3. It should be remembered that missionary societies were an experiment in the days when Mr. Campbell is quoted as opposing them. It was rather difficult in those days to find a man that did not oppose them. In the beginning of this missionary controversy in the church, not a score of men in the whole world favored missionary societies. It was like Fulton's steamboat project. Everybody opposed it. There was a time when educated men generally opposed the idea that the world is round. It was against reason and contrary to Scripture, they said. But that day has passed. Men have learned better. The missionary discussion is rapidly making for itself the same history. If the opponents of missionary societies have in their ranks to-day a scholar of any standing, or a Bible critic of any note, we cannot call him to mind. The scholarship of the religious world has changed sides on this question since the beginning of the controversy. This is significant. How will the Advocate explain it? If Campbell was the only man that had changed, this talk about his mental and will force abating might have some point in it. But how can the abatement of his mental and will force explain the change that has taken place in the scholarship of the whole religious world? We find the same change in others that the Advocate has not explained in Mr. Campbell. Can it be possible that the mental and will force of all men in the religious world abated about the same time Mr. Campbell suffered such a catastrophe? Let us have no such twaddle. Mr. Campbell lived long enough to put to himself right on the missionary question, and the insinuations that he bartered away his convictions for empty flattery will hardly destroy the influence of his example, backed up as it is by a similar change in the scholarship of the religious world. If the opponents of missionary societies have ever made a convert of any standing as a scholar or Bible critic during all this controversy, we have no recollection of the case. This is significant. Can the Advocate explain it? Strange that no man has ever been known to abate in mental and will force on the other side of this question. We are puzzled to know why some man of eminent ability has not been flattered into opposition to missionary societies. This missionary controversy has been a very one-sided affair from the first. It began with a baker's dozen in favor of missionary societies and the balance of the whole world against them. These missionary spirits had to contend against wealth, numbers, prejudice and covetousness. Still further to weaken their cause, missionary efforts in heathen lands absolutely demonstrated, as the world thought, the utter impracticability of the whole thing. Years of labor and thousands of dollars were spent in foreign fields, and not a convert made. But against all these odds, the missionary cause kept on steadily gaining adherents. To-day the scholarship, enterprise and intelligence of the religious world are solidly for missionary societies. The converts, from the first, have been on one side. They have been as a class, men of the clearest heads and purest hearts in the religious world. Why is this? Can the Advocate explain it? Such a triumph is without a parallel. It means something. This world is not full of fools. All the "mental and will force" in the religious world has not "abated." A bit of empty flattery would not suffice to reverse the current of thought in the whole religious world. Among the Disciples, the advancement of the missionary cause has been perhaps more rapid than anywhere else in the past few years. We could name a dozen men to-day who constitute the substance of the opposition. Without them, opposition would soon be a thing of the dead past. Among our papers the Advocate stands well nigh "alone in its glory" in opposing missionary societies. Even the American Christian Review, which has been considered opposed to societies by some, comes out distinctly and pronounces this a misrepresentation. Our educational institutions are for the societies. There are few if any regular preachers at important points in the whole church that are not for the missionary societies. The increase in the number of churches through Tennessee, Arkansas and Texas, that contributed to the foreign society in the general March collection, is evidence that the brotherhood in those States begin to feel that the cause has been retarded long enough by this ghost of ecclesiasticism. Men of intelligence are beginning to understand that the Advocate has made a mistake, or else the scholarship, enterprise, intellect and overwhelming majority of the church are all wrong. This opposition to missionary societies is monopolized by an insignificant minority among us. That minority has been steadily losing ground for years, and is larger now than it will ever be again. Let us move on.

At another time we will look into the writings of Mr. Campbell, and see whether he "ever wrote a word indicating a change." For the present we close by suggesting that Mr. Campbell has not been fairly represented by the Advocate in this matter. What he said against missionary societies has been greatly exaggerated.

BAPTISM A NONESSENTIAL.

A large proportion of the religious people of this country regard baptism as nonessential, by which they mean people can be saved as well without it as with it. The question is, why do men think so? Does God anywhere say that baptism is a nonessential? Nay verily, there is no such an expression in all his word, or anything that resembles it. God never said such a thing since time began. Since therefore, God never said it, it has no authority connected with it whatever. It is simply what men say about it. But what do men know about it? They know nothing beyond what God has said in his word. And as he has said nothing about it, men know nothing about it. It is simply an assertion of men, nothing more, nothing less.

