading of Mr. Wesley, that some may be born of water alone, some may be born of the Spirit alone, while others are born of the water and Spirit at the same time. And how can I tell—how can anyone tell—whether we be born of the Spirit first, or the water first, or of both at the same time. Oh, that "our church" could have framed a supposition as authority in this case, as in the case of infants.

Second Recorded fact. "Our church" supposes that all infants who are baptized, are at the same time born again. Now here is the best reason for infant baptism, to my mind, that I have ever read. I have read some high "theology—Grub-As Theology"—and also studied the teaching of the Bible to a limited extent, but never have I seen a stronger reason for infant baptism than this. "Those that are baptized in infancy, are at the same time born again." Oh! what a consolation to know that one is born again! Oh! that the followers of Mr. Wesley would tell the loving parents, that in having their infants baptized, they would be born again, then would consolation press her soothing claim. But, ah! me! how many thousand persons of riper years—yes, parents of tender babes, that spurn suppositions, though emanating from "our church" as authority for any religious ordinance, and who instead, desire the pure milk of the word of God, that they may grow up into a fit temple for the indwelling of God through the Holy Spirit. Oh! they go higher than the third proposition for religious worship to God—they go to his revelation, where they find a "thus saith the Lord," instead of a "supposition," though it originate from the Pope of Rome, or from the head of "our church" of England, or from the wisdom of the world, upon which to build their hopes of a "new birth."

INDEPENDENCE.

It has been well said that there is nothing in the wide world that secures success so completely as does perfect independence. People who are always waiting for help may wait a long time, a general thing. A little assistance, a little influence, is not to be had by asking, but there is always something one can do himself. Do it, whatever it is, with a will. If a young lady, don't sit still and hope a rich man will marry you, while your aged father toils for your daily bread. Learn how to help yourself, and take care of yourself as much as possible. Rather be one who does things for others, than one who must have things done for you. Two hands, two feet, sight and strength—these ought to enable you to dispense with help while you are young and vigorous. Men who can defy adverse circumstances, and can earn a living in any quarter of the world in which they are dropped down; who can roll up their sleeves and set to work at almost anything that offers; and who can even sew on their own buttons and make themselves a cup of tea when deprived of the help of womankind, are the ones who are really independent. The most helpful women are the kindest and truest; and as for a man, never trust him in any capacity if he has not within him the true spirit of independence, without which neither strength nor sweetness may be hoped for. In the battle of life there is but one way to succeed—fight it out for yourself. Give the helping hand when you may. Take it, if in some sore strait it is offered freely, but never ask for it. Be independent as far as man may be if you would honor yourself, or be honored by others, or be happy.—Ex.

He who lets one day slip by without feeling upon some portion of the Bible endangers the health of his soul as truly as the man defrauds his body who goes without food. And no sooner does he allow one day to pass thus forgetful of God and his truth, than a tendency is begotten which promises a second omission, and a third, and so on, until this bread of life, sent down from heaven for the nourishment of that which is immortal within us, is wholly neglected, and leanness of soul at last results in spiritual death.

When a man assumes to be extra "liberal," and yet sneers at every man who believes something he does not believe, he would do well to change his temper or his terminology.

Good works are always to be commended; a pure life is beautiful; but without faith in a living, all-sufficient Savior, the one thing needful is lacking.

NOTES FROM FLORIDA.

EDITORS GOSPEL ADVOCATE: This morning the disciples in this city held their first meeting for the winter. Several weeks had passed since I had enjoyed the privilege of partaking of the supper, so the meeting was of more than usual interest to me. One does not realize, until the pleasure is denied him, how hungry he can become for a sight of the familiar table. I had heard there were some members in Jacksonville, but had met none of them, so was agreeably surprised to read the announcement in the secular papers that the disciples would meet for communion services in the Odd Fellows Hall. The day was one of the loveliest and most delightful that can be imagined; and as the hour approached, myself and another wayfarer from Tennessee, Bro. Joe F. Mays, leisurely made our way to the appointed place. About thirty persons were present, and we soon made the acquaintance of several, and from the moment we entered the door, felt we were at home.

North, East and West were represented here; some had come for pleasure, to be safe from the snows and biting winds, and to find in this sunny land, a long rest from the cares of business. Others, alas, had left their childhood's home in sorrow, smitten by the consuming hand of disease, and fled hither in the hope of a new lease of strength, but all had met in this place to worship God, and all were welcomed with a smile and hearty shake of the hand. Bros. G. W. Linton and Challen led in the exercises. Bro. Challen is a son of our eminent brother, Jas. Challen. Bro. Linton read the entire five stanzas of the hymn, beginning, "Hail, sweetest, dearest tie, etc." Its beauty and appropriateness struck me as it had never done before, and as those can scarcely realize, who have not been placed in like circumstances. Strangers in the city, and to each other, we had met in this humble place, sneered at by the frequenters of the popular sectarian churches, (as in many other places, the "Campbellites" are obscure and unknown, or if known, despised) we were drawn together by the strongest feeling of brotherly love, and sung with a present application, the words:

"Hail, sweetest, dearest tie that binds
Our glowing hearts in one;
Hail, sacred hope, that turns our minds
To harmony divine.
It is the hope, the blissful hope,
Which Jesus' grace has given;
The hope, when days and years are past,
We all shall meet in heaven."

* * * * *
From eastern shores, from northern lands,
From western hill and plain,
From southern climes the brother bands
May hope to meet again.

* * * * *
No lingering look, nor parting sigh,
Our future meeting knows;
There friendship beams from every eye,
And love immortal glows.
O sacred hope! O blissful hope!
Which Jesus' grace has given,
The hope, when days and years are past,
We all shall meet in heaven."

After dismissed, we held a regular love-feast, and lingered to make each other's acquaintance. A Sunday-school was organized, Bro. Challen being elected Superintendent. The church will meet regularly hereafter.

Last Friday night I had the pleasure of seeing and hearing, but not understanding, the distinguished French ex-priest, Pere Hyacinthe. He is visiting America to see and learn something of our enlightened country, and to obtain material aid for the Reformed Catholic movement in Paris, of which he is the head. I did not suppose a man of his learning and ability would make a visit to this country without first familiarizing himself with the English language, so went prepared to take notes. After he had spoken some minutes, however, and I didn't seem to "catch on" somehow, pencil and note-book were ignominiously replaced in my pocket. I was very much disappointed, and so, as was plainly apparent, was the large audience of cultivated people who had assembled. The entire lecture was in French, and we could not understand six words. The Pere spoke earnestly, and is a dignified, intellectual looking man, seemingly about fifty-five years of age. He is accompanied by his wife and son. But enough.

"THE REAL ISSUE" REVIEWED.

The reader is requested to peruse most attentively Bro. Jones' article, "The Real Issue," before reading this review. As I have intimated before, if the existence of these societies is right, Bro. Jones may be expected to show it. Without consuming space by introductory remarks, I proceed at once to consider what he calls the "cardinal issue" between us. He says:

"If God reveals no way to combine a number of churches to evangelize the world, there can be no divine ideal for co-operation. Now it is admitted that 'inspired men worked in spreading the gospel for nearly a hundred years as teachers and evangelist and leaders of the churches,' and that no explicit declaration for the organization of societies is left on record."

This statement of Bro. Jones is strictly true, but it is not all of the truth in the matter. True, inspired men led the churches about a hundred years without giving an "explicit declaration" for the organization of societies; it is, moreover, a simple historical fact that no societies for the spread of the gospel existed, through all these years of guidance by inspired men, except the churches. It is another fact of history that these inspired men did not write a line, which can be made to intimate, upon any proper principle of interpretation, that the Holy Spirit foresaw that the necessity for the existence of such societies would arise. God gave societies (the churches) for the publication of his gospel and the extension of his kingdom; these were deemed entirely sufficient by the apostles, their coadjutors and immediate followers; and, although the Sacred Oracles are said to furnish the man of God "unto all good works," they nowhere teach that in the years to come exigencies may arise that will demand others. There can be no question therefore but that those of us who are content with the churches as missionary societies, and who are working faithfully through them, are walking in apostolic footsteps, the "old paths," "the good way." "If God reveals no way to combine a number of churches to evangelize the world," says Bro. Jones, "there can be no divine ideal for co-operation." May I not, then, upon the strength of this concession, and in the light of the above mentioned facts, conclude that there is no divine ideal for such a co-operation as Bro. Jones advocates?

"But," says he, "it does not follow that everything not explicitly authorized in the Bible is wrong. It cannot be assumed that the New Testament contains detailed statement and directions necessary to secure every element of strength in the spread of the gospel."

We do not ask for "detailed statements and directions" for everything in connection with these conventions and societies. All that we want is scriptural authority for the existence of the things themselves. When a thing is commanded everything that is necessary to the carrying out of the command is divinely enjoined, even though it be not expressly mentioned. The command is "make disciples of all nations," "preach the gospel to every creature;" are these conventions necessary to the fulfillment of the command? Certainly not; for inspired men led the churches for nearly a century, and published the gospel to the ends of the world without them. If they had been commanded, or if we had an example of the apostles' using them, or if they were necessary to the carrying out of command, then would they be authorized by the Bible; then would they exist by divine right; but I most unhesitatingly affirm that in one of these three ways everything must be authorized, that is authorized at all in the service of God. It is simply an admitted fact that they are not commanded, nor have we an example of them, nor are they necessary to the fulfillment of the law.

Bro. Jones thinks that a demand for "detailed statements and directions" for every step taken in the spread of the gospel is the "root error in every effort to suppress co-operative work." Let me remind my brother that there has been no effort to suppress co-operation work made. The question is, shall we co-operate as the apostles and first Christians did, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, or shall we do as the sectarians around us are doing? Some of us contend for the ancient way, and hence this discussion. Did the first Christians co-operate? Yes! Well, we are therefore in favor of co-operation. How did they co-operate? through missionary societies and conventions? No, it is admitted they did not. We, then, are not in favor of such co-operations. Where they have set us an example we want to follow it. In a former essay I showed in what way they did the work, and Bro. Jones admitted that my answer was scriptural and right. Now we favor co-operation in that way. Let those that love the Lord, and have the gift, preach the gospel to the world. Let the churches raise money and send it to them, while they are doing the work. Let individual Christians minister to these preachers as they are able to do, and as occasion may demand. In this way did the ancients co-operate, and in this way only. Three questions will arise out of this method of co-operation in the congregation; viz., How shall we raise the money? To whom shall we give it? How shall we send it to him? But these questions need not disturb the preacher. Let him do the work that is committed to him with all of his might. God's providential care is over him.

"Bro. Harding stands on one side of an opinion or human judgment and we on the other," says Bro. Jones. This does not seem to me to be a fair statement of the case. According to my understanding of the matter the issue is this; I favor co-operating as the apostolic churches, while Bro. Jones is disposed to adopt the methods of "our religious neighbors." Hence he says in his first article:

"While we are expending our strength in an effort to survey the island of apostolic Christianity, and are ready to bombard to pieces every ship that passes with any uncertain banner of expediency floating about it, our religious neighbors, with less apostolicity, but may be more of zeal, more self denial, and more system are entering the open doors of foreign lands. Madagascar, the Sandwich Islands, and many heathen countries have been transformed by what we term an imperfect gospel. Is not this infinitely better than none?"

This is not the question, my dear brother. Is this imperfect gospel better than the complete gospel? Is this sectarian method better than the divine method? Do they perform more and better work than did the first Christians? These are the questions. Shall we seek to restore primitive Christianity, or shall we scan sectarianism for "more system" and better methods? It is not true, however that any sectarian body in proportion to numbers and wealth, is doing more or better work than we of this reformation.

But "Bro. Campbell belonged to and encouraged one of these human organizations," says Bro. Jones. Concerning which allow me to remark, first, that these organizations were then much simpler and much less threatening to the peace, prosperity and independency of the churches than they now are; and, in the second place, that Bro. Campbell, though by far the greatest man of his days, the brightest light that has arisen among men for centuries, was neither inspired nor infallible; and, in the third place, as an offset to his great name, I remind the reader that neither Paul nor any other of the apostles "belonged" to or "encouraged" any of these human organizations. It seems to me that this last consideration should have great weight.

The local church, we agree, is and ought to be, as far as in it lies, a missionary organization; so writes our brother, and so we agree. It is an admitted fact, then, that God has given us a missionary society. Have we the right to assume that it is an insufficient one? Have we the right to organize another? The Lord has given us an institution by which to commemorate his death. Has any man the right to assume that this supper is insufficient in this age of the world, and to give the churches another one to be attended to in connection with it? The Scriptures give us an institution in which we are transferred into the kingdom of Jesus. Has any one the right to say this institution, baptism, is not now sufficient, and to ordain another one to be used in connection with it? The local church is as much God's society for the conversion of the world, as the supper is his institution for showing forth the death of Jesus, or baptism his ordinance for translating penitent believers out of the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of his dear son. It is fully as subversive of the divine way, fully as dangerous to the cause of God on earth, fully as sinful, to organize another missionary society to be used in connection with the church, as it would be to invent another supper, or another baptism, to be observed in connection with the divine. Would Bro. Jones be willing for the church at Carlisle to observe two Lord's suppers on each first day of the week, one human one divine? Would he be willing for it to practice two baptisms, one human, the other divine? I venture to say he would most hotly protest against any such innovation. Why then is he so ready to operate through two missionary societies? The same all-wise God that gave us the one supper and the one baptism, gave us also one missionary society, the local church; and no inspired man ever worked in any other, or intimated that any other would ever be needed.

Are not the congregations, when working according to New Testament teaching sufficient for that work? It must be replied that they are; for during hundreds of years no other societies were known; and that too in the first century of the Christians era, the most prolific age in missionary work. "We know that few if any, congregations do or can sustain a missionary singly," says our brother, and it is clear that in so saying he is wide of the mark. There is hardly any church, walking according to the teachings of the apostles in liberality and missionary zeal, that does not raise enough money to sustain an evangelist; and numbers of them, were they so to walk, would raise enough to sustain many. Bro. Jones thinks that Christians should give at least as much as the tenth; were they to do it, would there not be an abundance of money in almost every congregation to sustain a missionary? But they won't do it, and therefore another society is needed, it is said. I claim that he had better try to induce the churches to do their duty, instead of trying to invent something to fill up the measure of their deficiencies.

True the Jews went up to Jerusalem three times per year, and this was expensive; but God commanded it. When he commands we are to obey, regardless of cost. Were he to command the disciples to meet in Cincinnati every year in convention for devising ways and means for the spread of the gospel I would say let us all go; but as he has not given any such command, but has shown us another way, let us walk in it. We do not honor God by neglecting the institutions he has given us, and by inventing others to do their work.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

The Christians are erecting a fine brick church at Martin, Tenn.—World.

Sister Jennie Wilson was reported by Bro. Officer, as contributing $3.00 for the Indian Mission. The church at Riggs' X Road contributed the amount. She only sent it for them. She wishes this corrected.

Some time ago, we published in the ADVOCATE, a list of prominent Baptist scholars, who pronounce the claim to a succession of Baptist churches back to the apostles a myth. A Bro. wishes to find this to use it in discussion. We fail to find it in the Index; if any one can refer us to the number of the paper in which it is published, we will be thankful.

Our General News department froze up during the cold weather. We know those taking a secular paper do not care for this department. We would like to have an expression from others, if it is desired. If it is desired by any considerable number, we will keep it up; if not, we will not revive it, but will try to fill it with something better. Let us hear if you wish it. If you don't wish it, keep silent.

Bro. Westmoreland, of Gardner Station, was in our office the 11th inst. He was homeward bound from a trip of some weeks in Alabama and Middle Tennessee. He reports the building of a good brick house for the church at Martin under headway, but much interfered with by the cold weather. We hope the brethren at Martin will do well. We remember with pleasure our several visits to the place, when they were but few in number.

Bro. McQuiddy of Mormandy asks us the meaning of the expression, "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The house of this tabernacle the connection clearly shows means the fleshly body. Read the connection, in this house or tabernacle we do groan; then in the sixth verse, he drops the figure, and says, "Knowing whilst we are absent at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord. In the succeeding verses, the body is still used instead of house of this tabernacle. It clearly refers to the body.

We have received an invitation to be present, January 21st, at the golden wedding of Bro. N. W. Smith and wife, to be celebrated at the residence of their daughter, Mrs. Mitchol, Acworth, Ga. It would afford us much pleasure to be present, and in person tender our congratulations, and wish, as we sincerely do, many happy returns of the day that made the twain one flesh. We would be glad to do this, as it would be the celebration of the anniversary of our own birthday. Fifty years is a good long span of time for two persons to live together, as man and wife. We begin to feel ourself an old man, yet we were but three years old the day Bro. Smith and wife began their life jointure. Length of years, such as has been allotted our aged brother and sister, devoted to the service of God, as has been theirs, brings both a crown of honor here, as well as the crown of righteousness, which the Lord will give in that day "to all that love his appearing."

Bro. Johnson, from Floy, DeKalb County, Alabama, says Bro. Reaves came here three years ago. Organized a small congregation of six members, something over a year ago. They have prospered well, all working in harmony, until recently trouble has arisen over the hand of fellowship that disturbs some. He says they now have thirty-six members, and desire all to see alike, speak the same things, and have no division among themselves. This is just what Christ desires. While we believe there is no authority for the hand of fellowship, as an introduction into the Church of Christ, we believe it admissible as a pledge of love and brotherhood to a young member entering the fold, or to one another already in the fold. If it were given thus every Lord's day, it would promote union, love, harmony among the children of God. But it is not commanded, and should never be allowed to create division or strife.

We have a large number of queries on hand that have accumulated during the last six months. During this period we have both been very much from home. The queries would come and be filed. They grew to such a number that we dreaded to begin them. We are now going through with them, and will try hereafter to give more prompt attention to them, and will dispose of them as they come. This does not mean that we will try to answer all that we now have, or that will come hereafter. We will use our discretion as to what can be answered to profit. When we get queries about Revelations, we always know he has run over his lessons too fast, or he is ahead of us. We need to ask questions of him, rather than he of us. When we receive queries in the eighth and ninth chapters of Romans, from a man who tells us he is only a babe, we know he will not be profited by any answers we can give. He has begun studying at the wrong end of the book. He is trying to eat meat when not able to digest milk. He is seeking to know the mysteries of God's ways, instead of learning the ways in which he should walk. When a brother from a community in which the way of salvation is not known, asks about the difference between the soul and the spirit, what is the state of the soul between death and the judgment, or queries on the return of the Jews to Jerusalem, I know he has failed to imbibe the true Spirit of Christ, and the answer to his queries will not help him. Then again, queries are frequently asked, that no man can answer profitably. Frequently queries are presented that have quite lately been answered in matter, if not in form, in the ADVOCATE. None of this class can we, with justice to all parties, attempt to answer. But queries involving human duty, or proper interpretation of Scriptures that are practical in their bearing, we will gladly answer. If your queries are not answered, don't get hurt, but know that we, for some reason, do not think it best to try to answer. We cannot answer all.

Several allusions have been made to the Indian Mission, by Bro. Officer, but we learn that many of our readers fail to understand the true nature of it: First, the proposed mission is to the Chickasaw Indians, in the Southern portion of Indian Territory. Bro. Ascue, of Northern Alabama, one of our best men and a good teacher, with some Indian blood in him, went to the Nation, and claimed his right of homestead among them by virtue of his Indian descent. He has remained there, but is about seventy-three years of age, so cannot do much active work. Bro. Officer has made several visits to the Chickasaw Nation. He found no regular mission among them. Some preachers were there by permit of the Chief from year to year, but no mission of the council. He made application to the council for the privilege of a permanent mission. The elders of Churches at Gainesville and Paris signed it. The Governor gives assurance that it will be granted, and one hundred and fifty acres will be allotted for building a meeting houses, house for missionary and for farming. There are some brethren there in connection with Bro. Askew, but not enough to build the meeting-house, sustain a young and more active man as preacher, and get the work on foot. It is believed it can very soon be made self-sustaining. The denominations have missions among the other nations, but none among the Chickasaws.

The churches at Gainesville and Paris, Texas., have undertaken to manage the matter. It seems to me a move that ought to be heartily sustained. Any money sent to R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas, or to ADVOCATE, will be forwarded to him, and we doubt not, properly appropriated by the elders of these churches.

We confidently expected a large increase in our circulation the present year. Up to the 1st of January, while the weather was open, our expectations were more than realized in the large increase of lists coming in. The very rough weather since then, has, of course, cut down the lists to some extent. Yet they have continued to come in well, very well, considering the weather. We began with an issue that we thought would fill all orders likely to come in before the middle or last of February. All of one number are now gone, and the others will be in a few days more. This encourages us, and makes us wish to see the effort continued, and increased so soon as the weather becomes pleasant.

Our Southern people have never been as a body a reading people. We suppose that the same number of people North of the Ohio river, read ten times as much as South. Buy ten times as many books and papers. The result is, they are more active-minded, more wide-awake, more enterprising, and not only are more intelligent, but more successful in business than our Southern people. Reading, study, thoughtfulness open ways to success in business, that directly enhance the opportunities of success in life. We need to be stirred up on this question. Every parent ought to provide his children with good, wholesome reading matter, as a help to mental activity and business enterprise in life. Then, as Christians, we need continually to have our minds stirred up. Other things being equal, the Christian who reads and studies most, is the most zealous, earnest, active Christian. The man who pays the most for religious reading, is the man who pays most for the advancement of the religious interests of the people in every direction. Elders, teachers, evangelists, will always find those who read good religious literature, their most active helpers in the church. Those who fall away from their steadfastness, are those who fail to read and keep alive an interest in the church of God. I have no hesitancy in saying it would be economy in any church to supply every family, every member of the church with a good Christian paper. It would repay the expenditure in more liberal contributions, in a more faithful attendance upon the services of the church, in a quickened moral and spiritual life, and in developing the activity in a practical and Christian direction. We impress it then upon our readers, to extend the circulation of the ADVOCATE. We are sure it will do them good, and will help us to improve and enlarge it. With activity and perseverance on the part of our friends, its circulation can, and will be doubled during the present year. Will you not work with us for this end?

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

We call attention to the card of Pigue, Manier & Co., wholesale dealers in Boots and Shoes. No house in the city stands better than this for open, fair dealing, and prompt attention to business. We hope our friends trading in the city will give them a call, compliment them for advertising in the ADVOCATE, and see if they do not treat you as well as you will be treated anywhere else.

Home Reading.

Threshold of The New Year.

We are standing on the threshold, we are in the opened door,
We are treading on a border land we have never trod before;
Another year is opening, and another year is gone,
We have passed the darkness of the night; we are in the early morn;
We have left the fields behind us o'er which we scattered seed;
We pass into the future which none of us can read.

The corn among the weeds, the stones, the surface mould,
May yield a partial harvest; we hope for sixty-fold.
Then hasten to fresh labor, to thrash and reap and sow,
Then bid the New Year welcome, and let the old year go;
Then gather all your vigor, press forward in the fight,
And let this be your motto, "For God, and for the Right."

GLIMPSES OF JAPANESE HOLIDAYS.

The Japanese have many festive days. Unlike most heathen nations they are exceedingly devoted to their children, sparing neither time, labor, nor expense, for their amusement. Even their system of education is made a source of pleasure; and corporal punishment is a thing unknown in the family. Masquerades, domestic comedies, picnics, and many feast-days, are enacted and observed for the benefit of the little folks, giving a very strong impression that it is a shrewd method of enjoyment for the elders also. There are five national festival days, including New Year's, which, under the old laws, was not begun with ours, but on the ninth day of February. The second is called the "Festival of the Dolls," and is a great day for the little girls; during which the various specimens of dollhood are conducted into the state chamber of the house, which is beautifully decorated with blooming peach-boughs and evergreens. These favorite automatons are made to personify grand personages, from the ancient Mikado and his Imperial Court to the various families of the princes. For days before this greatest of great days to the daughters of the house, the shops are gay with these splendidly dressed images, and afterward are seen no more till another year brings the demand. Every respectable family has a number and variety, ranging from four inches to a foot and a half in height. When a daughter is born to the household, a pair are purchased, with which she plays, until grown; when she marries, these are taken to her husband's house, and, in turn, given to her children, adding to the stock with every daughter. In some old families the display is very large. A family banquet is served, and afterwards, the girls make offerings of sake and rice-cakes to the effigies of emperor and empress, and then spend the day mimicking the entire round of Japanese life, as child, maiden, wife, mother, and grandmother. Other toys, representing the table service, utensils of the kitchen, toilet set, and traveling apparatus, many of these very elaborate and costly, are in use on this day. This festival is celebrated on the third of May.

On the 5th of July occurs a corresponding feast for the boys. Previous to this day of rejoicing the shops are again gay with toys suited for the "Feast of the Banners." These consist of all the regalia and equipments of a damio's (prince) procession; the contents of an arsenal, flags, streamers, banners; effigies of heroes, warriors, soldiers on foot, horsemen, genii of strength, valor, etc. Such toys are bought for every son born into the family, hence the display is imposing and brilliant. The streets are gayly decorated, and planted with bamboo staffs, which are ornamented and trimmed with every device of oddity. Gay banners are placed in all conspicuous points, blazoned with national designs, heroic sermons, and family titles. Troops of boys in parti-colored clothes, wearing miniature swords and sabres, and each carrying a flag, throng the streets, while parents, priests, and police, look on in pleased admiration. Outside of the door of the home, a bamboo pole is erected, and hung by a string to the top of the pole is a large paper fish, representing a carp, which the Japanese consider the type of swiftness and strength. The paper being hollow, is easily filled by the breeze, and the huge body flaps its tail and fins in a most natural manner. The carp, being able to swim swiftly against the current, is a favorite type of the young man who mounts over all difficulties.

On the 11th of September is held the "Feast of the Lanterns," which is celebrated by processions in solemn pomp, to and from the tombs by night; a touching tribute to their dead. The 9th of November is the Flower Day, or "Feast of Chrysanthemums." This is simply a lavish and beautiful expenditure of flowers, which are made to decorate everything, and are offered as tokens of good-will to every one.

New Year's Day we had looked forward to with eager anticipations. This is not altogether a fete day. The national idea of justice is shown in the law requiring all debts to be adjusted, and no one allowed to begin the year with unsettled accounts. Therefore, no one gives himself up to unrestrained enjoyment on this day until those matters are satisfactorily arranged.

On this day, for which we had been impatiently waiting, we prepared to go everywhere and see everything that one pair of feet and eyes could accomplish. Festive preparations had been going on for many days; such as thoroughly renovating and cleaning the houses, planting evergreen and bamboo branches along the streets, and either side of the vestibules or doorways. The bakeries were unusually alive, and teeming with delicacies. Professional rice pounders, with their immense mortars and pestles, were hurrying from house to house. Flowers and ornamental shrubs, of exquisite varieties, were vended on every hand, and the shops displayed their daintiest wares and toys.

Households, on this day, not only prepare an abundance of good things for feasting themselves, but provide a liberal supply for those that are poorer than they. Each home, too, must be decorated, which is not a difficult matter in this ever-blooming land. Every house and street was brilliantly illuminated for the inauguration of the new year, till the entire city, bay, and country, were lit up with a brilliancy we had never seen equaled. During the morning, a Sabbath-like stillness prevails, while accounts are being adjusted, and family life reigns supreme. Indeed, it has been said that New Year's Day is the only Sabbath of Japan. After that, all is astir; every one in festive garments and smiling faces, exchanging polite greetings.

The Japanese are well trained in the laws of good breeding, and, in their several grades, seldom offend the rules of etiquette. According to these rules, a joyous freedom is extended to every one on this day of days. Various styles of reception cards are carried through the streets on elegant lacquered trays by obsequious servants. It is the custom of many Japanese merchants to send to the families of their customers beautiful fans and toys of exquisite designs as gifts, in the same manner.

One of the most popular amusements of the day is masquerades, in which children, parents, and servants, delight in mystifying each other by personifying various families of rank. Here and there fathers, with their big and little boys, were intent upon the use of the top,—in which they were very expert, while bevy of pretty girls and young women merrily played with battledore and shuttlecock.

At one time, we were mystified by sweet musical sounds in the air, resembling those proceeding from an Æolian harp, and discovered that these came from a great number of kites, flying over the city. Our Japanese teacher explained this mystery to us by showing us a strip of fine bamboo stretched across the frame of the kite. This creates the strange, sweet music.

But the toys—could I venture to enumerate them? Nay, not even to name them, or designate them. Some, however, were familiar. It has been well said that in the toy-shops of Japan, one may see the microcosm of Japanese life; for in the children's life, one may see enacted the miniature drama of the serious life of the parents. It would be difficult to draw a line of demarcation between the amusements of the children proper and those of a larger growth, from previous to the large influx of foreigners, the principal business of this nation was play. The contrast between the Chinese and Japanese in this respect is striking indeed. The Chinese inculcate to their youth that play is absurd and unprofitable. The dignified Chinaman has an aversion to national amusements or athletic exercises; while the Japanese not only provide the full quota of harmless sports for their children, but enjoy and enter into the same with equal zest.

But to return to the toys; among them are bows and arrows, artificial birds, and hen and chickens, true to nature with marvelous fidelity; exquisite dolls parading the streets with automatic regularity; families of mice, rabbits, and monkeys; eggs and fruits, in brilliant colored crapes. Here are cranes, parrots, dragons, and wild beasts, all in mimic—that is toys, in mortal combat; feats of jugglery, impressive as impossible, and all entered into the heartiest earnestness, hilarity, and mirth. But one is told with sudden gravity. "It is all for the children!" Blessed childhood! And it is plain to see that these people revel at will within its sacred precincts, to drown the cares and sorrows of their riper years.

Here the man with the magic swimming-birds tips his tiny water-fowl with camphor, and floats them in a long narrow trough of water. The dissolving gum propels the fowl from side to side, and imbues them with life, to the widening eyes of the uninitiated. The bug-man harnesses paper carts to the backs of the beetles, and a half dozen will drag a load of rice up an incline planed. The fire-eater rolls balls of camphorated paste, glowing lambent fire, over his arms and face, and then extinguishes them in his mouth. Rare shows, in which one sees some famous bit of natural scenery, or the inside splendor of a damio's palace, dancers, flute-players, posturers, conjurers, acting charades, throng the streets. Here are a bevy of pretty girls, dressed in their gayest robes and girdles, with painted lips and cheeks, till they resemble beetles' wings, their beautiful hair still more beautifully dressed, playing battledore and shuttlecock. There is a knot of boys laughing uproariously over a huge image of Daruma, the snow-man of the northern and western coasts. In America the boys snow-man is a Paddy with a caved hat, clay pipe and shillalah in hand; but in Japan the snow image is Daruma, one of the followers of Buddha, who by long prayers in kneeling posture lost his legs from paralysis.

Banquets are spread in the streets for the police, and the benefit of those who prefer this repast to the more private dinner at home. Buckets, barrels, and porcelain jars, are everywhere flowing with new saki (rice beer), which everybody drinks, and yet, to the credit of these people be it said, there is a little drunkenness; and although we are ashamed, yet we are glad to know that the temperance laws of Japan are far stricter than in America.

Far into the night some religious ceremony is enacted by the head of each household, and by the priests in their temples, by which all evil spirits brooding about on wrong intent are said to be exorcised, and thus the day is ended.

The Japanese are determined to enjoy life as they go. Probably much of that habit of devoting so much time to recreation and amusement is due to the sad tenets of Buddhism and the steady growth of infidelity. We live in the faith of a joyous immortality, but annihilation and transmigration can hold but little to brighten the cares and toils of the present. Therefore we see all classes of this people leaving their labors to go on short journeys into the country, where, under the rustic shade of blossoming fruit-trees, or in one of the endless tea-houses, they may rest, refresh, and enjoy themselves. We often observe family groups visiting the suburbs, or temples and statues on some high hill, with apparently no other object than to view the landscape under a light fall of snow, or to gather some of nature's treasures to adorn the grottoed wall or miniature lake at home, or to amuse the children.

These tea-houses are a character—if I may be allowed the expression; idyllic certainly. Charming retreats with flowers, arbors, and climbing plants; flowers growing even upon thatched roof. Ah! lover of the thea-nectar, would you have it in perfection? Come, then, and sip from dainty cups, ambrosia fit for the gods! and with it, on some of these fair hills, drink inspiration not only for your poet or artist's brain and eye, but enthusiasm and high resolve to enter in and possess this land for the King of kings and Lord of lords! The harvest is ripe, but the reapers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest.—S. S. Times.

We grow broader, not by seeing error, but by seeing more and more of truth.

Brethren L. & S.—I went to Ghent, Ky. The weather was bad and I preached five discourses—had a happy greeting with the good people of Ghent. Those who are reading the ADVOCATE there are well pleased with it. The meeting there was a happy one. The brethren treated me very kindly, and I promised to visit them again. I preached one discourse at Liberty station where the brethren have just built them a nice house of worship. Have not yet seated it. I promised a meeting when they finish the house. We have a set of earnest brethren there. This is where Brother Elliott of Murfreesboro, held a big meeting in November, and organized the church. He is a good preacher, and is preaching in Carroll county, Ky., this year. I will hold a meeting next at Sulphur, where Brother Elliott lives, beginning next Saturday night. I preached there last night on my way here. This is where Brother James A. Harding planted the church.

May the Lord bless all these brethren. They have been kind to me. I attended the prayer-meeting here at No. 25 Portland Avenue, Louisville. They had a house full. They are in earnest, and are pleased with the ADVOCATE. J. HARDING.

WITHOUT AN EQUAL

BETTER THAN CALOMEL OR BLUE MASS

For Headache, Sour Stomach, Torpid Liver, Sick Stomach or Biliousness DR. DUNCAN'S VEGETABLE PILLS.

Stop in Time

That dangerous, Cough, which may lead to Consumption and Death, by using DR. DUNCAN'S NEVER-FAILING COUGH BALSAM.

Cure For Croup.

That most dangerous and dreadful disease, so fatal in many cases, quickly cured by DR. DUNCAN'S COUGH BALSAM.

SERIOUS MISTAKES

are often made in allowing a simple Cough to run until it is beyond the aid of medicine. Act with prudence and cure it at once with DR. DUNCAN'S COUGH BALSAM.

It is no small fault to be bad, and seem so; it is a greater fault to seem good, and not be so.

A bad taste in the mouth means a bilious attack. Samaritan Nervine is the cure.

When your wife's health is bad, when your children are sickly, when you feel worn out, use Brown's Iron Bitter's.

What the present man tries to do is a prophecy of what the future man will do—women likewise.

A MIDWINTER OFFER.—I desire every home within the reach of civilization to possess one of my matchless Organs and to this end only I make this offer.

$65.00 Parlor Organ, with Book, Stool and Music, complete, boxed, $35.00 delivered on cars at Washington, New Jersey, FOUR ONLY. Providing Order is received and remittance made within seven days from date of this newspaper.

CLIP THE FOLLOWING NOTICE AND MAIL WITH ORDER.

No. 111. Upon receipt of this Notice from any reader of the Gospel Advocate together with only $35 CASH, by P. O. Money Order, Registered Letter, Check or Bank Draft, mailed within the limited time, as specified, I hereby agree to receive and pay in full payment for one of my Parlor Organs, New Style, No. 700, etc. Money refunded with interest at 6 per cent. from date of your remittance, if not as represented after one year's use. (Signed) DANIEL F. BEATTY.

Remember to secure this GREAT BARGAIN you should order at once before the limited time has expired. Nothing can be gained by long correspondence. My sole object is to have this popular Organ introduced, without a moment's delay, into every household throughout civilization, as early and as quickly as possible. I am willing to offer the first instrument at a sacrifice to introduce, as every one sold so far has sold others. In one particular instance thirty sales, at $65 each, have followed the first Organ purchased. First Organ is shipped at $35.00 as an advertisement. All I ask in return of you is to show the instrument to your circle of friends. The instrument speaks for itself; it sings its own praises. If you are unable to accept this Great Offer, write me your reason why. Perhaps you have an instrument already of some other make and are not pleased. If so, dispose of it and order this. Friends of yours may desire an Organ. Call their attention to this advertisement. If they are from home mail this offer to them. If you can conveniently help me extend the sale of these Popular Instruments I shall certainly appreciate your efforts in need of an Organ you should avail yourself of the above offer at once, as it will not be repeated. Let me hear from you anyway. Bear in mind, that I will not deviate from the above offer. ORDER IMMEDIATELY.

Loss and Gain.*CHAPTER I.

"I was taken sick a year ago
With bilious fever."

"My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I

Could not move!

I shrunk!

From 228 lbs to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains all left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after using several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign, but weigh more than I weighed before. To Hop Bitters I owe my life." R. FITZPATRICK.
Dublin, June 6, '81.

CHAPTER II.

"Malden, Mass, Feb. 1, 1880 Genmen—

I suffered with attacks of sick headache.

Neuralgia, female trouble, for years, in the most terrible and excruciating manner.

No medicine or doctor could give me relief or cure me:

"The first bottle

Nearly cured me:

The second made me as well and strong as when a child.

And I have been so to this day."

My husband was an invalid for twenty years with a serious

Kidney, liver, and urinary complaint,

Pronounced by Boston's best physicians—

"Incurable!"

Seven bottles of your bitters cured him, and I know of the "Lives of eight persons"

In my neighborhood that have been saved by your bitters,

And many more are using them with great benefit.

"They almost

Do miracles"—Mrs. E. D. Slack.

How TO GET SICK.—Expose your self day and night; eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know how to get well, which is answered in three words—Take Hop Bitters!

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

PUBLICATIONS.

We wish to say some things to our readers on the subject of publication. We get much advice from them, and, as usual, the less they know about it, the more freely they tender advice. We stated we could not publish the index on the first page, now they have begun to flood us with advice to put it on the last page. There is just the same difficulty about putting it on the last that there is on the first page. They go to press together. Some advise us to put the paper down in price. We have done all in our power to make a cheap paper. We have worked eighteen years for it, and have paid out more dollars for it than we ever received from it. Only one or two years have the editors and publishers received anything like pay for the labor or means invested in it. Even now, we offer men commissions to work for the ADVOCATE, that if they will give a fair amount of attention, will pay more than either one of the editors hope to get for their services, but they think the pay too small. Whenever you ask us to lower the price now, you ask us to work for nothing all the year, that men who are too stingy or indifferent to religion and religious culture, may save a fifty cents or a dollar during the year. The editors fail to see why they are under obligation to give all their time for nothing, that others may receive a paper, and have one day more to idle, or one dollar more to spend or hoard. Then the complaint of price is an excuse only for not taking a paper. This is merely an excuse. If this excuse were remedied, others would be found. We used to charge three dollars for the ADVOCATE. We remember brethren would tell us if we would reduce it to two dollars, we could get a great many more subscribers. We reduced it, and the men who clamored most for its reduction ceased to take it altogether, and if the reduction ever brought us one new subscriber we did not know it.

But others publish papers cheaper, why cannot we? Of this we wish to speak. Increase of circulation greatly cheapens papers. Papers in the South have never been able to compete with those North, because they have never been able to secure the circulation that those North, do. This difficulty arises from two causes. First, our southern people are not a reading people as the northern people are. An ordinary northern farmer as regularly provides a supply of reading matter for his family, as he does fuel or provisions for the body. Here has been the secret of the great success of the northern people over the southern. Mental activity is excited. This leads to enterprise and success. On the other hand, southern farmers, well to do, spend hundreds of dollars on a little finery, and on tobacco and whiskey, but growl at the idea of a dollar or two spent for reading matter for the family. No wonder the young people seek sensual dissipations as a means of passing off the time, and grow up without enterprise, without ambition, with only taste for fleshly gratification, with no aspirations for usefulness and for honorable lives. From mental inactivity and lack of enterprise, they live along in poverty and want, with advantages for wealth lying all around them, and are crowded out by a more enterprising people, drift West to live the same life of mental inactivity, and again be crowded out by people who read and think. Many families might save their children from lives of poverty and want, of dissipation and moral ruin, by the judicious expenditure of a few dollars in good reading matter. Because the people have not sustained, and there has been no demand for good papers, they have not been published in the southern country.

When some of our southern people desire a paper with all their sectional prejudice, they send North for it. The northern people have been much wiser in their course in this, than southern people. The northern people appreciate the importance of building up home interests, home manufactures, home papers, and sustaining home institutions. They know a paper in their midst, if not quite so good as one at a distance, is worth more to excite home interest and develop the home talent than a better one at a distance. So they heartily sustain the home paper so as to enable it to be as good as the best. Our southern people seem to be lacking in that commendable regard for home institutions, so are ready to send North for their preachers, ready made to hand, for their papers, to schools and neglect and discourage the home talent, just as they are willing to discourage all home manufactures, and be dependent upon foreign sections for all the implements of necessity and comfort. Such a people never will prosper, or have weight in the world's affairs in any respect. The trouble is, they lack self-respect.

The northern people do not act thus. They never patronize southern papers or institutions. It is not because there is not talent at the South. It is true there has not been so much literary talent developed at the South as at the North, because there has been no demand for it, no encouragement to it. Southern men have gone North and succeeded. The leading men of some of the best papers North, are men of southern birth and southern parentage, and southern raising, but they had to go North to find a market for their wares. The northern people would not patronize them so long as they remained South, but when they go North to build up northern institutions and enterprises, they are heartily welcomed and sustained. We are not complaining of this. They act wisely. We ought to learn a lesson from this. If we wish to command the respect of others, we must respect and encourage our home talent, home institutions and enterprises. If we wish to encourage our children and our families to be enterprising, and to the development of their talent and energy, and to use the opportunities around them, we must encourage our neighbors who make the effort.

Another trouble with our southern people is, their individuality is developed to a greater extent than others. Each one accustomed to manage his own affairs, they have not become accustomed to yield their individuality so as to harmonize with others. In all joint enterprises this must be done. If everything does not please the individual preferences of a southerner in a paper, he will have nothing to do with it. He has not learned by working in combinations, that in all matters where many different persons are interested, all must, to a greater or less extent, learn to yield their individual preferences for the general good.

Nothing hinders our southern papers more than this. A brother don't like some position of the editor, or some writer, therefore he will have nothing to do with the paper. This will kill any religious paper whose editors have any convictions of their own, no others are worthy to live. A brother wrote me not long since, I have not encouraged the ADVOCATE, because it has stood against my ideas of co-operation, as though the ADVOCATE had stood against his ideas, more than he had stood against the ADVOCATE's ideas, as though the ADVOCATE did not have a right to ideas as well as he. While the ADVOCATE has freely expressed its ideas, it has allowed every one the same freedom, has ostracised none. Such a spirit that refuses to encourage a paper unless it servilely conforms to his ideas, will destroy any paper. Our northern brethren have learned by constant work in combinations to be less exacting in asserting their individual peculiarities. Have learned to yield something of their individual preferences for common good, and so can work together and build up strong papers. These are some of the difficulties we have to meet. There are other matters we will speak of next week.

ROM. XIII: 14.

Nothing is taught more clearly in God's book, than the all-sufficiency of a church to sustain itself, drawing, at it does, daily and hourly from God's storehouse. We get knowledge from his book, we gain strength from the same source and prayer. As soon as a body of people aspire to the dignity of a church of the Most High, they should cast about for all the elements of continued life in itself. All the essentials are found in an ordinary sized congregation. It is shameful to look without and abroad for help to keep alive, or to carry on the work of the Lord. It is disastrous, too, to the family of the Lord. Just think, were all churches to conclude to import, or transport help, such as pastors and preachers, bishops and evangelists, where would they come from? There would be no supply. Well, it is the duty of one to produce such men as much as another. Some of the most brilliant and useful men come from humble places—the "Backwoods." What could be done, with proper effort, with better surroundings? The South goes upon the principle, (if, is worthy to be called principle) that money can buy all things. So they grow cotton and purchase their mules, meats, corn, and many other things from somewhere else. This want of system drains the money from the land, and impoverishes the country. At the same time, the resources of the country are not brought out, and the interests are not cultivated. How much like this ruinous course is the strangling of our ability, by inattention and sending abroad for something thoroughbred or varnished. Plenty of money will procure any subject of venality lands, houses, horses, cows, sheep, oxen, asses, and preachers. Look at what Paul says of the church at Rome. He said he was persuaded that the Roman brethren were "full of all goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish ("instruct," McKnight) one another." They had a good character, they studied God's word, and knew its teachings, then they could teach, admonish, instruct one another. This is not true of all churches. Why? Ask myself, my brother, why it cannot be said of the congregation of which you are a member? Is it not because your brethren study something else; and neglect God's word? Are you able to instruct one another, or is it true of you as it was of some Paul wrote about, "when you ought to be teachers you have need that some one teach you again the first principles of the oracles of God." There are ignorant churches just as there are ignorant men. There are lazy churches just as there are lazy men. But there should be neither. We should bestir ourselves.

J. M. BARNES.

SWEAR NOT AT ALL.

REPLY TO BRO. MORGAN.

For nine months I have waited patiently for Bro. Morgan to appear in answer to my challenge. I heard of the affliction that fell upon him about that time, and sympathized with him. But I believed that time and Christian faith and hope, would bring him comfort; and in due time he would come forth. And so he has. Bright and strong, he appears in the lists, and throws a shining lance with skill and courage. I salute him, and bid him look well to the armor wherein he trusts.

I concede to Bro. Morgan that the words of Jesus, "Swear not at all," are perfectly clear. Not the shadow of a doubt hangs upon their meaning. That Jesus said what he meant; and that he meant to forbid swearing, this is self-evident. I beg of Bro. Morgan, not to try to make it appear more so. He cannot do it. It is not needed. I admit it. I do not belong to the mystic school. I do not deal in what he calls "fine spun logic." I have no use for it. I heartily accept the rules of interpretation, as laid down by the latest and best authorities. I am willing in all things, to abide by "the simple teaching of the word of God." There now, Bro. Morgan, I am a better man than you thought. Am I not a hopeful case for conversion? If you fail on me now, certainly it will be because you use not converting power—the truth.

Bro. Morgan and I, do not differ about what Jesus said, or what he meant. We differ about the application of his words, "Swear not at all." Bro. Morgan affirms that their application is general, unlimited; that "they apply to every conceivable kind of oaths." I deny this. I affirm that their application is special, limited to certain specified kind of oaths. This, I believe to be a fair and clear statement of the issue between us. It is truly said, that "an issue clearly stated, is half argued." I concede further, that the general application of such words, is the most natural, that is, it strikes the ear first as the right one. It is therefore incumbent on me to prove that the limited or special application is the right one.

The general application of words and sentences stands good until the special is proven. For example, "all Israel shall be saved;" all "men come to Jesus for baptism." "If I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The special or limited application of these phrases is the right one; but it must be proven. I am now ready for the argument.

It has been nearly a year since my article appeared in the ADVOCATE. Of course, in that time, my argument has faded from the minds of the readers. It is necessary for me to restate it. Bro. Morgan ought to have done it, that the readers might have seen the pertinency of his reply. But he did not. Judging from his reply, I do not think he comprehended the argument himself.

My first argument was against the position taken by Bro. Morgan, that Jesus, in Matt. v. 33-38, was speaking of the "judicial oath." From the Scriptures, I developed these facts:

1. That Jesus was born under the law, and subject to it.
2. That during his life, he rendered to the law a spotless obedience.
3. That as a teacher, he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it.
4. That a short time before his death, he said to his disciples, "The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe and do, that do." In these words, he bound on his disciples every requirement of the law, oaths and all. He loosed not one, (of course until the law was taken away.)
5. That the law required the judicial oath.

I then showed that Bro. Morgan's position was irreconcilable with these facts. For if Jesus forbid the judicial oath, he was (1) a destroyer of the law and not a fulfiller; (2) he was inconsistent with himself; (3) he came under the condemnation of the broken law. I could not deny these sequences, I could not accept them. Therefore I was compelled to reject the application of the words, "Swear not at all," to the judicial oath. For, it is a rule of interpretation without exception, that "no interpretation or application of Scriptures can be accepted as true that does not harmonize with all scriptural facts, and requirements." This is the substance of my argument. Bro. Morgan was bound as a fair disputant, to reply to this argument in some direct way. He ought to have (1) disproven my facts; (2) or to have reconciled his position with them. He has done neither, he cannot do either. So long as the argument stands unbreached, it is a reproach to his position. Bro. Morgan replies to this, not directly, but indirectly. I give the greater part of the reply in his own words.

In support of his theory, (position, L.) Bro. Lauderdale quotes various passages from the law, where oaths were required. I deem it unnecessary to answer in detail the argument drawn from these passages. But as pertinent to our investigation, I present this inquiry? Do we live under the Mosaic, or Christian dispensation? Are we bound by the old covenant, or the new? Do we live under the law that governed the Jews, or under the law of the Spirit of Life in Jesus Christ? If under the former, we ought to discard the teaching of Jesus altogether, as do the Jews, and live up to the whole law, practice all its forms and ceremonies, offer its bloody sacrifices, and do every thing else required by the law, and not hunt up isolated requirements; such as oaths, and reject all the others. This is the logical sequence of Bro. Lauderdale's position. He seems to realize it, for he uses this strange language, "If the law required the oath, and Jesus as a teacher, (of the law, L.) rejected it, then he rises up against the law, and stands self-condemned. He seems not to realize the great truth, that Jesus fulfilled the law in his death, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." If Bro. Morgan had studied my argument, he would have apprehended it, and not made this rash reply. I suppose he only glanced at it, and his quick eye thought it caught me on the wrong side of the new covenant line. That was the place to overthrow me, and he knew so well how to do it. Doubtless he had caught many a luckless Methodist and Baptist on the wrong side of that fatal line, and "routed him, and scouted him, nor lost a single man." He could not lose the opportunity, so he came down on me like Don Quixote on the wind-mill, and with about the same result.

He overwhelms me with questions; surrounds me with horrid dilemmas, and broadsides me with Scriptures. Well, I love to answer questions, and break the dilemmas, such as they: as for the Scriptures, he shall have the benefit of them. Answers: We, i. e., (members of the church of Christ) are under the Christian dispensation. We are bound by the new covenant. We are under the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus. Hence, we have nothing to do with the "forms and ceremonies, and bloody sacrifices of the law." Bro. Morgan failed to perceive that this question under debate, belongs to the old covenant, and not to the new; to the law of Moses, and not to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus; and that I was so discussing it. Hence, his questions are without point; his dilemmas without horns; and his Scriptures all against him. Jesus and his disciples were under the law of Moses, when he said swear not at all.

Hence the command is in harmony with every requirement of that law, and must be so applied. To apply those words to any oath or oaths required by the law, or even approved by the law, is to array Jesus against Moses, and against himself. To do that, is to misapply them. Jesus could as well have abolished the feasts, or the washings, or the sacrifices required by the law, as the oaths. They stood on the same authority and were no more binding than the oath. The man that shows that Jesus ever did, or taught anything contrary to the law, while under the law, puts a blot on his spotless character that unfits him for the work of Savior.

Bro. Morgan also failed to see the great difference between the disciples of Christ on that and this side of the cross. The cross divides the dispensations, on that side both the Master and his disciples were under the law. Every precept was binding upon them; fasts, feasts, tithes, sacrifices, oaths, and all, on this side, they are "freed from the law," "dead to the law," under Christ only. Bro. Morgan ought to have known this. He quoted against me the very Scripture that teaches it. Col. ii. 14: "Jesus fulfilled the law in his death, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." He says, I seemed not to realize this great fact, when he was the very man that seemed not to realize it. For he arraigned me as a Judaizer, because I based my argument on the fact that Jesus and his disciples were under the law until the cross made them free.

He thought I was confounding the covenants, when it was he who was confounding them. He thought I was Judaizing Christians, when it was he who was Christianizing Jews while under the law. His argument was that, if I bound the oath on the disciples to be consistent, I ought to bind on them all the other requirements of the law—bloody sacrifices and all. Well, I was just that consistent. I did bind them on, in the very name of Christ, until the cross made them free. And now I say to Bro. Morgan, and all who agree with him, if you release the disciples from the oaths on the other side of the cross, then to be consistent, you ought to release them from every other requirement of the law—"forms ceremonies, bloody sacrifices and all," and when you do that, you take away the law before the cross, and thus strip the cross of its glory and power. Thus I turn upon him his own argument. The inconsistency is with him, not with me. Jesus never took away the law by items. In unmistakable words he bound the whole law on his disciples. He leased nothing until he reached the cross, and then he bound all. It was not a broken, but a whole law that Jesus nailed to the cross.

And now, I say again, "Swear not at all," is commanded by Jesus under the law, to his disciples under the law, and it must be applied in harmony with the law. When this is done, the application will be limited to unlawful oaths, such as Jesus specified in connection with the command, viz.: "By the heaven, by the earth, by Jerusalem."

But in reply to all this, Bro. Morgan will say, "Jesus did certainly forbid the law of revenge. Why then not the oath?"

Well, that at first looks like a strong objection. But it is because he fails to see the great difference in the two laws. Revenge was not required by the law—it was permitted. The oath was required by the law. No Jew was commanded to revenge himself. Every Jew was required, on proper occasions, to take the oath. When Jesus said, "avenge not yourselves," he said nothing contrary to the law. But if he had commanded his disciples not to take the "Judicial oath," he would have been as much against the law as if he had said, "Do not keep the passover." Jesus in teaching his disciples not to avenge themselves, sought to lift them above that spirit that the law never approved, but permitted "because of hardness of heart."

I now claim that I have proven that the words of Jesus have no application to the "Judicial oath." If not to the Judicial oath then, it has none now; for the application can be no broader now, than it was then. Whatever the application was under the law, it is the same under the Gospel. If the words do not apply to the Judicial oath, then they do not apply to all oaths. If not to all oaths, then their application is limited. If limited, then my proposition is proven, and the backbone of Bro. Morgan's arguments is broken.

WORTH REMEMBERING!

The Christian Sower Tract Fund raised $634.81 last year. This was used in putting to work 1000 tracts of one page; 4000 of four pages; 6325 such tracts as "Sincerity" and "Our Position," and 170,500 card tracts. Many thanks to all who helped in this work. Let us do better in 1884. Just received 21,000 card tracts, and a large supply of such tracts as "Sincerity," "Our Position," "Christian Union," "Letters on Baptism," Errett's Review of the Methodist Tract, "Why I am not a Campbellite," and a new tract by J. H. Garrison, entitled "The Word Divided." They are very cheap but first class. Do not forget the new book, "Our Orthodoxy in the Civil Courts." It has no rival. You must have a copy, 50 cents in paper, $1.00 in cloth. Send me your orders for any of the above. You get them as cheap, and I make something to help in this tract work. Do not forget that the main object of this Fund is to give tracts away to destitute fields. It needs help, do not fail to give to its support.

Hasty Words.

Half the actual trouble of life would be saved if people would remember that silence is golden—when they are irritated, vexed, or annoyed. To feel provoked or exasperated at a trifle when the nerves are exhausted is perhaps natural to us, in our imperfectly sanctified state. But why put the annoyance into the shape of speech, which once uttered is remembered, which may burn like a blasting wound or rankle like a poisoned arrow? If a child be trying, or a friend capricious, or a servant unreasonable, be careful what you say. Do not speak while you feel the impulse of anger, for you will almost be certain to say too much, to say more than your cooler judgment will approve, and to speak in a way that you will regret. Be silent till the "sweet by and by"—when you shall be calm, rested, and self controlled.

Above all, never write a letter when you are in a mode of irritation. There is an anger which is justifiable; there are resentments which are righteous; it is sometimes a duty to express indignation. But if you consider the matter, the occasion for putting such feelings on record are comparatively few. They come once in a lifetime, perhaps, and to many fortunate beings they never come at all. Upon the whole, people—our friends and neighbors, and the community of which we form a part—are trying to do the best they can; and in hours of good temper and health life wears a bright and sunny aspect. Much of the friction which make the machinery of living move roughly and discordantly is caused by things too pretty to be noticed if we were in our normal condition. The hasty word spoken in petulance may be explained, forgiven and forgotten. But the letter written in an ebullition of wounded feeling is a fact tangible, not to be condoned. There it lies with a certain permanence about it. You have sent it to a friend, who reading it a half dozen times will each time find it more cruel and incisive than before. Letters once written and sent away cannot be recalled. You cannot be sure that your friend (or enemy) will burn them. Hidden in bureau drawers or in compartments of desks, folded up in portfolios, locked in boxes, they will, it may be, flash up again in sudden feud and fire, months after you have ceased to think of the folly which incited them, or the other folly which penned them.

Never write an angry letter, or write a letter when you are angry.

All heated feeling seeks the superlative as an outlet, and superlatives are apt to be dangerous. So long as we cling to the positive in speech, we are pretty safe.

We all need to be cautioned against undue haste in speech, but mothers most of all. It is so easy to grieve a little person who is forbidden to answer back; so easy to leave a picture of yourself in the plastic memory, which will be photographed there for the remainder of life, and of which you would in coming days be ashamed. Let who will be hasty and uncontrolled, the mother cannot afford to be either; and, if she ask the help of our Lord daily, hourly, and every moment, she will be kept from this sin and peril.—M. E. Sangster.

I do not wonder at the superstition of the ancient Magians, who in morning of the world, went up to the hill-tops of Central Asia, and, ignorant of the true God, adored the most glorious work of his hand. But I am filled with amazement when I am told that, in this enlightened age, and in the heart of the Christian world, there are persons who can witness this daily manifestation of the power and wisdom of the Creator, and yet say in their hearts. "There is no God."—Edward Everett.

If here, in the Church's low estate, the communion of saints be blessed, than how great shall the joy be in the the perfect love of the innumerable company of angels and men, when each shall love another even as himself; for every man then shall rejoice as much for his own felicity.—St. Augustine.

When we speak of obedience we should always speak of faith first. Faith is the first and fundamental act of obedience. Faith is the main-spring of obedience.

THE WHITE ROBES.

"What are these arrayed in white robes, and whence came they? And I said unto him, sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, these are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev. vii: 12-14. There is something supremely beautiful in the very expression, "arrayed in white," a most expressive indication of something entirely pure, entirely separate from everything corrupt, from every stain of filth and pollution. John, in vision, had just been permitted to look over on the other side, and beheld a vast multitude, all arrayed in white robes. One of the elders spake to John and said, what are these arrayed in white, and whence came they? and the above answer was given by the elder. These persons arrayed in white, evidently, are those who serve God faithfully in this life, who deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and who live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, who so live as to have all their sins washed away in the blood of the Lamb.

The white raiment is certainly intended to represent the character the Christian must possess, in order to be ready for the bright hereafter. And as these robes were purely white, no spot or stain upon them, the implication is that no spot or stain of sin must be upon us, when we go to cross over to the other side. No sin can enter heaven. All sin must be put down, or we cannot wear those beautiful white robes. No man can carry one sin to heaven with him. But, it is replied, no one can live on this earth without sin, no matter how humble, how devoted he may be. This, without doubt, is true. No man can live so heavenly, so pure on this earth as not to do anything wrong, as to commit no sin in this life, after becoming a Christian. It may then be asked, how can man's robe, his character, be purely, spotlessly white, when he stands with that innumerable throng on the other side of the river? This is easy enough, if we properly appreciate the Christian life, and the provisions of mercy which the Lord has made for us, through the offering of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ once for all. Under the old order of things, men had to keep repeating their sin offerings, in order to continue to obtain pardon for their oft recurring sins. But Christ was offered once, in the end of ages, to put away sin, by the sacrifice of himself to put an end to sin-offerings, so all men, through all time, may be forever purified from sin through his precious blood. It is not enough that our past sins be washed away through the blood of the lamb when we obey the gospel. For so long as we live in the flesh, and have to contend with the flesh, and with sinful influences, and temptations, we are liable to sin again and again. And all these additional sins must be forgiven before we can enter heaven. But thanks be to God, the way is provided that through the same precious blood of the Son of God, these sins may be forgiven to the very close of life. The apostle John, says, "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Jno. i: 7-9. The language was addressed to Christians, and is therefore applicable to Christians now. He says if we walk in the light, that is, if we live according to the light afforded to us in the word of God, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all sin. The word of the Lord plainly teaches us as Christians how to obtain pardon for sin committed after coming into the church, if we will only comply with the conditions upon which it is promised.

Many members of the church seem to live as if they would have no sins to answer for after coming into the church, as though all their sins, past and future, were washed away when they obeyed the gospel. But John says, if we (Christians) say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. We do sin as Christians, and these sins must be washed away in the blood of the Savior, or our robes will not be pure and white at the end of life. The blood of Jesus avails to wash away the sins of Christians, as thoroughly as the sins of the alien. And if the Christian will continue to avail himself of the privileges of the law of pardon to the erring child of God till the close of life, so that his last sins may be cleansed, may be washed away, he may then stand with the innumerable throng, and it may be said of him that he has come out of great tribulation, and has washed his robe and made it white in the blood of the Lamb. Christians cannot live the Christian life in this sinful world without suffering more or less persecution, without passing through tribulation. And the expression, "have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," indicates that Christians have something to do in the matter; have washed their robes. While the Lord has prepared the plan, and has set forth all the conditions of pardon, men have to use these conditions as the Lord ordained them, in order to obtain the blessings. The alien has to obey the gospel, in order to obtain pardon for his past sins, while the Christian has to continually obey the second law of pardon. God has ordained that the Christian must repent of all sins, committed after obeying the gospel, must confess these sins to God, and pray to him for pardon, in order that he may have the promise of forgiveness. This is all embraced in the expression washed their robes. This repentance must be sincere. It is not enough that the Christian man be sorry for wrong doing; he must strive with all his power to turn away from those wrongs, and do them no more. He must strive to make his life pure, by conforming to the Lord's will, and so far as possible, bring his whole life, with all its purposes and aspirations, into harmony with the will of God. All this is embraced in the washing of his robe. No Christian need suppose that the Lord will do all this washing without an effort on his part. As well suppose the Lord will pardon and purify the alien without an obedience to the gospel, as to suppose he will pardon the erring Christian without obedience to the law of pardon ordained for him. Christians then must labor. Must strive to wash their robes and make them white, to make their character as pure as possible. Only the pure, the holy, will be permitted to stand with the glorified ones on that eternal shore. The apostle said; "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Vain will be the pretensions of those who only have a name to live, and are dead. The character for heaven, the beautiful white robe must be prepared here in this life, must be washed and made white while passing through the tribulations of earth, and the man who fails to do this, makes a fatal mistake. There will be neither time nor opportunity when we come to die. The preparation must be made in this life, or not at all. But is not the reward to be gained, the blessings of eternal life, sufficient to stimulate us to do these things? To be permitted to be in that innumerable glorified host that will be with God and the Lamb forever, is surely enough to stimulate us to constant, earnest obedience.

E. G. S.

GAMBLING.

1. Bro. Lipscomb: What is gambling? Is it gambling for men to run for a prize, either on horseback or afoot? Is it gambling for editors to offer a few large premiums to be drawn for by subscribers? Is all gambling wrong? What about Bro. Lauderdale's fine Bible prize?

2. Do Christians need what is called pastime, or innocent amusements? Has not our Master always some employment for us that will yield the highest joy?

3. Is it wrong for us to join in with our sectarian neighbors to have a Sunday-school for our children, when there are few of us in the community?

4. What do you think of a brother lecturing against infidelity, in a way that pleases sectarians and gets their money, but offends the infidel? In other words, what do you think of Ingersol unmasked?

5. What do you think of a brother who says we have too many preachers, and says none but those who are gifted with eloquence, and are natural orators, should preach?—[H. North, Stephenville, Texas, December 22, 1883.]

Gamble is to seek through chance or skill to win what is another's, without giving an equivalent. Trade gives that which is worth as much to the seller, and suits him better than what he sells. In trade, both parties are benefitted—accommodated. In gambling one gains all, gives no equivalent. The other loses all, gets nothing. Two persons running, riding, shooting for a prize they jointly offer, gamble. If a third party for selfish ends offers ten dollars, and two or more persons are entitled to it, but agree they will run, or ride, or shoot, and whoever beats can take the whole, the others getting none, it certainly is gambling.

To offer premiums as pay for services in securing subscribers, is not gambling. To offer them as an inducement to make persons get subscribers, is not gambling. To offer one or two premiums, have a hundred work to gain them, when one or two get all which is more than compensation for the labor done, and the others who labored get nothing for their labors, it seems to me involves the elements of gambling. All gambling is certainly wrong.

By Bro. Lauderdale's prize, none lost anything, all were benefitted by the study of the questions, by writing what they learned. The Bible was a gift to stimulate them to learn. It was a gift to one out of a number. If a gift were promised a child on condition he learned a lesson, it would not be gambling. Then offering it to one out of a number who learned it best, would not be gambling.

If this is to be condemned, it is under another principle. "Fathers provoke not your children, lest they be discouraged." Yet I do not think it falls under this head.

2. Christians frequently need rest, recreation, social cultivation and gratification. That this can be found in something else than mere pastime or amusement, is pretty certain. Amusement sought as amusement, is the least amusing of all things in the world. Amusement won't amuse those who seek to be amused. Those who merely seek to amuse themselves, are the most troubled with ennui and the most disconsolate in feelings of any people in the world. Yet the Savior attended feasts. The Holy Spirit anticipated Christians would attend the feasts even of unbelievers. "If any of them that believe not, bid you to a feast and ye be disposed to go, whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no questions." This intimates Christians may attend socially such feasts. The succeeding verses show that nothing should be done while there, that could possibly encourage wrong doing. But our conversation and life should always be such as will minister grace to those who hear or see us. And there is no doubt but that self-denial for the good of others in the name of the Master, brings the highest measure of happiness man can attain in life.

3. If our sectarian neighbors or infidel neighbors will join with us in a Sunday-school—that is, in studying and teaching the word of God in its purity, it is right to join with them in so doing. The only thing, is to be careful we do not let these associations so control, that the true, full counsel of God is not taught.

4. I do not know much about Ingersoll unmasked or masked. Were I to lecture against infidelity, I would be glad that sectarians were pleased. I am always glad when sectarians are pleased when I preach the truth. The only thing is, we must not sacrifice the truth, or compromise the truth, or cater to wrong prejudices in order to please any body. If the truth was not sacrificed to please sectarians, we ought to rejoice that they were pleased. I do not know that there is harm in taking money, freely offered by those without, if no truth is sacrificed, no error is winked at to get this. But when a man goes out to depend on the upholders of error for support, then the temptation to wink at error is too strong for weak humanity. I would never ask or beg for help for the cause of God, when voluntarily tendered, would not refuse it.

5. We think every Christian in one sense, must be a preacher of righteousness. We likely have a great many preachers making preaching a profession through which to get a living. Of this kind, any is too many. But had this brother lived in the days of Paul, he would have stopped him and the great majority of good preachers of the world. But few men are good speakers at first. Bro. Fanning became a good speaker in his day. But after he had been trying to preach several years, a good old sister, whom I knew well in my childhood, told him, "Do go home, Bro. Fanning, and go to plow, you never can make a preacher." He was a right unpromising piece of timber to make a preacher out of, I have been told. But he possessed the patient application and the plodding perseverance, that labor and wait, and never fail, and he was able to hold, and interest, and instruct an audience for hours, as but few men can. Generally those known as orators, plausible, fluent talkers, with magnetic powers, are a curse to the truth instead of a benefit. They dissatisfy the people with others, and they beget a kind of man worship instead of a worship of God. Moses was of a stammering tongue, and Paul's bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible. D. L.

"HEART-PIETY, AND LOVE OF FASHIONABLE DISPLAY.

These qualities have no connection—are not often placed together, but some time since, a sister, writing from Texas, remarks in regard to them: "The great evils to observe in our churches here, are want of heart-piety, and a love of fashionable display. There is almost a national canker eating out the love of Christ, and bringing disgrace upon the Christian name. Earnest, loving appeals to our sisters, would, I think, arouse many to the duty of denying themselves, of taking up the cross and following more closely Him, who left his Father's home for a world of sorrow and suffering, that he might redeem the mothers with their little children, from suffering and sorrow eternal. Want of heart-piety, and love of fashionable display are not confined to the sisters of the state above mentioned. They prevail among the sisters and brothers too, of other regions, and aid in preventing the wide-spread influence the religion of Christ might exert. No doubt we are all to blame in this respect. Sisters appear in attire, costly and elegant, as those who make no profession of heart-piety. The flash of jewels, the sheen of rich silks, gold, pearls and costly array, are loved and worn by many of the followers of Him, who laid by all beauty and glory for their sakes. His coat is described as "without seam, woven from the top throughout." How simple! As a general thing, those who most indulge their taste for the beautiful and fashionable, have but little for the needs of others. The rich man sat in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. When obliged to lay away his stylish, fashionable clothing, he was so poor that there was not one to dip the tip of his finger in water to cool his tongue. He did not seem to think of the rich wines of his sumptuous fare, but wanted a drop of water from the spring where he played when a boy. (That is my idea of his case, not Luke's.) Everlasting thirst! who can tell its misery?

But to come back to our own times. The year 1884 has dawned upon us in ice, snow, rain and hail. There never was more cause for gratitude to God, from those who have the comforts of life, and pity and kindness to those, who have not such blessings. If all who love their fellow beings were to inquire how much more can be done as the months pass away, than during the year 1883, we may perhaps rejoice in eternity, at the efforts we make—the self-denial we practice. It is most pleasant to have all beautiful and fashionable things around us. The love of them seems to spring up in the heart as naturally as that of the birds, flowers, fresh air and sunshine. The trouble is, when we cultivate this love, it requires thought, time and means that should be devoted to others more important, more necessary.

How much more desirable is the heart-culture of the children than the study required to dress them fashionably. Very soon they learn to set the highest value on such dress for themselves, and they respect others for their appearance in it. Children whose mother is devoted to fashionable display, seldom, or never, hear her earnest prayers for their welfare. They see her anxious for them to surpass others in elegance of attire, in fashionable accomplishments, and the impression is made, that these are the main objects of life. A gay, fashionable mother is an object to make angels weep. Wonderful it is, that one who has submitted to the Savior—who has reflected on the great scenes of the future, should ever forget that her now little helpless children will, if they live, appear in them, as men and women, the friends or enemies of Christ. How can she forget that every sweet, little one, has a never-dying soul that her influence may place in blissful immortality, or in ruin without end?

There are families of children whose parents never bow with them in prayer and supplication. They are too busy to pray in the morning, and too weary at night, although they profess to be Christians. Death may step in, and how will they reproach themselves if one were to pass away without hope in the Savior.

A young girl, I remember, said: "Mother, I am dying; you never spoke to me of any world but this. What must I do?" She had learned to dance with grace, to sing delightfully, and to appear well in society, was bright and interesting, but the great world, where she must live forever, was too far off to be thought of in health. No preparation for a graceful appearance there, had been made. Could that mother forget—ever forget?

A friend, writing of a family near her says: "The parents have made an effort to train their children intellectually, but their morals have been neglected."

What is a man, or woman of intellect, without purity of character? The power of such a one for evil, is greater than if left untrained. A mother who desires the final approval of the Judge, must remember her responsibility, and life should be a constant prayer for strength to do her duty. She should, above all else, determine to lead her children to the Savior—who so lovingly invites. She must form for herself such character as she desires her children shall possess, when they must give account of her influence over them—of the characters they have formed. With a large family, or even a small one, if she has a truly Christian influence, she has not much time to devote to fashionable dress, fashionable manners, fashionable furniture, house, equipage, etc. Neatness and comfort should, everywhere prevail; but the last fashion, unless it is an improvement on all the rest, is of minor consequence. A book I met with years ago, gives the meeting of a son with his father in the eternal world. The father had spent his life in fashionable follies—the son followed in his steps. In the world where they met, they had leisure for thought. The son reproached the father for leading him there. The father was bitter as the son. From reproaches they came to curses and blows. Although a work of fiction, it was calculated to lead parents to be thoughtful of their influence. It is terrible to think of children reproaching their parents, when all hope of exerting a good influence has forever passed.

If the study of Christian mothers were to have a Christian influence, would not more of the children accept the invitation of the Savior, and come to him in the dew and freshness of youth? He had tears for the frail beings of earth. He knew the fate of souls lost forever, and spent laborious days and sleepless nights, inviting and praying all to come to him and live. He knew the vilest could become glorious immortals, and yearned over human beings with a deathless love. The children called forth his tenderest feeling. Pity for their future being, was, no doubt, mingled with it.

Should not this be the feeling of every mother, particularly those who believe in Christ? Sad it is, that the love of fashionable display ever prevents the cultivation of that heart-piety that would lead all of the children to Christ. He asks the mothers to suffer the little children to come and forbid them not. How tender the invitation, and how much it is neglected. We see the streets of the city thronged with the young, the gay and the giddy. They fill the theatres, the ball-rooms. They meet in places where the pure in heart are not found, and rush on, forgetful of the future, as they pass to its grand scenes.

The saddest thought is not that all are mortal—that the places that now know them, will soon know them no more forever. It is not that every bright eye will become dim—every graceful form lose its vigor and activity—that the rose must fade from the soft cheek—the fingers forget the melody of harp and lute. The real sorrow is, that but few, comparatively speaking, with ears attuned to soft sounds—eyes radiant with immortal brilliancy and form of never-dying youth, will rise up in that day for which all other days were made. Mothers who spend life in fashionable display, in devotion to the world, may hear their children call in vain, upon the mountains to fall on them, and the hills to cover them.

Should not all parents, the disciples of Christ, study to attain the earnest heart-piety, that will prevent devotion to fashionable display—will enable them to take up the cross—to walk humbly in wisdom's ways, and thus save themselves, and the dear, young beings, dependent on them?

Obituaries.

Our father and mother have both left this earth and are (as we trust eternally with the Savior in the mansion, prepared by him for all who love and serve him here. They departed this life as following: Mother departed this life September 15th, 1875, she was born in Guilford county, N. C., Dec. 21st, 1829; lived there about 19 years, then moved to Gibson county, Tenn., where she resided until death. She lived a member of the Methodist church about 15 years, but having learned the way of the Lord more perfectly, she joined the Church of Christ about 1868. She was faithful until death. Father was a native of Monroe county, Tennessee, but came to the West when a boy, spending most of his life in Gibson county. He was born February 9th, 1824, departed this life December 26th, 1883, became a member of the Christian Church about 1867; he lived a faithful member until death. Their membership was at Mount Zion, Gibson county, Tenn. With sad hearts they were followed to the tomb. Their remains were laid in the cold grave to await the resurrection. We learn all that sleep in Jesus, God will bring with him. Were it possible for me to commune with their departed spirits to night my first message would be dear, father and mother I can not, I would not, forget you; I shall cherish their precious memory so long as I live; their wise counsel and noble examples of virtue and principle will I ever hold sacred. They have many relatives and friends on the shores of time to think of their departure. We do not sorrow for them as we would if they had no hope, but my heart's desire and prayer to God, is that we may all be prepared to meet them in the New Jerusalem, where all is love and peace forever.

Bradford, Tenn.

W. J. ARNOLD,

THE CHRISTIANS' RULE OF FAITH AND PRACTICE.

"We will hold to nothing; we will do nothing for which we cannot plead a thus says the Lord, or an approved precedent."

The disciples have hitherto taken this as their infallible guide through all the dark mazes of religion; making it a rule inviolable, that "where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent." In this way, Christianity in its primitive purity and simplicity, has, to a great extent, if not entirely, been restored; and in this way alone can the church be restored to apostolic usage, and apostolic ground.

Each step the protestant church of to-day takes from Rome, if made in the proper direction, advances it that far toward Jerusalem. But in its haste to flee the "eternal city," it should look well to its footsteps, lest per chance, it should go beyond the proper precincts, and thus, while shunning the rock Scylla, it be eternally engulfed in the whirlpool of Charybdis. Is, then, our compass properly adjusted, and our pilot at the helm? Let us now, at the beginning of the year 1884, sound our depths, take our longitude and latitude, and be sure our ship is not endangered by the shoals and breakers of sectarianism. Let us now measure ourselves by our infallible standard, the Bible, and ascertain whether we have stopped short of, or gone beyond the limits in it prescribed.

1. On the question of faith, stand we safe, our foundation planted upon the imperishable word? He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned. Mark xvi: 16. Believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. Acts xvi: 31. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Rom. x: 10. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Gal. iii: 26. By these and many other kindred passages faith, as the first item in conversion, is, we believe, firmly established. Furthermore, we believe and teach, that "faith if it hath not works is dead, being alone;" that no salvation is secured "by faith only;" but by faith perfected by repentance and baptism. We say this for the information of many, who, from either ignorance or insolence, have denounced us as a "pestilential sect," and "baptized infidels." To such, we commend a careful reading of the Scriptures; for our tenets can be learned by reading no human creed. They are found only in that creed, given by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Thus far we stand upon the Bible.

2. Is repentance a divine requisition? Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Acts ii: 38. Repent ye, therefore, and be converted that your sins may be blotted out. Acts iii: 19. And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent. Acts xvii: 30. Repentance, as a fact, and as the second item in the conversion, of the sinner, is certainly Scriptural, and our belief and teaching on this point divinely authorized.

3. Can a thus says the Lord, or an approved precedent be produced for taking the confession of a believer before, and making it a pre-requisite to baptism? And Phillip said, if thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Act viii: 37. Here it is peremptorily demanded of a believer as a pre-requisite to baptism; also the confession is given; and if this passage be of divine authority, by it, the practice as scriptural, is clearly authenticated. The tide, however, of textual criticism is decidedly adverse; so much so, that it is now with hardly one respectable, dissenting voice, held to be no part of the original. Tregelles, Alford and Green, three of the most eminent critics that have ever lived, have, for many reasons, pronounced it an interpolation.

1. That the first printed Greek New Testament, completed June 10, 1414, omitted the verse in question.

2. "That no part of this verse is recognized in critical texts."

3. That had the Complutensian edition of the Greek New Testament been received instead of that of Erasmus, we should seldom, perhaps never, have received this verse. And in that case, any attempt to induce us to believe it, would have shocked us, whereas we are now pained at the thought of having to part from it.

4. That it is wanting in most of the best mss.

5. That "the passage also exhibits that mark of spuriousness, shiftings of shape." "The mss. which contain it very exceedingly."

With these authorities, on such weighty reasons, proscribing the verse, it will, it must be confessed, be difficult to defend it. Indeed, until their character is impeached, or their opinion otherwise overthrown, the verse must stand as condemned. We do not say that this will be the final decision of the critical world, but at present there seems the least possible doubt of it. But as an offset to these, it may be added:

1. That many mss. contain the verse, of which some stand high, although they are not the most reliable. These are, moreover, among the more recent mss. and for this reason carry less weight.

2. That the fourth edition of Erasmus, of the Greek New Testament, published in 1527, contained in substance, the same as the received text of the present. It is, however, argued that Erasmus inserted it either from the margin of some Greek ms. or that he first translated it into the Greek from the Vulgate, and then inserted it; and thus it found its way into the text.

3. That, if spurious, Irenaeus, who wrote in the latter part of the second century, quotes it. It is thus shown to antedate the oldest New Testament, ms. now extant. An argument of no little weight, in such controversies. Upon its being quoted by Irenaeus, another argument in its defense is also based.

4. That it was, at that day, the custom to take the confession of persons, before baptizing them.

From this, that the passage antedated the practice, seems the stronger conclusion. This is, however, far from being conclusive or certain. We leave the reader to judge for himself, which are the stronger arguments. But grant that the passage must be abandoned as spurious, and for this some have concluded that we, as a people, may prepare ourselves; for to this end, in their opinion, we will ultimately be driven, and how is it to affect our practice? Clearly it cannot affect the confession as a fact, neither the thing confessed. "That 'thou (Jesus) art the Christ, the Son of the living God,' is the radical truth of the Bible, the keystone to the great doctrinal arch of Christianity. Certainly no one who denies this can be saved. Nor can any danger accrue to the confession as a fact. For that all must confess him in order to be saved, Jesus clearly teaches when he says, 'Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.'" Matt. x: 32-33. Again, Paul writes to the same effect, "The word is nigh you, in your mouth and in your heart, that is the word of belief which we preach: that if you shall confess with your mouth the Lord Jesus, and in your heart believe that God raised him from the dead, you shall be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. x: 8-10. These passages rest on no critical ground, and on them the confession, as a fact, stands infallibly safe. But to the same effect, Paul again speaks, in his first letter to Timothy, thus: "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on everlasting life into which you were called; and you made the good confession before many witnesses." Here is a historical fact, telling us that Timothy had made "the good confession before many witnesses," and contains for us all the force of a precedent, determining us to the same act. But here comes the important and difficult questions on these premises; what is the nature of the confession thus secured? To say that these passages, we have either the command, or an approval precedent to take the confession as pre-requisite to baptism would be to say too much. That they include confession before baptism, we, by no means deny. But they only prove that (1) Christ must be confessed in order to salvation; and that (2) the confession is after faith and before salvation. But where between these passages do not settle. Now do we know of any other passage, unquestioned, that will settle the mooted question. Necessary implication in the facts and circumstances attending remission is the only means, decisive, now attainable. Certainly the most natural place for the confession, since it is subsequent to faith and precedent to salvation, is immediately after belief. For when a man believes anything, obviously, then is his time to own it, especially when it is made his duty to do so. It is also the bounden duty of the minister to immerse the believer, and as equally his duty not to immerse the unbeliever. The only means of his obtaining this intelligence, is by the confession of the candidate. Thus we locate the confession after belief, and immediately precedent to baptism. In case the authenticity of the verse in question be established, the question is forever settled, and our practice confirmed. But if it be expunged, no change will be made in our practice, but a slight modification in our motto.

4. We believe and teach, that immersion is essential to the remission of sins; that thereby, we put on Christ, and that remission of sins is only one among the number of blessings received. Long have our inveterate foes assailed this position with all the impetuosity suffering error and revengeful malice could summons; but their sorrows have fallen harmless from our shields, and returning, have wounded only those who sent them. Founded upon the Bible, it stands firm as the "Rock of Ages." Fearless of our position, we stand ready, at any moment, to brush error from the soul with a hand as velvety as down itself; and as equally ready, with the blade of truth broad, keen, irresistible, to sabre down the haughty for who would innovate upon the pure religion of Jesus. Thus let us ever stand as lighthouses upon the shore of a stormy deep, sending our rays hither and thither to guide the wandering sinner to a haven of rest, till death crowns our labor and calls us home to sing the songs of glory among the redeemed in heaven!

E. L. BARHAM.

Chestnut Ridge, Tenn., January 10, 1884.

"We will not forget that in the use of the simile of the vine and the branches, Christ made our duty to consist in trusting him and receiving from him. It will never do for the branch to be ambitious to have a root of its own, or for the soul to feel it is personally responsible to find its own way through life. The glory of the branch is that it receives its life from the vine, and is satisfied simply to grow, and blossom and bear fruit with thanksgiving; and the glory of the soul is to know that Christ will take care that the life is all right, if it only love him and cling to him with trust. The worry drops out of life, and the peace comes in, when we give up being the vine and rest content to draw our life from the Lord."—Hepworth.

Religion stands upon two pillars, namely: what Christ did for us in His flesh and what He performs in us by His Spirit. Most errors arise from an attempt to separate those two.—John Newton.

REFLECTIONS ON VARIOUS MATTERS.

One of the greatest difficulties which men encounter in studying the Bible is the trouble we have in divesting ourselves of prejudices and predilections. It is said of a certain old lady of my county that she was very much distressed by her grandson's joining the "Campbellites," as the disciples were called by the ignorant and prejudiced in those days, especially because those people, she had heard, taught that baptism is for the remission of sins. When she expressed this reason for her distress to the young man himself, to her unbounded astonishment and confusion, he called for her old family Bible and read from it, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." "Well, I declare," said she, "it is there. I thought it might be in Alexander Campbell's Bible, but I didn't dream that it was in mine. It is there, but I am sorry it is."

Many of us are like this old woman. We have notions and opinions and we would be very sorry indeed to find that they are contrary to the word of God. And unfortunately, many in taking up their Bibles are determined to find what they want. If the doctrine does not lie upon the surface of the divine records they select a passage and give an "exegesis" of it; then the matter is as clear as light, at least to themselves. I desire in this essay to call attention to several passages of the word of God that have been badly treated because they do not teach what people want to believe.

Paul says, (1 Cor. xiv: 34-35,) "Let the woman keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home: for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." And again, (1 Tim. ii: 11-12,) "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness." A writer in the Review, who signs himself "Paul's Friend," endeavors to show that women should teach, preach, pray, etc., in the churches side by side with the men. He explains the passage from 'Corinthians above quoted, and in explanation of it, claims to show clearly that the women referred to were a few married women who had been asking "secular questions" in church, of other women's husbands. Just think of it! Paul says, "Let the women keep silent in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; * * * it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church." Oh, says this friend of Paul, this passage merely forbids married women from asking secular questions of other women's husbands in church. He says most emphatically, that this prohibitory language is limited to married women; that it does not include widows and unmarried. We are to understand them, I suppose, that maidens and widows and even "old maids" may ask as many "secular questions" of married or single men in church as they please. The passage only restricts the married women. Then again married men may ask as many secular questions of other men's wives in church as they please, but the women must not ask back. Perhaps in the estimation of this "Friend" the restriction is laid upon the women on account of their proverbial curiosity.

But then we cannot conclude that married women are more curious than single ones and widows, nor can I imagine why it would be wrong for them to ask such questions after marriage, when it was perfectly innocent before. If this expositor's interpretation is to be received, there are two customs which prevail among us to some extent that must be stopped. Some preachers are given to correcting the young people for whispering during services. This must be stopped; for they have the right so to do, unless the said young folks are married women engaged in asking secular questions of other women's husbands. Let the married women content themselves with asking their secular questions of unmarried men or widowers. In the rural districts it is common for the preacher upon arriving at church to pass around and shake hands with the older sisters, even though the song service has begun when he arrives; and frequently they inquire after the welfare of his family. Now the married ones among them must not be permitted to do this, as that is a secular question. Nonsensical as the conclusions are, they seem to me to follow necessarily as corollaries to his argument. Now, I presume this writer is a person of very fair sense and information; but when Paul said, "Let the women keep silent in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak;" "for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church," he said that which he, (Paul's Friend,) did not intend to believe, and hence some sort of an explanation must be invented. I doubt if there is a man in the States sufficiently skilled in solving riddles to discover the process by which this "Friend" reached his remarkable conclusions. No passage of scripture is permitted to stand in the way of the man who has a theory or practice that he is determined to maintain. The doctrine of baptism for remission, for instance, is expressed in so many words in the New Testament, and in such wise as to exclude utterly the possibility of ambiguity; but, notwithstanding this, nearly all the denominations despise the doctrine, trample it beneath their feet, and go on teaching justification by faith only, although in so doing they flatly contradict the word of God. Men hunt for passages teaching infant baptism, and find them too (so they say) in abundance both in the Old Testament and in the New. True, the Old Testament says nothing about Christian baptism, and neither in the Old nor in the New is infant baptism referred to, directly or indirectly, in express terms or by the remotest inference, but then there is the authority of permission that our scribes sometimes talk about; and our paedobaptist friends, when pressed from every other point, fall back upon that. The Scriptures do not forbid it, they say. Very true, we reply, but the Scriptures enjoin the baptism of believers and we object to your doctrine, because, if it were to prevail, believer's baptism would be done away. You make void the commandments of God by your tradition. When God legislates with regard to a matter, it seems to me to be clear that we may not do anything that will make void his teachings or supplant his institutions. Does he command believer's baptism? then he forbids infant baptism; for one makes void the other. Does he command the elders of the church to take the oversight thereof, to care for it, teach it, and guide it? then he forbids the present plan of "calling a preacher" to do these things. The present plan makes void his way; for every body knows that when a preacher is employed by a church he does all of this work that is done, with little, if any, help from the elders. Yet brethren who stoutly oppose the one practice, resolutely contend for the other, although both evidently make void the commandment of God.

Has God given us a society for the preservation of the saints, and the spread of the gospel? then he has implied, in so doing, that such a society is necessary, and that the one which he gives is sufficient. When God gives us an institution for the accomplishment of a certain work, we have no right to invent another. It is disrespectful and rebellious in us to do so. Having this very matter in mind, Bro. Allen, in the Old Path Guide, says:

"To be silent where God is silent, is to stop where he stops in enactments of faith and authority." He would interpret this statement of his as favorable to the human missionary societies. But is it not clearly against them? Has not God by divine enactment in the New Testament given us the churches as missionary societies? Has he not legislated in the matter of "enacting these institutions? It is admitted by all the writers on both sides of the society question, so far as known to me, that the churches are divine missionary societies, and that no others were known during the first age of the Christian era. Shall we stop where God stops in the matter? In instituting the churches, were not his enactments "enactments of faith and authority?" Are any of his enactments of any other nature? I think not. If Bro. Allen admits, then, that the churches are missionary societies, and that they stand by the enactment of God, he must "stop where he stops;" that is he must give up the human societies. His own published principles compel him to take the ground that the churches are not missionary societies by divine enactment, or else to turn against and oppose the institutions he has so long been laboring with.

I am curious to know what position he will take. Let me say just here to the reader that I have watched the course of Bro. Allen in the discussion with great interest, for two reasons; in the first place, he is an exceedingly clear headed man; and, in the second, he has profound respect for the authority of God, and a very tender conscience. That he is wrong on this society question, and that he has therefore been involved in a number of inconsistencies, is as clear as the light to my mind. In order to bring the matter out clearly I ask him these questions:

Are not the churches, with their elders and deacons, divine organizations? Do they not exist by divine enactments? Are not the teachings of God by which he makes the churches, and indicates that for which they are made, "matters of faith and authority? Shall we stop "where he stops" in these matters of faith and authority? I don't see how our dear brother can give any other than affirmative answers to any of these questions. While I am talking about Bro. Allen, I desire to say further that I have sometimes thought that perhaps it would be better not to take issue with him in any matter on account of his physical weakness, lest he should be excited and disturbed and thereby injured; but I have further reflected, that the great desire of his life is to know and advocate the truth; that that which sustains, invigorates and encourages him now is the thought that he is doing good in entering into these discussions in defending and advancing the cause of God. I have just read his article headed "My Condition," and it confirms me in these thoughts. Moreover, Bro. Allen knows too well the admiration and affection that I have for him, I think, to be excited to a disagreeable and unpleasant degree by any argument in search of truth that I might present.

In conclusion, let us all look into the Bible to see what is there. Let us delight in the work of God, and be anxious to get rid of every notion and fancy that is not in harmony with this will.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. J. A. Harding is at Scottsboro, Alabama, where he may be addressed until further notice.

Miss Stone, of Malden, Mass., died January 15th, from the effects of a fall four weeks ago. During the past few years she has given colleges and schools for girls over $400,000.

I have not seen the ADVOCATE this year. What is the matter? I am worse again this week. I try to wait patiently for the Lord to decide the case.—[F. G. Allen, Milton, Ky., Jan. 23, 1884.

Bro. Geo. Campbell, of Linville, was in our office during the past week. We are glad to note him looking to be in better health than formerly. His school begins the Spring session, Monday, the 28th.

Bro. J. A. Harding is in a meeting at Scottsboro, Ala., and says he hopes to spend several months in towns of Alabama, where there is no congregation. Bro. Daugherty is with him leading in song.

When J. Harding leaves Sulphur, Ky., he will go to work in Louisville, Ky. He will work there for three months, as an evangelist; will work under the auspices of 25 Portland Avenue congregation.

Married, Thursday night, January 17th, at the residence of the bride's father, near Petersburg, Tenn., by B. F. Hart, Mr. J. T. Holland to Miss Mollie Bills. The new couple are both members of the church of Christ, and have a bright prospect for future success.

We have received a card of invitation to be present at the Bellwood church, on February 5th, to witness the marriage of Bro. E. A. Elam and Miss Mary Thompson. Our heartiest wishes, for the happiness and usefulness of the twain made one, will be with them.

We cut out several thrusts at Bro. Harding, made by brethren, asking him why he did not go to poor and destitute places to preach, relying on the Lord. We took the liberty of cutting these out, because I knew they were unjust, and I believed those brethren did not desire to do him an injustice, but were mistaken. He is now down in a field that they can learn how true the charges are.

It is said that a lady seventy-two years of age, living near Snow Spring, Deoley county, is the best farmer in that neighborhood. She has been a widow for thirty-five years, and has managed her own business successfully, and a few days ago she had more cotton bales around her gin-house than any farmer in that region. She employs her own laborers, and, if necessary, will put on her spectacles, go into the field, take the plow handles, and show an inexperienced hand how to "lay off" a corn or cotton row. This is a short story, but a true one.

We have had on hand for some weeks, a reply of Bro. Kidwill, to a report published in Pulaski Citizen, by J. H. Nichols' friends, in response to his exposure of Nichols' course. The reply of Bro. Kidwill would necessitate the publication of their report. We have been waiting for space to publish the two. Bro. Kidwill writes, that while his feelings prompt the publication, his judgment is against the further notice of Nichols. That is exactly our judgment. I cannot believe that further notice is needed. If any man doubts the truth of the statement of Bro. Kidwill, I am certain a further acquaintance with Nichols will remove these doubts. The ability of these friends of Nichols to judge impartially, will be recognized when we tell that their resolutions conclude with, "We recommend the general cir-culatation of the Grub-axe, until the Campbellites refute it."