What men say cannot benefit any one regarding salvation, because men are not able to save men. That man therefore that accepts the statement that baptism is nonessential, and acts upon it, trusts his salvation to what men say, and not to what God says, for he never said that. But others say baptism is an outward sign of an inward grace. But who says that, God, or man? This again is what men say. God never did say that, nor anything like it. Every man therefore that believes it, places his faith in man, and not in God, and is therefore deluded. But many others say God for Christ's sake pardoned them before baptism, and they know it by their feelings. Here are two more things that are purely human. In the first place God never said the sinner shall be pardoned before baptism. No such an expression anywhere in his word. This therefore is simply what men say, and in consequence a delusion, a reception of what men say instead of what God says. All the faith therefore that there is in this proposition is simply and alone in men, for only men have ever said it. Then in the next place, the evidence upon which they rely that their sins were pardoned before baptism is wholly human. Good feelings are their evidence, and these feelings are all their own. And as these feelings are their own, simply human, they have only human testimony, and that of a very unreliable character; simply their own impulses. But if God had described just such feelings as they claim to have, in his word, and had then said these feelings shall be to those who have them, the evidence of pardon, then all would have been right. But he has failed to do this. He has described no such feelings as those people claim as the evidence of their pardon, and as a matter of course has said nothing about such feelings being the evidence of pardon. Hence those who rely upon that sort of feeling as their assurance of pardon, are left alone to human impulse, than which nothing is blinder, or more unreliable. But Jesus did say of the gospel, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In this there is something reliable. When Jesus said this, he had received all power (authority) in heaven and in earth, and is therefore able to bring it to pass. He is not only able, but is full of mercy and goodness, and will do what he has promised in every instance in which men do what he has required them to do. Again the Holy Spirit said to believers, "repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." In this again there is something tangible, and reliable, because this is what God says, and not what men say. Again God through Ananias to a believing penitent said, "And now why tarriest thou, arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." This makes three plain statements from God looking to, promising pardon, remission of sins. In these statements, the goodness, mercy and truthfulness of God are all involved. And who would not rather trust God, who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for sinners than to trust uninspired men? Who would not rather trust the words of Jesus, who shed his blood for many, for the remission of sins than to trust blind, uninspired men, all of whom combined cannot save one single soul? All who calmly, honestly think these matters over will say, give me the word of God, the words of Jesus, the words of the Holy Spirit. I know these words will do to trust. I know that God and Christ are able to save, and I know they have promised to save those that obey, and I will strive to do their will, and trust their promises. But I know men are not able to save, and I know that those who trust in men for salvation have no foundation for their hope. These will be wise conclusions.

SWEENEY AND ABBOTT DEBATE.

"I reached Dawson Springs in time to hear the closing speeches of the disputants, and can, of course, only give you my impressions, made by these speeches, and what the people say about the debate. Bro. J. Sweeney, of Paris, Ky., is too well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE to claim an introduction. He is now just in his prime, physically and mentally a giant, well posted on all questions usually in debate; and when he has a foe worthy of his steel, I should think he would make it quite interesting. But the present debate was not an equal one. Mr. Abbott has been, and may be at present, regarded as the champion of Universalism. I must confess, however, my great disappointment. While his age would not indicate a failing of mind, yet the speech I heard was disconnected; no point or force about it. And I am told this was a fair sample of all he has made. I felt sorry for Bro. Sweeney, who had to follow such disconnected nonsense as "free salvation," "unconditional salvation," "God's love." I have no doubt but good will result from the discussion; not that those who are set in their ways will be changed, but the rising generation need to be taught. Universalism is very soothing in its effect on those who want to follow out their own inclinations and desires; and error needs to be shown up in its deformity, that truth may shine the brighter.

Mr. Abbott was very gentlemanly in his discussion, but showed his want of reverence for the word of God by his frequent scrapping of the Scriptures. Bro. Sweeney had expected to continue the debate with him on Saturday, but by mutual agreement they completed the discussion on Friday night. Each of their friends appeared satisfied with the result.

Since the debate, a new Richmond is in the field. Mr. W. T. Caskey, of Christian county, is here, and came for the purpose of challenging each of the disputants. He is a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher of some note, having had several debates. It was expected that he would have debated with Abbott, instead of Bro. Sweeney; but for some cause he was left out of the ring, and Bro. Sweeney selected. So in order to get even, he has taken it upon himself to come here and challenge both parties. Abbott has accepted his challenge. The debate is to come off late in the summer, at this place. Bro. Sweeney had left before Mr. Caskey arrived, so his challenge was sent to the brethren at Madisonville, which will receive due consideration.

I doubt the propriety of debates with these old men, especially those who have spent the prime of their lives in disputing. They are set in their ways, and no hope of doing them any good; besides, they have nothing new to present, and are generally cross and crabbed. But with such men as Sweeney, Harding and Briney, we need never fear the truth suffering, until they get so old as to lose their tempers. The few brethren we have at this place are hopeful of the debate accomplishing great good for them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bros. L. & S.: I have preached almost every night for two weeks. The fourth Sunday at three o'clock and at night, I heard Mr. Ogle, of the Baptist church, deliver two sermons at Oak Grove against what they call Campbellism. I preached four times near the same place during the past week, which resulted in five additions. The little congregation there is doing very well, I think. They are all young babes in Christ. They have no house, but are taking active steps to build one. They are all poor, but determined to have a house. I have been requested to ask the different congregations of Wilson county to aid them in building their house, and I take this opportunity to do so. Now, brethren, they will build it without you, but don't you want to help a little? Who helped you to build your house? I want every one who reads this to present the matter to his congregation immediately. Don't wait for me to come and beg you to help these brethren, but make up your offering and send it to me at Lebanon, and I will see that it is faithfully appropriated. These brethren will appreciate every dollar you send. Shall I hear from every congregation in this county? May the Lord bless you all.

IS IT ACCEPTABLE WORSHIP?

Acceptable worship is from the heart; and the congregation that worships God in a way that courts the applause of its members and the world rather than the favor of God, by obedience, degrades itself and pulls down the standard of Christianity set up by the Son of God. The church that introduces an organ or anything else not commanded by Jehovah as an assistance, (like the Methodists claim for the mourner's bench,) detracts from the dignity of the church, and brings discord and strife among its members. The individual, or individuals, who do this will be held responsible at the judgment seat of God for that discord. Brethren who have seen its influence should arise with one voice and congratulate the churches which have felt no such influence. I have known a congregation to discontinue the use of the organ, after having it in use only a short time, to find it had entirely destroyed the musical talent of the church, or the desire to worship God in song, as dictated by the Holy Spirit. That church was not able to sing a song or hymn after partaking of the Lord's supper. So utter was its baneful influence that they would not, or could not, worship God in his appointments. I think, though, the worship is more acceptable to God when it is without the ability to sing, than it was when it was supported by the inventions of men, the wisdom of Babylon, or sectarianism. I will not here point out the church, but write this to warn others, that they may steer clear of this rock of discord; and would suggest to all churches that have been walking in the same retrograde path, to sell their organ and employ music teachers. Teach your members music, and don't destroy what you have by the use of an organ; for my observation is, it is utter destruction to church music in its members. Let no one think this an over-drawn picture; for it can be shown that that congregation has not, at the time of this writing, sung a song or hymn after partaking of the Lord's supper, since the discontinuance of the organ. But if this is a want of ability to sing, the worship is acceptable to God, (without music,) in my humble opinion.