The article of Bro. Kidwill shows conclusively that notwithstanding their denunciation of him, their own communication confirms fully his statement in all essential particulars. While giving this assurance, we will lay it by, for the present, and let future developments determine as to its publication.

Queries.

Christ raised Lazarus and others from the dead, before his own death and resurrection. How is he then the first fruit from the dead, as Paul seems to teach? Please answer through the ADVOCATE.—[G. W. Blake, Canmer, Ky., January 1st, 1884

The others were simply restored to their natural life, to die again. Christ was raised to an immortal life, to see death no more. Christ was the first raised to die no more.

What is it for those, who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come to "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame?"—[Eph. Barham, Chestnut Ridge, Tenn., December 30, 1883.

To turn back to Judaism after having known Christ, was clearly to do this. We do not see why turning back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world and a rejection of divine law, be not as bad.

Please give an elucidation of gospel as recorded by John x: 9: "I am the door, by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." Explain especially the clause in italics.—[A. J. Timmons.

It is simply a reference to the shepherd keeping his sheep. He leads them out in the green pastures in the day that they may find food. He brings them into the fold at night to protect them from beasts of prey. So the Savior leads those who enter in by him as the door, where they can find food, and he preserves them from the wicked who deceive and devour them. It is called going in and out, because that is the way the shepherd feeds and protects his sheep.

Please explain St. John xiii: 14-15: "Christ washed his disciples feet, and told them they ought to do likewise. He also said it was an example to them." If so, why not to us?—[A. W. Moss.

We think it means just what it says. When the disciples were tired and footsore at the end of a day's travel, the Savior washed their feet for them, and told them they ought to do the same to each other. We ought to do it one for another yet, whenever it is needed. But to go to church to do it there as "religious ceremony," has no divine warrant. The foot-washing was not performed the same night the supper was instituted, but two nights previous. It is no more a church ordinance than entertaining strangers or raising children, with which it is classed in letter to Timothy.

I have had two Christian Baptist preachers with me for a few days, they preached in my house, as the weather was cold and the school house very open. They asked, are the church and the kingdom one and the same, or is the church one and the kingdom another. They claim the church and the kingdom the same. Please give me the distinction, if any. They say they have asked many of our preachers to give some light on this subject, and have never had a definite answer. They asked me if I had ever put the question to the editors of the ADVOCATE, I told them I had not. They claim we are not keeping all the ordinances of the church the Savior required. That we omit foot washing, which they say is just as much an ordinance as the communion. They teach that both were instituted at the same time, the night of the betrayal. The Christian Baptists, are building up a congregation near me. They teach some good doctrine, and some I don't think is good.—[W. E. Bartlett, Laurell Hill, Tenn.

I do not know who these Christian Baptists are. They never put the question as to the identity of the church and kingdom to a brother of any intelligence, else he would have told them. They refer to the same institution. When viewed as the heritage ruled over by the king, it is called a kingdom. When regarded as an assembly of saints separated from the world, it is called a church. The questions concerning foot washing are answered above.

If you can spare me the space in the ADVOCATE I wish to see a few thoughts from you on Matthew the 18th chapter, commencing at the 23rd verse, to the close of the chapter. Does this parable teach that when a repenting sinner receives pardon for all his sins and enters the Church, should he subsequently relapse into sin, and die in that state, he will be held responsible at the Judgment for those sins that were once forgiven? Also the 3d chapter and 11th verse of Matthew, and 3d chapter and 6th verse of Luke, which speak of Christ baptizing with fire.—[W. B. Lester, Chaseville, Tenn.

The parable says that when the wicked servant who had received forgiveness, refused to forgive his fellow-servant, then his Master held him accountable for all that had been forgiven him, made him pay the utmost farthing. The Savior then adds, "So will my Heavenly Father do to you, if you from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." We understand the baptism of fire spoken of to refer to the destruction of the wicked. The first direct reference was probably to the destruction at Jerusalem. But this destruction typified the destruction to be visited on the unworthy at the day of judgment.

Is it consistent, and right, for a congregation of disciples, who meet regularly each Lord's day in a Sunday-school capacity, to give a festival on Christmas, have a Christmas tree, and invite both saint and sinner to come, and charge each participant 25 cents for the purpose of raising money to buy an organ for the Sunday-school? Can they not use the organ in the church worship, as acceptably to God, as in the Sunday-school?—[A. Bro. in Christ.

When people start to do an evil thing, they had as well to do it through evil means, as good. The organ in the Sunday-school, is as bad as the organ in the church. If it is right in the Sunday-school, it is right in the church. The Sunday-school is properly a part of the church service. If it is offensive to God in the church, it is equally offensive to him in the Sunday-school. What the children become accustomed to in the Sunday-school, they will carry into the church. If they are to have an organ, they had as well fiddle and dance, and cajole the money to buy it, out of the world, as to get it in any other way. None of it is of God. When a work acceptable to God is to be done, it ought to be done in a godly manner. Godly means ought to be used, and godly motives ought to be presented to induce God's children to give to God's cause. When the cause is not of God, worldly motives presented to worldly people, and worldly means are consistent. The only inconsistency is in people who do such things, pretending to be children of God.

TREATING RESOLUTION.

"I'm going to bind myself," she said,
 "To read no more romances
 For six long months, and clear my brain
 Of all my silly fancies.
 But just this one, a gift, 'twould be
 A pity not to read it."
 She read that one, but, sad to say,
 Fully twenty more succeed it.

"'Tis true," he said, "tobacco may
 My constitution mar,
 I'll smoke once more and then I'll say,
 I've smoked my last cigar."
 That one was poor,—it was unfair
 To end with such a weed.
 He tried one more—his firm resolve
 Became a broken reed.

"I've long bemoaned," the lady said,
 "The ease of social lying,
 And now to speak the simple truth,
 I'm firmly bent on trying.
 Just one more fib, and then I'll stop,
 This truth would be too rude."
 That one last lie to others led,
 And changed the lady's mood.

"It is a stupid, foolish thing
 To lose one's self-control—
 I envy even-tempered men,
 I'll strive to reach that goal.
 But there is Jones, who injured me,
 To him I'll speak my mind."
 But from that day his constant sin
 More closely round him twined.

"I'll play no more," the gambler said,
 "I oftener lose than win.
 This thirst for play will kill my soul,
 And drag me down to sin,
 Just one more throw, and then I'm done."
 He lost—his weakened will Condoned another throw, and he Remains a gambler still.

"I'll never drink another drop,"
 A drunkard said, when waking
 From out his fevered, heavy sleep.
 With head and conscience aching.
 "I'll take one glass to tone me up,
 Then sign the pledge to-morrow."
 Alas! one glass drowned his remorse,
 For him there came no morrow.

Believe me, all who would begin
 A better way of living,
 Begin when you resolve—to self
 No lasting indulgence giving.
 Put hand to plough and look not back.
 A course of self-denial
 Begun with yielding one last time
 Is never worth a trial.

OUR HINDU STUDENT.

It has long been the opinion of the progressive party in Hindostan that, until the condition of their women is materially changed, further advancement or civilization of the Hindu race is impossible. In consequence of this some attention has been given, of late years, to the education and elevation of the native women, chiefly by the members of the Brahmo Somaj, or progressive Hindu Society. As a result, Mrs. Anandibai Joshee, a woman of the highest Brahmanical caste, is registered as a student in the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania.

The history of Mrs. Joshee's coming to this country is somewhat remarkable, and will be regarded by many as one of the signs of the times.

A little more than nineteen years ago, a girl was born near the city of Bombay. Her childhood passed quietly, after the manner of high caste Brahman children, until she was two years old, when the mark indicative of her rank in life was placed on her forehead. The ceremonies attending this event having ended, and with them her transient importance, she became the pet and plaything of the family. Although apparently of little consequence, she did not lack attention; for her father's household consisted of no less than fifty members. Grandmothers and aunts vied with one another, after the manner of their kind, in caring for her, and soon discovered that she was by no means an ordinary being. The announcement of these fond relatives, that little Anandibai was wise beyond her years, and unusually gifted for a girl, resulted a little later, in her going to the girl's school at Mahratti. She soon distinguished herself here as a scholar, and was pointed out by her teachers and less fortunate mates as the girl who led all her classes and took all the prizes. One day a party of distinguished Brahmans visited the school, among them Mr. Joshee, a highly educated employe of the British Government. The ability and attainments of little Anandibai made a deep impression upon the learned gentleman, who at once began to negotiate with her father, and a year later, when the child had reached the mature age of ten, married her, in spite of the fact that he was twenty-five years her senior.

It was because I always stood first in my class and gained the prizes that my husband, first liked me. Mrs. Joshee said to me one day. "And I loved him the first time I saw him, he was so handsome."

For two years after her marriage Mrs. Joshee lived in her father's house, learning the duties of a wife from her own mother and grandmother, contrary to the customs of the country, which require that the mother-in-law shall be the instructor in these arts. At the end of that time she removed to Serampore, where her husband had been appointed postmaster; and here, three years after, her first and only child was born. It was this event that opened Mrs. Joshee's eyes to the need of educated female physicians among her country-women; for no man is ever allowed in the apartments of a married woman, and in case of sickness she is dependent upon the unskillful devices of ignorant and superstitious women.

"My husband and I used to discuss these things a great deal," said Mrs. Joshee to me in her inimitable way. "We always sat at the table a long time after dinner, we had so many matters to discuss; and often it took a long time."

As a result of these "discussions," Mr. Joshee, without the knowledge of his wife, wrote to the Rev. Mr. —, of Princeton, N. J., whom he had known as a missionary in India, asking what advantage for medical study were given in America. Unfortunately, the Rev. Mr. —, very conservative by education no less than by birth, and a strict believer in the old-fashioned woman's sphere, did not approve of female physicians. His reply was most disheartening. Not only was little information given of medical schools for women, and that little of the most unattractive kind, but the position of women themselves as physicians was described as undesirable in the extreme. Mr. Joshee did not continue the correspondence. His expectations, however, were destined to be fulfilled.

A little more than two years after this, Mrs. C., a lady interested in all good works, went into a dentist's office in Elizabeth. While awaiting her turn, she took up a file of newspapers lying near and began to run over the leaves. All at once her eye fell upon the correspondence of Mr. Joshee and the Rev. Mr. —, which had been given the public. The letters touched her heart. She carefully noted the address, thinking sometime she would write to Mr. Joshee herself, in regard to our medical schools. The time came sooner than she anticipated; and the next week's foreign mail carried a letter to Mr. Joshee. The weeks passed away, bringing no word of reply. But at last the patient waiting was rewarded by letter from Mr. Joshee, which stated that the correspondence which Mrs. C. had found was more than two years old. The reply of the Rev. Mr. — had been so discouraging that the project had been abandoned. But the matter was not to rest here. One day Mrs. Joshee found among some papers of her husbands the letter from Mrs. C. She read it, and then carried it to her husband and told him what she had done. After that she had a share in the regular correspondence with Mrs. C., which continued until arrangements had been made for a medical course of study in this country.

The steamer which left Calcutta the first of last April carried among the passengers to America the first Brahman woman who ever left India. As one of the principal articles in the Brahmanical religion strictly enjoins that no Brahman shall cross the ocean, the sensation created by her departure can be better imagined than described. Surely, the woman who not only encountered and conquered the opposition of priest and family to her coming, is a fit product of this nineteenth century, most justly characterized as the "Century of Women."

"What will you do without your husband Mrs. Joshee? Will it not be very hard to stay here four years without him? I asked one day.

"My husband said that to me," she replied, with her expressive smile. "I told him: I can do it; but I think he will come to me before that time."

Having a natural antipathy for the colored races, I rather dreaded meeting Mrs. Joshee, fearing that my greeting might lack the cordiality I desired to have. My fears proved groundless. A more charming manner I have rarely seen. Perfectly self-possessed, she offered her hand and thanked me for my welcome with an earnest little smile that quite won my heart. She is a little woman scarcely five feet in height, and although quite plump, was very graceful in her motions. I am not sufficiently accustomed to Hindu type to pronounce her beautiful; but every feature shows such strength of character, and her eyes are so tender and earnest that beauty is not needed to make her face unusually attractive and expressive. And then, she is such a perfect lady, so thoroughly well-bred, so dignified and graceful. I blushed hotly for some of my own country-women, and thought they might imitate the manners of the heathen gentle-woman beside me, with great profit.

Strange as it may seem, Mrs. Joshee does not lose caste by coming to this country and mingling with the people here as she is obliged to do in her medical career. As a member of the Brahmo Somaj she has many privileges which are not granted to those outside of that society. In order to keep her caste while here she must live by herself, prepare her own food, wear the native costume—which, by the way, is exceedingly pretty and graceful—and rigidly observe certain religious rites. If she is faithful to these things, when she returns to India there will be a meeting of the principal Brahmins, who will hear her confessions, and then absolve her from her transgressions.

She is a highly educated woman and a remarkable linguist, speaking seven languages fluently, among them Sanscrit.

I asked her, one day, if she had any difficulty in acquiring English. "Oh! no," she replied, "it was very easy after Sanscrit. My husband taught me. I studied English five years with him; but I did not speak it at all until I went on board ship." She speaks so readily and well that it is difficult to believe this; and she writes better than she speaks.

I noticed, one evening, as she sat by me, that she was stroking her face. "Do you ever have the toothache, Mrs. Joshee?" said I. She looked at me quietly a moment before she replied; "No. I cut my wisdom teeth before I left home; but I have cut four new teeth since I have been here." —Independent.

A man's real character may frequently be better guessed at from his way of doing little things than from his way of doing things of greater importance. Chamfort has said, cynically, that "in great matters men show themselves as it is expedient for them to appear to be; but in little things they show themselves as they are." There is a certain justice in the Frenchman's sneer, for even the best of men act more freely, in matters which they esteem of little account than in other things in which careful planning and nice discretion are necessary. It is in view of this tendency of human nature to reveal itself in little things, that our Lord has said: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much: and he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much." If men were fully to realize that the world around them never lacks of self-constituted judges and juries to weight the meaning of every trivial word and act, they would be likely to devote more attention than they do to the little things which now they count of little importance at all; the evil minded would be cautious, in order that they might seem to be what they are not; the good, in order that they might come to be what they would wish to appear to be. —S. "It'll Make You Work."

Those who indulge in the use of intoxicating liquor, sometimes apologize for their drinking, by asserting that it helps them to do their work. The following dialogue is a good answer to the unfounded assertion:—

"I drink to make me work," said a young man. To which an old man replied; "That's right; thee drink, and it will make the work? Harken to me a moment, and I'll tell thee something that may do thee good."

I was one a prosperous farmer; I had a good, loving wife, and two fine lads as ever the sun shone on. We had a comfortable home, and lived happily together.

But we used to drink ale to make us work. Those two lads I have laid in drunkard's graves. My wife died broken-hearted, and she now lies by her two sons. I am seventy-two years of age.

Had it not been for drink, I might have been an independent gentleman; but I used to drink to make me work, now I am obliged to work. At seventy years of age, it makes me work for my daily bread. Drink! drink! and it will make thee work."—Northern Messenger.

"I SEE THE SHIP THAT BRINGS MY LOVE."

A New and Beautiful Waltz Song, by H. J. Fulmer.

"She stood beside the moonlit sea,
Alone in the silent night,
The wind blew softly o'er the sea,
And stars in the sky were bright;
The light of joy was in her eyes,
And thus she sang in glee:
I see the ship, the gallant ship,
That brings my love to me."

Charming words and music, most happily blended together in a thoroughly artistic manner. Equally well adapted to parlor and concert use.

Price, by mail, 40 cents.

Loss and Gain.

CHAPTER I.

"I was taken sick a year ago With bilious fever."

"My doctor pronounced me cured, but I got sick again, with terrible pains in my back and sides, and I got so bad I

Could not move!

I shrunk!

From 228 lbs to 120! I had been doctoring for my liver, but it did me no good. I did not expect to live more than three months. I began to use Hop Bitters. Directly my appetite returned, my pains all left me, my entire system seemed renewed as if by magic, and after using several bottles, I am not only as sound as a sovereign, but weigh more than I weighed before. To Hop Bitters I owe my life." R. FITZPATRICK.
Dublin, June 6, '81.

CHAPTER II.

"Malden, Mass, Feb. 1, 1880 Genmen—

I suffered with attacks of sick headache.

Neuralgia, female trouble, for years, in the most terrible and excruciating manner.

No medicine or doctor could give me relief or cure me:

"The first bottle

Nearly cured me:

The second made me as well and strong as when a child.

And I have been so to this day."

My husband was an invalid for twenty years with a serious Kidney, liver, and urinary complaint,

Pronounced by Boston's best physicians—

"Incurable!"

Seven bottles of your bitters cured him, and I know of the "Lives of eight persons"

In my neighborhood that have been saved by your bitters,

And many more are using them with great benefit.

"They almost

Do miracles"—Mrs. E. D. Slack.

How TO GET SICK.—Expose your self day and night; eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised, and then you will want to know how to get well, which is answered in three words—Take Hop Bitters!

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

A REVIEW OF J. B. MOODY'S TRACT ON THE NAME CHRISTIAN.

In August of last year, I preached a discourse on the name Christian, at Watertown, Wilson county. A good Baptist brother, living in that neighborhood, has kindly forwarded me the tract: The Name Christian, by J. B. MOODY, of the Baptist Gleaner, Fulton Ky. I have read the tract twice, carefully, and as my friend will perhaps be pleased to know what impression it has made on me, I propose to briefly review it through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

The author says "that circumstances just now render it highly important to discuss this question," and gives as a reason, the fact, that "Our Zion," is "in great trouble," and in spite of the Baptist doctrine, of the impossibility of apostasy, "hundreds of the simple minded among us have been led into apostasy," by a perversion of the text: "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch."

On the second page, the author says, "It (the name Christian) is urged as the basis of union for all religions, regardless of doctrinal differences, and moral and spiritual qualifications." The basis of union is the foundation of union—that on which union rests. Mr. Moody ought to know, and I presume does know, that the basis, the ground of union with us, is faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and an unreserved submission to his authority. Nothing short of this can constitute any man a Christian, and once for all, let me say that we would not call any man a Christian in name, who is not a Christian in fact. But still further, he says, we make the name, the basis of union, "for all religions, regardless of doctrinal differences, and moral and spiritual qualifications." What does he mean by this? Does he mean that the Mormon may continue to be a Mormon, that Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists may continue to be Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists, and that all these, with every unclean bird, of "all religions, regardless of doctrinal differences," or even of "moral and spiritual qualifications," can by simply taking the name Christian, without the character, bring about that union, for which we plead?

Certainly he knows this to be false, for on page twenty-one, he says, "They believe, and boast, that salvation is by reformation, hence they are reformers, in doctrine and practice." If he means that we preach, that men of every grade of morality and of immorality, must believe in Jesus, and obey him to become Christians, if he means that we preach to the Mormon, that he must give up his book of Mormon, by which Mormons are made, that the Methodist must give up his discipline, by which Methodists are made; that the Presbyterian must give up his confession of faith, by which Presbyterians are made; and that the Baptist must give up his declaration of faith, by which Baptists are made; and that all these must accept the word of God as their only, and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice, then we plead guilty to the indictment. Baptists often deny having any discipline or declaration of faith, except the Bible. On page twenty-three, Mr. Moody speaks of their "declaration of faith." We believe that in order to union, all things of human origin in religion, whether practice, creed, or name, must be given up.

Before we take up Mr. Moody's discussion of names, let us have a clear definition of the word. A little attention here, would often save ink, and a vast amount of nonsense. Webster says, Name is generic, denoting that combination of sounds, or letters, by which a person or thing is known and distinguished. Appellation, though sometimes put for name simply, denotes, more properly, a descriptive term, used by way of marking some individual peculiarity or characteristic. Jesus is often called a priest. Priest is an appellation, but not the name of the Son of God. So of Mediator, Advocate, King, etc. As Savior, his name is Jesus. As the Anointed Prophet, Priest and King, his name, official name, is Christ. The word Christ is used as a proper name, more than one hundred times. Mr. Moody says: "The names given by God are Believers, Faithful, Sanctified, Beloved of God, the Called, Children of God, Brethren, Disciples, Elect, Chosen, Saints, etc."

Although he calls them names, and to make them look like names, begins each one with a capital letter, not one of them is a name in the proper sense of the word, nor are they so used in the word of God. These are all descriptive terms, marking some individual peculiarity, or characteristic. I think that even Mr. Moody can now see, that four pages of his tract on these names, (so called) has been a reckless waste of ink and time, and falls far short of respectable nonsense.

The next takes up Acts 11:26—and the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. He says: "The Holy Spirit called them disciples—others called them Christians." Is the word disciple here used as a proper name for God's children? Mr. Moody knows it is not, or he would begin it with a capital D. In writing Antioch, Paul, Agrippa, and Christian, he uses capital letters, and thus shows that he knows these all to be proper names. In writing disciple, he begins with a small letter, and shows by this that he knows that disciple is not a proper name. Disciple is used as a common name, like the words, man, animal, plant, etc. It means learner, scholar, pupil, follower, etc. There were disciples of Moses, disciples of John, disciples of Plato, and disciples of Christ. One might be a disciple and not be a child of God, even a disciple of Jesus, and still need conversion: See Mat. 18:1-3. But to be a Christian, even Mr. Moody will admit, was to be a child of God. As the word Christian, is here used as a proper name, it is important to inquire who gave this name to the disciples. If God gave it, then every child of God should wear it. Many wearing party names contend that this name was given by the enemies of the disciples, as a term of reproach, or of contempt. Even Alexander Campbell, while contending for the term disciple as a name, denied the divine origin of the name Christian. Let us now turn to the law and to the testimony. No one will question God's right to name his children. From the history of creation, we learn that God gave to man the privilege of naming the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air. These were made for man. God gave him dominion over them, "and brought them to Adam to see what he would call them, and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof: Gen. 2:19. God reserved to himself the right to name whatever was peculiarly his. Man was created in the likeness of God; "male and female created he them, and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created: Gen. 5:2. God gave the names, Abraham, Sarah, John, and Jesus.

Bible names are often full of meaning, such as Jesus—Savior, Abraham—Father of a multitude, Sarah—Princess. Moses was a stranger for forty years in the court of Pharaoh, then a stranger, or wanderer, forty years in the land of Midian, then a wanderer forty years in the wilderness; one hundred and twenty years, a homeless wanderer on the earth, and never till he entered the city of God, did he find a home; when he named his first-born, he wrapped up his whole history in a single word, and gave it to his son as a name, Gershom—stranger or wanderer. Men, who would rob God of the privilege of naming his children, are continually repeating Shakespeare's question, "What's in a name?" The above, and a hundred other examples that might be given, will enable the dullest reader to answer this question.

In the Old Testament, we learn that God separated the children of Abraham from all other nations, to be a peculiar people to himself. No man will dare question his right to name them; did he exercise that right? Turn to Gen. xxxii: 28: Jacob is on his way from Padan Aram; he wrestles with the angel till the break of day, and then prevails; God then said to him: Thy name shall no more be called Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God, and with men, and hast prevailed. From the marginal reading, we learn what is clearly indicated in the text, that Israel means Prince of God. El is the Hebrew name of God, and is often found in Hebrew names, such as Bethel—house of God, Peniel—face of God, Immanuel—God with us, Israel—prince of God. God gave his own name as a part of the name of his people—his princes. This name was not for Jacob alone, but for his posterity. In 2 Kings xvii: 34, we read of "the children of Jacob whom he named Israel." Isa. xlviii: 1: "Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name Israel." God speaks of them as a people called by his name: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and heal their land." 2 Chron. vii: 14. For five hundred years, after the organization of the sons of Jacob into a nation at the foot of Sinai, they continue a united people, and while they are often spoken of as brethren, as children of God, and as Hebrews—descendants of Heber, a great grandson of Shem—Israel is God's divinely given name for them, and they honor God, and honor themselves, by wearing it. In the days of Rehoboam, God's people divide asunder, and as division demands names by which parties may be known, the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, are called Jews, from Judah the principal tribe; the ten tribes at first call their kingdom, the kingdom of Israel. The hill and city of Samaria, is made the capital city, and then we read of Samaria as a kingdom. As man always loves his own work, the man given name, Jew, grows in popularity, till men call the sons of Jacob of every land and tribe Jews. As they have dishonored the name of God, and shown themselves unworthy of his name, he permits them to wear their own name, but as will soon be seen, warns them of the terrible consequences that will follow. The wisdom of this world, calls the children of Jacob, Jews; the wisdom of God, still calls his faithful ones by his own name—Israel. See the sixteen last books of the Old Testament, where God by the prophets speaks of Israel about five hundred times. God promises good to Israel, "Israel is my heritage." Israel is yet an honored name; every child of God to-day, is also, a child of Abraham, and belongs to the true Israel of God.

In the prophets of the Old Testament, God promised to make a new covenant, to set up a kingdom, and to call those his people under the new, which were not his people under the old. In the New Testament, we learn that these prophecies have been fulfilled; the new covenant is made and dedicated by the blood of Christ, the kingdom is set up, Jews and Gentiles enter into this kingdom, and Paul, in speaking of the church, calls it a "New Man." Eph. ii: 15. This new man is as much the workmanship of God, as was Adam. In the beginning, male and female created he them, and called their name Adam. The church is called the new man, and the same church is called the Lamb's wife. What wonderful harmony in God's work! God has the right to name his own: did he exercise that right? He undoubtedly exercised his right in the beginning. Did he give the new man a new name? Turn to Acts xv: 13-17: Jesus answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me; Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this, agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, after this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things. This is a quotation from the prophecy of Amos, 9:11-12. Here we learn that the tabernacle of David was to be raised up, "that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this." The prophet here declares that the heathen should be called by the name of the Lord, Simeon declares that God did visit the Gentiles, to take of them a people for his name; and James says, to this agree the words of the prophets. Mr. Moody tells us in his tract, page 22, that Baptist is a Bible name—that Jesus was baptized by the Baptist, and that the churches of God at Jerusalem, Antioch, and Corinth were composed of Baptists. Then Baptist is the name of which these prophets and apostles speak!! Then John preached among the Jews, to take out of them a people for his name—Baptist!!! And although Mr. Moody says we dare not say that Christ is a Christian, he makes him enter by the door (Baptism; Moody tells us, is the door, page 22) into the Baptist Church!!!! What miserable bosh! Can his brethren close their eyes and feed on such contemptible stuff? Baptist was not the name, nor even a name of, John. The angel named him John before his birth. He was called John the Baptist from his mission, like "Luke the physician, Zenas the lawyer, Erastus the chamberlain, etc. The Baptist translation of the New Testament, leaves out "the Baptist," and gives us John the Immerser. Then Jesus was baptized by the immerser preacher, and the churches at Jerusalem, Antioch, and Corinth, were Immerser churches. If Mr. Moody knows anything of history, he knows that he cannot find a single church on earth, before the fifteenth century, wearing the name Baptist. If he will look into Orchard's History of Baptists advertised in his tract, as a "standard denominational work," he will find that during the first century, while there were dissidents in the church, each party tenaciously held the name of Christian, and had strong aversion to any other: Vol. 1 page 12.

Let us turn again to the word of the Lord, and see if we can find any reason why those living in the first century, in the days of the apostles would "tenaciously hold the name Christian," and have strong aversion to any other." Mr. Moody and his brethren tenaciously hold the name Baptist, and seem to have a strong aversion to the name Christian.

We read in Isaiah 62:1-14, For Zion's sake, will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof goes forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory—and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord; and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken—neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighted in thee, and thy land shall be married." Isaiah 66:5, we read: "And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen; for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name. Here are prophecies that point clearly and unmistakably to Christianity. God here gives plain and positive promises. One of these promises is, that God will call his servants by "another name," a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name." This new name was to be given after the death or end of Judaism, and at the time when the Gentiles should see the righteousness of the Lord. The Jewish economy was ended at the death of Christ; God's righteousness was extended to the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius. Has the new name been given? God declared plainly and positively that he would give it from his own mouth. Will Mr. Moody dare say that God has not given the new name? Has God promised and then failed to perform his promise? Peter in the council at Jerusalem, when speaking of the conversion of the Gentiles, says, "God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." James says, "to this agree the words of the prophets." Will Mr. Moody open his eyes, and behold this wonderful agreement?

1. Judaism was to be slain.
2. Righteousness to go forth from Jerusalem.
3. Gentiles shall see God's righteousness.
4. A new name to be given.
5. God's people a royal diadem, (diadem symbolized by the crown.—Webster.)
6. No more forsaken or desolate.
7. Thy land (habitation) shall be married.

Let us see the complete fulfillment of these predictions.

1. Judaism was slain. "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man: Eph. 2:15.

2. Righteousness did go forth from Jerusalem. "It behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead. And that repentance and remission of sins, should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke 24:46.

3. Gentiles did see God's righteousness. Peter at the house of Cornelius said, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him: Acts 10:35.

4. A new name is given, just at the time when God promised to name his people from his own mouth. In the next chapter we read: "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Acts 11:26.

5. Christians of all nations are a royal diadem in the heart of the Lord; "for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests": Rev. 5:9-10.

6. God's people shall no more be forsaken or desolate. Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world: Mat. 28:20. I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever: John 14:16.

7. Thy land shall be married. The word land is here evidently used in the sense of habitation, as the word Zion is often used. The church is the Christian's Zion, Land, Kingdom and Habitation. Mr. Moody denies that the church is married to Christ: pages 13-14. He will allow me to tell him that Paul is better authority with Christians, than Moody. Paul says to the church in Corinth, I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ: 2nd Cor. 11:2. Young in his analytical concordance defines the Greek word harmozomai, translated "espoused, to be fitted together." Webster defines espouse, to wed. In the first chapter of Ephesians Christ is represented as being in the same relation to the church as the husband to the wife. As they twain are one flesh, so Paul says of Christ and the church, "we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." The church is often called the bride, the wife of Christ. Mr. Moody says, "Shame on you! Shall a betrothed bride wear the name of the husband before the wedding?" Why did he so adroitly change the Bible word espoused for this word betrothed, a word never applied to the church by any inspired man? Was it for effect? Shame on you!! But we are told that the marriage will be at the second coming of the Savior: Rev. 19. Young defines gamos translated marriage; marriage, or wedding feast. Jesus has gone to prepare a home for his bride; he will come to take her home, and then will be the great marriage supper—not the wedding. She is already his bride, his wife. But Christian is not the name of Christ, the husband. Who said it was? But if Christian is not the name of the husband, then if the bride is called Christian she fails to wear the name of her husband. When God called his people Israel, all though his name, el was but one-third of that name, God said they were called by his name. Who speaks truth, God or Mr. Moody? Christians will believe God. If God promised to call his people by a new name when his righteousness went to the Gentiles, that this new name should show that his people were married, if God kept his promise as he certainly did, and called the disciples Christians first in Antioch, thus giving them the official name of his Son, the highest name in the universe, as a part of their God-given name, how dare Mr. Moody to stand off and pronounce it blasphemy to wear that name? Let us see what kind of nonsense Mr. Moody's logic would make of the name of the church as the wife of Christ. He would intrude his wisdom and his way, on the God of heaven. He tells us his wife is not a Moodyite. She took his personal name—then I presume he calls her Mrs. Moody. Will he call the church of the First-born Mrs. Jesus, or Mrs. Christ? If so, he bids adieu to common sense; if not, his labored effort here is the veriest nonsense. Let us here notice another specimen of Mr. Moody's wonderful logic. He gets up an "equation," and tries to demonstrate that according to our use of the names, Christ and Christian, Christian is equal to Christ. He says we claim this, when in taking the name Christian, we claim to wear His name. He asks, does this fulfill the prophecy. "Many will come, saying I am Christ." He charges that we claim to be equal to Christ, because we claim to wear his name. He then gives some more equations, and charges that we teach that Christian patience equals the patience of Christ."

"Christian suffering equals suffering of Christ."

"Christian blood equals blood of Christ."

"Christian death equals death of Christ."

Let us try these "equations" on Mr. Moody.

He says his wife took his personal name—then Moody is her name. Mrs. Moody equals Mr. Moody. Then Mrs. Moody's patience equals patience of Mr. Moody. Mrs. Moody's suffering equals suffering of Mr. Moody. Mrs. Moody's blood equals blood of Mr. Moody. Mrs. Moody's death equals death of Mr. Moody. Shall I add the conclusion to which Mr. Moody would have you come from his "equations?" Therefore Mrs. Moody should not wear the name of Mr. Moody! As this is the conclusion to which he evidently desired to bring his readers, how does he like the conclusion? He tries to prove by A. Campbell, D. M. Evans, Dr. Wheden and Dr. Elliott, that the Greek, or Romans—he fails to tell us which—gave the name Christian as a term of reproach. He closes his testimony by "introducing one, each, of the Latin and Greek fathers." He then introduces Tacitus as a Latin Father!! Father of what? He was a Roman historian, and in his Annals he speaks of Christianity as a "pernicious superstition." Mr. Moody quotes from Tacitus: "Nero punished with refined cruelty those whom the vulgar called Christians." Then it is not blasphemous but vulgar to call the disciples Christians. Tacitus, the "Latin Father," says so. Let "Father Tacitus" tell us where the vulgar crowd got this name Christian. He says "they had their denomination (name, designation, or title.—Webster,) from Christus who, in the reign of Tiberius, was put to death as a criminal, by the procurator, Pontius Pilate." Will he believe his Father Tacitus? Honor thy Father! that it may be well with thee.

In his examination of Acts 11:26, Mr. Moody introduces Adam Clarke by saying that he "speaks on this subject with unusual positiveness." He quotes Clarke as saying, "Beyond all controversy, the name was given them by the Gentiles, probably by the Romans, as the very form of it suggests. Mr. Moody is evidently no better acquainted with Adam Clarke, than he is with "Father Tacitus." He fails to tell us where we may find this quotation. I have searched Clarke's Commentary in vain for it. He may have written this quotation somewhere. If he has, he contradicted his comment on Acts 11:26, the passage under consideration by Mr. Moody, where he introduced this quotation. I have shown above, that God called the disciples Christians in Antioch, in fulfillment of his promise in Isaiah 62:2, to call his servants by a new name. As Mr. Moody says Adam Clarke "speaks on this subject with unusual positiveness," let us hear what he says. In his comment on the new name, Isaiah 62, Clarke says, "the new name is Christian." Turning to Acts 11:26, where the disciples were first called Christians," Clarke says, "It is evident they had the name Christian from Christ, their Master." He says, "It has been a question by whom was this name given to the disciples? Some think they assumed it—others, that the inhabitants of Antioch gave it to them; and others, that it was given by Saul and Barnabas." He then gives a quotation from the Codex Bezae, a manuscript of the sixth century, from which he quotes that Paul and Barnabas "assembled with the church a whole year, and instructed a great number; and there they first called the disciples at Antioch Christians." He next shows that the word, translated called, in Acts 11: 26, signifies in the New Testament, to appoint, warn or nominate by divine direction." He then says, "If, therefore, the name was given by divine appointment, it is most likely that Saul and Barnabas were directed to give it; and that, therefore, the name Christian is from God." "A Christian, therefore, is the highest character which any human being can bear on earth; and to receive it from God, as those appear to have done, how glorious the title." At the end of the chapter he writes, "There is presumptive evidence, as we have seen, that this appellative came by divine appointment. How very few of those who profess this religion are satisfied with this title!" He then very truly says, "When all return to the spirit of the gospel, they will probably resume the appellation of Christian." Clarke's Commentary lies before me, and I have taken these quotations, italics and all, directly from the work.

The reader can now see how grossly Mr. Moody misrepresents the testimony of Adam Clarke.

I now desire to call attention to the word translated, called, in Acts 11: 26, which Adam Clarke says indicates that the name Christian is by divine appointment. I am indebted to Clarke, and to an excellent article by Bro. B. U. Watkins in the Christian Quarterly, of Oct. '82, for much of the material for my argument on this subject. By reference to Young's Analytical Concordance, we find that our words call, called, callesth, in the New Testament, are generally translated from some form of the Greek word Kaleo. A wholly different word is used in Acts 11: 26. The Greek word here translated called, is Chrematizo. We now enquire what is the meaning and Bible use of this word? Young defines it, "To declare by an oracle." Clarke says the word signifies in the New Testament, "To appoint, warn or nominate, by divine appointment," and gives several of the examples cited below.

Let us turn to the New Testament use of this word, and see if this definition is sustained. We find Chrematizo in different forms, in ten different passages. We group the quotations, and indicate the different translations by emphasis:

1. Mat. 2: 12, And being warned of God in a dream.
2. Mat. 2: 22, Being warned of God in a dream.
3. Acts 10: 22, Warned from God by a holy angel.
4. Heb. 11: 7, By faith Noah being warned of God.
5. Luke 2: 26, Was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost.
6. Heb. 8: 5, Moses was admonished of God.
7. Rom. 11: 4, What saith the answer of God unto him.
8. Heb. 12: 25, Refused him that spake on earth.
9. Rom. 7: 3, She shall be called an adulteress.
10. Acts 11: 26, Disciples were called Christians.

It was God that warned Joseph, Cornelius, and Noah. God revealed to Simeon, admonished Moses, answered Elias, spake on earth, and calls, divinely calls, the woman, who puts away her husband and marries another man, an adulteress. Man may not call such an one an adulteress, but God so names her. It follows, with all the certainty of a mathematical demonstration, from this invariable use of this word, chosen by infinite wisdom that never makes a mistake, to express the naming of God's people, that he remembered his promise made seven hundred and fifty years before, and called the disciples Christians, the only new name given by any inspired man, to God's children in the New Testament. A name that is the synonym of all that is pure and good on earth; that has been honored for 1800 years, as no other name, worn by man, has been honored, and that has been an honor to every child of God who has worthily worn this God given name. That worthy name by which ye are called, (Jas. 2: 7) has been blasphemed by thousands before Mr. Moody blasphemed it in his tract. Thousands have been reproached for the name of Christ, before Mr. Moody wrote out his reproaches on that name for his tract. Many a child of God has suffered, as a Christian, while he "glorified God in this name." Many faithful ones to-day, like the faithful ones of the seven churches in Asia, "hold fast the name of Christ." Adam Clarke says the name held fast by these faithful ones was Christian, and Orchard, Mr. Moody's own historian, says that the church in the first century tenaciously held the name Christian. Every name, given by God, is kept by him, and comes down to us a diadem of glory. Abraham, Sarah, Israel, John, Jesus, Christian, shine with all the effulgence of heaven's purest light, through the thick darkness and gloom, of a sin-cursed earth, and lights and cheers us on to the Christian home. A thousand Moody's may write, and preach, and kick against any one of these names, spoken from the throne of Jehovah, but the name will live on, brighter and brighter, to the perfect day. Israel has been an honored name for 3600 years. God said to his people "ye shall leave your name for a curse." While God's name, Israel, is a blessing, man's name, Jew, for a thousand years has been a curse, in every land, to him who wore it. Man may name his own, but no man can claim the right to name God's children.

ARKANSAS NEWS AND ITEMS.

The second session of the "Arkansas Christian Missionary Convention" was held with the church at Russellville, embracing 9, 10, 11, and 12 inst. The good people of Russellville had made every preparation necessary for the entertainment of visitors, and our stay with them was most enjoyable. Quite a number of preachers were in attendance, and we formed several pleasant acquaintances with preaching brethren, whom we had not met before. We will mention, T. D. Garvin of Ohio, the only one at the "Convention," who lives out of the State. We will mention of them who came from different parts of the State, E. R. Childers, V. Y. Wood, Dr. Holmes, C. E. Gillispie, J. W. Bratcher, Bowman—Paston, Geo. Harkey, W. D. Keltner, J. T. Garland, and J. T. Jones. The three last named are warm friends of the Advocate, and promised to do all in their power to increase its circulation in their respective fields of labor.

The most interesting feature of the "Convention" to us, was the encouraging reports from the field in almost all parts of the State. If we may credit the report made by the preachers generally, and I know no reason why we should not, the cause is certainly advancing throughout the State. I was sorry to notice a general opposition to, and in some instances, palpable misrepresentations of, the Review, Advocate, Christian Messenger, and Model Christian, on account of their anti-missionary spirit, it is said, is literally starving preachers to death. We think it very bad in our sectarian neighbors to misrepresent us, and we are hardly willing to allow that they are honest in doing so. We tell them plainly they are without excuse; that if they do not understand us, it is their own fault; that they have had ample time and means of knowing just where we stand, and just what we teach. Hence are without excuse for misrepresenting us. But how much truer of brethren than sectarians? Certainly there is no reason why brethren should misrepresent each other. Better not speak of brethren at all, than misrepresent others.

There was a good deal of outspoken opposition to, and some heated discussions of, the Constitution and by laws, framed by the "Convention," in Little Rock, a year ago. I was pleased to notice at the close of the "Convention" a general willingness to set the "Constitution and By Laws" entirely aside, for the sake of harmony and concert of action among the churches. Think it just to say that all present were apparently earnest pious and godly men, desiring nothing but the glory of God and the salvation of souls. I had the pleasure of meeting, on the third Lord's day inst., with the church of Sardis, in Hempstead county. Work was begun here about eighteen months ago by H. A. Smith, who now has charge of the Texas and Arkansas department of the Christian Evangelist. His first meeting was under a brush arbor. The congregation was soon organized (whatever that may mean) with eight members. Bro. S. soon left them and they secured the services of Bro. W. J. Hudspeth, who is still with them. They now number seventy-five or eighty; have a comfortable and commodious house of worship, and are an earnest band of Christians. Bro. H. A. Smith is now at Prescott, having agreed to preach half the time for the church there, and will devote the rest of his time to evangelizing in destitute places. I should have stated that Bro. Hudspeth preaches twice a month at Sardis and twice a month at Hope.

Bro. J. C. Mason is at Texarkana, where he is doing a real good work. Bro. E. R. Childers will probably take Bro. Mason's place at Okolona. They have a good church there.

Bro. J. B. Davis, one of our earnest and faithful preachers, is evangelizing in Claiborn and Bossier parishes, La. It is not plans or discussion about "plans," but earnest, faithful preaching of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, that will spread the gospel and convert the heathen would to God. May we not have less discussion and more self-sacrificing devotion to the grand work. There is no better way to teach one how to live the Christian life, than to live it yourself. The more we think of God the less we think of ourselves and of the temptations which surround, hence the less liable we are to fall into temptation. Prayer brings God before the mind and causes us to think of him. Let us pray often.

QUESTIONS.

One of our little school girls could not be with us this year on account of her health. She wrote to me not long ago, and sent a question to her old associates. Here it is: "Who was it had the iron bedstead?"—[Lucy Tankersley.]

She requested that others be sent by the girls to her. I will give them as they presented them. Others may wish to answer them. You will see all are not from the girls. The boys asked to send some also.

"What Israelite killed the King of Moab, and what was the King's name?"—[Elly R. Barnes.]

"Who was it that gave the antidote for death in the pot? When did it occur?"—[W. F. Black.]

P. S.—Ere I sent these questions off, I received a letter in answer to them, and now to be answered, but I will not send them until I see further.

J. M. BARNES.

The Christian at Work puts the matter in this nutshell fashion:

If Mr. Ingersoll were to lose his eyes would he seek refuge in the Voltaire Blind Asylum? If Mr. Charles Bradlaugh were to become insane would he be sent to the Tom Paine Insane Asylum? If Mr. G. C. Miln were to be struck with an incurable disease would he resort to the Hume Hospital? If any uncared-for, vicious child, belonging to a Free-thinker were to be found at large, would it be sent to the D. M. Bennett Society for the Suppression of vice? There are no such institutions? No? Well, brethren and sisters, continue to abuse Christianity, and when you or your friends become blind, or lame, or sick, or deaf, or insane, or intemperance, send them to some good Christian institution. They will be taken care of, free of cost, and no reproaches thrown in.

Infidelity does not found such institutions. The world has them through the influence of Christianity.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

Dear Brother Poe:—If, when a brother preacher is withdrawn from for disorderly conduct, he continues to preach, what is the duty of the congregation that withdrew fellowship from him in such case? Please give us your views on above through the Advocate and oblige your brother in Christ.—[J. H. Sills, Dec. 6th, 1883.]

I think the duty of the church, if he continues to preach, is very plain. They can only do one of two things:

1. Rescind their action, and restore him to fellowship, or,
2. Publish his offense, and their action in the case, so that he may not impose himself upon the brethren elsewhere. The first proposition here mentioned, they cannot take, unless they find they have done wrong in withdrawing from him. The second position they should take in behalf of church purity, and in an endeavor to uphold the authority of Christ's law. A preacher who goes about preaching, while he stands withdrawn from, and excluded from the fellowship of his home church, is either too ignorant of Christ's law, or too outrageously wicked, to be allowed to preach. If he is not entirely ignorant of the law he proposes to teach, he knows he is an outcast from heaven's blessing, and will be forever lost, unless he makes the proper amends to his offended brethren. He cannot trample under foot the feelings of his brethren, and yet be at peace with high heaven. Our brethren, many of them, need teaching right here on this point. We must sacredly regard the feelings of our brethren. The church that stands with its fellowship withdrawn from a preaching brother, and permits him to go on preaching without exposing, is guilty of perpetrating a great wrong upon the church of Christ, at large.

J. W. MCGARVEY.

A number of preaching brethren in Texas have expressed a desire to have Bro. McGarvey visit the State, and conduct an Institute similar to that conducted by him in Kansas last year. Bros. Dimmitt, Clark, Wilmeth, Prichard, Horn, Jackson, Poe, and a number of others have expressed this desire. The Institutes are simply classes formed and taught for a number of days, and lectures at night on Palestine, illustrated by splendid stereoptical views of the most interesting places and objects. Bro. McGarvey has consented to come in July, provided twenty-five or thirty preachers will agree to attend. The attendance however will not be limited to preachers by any means. If held at some suitable place, the expense to those attending, need only be travelling expenses. If you desire the Institute, and will agree to attend it, please write to the undersigned at once. Suggest your choice of place.—[C. McPherson, Waxahachie, Texas.]

We want this Normal Institute, and we need it. We can make it useful to us in many ways. The exchange of thought, solution of difficult problems, how to preach, and what to preach, is of vast importance to the brotherhood at large. We can thus be completely united in the work. Let's have the Institute by all means. Have it where you please, brethren, but put us down one scholar for the whole term.

Bro. Gowen did not send us the answers to his query. So we do not yet know them ourself. We hardly think this correct. Willie F. Poe sends answer: "God made the world, and man as part of it—then gave the world a soul when he breathed into man, he breath of life, etc.

BREAKING THE SABBATH ETC.

Our Methodist friends in Texas are having great trouble over the Sabbath question just now. One is out in an article, saying that preachers who travel on railroads to go to appointments, etc., on the Sabbath, aid in keeping the poor railroad hands from church, etc. Others say it is no more harm than to go horseback, etc. And on this question they show as great a lack of knowledge as they do on the subject of baptism. If they would study the Bible more, and John Wesley less, they would find that none of them pretend to keep the Sabbath. The Seventh day of the week is the Sabbath. Come! You Methodists should have more method in your religion. You have no more authority in Scripture, for calling Sunday, or the first day of the week Sabbath, than you have for sprinkling water on a baby and calling it baptism, and you have not a line to justify, either.

Dear Brother Poe:—I returned home last Friday from Hill county, where I had been preaching. On entering my door at home, I found my only little boy, who was near three years old, cold in death. He died very suddenly—before medical aid could be obtained. The thought is hard indeed, even when one is present and is aware that they have to go; and this thought is the more intense when one has no warning. My wife telegraphed for me, but I had started home about six hours before the telegram—consequently I knew nothing about it until I reached home. My feelings cannot be described. O, how sad! how hurtful the thought! No one but those who have lost their dear little ones can tell anything about how hard it is. As one of old has said, "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be his name." "Our dear little one cannot return to us, but we can go to him." This is the only consolation we have in this our distress. Pray for us, Bro. Poe, that we may bear up under this heavy stroke.

Yours in the one faith,

N. B. SYKES.

Bro. Burnett, while visiting the churches in Arkansas, advised Bro. J. J. Setliff that if he would "take the field and evangelize (not preach for the churches) and do nothing else, the Lord would supply him with all the money he needed." Why does not Bro. Burnett try that plan?—Christian Preacher.

Bro. Burnett has been trying that plan for four or five years. Why does not Bro. Wilmeth read the papers, and post himself up better? Bro. Burnett baptized more converts last year, in the destitute regions of Texas, than the "state evangelist," who receives a salary from the churches of twelve hundred dollars a year.—Christian Messenger.

Never mind, Bro. Burnett; I intend to nominate you for next S. Evangelist, or solicitor for Orphan Home, at same price as the other place. Then—well—you know how to use a cross-cut saw, don't you? You at one end and me at the other.

Dear Brother Poe:—Please state that $10 has been received from the congregation at Lewisburg, Tenn., for Indian Mission, by Bro. P. D. Houston.

The debate between Bro. John Denton and Owins, a Baptist, begins to-night, Jan. 14th, all of this county. The same propositions were discussed a few months ago, between brother Denton and a Baptist by the name of Price. It seems the Baptists were not satisfied and want to try a new man.

Dr. Neal, of Lewisburg, said I might wear the chain; so I will put it on. Doctor, how easy it is for one to do a thing when he wants to.

Two additions last Lord's day. R. W. O.

DIED, in Longview, Texas, "A. Gennis," of delirium tremens, by nature and by education, fitted to fill almost any noble station in life; yet he did as the fool dieth. Oh, tyrant! Whisky, thy victims are legion. Who'll be the next?

FOR OUR BIBLE CLASS.

Dear Brother Poe:—I want to join the Bible Class. I again venture to give some answers. I submit the following in answer to Bro. Gowen's query, No. 6:

(a.) God gave the whale a soul (Jonah) and in due time took the soul from it: Jonah 1:17.

(b.) God caused a soul (Daniel) to be cast into the lions' den, and in due time took the soul from it: Daniel 6:16-24.—[J. P. Gotcher, Waxahachie, Texas, Jan. 19th, 1884.]

Dear Bro. Poe:—Bro. Lauderdale desires me to state how I learned Jacob's age at Joseph's birth. Here it is: Joseph was thirty years old when he was made ruler, at the beginning of the seven years of plenty. At the beginning of the famine he was three years old. Jacob came after the second year of the famine, when Joseph was thirty-nine years old. Jacob lived in Egypt seventeen years. Thirty-nine plus seventeen equals fifty-six, Joseph's age at Jacob's death. Jacob was 147 years old. Hence 147 minus fifty-six leaves ninety-one, Jacob's age at Joseph's birth. Jacob's service of fourteen years from this, leaves seventy-seven, his age when he went to Padan Aram. As Joseph was born at the expiration after fourteen years.—[George Gowen.]

A Shepherd being asked the number of sheep in his flock, replied: "If you divide the number of camels Job had before their capture by the Chaldeans, by the number of men sent to take Jeremiah from the dungeon; add to the quotient the number of lords entertained at the feast of Belshazzar; from the amount subtract the number of righteous who could have saved Sodom; multiply by the age when David began to reign; divide by the number of Gideon's band; add the number of Philistines whom Samson slew with the jaw bone; subtract the number of Solomon's songs; multiply by the number of days Job's friends tarried without saying a word; subtract the number of fish caught in the draft of the miracle of fishes; and the remainder will be the number of sheep in my flock." What was the number?

Dear Brother Poe:—In answer to Bro. Lauderdale's questions in a recent issue of the Advocate, I would say

1. Terah was seventy years old when Abram was born. See Gen. xi:27.

2. The children of Israel remained in Egypt about 210 or 215 years.

3. There were about two and one-half millions of Israelites in the exodus from Egypt.

4. This question is a hard one—one that requires considerable reading.

The rate, or ratio of increase, in each generation may be safely put down as follows:

1. Combining the 1st, 2nd and 3rd generations. We have 6 as the average ratio of increase:

4th generation, ratio	7.
5th " "	5.
6th " "	7.
7th " "	7.

Proof: 1st, Combining the ratios of 12 in Jacob's case, (12 sons,) with the ratio of his sons' increase, which is 4. (See Gen. 56:7-21,) with the fruitful statement of the 3d generation in Ex. 1:7, we can very safely put the average ratio of the three at 6.

2. 4th Gen., still greater, not less than 7. See Ex. 1:8-12. Caleb, son of Hezron, of this generation had twelve sons, (see 1. Chron. 2.

3. 5th Gen. Cast into river, (see Ex. 1:23,) reduced ratio to 5. Moses belonged to this, the 4th generation from Levi. The 4th and 6th generations restored to 7 and continued to the 7th generation.

These figures apply only to males.

From the above data we can determine the possibility of the number, 603,550, which is the census of all males over twenty years of age, by multiplying the number in each generation by its ratio of increase. Thus the objection of skeptics as to the impossibility of the above increase is brushed away. GEO. GOWEN.

The Four Stages of Disease.

Few people but will realize the startling truth shown in the engravings accompanying the advertisement of Rev. T. P. Childs in this number of the GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Nearly every family in the land has friends or near and dear relatives who have passed through every stage of disease as described in the engravings—how true to life—how fearfully suggestive of the dangers that may result from careless exposure—how carefully we should heed those warning, Coughs and Colds—how fearful are the unseen dangers that surround us on every side, a slight cold or cough neglected may bring us untold miseries; Catarrh, Bronchitis, Consumption, with death in the near future. Take care of the first symptoms is the lesson read from the pictures, delay may mean death.

To many it will be a matter of surprise that CATARRH is very frequently mistaken for CONSUMPTION, the symptoms in each being much alike, especially in the earlier stages. No one who recognizes in his own system, or who has friends or relatives with any of the symptoms so accurately described, should fail to send a statement of the case to Mr. Childs. There may be hope in very desperate cases.

The discovery of his cure for Catarrh and diseases of the Throat and Lungs, has attracted great attention. Leading men everywhere, publicly state that Childs' treatment has cured them or their families of Catarrh or Throat or Lung difficulties—among them clergymen, physicians, lawyers, merchants, bankers and business men. All who have personally investigated the facts, are satisfied that Mr. Childs has discovered a certain, positive and permanent cure for these diseases, that when properly used never fails even in the most desperate cases. Catarrh is generally many years in gaining a foothold in the system, and attacks so many parts of the body that it can not be cured by any one remedy or by a single application. It requires remedies that will meet the disease wherever it is located, and fight it inch by inch until a complete victory has been obtained. Rev. T. P. Childs has treated and cured thousands at their own homes never having seen them. In a thoroughly honorable and characteristic manner he publishes the names and addresses of some he has cured, that any who desire may inquire of the patients themselves what Childs' treatment has done for them.

The following from other publishers has given us every confidence in recommending Mr. Childs to our subscribers.

"The publishers and editors of The Journal and Messenger, Cincinnati, have known Rev. T. P. Childs for many years, and feel every confidence in any statements he may make. Our subscribers can feel every confidence in giving their cases into his hands for treatment." "While not supposing that all cases of Catarrh will be cured by the prescription advertised, the publishers of the Illustrated Christian Weekly, of New York, after diligent inquiry, have reason to believe that it has, in many cases, proved effectual." "The publishers of The Congregationalist, of Boston, with multitudes of other people, are somewhat suspicious of patent medicines as a rule, and when we received the advertisement of Mr. Childs, we at first declined its insertion; but on making inquiry, we received such satisfactory replies, and one especially from a well-known Congregational pastor not far from Rev. Mr. Childs, the proprietor of the medicine, that we withdrew our objections." "The publishers of The St. Louis Christian Advocate, after careful investigation, are satisfied that Rev. T. P. Childs' treatment for the head, throat and lungs is all that it is represented to be."

None need feel any hesitancy in placing their case in Mr. Childs' hands for treatment. We would call especial attention to the advertisement, and request a careful perusal of the facts as set forth.

Many who do not receive our paper would doubtless be very thankful, should our readers call the attention of such to the advertisement of Mr. Childs. Catarrh and Consumption are the twin enemies of the race, and any means of relief is a heaven sent blessing. Childs' treatment may be relied on as an effective and certain cure for Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and you may recommend it to your friends with every confidence.

WARREN COUNTY NOTES.

Our readers remember that we published a list of appointments recently in the ADVOCATE for the above named county in Tennessee. When the time came to start to the first places, Philadelphia and Antioch, a snow-storm was raging, and we thought the weather too severe to accomplish good, and so declined to go. This decision was partly on account of rheumatism, from which we suffered so severely last spring, and of which we have had some touches this winter. But on Tuesday following, we set out to McMinnville, which was the next place in our list. On reaching the depot at this place, we were met by brothers H. L. Walling and H. B. Todd, and after a very cordial greeting, were conveyed to the residence of Bro. Walling, and were made to feel very comfortable, and very much at home in his hospitable family, and almost made to forget the gloomy outlook of the weather, by genuine Christian kindness. A large audience, considering the weather, greeted us in their very comfortable meeting house that night. Perhaps none but preachers know how cheering it is to meet such an audience, in such weather. We discoursed to them as best we could that night, and the next night, both of which were very dark, and unfavorable looking, but which did not hinder those earnest, truth-loving people from turning out to hear the word of the Lord.

On Thursday morning, Bro. H. L. Walling, together with his wife and daughter, accompanied us ten miles out to a meeting house called Holcum. Here we met quite a good audience, considering the weather, to which we preached and were very hospitably entertained that night at the residence of Bro. P. G. Potter, who recently united with our brethren, from the Baptists. He and his wife know how to make people feel pleasant and comfortable. We preached next day again, but it rained all day, and there were not many out. There are a good many members in this congregation, and, although widely scattered, seem to be doing well. Bro. Potter, though engaged in farming and merchandise, preaches on Lord's days, and we hope will do much good in that section.

In the afternoon (Friday) we went back to McMinnville, preached there again at night, and on Saturday morning, by the kindness of Bro. Walling, though the roads were exceedingly muddy, and waters up, we were conveyed five or six miles out above McMinnville, to New Smyrna meeting house, where there is quite a good congregation of brethren and sisters. But the weather was so inclement, and the brethren partly cut off by high water, that we only got to see a few of them. This was our first visit to this point, and we were sorry we could not see a good turnout of the members. The brethren have a good, comfortable house at this place, and cold as the weather was on Lord's day, January 20, we were quite comfortable during services.

Lord's day night, we preached again in McMinnville, accompanied and conveyed back by Bro. Walling, who came out through the cold and snow that morning. And cold as the weather was, we had a good audience that night. At the close of the sermon, and at the suggestion of Bro. Todd, we had a good warm handshaking, which we all enjoyed very much. Such manifestations as this, are well calculated to revive a preachers courage by the way, and give encouragement to all. Bro. Todd and his family are stopping for a while here, and are looking out for a suitable home, where they may locate, to spend the evening of their lives quietly and usefully. He is a zealous, warm hearted Christian, and so is his wife, who has been a member from her youth. We left McMinnville with the decided impression that they have a zealous, live congregation, and a most excellent Sunday-school. Bro. J. C. Martin, superintendent, is a live, working man. They have about half a dozen preachers in this congregation, some of whom are doing much good by going out into the country and preaching Lord's days, and starting up the good work at new places. This they are doing at their own charges, and will continue to do so, doubtless, as they are all engaged in other callings. Now if the congregation as such, will employ one of these, or some other preacher that can give his time to the work, to hunt out the by-ways and school-houses of the county, in addition to what their own preachers are doing, and will still do, they will do a grand work. And as their own home preaching costs them nothing, they surely can do this, and we hope they will.

From here we went on Monday to brother O. F. Young's, near Bethlehem church, White county. Tuesday and Tuesday night, we preached to good audiences at Bethlehem, and was to preach again the next day, but an unceasing, cold rain, closed us out. The brethren here have arranged to sustain brother Wesley Kidwill a part, or the whole of his time, to evangelize in this section of country. From all we could see on the two occasions upon which we met with them, they have a live, zealous congregation here, and a very neat, comfortable house in which to meet to worship the Lord. We hope they will long continue to be a light in that community, till their influence shall extend into all the region round about.

On account of the severity of the weather, we were prevented from going to Sparta to fill the appointment there. We reached home on Thursday, the 24th, to find all well, and to find the mercury only one degree above zero the next morning. During our sojourn with the brethren at the above places, we were made to feel and realize the force and beauty of Christian kindness and hospitality. When we have better weather, we expect to start out again, "the Lord willing."

INTOLERANCE.

In the last number of Vol. of 1883, we wrote an article on Union and Schism. In it, we took the position that all conventions of churches, or meetings, other than congregational to oppose error were wrong, were unscriptural, would be adopting one error to oppose another, and that the cure would be worse than the disease. We further insisted that, while we believed fully that unless innovations on the divine order were stopped, division would and ought to come. God would bring it. But that Christians, those in the right, ought to take no aggressive steps looking to a separation, that all they had to do was to firmly stand for the truth, refusing to participate in the evil, and that the ostracism would all come from those departing from the truth, soon enough. Yet Bro. Allen heads a criticism on our article, "Intolerance," and says that "Alexander Campbell went out (of the Baptist church) when he was driven out by just such intolerance as Bro. Lipscomb's article seems to advocate." Was Alexander Campbell driven out of the Baptist church by a non-aggressive adherence to truth, on the part of the Baptists, by their refraining from all ecclesiasticisms, by their waiting for him to take the initiative in a separation? Certainly Bro. Allen did not mean what he said. If my article recommending a patient, unaggressive maintenance of the truth, waiting for those opposed to take the aggressive in a separation, is intolerance, what would Bro. Allen call his declaration, in discussion with Bro. Hobbs, that he had as little fellowship for a church that would bring an organ into the church so as to drive out members opposed as he did for one that preached infant baptism?

In our article, we urged Christians to stand firmly to their conscientious convictions in the maintenance of the truth. That is, they should be careful not to engage in any service, and in no sense be responsible, for that they believed sinful. Bro. Allen in his controversy with Bro. Hobbs, said no man can be saved who violates his conscience, and participates in things that he believes to be wrong. I was only adopting his sentiment in the matter. We added that opposition that protested a thing was wrong, yet went forward and participated in the wrong, never corrected the wrong. "Had Luther protested that the papacy was 'unjust, unwise, unsafe, and unscriptural,' but that he intended to work in and under it, the pope would never have excommunicated him." Bro. Allen responds:

"Did Luther nail his thesis to the church door at Wittenburg, and then at once withdraw from the church at Rome? How many years did he continue to support the Romish church, while he shook all Germany with his opposition to some of its principles and practices? Was his conduct inconsistent and sinful? Did Alexander Campbell bolt out of the Baptist church as soon as he felt constrained to oppose some of their principles and practices, as violations of the word of God? He went out when he was driven out by just such intolerance as Bro. Lipscomb's article seems to advocate."

If Bro. Allen had been careful to observe his own advice to represent fairly what he was opposing, the forceful sentences here quoted, might not have been written, but greater justice would have been done me, and his readers would have better appreciated the point at issue. I again ask where is one sentence, one thought, I have written that can possibly indicate any body should be driven out of any church? Any body was or ought to be prescribed? The whole article was a cutting off the possibility of such a thing by those who followed the counsel given.

Where did I ask Bro. Allen or any one to bolt out of, or leave any church? I only asked men to be true to their consciences, and not do the thing they believed wrong. Did Luther say a thing was unwise, unsafe, unscriptural, and yet say he intended to continue to do that thing? Did he say the sale of indulgences was wrong, yet sell and buy indulgences? Did he say the pope was anti-christ, yet submit to the pope? Did Alexander Campbell say that creeds were sinful, were unsafe, were unscriptural, yet support and enforce creeds? Did he denounce the dreams and visions, of the masses of religious, yet encourage those dreams, tell them himself, and urge others to do so? Did he denounce the authority of associations, yet submit to them, and build them up, and enforce their authority on others? That is the question. He and Luther believed the churches, if they could be purified of the wrongs to which they refused to submit, were churches of Christ. But it is a gross misapprehension of those heroic spirits, to say they believed a thing, or an institution based on principles, unwise, unjust, unscriptural, and violative of the divine government, yet with this protest, worked in, and built up these very principles they believed wrong. That is the point, Bro. Allen, not whether they bolted out of any church or not. We have not asked any one to leave any church, but protested against their doing it, or taking any steps to force others out until, like Campbell and Luther, they are driven out, for refusing to support and build up those principles they believe to be unwise, unsafe, unscriptural, and violative of the divine government. The Pope did not, like Bro. Allen, think Luther was supporting the Romish church while shaking Germany with his opposition to its principles, else he had never excommunicated him.

SOUTH ALABAMA WORK.

To all whom it may concern: I have just received a letter from a good brother, urging me to appoint men to receive money for the Alabama work. I am anxious to know that I have the hearty co-operation of my brethren in Alabama. If no other man works, by the help of my God I will labor. But there are many zealous brethren in our State, and I thank God for them. I would love to have an expression from every one of them in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE. It may be, they are waiting for an opportunity for something more tangible, and practical than words. If this be the case, I am certainly willing to suggest what I think best. This brother wrote: "Point to some man, to whom money can be sent and safely kept until a sufficient sum has been raised to start an evangelist to work. I am ready and willing to go to work. If I can't raise much, I can raise a little, and every little will help." This is the way to talk. This is encouraging. Send money to me. I will report to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE every cent received. If the brethren prefer, send to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE office. It will all be accounted for. Money placed in the hands of Dr. A. C. Henry, Bros. Daniel, Tipton, Hamilton, Dr. David Adams, will be reported and properly appropriated. Remember, brethren, I do not want a dime of it, and will not receive it for my own use. I am anxious to have preaching done in Alabama, and now let us have it. Some brethren say, we want preaching in the smaller towns, and you propose only the larger ones. No, that is not the way; I propose the cities for the present only. My hearts desire, and prayer to God, is, that every city, hamlet, burg, and town, every pleasant valley and breezy hill in Alabama, may hoist the standard of the great Captain of man's salvation, and receive Jesus and his word without creed, confession of faith, note or comment or commendations of Pope, Bishop or monk. It may be, that if we get to doing something more, we will be so well pleased, that we will push the work into the towns, among the mountains, into the nooks and corners. Who will do the preaching? I am not troubled about that yet. We have good preachers in this State—others will be forthcoming.

I have a new letter from Bro. Poe. He wants to stand on the soil where first his eyes looked out upon the pretty world, and preach his Savior to the people. He is not able to do it at his own charges. He has a large family. This laborer is worthy of his hire. He has asked me what the chance to send from the land of his nativity, something so as to keep the dear ones at home "living and moving and having their being." Did you ask me what I wrote? Not one word. What must I write? Say my dear brethren of Alabama, It is refreshing to find one preacher desiring to turn his head back from the West to the old forsaken. Shall we stretch out our hand and say, come back to your old mother, and while you make an offering of respect to her, she will not refuse you the milk that flows freely from her breast as of yore. The halcyon days of spring will soon burst upon us. Beautiful, blossoming, bird-singing spring will be here. These are the days to work in the cities. Shall we be ready? What thou doest, do quickly. Sisters I look to you for much help in this work.

Queries.

Please explain first Peter, 3: 19-20, and 4: 6. Did Christ preach to the departed spirits of the Antidiluvians? It seems so from the reading of first Peter, 5: 6. If not, what did he preach to. You will oblige a brother by explaining this in the good old ADVOCATE.—[A. W. Moss.

The result of the preaching was, eight souls were saved by means of the ark, by water. What preaching saved those eight souls? Noah's, a preacher of righteousness. This declares simply that Christ through Noah preached to the disobedient spirits that are in prison, and eight souls were saved by the preaching.

Prother E. L. C. Denton preached for us last year, and will attend us again this year, though I have not heard him since August last, owing to bad health. He is well liked here as a preacher. There were twenty-five added to the Church during the year.

Bro. Lipscomb, please give your views of the 23rd verse of the 3rd chapter of John; who did the baptizing, Jesus, or his disciples? Your brother,—[Joel H. Curd, Murray, Ky., Jan. 27th, 1884.

The 2nd verse of the 4th chapter says, "Though Jesus baptized not, but his disciples." Jesus did no baptizing. I think his disciples did it.

Will you please explain through the ADVOCATE the 1st verse of the 2nd chapter of Ephesians, which reads as follows: "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." Now, the trouble with me is this: anything dead is lifeless, and incapable of action, and I think the teaching of the New testament is, that we are made Christians by obedience to the Law of Christ; but if, while aliens, we are dead, how can we render obedience. Yours in the one hope, and in search of the truth.—[J. G. Wilburn, Bowie, Texas, Jan. 28th, 1884.

A man separated from Christ, is said to be dead spiritually, that does not mean that he has no mental and moral faculties to perceive and take hold of and obey the truth, and so bring himself into spiritual relations with God.

Please explain Acts 7: 38, which reads, "This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angels which spoke to him in the Mount Sinai, etc. Was there a church in the wilderness?"—[W. J. Knox.

A church is an assembly separated from the others of earth. It matters not what the purpose of the separation. The Jewish people when assembled as separate from the rest of the human family, was the Jewish church. The people in the wilderness constituting an assembly separated from the world, was a church. So too, the church of Christ assembled or united together, separated from the world, constitute the church of Christ. Any people separated from others, constitute a church, but not a church of Christ, unless separated for Christ's sake.

My neighbors say that it don't matter what a man believes, or what church he belongs to, just so he is honest in it. Just so he is sincere, is all that is required, which I don't believe I will look for an explanation in your paper. It may do them good, as several are continually borrowing the ADVOCATE to read.—[T. J. Chambers.

Paul was very sincere, very honest, a devout worshipper of God—had been from youth up and all the days of his life lived in all good conscience before God. That is, he lived up fully to the requirements of his conscience. Yet he said he was the chief of sinners, and obtained pardon only because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. A man who loves God will always do his commandments, follow God's directions. God's directions never lead into any church but God's church. No man who follows God's direction will ever be led into any church save God's church.

Please explain these verses: John 10: 8, and Luke 14: 26, and oblige your brothers in Christ, —[P. W. Hardin, J. T. Nolan, Zion Rest, Sept. 18th, 1883.

All that came before me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not hear their voice. All who came claiming to be the Christ, the Shepherd of the sheep before, were thieves and robbers, and the sheep did not follow them.

The other passage, "If a man come to me and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, brothers and sisters, yea and his own life, he cannot be my disciple." This passage has been frequently commented upon in the ADVOCATE. We cannot argue it now. "This is the love of God that you keep his commandments." If the love of God is keeping his commandments, the failure to keep his commandments, is to hate him. Then to love, a father, mother, husband, wife, is a willingness to obey them or please them. To hate them is to be unwilling to please them. The meaning then clearly is, if a man won't displease father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister, and even sacrifice his life to be a servant of Christ, he cannot be his disciple.

Please explain through the ADVOCATE, James 4: 14-15, "Is any sick among you?" etc. And also Romans 1: 11-12, and you will greatly oblige your humble servant,—[William K. Elder, Morrison, Tenn., Oct. 22nd, 1883.

I do not see what explanation can be given of James 5: 14-15. It is a plain statement that no one can misunderstand. If the desire is to know whether we think it applicable to us at the present day, I can only say, I do. If Christians in faith would do as here commanded, it would result beneficially to the healing of the sick. I do not understand that was a promise, that all should get well, because people must die. They did it with Christ and the Apostles, and will always die, still as a remedial course, it would result favorably.

2. The verses from Romans 1: 11-12, was nothing more than Paul expressing a wish that he could visit the Christians at Rome, that he might bestow on them some spiritual gift—that is, some miraculous gift of the spirit, that by it "you may be strengthened." You being made strong in the faith, comforts me. The early church was without the written New Testament, so was dependent upon miraculous gifts for a time, until the Scriptures were written out. The Roman brethren had but few of these gifts. He desired to impart unto them some of these gifts, to confirm or establish them in the faith. This would comfort Paul, and his faith would comfort them.

We must look downward as well as upward in human life. Though many have passed you in the race, there are many you have left behind.

It is easier to find a score of men wise enough to discover the truth than one intrepid enough in the face of opposition to stand up for it.

Obituaries.

Bro. Robert Hardison was born June 4th, 1854, and the spirit and body were separated December 25th, 1883. During our protracted meeting last fall, at Antioch, he willingly submitted to the commands of our blessed Jesus. It was supposed consumption was the cause of his death. The old, young and all persons must pass through the dark valley of death at some period of time, because the volume of inspiration teaches it. Notwithstanding this, the sorrowing ones can lift up their heads and wipe the gentle tears from their eyes, when they realize after our brother became a Christian, he lived and died in the blessed hope. To comfort and encourage the sad hearts of those who were so warmly connected in love with our dear brother, we would say, the spirit now rests in the unseen world, shielded by the Almighty. If we would love and adore our Savior, the remainder of our days here, we will meet again the loved ones in the "Happy Eden," and there we will hear and enjoy the heaven-born songs of joy and gladness. May we continue to praise and honor our Savior, so we may at last rest with Him "beyond the dark sea."

F. C. SOWELL.

Fell asleep in this place, January 11, 1884, Sister Lucy Alderson, aged eighty-one years, three months and nine days. Aunt Lucy, as she was familiarly called, had long been a disciple of Jesus, and from her daily walk and conversation, we have the blessed hope that while her frail body returns to its original dust, her pure spirit has found a priceless home among the bright immortals. Long years ago, when the tide of opposition ran high, she gave her young life to Jesus. She "fought the good fight" with a firm, unshaken faith, and proved by her works that there is a blissful reality in the religion of the crucified Redeemer. She loved the cause she had espoused, and did much to make bright the light of God's truth in this place. Before a house of worship was erected, she met with a faithful few in the court-house, or in the old Masonic building. That faith so firm in youth and so strengthened as the years grew on, is the faith we all admire; it is the faith a risen Savior loves and blesses with his priceless sweet "well done." Aunt Lucy's death was painless. Her tired heart ceased to beat while wrapped in peaceful slumber—a beautiful ending for a life so beautifully spent. "With pitying eyes" Jesus beheld his aged follower and gently freed the captive spirit from its house of clay. We sympathize with the stricken ones, and pray our Father to comfort them in their bereavement. Help us all, O God, to have our hearts ready when the shadowy river rolls by, and land us safe in the harbor of heaven, we pray Thee in Jesus' name.

EMMA BELL MCQUIDDY.

Died December 24, 1883, Sister Ann Helms, leaving a husband and eight children to mourn their loss of wife and mother. She obeyed the gospel of Christ in the fall of 1881, and strove to live the Christian life from then to the time of her death, thus leaving those who still live, the hope of eternal life for her. Let them serve the Lord faithfully while they live, that they may meet her in a better world.

J. HELMS.

Valhermosa Springs, Ala.

I am called upon to announce through the ADVOCATE, the death of sister Hattie F. Cowden, daughter of sister Emily Hart, and sister of Bro. B. F. Hart. She was born August 23rd, 1846, became a Christian in 1866, under the preaching of elder Thomas Barrett, of Texas, while on a visit to Tenn. For near twenty years, she lived a devoted member of the church, and was identified with the Cane Creek congregation in Marshall county, Tenn. She loved the Lord, loved his cause, and was loved by all who knew her. She said in her afflictions, that if she could live her time over, that she would do more than she had done—be more like him who went about doing good. Sister Cowden just wore out in suffering. She stood up under the heavy hand of affliction longer than it seems possible for one to endure under such extreme pain as she was called upon to bear. For two long years, she patiently bore her trouble caused by a large tumor upon her left side. No human skill was found to give any real relief, only as lulled by Morphine. O the number of times she prayed to be released by death; at last it claimed its victim November 12th, 1883, and she rests in the arms of him who suffered that she might live.

O sometimes the shadows are deep,
And rough seems the path to the goal;
And sorrows, how often they sweep,
Like tempest down upon the soul.

O sometimes how long seems the day,
And sometimes how heavy the feet;
But tolling in life's shadowy way,
The Rock, blessed shadow how sweet.

While the water, through which her sorrowing relatives, husband and friends are called upon to pass, is deep, we sorrow not even as those who have no hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. So then, may her dear husband, mother, brother, sisters and brethren in the Lord, labor to meet those who are not lost, but gone before, and may her dear child be raised to fear God, and learn to honor him who loved little children. Farewell, dear sister, till Jesus comes.

Petersburg, Tenn., January 14, 1884.

Unless a man can count himself the master of the universe, he must be under some authority. The choice for us, therefore, is between masters; not between service and supremacy. Who could be better as our master, than He who is the Supreme Master?

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

FIRST CORINTHIANS, FIFTEENTH CHAPTER.

NUMBER I.

All true Christians esteem it a high privilege, when, in the providence of God, they are enabled to come to the assembly of his people there, to participate in the worship of the true and living God, affording them, as it does, a purer and higher order of enjoyment, than any worldly pleasure. No praise more delightful, than the praise of God; no promises more precious, than the promises of Christ; no feast more to be enjoyed, than communion of saints; no music so sweet as the songs of Zion—no society so refining and elevating as the company of the redeemed, and no hope so inspiring as the hope of the Gospel.

When we consider these exalted favors, we are naturally led to inquire from whence do they arise? What have been the means by which we have been raised up, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ? By what power have our feet been taken from the "mire clay," and, as we trust, firmly planted upon the rock of ages? The answer to one of these questions, is the answer to all. Paul shows in that inimitable chapter of Holy Writ, that it is by what he styles, "the Gospel," that all these spiritual blessings are enjoyed. He deemed it important in writing this Corinthian letter to include in its contents a mention of the gospel's glorious facts, which he had preached to them, which they had received, wherein they stood, and by which they were saved, and which he would have them keep in memory. No Christian can esteem that a matter of minor importance, which affords the only means of salvation here, and forms the only basis of eternal felicity in the world to come.

To the unconverted also, this is a theme of the highest import, as the gospel is God's power to save, and it was the design of its benevolent founder that to this end it should be preached to all the world, and to every creature. Salvation is as much to be desired now as at any time in the history of humanity, the soul just as precious. Without Christ we are poor and miserable, and blind and naked, though we might own all the wealth of this continent. Salvation brings pardon and peace—makes God our father and Jesus our brother—constitutes us heirs of that inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled—gives us a treasure in the heavens that faileth not. To this transcendent and inspiring theme, kind reader, whether you are a Christian or not, your attention is most respectfully invited.

To preach the Gospel is a most important matter, for several reasons. There is a great responsibility resting upon the minister of the gospel, not to say that he must rack his brain to originate the gospel or any part thereof; but he is required to faithfully proclaim the gospel, "according to the Scriptures." There is a certain system of salvation, plain and easy of apprehension, once preached by the apostles of Christ, and now on record in the New Testament, concerning which Paul said, "Though we (apostles) or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

To this they were restricted, and though, as Paul intimates, he could have come to the Corinthians with excellency of speech and wisdom, he determined to know nothing among them but "Christ and him crucified." This only could save, this only was he authorized, by Christ to preach.

To pervert or change this gospel, was to preach another gospel. To declare a part only of the gospel, was to keep back the counsel of God; in either case, subject to the preacher to the anathemas of deity.

There is also a responsibility upon those who hear. "Take heed what you hear," and "take heed how you hear," are both divine injunctions. The people should hear nothing with approbation, but what is of divine authority, and it is incumbent upon them to heed the word when presented as God has given it. While those who hear have a God given right to demand of the preacher, that he preach to them the word of God fully and faithfully, he in turn is commanded to reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine; all under the guidance of the gospel. Nothing is more plain than that the authority of God's word is above all, preachers and hearers. To it all must bow. When this great and important truth is supreme, realized in the hearts of preachers, and hearers, much prejudice is allayed, and the way at once paved, for a dignified presentation of the gospel, and a serious consideration by those who hear of its life-giving truths. It is not enough to know the truth, but to receive it in the love of the truth, and to honor the same as of supreme authority, is the condition of heart and mind to which all must come to be benefitted by the gospel of Christ.

G. LIPSCOMB.

I think Bro. Barns' suggestions very timely, and say to him, if you choose, that I am ready to do what I can to promote the end in view, and if the brotherhood of Alabama were alien to their duty, and had at heart the advancement of the Master's cause, and the salvation of perishing mortals sufficient to prompt them to shell out the sterling dimes, and come to the rescue as one man, every hill and dale, every city, town and hamlet in the State, would reverberate with the sound of the gospel of peace, ere long, and why should we not do this? Are people ever too poor to serve the Lord, and do his commandments? If so, they will be too poor to enter the city of foundations; for only those who do his commandments, shall have a right to enter through the gates into the city. I wish we all could fully appreciate the indispensable importance of doing the whole will of God; have no non-essentials in theory or practice; and if we, as a people, are as correct in theory as we believe we are, and yet the most denlict people in the world in practice, will we not be "counted worthy of sorer punishment," than those who do not recognize "the gospel as the power of God unto the salvation of men." Surely none will regret having done too many charitable deeds or made too many sacrifices, when his little barque is launched upon the boundless ocean of eternity. I would have written to Bro. B, but I have lost his address. Yours as ever,

W. B. WALLACE.

LIFE AT HOME.

For all of us our life at home must constitute a great part of that life which, by patient continuance in well doing, we have to seek for glory, honor, and immortality; for many of us it practically constitutes the whole. There are millions of women, millions of girls, to say nothing of little children, who have no life worth speaking of beyond the boundaries of the family. Whatever fidelity to God, whatever love for Christ, whatever justice, whatever kindness, generosity and gentleness they are to illustrate in their spirit and condition must be illustrated there. And even men who have their business and their profession to follow during the greater part of the day find occasion in their home-life for forms of well doing and ill-doing that are not possible elsewhere. I like a broad and rich life for myself—full of varied interests; and I should like to see the lives of most men, and most women too, animated by the inspiration and refreshed by the free of activities and interests outside their own home. But no shining achievements elsewhere can palliate the guilt of coldness, injustice, ill-temper in the family, and the noblest public virtues have their roots in the gentleness, the industry, the self sacrifice, and the truthfulness of which only those who are nearest to us have any knowledge—R. W. Dale, in Illustrated Weekly.

"There is one thing about babies," says a late traveler, "they never change. We have girls of the period, men of the world, but the baby is the same self-possessed, fearless, laughing, voracious little heathen in all ages and all countries."

Much has been said and written of late concerning the pastoral qualities needed in the work of a pastor. There is one of supreme importance, namely: spirituality. Start at this point in your New Year self examination.

Our Savior distinctly taught that he would count himself as represented in the least of his disciples, and that those who loved him ought to recognize this representative character in their Christian brethren.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

BAPTIST SUCCESSION.

Our brethren of the Baptist church, in many localities, depend largely upon their succession doctrine, for their influence with people. This is notably the case in south-west Kentucky. In that region the advocates of the order have loudly and as persistently published that an unbroken line of Baptist churches can be traced back to the days of Jesus and of John, and many of the people knowing but little of church history, believe it. The teachers themselves, I am informed, depend for their information concerning the matter upon Ray's "Baptist Succession." Any one who has read Ray's "Text Book on Campbellism," and has noticed his quotations (?) from Mr. Campell, can testify that he is not the most accurate historian in the world. Indeed in reading his writings, unless I have other means of knowing, I am never sure whether what I read is fact, fancy or fiction.

Now concerning this doctrine of succession I have two positions to maintain in this article. The first is, that if this doctrine of succession were true, it would in no wise give the Baptist an advantage over us of the reformation; and the second is, that it is not true.

In maintaining the first position, viz., that the Baptists have no advantage over us even if they can trace the succession for which they contend, I desire to call attention to the fact that Alexander Campbell and the other leaders in this reformatory movement were never excluded from the Baptist church. The congregation of which Campbell was a member agreed that his teachings were but the teachings of the word of God and therefore adopted them; the association with which this congregation was connected for the same reason embraced his doctrine and came into the movement. Now as Campbell's church and association were in hearty accord with him; as they only dropped their Baptist peculiarities in entering upon the new movement, the only questions are, were those peculiarities divine? Did Campbell and his co workers unchristianize themselves in the changes which they made? They dropped the name Baptist. Well, the Baptist themselves do not claim that the name is divine, or that the first Christians wore it. Nearly all the churches through which they strive to trace their "unbroken line" wore other names, knowing nothing of this. Surely the reformers did not forfeit their right to a place in the line by dropping the human name and turning to the divine ones.

They gave up their associations. The apostles and first Christians had none; many of the churches through which they claim to trace their line had none; therefore in making this change we lost nothing. They gave up their church covenants the Bible alone as the expression of their faith and the rule for their practice; did these churches cease to be churches of God by this change? They gave up the mourner's bench plan of "getting people through;" the custom of asking people if they believed that God had for Christ's sake pardoned their sins, and of requiring an affirmative answer as a condition precedent to baptism; and they taught that the religious teacher should ever be ready to read from the Bible an answer to every question pertaining to duty, that the inquirers might know that they were following God rather than man. So, after all, the question between us and the Baptists is a question of doctrine. Were they to establish a succession they would benefit us as much as themselves, unless they could show in the division we adopted doctrines and practices that unchurched us.

But now to the second question: Is there any such successions as they claim? On this point I want to introduce three witnesses. Better ones, let me assure the reader, cannot be found on this question in America. They are Baptists professors of Church History in leading theological seminaries. To study and teach church history is their business; and they rank as high in this department, I presume as any Baptists in the world. Bro. Higbee, through the kindness of Prof. Lincoln, obtained their names and furnished them to me. I then wrote them the following letter, and obtained the answers subjoined.

MADISON STA., Madison, Co., Ala., Jan. 15, 1884.

Prof. —: Dear brother I have recently been studying Elder Ray's "Baptist Succession." I write to ask you whether or not you have concluded from your knowledge of Church History that this theory, (viz., that the Baptist Church, having all of its essential marks and characteristics, can be traced back in an unbroken line to the days of Jesus and of John) is true? As I am soon to engage in a public discussion that may involve the question, I write to you, knowing your superior facilities for arriving at a correct judgment in the matter. Most truly your brother in the one hope,

J. A. HARDING.

To this Prof. Heman Lincoln, Newton Theological Seminary, Newton Centre, Mass., replied:

My dear brother: Your letter of inquiry has just reached me. In reply, I might simply say, that any one who holds to Bro. Ray's "Baptist Succession" must be content to walk by faith and not by sight. One may sooner hope to invent perpetual motion, or to discover the process of turning the common metals into gold, than to find a line of Baptist churches stretching from the apostolic age to our own time. There are records of occasional outbreaks of spiritual reform, as with the Novatians, the Montanists and Donatists, in the early centuries; but it is doubtful if their churches would have been received into the fellowship of any Baptist Association to-day. There are later reforms, like the Albigensian and Waldensian movements, and among them were some no doubt holding to substantially Baptist views, but it is difficult to find the organized churches professing such views. Even when we come to the Anabaptists of Switzerland and Germany, we find them differing widely from us in some doctrinal views, and often in polity also.

I should advise all Baptists to hold fast to apostolic authority, and give themselves little concern in tracing the descent through the Church of Rome, or any of the various sects diverging from it. We are safe in adhering to ultimate authority—we are launched on a sea of conjecture, when we attempt to find an organic connection with the past. After many years of study, I have never been able to find it, nor anything approaching to it. I am yours fraternally,

Newton Centre, Jan. 17, '84. HEMAN LINCOLN.

Prof. B. O. True, Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y., replied:

Mr. J. A. Harding—Dear Sir and Brother: In answer to your query, concerning the correctness of Mr. Ray's view, I will say that if the "unbroken line" means organized churches, as I believe Mr. Ray intimates, I do not think we can from history show that throughout the Middle Ages there were such churches as we now understand by the term Baptist Churches. This is the weak point, from a strictly historical view in the claim of some who think of an external church organization, as necessary to the true perpetuity and succession of Baptist principles. But it is certain that there have been spiritually minded persons (some within the Roman Church in Mediaeval times) who have protested against infant baptism and have exalted a personal experience of Christian truth. Unite this fact with the very general practice of immersion (except in localities and for the infirm, weak or sick) for one thousand years and I do not think the inability to find regularly organized Baptist churches in every century disproves the existence of devout persons, since the days of Christ, who have held substantially our principles concerning both the act and subjects of baptism. For the history of immersion and deviations therefrom throughout the Christian centuries the book of Mr. Burrage "The Act of Baptism," Am. Bapt. Pub. Soc'y, gives a scholarly and authentic account.

Sincerely yours,

BENJ. O. TRUE.

Rochester, N. Y. Jan. 19, 1884.

Prof. Eri B. Hulbert, Baptist Union Theological Seminary, Morgan Park (near Chicago) Ill. replied:

J. A. Harding—Dear Sir and Brother: I have not read Elder Ray's book, but if you state his position correctly, I think he is in error. The parties that broke away from Rome from time to time, were nearer the New Testament order than the so-called Catholic party, but the separatists themselves were not free from grave errors, and would not, in my judgment, be fellowshiped to-day in Baptist churches. Take, for instance, the Donatists. Dr. Benedict has written a small volume setting forth that in denominational character the ancient Donatists and Modern Baptists were and are essentially alike. But I think Prof. Lincoln of Newton, in a review of Benedict in the Baptist Quarterly Review, Vol. II.—published by J. R. Baumes, Cincinnati, Ohio, has shown conclusively that the Donatists, with all their excellences held some very grave errors, which would certainly bar them out of Baptist communion. I believe that Baptist principles can be traced in every age of churches but that the Baptist church cannot be traced. It takes something more than immersion and separation of Church and State to constitute a Baptist church. I do not feel that Baptist succession is needful to our integrity or usefulness. I think something is lost by attempting to bolster up a cause which cannot be maintained in calm regard to historic truth. It is not wise to force history to our way of thinking. It is better to modify our view, if history will not bear it out.

My dear brother, at this point it occurs to me that you might not be a Baptist minister (a doubt which remains because I fail to find your name in the *Year Book. And that in this letter may be giving comfort to the enemy. At any rate I sincerely hope that in the debate that is about to take place the truth may triumph.

A church that is made after the New Testament pattern is a BAPTIST church, whether it can trace a succession or not. If there was not a Baptist or a Baptist church in the world to-day, to-morrow one could be made by sincere disciples banding together in the manner and spirit prescribed in the New Testament. Very cordially yours,

E. B. HULBERT.

Morgan Park, Ill., Jan. 19, 1884.

Thus testify these Baptist Historians. If any body on earth could find "Baptist Succession," these men, being teachers of church history in Baptist Theological Seminaries, would be the men to do it. They have failed because it cannot be none.

*I am not sure I have the right word in this place.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

F. P. Tankersley, of Verona, Tenn., and Leonard Daugherty, of Elizabethtown, Ky., have been teaching vocal music in our school the present term. Bro. Tankersley is expected to be my companion during next vacation; and Bro. Daugherty to teach music here during all of next session. Bro. Tankersley is one the very best of the "Mars Hill Boys." Bro. Metcalfe "Uncle Minor"—a good judge of men and things, says, "Bro. Daugherty can sing better than Sankey." Congregations desiring to secure the services of either of these estimable brethren, as "SINGING TEACHER," any time before June 1, 1884, may address F. P. Tankersley, Verona, Tenn., or Leonard Daugherty, Florence, Ala., Box "E."—[T. B. Larimore, Florence, Ala. January 26, 1884.]

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Married, by N. R. Dale, on December 26th, 1883, M. J. Davis, of Russellville, Ky., to Miss Tillie Burgher, of Logan county, Ky.

Married by N. R. Dale, in Clarksville, Tenn., on December 24th, 1883, R. T. Hall to Miss Susie D. Tinsley, all of Christian county, Ky.

Married, on January 23rd, 1884, by N. R. Dale, at the residence of the bride's parents in Montgomery county, Mr. J. W. Pardue, of Clarksville, to Miss Lillian B. Hollins.

Bro. S. G. Blackerly, writes Bro. J. Harding, continued the meeting at Sulphur, Ky., from the 9th to the 30th of January, with three additions to the Church, and the Church put into good working order.

The continuation of Bro. Lauderdale's article "Swear Not at All," was unintentionally crowded out this week. We hope our readers will keep the article last week fresh in their mind, and we will give the conclusion next week.

Married, January 23rd, at the residence of the bride's father, near Petersburg, Tenn., Mr. T. F. Dixon to Miss Anna Prosser. B. F. Hart officiating. The new couple are both members of the church of Christ, and have our best wishes.

Last week a fifteen-year-old son of Bro. Thos. H. Bond, Frankland, Tenn., went out rabbit hunting with a number of his comrades. He, with gun in hand, slipped off an icy log; the gun was discharged, killing him instantly. The bereaved family has our heartfelt sympathy.

Bro. E. A. Land, of Perry county, was in the city the past week. We rejoice to note him in improved health. He is one of the truest men to the Bible we know. He of course is useful in his work. He reports the cause of truth on the increase in Perry and adjoining counties.

Married, at the Christian church, in Sparta, January 24th, by elder J. M. Kidwill, Mr. A. E. Rhea to Miss Dora Hill. Both yielded themselves servants to righteousness in the days of their youth. May they prove faithful to their vows, and have a happy and prosperous voyage over the sea of time.

The law of Moses exempted a man from going to war the first year after his marriage. We hope our young preachers who are marrying so rapidly this winter, will not claim under this law exemption from service in the war in which they are engaged. In this war there is no discharge, neither exemption or furlough from service.

Please state that I desire all mail matter (GOSPEL ADVOCATE included), addressed to me at Texarkana, Ark., instead of Okolona. I give half my time to the mission here, and the remainder to evangelizing in destitute places, under the auspices of the elders who for sake of convenience are called Mission Board.—[J. C. Mason.]

We trust our friends, now that the cold weather has gone, will not become so absorbed with business on the approach of spring as to forget to see those brethren and friends who ought to take the ADVOCATE, and finish up the lists. We have averaged over thirty subscribers a day during January. If this rate of increase keeps up during February we will make some improvements.

Bro. W. J. Higdon, of Tyler, Texas, says he has fourteen volumes of the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, except about four numbers of volume nineteen, that he desires to sell them, and if successful, will give the proceeds to the Christian Sower Tract Fund. Will you be so kind as to give this card a place in your paper. Any one who wishes to purchase, can apply to him for terms. The Fund is much in need of money, and will be much pleased at the sale and donation. Are there not others who will do as much? There are many good books that will never be read by the owners, that might be turned into money and made to do double duty.—[J. W. Higbee, Madisonville, Ky., January 30, 1884.]

CAUSE FOR ALARM.

A young man carelessly formed the habit of taking a glass of liquor every morning before breakfast.

An older friend advised him to quit before the habit grew too strong.

"Oh, there's no danger; it is a mere notion. I can quit any time," replied the drinker.

"Suppose you try it to-morrow morning," suggested the friend.

"Very well; to please you I'll do so. But I assure you there is no cause for alarm."

A week later the young man met his friend again.

"You are not looking well," observed the latter; "have you been ill?"

"Hardly," replied the other. "But am trying to escape a dreadful danger, and I fear that I shall be, before I have conquered. My eyes were opened to an imminent peril when I gave you that promise a week ago. I thank you for your timely suggestion."

"How did it affect you," inquired the friend.

"The first trial utterly deprived me of appetite for food. I could eat no breakfast and was nervous and trembling all day. I was alarmed when I realized how insidiously the habit had fastened on me, and resolved to turn square about and never touch another drop. The squaring off has pulled me down severely, but I am gaining and I mean to keep the upper hand after this. Strong drink will never catch me in his net again."

Go Home, Boys.—Boys, don't hang around the corner of the streets. If you have anything to do, do it promptly, right off, then go home. Home is the place for boys. About the street corners and at the stables they learn to talk slang, and they learn to swear, to smoke tobacco, and to do many other things which they ought not to do. Do your business and then go home. If your business is play, play and make a business of it. I like to see boys play good, earnest, healthy games. If I was the town I would give the boys a good, spacious play-ground. It should have plenty of soft, green grass, and trees, and fountains, and broad places to run, jump, and to play suitable games. I would make it as pleasant, as lovely as it could be, and I would give it to the boys to play in, and when the play was ended I would tell them to go home.

Deeds are the best things to judge character by, or the worst, according as their relation to the whole life, is seen or is overlooked. There could be no greater mistake than to think that the same deed has the same moral by whomsoever it is done. What in one person and in one set of circumstances would be criminal, with another person and in another set of circumstances might be a shining virtue. There is no safe rule-of-thumb method for estimating character; and we should not so much ask what a man's deeds are, as to ask what his deeds mean. There are great deeds which become small when tried by this standard: but there are also little acts which men not care to notice, over which the angels sing in heaven.

Nothing impairs authority more than a too frequent or more indiscreet use of it. If thunder itself was to be continued, it would incite no more fear than the noise of a mill.

The temperate are the most truly luxurious. By abstaining from most things, it is surprising how many things we enjoy.—Simms.

Whilst just government protects all in their religious rites, true religion affords government its surest support.—Washington.

Our Reform City Government does not work smoothly. The City Council elected the Board of Three to manage, and fixed their salary at $4,000 each. The principles on which it was announced they should conduct the affairs of the corporation, were such as govern business men in their private affairs, that the corporation should pay no more for work than business men paid for similar work. The Board of Three acting on this, reduced the price of the street force from $1.37½ to $1 per day. ## WHY NICK CONFESSED.

A NEW YEAR'S STORY.

Poor little fellow! He didn't look much as the other children did, that Saturday afternoon, when they were all playing together. The family to which he—Nick Jackson—belonged, had recently moved into the neighborhood, and but little was known of them except that they appeared like very respectable people, and as the mother took music lessons and spent a great deal of time on Kensington and fancy work, it was not probably for want of money that Nick's overcoat showed sundry little bursts, and the binding was ripped off here and there; his cap also wanted a stitch or two, and mittens he had none.

It was altogether a neglected-looking little boy, rather than a poor one, on whom the kind, motherly eyes of Mrs. Harper rested, as she stood watching from her window the group of merry children at play, and also with quick womanly instinct, she divined the fact that the boy felt the difference in his appearance from the rest.

Her own little daughter, Bessie, in neat ulster and felt hat, with bright mittens and leggins, was the picture of comfort and neatness. Mrs. Harper had heard Bessie say that Nick was one of the nicest little boys that ever was; "only," she added, "he never seems to think the others want him to play, but we do, we all like Nick, and he will do anything in the world for us; why, he's a splendid little boy!"

But something in the look and manner of the little fellow all at once engrossed the mother's attention.

Peeping out of each pocket of the ulster was a bit of something white, which showed that thoughtless Bessie had clutched a fresh handkerchief from her little box, forgetful of the fact that she was already provided with one. Doubtless, all the other children had one of the useful little articles at hand, but as they dodged about, first one way, then another, Mrs. Harper from behind the blind where she sat watching, noticed that Nick kept pushing playfully between Bessie and little Jennie Hill, and suddenly with a sidelong movement, he jerked one of the handkerchiefs from the ulster pocket, availed himself of its use, then deliberately placed it in his own coat pocket.

It was all so quickly done, that not one of the other children were aware of the trick, but it filled the mother's heart with regret.

"Poor child!" she sighed, "now what must I do? To let Bessie play with a little thief is impracticable surely, and ought I not to tell Mrs. Hill?"

She sat lost in thought for several moments, then arose with a gratified look, as though she had planned it all out to her satisfaction. Presently Bessie ran in for an apple.

"Bessie," she said, "where is your other handkerchief? You had one in each pocket, I noticed, when your were playing."

"Oh dear! I've lost it."

"Well, ask the other children if they have seen it; will you remember?"

"Yes, mamma."

When Bessie came in to supper her mother questioned her again about her loss.

"None of the children had seen it, mamma."

"What did Jennie Hill say?"

"Said she hadn't seen either my ole nosegays," returned Bessie.

"And what did Nick Jackson say?"

"Asked me if I was sure I had two, and I said yes, and he said he was awful sorry I lost it."

A bit of advice as to the importance of being more careful in the future was all that followed then. When in her room alone, Mrs. Harper said to herself, with a sad smile,—"Unless I am very much mistaken, I'll make that child tell me the whole truth himself yet, without any questions either. He has a good little face; pity he is so neglected."

It was the day before New Year's, and Bessie was out playing with Jennie Hill, when Mrs. Harper went to the door in quest of the little girls, as she wanted an errand done; but no little girls were in sight. Just then Nick Jackson appeared.

"Have you seen Bessie, Nick?" inquired Mrs. Harper. "I want her to run on an errand for me."

"No, ma'am, I haven't" but please let me go for you," added the obliging child. "I'll run to the store and back in a jiffy."

Mrs. Harper gratefully accepted his offer, and as he returned with the errand nicely done, she said cheerily,—

"Come and wish me 'A Happy New Year' tomorrow morning, Nick, that's a good boy."

"Yes'm," responded Nick.

When he came creeping half shyly around the back-yard next morning, Mrs. Harper went to the door, and holding out a neat little package, said heartily,—

"Good-morning, Nick. Here's a little New Year's gift for you; this, you know, is the first day of a new year, a time to be happy and a time to try and be good."

Nick went home, ran to his own room, and hastily removing the wrapper, found three pretty, nice handkerchiefs, with his name neatly marked in one corner of each.

The box which has been stocked for Bessie's delectation had been despoiled of all its attractive belongings, the ample New Year's dinner was over, and Bessie and papa were enjoying a nap. Mrs. Harper was just contemplating lying down herself, when she paused upon hearing some child in conversation with the cook.

"Yes, she's here," said cook, putting her head into the dining-room, and the same moment Nick Jackson entered, his eyes swollen with weeping; and his whole manner so woe-begone, that kind-hearted Mrs. Harper was all sympathy at once.

"Why, Nick, little boy, what is the matter?" she asked pityingly; and, as if he was about to face the one great conflict of his life, he began in a quivering little voice:

"You see, Miss Harper, I never meant to be wicked in all my life, no I didn't, but here 'tis,"—and he held up Bessie's little soiled handkerchief,—"here 'tis, Miss Harper. I s'pose I stole it, but I was so shamed! all the other fellows had one but me, and all the little girls too, but I hadn't. I'd a-asked ma for one, but she was 'broaderin' and says I mustn't bother her. I meant to give it back anyway, but when you so kindly gave me those three beautiful ones,—Oh, if I only hadn't!"

Poor Nick had been steadily losing voice all along, but here he broke into such a great sob that Mrs. Harper cried too, and drawing the little penite up to her, she talked to him in a manner he never forgot, and when she advised him to tell his mother all about it, he said he would, and he did; and it was evident that it awoke in her dormant conscience a more lively sense of her little boy's needs, for he was less neglected-looking from that time forth; and a more honest, truthful child than Nick Jackson could not be found. But to this day neither papa nor Bessie knows that the little lost handkerchief was ever found.—Harriet A. Cheever in Watchman.

Good men have tried the Bible; in youth and in old age; in sickness and in health; in business and at home; in life and death. Lawyers have tried it; statesmen have tried it; society has tried it in its charities, its education, and its laws; but it is not worn out; it is not affected; it is ever young and never old; it is the Lord's Book; we need no others; the longer it is tried the more satisfactorily it is proved the Word of the Lord, which abideth forever.—Dr. Hall.

If you think you can trust in Christ's sacrifice for salvation, without obeying his precepts as a rule of sanctification, you are greatly mistaken; trust in Christ will lead you to take the yoke of Christ.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

How many of you have stumped your toes, or mashed your fingers, and cried over it? I remember those days of childhood. Yes! I remember, too, how good I felt when it quit hurting, and how my good mother used to tie up the sores, bruises and cuts in a clean white rag, always putting a little-sugar or camphor on the rag, and then giving me a loving box or kiss, and sending me away laughing, ready for another romp. Yes! no doubt many of you have gone through the same experience. Some children are much more quiet and careful than others, and hence do not get hurt so often; but there are many romping boys and girls now who have to learn by experience that fire will burn or a stumped toe will hurt, before they learn to be careful; all the lecturing in the world won't keep them from trying it. But then we boys and girls have a heap of fun, even if we do get hurt occasionally. I remember well, my playmates, my three brothers and two sisters, who were younger than myself. We had our days of prosperity and sunshine, and also our days of adversity and saddened hearts.

As I grow old, I love to look back in the pathway of the past—sacred memories of the loved ones and the home that has long since passed into the hands of strangers. As we sing Payne's "Home Sweet Home," how it brings to our minds our dear old home, the sweetest, dearest spot on earth, and how I remember old grandmother McPherson's little home just up the creek, with its great broad fire-place, with its swinging crane, its kettle swinging over a blazing log fire, in which we children would color our easter eggs; and on the hearth the great biscuit oven with its embered lid. The smoking, buttered rolls, and long rows of pies ranged on the high shelf in the old cubbard, in the corner. And then the barn, the rush we children had for new laid eggs when we heard the hens cackle; the orchard with its rich, yellow fruit, the melon patch. The old spring house, from the lower side of which came rushing forth sparkling water, over great yellow stones. And in this little old spring house was kept the golden butter, and rich sweet-milk, and an occasional watermelon was laid away inside to cool.

Three cheers for these dear old homes and places—those days of real wealth, rich in parents, rich in brothers and sisters, rich in the sweet slumbers of the trundle bed, rich in tops and toys, made by our own hands, of sticks and rock and mud. Boundless wealth of by-gone days. All the stock on Wall Street can't buy the joys of those happy days. But by-and-by, the seen changes; partings come, perhaps, one of our number of playmates is laid away in the quiet old grave yard, then again sorrow comes into our own homes.

UNCLE MINOR.

LITTLE THINGS.

There are no little places; we have grown to feel this more and more of late years. There is too much of this idea that one place is better than another, and that good work done in a poor community is not as important as good work done in a rich one. To be sure one man may be more conspicuous than another, and may achieve more lasting results than another, but we contend that a soul saved in a hut is just as grand a work as a soul saved in a palace. The communities that are the poorest and least civilized are in most need of the gospel. The more ignorant and degraded men are, the more important it is to send them the gospel. As we view it, no man has any choice as to where he shall stand on the wall or where he shall gather in the great harvest field. The men who spend their lives teaching miners, lumbermen, and artisans the way of life should be men of the highest intellectual ability and the largest Christian culture. The man who has the largest sympathies and the purest life is the man to represent Christ among the rough and hardy sons of toil.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

The meanest woman in the United States has been discovered. Somebody a few nights ago left a young infant on her door-step in a basket. She sent the baby to the police-station, but kept the basket to do her marketing with.

The Progress of Disease.

We so unwilling to admit the presence of disease, fall a ready prey to the grim destroyer whose insidious approach, subtle progress and unseen workings, develops such fatal results. Let us be warned in time, lest it be "too late."

Are You Sure It Is Consumption?

Many thousands fully believe they or their friends are being hurried toward the grave by that terrible disease Consumption, and are being treated for that disease, when they have only CATARRH in some of its many types; the symptoms in many forms of these diseases are quite similar and can easily be mistaken. Catarrh, unalarming in its character and beginnings, neglected, develops and spreads, and in time poisons the vital organs, until it finally is no longer "ONLY CATARRH," but some disease that gives but little hope of health or life. We do not claim to cure Consumption, but are fully convinced from the results of our daily practice that we can save and restore to health many who now feel their case to be hopeless.

Danger - Signals.

Do you take cold easily? Have you a cold in the head that does not get better? Have you a hacking cough? Is your throat affected? Are you troubled with hoarseness? Soreness of the throat? Difficulty in breathing? Have you a pain in the head between and above the eyes? A sense of fullness in the head? Are the passages of the nose stopped up? Is your breath foul? Have you lost all sense of smell? Are you troubled by hawking? Spitting? Weak, inflamed eyes? Dullness or dizziness of the head? Dryness or heat of the nose? Is your voice harsh and rough? Have you any difficulty in talking? Have you an excessive secretion of mucus or matter in the nasal passages, which must either be blown through the nose, or drop back behind the palate, or hawked or snuffed backward to the throat? Ringing or roaring or other noise in the ears, more or less impairment of the hearing?

If so, you have Catarrh.

Some have all these symptoms, others have only a part. Some of these symptoms indicate the disease has passed from the head and has attacked the throat and bronchial tubes, and affecting the lungs and other vital organs of the body, and unless the disease is stopped, its ravages will effect and endanger the life. In most cases Catarrh is only a local disease, and requires only local treatment. But in old or neglected cases the whole system becomes poisoned by the disease and the constitutional treatment is necessary to assist in expelling it from the organization.

Some Bad Symptoms.

The long continued corruption of the air that is breathed passing over the foul matter in the nasal passages, poisons the lungs and from thence the blood. The morbid matter that is swallowed during sleep, passes into the stomach, enfeebles the digestion, vitiates the secretions and pollutes the very fountains of life. The patient becomes feverish occasionally, there is less buoyancy of spirits, the appetite is often fickle, the head less clear, it is difficult to keep the old energies up to the old standard, and often without knowing why, he is conscious that he is not as well at the time as he used to be. These symptoms indicate that the vital organs are becoming impaired so that they cannot perform the natural healthy functions. Our constitutional treatment is devised to assist nature in removing all poisonous material from the system and to neutralize and counteract its baneful effects on the vital organs and in the blood.

Do Not Trifle With Disease.

We have the only known certain and reliable method for the cure of Nasal Catarrh, Throat and Lung disease; it is regarded by the best judges as being the most complete treatment ever devised. Indeed there does not appear to be anything lacking in its perfect adoption to these diseases in all their loathsome, painful dangerous developments. Each case is examined into carefully and critically and the whole treatment compounded to meet the wants of each individual. To this fact alone, much of our success is due, and we think no case is incurable when our questions are properly answered. Fifteen years of constant practice with thousands of patients all over the country have enabled us to bring the application of our Remedies to the highest point of perfection. Do not trifle with some cheap so called "Cure" which at least can afford but temporary relief, (while the roots of the evil disease are left to strike deeper and deeper,) but be in earnest and thorough or do nothing! You have been years in contracting the disease; you cannot be rid of it in a day, or with one application of any medicine.

The Experience of Others.

The record is a guarantee that Childs' Treatment for Catarrh and all disease of the Head, Throat and Lungs is not new and untried, but positive and certain remedy. We, above all things, desire to establish confidence in our treatment; so that every sufferer from Catarrh, Bronchitis and their effects on the Lungs and other Vital Organs, may feel certain of success in its use.

Only Fair We deem it only fair that every one who wishes should have the opportunity to ascertain whatever we are able to accomplish all that we claim; and for this purpose we add a few of the many thousands of unsolicited certificates which have been sent us by grateful patients—almost of any of whom will doubtlessly respond to any inquiry by letter, if accompanied by a stamp to pay postage. Having been cured themselves, they will be willing to let the afflicted know where they can find a certain relief. We have thousands of these certificates from all classes—physicians, clergymen, lawyers, judges, merchants, bankers, business men, farmers, young women and old, children and adults.

Mr Z Z LEE of Ganesville, St Helena Par La writes: I cannot speak too highly in praise of your valuable remedies which act like a charm in relieving the loathsome disease for which they are recommended.

I have been permanently cured of Catarrh in the head by the use of your Catarrh Specific. I will answer all letters addressed to me, in regard to this subject.

Yours with thanks,
E FOWELL, Heath, Burke Co, N C.
You may use my name as a reference, as I have been cured by your treatment. I shall be pleased to answer any inquiries in regard to your remedies.

HARRY TRUESDELL, Rock Dale Mills, Mass.
Aug 18, 1882
You are at liberty to use my name as a reference in favor of the healing qualities of your remedy. It has not only cured my wife of Catarrh in the head and throat, but has cured her of dyspepsia.

B S DUNKIN, Carroll, Ind.
Aug 8, 1882
You may use my name, also that of my wife; we have both been cured by your treatment. We recommend your remedies to all we hear saying they have Catarrh. We can do it with pleasure and conscientiously, for we know of what we speak.

L W SPAYD, Colorado Springs, Col.
I was thought to have had consumption, and had suffered many years with what was really Catarrh, before I procured your treatment. I have had no return of the disease.

MRS LOUISE JAMES, Crab Orchard, Ky.
When I received your treatment I could hardly move about, but before I used it six weeks I could work all the time, and have been attending to my business ever since.

I shall always recommend your treatment in the highest terms. Yours respectfully, IRVING C GLEASON, Mobley's Pond, Ga.

I received your medicine and used as directed, and I now rejoice in saying I am well.

JOS A MARTIN, Galley Bridge, Fayette Co, W Va.
Your medicines were duly received, and effected a perfect cure. Thanks for your prompt attention, and for the thorough cure of my husband.

Respectfully,
MRS A L FORELAND, Centerville, Texas.
I was terribly afflicted with nasal and bronchial Catarrh, and concluded to give your treatment a test. In a short time it cured me. I induced my brother to try it, and he too was cured.

Respectfully,
E C JONES, Rock River Falls, Wis.
Being one of your cured patients, I recommended your treatment to all I find troubled with Catarrh.

Respectfully,
MRS JOHN SULLIVAN,
183 Dorman St, Indianapolis, Ind.

I write to tell you that I am perfectly cured of Catarrh.

I would not take a farm for your Specific if it could not be replaced.

J P ROBERTS, Chicago, Ill.
Your treatment has cured my daughter of Catarrh induced by a severe attack of measles.

JOHN W RILEY, U S Express Agent, Troy, O.
My health is full restored. The horrid and loathsome disease if all gone. My lungs feel all right.

MRS W D LINCOLN, York, Neb.
Your treatment did me great good. I have not lost a day by sickness this year.

ABNER GRAHAM, Middlebury, Vt.
I am glad to say that I found your medicines all that can be desired for it. I am fully restored.

J H SINGFRIED, Pottsville, Pa.
I do not regret the money it costs in using your medicine. I can heartily recommend your treatment.

E J LIPPINCOTT, Clarkesboro, Gloucester, Co, N J.
I have used your Catarrh treatment and am cured. A thousand thanks to you for so sure a remedy.

FANNIE DEMENT, Dyer, Station Tenn.
I am much pleased to say that I have used the treatment faithfully with the happiest and best results.

JOHN A PRATT, Goffs Falls, N J.
Your treatment cured me: your inhalers are excellent. This is the only radical cure I have ever found.

E S MARTIN,
Pastor M E Church, Port Carbon, Pa.

No amount of money could induce me to be placed in the misery I was when I commenced using your treatment.

J C MCINTIER, Fulton, Mo.
I am so far recovered that I am able to attend church, can walk half a mile. Have good appetite, and gaining all the time.

MRS A N MUNGAR, Detroit, Mich.
Now I am cured: head free; air passage all open and breathing natural. A thousand thanks to you for so sure a remedy.

JUDG J COLLETT, Lima, Ohio.
Your Cold Air Inhaling Balm has proved a great benefit to Mrs Marble as well as myself. I can heartily recommend it to others.

E MARBLE, Concord, Mich.
It affords me great pleasure to notify you that I have, as I sincerely believe, entirely recovered from that loathsome disease, catarrh, through your very beneficial treatment.

B BENEDICT, Baltimore, Md.
I received your Catarrh Specific some time ago, and used as directed. It acted like a charm. It cured my cough and stopped that wheezing I had in my throat.

JAMES W SANDERS,
Five Mile, Mason Co, W Va.
I am cured, another formidable case at last yielded to your treatment.

W B ROSE, Bryan, Texas.
I am now entirely cured. When I had used it three months I felt like a different woman. Too much cannot be said in favor of your Catarrh treatment. It has saved my life.

Mrs E G MITCHELL, Fairbury, Ill.
Mrs Mitchell lives near me and has used your treatment with perfect success, and is now well and hearty. This I am witness to.

JOHN G STEERS, Fairbury, Ill.
Mr J C WILMOTH of Oxford, Ind writes: You can say to who ever you like, that your Catarrh medicine has done me wonders; it has driven the disease out of my system.

My wife continues in the best of health, and has no cough. It is with great pleasure we are able to recommend so wonderful a medicine as yours has proved to us.

J H BULLARD, Springfield, Mass.
About one year ago I ordered your Bronchial treatment for my father. The benefits to him have been magical, and far beyond our most sanguine expectations, as this has been the only winter for several years that he has not passed most of the time in bed, all the time in the house.

Very truly,
C S SHERWOOD, Portsmouth, Va.
Between nine and ten years ago, being afflicted with Catarrh, I obtained your course of treatment, and after persisting in its use some months, was completely cured, and have had no return of the disease.

A J STILL, Pattenburg, N J.
More than a year ago I used your Catarrh remedies, with almost untold benefit to myself. I prize your remedies more than I can tell you.

MRS E P HOOKER, DeLancey, O.
One of the terriblest cases of Catarrh we have had in our practice, was that of W S Sandle of Willis Montgomery Co, Tex. He says: "In the spring of 1877 the disease assumed a new form, my mouth and throat were attacked, ulcers were formed, and soon the ulcers were all eaten away, and large sores through the posterior nares. My condition was not only deplorable, but apparently hopeless." After three months use of our treatment, he says: "I am entirely cured, all the horrible disease entirely removed."

This is to certify that I was a sufferer from nasal Catarrh; I tried remedies of several physicians, but instead of getting better I gradually grew worse. I saw your advertisement. I applied to you at once and received your remedies and commenced their use. At first I thought it was a humbug, but I followed your directions and now I can rejoice in saying I am well.

BOBERT DANIEL, Geneva, Ala.
Your wonderful remedy has by close application cured a most stubborn case. You are at liberty to use my name as a reference.

Yours truly,
F R MILLER, Smyrna, Tenn.

Your treatment has proved a complete success in my case; the disease had troubled me for about fifteen years.

Yours truly,
THOS D JONES, Middle Granville, N Y.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

DAVID.

Under the head of Saul and David recently, we considered some facts in the history of King Saul, regarding his disposition to make excuses and apologies for sin. We will now present a few thoughts in regard to David's history. David was a man that feared God from his youth, and was in turn blessed and prospered in a manner that only those are prospered who love and serve the Lord. He was modest and meek in his youth, as those who truly love the Lord, and trust in him, are ever inclined to be. When Samuel was sent by the Lord to anoint one of the sons of Jesse, David, the youngest was a shepherd boy, attending to his father's sheep. Among the many sons of Jesse, Samuel selected Eliab, as the one he supposed the Lord would choose, and would have anointed him, but the Lord said, "Look not on his countenance, or the height of his stature; because I have refused him. For the Lord seeth not as man seeth: for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." 1 Sam. xvi: 7. This is a very significant expression: "The Lord looketh on the heart." Samuel and Jesse tried all the older brothers of David, thinking surely the Lord had selected one of them. They were older, and had probably begun to distinguish themselves among men, while David was but a youth, looking after the sheep, and had not caught the attention of men. But God was observing him, and knew what an humble, honest heart he had, and chose him because of these qualities. There is nothing in man so precious in the eyes of the Lord as an honest and good heart. Jesse had brought ten of his sons before Samuel, and the Lord had refused them every one, and would not allow Samuel to anoint one of them to be king. David was so young, and had done so little for men to look upon that even Jesse had not thought of his being the one the Lord would choose. But God trieth the hearts of men. He loves an humble heart, one that loves and honors him, a heart set on doing the will of God. As soon as Samuel poured the anointing oil upon David, the Spirit of God came upon him, and from that day forward David was an inspired man. It was not long after this that David was sent by his father to see how his three older brothers were doing, that were in Saul's army, and to carry some supplies and presents. And when he arrived, he saw Goliath defying the armies of Israel, and challenging them to send a man to fight with him. He saw, too, that all the men of Israel were afraid of him, and would not go out to fight with him. But when David saw it, his indignation was stirred, and he began to talk about it, so that Saul heard of it and sent for him. When David approached Saul, he said to him, "Let no man's heart fail because of him; thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine." 1 Sam. xvii: 32. And Saul said to David, you are not able to fight against Goliath, for you are but a youth, while he is a warrior from his youth. But David was not afraid, for he placed his confidence in God, and not in human strength. So he replied to Saul as follows: "And David said, thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock; and I went out after him, smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth; and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him. Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear; and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God. David said moreover, the Lord that delivered me out of the paws of the lion, and out of the paws of the bear he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, 'Go, and the Lord be with thee.' So Saul offered David his own armour; but David refused it, and took his sling, and shepherd bag, and went to meet the giant, trusting in God for success. In this the true character of David was manifested. While all others quailed with fear, David was bold, being strengthened by his unflinching faith in God. He could boldly say to the giant, 'You come to me with a sword and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied.' Thus David's heart was perfect before God, and all his trust, his hope for protection and success was in God. Well may Christians emulate the faith that David had on this occasion. But unfortunately, they are too much like Saul and the children of Israel. They have not faith enough in God to do his bidding under the circumstances and trust his blessing. They put too much dependence upon the arm of flesh, and not enough in God.

But David put his confidence in God. He did not say my strong arm, and my trusty sling shall put an end to you, but the God of Israel, whom thou hast defied, will deliver you into my hand.

The man who serves God faithfully, and puts his trust in him, as David did, is always safe. Like Paul, he can say, "If God be for us, who can be against us." So David, through his strong faith in God, took the dread and fear of the army of Israel out of the way by the simple means of his sling and a stone which he picked up out of the brook. Had it not been for David's strong faith in God, he would have been as weak and fearful as other men, and the giant would have continued to defy Israel. As Christians we should have faith enough in our hearts to do the Lord's bidding, and trust him for the consequences. No human being ever manifested a better heart, or stronger faith than David did when he went to meet the giant. His faith is simply sublime. Let us strive to imitate it. And thus David continued to cultivate this sort of humble and trusting heart, till after he had been for sometime established upon the throne of Israel. Then he yielded to temptation in the case of the wife of Uriah, and procured the death of Uriah in battle, and took Bathsheba to be his own wife. This was the great sin of David's life, and on account of it he was told by Nathan the prophet that the sword should never depart from his house. And so it never did. He was harassed and troubled by family difficulties to the day of his death. But when this terrible sin of David was held up before him in all its deformity by Nathan. David did not, like Saul, attempt to excuse it. He humbly, and without any apology, confessed that he had sinned. When Saul sinned he had a multitude of excuses for his sins, trying every time to excuse himself, and place the blame upon others, when he knew the sin was his own. But not so with David. When Nathan had finished picturing out his great sin, and the terrible consequences that should follow, he simply said, in full honesty, "I have sinned." No plaster of apologies, no placing the fault at the door of others, but an honest "I have sinned." Thus he condemned and acknowledged his own sin, as he would have done if the sin had been that of another. He confessed this sin again and again, and besought the Lord to pardon. In the 51st Psalm, it is understood that he was confessing and lamenting over this sin.

He says: "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin; for I acknowledged my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me." This sin was the great burden of his heart. He neither denied it, nor apologized for it, nor in any way tried to justify it. He hated sin, and was ever ready to acknowledge and condemn it, though in himself. How much better if all Christians, would act thus. But many are so anxious to keep their sins from men, they deny and make all sorts of excuses, rather than own up with an honest heart like David. Men feel better every way when, with an humble, honest heart they openly confess their sins, and, like David, pray for pardon. Whenever a Christian sins, and his fellow-men know of it, and yet he denies it, or apologizes for it, and tries to justify himself in it, he is only looked upon with distrust and contempt by men, and regarded as a falsifier and hypocrite in the sight of God. And such a man feels mean and despicable in his own eyes. But a man may persevere in this until he so hardens his heart that he loses all sense of honor and truth, both in the sight of God and men. It is an exceedingly dangerous thing to do. Whenever a Christian man does a wrong that in anywise affects his fellow men, he should at once, and in the fullness of an honest heart, confess it to all affected by it, and, like David, should also go to the Lord at once with it, and through his appointments seek forgiveness from him. And if his sin does not effect, or in any way injure his fellow men, but only between him and God, he should immediately confess it to God and pray to him for pardon. We cannot carry him with us to heaven. Our sins must all be forgiven or we cannot enter that pure and sinless abode, which the Lord has provided for his people. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

Many of the Psalms of David are but earnest confessions and prayers on account of his sins. Christians ought to read these and meditate upon them much. Read the 38th and 51st Psalms, and many others of like import, and their lessons may be worth more than treasures of silver and gold.

When we come to compare the sins of Saul and David, and look at them from a human standpoint, we would be inclined to say David's sin was much greater than Saul's. Yet David was forgiven, while Saul was rejected. Why is this? Evidently because David was an honest and humble man, and confessed his sin. He deeply and sorely repented, and loathed sin, and loathed himself on account of it, and went bowed down and in prayer by day and by night, and walked before God in love and devotion, and approved of the chastisement God had placed upon him, sore and terrible as it was. While his very soul sank within him, and while his very life was almost crushed out of him by the terrible ordeals through which he was made to pass; he justified and praised the Lord, and condemned himself.

There is an example that Christians may well strive to imitate. But it is dangerous and ruinous to follow the example of Saul. He loved sin, and sought to justify it in himself, being willing to continue to sin by trying to justify it, rather than to appear a sinner before men. How often do Christians deny, and thus increase their sins, rather than let men know that they have sinned. And when they do this, though men may not know it, God knows that they have more than doubled their sins in his sight. And when they thus act, they follow the very course that Saul pursued, when he brought degradation and ruin upon himself. We should ever fear to pursue such a course. Although David committed an almost overwhelming sin, the Lord still loved him on account of his honest and humble heart, and recommended his upright course of life to his son Solomon for imitation, except the one sin which we mentioned above. The sins of an honest heart like David's, may be forgiven. But when, like Saul, men are stubborn and selfish, and continue in a sinful course by justifying sin, pardon passes beyond their reach, and ruin is inevitable. E. G. S.

Queries.

In 12th of 2nd Cor., from 1st to 5th verse, who was it that was caught up to heaven.—[Thomas Hamilton, Cherry Creek.

Paul in a vision was caught up to heaven, and saw what he there describes.

Is it right for Christians to stay from church on the Sabbath to entertain company? Is it right to visit on Sunday?—[Granville Gray, Sunny Lane, Butler County.

Is it right to please men or God? An answer to this question, answers that.

Can an elder in the church of God, consistently hold the office of Justice of the Peace?—[J. E. Hobson, Llano county, Texas.

If Christians can vote, hold office, and take part in governmental affairs, it would seem right for an elder to be magistrate. If it is not right, as I believe it is not, it cannot be right for any Christian to hold any office.

The apostle says, 1st Cor. vi: 2, Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? In the 3rd verse of same chapter, he says, Know ye not we shall judge angels? Please explain how, or in what sense, the saints judge the world, and how, or in what sense, the saints judge angels?—[S. F. Halbrook.

We do not have any idea how they will do these things. We accept it as true, because the Bible says it is true. We do not know how it will be done, because the Bible says nothing as to how the saints will judge either the world or the angels.

Is the call spoken of in Rom. ix: 24, the gospel? 1 Cor. iii: 15.—[J. C. Lynn.

The verse in Corinthians, "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. The apostles referring to different teachers, teaching or building on the one foundation, he said some build on that foundation gold, silver, precious stones; others wood, hay, stubble. He says this work shall be tried by fire. If a man's work stands the test, he shall receive a reward. But if he builds in bad material, it will be burned up and he will suffer loss. But while suffering the loss of his labor, he himself will be saved, if he has been trying to serve God in doing his will.

The called in Romans, both Jews and Gentiles, were certainly those called by the gospel. Paul determined to know nothing else as a means of saving the people, but Christ and him crucified.

Please harmonize 1 John iii: 9, with 8th verse of 1st chapter? Also explain Acts xiii: 48? The gospel has only of late found its way into this section of country. But God be thanked, it is making rapid strides now, after a lodgment has once been made. The ADVOCATE is helping on the good work.—[G. O. Hill, Haywood, Ala.

These passages are rather strong meat for a babe to feed on. It is much better to try to learn and practice the easy practical portions of Scriptures, than to bother our heads over these difficult messages, involving nothing very practical, but bearing on the principle on which God acts in doing his part in the salvation of men. The passages in Acts, is, "As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed." We think it means this, all honest hearted people who are willing to hear God, and obey him, are ordained to eternal life, and that class did hear and believe.

The passages are "Whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." We think this means, whosoever is born of God cannot wilfully or purposely sin. The word of God is the seed, and so long as this remains in him, as his rule of life, he cannot intentionally sin. The other verse, reads, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." This we understand to refer not to intentional sin, but to sins of weakness, to which all flesh is subject.

Please explain through the columns of the ADVOCATE, the law of the ten commandments? You say they have been abolished and taken out of the way; I want to know in what sense they have been taken out of the way. Do you not think they are binding on us? Do you not think it wrong to violate any of the ten commandments? Please explain in full and at length.—[Amanda S. Penney, Silver Cliff, Colorado.

The Scriptures plainly declare that the ministration written on stones has been done away. Gal. iii: 7-11. These commandments of the law were taken out of the way, nailed to the cross by the Son of God. The law given prior to the coming of Jesus is not in force now. It was a school-master to bring us to Christ. When Christ was come, then the law was taken out of the way. We are no longer under the school-master. The ten commands, as given by Moses, are taken out of the way as part of this law. The same commands are binding on us now only so far as they are repeated, reenacted by Jesus Christ. They are in force not because commanded in the law by Moses, but because commanded in the gospel of Jesus Christ. To what extent have these laws been re-enacted in the New Testament, or commanded by Christ? The principle embodied in all of them except the law to keep the Sabbath, has been re-enacted by Christ in the New Testament. The same laws in different language. The sabbath was the seventh day, Saturday, under the Christian dispensation, the first day of the week was set apart as the day for public worship of God. We do not doubt, that the example of consecrating one day to the service of God, as set forth in the observance of the Sabbath, indicates that one day should be devoted to that service, but the day is not the same, nor are the rules regulating it, the same.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Brethren L. & S.: I rejoice to announce through the ADVOCATE, that the debt for erecting the house of worship in this place has been paid. As the house was completed, and in it the brethren worshipping, it required a much greater effort to pay a debt of $700.00, than it would have before worshipping in it. But thanks be to a merciful Creator, and thanks to all who so generously aided with their contributions, the debt has been paid. The church owes Bro. R. Lin Cave a great debt of gratitude, especially, for the interest he manifested in liberating them from debt. He not only donated $50.00, the proceeds realized from holding a meeting in Pulaski in conjunction with myself, but also assisted me in holding a meeting of much interest, in Columbia, free of charge.

The brethren of Beech Grove sent Bro. Cave to Pulaski. Thus we see their noble deed accomplished a double mission at once. Will not other brethren imitate their example, remembering that it is a blessed thing to tell the old, old story of the cross to the benighted travelers of earth? 'Tis noble to do so, and noble deeds are steps toward God, lifting our souls to the mellow sunlight of heaven. While the church is not in the financial condition now, that it should be, it is in a much better condition than it has ever been. I trust the brethren will push forward with energy and perseverance, remembering that Rome was not built in a day, that heaven is not reached at a single bound, and that hell itself is filled by indolence and a lack of perseverance. May God bless us all, and guide us in the way of life everlasting. J. C. McQUIDDY.

Brethren L. & S.: Permit me through your columns, to offer a few thoughts upon the subject of prayer. I think this subject has lost its position in the papers, and I want some of our ablest writers to give it prominence, by elucidating its design, effect, province, and every bearing upon Christianity. I think there is no Christianity without prayer. Did not Paul command that first of all, prayers, intercession, and giving of thanks be made for all men? See how prominent he placed it. "Pray without ceasing. Who, while arguing the necessity of immersion, because it is commanded, can conscientiously neglect prayer—cease to pray, having read this command? Yet many of our brethren—laymen—are expert in proving that baptism is for the remission of sins, and that sinners are not commanded to pray. The argument runs thus:

1. The Lord commands sinners to be baptized; if they do not obey, they are condemned.
2. The Lord commands Christians to pray; if they do not obey, they will be lost.

Reader, do you pray? Do send up some odors to the Lord. Have you read Rev. v: 8, and viii: 3-4? Now read Psalm 141-2, and tell me is there not something wonderful and glorious in prayer? Do we not, in prayer, draw near to God? And by ceasing to pray, do we not wander from him? Brethren, what can we, and what can we not effect by prayer. L. A. MORRIS.

York, Ala., January 28th, 1884.

Dear Brother Barnes: You desire the preachers of Alabama to correspond with you in regard to a convention etc. The brethren of Northport are very anxious for a convention to be held with them. And the fourth Lord's day in March the time, and as the church will be completed we desire to dedicate it at that time. Will that suit you? Write directly to me at Gadsden, Ala.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS—Continued.

We give a large space to Bro. Poe's department this week, to get it up even, as hereafter he will arrange it himself.—EDS.

We publish the following, which was suggested to this brother, as he informs us, on reading Bro. D. L.'s reply to Bro. McGary on "Re baptism." We are much pleased with Bro. L.'s reply. "Into Christ," as he clearly shows, is the great point to be obtained first. Baptism, to the penitent believer, is for that very purpose. "In Christ" we reach pardon, are saved. Do these brethren take the position none are "in Christ," save those who understood they were baptized for the remission of sins?

Bro. Poe: God said to Abraham, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

Now, had Abraham said, "Lord, I will enjoy all these blessings right here in my own country, among my own kindred, and in my father's house," would he to-day be the father of the faithful? Would he have enjoyed the promised blessings? Abraham certainly understood that it was only in "a land that I will show thee" that he was to be blessed.

Now, if "in Christ" alone there is "remission of sins,"—if the law of pardon to the alien is faith, repentance, and baptism, how can the penitent believer say before baptism, "I believe God for Christ's sake has forgiven my sins." Suppose he makes or thinks such a confession before baptism, what is it worth? Is it true because he is honest and believes it? Ought not such an one to have "expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly? While "it is not needful to understand the purposes, motives, designs of God in ordering us in a certain walk, to enable us to acceptably obey God," it is needful that we know where to find that "certain walk," that we may walk in it. "Abraham followed God without knowing whither he led." But has the penitent believer who says before baptism that his sins are pardoned, followed God's lead? Does he not reach the good before he gets to the "land that I will show thee"—"in Christ." And whatever "faith in Christ as the Son of God, the Savior of sinners," his confession may imply, is it not a dead faith because it is without works? Should he not show his faith by his works?

R. H. POWELL.

Will Bro. Powell answer the question at head of this article squarely and unequivocally? If so, proof.—ED.

Dear Bro. Poe: Col. J. J. Hickman, of Kentucky, left our Lone Star State this morning for Louisiana. He has created a temperance boom in North Texas, organized a number of lodges, and revived old ones. He presided over the temperance meeting held at Honey Grove, with great ability and satisfaction. We all learned to love him. Many hearts, mellowed by his gentle persuasion, bear him on their prayers to God, and ask that his unselfish labors be blessed with success. Again, may God bless him in his labor for fallen humanity, and give him a place among the redeemed when his battles of life are finished.

I received yesterday morning, from a sister in Louisville, Ky., one dollar for Indian Mission, "Your sister in the Lord." The Lord bless you my sister. "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have shown toward his name." My sister, the Lord bless you.

Gov. B. F. Overton is quite sick at his home in the Chickasaw Nation.

RETROSPECT.

"Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. iii: 13, Revised Version. The year of our Lord, 1883, came and is gone, with its sorrows, joys, trials, triumphs, defeats, victories, failures and successes. During last year I find by my "Field Notes" that I preached about one hundred sermons; that I received into the church of Christ twenty-seven members—twenty-one by baptism, six from the Baptists, three from the Methodists; that I received about one hundred dollars in compensation; that I set in order two congregations. I regret that I did not do more. Much sickness of family and self distressed and hindered me. "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before," I hope to do more this year.

OUR CASKET.

"Be the fair level of thy actions laid."—Prior.

"Providence, for the most, sets us on a level." Spectator.

Bro. H. W. Cooke, of Alamo, has taken to himself a wife.

"The glory of God and the good of his church ought to be the mark at which we level."—Hooker.

The people of Gadsden and vicinity have recently been scourged with small-pox. The report is, that out of thirty-three cases fifteen died.

Died, Bro. Needham Moore, on the 27th of January, 1884. He has been lingering for several months. He has been living for many years five miles north of Gadsden. On the day of the funeral of Bro. Moore, sister John Dunlap, who lived in sight of Bro. Moore, was buried.

I was asked, a few days ago, if I indorse the phrase which I will here place in quotation marks: "Where the Bible speaks, we may speak; and where the Bible is silent, we should be silent." I do heartily indorse the principle contained in the phrase.

Bishop Burnet says: "A preacher is to fancy himself as in the room of the most unlearned man in the whole parish, and must therefore put such parts of his discourses as he would have all understand, in so plain a form of words, that it may not be beyond the comprehension of the meanest of them."

The Bible says: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." There is a difference between training and teaching. We can teach without training, but cannot train without teaching. To teach is to communicate to another the knowledge of that of which he was before ignorant. To train is to exercise, as the training of soldiers to the use of arms and to tactics. "Abram armed his trained servants."

"When men," says Dr. Hodge, (and I may be allowed to add, when women) "pretend to be influenced by the Spirit of God, in doing what God forbids, whether in disturbing the peace and order of the church, by insubordination, violence, abuse, or in any other way, we may be sure that they are either deluded or impostors."

IN MEMORIAM.

I received this morning the sad intelligence of the death of my dear friend and brother—Askew, and cannot let this mournful event pass without in obedience to his dying request, some expression of my sympathy with his bereaved family, and my high appreciation of his noble bearing as a Christian gentleman, and his transcendent ability as a gospel preacher. So reluctant am I to give him up, that I almost feel a disposition, if I could "Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath," but serenely his "silent dust" must repose in its quiet resting place, till the shrill blast of the last trumpet shall startle the slumbering millions, and quicken them into life. With Bro. O. I repeat, "I would not mark the place where the broken casket has fallen, with a monument." This he did in his day, he needs "no monumental pile, no princely dome, no towering pyramid" to perpetuate his name, it is engraved in indelible characters upon the tablets of memory. This sad event brings fresh to my mind many thrilling incidents in our long labors together, "in the kingdom, and patience of Jesus Christ," and these are greatly intensified with the thought that I shall see his face no more, till I too, shall have crossed the river, and stand with him, arrayed in his robe of spotless white, before the "King of kingdoms," at whose presence the affrighted sun will give place. Then indeed will he "sing in nobler sweeter strains, his power to save." Bro. Askew had a faith and trust in the promises of his God, that enabled him to stand unmoved upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone." And over many a battle field he waved in triumph the blood stained banner of the Prince of Peace, and though of feeble frame and small means, would travel from place to place, in winter's cold or summer's heat, to break the bread of life to a perishing world. Sometimes he was admonished to take more care of his health. His reply was, "The servant is not better than his Lord." Thus he toiled on through trials and privations, making full proof of his ministry up almost to the day of his death, and we are happy in the thought that he died as he had lived in the full assurance of faith, having drunk freely, not at the fount of Parnassus, or Helicon, but of the water of the river of life of which Jesus said, "If a man drink, he will never thirst: but it shall be in him, a well of water springing up into everlasting life." I had indulged the fond hope of seeing him once more, in the flesh, to talk of the trials by the way, and take sweet counsel together as of yore: but he has finished his work in triumph. I would not disturb his peaceful slumber, and doubt not if he could speak to us from his angel home, he would say, "Dear brethren, press on; it is not all of life to live, nor of death to die. "I would not live always, I ask not to stay, where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way, the few cloudy mornings that dawn on us here are enough for lifes woes, full enough for its cheer." I trust this affliction may be sanctified to the eternal good of the living. Let us ever imitate his noble example. How humble, patient and self-sacrificing. Bro. O., do you remember at the dear old "Oak" the discourse of our father, made on the great sacrificial atonement? What a halo of glory lighted up his features, as he talked of Gethsemane, Calvary, etc. Suggestive of the inspiration of Isaiah, "when wrapped in wisdom, and his hallowed lips touched with fire." May our departure be like his.

"So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death.
Thou go not as the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach the grave
Like one who draws the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

N. B. WALLACE.

Learn to entwine with your prayers the small cares, the trifling sorrows, the little wants of daily life. Whatever affects you, be it a changed look, an altered tone, an unkind word, a wrong, a wound, a demand you cannot meet, a change you cannot notice, a sorrow you cannot disclose—turn it into prayer, and send it up to God. Disclosures you may not make to man you can make to the Lord. Man may be too little for your great matters; God is not too great for your small ones. Only give yourself to prayer, whatever be the occasion that calls for it.—Winston.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

"WILL YOU ALSO GO AWAY?"

There is talk of division among the disciples of Christ. But we think it is only talk. There may come a falling away—a sloughing off—a turning back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world. But true Christians—those who are truly the disciples of Christ will not, cannot divide. Christ himself has recorded a prayer in behalf of their union, and he must—he is heard. That prayer was heard by the Father when uttered, and it has stood, an answered prayer to this day. Jesus prayed for the union of all who believe on him through the word of the apostles whom he sent to preach—the union of all who believe Jesus and his word. These have no law of their own, they have no will of their own but to do the revealed will of God. In doing this, they are united, and in continuing in all things commended of Christ—to do them—they never can divide. They must be one. Only the self-willed, and disobedient, can ever separate. These may slough off, separate from Bible men and women, and the true church will always be left. By a hard struggle, we have reached primitive ground, and have established the ancient order of things. But some have crept in unawares, and have corrupted many, who are turning back to Babylon. In the days of Christ, many turned back and walked no longer with him, because they could not endure his teaching. It is so now. There are many who—failing of the popularity, praise, and pay, they sought in the church, because, perhaps, they were unworthy, and like Demetrius of old, loving the world more than God, have originated schemes, and plans, and schisms to turn away all they can from the faith. These will go out from us, because they are not of us. There are others, only half converted—baptized infidels, or skeptics, who joined the church for popularity, or for some worldly gain, or favor. These will be ready to follow any lead that looks back to "the flesh-pots of Egypt." A falling away is at hand; many are going back to sectarianism under a new name, but the true followers of Christ will not go back. The sloughing off that shall come, will leave the church purer, and consequently better. Do you ask dear reader whether you will go? To whom, and where can you go? Jesus is the life. Will you have him? His words are the words of eternal life; can you exchange his word for man's word, or the wisdom of the world? You can not. Here you must stay. Close by his side, ever striving to know, and to do his will.

To this end you must, like Paul, set Christ before you, and strive to conform your life to his. Accept no law but the law of Christ. Let your language be "speak Lord, for thy servant heareth." Be brave and valiant for Christ. Be meek and gentle in opposing those who destroy themselves. And if others get up schisms, and slough off from the body, we will strive for a nearer approach unto God. To what higher ground can we go, than to speak where the Bible speaks, and be silent where it is silent? Is not this the only safe ground? Can we then introduce into the worship, things about which the word of God is silent, and by doing so, offend the feelings and consciences of good brethren in Christ? Assuredly not. If God has not commanded us to do that thing, we must respect the silence of the Bible. All that is necessary to be done, God has instructed us, in his word. If he has not instructed us, we are not to blame if we do not do it. For, how may I know what God desires me to do, unless he tells me. But the apostles tell us God has done this—furnished all things necessary to life and godliness. We cannot leave the Bible then. Bible Christians cannot separate. The moment there is a separation of any kind, there is schism and heresy at work, and schism and heresy are the cause. "Mark them that cause divisions, and have no fellowship with them," says the apostle. Let us make the Bible the man of our counsel in all things, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, and we are safe.

THE ORGAN—AT IT AGAIN.

The old church at Huntsville has put the organ in, and some of its best members out. They had to choose between a good old brother, who has been a member for years, and the organ which he declares he cannot fellowship. They chose the organ and let him go, as an old foggy who stands in the way of progress. Will the church please have their "pastor" preach on the following texts, next time they meet? Matt. v: 23-24; 1 Cor. viii: 12-13. If "the pastor" does his whole duty on these Scriptures, the church will hear something to her advantage. Had they been commanded to put an organ in the house, then they would have to do so, whether it offended any or not, but since it is not commanded of God, they dare not offend a brother's conscience by taking it into the house. Better put the calf out brethren, and take back your offended brother. "In as much as ye did it to one of the least of these," etc.

Dear Bro. Poe: The debate between Bro. John Denton, of Roxton, and the Baptist, which came off at Hopewell, five miles from this city, closed Wednesday evening, 16th inst. One of the Baptist members came over on the Lord's side at the close of the debate, and united with the church of Christ. All passed off pleasantly. Bro. DeWitt, of Moor's Springs, brought $7.00 in for Indian Mission last week, contributed by the brethren in his neighborhood.—[R. W. O., Paris, Texas, January 19, 1884.]

We tender our thanks to all who have by letter, and otherwise sympathized with, and aided us during the sickness of our daughter—doctors, nurses, friends and all. She is getting better now—has been down over one hundred days with typhoid fever. We mention this, that others may never get out of patience, nor despair of a case of typhoid fever, as long as there is life in the patient.

The sad intelligence reaches us that Gov. Overton, of the Chickasaw Nation, is dangerously sick with pneumonia. We hope he may be spared, as he has kindly opened the door for the preaching of the gospel to his people, and will be an important agent in the establishment of the truth in the Indian Nation.

Married, at the residence of Dr. McCauley, near Hallville, Texas, January 23rd, 1884, Mr. J. M. Benton, of Sweetwater, Texas, and Miss M. E. Garrett. J. T. Poe officiating. We wish this handsome couple a long, happy and useful life.

Fires, and losses by fire everywhere throughout the State. We believe that insurance is one potent cause of so many fires. We never have believed that insurance companies were a benefit to the country.

The comet is now in full view.

TOO MUCH BIG MEETING.

A great many churches over-do things in the way of big meetings. A church will soon get to think they must have a big meeting going on all the time, or they die. It is not often that a protracted meeting does a well established church good. In fact, we feel safe in saying, that as a rule, protracted meetings are damaging to well organized churches; fully as bad as regular "pastorates." Where a church depends upon a paid "pastor" to preach twice on Lord's day, instead of the worship divinely appointed, they die spiritually. Where they depend upon preaching in any event, for growth and prosperity, they are sure to die.

Bible reading, exhortation, prayer, and song, are the divine appointments for acceptable worship. Care of the sick, the poor, and the helpless of every kind in the church, is the divine work before the church. A close observance of these things will build up any congregation, and what is better, keep it up. The reason churches grow cold, and cease to work, is the members cease to worship after the divine method. There is too much preaching, and too little teaching. But says one, "the other churches have regular preaching twice each Lord's day, and we must too. Others hire pastors, and we must too." Well, let them do so, if they choose; we follow Christ, not sects. We are not bound to copy sects. "Search for the old paths," and walk therein.

This preaching business is ruining the church. Too much preaching, and too little teaching. Flowery nothings, called sermons, gotten up to tickle itching ears, or to court favor with the sects, to raise the preachers salary by having himself spoken of as a popular, and eloquent man, etc. These things destroy pure Christian life, and secularize the church. Harangues called sermons, are strung off by the hour, and not a gospel sentence in them. The preacher starts off with a sensational text, such as "God's water works;" or, "The eagle's nest;" or, "He went down into a pit on a snowy day and slew a lion;" or, "Take it by the tail," etc. Then follows a long, flowery, wordy display of man's ingenuity, and world wisdom, without a sentence of saving truth, or gospel in it, and the people applaud, and say, "wonderful!"

Sometimes the church does not seem to grow fast enough, and some big preacher is called from a distance, and while his list of big cut-and-dried sermons lasts, he carries on a protracted meeting. The people flock to hear. Some join the preacher, and are baptized, his sermons give out, he is called home suddenly, leaves in the midst of the excitement, brethren and sisters all say, "Oh! if our home preacher could preach that way, what a glorious thing it would be. Why don't our home preacher study, and get off such nice sermons, and draw that way?" And soon, "Oh can't we get the big preacher here?" Perhaps big preacher is called. Just what he was fishing for. He accepts, moves in, and sets home preacher out. Soon big sermons give out, big preacher wanes, another meeting, another new preacher called, and so the farce goes on until the church is too dead to call any longer.

Brethren, let us get back to God's ways. His ways are best. Bible study, exhortation, prayer and song, with the care of the poor and the sick, will soon build us up. If we preach, let us preach the gospel, and let us determine, like Paul, to know nothing in the pulpit, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. If we preach, let us hide ourselves behind the cross of Christ, while we hold Jesus up to the world, "chief among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely."

Bells! Bells! Beautiful Bells!

"Those evening Bells! Those evening Bells! How many a tale their music tell, Of youth and home, and that sweet time When first I heard their soothing Chime."

How vividly do the McShane Celebrated Bells recall Moore's beautiful lines as above quoted? It is difficult to find any sweeter toned, or more beautifully shaped, Bells. The McShane Church Bells, undoubtedly take the lead in first-class Church Bells, Chimes, Peals, etc. The Foundry is situated in Baltimore, Md., owned by the Messrs. Henry McShane & Co., and is one of the many prominent establishments of the thriving city which has earned a world-wide reputation for the beauty and superiority of its productions. Among the most recent of their shipments are a peal of two Bells to the West Indies. One fine Bell to Egypt, two excellent Bells to China, and a very fine one to Mexico. Besides these, they have just sent a 6000lb. Bell to Indiana. A Chime of six to Detroit, Mich., and a Chime of 9 just completed and satisfactorily inaugurated to Mass., near Boston, to the delight of the surrounding community. They have also just been awarded another prize medal for the superiority of their Bells over all competitors. It appears, therefore, that the McShane Bells are entitled to all the honor, and far-famed reputation which they are constantly receiving.

Starting Plants from Slips.

Peter Henderson, gives the following directions for the domestic propagation of plants from slips; "Florists use what are called propagation benches for rooting cuttings, when wanted on a large scale, as they usually are by them; but when an amateur, not having green-house facilities, wishes to root a few slips there is no process that we can recommend better than what is known as the 'saucer system,' which even at the risk of telling it to some of your readers who already understand it, I must again repeat, as there is no other plan so simple and safe. Take any common saucer or plate, into which put sand to the depth of an inch or so. Then prepare the cuttings in the usual manner, and place them in the sand close enough to touch each other. The sand is then to be watered so as to bring it into the condition of mud. The saucer thus filled with slips may be placed on the window sill and exposed to the sun. The cutting must be fully exposed to the sun, and never shaded. But one condition is absolutely essential to success: until the cuttings take root the sand must be kept continually saturated with water, and always in the condition of mud. To do this the slips must be watered at least once a day with a very fine rose water-pot, and the watering must be done very gently, else the cuttings may be washed out. There is every certainty that ninety-nine per cent. of the cuttings put in will take root, provided they were in the proper condition when placed in the saucer, and that the temperature has not been lower than sixty degrees for green-house plants, or less than eighty degrees for tropical plants. By the saucer system a higher degree of temperature may be maintained without injury than by any other system of propagation, as the cuttings in reality are placed in the water and will not wilt, provided the water is not allowed to dry out. Still, the tender slip, until rooted, will not endure a long continuation of very high temperature, and I would advise the propagation be done at such seasons that they may have as near as possible a uniform temperature of seven-five or eighty degrees in the sunlight. When rooted they should be potted in dry soil, such as is recommended for sowing seed in. The should be placed in pots not exceeding two and a half inches in diameter, and treated carefully by shading and watering for two or three days."

The essence of truth is not in letters and words. A painter may give the the figure and color of a rose, or the outline of a flame, but he can neither put fragrance into one nor heat into the other. The musician may write out the score, but the characters are dumb save the soul, that interprets them. So "with the heart man believeth," and by the spiritual man alone are spiritual things discerned.—Cudworth.

PUBLICATIONS.

Other publications in connection with a paper greatly helps the paper. It serves as an advertisement for these, and the profit on these help to support the paper. As an indication how greatly these publications help a paper, I copy the following from a letter written by Russel Errett to the trustees of the Hymnal, in reference to its publication. In speaking of the benefits of the publication of the Hymnal to any one paper, he said:

"Suppose the Standard Publishing Company to be the strongest of any of our publishing houses. The Standard comes, more or less, into competition with every paper we have—friendly competition, but none the less strenuous. The Standard company is, let us say, in a condition to bid lower than any other house can afford to manufacture and print it at a less profit, besides securing lower bids on all work—on account of the magnitude of its business. It will not be questioned that the company is now expending an amount of money on the Standard that makes it extremely difficult for other papers to compete. But by securing this bid it might become master of resources that would make it all but impossible for other papers to compete with it. The company could afford to lower its rates, or increase its attractions, to a point which no other paper could afford. What effect would such a prospect have on other papers—many of them struggling for a bare existence? They could not afford to push it, because while adding a little to their own resources, they would feel that they were adding far more to those of a paper already hard enough to contend with. Singly or together they might bring out one or more Hymnals, which would not only yield them a profit all their own, but would curtail to the same extent the profits of their rival."

We have quoted this only that our readers may get some idea of the benefit that outside publications are to a paper. Here the Standard recognizes that if it had the Hymnal, it could through it get means to crush out all rivalry among papers. It could not control it. It went into the hands of another paper, and rather than help that other paper by selling the Hymnal, it encouraged the getting out of another book, out of which it could get better profits, at the same time curtail the profits of its rival.

The point that we wish our readers to see is, that a paper is very greatly benefitted by other publications made by it, provided enough of them can be sold. We have never been able to make this a means of help, because we are not able to sell enough to make the tracts or books profitable. Because our Southern people do not buy enough books to afford a profitable market, and Northern people do not buy Southern books. We have published a number of tracts, some of them such as would have been profitable in the hands of a Northern publishing house. The Northern people never buy Southern published books, and the Southern people do not buy enough of them to make the market profitable.

We published in tract form the best chapters of "The Gospel Plan of Salvation." A stronger and less objectionable work than these tracts, as we published them, has never been written or published. While selling it, we never received a single order from a publishing house north of us, and it took us a couple of years to get back the cost of publication. This has been our experience.

We frequently have been importuned to publish our articles, "World Powers," the articles on "Fruit-Bearing Faith," "Organization." More recently, "Review of Grub-Axe." There is but one trouble about any of them. We are afraid we would not get back the money, and we would be crippled in the publication of the ADVOCATE. There has been a call for the publication of Bro. Jesse Sewell's sermons in book form. We do not believe a series of better discourses has been published among us. There are some few objectionable points in them, to my mind, but fewer than in the same number of sermons we ever saw.

Recently he asked what we thought of the publication, expressing a desire not to involve himself or others in loss. I had to tell him that if he lived North, or possibly if a Northern publishing house would take hold of them and publish and push them, they might pay through, with some profit; but while we could publish them here almost as cheap as elsewhere, and would be glad to do it, if we could even lose nothing ourselves, and help him some, we were afraid to take the risk.

The point I trust you see. That we not only suffer from a circumscribed circulation for the ADVOCATE, but we are cut off from the other sources of help, that could be derived from publishing tracts and books, because we cannot sell them. This difficulty arises from two causes. First, our people do not buy many books. Second, when they buy, many of them buy northern ones.

Another point is this, every book we sell, published by another publisher, helps that other publisher greatly more than it does us. He uses the profits he makes off of our sales, to cut down the price of his paper, to under-work us. The Standard will not sell the Hymnal published by the Evangelist company, because in selling this, it profits the Evangelist more than itself; and the profits the Evangelist makes out of its sales, would enable it to lower the rates to underwork the Standard. We use this as an example, true in its essential facts. Another example is, we sell a goodly number of Popular Hymns. Although the publishers make liberal terms with us—as liberal as we can ask—still all that we sell help the company to build up a paper to underbid us.

Every book we sell published by another paper builds it up and so enables it to cut rates on us. We have never allowed any selfish motives to control us in this matter. We have encouraged the sale and the circulation of all good books and scriptural papers, believing that a cultivation of a taste for reading will finally build up papers, cultivate a taste for reading and develop talent among ourselves, whether we ever live to profit by it or not. Then again, large circulation gets large income from advertising. An advertiser will pay greatly more for an inch of space in a paper with 20,000 subscribers, than in one with 5,000.

The wrong in this matter grows out of this. In the sharp rivalry between the papers, the papers are not made to pay their own way. If each paper was held at a price that would pay its own way, the evil would not be so great. But I believe I am safe in saying not a paper among us pays its own way. I mean by that, the direct receipts and profits of the paper does not pay for the work that is done upon it.

Take the Standard, the most successful paper among us. It first received a large bonus of thousands of dollars to enable it to publish in good style until it had time to work up a subscription. It exhausted all this. But to-day the Standard does not pay expenses and a fair per cent. on the means invested in it, outside of its other publications. Papers with no more matter and twice its circulation, charge from 50 to 100 per cent. more in New York and Boston, and do not grow rich. The other papers among us rely upon sales of books they publish, and other work connected with their offices, to enable them to keep alive, or much of the work on them is done for nothing. No secular paper could keep alive, as the religious papers do, simply because no one would work for them as is done for religious papers, for nothing.

We wish our readers to understand these difficulties. It is to their interest to build up a good paper in our midst. It will develop their talent and build up the cause of Christ, as no paper in a distant country can do. Three fourths of the writers for the ADVOCATE would never have developed themselves as writers, had not a paper been published in their midst.

What it needs is a generous support, to enable us to improve it. Complaints at the price and at the advertisements will not help it. It honestly is worth more than is charged for it. The publishers and writers have done more, and to-day are willing to sacrifice ten times as much as any other persons to make it a first-class paper in style. They work for nothing almost. We really felt a hesitancy in accepting Bro. Harding's labors for the meager pittance he gets for the work he does, knowing the other sacrifices and deprivations he and his family undergo for the cause of Christ. It seems to me that a man with any nobility of soul ought to feel ashamed to read his article in this number and complain at the price of the paper. If we were able we would compensate him justly for the labor that he does for the ADVOCATE, that would lighten some the self-denial of himself and family in preaching to the poor. We do not think it would be honest in us to receive the amount of labor he does for the ADVOCATE for nothing, and give it to, able-bodied men for less than we do. We mention him because he is more from home preaching, and gets less pay, according to his work, than others.

We wish our readers to see these things just as they are. The ADVOCATE has now fifty per cent. more names on its list than it has had at this date in any former year. A little more vigorous help from its friends for the next few months will give us a list of subscribers, that will enable us to give an honest compensation to those who work for it. And we are more anxious than any subscriber can be, to drop out the advertising pages now in the body of the ADVOCATE, and otherwise improve it. And this shall be done the moment we see it can be safely done. But we do not intend to run risks, cut prices, and involve ourselves and the ADVOCATE in embarrassment, by trying to publish for less "than cost." No true friend of the ADVOCATE desires us to do this.

SWEAR NOT AT ALL.

My second argument, in support of my proposition, that the words of Jesus have a limited and special application, was drawn from the example of Paul. On several occasions he used these strong declarations, "Moreover, I call God for a witness on my soul, that to spare you, I came not to Corinth." 2 Cor. i: 23. "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is blessed forevermore, knoweth that I lie not." 2 Cor. xi: 31. "Of the things I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not." Gal. i: 20.

I showed that either of these declarations filled every feature of an oath defined by Webster. (1) There is a declaration; (2) a solemn declaration; (3) an appeal to God for the truth of the declaration. In the light of Webster's definition, no man can frame an oath in clearer and stronger words than that of Paul. "In the things that I wrote unto you, behold, before God, I lie not." If Paul had said "I swear to you by the living God that what I write to you is the truth," it would have been in no respect more an oath. It will be conceded that Paul was familiar with the words of Jesus, "Swear not at all," and knew their perfect application; that no man had more reverence for the authority of Jesus. That he would have been the first to enforce, and the last to violate them. Paul's words are oaths in the full meaning of that word. Now one of two sequences logically follow from these premises; (1) the words of Jesus do not apply to such oaths as those taken by Paul; (2) or, Paul willfully violated the command of Jesus in using them. I cannot accept this last sequence; I am compelled to accept the first, for there is no other to accept. I therefore conclude that the words of Jesus are limited in their application. This is the substance of my argument.

Bro. Morgan replies thus: "Bro. L.'s proof texts do not sustain his position. (1) 'In the first place, Paul's declarations do not amount to oaths, in the sense in which Jesus forbid oaths, nor, (2) do they fill our accepted definition of an oath.' Here are two distinct grounds of objection. I scarcely know how to reply to the first. If I give his words their fair import, they imply (1) that the words of Paul are oaths in some sense; (2) that Jesus only forbid oaths in a qualified sense. This is exactly my position, and Bro. Morgan comes squarely over to it. I do not suppose he meant to do this, and I will not press the advantage thus given me, lest the words prove a 'slip of the pen.' But if on the other hand, he meant to say, that Paul's words are oaths in no sense, (which is his position) it certainly was a very strange way to say it, and then he confounds his first and second objection, for that is just what he means, when he says, 'nor do they fill our accepted definition of an oath.' I reply to this last objection.

In my argument, I analyzed an oath as defined by Webster, and showed its several features; and that Paul's words filled every feature. But Bro. Morgan says Paul's words do not fill the definition. Let us then see what they lack. An oath is "a declaration," do Paul's words lack that feature? No; "a solemn declaration," do they lack that feature? No; "made with an appeal to God for the truth of what is declared," do they lack that feature? No. Well this is all, as defined by Webster, and if his definition is complete, Paul's words are oaths in the perfect sense.

But says Bro. Morgan, there is an "implied feature." What is that? Why "every appeal to God implies the invocation of his wrath, and the renunciation of his favor if the declaration be false." Very well, if the appeal to God implies this, then it is implied in Paul's appeal to God. How did Bro. Morgan find out that in Paul's appeal to God this feature of an oath is not implied? At this point, his whole argument hangs over complete destruction on the hair of an implication, and he assumes that; or perhaps I should say, he faintly argues it thus: a false oath is perjury; no judicial tribunal would hold Paul guilty of perjury if his words were false; therefore, Paul's words are not oaths. But why would not the tribunals so hold? Because Paul's words are not oaths? No; but because they were not made before the court—they are not judicial oaths. Suppose Paul goes into the court as a witness, and says, "I call God for a witness on my soul, that what I state in this case is the truth, and then, were to tell lies, would that court convict him of perjury? Certainly it would, and justly. Perjury properly applies to violated oaths taken in courts. Forswear applies to all violated oaths. Bro. Morgan's illustration is against him. Bro. Morgan now admits that all that Paul's words lack of being perfect oaths, is the "implication feature." If I show this feature is not wanting, then I show that Paul's words are perfect oaths, and then Bro. Morgan will have either to give up his position, or condemn Paul for violating the command of Jesus by taking oaths. I will do it.

Bro. Morgan says "the appeal to God implies this feature," Paul appealed to God, therefore it is implied in Paul's case. Proven. But better yet. Paul's God was an avenger of lies, and a rewarder of truth. In those declarations, Paul appealed to him as such a God. It was as if he said, "I speak the truth, I invoke God to witness it." If I speak falsely, I am a liar, and God knows it. Liars have no inheritance in the kingdom of God, but have their portion in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. If I lie, I forfeit my place in the kingdom of God, and incur the doom to be inflicted in the lake of fire. Thus Paul's appeal to God fairly, nay, necessarily implies a renunciation of God's favor and an invocation of his wrath if his words are false. I have now shown that Paul's words lack nothing of being oaths. But Bro. Morgan now says, admitting that Paul's words are oaths, it does not follow that Christians now should swear. No, I never argued that Paul's example taught that Christians should swear, but that they might swear, and be as blameless as Paul.

Bro. Morgan continues, Paul was divinely called and commissioned as God's minister to all men, and he could do many things that we cannot now do. That is true. And when Bro. Morgan shows that swearing to his declarations, is one of those things that Paul could do, and we cannot lawfully do, then his words will have the ring of an argument, not before. Paul had no liberty in the gospel that every Christian did not then have, and does not now have. Neither was Paul exempt from obedience to any command Jesus gave to his disciples, forbidding a sinful, or even a questionable deed. If Paul could, on solemn occasions, take oaths and be blameless, so may all Christians now. Teachers were to be examples to those they taught. Paul held himself as an example in all such things.

I claim that I have proven that Paul took oaths; Bro. Morgan must now abandon his position, that the words of Jesus forbid all oaths, or he must condemn Paul for violating those words in taking oaths. Either horn of the dilemma will hold good.

In confirmation of my position that the words of Jesus do not apply to the judicial oath, I called attention to the fact, that Jesus himself answered under it, and thus publicly recognized the obligation of that oath. The facts are these: He was on trial before the Sanhedrim for his life. He answered not a word to the false accusations made against him. His enemies urged him to speak. He would not. Stung by the rebuke of his silence, the high priest said, "I adjure you by the living God, that you tell us if you be the Christ the Son of God." Matt. xxvi: 63. Jesus promptly answered, "Thou hast said," or as Mark has it, "I am." This was as clear and positive an answer as could be given. It was the adjuration that extorted it. If adjure means to swear, or put under oath, (and that is its natural meaning when used in court, and applied to one whose testimony is wanted,) then it is certain that Jesus answered under oath, and thus gave his sanction to the oath. Bro. Morgan's comments on the answers of Jesus are purely fanciful. I do not think he is satisfied with them himself. "Thou sayest it," "Thou hast said," and "I am," are all the exact equivalents of each other, and are square affirmations, and not at all evasive. Bro. Morgan's illustration is against him. The judge says to a silent witness, "I adjure you, by the living God, that you tell us if you be the son of John Smith." The witness promptly answers, "I am." How could he better show that he accepts the oath than to answer promptly and squarely under it? This is just what Jesus did. Bro. Morgan says Jesus in his answer refused the oath. Who ever refused an oath by answering under it promptly? I have but two commentaries in my house; McGarvey's and Abbott's. Bro. McGarvey says, "The words I adjure thee, etc.," were intended to put Jesus under oath; page 235. "Jesus answered to an oath before the Sanhedrim;" page 57.

Abbott says, "I adjure then—an ordinary formula for administering the oath. By this the high priest put Jesus under oath to testify," etc.: Com't. on Matt., page 300.

Jesus answered under the judicial oath. His words do not then apply to it, for he would not be guilty of the inconsistency of forbidding it, and then answering under it.

Bro. Morgan says I am mistaken as to the requirements of the civil law concerning oaths; and that I am also mistaken in saying that in the affirmation, as in the oath, there is an appeal to God. Very well, I thankfully stand corrected, and am only sorry that this is the only instance in which I can confess error.

I want the nature of this discussion understood. I am not striving to get Bro. Morgan or any other brother to take judicial oaths, or any other kind of oaths. I do not think that taking oaths is a Christian grace. I am only defending myself and brethren against the charge of violating the command of Jesus, and dishonoring our word when in the fear of our God we take an oath, as the end of strifes or the basis of strong assurance.

Bro. Morgan in his first article on the judicial oath, used these words, "When a Christian puts his hand on the book of God, and says, 'I solemnly swear,' etc., he puts his word on a level with that of him that loves and makes a lie," and the brethren about Gainesboro endorsed it.

Well, I am a Christian, and have done that thing, and so have thousands of our best brethren. Now when we do this, I deny that we violate the words of Jesus, or in any degree dishonor our word. In answer to this charge, I asked Bro. Morgan if an oath dishonored the word of a Christian, why it did not also dishonor the word of God? I can think of nothing that is dishonoring to man, that would not be dishonoring to God. I called attention to the fact that men learned to swear from the Almighty. Did he teach them to dishonor their word? God swore to his saints, and commanded them to swear to one another, would it not be strange now, that an oath in God's name and fear was dishonoring, etc.

To all this, Bro. Morgan replies, "that the oaths of God cannot be taken as an example to guide men." But they were so taken, and did guide men for 4,000 years, and that with God's approbation. He further says, "God did many things, in ancient times that, and yet, does many things that men may not, and dare not do." That is true. But Bro. Morgan does not show that swearing on solemn occasions, is one of those things. When he shows that, his words will have the ring of an argument, not before, I can make just as good an argument for swearing from the same premises, viz.: God did many things, that men may do. God made oaths on solemn occasions, therefore, men may make oaths on solemn occasions. My argument is as good as his—neither deserve the name.

Bro. Morgan says many good things in the conclusion of his article, all of which I highly appreciate.

I assure him, I have no disposition "to be as Gods" in anything that God has forbidden, and that I deem it a privilege to be as God in every thing that he has permitted. Hoping to hear from him again, I extend to him my Christian regards.

B. W. LAUDERDALE.

Bailey, Tenn., January 18th, 1884.

The quaint Thomas Brooks says: "A man sincerely obedient will not pick and choose what commands to obey, and what to reject. He will lay such a charge upon his whole man as Mary the mother of Christ did upon all the servants at the feast: 'Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.' Eyes, ears, hands, heart, lips, body and soul, do you all seriously and affectionately observe whatever Jesus Christ says unto you, and do it."

To accomplish a duty is to diffuse joy; and as every moment of life holds a duty, it depends upon us to surround ourselves with unceasing joys.

TWO THINGS.

"I will therefore that the men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting." Does not conversion carry a change of mind with it? Does it not imply that the man is so changed now, that he wishes to do God's will, and wants his will to be done? Well here is the will of our heavenly Father clearly expressed. How many do this? No doubt this has reference to the public worship, from what Paul said in the close of the next chapter, but how many pray at home, in the family, in secret, at church or anywhere? All righteous men have been noted for prayer. Christ himself would pray in the mountains for a whole night, yet men and women dare make the whole trip from earth to heaven without prayer. Prayer is an evidence of dependence, and then, of course, of humility. This characteristic in man makes him great in the eyes of God and man. When a man prays none, it is evidently clear that he feels no need of assistance, or does not believe that he can get it through prayer. It is a sad state to have either mind. Man is a very helpless creature. It is true he has done some very wonderful things, and is all the while astonishing himself and others with his marvelous doings. Still there is a bound, at which omnipotence has said, "thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." Man can do less with himself than with the outside physical world. He skims the waters, talks through infinite space, sweeps our distance, opens the throttle valve and sets thousands of wheels to running and drives machines for nearly everything. But the few things are the trouble. There is no device by which the old body can be burnished up, the wrinkles ironed out, a new coat of paint put on, the worn boxes and bearings duplicated from the factory and all made new and put in first rate running order. The daubing, powdering, painting, and padding are mocking the difficulty instead of offering a real remedy for it.

The nostrums, patent potions, and powders, and pellets, the quacks and charlatans, yes the most skillful allopaths, homeopaths, hydropaths, all propose and dose, but along comes death in defiance of all. There are two periods in a man's life when he shows his utter dependence. In infancy, and when he shakes right in the presence of death. A few can even nerve themselves up for the final hour, but this does not change the truth that man is helpless. Do you believe that God hears the humble, contrite petitioner, my brother? Do you realize your dependence? Do you see that you have no weapon with which to fight disease, death and the grave? Why do you not pray then, "pray without ceasing," "pray always," "continue in prayer?" "I will," says Paul. Does not that mean God wills. What does he will? That the men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hand without wrath and doubting. He has something else for the women to do, of which he tells them in the same letter, but he wants the men to pray. A praying man is one wanting and trying to do right. He will have his weaknesses, he will do wrong, he will jump off the pivot sometimes, but the man who prays from his heart is like the needle, he may bobble and bobble, but finally he will settle down pointing heavenward. I read a little story illustration not many years ago. It shows the estimate put upon a praying man. A traveler was lost, after long wandering late at night, he came to an uninviting hut, had it been otherwise. He was taken in. Later in the night, the man of the house, a rough and savage looking creature, came in. He read in the man his death that night, for certain he was that he belonged to a clan of highwaymen. He was invited to go to bed, but not he, he was going to meet death with his eyes open. The old man looked at his wife and his wife returned the look. The stranger thought it meant something, and sure it did. At last he said, well stranger we are accustomed to saying something before we go to bed, you can join in or keep your seat. Judge his surprise when he saw them bowing before their God. He went to bed and never slept better, or felt safer, fearing nothing from the praying man. Prayer will give us the same character.

THE WOMEN.

"In like manner also that the women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."

I judge from what Isaiah said, (chapter 3,) that women have always been disposed to run wild after gold ornaments. Abraham's servant carried some ornaments with him, and he gave them to Rebecca when he found her. The women of Israel wore jewelry, and borrowed it. The people brake off the ear rings and other jewelry from their wives and children, and Aaron made a calf for them to worship. It seems that the Lord did not prohibit the adorning with gold under the patriarchal and Jewish dispensation. There seems to be a perfect mania for it at this time. God calls upon the men to pray in the house of worship. This few do. He calls upon the women to dress neatly, not to adorn with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array. This they will do. It seems to me that God has very little influence over his converts, that is all. A disciple is one who receives lessons from Jesus and his apostles. A convert is one who has been so changed that he craves to do God's will. He abhors evil, cleaves to that which is good. Who of us are disciples then? Who are converts? How many can say from the heart, "Our heart is to do the will of Him who called us out of darkness into light." If our women were as anxious to please the God who made us, as the Jewish women were to make a calf-God, there would appear to be some devotion in it. These took off their jewelry for the purpose of making a deaf, dumb, and blind God. But ours will not leave theirs off to please the all-seeing, all-hearing, all-wise and omnipotent God. There is a vast difference, certainly. Still the women are much better than the men. They are ready for every good work. It is not difficult to find a woman adorned with "good works."

I find the mothers of our times are not as well informed as those of the earlier history of the reformation, but the same may be said of the men. McKnight says: "Not with gold only, or plaited hair, etc." He evidently meant that women could adorn with gold, etc., but not that alone. I do not so understand it. He further confines the meaning of this text to the church or assembly only. In this he may be right. It is certainly a great wrong for women or men to appear at the house of God with their minds full of something else, rather than the worship of God. If they are extremely anxious to be seen of men, it is certainly true that there is less room in their hearts for thoughts of God, and how they will please him. A sister with ear-rings, one, two or three bands on the fingers, bracelets, a massive chain around the neck, pins and buttons, does not appear to be striving to win the attention or approval of heaven. God would have all who worship him get ready for it not only in heart, but in outward appearance. To those who would fast, Christ says: "When thou fastest, anoint thine head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret." Paul commands women "to adorn themselves in becoming, neat, nice apparel," also "with good works." Here are instructions to all as to how they shall appear before God. This is an important matter. If men never look on with favor, we will not lose so very much; but if we fail to receive God's approval, then eternity itself is dark. J. M. BARNES.

The church that does not afford the fullest scope within its own limits for philanthropic effort is defective in its organization, or lacking in the spirit of Christ. This may sound like a bald truism, but it will grow on you if you will think on it.—Christian Advocate.

Whoever doubts that Christ's church as the Holy Spirit left it, was better equipped for the fullest development and exercise of all true philanthropic efforts, has a low idea of the wisdom and power of our heavenly Father.

A deputy sheriff kept a whisky-saloon, a customer got drunk on his whisky and killed a man; that deputy-sheriff is sent to arrest the murderer; and if the wretched man is hung, the same deputy will probably superintend the execution. But keep quiet; is not this a land of liberty?

A Christian minister said, "I was never of any use until I found out that God did not make me for a great man."

Obituaries.

Departed this life, after a brief illness, at her residence in Limestone county, Alabama, on the morning of January 27th, 1884, Mrs. Melinda Robinson Hundley, relict of the late Dr. John H. Hundley, being nearly eighty years of age. The noble woman who has thus passed away, was born in Greenville county, Virginia, the only daughter of Daniel Robinson, a most respectable merchant and planter of that county and State. After her marriage, in 1824, she came with her husband to reside in Alabama, where she has had her home ever since until the day of her death. The grand Old Dominion could boast of few such daughters, and Alabama might well feel pride in her adoption. She was a woman of the very noblest type, large-hearted, strong-minded, and possessed of a will and nerve equalled by few men. And yet this same woman, so heroic and fearless in the presence of death, was full of a divine sweetness in all the relations of life,—a devoted, self-sacrificing mother, a model Christian, and one of the kindest of neighbors and friends. For nearly eighty years she bore herself so bravely, never elevated by prosperity nor humiliated by adversity, as to command the universal respect of all classes; for, truly,

"None knew her but to love her,

None named her but to praise."

But at last she has gone to her reward. Death had no terrors for her. On the contrary, she seemed desirous of being once more united to her venerable companion, who had been taken from her only three short years before. Full of a living faith in her Redeemer, when the grim Archer winged the fatal shaft so long delayed, she made no murmur, but meekly bowed her head and passed over, the silent river without a shudder. We can but weep for her loss, and yet we know loving friends have already welcomed her "over the river," friends from whom she had been parted long and was most anxious to greet. In the silent watches of the night, it almost seems that we can hear those loved ones calling to those of us who linger sorrowing here: "Why do we weep, beloved? She is not dead, but only gone before." Ah, yes, the dear old mother, who watched over us so tenderly in our youth, who gave such good counsel in our maturer years, and who always set us an example worthy to be followed, can never be dead to any of her children. She has only been transplanted to brighter worlds above, for surely,

Her flight,

Her upward flight our mother took
If ever soul ascended."

D. R. H.

A great and good woman asleep—rested from her labors, at her home in Ash Grove, Mo., on the 8th inst., Mrs. Mary J. Barbee, wife of Dr. W. J. Barbee, a talented teacher in the ranks of the reformation. She was the daughter of James E. Matthews, a pioneer preacher of the reformation, and one of some distinction; and was born in Alabama on the 25th of January, 1834, whence she moved to Jackson, Mississippi, in early childhood, where she was married in 1852. She became the mother of eight children, all of whom, with her husband and her aged, venerable mother, still live to mourn their loss. She embraced Christianity when young, and died as she had lived—a noble, Christian woman. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." Her life was an example of self-denial and unselfishness, rarely to be found, spent in the service of her Master, her family, her race, and the church, always ready for the work at hand, first in her place in the church, Sunday-school, using the talents that God had endowed her with, to glorify Him, and bless all around her, with an unusual readiness to adapt herself to the capacity, conditions and circumstances of the humblest and lowliest in her circle, and finding her greatest happiness in contributing to the happiness of others. She was a woman of brilliant mind, with firm and judicious nature, and strong individuality, and a most kindly disposition, and Christian sentiments, giving her a large and controlling influence, which was felt in any circle, in any community, in which her lot might cast her. Blessed with a great, and loving, and grateful heart, that lent its softening power and influence to her gifted and cultivated mind, making her life a charm, and a grand and beautiful display of power and tenderness combined. "Strength and honor were her clothing." Her crown was her modesty and her purity of life, which, with her noble and unwavering faith, enriched her every act and adorned her life. An angel on earth a ministering spirit of love, she now swells the hosts of heaven. One of the greatest characteristics of this noble woman, was the interest she felt and exhibited in the young, whom she bound to her by the strongest cord of affection and love, never too much occupied to assist them in pleasures that made them happy and improved them. She kept herself young for her children's sake, making their pleasures her own, and exercising an influence over those under her care, and instructions as strong as it was beneficial in moulding their characters, and binding them to her by cords of kindness that they cannot forget, and as unbounded as her own great charity, which was such as not only to aid the needy, but "thought no evil," and covered with its broad mantle, all her fellow creatures. Sister Barbee's position for years, was that of a teacher of music, holding many responsible positions, which she filled with ability, and taste, and satisfactorily, and her last work was done at Woodland College, Independence, Mo., one year ago. Consumption fastened its unrelenting fangs upon her before that year expired, and though anxious and faithful friends and a devoted family, used their every effort to preserve a life so useful to others, and so glorious in itself, "all failed," and she now sleeps with the apostles, and all who look for the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, at the resurrection of the just.

Farm Life.

Perhaps there is too low an estimate placed upon the privilege of farm life; yet there are those who appreciate it in the highest sense. Who can be so narrow-minded as to imagine that cultured minds dwell only in cities? True, city people have the advantage of superior lectures, society-meetings, city libraries, and all that, but who does not covet the free open air, unlimited by hot, dusty walks, or high close fences? Go into the forest in Autumn, or walk into the field of newly cut grain, or seek the thick marshes where the wild rose has left myriads of bright red berries, and the path is matted with every variety of wild grass—what a feast for the lover of art? And such a variety of ornaments as can be made to adorn the household during the cold months of Winter!

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

A STATEMENT FOR MY CRITICS.

The following clipping is from the "Items Personal, Etc." of the ADVOCATE of two weeks ago.

"We cut out several thrusts at Bro. Harding, made by brethren asking him why he did not go to poor and destitute places to preach, relying on the Lord. We took the liberty of cutting these out, because I know they were unjust, and I believe those brethren did not desire to do him an injustice, but were mistaken. He is now down in a field that they can learn how true the charges are.

It has been in my mind for some time to give in detail an account of my work, receipts, expenditures, etc., in order to correct certain erroneous notions that prevail on the subject. Not that I have any personal concern as to what people may think about me, only in so far as their thoughts may effect them for good or for evil; but I desire that my experience may benefit others, as it has me, by increasing their faith. A brother said to me recently, "Your theory about the support of evangelist will not work." I replied, "It has worked with me for years." "O yes," said he, "but you write for the ADVOCATE, and have preached from the lakes to the gulf, and, being thus known, wealthy brethren and strong churches minister to your wants."

When I began this work I had been preaching less than two years and had no reputation as a preacher with any church that was able to help me (or, at least, that thought itself able to help) but one, and I left that one, turning my engagement over to another man, to evangelize in one of the very poor regions of Kentucky. Frequently after six or eight weeks work, I have returned home having received scarcely enough money to pay my traveling expenses. That was in the beginning of my work; now it is not uncommon after laboring for a month or two in some region to find that those with whom I have labored have not paid the expenses by ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty dollars. When I have a traveling companion and fellow laborer, as Bro. Daugherty, the expenses are greatly increased and we are particularly liable to have them run up on us. By way of illustration I will give a report of the month of January just past. We expended for traveling expenses, books, advertisements, etc., $37.10; and received from those with whom we were laboring $1.50. Our expenditures above what we received from the field of work were $35.60. How then did we get along? you ask. Well, I'll tell you. On my way down here I spent the night with a brother who handed me ten dollars as I was about to leave him; his wife gave me three: upon stopping at the ADVOCATE office, I learned that I had sent in six dollars too much in sending in a list of names; they refunded the money: upon going to the station to take the train for another point, after having tried for three weeks to hold some meetings among a few poor brethren, but having been frustrated for the most part by cold, rain, snow and mud, I received through the mail a check for twenty-five dollars from a Kentucky disciple, who wrote, "as the weather is gloomy in Alabama perhaps you will not receive much and may need some money to pay expenses." It was well for us that he was so thoughtful, for, had it not been for his check, which I cashed on the spot, we could not both have gone to the next appointment without borrowing money. After this, another Kentuckian, a business man, happening to pass by, stopped in at one of our meetings. Upon leaving, he left ten dollars "to help along the cause." Leaving out the six dollars which were mine before, we received $49.50 from all sources, for our labor, and expended in the work $37.10; leaving us for our labor $12.40. Bro. Daugherty was with me about half the time. "But," some one is ready to say, $12.40, or your part of it, is not enough to support your family for a month!" Certainly not; but I had my board bill partly paid for the month before coming to Alabama, and hence got along very well. If I had needed more, I would have received it. It is not necessary for a man to be carrying money about in his pockets that he has no need for; the Father furnishes it as it is needed. He always sends a sufficiency too, and sends it by the time it is needed, though sometimes my faith almost gives way. It is hard to wait patiently and undoubtingly when you are hundreds of miles from home, without a dollar, preaching in a little log school-house back in the woods among a half dozen or so of brethren every one of whom is poor, and every one of whom, probably, thinks that you, being a Kentuckian from the "Blue grass," are rich,—it is hard to trust unfalteringly under such circumstances, especially, when at such a time a letter comes from one's wife saying, "My money is about out, and I don't expect you can send me any, but if I can get some sewing I will try to run matters here for awhile." Your meeting closes. You start for the train without money enough to pay your way to the next point (unless you borrow, or make your wants known, neither of which should be done;) upon reaching the station, where is also the post office, you receive a check for twenty-five dollars, and then, a letter from your wife saying, "I have received a few dollars on an old debt of yours, and have made a little money by sewing, and therefore, my dear, you need not be disturbed about me."

Your fellow laborer looks at you in delight and amazement and says, "Is it not wonderful that it always works so with us." You laugh a little and then in spite of yourself turn away and weep a little, and think "Surely I will deserve to be killed, if ever I doubt His loving kindness and tender mercy, or grow weary of waiting." When I began this evangelizing work, I was a little in debt. The debt was soon paid, and we have realized that every real want has been supplied all through the years; but, except in paying the debt, and in buying some books that I have needed, I have not made nine dollars in nine years. I do not speak complainingly; God forbid! I ask no more for the years to come; the more a man does for God, the more of his time and energies and money he expends in his service the richer he is.

So far as I remember, I have not at any time received help from any who do not know me personally, and who do not feel indebted to me, except in two cases. Two brethren sent me five dollars each through the ADVOCATE office. No church, as a church, has at any time assisted me, if my memory is correct, except my home congregation. I held them a meeting of two weeks last year and they paid me for about five weeks work. For the most part, the support has come from the poor.

In the last nine years I have held about one hundred and ten protracted meetings, varying in length from ten days to seven weeks; at least half of these were held in poor districts where the brethren think they do extra well if they pay five dollars per week to the evangelist for their meeting.

It may be that some strong churches upon reading this will decide to call Bro. Harding for a meeting "that we may help him." I have more calls of that kind than I know what to do with, and don't want any more of them. If you have plenty of money you can secure preaching without any trouble; send for some other body. As for your help, you may be perfectly serene about that, for I will get all that I need whether you help or not. I am certain that my motives in writing this will be misconstrued, and that mercenary considerations will be attributed to me; but that in no wise moves me; if some young man by reading this has his heart stirred as mine was upon reading the biography of Samuel Rogers; if his attention is fixed by it upon the precious promises of our Lord, so that he may be induced to give himself wholly, body, soul and spirit, to the grand work, I will have accomplished enough to counterbalance all such evil surmisings.

Some other brother, earnest and good, upon reading this may feel like rushing at once to the rescue of the editor of the KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT; but let him keep cool; the said editor has money enough just now, or he would not be writing on this subject. It would be wiser for the brother to look about him for needs; let him help the preacher who is laboring for the destitute in his own county, or the orphans and widows at his own door. When he has ministered to the real wants that he sees, if he has any surplus change (which is not likely to be the case) he may, think of more remote sections. So far am I from asking help from the brotherhood that I can say I neither need nor desire it, only from those who from a personal knowledge of me and my work desire a partnership in it.