WHAT HAS DOUBT ACHIEVED?

How is it that no such trophy has ever been raised to the honor of unbelief? Will the poet of infidelity and the historian of scepticism yet appear? If so, what will be the record? "Working righteousness" and "obtaining promises" are rather out of the line of doubt, and it is not likely to endure much suffering to "obtain a better resurrection," for it sneers at the mention of such a thing; the eulogist of doubt would have to content himself with lower achievements. But what would they be? What hospitals or orphanages has doubt erected? What missions to cannibal tribes has infidelity sustained? What fallen women or profligate men has scepticism reclaimed and new-created?

"Sing, muse! If such a theme, so dark, so wrong, May find a muse to grace it with a song."

The Milton of this subject may well turn out to be like him whom Gray describes in his Elegy as "mute, inglorious." "By their fruits ye shall know them." What are the precious outcomings of "modern thought," which is the alias for new-fashioned unbelief? We hear the shouts of the craftsmen as they repeat their cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" But where are the holy and happy results of the "advanced criticism" which is so busily undermining the foundations of faith?

DOUBT IS STERILE.

The fact is that doubt is negative, destructive, sterile. It constrains no man to nobler things, and begets in the human mind no hopes or aspirations. It is by no means a principle upon which to base life's fabric; for whatever force it has, is subversive, and constructive. A principal which tends to nothing but universal smash is not one to which an ordinary man may contentedly commit the ruling of his life. What if some religious notions be mere fancy, impractical, and imaginary? It is no great thing after all to be good at breaking up the bric-a-brac of the house. However much the coldly-wise may rejoice to be rid of what they call rubbish, it will be no great feat to sweep away the trail fabrics; the genius required is akin to that which is incarnate in a monkey or a wild bull. Our ambition lies in a higher region; we would construct rather than destroy. Since we aspire to honorable and useful lives, we seek a positive force which will bear us onward and upward. Those who prefer to do so may doubt, and doubt to the dregs of nothing; but our choice is to find truth and believe it, that it may be a life-force to us. No partisan has yet had the hardihood to preach an evangel of "doubt and live," for too manifestly doubt is akin to death; but BELIEVE AND LIVE is the essence of the message from heaven, and we accept it.

SELF-RELIANCE AND A BETTER RELIANCE.

Self-reliance is inculcated as a moral virtue, and in a certain sense, with due surroundings, it is so. Observation and experience shows that it is a considerable force in the world. He who questions his own powers, and does not know his own mind, hesitates, trembles, falters, fails; his diffidence is the author of disappointment. The self-reliant individual hopes, considers, plans, resolves, endeavors, perseveres, succeeds; his assurance of victory is one leading cause of his triumph. A man believes in his own capacity, and unless he is a piece of emptiness he gradually convinces others that his estimate is correct. Even self-conceit, immodest though it be, has sometimes acted forcefully, just as, at a pinch, Dutch courage has supplied the place of valor. The essence of the matter is that confidence of some sort is an item of great importance in accomplishing our designs, and distrust or doubt is a source of weakness in any and every case. Faith, then, we choose, rather than doubt, as the mainspring of our life.

THE THREE ARISES.

1. Repentance.—"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him—Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." (Luke 15: 18-19.)
2. Testimony.—"Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." (Isaiah 60: 1.) "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 15: 16.)
3. Glory.—"Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." (Song of Solomon 2: 13.) "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4: 16-17.) And, "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." (1 John 3: 2) "Surely I come quickly, Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus." (Rev. 22: 20.) Amen and Amen.—Selected.

A MATTER OF REGRET.

To be continually receiving urgent calls for tracts from destitute fields, and not to receive the means with which to supply them, causes much regret. We have many good brethren who, though cut off from church privileges, have a mind to work; but being unable to preach or to help support a preacher desire to do the next best thing, which is to sow their neighborhood thickly with tracts. Lately I have failed to supply a number of such applicants, because the Christian Sower Tract Fund has gone beyond its power in giving away tracts, and is now impoverished. Heretofore it has boasted that none were turned away empty; it cannot do this now. Brethren we are not doing a fractional part of what we can do. See how eager the political parties are to separate their principles. The postal cars groan with the weight of campaign documents—tracts by the aid of which they seek to increase their power. The "children of light" may learn a sermon. Heed this call at once by sending a liberal contribution. Many worthy men will bless you for your liberality.

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

Dear Bro. Poe: I should like to be admitted into your growing Bible Class. I think I can answer some of the questions in GOSPEL ADVOCATE No. 20. In answer to B. W. Lauderdale's questions:

1. The brother of Goliath of Gath was named Lahmi, and Elhanan slew him. 1 Ch. xx: 5.
2. The city of Samaria was founded and built by Omri, and he paid two talents of silver for the site. 1 Kings xvi: 23-24.
3. The Jews had three annual feasts. The feast of the passover in the first month Abib, corresponding to our April, and celebrated the bringing forth of the children of Israel out of Egypt. Deut. xvi: 1. The feast of weeks, seven weeks or fifty days after the passover, celebrated the first fruits of their labors. Deut. xvi: 9; Ex. xxiii: 15, 16, 17. The feast of Tabernacles in the month Tisri or Ethanim corresponding to our September or October, celebrated the dwelling in tents. Lev. xxiii: 34; Ezra iii: 4; Neh. viii: 14.
4. Jeshoshaphat was the king who sent out missionaries. The result was, "the fear of the Lord fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jeshoshaphat." 2 Chron. xvii: 8, 9, 10.