I have written these lines because the effect of my writings concerning God's providential care has been to some extent neutralized by the impression that I am continually laboring in towns and cities among the rich and strong churches. Such is not, nor has ever been the case. But I have labored much more for strong churches than I expect ever to do again. It seems to me that it would be better to go where we have no congregation, and by engaging in some secular calling support one's self and family while building up the cause, than to "take charge of a strong church," or to spend one's time wholly in holding protracted meetings for such churches.

END OF THE KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

Give our girls a chance. They need money and the discipline of earning it as much as the boys. There are fewer employments open to them; they have less chance for their lives. Help them to help themselves. If they have a natural taste or talent for any particular work educate them for it and let them do it, even if it necessitates the hiring of a girl to take their place in the kitchen. In this way the practical value of girls is apt to be realized; there is nothing so convincing as an appeal to the pocket book. If the daughter shows no special inclination toward any particular branch of industry, but to serve and save at home pay them for their work. It amounts to the same thing in the end; you buy their clothes for them, and you pay for them, and they make their own purchases; and so, in reality their greatest gain is independence, in self-reliance, in good judgment in purchasing, in decision of character. They are personally interested in spending their earnings wisely and economically, and in making every dollar do its duty. It is not calculated to foster one's self-respect to be obliged to ask of a father or mother money for every postage stamp, shoe lace, or box of hair pins.

We may not add a hair's breadth to the seamless robe of Christ's righteousness, but we may be allowed, by obedience to God's commandments, to add the beauty of a graceful fringe, and so to "adorn the doctrines of our Lord and Savior by pious and godly conversation."—P. Henson.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

We notice Bro. Geo. H. Morgan, from Gainesboro, among the callers at our office.

Bro. Jas. S. Bell has removed from Bradfordsville, Ky., to Lynnvillle, Ill., and will work with the church there.

Bro. Jesse Sewell and his son Joseph, of Gatesville, Mo., were in the office this week. Bro. Sewell is improving, but still not strong.

Bro. Johnson Harding, of South Tunnell, Tenn., is now in Louisville, and may be addressed at 2511 Portland Avenue, until further notice.

The Christian Advocate, Methodist, of this city, added to its circulation last year 7,000. And they propose to do greater things this year. We added to our list last year over 1,000. Cannot we double that number the present year? We ought to be as earnest as Methodists.

Bro. Hugh B. Todd has removed to the city for the present. He appears as fresh, as active, and as energetic as though a youth of 25. He left McMinnville on account of the unfavorable influence the location seemed to have on Sister Todd's health. She is asthmatic.

Bro. Bobo, of Bedford, Texas, writes:

I am seventy years old and severely afflicted. I hope my afflictions will work humility and patience in me, that I may be the better prepared for the great change when it comes. I hope you may live long to battle for the truth.

Married, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Giles county, on Tuesday, January 28th, 1884, by Elder H. C. Abernathy, Mr. W. H. Gibbons and Miss Mattie White. We trust that they may never reach the frigid zone of connubial happiness, but that their hearts may always be warmed by the tropical sun of reciprocal love.

Bro. Stevens, of Columbus, Miss., writes:

"The ADVOCATE has improved immensely of late, or I am more appreciate; guess it must be some of both. If one fourth of the thousand 'unemployed' preachers of our church in the West could come to Mississippi, they would find sufficient missionary work to keep them busy for several years. We need evangelists in this State badly."

We are pleased to learn that Bro. W. W. Litton, who was sent to school to Bro. Larimore, to aid him in obtaining an education, by the congregation at Pinewood, Tennessee, has made a satisfactory settlement with them for the money they paid for him. We mentioned this case last summer in the ADVOCATE, and intimated a doubt about this being done. But we are glad to state upon authority of the brethren at Pinewood, that a satisfactory settlement of the matter has been made with them by Bro. Litton.

Bro. R. T. Lanier, of Comer, Alabama, writes:

"Can't you, or some competent man, gather up all of Bro. Creath's writings, and publish them in book form. I would give more for the book, than I would for any book of the kind that was ever published. The trouble here, is, our brethren do not read enough. Every brother that reads the ADVOCATE is a zealous worker in the Master's vineyard. Those who do not read are lazy Christians, if Christians at all. I tell them that God does not bless, or like lazy Christians. Your paper is better now than ever before."

We confidently believe that the best preaching that can be done to a church, for the cost, is to put a good religious paper in the hands of every member of the church—a paper that urges prompt and faithful service to God in all of his appointments. To any church that will do this, or to any church that will furnish the ADVOCATE to those not able to take it, we will offer special inducements. We intend to try to make it better and still better, and ask the help of every friend in extending the circulation.

We have lost, in our office, a letter from Bro. Kendrick, near Corinth, Miss., correcting Bro. Metcalfe's statements concerning the condition of the churches in that country. He mentions six or eight churches in Alcorn county, and several in adjoining counties. They are not strong, but active, growing churches, and several of them promise well. We read the letter and marked it from "Bro. Booth's Notes," but it has disappeared. We regret it as we know the Bro. Kendricks are doing a good work, and are building up the churches in their section of country. We know, too, that no one will be more pleased to know the report was worse than the truth justified, than Bro. Metcalfe.

Bro. Munnell says those same old objections to, and arguments against the Societies, that were answered, and exposed, and demolished a score of years ago, are now brought forth as though they were new. As an explanation of the phenomenon, we publish the following extract from a sermon of Dr. Parker, of London:

"They left Paul, 'supposing he had been dead.' That is a common mistake about Christianity itself. Many a time has Christianity been stoned and drawn out of the city, and thrown into the ditch, 'supposed to be dead.' Paul recovered his consciousness. He was blinded and stunned, but not killed. So, to the joy of the little circle of weeping disciples, he got up and stood upon his feet—a kind of resurrection before the time! Take it as a typical instance, and regard it as teaching the impossibility of killing truth. You may 'suppose it to be dead,' but the error is in the supposition. Whatever is true rises again. It may be thrown down; it may be kept upon bread and water; it may be spat upon; it may be thrust through with a dart; over it all hell may have a moment's laugh,—but it finds its feet again!"

Were every man, woman and child in the world to enter into a solemn league and covenant that these objections are answered, dead, and buried, yet in less than twenty years they would all be on their feet, bristling with life and vigor. If these were to hold their peace, the very stones would cry out.

LITERARY.

Vick's Monthly Magazine, with beautiful colored Plate and other illustrations, is worth the subscription price several times over, to every amateur gardener. $1.25 cts. a year, Address James Vick & Co., Rochester, N. Y.

The Century for February opens with an illustrated sketch of GUSTAVE COURBET, Artist and Communist. Other articles of interest are "Merinos in America," illustrated, by R. E. Robinson; "The Convict Lease System of the Southern States," by Geo. W. Cable; "The Princes of the House of Orleans," by Geo. B. McLellan; "Artistic Help in Divine Service," by Chas. W. Robinson.

"Garden and Farm Topics," by Peter Henderson, with a portrait of the author, contains much information on a variety of subjects connected with the farm and garden. In another column, we give an extract on growing cuttings, that may be profitable to our lady friends, who prize their plants more highly when they grow them, themselves. Price $1.50 cts. Peter Henderson & Co., New York.

The Nursery, with its lovely pictures, is always a much welcome visitor to the little folks. The contents of the February number are "Grandmother's Clock," "Scamp and his Pupil, Psyche," "How Birds use their Bills," "The Path by the River," "Four Years Old," "Helms' Daisy," "A Goose Flying a Kite," "The Candy Pulling," "A Valentine," "The Nest in the Mail Box, C. O. D.," "Beppo," "The Queer Couple." The Russell Publishing Company, Boston.

The printed catalogue contains 4000 lots.—During the past year 2,362 new buildings have been erected in Baltimore, making the total number of structures in the city 64,060. The principal growth has been in a northwest direction.—Mrs. B. F. Dennison, wife of Judge Dennison, of Vancouver, Washington Territory, has been appointed Notary Public, and is the first woman to hold the position in that Territory.—The postmaster-General is preparing a bill which it is proposed to have introduced in Congress, to exclude newspapers publishing lottery advertisements from the pound rate.

FOREIGN.—Vienna has a society which renders assistance to boys and girls who on leaving school wish to enter any trade, and who have no one else to help or advise them. The children are looked after both as regards their moral and intellectual development.—A bookseller at Glenoe, Canada, put $440 in bills in a stove for safe-keeping, and during the recent cold snap it helped kindle a fire.—The bodies of DeLong and his comrades in the Jeannette expedition have reached Hamburg. Funeral services are to be held preparatory to the departure for America.—The directors of the Mexican Central railroad announce that the road will be completed to the United States by the middle of March, and open to traffic between the first and fifteenth of April.—A convention of farmers at Carlow, Ireland, denounced Lord Rossmore and orangemen. They resolved to prohibit hunting on lands of farmers, and if necessary to prevent it, farmers say they will poison their grounds. The steamer Faraday, bearing the new cable to America, returned disabled, the chain becoming entangled with the propeller.—Nearly $15,000,000 worth of real estate, belonging to the Propaganda, will be sold and invested in Italian bonds in trust for the Propaganda. The Pope has decided to communicate the fact to all Catholic powers as a new attack against his independence.—Baker Pasha has been defeated near Tokar, and his army cut to pieces. He escaped with the remainder to Trinkitat.—The Spanish Government prohibits the meeting of the Republicans announced to take place on the 11th, in commemoration of the proclamation of the Republic Feb. 11th, 1873.

In The Morning.

The day is before me for bliss or for woe,
For toil or for waiting, how little I know;
The day is before me, dear Savior divine,
I pray thee upon it in beauty to shine.

Wherever I go, be my errand for thee;
Wherever I look, there thy poor let me see;
Whatever I say, be the words in thy name;
On the thoughts of my heart breathe thy spirit of flame.

Uphold me in weakness, for thine is the power.
My death with thy fulness in benisons dower;
Restore me when fainting, withdraw me from ill,
And stir me to praise thee whate'er be thy will.

I would run in thy service, yet grieve not to stand
With folded hands quiet, if such thy command.
All trials I pray thee to sweeten and bless,
Nor suffer my faith, dearest Lord, to grow less.

Oh, fain would I bring to the place of thy feet
Some pilgrim who knows not that hallowed retreat.
Oh, fain would I bring, where the perishing are,
Of Jesus, my dayspring, my sun, and my star.

The day is before me, dear Lord, let me break
Its bread in contentment and peace for thy sake
And this be my glory, my joy and my crown,
All things on thine alter, to gladly lay down.

ANGER AND ENVY—TWO EVIL PASSIONS.

"I'll break down his grape-vine swing—I'll tear it all to pieces!" cried Phil in a rage.

"What's the matter, my boy?" said grandfather gently, but quickly catching a hand and holding it with a firm grasp as Phil tried to rush past him.

"He's been spiting me, and I'll spite him. Let go, grandfather—please!"—Phil struggled to free his hand.

"But let me hear something about it first, Phil. Sit down here with me. Whom do you want to spite and why? There will be plenty of time to do it then, you know!"

It was very hard for the angry little boy to wait, but grandfather was too good a friend to have his wishes disregarded.

"Why, sir, I made a dam out in the little creek where Harry Danforth and I play—and I made a little water-wheel and put it in and it worked beautifully—you ought just to have seen it!—and now Harry's been and broke up my dam and carried off the wheel."

"Are you sure Harry did it?"

"Why—yes, sir. No one but he and I play there."

"Did you see him do it?"

"No, but I know he did, and I'm bound to break down his vine-swing to pay him up, and to teach him to let my things alone."

"Spiting is a poor business, Phil, I tried it once myself when I was a boy. Indeed, I suppose I tried it more than once, but that one time I remember so well I think it was the last, for I never forgot the lesson it taught me."

"Tell me about it, please grandfather—I mean tell the story."

"I had a boy friend with whom I played as much as you play with Harry Danforth. Our homes were near together and we were fond of sharing with each other whatever we had which could be shared."

"We were both very fond of gardening, and kept up a friendly rivalry as to who should be able to show the finest roses and violets and marigolds and poppies—we had very few geraniums and verbenas in those days, and what you call pansies now we used to call Johnny-jump-ups. We always divided whatever seeds or slips we had, and it was a great thing when either of us got anything new, which only came about through some one giving us something, for there were fewer green-houses then, and people were not given so much to spending money for everything. Neighbors used to exchange among each other what they had."

"Well, I was greatly surprised one day going over to Rob's to find he had two fuschias. They were rare flowers then—some one had sent them to him from quite a distance—and how we both admired the graceful, drooping stems, the shining leaves, and the one or two buds which gave promise to future beauty. He was much elated at having the only ones in the neighborhood; but I fully expected him to give one of them to me. You may imagine, then, that I felt angry and astonished at his seeming to have no thought of anything of the kind, although I had only the day before given him more than half I had of some white peony bulbs, which were considered very choice indeed.

"I thought the fuschias the most beautiful things I had ever seen, as they bloomed on with their lovely clusters of scarlet bells, and every time I saw them I felt crosser at Bob for keeping both himself."

"I did not stop to consider that I had really no right to expect it of him, but allowed my feelings of envy and anger to grow in my heart in a way which many have found the cause of sore trouble. Try, my dear boy, never to let such feelings get the upper hand of you. Stamp them down and cast them out, for if you do not master them they will master you. I got pretty well punished for harboring them as I did, but not perhaps as severely as I deserved."

"I got sullen and could not play or work harmoniously with Bob any longer, so I was glad when I was sent to spend two or three weeks with my uncle who lived a few miles distant. I walked back home on the morning of my birthday, and, passing by where Bob lived, stopped before the gate to see if I could get a glimpse of the fuschias. I could only see one under a tree where Bob had placed it for shade, and I was amazed to see how it had grown and what a beauty it was in its full perfection of June bloom."

"But the ugly, covetous feeling within me arose so strongly that I only felt more and more angry that Bob should have a thing so much finer than anything I had. Hardly thinking what I did, to give vent to my spite I picked up a little stone and flung it toward it. I aimed truer than I expected, and the next moment the glorious plant lay over on its side, the stalk broken short off not far from the root."

"I shrank away in dismay. No one, I was sure, had seen me, but if the whole world had been looking on I could not have felt more bitterly ashamed. I reached home and found it hard to put on a decent face to answer all the kind wishes for my birthday, and to seem pleased with my presents. Bob was there with the brightest face among them. I couldn't bear to look at him, but he didn't stop to notice how I tried to avoid him."

"Come into the garden," he said, as soon as the others had said their say. I could not refuse to go, but in my shame and confusion I hardly understood his eager chatter."

"I've been keeping it for a birthday present," the dear fellow was saying. "It's been all I could do, I tell you, to wait so long—I used to have to bite my tongue to keep from saying, 'Here, Jack, of course this is for you.' I picked out the prettiest for you—ain't they just splendid, though?"

There in the centre of a round bed in my garden, with a decoration around it of moss he had brought from the woods, was the other fuchsia, larger and more laden with bloom than the one I ruined for him."

"As he tenderly laid his hand under a cluster of the flowers, lifting them up for me to see, I threw myself on the ground and cried with all my might."

Phil drew a sigh to relieve the pent-up feeling with which he had listened to grandfather's story.

"I am glad I wasn't you, grandfather," he energetically remarked. "I wouldn't a-been you for anything! What did you do?"

"Well, I did about the only thing, I suppose, which a boy who ordinarily aimed to be a decent boy could do—told Bob all about it. Of course he forgave me at once. He came over to our house the next morning to tell me his broken fuchsia would sprout again from the root and after a while be as good as ever. And I thought and still think it was most generous in him to consent when I begged him to let me have the broken plant and give back the perfect one."

"I think so, too," said Phil.

"Now, little boy, long after grandfather has gone to where anger and envy never enter, I want you to remember how he counseled you never to take offense without good cause. And if you find you have good cause, do not give way to anger, but try to overcome, by the help of the dear Lord who says: 'Do good to them which despitefully use you.' It is noble and manly to cultivate Christ's spirit of forgiveness—"

"There's Harry, now!" cried Phil, as a bright little boy-face peeped through the fence pickets. "Wait a minute, grandfather, I just want to see what he's doing with that piece of my wheel."

Harry came up to the piazza.

"See what our Pont did, Phil!" he said, with a face of concern, holding up the fragment.

"Did Ponto do it?"

"Yes, I found him playing with this, and Mike saw him in the water near your dam. Mike says he's a water dog. Papa says he's a great overgrown pup that must be shut up if he does any more mischief."

"Let's go down and build another dam, Harry—come on."

Both went off on a run. But Phil presently dashed back to whisper to his grandfather:

"I'm awful glad I didn't spoil his grape swing. And I'm going to remember all about the anger—and things."—Sydney Dayre, in N. Y. Observer.

HEAVENLY-MINDEDNESS.

We live in too great hurry, and our very religion has about it often that quick, nervous way that seems to be a reminder that the shortest road to the end is to be promptly taken, and that the Lord cannot have but a limited time and space in every day. Let there be system, of course, but religion and rest go together, and "he that believeth shall not make haste." When the home atmosphere is religious, and the conversation is seasoned therewith, the children will grow up considering the high problems of personal duty and destiny, and will not hasten from godly speech and act as if the subject were too unpleasant for consideration. We have been privileged to know a few people, who were so sweetly abiding in Christ, that their heavenly-mindedness was manifest to all. It has been to us not only a rare pleasure but a high privilege to sit at their feet and hear them talk of Him, so affectionately, wisely, and reverently. We have discovered in their very speech a scriptural style, which told the source whence they got their sublime thoughts, and whose quaintness was an added charm; and we long for a revival of the old class-meetings, and the disposition to talk on religious themes so common in our boyhood, but now so seldom heard. A church full of heavenly-minded people would be a power now, since its opposite so largely prevails, and we hope that a revival in the church of true and heart-felt religion will not long be delayed. As soon as our people are found groaning for it the time will come, for "the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."

THINGS TO THINK.—Great things are not accomplished by idle dreams, but by years of patient study. They that do nothing are in the readiest way to do that which is worse than nothing. Be happy if you can, but do not despise those who are otherwise, for you know not their trouble. Every person has two educations—one which he receives from others and one more important which he gives himself. It many times falls out that we deem ourselves much deceived by others because we first deceive ourselves. He who is false to the present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause. If you are going to do a good thing, do it now; if you are going to do a mean thing wait till to-morrow.

A sweet mother on whom the storms of life had fallen with all the sharpness and severity that can be well imagined, when once asked how she kept her soul in peace, how she won so easily the love and obedience of each of her ten delightful children, replied: "Perhaps because I pray for a mother's crowning grace—patience."—Christian Register.

The best thing to give to your enemy is forgiveness; to an opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example, to a father, deference; to your mother conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity.—Mrs. Balfour.

Prayer in the morning is the key that opens to us God's mercies and blessings. Prayer in the evening is the key that shuts us up under his protection and safe-guard.

Those languid, tiresome sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity, driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstruction of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over seventy years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, in Providence.

BRADFORD, PA., May 8, 1875.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

WILL GOD SAVE THE HONEST, WHETHER THEY DO JUST WHAT HE COMMANDS OR NOT?

All that men can know about this matter, is just what the Lord tells us. And he has never told us in one single instance that he will save any except those who do his will. If it shall turn out to be right that some who do not do his will shall be saved, it will be certain to be done. But this matter is wholly with the Lord, and he has not told us anything about it. It is not very easy to discover how men who have the word of God, and know how to read it, and have strictly honest hearts can fail to understand what God would have them do. The same book that tells us of God, and of heaven, and of the plan of salvation provided through our Lord Jesus Christ, tells with equal plainness what we are required to do in order to be saved. And where the Bible is not, nothing is known of salvation any way. The New Testament tells us what Jesus did to prepare the plan of salvation in language as plain as any thing was ever told to humanity. None who read Matthew, Mark, Luke or John can fail to understand that Jesus died, shed his blood for many for the remission of sins, was buried, and rose again from the dead. Nothing was ever more plainly, or more intelligibly told than the story of the cross is told by these men. And in the commission as given by these men, and in Acts of apostles, the conditions upon which men were to be saved, are expressed with equal plainness. And in the immediate connection with the conditions upon which we are to be saved we are plainly told that if we do not do them we shall be condemned. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Who that can understand the gospel, the plan of salvation, can fail to understand these declarations of the Son of God?

Again, all men are commanded to repent, and Jesus says, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Repentance and remission of sins were to be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. All these things are just as plain as language can make them. And in these things what room is there for a sincere, honest heart to make a mistake—to fail to understand them? So when brethren apologize for the honestly mistaken in the matter of becoming a Christian, it must be upon the principle that when they, with honest hearts, and with the word of God before them, and with all the advantages at their command to understand the truth, and with the very best efforts they can make, they still fail to understand just what God would have them do. Some of our good brethren presume that this will be the case with some, and they seem, if possible, more anxious to make out some way by which God will save this class, than they are to make known the plain word of the Lord, by which he promises with the most perfect certainty to save all who do what he requires. We do not see any reason why any who have mind enough to be responsible, and who entirely free themselves from prejudice, should fail to understand; nor is there any intimation in the word of God that there will be any such; and hence there is no intimation that any will be saved, except in obedience to the truth, to the plain requirements made in the gospel of Christ.

For any man to claim that there are any such cases, is for him to simply express his own opinion, where there is no expression of the word of God. And then for any one to say not only that there are such, but that the Lord will save them anyhow, though they have not fully obeyed him, is purely a matter of presumption. The word of God nowhere says any such thing. And for a man to say so is virtually to apologize for sin, for rebellion against God. We think it both dangerous and sinful for any preacher to intimate that God will forgive the sins of any except in accordance with the teaching of the apostles, as recorded in the New testament.

When Jesus was sending out his apostles, he said to them, "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained," John xx: 23. This is a very definite and full expression. "Whose soever sins ye remit." This most certainly means that the apostles were to forgive sins, not by their own power, but through the gospel, by preaching it to them, and inducing them to obey it. They could save no soul as men. The power to save is in the gospel, and only those who obey the gospel have the promise of being saved by it. This passage, therefore, plainly shows that none will be saved except through the gospel as preached by the apostles. Jesus also said, "Whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained." The apostles, as men, could not retain sins. Therefore the expression must mean that only those could be saved who would receive and obey the gospel as preached by the apostles. These two classes again embrace all. Some were to be forgiven, and some not. Those to be forgiven, were to be forgiven, by the apostles. This plainly indicates that God has no other plan of forgiving men than through the gospel as proclaimed by the apostles. How then are those going to be saved that do not do what the gospel requires? There is no other plan of saving men revealed, except the gospel, and none can be saved by it except those who obey. Paul says when Christ comes to judge the world, he will take "vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." How then, and by what plan, are any going to be saved except those who do what God says? Those who say they will, say so upon their own responsibility, and are adding to the word of God when they do so. Preachers should be satisfied to say just what God says, and promise just what he promises, and stop at that. When they say more, they say it upon their own responsibility, and at their own peril. They have no right to preach any such thing. All such preaching as this, so far as it has any influence at all upon those in error, only has a tendency to lull them to sleep in their errors, instead of leading them out. Every time a preacher argues that God will save those in error for their honesty, he weakens his power to get them out of error. He blots out more and more the line of distinction between truth and error, justifies error more and more, and lessens more and more the necessity for all to obey the plain truth in order to be saved. Yet our own brethren do these things sometimes. We heard one do some of this very recently.

While it would be very congenial to our feelings to save all who want to be saved, it is not for us to promise salvation to any except to such as God promises to save.

So far as being saved through honesty is concerned, Paul had just as high claims to that as any man can have now, when he was persecuting the church. He says he verily thought he ought to do it. Yet he tells us afterwards that he was chief of sinners, and that he obtained mercy because he did it ignorantly, in unbelief. So far from his honesty saving him when he did contrary to the will of God, it only opened the way for him to obtain pardon, when he obeyed the truth, which could not have been done but for his honesty. But had he continued through life, as thousands of the Jews did, to persecute the church, rejecting the gospel, then how? Suppose the Lord had not determined to make an apostle out of him, and had just allowed him to go on in his persecutions as he did others, would he then have been saved? Most certainly not, when he was chief of sinners, as he himself said. Who then is safe in error? Men should leave off these opinions, and preach the word of God, and then all would be well. It is therefore, certain that none have the promise of salvation except those whose sins are remitted by the apostles, that is by the gospel which they preached, and as they preached it.

The same may be said of practical Christianity. No one has the promise of heaven except those who live as the word of God directs. The same apostles who taught so plainly the first principles of the oracles of God, have taught with equal plainness the individual work of Christians. Those who do these things have the promise of everlasting life. When Christians, through the weakness of the flesh, do wrong, God has, through the apostles, given a law of pardon, through which the humble, penitent, erring child of God may obtain pardon. And this is just as certain in its results as the law of the gospel is in making Christians. But there is no promise that the Christian will be pardoned who does not comply with this law. And as the promise of heaven is only to the obedient, to those who do his commandments, where is evidence that any will be saved otherwise? There is none. If, however, it should turn out that it will be right for any others to be saved, the Lord will do it. But that is his business, and not ours. It is the business of preachers to preach the word of God in all its fullness, and urge upon all men the importance of obeying it. But whenever a preacher leaves off this work, and tries to show that God will save some without implicit obedience, he leaves his proper work, and launches out on forbidden ground. This is precisely the principle that brought such ruin upon the ancient Jews. Their leaders, as God said, caused them to err. This they did by teaching them that something else would do for the service of God, besides doing just what he commanded. And little by little they led them away, till God brought the heathen upon them, and carried them out of their own land. We, as a people, have been fighting these very things among the denominations for the last half century. And now some are turning back and tearing down the very work we have so long been trying to build up. Brethren, please don't do this. Let us go on building up the truth, and leave others to tear down, if nothing else will do them.

MURDER! MURDER! MURDER!

A member of the Congress of the United States shoots down a man whom he suspicions as the seducer of his wife. There had been some indiscreet conduct on the part of the two, but there is so much of this in high life that much allowance can be made for it. It appears that the wife was anxious to go to the theatre, drank with avidity champagne, came back to the hotel drunk. The two men had been long strong friends, and were kinsmen. It is true a real friend should regard himself the guardian of the interests of the absent one, and the protector of the same. Murder and adultery are fast damning our land. Of these we wish to speak.

Understand the man who used the pistol upon this occasion was a grave Congressman, a law maker. This celebrity has received letters and telegrams from all parts of the United States, from fellow Congressmen, and other law-makers, judges, lawyers, all endorsing his action; and the Courier-Journal, a paper read all over the South, says "there was nothing else left for the aggrieved to do but kill the accused." Here we have the action and advice of law-makers of the United States of America. The aforementioned popular paper claims to be trying to stop so much murder in our country. It is a small thing to shoot down a man in our time. Here is an act committed in high places, and endorsed by men of influence. Do they mean to say, "Stop, all you poor, ignorant fellows; turn the job over to the educated, the refined, the rich; let these last have all rights and privileges to redden their hands with gore; they can do the work better?" This is not a land without law and executors of the same. All that is considered crime is punishable by law, unless the guilty rascal has money enough or friends enough to buy up the mercenary judges, jury, sheriff, and solicitor. If a man is guilty of seduction, it is regarded in law a high crime and misdemeanor, and the law will reach this. What think ye of a man who votes for and makes laws against murder, and swears to keep them, then faces right about and commits the highest crime known to the great catalogue of criminality? This is in keeping with the conduct of such men all over the United States, and especially in Washington. Law-makers are guilty of drunkenness, debauchery, gambling, adultery, not to say a word about venality, perjury, and all the dishonest tricks so clearly connected with the corrupt politics of to-day. How can the stream—the people—be pure when the fountain—the law-makers—is so dreadfully corrupt? Some may plead, "Oh! you would do the same under the impulse of the moment." There are so many men of influence and power excused these days through sympathy, and so many set free on the score of idiocy, that it may be said that the twelve men, whose sworn duty it is to carry out the law, are excusers, instead of jurors. A jurymen's oath is about the consistency of a mush poultice. He forgets that he is not a law-maker, but takes it in his own hands, and "Whom he will, he condemneth; and whom he will, he finds guilty."

"Higher law!" "Unwritten law!" Really, I did not think that Southern men ever talk such nonsense. The righteous Yankees precipitated the war with their higher law than the Bible or constitution.

Now we are told that it is right to slay the seducer of one's wife. The mob is justly condemned because they take the law in their own hands. Why not censure one man for so doing under any circumstances? How can we have law and order so long as the most popular journals, and best lawyers and statesmen, justify a man who takes it upon himself to execute the law for himself? If it is right for a husband to kill the seducer, then amend the law. "Be it enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful, right and just for any man to shoot down the seducer of his wife as he would a bear or hyena." Ah! but these saintly men say there is no other way of preserving the purity of the marriage-bed but by blood. When Lucretia would vindicate the honor of her bed, she poured out her own blood upon it. The blood of others has never purged it of its awful defilement from that day to this. I hint to men that about as good way as any to keep their chambers pure and happy, as the stronger vessels, lay their wives examples of virtue. Has any wrong been righted by this murder? Is any one better for its occurrence? Certainly a bad example has been laid to the youth of our land, and some very bad lessons taught. If the editor of the Courier-Journal and the murderer were asked if they believed in the Bible, they would answer yes. Do you believe the purity of the marriage-bed would suffer if its holy laws were carried out? Not at all. Then why not pursue the course that an all-wise God marks out? There are times when man, with his feeble judgment, knows not what to do. The ancients, under such circumstances, consulted an oracle—a fallible one; but we can turn to one whose maker is God.

It is admitted that those who learn of the great Master, and do his will, are wise in the eyes of heaven and earth. Admit that in this case the gravest of wrongs had been committed, and I have no apology to make for one man's having anything to do with another man's wife, then what should have been done? "Overcome evil with good," said Paul. You may say, "Oh! nobody follows that law." That is not the question. Is it not a good law, and one worthy of service? Would it not be better for all to follow it? If so, why write it where the old and the young will see it, that there is an unwritten law, a law that ranks all law. Well, try the case strictly by the laws of any State in the Union. The codes of the States define the different degrees of murder. What would they be? It was not a case in which the man's life was threatened, or was in any way endangered. He thought he was aggrieved, and, as said before, settled the case as judge and jury, and as sheriff executed the verdict of his own excited mind. Is this right, be the man Senator or hod-carrier? The laws of the land have decided that twelve discreet men shall sit in judgment when life is threatened. Even then injustice is done. How absurd for one man to think he has the right to settle it all himself! Remember this is no exasperated youth, but a wise Congressman. He should have settled this in a way that all who learn of it should be able to point to it as a wise example. Murder is too common; strange any one can find apologists. Even the James boys could find sympathizers among respectable people.

I read of a young Englishman who did a deed, and ran away to America. After long years he returned, and found his father one of the judges on the bench. The old man loved his son, but he loved stern justice more, and ordered his son to trial, where he was convicted and condemned. This was carrying justice to an extreme, some may say; but there are so many trying to screen "me and mine," it is refreshing to learn that there have been men who could rise above such smallness, and stand on the side of law and order, even against their own interests.

If husbands are, according to the high authority we have mentioned, their own protectors and vindicators, then the thousand or two jealous husbands who read the Courier-Journal are encouraged and incited to avenge their imaginary wrongs, and purify their marriage-beds, by the unwritten law of pistols and bullets. Remember this law ranks Bible, constitutions, and statutes. Not only so, but these green-eyed hubbies have the example of an illustrious statesman, a Congressman. And they have the endorsement of other Senators, Congressmen, and men of renown all over the United States. Not only so, but if blood alone purifies the aforesaid couch, just so long as no blood has been shed, the defilement is there, and the husband is guilty before all those who take the unwritten law as their guide. Then these things being so, to be a man somebody must be killed. Nothing left to be done, so bang goes the gun, and the death shot purifies the stain. Human life is cheap stuff in America. One crazy loon shot an innocent not long ago just this way. Punish a few cases where men dare trample the law of the land, and it will have a salutary effect. The best way to manage a school is to make the big boys act best. It seems the same will hold good in law. Make the educated, the rich, the refined, and especially law-makers, judges, lawyers, sheriffs, behave best of all, and when they fail, hold them to the strict account. The solicitor of our district, while pleading at the bar, last year, challenged any one to show a case on the records of Alabama, in which a rich man had been punished for killing another man. This is enough to embitter the lower classes, and it does have an unwholesome effect upon them. The law is intended to restrain the maddened passions of men; and insure the lives of others against outbursts of fury. But the law must have the moral support of those under it to make it effective. Man's law and God's law are both respected, as far as it suits the people, and then it is trampled upon by some as though they were ordained by children in their play-houses. Is this a growing evil in our land? Then how must it be checkmated? Friends of law must insist that it be carried out; then none will dare disregard it, or heedlessly set it aside.

J. M. BARNES.

Brethren L. & S.: I am just emerging from winter quarters with this warm February weather, and thought I would drop a few lines to the Advocate. I visited last year the congregations worshipping at Bethel, Simpson county, Ky.; Auburn, Logan county, Ky.; Rochester, Butler county, Ky.; and Pleasant Valley, Ohio county, Ky., each once a month. Have labored for all these churches except Auburn two years. Besides this regular work, I have done some work in the general field. I must not omit to say that these churches have sustained me nobly. I continue my labors with these congregations the present year, as with Antioch, Logan county, Ky. We received to the fellowship of the church last year in all thirty souls, mostly by confession and baptism. At Bethel two; Mt Moriah, Muhlenburg county, Ky., nine; Pleasant Valley, fourteen, Rochester two; and two at Morgantown, (the first that have ever been baptized at that place by our brethren.) The church at Rochester has in the meantime built a house of worship that is very creditable to the little town, and speaks well for the liberality of her people. I have met with some difficulty in getting the churches in the Green River country to realize the importance of meeting on the first day of the week, to commemorate the Lord's death for sin. The great lack of the churches to-day is an efficient eldership. I don't mean by this that there are no qualified elders among us. The great difficulty is to get them to work. I must add that each of these churches have contributed something to the South Kentucky Missionary Work, and have been visited again by her general evangelist, J. W. Gant, soliciting funds to push forward the cause in other fields that are destitute of the word of life. I have never fallen in much with the missionary plans, but ca dor compels me to say that I like our South Kentucky Missionary Work better than some other plans. I shall do what I can to extend the circulation of the Advocate. May the Lord bless you, brethren, for your undeviating fidelity to the cause of truth.

CHURCH MUSIC.

That the highest artistic skill in sacred music has somehow generally been associated with the lowest spiritual culture—and has been far more promotive of sensuous than spiritual attractions.

That the genius of this reformatory movement, like that of previous reformations, is not favorable to choir singing and instrumental music. Its sympathies are with the bewildered and oppressed masses, and it wants, "music for the million." Its original power will be largely lost when the stirring melodies of its early days shall have been supplanted by stately artistic performances.

As the Church of Christ is the common home of his people—"Barbarian, Scythian, bond and free," who are "all one in Christ Jesus;" and as singing is part of worship in which the great mass of Christians can personally practice; no choir singing or instrumental music should ever be allowed to interfere for a moment with this privilege and right of the saints. If such appliances can be made to assist rather than hinder this great object of uniting the whole congregation in the worship, the most serious objection to them is removed.

The religion of Christ demands our best offerings. Let us cultivate a musical taste and musical talent in our churches. Let us have attractive singing in our families and in our public assemblies. Let us learn hymns, chants, choruses, anthems, in which we may suitably utter the high praises of our God. And win the hearts of men to his altar.—Isaac Errett,—in Harbinger.

AN OPEN LETTER TO ELDER J. M. BARNES.

Dear Brother Barnes: I read your letter to our much loved brother Manire, of Mississippi, with an interest that, to a small extent, could taste with him the bitter of his cup, and could say of him, Thou son of Abraham by faith, Oh: how thou needest an Aaron and Hur to hold up your hands in the great fight for truth, and thought came to my mind, from whence will they come? Our prayer is that the word of God will quicken them and send them quickly forward to the assistance of the good, earnest, and bold B. F. Manire, of Mississippi, and whilst our hearts go out in love and sympathy for our brother and his his great work of faith let us, my dear brother, not forget the great demand for the love light in the states of Alabama and West Florida; but let us free ourselves entirely from preference in the work that is before us, and go into the right determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified, and the winning of undying souls to him. Let us strive not to be partial to particular localities, counties, states etc, but move forward upon the enemy, with the voice and stamp of one man, and our great Captain will lead us to victory.

In reading your letter to Bro. Manire, I could not help taking a retrospect of the years that are now numbered with the things that were, and in this view I saw a man astride of the cream horse Jack; the rider was dressed in gray jeans, carrying a Bible and a Hymn book; yes, I saw him as he traveled the byways and the highways, preaching the word, and persuading men and women to accept it as it was, the word of God, and teaching them that it did an effectual work in those that believed. His work of faith in those years that have fled, all came up before me in contrast of what he is now doing. Then the kingdom grew as a greenbay tree upon the banks of a river of pure water. The seed was then sown and under his watch-care as husbandman, the growth was vigorous, and healthy. But alas, old Jack has, I presume, returned to dust, and the master has left the work of love in a great measure, and in consequence there is a dirith in Zion. Her sons and her daughters in South Alabama walk no more as they used to. A gift peculiar, a talent for the special work of keeping the children in memory of their first love, has certainly been buried. The question might be asked, Where is the talent? we answer, seven months each year within the walls of Highland Home Lyceum, directing the youth of the country in the walks of literary science, and the remaining five getting ready for the seven ahead, and so his days are gliding by, whilst undying souls are going down to death without a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, and the children growing more cold, in different, and penurious each day.

My brother, yes, I might say, for you it was that broke the sectarian chain that bound me and thus liberated me, and for it you will ever have my love and earnest prayers,—can you longer hold your peace, or will you again draw the sword and enter into the fight? You will find soldiers true to aid you. I think, from recent letters in the ADVOCATE, that you are preparing for battle. I am free to confess that your present work is much needed and that the brotherhood of South Alabama is proud of you. Still I think they will all agree with me in saying that your place could be more easily filled in the Lyceum than among the congregations of South Alabama. Then can't you give us five months of active work among the churches in South Alabama each year, until the great Captain requires you to lay your armor by? May God help you to give yourself entirely to him.

Now, as to Highland Home Lyceum. With it I am well pleased in the main, still I have somewhat against a particular department, and that is the violin department. My reason is, if no other, it has the appearance of evil; but I have two other reasons which I will state. Second, it has a bad influence upon the godly and the sinner. Third, it offends (wounds) your brethren. The first was taught me by my father in the gospel, yourself. Can't you remember in the year 1868, at the house of our brother Bro. S. L. Payne, that I propounded this question to you: Is there any harm in performing on the violin? And your answer was, "Whilst it might be none to you, it has the appearance of evil, and the safer plan would be to not perform." The second reason, it has a bad influence on others. At the Institute on Christmas night you, with the string band, was playing what was called "Golden Slippers," and a prominent citizen of your county came to me and said, "Doctor, I care very little for dancing, but that makes me feel just like I wanted to dance." I saw those that I was informed belong to the church keeping time with their feet. This is bad influence. The third, it offends your brethren. The brethren and sisters with whom I conversed were free to so express themselves. Now, don't you think you should, under the circumstances, my brother, remove it from your Institute?

I heard you say on Christmas night, that you played waltzes, polkas, marches, quadrilles and jigs, and you did it because they were pretty. I would ask you the question in all love, Where did that class of music get its origin? We should be candid, and remember there are but two kingdoms—no neutral ground. Of which of these kingdoms is it? If of God, you are right; but if of the other, then touch not, my brother, the unclean thing.

You also remarked to the audience that the violin was in bad company, and you desired to redeem it; there was no harm in it. I fear, my dear brother, in this effort you will flit away much precious time indeed; for it is certainly properly and legitimately the property of the Wicked One. Then let us let him have that which is his own, and use the talents with which we are possessed in persuading men and women to accept the redemption offered by our Lord and Master; and when we have accomplished this great work, we need to give ourselves no concern about the violin, it will most assuredly find its proper place. I shall ever pray that God help us all to walk after the meek and lowly Jesus.

I promise you to do all that I can to stir up brethren the upon the importance of evangelizing, and let us lay siege to country and city alike. You know my poverty; yet I have a heart with which to love, and a tongue that's not still, thank God. We say, have the convention or gathering, and begin anew the work. May our God care for us.

S. I. S. CAWTHORN.

LIFE IN A GRAVE.

Yes, there is life in a grave, life that comes to us, from its silent bosom, to animate and inspire. Sometime since, I was near one, and felt no peculiar interest, until passing around, I read the inscription, "Blessed are the meek," and connected with it was a name that had been familiar for years. There was at once life breathing from the silence. Meekness and earnest trust in the Redeemer of man, had filled the heart whose beatings had been stilled—whose warm life had gone out and left only dust, whose efforts for the benefit of others had ceased. Sorrow had purified, and suffering, borne with submission, had raised the heart to Him who was a mourner all his days, who had borne the griefs and carried the sorrows of earth. Life's work was finished and the sufferer was ready to pass in hope, before Death called to a quiet home, an everlasting rest. In that grave laid one "whose faith in future worlds was strong—worlds where knowledge sweet and new, would fill the soul—where the soul would reign gloriously and would recognize the dear familiar faces known and loved on earth, although clothed with perfection as they walk in the presence of God." The earnest longing was to meet them there, and talk with gratitude of perils past, of trials overcome, and praise the loving tender one, who had been with them to the end. In that grave lay one who had thirsted for God—the God who dwelt with man on earth; his dearest friend, his Savior. The beauty of that patient, earnest life was again before me, and now that its sorrows had ended, it was sweet to muse upon, and remember the gentle influence it had exerted. The beauty of holiness speaks from the grave with more eloquence than the tongue of the living. Chalmers says, "It is the most effective influence, one human being can offer to another, to raise the mind to God. It is the best inheritance a father can leave to his children—something to which they can look back with noble pride and spend life in imitating. They can tell their children, 'our father died in goodness, as he lived, and left us his good name. There is a roll on which his name is fixed in light, and safe within a better home, where time and its titles are not found; God gives a new name—a name better than of sons, dearer than of daughters—a name of peace and praise."

To the children of a pious mother the beauty of holiness speaks from the grave, when other influences fail. A man who had exhausted the pleasures of the world, says: I can forget the prayers of my mother in the excitements of dissipation; but in the silence of night, when sleep falls upon men, her words, her tones come to me, and years, and sin, and manhood are forgotten, and I am again a little child at her knee. When I have gazed upon the lamp of night, floating in beauty through the heavens, and have thought from her influence, of spiritual beings there, the memory of my mother has come like the rain's light dropping, and all is forgotten but her tenderness—her earnest love to her wandering son. When I have been a worn traveller, perhaps till dawn was stealing over earth, the face of my mother has come to me in sadness—her voice has thrilled me, and I, the gay, the wild, have humbly bowed and poured forth low and fervent prayer. Till life's silver cord shall be broken, her memory will be the one to lead me upward—will be a lamp to guide my feet heavenward. Beautiful in life and in death the influence of such a mother.

Sad it is, that a mother should ever exercise an influence of a different character. I might mention one who felt not her responsibility to children given to her care, and in health spoke lightly of heaven and hell, of God and eternity. She often spoke and acted insincerely in their presence. In after years sickness fell to her lot, and calling them around her, she said, "I have been leading you, my children, the road to destruction. I pray you, now, enter the service of God. Try to find the gate of heaven, although you may not find your mother there." Her lips were closed forever. The spirit went to its account. Her children were terror-struck, and saw her laid in a grave from which came no light, but only the thought of death—eternal death.

Would mothers who study not to cultivate heart piety, and are devoted to fashionable display, be willing, when they reflect seriously, to live and die thus?

But enough. There are names that cheer and guide—images that dwell in the heart beautiful in holiness. They shine as did the star that led the wise men to the manger of Bethlehem, and their influence is not only in life, but speaks in sweet tones from the tomb, where, though "lost to sight, they are still to memory dear." C. F.

The congregation at Owen's Chapel held a short consultation on last Lord's day after their usual services, and unanimously, and heartily agreed, that they would not promise to pay to any evangelist any specified amount for mission work, but that they would contribute on each Lord's day according to their ability, and then not "muzzle the ox that treads out the corn." This, it seems to me, is the scriptural plan, and if we will do our duty, that is, contribute according to the scriptural measure, I feel confident we will do much more than we have ever done, or ever will do, on any other plan. If we will put into the Lord's treasury, he will open the way for it to be used, so as to honor him and accomplish the greatest good. I hope we will not be like the servant with one talent, who "was afraid," here is where all the difficulty comes in the way of our success in every good work. God has plainly told us how to act in all service to him, and promised to bless us abundantly if we follow his directions, but we are "afraid" if we give even one tenth of our income, we will not have enough to keep us from suffering; we need more faith, has he not promised to "make all grace abound toward his faithful children, so that they having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work?" 2 Cor. ix: 8. And again, "But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Phil. iv: 19. Listen at the promise of God through the prophet Isaiah, concerning Christ and his followers: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee, in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." Isa. liv: 17. —[O. T. Craig, Brentwood, Tenn., Jan. 14, 1884.]

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

Dear Bro. Poe: When did the ministry of John the Baptist cease?

Put me down for one dollar to help buy the prizes for the class.—[W. F. Elliott.]

All right Bro. Elliott, you shall have a chance. We like live men like you. We are so glad to have the girls and boys joining our Bible class too. It shows that there is hope for the coming age. I am going to travel over Texas some this year, if the Lord wills, and shall, perhaps, meet many of the class. Hope I may.

Wonder if the class all know what Matthew, Mark, Luke and John wrote the gospel for? See John xx: 30-31.

10. How many books in the New Testament give an answer to the question? "What must I do to be saved?" No guess work now.

Dear Bro. Poe: I give the following to No. 6: Gen. i: 21: The whale and the soul was given Jonah; 1st, seventeen taken away. See Jonah ii: 10. 2nd, the earth and Adam was created out of dust. Gen. ii: 7. God demands again the soul he gave the world in Adam.—[J. B. Armor, Hickory Flat, Miss., January 22, 1884.]

Several have sent the first answer. Sister Wheeler, Cook County, among the number.

Dear Bro. Poe: This is in answer to E. L. L.'s (Bro. Ed. Lindsay, of Fayette County, I think) question in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE of the 9th of January. Matt. xxiii: 14-15-23-25-27-29: The phrases are, "Woe unto you, Scribes, Pharisees, and Hypocrites." Ask some more questions, Bro. E. L. L., we are glad to hear from you.—[Janie Hines, Pleasanton, Atascosa County, Texas.]

The answer is "Where the worm dieth nor, and the fire is not quenched." Can you find it?

Dear Bro. Poe: I am very much interested in your Bible Class. I wish to be a member. I am twelve years old. The answer to E. L. L.'s question is in the 23rd of Matthew. "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites." Question 1, Terah was 70 years old when Abram was born. Gen. xi: 26. Question 2, The children of Israel dwelt in Egypt 430 years. Exo. xii: 40. My question is, "What is it that man cannot tame?"—[Mary Sue Sugg, Cyruston, Tenn.]

We are glad to have Mary join our class, and hope she will get much benefit from it this year. How many of the class read at least one chapter in the Bible every day? Bro. Lindsay sends us another query. He is a good student. Let queries be as practical as possible; such as lead to Bible study, and development of Christian growth and character.

Dear Bro. Poe: Desiring to join your Bible Class, I send these answers: Question 7. How many prophecies of the Old Testament did Christ fulfill according to Matthew's account? Answer, thirteen. I refer you to chapter i: 22; ii: 15-18-23; iii: 15; viii: 17; xii: 18; xiii: 45; xxvi: 56-57; xxi: 42 and xxvi: 31. Question 8. What does Peter mean, when he says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy," etc.? Answer, The New Testament Scriptures. I am not twenty years old.—[Ada Thurman, McMinnville, Tenn., January 31, 1884.]

Dear Bro. Poe: I herewith send answers to some of Bro. Lauderdale's questions in GOSPEL ADVOCATE of the 9th inst. 1. About 71 years old. Gen. xi: 26. 2. 430. Exo. xii: 40. 3. Supposing the females and old men not able to go to war, to equal the males that were numbered there were about 1,286,020. Num. 1st, 2nd, and 3rd chapters. Not fully comprehending 4th question, I will not attempt an answer; but will ask a question, that will take considerable research to answer correctly. To how many things in the New Testament is salvation ascribed?—[E. L. L., Pleasant Retreat, January 30, 1884.]

Queries for class, from Noblett Chapel class.—1. Who succeeded Jotham, king of Judah? 2. What was the individual's character? 3. What terrible thing did he do? 4. Who sold Joseph into Egypt? 5. When was John the Baptist filled with the Holy Ghost? 6. At what time did our Savior receive it? 7. What was the difference between the ages of the two. (John and Christ.) 8. How many quotations did our Savior and apostles make from the old Scriptures? Also how many from each book?

Answer to Bro. Gowen's query No. 6, ADVOCATE No. 3. It was the whale that swallowed Jonah.

Answers to Bro. Lauderdale's queries, ADVOCATE No. 2. 1. 130 years of age. He died at the age of 205. Gen. xi: 32. And God commanded Abram to leave his native country and his father's house at Haran, and he departed at the age of seventy-five; it follows then if he was 75 at his father's death, which occurred at the age of 205, that Terah was 130 years old. 75 taken from 205 equals 130. 2. Four hundred and thirty years. Ex. xii: 40-41. 3. About six hundred thousand. Ex. xii: 37.—[Noblett's Chapel, Minor Hill, Tenn.]

A LETTER FROM BRO. MCGARVEY.

The following letter from Bro. McGarvey, is sent me for publication by Bro. McPherson:

I have just received a letter from Kansas which makes the way entirely open for me to attend your State meeting, and hold the Institute on the following week.

The programme will be about this: Two lectures each day for four days; each lecture followed by an examination of the class on the matter presented, including a free expression of opinion. After every lecture and examination, a free discussion of practical, miscellaneous questions to be selected by a committee of the class. Four lectures at night on the geography and topography of Bible lands, all illustrated by calcium light pictures of places named in the Bible as they appear at the present day. I think it best that the illustrated lectures should be preceded by one without illustrations, giving a general description and preparing the way. This should be free to the public, but the other four should be pay lectures, 50 cts. admission to one or $1.00, paid in advance, to all. The proceeds should meet all expenses, and I am willing to risk them, if the brethren interested will exert themselves vigorously to sell tickets. J. W. MCGARVEY.

Lexington, Ky., January 12th, 1884.

The brethren will see from the above, that Bro. McGarvey's visit is a certainty. The Institute will begin Monday, July 21st, immediately after the State meeting, and the place will be Bryan, Texas. The brethren at Bryan offer to entertain us. We are sorry that arrangements were not made to have this Institute at a more central place, and hope Bro. McGarvey will conclude to visit other points. Will he please say whether he will?

INDIAN MISSION.

Dear Bro. Poe: Please state through the Texas Department of GOSPEL ADVOCATE, that the following amounts received by Bro. Wm. Kitch, of Thompson's Station, Tenn.: church at Thompson's Station, Tenn., $5 35; church at Franklin, Tenn., $7.50; Bro. D. H. Baily, Nashville, Tenn., $10.00; W. J. Zellner, Davidson County, Tenn., $1.00; Sister Alice Higdon, Lynville, Tenn., $1.00. All for our Indian Mission, for which receive our thanks. May God bless you all. R. W. O.

Bro. Kitch and wife arrived in our city to-day, January 30, 1884. Both look well. R. W. O.

We welcome Bro. Kitch and wife to Texas. The field is large, and we hope they may be instrumental in doing great good.

Dear Bro. Poe: For the benefit of myself and others, I would be glad you would give your views on the following passages: James v: 14-15: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let him pray over him, anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Also 1st John v: 16-17: "If any man see his brother sins a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death. I do not say that he shall pray for it." By giving a solution of these two Scriptures, you will much oblige your Bro. and many others.

I am engaged this year at the following places: Franklin, Wooten Wells, High Prairie, Tidwell Prairie, all in Robertson county except High Prairie, that is in Limestone county. Let us all pull together this year, and get Christ into as many hearts as possible; the Master hath need of more workers and better workers. There are too many souls starving for the bread of life, for us to be warring and jangling about questions that have nothing to do with the saving of men. If we can get the people to open their hearts, and let Christ take complete possession, such subjects as the organ and plans to raise money for the spread of the gospel, and many others of a kindred nature, would cease to be agitated. We would have too much reverence and respect for our head and lawgiver to be springing untaught questions. I have read very near all that has been said pro and con on these subjects, and I do think that our editors have done wrong to admit them in their papers. There is no practical good in any, or growing out of any such wrangling. Where the Bible speaks, we should speak; where the Bible is silent, we should be silent. That's the motto. Stick to it we must, or abandon our plea. B. P. SWEENEY.

James and John probably refer to the same thing. In the days of apostles, there were some in the congregations punished with physical ailments, or disease, on account of certain crimes they committed. Paul says that on account of the drunken feasts of the Corinthians, some were sick, and some were dead. James says, "are any sick among you, etc.?" John says, "if any brother sin a sin which is not unto death." Doubtless, those who had the gift of healing, had also the power to see or know whether the sin which brought on the disease was to result in death or not. In case it was unto death, they were not to pray for it. For it was by the "prayer of faith" that they were to be healed, with the laying on of hands, etc. This refers, I think, to the miraculous life of the church, and as other spiritual gifts passed away with the perfection of the divine order of things in the church, so the power, or gift of healing, passed away with it. I do not think it has reference to this age.

Relative to the admission of vexed questions into the papers, I say this: Editors are the most abused, and the most poorly paid class of men on earth. A great many men differ from Bro. Sweeney and I in a terrible stew if their ideas are not vented. And then again, editors must admit some unpleasant things into their columns to try to show, if possible, the sin of using. The organ question occupied considerable space for a time, but if nothing had been said, the church everywhere might have taken it for granted there was nothing wrong in its use. Whereas, it is now known to be wrong, and has about passed out of use. So of plans, and so of any error. Editors occupy very much the same position the preacher does, save that he must watch as best he can, others who help him preach through the paper.

Whatever busies the mind without corrupting it has at least this use, that it rescues the day from idleness; and he that is never idle will not often be foolish—indeed, if wisely busy, he cannot be so.

Brethren L. & S.: I don't write often, but seeing a report from Bro. L. L. Carpenter, from Indiana in reference to the number of names amounting to one hundred wanting work to do, I feel like I want to say something. It brings my mind back to my own State of Mississippi. Famishing for want of the bread of life, and but few to impart to them that bread. I often think what must be done, or in other words, what can be done, and how it is to be done. We have many preachers north and south that are doing much, and many of them that could do valiant service. What is the matter? Is the fault in the preachers, or is the fault in the people? It may be the preachers, some of them at least, have studied the ministry as a man would study medicine or law, or as a profession to make money, or as an accomplishment. Now I would say to such, if there be any, it would be better if that is the cause of the one hundred not having employment. It would be far better for the cause of Christ if they were always idle. Some men are in dead earnest, but lack the push. Now, upon the part of the preachers, the fault is either they have studied it as a profession and looking for big salaries, or they lack the push or have not the cause at heart enough. Or the fault may be in the people. It may be they are not enough disposed. Now, I would make this suggestion to both people and preachers: If you want the cause of your master to prosper in the destitute places, there must be sacrifice upon the part of both preacher and church. This is only a state of preparation, and a living is all we need while we stay here. If the church would spare all they can, and the preachers would put up with a good living, Mississippi would soon have the gospel preached at destitute places and the cause built up where the ancient gospel perhaps has never here sounded out. Now, I would say that if there are any churches in my reach who can't get a preacher, if you will do your part of the sacrifice, and want me to help, I will make my part of the sacrifice and preach all I can, to as many churches as I can. I have only engaged one half of my time yet. The 2nd and 4th Lord's days are taken up. The Lord has been good to me, and I want to do all I can while in this life.

W. N. McCain.

Do not give me ready money now, but give me a check-book and let me draw what I like. This is what God does for the believer. He does not immediately transfer his inheritance to him, but lets him draw what he needs out of the riches of his fullness in Christ.—Spurgeon.

How he Helped his Father.

Some years ago, a boy whose name was Webster, living in Bridgeport, Ct., then nearly four years old, was taken from his own home to that of his grandpa, where he remained several weeks. His grandpa was a Christian man, and always asked God's blessing upon the food before eating, and read a chapter and prayed in the morning, when the breakfast was finished.

When little Webster was taken home, the first time he sat at his father's table in his high-chair, he said, before he began to eat, "Papa, why don't 'ou talk to God before you eat, as grandpa does?" And the father said, "Oh, grandpa is a good man." "But, papa," said Webster, "an't 'ou a good man? Why don't 'ou talk to God as grandpa does?"

And the good mother, sitting on the other side of the table said, "Father, that is God's voice to you." And it was; and then, for the first time, the father, as the head of his own house, and mother and child, bowed their heads, while a blessing was brokenly asked on the food. That was the beginning. After the breakfast the father read and prayed, and continued the practice as long as he lived.—Congregationalist.

Brethren L. & S.: Bro. Barnes' proposition to evangelize the cities in Alabama, meets my hearty approbation. If I could live independent of my pay for preaching, I have no doubt that I could raise five hundred dollars in this field for the work. As the case stands, I am ready to devote a part of my time to the work, and will faithfully and promptly report any means placed in my hands, to have the work done. If each brother would give one dollar, and each sister fifty cents, the work could be put in operation and pushed to success. This amount they could give and not miss it; some could give much more and not miss it; but every one (almost) could give one dollar. It has never been but little trouble, since I can remember, for any one who wanted to go to a "show," to raise the money to do so, and not regret the sacrifice. If we love the Lord, and love our fellow men, surely we can raise as much for the preaching of the gospel in the cities of Alabama.—[A. C. Henry.

Brethren L. & S.: I see Bro. Barnes' appeal in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE for an effort to have preaching in Alabama, and wish here and now to say that this is the golden opportunity to start the work, and hope that some good brother or sister in every community will commence the enterprise at once. While the small amount in each church or place might look very small, when summed up will do a power of good. Let us go to work, and may the Lord help us. E. A. ALBRITTON.

We should accustom ourselves to self-denial and patient waiting; for the blessings that God reserves for his people are like fruit which will be wholesome when it has had time to ripen, but will certainly be noxious if greedily and prematurely gathered.—Scott.

It is the same thing with a book as with a man. With a good title, the demand for the book or the man will be measurable increased.

CHURCH ORDER.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: I thank you for your extended answer to my question. What I now write, is not in the spirit of criticism or controversy. I acknowledge that I am not fully settled in my mind as to the question of "individual co-operation," and I want all the light that I can get from all sides. If it is not too much tax on your patience, I would like to hear from you a little further. My question was: Have I a right, as an individual Christian, to give my money to a brother to preach the gospel, without giving it to my congregation, or through it, or in its name? If I understand your answer, you say that we have a right to give as opportunity offers, but that what the member does, the congregation does, and therefore it must be in the name of the congregation, although it is not necessary to constantly parade the fact. You also say that if one member of our body were to consider other members useless and sluggish hindrances, and join with similar active members of other bodies, the body would perish, and thus the end sought to be obtained would be thwarted.

Now I have an actual case. A certain congregation in Texas is opposed to paying a preacher for preaching under any circumstances. I mean that the bishops, deacons, and a majority of the members are so opposed. A member of that church considers it his duty to support the gospel with his money. Now,

1. If he gives, is it the congregation giving? Must he force them to give against their will?

2. Must he give in the name of the church, if the church forbids it?

3. If he cannot give in the name of his congregation, must he neglect the support of the gospel?

4. If he has a right to give independently, have not all other Christians the same right?

5. If this is an extreme and special case, giving him privileges that under other circumstances he would not have, what passage of Scripture makes this distinction?

C. MCPHERSON.

Some human bodies are very badly developed. Sometimes they are lame in the feet, sometimes in the hands, sometimes in the stomach, sometimes, and worse than all others, in the heart and the head. When some members are lame or maimed, more labor devolves on the others, and that under disadvantageous circumstances, to keep the body alive. If the head is weak, is feeble, is disordered, much of the labor of the members will be at great disadvantage. So it is in the church of Christ. The thing that we fail in, more than anything else, it seems to me, is to realize the sanctity and maintain the integrity of the churches of Christ. The church, the congregation, constitutes the body of Christ, the temple in which God, through the Holy Spirit, dwells. It is the ground and support of the truth. Every exhortation, direction, command to unity in the Scriptures, is to the congregation to maintain unity within itself. That it may be bound together in harmony, peace and love, all the warnings and protests against division, are directed to the congregations, that each one may avoid division within itself—that no root of bitterness may spring up and defile the church, and that in that body, no schism or division or strife should exist. There is no recognition of any body outside of, or distinct from the congregations in the Bible. No exhortations to unity in any body above the church of Christ. No room for a divided fealty is given there.

But at present men think nothing of dividing a church of God. Do not recognize that they are violating the law of God, but while recklessly dividing the church of God, cemented by the blood of Christ, they are very fearful of a division of some denominational organization unknown to the body of Christ.

It seems clear to me, that anything that tends to weaken the tie that binds the member to the body of Christ, must be destructive to that body. Must be wrong in the sight of God. All outside human provisions for doing the work must weaken the tie that binds the members to churches. Bro. McPherson presents a case exceptionally bad, only in degree. All of the churches are faulty, because composed of human beings. If faultiness or lameness in its parts constitute a ground for refusal to work in and through a church, then are members absolved from obligation to work in any church. How far shall a church fall short of the divine model before the individual member is absolved from his obligations to work in and through it? When we go back to the Old Testament, we find that the ministers of God's government were corrupt. The sons of Samuel (1 Sam. 8) took bribes and perverted judgment. Thwarted the very ends for which the government was established. The people seeing this corruption in the head, asked a change. This desire to change a perverted government of God, was characterized as a rejection of God as their ruler. This seems to me to teach very clearly, that no weakness, infirmity, or wickedness of those who carry out the institutions of God, can justify men in turning from them and adopting as better, the institutions of men. When we come down to the New Testament times, we find very early, the churches faulty.

Wickedness was in the churches, witness Corinth, witness the wickedness depicted in the churches in Asia. They were lukewarm, cold, wicked, as a whole. Evil, mercenary men controlled them. The Holy Spirit recognizes some faithful and true in the general declension. But it never seemed to enter the mind of the Spirit, that these faithful ones should, in any way, withdraw from these cold, lukewarm churches, and act independent of them. If they withdraw from them in one department of labor or work, the same reason exists for doing it in all other work and worship. I am satisfied we too lightly regard the sanctity and integrity of the churches of God.

I think if there is such a perversion of the true development of a church as Bro. McPherson describes, it shows that men have come to direct the affairs of the church, that never were appointed by God. They have been elected of men.

The parent, the ruler, the husband, the elders of a congregation, are to be obeyed only as their requirements are in account with the law of Christ. Two of the main duties of elders are to see that the members make money honestly, and that they spend it in the service of God. For elders to take the position assigned these, is to show they are utterly ignorant of the duties of the elder and strangers to the true Spirit of the Christian religion. Members should certainly not be led by such elders (so called) to violate the word of God, nor would I be driven by them out of the church-work into any human associations. What they failed to do, I would strive to do, but I would do it as a member of the church of Jesus Christ. I would insist this earthly head is demented, unfit to fill the position which it occupies, and I would, as a member of that church, and not otherwise, carry out the duties imposed by the word of God. This will cure the church if anything will, and the person will be obeying God and saving his own soul. If we think we can rebuild the temple of God without difficulties and trouble, we are greatly deceiving ourselves. If we work only when all surroundings are favorable, we will never work. In rebuilding the earthly type, the workmen wrought with the sword in one hand and the trowel in the other. The antitype repeats the necessities.

To answer specifically, the questions,

1. Unless he joins some other association, than the church, when he gives, it is the congregation giving.

2. All that a Christian does, must be done in the name of Christ. The church is the body, the spiritual body of Christ to us. We cannot do it in the name of Christ, without doing it as a member of his body, and that is in the name of his body or himself. The church cannot forbid the doing of Christ's will. Men elected by men and improperly foisted upon the church may do this, but all such edicts are unconstitutional and void. The Christian must obey God, he must do it as a member of the body.

3. He can give in the name of his congregation; God has authorized him to do so, and no power on earth can deprive him of this right.

4. He has no right to give independently, we are members of his body, and we cannot be severed from it, or act independently of it, without death ensuing.

5. God's laws meet every possible case and contingency. There are no exceptions to them. There are exceptions to man's laws, because man is shortsighted, and cannot foresee the contingencies that will arise. But God foresees all, and provides from the beginning for all contingencies, so there are no exceptions to his laws when they are well understood.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"Ten men can be found with ability to see the truth, where one can be found with courage to maintain it." Courage to stand by the truth is the most desirable, as it is one of the rarest virtues among men. It would be well if, during the centenary celebrations of the heroic reformers of the past, the one leading and characteristic principle of them all could be appreciated. There was one leading characteristic that gave prominence and character to Tyndale, Wickliffe, Luther, Zwingli, Calvin and Wesley. They were possessed of wide diversities of character, were as unlike in many respects as men can well be, but there was one trait characteristic of all, and that one gave to each and all their influence for good before heaven and earth. It was the courage to firmly stand by the truth, and patiently bear and suffer whatever fate fidelity to that truth might bring. No one of them ever could see a wrong condemn a wrong, yet continue in and build up that wrong. That quality is Christ-like—it is God-like. To repose to participate in and encourage wrong in anything, or in any way, was the moral quality that distinguished Jesus as the Christ, from all other human beings. There were many men in the days of Luther, his equals in mental power, his superiors in learning, who saw the errors of the age, who even exposed and protested against those errors, yet whose work came to nothing, and whose names have passed into forgetfulness. As an example, Erasmus, a compeer of Luther, of great learning, saw the evils of Romanism, and saw them as clearly as did Luther, exposed them and protested against them in a mild way, but lived in and practiced them. Rome could well tolerate such opposers of error. They build up and strengthen error, instead of destroying it. Luther saw the wrong, seeing it, protested against it, and refused to participate in, or affiliate with the wrong, and in this way overturned, and to a great extent, destroyed the wrong. Every Christian ought to cultivate that sensitive regard for his conscience, that will cause him to refuse fellowship with wrong. This does not at all involve a refusal to live in the church with persons who engage in wrong practices, but it involves a firm determination to not only protest against the wrong, but to refuse all participation with what is wrong. It is an impugment of the wisdom and providence of God, to say a man cannot work for the good without participating in the evil.

Bro. Munnell, twenty years ago, challenged us to find a church or churches that were supporting an evangelist to preach among the destitute, outside of the societies. We now can point to a score of them, each acting as individual congregations, doing more than a score of greatly stronger and richer ones, combined in society operations. While he and all society men profess to be glad to know that churches are working outside of the societies, they are careful never to mention work of that kind reported. Why do not the papers favoring societies note this work? This failure is rather significant.

But about that wonderful foreign mission work. It began in England. The beginning was brought about by a wealthy man being converted in England before the society was born. He agreed to pay the expenses and salary of a preacher from this country, to go over to England to preach. He went on these terms is our information. It was called sending a missionary to England—a foreign missionary. In the report of the last Foreign Missionary Society, it is reported they have four missionaries in England. But it is reported likewise that friends in England contributed $5500 to the Society. We think, too, that these English Christians contributed $1000 at least, to other missionary objects. This looks very much like somebody had gone to England and converted these Christians, they came over here, employed preachers to go over there and then their work is reported as foreign missionary work, by the churches in America. Beside this, we see that one of the churches to which a foreign missionary is sent, is reported as raising over four thousand dollars last year within itself. That is a queer idea—money is collected in America to support a preacher in a church that raises over four thousand dollars a year! That is a wonderfully destitute place. But we say to Bro. Munnell, it is just as easy for the churches to support missionaries in a foreign field as in the home. The work is just as simple.

"I had good news to tell, and was determined to tell it," Bro. Turner says, was the inspiration to him to labor under difficulties. Earnestness is worth a thousand fold more in reaching men with the gospel, than eloquence or learning. The Mars Hill church last year, helping Bro. Turner, added one hundred and nine persons to the Lord, planted five young congregations, kept three Sunday-schools at work, in a destitute and needy field. Mars Hill is a weak congregation, financially and numerically. Who can show a better record? Mars Hill congregation could not have brought a preacher from a distance and sustained him, but an earnest man living close by, with the help he could get in the field of labor, was supported. The way to clean the street, is for every one to sweep before his own door. The way to convert the world, is for every church and every Christian to convert his neighbors. The Mars Hill church is a good example to other churches in Alabama and elsewhere.

Bro. Butler has undertaken to prove that such churches as we have in Tennessee are not churches—can never do any missionary work. If our churches in Tennessee will persevere in the begun work of sending out the gospel to the destitute, by the time he has proved this to his own satisfaction and that of others, Tennessee will be the best evangelized spot of earth on the globe. Let all the churches, and every brother and sister in the churches, determine to do all in their power to send the truth to those in darkness. Don't hunt for big preachers, nor send off to a distance for strangers, but take the good, earnest brother near you—encourage him, send him to the neighborhoods close by—to the most ignorant and sinful communities. He can be supported on one third of what it will cost to bring a stranger, and support him, and he will do more permanent good.

Some brethren still complain at the discussions that take place about the operations and work of the churches. When the affairs of the church will move along without controversy, when no evil is intruded into the church, that loyalty to Christ demands shall be opposed, the millennium will certainly be here. When the temple in Jerusalem was rebuilt, the workers were compelled to hold the sword in one hand, the trowel in the other. This was typical, the man that attempts to rebuild the broken walls of the true temple of God, without both sword and trowel, will find himself an untrustworthy builder. "Contend earnestly for the truth," is the divine mandate.

We have received from Bro. Casey, $3 90, a contribution of the Berea church, Williamson County, Tenn., for the Indian Mission. Berea is one of the youngest and weakest congregations in the county. Are there not a hundred congregations, that can at once, raise from ten to twenty dollars each, and place this mission in active operation? It seems to me, scarcely a congregation, if it were presented, would fail to respond. Let us hear from you promptly in this matter.

Queries.

How was the thief saved, and how were all the people saved before Christ?—[J. C. Stephens, Esom Hill, Ga.]

If the thief was saved at all, he was saved by Jesus Christ, because he saw that he did everything to honor him that was in his power. The people before Christ were saved by obedience to the law of God that was in force when they lived. The people since Christ's day are saved by obedience to the law now in force. The laws, both before and since the death of Christ, receive their efficacy to save by virtue of their connection with the blood of Christ.

Will you or some one tell me, have disciples the right to meet on the first day of the week, if they have not elders nor preacher to teach them? Is it not their duty to meet and attend to the ordinances until they can do better?—[R. L. McMurray, Antioch, Lavaca County, Texas.]

We do not think they will ever do better than to meet together for worship. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," says the Savior. Worship of God is intended to help the worshiper. Why a few by themselves without teachers or elders do not need the help that comes through worship, I cannot see. We can help each other by reading and studying the Bible, and no matter how humble we may be, we receive strength in drawing near to God in worship. We need all this help without preachers and elders as badly as when we have them. We had as well ask should a family of children eat without old persons to direct them. Worship is as essential to spiritual life as eating to physical life.

Is it a proper and indispensable duty for Christian women to offer thanks at their tables, and pray in their families in the absence of their husbands, even when there are others present besides their own families? Some say it is only for a show, others, it is not the woman's place, and others, it is straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel, neglecting more important matters, and doing things worse than neglecting them. But if it is a duty, it doesn't matter what people say, nor should we sin wilfully because we sin through weakness.—[A Sister.]

The Bible says, give thanks; it says it as much to the women as to the men. It says, "parents bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Both parents are commanded to do this. It is as much the duty of the mother to give thanks, and to pray with and for the children, and to teach them to pray, as it is the father's. She can usually do it better. She must do it in a modest and womanly way, or it has no effect. We do not see why the children cannot be prayed with to themselves even though others be about the house. The more privacy there is about such exercises with our children, the more sanctity there is—always; and the more lasting impression it makes.

Fame, as a river, is narrowest where it is bred, and broadest afar off; so exemplary writers depend not upon the gratitude of the world.—Davenport

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

NUMBER II.

There is something in the word gospel that demands notice. It is from two Anglo-Saxon words that signify "good news." The plan of salvation is so styled in the New Testament about one hundred times. It would seem eminently fit and proper to designate that system of salvation of which Christ was the author, by a term that signifies good news, since all its provisions of salvation are joyful in the extreme. To a poor, convicted, self-condemned sinner, the assurance of a free and full pardon of all his sins is a joyful message. To the Christian who feels, day by day, the outward man declining, it is good news to read in the message of salvation of "the redemption of our body;" and as the world fades upon his earthly vision, the eye of faith brightens at the prospect of soon being in the "Father's house" of many mansions.

The gospel of Christ, like every true system, has its facts, as a foundation, upon which rests all the superstructure. These are few, but of great importance, embracing the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Paul declares he preached these facts when he preached the gospel. Analysis of all the apostolic sermons will show that these leading truths in some way were always announced. No Christian can advance so far in the divine life that he can dispense with these important facts. Growth in grace lends to them additional importance, and gives renewed and increased delight in the study of these marvelous themes. It was to the "saints" Paul wrote, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also, for I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." To the "church of God" at Corinth he declared the gospel which he had preached to them. Through heaven's opened door John heard the ransomed sing, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and tribe, and nation." These glorious facts must remain in time and eternity the basis of all our salvation and joy. To forget them is to be "moved away from the hope of the gospel." They were "according to the commandment of the everlasting God made to all nations for the obedience of faith."

It may be asked: Do not all in this enlightened age believe these things? We rejoice to know that a great many do believe them, and whose lives, we trust, are in harmony with them; but many believe not, and others believe only in part. It avails no good to believe that there was such a person as Jesus of Nazareth, or that he was a great and wonderful man, unless we believe that he actually died and rose again. Faith to this degree is necessary to a consistent profession of his name. Since all the significance of his life, all the importance of his death, and the efficacy of his blood, are established by the truth of his resurrection. "He is declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." This is the crowning proof of all his high claims. The apostle further shows that our own resurrection depends upon the truth of Jesus' resurrection. If he never arose, we will all sleep forever. If he never arose, the apostolic preaching, arduous as it was, is vain, time misspent; and the faith of all who believed their report was also vain—a delusion. If Christ never arose, the veracity of the apostles stands impeached, since they boldly affirmed that he did arise. If Jesus of Nazareth never arose from the dead, no sin has ever been pardoned, and no sinner saved, since "through faith in his blood" is the pardon of all sin, and his blood was of no value unless indeed he did arise. If Christ never arose, all those who have fallen asleep in Christ have simply perished. If there is no risen Savior, our hopes would be confined to the narrow bounds of this life, and we (apostles) of all men the most miserable.

But this linked reasoning of the apostle, in which our great loss is shown upon the supposition that Christ has not arisen, by contrast, enables us in our estimate better to approximate the value. The man is yet unborn who can express the true worth of that salvation, indeed inexpressible, which through him has so surely been provided for us all; and with Paul we turn from the gloomy and cheerless prospect of such hypothesis, with the exalting cry, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

While it has pleased God to make our salvation through Christ depend upon our faith in his resurrection, this he never begs man to believe. He never calls upon anyone to exercise faith without ample testimony upon which faith can rest. He who gave man power to reason, and through this means to credit testimony, does not ignore this either, in submitting to man's faith propositions upon which his salvation is suspended. This then is the true province of reason, so far as connected with our salvation to examine the testimony upon which the exalted claims of Messiah rest. The very nature of these claims is such that the bare possibility, not to mention the absolute certainty of their truth, is enough to awaken every thought, and quicken all our rational powers, to give them a fair and impartial hearing. In this manner the Christian religion was first promulgated, and this is yet the only substantial way of propagating its high claims, and being established in the "faith once delivered to the saints." We are commanded to be "ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Paul declares our service a reasonable one. The testimony concerning Christ is strong, the proofs many and infallible. G. LIPSCOMB.

THE ORPHAN SCHOOL.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Directors, of the Orphan School, held at Caldwell, Texas, the owners of Add-Ran College proposed to sell to the Orphan School the entire property of the college. The proposition was accepted. The agreement is as follows: Bros. D. B. Mizell, of Jacksboro; C. D. Rider, of Weatherford; and H. G. Taylor, of Palo Pinto, were appointed to assess the value of the buildings, grounds, school furniture, etc. The Orphan School is to buy the property at one half of this assessed value, the owners of Add-Ran donating the other half. $4,000 of this amount is to be paid during the year 1884, and we are to have as much time on the rest as we need. It is supposed that the assessment will be about $16,000. This will give us the building, lands, furniture, apparatus, libraries, etc., for the small sum of $8,000, and we can have our own time on $4,000 of this amount. We have determined to sell the farm that we own. We can get for it $2,000, which will be used in the Orphan School enterprise. It is the design of the directors to let Add-Ran run pretty much as it is now. Bro. Clark will continue at the head; the school will receive patronage just as it does now, and it will be a Christian school with the orphan work as a feature. We expect to have boarding departments, and our expectation is for the receipts from the girls who pay their board to defray the expense of the house, so that the orphan girls can be boarded without expense. The same thing will be done in the boarding department for boys. Shops will be established in which boys can be taught trades. The boys will be kept at their trades and at school alternately—a year at each. These shops can be made self-supporting. We have the statement of mechanics for this. Arrangements will be made by which the girls can be alternated at school and at useful employments.

This is a great work, but it can all be done with comparatively little outlay, and this on terms very favorable. We must pay $4,000 this year, and we will sell a $2,000 farm to help this work. This leaves $2,000 to pay. We already have a good deal promised that will be due this year, and we expect to meet these matters readily. Then we can establish our boarding house and shops before we pay the remainder of the purchase money. If we were compelled to build school buildings and furnish them as school buildings should be furnished, we could not get them at such figures, nor on such terms. I think that we have a golden opportunity to do a glorious work. The writer will furnish any information desired. Send contributions to K. M. Vandant, Fort Worth, Texas. C. McPHERSON.

Suffer not your thoughts to dwell on the injury you have received or the provoking words that have been spoken to you. Not only learn the art of neglecting them at the time you receive them, but let them grow less and less every moment, until they die out of your mind.

Obituaries.

Tommie M., son of Eliza M. and S. D. Whitfield, departed this life September 22nd, 1882; was born September 8th, 1881; age, one year and fourteen days. God has taken our dear little angel. He was the pride of our home. He was too pure a bud to bloom in this world; so his pure spirit returned to God the giver, and we laid his precious body to rest, there to remain until the resurrection. I am thankful to God for the consolation the Bible affords me, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Sad indeed is my heart without my dear one; but a few more days and mother will meet you where sorrow and separation are no more, and joy and peace forever reign. MOTHER.

Died, November 5th, 1883, Margaret Ann Ray, daughter of J. M. and Elizabeth Leeman, and wife of Verge Ray, all of Wilson county, Tenn. Sister Ray was born November 4th, 1852, being thirty-one years and one day of age. Was married October 6th, 1869. She united with the Baptist church in August, 1867, but learned the way of the Lord more perfectly, and united with the church of Christ at Bethel, Wilson county, Tenn., in August, 1883. Sister Ray had been living in constant expectation of the dissolution for many weary months, having been a sufferer with that dreadful disease, diabetes, for more than a year. She died in full faith and hope of the gospel. She leaves a husband who is in full accord with her in faith and hope of eternal life. She also leaves five or six little girls to walk life's dangerous path without a mother—the greatest misfortune that could befall them in their young and tender years. It is our wish that those precious little jewels may never forget the example of their faithful mother, and that the father may be enabled to instill into their minds the will of the Lord, that they may grow up honored daughters of the Almighty. R. H. BAKER.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at his home near Taylorsville, Spencer county, Ky., Elder Major Holloway, in the 85th year of his age. Bro. Holloway was born in Virginia, December 9th, 1799 and died January 29th, 1884. He was the father of ten children. Six were waiting for his coming on the other shore. Four are left to weep over the good old father's grave; but sorrow not as those that have no hope. Few men were more favorably known and respected in our county than Bro. Holloway—perfectly upright and honorable in all his dealings with his fellowmen, kind and loving in his family. But it was as a Christian, tried and true that I knew and loved him best—prompt in his attendance at divine service, full of zeal for the cause of his divine Master, whom he had served faithfully for more than forty years. Farewell, old soldier, brave and true, we'll miss you sadly as the battle goes on, but we'll not grudge you your well-earned rest and promotion. Soon the conflict will be ended with us all; and when the heavenly breezes have driven away the smoke of battle, and the clouds of sorrow have rolled away forever, and light and peace have become to us a glorious reality, then, dear brother, we shall see you again.

Not with cross and armor bowed,
Not with age and sorrows bent;
But with saints and angels bowed,
And with crown and homage bent.

REFLECTIONS ON VARIOUS MATTERS.

In Kentucky Department of GOSPEL ADVOCATE, of January 30th, current vol., I have read an excellent article under the above heading, but in speaking of the "society question," Bro. Harding closes down on Bro. Allen stoutly, by asking him these questions: Are not the churches, with their elders and deacons, divine organizations? Do they not exist by divine enactment? Are not the teachings of God, by which he makes the churches and indicates that for which they are made, matters of faith and authority? Shall we stop where he stops in these matters of faith and authority? I don't see how our dear brother can give any other than an affirmative answer to any of these questions. To all of which (if the editors of the ADVOCATE will permit) I will give an affirmative answer, and in turn, will ask Bro. Harding a few questions. Are the churches with anything, more or less, than their elders and deacons divine organizations? Are not the churches with their elders and deacons God's only means of converting the world to Christ? If so, where does the evangelist belong? Please tell us Bro. Harding. W. N. MURPHY.

St. George Mivart, an eminent naturalist, says that for awhile he accepted Darwin's theory, but he has been compelled to give it up for scientific reasons. It is plausible, but not true. And so it goes. In what is called natural science nothing is fixed so securely that it may not be superseded by new discoveries to-morrow. Only the word of the Lord endureth forever.

It is one great characteristic of genius to do great things with little things.—Rade.

THE MEETING AT SCOTTSBORO, ALABAMA.

On the 26th of January, i. e., seventeen days ago, Bro. Daugherty and I began a series of meetings at this place. The meetings have been of unusual interest, and a report concerning them, I think, will furnish practical lessons that may be of much value. Scottsboro has about one thousand inhabitants, six of whom—two gentlemen and four ladies—are connected with the reformation. We knew of only one of these, Bro. W. J. Rorex, until our arrival. Indeed he is the only brother in town, as our Bro. Daniel lives in the country near here. There are in the place four churches, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal and Presbyterian. The Methodist is the largest, most influential and most popular one. The Methodist preacher, Mr. Whitten, is a man of considerable ability, and of great energy, both of body and mind. He is the popular preacher of the place. I have not heard any other of the speakers, and hence cannot testify of their powers. Bro. Rorex wrote to us before our arrival saying that he did not believe we could accomplish anything here, but he felt that it was, perhaps, our duty to try anyhow. This had but little effect upon me, for I have long since learned that no man can tell how a meeting will result. Indeed, at this writing, I have no idea how it will end. But the weather appeared so unfavorable at the time of the arrival of Bro. Rorex's communication, that I concluded to return to Kentucky and wait for a better time. Bro. Daugherty, however, suggested that, as it would not be out of my way, it would be wise for me to stop at Scottsboro and consider the prospects on the ground, promising to await for a telegram from me before making any further arrangements himself. This suggestion was so evidently a wise one it was adopted without discussion. Upon arriving at the place, I sought at once for the house of Bro. Rorex, where I was most heartily received. He was not willing to advise me to undertake the meeting, considering the time, labor and expense involved in the attempt, and the improbability of accomplishing anything; but then he was hardly willing for me to leave without trying to get a hearing. "We will go out and consult Bro. Daniel," said he. Bro. Daniel was much like Bro. Rorex. He wanted the preaching, but thought it almost a pity to waste our time. But sister Daniel, dear woman, looked at her children, grown, but out of Christ, with wistful eyes, and said, "Oh, we must have the preaching, Bro. Harding; so few brethren visit us it will not do to let the opportunity pass." And I thought I could hear the pleadings of her heart in her voice, and could see anxious solicitude in her eyes, so I thought we will try anyhow; who knows but that her heart may be made to rejoice in receiving her children into Christ. (We baptized one of them yesterday morning.) So I telegraphed Bro. Daugherty to come: to stop by Huntsville on his way, and to bring us a package of cards for advertising. We made arrangements with the printer, and had the type set by the time he arrived with the cards, announcing our meetings, giving the subjects to be discussed for the ensuing week, and inviting the people out to hear the "Kentucky Evangelists, Disciples of Christ." By four o'clock in the afternoon we had a card in every house in town, and one in the hands of almost every man. That night, being Saturday, we had a fair audience; on the next day we had two large ones. By the way, that was one of the best days work I ever did. Bro. Rorex was sick, hence everything devolved upon us. Bro. Daugherty and I built the fires, lighted the lamps, swept out the meeting-house twice, rang the bells, and attended four meetings, three of which we conducted, he leading the singing and I doing the preaching; then at night I took the midnight train for Huntsville, where I was expected to attend a funeral on the next day, arriving at my room at the hotel in that town at half past two in the morning.

I remember thinking that I was very badly treated once while holding a meeting in Jefferson county Ky., because I had occasionally to attend to the lamps, sweep the house and build the fires. But, bless you, I have gotten bravely over all that. A man need not expect to succeed in places where we have few or no workers connected with our restitution-movement, unless he is willing to advertise freely at his own expense, to furnish the fuel and oil, to build fires, ring bells, sweep houses, and, when necessary, to speak to small audiences without getting the "blues," or complaining. He must make up his mind to have all sorts of doctrines attributed to him, and all sorts of stories told about him; and the very first time he shows his temper, or becomes despondent, he injures his cause.

Well, our meetings continued and the Lord gave us favor with the people. Night after night full houses greeted us, and they gave the most marked attention. "Preachers, members, and people who had not been in a meeting-house before for ten years came night after night." And it was a matter of common remark that such large, interested and quiet audiences had not been known before in Scottsboro. Our services are conducted about thus: A half hour is devoted to a song service. No time is spent in hunting songs; as soon as one is sung another is called out. Bro. Daugherty stands before the audience during this half hour leading and directing the music; here, excepting my assistance on the bass, he has had it pretty much all to do. Then we read a chapter and have a short prayer. After another song the sermon follows, generally something less than an hour in length; then an invitation song, and then the congregation is dismissed. Thus our services are generally conducted in about an hour and a half; but every bit of this time is utilized. No harrowing death-bed scenes are told, no shoutings, yellings, howlings or kickings at the Lord, as though he were deaf, or had gone a hunting, or were asleep, are indulged in. We endeavor to sing the truth to the people and to speak it to them in earnestness and love; then we leave the matter with them; for if the truth makes them free, they shall be free indeed.

On the tenth day of the meeting Bro. Metcalfe, who had been with us over Sunday, left us in a rather despondent mood, I thought, indeed, he said, he feared we would not move any to obedience. On the way to the train he told Bro. Daugherty to "tell Bro. Harding to put a little more sugar in his exhortations." But I confess I do not "shake as hard" as I used to do. If the truth does not bring the people, God forbid that they should come. So I make it my sole object in preaching to get a clear understanding of the word of God into the minds and hearts of the people. I do not try to move them at all, except in this indirect way.

On the eleventh day, a gentleman came forth to stand with us on the "union ground;" on the twelfth day, a gentleman and lady, both Methodists, came forward; on the next day, a lady of the Methodist church made the confession at the water; there have been two confessions since, one from the Methodists and one from the world, making six additions in all up to this time.

Upon going around to see the first young lady who confessed about her baptism, for the rain was pouring down in torrents as the time appointed drew near, giving us abundant water much nearer than was the place which we expected to go, I found the Methodist minister in consultation with her. He was advising her not to be hasty, but make it a matter of reading and prayer and meditation before acting. Upon coming in he said to me, after the usual salutations, "Bro. Harding, if you had been content to exert yourself in the conversion of sinners—of those who have never professed religion—I would not have said a word, but when I heard you were about to take one of my flock, I came around to see about it, and to preserve it entire if I can. He then proposed to the young lady to immerse her, if that were the only trouble. Of course I showed him it was my desire to convert people from error whenever I find them in anywise afflicted by it. He seemed somewhat astonished, I thought, at the readiness with which I expressed the conviction that the Methodist church teaches and practices grave errors; and a brief discussion followed, which resulting in my proposing to meet him or any gentleman whom he might secure for the work in a public discussion. This he declined to accept on the ground that no good would result from such a discussion. In this idea he is strictly and literally correct, too, in so far as the cause of Methodism is concerned; for it never obtains any benefit from a discussion with us. Upon arising to leave, I said to the young lady, "If you have any doubt about what is your duty, I advise you to pause, to pray, read and consider until the doubt is removed; but if your mind is settled about this matter, if you see your way clearly, act, regardless of what any body may say or do." She promptly responded, "I will be immersed at once," and she was. It required no little courage and devotion on her part to leave father, mother, grandmother, kindred, and a large and popular church, which has a comfortable church-house, simply because her sense of duty demanded that she should go elsewhere. May God bless her, protect her, and guide her into his everlasting kingdom.

The interest is now intense. Everybody is talking about the meetings. It is estimated that more reading of the Bible has been done within the last seventeen days than in many months before. Sunday school children, in paedobaptist Sunday-schools, conduct vigorous discussion with their teachers on the action and subjects of baptism, and get the better of their seniors too. I was told that "the pastor" of the Baptist church (in whose house we are holding forth) said, "These meetings will do good, for they have gotten the people to reading the Bible as never before, and that is certainly good. The end is not yet."

END OF THE KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

A brother writes rather indignantly, saying we referred to him in our reference to persons inquiring the difference between the soul and body and "the return of the Jews to Jerusalem," and says that he desires us to give him some information on the latter subject privately or through the ADVOCATE. We have no knowledge and not an idea in the world, in reference to the subject, so cannot gratify him. We do know, though, that when Christians have turned aside from the practical lessons of the Christian religion, to speculations on this and other subjects named, their usefulness, as Christians, has ended.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. M. Smallman, from McMinnville, was in the office last week.

We have received two dollars more, from a brother near LaGuarda, for the Indian Mission.

It still rains. The signal service men have been missing it all along. It seems that the Almighty is determined to convince them that they knew nothing about it.

Two weeks ago we announced that Bro. W. J. Higdon had fourteen volumes of the Advocate for sale. Bro. Higdon writes us that he was mistaken; he has only thirteen volumes. Any one wishing to buy them can address J. W. Higbee, Madisonville, Ky.

In the thirtieth line of third column Bro. Lauderdale's article in the Advocate of January 30th, is this sentence: "He loosed nothing until he reached the cross, and then he bound all." It should read: "He loosed nothing until he reached the cross, then he loosed all."

We call the attention of our readers who are in need of fruit trees or nursery stock, to the advertisement of W. Hy. Smith, that has been running sometime in the Advocate. He is an experienced nurseryman, and reports that he has an unusually fine stock of trees on hand, that he will sell at reduced rates to those desiring them in quantity.

Bro. Jesse Owen, of Bell's Station, the music teacher, recently went to Leiper's Fork, Williamson county, Tenn., to teach a singing class. He soon began bleeding from the lungs, and was compelled to give up and return home. He still is troubled with bleeding, and is very feeble. He desires to return his thanks to the brethren at Leiper's Fork, and other points, for the kindness shown him, and the pecuniary assistance rendered. Our brother has our sympathy.

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Fanning Orphan School, the following resolution was passed and ordered to be published: Whereas: largely more than the stipulated amount of solvent subscriptions having been made to the Fanning Orphan School, the first instalment of principal and interest on all subscriptions is now due, and it is requested that all subscribers remit promptly to C. W. McLester, Treasurer, 51 North College Street, Nashville, Tenn.

J. C. WHARTON, Sec. Board of Trustees.

J. G. HOUSTON, Pres't.

Our aged Bro. Sparkman, of Boston, Williamson county, Tenn., with his son, Bro. Jas. T. Sparkman, was in our office the past week. He is now in his eighty-eighth year, is active in mind and body, and reads without glasses. He had started on a trip to West Tennessee and Missouri. After reaching the city, he concluded the high waters would be so much in the way of travel in the sections he was proposing to visit, he turned back home. He has a sister living in Missouri about ten years his senior, who is still active, and frequently walks a mile or two from one child's residence to another.

ELAM—THOMPSON.

At Bellwood Christian church, on the morning of February 5th, a very large audience gathered to witness the marriage of Bro. E. A. Elam and sister Mary E. Thompson. The marriage ceremony was performed by Bro. J. M. Kidwill, in the most impressive manner. The wedding party left immediately for Lebanon, where they took the 1:30 train for Fosterville, Rutherford county, the former home of the groom. They will spend a fortnight there with his relatives and many friends, all of whom, no doubt, will be won by the bride's loveliness and amiability. With hearts full of love for each other, and devotion to the cause of our Heavenly King, he surely will bless them, and "the blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it."

NOTES FOR BIBLE READING.

"And pour contempt on all my pride!"
The life and death of our Lord Jesus are a standing rebuke to every form of pride to which men are liable.

Take for instance:

Pride of birth and rank—"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

Pride of wealth—"The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

Pride of respectability—"Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" "He shall be called a Nazarene."

Pride of personal appearance—"He hath no form or comeliness."

Pride of reputation—"Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

Pride of independence—"Many others who ministered unto him of their substance."

Pride of learning—"How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?"

Pride of superiority—"I am among you as he that serveth." "He humbleth himself." "Made a curse for us."

Pride of success—"He came to his own, and his own received him not." "Neither did his brethren own him." "He was despised and rejected of men."

Pride of self-reliance—"He went down to Nazareth, and was subject unto them."

Pride of ability—"I can of mine own self do nothing."

Pride of self-will—"I seek not mine own will, but the will of him who sent me."

Pride of intellect—"As my father has taught me I speak these things."

Pride of bigotry—"Forbid him not, for he that is not against us is on our side."

Pride of resentment—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." "Friend, wherefore art thou come?"

Pride of reserve—"My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." "Tarry ye here, and watch with me." "The Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected."

Pride of sanctity—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." "But God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of Christ, by which the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."—Atlantic Missionary.

RELIGIOUS IDIOTS.

Dr. Seguin, the great authority on all that relates to idiocy, regarded this unhappy condition as a state of prolonged childhood, in which the graces of infancy have departed, while the feeble development of body and mind remains. When we see the babe playing with his fingers and his toes, grasping at the sunbeam that falls on his cradle, trying feebly to walk, but unable to stand steadily, we are amused, interested; it is natural, it is childlike. Suppose that when five or ten years are passed we see the child, and he is still where he was—still playing with his fingers, still amused with the sunbeam, and still feebly tottering. We start back in horror, exclaiming, "The child is an idiot." For we know that progress, growth, is the condition of health, bodily and mental.

Are there not among us religious idiots, persons whose spiritual growth has stopped in their infancy, who have never grown? We meet a young convert; his views of the truth are but immature; his faith is but feeble; he has to struggle against the old man within and against temptation without. Often his struggles are vain, and he yields to temptation; his devotions are fitful and irregular, for devotion is not yet a habit with him; he has to force himself toward it with an effort. But all these things do not discourage us—rather they arouse our sympathy, our affection, our prayers.

Years pass on; we meet the same convert. In his capacity for business there has been a growth; he can make more money than he could; his mind has grown. But as to his religious nature there has been no progress; his knowledge of the Lord's word has not enlarged; his faith is just as weak; his self-denying benevolence is no larger; it is just as hard for him to deny himself as it was; he has gained no power in prayer; he is just as much the victim of temptation. His benefactions are just what they were. He gave them a dollar with a struggle; and with the same struggle he gives a dollar now. It is just as hard for him to forgive injuries; just as hard to withstand the solicitations of fashion; just as hard to forego worldly pleasure, to repress anger and passion. What shall we say, what can we do, but start back and exclaim, "A religious idiot!"

Have you grown? Are you growing? Are you gaining victories? Is your present light so clear and bright that you look back on the period of your conversion as but the dawn? If not, then must not yours be regarded as a case of religious idiocy?

General News.

The river at Cincinnati has been three feet higher than last year, but the latest news is that it is falling slowly.—Senator McPherson has introduced a bill in the Senate to redeem the trade dollar, by making it receivable for postage and revenue stamps.—A bill has been introduced, temporarily, providing for the support of the common schools. It provides an annual appropriation of from $10,000,000 to $1,000,000 for the next ten years; the appropriation to be reduced $1,000,000 every year.—Telegrams have been received by Congress, asking aid for the flood sufferers, and both houses adopted a resolution, ordering an appropriation of $300,000 for that purpose. There was some doubt expressed as to the constitutionality of the measure, but only twelve members of the House voted against it.—The American National and Third National Banks, of this city, were consolidated during the week. The new concern will be one of the largest banks in the country, having a capital stock of $1,000,000.—Wool growers lost last year $15,000,000 by the reduction of the duty on wool.—Our exports of iron and steel, and manufactures of iron and steel were nearly $20,000,000 larger than ever before.—The Government has collected $1,000,000,000 of taxes from whiskey in the last twenty years.—The Chicago Tribune counts up 125,000 human lives lost by earthquakes, tornadoes, shipwrecks, fires, mine disasters, and other accidents in 1883.—Total number of deaths in the city of Nashville for the past year, was 1,175. This is a proportion of 23.50 in 1,000 of population. This is a lower rate than has been for several years, except in 1878, when it was .39 lower.—The case against Frank James and Chas. Ford, on the charge of the Blue Cut train robbery, has been dismissed. On account of Gov. Crittenden refusing to pardon Dick Liddell, the State was deprived of his testimony, and also valuable corroborative evidence, hence they would be unable to make the case.—Central Park, New York, requires more money to the square acre, to keep it in repair, than any other large park in the world.—The question of social precedence is exciting great attention in Washington. It is expected the president will send a message to congress, asking an appropriation of $500,000, to have a board of European noblemen and courtiers appointed to draw up the rule for the court at Washington.

FOREIGN.—The cotton operations at Lancashire, England, have won, and the strike is ended.—Bradlaugh swears himself in, but is excluded from the House of Commons. He then resigns his seat and a writ for a new election has been issued.—The powers are about to agree on carrying on the work of civilizing Africa begun by Belgium.—Three hundred Christians have been massacred in Tonquin.—Fifteen thousand weavers struck for higher wages at Blackburn, England, and march through the streets.—Advices from South Africa report the death of Cetewayo, the famous Zulu Chieftain, from heart disease.—The Sheiks between Shendy and Ambukal promise, to protect caravans and keep the route to Khartoum open. This is regarded as a good sign.—A millionaire in Marseilles has been sentenced to six months imprisonment and heavily fined, for lending money to young men at rates of interest varying from 20 to 60 per cent.—Foreigners employed on Russian railroads have been notified that they must be naturalized, or be dismissed at the expiration of three months. The Princess Frederica, of Hanover, has opened an exhibition in London for the benefit of the "London Flower Girl Brigade."

How Easy It Is.

How easy it is to spoil a day!
The thoughtless word of a cheerished friend,
The selfish act of a child at play,
The strength of a will that will not bend,
The slight of a comrade, the scorn of a foe,
The smile that is full of bitter things,
They all can tarnish its golden glow,
And take the grace from its airy wings.

How easy it is to spoil a day
By the force of a thought we did not check;
But by little we mould the clay,
And little flaws may the vessel wreck;
The careless waste of a white-winged hour
That held the blessings we long had sought,
The sudden failures of wealth or power,
And lo! the day is with ill inwrought.

How easy it is to spoil a life—
And many are spoiled ere well begun—
In home-light darkened by sin and strife,
Or downward course of a cherished one;
By toll that robs the form of its grace,
And undermines till health gives way;
By the feverish temper, the frowning face,
The hopes that go, and the cares that stay.

A day is too long to be spent in vain;
Some good should come as the hours go by,
Some tangled maze may be made more plain,
Some lowered glance may be raised on high.
And life is too short to spoil like this,
If only a prelude it may be sweet,
Let us bind together its threads of bliss,
And nourish the flowers around our feet.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

FROM UNCLE MINOR.

In the 20th verse and 8th chapter of Matthew, you will find out how poor Jesus was. He said something about foxes and birds having a home, but he had none. So I want to talk to you a little while about foxes and birds, which I know you will be glad to hear.

Well, foxes, have you ever seen a fox? Yes, say the country boys; but the little boys in the cities say they have never seen one, except it was in a cage in a circus. Now foxes have been known in almost all countries, and in all ages; they are a very peculiar little animal; there are various kinds. We find, in our country, the red and the gray fox. When I was a boy I used to go fox hunting,—your fathers can tell you what a nice time young people used to have fox hunting. In the South a great many persons, especially among the rich planters, used to spend a great deal of their leisure time in hunting foxes.

They kept a large pack of hounds, sometimes twenty or thirty, just for this purpose. I have known them to divide up the pack so as to let only part of them run at a time, and sometimes they would chase the fox, with the hounds, for two or three days and nights before they would catch him.

The fox will seldom leave the place where he was raised, and when the hounds get after him, he will usually go round and round for a long time; if he is pressed too close by the dogs he sometimes would go into his den or hole and stop the chase. I have known young ladies sometimes to go fox hunting with their brothers. They usually rode horses, because the fox and dogs run so fast that you could not keep up with them on foot. The chase becomes very exciting sometimes, especially when there is a large pack of hounds. In Europe, the fox chase is often engaged in by the nobility. They sometimes raise foxes for this purpose alone. It used to be regarded as one of the most amusing and entertaining sports. But of late years it is not so common. The fox is a very cunning little animal. While it cannot run so fast as the gray hound, yet it dodges the dogs, and is long-winded, especially the red fox, and can generally get away from the dogs. They live on chickens, rabbits, and birds, which they usually catch in the night—seldom coming out of their dens or holes in the day time. I might tell you a great deal more about the habits of foxes, but this is enough now.

Birds, you have all seen, but not all kinds. Those of the most beautiful plumage are found in the extreme South, among the ever blooming flowers, and where it appears spring-time all the year around. Many of them are sweet singers. The mocking-bird, thrush, cat-bird, and the little canary, we have all heard many times. But I cannot tell you of all the different kind of birds. Some of them sing, some do not. They all lay eggs and have nests. The dear Savior, when on earth, used familiar illustrations to teach the people. There was a man that had been following Jesus, perhaps, for several days, and saw the wonderful works that he did, he must have concluded that he was a very rich and great man. So he said; "Master, I will follow thee where thou goest." Jesus turned around, no doubt, and said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man has not where to lay his head." Thereby teaching this man he was poor—no place to call home. The foxes had places to hide and rest. The birds had a nest and resting place, but Jesus had none. So, dear children, you ought never to complain about your lot in life. "There are many thousands much worse off than you are. Just think of it. While you may have a comfortable little home, although it may be humble, you have a dear good father and mother, while there are thousands of poor little girls and boys in the world with no home, and worse still, have no loving, kind parents to watch over them.

What a kind, good woman sister Fanning is, to give all she has, to try and help the poor little orphan girls. And so many good brethren too, are willing to help them, by establishing a school to raise and educate them for useful lives. Work and pray for the Fanning Orphan School. I will tell you more about it, by-and-by. May God bless you all, and help you to be useful. Remember the poverty of Jesus.

BAD WRITERS.

A great many stories are told about the mistakes of printers, and there are some ridiculous ones that may happen by the use of a wrong letter, but the printers would not make so many blunders if those who wrote for them wrote more plainly. Many noted writers have been celebrated for their horrid hand. The bad writing of the eminent lawyer, Rufus Choate, has often been mentioned as the worst possible; some one said that the word "what" as he wrote it, "looked like a small grid-iron struck by lightning." One of the widely read English journals not long ago had an article on "Wretched Writers," which was mainly devoted to showing the mistakes made by Horace Greeley, as if there were not abundant examples of bad writing in England. It is true that Mr. Greeley would never have succeeded as a writing-master. We have several pieces of his writing which are not so difficult to make out when one gets the hang of it and knows that he made s, a and r all alike, as he did b, p and h. This English journal gives an instance of his bad writing that we had not seen before. Mr. Greeley was invited to attend a press meeting in a Western state, and sent a letter declining to come. Those who invited him studied over his answer, and this is what they made out of it: "I have hominy, carrots and railroad ties more than I could move with eight steers. If eels are blighted, dig them early. Any insinuation that brick ovens are dangerous to hams gives me the horrors." What he did write was: "I find so many cares and duties pressing on me, that, with the weight of years, I feel obliged to decline any invitation that takes me over a day's journey from home."

It does not seem possible for every one to learn to write an elegant hand, but it is possible for every boy and girl to write a plain hand that can be read without difficulty. The most troublesome letters that come to this office are those of persons who use flourishes, and though the written page as a whole presents a fine appearance, yet it is more difficult to read than the poorest cramped school-boy hand. It very often happens that we can read every part of a letter but the most important—the signature. While you are young, get in the way of writing your name so plainly that there can be no doubt of a single letter in it. It may save yourself and others much trouble in after life.—American Agriculturist.

Dear Uncle Minor: I thought I would write you a few lines from Smithville; it is the capital of DeKalb county. I am seven years old, and go to school here to Pure Fountain College. Miss Mary E. Pope is my teacher. My school opened January 14, 1884. We have one hundred and twenty-five pupils in school; four teachers. P. W. Dodson is President. Papa takes the Advocate, and I read it for grandma, who is now eighty-two years, old, and can't see. I also read the Testament for her. I go to Sunday-school every week, to the Christian church. Bro. J. M. Kidwill preaches here twice a month, or first and third Sunday. You will hear from me again. Smithville, Tenn., LIZZIE POTTER.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

I am sadly conscious that thousands of mothers are so overburdened that the actual demands of life, from day to day, consume all their time and strength. But "of two evils choose the least," and which would you call the least, an unpolished stove or an untaught boy? Dirty windows, or a child whose confidence you have failed to gain? Cobwebs in the corner, or a son over whose soul a crust has formed so strong that you despair of melting it with your hot tears and your fervent prayers?

I have seen a woman who was absolutely ignorant of her children's habit of thought, who never felt she could spare a half hour to read or talk with them—I have seen this woman spend ten minutes in ironing a sheet—there were six in the washing—one hour in fluting the ruffles and arranging the puffs of her little girl's "sweet white suit;" thirty minutes in polishing tins which were already bright and clean; forty minutes in frosting and decorating a cake for tea, because "company" was expected.

When the mother, a good orthodox Christian—shall appear before the great white throne, to be judged for "the deeds done in the body," and to give in her report of the Master's treasures placed in her care, there will be questions and answers like these:

"Where are the boys and girls I gave thee?"

"Lord, I was busy keeping my house clean and in order, and my children wandered away!"

"Where wert thou while thy sons and thy daughters were learning lessons of dishonesty, malice, and impurity?"

"Lord, I was polishing furniture and ruffling dresses and making beautiful rugs!"

"What hast thou to show for thy life-work?"

"The tidiest house, Lord, and the best starching and ironing in all our neighborhood!"

O these children! these children! The restless, eager boys and girls who are more than our lives! Shall we devote our time and strength to that which perisheth, while the rich garden of our child's soul lies neglected, with foul weeds choking out all worthy and beautiful growths? Shall we exalt the incidentals of life to the rank of a purpose, to the shutting out of that work whose results reach beyond the stars?

Fleeting, O mother, are the days of childhood! and speckless windows, snowy linen, the consciousness that every thing about the house is faultlessly bright and clean, will be poor comfort in that day wherein we shall discover that our poor boy's feet have chosen the path that shall take him out of the way to all eternity.—Ex.

IMPARTIAL DEVOTEDNESS.

To follow God as dear children, is to follow him impartially. The fidelity of a truly dutiful child embraces all, and not merely a part, of what a parent requires. Obedience is not a matter of mere impulse or caprice, option or selection. There is the same feeling of obligation to obey in one thing as in another. Those who are properly filial do not feel at liberty to select some commands to be obeyed, or some known wishes to be complied with, in distinction from others equally deserving of respect; but the obligation to do what is well pleasing to their parents, in one thing, is regarded as involving a similar obligation to do that which is well pleasing to them in other things, even in all things.

This should be a child of God's entire conformity to the will of God. All the commands of God are supremely important, and there is no one of them which is not to be obeyed. God never yet made an unimportant demand, which could be complied with or not, as those commanded may please to do, and the result be all the same. Being bound to honor one of the Divine mandates, is to be bound to honor another, and so all that is demanded claims respectful recognition. Partial obedience involves no obedience; for as one command is set aside, another may be treated in the same disrespectful and disobedient way, and thus it might come to pass that none of the claims of duty would be spared from rejection by the repudiating spirit which does not acknowledge the authority of all the commands of God.—Watchman.

The refined sins of the cultured class are as hateful to God as the coarse sins of the ignorant.

THE DANGER OF OVER-EXERTION.

A Stalwart Man Becomes Weaker Than a Child and Then Recovers his Former Strength.

(Waterloo, N. Y., Observer.)

In these days of rowing giants and athletic heroes fine physical development is more observed than ever before since the time of the Athenian games. A man who shows the elements of physical power is looked upon to far more than the days of our ancestors possibly because there are fewer specimens of well-developed manhood than then. An emissary of this paper met a magnificent specimen of physical power a few days since in the person of Dr. A. W. McNames, of Waterloo. His muscles, which showed unusual development, were as hard as wood. At his request the writer sought to pinch him in the arms or legs, but found it wholly impossible. A realization of what is meant by an iron man was fully made manifest.

"Have you always been so stalwart as this?" inquired the news gatherer.

"Not by any means," was the reply. "When a young man I was always strong and active and felt that I could accomplish anything. This feeling so took possession of me on one occasion that I attempted to lift a box which four men found it impossible to move. I succeeded in placing it on the wagon, but in two minutes from that time I was unconscious and remained so for hours and when I recovered consciousness I vomited a large quantity of blood. From that day I began to grow weak and sickly. I believed that I had suffered some internal injury and experienced a general debility, which seemed similar to the effects produced by malaria. My back was very weak. I had no appetite, and at times loathed food. My lips were parched and cracked. My head felt as though it were entirely open at the top and it pained me on the side intensely. In six weeks' time I had fallen away from 208 pounds to less than 170. I was in a most wretched condition. I was completely discouraged."

"What did the doctors say about you?"

"Almost everything. I consulted no less than six different physicians. They all treated me and none did me any good. At that time I was suffering intensely. I could not sit upright, but was obliged to rest in a cramped, uneasy position. I was compelled to urinate every five minutes and I passed over three quarts every day. I was not living, I was existing."

One night (how well I remember it!) my wife had put the children all in bed when the feeling came over me that I should live but a very short time. My wife and I talked matters all over and I gave the minutest directions as to what she should do after I was gone. I was not in a flighty condition by any means for the doctor, on leaving town the day following, bade me good-bye, saying he never expected to see me again, for I was suffering with Bright's disease of the kidneys in its last stages. Within the next few days more than twenty friends came to bid me good-bye. Among the number was Dr. John L. Clark. He asked me what I had used in the way of medicines. I told him. He then recommended a remedy of which I had heard much, but about which I was very skeptical. If faith were an element of power it certainly was lacking in my case."

"And so you did not try it?"

"On the contrary, I did try it and to my surprise it seemed to go just to the spot. Indeed, it was the most palatable thing I had taken into my mouth for months. I relished it."

"And did it cure you?"

"Do I look as if it did?"

"Yes, indeed. What was it?"

"Warner's Safe Cure."

"A proprietary medicine!"

"Of course. What of that! I suppose I once had as great a prejudice against advertised medicines as any one could have. When I was studying medicine at Ann Arbor, Michigan, I used to vow with the rest of the class that we would fight all such remedies at all times. When a man comes down to the last hour, however, and bids his wife and friends good-bye, such bigoted prejudices as these all vanish, I can assure you and any remedy that can cure is gladly welcomed."

"And how have you been since then?"

"As well—or better, than before."

"Do you still exert your strength?"

"Certainly. But I do not over-exert, as formerly. My strength is increasing every day, and my health is number one. I know that my life was saved by Warner's Safe Cure, and I believe it is the best medicine that was ever compounded by any chemist or physician. I am willing the doctors should sneer at me for such a statement if they choose, but I have proven its truth, and am prepared to stand by it."

The above experience should be of great value to all who are suffering. It shows the deceptive nature of this terrible malady: that all symptoms are common to it and that there is but one by which it can be absolutely avoided.

Delicate and Feeble Ladies.

Those languid, tiresome sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity, driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstruction of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over seventy years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, in Providence.

BRADFORD, PA., May 8, 1875.

It has cured me of several diseases, such as nervousness, sickness at the stomach, monthly troubles, etc. I have not seen a sick day in a year, since I took Hop Bitters. All my neighbors use them.

MRS. FANNIE GREEN.

$3,000 Lost.—"A tour of Europe" that cost me $3,000 done me less "good than one bottle of Hop Bitters; they also cured my wife of 15 years, "nervous weakness, sleeplessness, and "dyspepsia." R. M. Auburn, N. Y.

High Authority.

Hop Bitters is not, in any sense, an alcoholic beverage or liquor, and could not be sold for use except to persons desirous of obtaining a medicinal bitters.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

AN HONEST HEART LEADS TO A HOLY LIFE.

Good seed, on good ground, as certainly produces an abundant harvest as that any appointment of God in the physical world will produce any promised result. But it is equally true that the man who would obtain an abundant harvest must prepare the soil for the reception of the seed. Without this preparation, no matter what the strength of the soil may be, no abundant harvest can be reaped. God on his part created the soil, and has established all the laws by which the growth of a crop is consummated, but he has left it to man to prepare the soil, and place the good seed into it at the proper season as God has appointed. And if man leaves out this part of the work, the part that has been done for man will be of no avail to him. God in his divine wisdom has so arranged the affairs of this world as to make man's part of the work a necessity in order to make what God has done available. This is an unalterable decree. Neglected soil may produce abundance of wild weeds, thorns and briars, but the waving corn and wheat it will not produce without man's part of the work. The farmer may possess both the strong soil, and the good seed, and the seasons may be everything that could be desired, and yet no harvest will be reaped unless he prepares the soil, and sows the seed. Just as well expect a new world to be made as to expect this decree of God to be varied from. So it is in regard to the human heart, and the life that is to result from it. Man must prepare his heart for the reception of the incorruptible seed, which is the word of God. While God has created the heart, and furnishes the seed which is competent to the production of a holy life on the part of man, this holy life will no more be developed in man without the performance of his part of the work than the abundant harvest will be developed in the soil without man's part. Man must put away the love of sin from the heart, from his affections, and must willingly and lovingly receive the incorruptible seed, the word of God, into this prepared heart. So long as the love of sin lurks in the heart, leading to the gratification of its evil desires, there will be no room for the word of God, the pure seed of heaven's kingdom, to take root and grow there. There are many alien sinners, who when they allow themselves to think seriously, would be glad to be Christians. But they love money so well, and keep their hearts so deeply set upon it, that it is impossible for the word of God, the seed of the kingdom to take root and grow, so as to develop spiritual fruit. Others again think so much of worldly pleasures and amusements, the theatre, the gay and giddy dance and such like, that no room is left in their hearts for the pure gospel of Christ, and its divine principles. Large numbers are annually going into eternity unprepared from these very causes. They will not remove from their hearts the things that obstruct the soul-saving seed, the gospel of Christ. It is sad that so many, under circumstances so favorable, and with all the means of salvation, will cling to the love of the world, and allow this to shut out the power that would make them pure and good here, and prepare them for purity and happiness hereafter. And this love of the world that shuts out the religion of Christ, the only power to save the soul, is by no means confined to aliens, those who have never cleared off the rubbish of the world from their hearts. There are many in the church who for a time shut out the love of the world, and let the love of God, the gospel of Christ in, that fall back afterwards into the same old channels. It is not enough to cast the love of the world out of our hearts so far as to become Christians, and come into the church of God, and then allow the old thorns and briars to return.

There are many members of the church, who, no doubt, were sincerely in earnest at first, who are to-day so full of the love of money, or the love of pleasures and fleshly desires, that the first love and purity of heart that led them to obey the gospel of Christ is crowded out, and they cease to bear that spiritual fruit that alone proves an honest and good heart. Jesus said, "That on the good ground are they who, in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Luke viii. To keep the word, and to bring forth fruit with patience, is to so continue the love of God and the love of truth in our hearts, as to keep down the love of the world, so as to allow a continued growth in grace and the knowledge of the truth. It is just as important to keep the heart from the love of sin after coming into the church, and to allow the continued practice of the word of God, as it was to come in at first. And the only way to keep good hearts—honest, pure hearts—is by keeping them filled up with the love of God, the love of truth. We must continue to battle against the love of sin in every shape and form. This continued pure heart is not in any a direct gift from God, any more than a continued preparation of soil is a direct gift from God. The farmer knows very well that if he does not continue to prepare his soil every recurring season for the reception of his seed, that he will cease to have a harvest of yellow grain to reap. Hence you see him year by year preparing again and again the soil upon which the next harvest depends.

So it should be in Christianity. The Christian man should see to it that he has a good heart day by day. Whenever he finds noxious weeds and sprouts of sin rising up, he should go to work at once to grub them up, and throw them out, or burn them. Impurity of heart may come up in a thousand different shapes and forms. But come they will, in some measure, to all. None need suppose they will be exceptions to this rule. You see here and there a Christian whose heart seems to be almost always pure. You never see an impure desire-cropping out, nor the manifestation of an impure thought. But love and good works are continually manifesting themselves in their lives. But then, how came it so? Does any one suppose it just happened so, or that it is the result of direct overpowering work from God? If so, he is wonderfully mistaken. In order to find out how great a mistake such a supposition is, just go and talk to one of these godly men, and get the experiences through which he has passed. And when you do this, you will find he has had many struggles and contests with sin, in some of its varied forms. You will find that he has labored, [and toiled, and prayed, to gain the ascendancy over sin. You will find that he has resolved, and stumbled, and re-resolved, and stumbled again under the weight of sin; but that he has continued to make a determined fight against the great enemy of souls, and that he has read, and meditated, and prayed, and struggled on, and has tried, and continued to try to grub up, kill out, and destroy every root and vestige of sin. There is not a godly man or woman in the land that has not had more or less of this experience. And it is by this very means that such people keep their hearts and lives pure. Paul had such struggles as these. He says, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." 1 Cor. ix: 26-27. The Revised Version makes him say, "I buffet my body." This indicates that even with the great apostle to the Gentiles this constant struggle against sin was going on.

And so it is with every one that lives a godly life in this sinful world. It may require much greater effort on the part of some to keep down the desires of the flesh, than of others, but it requires an effort on the part of all, to keep down the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, and keep a pure heart. Yet this can be done, and must be done, if we desire to go to heaven when we depart out of this life. If we, as Christians, will keep pure hearts, pure lives will be the certain result. But to do this we must have the matter before us by day and by night, cultivating a constant, earnest, honest desire to obey and honor God, to do right, to do the Lord's will in all things. This one leading desire and purpose of heart to honor God by doing his bidding, was the leading characteristic in the lives of godly men of olden times. Abraham, Isaac, Elijah, David, were men of this sort. They hated sin, strove against it with all their powers, while they loved God, and honestly strove at all times to do his will. When men like these do, by sudden temptation, fall into sin, they mourn over it, repent of it, and through sincere and earnest prayer ask the Lord to forgive. And God has shown himself ready to forgive such as these, in every age. And such a life is so interesting, so beautiful and lovely in the eyes of others. Such a life is like the beautiful waving grain upon a well cultivated field of good soil. All love to look upon the vigorous looking wheat-field, from the time it first shows its bright beautiful green, till it reaches the golden yellow, and is ready for the reaper.

So it is with the Christian life, resulting from a pure and honest heart. The eye of the beholder is charmed with his constant devotion, his regular attendance upon the worship of the Lord on the first day of the week, his visits to the fatherless and widows, his keeping himself unspotted from the world. Honesty, truthfulness, good weights and measures, fair dealings in every department of life, are the fruits of an honest and good heart. A sincere effort to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, is ever present and visible in the life that results from a pure heart. Such a life as this is never hid. It is like a city that is set on a hill, seen by all around. Such a life is not only seen by all around, but is admired by all, and is constantly influencing others for good, and, like leaven, is permeating and elevating all with whom it comes in contact. And when the golden harvest of such a life comes, how sweet to be gathered into the heavenly home, to suffer and grieve no more. E. G. S.

BEARING FRUIT.

We are brought into Christ that we may, as branches in him, bear fruit. Without a connection with him we can no more bear fruit, than the branch can bear fruit severed from the vine. "Every branch that beareth not fruit he taketh away." Christ takes away every barren member. The church may fail to remove the name from the church-book, but God none the less takes it away, that it may not draw strength from him, to be exhausted in maintaining unfruitful life.

"Every branch that beareth fruit he pruneth, that it may bring forth more fruit." The vine-dresser prunes away the too exuberant growth of wood, that it may not absorb the strength that comes from the vine, and that this strength may be devoted to producing fruit. So God, the spiritual vine-dresser, takes away the tendencies and opportunities for fleshly development, of him who desires to be faithful to him, that all the strength of soul, mind and body, may be directed to bearing spiritual fruit in the kingdom of God. A man's condition is hopeless when God never cleanses or prunes his life by affliction, and sorrow, and disappointment,—by cutting him off from fleshly developments. If men abide not in Christ by bearing fruit, they are cast forth as the barren branches, and they are gathered up to be burned. That is the end of the unfruitful branches in Christ.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified that you bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples." We promote God's glory by bearing holy fruit. The quantity of fruit we bear is the measure of the glory that we bring to our Father. If the servant of God bears no better and no more good fruit than the servant of the evil one, then the service of God is no better than the service of the evil one. If the rule of God over us bears no better fruit in our lives than the rule of the evil one bears in the lives of his subjects, then God's rule is no better than the rule of the evil one. Hence no glory to God comes unless his servants bear good fruit through their service to him. This, too, comes from the fact unless we bear fruit in our lives here to God's glory, we can reap no fruit in the world to come to our own joy.

But in bearing much fruit we glorify God, and so shall be the disciples of Christ our Lord. This fruit consists in the denial of fleshly lusts, appetites, and desires manifested in true uprightness of character, in truthfulness, honesty and integrity in our bearing toward all, in deeds of kindness, mercy and love, in relieving the wants of the needy and suffering, and in seeking to spread the knowledge of the Lord to those in ignorance of his gracious love.

Now, brother and sister, are we bearing fruit in our lives whereby God will be glorified? Are we more self-denying than others? Do we gratify the appetites and fleshly desires less than our neighbors who are not Christians? Are we more honest, truthful, just and upright in our dealings, than others? Do we rule our tempers better, choke back the rising passions, and show forbearance, meekness, kindness? Do we show we return good for evil, and bless those who despitefully use us, and wrong us? Do we do more to help the poor, the afflicted, the suffering, the helpless, than others? Are we more ready to sacrifice, in order to save men, than others? We must bear fruit, else we cannot be the disciples of Christ. What fruit do we bear? What have we borne? What have we ever done to help a suffering fellowman? How many souls have we been instrumental in saving? How many in the year that has passed? Dear brethren and sisters, there is work for you and for me, for every one. If we do no work, we can wear no crown. Let us all re-consecrate ourselves to God, and determine that this year each one of us will bear fruit—we will do something toward perfecting our characters, and toward saving our fellowmen. No labor, no fruit; no fruit, no glory to God; no glory, we are not disciples of him who came to glorify God, and no crown in the home of God.

QUERIES.

Please explain the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of Paul's second letter to the brethren at Corinth: "Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away." Now, what does it refer to when it says, it shall turn to the Lord? Again, does the sinner possess immortality at death? If so, what is the — now? Do not suppose that any have drifted into the idea of the annihilation of the wicked, nor are they likely to, but wish to know your views upon the subject.—[W. W. Davis, Washington, Ark.]

It clearly refers to heart in the preceeding verse. The Scripture refers to Moses delivering the law to the children of Israel. His face shone with brilliancy when he came down from the Mount, the reflection typically of the glory from the presence of God. When he spoke to the people he placed a veil over his face. Paul says "this was done that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which was abolished." This I understand only to be a means of declaring the fact, by this type, that the Jews could not see the end for which the Jewish law was established, to-wit, to bring them to Christ. Paul, referring to the fact that they still failed to look to the end of the law and see Christ, says, "Even unto this day when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart." There prejudice is called here the veil that is upon their heart. But when it (their heart) shall turn to the Lord, the veil (that hides Christ) shall be taken away." He uses the Jewish nation as an individual with one heart.

The sinner never possesses immortality. God "alone hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi: 16. The Christian here seeks immortality. Rom. ii: 7: "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." He finds it when raised from the dead. 1 Cor. xv: 53: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." None become immortal until raised in Christ. Immortality is not used in the Bible as we use it. A corruptible suffering being is not immortal. Eternal death is not immortality. Immortality is freedom from corruption, freedom from suffering, freedom from decay, is eternal life. Eternal death is the opposite of this. It is eternal suffering. It is subjection to suffering, to corruption, to woe forever. God alone possesses immortality. The Christian seeks for it, and will be raised to inherit eternal life, immortality with God, in heaven. The sinner does not possess it, does not seek it, and will be raised to eternal death, everlasting shame with the devil and his angels forever. If we will only learn the true meaning of the word immortality as used in the Bible, there is no difficulty about it.

What part of the Scriptures ought young Christians to begin on? I read some in the Old and New Testaments every day, and advise others to "search the Scriptures daily." In reply, have been asked, "What will I read?"—[Leonard Wilson.]

First, we would say, the New Testament Scriptures ought to be more fully studied than the Old. Of the different portions of the New Testament, we would say the young Christian ought to familiarize himself fully with the life and teaching of Jesus as presented in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. The work of the Christian, is to reproduce in his own life, as far as is possible, the life of Jesus. This is the earthly end, the end so far as results upon himself, are concerned, that is to be effected on earth. This is the necessary preparation for enjoying eternal results in heaven. Unless we mould our lives into the likeness of the life of God's Son here, we cannot live with him in his eternal home. To do this, we must study his life, we must know it—must understand the principles of his action and life, that we may embody them in ourselves and drink into his Spirit. The teachings of the apostles embrace some Scriptures not practical to us, and hard to be understood, but they abound in practical exhortations and admonitions, with which the young Christian should become as familiar as with "household words."

But the Old Testament Scriptures should not be neglected. We have been satisfied that the protest against their binding authority upon us, led many disciples to neglect their study too much, to undervalue them. The effort to draw the distinction between the Old and the New Testaments, caused many to forget or fail to recognize their close connection to each other. One cannot be understood without the other. They are but parts of one whole. The principles of God's dealings with man, are more fully applied by God's own hand to the exigencies of life in the Old than in the New. The biographic and historic portions of the Old Testament Scriptures furnish inexhaustible fountains of knowledge to those who study them earnestly to learn God's will and ways with men. They give clearer, fuller conceptions of human character just as it is, and of those qualities and that type of character which God approves, than can be found elsewhere. Much study of these will give to us clearer conceptions of God and man than can be gained otherwise. The Psalms afford constant training to the devotional feelings. Proverbs is storehouse of divine directions to succeed in our efforts here in the world. We cannot say more now, than that the easy, practical lessons regarding human duty, are the portions of Scripture that we ought first to thoroughly hide in our hearts that we may not sin. The more difficult passages involve the principle of God's operations, rather than men's duties.

We received one hundred dollars from the church at Pinewood, in Hickman county, for the Fanning Orphan School, and five dollars from a brother at Manchester. We have now subscribed, about eighteen thousand dollars. We are looking around for suitable persons to open and conduct the school. The house needs some repairing, and other fixtures must be provided for the school. We hardly think it will be opened before next August or September. The purpose of the trustees is not only to furnish a training school for destitute orphans, but a good school for those having limited means, to obtain the best and soundest education for the duties of life. A year ago application was made for the reception of four orphan children—grandchildren, too, of one of the wealthy men of Davidson county. Their grandmother was a Christian. But reverses came upon the family, and these children had only enough to sustain them at a cheap school. We were not ready to receive them. They went to a Romish school. How many we might be able to save from such influences, none can tell. Rome increases her influence in this country more through cheap and safe schools for girls, than through all other means. Are there not eight or ten men and women who read this that will give one thousand dollars each, payable in cash or in five annual payments, bearing interest from date, to enable the trustees to start this school on a proper basis. Every one giving one thousand dollars can send an orphan perpetually to the school, subject to the conditions the trustees may adopt for the good of the school. If you are not able to pay so much, give what you can. The little of the poor is as much in the sight of the dear Father, as the much of the rich. Christians ought to give freely and gladly; they ought not to wait to be begged. Send in your free-will offerings, without taxing the school with the cost of an agent. You can send either to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, or to C. W. McLester, Treasurer, 51 N. College Street, Nashville, Tenn.

THOUGHTS ON MIRACLES.

Sometime ago I gave to our readers an article on "Miracles," which attracted the attention of a thoughtful brother with whom I have some correspondence, and caused him to write the following extract, which I take from his last letter to me. He says:

"Yes, I did write that I could not agree with you on 'Miracles,' but I did not mean that I wanted to controvert the question, but merely meant that it was an entirely new theory to me. This is a question too deep for me, and hence I asked you to write more on it. I hope you will do so at your earliest convenience. I will however be more specific since you desire it. To be candid I must say that I do not have any very well defined ideas on that question of special providence. I do believe in what is called the reflex influence of prayer, yet I do believe that we must bend our energies for the accomplishment of all things that we ask God to bring about, or he will not answer the prayer. I do not believe that prayer is ever answered in these days by miracles. And right here I sometimes get confused. And I am so anxious to know the truth about this important question. I pray privately and have family worship every night. I always feel better when I pray, and especially when I pray in private. I feel that I am giving my views to one who is in truth my brother, and who may bring me out of my perplexities on the subject. I do believe that you judge on this question too much from what God has done under a different dispensation. I fear that we all fail sometimes to draw the necessary line of distinction between those things written by Mark, Luke and John as said by the Savior to the early disciples, and particularly intended for that time, and these things that pertain to all time. I could mention many things that lead to this conclusion but will now mention only one—viz., the signs spoken of in the closing of Mark. Those signs do not follow believers now; why not? Whatever the reason may be, it may make plain other things that were intended for those people and times. It may also explain James v: 14.

But I will hasten to the next objection. You regard answer to prayer as a miracle. To this I have to say that first of all I do not think God would work a miracle to save any man's life. If a man were to go upon the house-top and pray to God to save him from death, and then leap to the ground, I do not believe his prayer would be answered; but if it should be, it would not be a miracle, because God has a fixed law upon prayer, and if the man should pray in accordance with the law and thus escape death, it would all be in harmony with law; and as the operation of law is not miraculous, there would in all this be no miracle. So of a man who would thrust his hand into the fire. I do not believe, in the first place, that God would, in answer to prayer, protect him from the flames; but if the prayer should be made and answered, and he should escape the burning, it would all be in harmony with the law of prayer, and hence there would be in it nothing miraculous. Certain chemicals will uniformly produce certain results when combined; upon the addition of a third an entirely new result is obtained all because of a fixed law that is inexorable. New discoveries are constantly being made in reference to the combination of chemicals that at first are phenomenal; but repeated experiments determine the fact that it is a law that inexorably governs said combination. Now it appears to my mind that whatever is over-ruled by fixed laws, (and all laws are fixed,) is not miraculous, but that the suspension of law is a miracle. If we pray for our daily bread, it is fixed that when we work the bread comes and when we idle it does not. As you showed Bro. McQuiddy, the laborer in the Master's vineyard is promised a support, but this support comes by a fixed law, it seems to me. He must preach the truth so that his hearers will fall in love with the truth; he must teach them their duty about giving—about supporting the laborer—as well as about other things, and then bread comes. But I do not deny that there are many seeming confusions in what I have said. How can I get out of these difficulties? The truth when once fully understood will bring us into the light. I am anxious to hear more on this subject."

The trouble on this subject, I think, grows largely out of an incorrect definition of the word "miracle." In the estimation of my correspondent, a miracle is a violation of natural law. Law must be suspended or broken, he thinks, or there is no miracle. It is hardly necessary to remark that a proper conclusion can be obtained only by keeping in mind the meaning of the Greek words which are rendered by the word miracle in our English Testaments. As well might one expect to find out what is Christian baptism by looking up Webster's definition of the word baptize, as to hope to obtain light on this subject from the commonly received opinions concerning the meaning of the word miracle. The misconceptions in the one case are not more foreign to the truth than in the other. In our common version (and in most English translations) the word miracle is used in translating the two Greek words, dunamis and semeion. The first of these words, dunamis, signifies primarily power; it is rendered by the words power, strength, ability, efficacy, energy, authority, miracle, etc. The other word, semeion, signifies primarily a sign; it is rendered by the words sign, mark, token, proof, evidence, wonder, remarkable event, wonderful appearance, extraordinary phenomenon, portent, prodigy, miracle, etc. I conclude from the study of these words, and from the connections in which they occur, that a miracle is the exertion of a power, or the giving of a sign, which man can not do without superhuman help. A miracle is something that God does, the how of the doing of which is beyond human comprehension. God cured the lame man at the gate Beautiful, and I presume Peter and John were as much in the dark as to how he did it as we are at this day. It was done at their word, but not by their power. God often wrought miracles at the word of man, thereby attesting that these men were sent by him to the people to instruct and lead them, but far oftener has he preformed them I think, in protecting and blessing and guiding his children, and in bringing disaster upon those who despise him. Says the great apostle to whom the keys were given, (1 Pet. iii: 10-12.) "For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil and do good; let him seek peace, and pursue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." Here we are exhorted to live righteous, devoted lives, if we would see good days; and instead of claiming that this happy result is the natural and necessary outcome of such lives, the apostle expressly attributes it to God's providential care in the words, "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." The Bible expressly teaches in hundreds and thousands of places, in the Old Testament and in the New, in the Gospels, Acts, Epistles and in the Revelation of John, that God is ever with his saints in some way incomprehensible to mortal ken, protecting them, guiding them, supplying their wants, and causing all things to work together for their good.

Jesus the son of God, left the earth more than eighteen hundred years ago and ascended to his home on high, to the right hand of the Father; and according to his word, in about ten days after, another divine person, the Holy Spirit, came to the earth to take his place as a comforter and guide of the disciples of our Lord. He has been on earth in the saints ever since. One of his first works was to give us the sacred writings of the New Testament, which he did through the apostles and evangelist by inspiring them. He attested the truthfulness of these records by many signs and wonders and miracles which he did through those holy men. After the Oracles were completed, and the fact that they were from God fully established, miracle-working powers among men ceased, as there was no further need of them; but the Holy Spirit is upon earth dwelling in the children of God, helping their infirmities, and making intercessions for them with groanings that cannot be uttered. I don't think we should theorize about the Spirit's work: we should believe what the Bible says about it, and stop with that. From plain statements, of the word of God we learn that the Spirit is given to believers; to believers after they have heard, trusted, believed; he is given to the obedient, not to the disobedient; he is given to the baptized; "whom the world cannot receive," says Jesus, talking to his disciples, "because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Observe, the Spirit was not in them then; he was with them (in Jesus,) but was to be in them. They received him on the day of Pentecost; and not only so but they told the multitudes that if they would repent and be baptized, in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins, that they also should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; "for," said they, "the promise is to you, and to your children, and all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, (1 Cor. vi: 19), after saying that he who commits fornication sins against his own body says, "Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God?"

If the reader wonders why I write thus about the Holy Spirit in considering God's providence, and the wonderful works that he does, I remind him that it is while discussing this indwelling of the Spirit, his helping our infirmities, making intercessions for us, etc., that he says, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I do not hesitate to say that this indwelling of the Spirit is an incomprehensible, miraculous thing necessary to the well being of the Christian and of the church; and that every Christian does receive the Spirit upon his baptism into Christ. That a divine person, the Holy Spirit of God, is upon earth dwelling in the saints, and that he has been here shortly after our Lord ascended to heaven, are startling facts well worthy of our meditations. It is needless to say that he is not here in vain.

My space allows of only a few words more this week. If a man should pray God to save him and then throw himself from a housetop would he be killed? Certainly! He would be tempting God. Had Jesus cast himself from the pinnacle of the temple, I doubt not he would have been killed. The question is not whether God will work a miracle in answer to the prayer of one who prays contrary to his will, but whether he will, when we pray in harmony with his will, answer us in ways that are many times unexplainable by us, and whether it is proper to call these answer miracles.

END OF THE KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

PERMANENT SUCCESS.

It is a law of nature, and of grace, that that which grows quickly, dies early. That which is to be permanent and lasting, comes slowly to maturity. As this is one of God's own laws, he observes it himself. God was four thousand years preparing the gospel for the world, and the world for the gospel. It was to be permanent; and hence its slow progress through the ages of man's history. Upon this principle, those churches which have grown slowly, have lasted longest. Churches built up hastily, by revival meetings, do but little good, and last but a short time comparatively, while those churches which have grown slowly, have been permanent and lasting.

Take, for instance, a church or congregation built up mainly by the teaching of the elders, and other members of the congregation, by the work and charity, the brotherly love manifested, and constantly exemplified by the life of its members in caring for the poor and the sick,—a church whose members are taught the necessity of worship, and of contributing every Lord's day as they have been prospered; and with such a church there is permanency. There is life, and growth, more and more. Such a church teaches the rising generation the necessity of its work, and enforces the lesson by practical demonstration. On the other hand, take a church whose elders do not teach, or who teach in a careless and very imperfect manner, and who require no practical, godly living, and who have no treasury in the Lord's house—who depend upon protracted meetings for church growth and Christian zeal, piety, and work; and such a church is short-lived, and dead, even while it has a name to live. The Lord has ordained the law by which the church is to grow, and I feel sure that a church once planted, and teachers or elders developed, the law of Christ does not contemplate anything like our great protracted meeting efforts. These are demoralizing to the church, while the course mentioned above is healthy, and permanently successful. We have copied the sects in calling "big preachers" for us, and have come largely to depend upon the magnetism, the eloquence, or the manipulation of preachers for success. Preaching is running the church. Let the elders go to work, study the word of God, and then teach the people; and keep the preachers in the field preaching to sinners. Let them preach to the world, convert men and women, set them in order, watch over, and teach them until some of the brethren are prepared to take the oversight of the flock, and then let them hunt new fields in the dark, untaught portions of the country, and again plant churches. Let the organized and taught churches in the meantime support the evangelists in their work in these new fields, and let them direct them, and say when they shall leave. In this way, we will carry out the Lord's plan of work, and in this way, we will build up congregations that our children's children may worship in and be saved. Let us study to do work that shall stand. Let every member be in earnest about his religion. Neglect no opportunity of learning God's law—study—and let the mothers in Israel call their children around them and teach them the Bible, and let father and mother both attend the assembly of saints each Lord's day. Worship God, look after poor, destitute brethren, care for the sick, and contribute to the Lord's treasury as they have been prospered. This will impress a lesson upon the children which they will never forget, and it will be an example which they will feel honored in copying. They will thus be led to emulate the good example of parents, and at last through this permanent work, and permanent growth, the earth shall be full of the glory of God.

KILLED BY PREACHING.

We stated in an editorial recently, that the church is being preached to death. Every day confirms us in that view. It is not teaching, but preaching we mean. The kind of preaching—modern, pastoral preaching. Instead of going on to perfection, in this reformation—imitating more and more, the life and the teaching of Christ and the apostles, we have turned back to imitate the sects, and in many places, are now practicing that from which our fathers fled. This is the legitimate result of the "pastor mania, that has crept into our churches. The teaching and ruling of the flock has been gradually taken from the hands of the eldership, and placed in the hands of the pastor." In many cases, he being a mere boy, and thus instead of the old and wise brethren, the elders ruling and teaching the church, as of old, and as ordained by our Savior, the whole thing has been unscripturally turned into the hands of an unscriptural officer, who being a novice, and a usurper has corrupted the worship, killed off the spiritual life and growth of the church of Christ, and changed it to a mere human society.

As an evidence of the "pastors" influence, in secularizing and prostituting the true worship of God to the worship of men, we copy a circular letter issued by one of these churches with a "pastor." Said circular was sent out on first of the year, or near there. Read:

To the members of the Christian Church: Having employed a new pastor, it is necessary that we at once provide for his support, as well as for other expenses of the current year.

You will please indicate the amount you are willing to contribute by filling up and signing the following blank, and depositing the same in the basket next Sunday (or, if you cannot be present, sending the same to me through the postoffice), and thus relieve the deacons of the necessity of calling on you personally.

At the request of the Treasurer, I also enclose a statement of your account as it stands on his books. The church is in great need of the money, and you are earnestly requested to place the amount in the basket next Sunday. If the amount is not correct, please deposit the correct amount and state what the error is and it will be corrected.

By order of the Board of Deacons.

Then follows blank pledge, which is to be filled up in favor of the pastor. Here it is:

I will contribute to the treasury of the Christian Church, for the support of the pastor and payment of current expenses during the year 1884, commencing January 1st and continuing until I give notice of the withdrawal of the subscription, the sum of _____ per week.

A few remarks on this circular is now in order. This church has a new "pastor," and provision is to be made for his support. Hence, the members are taxed to this end. The reader will observe, there is no provision made in these pledges for the poor; they are not mentioned. The call is for the support of "our new pastor." You will observe also that the call is earnest, and that the church is in need. The new pastor has come (excuse us for not spelling "pastor" with a capital P,) and must be supported. It looks too, from the earnest manner in which this "Board of Deacons" talk, that if response is not prompt, and liberal, somebody may be excommunicated. It must be next Sunday, (Lord's day our elders used to call it) and of course if this fails to meet the support of the new pastor, something else must be devised, and hence you may expect to hear of "socials," "festivals," "grab-bags," "cinderellas," etc., gotten up by the Board of Deacons with the new pastor as grand usher, and officer of the guard. How different from the scriptural method.

The Lord's method of raising funds is, that every one shall contribute every Lord's day as he has been prospered. It is to be a willing and voluntary offering; no taxing by the "Board of Deacons." It was to be for the poor. The pastor as we now have him, is unknown in Scripture, except it be under the title of "the man of sin." There is just as much provision made in the Scriptures for the support of the President of the United States, as there is for the pastor, as such, and not a word for either. Let the elders do their duty. Let them take hold of the flock as good shepherds,—teach, admonish, rebuke, and rule the congregation. Let them drive out these hirelings who care for nothing so much as for the fleece. Then shall the churches have rest, and then shall piety and godliness abound. But if this reformation is to be turned over to these hirelings, called "pastors," we had as well select its funeral hymn, for it must soon be sung.

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

13. Who are the witnesses referred to in Heb. xii: 1, and which Paul says, surround us?

The Infidel Voltaire said Christianity would be dead by the year 1800. We are now 83 years past that point, and Christianity still lives.

12. Paul says in 1 Cor. xv: 6: "After that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at one time, etc." Now can the class tell where, and at what time Jesus was seen of more than five hundred of his disciples at one time?

Dear Bro. Poe: In answer to Bro. Reccard's question, Noah was Methuselah's grandson. Methuselah died in the eleventh generation and Noah in the nineteenth. I agree to ruling the preachers out of the class. Hope the good work will go on.—[Edgar Floyd, Flat Creek, Tenn., February 3rd, 1884.

J. D. Murphy in the Texas Baptist Herald says the New Testament does not teach the idea of atonement, but that this idea belongs exclusively to the Old Testament, and that atonement could do no more than bring sins to remembrance—it took away no sins. What does the class say to that? How will that do for Baptist doctrine.

Dear Bro. Poe: I have seen some very interesting questions in your Bible Class, which have caused me to search the Bible a great deal, and in searching, I found some questions which I wish to ask. Who of the twelve tribes of Israel dipped his foot in oil and wore iron and brass shoes, and who was the fat king? As this is my first to write to any paper, I will close for fear I say too much.—[T. S. Stephens, Larkinsville, Ala., January 31st, 1884.

Why do you say cobweb, when you mean spider-web?

You complain at your lot in life, perhaps you are to blame if it is no better.

The past is unchangeable; we cannot alter one act of all our past history, but the future, we may direct if we will.

Surreptitious Selfishness.

Gross selfishness is comparatively easy of discovery and expulsion. It occupies so much of one's self that it cannot escape detection. It is like an army in the enemies country, which does not attempt concealment but invites attack. In the effort to subdue it, there is a clear action; the weapons can be wielded without hinderance, directly against the foe. The battle over and won, a great sense of triumph follows, along with with a feeling of true security.

There is a subtle form of selfishness, in some respects more dangerous than that which is thus pronounced. It often comes in when the other is driven out. It comes in by stealth. It takes refuge beneath the cloak of generosity. It springs up silently, imperceptibly, within the spacious chambers of earnest devotion. It is so small, so unobtrusive, and there is withal such a certainty of the pure and generous purpose in the main, that it is unobserved by the one into whose heart it has stolen. It is cowardly, for it sails under false colors: its light is borrowed—or rather pilfered—from the lustre of the predominant love. It is to be feared because unrecognized and because of the venom of its tongue.

Sadly is it to be deplored when one whose absorbing intent is Christian harbors this deceptive guest. It mars the beauty of character; it sullies the purity of purpose; it clogs successful endeavor. Yet such is its elusive nature, that, if one searches for it within himself, he will not find it; he says it is not there. Others may, or may not, recognize it in the distinctness of its malicious self; but they must feel the chilling influence of its presence. It works harm none the less surely because covertly and indirectly. The evil it does accomplish is doubly pernicious because concealed in intended good. Many a one wonders why his earnest efforts for good are unproductive. It may be that this insidious foe lurks within, and has thrown a dart into the purpose of love.

There is ample scope for the exercise of this secret selfishness in all phases of activity. It often manifests itself in religious controversy. Words then spoken in defense of truth which one thinks assailed, will sometimes carry with them an unperceived flavor of ill-will, of discourtesy, of unjust imputation. Accused of displaying an un-Christian spirit, the champion of truth, in surprise, warmly repels the charge, and affirms an untainted motive; while possibly the self-justification itself does not end without an ungenerous fling at the opponent, so stealthily has the film of selfishness been spread over his eyes. The signally harmful effects of religious discussion, conducted on either side in such spirit, are too palpable to need remark.

Jeremiah cries that the heart is deceitful above all things. The general experience of men attests the justice of the statement. Yet one cannot but wish an exception might obtain in the instance of those who, by pen or voice, take conspicuous place as contestants for God's eternal truth.—S. S. Times.

Our Revival.

It started in Sunday-school, and with a single pupil. Coming from that service one Lord's day afternoon, John Maxwell remarked to a friend:

"This is the last time I'm ever going into the Bible class. You never heard such twaddle as old Deacon Bates talked there to day. He's stupid enough in prayer-meeting, but the in the role of Bible teacher he's a donkey!"

John attached himself to the Bible class, but Deacon Bates's slow way of presenting the truth seemed to have been to the liking of this ardent young disciple, who was a veritable Peter in zeal and indiscretion. On this particular afternoon he went away quite resolved the time spent in the class room could be devoted more profitably to private study of God's Word. Burning with the righteous determination he began to pore over the Epistles of the Romans, and presently came to the words, "For even Christ pleased not himself." The text lingered in his memory; it haunted him through the week; it thrust itself upon his conscience when he tried to study, next Sunday in the retirement of his own room. Somehow the Holy Spirit seemed to apply the words to his soul in but one way, and that in connection with the despaired Bible class. He saw his selfishness in aiming to make the service an occasion of personal enjoyment, rather than a means of showing loyalty to his divine Master. The more he and prayed about it, the meaner his motives appeared, and with characteristic manliness he turned square about. In the warmth of penitent feeling awakened, he even wished that the deacon's teaching might grow more "stale, flat, and unprofitable;" he longed for the hour to be increasingly tedious each week if thereby he could be like Jesus in pleasing not himself.

The emotion crystalized into action. The text became so inwrought into his own experience that he could not help talking about it to other members of the old class. He shared with them the new wealth of joy and peace which enriched his life by a hearty surrender of his preferences in what seemed a very small matter. With two and afterwards three others, he formed a little prayer-meeting to ask for a special blessing upon the school that winter. They pledged God and each other to render any service that might be asked of them. The superintendent was puzzled, but none the less gratified, at their readiness to act as substitutes for absent teachers, to help in the concerts, to fill any kind of a gap, and, above all, at their loyalty to a plan, uncalculated, but godly man, whom, in despair at finding a St. Paul, he had placed over them as teacher. A thoughtful spirit soon became manifested in some of the classes, was communicated to others, and the blessed quickening is now being felt throughout the church. Is there a John Maxwell in your school.—S. S. Times.

RE-BAPTISM SO-CALLED.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: In the last issue of the ADVOCATE, I see my letter in reply to a short comment of yours, upon what I had said on the subject of re-baptism in a previous issue of the ADVOCATE.

First, I will notice what you said in reply to my article. You begin by saying, "We do not think a discussion of the question of re-baptism of much profit, from the fact that the question at issue is always assumed, and the brethren look at it wholly from a prejudged standpoint." If I understand you, Bro. Lipscomb, I would like to know what question it is, that is now under discussion, the issue of which is not assumed and looked at from a "prejudged standpoint?" Is the question of the "missionary convention" free from this same difficulty? If not, further discussion of this question is unprofitable, if you are right, but I do not think you are. I trust that you may never cease to use your strength against this monstrous usurpation. Again, you say, "When any one assumes that Baptists never teach the Scriptures on the connection of baptism with remission of sins, he errs." I, for one, have never stated that Baptists never "teach the Scriptures on the connection of baptism with the remission of sins." But, so far as I know and have read of them, I have never yet learned that they bring remission of sins in connection with baptism very "prominently forward." You say: "It is true, that when the partisan spirit is aroused, they controvert the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins. But my conviction is, only a few Baptists believe that persons, who wilfully or indifferently neglect baptism, are in a saved condition. It is true, that they attach a different meaning to the remission of sins, from what I believe the Bible does; and will say they are converted and their sins pardoned, when they really mean, only, that they have been brought to trust the Lord."

Bro. Lipscomb, will you please tell from what you formed your conviction, since it is not from what they say? Might not you be mistaken in your "conviction" as to what they believe? Would it not be a safer rule to judge them by what they say, rather than by your "conviction," since all will agree that they ought to know better than any one else, what they believe? If they attach a different meaning to the remission of sins, from what you believe the Bible does, which is right, you, the Baptists or the Bible? Again, you say: "I have believed for years, that an undue prominence has been given to the remission of sins as the design of baptism. Not that baptism has been too earnestly insisted on as a condition of remission of sins, but to say remission of sins is the design of baptism, is to say either that it is the only design of baptism, or that it is preeminent above all other designs, ends or purposes effected by baptism." Here, to me, your language is vague and indefinite. Is baptism for the remission of sins? If you answer

"yes," then I believe you are right, but upon such an answer, I should not conclude that you were holding baptism for the remission of sins in that exclusive sense, that you seem to assign to me and others who hold that it is for the remission of sins. I do not remember ever to have heard any one say that remission of sins is the design of baptism. In my letter in question, in speaking of baptism with its antecedents, I said, "This is all for the remission of sins. It is thus we gain heirship." I might have gone on and named many other ends gained by baptism, but did not deem it necessary. Again, you say, "In the commission as announced by the Savior, nothing is said of the remission of sins. It is embraced in the being in Christ." This depends entirely upon what you consider "the commission by the Savior." What about the commission as given by Mark and Luke? Do you suppose, my brother, that baptism was only for the remission of the sin of murder? Surely you do not, yet your language verges very closely on to this idea. You say baptism brings us into Christ. To this, I heartily agree, and in coming into Christ we are freed from sin. "For all the promises of God in Him are yea and in Him amen, unto the glory of God by us." We cannot come into Christ loaded with sin. No, we are to be cleansed from sin, and the act that cleanses us from sin, brings us into Christ, constitutes the "new birth," etc.

You ask, if I understood when I was baptized "that baptism was for the dead." I will answer that I understood that Christ had died, and that he commanded baptism to believing penitents for the remission of sins—not confining it to murderers. I understand it that way yet, and am surprised at any Bible reader who can understand it otherwise. I am one of the "selfish" ones who was baptized for the remission of sins as well as for other benefits promised. Had I not believed that my sins were to be pardoned in the act of baptism, I should never have been baptized. Our Savior did not say, "He that believeth and is baptized for the dead, shall be saved, nor go, teach all nations baptizing them into the dead; neither did Peter, on the day of Pentecost, say, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, for the dead, for the remission of sins." Neither did Paul say, "As many of you as have been baptized into the dead, have put on Christ." Neither did he say, "Know ye not, that so many of us were baptized into the dead, into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death." If our Savior or any of his apostles had said any of these things, I should have endeavored to ascertain the meaning of their language, before baptism. I do not regard an exegesis of this mooted passage at all pertinent to the question at issue. Were it not for fear of being too lengthy, I would be pleased to show the irrelevancy of Bro. Lipscomb's question upon this point at more length than I have, though I have no fear that any careful reader of the ADVOCATE will so far forget the real question at issue, as to be led astray by this subterfuge.

Bro. Lipscomb, I love you for your work's sake, and am sorry to see you so wedded to sectarian idols. Old ruts are hard to pull out of, but when there is imminent danger ahead of being capsized by remaining in them, a good driver will make a strong, steady pull, and come out of them. I hope you will pull out of yours and get on the turnpike of truth, out of all danger of the quagmires of sectarianism. If you sometimes take the confession and at other times do not, one of these times you have done wrong. There are no two ways to do about God's law of induction; and when two ways differing from each other are proven to be right, I stand pledged to prove by the same rule, that two thousand are right. You can only safely determine one believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, when told so by "the mouth" of the believer, your "convictions" should be based upon what a man says of himself: you will even then be deceived often enough. You say "then every man who says before or after (italics mine) baptism, that he believes that God for Christ's sake has pardoned his sins—confesses his faith in Christ as the Son of God, the Savior of sinners." I say, if such language is evincive of faith in Christ, it is, at the same time, evincive of very little faith in the words of the apostle Peter. Acts ii: 38. I regard any rejection of what any of the apostles taught as palpably, a rejection of Christ, who chose them, sent them and filled their mouths with messages of love. I am constrained to regard a light estimation of "confession with the mouth" as a failure to understand one of the antecedents to scriptural baptism. Jude says: "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you, of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you and exhort you to contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Paul says, "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart, that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and shalt believe in thy heart, that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

This is what Paul, one of the saints, says is the faith which we—that is, I, Paul and other saints—preach. Now, a man who does not earnestly contend for this faith, which Paul say "we preach," not only fails to follow the example of the great apostle to the Gentiles, but also disregards the solemn exhortation of Jude. Bro. Lipscomb, do you not think we ought to contend earnestly for this faith? You say, again, "To single out one result of the entrance into Christ through baptism, and hold it up as the design, either the sole or the chief design, to the overlooking of other results, and to the obscuring of the great end which embraces all fruits and results, is to do violence to the order of God." To this I say amen! and will add, that to take from God's law any one of the conditions and say it is less prominent than any other, when there is no authority in God's word for it, is to infract the divine law and fall under God's condemnation. Again, you say, "To single out any purpose or design, God proposed to accomplish for men and make the understanding of this purpose of God necessary to acceptable obedience, when God has not done this, is to presumptuously add to the requirements of God and to fall under his condemnation." To this also, I say amen! and will add, "to single out any purpose or design that God has proposed to accomplish for men or act that he has required to be obeyed from an understanding heart, and say that it is not necessary to understand it, when God has said that it is, is to presumptuously supplant the law of God, by the wisdom of this world and fall under his severest condemnation. To my mind, there is nothing more clearly taught in God's word than that baptism is for the remission of sins. I fully agree that it is clearly taught that baptism puts us into Christ, but you say "to put a man into Christ is oftener presented in the Scriptures as the end or purpose of which man was baptized, than any other." To this I say, that anything, clearly taught in the Scriptures, though it be mentioned but one time, is worthy of as much weight as though it were mentioned one thousand times.

However, were it necessary to ascertain which of these two ends that are reached by baptism, is oftenest mentioned in the Scriptures, I think it would be found that you are in error on this point. Yet I do not think that the number of times either is presented, is to be taken as conclusive evidence that one is more clearly taught than the other; neither do I consider this relevant to the question at issue. You say, "To be baptized for the remission of sins as the only design—that is, if we do it, moved alone by the desire of securing the remission of sins—the design is wholly a selfish one. I do not believe that men baptized by a design purely selfish, are acceptably baptized." I am sure that selfishness is contrary to the spirit of Christianity, but according to your own rule of reasoning upon the subject of re-baptism, the man who knows no other end to be gained by baptism—if there should be such a man—than remission of sins, would be acceptably baptized, because you say it is not necessary that he should understand all the ends to be gained, and I shall patiently wait for you to tell your readers just how much a man is to understand before his baptism is acceptable. My brother, are you not here "singling out a purpose or design God proposed to accomplish for men and making the understanding of this purpose of God necessary to acceptable obedience?" Does not your language, fairly construed, imply that if a man only knew that baptism was for the remission of sins, and was baptized solely for that end, that his design would be selfish? I do not propose to undertake the arduous task of finding a man in that frame of mind, but your whole article seems to be directed at just such a species of the genus homo, and I wanted to let you know, that if you ever did find him, that although you have directed some heavy blows at him, he will go uncondemned when fairly tried by your own theory. Again, you say, "On the day of Pentecost they were convicted of the murder of the Son of God. Under a sense of guilt of a crime so heinous; they are anxious to free themselves from the guilt and the condemnation resting on them for this crime." Oh, how selfish Bro. Lipscomb's theory would make them appear! Yet Peter promised these "selfish murderers remission of their sins upon repentance and baptism. "God is no respecter of persons," but as I understand Bro. Lipscomb's theory, he did here accept these murderers of His Only Begotten Son, who were "selfish" enough to be baptized for the remission of this enormous sin. Then God forgave the sins of those who murdered his Son, upon terms that he will not forgive the sins of others. Do you believe this?

In the ADVOCATE of April 25th, 1883, while upon this same subject—re-baptism, you say: "But when a sense of guilt was not so pressing, the forgiveness of sins was not so prominently brought forward." My reason for quoting from you at that date while answering your recent article, is because you present the same idea in both articles; but this language gives your idea in fewer words than any quotation I could make from your last article. I propose to show that remission of sins is brought "prominently forward" in many instances. Luke says: "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and rise from the dead the third day, that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem," (ending, I suppose, when the gospel ceases to be preached.) What do you say, Bro. Lipscomb? Here Luke brings remission of sins quite "prominently forward."

The commission as given by Mark, says: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Here remission of sins is "prominently brought forward," unless our Savior did not mean "saved" from past sins. Peter, acting under the commission and "beginning at Jerusalem" brought remission of sins "prominently forward," but Bro. Lipscomb says the Pentecostians were laboring under a deep sense of guilt of murder; but Peter goes on to say in the same connection, "For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." I claim then that the Holy Spirit through Peter, brought remission of sins "prominently forward," not only for the Pentecostians, but for "as many as the Lord our God shall call." Peter, at the house of Cornelius, brought the remission of sins prominently forward when he said, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive the remission of sins." Paul at Philippi brought remission of sins prominently forward, when, in response to, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" he said: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." What was he to be saved from? Here was another man selfish enough to want to be saved from his sins. Paul says, Rom. vi: 17-18, "God be thanked that though ye were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you, being then made free from sin, you became the servants of righteousness." When were they made free from sin? When they "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine," not part of it, but the whole form. They "put on Christ" by that same form. Thus they were born again. Thus they became "new creatures in Christ Jesus." They accomplished all of this and much more by obeying from the heart that form of doctrine delivered them. Although remission of sins is brought prominently forward as an end accomplished by obedience to this form, its "prominence" does not weigh, in the least, against any of the other ends to be gained by obedience to "that form of doctrine." What does obedience from the heart mean? What does it take to constitute the baptism that brings us into Christ? Bro. Lipscomb, do you consider immersion in water, without a previous preparation of the heart, the baptism that brings us into Christ? If not, what are the necessary antecedents to make it Christian baptism? Upon this ground, the question, now called re-baptism, can be fairly and profitably discussed.

Everything that I have seen from your pen upon this subject, tends to the idea that the immersion in water, simply upon the belief that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, without any conditions or understanding between that fact and the water, is scriptural baptism. Is this your position? If not, then please state what else is necessary besides the belief in that fact? With this question I will close my remarks, as I have consumed so much space already in answering points of Bro. Lipscomb's entirely irrelevant to the question at issue. But promise, if Bro. Lipscomb will allot me space in his paper, to prove conclusively to every candid reader; that we should never receive persons from anywhere into the church without requiring them to be baptized.

A. MCGARY.

The great trouble in all these discussions is to keep the point directly before us. The failure to do it brings in so much irrelevant matter, it lengthens out, multiplies articles, until it over-crowds the paper and wearies the reader.

There are just two points involved in this discussion. First, when a person believes in the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart, and submits to him in baptism, with a view of honoring him, will he receive the blessings of the Lord, even though he may mistake the time or place at which the promised blessing comes? Second, do any of those baptized by Baptists, Methodists, or others, believe with all the heart in Jesus the Christ, and are they baptized in order to obey and honor the Lord?

Nobody is contending that all baptized by Baptists, Methodists, or any one else, are scripturally baptized? I have always contended that were the apostle Paul to baptize one not qualified by a believing and penitent heart, it would not benefit him. Were a true, believing penitent, baptized by an incarnate devil, it would not invalidate his baptism. Then whatever vitiates the baptism performed by a Methodist or Baptist, would vitiate one performed by the apostle Paul. The devil, when transformed into an angel of light, doubtless did, and does preach and baptize. If a true believer that seeks union with God through obedience, submits to baptism at his hands, he is saved.

Then let us dismiss the question of who does the baptism, and ask if Alexander Campbell, who in his anxiety to obey the Lord, saw that baptism was a requirement of the Great King, and was baptized before he could, through the fogs and mists in which he had been raised, clearly see that baptism was for the remission of sins, or was for the dead; Did this failure to understand the time and place when God bestowed the blessing vitiate the obedience? If so, Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, B. W. Stone, Tolbert Fanning, and that heroic band that led out of sectarianism, lived and died out of Christ. This does not prove that the knowledge of the time when the blessing is received, is not necessary, nor do I present it for this purpose. I only wish to see what it involves. If these men of might and faith could be acceptably baptized, while not understanding the exact time and place when the blessing was to be bestowed, or the whys, and wherefores, and purposes of God in giving a command, God will not be more exacting with the weak and lowly, who, while anxious to obey and honor God, find their minds beclouded about what baptism for the dead is, or at what point in their submission to God he forgives their sins. If it is necessary to understand what one fruit of baptism is, before it can be acceptably submitted to, it is necessary to understand what all the fruits are. But God never required the knowledge that baptism is for the remission, as a preparation to baptism. When it is mentioned, it is mentioned as an encouragement and incentive, and a comfort to those oppressed with a sense of guilt, not that a knowledge of it is necessary to acceptable baptism. When a man asks another, Do you believe that baptism is for the remission of sins? as a condition of baptism, he as much adds to the appointments of God as does he who asks, Do you believe God has for Christ's sake forgiven your sins? But if it is requisite, as faith in Christ is requisite to acceptable baptism, every administrator should be as sure that the subject believes this, as that he believes Christ is the Son of God. To be sure of this, he must take the same means to determine the one as the other. Make him confess it with the mouth.

I can't think it is necessary to argue this question further. Bro. Powell supposes a case: "If Abraham had said before he crossed the line, I will stop in my own country here and enjoy the blessings, and not go over, would he have received the blessing?" Why he asks such a question, I know not. I never heard of a position taken at all similar to it. I never said a man could stop short of baptism and enjoy the blessing. But to use the case of Abraham, was it necessary for Abraham to know exactly when he crossed the line of promised possession in order to inherit the promise of God? He followed God, not knowing whither he went, nor when he crossed the line, and after he had followed him into the land, then God told him to look abroad, the land should be his and his seed's forever.

Not only is this case against the position, but every one in the Bible. The man that obeys God with a full heart, without stopping to inquire the why and the wherefore, exactly how much service must be rendered to gain so much blessing, is the one that is blessed. All human obedience is necessarily beclouded with more or less of erroneous theory simply because we are human. It is a question, What degree of error is fatal? My conclusion is, no error is fatal until it prevents obedience to the divine law. If any one can show this is untrue, and will show the point at which error is fatal, I will be thankful. Second, with this conclusion, it seems to me hardly needful to investigate the second. We hardly think any will deny that many who are baptized by Baptists, Methodists, and others, believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and are baptized in order to obey him. Will Bro. McGary deny that A. Campbell and T. Fanning were baptized with the desire to honor God? Bro. Fanning was not baptized by a Baptist, but did not realize that baptism was for the remission of sins, and as a preacher, used for a time the mourning bench to convert people. I ask it of these because we can look at these without sectarian prejudice. If they could be baptized to honor him in the Baptist or other churches, why may not others? And remember no one contends that a person baptized merely to get into a Baptist church, or any other church, is baptized acceptably.

This much we say, but even if the belief in baptism for the remission of sins, is necessary to its validity, many Baptists believe this. All Baptist historians known to me teach that the ancient churches believed that without baptism there is no remission of sins, no entrance into Christ. Bro. Alsop has quite recently given extracts from Orchard and Jones on these questions. Dr. S. W. Lynd and Jno. S. Waller, the most prominent members of the church in Kentucky, thirty years ago, the originators of the Bible Union movement, taught the truth on this

Obituaries.

A. D. Fry passed from earth to the better land Jan. 6th, 1884, at the age of 23 years and 2 months. He was the 9th of a company of 15—3 daughters and 12 sons, children of Jesse and Nancy P. Fry.

No young man, perhaps, ever arrived at manhood's estate in this community with a reputation more spotless. Before he was 15 years old, he confessed the Savior and was baptized, and amid all the temptations to which youth is exposed, he remained true to his Master. Sinners enticed, but he consented not with them in anything that he felt was a violation of the law of his God. Standing in the presence of God and reviewing the temptations of this life and the actions of his wicked associates, like the heroic Nehemiah of old, he can say, "So did I not."

No one ever heard of Lonnie Fry's indulging in the "social glass," the giddy dance, or cards for amusement. He walked not in the counsel of the ungodly nor stood in the way of sinners, nor sat in the seat of the scornful. Truly, it might be said of him, "His delight was in the law of the Lord." He attended Sunday school regularly and the weekly meetings of the brethren to commemorate, in the holy communion, the sufferings of the dear Savior. At an early age he became a teacher in Sunday School, and often, when his own carnal desires would, no doubt, have led him away from his work for Christ, a sense of duty to his class, and an abiding love of his Redeemer constrained him to forego these pleasures, and in the house of God meet those whom he had committed to his care.

Nor was his Christian life only the outward circumspection of the modern Pharisee, but "the powers of an endless life" shone forth in his sweet spirit, sublime faith and sincere charity.

His virtues and intelligence were recognized in the community in which he was born and reared, so that parents who had known him from childhood's thoughtless hour, chose him above others to lead their children in the ways of science and knowledge. It was a touching scene, when, at his funeral service, the boys and girls whom he had so recently taught, came near with tearful eyes and sad hearts to take a last look at their dear teacher "not lost, but gone before." After teaching the fall session he returned to Goodman's College at Nashville, which he had been attending for a year. During his residence at Nashville he was, as at home, a regular attendant of church and Sunday-school. The distant city, away from father and mother and the restrictions of the home life, with its gaieties and follies, temptations and follies, led him not away from his God. His pastor in Nashville thus writes concerning him:

"You say he was a good boy at home. I can say he was a good boy 'away from home.' His Christian life while here was very praiseworthy. He was a willing and faithful worker in Sunday-school and in church. We miss him very much. May God bless his 'death' as his 'life' to our good, and comfort all sorrowing ones."

While there he contracted a fever. Hoping to recover, he continued at his work perhaps too long. At last yielding to the advice of his physician, he came home. He was much reduced in strength when he arrived and seemed to have a presentiment that he would never recover. He said once: "I have come home to die." Hopes that he would recover were entertained, however, by his friends until 48 hours before his death. A copious hemorrhage from his bowels left us no hope for him in his prostration. His father preceded him only a few days to the heavenly world. Fearing the effect of the sad news his friends withheld it from him.

What a surprise it must have been to him, when across Jordan's restless wave he found his father "watching and waiting" for him! That father with choking voice and tear-dimmed eyes once said to the writer something like this: "My boys somehow are hard to move in obedience to God. I would be mighty glad to see them all do as Lonnie has done. He is a great comfort to me and never causes me any trouble."

At that time Lonnie was the only son in the church. Since then a father's prayers have been answered and other children are enrolled in the "Lamb's Book of Life." "Over there" he is still more anxious to see those left behind follow on to the Christian's home.

Bless, O, Lord, our Heavenly Father, the widowed mother smitten by this new grief and the broken-hearted brothers and sisters, and grant them grace to "strive to enter in at the strait gate" that they may rejoice evermore in a glad family reunion in the "summer land of song."

GEO. W. CAMPBELL.

Jesse Fry lacked 30 days of completing three score and ten years, passing away Dec. 27th, 1883. His long and useful life was spent on the farm on which he was born. He was the only living brother of Capt. Wm. Fry, who died at an advanced age 3 years ago. Two sisters in Missouri and two in Texas alone remain of the family to which he belonged. He was united in marriage at the age of 31 to Miss Nancy P. Boatright, daughter of Daniel Boatright, a life time citizen of this community. To them were born fifteen children, ten of whom have been called to mourn the double loss of father and brother in ten days of each other. He united with the church of Christ under the ministry of Joshua K. Speer, sr., in about the year 1848. During all these years he has been an humble follower of Jesus—seventeen of them an elder of the church of Christ at Lynnville.

He was a man of strong physical frame and suffered little from ill-health until within the last three years. During this time he has suffered much from an asthmatic trouble, which culminated in disease of the lungs, from which he died. "Though he lived long and lived well and could be ill-spared, yet he died at last" and was gathered to his people. In him the church of Christ loses one of its oldest members, the community one of its best citizens and his family a kind and indulgent husband and father.

"The righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance."

GEO. W. CAMPBELL.

On the night of the 2nd inst., at 9 o'clock, Sister Bettie Crawford, the wife of Jno. W. Crawford and daughter of elder Wm. G. and Mary F. Martin, bade farewell to all earthly friends, and in the calm resignation of the child of God resting upon the chief corner stone, passed to her reward. Sarah Elizabeth Martin was born July 4th, 1850; was married to Jno. W. Crawford March 16th, 1870; obeyed the gospel soon after, being baptized by Bro. J. M. Pickens, and died February 2nd, 1884, being 33 years, 6 months and 28 days old. She has gone to join her angel mother, in the rest that remains for the people of God, leaving a father, husband, two bright children—Willie and Lizzie—and very "very" many friends to mourn her untimely loss. But while they mourned, how sweet the thought that with her mother and aunt Nannie, she rests from her labors in the Paradise of God. Her father has already passed the meridian of life, and with the speed of time, hastens on to join the angelic throng. Her husband, now broken hearted! May God bless him, and help him to fall into line under the banner of King Immanuel, and make as good a soldier for Jesus as he has been a husband for her; and her children, now left to be raised without a mother; may the Father of mercies temper the winds to them, and be a God and Father to them in their orphanage, so that they may not know the want of a mother's care and affection. When old age has dimmed the eye, and bent the frame; when the days of our usefulness have passed, and there is no more work that we can do, it is not so hard to give into the embrace of death those whom we love, knowing, as we may, that they but enter into the vestibule of ecstatic joys and ineffable delights, to await the summons, "come up higher." But not so with Bettie Crawford; she was in the very zenith of her usefulness; a model wife, a devoted and peerless mother, an earnest disciple of the Lord, doing his bidding; she was a very angel of mercy to the suffering, and a good samaritan to the sick. Thus following the example of her Master, she went about doing good, shedding beams of brightness and inspiring the sick with hope as only an angel of mercy in the form of a good woman can. May God in his mercy bless the bereaved ones, and help them to bear this heavy affliction.

A. C. HENRY.

Sister Mollie E. Fisher was the beloved consort of J. M. Fisher, of Monroe County, Ky., and daughter of M. B. and D. A. Welch, of Monroe County, Ky. She was born December 21st, 1854; was married September 29th, 1874, and gently fell asleep in Jesus January 2nd, 1884. She was buried at Lebanon church near Jamestown, where she had worshipped with her brethren and sisters while on earth, where appropriate services by kind friends were held. Her sickness, like all other troubles that came upon her, was borne with Christian fortitude. She remarked just before she departed this life, that she would soon be where she could rest. She leaves a husband and four children, a father, mother, six sisters and two brothers, with many relatives and friends, who deeply mourn their loss. She made the good confession in the autumn of 1874, under the preaching of Bro. A. Alsop, and as she was a submissive and dutiful child to her earthly parents, a kind and affectionate wife, and a loving mother, she was also an humble child of God, and it is justly due to say of her that her life was spent in humble and faithful service to the God she loved. And God be thanked, we do not sorrow as those that have no hope, for our loss is her eternal gain; her disembodied spirit has gone to God who gave it, where faith is changed to sight, and hope to enjoyment. In all of our afflictions and bereavements, we submissively yield to the decree of heaven. For the time will come when we will again be reunited with our beloved sister, and with her sing the praises of him who died that we might live.

W. J. H. YORK.

Died in the Lord, January 30th, 1884, near Bradyville, Sister C. C. Whitefield. She was born September 26th, 1862, and obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. Ben. Young, at Curlee's in the fall of 1879. She became a member of that congregation, and lived a devoted Christian in it, until the new meeting house at Bradyville was erected and a congregation there organized; when she became one of them. She met regularly with them, until she was taken sick with lung-complaint about the middle of 1883. Her illness she bore patiently, and seemed to have a strong desire for the prosperity of the church to the last. Sister Whitefield had no enemies. She has left a mother and four sisters to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as they who have no hope. "They which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Bradyville, Tenn.

L. W. JERNIGAN.

Died January 26th, 1884, at the residence of her father, T. H. Elam, in Davidson county, Mary E. Elam in the 24th year of her age. Sister Mary became a Christian in her girlhood. She loved the services of the church, was cheerful and helpful to her parents and younger brothers and sisters, kind to, and loved by her associates, and was sustained through a long and painful illness by the patient courage and cheerfulness which only the religion of Christ can give. The Bible was her constant companion on her bed of affliction. To her family and friends we extend our warmest sympathy.

Death has again visited the little congregation at Mooresville, Ala., and taken two of her brightest jewels. The night before the 4th Lord's day in January, the pure Spirit of the good and venerable widow of elder J. H. Hundley returned to God who gave it. I have not been informed as to the particulars, consequently am not prepared to write an appropriate notice of her death, but suppose that some one of the family or friends will furnish the Advocate with such a notice in due time. She was rich in faith, and crowned with good works; her reward is certain.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

NUMBER III.

We come more directly to the main issue, by considering how much concerning Christ is beyond any question. It is beyond question, there was once on this earth such a person as Jesus of Nazareth. Considering the proof, no rational man can for a moment doubt this. It is a fact as well attested as that Pontius Pilate lived at the same period. One may as reasonably deny that Caesar or Bonaparte were real persons, as to deny the existence of Jesus of Nazareth. His sufferings were so notorious that Paul with all confidence in the presence of Festus and Agrippa said "this thing was not done in a corner." Acts xxvi: 26.

That he was the founder of the Christian religion is a fact well accredited by history, both sacred and profane.

Every attempt to reduce Christianity to a merely human philosophy, or to account for its establishment upon any other than a miraculous basis, is a tacit acknowledgement of the existence of both Christianity and its founder. This the more learned of Christian opponents have done. It cannot then be denied that Christ has a wide and wonderful influence in the world, an influence streaming through more than eighteen centuries: yea, the mind that reads these imperfect lines, indited, also in the interest of his name, must be conscious to some degree of that influence. Bend low, be quiet, and listen to hear the last whisper of that dying Christian! whose name is that the faltering tongue and feeble lips pronounce? It is the name of Jesus. Observe on each recurring Lord's day the hush of business, note the calm that prevails in the most enlightened parts of the world. Hark! to the sweet tones of a thousand bells that holy souls to sweeter worship call. See! hundreds of thousands wending their way to worship in his name. The Lord's day, the Lord's supper and Christian baptism are three towering monuments which from age to age, and generation to generation, will attest his influence and bespeak his death and burial.

Here it may be objected, that Christendom is composed of many rival sects, with rival claims to the gospel of Christ. To this let it be replied, the perversion or corruption of any part of his word or worship, can argue nothing against the existence of a pure gospel, rightly considered, is a clear implication of the genuine faith, as a counterfeit coin implies the existence of true currency.

Where then shall we raise an issue? Let us take from the shelf, where it seems to have been placed, that grand old apostolic issue, "Jesus and the resurrection." "Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead according to my gospel," said the aged Paul, in his last letter to Timothy. This proven, our plea is established, and our hope of heaven through Christ is well founded.

In establishing this vital point of Christian doctrine, we are encouraged to present, as nearly as possible, the identical testimony submitted by the apostles of Christ during their personal ministry on earth. This testimony then won the faith of many thousands, fairly considered it is yet calculated to induce strong faith in the Messiah and all his high claims. No better method will ever be found for making true converts to Christ, than that so successfully urged by these "able ministers of the New Testament."

Take for example the initial discourse of Peter upon the day of Pentecost. The fact there had been such a person as Jesus of Nazareth was patent to all his hearers. The wonderful character of his life was not denied. His death was beyond all question true, for had they not put him to death? But Peter said, "It was not possible that He should be holden of it," that God had raised him from the dead. This was the main fact to be proven, all the rest were substantially granted, and are yet.

"Here cease we; but ere long,
More powerful proof shall take the field against thee, Stronger than death, and smiling at the tomb."

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS—Continued.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

THE STARRY HEAVENS.

Boys and girls, please get your Bibles and turn to the nineteenth Psalm. See in what glowing language David describes the glory of God through the stars which He hath made. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy work. Day unto day (speaks) uttereth speech; and night unto night sheweth (or giveth) knowledge." And then the Psalmist proceeds to tell us that the stars have a voice. He says, "There is no speech, nor language, where their voice is not heard." Did you ever think that the stars could speak—that they have a voice? They do speak, and as the poet says—

"Forever sing as they shine,
The hand that made us is divine."

Their brightness tells us of the glory of Him who made them all. Six thousand can be counted by the eye, but many thousands with the telescope. When the great telescopes of the nineteenth century are turned towards what we call the milky-way, and the numerous clusters and rings and whirlpools of the wonderful nebular in the heavens, they resolve into myriads of stars and suns, whose light may have been millions of years coming to our planet—earth. These stars are so far away, as computed by our best astronomers, that the light which we catch from them now must have left them millions of years, ere our earth was created. Myriads of suns, grouped and poised, and spread abroad through space, declare the glory of God. Stars made, and stars to be made. For there is in this nebular great worlds of light, which no telescope can resolve into stars, and astronomers have called it God's star material—material prepared for other new worlds, which yet have no form as worlds. As we contemplate the starry heavens, how are we lost in wonder and awe as we realize that we stand in the presence of Him who made them all, and who upholds them by the word of his power. We turn from the contemplation of these, as David did, to ourselves, and we exclaim with him, "Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou takest account of him?" Let us love and adore forever the great God, whose goodness and mercy leads him to care for and lift up sinful, fallen humanity. And if God has thrown round us such glories in this life, what shall the glorious manifestation be in the next, when we awake in his likeness? Let all the earth praise and magnify his name.

We heard, not long ago, of a certain preacher who, when traveling, has his little flask filled at the wayside grocery. And when about home, he gets a certain young man to get his flask filled, and slip it in his buggy for him. He is on the road to certain ruin, and will soon get there. He thinks no one knows, and yet his neighbors all know. Is it you? Answer:

No wonder the Southern people are poor. They will be so as long as they submit to have Northern men put up their flour, meat, pickles, preserves, clothing, all farming implements, every hoe handle, hame, plow stock, and everything down to a wooden tooth pick. The only thing we are willing to do, is to raise cotton for Northern manufactories, and this we sell them at their own price. Will we ever awake to our rights in these things?

SPECIAL NOTICE.

One brother paid for fifteen copies of the ADVOCATE to be distributed among those not reading it. We received ten dollars from a brother in Williamson county, the last week, to send it to those unable to pay for it. We make this proposition, we will furnish the ADVOCATE to any one desiring to give it to an alien, or a person unable to pay for it, or one unwilling to pay for it, at one dollar from time of reception of name until close of present vol. To any church that will undertake to furnish all of its members with the ADVOCATE, we will furnish for this purpose at one dollar from time of receiving name until end of year. How many shall we circulate under this proposition? We are losing a little on every paper furnished at this rate, but we will bear it if you will pay one dollar.

One agent starts out to raise a thousand subscribers the present year. How many others will undertake to do the same? How many will undertake to raise five hundred? How many two hundred and fifty? If we never strive for grand results, we will never obtain them. There never has been a time that people subscribed so freely for the ADVOCATE as they do at present. It was mentioned in the ADVOCATE recently, that during December, there had been an average of over thirty subscribers a day entered on our list. An actual count shows that from the 15th of December to the 1st of February there were over fifty names a day entered on our books. Of course this was chiefly renewals, but including many new names. It was much better than we had hitherto ever done in the same period. If the same rate had continued through February, we could have dropped out all the advertising, save the four last pages. While our lists still daily grow, the increase is not so rapid. We appeal to our friends, one and all, to press the matter, and enable us to make the change, as well as help us to do more good by reaching a larger number of readers.

NOT JOINED THE BAPTIST, BUT UNDER CONVICTION.

Brethren L. & S.: This was the language of a Primitive Baptist preacher a short time ago. They had circulated a report that I had joined the Baptists, to cover a retreat they made to keep out of a debate with me. After we had agreed on propositions, the question was put to a Primitive Baptist preacher, and he said that he (that is me) had not joined, but was under conviction. Now I wish to give a few reasons why I have not joined the Baptists.

1. If the doctrine, as set forth in the Philadelphia confessions, be true, I would be in no better condition in the church than out of it, for all the elect will be saved any way; those not elect cannot be saved, whether in the church or out of it.

2. If the doctrine is false, I would be in a worse condition in that church than out of it, where there is no chance for the better and a probability for the worse. I prefer not to join the Baptists.

3. The Savior nor any of his apostles ever said anything about a Baptist church. The Baptists say that a man can be saved from sin here, and saved in heaven without being baptized, but he cannot get into the Baptist church, nor to the Baptist table without it; so it is easier to get to heaven than into the Baptist church.

4. I have been a reader of the Bible for forty years, and the idea of a Baptist church has never been suggested in that book, it came from another source. I find no promise to a Baptist, (as such) nor any threats for not being a Baptist.

Paul says all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. 2 Tim. iii: 16-17. Paul tells Timothy, xiv: 16, take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine: continue in them; for in so doing, thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee. Luke says, Acts ii: 42, Speaking of the first Christians, that they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine in fellowship, and breaking of bread, and in prayer. I find in the Scriptures, the doctrine of God, the doctrine of Christ, good doctrine, sound doctrine, but not a word said about Baptist doctrine. If it is there, it must be included in the doctrines of men, or doctrines of devils. I find them both in the plural number, these are some of the reasons why I have not joined the Baptist church. I was raised by Baptist parents, tried to believe the doctrine, and have the kindest feelings toward the Baptist people, but believe the teaching to be wrong; and what I have to say, is against the doctrine, not the people. I will make one promise, when the preacher alluded to, or any one of them, will show that the Baptist church was established by Christ and the apostles, I will join it. But it was started by the wrong men, at the wrong time, at the wrong place. It has the wrong law, it has the wrong order, it has the wrong spirit in it. Next I will give my conviction.

E. A. LAND.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died on the 16th of December, 1883, sister Lizzie Vandyke Fort, after several months of ill health, which she bore with Christian fortitude. At an early age she came to us, and remained three years; was an earnest student of good capacity, and more thoughtful than most young girls. When about thirteen years of age, she heard a discussion on the question, "Have persons who will not submit to the authority of Christ, reason to believe their prayers will be answered?" In other words, "Have sinners a right to pray and a promise that they will be heard?" After listening to the arguments on both sides, she concluded they have no promise, and left off kneeling at her bedside, before retiring, till she had an opportunity of publicly confessing her faith in Christ, and of putting him on by being buried with him in baptism, that she might rise to walk in newness of life. Then she considered it her duty, as well as her pleasure, to bow in humble prayer to him who says, "I am near to them who call upon me in truth."

After leaving school she became a teacher in the family of Dr. J. H. Mallory, of Robertson county. If one could judge from her letters, she took as much interest and pleasure in the employment of her pupils as she had done in her own.

On the 20th, of December, 1882, she was married to Wm. D. Fort, a deacon in the Baptist church. I rather expected from the respect and affection, she expressed for her husband, she would become a member with him, but she remained with the Christian Church—the church of her early choice—and united with a little band at Forest Hill, Robertson county. One of the elders said, "She was a devoted follower of the Savior." After her marriage she took charge of the family of her father-in-law, and sometimes mentioned in her letters the pleasure she took in domestic matters, and in being able to add to the comfort of persons so dear to her. She spoke of the sweet little sister confided to her care, of her love for her new father, who had taken the place of her own, of the brothers in the family. She was not, however, long permitted to enjoy the happiness she so much prized. Her health had never been very firm, and after some months of feebleness, she was stricken with paralysis, which prevented speech, and died after three weeks of suffering, in the 22nd year of her age. She leaves her husband and many friends "who hold her in their inmost heart; there, there, at least, she cannot die."