I have found the names of six books mentioned in the Old Testament. The book of Nathan, 2nd Chron. ix: 29; the book of Ahijah, 2nd Chron. ix: 29; the book of Iddo, 2nd Chron. ix: 29; the book of Shemaiah, 2nd Chron. xii: 15; the book of Jehu, 2nd Chron. xx: 34; the book of Gad, 1st Chron. xxix: 29. As yet, I have not found the king who had sixty daughters, but found one who had sixteen. With many good wishes for the success of your interesting Bible class, I am your brother in the hope.
—[A. L. Elam.

Here comes an old brother who wishes to join our class. We welcome Bro. Robb.

THE MORE SURE WORD.

What word is more sure than the word that Peter, James and John made known after they had seen the Son of God in his majesty on the holy mount, and heard a voice from heaven proclaim, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased? Answer: The word of prophecy. This Scripture, I have seen quoted hundreds of times in the last sixty years, and I think it was not understood by any one that has quoted it, including Bro. Poe's Bible Class. Let Peter explain. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation or impulse. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Here we find that what these three testified to, was only the witness of what they saw and heard without being inspired; while the prophets spoke by inspiration, the word of prophecy. Bro. Poe, I am not one of your Bible class, but thought proper to send this answer for the benefit of the little children. I think that there are some questions asked by the class that are not profitable, but this is not one of them; I therefore with pleasure contribute my mite.—[William Robb, Williamsport, Ind.

How many prophetic books are there in the Bible? Of what country was Babylon the capital? How long were the children of Israel fed with manna? By whom was Babylon destroyed? How long before Christ, was the Babylonish captivity?—[Noblit's Chapel, Minor Hill, Tenn.

May I ask the brethren through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to gather up and send to me such books and tracts as would be an advantage to our Indian Mission. Bro. F. D. Srygley, of Old Path Guide, sent ten dollars worth, who will follow suit? Help brethren, help!—[R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas.

TRIP TO THE CHOCTAW NATION.

I reached Gov. B. L. LeFlores last Monday evening in time to be at the burial of a full-blood Choctaw woman, Vicy Robinson. There was no service at the grave. Mrs. LeFlores told me they would have a feast, and a cry, (funeral) in a few weeks or months, in which all who could attend would take part, in memory of the departed sister. Tuesday morning Gov. L. took a horse from the plow and hitched it with mine to his hack and went with me to see Judge Turnbull, a good man of sober judgment. Spent a few hours very pleasantly with him and his family; his good wife, a Christian woman, gave us a good dinner and we returned to Gov. L.'s. All with whom I talked were pleased with our work, object, etc. I took some books and papers over with me and left them; did not preach owing to the rain. I am always kindly treated by my Indian friends, and you need not think it a strange thing if I tell you I have learned to love them. While at Gov. LeFlores, I learned through a private letter that Ben Murphy, a U. S. Indian police, with two men, came up with four whisky men, a fight began. Ben and his comrades killed one and mortally wounded another of the whisky men. National prohibition works well in Indian Territory. If the States had such men as Ben Murphy to enforce the law, prohibition would work well in the States. Ben is an Indian. I will go over again in a few weeks and preach and scatter books, papers and pamphlets. Help us what you can. I have received some books, etc., from brethren for the Indian Mission. Paris, Texas. R. W. OFFICER.

Bro. Poe thinks the suggestion to appoint messengers to Bryan leads to danger ahead. I fail to see the point. I am not, however, a stickler for the messengers. The old way suits me just as well. The suggestion was made for the sake of harmony and to get churches enlisted in work. I remembered that Bro. Poe came to Fort Worth as a messenger from the church at Longview and no one seemed to be afraid of him on that account.—McPherson in Old Path Guide.

The church did send me, with instructions to try to get up a boom in behalf of Orphan Home, which, with the aid of Bro. McPherson and others, was done. But my attendance there, as was expressly stated in the letter I bore, was for no other purpose. Bro. McPherson will remember I took no part in anything else. That mission, or delegation, was purely in the interest of Orphan Home. Only this, and nothing more. But I am glad Bro. McPherson does not insist on carrying out his suggestion, for I feel sure it would do harm to the cause. Let us make haste slowly. The work of converting the world—if it must be done—belongs to God. He knows how it should be done, and if it be true—and we are sure it is—that God has given us all things necessary to life and godliness, in his word, then, surely he has taught us how the gospel was to be spread. Or did he intend for us simply to follow his instructions, and let the gospel spread itself?

We think, that right here is the key to the whole of this vexed question. The Lord intended the gospel to spread naturally,—by a fixed law, which in nature we can readily see. Men learn readily the necessity of law in physical or natural things, but in spiritual matters—in things pertaining to the mind realm, they are loth to believe that God has placed all under law. A church of Christ—living after the law of Christ—would as naturally produce other churches adjacent to itself, as an oak tree would produce other oaks round about itself. The great difficulty is, we are not willing to wait, and to work as God directs. We profess to be a Bible reading people, and we claim to be guided by it. As preachers, and editors, let our aim be to make good this assertion. If the Bible is silent as to the how of spreading the gospel, will not Bro. McPherson join me in calling the attention of the brethren to the silence of God's word, and then aid in pointing them to the building up of Christian life and character, take care of the churches and let God take care of the spread of the gospel? We have no fears but he will do it. Will Bro. McPherson please copy.