She had looked forward to long enjoyment of the beautiful and pleasant things of earth, but scarce a year passed between her bridal and her tomb. Father in heaven, thou takest the loved and the lovely to thyself, and we mourn them. The sweet young flowers that bloom in our pathway perish, and we miss their beauty and brightness as we walk on alone. We know thou doest all things well, and we murmur not.

Bro. Grant will know why his letter did not receive an earlier notice, when he learns that, although post-marked the 27th of December, it did not come to hand till the 16th of February.

C. F.

subject. Dr. Hackett, Conant, and Kenrick, the leading spirits and scholars of the Baptist Church North, teach it. The Bible Union Baptist translation translates it unto. Mr. Jeter says, "Baptism is the gate to the heavenly kingdom." Mr. Graves says that to be born of the water and spirit refers to baptism; that eis should be translated into in Acts ii: 38, and that no man is a Christian, or can appropriate the promises, until baptized. I just happen to find an extract from Religious Herald, published by Jeter, on Acts ii: 38, in 1872:

"For the remission of sins." These words are connected with both verbs "repent and be baptized," and signify that these things should be done in order that their sins might be remitted. Mr. Jeter endorses the statement by saying, "These notes are prepared for the Herald by an earnest and able Sunday-school worker."

We could fill a whole number of the ADVOCATE with similar extracts. The trouble is, Bro. McGary is in the habit of hearing what only very narrow sectarians among Baptists say, and judging all by these.

We not only believe it is not necessary to baptize persons that have been led by faith in Christ into an obedience to God in baptism, but we believe it is a sin to do so. While we have not replied to Bro. McGary's article, it is because we wish to shorten the discussion to the real point. Our readers will note that he thinks the baptism for the dead is not needed to be understood, because neither the Savior or the apostles in giving direction into the church, laid it down as one of the conditions, yet he strenuously insists on confession with the mouth, as a precedent condition, although neither the Savior nor the apostles in directing men into the church, laid it down as a condition of baptism.

In reference to Bro. McGary's proposition to show that no one should be received into the church from any other body without baptism, meaning by this, ignoring a former baptism, submitted to through faith in Christ, to honor God, we have never refused a discussion of any question of practical bearing on the work of the church. We have no faith in his ability to present anything new on the subject. Yet if he will confine himself to the point, and not assume the question at issue, we are willing for our readers to see the best he has to say on the subject. We suggest that long articles are frequently delayed in publication, when we could find room for shorter ones. The point at issue is, If a man, as was Alexander Campbell, is raised in much mist and fog, but believes in Christ and is anxious to obey him, finds that God requires the believer to be baptized, and he is baptized to obey him before he learns that baptism is the point at which remission is bestowed, will his obeying God without learning this point vitiate his baptism in the sight of God? #### ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

We had a call of a few minutes from Bros. Zach Sweeny and S. J. Tomlinson, of Indianapolis, on Thursday, on their way to New Orleans. We regretted their stay was not longer. We are sorry to learn Bro. Sweeny is yet unable to preach more than two or three discourses at a time.

We direct attention to the advertisement of Burritt College. The costs of board are announced in the advertisement. The next term opens Monday, the 25th of February. Burritt has been doing good work, and has been favored with full classes for several sessions past. We learn the prospects are regarded better for the next session than at any time heretofore.

Read the advertisement of Dudley Bros. & Lipscomb, hardware dealers. They are experienced in their line of business, and we think will sell as cheaply as any others in the city. Give them a trial.

B. S. Rhea & Son, grain dealers, are the oldest firm and largest dealers in grain, sacks, etc., in the city. We think they are entirely reliable. We commend them to those wishing to sell or buy grain, sacks, or anything in their line. Tell them you saw the advertisement in the ADVOCATE.

Bro. Johnson Harding writes, "I am now in the midst of another meeting, at Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky., nine additions to date. Was to have held a meeting at shipping point, but was flooded out by the high waters. Have engaged to evangelize in Louisville until 1st of May. Those wishing meetings will address me at Portland Avenue, Louisville, until 1st of May."

Bro. McGary asks if I believe "shall be saved," in the commission, refers to salvation from past sins. If he means the salvation is only from past sins, "I do not believe it." It secures deliverance from a life and state of sin, from the effects of past sin, and prevents future sins. Baptism puts the believer into Christ. Christ saves from both past and future sins. It is as important to save from sin in the future as from sin in the past. Faith creates the desire and prepares the heart for Christ. Repentance turns the purposes of the soul toward Christ, then in baptism the whole man with the true preparation of heart and purpose, is passed into Christ.

Bro. A. S. Johnson writes from Walterboro, S. C., February 18, 1884:

I am spending the winter in South Carolina. I came here December 1st, 1883. I am in the field doing the work of an evangelist. This is a fine field for the cause we plead. Since I began to labor here, I have received into the "one body" one hundred and four members, and there is one yet to be baptized. A large number of the additions were from the Baptist denomination. They are somewhat stirred up, but this is good for them. This State could be redeemed from the thralldom of sectarianism if we had preachers enough. The people are looking Zionward. The Lord willing I shall return to Knoxville, Tenn., April the 1st, however I intend to continue in the field. Any communication addressed to me there will find me in due time.

There is a rumor to the effect that the Apostolic Times and Old Path Guide will consolidate, and as we wish the brethren to understand clearly our position on that question, now that a vigorous effort is being made on the part of those interested in the Guide to form a new joint stock company to continue the publication of that paper, we deem it necessary to state a fact or two. There is not the least probability of the Apostolic Times consolidating with the Old Path Guide. The question as viewed through Guide spectacles is a thing not only entirely impracticable, but we might say impossible.

The above is from the Apostolic Times. Would it not be better to charge such a price as will support the paper, or publish such a paper as can be published for the price, rather than be compelled to organize new companies every now and then, to continue the publication? Would there be no moral wrong in a merchant selling goods at less than cost, making the impression thereby that other merchants selling at a barely living rate were extortioners, at the same time hazarding financial ruin himself and forcing the others to ruinous rates or the loss of their custom? If it is morally wrong in merchants, why not in the publishing of Christian papers? We wish our papers abundant success, commensurate with their fidelity to the truth, but we think principles of moral right ought to be carefully preserved in building up agencies to maintain truth and right.

Orphans.

BY M. S. FANNING.

stay, my heart! A wail of grief
Is trembling on my ear!
A sigh of woe, so deeply sad,
That every heart must hear.
'Tis orphans weeping—O my soul!
'Tis sighs from the grave—
'Tis pleadings from the sleeping dust:
"O! pity, hear and save!"

And is there no responsive sigh?
No throbbing pulse to flame
The heart of holy charity
To plead the orphan's claim?
Proud graves, where gilded titles rest,
Where honored heroes sleep,
Inspire the lofty strains that bid
Adoring nations weep.

Shall humble graves, that seal the poor
In silence 'neath the sod,
Find voice to plead, and wings to bear
That pleading up to God?
Yes, inspiration pure and high,
From Zion's portals rise,
And sweep the chords that flood the heart
With loving sympathies

And loving ones who humbly seek Communion pure and high,
Have heard, and felt, and treasured up
The lonely orphan's cry.
The white-robed "Bride," whose open arms
Invite the poor, oppressed,
Comes forth with "mother's love," and folds
The orphans to her breast

Bless, O my soul! the faithful ones
Who bring, for Jesus' sake,
The "oil and wine," and for His poor
"Sweet home" and comforts make!
When Zion wears her spotless robe,
Her "pearls and diamonds" bright—
Her luster, "pure and undefiled," Gives earth Redeeming Light.

CAPTAIN ROBERT.

Robert was kept in the house by a cold, so he flattened his nose against the glass and watched a military procession pass by. They were in very gay uniform with very bright buttons, and kept step beautifully.

Robert watched until the last glimmer of their brightness disappeared around a corner, then turned with a sigh to watch his mother place pies in the oven, and say to her:

"I would like to be a soldier."

"Very well," said his mother; "then I would be."

Robert stared at her a few minutes and then said:

"Would be what?"

"Why, a soldier. Wasn't that what you said you wanted?"

"Well, but how could I be?"

"Easy enough; that is, if you put your mind to it. A soldier's life is never an easy one, of course. Clare, you may hand me that other pie; I think I can make room for it."

"But mother, I don't know what you mean." This Robert said.

"Don't? You haven't forgotten the verse we talked about so long? 'Greater is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.' It takes a real soldier-like fighting to rule a spirit, I can tell you."

"O," said Robert; and he flattened his nose against the glass again and thought.

"But, mother," he said at last, "I don't mean that kind. I would like to be a captain and have soldiers under me."

"Nothing easier," said his mother, shutting the oven door with a satisfactory air. "There are four ten fingers, and your eyes, your ears, and that troublesome tongue that hates to obey. I'm sure you have enough soldiers to control. I pity any captain who has as troublesome ones."

Robert laughed; he had so many talks with his mother that he understood her very well; yet this was a new way of putting it. He stood there a good while thinking about it, deciding that he would be a captain forthwith, and his soldiers should obey perfectly. Then he wondered what orders he should have to give them first.

Poor fellow! In less than ten minutes from that time he knew.

He went to the sitting room to find that baby Carrie had been there before him. There lay his birthday books, his beautiful "Family Flight" on the floor, some of the loveliest pictures in it torn into bits; his photograph album was on the sofa, but chubby fingers had tugged at mamma's picture until it lay loose and ruined, and papa's page was gone entirely.

O, how angry was Captain Robert! He wanted to run after Carrie and slap her naughty fingers; she was almost two years old, and ought to know better. He wanted to run to his mother, and with red face and angry voice tell his story of wrong, and demand that Carrie be punished. He wanted to bury his head in the sofa cushions and cry just as loud as he could roar. Why did he do none of those things? Just because he remembered in time that he was a captain, and had soldiers that must obey.

"Halt!" he said to his feet as they were about to rush away; and they instantly obeyed. "Stop!" he said to the tears, as they began to rush in torrents to his eyes; and back they all went, save one little straggler who rolled down his nose, and was instantly wiped out of existence. In short, the boy proved himself a good captain, for that time at least. He even sent his feet up stairs presently with a rosy cheeked apple for Carrie, and bade his arms give her a very loving hug, which they immediately did.

Mamma found out all about it, as mamma's almost always do; and when papa came home at night what did he do but bow low and say:

"Captain Robert, I am proud to salute you. I hear you have fought a battle and won a victory to-day.—Pansy.

THE CALIFORNIA WOOD-RAT.

In a letter to Prof. Silliman, Mr. A. W. Chase, Assistant U. S. Coast Survey, gives the following account of a singular habit of this creature: "It is a little larger than an ordinary Norway rat, dark brown in color, with large, lustrous eyes, and a tail covered with thin hairs. I should call it intermediate between the squirrel and the rat. This creature builds its nest in the wood's sometimes on the ground, more frequently in the lower branches of trees. It accumulates a surprising quantity of dried twigs, which are interlaced to form a dome-shaped structure, often ten or twelve feet high and six or eight feet in diameter.

"Openings in the mass which lead to the center, where the nest is found, consisting of finely divided inner bark of trees, dried grass, etc. But it is to a peculiar theivish propensity of this little creature that I wish to call attention.

"To make my story intelligible, I would first state that I am partial owner of some property on the Oregon coast, on which a saw-mill had been placed, but which, owing to various causes, has never been in operation. On this property is a dwelling-house for the hands, in which, on work being discontinued, were stored a quantity of stuff, tools, packing of the engine, six or seven kegs of large spikes; in the closets, knives, forks, spoons, etc. A large cooking-stove was left in one of the rooms.

"This house was left uninhabited for two years, and being at some distance from the settlement, it was frequently broken into by tramps who sought shelter for the night. When I entered this house I was astonished to see an immense rat's nest on the empty stove. On examining the nest, which was about five feet in height, and occupied the whole top of the stove (a large range), I found the outside was composed entirely of spikes, all laid with symmetry, so as to present the points of the nails outwards. In the center of this mass was the nest, composed of finely divided fibres of the hemp packing. Interlaced with the spikes, we found the following: About three dozen knives, forks and spoons, all the butcher knives, three in number, a large carving knife, fork and steel, several large plugs of tobacco; the outside casing of a silver watch was disposed of in one part of the pile, the glass of the same watch in another; an old purse, containing some silver, matches and tobacco; nearly all the small tools from the tool-chest, among them several large augers.

"The ingenuity and skill displayed in the construction of this nest, and the curious taste for articles of iron, many of them heavy, struck me with surprise. The articles of value were, I think, stolen from the men who had broken into the house for temporary lodging. I had presented a sketch of this iron-clad nest which I think is unique in natural history.

We may secure ourselves in a great measure from a liar by not conversing with him; and from a covetous man by not dealing with him; but we cannot secure ourselves from the envious.

MANNERS.

Young folks should be mannerly. How to be so is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they can not behave to suit themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling and acquire graceful and easy manners; that is to do the best they can all the time, at home as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned from arbitrary teaching so much as acquired from habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly, and womanly at home, and then it will soon become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home begets a habit of roughness, which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company are those that are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all the best things, especially for good manners.

The following is an extract from the remarks of Bishop Pierce, at his recent Golden Wedding, as reported in Christian Advocate. We commend the wisdom to others:

In 1834 I was sent, a young preacher to Savannah. There I met Miss Ann M. Waldron; she was small, buoyant, amiable, and elastic as a willow twig. She was no heiress, and I was no fortunate hunter. I had always said I would never marry a rich woman; I did not want to put it in the power of any woman to say to me, "You are spending my money; I took you out of the ashes, and I have made you all you are." [Smiles.] I courted her prudently and quietly, wishing to avoid gossip—unlike many young preachers nowadays who seem to covet the character as ladies' men. It was arranged between us that if at the Annual Conference I should get an appointment that would be able to support a married couple, we would be married at once. I was appointed to Charleston, South Carolina. I went to see her, and told her of the appointment, and said I thought it would support us. Her face flushed—she turned her head to one side and said nothing. Like Isaac's servant, when he was sent to Rebecca, I declared I would not go until I had gotten an answer. At last like Rebecca, she said, "I will go." [Laughter.] Right here I would enter my protest against the modern foolish notion that poverty is a bar to marriage. If men would marry prudently, it is true economy. He who gets a good wife has made his fortune. [Applause.] After our marriage, and before starting to Charleston, I took an inventory of my wealth, and found that I had exactly eleven dollars. I asked my bride how much she had; she said, "five dollars." That made sixteen dollars, all told. That is the way we started—and we have held our own pretty well ever since. I am naturally a spendthrift, though I have tried to regulate my expenditures by good sense and considerations of duty; but this little lady by my side has been the real conservatory of our domestic interests. She was a good manager, a careful economist, indefatigably industrious, and endowed with rare common sense. Before the war we had accumulated a modest competency; our children married off rapidly, and our little property melted as their patrimony was disturbed. The war about took the balance, but we have never been in want. It is a source of thankfulness to me that I never turned aside from the work of the ministry for secular profit.

LETTER TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am a little girl, eleven years old, daughter of Elder R. B. Trimble. My father knows you well, and loves you dearly, I read all your letters in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, and have concluded to write you a few lines. We are now living at New Burnside, and papa preaches for the Christian Church one half of his time. We have a good Sunday-school—about eighty scholars. Fearing my letter will be too lengthy, I will close. Your loving little niece.

TORNADOES.

Scientifically Accounted for, and Some Remote Causes that Produce Painful Results Explained.

The following synopsis of a lecture delivered by Dr. Horace R. Hamilton before the New York society for the promotion of science, contains so much that is timely and important that it can be read with both interest and profit:

There is probably no subject of modern times that has caused and is causing greater attention than the origin of tornadoes. Scientists have studied it for the benefit of humanity; men have investigated for the welfare of their families. It has been a vexed subject long considered, and through all this investigation the cyclone has swept across the land carrying destruction to scientists as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, is certain; the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the whirling body of wind itself. Its results are powerful; its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts. First, the appearance of a cyclone is invariably preceded by dark spots upon the face of the sun. These spots, indicating a disturbed condition of the solar regions, necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. An unusual generation of heat in one part of the atmosphere is certain to cause a partial vacuum. Hence the disturbances—hence the cyclone. This theory finds additional confirmation in the fact that tornadoes come during the day and not at night. The dark spots upon the sun, whatever they may be, seem to cause great commotion in the atmosphere of the world, and it is almost certain that the extremely wet weather of the present season can be accounted for on precisely this basis. Is it reasonable to suppose that the marvelous effect of the sun upon vegetation and life in general shall be less than upon the atmosphere itself through which the rays come? The cause is remote, but the effect is here.

After describing some of the terrible effects of the cyclone, the speaker went on to say:—

This rule finds its application in nearly every department of life. An operation in San Francisco—the click of the instrument manipulated by his fingers, in New York. The president makes a slight stroke of his pen in his study at the White House, and the whole nation is aroused by the act. An uneasiness and disgust with every thing in life, commonly called home-sickness, is felt by many people, when the cause is to be found in the distant home thousands of miles away. An uncertain pain may be felt in the head. It is repeated in other parts of the body. The appetite departs and all energy is gone. Is the cause necessarily to be found in the head? The next day the feeling increases. There are added symptoms. They continue and become more aggravated. The sight becomes chronic. The heart grows irregular, and the breathing uncertain. All these effects have a definite cause; and, after years of deep experience upon this subject, I do not hesitate to say that this cause is to be found in some derangements of the kidneys or liver far away from the portion of the body in which the effects appear. But one may say I have no pain whatever in my kidneys or liver. Very true. Neither have we any evidence that there is a tornado upon the surface of the sun; but it is none less certain that the tornado is here, and it is none the less certain that these great organs of the body are the cause of the trouble although there may no pain in their vicinity.

I know whereof I speak, for I have passed through this very experience myself. Nearly ten years ago, I was a picture of health weighing more than 200 pounds, and as strong and healthy as any man I ever knew. When I felt the symptoms I have above described, they caused me annoyance, not only by the reason of their aggravative nature, but because I had never felt any pain before. Other doctors told me I was troubled with malaria, and I treated myself accordingly. I did not believe, however, that malaria could show such aggravative symptoms. It never occurred to me that analysis would help solve the trouble, as I did not presume my difficulty located in that portion of the body. But I continued to grow worse. I had a faint sensation at the pit of my stomach nearly every day. I felt a great desire to eat, and yet I loathed food. I was constantly tired and still I could not sleep. My brain was unusually active, but I could not think connectedly. My existence was a living misery. I continued in this condition for nearly a year; never free from pain, never for a moment happy. Such an existence is far worse than death, for which I confess I earnestly longed.

It was while suffering thus that a friend advised me to make a final attempt to recover my health. I sneered inwardly at his suggestion, but I was too weak to make any resistance. He furnished me with a remedy simple yet palatable and within two days I observed a slight change for the better. This awakened my courage. I felt that I would not die at that time. I continued the use of the remedy, taking it in accordance with directions, until I became not only to my former health and strength, but of greater vigor than I have before known. This condition has continued up to the present time, and I believe I should have died as miserably as thousands of other men have died and are dying every day had it not been for the wonderful power of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy I employed.

The lecturer then described his means of restoration more in detail, and concluded as follows:

My complete discovery has caused me to investigate the subject more carefully, and I believe I have discovered the key to most ill health of our modern civilization. I am fully confident that four-fifths of the disease which afflicts humanity might be avoided, were the kidneys and liver kept in perfect condition. Were it possible to control the action of the sun, cyclones could undoubtedly be averted. That, however is one of the things that cannot be. But I rejoice to say that it is possible to control the kidneys and liver; to render their action wholly normal, and their effects upon the system that of purifiers rather than poisons. That this end has been accomplished largely by means of the remedy I have named I do not have a doubt, and I feel it my duty to make this open declaration for the enlightenment of the profession and for the benefit of suffering humanity in all parts of the world.

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

For the HIGHER CULTURE of YOUNG LADIES.

The instruction in this Institution is thorough and practical. The school is progressive and economical. Book-keeping and Penmanship are without additional cost. A pupil can enter at any time and find classes to suit any grade. No one held back on account of the slow progress of indolent pupils. Elocution is made a study, and those who desire to prepare for public reading can do so without extra charge. The lessons are studied under the supervision of teachers, and the student is taught to overcome her difficulties. Our graduates are successful teachers and book-keepers. Music is a speciality. Our recitation rooms are daily open to the inspection of any one, and critics are especially invited. Latin course free of charge. All the advantages of a first-class Female school can be had here. For catalogue and testimonials address,

The Institution will be reopened on the 27th of August, 1883, with a full corps of teachers.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

Chisel Work.

'T is the Master who holds the mallet,
And day by day
He is glipping whatever environs
The form away;
Which, under his skillful cutting,
He means shall be Wrought silently out to beauty
Of such degree
Of faultless and full perfection,
That angel eyes
Shall look on the finished labor
With new surprise,
That even his boundless patience
Could grave his own
Features upon such fractured
And stubborn stone.

HOW SHALL MEN BE SANCTIFIED?

Jesus answers this question when praying for his disciples, in these words: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." This covers the whole ground of sanctification. To sanctify is to consecrate to the service of God. It is not a mere inward, heart work, but the whole of the man is involved. Paul divided man into three parts when he prayed for the Thessalonians in the following words: "And I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. v: 23. This expression certainly embraces all the ground, no more and no less, that the word sanctify embraces. A man is sanctified when his whole being, soul and body, is consecrated to the service of God, to doing what the word of God requires. The man who attempts, or professes sanctification, that does not go forward in attendance upon the ordinances of the Lord's house, will never succeed. No man can be wholly sanctified while disregarding any command of God. Some claim sanctification who have never submitted to the ordinance of baptism, and as a consequence have never entered into Christ. Out of Christ no one can be sanctified. Without baptism no one enters him, according to the word of the Lord. We are plainly told in the New Testament that we are baptized into Christ. This being true, only those who have been baptized unto him are in him at all. Out of Christ there is no remission of sins. Paul says: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." The converse of this is true, that if a man be not in Christ, he is not a new creature, not saved, and therefore cannot be sanctified in this condition. Those, therefore, that claim to be sanctified in rejection of baptism, are simply and sadly mistaken. They are sanctified in their own eyes, but not according to the word of God. And it is not what men think that will sanctify them, but it is doing what the word of God commands that will sanctify. And yet those who are not baptized are loudest in their claims of sanctification.

This is not because baptism is of any more importance than any other command of God. But the man who refuses it, refuses obedience to God, and James teaches that if a man keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. If a man in any matter that God commands decides that it is not necessary to be done, he, in so doing, attempts to measure wisdom with God, and shows by his actions that he thinks he knows better what is needful to be done than God himself, and thus sets God and his wisdom aside, and acts upon his own wisdom. No man can be sanctified while he occupies this position before God. He places himself deliberately against God, and thus makes himself guilty of one of the most dangerous sins that man ever committed. When a man sins, ignorantly, or without intending it, he can be forgiven. But the man that sins wilfully, that deliberately and as a matter of cool choice refuses to do what he knows God has commanded, places himself where there is no promise of God for him. Insubordination, unwillingness on the part of man to submit to God and be governed and controlled by him, has brought ruin to the masses of men in all ages, and will to the end of time. Let no man, therefore, suppose that he is in a sanctified state out of Christ. But then the same principle holds true after coming into Christ. No man can continue in a sanctified state, who does not continue in the service of God, does not continue to do, to the best of his ability what God requires him, as a Christian, to do. The Christian is required by the word of God to add to his faith knowledge; that is, knowledge of the will of God regarding how he should live. The only way to add this sort of knowledge is by studying that part of the word of God that teaches the Christian how to live, how to conduct himself as a child of God. This is an exceedingly important matter.

No Christian man will ever be sanctified in a willing neglect of this duty. It is not enough that a Christian man read the Bible with a view to settle some intricate theological question, but he must read to learn his own duty. Many disciples of Christ are far more anxious to learn about God's decrees and foreordinations, than they are to learn what God would have them do. Others study all the time to be able to argue against errors on the subject of conversion and such like, who know little or nothing about their own daily Christian duties. Then others are spending ten times as much of their time in trying to find out who the two witnesses are, or when the millennium will begin, than they do in learning the course of life that they individually must pursue, day by day, in order to reach heaven. This is the matter that every child of God should especially study.

It is my highest interest to be able to know my own individual, Christian duty. And it matters not how well I may understand the foreknowledge of God, or what the two witnesses are, or when the millennium, so-called, will set in, if I fail to understand and do my own individual duty as required in the word of the Lord, these other matters will profit me nothing in the world, in the end. What will it profit to know when the Lord will come again, if in life I am not prepared for that coming? Nothing at all. What will it profit me to know what was Paul's thorn in the flesh, and not know my own duty?

And again, what will it profit a Christian to understand first principles thoroughly, and be able to battle against every system of error in the land, while he is ignorant of what God requires daily at his hands? Every child of God should be especially careful to know and do his duty in the sight of God, and toward men; and if he will do this, though he may never know what was Paul's thorn in the flesh, or what the two witnesses are, he will be perfectly safe at the judgment seat. Let every Christian make a pretty thorough study of the epistles before he goes into the prophetic intricacies of Revelation. No man will ever be sanctified while he does not understand what the Lord would have him do. We must understand and do the will of God in order to sanctification. We must also add patience, and let patience have her perfect work, if we would be perfect, wanting nothing. Impatience is a very great defect in any man's character. Impatience results in fretfulness, peevishness, ill-temper, angry words, and an almost untold number of evils. An impatient, impetulant man will not be a sanctified man till he learns to subdue and put down that evil, so as not to allow it to control his life. Indeed, sanctification consists in putting off what is wrong, and putting on what is right. Instead of impatience, a Christian man must put on gentleness, meekness, and fidelity. He must be kind, tender-hearted, and full of mercy and of good fruits. When a man obeys the gospel and becomes a Christian, he is then sanctified, is consecrated to the service of God. But if he does not then go to work in earnest, in adding all the Christian graces to his faith, he will soon be unsanctified again.

Sanctification is something to be continued through life, by a continual consecration of the whole heart and life to the service of God. Even if in old age, after serving God long and well, we turn back into sin, we give up our sanctification in so doing. Uzziah, after reigning for fifty years in Jerusalem in faithfulness and humility, sinned in his old age by presuming to burn incense in the temple of God, which the word of the Lord forbade, and was stricken with leprosy, and died a leper. Solomon, for a time, was a very humble and faithful servant of God; but after awhile married strange wives, and by them was led into idolatry, on account of which the kingdom was taken from his posterity. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, indicated plainly that he would be cast away at last, if he did not keep his body under, although he had preached to others. No matter how well, nor how long we may preach and teach the Christian religion, we will fail at last if we do not control our lives by it. Many preachers, who preach well, fail to bring their own lives under the controlling influence of the religion they teach, and prove failures in the end. All Christians, therefore, must be faithful through life, doing what God requires of them. Such as do this, and these only, are sanctified, in the scriptural sense of that word.

No direct power of the Holy Spirit ever sanctified any human being. Christ never prayed for any such thing, nor does the word of God intimate that any such thing will be done. Men can only be sanctified through the truth, and then only by submission to its requirements. Those who are trusting to some direct inward work of the Holy Spirit to sanctify them, while in their lives they are failing to do faithfully what the word requires of them, will die without sanctification. Let all, therefore, strive and pray that they may be able to do the entire will of God while they live, that they may be among the sanctified ones of earth, and that they may be among the redeemed of heaven. E. G. S.

Be ignorance thy choice where knowledge leads to woe.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

"Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Eph. vi: 4.

At our Sunday night meeting, just before Christmas, a little caution and admonition were administered, by first one brother and then another, in view of the temptations of the holidays. One brother, a very good man, did not like parties. Though he had let his children go to them, he believed he was wrong. In the next place, he thought Christmas-trees wrong. If a brother had anything to give to the poor, let him take his Bible, and carry his gift to the needy, and read his Bible to him also.

There is nothing more important in this world than the culture of children. Nearly every one of mature years has them, more or less. A household is barren without them. Some never realize the importance of the calling of the nursery, or its responsibility. Some think they know how to raise children, and make a most disastrous failure. Smart men, or men whom the world calls wise, bring up some of the most trifling sons and daughters. Widows and backwood, unpretentious men, train some of the most useful and intellectual characters. So you cannot always tell from what place the most interesting individual will emanate. The training of the child shapes the character of the man or woman. It is a subject to which too much study and prayer cannot be given. I have been teaching children twenty-five years, and now seek to know how to manage these treasures of the Lord's trusting. Paul teaches us to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Well, there is a preacher just over the way, a good man, who gave his sons Bible for breakfast, dinner, and supper, and between meals he kept them under close surveillance all the time, and now they are the worst young men in the country. His neighbor, an untutored man, took little pains with his boys, and they are all useful men. These examples to be found in many parts of the country, are troublesome to child trainers. It is proverbial that "preachers have the worst children."

There is a Scylla in this business, I suspect; and if there is, there must, of course, be a Charybdis. The child is a rational being, and it is early so. It should be treated as such. To say, you shall do this, and you shall not do that, without giving a reason for it, is far from satisfying the young thinker, though it may submit without a word, but with a big mental reservation to be free some day. Parent's advice is often neutralized by their own example. It is often flooded and drowned out by bad association and influence. Pa and ma should watch as well as pray.

I am not in favor of having gatherings from which the old people are shut out. It seems unwise to leave all the prudence at home. I do not believe any training will keep the young from coming together. They want to see one another. We did when we were young. I remember now how I used to love to see Annie Goodsen in the "sweet long ago." I do not care how "old," and "dried up," and "sedate," and "religious," you are now, there was a time when you donned your best and sought the company of your "Sally," or your "Johnny."

There is no sin in craving good society. I do not know how to keep the young in bounds proper, unless the old meet with them and try to make life happy for them. There is a saying sometimes heard, "Oh! you cannot put old heads on young bodies." This text of weak-kneed morality is offered as a kind of apology for "dancing" and "story papers," and I believe it takes in going to the theatre, circus, fairs, and many other places; for it may cover more ground than Dido did with her bull's hide.

Now the maelstrom of sensuality and carnality lies on one side; but across there, not a great way, you may run the family ship again, that fearful rock infidelity produced in children by the want of consistency in parental religion. Now, I have urged young people to substitute for their little foolish pastimes, something intellectual and improving, something worthy of such minds as they possessed. About the time I thought I would soon have a revolution in the way of doing, bless your souls! I would find my most stolid convert out on the floor, with his Jennie Bliss, ready to play "steal partners," "blind man," "old shoemaker." Anything seems to fill up the vacuum. They will be content with the simplest folly, or they will plunge into the maddened whirl and twirl of the round dance.

I have rather come to the conclusion, that it is being with the girls that makes sauce in it for the boys. But it is not so with the girls. They do not care much for the girls; it is being with the boys they like. It is no new thing, I reiterate, to my certain knowledge, and I can speak back for a few years. If any one knows more about this thing than I do, speak out. I confess it has been more troublesome to me than a problem in Algebra.

My little girls,—well, they are not so very little, since I come to think about it; they strike the teens all along, and oftener the higher keys,—well, they said they wanted a "Christmas tree." I told them that most presents put on the tree were there for those who did not need them, and it was generally a source of mortification to the poor children to see others loaded down with good things, and, like old Mother Hubbard's doggy, they were turned away from the cupboard without so much as a dry bone. Again, I did not like the origin of it. Then it stimulated some to give who were not able to do so. They said the poor must be helped; and as they were away from papa and mama, and I must act the part of these, I asked myself what we could have more free from harm than the tree. Now the poor must be helped, and I urged them to spend their money for good books, and not cram with nuts, candy, oranges and apples, and more nuts and candy.

Well, finally it was lighted up, and such a sight from trunk to top! Big babies, little babies, wax babies, china babies, apples, oranges, on limb and twig; candy hearts, and candy sticks, and candy drops, painted and streaked candy, and raisins; red silk handkerchiefs, and yellow ones, purple, brown, blue, green, crimson, and if there be any other color of the rainbow, that too; boxes, cravats, collars; there were Milton, Scott, Tennyson, Byron, Lucile, Cowper, Coleridge; history of Washington, of Greece, United States, Esop's fables, natural history, and Jumbo, the big elephant. But what for the poor? Calico—why, the thing was striped with many colored calico dresses for the little girls, coats for the boys, stockings for little feet, fruit for all; and some thoughtful ladies, knowing my weakness, put on for me what was left of turkey after dinner, (the best part,) and a nice mess of sausage. The poor were delighted, and all others seemed as much pleased at their satisfaction as at anything else.

It is all over, and the question still recurs, how shall we train the young? Did you say bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? That is right; but they will want to know right away, if those who come up in this manner are debarred from meeting with those of their age, and passing off the time in a way that no one will be harmed. Now, I would not send my daughter off to a party with a young gentleman for an escort. I would not encourage my boy in attending gatherings where none meet but the young. Still I would fear to say to them, you shall not mingle with the young. We are in the world, and cannot get out of it. We can, in one sense, separate from it by being in the church, but that relation only demands imperatively of us to mingle with our sinful fellow creatures, and do them good. We must then teach our children what is evil, and to shun it; to love righteousness, and hate iniquity; "to abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good;" "to fear God and keep his commandments." At the same time we must make the service of God at home and at church pleasant and interesting. Home should be the brightest spot on earth to boys and girls. Nothing so beautifies that as a father and mother fully under the influence of the Spirit of God.

J. M. BARNES.

Mr. P. T. Barnum has made his last will and testament. Several physicians were invited to Bridgeport to testify to his mental condition before the execution of the document. The will bequeaths property to the value of $10,000,000 to twenty-seven direct heirs. Among his bequests are various sums to charitable institution.

There are more false facts current in the world than false theories.—Oullen.

WHY SHOULD MEN WANT TO HELP THE LORD TO DO HIS WORK?

A large number of people believe that sinners are converted by the direct work of the Spirit of God upon their hearts. They believe that the Lord convicts, and the Lord converts, and yet they are continually holding revival meetings, and doing everything in their power to work on the sympathies of the people, and get them roused up and excited all they possibly can, and still claim that the Lord does all the work. If their claim be correct, all they can do amounts to nothing; the Lord can do the work just as well without all this ado as with it, and we are at a loss to understand why, upon their claim, they should make such an ado to help the Lord do that which they themselves say he does.

Under the claim that sinners must obey the gospel for themselves, and that when they do this the Lord will pardon them, we can very easily see the importance of rousing them up to do their duty. But when it is claimed that the Lord convicts, and the Lord converts by the direct power of the Holy Spirit, we can see no meaning in these human efforts.

Then again it is claimed that the Lord will convert and save the heathen in this same way, and they regard it almost sacrilege to intimate that they will not be thus saved. If this be true, then why should these same people make such strong efforts to send missionaries to preach for them, when at the same time they claim that the Lord will do the work. If it be his work, he can do it just as well without the missionary as with him, and really better, because most of these preachers go over there and preach contrary to the Bible, the book they want them to believe. Why not let the Lord do his work in his own way? But with the understanding that where the word of God is not sent or proclaimed there will be no knowledge of the gospel, no Christians, and hence, no salvation through Christ, there is some meaning in sending the gospel, so the heathen may hear it, understand it, and obey it, that they too may be saved. Then again, why should any of those who believe a partial obedience to the word of the Lord will be sufficient to save those who are sincere, and do what they think is right, make so much fuss in trying to sustain it?

If any such thing as this is done, it will be purely the work of the Lord, and men do not, and cannot know anything about it. The Lord needs no help in any work of that sort. And besides, if he does anything of the sort, it will be simply and purely a work of his own mercy that he has not seen fit to tell us one word about. Men would do far more good if they would spend their time in teaching the word of God and striving to induce people to submit themselves unreservedly to the requirements of the word, and trust in the divine and precious promises. Everybody knows there is safety in this. But the principle upon which the other is argued, is the very same principle upon which universal salvation is argued by the Universalists. No man who argues that God will save such as only obey part of the Lord's will, on account of being deceived as to what it is, can possibly meet the arguments of Universalism, because he has to use precisely the same argument to support his position that they do to support theirs. Both have to assume their ground upon the supposed mercy of God, which supposed principle of mercy is contrary to the plain declarations of God's revealed will.

Queries.

1. The Holy Spirit, through Peter, promised the people that obeyed the gospel the gift of the Holy Ghost, what is the gift of the Holy Ghost, and how are we to receive it?

2. The gifts spoken of by the apostle Paul in Rom. xii, and 1 Cor. xii, and Eph. iv, I understand to be the governments of the church. Some of the brethren here teach that this work of the Spirit is done away, if so, you will please explain fully?

3. In 1st Cor. ii: 14, the apostle says, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Some teach that we are all natural men and deprived of the things of the Spirit, because they are spiritually discerned, and we can't receive them.—[M. Marcum, Sugar Creek, Ark.]

The gift of the Holy Spirit, promised by Peter, was the Holy Spirit itself. Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." They were to receive it through repenting and being baptized. But repentance and baptism brought them into Christ. They received the Holy Spirit by entering into Christ. But it is possible we have not yet met the difficulty. The apostles and early Christians received the Spirit with wonder-working manifestations. There are different manifestations, but the same Spirit.

This brings us to the 2nd question. The gifts of the Spirit spoken of by Paul, were the miraculous powers bestowed on the different members of the early church, to enable them to teach, instruct and carry out the will of God, before the will of God was fully revealed to the churches. When that perfect will of God was made known then these gifts, partial in their nature, would vanish away, and give place to the word of the Lord as the only source of spiritual guidance to man. "Whether there be prophecies they shall fail, whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." 1 Cor. xiii: 8. These miraculous gifts were bestowed instructing each in the work he should perform. When the full will was made known in the word, ample instruction was given to guide in these separate works. The same work was to be done—is to be done now—but those doing it will not receive instruction save through the word of God. But the Spirit gave the word of God, and whatever is received through the word of God, is bestowed by the Holy Spirit. We to-day receive the same help from the Spirit, but receive it through the word. The Spirit itself is received through the word. As we receive the word of God into our hearts, as the rule and guide of our lives, we receive the Spirit dwelling in that word into our hearts. As we reject the word of our God, fail to cherish it in our hearts, and refuse to be led by it, we reject the Spirit of God which gave and dwells in that word. This was spoken before the Scriptures of the New Testament were revealed.

3. The natural man was the man who had not the Spirit of God to make known the will of God to him. That will was only discerned or learned through the revelation of the Spirit. In illustration of this, he asks, what man knoweth the things of a man but the spirit, which dwelleth in him, even so the things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the Spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things freely given to us of God? That is, none know the things of God but his Spirit, and we have received God's Spirit which reveals to us the mind or will of God, and we inspired men make it known to you. The Scriptures stand to us as the revelations of the Spirit of God, and having received these, we are not natural men in the sense in which the term is here used.

I know a young brother who made a confession at Bristol, Ellis County, Texas, and was baptized. (He was raised a Missionary Baptist.) A short time afterwards, he returned to Alabama and did not demand a letter from the church. In fact, was unconcerned, and had but little faith in the Christian mode of joining the church; still thinking he might get religion and join the Baptists. After thinking seriously upon the subject, he resolved to read the New Testament with an impartial view, and get an understanding of the true principles of the Christian religion. And the result was this: A true believer in the Christian religion. Believing this to be the church of Christ in its pristine simplicity, he then returned to Texas, and is located far from Bristol. He wrote two or three times for a letter and received no notice, what must he do? Attempt to unite with the church in his community without a letter, and a stranger too? Would it not be better for him to be baptized again?—[W. T. R., Cannon, Texas.]

If that young brother has a clear consciousness that he was baptized to obey the Lord, because he believed in Christ Jesus, and desired to obey him in baptism, we believe he would trifle with God's commands in being baptized again. If he was baptized from any other motive than that of desiring through faith in Christ to obey and honor him, it was not acceptable baptism, and he should be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. He should not be baptized merely to satisfy the church or remove suspicion from himself. These are not the motives that should lead to baptism. Letters are required by no divine law. They were given in ancient times, when members of a church were going among strangers to certify that the bearer was a member of the church of God. They were not letters of dismissal, but letters of certification. When a man goes as a stranger to remain in a community permanently, he needs this to certify to his character as much as when he is a transient sojourner or traveller through a community. But they were doubtless used as expedients, not requirements. The church that was written to, ought to have responded, and either have given the letter or told why it did not. The church failing in this, the young man should tell the facts to the church near him, and it should accept him, unless it has good reason for not doing it.

Please explain, for the benefit of many of your readers, the 4th, 5th and 6th verses of the 2nd chapter of 1st Timothy.—Rebecca Walker.

We do not see how this language could be made plainer. "God will have (or desires) all men to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one mediator between God and men, Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." God revealed his truth that all men might know it. Jesus came as a mediator—to make known that truth to the world, and through his mission to call men back to that truth, as a mediator. He gave his life to ransom or rescue man from the state of condemnation into which he had fallen.

Is a man a legal member of the church of Christ, if he lives with a woman that has a divorced husband.—[W. Hendrix.]

A man may be legally a member of a church, but not a true and faithful member. When a man complies with the law of induction into the church, he is legally a member in that church.

If he sins, that does not put him out of the church. The law does not put him out of the church, until all scriptural provisions for reclaiming him have been used and he still persists in sin. It is a sin for a Christian to live with a divorced woman, unless she was divorced on account of adultery of her husband. If so, I think she has the right to marry, and a Christian to marry her. If she was divorced for any other cause, he sins in living with her, but is not legally out of the church, until all the scriptural means to reclaim him from that sin have been used in vain. This does not mean that God will not condemn him, even if the church never does its duty. But the church cannot regard him as legally out of the church until she has done what the scripture require to save him. The church is a participator in his crime, and must share his condemnation until the scripture means to save him have been exhausted. Exclusion is not the discipline. It comes as the result of the failure of discipline.

We have some preaching brethren in this community that admit there are good Christians in all denominations. If this be so, the Bible teaches me wrong, or I take the wrong view of it. Please give me all the Scripture on the subject you can.—[W. P. Hamilton.]

The Bible teaches nothing about Christians in sects and denominations, for the reason, there were no denominations in the days of the revelation of the Holy Spirit for Christians to be in. All denominations are wrong. The Christian denomination is as sinful as the Baptist denomination, or the Methodist denomination. Any organization binding churches together in one body, is a denomination, and is sinful. Christians may do sinful things, they may sin in the way of going into denominations as well as in other ways. If a man believes in Jesus as the Christ—as the Son of God, repents of his sins, and is baptized into Christ, he is a Christian. If he does wrong, he is a sinning Christian. He goes into a denomination, he sins in that way. I have no doubt there are many Christians in the denominations. They sin in being there, and ought to be called out. Sects and parties sprung up under Moses, typical of parties under Christ. They were regarded as of the family of God, and when one repented of his partizanship, was accepted as a true child of God.

If a brother moves to our neighborhood and brings no letter of commendation, and gets drunk, must we take action in the case, or notify his home congregation?—[Elder.]

We find no indication that a letter is required by the Scriptures in leaving one congregation or joining another. They join one, to which they go on their good standing in the other. The letter is only intended to certify their good standing. It is right to have this when going among strangers, either as a traveller or to remain. It is simply evidence of membership. If other evidence is accepted, and the individual worships with the church, enjoys its privileges, the church must suffer the odium of ill-behavior, most certainly it is the duty of the church to discipline that member. I cannot enjoy privileges in a church without becoming responsible to it for my behavior. While letters of commendation are right, they do not constitute a dismissal, nor does the hand of fellowship, which I think desirable, admit into the church. Association with, and participation in the privileges of a congregation lay the congregation under obligation to look after and discipline one enjoying these privileges.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

CAN FAITH SAVE HIM?

Faith alone cannot save any one. Thousands have been lead to believe that faith alone is the only condition to salvation. Orthodox preachers have preached it, and Orthodox editors have written it, until thousands came to believe it. Yet there never was a greater error taught by man. Men who talk most about saving faith—faith alone salvation, are far from salvation themselves. Saving faith works, and without works is dead, while dead faith cannot save any one. To illustrate, suppose two farmers, one sits around the street corners in town, and tells of his great faith in Agriculture. He believes it to be the greatest science in the world. Life and comfort depend upon it, and it is honorable and right. He is ever-more talking of agriculture and its blessings, but does nothing. There he sits and whittles day after day, and talks of his faith in agriculture. But just one mile from town lives a farmer, who is in his field early and late. Pass by that way, and he has little time to talk to you. There he is, with sleeves rolled up, clearing away briars, fixing up fence, plowing, sowing, and cultivating his crop. As you pass along, is it needful that you stop and ask him if he believes in agriculture? He would respond, "Why man, what do you think I am toiling here for, if I have no faith in agriculture?" Would you ask him? No sir. His faith stands forth in his works. There is no need for him to tell his faith, we see it in every act he does. But the street talker, who is all talk and no work, we do not believe—we know he really has no faith, or if he has, it is a dead faith. So with professing Christians. One who is forever talking of salvation by faith only, while he does no work, does not believe, or believing, his faith is dead. Can faith—or a dead faith save him? Another who says little of faith, but goes ahead in good works, manifests his faith by his works.

If you saw a man in his place at church every Lord's day, at the house of the poor and needy with help, at the bedside of the sick, administering comfort to the sorrowing, one who is abundant and earnest in these duties, would you enquire if he had any faith? No sir; you would read his faith in his works. Men of faith—living faith in Christ and in the Christian religion, are the men that build our asylums, our homes, our refuges, our hospitals, schools, colleges, and churches. Infidels do not build these. Unbelievers make no provision for the amelioration of mankind. There is no Tom Paine asylum in existence. No infidel orphan home,—nothing left behind any of them to testify that they ever cared for any but themselves.

Men of faith do something; men of faith move the world upward; they lift up mankind, elevate morals, heighten virtue, and in a thousand ways benefit the human race. For any grand achievement that benefits mankind, give us men of faith. Christian men, who manifest their faith by their works. Faith alone saves no one. Faith alone blesses, nor benefits any one. What we want now, is more works, and less talk about faith. It is the works—the actions of men in this life, which must save or damn in the next. We want less talk, less preach, and more work. The world is sick of a theory which has no practice. Preaching or talking warms no naked and cold sufferer. It feeds no hungry, it relieves no sick or destitute. These blessings come of work, and these alone can commend us to favor with the great Judge in the great day. According to what they have done, is the way men shall be judged.

MAGIC LANTERN ENTERTAINMENT.

A magic lantern entertainment, for the benefit of the Episcopal church, will be given in the Christian church next Monday night. Admission 25 cents; children half price. It is hoped there will be a good attendance, as the proceeds are to be applied towards purchasing a new organ for the church.

The Episcopal members will not have shows in their own house, because their houses are consecrated houses. But our brethren, anxious to court favor with all the babylonish sects, give a show in their church house to buy a new organ for the Episcopal church!! Where are the Baritons, the Sweeneys, the Birdwells the Bush's and Smiths of other days? Oh! for some Nehemiah to rebuild the waste places. Oh! that some Elijah might stand, and say, "thus saith the Lord."

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

Below, will be found a good letter from Bro. Lauderdale. His suggestions are good. We do not, of course, intend to rule the preachers out of the class. We want them all in the class with us, and hope they will give us the advantage of their research and knowledge, through this column. What we asked, was whether we should not rule them out for prize competition. Some of the boys, and some of the girls too, say yes; but we will give them a chance.

Dear Bro. Poe: I desire to say to the Bible class, that Bro. Reccard answers correctly as to the age of Terah when Abram was born, viz., 130 years. He wrote 135 years, but it was simply a mistake in subtraction: 205 minus 75, equals 130 years. See Gen. xi: 26-32; xii: 4; Acts vii: 4. Bro. Gowen's answer, viz., 70 years is incorrect. He relied on Gen. xi: 26. I say this, to remind the class, that an answer apparently correct, may prove on close examination to be incorrect. Bro. Reccard falls into the same error, in answer to the question, "how long did the children of Israel sojourn in Egypt?" He answers 430 years; and relies on Ex. xii: 40 and Acts vii: 6. Bro. Gowen answers correctly, 215 years. He ought to have shown how he reached the answer. I hope he will yet do so, and reconcile his answer with Ex. xii: 40 and Acts vii: 6. This is confessedly a difficult question. Bro. Clark Braden in debate with Mr. Hughey, took the position that the children of Israel were in Egypt 430 years, and quoted in proof Ex. xii: 40, Acts vii: 6. He argued that the period of 430 years was necessary for the 70 souls who went down into Egypt, to increase into the three million souls, the number supposed to have gone out in the Exodus. It was to call attention to, and to meet this difficulty that I asked the questions concerning the time of the sojourn, the number of generations, and the rate of increase by generations. I think Bro. Gowen has answered the questions satisfactorily, and as nearly correct as it is possible to answer them. I think he deserves the thanks of the class, and I hope each one will study his answers. If any one thinks he can improve on the answers given, I hope he will try, and I ask of Bro. Poe on this question, to let the preachers in. The question is a good one to study. I see that Lyman Abbott in his commentary on Acts vii: 6, decides with Bro. Braden.

Mrs. W. C. Lauderdale says that the answer to Bro. Gowen's riddle is "dust." Dust was created before man; it had neither hands or feet. God made man out of dust, and gave him a soul, and then required that soul of him.

Question No. 13. How many years of the history of the world does the book of Genesis cover? Give the proof with the answer.—[B. W. Lauderdale, Bailey, Tenn., February 7th, 1884.

Here comes another new scholar whom we are glad to welcome among us. Our class is getting to be very interesting now.

Dear Bro. Poe: Let me congratulate you on your Bible Class. I like it so much and am going to work for that "nice Bible" too. I send you answers to yours and M. D. Reccard's questions in GOSPEL ADVOCATE of January 30:

1. Methuselah was Noah's grandfather, and died in next to the last generation before the flood, and Noah died in first generation after the flood.

2. Christ fulfilled nineteen prophecies of the Old Testament, according to Matthew's account.

3. Peter meant the word of God when he says, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy," etc. 2 Peter i: 19.—[Eva Bradshaw, La Guardo, Tenn.

Then follows Bro. Gotcher, trying to answer the same queries. Neither of these will do. Try again. There are many more yet. You will have to read Matthew closely, with pencil in hand. Let the class all try here:

Dear Bro. Poe: I offer answers to your queries in the ADVOCATE of January 30:

7. Christ fulfilled all of them—22 in number. Matt. i: 22; ii: 15-22; iv: 4-7-10-15-16; viii: 17; xii: 18-22. Christ fulfilled the sign of the prophet Jonas,—Matt. xii: 40—whether a prophecy or not. Again, Matt. xiii: 14-35; xxi: 5-42; xxvi: 24-32-56; xxvii: 9-10-35.

8. Peter had reference to John's testimony of Christ, and also the wonderful works which he did in their presence. John v: 36.—[J. P. Gotcher.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Bro. J. M. Barnes and I propose to make a tour in Alabama—my native state—next June, or soon after. The people are poor, and so are the preachers, and we therefore mention the proposed tour to give any one a chance to co-operate with us, ~~who may wish to do so.~~ We will work as long as we feel justified in staying at it. Any who feel disposed to help in this mission may send funds to Bro. J. M. Barnes, Highland Home, Ala., or to me, at Longview, Texas. We cannot work long at our own charges. Brethren, how long shall we stay?

The Board of Directors for Orphan Home and School have decided to purchase Add-Ran property, which is tendered them at one half its present assessed value. The farm now belonging to Orphan Home will be sold to help pay for Add-Ran. This arrangement will not change the present feature of Add-Ran College.

It takes $44,000,000 to pay pension bill of this country. Just think of that. Notwithstanding there are now 425,000 pensions, there has been over one hundred new bills introduced during the present Congress to increase this enormous pension business.

We hear many regrets expressed that Bro. McGarvey's lectures are to be in Bryan. Many in North and East Texas desire to attend, but say Bryan is too far west. We hope he may decide to hold another meeting in this section.

We learn that Bro. V. I. Stirman is doing a good work in Terrell. We hope the church is working with him. Terrell church has some noble souls in it, and some good workers, if directed right.

Who runs the Christian Preacher now? If so, please shute a copy down this way; we have seen but one copy since sometime in December.

It is utterly impossible for any young lady who chews gum ever to be President of the United States.

Negative Sins.

Whenever a vigorous writer closes a long enumeration of counsels with an emphatic "therefore," it is worth our while to examine carefully the conclusion he has reached. Hence, this chapter, which falls under our extended study now, may perhaps be considered as epitomized in its concluding sentence; "Therefore, to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." This is a new rule of holy living in God's sight.

1. Some few words may be needed, in the outset, concerning the authority of so searching an utterance. There are those who have a choice in the parts of Scripture which they prefer to read, who are even accustomed to pronounce their encomiums upon favorite writers among the men who were inspired specially to communicate the will of God to mankind. They say that the apostle Peter is rather experimental and didactic; that his associate John is often enthusiastic and mystical; and Paul is argumentative and theological; they love to quote, as quite a help in making their discussions, the closing remark of Peter, who said frankly that his "beloved brother Paul" had in his epistles spoken of "some things hard to be understood." On the whole, they appear best like the apostle James. He is practical in his counsels; he has thorough common sense; he does not run off into philosophical disquisitions concerning abstract faith; he notes what a virtuous man does in daily life, and gives him at least some small decency of credit for becoming behavior, when he honestly tries to do his duties all around.

Especially men of the world, of correct conduct and amiable temper, have the highest and most reverent regard for the sober-minded and "practical" man. Now it is not necessary for us to admit or combat this general estimate of the one epistle which this disciple of our Lord was inspired to send to the ages of the world. We need only congratulate ourselves to-day upon the fact that our instruction has been penned by a author so deservedly popular. This single verse, summing up the whole argument, sounds like a favorite sentence from a welcome friend.

2. But when the question of authorship is passed, and an announcement so far-reaching is commended to our consideration, we do not seem to have made so much advance as we imagined. It will not do to array this apostle against the rest; indeed, it is perfectly evident that he says precisely what the others do. Paul speaks with no uncertain sound, when he declares that if men know God, and glorify him not as God, neither are thankful, then they become fools and are without excuse (Rom. i: 20-23). John records the discourse of Jesus which declares plainly that, if men were only spiritually blind, they might escape the charge of sin; but the moment they assert they see, therefore their sin remaineth (John ix: 41.) This is the doctrine they all proclaim.

But what is more the point, James in this verse actually repeats the declaration of our Lord Jesus Christ in persons as the principle by which the vast awards of the judgment-day are to be fixed (Matt. xxv: 41-46). The two classes of people which the Supreme Judge addresses on that solemn occasion differ in the formula only thus: "Inasmuch as ye did," and "Inasmuch as ye did it not." It is those who "did it not" who will have to take their places upon the left hand of the Lord—S. S. Times.

Traveling Stones.

Many of our readers have doubtless heard of the traveling stones of Australia. Similar curiosities have recently been found in Nevada, which have been described as almost perfectly round, the majority being as large as a walnut and of an iron nature. When distributed about upon the floor, table, or other level surface, within two or three feet of each other, they immediately begin traveling toward a common center, and there lie huddled up in a bunch, like a lot of eggs in a nest. A single stone removed to a distance of three and one-half feet, upon being released, at once started off with wonderful and somewhat comical celerity to join its fellows. Taken away four or five feet it remained motionless. They are found in a region that is comparatively level, and is nothing but bare rock. Scattered over this barren region are little basins, from a few feet to a rod in diameter, and it is in the bottom of these that the rolling stones are found. They are from the size of a pea to four or five inches in diameter. The cause of these stones rolling together is doubtless to be found in the material of which they are composed, which appears to be a loadstone or magnetic iron ore.

Can You Sing?

Girls generally sing when they can. They consider it a great accomplishment. Some boys, however think it is well enough for girls to sing, but not exactly the thing for them. They seem to think it is not manly, and, therefore they make no effort. Now, that is great mistake. It is manly to sing. The great David was a very fine musician. He played upon the harp, and wrote songs and, sung himself.

Paul and Silas were singing in the dungeon at midnight when the earthquake came and shook of their iron fetters, and shook open the doors of jail.

And when our blessed Lord was with his disciples, having eaten their last supper together, they all joined in a song. I have often wondered what that song was. No doubt it was one of the Psalms of David. I wonder who led in that song? It is not probable that Jesus himself selected it and began it? Do you think that Peter and John were ashamed to join in that song with their Master? No, no. And will you be ashamed?

The young man who pays sixty dollars for a suit of clothes is always ready to borrow the money from another man who pays twenty dollars a suit. There's a moral to this, boys.

THE CONFESSION.

Dear Brother Poe: Will you receive into your "Department" a few words from an humble source, on the necessity of the confession as a condition in order to the pardon of sins. I have quite recently noticed some positions taken by Bro. Lipscomb of the ADVOCATE, and Taylor of the Old Path Guide that I do not think will stand the test of fair criticism. Bro. Lipscomb seems to believe that none made the confession primitively but those convicted of some great sin, and hence he does not uniformly require it of the alien. Bro. Taylor seems to believe that it was for the purpose of convincing the preacher of the fact that the party to be baptized believed in Christ. I think these good brethren, have been led into this position by seeking for a plausible defense of the quite common practice among us, of receiving Baptists without baptizing them. So soon as it is admitted that the confession is a necessary condition in order to the remission of sins, and that it has its place in the order of the conditions, our grand old plea for "A restoration of the primitive order of things" if adhered to, will lead us back to primitive practices. But to the question. Bro. Taylor says that the confession made by the Eunuch is an interpolation. Grant it. Does this render null and void the argument in determining the question? We take the position that the confession was uniformly required by primitive teachers. Paul says to Timothy (vi: 3) "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life, unto which you were called and did confess the good confession before many witnesses" (Bro. McGarvey's version in Com. on Acts.) Now when was this confession made? Please notice that it is connected with his call to eternal life, and hence was made on entering the body of Christ. Timothy then made the confession that the interpolator charged the Eunuch with making; for Paul at once adds, "I charged them before God who gives life to all things and Jesus Christ who bore testimony under Pontius Pilate to the good confession etc." An allusion is here made to confession before the Sanhedrin that he was the Christ, the son of God. Timothy then had made the confession that Jesus was the Christ. Had he been convicted of some great crime? Had he murdered any one? Had he stolen anything? Had he been a falsifier? Paul charged Timothy again: "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." The good confession was a part of the word of faith was everywhere preached, and hence was uniformly required. Paul to the Roman brethren said "The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart; this is the word of faith which we preach, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thy heart that God has raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made (eis) unto salvation. Is it not evident that an important item in the word of faith everywhere presented by the apostles, the confession of the Lord Jesus Christ with the mouth?"

Paul had not seen those Roman brethren. Personally, he knew nothing about the manner of their conversion to Christ. He argued from the general practice of presenting the law of pardon and the acceptance of that law. For he knew it was uniform in its demands. Hence the confession was invariably made in the primitive Church. Jesus in giving the principles that should govern his kingdom said, "He that confesses me before men, him will I confess before my Father in heaven." Was this confession for the benefit of the party making it, or the party unto whom it was made? Those that made the confession were at once identified as disciples of Jesus. As a consequence, they were at once thrust out of the Synagogue. This confession caused great persecution by the enemies of Christ; and as a result took a prominent place in bringing the persecuted into the grandest organization ever seen. The fact confessed, is the bed-rock of the superstructure. Without it, the building falls. The kingdom of the Christ was for the purpose of binding together, God, angels and man. God first presented himself for this union. This is my son in whom I am well pleased and also announced he was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. After Christ ascended unto the Father, the angels of God worshiped him. Then the words of Paul were fulfilled. "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth and that every tongue should confess Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father. This confession joins in one harmonious whole God, angels and man.

What God hath joined together let no man put asunder. JOHN S. DURST.

It is strange if the Savior or the Holy Spirit intended the confession with the mouth, to be a condition essential to baptism and the remission of sins, that neither of them commanded it, or required it in that connection. The confession is not spoken of a single time by Christ or the Holy Spirit, except to those already followers of Christ. If it was required as a uniform, or even common practice, it is strange there is no reference to it in any case of conversion recorded in the Scriptures.

The Savior, in speaking of the persecutions that should come upon his disciples for his sake, says, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father and the holy angels." Matt. 10. This certainly has no reference to confess him in order to baptism, but refers to standing firm and confessing him when father and mother, son and daughter, husband and wife, turn against you, and you are drawn up before kings and rulers for his sake.

Christ confessed, and denied not, when he was drawn up before the ruler and death stared him in the face. Paul wrote the letter to the Romans when the persecution of Nero was pressing heavily upon the Christians. The test was when they were drawn up before the authorities; if they confessed they were Christians, they were punished; if they denied him, they were let go free. Then it was Paul admonished these Christians, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Paul required them to confess just under the circumstances that Christ said they must confess. Just under the circumstances that Christ confessed and denied not.

Our brother concludes Timothy's confession was made before many witnesses, on the occasion of his baptism: "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses." 1 Tim. vi: 12. We see nothing indicating it was before his baptism. It is brought in in connection with the good fight that he must fight in the persecutions before him. He is admonished to lay hold on eternal life by fighting this good fight, and he says thou art called unto this eternal life; he then says you have confessed the good confession before many witnesses, and refers to Christ's confession before Pilate. Now, was Timothy's confession at his baptism, or before many witnesses when arraigned before the ruler, as was Christ when he made the good confession? It is certain Timothy had been arraigned and imprisoned before this. He must have confessed when arraigned, else he had not been imprisoned. The letter to the Hebrews (13: 23) refers to his imprisonment and release.

He certainly had confessed under similar circumstances as Christ had confessed. Hence the two confessions are brought together. We think it wholly a matter of inference that a formal confession with the mouth was required in order to baptism. If it had been a necessary condition, it would have been stated in the requirements, and illustrated in the examples.

While saying this, although the confession of the Eunuch is decided spurious, I still think he made it, to assure Philip he believed. And I always demand it, to give this assurance of faith in Christ, unless it is unequivocally given otherwise. I do not believe on the day of Pentecost a formal confession was required of each one as a condition of baptism. The cry for terms of mercy, the glad acceptance of the terms, the willing and joyful obedience, constituted a confession louder than words. I have twice in my life baptized persons without the formal confession, when they, in writing for me to come and baptize them, or in conversation with me, had given clear assurance of faith in Christ. The confession required is, that everywhere in life, when persecutions, shame, reproach, fall upon us, we must confess we are Christians—we must do it as did the Savior, and Timothy, and all the true worthies.

I am certain I never thought that the confession was to be made only when the parties had been guilty of heinous sin, nor am I aware that I ever said so. I did say that remission of sins, as the consequence of baptism, was mentioned before baptism, only when the parties coming to baptism had been guilty of murder or some heinous crime, and laboring under a deep sense of guilt, were anxious to know how they could be free from it. D. L.

Many of our old friends have complained that their names have been dropped off this year. Our rule always has been to drop off all names when time of subscription expires. Our rule is to notify each one a week or two before the expiration of his time of subscription, except those expiring with the year. There are so many of these, that it is too much work to notify all. Besides, those who begin and end with the year generally know the time. While that is the rule, there have been some whom we knew in reason would desire to continue it, that we have transferred without waiting for a renewal. The complaints are chiefly from this class this year. They have been dropped off. The reason of it is this, our young Bro. A. M. Sewell, who has had charge of the mailing books for several years, had become familiar with these things, and attended to them, became feeble last fall and gave up the business and went to Florida. We had to get a new mailing clerk. He was unacquainted with the list, did not know who wished to continue or who did not, and so rigidly applied the rule to all alike. Some of the editors of our exchanges shared the fate of others. The editors do not have time to attend to the lists—are not familiar with them, and ought not to be held responsible for it. This explanation will satisfy all reasonable persons. We, of course, are anxious to retain and please every subscriber.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

NUMBER IV.

The first proof of Jesus' resurrection adduced this occasion, (Pentecost) was a prophecy of David recorded a thousand years before Christ, which it was said, the flesh of "thine Holy One" shall not see corruption. Peter said that David did not say this concerning himself, that he was dead and buried and his sepulcher with him at that instant; but being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spoke of the resurrection of Christ. Can we utilize this testimony now to prove Jesus' resurrection? Is this proof us? We believe it is.

This prophecy concerning Christ might not be conclusive, if it was the only one, or even the first one concerning him, but when we consider how great a number of prophetic statements had been exactly fulfilled in his wonderful life before this, beginning with his incarnation and birth of the virgin in Bethlehem, to the interment of his angled body but unbroken frame in the rich man's tomb, we cannot look upon this argument as a petitio principii, or begging the question, but a strong and irrefragable proof of Jesus' revival from the dead. Since it must be evident to everyone that a power that could foresee and foretell any event, in the life of any person, a thousand years in advance of that event, or the existence of that person, is a power more than human, it must be power divine. For no other than the mind of God could foretell at such a distance in time, that a certain person should be born in the village of Bethlehem, that he should be carried into Egypt, called out of Egypt, reside in Nazareth: that he would give sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, cause the lame to walk, and heal the broken hearted, that notwithstanding the enmity of his character he was to be oppressed and afflicted, wounded and bruised, and in lambs' silence, would bear it all; that he should be taken to death, his garments booty for raffles; but notwithstanding the violence of his death, his bones should be taken that none of his bones should be broken; that his death should be with the "wicked," but his grave with the "rich." The fulfillment of all these prophetic statements in advance of the resurrection, clearly showed them to be none other than the testimonies of God, the words of him "who cannot lie." The same divine inspiration of the prophets, that foretold so exactly all these things in the life and death of Jesus, also foretold his resurrection. True in these, they are right in this. To this sure word of prophecy we do well to take heed, as it is clearly the witness of God to the claims of his own Son. "Hear ye him."

Let us hear him give proof to his own resurrection. The subject of so many prophecies, he was himself a great prophet, and upon the fulfillment of his own predictions he justly demands credence to his claims. "Now I tell you before it came to pass, that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he." He foretold his own betrayal, arrest, trial, death and burial, with the circumstances attending: that he should be betrayed by one of his apostles, and delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, that all his followers, at that time, would forsake him (notwithstanding their earnest protestations to the contrary) that he should be scourged, spit upon, and put to death. That in his death he should be lifted up in crucifixion. These predictions all of which came to pass, no human being, as such, could have foreseen and foretold. This much was evident to Peter's hearers and was proof strong, of all his Messianic claims.

Stronger still must that proof be to us, who in addition to all these fulfilled statements of Jesus, have to consider the facts, that he foretold with wonderful accuracy the descent and work of the Holy Spirit, that it should come upon his disciples at Jerusalem. That his gospel should be confirmed by miracles, signs and wonders done by believers, that his disciples should be persecuted by their enemies, that Jerusalem should be encompassed with enemies, the temple destroyed, the city trodden down by the Gentiles, and the Jews scattered among all nations; all these things have come to pass as Jesus prophesied, and furnish indubitable evidence that he spoke the truth also, when he said, "after three days I will rise again." Had he been a false prophet his predictions concerning himself, his disciples, Jerusalem and the Jews, could never have come to pass, he was true in all these statements, he cannot be false in his claim to rise again.

"Yes, the Redeemer rose:
The Savior left the dead,
And o'er his hellish foes
High raised his conquering head;
In wild dismay, the guards around
Fell to the ground, and sink away."

All hail! triumphant Lord,
Who saved us by thy blood:
Wide be thy name adored,
Thou reigning Son of God!
With thee we rise, with thee we reign,
And crowns we'll gain beyond the skies."

G. LIPSCOMB.

Some of our friends think our language at the close of our remarks in reply to Bro. McPherson's query in reference to giving through the church, or independently, liable to convey an idea not intended. This arises from a failure to observe our definitions, of what is independent of the church. A man in Christ is in the church. The church, the individual congregation is the body of Christ. He can no more act independently of Christ, than the hand or foot can act independently of the body of which it is a member, unless he acts through another body than the church. If he does this, he acts independently of the church. But when he is a member of the church, and of no other organization, all that he does is as a member of that body. He cannot act independently of it while acting as a member of the body under the law of Christ.

I did not mean to say that everything must needs go through the treasury or be under the direction of the elders. If the elders are true elders, they are the proper persons to direct what goes into the treasury of the church. But there is a personal responsibility a man owes to God that the elders cannot release him from. Men are frequently put into the eldership that have no divine qualification. If a set of elders are anxious to spend money for an organ, to build fine houses, to pay large sums to employ an eloquent speaker to entertain them, while sinners are dying all around them ignorant of the truth, and they make no effort to teach them, or, as in the case presented by Bro. McPherson, if the elders refuse to spend money to spread the gospel, it would be a sin to put the money into their hands, yet it is my duty to use it as God says it shall be used, in accordance with his will. If I, a member of that church, acting only as a member of that church, the body of Christ, use it as the Lord directs, I am not acting independently of the church. I am, as a member of that church doing, and as far as in my power causing the church to do, the Master's will, while those called elders, are refusing to obey the will of the Master. But I act independently of the church only when I seek other organization than the church through which to act. When a man acts independently of the church he acts independently of Christ.

Give us the explanation of the sixth verse of the tenth chapter of second Corinthians, which reads thus: "And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience when your obedience is fulfilled."—[Jesse Sturdivant, Kenton Tenn.]

It seems that Paul was ready to execute the law or to condemn every act of disobedience, among the Corinthians whenever the church would put itself under the law as delivered. They had been calling in question his authority, had been refusing to execute the law on offending members. Paul notifies them when they put themselves in the line of obedience, he is ready to condemn all violations of the law.

INSPIRATION.

Some brother, whose name we have misplaced, asks, "Is everything in the New Testament inspired?"

Inspiration is that which is placed in the minds of others by the Spirit of God. The Spirit of God knows the mind of God; that Spirit, entering into man, reveals the mind of God to the mind of man, and he speaks it. What was spoken verbally was a revelation, not strictly inspiration. What Jesus spoke was revelation to the apostles, and to those to whom he spoke. It may be considered inspiration to Christ, and then revealed by him to the apostles. Just as the apostles were inspired, and what to them was inspiration, when made known to us is revelation. The apostles, and we take it the greater number of spiritually endowed, learned the will of God both through inspiration and revelation. One by inspiration was taught a truth; he told it to his fellow apostles or gifted brethren; to them it was revelation. Some things in the Scriptures were matters of revelation, others of inspiration. There were different measures or gifts of inspiration, sufficient to direct in the work it was given to accomplish.

The Savior promised the Spirit should be with the apostles, and dwell in them, after his departure. The office the Holy Spirit was to perform in the apostles, is defined: "But the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, that I have said unto you," (John xiv: 25,) and "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, that he shall speak; and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come." John xvi: 13.

He was to teach all things, (needful to their mission,) guide into the fullness of truth, and to call to their remembrances all that he had said unto them. He was to act (1) as a revealer of truth not yet revealed; (2) as an admonisher, to refresh their memory, to call to their memory all things that Christ had said to them. About the things that were revealed there can be no question. Of the things that they repeated from memory, the Holy Spirit only proposed to supply any deficiency of the memory. He was to act as a prompter, when their memory failed, or was at fault. He was to refresh their memory. But when their memory was full and correct, the prompter had nothing to do. He was ever present, as a guarantee of the absolute truthfulness of the statement of the apostles or other inspired men. This left the writer or speaker to his own style and manner, but guaranteed the absolute certainty of all that he said.

While then I would not say that everything in the New Testament was inspired, nor that all of it was the subject of revelation, some things narrated did not require revelation or inspiration to make them known, the Holy Spirit was the divine monitor or prompter present to see that everything spoken or written was infallibly true as it appeared to God. This fully accounts for the diversities of style and manner in narration. The Holy Spirit left each one to his own manner and style, yet guarantees the absolute truthfulness of everything contained in the New Testament. As there were degrees of inspiration, only that degree was given that was needed to secure absolute certainty of the truth revealed. So those who recorded the Scriptures in the first place, possessed sufficiency of inspiration to make the record infallibly true. While with these distinctions, everything in the Bible may not be matter of revelation or inspiration, it all comes to us with the stamp of infallible truthfulness. The Holy Spirit is the guarantee of this.

Obituaries.

Died at Uvalde, Texas, on January 31st, in the 43rd year of his age, Bro. Felix L. Bates. Bro. Bates had been troubled for a number of years with derangement of the heart, which was aggravated for several months previous to his death, by the failing of his general health. He suffered during his last hours beyond anything that we can describe. He took his stand with the people of God about five years ago, under the preaching of Bro. J. N. Gibson, now of Goliad County, Texas. To his aged father and mother, who are only waiting to pass over the "river of death," his bereaved wife who feels, more deeply than we could picture, her loss, and to his many friends and relatives, we would say, "look up" and be prepared for the great reunion which will take place on the other shore. S. T. D.

Died of consumption, near Fellowship, Marion County, Fla., February 18, 1884, Sister Emily Wells, nee McElroy, wife of Bro. Albert Wells, in the 29th year of her age. About a year ago Bro. and Sister Wells left Downs, Kansas, and came to Florida, hoping that the latter's health would be benefited; but the disease was too deeply seated, and beyond the power of climate or skill of physician to heal. The remains were interred at Fellowship. The writer conducted the burial service, and delivered an address to a large and attentive audience, based on Amos iv: 12: "Prepare to meet thy God." Sister Wells was a very intelligent and consistent Christian; was greatly beloved for her many virtues, and her loss will be deeply felt. She leaves a sorrowing husband and a babe about eighteen months old. May the good Shepherd temper the wind to the shorn lamb! "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." L. D. GRIGER.

Fellowship, Fla., February 19, 1884.
"A. C. Review" please copy.

Sister Lou Dean, wife of Bro. Eddie Dean, died of consumption at her home on Flat Creek, January 29th, 1884. She was the oldest child of Bro. J. W. Reagor, well known to many readers of the Advocate; was born December 21st, 1858, and therefore was twenty-five years, one month, and eight days old. She obeyed the gospel and became a member of the church of Christ at New Hermon, in her 17th year, and ever after was true to her profession. In the varied relations of life, as daughter, wife, mother, neighbor and servant of Christ, I have known none more faithful than was she. Her long and wearisome sickness, she bore with patience. In four years of suffering, it is said, she was never heard to groan. She was more solicitous for the comfort of her family than of herself. In her death, Bro. Dean has lost a true wife, Bro. and Sister Reagor a loved daughter, while the dear little children have been bereft of that dearest of earthly blessings, a Christian mother. Funeral services were conducted at New Hermon by Bro. Kirby and the writer, in the presence of a large number of sympathizing neighbors and friends, after which, her body was laid by the side of her sister Etta, there to await the resurrection of the just. Flat Creek, Tenn. J. D. FLOYD.

Almost a year has been numbered with the eternal past, since the dark angel death unwelcomely entered the hitherto happy home of Lonsa and Etha Lindsey, taking from their cheerful fireside their bright, interesting, and only girl of seven summers. Oh! cruel, relentless death! How many homes have been made desolate, oh! so lonely by thy icy touch! How many hearts have you in your cruelty robbed of their dearest, brightest hopes, rendering them for life sad, cheerless and unhappy. To these sorrowing parents whose hearts are still bowed in deep sorrow over the loss of their precious little girl we would say, cheer up, console yourselves with the thought that she is unmistakably an angel, peacefully reposing on the bosom of our loved Savior. Had she been spared to womanhood, to struggle with life's many temptations, her soul so pure, so free from evil in childhood might have been lost. Then cease thy weeping, recall the language of our Savior, "Not my will but Thine be done." These beautiful words uttered by his pure life in humble prayer will certainly comfort, to say nothing of other consoling passages of Scripture that ought to make us feel resigned.

"Thy coming was like gentle evening,
When twilight is weeping o'er the sea;
Like dew from the blue dome of heaven,
When soft, gentle zephyrs kiss the sea.
We called thee our fairy, our birdling,
We watched o'er thy form day by day;
But the flower we cherished has faded,
Thou art gone from our home sweet Maie;
Thy spirit has gone to thy Giver,
Away from this cold, earthly clay,
To the bright, sunny land o'er the river,
Where angels will welcome Maie dear."

Nashville, February 18, 1884.

PEARL.

By request, I record the death of Bro. W. A. Johnson, which took place at his home in Ellis County, Texas, on the 12th of May, 1883. Bro. Johnson was born in Dickson County, Tenn., in the year 1826, making him fifty-seven years old. When he first grew up to manhood he joined the Methodist church, and remained with them until he heard Bro. James Anderson preach the gospel as set forth in the New Testament. He soon embraced it, taking the Bible as the only rule of his faith and practice. Through the influence of that old servant of the Lord, Bro. Seth Sparkman, he was induced to commence preaching. In the year 1858-9 he preached in Hickman county; in the year 1859 he came to Perry County, where the writer heard him and obeyed the gospel under his teaching. From that time for many years we were co-laborers. Bro. Johnson then moved to Humphreys County and lived some years, and went to Ellis County, Texas, where he died. He leaves a good wife, two sons and two daughters to mourn his loss; but they sorrow not as others that have no hope. Bro. Johnson was a good man, one that loved his family and the cause of Christ, for which he labored for many years. I would say to his bereaved family that Bro. Johnson is not lost, but gone before, and if they live faithful until death, they will meet again in that land where parting is no more, and where trouble never comes. May the blessing of heaven rest on them, and all that fear his holy name, is the prayer of a friend. E. A. LAND.

TWO IMPORTANT HABITS TO CULTIVATE IN YOUR SONS.

It is a generally observed fact that, in this country, a very large proportion of the successful men are either the sons of poor parents, or orphans—or half orphans; and that comparatively few sons of rich men amount to much in any business or profession, notwithstanding the superior advantages they have of education, position, and an inherited capital to start with. The exceptions are usually, of course not always, the oldest children of those who have gradually grown up to wealth—those who received their bent while the parents were themselves too thoroughly occupied to carry their children, and too economical themselves to allow spendthrift habits in their children. Another thing we have observed is, that, other things being equal, successful men come from large rather than from small families. Three-fourths or more of the rich men, and the influential men of this city to-day, have risen to their present positions from very indigent circumstances in early life. Why is this so? Is it necessarily so? Must the well-to-do parent feel that, after all his efforts to acquire for himself and his family the position that wealth gives, there is some compensating decree of Providence which ordains that his sons must enter upon a descending scale?

Our observation has led us to the conclusion that two of the strongest elements of success are, courageous self-reliance, and economy. The boy left a poor orphan has to fight his own battles. No rich father furnishes him a carriage to ride, and so he must walk—and he learns to walk. No one reaches out a friendly hand to lead him, and he learns to go alone. With a scanty supply of pocket money, he is compelled to habit of economy that ever after cling to him. "The boy is father to the man" is a trite saying. The poor boy comes up to manhood, and instead of leaning upon some one to aid him, or of waiting for some one to come to his help, he strikes out with a feeling that, to use a vulgarism, he must "root, hog or die,"—and he roots away. Look where you will, and you will find that ninety-nine out of every hundred successful men are inspired with just this self-reliant feeling. It is at the very foundation of the go-ahead and get-ahead-yourself spirit that animates them. The man who was helped by father when a boy, whose school expenses were paid by father instead of having to earn them himself, whose expenses in preparing for his profession, or whose capital in starting business, came from some paternal bank, begins life with a dependent feeling, and it is next to impossible for him to strike out into the world with the feeling that whatever I am I must make myself; whatever I get I must get for myself. The only son, petted and aided as he could not be if he were only "one of several," lacks this element of self-reliance. Even in his "sums," and his other school lessons, he is helped out by mother or sister, or perhaps by father, or a subservient teacher. It is a very strong objection to private or home schools and tutors, that with few pupils, the teacher helps the children too much, and they also lack the stimulant of competition. In large families of children they have each to fight his own way along among compeers, and thus a healthful self-reliant spirit is acquired.

We have said enough to illustrate our idea. Let every parent consider the subject well, and see what he can do to cultivate this self-reliant spirit in his children. Let the training begin in very early life. Every time we see a mother sit down to work out the boy's "sums" for him, and help him dig out his other lessons, we feel that she is by so much teaching him to lean upon others, and lessening his manly independence. If he is over-tasked to absolute despair, let the task be lessened another time, but in every case let him "paddle his own canoe." Kindly encourage him to do it, but do not do it for him. While still very young, give him full charge of some work that he must accomplish entirely without aid from others. We think it well to give every boy on a farm at least a small plot of ground, in the care and direction of which he is to be absolute sovereign, suffering its losses and enjoying its profits. In its management let him have little of your aid or even advice. He will thus both learn self-reliance, and be led to plan and study for himself. Though there be a score of servants in the house, the child should not harbor the idea that he can run to them for every thing wanted. In short, whatever the station, let the children have a considerable number of duties and cares that they must attend to without leaning upon any one.

With this courageous self-reliance secured, a habit of economy—not a mean or miserly parsimony—will go far to ensure a man's success. We believe every boy should have a money purse, and always have something in it. If you can only spare him three cents a month, let him learn to spend but two of them, and to keep an account of the expenditures. It is as important for him to do this, for the habit it begets, as for the millionaire to enter a sale of a hundred thousand. A business man of our acquaintance, possessed of large wealth, came to this city almost penniless, and engaged to work at a very small salary. Himself and wife took apartments which allowed them to save $200 a year. While his fellow clerks took a three shilling noon lunch, he contented himself with one costing half that sum, but quite as nourishing. The money saved by these two economies was just what he needed when a little business enterprise opened to him, that laid the foundation of his present wealth. Getting rich depends not so much upon what a man receives, as upon what he saves. The sons of the rich seldom acquire these habits of economy, but commencing where their fathers leave off, they retrace his steps, and they leave off where he began—at the small end of the horn.—American Agriculturist.

It is not always egotism which prompts a person to give prominence to his own opinions or feelings, in social conversation or in public gatherings; and this truth ought to be borne in mind in our estimates of our fellows, as based on their manner of putting themselves forward. "He is not in love with himself; he is in love with his ideas," was the just and discriminating comment by an elder clergyman on the course of a very bright and forward, yet really unselfish and diffident, young member of his profession.

Many a man seems to be pressing himself upon public notice, when he has really little thought of himself, but has chief thought of the ideas which so possess his mind that he thinks they are worthy of possessing all minds. And many another man seems to be intent on making you think just as he thinks, when, in fact, his desire is to remove all difference of opinion between you and him by having both come to a common standard of agreement wherever that may be found. So, a man may constantly be causing new misunderstandings by his persistent endeavors to remove old ones. His restless determination to have all things straight at any cost, may forbid the possibility of his ever having things straight where there has once been a crook in the line. It is worth our while to have these tendencies of character in mind, both in judging and shaping our own course, and in judging and in bearing with the course of our fellows.—Sunday-School Times.

THE SOUL THAT LOVES.—The strength of affection is a proof, not of the worthiness of the object, but of the largeness of the soul which loves. Love descends, not ascends. The might of a river depends not on the quality of the soil through which it passes, but on the inexhaustibleness and depth of the spring from which it proceeds. The greater mind cleaves to the smaller with more force than the other to it. A parent loves the child more than the child loves the parent; and partly because the parent's heart is larger, not because the child is worthier. The Savior loved his disciples infinitely more than his disciples loved him, because his heart was infinitely larger.—R. W. Robertson.

The freer you feel yourself in the presence of another, the more free is he.

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM
ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

DOES GOD WORK MIRACLES NOW?

In discussing the question, Does God work miracles now? it behooves us to consider three subordinate queries, which if properly answered will give us a solution of the matter under consideration. The three questions are,—

1. When we pray in harmony with the will of God does he answer us?
2. Does he not often answer in ways that are unexplainable by us?
3. Is it proper to call these answers miraculous?

In answer to the first question, all for whom I am writing will join me in an emphatic Yes. Do we not open all our meetings with prayer? Do we not have special meetings of prayer? When afflicted or distressed are we not sure to go before the Lord in prayer? Of course we would not do these things if we did not believe that God answers prayer. Moreover, Jesus and the apostles tell us plainly, many times, that he will hear and answer us if our prayers arise from loving and faithful hearts. Read Isa. lv: 6; Matt. vii: 7; Matt. xxvi: 41; Luke xvii: 1: 21: 36; Eph. vi: 18; Phil. iv: 6; Col. iv: 2; 1 Thess. v: 17; v: 25; 1 Tim. ii: 1, 8; James I: 5; iv: 3; 1 Pet. iii: 12.

In order to assist us in answering the second question, Does he not often answer in ways that are unexplainable by us? When David was fleeing from Absalom his son, it was told him that Ahithophel, one of his wisest counselors, had joined the conspirators. Upon receiving this intelligence, David most earnestly cried, "O Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness." Now in order to have the answer to this prayer, turn to the seventeenth chapter of second Samuel. Read from the first to the fifteenth verse. From this reading we see that although Ahithophel gave good counsel, God so influenced the minds of Absalom and all his people that they unanimously decided in favor of the advice of Hushai. It is expressly said that "the Lord had appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Absalom." The mysterious part of the matter is that the people should have so heartily agreed that the good counsel was bad; and the bad, good. God blinded them so that the false seemed true. He moved upon their minds in some way incomprehensible to us. We have been quoting from second Samuel; the word Samuel means, "asked of God." Hannah, the wife of Elkanah, was barren. As the years passed away her desire to bear children increased upon her. At length, while on her regular visits to Shiloh to worship, in bitterness of soul she prayed to God for a son. The priest Eli saw her praying (for she spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard;) and he said to her, "How long wilt thou be drunken? Put away thy wine from thee." And the woman replied, "No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have poured out my soul before the Lord." Then said Eli, "Go in peace: and the God of Israel grant the petition that thou hast asked of him." Then in accounting for the birth of her son Samuel it is said, "The Lord remembered her." The woman then gave him his name "because," she said, "I have asked him of the Lord." Who can explain how the Lord answered her request? We see no supernatural agency in the matter, but we know there was a supernatural influence because the records teach us so.

When we consider the New Testament doctrine on this subject, we find that it is clearly intimated that miracle-working powers will cease to be conferred upon men, but it is no where taught that God will cease to answer prayer; on the contrary, we are told to pray for wisdom, for protection from Satan, for our daily bread, etc.; and in the most earnest way we are cautioned to be anxious about nothing, except the performance of our present duty. We are assured that if we do this one thing (i. e. our duty now) all things will work well with us. James teaches that men wanted things, and did not get them, because they did not ask for them; sometimes they would ask for them and would not get them, because they desired to consume them upon their lusts. It is clearly implied in all this that if a loving servant of the Lord asks for what he needs, he will get it. The same Lord who so freely and promptly answered the prayers of his children in former times listens now to the petitions of his children: he is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." It is not intimated that he has cut himself off from us, in any particular, so as to be less free to help than formerly. In order to test this matter, let any one who doubts, search the Old Testament diligently that he may see if he can find therein one promise made to God's people concerning the answer of their prayers that is not just as emphatically made in the New. He will not find one.

The brother whose letter caused me to write these articles on "miracles" says, "I believe we must bend our energies for the accomplishment of all things that we ask God to bring about." Suppose I pray for my bread during the day, shall I bend my energies during that day to the making of wheat and corn and beef? Then suppose I pray in the same prayer for the extension of Christ's kingdom during the day, shall I bend my energies for the accomplishment of that end? How can I do both? Do you reply, By preaching where the brethren are able and willing to supply their preacher? What then will become of the pioneer work? Let us not try to answer our own prayers, but rather let us bend our energies to please God by doing daily the duties that come up before us, stopping not to consider what the consequence may be; and he will overrule all things for our good.

Says the same brother, "The signs mentioned in the last chapter of Mark do not follow those who now believe. Why not?" Because they are not needed now. We have the Bible complete, giving us account of all these miracles, and establishing the truthfulness of the accounts by the most overwhelming and conclusive testimony. Having now the Bible and the churches we are as well equipped without the miracle-working powers as they were with them. Were the apostles inspired? Well, we have on the written pages of the word of God that which the Father miraculously imparted to them. Did they work miracles to convince the people that they were true teachers? We can accomplish the same end by using the Bible. Indeed, God has never been arbitrary in granting his gifts. In every age of the world he has freely given to his faithful followers all that they needed. He does so yet. All that we need is to know that we need a thing; then if we are doing good and trusting, we can ask for it in perfect assurance of faith; the Father is just as certain to grant our request as that he ever did answer any prayer since the world began. We need not trouble ourselves about how he will do it. That is his affair, not ours. "Why did not God answer the prayers of the thousands who called upon him to restore Garfield to health and strength?" people continually ask. People were foolish if they prayed for his recovery. No man could tell what would result from his death, or his recovery. No man knew what would be better for himself and country. I doubt not he did more for his people in his sufferings and death than he could have done in a hundred years of life. His death, and the time and manner of it, all seem to me to be clearly providential. If my own child were ill, I should pray that he might die or live, as God wills; for God knows best. What is the aim of Christianity, if it be not to bring us in perfect submission, body, soul and spirit, to the will of God?

But, to return to our questions, is it proper to call answer to prayers miraculous exertions of power? We must answer in the affirmative; for, in the nature of things, we can never by our unaided human powers discover the rule by which the heavenly Father works in such cases, if there be any fixed rule. We cannot know how he reads the unspoken thoughts of the heart; how he moves upon the people making large bodies of them brave at one moment and cowardly at another; how he influenced the enemies of the Jews not to desire their possessions while all their males were assembled at the appointed place for worship, three times each year. These things are all true; it is sufficient for us to know that.

Allow me to suggest that the chief reason that so many have no clearly defined views about special providence is that the entire Bible—Old and New Testaments—is not studied regularly and consecutively as it should be. We should never forget that God is the author of the Bible; we should read it that we may know him. An author reveals himself in his works; certainly our Father does in his great work.

After much reading of the word, I have become most thoroughly convinced that Solomon spake but the truth in saying, "Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are a shadow; because he feareth not before God."

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS—Continued.

Dear Bro. Poe: Received of T. C. Little five dollars for Indian Mission, from Cane Creek congregation. Also three dollars from Antioch congregation, by F. C. Sowell. Gov. Overton is quite sick at home. It has been raining here for four days. I hope the brethren will not forget our Indian Mission interest. Keep it before the minds of the congregations until we are able to build.
R. W. OFFICER.

LATER.—It is with deep regret that I announce the death of Gov. B. F. Overton. Don't know particulars. Received telegram to-day, February 9th, at 4:20 o'clock. More hereafter. R. W. O.

"B. J. Chambers, of Cleburne, Texas, who ran for Vice President on the Greenback ticket, in 1880, is an active member of the Christian church, and was baptized by Raccoon John Smith, many years ago."—Old Path Guide.

Will the Guide tell us what constitutes an active member of the church? We are just curious to know what it means by the term. Surely you do not mean to poke fun at the Colonel.

Bro. Durst is now doing pioneer preaching. He is a solid man, and a sound gospel preacher, and just such a man as ought to plant churches. We hope he will be sustained in his work.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

We have received four dollars for the Indian Mission, from a brother at Salem, Tenn., and five dollars from the Cathey's Creek congregation, Maury county, Tenn.

Bro. J. A. Harding says, "We had a fine meeting at Scottsboro. Had eleven additions, and started on foot the building of a house." Bro. Harding can be addressed at Winchester, Ky., until further notice.

Our young brother, W. Lipscomb, Jr., who has been teaching at Owen's Station, has given up his school, and will devote his time exclusively to preaching.

Lebanon is the banner office of our subscribers, outside of Nashville. Hudson & Stratton, Tailors and dealers in gentleman's clothing and goods, recognizing the large circulation in the town of Madison county, present their card in the ADVOCATE. We are certain those who deal with them will be pleased with their fidelity and fair dealing. We trust all of our friends in that section needing anything in their line, will give them a trial.

We must ask all matter in reference to Bible class, to be sent to Bro. Poe. We do not know what to publish, and what not; so have to send him. You do it, and it will save us trouble and postage. Also, brethren in Texas can write Bro. Poe for terms, as agents. We suppose his terms are the same as ours, but to be certain write to him. We allow all preachers twenty-five per cent. on all subscriptions at our published rates.

We call attention to the advertisement of The Gospel Advocate Printing and Publishing Co., in this number. Our young friends, James F. & Harry Lipscomb, have assumed control of this business, and are turning out some excellent work at very reasonable prices. We bespeak for them a good trade. Send in your orders for all kind of printing, and you will receive satisfactory work. We have also given up to them all the book business connected with the office. They will supply all the books advertised, and propose to furnish any work published at publisher's prices.

Bro. Lanier, of West Point, Ga., says, "Bro. Harding's account of the Scottsboro meeting is worth the price of the paper for a year." There is no doubt but that we need more earnest, self-sacrificing devotion on the part of the preachers, readiness to accommodate ourselves to all circumstances and conditions in life, a willingness to be servant of all, that we may save the lost. His self-sacrificing spirit on the part of the teacher, should be met in the same spirit of sacrifice on the part of the disciples of Christ. There is as strong obligation resting on every disciple to sacrifice his time, property, personal ease and comfort, to save souls, that there is on the teacher. But the teacher should set the example.