"FROM GREENLAND'S ICY MOUNTAINS."

Let some brother rise and tell how to make "the Lord's plan" practical in the State of Texas? We have theories and objections by the score. We call for the practical side of "the Lord's plan" in the case of individuals and weak and strong congregations. The case is becoming, or has become, distressing. When some brother, or even sister, furnishes a clear statement on this point, it will be in place to have the whole brotherhood rise and sing,—

"From Greenland's icy mountains," etc.

Till then, let no brother with more zeal than knowledge wake that soul-inspiring song of the missionary.—"C." in Texas Department of Old Path Guide.

Can't you read it for yourself, Bro. C.? This explaining business is what plays havoc with the Lord's plan. You will find it all laid out in a book called the New Testament. If you have no copy handy, write me, and I will mail you one. You will find there, no account of anything like State meetings, synods, councils, conventions, etc., etc. No churches sending preachers, or any one else to any given point, to legislate, or enact any rules, or laws, by which they are to work or preach. But the word of Christ and his apostles is made the rule of all religious life. They were not then as now, so anxious for members, that the Lord's plan had to be sacrificed to accommodate another plan, to catch men, and thus swell their members. You will find that the Lord has ordained, that all his followers are to be preachers, and each one spreading the saving influence of the gospel abroad. "Let him that heareth, say come!" These tell what they hear. Others preach by the light of a pure life. "Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth," etc. I think I know a church which works by the Lord's plan. They assemble every Lord's day to break bread. They exhort one another, sing and pray together, then before closing, each one puts into the Lord's treasury whatever he feels disposed to give for the furtherance of the cause of Christ, after which the sick and destitute are called for—enquired after by the elder presiding. If any are reported, provision is at once made for them, and as far as possible, all needed aid supplied. So far as aiding the destitute is concerned this is easy, since there is already a treasury from which to draw the supplies. The brethren and sisters volunteer to wait on the sick reported, and each is appointed his or her special day. These meet on Lord's day, not for preaching so much as for Bible study, but they invite everybody to study with them. True they have regular times for preaching to aliens, but this they hold a secondary matter. As they are able, they send out and sustain an evangelist in the surrounding country, and in this way are building up new congregations, and all taught to work in the same way. But read the New Testament and see if they are right. And now, if the Brother will read the Lord's plan carefully, perhaps he can give out and raise the old hymn "from Greenland's icy mountains."

"The practical side of the Lord's plan" is easily seen and understood when we apply to the New Testament. And if "C." will not hear this, he would not accept the Lord's plan, though one rose from the dead and declared it. If men would study the word of God closer, there would be less sneering at "the Lord's plan."

It is only in this life that we can win souls for Christ.—E. M. Bruce

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

The Christian Observer, a Presbyterian paper, says: "If John baptized him (Christ) with water, then Christ is a transgressor of law, and we have no priests," etc. His argument is, that "Christ had to be inducted into his priestly office as the Aaronic priesthood were, and that baptism was not a part of that law of induction," etc. This is fallacious. His premise is false, and the conclusion also. Paul says Christ is a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the Aaronic order. But John did baptize Christ, and he did baptize him in water. For the account says: "And when he was baptized, came up straightway out of the water." He could never have "come straightway out of the water" unless he had first been in it. See Matthew 3. We had rather believe God's word, than the guess of a thousand sectarian preachers.

Dear Bro. Poe: This leaves me in this beautiful, growing, clever little city. I am contributing of my time to the brethren here, assisting them to build a church house. We have about $1,300 to go to work with. The brethren are in earnest. The cause is looking up out here. I think the cheapest evangelizing that can be done is flooding the whole country with our books, pamphlets, etc. I have bought three copies of Dr. T. W. Brents' "Plan of Salvation," two of Bro. S. R. Ezzell's book, "The Great Legacy," and an armful of pamphlets. I am constantly hearing from the effects of reading them. I wish to say through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to the brethren, to send me the books they have read, with the pamphlets after they have read them, and I will circulate them throughout Indian Territory. I will go over in two weeks to see the chief of Choctaw Nation, Gov. McQuartan. Will have on that trip a splendid opportunity. I read GOSPEL ADVOCATE, Old Path Guide, and Bro. Burnett's paper, of Bonham, and send them off in Indian Territory. But books and tracts attract more attention, and I hear often of their effects. We will be able to put a man to work this coming fall. I will visit the churches in the interest of our mission and school.

Congregation at Paris is growing slowly but surely. I work part of my time during the week, and preach every Lord's day in Paris. Many thanks to Bro. F. D. Srygley of Old Path Guide for ten dollars' worth of books, pamphlets, etc., for Indian Mission. Fire in Paris last night; $400,000 loss. R. W. OFFICER.

The Christian heart which is not twenty-five thousand miles in circumference is not as large as it ought to be. We must take in the whole world if we are worthy of him whose name we bear.

A Telling Incident.

A certain New England church recently became the scene of much wrangling and contention. One of the deacons had made himself obnoxious in secular affairs to several of the members, and the good brethren determined to oust him. Nearly all the members had taken sides for or against the deacon, and the church seemed on the verge of dissolution. At one of the evening meetings in which the prayers and testimonials were of a decidedly personal nature, a venerable man of eighty arose, and told the following story:

When I was a boy, our family lived on a small farm over in York State. One day in the fall of the year, father and mother went away, and left us children to our own devices. They told us not to go away from the house, but to pick over beans until we were tired, then to play quiet games in the kitchen.