The South Kentucky College-building, at Hopkinsville, was burned on night of Sunday, February 24th. It is thought to have caught from a defective flue. The building was a good one, and on a commanding site. It is reported to have been insured for $9,000—something over enough to cover a bonded debt that was upon it. We are pained to know of this loss. It was an institution that has done, and was capable of much good in that section of Kentucky. We felt something of a personal interest in it. In the year '61, when Hopkinsville was garrisoned by Confederate soldiers, this building was occupied as a hospital. The soldiers began to cut the trees in the yard, and to demolish the building; I was there visiting a sick relative in the army. My attention was called to the work of destruction by Bro. Enos Campbell, who suggested I might, through my friends, be able to have it protected. Col. J. M. Clough, who was killed a few weeks later at Fort Donelson, went with me to examine the premises, then to lay the matter before the commanding General. Order was promptly issued to protect the buildings, trees and all. I have since felt a personal interest in the college, and sympathize with the brethren in their loss. Hope they may be able to promptly rebuild.

General News.

On the 15th of February, at Avondale, Ohio, two negroes, Allen Ingalls and Ben Johnson, murdered an old man, his wife, and grandchild, for the purpose of selling the bodies to the medical college. The strange thing is, the bodies were placed in an express and delivered to Professor Cilley, who received them and paid for them within an hour or two after they were murdered, and yet did not discover that these bodies were freshly dead, until the house had been burned, the persons missed, and no remains found; then the Professor examined, and found their skulls had all been broken. Certainly the practice had affected the morals of not only the body-snatchers, but the dissectors also. The handling of the bodies of the dead in this way must brutalize the grave-robbers, and harden the dissectors.—February 20th there was a terrific explosion in the mines at West Lessing, four miles from Uniontown, Pa., from fire-damp. Nineteen men were suffocated. One of the company escaped by wrapping clothing around his mouth, so as to exclude the foul air, and thus made his way to the entrance.—After the devastating floods of the Ohio River, on Tuesday 20th there were tornadoes and excessive rainfalls extending over large sections of country. It was severe in the Northwestern States. In several towns and neighborhoods of Tennessee much damage was done. Clarksville and Johnsonville especially suffered in the unroofing and damage of houses, but no lives were lost. But through the South—Birmingham, Ala., Macon, Ga., and portions of North and South Carolina—the destruction of property and life was greatest. Five hundred persons are supposed to have been killed, and many were wounded.—The National Democratic Committee, to nominate a candidate for President and Vice President, will meet at Chicago, July 8th.—The Senate of the United States have two committees investigating the riots and murders that occurred at the last election—one at Danville, Va., the other in Copiah county, Miss. Statements as to the aggressors are contradictory. Doubtless wicked men on both sides did wrong.—The papers report a disgraceful scene of drunkenness and rowdiness occurring at an all-night session of the lower house of Congress, by a number of the members.—The Senate passed the bill increasing the annual amount to provide arms and equipments for the militia to $50,000, and appropriating $600,000 for the militia.—The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President, announcing that the British Government had presented to the United States the Arctic steamship Alert to be used in the Greely relief expedition. ## The Little Boy Who Ran Away.

"I'm going now to run away," said little Sammie Greer one day. "Then I can do just what I choose; I'll never have to black my shoes, Or wash my face, or comb my hair, I'll find a place I know, somewhere, And never have again to fill That old chip-basket—so I will."

"Good-bye, mamma," he said, "good-bye!" He thought his mother then would cry; She only said "You going, dear?" And didn't shed one single tear, "There, now," said Sammie Greer, "I know She does not care if I do go, But Bridget does; she'll have to fill That old chip-basket—so she will."

But Bridget only said, "Well, boy, You off for sure? I wish you joy," And Sammie's little sister Kate, Who swung upon the garden gate, Said anxiously, as he passed through: "To-night whatever will you do When you can't get no 'lasses spread At supper-time, on top of bread?"

One block from home, and Sammie Greer's Weak little heart was full of fears; He thought about "Red Riding Hood," The wolf that met her in the wood, The bean-stalk boy who kept so mum, When he heard the giant's "Fee, fo, fum," Of the dark night and the policeman, And then poor Sammie homeward ran.

Quick through the alley-way he sped, And crawled through the old wood-shed, The big chip-basket he did fill; He blacked his shoes with a will; He washed his face and combed his hair; He went up to his mother's chair And kissed her twice, and then he said: "I'd like some 'lasses on top of bread."

—Golden Days.

HOW SHE SHOWED THAT SHE WAS THANKFUL.

How the sparkles did fly out of Abby Jones' eyes, like a flash of sunlight from amethyst stones, as she handled her new winter cloak.

"I do feel so thankful for this warm cloak, mother," said Abby, as she was dressing for school one day.

Do you? I am glad," said her mother.

"Are you thankful?" asked Aunt Seleucia, who was mending the stockings of her brother Job Jones. "How are you going to show it?"

Abby did not fancy Aunt Seleucia's remark. "That was just spiteful in Aunt Seleucia," she thought. "As if I was not thankful, real thankful!"

Her way to the school-house took Abby through the yard, then through the orchard, then past the rim of Long Pond, whose bright waters at the foot of the green pines flashed like a steel button set on the skirts of an emerald dress; and just beyond the pond was the school-house, whose temperature melted the scholars in summer, and would have frozen them in winter had it not been for the jolly wood-fires in a rusty but roaring stove. On her way through the yard at home, she was thinking about her aunt's words; and still busily thinking, she reached the barn door that was partly open. Aunt Seleucia was an old lady, and Abby Jones was a very young one. Aunt Seleucia had lived long enough to see many who talked thankfulness, but did not always show it. And as Abby thought it over, the longer she thought the more she was convinced that there might be something in what Aunt Seleucia said.

"Hullo, Jumbo!" said Abby, halting at the barn-door, and looking at a big brown-eyed ox. "And Black-Spot and Red-Back, how are you?" This was an address to two cows. "And, Philander, how are you to-day?"

Philander, the horse, said nothing, but took a fresh mouthful of hay. Philander was not very social. He preserved a dignified silence all the time.

"How do you like my cloak said Abby Jones to four-footed beings under the plump hay-mows. "I hope you are as warm as I on cold days." But were they as warm?

"What a lot of holes there are behind the cattle!" thought Abby. "With all those holes in the wall, I don't see how they can be very warm. Father says they are to vent'late. But I shouldn't want the vent'ating to be so near my legs if I were Jumbo or Red-Back. No, I shouldn't like it a bit."

It now occurred to Abby that it might be a good idea to show her heavenly Father she was thankful by making more comfortable some of his dumb creatures.

"I will make them warm," thought Abby, "by pasting some paper over those holes. I will ask father if I may; see if I don't."

The next Saturday, after breakfast, Abby said to her father, "May I paste paper over the holes in the barn?"

"Do what?" asked Job Jones, who stood cap in one hand and axe in the other, all ready to start for his wood-lot. "Holes where, Abby? Not up round the rafters?"

"Those round the cattle."

"Let her, Job," said Mrs. Jones; "if she don't go near the critturs."

"I don't know 'bout the children playin' out in the barn so much. There was Jerry, the other day, lost my best black-handled jack-knife out in the barn some-where."

Mr. Jones was fretting about his jack-knife, and then he was anxious to get off into the woods; and besides, conscience made him a little uneasy because he had not himself stopped up the holes.

So he only spoke a hurried "Well," and was crossing the yard, heading for wood-lot.

"That means 'yes,' said Aunt Seleucia, "and I will wet some strong brown paper and fix you some nice flour paste and a good brush."

"Thank you," said Abby, who was now declaring inwardly that "Aunt Seleucia was one of the very best aunts."

Did Jumbo, Black-Spot, Red-Back and Philander understand it all when they saw a little girl entering the barn, pastepot in one hand, the other holding scissors, brush and paper?

"I have come to make you warm you folks that can't talk," said Abby; "and, Jumbo, I will begin with the hole near you. My, what a lot of cold air comes in here!"

Jumbo gave a switch with his tail as if to signify that he was grateful.

"And O Black-Spot, I should think you would freeze cold nights. There, the hole near you is papered over. And poor, poor Red-Back, I should think you would be a junk of ice in a cold snap. But there, I've fixed that place back of you. And dear, good Philander how cold you must be sometimes! That's a horrid place behind you, but I have fixed it. There, I wonder if that won't make you warmer!"

Here Jumbo, Philander, Red-Back and Black-Spot winked their eyes, switched their tails, looked round, or did something as if to say, "Thankee, miss, thankee!"

"Now," declared Abby Jones, "I will go round and fix other places. Yes, I will stop up all the holes I can."

She was moving along the side of the barn, when suddenly she stopped.

"What's that?" she said. "If that isn't father's jack-knife on the floor! Won't he be glad when he knows it?"

Yes, Job Jones was glad enough to get his faithful jack-knife back again. But that was not all.

"Ann," he said to his wife, "Abby has been givin' me a lesson, and that is to make our critturs in the barn more comfortable. I feel ashamed of myself, though I know I was as kerful as some other farmers. But I know I ought to do different, and I mean tew; and in the spring I know my critturs will be in a better condition for it. I ventur to say we shall git more milk from the cows, and that Jumbo and Philander will work better. I will go to work to-morrow mornin' at the job."

The next day, toward night, a cold snap set in. How furious Jack Frost was! He took out his sharpest tweezers from his bag, and he put them on everybody's nose and everybody's ears, not sparing Parson Jones himself.

But Abby Jones did not care for the cold when under her new cloak she was hurrying home from school. She did not care that night when in her snug bed she heard the wind driving past the windows.

"I am so thankful," she said to Aunt Seleucia, "for being warm. Seems to me I can pray better when I am warm."

"Yes, that is true; and pray better also when you have not forgotten God's dumb creatures, but helped them to be warm."

THE OLDEN TIME.

How greatly it is to be regretted that we have no fuller record of the prehistoric inhabitants of this country. Enough is found to tell us they were here, but nothing of how they looked, or lived, whence they came, or whither they went. Among the most remarkable relics of these prehistoric times is the "Walled Lake," of Wright county, Iowa. We clip from an exchange the following account of it:

"I've seen a good many curious things in my travels," said a commercial traveler, "but the Walled Lake, of Iowa, rather lays over anything I ever saw. Just imagine a body of water, covering nearly 3,000 acres, with a wall built up all around it, not a stone of which can be less than 100 pounds in weight, and some as heavy as three tons, and yet there is not a single stone to be found within ten miles of the lake. The wall is ten feet high, about fifteen feet wide at the bottom, and may be five on top. The country is prairie land for miles around, except a belt of heavy timber that encircles the lake. The timber is oak, and it is plain that the trees were planted there. They are very large. The belt is probably half a mile wide. The water in the lake is probably twenty-five feet deep, as cold as ice, and as clear as crystal."

"What I would like to know is, who built that wall? And how did they hold the water back while they were building it? And how did they cart those immense stones for ten miles? If ever you go to Iowa, don't fail to visit the Walled Lake. You'll find it in Wright county, 160 miles from Dubuque. The cars will take you almost to it."

BAD THOUGHTS.

Bad thoughts, if cherished, blight virtue, destroy purity, and undermine the stablest foundations of character. They are like rot in timber; like rust in iron. They eat into the man. And when the process has gone on for awhile, and there comes the stress of the outward temptation, down they go in a mass of ruins! Ships go out to sea, all bright with fresh paint, their sails all spread and streamers flying, and never come back—never reach port. Why? They met a storm and went down, because they were rotten. Under the paint was decay! Just so bad thoughts—vile, impure thoughts and imaginations—rot the manly oak of character, rust the iron of principle, slacken all the stays of virtue, and leave the man, or woman to the violence of temptation, with no interior reserve power to withstand the shock. Bad thoughts fed and fattened are the bottom vices of society.—Anonymous.

ENDURING PERSECUTIONS.

A soldier in the East Indies, a stout, lion-hearted man, had been a noted prize-fighter, and a terror to those who knew him. That man sauntered into the mission chapel, heard the gospel, and was converted. The change in his character was most marked and decided. The lion was changed into a lamb. Two months afterwards, in the mess-room, some of those who had been afraid of him before, began to ridicule him. One of them said, "I'll put it to the test whether he is a Christian or not;" and, taking a basin of hot soup, he threw it into his bosom. The whole company gazed in breathless silence, expecting that the lion would start up, and murder him on the spot. But after he had torn open his waistcoat, and wiped his scalded breast, he calmly turned round and said: "This is what I must expect if I become a Christian. I must suffer persecution." His comrades were filled with astonishment.—Biblical Treasury.

A father was swearing dreadfully one day; he had often been rebuked for it, but never felt the rebuke; but on that occasion, using a most horrible expression to his wife, his little daughter in fright ran behind the door and began to cry. She sobbed aloud until her father heard her. He said to her, "What are you crying for?" "Please, father," she said, and kept on crying. He cried out roughly, "I will know what you are crying about;" and the child replied, "Dear father, I was crying because I am so afraid you will go to hell, for teacher says that swearers must go there." "There," said the man, "dry your eyes, child—I will never swear any more." He kept his word, and soon he went to see where his child had learned her holy lesson.

Now, if children living win the victory, your dear child, with whose curls you used to play, but whom has been taken to Paradise, ought to touch your heart if you are not following in the way to glory! Your child beckon you from above, and bid you "come up hither." Will you turn away?—C. H. Spurgeon.

Delicate and Feeble Ladies.

Those languid, tiresome sensations causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity, driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstruction of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain are permanently removed. None receive so much benefit, and none are so profoundly grateful and show such an interest in recommending Hop Bitters as women.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over seventy years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, in Providence.

BRADFORD, PA., May 8, 1875.

It has cured me of several diseases, such as nervousness, sickness at the stomach, monthly troubles, etc. I have not seen a sick day in a year, since I took Hop Bitters. All my neighbors use them.

MRS. FANNIE GREEN.

$3,000 Lost.—"A tour of Europe that cost me $3,000 done me less good than one bottle of Hop Bitters; they also cured my wife of 15 years, "nervous weakness, sleeplessness, and "dyspepsia." R. M. Auburn, N. Y.

High Authority.

Hop Bitters is not, in any sense an alcoholic beverage or liquor, and could not be sold for use except to persons desirous of obtaining a medicinal bitter.

GREEN B. RAUM,

U. S. Com. Inter'l Rev.

So. BLOOMINGVILLE, O., May 1, 1879.
Sirs.—I have been suffering ten years, and I tried your Hop Bitters, and it done me more good than all the doctors. Miss S. S. BOONE.

Baby Saved!

We are so thankful to say that our nursing baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted constipation and irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The parents, Rochester, N. Y.

THE NEW MUSICAL QUIVER.

By L. S. LEASON and W. A. LAFFERTY.

A choice collection of sacred and secular music for Singing Classes, Institutes, Conventions and Choral Societies.

There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

THE INFLUENCE OF THE WORD OF GOD.

The most refining and elevating influence ever brought to bear upon the human race, is that which comes through the word of God. Those people therefore who give their hearts and lives to the word of God, are the purest hearted and most noble souled people the world ever saw. Abraham is a noble specimen of this. He held himself in readiness at all times to yield his heart and life to what the Lord commanded him to do. There is not one instance on record in the life of Abraham, that indicates rebellion on his part against the word of God. There are manifestations of weakness on the part of Abraham, as there are in all men. No human being is without human weakness. Abraham showed his weakness in the cases where through fear of the people where he was sojourning, he denied his wife, representing her as his sister. But this is no case of wilful rebellion. It is only an exhibition of human weakness, and of sin through the weakness of the flesh, but with no desire or intention of the heart to do wrong. There is not one deliberate or premeditated sin on record in the entire life of Abraham. He never refused to do one thing that God commanded. In all the oracles of God, there is no account of a purer hearted or better man than Abraham. God blessed and prospered Abraham wherever he went, and under all circumstances. He was called the friend of God, and the father of the faithful. He was known both in the Old Testament, and in the New, as faithful Abraham. And any man will be like Abraham that will do as Abraham did.

In conforming the heart and life to the word of God, men become more and more like God. God is perfect purity, perfect goodness. And there is nothing in his word but purity and goodness. Every thought presented in the word of God is pure and good. And the more closely men conform their lives to it, the purer and nobler their lives. Men's hearts become purer and nobler the more they meditate upon that word. More to be desired are the testimonies of God than fine gold. Sweeter are they than the honey comb. The Psalmist said, "The law of thy mouth is better to me than thousands of gold and silver." "O, how love I thy law. It is my meditation all the day. Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than my enemies, for they are ever with me. I have more understanding than all my teachers, for thy testimonies are my meditation. * * * Through thy precepts I get understanding, therefore I hate every false way." 119 Psalm. The natural result of loving the word of God is hatred of sin, of everything wrong, wicked and mean. All men in all ages that have been lovers of God and his word, have been haters of sin. And the more they have meditated upon God's word, and the more they have brought their hearts and lives under its control, the purer and nobler have they been, and the more they have hated sin in all its miserable deformity. David was horrified at his own sins, but deeply did he love the word of God. No man can love sin and love God and his word at the same time.

The man that loves God, loves purity, loves goodness, loves mercy, loves things that are in harmony with God, things that are pure and lovely as compared with the character of God. Since God himself is pure and good, every word that proceeds out of his mouth is pure and good, and therefore those who love God himself, love his word, and all those who bring their hearts and lives into harmony with the word of God, bring themselves into harmony with God himself. We have many examples of such men, both in the Old Testament and the New. Study the character of Daniel as one of these. Though in a strange country and among wicked heathens, whose hearts were set upon idolatry, and all the abominable excesses that follow in its train, and though the life of Daniel was in their hands, his love for God and his word kept him from any participation in their wicked ways. His love for God and his faith in him, and his word cast out all fear. He stood like a tower of beauty and strength among those wicked men that sought his life. And though the lions were raging and roaring with fury and hunger, and though he knew no human hands could rescue him from their grasp, in the purity of his soul he trusted in his God whose word he loved and obeyed. Nowhere in all the annals of mortality is there a more beautiful specimen of manhood, resulting from the influence of the word of God.

No wonder that an angel entered with him into that den of lions and closed their mouths, and made powerless their strong paws. Nothing could be more beautiful, nothing more to be admired. While the multitude was raging in their wickedness, and gloating over the destruction that they thought they were bringing upon that godly man, the angels were rejoicing with him in his grand triumph over sin and the wrath of sinful men. This is a grand specimen of what the word of God will make of men when they love and obey it as Daniel did. The three Hebrew children stand as another beautiful example of the elevating and ennobling influence of the word of God upon the hearts and lives of men. Their passage id safely through the burning fiery furnace amid the rage and fury of their enemies, turning the rage of the king into humility and admiration of the power and goodness of the God of these men, shows what grandeur and beauty there is in keeping the word of God. The history of Elijah is another forcible example of what the word of God can do for men. Though in the time of the great famine he had to flee for his life from Ahab, the wicked tyrant of Israel, God was with him, cheered, comforted and fed him till the end. And when the great test was made near Mt. Carmel, that turned Israel back to the service of the true God, when at the prayer of that grand man the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the water that stood round about it; the beauty of the power and influence of the word of God is most strikingly seen. For while these wonderful manifestations were the miraculous power of God himself, this by no means lessens the beauty of the character of that Godly man through whom these wonders were brought about. And what gave Elijah this beautiful character? It was all brought about by his love for, and obedience to the word of God. This did it all. It was this that so ennobled and beautified and purified the life of Elijah, that the horses and chariots of fire from God were sent to take him to heaven without his passing through the pains of death. And the word of God now, under the gospel of Christ will make lives just as pure and beautiful as the word of God under Moses did then. The most beautiful life ever witnessed on this earth was that of the Son of God himself.

His whole life was a perfect exhibition of what the word of God can do. He came to do the will of his father, and his whole life is an example of perfect obedience to the will of God. Not one single sin mars the pure and perfect life of Jesus of Nazareth, because not one act or thought of disobedience to the word of his father is found in his whole life. He never thought wrong, he never purposed wrong, he never acted wrong. Holiness, goodness, purity, loveliness, are the characteristics of his entire sojourn among men. Thus he has left us in his life a perfect model of what perfect obedience to the word of God will accomplish. While no mortal of earth can fully imitate that perfect life, yet we may by earnest prayer, and earnest efforts, approximate it more and more so long as we shall live. He has left us an example, that we should follow his steps. And the more we treasure up the word of God in our hearts, and our affections, and the more we practice it in our lives, the more will our lives be like his. The whole tendency and influence of the word of God is to elevate, purify and ennoble the lives of men. The word of God has a power in this that nothing else in the universe can have. The words of the wisest men the world ever produced, have no power in this direction. The wisdom of men is foolishness with God. "He taketh the wise in their own craftiness."

We have an example of the power and elevating influence of the word of God in the life of Paul. From the day he obeyed the gospel, he sought to bring his life under the guidance of the word of God. He was sincere in all his efforts to do the Lord's will. He was patient and faithful in all sorts of trials and persecutions. He grew daily more humble, more spiritually minded, his character, his whole being was more and more in accord with the will of God, and hence more power and beauty in all his actions. Hence there was no fear when he saw that he must leave the world. He could in calmness say, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." And under the animation that this conviction gave him, he could look with assurance to the crown of glory which the Lord had provided for him. Well may we all imitate the life of Paul in his devotion to the word of God. And if we will, our last end may be like his. Let every preacher then that desires to benefit and elevate his race, be careful to preach the word. It will do no good to tell what we think the word of God means. It is our business to tell what the word says, and let it exert its own influence upon men. We never can elevate and purify men by preaching our opinions, and what men say about the word. They need the word itself, in its own simplicity and purity, and ought, and must have it, if they are to be prepared for heaven.

E. G. S.

Queries.

Please explain Romans 14th chapter, 1st to 6th verse; also 19th to the 23rd of same chapter.—[J. L. Summit.]

The passage is, "One man esteemeth one day above another, another man esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Rom. xiv: 5. If we examine the context, we will see that the things under consideration, are those of "doubtful disputation." That means the disputing about questions in reference to which God has given no command. He specifies first the thing of doubtful disputation—the eating of meat or the eating of herbs alone. Some men think it is right to eat meat, others that only vegetables should be eaten, receive both, but not to the disputings of these untaught or doubtful questions. Another of these untaught questions, or questions that involved no disobedience of the divine law, was the observance of certain days, not commanded to be observed by the Lord. Paul, to the Colossians, said, "Let no man judge you therefore in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the New Moon, or of Sabbath days." Some of them had certain days, as the New Moon, the Sabbath days as holy days, they were still disposed to observe, as we do Christmas, or Easter, or Thanksgiving. The direction was let not him who did not observe these days, despise him that did, as he served the Lord while keeping them, as others served him while not keeping these days. Just as a man might give thanks and eat meat, or give thanks and eat herbs only, and in so doing honor God. One was not to despise the other for his course in these things which involved no violation of God's law. These Scriptures do not refer to the worship of God on Lord's day. The worship on that day is not of doubtful disputation, because commanded of God. Where God speaks, there is no room for doubtful disputations.

The latter verses are "Let us follow the things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. For meat destroy not the work of God. All things are pure, but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence. It is neither good to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything, whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended, or is made weak." We are to follow those things that work union and harmony, and build up one another, not the untaught questions that gender strife. For the sake of eating or not eating meat, we must not destroy the work of God. All things are pure, that is, there is nothing unclean of itself, meat is not unclean, to eat it is not a sin, but a man that eats it, believing it to be unclean, and that it is wrong to eat it, sins in eating it. A man cannot violate his conscience without sin.

He then says, "It is neither good to eat meat or drink wine or anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended or made weak." Is offended here means is led to sin. Then if eating meat or drinking wine leads our brother to do those things in violation of his conscience, or leads him into courses in which he stumbles or is made weak, it is wrong for us to eat or drink. He adds, "he that doubteth is damned if he eats, for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." If a man engages in any course, or is led to eat, while doubting if it is right, he sins. For what a man does while believing it is wrong, or without faith that it is right, is sin.

Much meat that was eaten had been offered or dedicated to idols. An idol was nothing, and a Christian with clear head and strong faith in God could eat of this without any regard for the idol, and not be injured thereby. But many weak Christians having still a lingering regard for the idol, eating with this conscience for the idol, would have their consciences defiled by eating, and might be brought back to the idol worship. A Christian with a strong faith was not allowed to eat of the dedicated meat, even though it would not hurt him, if by his eating the weak brother, was led to eat to his injury. While we thus lead a weak brother to do what injures him, and so wound his conscience, we sin against Christ. Remember in these things, to offend men is, not to hurt their feelings, but to lead into sin. When we wound the conscience, we lead the men to violate his conscience toward God.

Please explain the following Scripture, the 3rd chapter of 2nd Corinthians and 6th verse.—[G. Mayo.]

"Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." The letter clearly refers to the Old Testament. The Spirit to the New Testament. The next verse explains this. But if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones, was glorious, * * * How shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious. We take the Old Testament as called the ministration of death, because while it produced a sense of guilt and brought condemnation, it could not make the comers thereunto perfect as pertained to the conscience and did not promise eternal life.

Please answer the following queries through the ADVOCATE: 1. (Rev. iii: 20) Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To whom was the language addressed? To the alien sinner, or to the erring Christians? 2. If Christ set up the kingdom while on earth, (as is claimed by many of the sects) was it not composed of sinners, since there could be no remission without the shedding of blood? 3. (Jeremiah xxxi: 31.) Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Was this covenant not made when the plan of salvation was revealed? Did God ever make a covenant with a Gentile?—A. Wilkinson, Dover, Stewart County, Tenn.

This Scripture was clearly addressed to lukewarm and erring Christians. Yet it is true, that to every sinner that will open his heart to receive the Lord—Christ—he will enter in and dwell with him. But to open the heart to Christ, is to be willing to obey him, to follow him as Lord. Christ to-day dwells with and in Christians, only in his appointments. The man that talks about receiving Christ that does not obey him, deceives himself. Neither does Christ knock at the door of any man's heart, save through the motives and incentives presented in the gospel. Christ knocks at every man's heart who hears the gospel, and the invitations of mercy presented in the gospel; and every one who hears the truth and obeys it, opens the heart, permits Christ to enter in, and he dwells with him. The promise on which the covenant is based, was made to Abraham. God came in Christ, to enter into that covenant. He, through Christ, opened the covenant to man. It is opened for all to accept, who will. No man, to-day, can bind another in a covenant with God. It always takes two to make a covenant. God proffers to meet man in Christ, and close the covenant with him. Every man who accepts Christ, enters into this covenant with God. God in this sense, makes a covenant with every man who enters Christ, Jew and Gentile, bond and free.

I am requested to get your views on Acts xx: 16, latter part of the verse. What did Paul want to go to Pentecost for? Some contend that Paul preached before the day of Pentecost.—[J. C. Moore.]

Pentecost was the fiftieth day after Passover. The Passover was the anniversary of the passing over the children of Israel, when the first born of the Egyptians were slain, but the destroying angel passed over or by the children of Israel and did not slay them. The feast of passover on the anniversary of it, was instituted as a perpetual memorial of this mercy of God. The fiftieth day from it was known as the Pentecost. Pentecost is fiftieth. It can be found instituted (Lev. xxiii: 15.) "On the morrow after the seventh Sabbath from the passover, they were to observe it. The seven Sabbaths made forty-nine days, and the morrow was the fiftieth, falling on the first day of the week. It was the day on which fell the feast of the ingathering of the harvest. It was the feast at which more liberality was manifested than any others. Jewish writers regard this as the anniversary of the giving of the law at Sinai. Pentecost came every year. The Jews still celebrate the day as a yearly feast. On this feast day, after the crucifixion, the Holy Spirit descended. Paul was not preaching at this time, nor for years afterward. But after he began preaching, he wished to be at Jerusalem before Pentecost on a certain year. We presume his object in desiring to be there on that feast, was, he would find great multitudes gathered at this annual feast, and it would be a good opportunity for preaching to them. We usually speak of Pentecost as referring to the one made noted by the descent of the Spirit at Jerusalem, but Pentecost is an annual feast of the Jews, and it was to this feast, years after the descent of the Spirit, that Paul desired to be at Jerusalem.

In Hebrews x: 25, we have this language: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: an so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." What day is referred to? Also I have been requested to write to you for your views on dancing—what you thought about members of the church going to dances. We would like to see an article from you on dancing. We had some preaching last fall by Bro. J. B. Davis, and there were several additions; some think that it is no harm to dance, or at least they say so. We have had first principles taught here till everybody understands them, or at least ought to; but we have had but very few lessons on second principles. So please give us one lesson on dancing, giving the Scriptures for and against. We have no organized body; there is some difference as to ordination; some think the elders ought to be ordained by prayer, fasting and laying on of hands. I would like to see an article from you on the subject.

The apostolic order was to have services on the first day of the week—every week. We have never seen a congregation get a firm foot hold, or build up permanently, until it met to serve the Lord on every first day of the week. No substitutes for divine order ever give strength to a church of God. The meeting on the first day of the week, is certainly that referred to. It is the only meeting authoritatively delivered to the churches. Some think that the day referred to is the Lord's day. As you meet with one another, exhort that you be prompt in the meeting. There is introduced immediately a day of fiery indignation and wrath that was coming on them. This is usually understood to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. The signs that were to indicate the approach of that day had been given. I am inclined to think that was the day referred to.

Much has been said and written on the subjects of dancing in the ADVOCATE. The trouble is those who dance never read religious literature. They have no taste for it. The dance is fleshly and sensual, and excites the lascivious feelings of the fleshly nature. Those who cultivate these feelings, walk after the flesh; those who walk after the flesh and seek happiness in its gratification, have no taste for spiritual teaching or associations. A man or woman who follows the dance, if not withdrawn from, will nine times out of ten forsake the church, because of lack of taste for religious services. They have no affinity one for the other. We only say, that thousands of persons through the dance have been hurried down to disgrace and ruin. The chief of police in New York City, years ago, reported after investigation that three fourths of the inmates of the brothels, were led to ruin through the dance. Not a single soul has ever been rescued from sin, or been strengthened in virtue, elevated and ennobled through the dance. No Christian should engage in any practice that makes such a record.

The subject of ordination has also been freely and lately discussed in ADVOCATE. We cannot now introduce a discussion of it. No one doubts that it is the duty of Christians to meet and worship without ordained elders. My judgment is that no one is fit to be set apart in any manner as elder, until he has proved his fitness by meeting and worshiping with his brethren as Christians, and by the practical work developing the proper qualifications. This was the scriptural order. I do not think it can be improved upon. Meet together and worship God, and let the setting apart of elders be an after consideration.

Please tell us to whom Jesus alluded, when he said, Verily I say unto you, that there be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power. Mark ix: 1. I answered the enquiry, by saying, John, while on the Isle of Patmos, confirmed the saying. Proof—Rev. xix: 11-16. —[T. W. L. Moore, Elm Dale, Ala.]

The reference was made to John's remaining till Christ came again, several times during the ministry of the Savior. There has been always some doubt as to the meaning of the expression, till the kingdom come. Some refer it to the destruction of Jerusalem, which is attributed to the power of Christ as a destroyer of the Jewish nation for rejecting him. God's coming was always to bless those prepared for his coming, and to curse those unprepared.

PHILADELPHIA, ANTIOCH, AND TULLAHOMA.

We made the visit, as announced recently in the ADVOCATE, to the above named congregations. The congregation at Philadelphia meeting-house, on Hickory Creek, Warren county, Tenn., is the oldest congregation anywhere in this section of the county, or perhaps the oldest in the county. We do not know the number of members, but they have had a large membership for the last thirty or forty years, possibly more. They have a good, lively congregation there now, meeting to worship every Lord's day, and carrying on an interesting Bible class, and are exerting a widely extended influence for good in that community. The congregation at Antioch, some six miles away, is not so large, but contains some as earnest members as we have met. The congregation at Antioch was originally formed out of members of the Philadelphia congregation.

Both of these congregations are mainly in the Hickory Creek country, where they have good fertile lands to cultivate, and some enterprising farmers. The country is very healthful, and a pleasant and intelligent class of people. Bro. J. L. Sewell lives in this community, and was able to be out twice while we were in the community, though he had not been so well for a time as he had been, but was improving, and we hope he may yet be spared to do much good. We found the ADVOCATE circulating quite freely among these brethren, and others subscribed during our visit. We preached six times in the community—twice at Philadelphia, once at Antioch, and three times at Viola, near by, and felt cheered in finding so many, as we trust, on the road to heaven. And we hope they will still widen their field, by sounding out the word more and more.

We made a very brief visit to Tullahoma, but had a poor opportunity to see the brethren, as we got there in the rain, and it continued to rain till dark, and then a fearful snow storm set in, which almost broke up the meeting. We met with a few noble souls, however, and was much pleased with their earnestness and zeal. They have a good house of worship, and we think they have good prospects to grow up in that rapidly growing town.

The next morning was so cold and gloomy, and we were suffering so with rheumatism, that we took the first train for home, not trying to fill out the rest of our appointments for that trip. We, however, were fortunate enough to induce our young brother, W. Lipscomb, to fill out all except two—Bellbuckle and Fosterville. We hope to be able to visit some of these places yet, during the spring. By remaining at home, and taking some remedies, our rheumatism has much improved, and we hope to be ready for a good spring and summer's work. E. G. S.

SHALL THEY BE PUBLISHED?

Bro. J. L. Sewell would be very glad to publish his sermons which have appeared in the ADVOCATE during the past two years, in book form, provided he can in any way have assurance that he can sell enough to justify him to do so, without loss. It will cost considerable ready money to get out an edition of the book; but if he can ascertain that he can sell enough to secure him against loss, he will undertake the work, for the sake of doing all the good he can before leaving the Lord's vineyard. We therefore ask that each congregation, or some brother in, or for each one, will make some effort to ascertain as nearly as practicable how many copies could, with reasonable certainty, be sold in their bounds, and write, giving the number, to J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn. We are certain great good could be accomplished by the book, if published, by handing and circulating it among aliens, and among the denominations. It would be a cheap way of accomplishing an immense amount of missionary work. An untold amount of good has been accomplished by Bro. Franklin's "Gospel Preacher," and a very large amount could be accomplished by the above, if published. Brethren, please take some pains to ascertain, and inform as above indicated.

EDITORS.

"Unless a man deny himself, take up his cross and follow me, he cannot be my disciple," is the emphatic language of the Savior. To deny ourselves, is to give up our time, our pleasure, our gain, our desires, in order to follow him. To follow Jesus, is to do like he did—be governed by the same spirit, walk in the same steps, and be willing, like him, to devote our lives to him or God, and help humanity. Kind reader, are you a disciple of Christ?

In the dark cloud of a great sorrow the beautiful bow of God's promise is often seen if we look up.

A LETTER TO J. M. BARNES.

Dear Bro. Barnes: I have been reading with much interest, in most of the late numbers of the ADVOCATE, the appeals made by yourself and others to the brethren in Alabama, and sisters too, to have more preaching done in our State, especially in the cities and towns. We have in this State, I think, no less than fifty preachers. Most of these are earnest, humble, sacrificing men. Much has been done, and much remains to be done. What is wanting now to carry on and accomplish the much needed work? One says, "a convention, a State meeting." Another says, "appoint men to receive money to create an evangelistic fund." And another suggests that each brother pay a dollar, and each sister fifty cents.

But should the convention or State meeting never be held, and should the men appointed to receive money fail to get it, and the brethren and sisters generally, not think proper to advance each a dollar, or even fifty cents, shall we despair? By no means. If godly men full of faith and the Spirit of Jesus, zealous, consecrated men, good men, whose steps are ordered by the Lord, and in whose ways the Lord delights, will go to the towns, cities, mountains, valleys, prairies, and piney woods, with the story of the cross; if such men will go and preach publicly, and from house to house, with tears, night and day, God Almighty will bless the work, and a generous and faithful brotherhood, throughout the State and in other lands, will readily and cheerfully co-operate with every such man of God in so glorious a work. I have no objection to money being promised to any preacher in the State or out of it to enable him to go to the work, but if it be not promised or paid beforehand, the work need not be retarded on that account. Time is so precious, the work so much needed, and success so certain, that I hope no brother, who desires to work in this large and inviting field, will wait for the development of plans or means. Badly as we need money, we need more a readiness to work. J. M. JOINER.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. C. M. Wilmeth will remove to Add-ran College, combine the Preacher and the Christian Student, and publish under the name of the Texas Christian.

Kenneth Rayner, of North Carolina, an old politician that for a long while commanded the respect of the public as a conscientious man, died recently, in Washington.

We direct attention to the advertisement, in this number, of J. C. Ayer's medicines. These medicines have stood the test of time, and still preserve their popularity.

Wm. Cameron, one of the oldest printers in the country, for a long time a printer in Nashville, died recently, at the residence of his daughter, at Rich Pond, Ky. He was one of the original members of the Methodist McKendree church in this city. Was at one time printer for the Christian Review and the Agriculturist, edited by Bro. Fanning. He was a gentle, kind-hearted man, loved and respected by all who knew him.

Bro. G. B. Ketcherside, formerly of Dade county, Ga., lately of Jasper, Tenn., was among the graduates of the Medical School of the University of Tennessee. He tells us he is likely to locate at Trenton, Ga., hereafter. Bro. Ketcherside is known to many of our readers as a good preacher. He loves the work of the Lord, too. We think the brethren in his section ought to insist on his giving his time to saving of souls—insist on his doing this work by helping him in the work, as they ought. The people in his section need his instruction.

We have received on our proposition to furnish the ADVOCATE from time of reception of names to the end of the year, for one dollar, when it is to be given away, or to a church that will determine to put it into every family connected with the church, ten or twelve names. One brother pays for it for a "hard-working negro, anxious to know the truth;" others furnish it to the poor sisters and women, not able to pay for it; some to outsiders. We ought, brethren, to have one thousand subscribers under that proposition. Look around you, and see where you can do good. A religious paper has most influence usually in families that have but little else to read.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO
THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

THE ADVOCATE FOR THE POOR.

If you know a poor widow to whom you would like to send the ADVOCATE for one year, send us one dollar, and we will send it. We will give one dollar, and you the other. Thus we will become co-workers in good. Will not brethren avail themselves of this now, to put good reading in the homes of the poor?

SHORT NOTES.

We regret to learn that Bro. H. D. Banta is in bad health. He writes me, "I feel that my work is about done." We hope not, but if it must be so, we feel sure it has been well done. He has been a faithful soldier, and when he falls, he will fall with his armor on.

H. Ab. Smith first had a re-division of his name with himself, and now he has divided it again with Miss Sue H. Burford. He writes me that he was married at Mount Pleasant, Texas, on the 10th of February. Bro. H. Ab., I congratulate you, but I will wait awhile before I congratulate Sister Sue. I'll wait until I see what kind of hubby you be. However, you are not so large yet, but a moderate sized lady can manage you, if she takes you in hand right from the start. And mind you, now, don't you quit preaching; you put out and fill your appointments, just as you used to do. If you don't, we'll attend to you next conference.

Correspondents please remember this: Write on but one side of your paper, and write with black ink. When you send money, send us post-office orders, postal notes are not safe. Deduct amount of order out of money sent, we will pay it.

Bro. J. F. Brill, New Caney, Montgomery county, will make a tour up through eastern Texas, as soon as spring opens. Churches wishing him to preach in passing, should drop him a card at once. Don't forget this.

The Board of Directors for Orphan Home and School, will have their next meeting at Add-Ran, when it is hoped every member will be on hand. Matters of vast importance are to be attended to, and neglect just now would be criminal, if possible to be there.

Is it not about time we had another poetic effusion from Collin McKinney Wilmet? It is about the season that song birds begin to warble. Give us something new on "Beautiful Spring," or a new parody on "Mary's Little Lamb." Something thrilling and touching, Bro. Mac.

Our Bible Class is pretty full this week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Bro. Poe: A flash of electricity has left a death message on my desk. Gov. B. F. Overton is dead. No matter what he was to others, to me his memory is dear. I loved him, but he is gone. Only six weeks ago I bade a last farewell to my true yoke-fellow, my dear father in the gospel, Elder M. Askew, a true and tried soldier of the cross, who died the death of the righteous. A little more than three years ago I wrote for him, to North Alabama, with a request to come at once and help me create a Christian interest among his wilder brethren. He came, and brought his family. I met him in Denton, Texas. I bought for him a suit of comfortable clothes, for it was winter. Gov. Overton gave him a good horse, and one hundred dollars yearly. He did a good work. He fell at his post. His way-worn spirit has gone to the God who gave it. The Nation's Chief mingled his tears with mine at his departure; but when the bold, liberal spirit of B. F. Overton felt the falling of his earthly house, he wept not with me; dying men never weep. With mankind it is always fall time. The fading leaves from the great tree of mortal life are dropping one by one. The Nation has lost a ruler, and I have lost a friend. May the God of all grace deal tenderly with the young mother and widow. Sister Overton is a true woman, and devoted Christian, and knows how to find comfort in the rich promises of the Lord Jesus. Sister Askew and all of her children who are old enough to understand the gospel, are in the kingdom. Three sons of noble bearing, with honest hearts and ready hands, are settled near her; three daughters with her to make sunshine at home; two little boys at home we may hope will grow up into usefulness. May little Tommie and his little brother be good, obedient children, and prove a blessing to their mother and country.

Paris, Texas.

R. W. OFFICER.

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

This week's answers in the class cheers us very much. We are now getting up to good, solid Bible reading, and study. Several new scholars have joined the class, and many answers have been received which I do not publish. You know I told the class we could only find room to publish the best answers, where two or more are nearly alike. First comes a well-arranged answer to the shepherd query, by two sisters in Mississippi; then a letter from Bro. Gowen again; Bro. Reccard speaks again also; and then Noblett's Chapel. Does the class notice the different answers now about the Scriptures, or prophecies fulfilled by Christ? This has taken much careful study of Matthew. Go again seven times, brethren.

Dear Bro. Poe: In answer to the shepherd problem, in GOSPEL ADVOCATE of February 6th, we respectfully submit the following as an answer: Job had before their capture, camels 3,000. (See Job i: 3). Number of men sent to take Jeremiah from dungeon was 30. (See Jeremiah 38: 10) 3,000 divided by 30 equals 100. Number of lords entertained at the feast was 1,000. (See Daniel v: 1.) 100 added to 1,000 equals 1,100. The number of righteous that could have saved Sodom was 10. (See Genesis xviii: 32.) 1,100 less ten equals 1,090. David was 30 years old when he began to reign. (See 2 Samuel v: 4.) 1,090 multiplied by 30 equals 32,700. Number of Gideon band was 300. (See Judges vii: 22.) 32,700 divided by 300 equals 109. Number of Philistines Sampson slew with the jaw-bone was 1,000. (See Judges xv: 15.) 109 added to 1,000 equals 1,109. Number of Solomon's songs is 8. (Solomon's Songs.) 1,109 less 8 equals 1,101. Job's friends tarried 7 days without speaking a word. (See Job ii: 13.) 1,001 multiplied by 7 equals 7,007. The number of fishes caught was 153. (See John xxi: 11.) 7,007 less 153 equals 7,554. Answer.—[Ida and Ada Garrett, Senatobia, Miss.]

We are glad to welcome these two names—twins, we suspect—to our Bible Class, from Mississippi. Bro. Gowen says 575 is the correct answer to the shepherd query. Who is wrong? We are getting on nicely in our class, and new names are coming in constantly. By the way, do you notice how these Tennessee folks fall into the Bible Class? I see they are great Bible readers over there. Let them come in from everywhere.

Dear Bro. Poe: Though I have left Flat Creek, and come away up in Kentucky to school, still I am a reader of the ADVOCATE, and member of the Bible Class. Bro. Gotcher's first answer to my recent query is correct, but his second one is wrong. Willie Poe gives correctly the second. The dust of the earth and large fishes both answer the demands of the question, both being created before man, without hands, feet, or soul. But in due time God gave each a soul, and after.

wards required that soul of them. In my explanation of Jacob's age the types make me say: "At the beginning of the famine he (Joseph) was three years old!" I wrote: "He was seven years older." I will correct two other mistakes which I made. (1) Jacob was 56 years old when he went to Padan Aram, instead of 77, as stated by me and Bro. Lauderdale. (2) Terah was 130 years old at Abraham's birth.—[Geo. Gowen, Lexington, Ky.]

Bro. Poe: In answer to your queries, numbers 7 and 8, in number 5 of the ADVOCATE, I would say: (7) There are about one hundred and twelve or fifteen prophecies of the Old Testament fulfilled in Christ, according to Matthew. (8) The first clause of 2 Peter i: 19, reads, according to the Revised Version, "And we have the word of prophecy made more sure." Canon Farrar translates it, "And still stronger is the surety we have in the prophetic word." He says it is more sure because it is wider in its range—more varied, and comes from many bringing a more intense personal conviction, than the testimony to a single fact. Another expositor says, "Previously we knew its sureness by faith, but through that visible specimen of its hereafter fulfillment, assurance is made doubly sure." Prophecy assures us that Christ's sufferings now past, are to be followed by Christ's glory still future. The transfiguration gives us a pledge to make our faith still stronger that 'the day' of his glory will 'dawn' ere long. He does not mean to say that the "word of prophecy," or Scripture, is surer than the voice of God heard at the transfiguration, for this is plainly not the fact. The fulfillment of prophecy so far in Christ's history makes us the surer of what is yet to be fulfilled. His consummated glory." —[Geo. Gowen, Lexington, Ky.]

Dear Bro. Poe: I send answer to your questions in the ADVOCATE of January 30th. The number of citations from the Old Testament, in Matthew, are about sixty-five. But there are forty-three verbal citations or prophecies that Christ fulfilled, according to Matthew's accounts. We have also a more sure word of prophecy. That is, we have the testimony of Jesus, which testimony is the spirit of prophecy. (See Rev. xix: 10; xxii: 18.) I send reply to Bro. Gowen, of February 6th. I acknowledge giving Terah's age wrong. I did it by mistake. But Bro. Gowen made as great a mistake as I did. The children of Israel that went out into the exodus with Moses were about six hundred thousand, besides children. (See Exodus xii: 57.) I know they were at different times numbered; three times by Moses, and once by David. But those that journeyed from Rameses to Succoth were sixty thousand. These are the numbers that went forth. Bro. Gowen says they remained in Egypt 210 or 215 years. We hardly think this correct, without chapter and verse. (See Exodus xii: 40-41. We claim they remained in Egypt 430 years. Who is right?—[M. D. Reccard, Fairfield, Tenn.]

ANSWER TO BRO. POE'S QUERIES.

(7) If Bro. Poe means fulfilled by Christ personally, we answer 22; but if in him, through others, and personally also, 86. Compare Isa. l: 2 and Matt. xvi: 67, to get our idea. We (apostles) have also a more sure word of prophecy." The apostles had the sure word of prophecy; and we claim that it is recorded in next chapter, and has been made sure to us by its fulfillment. Have there not been teachers who brought in damnable heresies? He says (third chapter, first and second verses,) that he writes to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance, that when these things come to pass, that they might be mindful of the words and commands of the prophets and apostles, and in the fourth verse makes the evidence still stronger by adding another witness. Those denying the resurrection, will they not stand up and tell us that "all things continue as they were from the beginning?" This is the reason he enjoins upon them "to take heed," that they may know that his sure prophecy is being fulfilled when this apostacy commences. Hence it will be a "light that shineth in a dark place" to lead them forward instead of back, and becomes a sure word of prophecy to us, because we can read the prophecy, and also see the fulfillment of it.—[Noblett's Chapel, Minor Hill, Tenn.]

Benevolence and Longevity.

Peter Cooper and Sir Moses Montefiore are two striking instances of extremely benevolent men being extremely long-lived. Peter Cooper's great ambition was to help the classes of society who most needed help. The masses needed a reading-room, and he gave it in the central part of New York at great cost. Poor youths of both sex needed instruction in employments which would enable them to earn a respectable living, and he provided classrooms, teachers, and the necessary adjuncts of them, all free. Besides this, he was continually giving to individuals and societies where he thought his gifts would do most good. He died recently at the age of ninety-two.

Sir Moses Montefiore has a grand record for munificent gifts and extraordinary exertions in the cause of humanity. He is a Hebrew of the Hebrews, connected with the Rothschilds by marriage, and, like them, exceedingly rich and prosperous. He was born in 1784 and married in 1812. His wife was a very superior woman, and greatly aided him in his, or rather in their, charities. They visited Palestine in 1827; and ten years later when the plague was raging in Syria, they went there again to minister relief to the sorely-stricken people. When he returned to London he was knighted by young Queen Victoria. When an anti-Jewish persecution broke out in Damascus he went in there in 1840, and enlisted the good offices of the Sultan and the Khedive of Egypt in their behalf. This gave him great fame, both with Jews and Gentiles. In 1846 he and his wife went to Russia to induce the Czar to remove some cruel decrees against Jews, and succeeded.

In 1854 he went again to the Holy Land to relieve the sufferers from a terrible famine. He personally administered a fund of $100,000 for the relief not only of immediate wants, but for reviving industries which would yield permanent support. Like Mr. Cooper, he always kept in view the enabling of the recipients to help themselves. His wife died in 1862, and he showed his appreciation of her by doubling his charities. A few months after her death, when the Druzes were massacring the Christians in Lebanon, he hastened to the relief of the survivors, and his example induced people in all parts of the world to contribute for them. In his eightieth year he went to protect persecuted Jews in Morocco, and succeeded. He went to Roumania to intercede for his down-trodden brethren, and again to Palestine to relieve the distress caused by locusts and cholera. When President Garfield was shot, he telegraphed to Palestine, requesting prayers in the synagogues of the four holy cities for his recovery. His entrance on his hundredth year was made the occasion of world-wide congratulations, and his portrait, showing him to be yet a majestic-looking man, was published in the pictorial weeklies. We suggest that in future the typical Jew shall be neither Shylock nor Fagin, but Montefiore.

The fathers of the temperance reformation, whose careers were eminently philanthropic and benevolent, were long-lived. They sought not only to cure all drunkards in the only way they can be cured, but to prevent all the terrible evils that grow out of drinking in the only way they can be effectually prevented—namely but a total abstinence from intoxicating liquors. In this warfare against habit, custom appetite, fashion, and immense pecuniary interest, the reformers had a hard time, but they reached the average of about four score. Dr. Lyman Beecher, Dr. Justin Edwards, Gerrit Smith, William E. Dodge, Dr. Patton, General Riley, Mr. Livesy, and a long list of temperance workers have been remarkable for longevity; and quite a number, such as Dr. Cheever and Neal Dow, and still living at or near the average age attained by leading temperance workers.

The common incident in our everyday life becomes less trivial when we catch, something by a flash of intuition, the less on underlying. A gentleman, walking down to his city office the other morning, was met at a street corner by a ragged little fellow, who, in a tone of oddly mingled impudence and entreaty demanded: "Gimme a cent!" The penny foolishly dropped into the small, outstretched hand disappeared like magic in one of the many pockets that undermined the little fellow's ragged garments; and almost instantly the empty fist was again thrust out with the added demand: "Gimmy 'nother." The hands we raise to the great Giver, we lift more reverently, and our method of address is more respectful, but is not the nature of our appeal, sometimes the same as this street urchin's? Do we never, in our haste for more blessings, forget to acknowledge those already received? Is the Giver never slighted, in our over-eagerness for his other gifts?—S. S. Times.

Let our approach to God be wakeful and intelligent, and our fellowship with him thoughtful and definite. Before we confess a sin, let us define it; before we tell out our thanks, let us examine the grounds of gratitude; before we ask a blessing, let us try to estimate our needs before we come near his presence, let us reverently put off the shoes of the world; and when we meet God in our inner chamber, let us realize that the room is not empty.—George Wilson.

To attempt to serve God without love is like rowing against the tide. But love oils the wheels and makes duty sweet. The angels are swift-winged in God's service, because they love him. Jacob thought seven years but little for the love he had for Rachel. Love is never weary.—Watson.

Let not any one say that he cannot govern his passion, nor hinder them from breaking out any carrying him to action; for what he can do before a prince or a great man, he can do alone, or in the presence of God if he will.—Locke.

Kings' titles commonly begin by force, which time wears off, and mellows into right; and power, which in one age is tyranny, is ripened in the next to true succession.

STRANGE DEVELOPMENTS.

A few weeks ago, under this head, we presented how man's own nature, his own faculties, his soul, his reason, his intuitions at the Preacher's Institute, in Missouri, were exalted as a rule of life to man, as superior to, more permanent than the revealed law and institutions ordained by God in his holy word. How that, when man's intuitional faculties were exalted, the word of God, which is the seed of the kingdom, which is to live and abide forever, was pronounced not absolutely infallible, in conveying the divine ideas to the heart of man. That God's revelations were subject to the limitations growing out of the imperfections of human language, its incompetency to convey thought with absolute correctness and perfection, especially concerning things invisible and infinite." That means God's language is not absolutely reliable to convey God's meaning to the human family on the subject of highest moment to the human family.

We wish this week to add a few more manifestations of the same tendency. Last summer, as our readers are aware, an encampment, called a Sunday-school encampment, was held at Island Park, Ind. At this gathering, which was held where there is no church, which was composed only of that class able and disposed to leave home to attend a Sunday-school association, combining with the meeting boating, fishing, bathing, etc., it was determined that this pleasure seeking assemblage should ordain missionaries to India. They determined to ordain them by imposition of hands and prayer. Three men and three women laid hands on three men and three women. This form was mutilated by the neglect of fasting. While we have doubted whether the form of ordination connected with the imposition of hands, was ever performed, except to impart spiritual gifts, and hence whether it was intended to be perpetuated in the church after the cessation of spiritual gifts, there can be no doubt that if it is observed, it must be done as the Lord ordained it. Hence to pretend to ordain in this way, and refuse to fast, is to mutilate the ordinance, and reject the authority of God.

God ordained ordination to be performed by prayer, fasting, and imposition of hands. They drop out the fasting, and still say they do it in the name of the Lord. Clearly, God never authorized any ceremony of imposing hands and prayer, without fasting. Then to claim to do this in his name, is a false claim.

This act was objected to on two grounds. One was, that no church was here; hence there could be no scriptural ordination. And on the ground that Scriptures give no precept or example for women ordaining or being ordained.

It is to the grounds taken in response to these objections that we direct special attention.

Elder Errett first gives no higher authority for it than, "it is the most satisfactory to the greatest number." Making the pleasure of these people not the authority of God, the standard. He further takes the position, "It is unwise for individual congregations to send forth evangelists."

Bro. Turner, of the Apostolic Times, said this order followed at Island Park is not good for a regular order, but is admissible as an occasional performance. We give the idea from memory, not having his language at hand. That was the way affusion came in as baptism, as an occasional admissibility for the sick and infirm. But if this is not admissible, as a regular order, why should it be as an occasional practice? What necessitates a departure from the regular order? This assuming to depart from God's order occasionally, schools us to depart from it regularly. Occasional violations of God's law are not admissible.

Bro. Turner, however, says that the performance of these irregular acts, is in accordance with the principle that each one is to be allowed his opinions. This principle of the holding of opinions is one that has greatly changed in its use since it was first laid down by the Campbells. With them opinions might be held as private property, but must not be taught or imposed upon others. A noted example of this was the case of Aylett Raines, who was a Universalist or Restorationist. He could hold this as an opinion, but he could neither teach it to create strife, or force it on others as a condition of union or fellowship. He, without surrendering the opinion as untrue, agreed he would hold it as private property, and preach the gospel. He did this, and, it is said, in holding the opinion as private property, not preaching it, he lost sight of the position altogether. According to the present interpretation of the principle, Aylett Raines would have been at liberty to preach Universalism on every occasion he saw fit, and none could have said nay.

For a man to make an opinion a principle of action, where others must act with him, is to force them to conform to his opinion, or to withdraw from his association. When a man has an opinion that an organ is admissible in the church service, and forces it in, he compels every man to accede to his opinion, or to withdraw from the church. When a man holds the opinion that sprinkling is baptism, and insists on acting on that opinion, he forces every one in the church to accede to his opinion, or to withdraw from the church. This is making an opinion the test of fellowship; making others accept and act on our opinion, or withdraw from the fellowship of the church.

Now, this Island Park ordination, so-called, was based on no higher grounds than that it was probably most satisfactory to the greatest number. Bro. Turner says these brethren, acting on their opinion in this matter, are only carrying out the principle that every one shall be allowed his opinion. It will be understood that this was done to ordain these individuals as the missionaries of "the whole brotherhood." An act that is done for "the whole brotherhood," is based simply and only on the opinions of a few men.

Every one co-operating in this foreign society is bound to endorse this opinion; to act on it or withdraw from the work. This is not holding opinions as private property, but is practically making these opinions tests of fellowship. For instance, Bro. Allen believes that ordination of evangelists (these missionaries are but evangelists) by fasting, prayer, and imposition of hands, is proper according to the word of God. (We do not think he believes the mutilation that drops fasting out because it requires self-denial, is.) But he believes it ought to be done by a church. He co-operates in this foreign missionary society. He is obliged either to accept this ordination, which was the result of the opinion of these men, or he is made to withdraw from the society. Hence this opinion, instead of being held as private property, is made a test of fellowship to all who work in the society. They are compelled to accept this opinion as the rule of their action; that is, support evangelists ordained in accordance with this opinion, and in violation of their convictions of what the Scriptures require as ordination, or withdraw from the fellowship of the work.

This is exactly the opposite of the principle laid down by the Campbells. Instead of holding opinions as private property, it is authorizing every man to make a creed of his opinions, and to force them upon others. It is demanding that every man shall practically be controlled in his religious service by the opinions of some men. This is tyranny of opinion. This is compelling the church to fellowship these opinions, and is not requiring persons to hold their opinions as private property.

But here is a worse one still. Bro. J. M. Shepherd, editor of the Faithful Witness, Topeka, Kan., writes the following:

"Another objection to the Island Park proceedings is, that it is unauthorized by the Holy Spirit; that in the case of Paul and Barnabas the Spirit is said to have been present and to have directed the appointment; and now if it can be shown that the Holy Spirit directed the Island Park ordination, the question will be yielded. All believe that the Holy Spirit is with the church to-day in some sense; and that he is with the churches in their scripturally united efforts, the same as in their individual work. Hence, he who questions the presence of the Holy Spirit in any particular case, should make good the grounds of skepticism; for that which is universally received needs not to be proved, but in every such case the burden of proof falls on the objector. Let those who believe the promised influence of the Holy Spirit was not with Christ's servants at Island Park, prove that such influence was absent."

J. M. SHEPHERD.

"We do not intend to re-open this controversy, but as Bro. Shepherd's view is an independent one, from a clear-headed man, we give his article a place, and commend it to the attention of our readers."—Ed. Standard.

Bro. Allen pertinently replies: "This is church inspiration and church infallibility." If they were directed in this matter by the Holy Spirit, it must have been a revealing Spirit, making a new revelation.

Bro. Allen further says: "Those who oppose that ordination are members of the church, and have the Holy Spirit in the same sense, and to the same extent, that those who engaged in it. Then how does Bro. Shepherd know but that the opposition is guided by the Holy Spirit? Let those who believe the promised influence of the Holy Spirit was not with his disciples in opposing this ordination at Island Park, 'prove that such influence was absent.'"

He further says, "When a man argues that the Holy Spirit directs a given thing, and then declares he is not in sympathy with all the details of the proceeding, it looks very much like saying he is not in sympathy with the Holy Spirit."

But is not this whole claim of Bro. Shepherd endorsed by elder Errett, a claim of inspiration, new revelation? May not the whim of any member of the church be interpreted to be the teaching of the Holy Spirit on the same ground? If we admit such a claim as this, how can we deny that the preaching done by our old Baptist brethren under the direct inspiration of the Spirit, that the so-called revelations of Mormon are not true? To show the evil that may grow out of the claim, if such things as these, unauthorized by the word of God, be interpreted as the guidance of the Holy Spirit, on what ground can Freeman's murder of his daughter, or Guteau's murder of Garfield, both claimed to be done under the guidance of the Spirit, be proved not to be? Let those who believe Christ's promise of the influence of his Spirit was not with his servants, prove that such influence was absent when Freeman murdered his little daughter, when Guteau shot Garfield.

We give these things to show, as we said, how the Scripture authority is set aside, by men recognized as teachers among the disciples. There are many ways of rendering the commandments of God of none effect by our traditions. To teach that our intuitions are revelations of co-ordinate authority with, and more permanent than the revelations of the Bible, certainly makes us feel less dependent upon the Bible than we otherwise would. When we are immediately told that the Bible is not an infallible revelation of his will to men, that feeling of reverential dependence, that makes us tremble at his word, is greatly weakened. When we are told that when God speaks to man he speaks to himself, that man's nature and God's nature are the same. Hence man is a law unto himself. When we are told that we may look to our own feeling, desires, or within our own hearts and minds, or to man's own judgment for new revelations, for new guidance from the Holy Spirit, equal in authority to the word of God, our sense of dependence upon Scriptures given by inspiration of God are destroyed.

The sceptical tendencies excited by the wave of rationalism and transcendentalism, that exalt, human wisdom, human intuitions, and human conscience into a co-ordinate, if not superior authority, to the word of God are affecting many of the teachers of the religion of Christ as they move those of the denominations. The battle for the supremacy of the word of God, as the only rule of man's faith and life in religion, must be fought again, and its enemies are to day found within the bosom of those churches, builded especially to maintain this authority. It is folly to any man to ignore this truth. The disposition to adopt substitutes framed by human wisdom for divine appointments in both the work and worship of the church, is an outgrowth of this tendency. To ignore these things is to foster this spirit.

LIVING EPISTLES.

Do we stop to think, dear reader, that each day of our separate lives is but a page in the life-book of letters we are writing, "known and read of all men?" Each word and act plainly read by, and, perhaps, indelibly traced upon the memory, nay, even life, of some one. Are not even our private thoughts mirrored in our acts? When we awake each morning, refreshed from sleep, ready to begin a spotless page, do we ask the great Master-Writer that our pencils be guided with unerring hand, looking at the perfect copy he has set for us? Although in an obscure corner of this wide world, with but an humble sphere to fill, none of us liveth or dieth to himself. Besides the sleepless Eye which scans the lines, others are reading as we write. We may be so eager to gain a desired end that we heedlessly ignore all our readers; but, be sure, their eyes are on us, just the same; or, we may be so enamored with the delicate tracery of our own invention, we proudly forbear comparison with the one perfect copy, and flauntingly hold it up to others' view.

"Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right." Let us read together a few brief chapters from young lives, and say, fair young girls, if any of you recognize your own? "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," a tender voice pleads with one to whom He has given that youth, bright with love, and gay with promise; but the pleader is repulsed with an indifferent tone, an angry frown, or a half-weighted promise to grant the request in the future. "Ah! but then it will be too late; the active, useful years of your life will then be spent, and will you give me (I who left the endless joys of a home in my Father's house, to procure blessings for you,) the years which have 'no pleasure in them?'" But Pleasure's enchanting voice lulls the once tender conscience, which has resisted that loving entreaty so often, to rest; till now, the beseeching tones fall as "an idle tale," or are drowned in the light laugh or giddy conversation.

But here is the story of one whose tender heart responded to the call; who now is listening, and moving in time to strains of music, at once solemn and fantastic. First, the deep, true, inimitable tones of Duty fall on her attentive ear, and her life is in harmony with their swells of peace and love. (Tell me, ye lovers of the gay and festive dance, what fairy-like motion of the followers of Terpsichore will bear comparison in beauty and grace with this?) Then the dulcet, deceptive notes of Pleasure steal on her ears; closing them not, soon she is entranced by their Lurlean power, and, all unmindful of, or deaf to the keynote of her new existence, floats along to the magic of their rhythm, until the shoals of sin loom in sight. Happy will it be if she is not eternally wrecked on them!

Ah! here are two home pictures in this autobiographical album. In this one the daughter of the home is indeed a household fairy, appearing in many different attitudes—all charming. Here she is "rocking baby to sleep," soothing the fretful little one into slumber, with a soft lullaby; there she imprints a kiss on grandma's wrinkled forehead, smoothing those lines of toil and care by the sweet caress. Ah! the little brother must have been unsuccessful in soaring his kite; for see the dainty figure impelled along by its swift motion, and the dear little fellow keeping pace with feet, eye, and a boy's bounding heart. Now we see her in that most lovely of all the aspects of home life, helping mother—taking burdens from the tired shoulders which have borne so much for her; giving the weary frame opportunity for a little rest, or a walk with "papa," in which the blissful days of "auld lang syne" can be recalled, or the worn eyes respite to regain their wonted bustle in the perusal of the thoughts of those whose words fall "as cold waters to the thirsty soul," or the sight of things beautiful in art or nature. "Papa," too, comes in for a share of attention from "daughter"—the many marks of affection so dear to his heart; and the servants, yea, every living creature on the place, come within the range of her kindly ministrations.

But ah! the other picture which obtrudes itself to our view almost makes me shudder. I wish the very thoughts of it were blotted from the earth. There, with God's bright sunshine falling around her, lounges she who should be the bright inspiration of home, with blowsy hair and untidy appearance generally, reading some false, exciting work, or perhaps even too lazy (shall I use this term? I think any candid reader will agree it is not too expressive) to do even that, and to all claims on her time and attention she snaps out a decided No! or, if she yields to the eager solicitations, looks as if the Seven Thunders of rage (if such there be) were heaped upon her face.

May the fresh young girlhood of none who read this description be sullied with marks of the latter; but may it be a type of that "eternal youth" in the great, unseen Beyond. Perhaps I may offer other chapters and pictures for consideration; for the present, good-night.

WHEN IS A CHURCH SELF-SUSTAINING?

In our mission work we have a resolution like this; "Help is to be continued at — until the church becomes self-sustaining." From this one would judge that almost any one could tell when help is to be discontinued. If by "self-sustaining" we all understand the same thing, it does not make much difference what it means, provided it does not mean something wrong.

It is assumed that "self-sustaining," as applied to churches, always means something good; something quite creditable to a church.

If the term were employed in the New Testament to designate a church, then we, as a people, would let go every other notion about it, and take hold of the Divine idea. It might be best to just find out what a church in the New Testament conception ought to be, and then apply the word "self-sustaining" to the church that comes up to the standard. In that case, I fear we would have little or no use for the word "self-sustaining." Still, in this use of the word we would have the satisfaction of not being left in the dark. On this I will not insist, since I wish only to determine how much we mean by the word when we talk in our missionary style.

Besides, the Scriptures do not use many epithets to describe anything. In the apostolic times when a church was found, or founded, that was a church, those who spoke by inspiration just called it a church. I am not sure but what every church established by the apostles was "self-sustaining" from the start.

The fact that some things were wanting, and remained wanting a long time, did not prevent said churches from being "self-sustaining." I am sure, however, that the "self" was not as big and as prominent in the primitive churches as it is now, and hence there was not so much to be sustained then as now. We have grown in this direction, at least.

A variable quantity presents itself in any and every estimate we try to make on this subject, and that uncertain, indefinable quantity is "self" and since this is a component of the word whose meaning we seek, our task is almost hopeless.

I will dot down my idea about it gained from reading the Bible, viz: The Christians in any community that meet on the first day of the week to break bread and otherwise worship as is ordained, and who teach the word of God to each other and to the world around them, constitute a church that is "self-sustaining." If this is not right, will somebody please make it right. Any community of Christians that substitutes monthly or semi-monthly for weekly meetings, however rich such brethren may be, and however much they may pay a man to pray for them and to preach to them, cannot, righteously, be called "self-sustaining."

Churches, then, must be a great deal more than "self-sustaining" or the world will not be converted.

There is no special credit due to a people for being able to take care of themselves without receiving aid from abroad.

In many places self-reliance would help the self-sustaining work.

We publish the above from O. A. Carr in Christian Evangelist. The fact that so much is said about self-sustaining churches now, so little in the Bible, indicates a wide difference in the character of churches now and then. The idea that a church had to be sustained, never seemed to enter the mind of an apostle. People constituted the church. It took no more to sustain people in the church than it did to sustain them out of it. Indeed it did not take so much. In the church they learned to live in a simpler, less expensive style, and to live more industriously. The people that could live out of the church whether ten or twenty could live in a church. They could not only live in a church, but their lives of industry and frugality enables them to send help to build up churches in other places. Christ's church from the beginning needed not to be sustained, but sustained the truth—was the ground and pillar of the truth. The church, as Christ and the apostles constituted it, was not a costly institution. Christians, no matter how poor, could meet together and worship God according to his directions, and this was the church of God. Institutions that cost large amounts of money, are not churches after the model given by Christ and the Holy Spirit.

Obituaries.

Died of pneumonia, near this place, January 28, 1884, Sister Maggie T. Burnett, aged thirty-three. Sister Burnett united with the church of Christ at this place last August, having previously been a member of the Baptist church at Laverne, Tenn. Her Christian deportment won for her the love of all who knew her. It pains us to part with so devoted a Christian, but she has found a brighter, lovelier home. Dear sister, rest in peace from thy toils. The battles of life are over, the victory is won. We sympathize with the stricken husband and children whom she leaves to mourn their loss.

Paradise, Texas, February 18, 1884.

B. F. HALL.

We are called upon to chronicle the death of one of God's noblest women. Our dearly beloved and widely known sister in the Lord, Eleanor Adair, of New Washington, Ind. who departed this life January 5th, 1884; aged 75 years. One more has been taken from the family on earth to join the family in heaven. The church has lost one of its noblest members, but her work will follow her; for John says, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they shall rest from their labors; yea, saith the Spirit, and their works do follow them." Sister Adair leaves four children to mourn her loss, whom we desire to mention, who are widely and most favorably known. Sister Fannie Eddy, Sister Belle Eddy, Sister Dr. Fields and Dr. S. L. Adair. These are the four sorrowing children with a number of grandchildren. Sister Adair left a letter sealed up to be read after her death, and we send you the letter to be published. We commend the bereaved to God and the word of his grace.

J. HARDING.

2511 Portland Avenue, Louisville, Ky., February 20, 1884.

Died in the full triumphs of the Christian religion, Sister Elizabeth Kersey, January 6th, 1884. She was born September 16th, 1827; was married to Bro. A. J. Kersey August 8th, 1848. She obeyed the gospel in 1849, and was baptized by Elder Wade Barrett. From that time until her death, she walked in the Christian ordinances with the congregation of Christians at Lynnville, Tenn. She had been a sufferer for years with the dread disease consumption. For eight months previous to her death her sufferings were very severe, and she was unable to walk a step; yet she never murmured, but bore her sufferings patiently, always speaking cheerfully to her friends. She would often speak of her death as an end of her earthly sufferings and the commencement of eternal happiness. She was a faithful wife a tender mother, a true friend and kind neighbor. She left a husband and three children; all of whom are followers of Christ. Life's labor well done, she sweetly sleeps until the resurrection morn, when she will rise to meet loved ones who now mourn her absence.

NOTES FROM JONES' HISTORY.

Brother M., we wish to add another extract to what has already been given. In the 12th article of the Waldensian (Baptist) church we have the following:

"We consider the sacraments as signs of holy things, or as visible emblems of invisible blessings. We regard it as proper, and even necessary that believers use these symbols or visible forms when it can be done. Notwithstanding which, we maintain that believers may be saved without these signs when they have neither place nor opportunity to observe them."—Jones' Church History, page 249. Jones tells us that DeVignaux says of the doctrine of these people, "That the holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to our salvation, and that we are called to believe only what they teach, without any regard to the authority of man, that nothing else ought to be received by us except what God had commanded; that baptism and the Lord's supper are the only standing ordinances in the church of Christ. * * * And that the true church of Christ consists of those who hear the word of God and believe it."—Jones' History, page 260. "They said that the prelates and doctors ought to imitate the poverty of the apostles, and earn their bread by the labor of their hands. 'They contend that the office of teaching, confirming, and admonishing the brethren, belonged, in some measure to all Christians, etc.' Their discipline was extremely strict and austere, for they interpret Christ's discourse on the Mount according to the literal sense of the word, and they condemned war, law-suits, the acquisition of riches, capital punishment, oath, and even self-defence."—Ibid, page 266.

I wish to call your attention to the theory, for many years pressed upon the attention of the public, that there is a regular succession of Baptist churches back to the apostles' day. In the first place, let me say, that we occupy the ground which Mr. Orchard and Jones (Baptist historians) put forward in their histories on the establishment of the church. Mr. Jones, speaking of the transactions on the day of Pentecost, says, "And here we contemplate the beginning of the establishment of Christ's kingdom in the world; or, which is the same thing, the erection of the first Christian church."—Jones' Church History, page 42. "As the church Jerusalem was the first Christian church established by the ministry of the apostles, so it was designed to serve as a pattern, in its faith and order, to all succeeding churches, to the end of the world."—Ibid, page 44. This is substantially Mr. Orchard's testimony. Is there a succession of churches back to the apostles? We will let the Baptist historians tell the tale.

Jones says, "It may be proper to remark, that not long before the times of which we now treat, some Christians had seen it their duty to withdraw from the communion of the church at Rome. The first instance of this that we find on record, if we except that of Tertullian, is the case of Novatian, who, in the year 251, was ordained the pastor of a church in the city of Rome, which maintained no fellowship with the Catholic party; page 141. On page 152, Mr. Jones says, 'We have already adverted to the rise of the Novatianist churches.' If these Novatianist were Baptist churches, and if Jones is right when he says that, the first Christian church began on first Pentecost after the death of Christ; why talk of 'rise of the Novatianist?' 'The Donatists appear to have resembled the followers of Novatian, more than any other class of professors in that period of the church, of whom we have any authentic record; but this origin was at least half a century later, and the churches in this connection appear to have been almost entirely confined to Africa.' Jones' Church History, page 173. To talk of the 'origin of the Donatists' Baptist churches in A. D. 211,' looks real queer.

Again, "At a moment when darkness seemed to cover the earth, and gross darkness the people," it is pleasing to contemplate a ray of celestial light across the gloom. About the year 660, a new sect arose in the East, under the name of PAULICIANS, which are justly entitled to our attention. Mr. Robinson says that the Waldenses were in communion with the Catholics fifty years before they withdrew from them. Ibid, page 195. Again, be it known, they say, to all in general, and to every one in particular, that these are the reasons of our (Waldenses) separation from the church of Rome. Ibid, page 254. Again, "If we could depend with certainty upon the correctness of the date of this manuscript, it would be a very important document in the history of the Waldensian churches, because it bears internal evidence of having been written for the express purpose of exhibiting a public declaration of their reasons for separation from the communion of the church of Rome." Ibid, page 251.

A. ALSUP, JR.

The following is the letter referred to in the obituary notice of Sister Adair, left to be read after her death:

My Dear Children: My hope is in Jesus, and in him do I put my trust; a few more days or years at most and I must stand on Canaan's coast. "The days of our years are three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength, they be four score years, yet is there sorrow, for it is soon cut off," and I will pass away.

I am saved by the blood of the crucified one, for we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end. "Blessed are they that do the commandments for they shall have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God and he shall be my son." They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abides forever. "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life, which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. "Blessed are they that endureth temptation, for when they have been tried they shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath prepared for them that love him."

I cast all my care on Him. He careth for me. The Lord hath done great things for me whereof I am glad.

My dear children, I pray that God will prepare you all for death, and for judgment; prepare you all to meet him with joy, and not with grief. My children, I want you to read the New Testament through very often. I want you to go to church regularly on the first day of the week; go often, the more the better. Remember I ask this of you. I wish to say something that will cause you all to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. I pray that God will prepare you for death and for the judgment. O, Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make them clean. O, God, I ask thee to make them just as thou wouldst have them to be, for thou, Lord, art good and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy unto all that call upon thee.

Dear children, above all things have fervent charity among yourselves, for charity shall cover a multitude of sins. "They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy." "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you, a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. God worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure." A praying man is in a frame to stand almost anything that he believes to be his duty.

Above all things, pray that God will open the gates of light to your souls. You must live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Soberly, you owe to yourself; righteously, to your neighbors; godly, you owe to God. God is faithful. He will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able to stand, but with the temptations, always maketh a way to escape.

Now, dear children and grandchildren, I commit you all unto the Lord, and the power of his grace. As long as I lived, I prayed for you, but now that I will soon leave you, I commend you to his care and keeping, begging you to trust in the Lord your God. Study his word for my sake. Hear and obey, and meet your mother in heaven. I pray God that none of my near and dear ones be lost.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them. Remember 'the grace of God is sufficient for all that will put their trust in him.' "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching." My heart has no doubt or fear. I give my body a living sacrifice, Christ the Lord is very near.

HE LEADS HIS OWN.

He leads his own! Enough to know,
He marks the path and bids me go;
I'll trust him, though the way seem long,
And follow on with cheerful song.
He leads his own! Not mine the choice;
Content I listen for his voice;
Gladly I hasten to obey,
And journey where he leads the way.
He leads his own! I would not say
That mine should be a pleasant way;
Only to know he leads me on
To perfect rest, and joy unknown.
He leads his own! Though deep the wave,
Mighty the Arm reached forth to save.
My heart shall know no doubt or fear,
For Christ the Lord is very near.
He leads his own! When bade to go,
Through pastures green, where streamlets flow;
And when the gloomy vale they tread,
And clouds hang darkly overhead.
He leads his own! Though oftentimes
The sun and joy seem left behind;
Just as of old he led his flock,
And gave them water from the rock.

WATER AND GRACE.

Not long ago we listened to a Baptist D. D. preach a sermon from John iii: 5: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." He said that the word water in the above passage did not mean literal water, but that it meant grace, or the grace of God in the heart. He labored to prove that baptism is not a condition of pardon. He told his audience that there was a class of people called Campbellites that relied more upon water to save them than upon grace. He then quoted Eph. ii: 8: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Now, if water in the third chapter of John means grace, then it follows that grace in the second chapter of Ephesians would be synonymous with water, and should read, "Thus far by water are ye saved through faith." So our brother out-Campbelled the Campbells in the way of Campbellism.

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

BRO. BUTLER'S DEFENCE.

In the Apostolic Church of February the senior editor Bro. W. L. Butler, writes a long article in reply to one that appeared in this DEPARTMENT. By some means my essay to which he replied failed to appear in his paper. It is just possible that the office editor thought his senior's piece would have greater effect upon those who had not seen his opponent's effort; an opinion which is doubtless correct whether it is entertained by any one about the Church office or not. I am perfectly willing, however, for our readers to see and meditate upon anything Bro. Butler may say in opposition to my position; therefore we give to him the space allotted to the "Kentucky Department" this week. In the next issue, if the Lord wills, we will consider the merits of his conclusion, the soundness of his reasonings. Of one thing I am confident, viz., that he has neither reason nor scripture to sustain him. His article reads as follows:

LOCAL CHURCH AND MISSIONARY WORK.

Our editorial on the sufficiency of a local church for missionary work, overthrows both the society plan and the go-any-how plan. Bro. Munnell, a society man, comes to the rescue of the society plan, and in this issue Bro. James A. Harding, an anti-society man, comes to the rescue of the go-any-how plan.

Bro. Harding's plan discharges the church from the work of converting the world, and commits the great responsibility to a self-chosen and self-sent ministry, for which there is no more authority than for the society sent ministry. Of the two human plans the society is least objectionable. Society work is more orderly and may be made more efficient than the unmitigated renegadism, which the doctrine of "go-any-how" must entail upon the public. Both plans destroy the work of the church in destitute fields.

It is true Bro. Harding says "individual Christians and the churches of the Lord" should contribute to the support of his "go-any-how" ministry; but since he informs us it is not churches behind the preachers sending them out, we respectfully inquire what churches? Are those churches in front, calling preachers into their territory to hold meetings? If not behind sending, nor in front calling, where do you hitch on the churches to this "go-any-how" ministry?

It looks like he means to defend our practice under deficient church order. In South Kentucky Bro. Harding has, to my certain knowledge, spent about 70 days evangelizing; but was called in and paid by two of the best churches in that region. Such examples can be found in his practice and mine—not in the New Testament. And what does this amount to for the ten thousand people where there are no churches in South Kentucky? The "go-any-how" men go mostly among the churches, in order to be supported by the churches. This calls the preachers into the churches to hold meetings, whereas true evangelism would send the evangelist out to found churches where there are none.

He states thus his position: "The Christian (i. e., the lover and servant of Christ), who has the ability to publish the good news, should do so with diligence as he has opportunity, praying God to guide him and support him, and to fit him more and more for the work. Individual Christians and the churches of the Lord should contribute to the support of such men."

This has the ring of consecration and piety, as it must have, coming from such a good man; but on the question at issue it hardly has the merit of respectable absurdity, to say nothing of reason and Scripture.

It destroys the ministry as a calling by making it no more the business of one Christian (lover and servant of Christ) to preach than of any other Christian of equal sense and goodness. The Christian who has the ability to publish the "good news" means every Christian with such ability. If every Christian sticks to his business, there will be no "individual Christians and churches of the Lord" left to support "such men," except those who have not the ability to publish the "good news." Must a man confess that he does not love and serve the Lord with ability to publish the "good news" in order to be a supporter of Bro. H.'s "go-any-how" ministry?

The matter stands logically thus: If a Christian has the ability to preach, and does his duty, he is a beneficiary of Bro. H. and his men, it must come through violation of duty on the part of Christians who are able to preach, or from those who do not love and serve the Lord with ability to preach: and in either case this support (?) would not be the Lord's service! Thus does our critic set aside the Lord's ordinance, that they "who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel."

We turn to something better. He states our position thus: "The church should select and send out the evangelist, promising him a support and directing him in his labors." This is sufficiently correct, only we prefer giving him a support to "promising him a support."

We now propose to prove to any one, whose mind is not so blasted by the preoccupation of error, as to make him unable to feel the force of the Scripture, which teaches contrary to his practice, "that no man, after the establishment of the church at Jerusalem, ever got into the evangelistic field by divine sanction and received a support for his work without being sent and directed in his labors by a church." We intend this to apply to apostles as well as evangelists.

Let us define the proof:

1. We find men in the field concerning whose appointment and sending, or how they got there, we have nothing in the word of God. These prove nothing on the issue.

2. There is no case where a church in front called the man into its town and territory to evangelize; especially is there no case of a man going anyhow, church or no church, pay or no pay. You had as well hunt for a man who was baptized, but was not baptized into the church, as for a man who got into the evangelistic field without the sending of a church. The same reasoning that discovers the one will discover the other.

There are clear cases where men got into the evangelistic field by being sent there by a church, according to our position as stated in the above quotation. These cases constitute all the light there is on putting evangelists in the destitute fields. If you mean to go by the Bible on this subject, this is the plan of putting forth evangelists for the conversion of the world. This or nothing.

Now for proof. The persecution at Jerusalem, in which Stephen suffered death, scattered the saints, and they went everywhere preaching. They were not acting under "go-any-how" plan: it looks more like go-because-they-had-to-go. Some reached Antioch and preached to the Grecians; and a large number believed and turned to the Lord. The record proceeds thus:

"Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem, and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch." (Acts xi: 22.) If a "go-any-how," or "go-because-you-had-to-go," ministry, was the established rule for sending preachers, why should Barnabas be sent to Antioch at all? But what I want you to note is, (1) the church sent Barnabas; (2) the church selected his field—"that he should go as far as Antioch." Stick a pin down here.

Under the same persecution Philip went to Samaria; he preached, worked miracles and baptized people in great numbers. When the news came to Jerusalem Peter and John were "sent unto them," the Samaritans. Here again the field is chosen, and these apostles are sent to it from the Jerusalem church, which is gospel headquarters. Philip was a good preacher; but still the cause in Samaria is not left to him. Hence the sending of Peter and John to continue and perfect the work. (Acts viii: 14.) Another pin, please.

We next introduce the sending of Paul and Barnabas from Antioch into Asia to do a previously chosen work (Acts xiii: 1-4). Bro. Harding, I know, says the Holy Spirit sent them, and the church had nothing to do with it. This is a partial view of the matter. True, it is said in verse 4, the Holy Spirit sent them, but it is said in verse 3 of those who fasted prayed and laid hands on them, "They sent them away." Again "they were recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled" Acts xiv: 26.) I is not said here who did this recommending to the grace of God; but we find out in the next chapter. Paul and Silas go out for the same business from the same church, "being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God" (Acts xv: 40.) If Paul and Silas were recommended to the grace of God by the brethren, who recommended Paul and Barnabas to the same grace, from the same church, for the same work? Bro. H., can't you put these two passages on recommending to the grace of God together some thing like you put Mark and Luke together or the commission? As surely as the church had anything to do with the prayer, fasting and imposition of hands and "the brethren" recommended to the grace of God, Paul and Barnabas was sent to the chosen work by the church at Antioch. And it cannot be said by Bro. H. that the preachers, and not the church at Antioch, sent Paul and Barnabas into Asia, except on the preposterous assumption that a church does not do what is done by her ministers.

Certain teachers went from Jerusalem to Antioch and made circumcision a condition of Gentile salvation (Acts xv: 1). After much disputing, the church at Antioch, decided to send Paul and Barnabas and others to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem (xv: 2). "The apostles and elders and the whole church" participated in the deliberations, and wrote the decision thus: "For as much as we have heard that certain, which went out from us, have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying: ye must be circumcised and keep the law, to whom we gave no such commandment," etc., (Acts xv: 24). In the first place, if these men were going anyhow, and were not sent from Jerusalem whence they came? How could a Jerusalem church decision take effect on men who were going anyhow, church or no church? In the second place I am curious to know what business this church had to give any commandment at all—the men were going anyhow, and the church had nothing to do with sending them! And what will the church, saying we did not command you to preach circumcision as a condition of salvation, amount to when it gets to Antioch? This transaction convinces me that the church not only sent men, but commanded them what to preach and stopped them when they made essentials out of things they did not command.

It appears now that a church (1) selected and defined the preacher's field; (2) sent him into this field, (3) told him what to do when he got there; commanded him to preach, and (4) stopping him when he violated instructions. This establishes my position beyond all doubt. If this is not divine order on how ministers are constituted and sent into the field, there is none.

Need I now spend time proving that the church that thus commanded the labors of the preachers paid them their hire? Needless as it may appear to some, we invite your attention to the following:

1. When we find a preacher in the field, it is not necessary to find it said that the church which sent him paid him, or that anybody paid him, in order to show he was paid. The direct way is to appeal to the ordinance of the Lord: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. ix: 14). The men we find engaged preaching the gospel are paid as certainly as this ordinance is observed.

2. And the fact that a certain church chose a field and sent a man into it, is sufficient proof that that church was responsible for the observance of the ordinance of preacher paying in that case. There is only one condition upon which one man, or set of men, can control the labors of another man, or set of men. The labors thus directed must be owned by the party or parties controlling them. If one owns another as a slave, by purchase or conquest, he can then say, "Go, and he goeth." Or, you may own the labors of another by hiring him. But you must own before you can rightfully use. When we read of ministers sent to Egypt, China, England, Germany, etc. we do not need to ask if they were paid, and if we know what nation sent them? We have no further trouble about what nation paid them. Christ has bought us with a precious price. We all belong to him; are his bondmen. But on the ownership of labor we are all sent alike into the work of saving others. But when a church elects and sends certain of her members to do a special work, which is her work as much as the work of those sent, her only right to send consists in the carrying out the Lord's ordinance that the laborer is worthy of his hire." In no other way can it be sensibly said that a church sent a preacher.

But while Bro. Harding admits that there are examples of a church sending men, he denies that the parties thus sent were ever sent in any case to preach the gospel. It is surprising that he commission of a preacher, the known business of a preacher, and the plain declaration of what he preachers did when thus sent by the church, were insufficient to disabuse his mind on this subject. Peter and John were sent to Samaria, and he sums up the facts about their mission as follows: "(1) They were not sent down to Samaria to preach the gospel, but to bestow miraculous gifts upon those who had already received and obeyed the gospel; and (2) they were sent by the apostles and not by the church." Both these "notes" contradict the work of God as plainly as Satan's "not in the garden of Eden."

1. The apostles were solemnly commissioned to be witnesses of Christ, beginning at Jerusalem and extending through Judea and Samaria, and thence to the uttermost parts of the earth; and yet, the first time any apostles are sent to Samaria under this commission, we are coolly informed that "they were not sent down there to preach the gospel, but to bestow miraculous gifts," something no apostle was ever sent to do. They were sent to preach and testify, and God bore them witness and confirmed the word with signs (Mark xvi: 25-20; Heb. ii: 4). It is not by no means said that Peter and John were sent to confer gifts, except by our critic. Besides, the very text out of which he sums up "his facts," in reference to this mission, says, they testified and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans." So, if Bro. Harding's statement, that they were not sent to preach, be true, it follows (1) that though Jesus told them that they were to be witnesses of him in Samaria, and the text says they testified the word, in this the only case where we have account of apostles taking a trip to Samaria, they went there not under his commission, but a new one; (2) they went there for a business he never sent an apostle on; (3) they violated their new miracle-working, non-preaching commission, for they did testify and preach.—indeed! The apostles were never sent for anything else.

And how straitened is "go-any-how" for material in the attempt to prove they were not sent by the church! Was there any church at Jerusalem at this time? If so, how much? Luke answers: "And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad throughout the region of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles" (Acts viii: 1). The apostles composed the church at this time, and they sent Peter and John, which looks like quite unanimous church action. According to our view, they were very suitable persons to send to preachers; the estate of the church had been laid down at their feet! Besides, if the church had all been present it is not proper to say that a church does not do what is done by her ruling ministry. It seems there were no elders in the church at this time, and the apostles were the presiding and ruling ministry.

His effort to prove that the church at Jerusalem did not send Barnabas to Antioch to preach, but for something else, is equally subject to adverse criticism. We will pass it with few words. In the first place, it is Bro. Harding, not the Bible, that says Barnabas was sent to Antioch "to comfort, encourage and exhort the young church," and that it was not "to preach the gospel." In the second place, the Bible does say that the church sent Barnabas to Antioch, and that "when he was come, and had seen the grace of God, he was glad, and exhorted the brethren to cleave unto the Lord." It looks like his joys and exhortations were evoked by what he saw after he got there, and not by the instruction of a previously given commission. Then the Bible gives right in this connection as a result of his labors: "much people were added unto the Lord." If he was not sent to preach, he either added these people without preaching, or else violated his commission. Nor is this all. He went to Tarsus and brought Saul to Antioch, and they spent a whole year together, "and taught much people." Did they preach? Was Barnabas an evangelist? His commission as a preacher and the work he did indicate that Barnabas was sent to preach. See Acts xi: 22-26.

The following facts can only be harmonized with our position:

1. Every office or agent to whom any special duty was committed, was chosen by some party or parties other than himself. The apostles, deacons, elders and messengers of the church were all chosen; did not go anyhow into their work; did not decide their own call and fitness for the work of their respective positions.

2. The elders, deacons and evangelists were all ordained to their work by prayer, fasting and imposition of hands. No man constituted himself a minister and went anyhow.

3. The preachers were not left to choose and decide their own field of labor. The church, under the Spirit, decided the field of Peter and John when they were sent out to Samaria; also the field of Barnabas when he went to Antioch. Paul and Barnabas were sent into a field which was previously chosen and defined. So of Paul and Silas.

4. The evangelists were sent by the churches. Even Paul who had long been an apostle is ordained and sent by a church.

5. The church which sent an evangelist, not only chose his field, but gave him instructions how to carry out the Lord's commission, and stopped him when he disobeyed orders.

6. No church can send a preacher and direct his labors, without owning said labors; and this can only be by compensation. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." The Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel, shall live of the gospel. "Who goeth a warfare at his own charges?"

7. The conversion of the world is not the work of the ministry, but the work of the church, "which is the pillar and support of the truth" and "the light of the world." The evangelists are servants of the church through whom the church accomplishes her work. If you discharge the church from sending and supporting evangelists and let them go anyhow you simultaneously discharge the church from all fellowship in extending the gospel conquest into foreign fields.

That the Lord and Holy Spirit commissioned and sent the preacher only adds divine authority to our position. The Lord commissioned and sent Paul as an apostle; and yet the church at Antioch sends him. If the Lord sends the preacher that the church sends, the plan is divine. If the Lord pays the preacher the church pays (and we doubt that he pays any other,) the plan is divine; and the "go any-how," and "society plan," which takes the work out of the hands of the church, are not divine.

General News.

The total receipts from all sources of Brooklyn Bridge during the eight months was $205,281—$46,350, from foot passengers, $109,086 from car passengers, and $49,845 from vehicles. On that basis the trustees estimate the earnings for the whole year at $521,510. But the cost of maintaining the bridge is now estimated at $280,000 a year, and the interest on the bridge bonds amounts to about $1,000,000 a year, so that the structure is running behind more than $750,000 annually. Eighty policemen are employed on the bridge, and the monthly pay-roll is over $19,000.—The University of Deseret is supported by the public school funds of the Territory, and has always been controlled by the Mormon church. ## The Broom's Soliloquy.

"I'm only an insignificant broom,
Good to sweep an untidy room,
And then to be hidden away.
It's very trying I cannot be Something dainty or sweet to see,
Where the light and the sunbeams stay.

I'd like to be a dear little chair
That holds the bonny wee baby, there;
Or rather, if I were able To have my wish, I would proudly stand
With bric-a-brac, cards, and flowers, a grand Magnificent marble table.

Or there is the looking-glass, you know,
Which everybody admires so;
You can always see the smile
With which they peep as they pass it by;
How aristocratic to hang so high
And be looked at all the while!

And there a splendid thing to hold
The books with covers of red and gold;
Exceedingly dignified.
Or that old sofa, where the children crowd
And shout and frolic and laugh aloud
At play on its cushions wide.

But what is the use of wishing to be Anything else but just plain me?
I'd better be trying to do
My best, I think, for a homely broom,
And see to it I sweep my room
As well as I can. Don't you?

Nor ever grumble, though only made
To live and work in the quiet shade;
For any with eyes may see
Than if each of us do more
Than keep in order a single floor,
Very clean world 'twill be."

HOW THE THIRD MAN "TREATED."

The Middletown Press tells the following story, which by the way has a local bearing in every American town:

A party of three or four gentlemen who were in a hotel in this village a few days before election were invited to "take something" by one of their number. After they had taken it and chatted a few minutes, another of the party solemnly suggested that it would be well to "take something." They accepted the invitation and took something again. They started out and in a few minutes, as they were passing a dry goods store another of the party stopped them and said:

"Let's go in and take 'something.'"

"Why that's a dry goods store," said one of the party.

"Well, what of it? Come in."

In they marched, and ranging themselves before the counter, the gentleman who invited them propounded the question, "what will you take?"

One party took a box of collars, another took a clean shirt. When the bill had been settled and they had walked out, they looked at each other rather sheepishly and began to see, for the first time the foolishness of the "treating" business. If men must treat why not do it in a dry goods store?

SUSAN'S WORK.

The work was more troublesome than usual; and the holes in the stockings bigger; and the children had stolen her little gourd, to set up for a steeple on their block-house, and altogether she was forgetting whom she was working for. A thought strikes her, and she speaks out with, "Bress you, honey, de Lord put dis yere work in old Susan's han's jes as much as he put young Massa Tom in de polepit wid the Bible words in his mouf for to speak. But ole Susan am a dretful forgittful kind of a critter, and pretty often she don't mind who she is doin' de work for. Den it's dretful hard, specially dat ar Phoebe's stockin's; de holes look like to swaller me. Den I tinks jes in time 'bout de Lord's work, an' right away de holes begin to gedder themselves up like, and look kinder 'shamed for makin' such a fuss, and pretty soon there ain't no hole dar, but jes a werry han' some darn in de werry best style, 'cause you can't poke off none ob yer second rate work on the Lord. No, sah, honey, dat ar ain't de 'fect ob workin' for de Lord."—Gospel Messenger.

THE LESSONS OF PETER COOPER'S LIFE.

The highest lesson taught by Mr. Cooper was the lesson of his own life. As much as, or more than any one I ever knew, Mr. Cooper solved the problem: "Is life worth living?"

Observing him carefully for a long series of years, it appeared that certain parts of his nature were cultivated intentionally, as the result of a wisdom which discriminated that was really caring for from what was not worthy of pursuit. Personal ambitions or selfish aims have no weight with him, and disappointments and annoyances which would have left deep wounds with many pass off from him with scarcely an observation. He was most kind and loving; but if he were usefully employed, no domestic loss or separation from friend seemed to touch his happiness seriously. He spoke often of his preference for plain living, and his habits were as simple as those of a child. Love of pomp and display never touched him in the slightest, and he had an innocent openness of character which concealed nothing. Never, under any circumstances, did he show a particle of malignant revenge or meanness. If people disappointed him, he passed over the wound it made and let his mind on something more satisfactory. Swedenborg's phrase, "the wisdom of innocence," often occurred to my mind in observing Mr. Cooper. He knew what was wise, and to that his heart was given. Sensitive as any young man in all works of sympathy and kindness, the mean and the bad ways of the world fell off from his perception.

So his life passed in New York in the Cooper Union, serene, happy and contented. With "honor, love, obedience, hosts of friends," he was an example and encouragement to those who had not gained the quiet heights of which his inner self habitually dwelt—Mrs. Carter, in the Century.

WHAT THEY AGREED TO GIVE UP.

A poor woman in the village had lost her husband, and had nothing left to live upon, and five children.

All the little Harpers were very sorry when they heard their mother's tale.

"How can we help?" said Janie, the eldest. "We've no money at all."

Mrs Harper smiled and said "No, you have no money, but if you would like to give up some of your pleasures, you could earn some."

"How, mother?"

"You might give up having sugar in your tea, for one thing."

"But it's so nasty without, mother."

"Well, perhaps you can think of something else. All of you go into the garden for half an hour, and come and tell me what you fix upon."

Off ran Janie and Harry and Sybil and wee Johnnie, hand in hand, and walked solemnly round the garden for just half an hour. When the clock struck twelve they ran in again, helter-skelter.

"Well," said the mother.

Janie spoke:

"We've thought of everything all round, mother, and, if you please, we should like to give up our lessons!"

But that mother could not agree to.—Philadelphia Call.

JAPANESE HOUSES.

The Japanese houses are generally one-storied, but roomy, and of exceedingly neat appearance in and outside. They much resemble Swiss chalets, with the roof protruding over a basement veranda, from six to eight feet wide. The wooden framework of the main walls is filled with bamboo laths, covered with clay, and heavy rafters are put on it for the roof, to give the whole structure a necessary stability. No permanent partitions are found in the interior, and light wooden pannels, moving on grooves in porcelain castors, divide the different compartments. They can be removed and transposed at will to form new partitions. Transparent paper serves for the window panes, and the same material, made of the bark of the mulberry tree and painted over in colors with elaborate patterns, is used for curtains, portieres, and many other items of ornaments. The floors are covered with mats made of rushes, which all over Japan have the same dimensions—six feet long, three feet wide and two inches thick. The size of these mats, or "kins," as they are called, regulates all the measurements of a house; and if the Japanese wants to have to have one built, he only states to the architect the number of kins it has to contain. These mats are always kept scrupulously clean, and never allowed to be trodden upon by the sandals of the natives or the boots of the foreigners, but only with stockings or bare feet. Chairs, tables and bedsteads being almost unknown, the Japanese sit and sleep on this matting, and, except some ornamental cabinets and screens, hardly any other furniture encumbers the room. The reception and business apartments open toward the street, and the back of the house contains the living and sleeping rooms, as well as the kitchen, which are all more or less open to the view of the passers-by. All the household utensils are made of lacquered papier mache or bronze in curious shapes, elaborately ornamented, and with a view to stow them away after use in the smallest possible space, economy of space being a cardinal virtue in the construction and management of Japanese houses.

In winter the rooms are warmed by coal pans a very insufficient method in a climate like that of Japan, but counteracted by the number of quilted gowns both sexes wear one over the other in cold weather.—The Builder.

THE TEST.

An expert was called to examine some coins held up two yellow eagles, and said, "I think one of these are counterfeit! But a certain acid will prove if my suspicion is well founded."

To all appearance the pieces were of equal value, both being perfectly executed, clean and brilliant in color, and having the ring of true metal.

However, when the potent fluid came in contact with one, it instantly turned a livid green, showing that it was made from material largely composed of brass. Upon the other the strong chemical had no more effect than so much water.

Many people with characters seemingly as free from dross as the purest gold quickly lose their outward glitter, and reveal the baseness of their real natures, when touched by the acid of severe temptation.

Many others, in every walk of life, although fairly deluged by this terrible tester, remain uninjured in armors of righteousness, shining with finer luster after every trial.—Watchman.

GOSSAMER SPIDER.

In describing the works of these insects, Dr. G. Lincecum says: I once observed one of these spiders work on the upper corner of an open, outside door-shutter. She was spinning gossamer, of which she was forming a balloon; and clinging to her thorax was a little cluster of young spiders. She finished up the body of the balloon, threw out the long bow lines, which were flapping and fluttering on the now gently increasing breeze, several minutes before she got all ready for ascension. She seemed to be fixing the bottom and widening her hammock-shaped balloon, and now, the breeze being suitable, she moved to the cable in the stern, severed it, and her craft bounded upward, and, soaring away northward, was soon beyond the scope of my observation.

Fifty Indian girls have just been sent from the Indian training school at Carlisle, Pa., to a similar school in Philadelphia. They are reported to be bright and quick at their studies. They are from six to twenty years of age, dress neatly, and wear their jet black hair braided. They rise at six o'clock, and after breakfast one division goes to the school-room, while the other learns to sew, cook, and do general housework. In the afternoon they change, so that all may be instructed in books and in house keeping. They must speak English during the day, but at evening they are allowed to talk together in their own language. Those of different tribes cannot understand each other, and there are Pawnees, Sioux, Cheyennes, Comanches, Diggers, Osages, Omahas and Delawareans. Some have curious names—English and Indian mixed,—like Besie Big Soldier, Edna Eagle Feather, Maud Echo Hawk, Sarah High Pipe, Frankie Bear, and Lizzie Spider.

THE HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

Upon a Subject of Vital Interest, Effecting the Welfare of All.

The following remarkable letter from one of the leading and best known scientific writers of the present day is specially significant, and should be of unusual value to all readers who desire to keep pace with the march of modern discoveries and events.

"A general demand for reformation is one of the most distinctive characteristics of the nineteenth century. The common people, as well as the more enlightened and refined cry out with no uncertain voice to be emancipated from the slavery of conservatism and superstition which has held the masses in gross ignorance during a large portion of the world's history and in the time of the 'Dark Ages' came near obliterating the last glimmer of truth. Dogmatic assertions and blind empiricisms are losing caste among all people of all countries. People are beginning to think for themselves, and to regard authority much less than argument. Men and women are no longer waiting that a few individuals should dictate to them what must be their sentiments and opinions. They claim the right to solve for themselves the great questions of the day and demand that the general good of humanity shall be respected. As the result of this general awakening, we see, on every hand, unmistakable evidence of reformatory action. People who, a few years ago, endured suffering the most intense in the name of duty, now realize the utter foolishness of such a course. Men who under the bondage of bigoted advisers allowed their health to depart; suffered their constitution to become undermined and finally died as martyrs to a false system of treatment. There are millions of people filling untimely graves who might have lived to a green old age had their original trouble been taken in time or properly treated. There are thousands of people to-day, thoughtlessly enduring the first symptoms of some serious malady and without the slightest realization of the danger that is before them. They have occasional headaches; a lack of appetite one day and a ravenous one the next, or an unaccountable feeling of weariness, sometimes accompanied by nausea, and attribute all these troubles to the old idea of 'a slight cold' or malaria. It is high time that people awoke to a knowledge of the seriousness of these matters and emancipated themselves from the professional bigotry which controls them. When this is done and when all classes of physicians become liberal enough to exclude all dogmas, save that it is their duty to cure diseases as quickly and safely as possible; to maintain no other position than that of truth honestly ascertained, and to endorse and recommend any remedy that has been found useful, no matter what its origin, there will be no more quarreling among the doctors, while there will be great rejoicing throughout the world."

"I am well aware of the censure that will be meted out to me for writing this letter but I feel that I cannot be true to my honest convictions unless I extend a helping hand and endorse all that I know to be good. The extended publication for the past few years, and graphic descriptions of different diseases of the kidneys and liver have awakened the medical profession to the fact that these diseases are greatly increasing. The treatment of the doctors have been largely experimental and many of their patients have died while they were casting about for a remedy to cure them."

"It is now over two years since my attention was first called to the use of a most wonderful preparation in the treatment of Bright's disease of the kidneys. Patients had frequently asked me about the remedy and I had heard of remarkable cures effected by it, but like many others I hesitated to recommend its use. A personal friend of mine had been in poor health for sometime and his application for insurance on his life had been rejected on account of Bright's disease. Chemical and microscopical examinations of his urine revealed the presence of large quantities of albumen and granular tube casts, which confirmed the correctness of the diagnosis. After trying all the usual remedies I directed him to use this preparation and was greatly surprised to observe a decided improvement within a month, and within four months, no tube casts could be discovered. At that time there was present only a trace of albumen, and he felt, as he expressed it, 'perfectly well,' and all through the influence of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy he used."

"After this I prescribed this medicine in full doses in both acute and chronic nephritis, [Bright's disease] and with the most satisfactory results. My observations were neither small in number nor hastily made. They extended over several months and embraced a large number of cases which have proved so satisfactory to my mind, that I would earnestly urge upon my professional brethren the importance of giving a fair and patient trial to Warner's Safe Cure. In a large class of ailments where the blood is obviously in an unhealthy state, especially where glandular engorgements and inflammatory eruptions exist, indeed in many of those forms of chronic indisposition in which there is no evidence of organic mischief, but where the general health is depleted the face sallow, the urine colored, constituting the condition in which the patient is said to be 'bilious,' the advantage gained by the use of this remedy is remarkable. In Bright's disease it seems to act as a solvent of albumen; to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes; to wash out the epithelial debris which blocks up the tubuli uriniferi, and to prevent a destructive metamorphosis of tissue."

"Belonging as I do to a branch of the profession that believes that no one school of medicine knows all the truth regarding the treatment of disease, and being independent enough to select any remedy that will relieve my patients, without reference to the source from whence it comes, I am glad to acknowledge and commend the merits of this remedy thus frankly."

Respectfully yours,

R. A. GUNN, M. D.

WORTHY Of Confidence.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla is a medicine that, during nearly 40 years, in all parts of the world, has proved its efficacy as the best blood alterative known to medical science.

SARSAPARILLA (extracted from the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla) is its base, and its powers are enhanced by the extracts of Yellow Dock and Sillaria, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other potent ingredients.

IS your blood vitiated by derangements of the digestive and assimilatory functions? Is it tainted by Scrofula? or does it contain the poison of Mercury or Contagious Disease?

THE leading physicians of the United States, who know the composition of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, say that nothing else so good for the purification of the blood is within the range of pharmacy.

ONLY by the use of this remedy is it possible for a person who has corrupted blood to attain sound health and prevent transmission of the destructive taint to posterity.

THOROUGHLY effective renovation of the system must include not only the removal of corruption from the blood, but its enrichment and the strengthening of the vital organs.

RELIABLE witnesses, all over the world, testify that this work is better accomplished by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA than by any other remedy.

BLOOD that is corrupted through disease is made pure, and blood weakened through diminution of the red corpuscles is made strong, by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.

PURIFYING up the blood and building time in serious cases, but benefit will be derived from the use of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA more speedily than from anything else.

MEDICINE for which like effects are falsely claimed, is abundant in the market, under many names, but the only preparation that has stood the test of time, and proved worthy of the world's confidence, is

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

IS ONE CHURCH AS GOOD AS ANOTHER?

The affirmative of the above is a very common expression among the denominations, and sometimes is heard even among the disciples of Christ. If, when the expression is used, reference is had only to denominations as such, we have no disposition whatever to question the truth of the claim. But when the church of God, as revealed in the New Testament, is brought into the account and compared with denominations of human names and human build, we are compelled to say no. All denominations have been built by human wisdom, and every thing that is peculiar to any denomination is essentially human. The church of God as given in the Christian Scriptures is purely divine in all its parts. Every item, both in introducing men into it, and in carrying on its practical work, is given us by inspiration. Nothing here is left for man's wisdom. God has given us all the laws of his kingdom. But in all the denominations in the world, there is more or less that is human. The name of every denomination in the world is human. God never named one of them, nor gave one single one of their peculiarities. And to say that any one of these denominations is as good as the church of God, is to elevate human wisdom to an equality with the wisdom of God. There is not one denomination to be found that is built upon the one foundation, which the Lord has laid in Zion. When Jesus was on earth, and sojourning with his disciples, and when Peter had said, "thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," replied, "upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. xvi. Paul also said, "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." These passages enable us with certainty to determine what the one foundation is. It is the sublime truth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. There is no denomination that builds upon this truth. Every creed, discipline or confession of faith we have ever examined, claims that Christ is "very and eternal God," and thus they all contradict the word of God, reject the one foundation the Lord has laid, and erect something else upon which to build. And not only do they reject the one only foundation, but they reject the law of initiation into the kingdom that God has ordained, and establish others of their own devising, and their own arrangement.

The Lord ordained that sinners, in order to an entrance into the kingdom of Christ, must believe the gospel, must repent of their sins, and be baptized into Christ. Everywhere the apostles preached, these things were required, and the people by thousands submitted, and thus entered. But where is the denomination that teaches and practices these things now? Not one such to be found. However much they may differ in other things, they are unanimous in claiming that the sinner is in Christ, is pardoned, saved, before baptism, and independent of it. While God has ordained that by baptism men enter into Christ, the religious parties of the present day set that aside, and claim an entrance into Christ before baptism, and by other means, thus making void this command of God by their traditions. Can churches acting thus, rejecting the wisdom and authority of God, be called as good as the church of God, the one "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone?" By no means. This cannot truthfully, scripturally be done. Then as to the practical work of the church, the management of the house of the Lord on earth, where is the religious party, denomination, that takes the word of God as given in the Christian Scriptures, and follows these divine directions? There is not one such to be found. But on the other hand, they actually claim that there is no rule, no system of church government laid down in the New Testament, but that all this is left to the wisdom of men. Hence Synods, Conferences, Presbyteries, assemblies and associations are called for this purpose. These assemblies all act upon this principle. They, in their judgment, must finish up what the Lord has left undone.

They must make laws for the government of God's people. Although the word of God says that "His divine power has given to us all things that pertain unto life and godliness," they ruthlessly contradict this, and say no, this is a mistake; God has not given all things, he has left for men to arrange the particulars of church government as may best suit their own wisdom. Although the word of God says, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," yet denominations say no, the man of God is not furnished in the Scriptures with a rule for church government, but must make them by his wisdom, thus setting at naught the word of God, setting up their own laws and regulations for the government of the church. Thus they reject God, and make void his word by their traditions. In this is manifested the disposition of the man of sin, the disposition to set themselves above God, above his authority, set up for themselves, in the whole management of the church on earth. Hence their long disciplines and confessions of faith, and articles of decorum and such like. Never was higher presumption manifested even by Catholicism itself than is manifested by all those who set the government that God has given at naught, and set up for themselves.

Indeed we regard this as one of the leading features and characteristics of the man of sin, as given by Paul in his second letter to the Thessalonians. Shall we then say that these are as good as the church of God, that takes his word and goes by it? Nay, verily. Then again the Anathema's of God are settled against those who add to, or diminish from the word of God which he has given. And yet, in every creed, every discipline and confession of faith in the land, both these things are done. They all ignore, set aside some things that God has required, and add some things that God never ordained, and will never approve. Thus all the creed makers in the world make themselves guilty of both these offences. God requires his people to meet on the first day of the week to break bread, to worship him in taking the Lord's supper. But these denominations, creedmakers, have changed this order, and have arranged to take the supper once a quarter, or once in six months, and have also inaugurated the custom of meeting on the first day of the week to hear preaching, something God never ordained, thus adding to and diminishing from the word of God at the same time.

Then again denominations have set aside the names that God has given for the divine institution that he ordained, and have substituted human names instead. Also the names God has given his individual children are set aside, while human names, unknown to the oracles of God, are substituted instead. Are these organizations that do these things as good as the church of God? Surely not. When these denominations are compared one with another, and one of them is said to be as good as another, we have nothing to say. This may be true for aught we know, and we shall spend no time in pointing out differences, or in trying to determine which of them is better, or which is the best. But when these parties are compared with the word and church of God, and said to be as good as it, we do not believe a word of it. Like Elijah of old, we are jealous for the Lord of hosts, and therefore oppose all who engage in pulling down the Lord's altars, and persecuting his prophets. And strange to say, some, even of the disciples of Christ, or that claim to be such, use the expression at the head of this article affirmatively, even when the church of God is taken into the account, and say "one church is as good as another," including the church of God as one. This is just a little too bad. But we have never known any to do this, except those who are ignorant of the difference between the church of God and modern denominations, or such, in the next place, as have done like the denominations, have added things that God never ordained, in the way of societies, human plans, organs, and such like things, that can no more be defended by the word of God than the errors of denominationalism. And for such as these to condemn the parties around them, would be to condemn themselves, for they have acted upon precisely the same principle in what they are doing. These are the very men among those claiming to be purely the Lord's people, that say that one church is as good as another. And whenever they do this, they place themselves upon a level with all who, in any matter, set aside the word of God and substitute something else. Those who do this are going backwards, not forwards.

As to the people that belong to those denominations, many of them are apparently as pious, as humble, as zealous, as any we find. And for these traits, we love them. Many, too, of the masses are wholly ignorant of the extent to which the creeds to which they adhere have rejected, changed, and added to the word of God, and many that if they knew these things would submit no longer. For all such as these, we have the highest regard. But we can never say of these denominations as such, with their human creeds, that they are as good as the church of God. We do not believe it, and therefore cannot say so. We believe in respecting the word and authority of God above all things else. We believe in the names that God has given to his church and to his people above all human names. We believe in the word of God as the only rule of faith and practice against all the creeds and confessions of faith the wisdom of the world ever produced, and can never consent to any form of speech that will place human wisdom and human productions upon an equality with the word of God and his wisdom. We may say more at another time.

ELDERS, DEACONS, EVANGELISTS.

See ADVOCATE No. 13, page 38, for a query from Bro. N. A. Bostick, and Bro. Lipscomb's reply to the same. Bro. Bostick says: "One of our preaching brethren in our community, has taken the position that elders and deacons, as spoken of in the New Testament, went out of existence at the same time, and in the same manner, as did apostles and prophets, and therefore should not exist in our congregations now. * * * He claims also that the work of the evangelist, as performed by Timothy, is not necessary now."

As this is a misrepresentation of the position of the brother referred to, I undertake to state his position myself. Concerning elders he holds not that they "went out of existence at the same time, and in the same manner, as did the apostles and prophets, and therefore should not exist in our congregations now." On the contrary, he holds that the apostles, though dead, have never passed away as regards their position in the church; neither have the prophets, (inspired men of both Old and New Testaments,) so far as concerns their instrumentality in corroborating the word of the apostles, and assisting in laying down the foundation upon which the church is built.

The church still rests upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. The apostles are still seated upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. As Christ's ambassadors, as his instruments in promulgating the law of pardon, they still retain and remit sins; i. e., obedience to the gospel preached by them is the only obedience recognized in heaven. If the apostles ever occupied official positions in the church, they still fill the same offices. To them, and to them alone, we go for authority in all matters of doctrine and practice, even as did the first Christians.

The difference is that now we have the New Testament Scriptures given through the instrumentality of the apostles as "that which is perfect, the full will of God, the completed revelation, delivered to the churches." Until this completed revelation was finished and compiled, people had, in a great measure, to depend upon the oral and traditional teachings of the apostles. Timothy received the word from Paul, and was to commit it to faithful men, and they, in turn, were to teach others. This arrangement was to continue till the completed revelation was brought in, but no longer; otherwise we are still dependent upon tradition for our knowledge of the word, which neither Bro. Lipscomb nor Bro. Bostick believes.

As "Preaching Brother" does not understand the Greek, he confesses his inability to determine the meaning of the word translated "pastors," in Eph. iv: 11. Scholars in whom he confides, say it is the same word that, in other places, is translated "bishop," or something equivalent.

It seems a little strange that Bro. Lipscomb should conclude from their association that those pastors were inspired teachers. Then we might read, "And some evangelists, and some 'inspired teachers,' and teachers." Or, as Bro. Lipscomb doubtless understands that all those characters were inspired, we might read, "And some evangelists, and some 'inspired teachers,' and inspired teachers!" It seems that Bro. Lipscomb would mark as a distinct era in the history of the church, the time at which the inspired pastors, or elders, ceased to exist, and the "permanent ministry" of uninspired elders and deacons "was ordained." He says if this ministry is not permanent, the church itself is not permanent. Well, be that as it may; it is not the continuity of the eldership and deaconship that "Preaching Brother" is questioning. But he does contend that if there be a modern eldership, it differs from that which existed before the completion of the New Testament, even though the beginning of the present order must mark a yet different era in the history of the church. The points of difference are, (1) there are now no Timothys nor Tituses to ordain them, and (2) they do not receive the word direct from inspired men that they may teach others. And as an era or transitional point, it is certainly more clearly defined than the other.

Now, all are under the necessity of receiving their knowledge of the word from the "completed revelation." What, then, "Preaching Brother" holds with regard to elders is, that if there exist to-day those who should be called elders, they are those Christian men who have been favored with natural and providential facilities, and who have grown wise by the study of the word, and whose hearts and lives are in keeping therewith. Bro. Lipscomb says, "The work of evangelizing is the essence of the Christian religion itself." We add, that with such men, the work of "feeding the flock of God, taking the oversight thereof," is, with them, the essence of the Christian religion itself.

But the position of "Preaching Brother" is, that it is the qualifications that make them elders, (if they should be so called,) and not any appointment, ordination, or designation, by any so-called evangelist, presbytery, or other ecclesiastical dignity or power. And one essential qualification is the engaging in the work, wherever and whenever opportunity offers. In some cases there is in a congregation a nominal eldership, while some one who wears not the name is doing what work is being done. Hence the name is not essential to the work. If the name should be worn, it should be given by the doing of the work. Bro. Bostick would concede that the elder has no power outside of the word. Well, if he has any power within the word, it is the power that is vested in the word, and not in the man.

It is not left to the elder to teach in the same sense in which elders taught in the days of primitive Christianity, before the completed revelation was given. Then he was either inspired, or received the word from inspired teachers, that he might be the avenue through which it was to be transmitted to others. Now, in common with others, he is under the necessity of going to the Bible. His work in teaching is to appeal to the open Bible, explain Scripture by Scripture, and exhort others to search, understand for themselves, and abide by the word.

Were it not for the prevalent idea of a ceremonially ordained, or a specifically designated board of elders, nothing would be more reasonable and natural than for those who have been blest with a knowledge of the word, and a love of the same and their brethren, to take the lead in this work of teaching and watching after the welfare of the church. Neither would anything be more reasonable than that the congregation should recognize such as the ones to whom she would look as leaders in this work. "The essence of the Christian religion itself" demands that the work be done. But frequently, for lack of that which is considered necessary as giving authority, those who are qualified fail to do the work.

But a congregation should at all times be able to determine whether or not her elders are in harmony with the word. Never, in a matter of doctrine or discipline, should a congregation be led by men, be they elders or what not. This, too, is certainly the will of God, inasmuch as he has given to each the "completed revelation," thus cutting off any other avenue by which we might hope to receive it. God may have winked at ignorance in times past, but now he commands every man to know for himself the truth. Does Bro. Bostick object that the members of a congregation cannot all understand the Bible alike, and therefore it is necessary to have an eldership to regulate and settle matters of discipline? This is the old cry of sectarianism, "Can't see alike." Shall we oppose this cry as regards matters of doctrine; but when it comes to matters of discipline among those who have made the good confession, join in with the Babylonish howl? Again, if a congregation cannot agree as to the meaning of God's word, are they likely to understand and agree as to the meaning of the utterances emanating from an eldership? Can fallible men express themselves more plainly than can God? We are commanded to be all of the same mind; therefore it is possible. Is it suggested that it is possible only by having an installed eldership, into whose hands the congregation, by unanimous consent, yields all questions? This would be to give one's faith and salvation into the hands of another as completely as does the priest-ridden Roman Catholic. Bro. Bostick would risk the consequences of division, rather than to sell out thus his freedom in the truth. In any matter of doctrine or discipline, matter of faith or of vital import, he would say, If there be any in the congregation who do not understand, let them be taught by the word, that each may act his part in the matter in "all good faith; for 'whatsoever is not of faith is sin.'"

Well, when all thus understand and act, is it not the Bible, rather than man, that is ruling them? When a congregation, without understanding, submits to the dictation of an eldership in any matter of faith, though the decision may be in harmony with the Scriptures, she is, nevertheless, culpable, from the fact that she has taken man's say-so, and has claimed to do a thing in the name of the Lord, without the assurance that it is the Lord's will. "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." The only way to be sure that the blind lead us not, is to suffer no man to lead us.

If necessary to install the elder into office, there is a work for him to do, peculiar to his office; otherwise the office is unnecessary. It avails nothing to call it a work instead of an office; for, so long as the idea of an ordination or installation of any kind is entertained, the difference is in name only. The power to confer the eldership upon any one, implies the power to take it away. The power to accept it, implies the power to lay it down. We frequently hear of elders acting upon this idea, "resigning their eldership." In view of this, "Preaching Brother" propounds the following query: "What is left for the modern official elder to do that is not done by the word of God as contained in the Scriptures? It will not do to name the work of teaching, governing and watching over the church as a work peculiar to his office, for all Christians are kings and priests to God, and since the completed revelation is given to all, the 'quintessence of the Christian religion itself' demands that each member do this work to the extent of his ability."

DEACONS.

The writer of this, searched the Scriptures and asked the advice of others, in an effort to understand what the work of the deacon is. Not being able to find Scripture authority for his doing only the temporal work of the church, he appealed to Bro. Lipscomb. See GOSPEL ADVOCATE, 1883, No. 36, page 499. Whoever will turn there and read, will find that Bro. Lipscomb says that the word translated deacon, means minister or servant; and is generally translated by one of these words. He realizes that a servant may serve in many ways, and tacitly acknowledges that he cannot make out the deacon's work from the New Testament, to his own satisfaction.

But the prevailing idea is that one thing essential to congregational organization, is offices to be filled with deacons and some kind of men to fill the offices. After the organization is complete, without any Scripture authority for so doing, the deacons are placed over the temporal and financial affairs of the church, which frequently amounts to little more than waiting on the brethren with the bread and wine at the Lord's table! Yet they are expected by this to "purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith." 1 Tim. iii: xiii. Is it probable that God has left in the church, a matter of such vital importance as the holding of an office in order to the accomplishing of a certain work, and yet has left it impossible for man to determine what that work is? Shall we not conclude that whatever work was performed by the primitive deacon, if it be necessary now, is embraced in the Scripture given by inspiration, which is calculated to thoroughly furnish the man of God "to every good work?" 2 Tim. iii: 16-17. "Let us have light," says "preaching brother."

EVANGELISTS.

According to Bro. Lipscomb's reply to Bro. Bostick, every true Christian is an evangelist, i. e. according to Bro. J. A. Harding and others, a "preacher of the gospel." Well, if it be proper to call any one who does what he can to disseminate a knowledge of God's word, an evangelist, then "preaching brother" believes in the existence of evangelists at the present time. But even if the term should be confined to those who become familiar with the Scriptures, and who have a talent for public speaking, and who go forth as public advocates of the gospel plan of salvation; still, taking Bro. Lipscomb's view of this character, "preaching brother" claims that modern evangelists are not what evangelists were in primitive days. Bro. Lipscomb himself says that Timothy and Titus did a work as inspired vangelists that no evangelist can do since. The manner of "selecting or choosing," as described by Bro. Lipscomb, strips them of all extraordinary powers and privileges, such as are claimed by many to belong to the evangelist to-day,—a jealous brother develops a talent for public speaking. He is well versed in the plan of redemption and has the ability to explain it and persuade others to receive it. Then it is God's will that he should engage in this work. He should use whatever talent he has. Then, indirectly, God has already chosen him to this work, just as he chooses the one qualified to do the work of an "elder." Then all the church can do is to acquiesce in the choice and bid him God-speed. This is what Bro. Lipscomb says amounts to a choosing a selection." But because his talents in this direction, does this give him any official power or authority over his brother who, with his money, helps him on in this work? Are they not equally evangelists? Neither is a preacher of the gospel in the sense in which the apostles and inspired evangelists preached it. It is now embodied in the "completed revelation" and spread upon the pages of the Bible; and every thing necessary for inspiration to do, has been done.

"Preaching brother" believes all that Bros. Lipscomb and Bostick can consistently believe, concerning the duties and powers of the so-called vangelists. As such, they have no rule nor authority over the church. We are told the word means "preacher of the gospel." Should the modern expounder of the word be so called? In ancient times the disciples went every where, preaching the word as they had learned it from the apostles. Yet they are not said to be of the "gifted" evangelists. It seems that, despite the definition, the evangelist had a peculiar gift by reason of which he was called evangelist. Let us have light.

"He is overthrowing the faith of some," says Bro. Bostick. If he mean "the faith" of the Bible, it classes "preaching brother" along with Hymeneus and Phyletus, not a very enviable position. If he mean a faith in human authority and formality as opposed to the all-sufficiency of the Bible, "preaching brother" glories in the work.

Amid many duties, cares and trials, the writer of this has tried to set forth the views of "preaching brother." He invites just criticism, and if all is not plain, is willing to try it again. When fully understood, he does not hesitate to subscribe himself as that "preaching brother."

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

The attention of our readers is hereby called to Bro. D. C. Hall's notice in the ADVOCATE. Bro. Hall is a faithful member of the Church of God, and a reliable man.

Bro. Potter writes: "I had a very interesting meeting last Lord's day, on Sink Creek. One addition from the Baptists, the young preacher that the Baptists tried, last fall, for preaching Campbellism, as they termed it. Hope that he will enjoy that freedom that the truth always gives."

A man, or a church, that goes to the world in the name of God, and caters to the prejudices, courts the favor, and compromises with the foibles and crimes of the world, cannot fail to excite the contempt of the world, however much the world may consent to use the man, or church, for its own ends.

We trust our correspondents and contributors will be patient with us. We do the best we can toward getting out their contributions. The weather has been bad; they were confined at home, and rightly wrote more than usual. We do not wish any to write less; we are glad to receive all communications, and only ask them to be patient with us. If some of you could write now, when you are not so busy preaching, and keep it until July, August, and September. Contributions are rare then.

Married, at the residence of the brides mother, Mrs. M. Womack, near Thyatira, Tate county, Miss., on the 28th of February, by Dr. B. W. Lauderdale, Mr. Lee Jackson to Miss Willie E. Womack. The bride and groom have the good wishes of many friends.

A correspondent of the Daily World, from Memphis, states that Elder Sweeny, of the Christian church, in his sermon on Sunday, March 9th, nominated President Hadden, of the taxing district, as a candidate for Congress; which is all right, if it is proper for Christians to vote.

We have seen a letter from a sister in Huntsville, Ala., which says: "We have no preacher, but meet every first day to attend to the Lord's supper. There are thirty-two names enrolled; seventeen of the number meet regularly; have forty-nine dollars in the treasury. We sent Madison church ten dollars to-day, to help them pay the debt on their house; besides helping some of our needy members. We wish to commence building this year."

What is everybody's business, is nobody's. That is a trite, but true saying. Will our brethren learn that, as a rule, an appeal addressed to everybody is an appeal addressed to nobody? We have noticed when you wish a thing done, let certain individuals or churches think this is our work, our business, and they will feel under obligations to attend to it. When everybody is asked to help, everybody thinks it is everybody else's business, and everybody will leave it for nobody to do.

In the influx of emigrants to Chattanooga, there seems to have come a goodly number of Spiritualists. They have been making quite an impression there of late. There has been some talk of building a Spiritualists Tabernacle. Maj. G. C. Conner, formerly of this city, offered to pay any Medium one hundred dollars, that would cause writing to be done between a folded slate before an intelligent committee. Mr. James L. Whitesides accepted the proposal. He selected one, Maj. Conner one. The two selected a third. Maj. Connor gave to the committee his check for one hundred dollars, to be paid when, in their judgment, the writing was performed. Three efforts have been made, but not a scratch as yet found on the slates. Mr. Whiteside claimed ill-health to be the cause of the failure. It seems the spirits refuse to report at the call of sickly men. Only the healthy, robust, can call them up. This is suggestive, and it seems strange that people can believe in a thing of this kind when darkness is necessary to the manifestations.

We are pained to learn of the death of Judge J. E. Rice, of Clarksville. March 2nd. He has been quite feeble for a year or two, troubled with dropsy and affection of the heart. Bro. Rice was a lawyer—served a term as Judge of the Circuit Court of his district, was one of the few men who in these relations never lost his zeal, nor his integrity as a Christian. His religion was the first consideration of his life. He talked it in private and preached it from the stand on Lord's days wherever he was, as a lawyer or Judge, holding court. He was a true friend, a candid, honest man. He was respected, trusted, loved by those who knew him. The Mayor and County Judge requested business houses in Clarksville to be closed on the day of his burial, as indicating a public calamity. He was a warm and active friend of the ADVOCATE, and of its editors. We feel we have lost a true friend from this earthly home and gained one in the mansions of the unseen. We sympathize truly with the bereaved widow, his son and daughter. We trust some one will furnish a suitable Memoir for the ADVOCATE.

THINK OF THIS.

The Christian Advocate announces this week that it has 25,960 names upon its list. This makes an increase of 10,000 within about twelve months. While it is true that it has a larger membership to draw from, and stands as the official organ of the Methodist Church South, and while Dr. Fitzgerald is making it quite an interesting paper; there are quite a number of other Methodist papers published within the bounds of its circulation, and this increase indicates a remarkable zeal in the way of circulating their religious literature, upon the part of our Methodist friends. Will not our friends be moved to emulation in the matter, and make a solid and earnest move to extend our circulation? We frequently see accounts in the Missionary Baptist, too, that the paper goes to every family connected with this or that church. How many churches are there in Tennessee, of those claiming to be only Christians, that can say, every family connected with the church has the visits of a good weekly paper? Is there one? Every church ought to be able to say this. It will strengthen and build up the church.

The time was, when our people boasted of being the reading people of the country. This claim was recognized as just by others. But I fear feeling their superiority in some respects as occupying a true ground, they have settled down into a self-satisfied indifference, while others spurred to emulation are surpassing them as a reading, studying people. Whenever a people conclude they know all the truth, or are wise enough, then, as Paul says, they become fools. When they think they have done all, are grown, they begin to rapidly decline. This is the condition of many churches. They need to be excited to a new zeal, a noble emulation in laboring to save souls. As a means to this, to learn and teach the truth.

These papers we have mentioned have accomplished the ends without reduction of price, or making any sacrifice, save an earnest effort on the part of the editors seconded by their friends, to circulate the paper. We have proposed to reduce our price to those who will pay for it for others, or will place it in the hands of every family connected with the congregation. Our proposition has met with a generous response from a number. We have received within the past week some fifty subscribers on this proposition; twenty-three from one city in Missouri, and about seventy-five in all, but the response ought to be general. Will not the brethren and sisters all over the land, stir themselves up to activity in this work? In doing the work, do not be afraid to put the paper into the hands of others. We can point to whole families that have been brought into the church by the ADVOCATE. We can point to active churches that have been started by the ADVOCATE going into the neighborhood. Last week a Baptist came into the office to get the paper. He had read a few numbers and was interested in them. We have several Methodists now subscribing for the ADVOCATE, who began reading it in connection with their own paper, but dropped their paper and continue the ADVOCATE. These things frequently coming to our knowledge, fully authorize us to insist on our friends circulating the ADVOCATE. A copy of the ADVOCATE is frequently the cheapest, and surest way of introducing to them the truth. Remember we will send the ADVOCATE from time of receiving subscription to end of year, for any one giving it away, or to any church placing it in the hands of every family connected with the church, for one dollar.

RE-BAPTISM SO-CALLED—CONTINUED.

Bro. Lipscomb, in granting me space in his paper to continue this subject, says: "We have no faith in his ability to present anything new on the subject." Permit me to say, I lay no claim to any such ability. My reliance is in the power of eternal truth; besides, I shall not try to present anything new on this subject. It is new things that I am opposing, and in their stead, insisting upon ways as old as Pentecost, was as true as the words of the Son of God and his apostles; for it is their sayings that I want us to "keep." If we keep these sayings of theirs, we will stand the storms of the ages, because we will be founded upon a rock." But we now stand upon some "sandy" places, and I fear that the raging wind and surging floods that are beating against us will ultimately overthrow us, if we do not repair the weak places in our foundation. While we revere the names of the illustrious Campbell, Fanning, and others, it does not suffice as an answer to the question at issue to show that they were opposed to re-baptism. It is said that Bro. Campbell was an advocate of the missionary society; if true, shall we advocate that fruitful source of schism and strife, because, forsooth, he did not see its evil tendencies?

The man who attempts to defend the other side of this baptismal question, is forced to "speak when the Bible is silent, and to be silent when it speaks." Even Bro. L., who is regarded as almost a plumb-line on church government, and nearly all the leading questions pertaining the church, has passed on beyond this subject, without giving it a critical examination, it seems; hence, has espoused the wrong side of this question, the maintenance of which demands and extorts from him speech when the Bible is silent, and vice versa. Oh! the foibles of human nature! How often they blind our better judgment, and lead us astray! Just to think of Bro. L. saying that baptism to honor God, is acceptable, whether or not, it is understood to be for the remission of sins. Where, upon the broad pages of inspiration, does he find this? or where will he find anything said, that will justify him in saying it? No where, it is an apparition.

Peter said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of Holy Spirit. For the promise is unto you and to your children and all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized; and the same day, there were added unto them, about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, etc."

Mark! It was they that gladly received his words, that were baptized.

What a marked difference! Now, those who positively reject Peter's word and accept the "commandments of him," and are baptized because God has forgiven their sins at the mourners bench, (2) and continue steadfastly in the commandments of men, are "hail fellows, well met" with us, if they will only wear the Savior's name, whom they have dishonored. Shame on such a theory! What a pity that Bro. L., and many other good brethren, have espoused a position that makes them the apologists for such ungodly practices. When one heeds what Peter said, and "obeys from the heart," then he will honor God; but when his heart becomes the soil in which corruptible seed have sprung up and flourished, and he prefers this corruptible seed to the "good seed of the kingdom, he dishonors God. Peter said, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." Who can speak thus, and justify those who have preferred corruptible to incorruptible seed?

We need not be furnishing excuses for those who cannot understand the truth. God will, doubtless, make due allowance for those in that condition. We are required to "hold fast to the form of sound words, to speech that cannot be condemned, to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, to continue in the perfect law that thoroughly furnishes us unto all good works." Where are we "furnished" with authority for fellowship with those who have not obeyed God's law "from the heart?" Our opponents say they find it in the commission by Mark: "He that believes and is baptized shall be saved." But, mark you, they must hear before they can believe, and they must hear the truth; because our Savior says, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." So he sent Peter and the other apostles to preach the truth, requiring them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. He intended they should be fully equipped for preaching the truth. Those that hear this truth preached, believe it, and are baptized by their binding direction, are promised salvation in this commission. No man has been promised salvation here or elsewhere, by our Savior, upon acceptance of error, tho' it leads him to be buried in the depths of the ocean.

Our Savior said, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life." Now, let those who depend upon the commission by Mark to bear them out in their theory, that there are Christians in the sects, subject this last quotation to the same rule of interpretation, and see how palpably they will make it clash with Paul's teaching on this subject. 1 Cor. 11. Unsound speech, speech that must be condemned, is an indispensable adjunct to the weak cause of those who advocate Bro. L.'s theory on the baptismal question. As Bro. L. has been so kind as to lend me space to present my views on this question, and as he suggested shorter articles, I will desist for the present, hoping to be allowed to continue the subject.

A. MCGARY.

Bro. Lipscomb: I see in the ADVOCATE of December 26, 1883, page 822, that you say, "the Baptists excluded A. Campbell," while Bro. Harding says in the last number, Feb. 6, "I desire to call attention to the fact that Alexander Campbell and the other leaders in this reformatory movement were never excluded from the Baptists." Now I desire to know which of you are right. McClintock and Strong in their Biblical Theological and Ecclesiastical Cyclopaedia say, "Alexander Campbell withdrew from the Redstone association and joined the Mahoning, which went with him in the reformation." The same facts are substantially set forth in the Memoirs of Campbell, I think, but not having the book at command at the time of this writing am not able to give the page. Please explain and oblige.—[W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., February 8, 1883]

The church of which he was a member, never excluded him, neither did the association to which the church belonged exclude it from the fellowship of the association. But the other associations did declare non-fellowship with the association that tolerated him, and with all churches and associations that fellowshiped his teaching. We were both right.

SOWING AND REAPING.

2 Cor. ix: 6: "He that soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully." We understand this when we sow grain, but are apt to forget it when we use tracts. You must not expect a dollar's worth of tracts to turn the neighborhood upside down. Some buy ten, and are so disappointed, that they never buy any more. They do not think anything of donating at the rate of ten or more dollars a sermon towards a preacher's support, but it would alarm them to think of putting this amount into tracts. This is not giving the tracts free course. Send a liberal amount of money to me, and put the tracts into every family. Put them all at work at once. This is the way to make tract sowing tell. You can make a much better fire with an armful of wood than you can with a single stick. Be liberal: Sow faithfully and you will thus reap. The Christian Sower Tract Fund is in need of money. Send a liberal gift. If you are unable to buy tracts do not hesitate to apply for all you need. Now is the time!

Wonderful are the resources of the Bible; the wisest and those occupying the highest stations find its instruction invaluable, whilst the most humble and wretched may turn to it for help and comfort.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS, TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

[As we have nothing of Bro. Poe's on hand for his department, we put this criticism of him in place of his own matter.—D. L.]

Brethren L. & S.: In the ADVOCATE of February 20, 1884, are found some queries to Bro. Poe, by Bro. Sweeney, and his answers to the same, which are as follows:

"Is any among you sick? let him call for elders; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." James v: 14-15. The other is 1st John v: 16-17: "If any brother see his brother sin a sin not unto death, he shall ask and it shall be forgiven him; but if a sin unto death, he was not to pray for it."

Bro. Poe says the probability is, that James and John referred to the same sin; and I think he is mistaken in this. Now, in the case of James, he says, is any sick? let him do what? call for the elders; and they were to pray over him, and anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick. And this is not all, the Lord shall raise him up; and still further, if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. Sins in the plural, and there is no ifs or ands about it. The language is as positive as that of Christ; that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.

Now, in the case of James, not one word is said about an unpardonable sin; but the case covers any sin that comes within the reach of God's mercy, and does not just reach some sin brought on by drunkenness, as you seem to think. But in the case of John it is very different, it was (sin) and had reference to some particular sin; and one that any brother could see any other brother commit. And did not require supernatural aid as you supposed. Bro. Poe says, doubtless those who had the gift of healing, had the power to see or know whether it was sin unto death; and if so, they should not pray for it. And so he limits it to a few spiritual discerners. While the Book says, If any man, and thus includes any member of the church; and James says call for the elders, Bro. Poe would have to show that all the elders and members had that power, to make his exegesis look any ways plausible. It will be well for us to remember John lived to see many corruptions among God's children, and departures from the truth, and anti-christs, as we gather from his first epistle. And this sin that he spoke of had reference to the sin of final apostacy. Paul taught the impossibility of renewing such to repentance. As God has nothing above, beyond or better, as a sin-offering for fallen humanity, than his dear Son, it follows that when any person has obeyed the gospel, and been made a partaker of all the benefits of the blessed covenant dedicated by the blood of Christ, and then becomes so corrupt as to deny Christ, as doubtless many did in those days, that man or woman has crossed the line of God's mercy. And as no other one of the apostles had taught the folly of praying for such person, John did in this place. And thus our heavenly Father has carefully guarded us in this matter of praying for a thing that cannot be done. And what a sad thought that a person that has once been enlightened and has tasted of the good word of God, and been made a partaker of the Holy Spirit, should be thus doomed on account of his wickedness, and be so nigh a demon, that God's children cannot pray for them. Let me say in conclusion, Bro. Poe, in John's case, any brother could see the sin, not as you say its effect, it was some open violation of God's law, for John defines that to be sin. And in James' case, it is if he has committed sins, and not as you would have us believe, that the sickness was the effect of some sin or sins. But, if, in addition to the sickness he had sinned, they were to be forgiven him.

The Garments of God.

When God marched before the hosts of Israel to guide them to the Promised Land, he veiled his glory in a column of ascending smoke or fire, such as was wont to be the arching signal of Eastern armies; when he spoke to Elijah at Horeb, it was not with the whirlwind or the fire, but in the still small voice which uttered human words; and when he came to earth for the salvation of men, he came not in invisible majesty of pure spirit, but in the humble guise of a workman of Nazareth.

In the hands of God the commonplace and the natural are but the leath of the special and the supernatural. The machine in nature, with its grinding wheels and ceaseless revolutions, may pulse and throb with never so great regularity, yet with all its apparent uniformity it is only the vehicle on which are borne the works of God, and these are ever new, instinct with life, radiant with miracle. The natural order of the world is not unlike that of a vast railway system. To-day the same rains start at the same hour as they did yesterday, and will do again tomorrow. There is a little variation. From that city the cars speed out, and they arrive in this, with almost automatic regularity. Yet yesterday they carried a cabinet minister to a point which affected the policy of nations half a world away; and to-day they bear many a message of joy or of sorrow, many a word that will blossom into action, many a plan which will change the lives of those whom it involves. On the surface all is uniform, invariable, and fixed as fast as iron-bound law can make it. Beneath the surface are perfect freedom, ever-changing conditions, the play of thought and action and free life.

In the same way what men are pleased to call the fixed laws of nature are the vehicles which carry things which are not mechanical and not fixed. If we could but know all that is accomplished by the ordinary things of nature,—by the flying cloud and the sudden rain, by the long hot days of dead calm, or by the mist and snow of winter,—we should see that each of these things is to some person or to some cause a very miracle, and that what seems to the careless eye the measured rhythm of the great world-machine is but the punctual messenger that brings a Father's help or a Father's blessing. So true is it that the snow and the hoar-frost and the ice, and the wind of summer, and his word which runneth very swiftly upon the earth. So true is it that he covers himself with the light as with a garment, and that the shining heaven and the green earth, with all their wealth of beauty and splendor, are the garments of God,—the visible things which clothe and veil his invisible being and almighty working.

Nor is this less evident in the narrow circle which surrounds every individual child of God. It is in the ordinary happenings of daily life that the extraordinary blessings of God are most likely to come. He who clothed himself in the pillar of smoke for Israel's sake, clothes himself also in daily providences for ours; and these providences seldom take any strange or startling shape. Too often they are not recognized simply because they come in the form of commonplace events; and the heart, clamorous for a sign, overlooks the manifold mercies which throng in the things of every day. The ordinary is accepted simply as the ordinary, and the special message which is brought with it is allowed to pass without acknowledgement. Day passes after day with its round of duties and privileges and cares, and we call it commonplace, and know not that we might have grasped the very skirts of God.—S. S. Times.

The New York Sun discusses the question, "How shall infidelity be treated?" We clip this paragraph from reply of Biblical Recorder:

The answer to the question, "How shall Infidelity be Treated," can never be made by these parties of concession and compromise. The Gospel of Christ as it is recorded in the New Testament Scriptures, furnishes the only answer. A pure church that does exactly what Christ commands, and that keeps itself unspotted from the world is the only remedy. We would say to the churches and preachers of New York lay aside, all your worldliness and and vanity, your ambition and formality, and believe and obey the plain commands of Him who spake as never man spake, and your troubles with modern infidelity in your pulpits and pews will end.

The Central Baptist has these noble words on the pretensions of reason:

Our age is becoming more and more characterized by an overweening intellectual pride. One form of its manifestation is an utter disregard of the limitations of human knowledge. Savants, scientists, and philosophers seem to have beguiled themselves into the belief that they can know all things; and the contagion is rapidly spreading among the masses. Man, therefore stands in need of no other revelation than that which the book of nature lays open before him. Endowed with an intellect capable of studying every page of its stupendous volume, he is in a position fully to understand all that can be known of God. Indeed, the aggregate of nature, which is the object of thought, and of man the thinking subject, is the sum all divinity. There is no other God than this.

The National Baptist, in giving the definition of the word radical says:

"A man who is in earnest;" that is just it; a man who believes just what he says, and means it all; this is a radical. The world is full of men who say, "I am a warm friend of temperance; drunkenness is a dreadful thing; nothing makes me feel so badly as to see a drunkard;" and then they go to their farms or their merchandise; or perhaps they continue to run a dram shop or a distillery. These men are not radicals; there is nothing they dread and dread and hate so much as radicalism; they are conservatives. But now and then comes along a man who just means what he says. He sees the evil, he knows that it is an evil; and he rolls his sleeves and goes to work to correct it. He does not care how many people's toes he treads on; he is careless how many ribs he breaks; he means to do the thing; he is in earnest.

"INNOVATIONS."

There has been of late, much written about "innovations in the church," and I have given some attention to what has been published "pro and con." I have a few things I wish to say. First of all it is to be regretted, that an ungente, and somewhat bitter spirit has frequently been manifested in the discussion of this subject through our periodicals. Let us remember we are brethren, although we may differ somewhat in reference to "expediency" and methods of work. And in the discussion of these differences, let us not, even in thought, impute unworthy motives to those whom we may feel it our duty to oppose.

In the next place, I wish to say, that from my standpoint, "innovations" are inevitable, and grow out of the changed and changing conditions of human society. Of course I do not intend to affirm that it would be absolutely impossible to get along without them, but that in this period of the world the cause of Christ and humanity would be much hindered if we should leave them off altogether. Who thinks it desirable, or that the will of the Lord requires us to leave off the building of meeting houses, or the use of hymn-books, or of the printing press, or other modern inventions by and through which the travels and labors of the workers in the Father's vineyard are facilitated? Yet all these were unknown in the apostolic period, and are "innovations" that no one calls in question. Evidently "innovations" may be of three classes; such as are positively beneficial, such as are simply harmless, and such as are positively hurtful, and therefore antagonize the Lord's will. If this be not so, then all innovations, of every character, are sinful. Who is prepared to so affirm? Now to oppose a thing simply because it is an "innovation," is certainly illogical, and inconsistent upon the part of those daily consenting to, and using such innovations as they consider harmless, if not positively beneficial. If then an innovation is to be opposed, let it be shown that it antagonizes the will of the Lord, or hinders the progress of his cause. Again an expedient, under one set of circumstances, might be helpful, and under another an obstruction.

These observations must be correct unless we are to regard Christianity as a sort of "cast-iron" affair, incapable of any expansion to meet the necessities of an advancing civilization—a civilization largely the outgrowth of its own Spirit. Of the religion of Christ, it can be truly said, that, like its author, it is unchangeable in its principles. Its facts, commands, promises, and spirit are immutable. Further it may with equal certainty be affirmed, that where anything is commanded to be done, and the method or manner of doing it is made an essential element of obedience to the command, then it must be done just that way and no other. But can it be shown that every minute detail of every duty is authoritatively provided for by a "thus saith the Lord?" I am satisfied no close thinker, acquainted with the word of God, will so affirm. There must then be room for the exercise of sound common sense, enlightened by the truth, in carrying out the duties imposed upon us by the Lord. There must be a basis for a sound expediency in the application of the great principles of Christianity to the activities of Christian love and labor. To my mind, the only difficulty consists in determining its limits and boundaries with absolute certainty.

Hitherto much of the opposition to "innovations" and "expediency" has seemed to me indiscriminating—a sort of phrenetic antagonism, and the simple word "innovation" has done duty as argument, and has become with many, a sort of shibboleth, and is thought to be a sufficient answer to all who in the exercise of their "sanctified common sense" are striving after better methods of doing the Lord's work, than such as we have been using. Methods of work hitherto prevailing among us, including much of our church polity, have been inherited mainly from the Baptists, and the time has come to wake up lest our inherited customs crystalize into an authoritative creed. Loose declamation against "innovations" will not convince the sincere and earnest brethren who are seeking for more efficient methods, that they are wrong. We must have exact and discriminating argument, backed by the truth. Denunciation and the imputation of corrupt motives are entirely out of place, and very unbecoming to those professing to follow him who said, "Blessed are the meek," and the "pure in heart," and the "peacemakers." I have seen, with much regret and pain, more bitterness manifested by some of our brethren in their discussions with each other, than is exhibited in their controversies with those without. It is a source of continual sorrow, and complaint with the readers of our papers, and is bringing reproach upon the cause dear to us all. It is one of the hindering causes to our plea for union of all the lovers of Christ. And while I esteem the ADVOCATE for its work sake, I cannot hold its writers altogether guiltless here. If we cannot discuss our differences on these matters of expediency with Christian love and forbearance, we had better not discuss them at all, but let experience and sober reflection slowly rectify the mistakes of those who in fervent zeal are striving after the best means of advancing the cause of our common Lord.

But I have pushed these reflections further than I intended. Returning to my theme, I ask are those who so earnestly oppose "all innovation" consistent? Is not their paper, through which they pour out anathemas upon the "Missionary Societies, etc., the outcome of an "outside organization," "unknown to the Bible?" Is it not the work of a convention of individual brethren associated together, upon terms of their own providing, as editors, or as a publishing company or society, the object of which is to spread the gospel? Wherein do associations of this character differ in principle from other conventions of brethren having the same object or end in view? One is a co-operation to print the good tidings, and circulate it through the mails to those who will pay for it; the other to have it preached by the living voice, without money and without price to those who hear. What is it that renders the one association beneficial, and the other hurtful? Shall it be said the one impinges the work of the "church," and the other does not. That one is attempting to do by other agencies what God has ordained to be done by the church as such, and the other is not? Wherein is this true of one and not of another? Is the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, for instance, the organ of the Church street congregation of Nashville, or of any other congregation as such? Does that congregation, or any other speak through its columns, or is it an outside co-operation of editors and writers and printers whose voice we hear? Is it the mouth of the church in any sense? Is it the voice of the church as such, or are any or all of our papers just so many voices of the local organized congregations any more, or in any other sense than a "missionary society" is? To my mind it is a matter of small importance, provided it is the voice of truth and love which reaches our minds and purifies our hearts. Is the "missionary society" a hurtful innovation; while the newspaper and publication co-operation is a beneficial expedient, and that too while they are supported and kept at work largely by money of unbelievers? It would be well for all of us to be careful not to condemn in others that which we allow in ourselves. "Wherefore thou art without excuse, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest dost practice the same thing."

Do not understand me as presenting myself as a champion for missionary societies, or co-operation meetings. I do not think they need any defence against those who stand or fall with them. I am only trying to point out the weakness and utter inconsistency of that opposition which comes from a source vitiated by the fact that it also is bottomed by the same doctrine of expediency. It has too much the appearance of one innovation railing at another; or if I may use the homely phrase, it is the "pot calling the kettle black."

Now while I earnestly strive to adhere closely to all the commandments of the Lord, as embodying and expressing his will, I am no stickler for methods, unless the method is also commanded, or otherwise clearly required. If a duty is enjoined, and no precise and definite manner for doing it prescribed, I shall endeavor to perform it in the manner which seems best to me, and will not presume to say dogmatically to others, this is the only legitimate way. Nor will I, in such case, object to any other way, unless I think I can show a better and more efficient one. We have had quite an amount of talk and writing about "Scriptural plans" of spreading the gospel, and of "church co-operation, and much sharp opposition to the plans upon which the brethren and churches were trying to work; and much reproachful criticism heaped upon these workers for deserting the divine for a human plan; yet in most cases it seemed to me nothing better than opposition pure and simple. For when called upon for a positive development of the "Scriptural plan," the objectors were either silent or presented some scheme out of harmony with primitive examples, or else their plan, was found to be liable to the same objections, urged by them against others.

Certainly there must be some difficulty, or else these astute brethren could do better than flounder along amongst questionable inferences. They would come down with an emphatic "thus saith the Lord" for their plans, and so end the trouble and controversy at once, but for the difficulty of producing it. Here lies the trouble. I have read and studied the Scriptures with some care in special reference to this matter, as well as what has been written by our modern scribes, and I frankly confess I have been unable to find any single, definite, authoritative plan, set forth by the Holy Spirit for imitation in all subsequent ages. Absence of plan, or if the examples of primitive preaching is to be taken as determining the plan, then I should say a multiplicity of methods seemed far more apparent than any single plan, which we might properly call "the gospel plan." Neither has my reading of modern writers helped me to any clearer perception of the one thing they call the "Scriptural plan" of church co-operation for spreading the gospel. It does not meet the trouble, far less remove it, to say the church must sound out the truth. This but states the duty, the how is the troublesome question. The plan of doing it is the how of doing it. A plan involves the idea of arrangement, of adjustment and adaptation, and of clear and full statement. If it had been the purpose of our infinite Father to provide such a plan, adapted to all ages and conditions of society, to remain unchangeable through all time, doubtless he could have done so. In that event it seems, to say the least of it, reasonable that he would not have left it to be discovered through a process of inferential reasoning, but would have given a clear statement of it in the divine record, especially if he had considered the method of such importance as many now deem it. We find no such statement, nor have I been able to find any indications that the question of methods of spreading the gospel was in the mind of the Spirit at all. So the conclusion I have reached, is that here the Lord has left us free to adopt any method of spreading the gospel, provided indeed that it is the gospel preached to those who hear, and that we do nothing contrary to his revealed will. We may therefore expect continued innovations and improvements on old methods, as fast as experience and observation may show their necessity. The methods provided by God are perfect, and cannot therefore be improved, and where he has deemed the method or plan important he has clearly prescribed it, and when thus clearly indicated to be his plan, we have no choice but to follow it. But where a duty is imposed by divine authority, and the question of method is not clearly revealed, we may legitimately exercise our own best judgment as to the manner of doing it. I have not written this with any desire for controversy, yet if published, it becomes public property, and I shall not object to just and friendly criticism. Let us love as brethren, and write remembering that we know nothing perfectly, and therefore with humility and gentleness. J. H. ROULHAC.

We have had this article on hand for several weeks. We have delayed its publication on account of pressure of space, but especially of time. We wanted to give it more attention than we could hitherto.

There are positions of an ethical nature, assumed in this article, and frequently cropping out in the writings of Christians, that we think faulty. We take this occasion to examine them, and devote this article to them, promising to examine the arguments in the future. Bro. Roulhac is a clear-headed, logical-minded man, and one that we have esteemed from his youth as loving the truth earnestly. We feel toward him much as we feel toward Bro. Allen. Bro. Allen's positions on other questions, his logical mind, his earnest faith in and reverence for the appointments of God, would, it seems to me, have necessarily placed him on the other side of the question of human organizations to carry forward the work of converting the world. We give him up reluctantly. We are sure that his position and associations on this question will gradually lead many who are disposed to be conservative, to adopt the positions of the extremes, which he condemns as heartily as I do. They will never call one back from the "progressive" position to a conservative regard for the word of God.

Our brother's admonitions in reference to the spirit in which we write, are, excellent. The only thing is, he seems to see violations of the proper spirit on one side only of the question, when I am sure motives of brethren who oppose societies are impugned, they are denounced as actuated by piggardliness, covetousness, ten times, where such things are done once by those opposing them. Here is a specimen from the last number of the Apostolic Times:

"The great mass of our noble brotherhood mourn over the defection of perhaps good brethren toward missionary work, it is a pity they cannot see themselves as others see them, 'eccentric self-righteous, self-conceited, impracticable and porcupinish.'"

Then again, out of the abundance of the heart the pen writes, as well as the mouth speaks. Our writers have no more bitterness and jealousies than the preachers in their private relations. There is just as much jealousy, just as much bitterness, just as much partisanship, among preachers in the individual congregations, as crippling to the cause of Christ, creating division in the bodies in which alone the Scriptures admonish the preservation of unity, just as much hindrance to any scriptural plea for unity, as is produced by any division among our writers. Unity in the church is what the Spirit pleads for. Then the only fault to the exhortation is, it is not wide enough, does not begin back far enough, to benefit as it should. A man cannot indulge in bitterness and strife with his brother in private, and then be as gentle as an angel when he writes. The exhortation to have gone back to the root of the matter, ought to exhort brethren in private to cultivate gentleness, meekness, love, forbearance. If this is done in private, the same spirit will prevail in writing for the public. The writings show what the men are in private. But those who write are no worse than those who do not write.

Then again, there is just as much necessity of meekly receiving an argument made against us, as there is in meekly making an argument. It requires full as much grace to receive a hard argument in a Christian spirit, as it does to make one in a Christian spirit. The wrong is fully as frequent in the one taking, as in the one giving offense.

Things frequently look hard to us when against us, that seem mild and gentle when done by ourselves, or in our behalf. Our brother gives an example of this. We do not doubt he wrote every sentence in perfect kindness. In the very talk about Christian courtesy, he calls the opposition his brethren make to his societies, "loose declamation," and it cannot convince "the sincere and earnest brethren who are seeking for more efficient methods." Does this mean that brethren on one side only make "loose declamation," and are not "sincere and earnest"? It easily bears this construction. Then again, he speaks of their "floundering along among questionable inferences." Then his charge that they depend upon "denunciation and the imputation of corrupt motives to maintain their position," can be easily construed into a lack of courtesy, into misrepresentation, into denunciation and the imputation of corrupt motives. I do not believe Bro. Roulhac intended anything of the kind; but when men of certain temperaments write earnestly with the best motives, they use terms that appear harsh and rough to those viewing from a different standpoint. I call attention to it, to insist that the things we read or say, are greatly tinged by the spirit of him who receives them. We ought not to be looking for offences.

Again, our brother thinks that unless we can discuss things that we think wrong in a gentle spirit, we had better leave them to be rectified by experience. But how can human experience rectify wrongs in the workings of God's truth, brought about by following human experiences, or human wisdom? The idea underlying this statement, that human experience in some measure becomes a rectifier, a test of the workings of divine ordinances, we think the foundation error of this whole controversy. That human experience in the workings of any divine appointment ever proved anything right or wrong, or that it can do it, we deny.

Mr. Beecher proved infant baptism divine, just as he proved the yoke divine, by experience of its fitness for the proposed end.

While gentleness, and meekness, and kindness are desirable, we have usually found that those who greatly suppress human nature in one direction, let it break out with great virulence in another. We have in our possession a letter from a brother of some celebrity as a preacher, that says he is so outraged at personal controversies, that he wishes the authors of them in a stove of burning coals. He, of course, meant he wished they were in hell, but was too pious to say so. Our experience is, men who do not try to crush out human nature, but try to control and direct it for the truth of God, are the true reliable men. I am not sure that any bitterness among Christians of this age, surpasses in intensity that of Paul and Barnabas, Paul and Peter. Paul said Peter acted hypocritically. "Be not overmuch righteous," is an injunction of divine wisdom. When we get overly pious on one side, we neglect and break out on some other side. We have no doubt but there is much of selfish motive actuates us in our work here; and we do not doubt that an ex-posure of it would promote our moral health. The truth is, all human beings are actuated by more or less of selfishness, in all we do and say. There is more or less of a lack of candor, more or less of dishonesty, even to ourselves, in every heart. To work this out, to eradicate it, to fit us for the companionship of God, is the life work of Christianity. To be so tender as never to speak of it, only fosters and spreads it.

Our brother seems to think we ought never to point out errors in others, until we are free from errors ourselves. We fully recognize that a man ought to be more anxious to free himself from error of thought and practice, than to free any one else of it. He ought to be careful and not condemn himself in condemning others, by practicing what he condemns. But if we wait to be entirely free from all wrong before we attempt to correct wrong, never more will a wrong be corrected in this world, by mortals. None are without error. The trouble is, we regard it an outrage to have our motives questioned. Peter did not regard it as a mortal offence when Paul told him he acted hypocritical in a matter. He recognized the weakness of humanity, was willing to see his wrongs pointed out, and, I think, tried to profit by it. I see brethren frequently act in a way, when tempted, that I know is hypocrisy. Others probably see it in me. We see each other better than we see ourselves. I don't often tell them as Paul told Peter. The reason is, I lack Paul's courage and love for them. They or I would get furious, while Peter took it kindly and calmly. The reason is, we claim to be a great deal better than Peter claimed to be. He was not hypocrite enough to hide and perpetuate his hypocrisy, so did not get mad when told of it. We are such hypocrites that we try to conceal our hypocrisy from ourselves, nurse and perpetuate it by trying to conceal it from the world. It seems to me that the great lesson that Christ taught his disciples was to enable them to know themselves, to be willing to see and acknowledge their weaknesses and infirmities, to eliminate from them all false pride, and make them willing to have their faults and sins told them, to be reprov'd for their wrongs, and to appear before the world just what they were. I we could be this, there would be none of this oversensitiveness, this readiness to take offence, when our faults and failings are pointed out. There should be no false pride to lead us to hide our real weakness and characteristics. I could not write this, if I waited to be free from these wrongs before telling others of them. An oversensitiveness is one of my besetments.

Some think that everything of correction ought to be done privately. Paul reprov'd Peter in the presence of all, rather boasts of it, and then recorded the reproof for the world. Why should we wish to have the reproof for our faults in private? Except that we wish to have them unknown to the world. The Savior said, in a personal wrong, the individual injured must go to the other in private. But that bears no relation to this correction of our errors, both of temper and judgment.

Then our brother thinks that discussions among ourselves ought to be conducted with less bitterness than with those without. Why so? Error is error. Error within is worse than error without. Error ought to be opposed earnestly and determinedly, because it is error. Not because one man holds it, or another does not; but because error is the enemy of truth, and an enemy of every one who holds it, and of every man in the land; and the nearer error comes to

JAMES A. HARDING AND HIS WORK.

Some eighteen months ago I introduced Bro. Harding to the readers of the Advocate. I then stated that I had known him for years, and had never known a young man of more promise as a self-sacrificing, devoted Christian gentleman. How well he deserves the high opinion I had of him, the readers can judge. One thing is certain, he has shown his high regard for the word of God, by adhering closely to the old landmarks; and another is, that he is trying to practice what he preaches—a thing seldom done by preachers. Now, I would have nothing to say about his work, were it not for some good brethren who differ from him on the plan he is operating; who think, after all, Bro. Harding does not trust in the Lord so much, but preaches for rich churches, who are able and willing to sustain him.

To this I would say that Bro. Harding is not ubiquitous; he cannot go everywhere; he is only one man, and has to do only one day's work at a time, at one place. So you see the many calls that are made upon him cannot all be filled.

As I am traveling all the time, I occasionally meet with him, and see the influence of his work, and this expression is universally made by those I meet: "Did you ever see such a man of faith?" "Never," I say, "never." How does he get money to travel on, and support his interesting family? Simply by trusting in the Lord, and teaching Christians their duty. They supply his wants; not always by the brethren he is preaching for at the time; but the brethren who know him and his work, minister to his wants.

He is at present preaching at Scottsboro, Ala., where we have no congregation, and not much prospects of ever having one, unless some such self-sacrificing preacher carries the gospel to them. I have seldom seen a greater interest in a whole community, with good prospects of planting the gospel permanently. On account of his health, he thinks best to spend his winters South, and summers in the North, which he has been doing for several years. Last winter he held several good meetings in the South, among them one at Huntsville, Ala. A few disciples at this place had been trying for many years to establish the cause of truth; but they were poor and weak. They wrote to several prominent preachers to come and help them. One of them replied, if they would deposit one hundred dollars in the bank to his credit, that he would hold them a two-week's meeting. Bro. Harding, hearing of their struggles, determined to go to their help. He, in connection with his faithful co-laborer, Bro. Daugherty, (the singing brother,) held them a good meeting, resulting in over twenty additions, and establishing the primitive gospel on a firm footing in one of the most important cities of the South.

He does not wait to be called and sent out by some missionary society, or convention. They are human, and are liable to forfeit their "promise to pay." But he trusts in the Lord for his support, remembering that he is a son of the King, who is rich in resources—who feeds the sparrows and clothes the lilies.

It is true I have found him sometimes nearly five hundred miles away from home, with only fifty cents in his pocket. Yet he was always cheerful, and confident the Lord would put it into the heart of some good brother or sister to give him more when he needed it, which has been verified for nine years' past. And in that length of time he has brought into the church nearly two thousand members.

This is called by Bro. Butler the "one man plan." Would to God we had more men of faith who would work in this way. Christ, the apostles, the early Christians, Campbell, Smith, Johnson, Scott, and a host of others, worked on this plan.

You hear preachers all over the country complaining of a want of faith among the people. "Like priest, like people," is an old saying, and it is true. "Show your faith by your works." We want more godly preachers, who are willing to work faithfully and earnestly, trusting in the Lord for a support, and not always begging for money, and complaining because they do not get more.

I do not wish to be understood as objecting to preachers being paid. They seldom get enough. But what I wish to impress is, that if all the pleadings for money were stopped, and pleading with sinners were substituted; if all the expenses at, to, and from conventions, were paid to faithful servants of God who are working, we would soon see a very different state of affairs. The Lord knows his children need food and clothing like other people; and if we are faithful servants, doing his will, he will give it to us. He says so, and it is infidelity not to believe it, and act upon it. Old father Abraham, Bro. Campbell, and many others I might name, acted upon this plan, and got rich in goods, and did a vast amount of good in the world. "Oh! yes," you say, "they did something else besides preach; they had other business." So did Paul and Peter; and so would Bro. Harding, if it was necessary for the support of his family.

I know there is a strong tendency among my own brethren to "snub" those who do not make preaching a profession, especially if they have never had unholy hands laid upon them. They are sometimes not treated with decent respect, if they make tents, practice medicine, sell goods, or farm for a living. Was Paul any the less a preacher of the gospel because he made tents? Are brethren McGarvey, Lipscomb, Allen, Errett, not preachers of the gospel, as well as those who do nothing but preach? Certainly. We need more just such men. There is a class of "young American preachers," who, because they have been to college and possibly graduated, set themselves up as pastors or elders, deliver two short lectures on Sunday, go to see the girls and frolic the balance of the week, and then complain of their "heavy work," of the "pastorate." Shame on such creatures! Am glad, however, we have but few such.

We need more truly educated men, more Bible schools, more hard workers; men who are willing to preach the gospel, pay or no pay; men who will go out at their own charge, and preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. When men of this character are found at work, God will and has always raised up brethren who will divide with them and their families.

The brethren of Alabama have been talking about calling a convention. What for? To raise money. If so, they will spend more than they will raise, in getting to it. What for? To consult about what to preach. No necessity for this, as all are agreed. What then? To ape those around us, to gratify our pride and ambition, to have a name and fame among men. No, no, brethren of Alabama; you are doing a grand, good work just now; just keep on. Bro. Larimore and Barnes are good teachers, and are working in the field as they have opportunity. But the grandest work they are doing, they are unconscious of, making gospel preachers of most of their pupils. You need not tell me that nothing is being done in this section of the country. God is blessing the work of his children, and we have many faithful preachers, too—more than many suppose—in Alabama, and then here you have Bro. Harding coming to your help in destitute fields. So I would say to all; help him, with prayers, and words of cheer, and comfort his heart with a small contribution, if you have it to spare; he needs it, and perhaps will be a little hurt with me for saying so. But I know he is worthy, and working faithfully. May God bless him, and all those who are fighting against sin, in the church, or out of it.

I am at present at Talledega, Ala., where we have no brethren that I can find. I expect to spend a few days at home the first of March.

Bros. L. & S.: I wrote a letter, a week or two ago, in reply to Bro. Vanhook. He asked for a meeting at Northport, on the fourth Lord's day in March. I wrote I was willing to meet on the fourth Lord's day in April, but could not go sooner. I have looked anxiously for my letter to appear, but it has not. Please publish it as early as possible. The time draws on and no decision. Nothing new in this section. The brethren in different parts of the State seem anxious for work to be done. Then, brethren, send on your money, and the work will be carried on.

Obituaries.

Died at her home near Murfreesboro, Tenn., March 6th, 1884, Sophia L. Sanders. In the fall of 1874, Sister Sanders, then a young woman, a daughter of Mrs. Sophia W. Sanders, was baptized by Elder James E. Scobey, and became an exemplary and pious member of the Christian Church. Her maiden name was Warren. Sister Sophia was always a delicate girl. On the 20th of November, 1882, she was married to J. E. Sanders. She was a good, true woman, and in her lingeringsickness oft said she was not afraid to die. In the presence of weeping friends and relatives, her funeral was preached by Elder James E. Scobey, and her body consigned to the grave. We believe that, as she lived a true good life, she will receive a crown of rejoicing. She endured sickness, sorrow, pain, and death in this world, but we trust she has felt the last pang, and that she has gone to the reward of the righteous.

Another devoted follower of the meek and lowly Jesus is gone from these earthly shores. That fond mother, devoted and faithful wife, and our dear sister, Sarah A. Jones, wife of our esteemed friend, J. B. Jones, took her flight from sorrow pain, and earthly oppression, on the 11th day of January, 1884. Sister Sarah was the mother of five sweet little "buds of life," four yet living—three boys and a girl. The little babe sweetly sleeps in mother's arms. Sister Jones was born August 18th, 1838, and confessed and obeyed the Lord in August, 1872, at Robertson's Fork, under the preaching of Bro. James Morton. The congregation has lost from her service one of her truest members. But the congregation "in the sweet fields of Eden" has gained the same bright jewel. As to her husband, he is not a member of Christ's body, and hence is "without God and without hope in the world." O what a horrible thought! One who knows the plan of salvation so well, and, too, one who had the examples of such a devoted and faithful companion, as Mr. Jones, surely will, and I do hope and pray that he may, obey the gospel before death.

"Thy passing spirit gently fled,
Sustained by grace divine,
O may such grace on us be shed,
And make our end like thine."

J. R. BRADLEY.

Little Robert Sangston Johnston was born March 29th, 1871, and was taken from his dear mother, affectionate sisters, loving brothers, and many warm relatives and friends, January 14th, 1884. His dear good father, who was a warm, devoted Christian, preceded him a few years. God, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, saw fit to take Robert, while in the tender bud of life, gently across the dark chilly river of death, over which all must pass, in order to reach the glorious land that God has promised the pure in heart, and in which they can have the privilege of basking in the effulgence of eternal life. During the little time dear Robert remained with us, he was humble, quiet and obedient. The Bible teaches us it is right for children to obey their parents; and this he did as far as my knowledge reaches, willingly and readily. It was truly hard for the dear mother, sisters and brothers to give up such a precious member of the family; but they can be comforted, consoled and encouraged—realizing that God has provided consolation. Let us rejoice in the glorious hope of meeting again those who have gone before. Faith, humility and love are essential elements on which to rest our hope. May we all endeavor to fill our hearts with truth, and become rich in Christ, so we may at last join the one holy family "in the land of sweet rest." We now say, farewell dear little Robert, but we hope to meet you again in the heavenly land where death will not come.

F. C. SOWELL.

Sister Amanda Mosby, wife of Bro. F. C. Mosby, of Murfreesboro, died at her home, after a brief illness, at 7:30 o'clock, on the evening of 17th of December last. Sister Mosby, whose maiden name was Dill, was born in South Carolina, November 10th, 1815; came to Tennessee while yet a small girl; was a member of the Methodist church when quite young, but was baptized in 1833 by Elder T. Fanning. She united with the church in Murfreesboro, and became identified with it very early after it was planted, and continued a faithful member until her death. She was steadfast in her attendance upon the services of the church amid all its discouragements. She was firm and steadfast, seldom being absent when physically able to attend. During our early years as a preacher, we labored with the little band in Murfreesboro then meeting in a little frame house in the flat near the railroad. The attendance was never large, but Sister Mosby was always, when able, one of the faithful few who were present. She was not demonstrative, or impulsive, or obtrusive of her feelings, but steadfast and earnest in her purposes of life, and true to her convictions of right and duty. She was married to her husband in 1839. They raised quite a family of children, but since I have known her she has been feeble in health. She was of a sensitive nature, but good and true in all the relations of life. She has left a large circle of kindred and appreciative friends, and entered upon an eternal life with God. Our brother, whom we sorrow to learn is feeble, and her family, have our sincere sympathy in their bereavement. D. L.

We are accustomed to hear that early struggle is necessary to later success, and almost grow to feel that there is not hope of a boy who is not shoeless, penniless, and homeless. And yet it is a theory founded upon exceptions and exaggerations. Early comfort and proper advantages are blessings from which come the best human achievements. Home and plenty are not misfortunes.—United Presbyterian.

A Safeguard.

The fatal rapidity with which slight Colds and Coughs frequently develop into the gravest maladies of the throat and lungs, is a consideration which should impel every prudent person to keep at hand, as a household remedy, a bottle of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

Nothing else gives such immediate relief and works so sure a cure in all affections of this class. That eminent physician, Prof. F. Sweetzer, of the Maine Medical School, Brunswick, Me., says:—

"Medical science has produced no other anodyne expectorant so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is invaluable for diseases of the throat and lungs."

The same opinion is expressed by the well-known Dr. L. J. Addison, of Chicago, Ill., who says:—

"I have never found, in thirty-five years of continuous study and practice of medicine, any preparation of so great value as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, for treatment of diseases of the throat and lungs. It not only breaks up colds and cures severe coughs, but is more effective than anything else in relieving even the most serious bronchial and pulmonary affections."

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

Is not a new claimant for popular confidence, but a medicine which is to-day saving the lives of the third generation who have come into being since it was first offered to the public.

There is not a household in which this invaluable remedy has once been introduced where its use has ever been abandoned, and there is not a person who has ever given it a proper trial for any throat or lung disease susceptible of cure, who has not been made well by it.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has, in numberless instances, cured obstinate cases of chronic Bronchitis, Laryngitis, and even acute Pneumonia, and has saved many patients in the earlier stages of Pulmonary Consumption. It is a medicine that only requires to be taken in small doses, is pleasant to the taste, and is needed in every house where there are children, as there is nothing so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL for treatment of Croup and Whooping Cough.

These are all plain facts, which can be verified by anybody, and should be remembered by everybody.

BRO. BUTLER'S DEFENCE REVIEWED.

It is exceedingly important that we should keep before us the exact point in controversy in reading discussions. Realizing this to be so, I shall endeavor so to write this article that even those who have not seen the others of the series may clearly understand what are our positions, and what is the truth in the case. How are evangelists sent forth and supported, according to the teaching of the sacred writings? is the question under consideration. Of course all modern methods are out of the question, as the Scriptures teach nothing about them; there were no societies for the spread of the gospel in apostolic times except the churches. About this Bro. Butler and I are perfectly agreed. What then is the scriptural teaching on the subject? How shall the world be evangelized? In answer to this question I have replied:

"The Christian (i. e.) the lover and servant of Christ), who has the ability to publish the good news, should do so with diligence as he has opportunity, praying God to guide him and support him, and fit him more and more for the work. Individual Christians and the churches of the Lord should contribute to the support of such men."

Concerning this position, Bro. J. B. Jones, a prominent advocate of the modern missionary society, said, "No one acquainted with the scriptural facts which are the premises from which the above conclusions are drawn, can deny their accuracy." But Bro. Butler is horrified at the position; he exclaims, "On the question at issue it hardly has the merit of respectable absurdity, to say nothing of reason and Scripture." Clearly doctors differ.

Bro. Butler's position is this: "The church should select and send out the evangelist, giving him a support and directing him in his labors." He says, "No man, after the establishment of the church at Jerusalem, ever got into the evangelistic field by divine sanction and received a support for his work without being sent and directed in his labors by a church." "We intend this," says he, "to apply to apostles as well as evangelists."

Thus speaks W. L. Butler; now hear the apostle Paul: (Gal. i: 15-ii: 2.) "When it was the good pleasure of God, who separated me, even from my mother's womb, and called me through his grace, to reveal his son in me, that I might preach him among the Gentiles; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me: but I went away into Arabia; and again I returned unto Damascus. Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to visit Cephas, and tarried with him fifteen days. * * * Then I came into the region of Syria and Cilicia. And I was still unknown by face unto the churches of Judea which were in Christ: but only they heard say, He that once persecuted us now preacheth the faith of which he once made havoc; and they glorified God in me. Then after the space of fourteen years I went up again to Jerusalem" etc.

Did not Paul get into the evangelistic field by divine sanction? He went, too, without consulting with flesh and blood. He began preaching immediately after his conversion; and "all that heard him were amazed." He labored in the gospel at Damascus "many days;" and then "went away into Arabia;" three years had passed before he returned to Jerusalem. Now bear in mind that this same Paul said, "The things which ye both learned and received and heard and saw in me, these things do: and the God of peace shall be with you."

We call attention next to Acts xv: 36-41. "And after some days Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us return now and visit the brethren in every city wherein we proclaimed the word of the Lord, and see how they fare. And Barnabas was minded to take with them John also, who was called Mark. But Paul thought not good to take with them him who withdrew from them from Pamphylia; and went not with them to the work. And there arose a sharp contention, so that they parted asunder one from another, and Barnabas took Mark with him, and sailed away unto Cyprus; but Paul chose Silas, and went forth, being commended by the brethren to the grace of the Lord. And he went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches." On this trip Paul met Timothy; and finding him to be well reported of by the disciples, he took and circumcised him; and, desiring his aid in the ministry took him with him. Thus we see Paul, Barnabas, Silas, Mark and Timothy going forth on extensive missionary tours without the direction of any church.

Ah, but says Bro. Butler, "A church selected and defined the preacher's field; sent him into this field, and told him what to do when he got there; commanded him what to preach, and stopped him when he violated instructions." "If this is not divine order on how ministers are constituted and sent into the field, there is none," says he. And in another place he tells us, "The preachers were not left to choose and decide their own fields of labor." It is hardly necessary that I should comment on the above statements. They speak for themselves: Paul proposed a tour to Barnabas: Barnabas agreed to it, and suggested that they should take Mark with them: to this Paul objected, because Mark had deserted them on their former trip: they had a hot contention, which resulted thus: Barnabas took Mark and sailed in one direction, while Paul, taking Silas, went another: Paul and Silas on their trip became acquainted with Timothy and took him with them. It is clear they were not operating under the directions of a church, according to Bro. Butler's idea, for if such had been the case, the church would have settled all these matters.

Bro. Butler calls attention to the fact that Paul and Silas went forth, "being recommended by the brethren to the grace of God." Well, what of it? The brethren recommended them to God's favor that is, prayed that God's loving kindness might attend them. I have gone forth from many a congregation, after laboring awhile with them, being commended by the brethren to the grace of God; but I have never yet gone forth being supported in my labors by a congregation: and I never will, unless Bro. Butler or some other body, produces better arguments in favor of his position than he has yet done.

Just here, in order that what follows may be understood, I desire to call attention to the difference between preaching and teaching. The commands of the commission to the preacher stands thus: (1) Go; (2) Preach the gospel; (3) Baptize penitent believers; (4) Teach the disciples to observe all things that Jesus has commanded. Compare Matthew, Mark and Luke on the commission. That this is the correct order, Bro. Butler and the disciples generally, doubtlessly, agree with me. From this order it is evident that preaching is for the world, teaching for the church. To preach is to tell of the life, suffering, death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, and to show how there is in all this, good news for the sinners. Hence it follows that any disciple of Christ is intellectually competent to preach, since he cannot be a disciple without knowing these things; and, if he knows them, he can tell them. Hence when all the great Jerusalem church, which numbered many thousands, were scattered abroad except the apostles, it is not astonishing to hear said of them, "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word." Any disciple can preach, but few are competent to teach the "all things commanded." Now I grant that men were sent by the apostles, and by the church at Jerusalem, (in which were apostles,) to teach young congregations; and, as I think, in one case at least, to impart spiritual gifts unto them. But in no case did a church send an evangelist to preach to sinners in apostolic times. It was understood to be the duty of every Christian to preach as he had opportunity, looking to God for guidance and support, and trusting to him to open up the way. Some thus became traveling evangelists, while others engaged in secular pursuits; but all, if they did their duty, told the good news as they had opportunity, and contributed regularly and systematically for the advancement of the cause. And, at this day, no man needs to trouble himself as to whether he shall devote all of his time to preaching or not; let him, day by day, do the duty of the day; the Master will settle the question for him. He needs to concern himself only about one day at a time.

It will be remembered that Bro. Butler, in his article, occasionally called upon us to "stick a pin down here." Of course we stuck them. Let us go back now and consider the marked places in the light of what has been said.

Pin No. 1. "They therefore that were scattered abroad upon the tribulation that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phœnicia, and Cyprus, and Antioch, speaking the words to none save only to Jews. But there were some of them, men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who, when they came to Antioch, spake unto the Greeks also, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number that believed, turned unto the Lord. And the report concerning them came to the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas as far as Antioch; who, when he was come, and had seen the grace of God, was glad: and he exhorted them all that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord: for he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and faith: and much people was added unto the Lord." (Acts xi: 19-24). Observe how perfectly this report harmonizes with what I have been teaching. These disciples, having been scattered by persecution, go of their own accord as far as Phœnicia, Cyprus and Antioch, preaching the Lord Jesus: the hand of the Lord was with them, (a significant expression;) a great number turned to the Lord, after believing: upon hearing about this ingathering, the church at Jerusalem sent forth Barnabas to go as far as Antioch, (just as far as the evangelists had gone, making converts, but no farther). But Barnabas did preach, it may be said, for much people was added to the Lord. Of course he did; it was his duty to preach, wherever he might be, as he had opportunity: he went further than Antioch, too, as our brother will find, if he will consult his Bible and his atlas, for he went to Tarsus; but the church at Jerusalem did not send him there, any more than it sent him to preach; it sent him just as far as the evangelists had gone before him, making converts. When he went further, he went at the instigation of his own heart, just as they had done. By the way, it is remarkable, to say the least of it, that the Jerusalem church, if it sent him forth on a missionary tour, should have waited till it had heard that the gospel had been preached and sinners converted at these points, and that it should have limited him to the cultivated districts. No, no; a church guided by inspired men would not have been guilty of such folly: he was sent to the young church.

Pin No. 2. (Read Acts viii: 1-25.) Philip went of his own accord to Samaria and preached Christ to the people. Multitudes of men and women believed and were baptized: when the apostles at Jerusalem heard of his success, they sent down Peter and John: "who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they had been baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." * * * "They therefore when they had testified and spoken the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel to many villages of the Samaritans. Now, let it be observed that Peter and John were sent to the city of Samaria, whereas they preached to many villages of the Samaritans, while returning to Jerusalem. As in the former case, the evangelist (without being sent by a church) into the field, and makes converts: the church, having heard about his converts, sends men of experience, who are full of the Holy Ghost, to them. See what they did and you will know what they were sent for. If Bro. Butler reiterates, "They preached the gospel to many villages of the Samaritans," I reply, true; but they were sent to the converts in the city of Samaria, as the Bible expressly says; and it was after they had fulfilled their mission that they preached in the villages.

In conclusion allow me to remark that I do not feel the need of telling the reader that Bro. Butler's article is not even a "respectable absurdity," nor of intimating to him that if he does not agree with me his mind is so "biased by the preoccupation of error, as to make him unable to feel the force of the Scripture." I am perfectly willing to submit the matters to those who read and think.

If every Christian will work for Christ as though his own life, and the lives of those about him, depend upon his labors, and if the church will raise funds regularly, systematically, and liberally, as they should do, and send them to the men whom they know to be true men, diligently engaged at work in the field, we will turn the world upside down, notwithstanding all the sneers and ridicule those clamorers for human societies may give to "the Lord's plan." For my part, I am determined to study, work and pray for this most glorious consummation.

General News.

The leading inventors of the country have issued a call for a mass convention to take action to prevent pernicious legislation by Congress. It will be held in the Music Hall, in Cincinnati, March 27th. Responses from all points of the United States and Territories show that an attendance of 3,000 may be expected. As all inventors are eligible as delegates, and as there are about 500,000 in the United States, there is no doubt of a full attendance.—The Western Wool Growers in convention at Denver unanimously adopted a memorial to Congress opposing a further reduction of the tariff on wool.—Prentiss Tiller, Pacific Express Company's employe, at St. Louis, who decamped with nearly $100,000, a week or two ago, has been arrested in Milwaukee. A young man brought a trunk and directed it to be shipped to a party in Detroit. He left a valise to be placed in side the trunk, so as to save him the trouble of carrying it. The clerk when putting the valise in the trunk, dropped it, and the clasp burst asunder, and the contents were seen to be wrapped in Pacific Express Company's labels, and amounted to nearly $90,000. The young man was arrested at once.

The Southern Immigration Association has been in session in this city during the past week. Gov. Crittenden, of Missouri; Gov. O'Neale of Alabama, and other distinguished gentlemen were present.—On Thursday morning Col. Ed S. Wheat was shot and killed by his father-in-law, William Spence, in this city. The cause of the murder is unknown. Both gentlemen were widely known. Col. Wheat was a member of the firm of Buford, Thomas & Co., wholesale dry-goods merchants, in this city.—W. A. Knight, defaulting Trustee of Davidson County, has left for parts unknown. Mr. Knight, in 1875 was found to be behind in his accounts with the city over $100,000. The Supreme court had just reached his case when Mr. Knight was found missing.—A Sunday law less rigid in its provisions than the present one, is pending before the City Council, by which it is proposed to permit the sale of bread, fruits, oysters, and soda water. An effort is being made to have cigars and tobacco added to the list. The saloons are to be kept closed tighter than ever. The "blind tiger," at Winchester has been raided. The citizens are very anxious to suppress the sale of liquor in violation of the four mile law, but the trouble was to get hold of the guilty parties. A similar animal has been run to earth at Cowan.—The Broadway Underground Railway Company proposes to substitute for the tunnel road under Broadway, New York which the legislature of 1881 gave them the right to build, a wide arcade, which the tunnel road would serve the business interests at the lower end of the island, and residents at the upper extreme the company claims that the arcade railway would duplicate Broadway with a sub-surface street well lighted and ventilated; would change the dark cellars into basement stores, fronting on pleasant sidewalks. Such a plan it is claimed, would increase the value of all Broadway property.—The boiler in a dyeing establishment at Lawrence, Mass., exploded last week, killing one man, and fatally wounding two others. So great was the force of the explosion that three buildings were shattered into splinters. Pieces of the boiler and were thrown four hundred feet.