It didn't take us long to get tired of picking over beans, and we soon growled ourselves hoarse playing menagerie; then by common consent we went to the barn and began to hunt hen's eggs. One old hen was sitting, and refused to leave her nest. My brother was of an inquiring turn of mind, and very stubborn. He was determined to know how many eggs old Nancy had under her. He seized her energetically by the tail-feathers, and tried to drag her from the nest, but she picked him in the face so fiercely that he was glad to retreat. Soon a bright idea suggested itself to him, and he shouted triumphantly, "I know what I'll do, I'll burn her off." He ran to the house for a match, and we looked on admiringly while he sat fire to the hay. You can readily imagine the result. Werouted the hen, but we burned the barn and the house.

Now brethren will you persist in having your own way, and destroy the church? It seems just as though the Lord had left us to our own devices, and we aren't willing to work for him, so we find time to meddle with our neighbors. Let us pray, brethren, that we may not consume the church in fire everlasting.

The old man knelt, and the rest of the evening was passed in a real prayer-meeting.

Sydney Smith had a brother distinguished for his talents, but exceedingly sedate, having no element of wit or humor in his composition. Sydney said that "he and his brother contradicted the law of gravitation, for his brother had risen by his gravity, and he had sunk by his levity."

We often pray for comfortable feelings instead of conformity to the divine will; we would be put to sleep in our sin and sloth rather than startled into higher activities and more earnest seeking after God.

Sydney Smith once commenced a charity sermon by remarking: "Benevolence is a sentiment common to human nature A never sees B in distress without asking C to relieve him."

How easy is the thought, in certain moods, of the loveliest, most unselfish devotion. How hard is the doing of the thought in the face of a thousand difficulties.—Macdonald.

A. CAMPBELL AND MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The point before us was one of no practical importance, but of some historic value and justice to an eminent servant of God. Bro. Srygley evades the issue, and makes an appeal from their popularity in behalf of the societies.

Bro. Srygley said, "So early as 1849 A. Campbell learned the position of the Advocate was wrong." "So early" indicated that it was in early life. We submitted that he was sixty-three years old, thirty-nine years a preacher, twenty-seven years an editor. We are sorry Bro. Srygley does not frankly acknowledge his mistake in reference to this.

We submitted that his family, through his biographers published to the world, that two years before this time his mind and will power received a shock from which it never recovered.

Bro. Srygley holds up his hands in horror, and exclaims, "Alexander Campbell was editor of the Harbinger, president of Bethany College, lecturer and preacher before select audiences, and a debater, respected and feared by the best minds." He was all these, until "his mental and will power was so abated" that he did not recognize his own family. Until the end, he could make speeches abounding in the general truths and principles he learned in his early manhood, but his power of applying them to present facts and theories, was gone.

And our statement is that his speeches, as president of the society, abounded in these utterances concerning the missionary spirit, but no where did he make a defence of the society. He opposed the societies among Baptists and others, after which the present society was modeled. He opposed and ridiculed a society based on a monied membership.

With cutting satire he scathed the societies for taking children, infidels and gamblers into the societies on monied consideration.

He objected to "fracturing the churches up into missionary societies, Bible societies, education societies, nor did they (ancient disciples) dream of organizing such in the world. * * * They viewed the church of Jesus Christ as the scheme of heaven to ameliorate the world; as members of it, they considered themselves bound to do all they could for the glory of God and the good of man. They dare not transfer to a missionary society, or Bible society, or education society, a cent or a prayer, lest, in so doing, they should rob the church of its glory, and exalt the inventions of men above the wisdom of God. In their church capacity alone they moved. The church, they considered the ground and support of the truth; they viewed it as the temple of the Holy Spirit, as the house of the living God. They considered if they did all they could in this capacity, they had nothing left for any other object of a religious nature." We could fill this entire number of the Advocate with quotations like this. How groundless the assertion, "that A. Campbell never opposed missionary societies like those in vogue among the disciples." He opposed both individual associations and church representative bodies.

Bro. Srygley thinks these societies were very unpopular once, now they are popular.

Well they were so popular in the very beginning of A. Campbell's career, that he spoke of their advocates as "populars." The schemes as "the popular schemes."

He says, "we admit it is quite as difficult to convince the populars of the folly of their projects, as it is to convince one in a febrile reverie, that he is not in the possession of his reason."

* * * "It is not the recommendation of the popular schemes, it is not the prescription of zealously engaging in all the projects of converting the world, recommended by the popular clergy, that will heal the diseases of the people; but it is an abandonment of every human scheme, and a submission to learn and study Christianity as developed in the Bible. Every other course resembles the palliatives and sedatives and stimulants of quackery."

He says, "The Bible societies are the most specious and plausible of all the institutions of this age. No man who loves the Bible can refrain from rejoicing at its increasing circulation. But every Christian who understands the nature and the design, the excellence and glory of the institution called the church of Christ, will lament to see its glory transpired to a human corporation. The church is robbed of its glory by every institution, merely human, that would ape its excellence and substitute itself in its place."

He elaborates and illustrates this idea, and concludes with the declaration, "The infallible physician has exhibited an infallible remedy for sinners; he has also established a society to which he has committed it, to be preserved and exhibited in purity. This society he has called the house of God, the temple of the Holy Spirit. The honor and glory of this society, the honor and glory of its founder, require that in its own character, not in that of a heterogeneous association, it present and disseminate in their purity the oracles of God. Let every church, if it can disseminate only twenty Bibles or twenty Testaments in one year, do this much. Then it will know in what channel its bounty flows; it will need no recording secretary, no president, no managers of its bounty. It will send all this pagantry, all this religious show, to the regions of pride and vanity whence they came. Then the church and its king will have all the glory."—"Christian Baptist," page 33. He refers to these articles with approval as late as '44.

Bro. Srygley says, "What Mr. Campbell said against missionary societies has been greatly exaggerated."

His own language is stronger than I ever used. Where is the exaggeration? Did Mr. Campbell ever take back these statements? Did he ever confess he was wrong in thus exalting the church of God? Did he ever overthrow this cogent reasoning in behalf of the sufficiency of the divine institutions and the honor of God? If so, when and where? The facts stand that A. Campbell as the very essence and pith of his plea for return to primitive Christianity, denounced all these institutions as devices of men to rob God and his church of the honor of this work, and as corrupting the spirit of the Christian religion. He never retracted this, never acknowledged it an error, he was found presiding over similar institutions and affiliating with them. We find that before this, his mind received a shock from which he never recovered. We find that in this condition of mind he was approached, he was flattered, that if he would convey the Hymn book to the society, it would send his name down the ages as a self-sacrificing hero of God, and his example would be an inspiration of self-sacrifice to others. We find that under these appeals to his vanity, his long cherished antipathy to endowing a society yields, which even his enfeebled mind could not wholly forget, was overcome. We give these facts as the only explanation creditable to his integrity and honor, of the position in which he is placed. If others have a better explanation we do not know it.

For Bro. Srygley to talk of men not being affected by flattery, is a hurtful flattery of humanity. The chief temptation to the Son of God was the appeal to his vanity. When Bro. Srygley finds a man not tempted by this, he finds one that in nature surpasses the Son of God. Away with all that corrupting flattery of humanity, that intimates that any man is not liable to be tempted and to yield to flattery. A. Campbell only yielded to it when his mental and will power had failed, and he had become a child in strength.

Bro. Srygley thinks there has been a wonderful change, and all the educated and scholarly men have come to advocate societies; and all the world are not fools in adopting them. We say God was not a fool eighteen hundred years ago in failing to adopt them. The meaning of Bro. Srygley's plea is, The religious world is wise in adopting missionary societies. That those who fail to adopt them are fools. If it be wisdom to adopt them, God is a fool. For he never adopted them. And I had a thousand times rather be a fool with God, than wise with all the doctors and professors, and pastors, preachers, in chief centers and in the backwoods too, of this world. On this issue, I say, let all the editors and papers, and educational centers, and preachers, and scholars, and sects, and parties be fools and liars, and God be wise and true.

I am glad Bro. Srygley presented that issue. If the adopters of societies are wise, God is a fool; if he is wise, they are fools. Take your stand.

Nothing indicates the wide departure from the plea of Bible authority more than this appeal to the learning and numbers of the world for its justification. What would A. Campbell have said—what did he say to such an appeal in his day?

That appeal is a setting aside the authority of God by the wisdom and numbers of men. I am constrained to believe that no man ever made it except from a consciousness that the position could not be maintained by Divine authority. At what period of the world's history, have the learned, the institutions of learning, the wise, the scholars, the big preachers, the great popular crowds and currents, even in the church, been on the side of maintaining in its purity, the word of God? Was it in the days of the Savior? The doctors, the learned, the wise, the professors were against him. "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes." Was it in the days of Luther, of Wesley, of A. Campbell?

The learning and wisdom of the world, the educational centers, the professors, the preachers of earth, the great papers, are all against the whole movement back toward the apostolic ways. The learned world to-day are for affusion instead of baptism. They do not say Christ or his apostles practiced it but they practice it.

While there is no point requiring scholarship in deciding this question of societies, can Bro. Srygley find a scholar in the world, a professor, an educational institution, a preacher in a prominent point, a paper that respects truth, that will say Christ or his apostles, or the primitive church ever ordained or used societies? If so, which one? I am prepared to show that Campbell, Errett, McGarvey, Allen, have all condemned the societies as they exist, as dangerous, unscriptural and wrong. How can they condemn as unscriptural, and yet sustain them? How can the learned world affirm immersion alone was the practice of the early church, yet practice affusion? The answer to this will answer that.

Changes have taken place; yes, a year ago—a little over, Bro. Srygley told me he was preparing or making ready to prepare a series of articles against societies, from the standpoint of Allen's position with Hobbs' on the organ. He did not condemn the societies as necessarily wrong, but a year ago the entire editorial corps of the Old Path Guide was willing it should oppose societies. We accepted the position of Allen in reference to enforcing expediences, as true, and if wrong with the organ, it was wrong with societies. Some of them were wholly with us in sentiment, the others so opposed to their management, they were willing to have the paper absolutely oppose all societies. One of the chief owners called the society movement and cognate influences "carnalizing of the church." When one changes, he thinks the world changes with him.

Churches in Tennessee and elsewhere have contributed, etc. We have never doubted that, "that there must be heresies among us that they which are approved must be made manifest." We have a good conscience toward God and our brethren that we have striven to keep them united, laboring earnestly in the church of God, for man's good and God's honor. We know in this we stand with God. We intend to stand with him, by his help, if every man, woman and child in America turn away from him and his institutions to the inventions and devices of men. If Bro. Srygley desires the honor of dividing them, turning them away from giving an undivided fealty to God through his own institutions, and make them divide their fealty with human inventions and institutions, he is welcome to it. I want no part nor lot, nor inheritance in that work.

I know that men who believe it as great a sin, to violate the dictates of human judgment, in its sphere, as to violate a law of God in its sphere, who have great confidence in human wisdom and learning and judgment, and great men and popular crowds, will always feel free to take large liberties in changing and modifying the appointments of heaven, but I want no part nor lot in that work. God and his appointments are wisdom, sanctification, and righteousness, and justification to me. They are all my heart desires. For this, I thank God.

Not only does Bro. Srygley's wisdom make God a fool, but if he is a true prophet, God is a false prophet. Jesus says, "Every plant not planted of my Father shall be rooted up." Paul says, Everything builded on the foundation Jesus Christ, save the gold, silver, precious stones of God's ordaining, shall be burned up. John says, "Whosoever adds to the things written in this book, to him shall be added the plagues written herein." But Bro. Srygley says, "These churches that remain pure as God gave them, will come to naught, and these additions by human hands will prosper. If Bro. Srygley is a true prophet, Jesus, Paul, Peter, John, are all false prophets.

The GOSPEL ADVOCATE may betray the principles it has maintained; it may turn and follow the popular current. Stranger things have happened. Every institution of learning, every professor, every preacher in the land, every soul able to read his mother tongue, may give up the purity of the church, and turn to these popular additions of men, and may affirm by his action that God is both a fool and a liar; yet the foundation of God stands sure, and he will vindicate his right to rule, the sufficiency of his institutions to accomplish his work; and he will present unto himself a church without spot or blemish, without wrinkle or any such thing, just as he gave it. He will do this if he has to destroy in hell every institution of learning, every newspaper—big or little, every preacher—in places important or unimportant, every one made a scholar, by turning against the sufficiency of the word and appointments of God. God will rule; God will vindicate his truth, the sufficiency of his institutions. Of this I have not the least doubt.

The simple truth is what Bro. Srygley calls a reformation in favor of "society," is but the flood of carnality that always rushes into a church or reformation that becomes popular. Accompanying this has come festivals, frolics, looseness in morality and worldly conformity in every direction. These all go together, and can be cured only by another and more radical reformation.

Yielding to them makes men popular with the world, and the giddy, and light minded, and pleasure lovers in the word, but does not commend us to God.

D. L.

QUERIES.

Please explain Romans vii: 24: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Please explain who or what character of person the apostle personifies in the text. Give your views as full as your space will admit.—[J. C. Charlton, Yorkville, Tenn.]

He spoke in his own personal character of his own body, full of sinful impulses and desires. In that body death reigned. Disease and sorrow, anxiety and care found a continual home. Hence, Paul contemplating the rest and peace that deliverance from it would bring, exclaimed who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Paul felt the impulses to sin as we do. He realized them more keenly, regretted them more deeply, because he had clearer conceptions of the truth, and a deeper sense of the sinfulness of sin. The great trouble with humanity to-day, is we do not realize our sinful condition. Nor do we realize that we are poor needy undone, and that God alone can save us. We have confidence in our own ability to know right, to do right, and so to gain immortality. Paul had none of this self-righteous and self-sufficient feeling. He had lived in good conscience before God all the days of his life. He had zealously served God, as he thought, and yet he was made to realize that all that service with a good conscience, was sin and rebellion in the sight of heaven, and that he obtained mercy on deep and true repentance only because he did it in ignorant unbelief.

The great mass of teachers to-day think that a person that does as Paul did was safe, acts up to the best light of his conscience. Persons who feel this, can never realize the sinfulness of sin. Not realizing this, they never realize the obligations they are under to God. Hence they do not consecrate themselves to God, and give him the earnest service of their lives. Paul realized he was a sinner, a great sinner. He felt it was a stretch of infinite mercy to save him. Feeling this, he was inspired by zeal and love and self-sacrificing devotion, to labor for Christ, and for the help of other sinners lost as he had once been. Personal devotion, personal self-sacrifice, personal consecration to the service of God and the salvation of men is the great need and the great lack of our age.

—Is it a sin for Christians to go to a festival given for the purpose of raising money for the church? If it is wrong for the church to raise money in that way, is it not wrong for members to uphold them by their attendance? I heard a good sister say that she believed it was wrong in the church to hold festivals, but that there was nothing wrong in her going, if she had an opportunity.—[J. H. T.]

If it is a sin to hold a festival to raise money for religious purposes, it is certainly as great a sin to encourage persons in that work. We have received notice of a festival and frolic in Centreville, to raise money to build a house, and have been asked to comment upon it. In St. Louis they are doing it. The Foreign Missionary Society asks Sunday-schools to hold festivals for the purpose of raising money for the missionaries. We have but little heart to write on these matters. Persons who encourage them are usually either those who do not read what is written, or are so determined to set the word of God at defiance and go their own way because others do it, that writing is useless. At Centreville they are, I presume, something as they were at Savannah, Ga. They have done it because those around them do such things, and they have never studied the principles of Christian giving. What is needed is just what Bro. Harding did for the brethren and sisters at Savannah, Ga. Kindly and in love show them the wrong, and point out to them that God accepts no offering that does not come from a sincere desire to honor him; hence must be given to honor his name. The money given at festivals and frolics, is given to gratify the flesh, to have a good time, without any care for the cause of God. So it cannot be accepted of God. It will be a curse instead of a help to his cause. To encourage these festivals and frolics by your presence and your money, is as wrong as to help get them up or manage them.

We read in the 23rd chapter of 1st Samuel, where it is said, that because the Lord refused to answer Saul, he (Saul) sought a woman, and requested her to bring up the Spirit of Samuel. "And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice, why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul." "And Samuel said to Saul, why hast thou disturbed me to bring me up? and Saul said, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets nor by dreams; therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do." Now, one of our preachers says that the whole thing was a fraud, and a cheat, that Samuel did not talk to Saul, and gives as his reason, that as God commanded Israel not to call on a woman with a familiar spirit, that he could not consistently give the power to a "witch" to do this. You will please tell us what you think about the matter; are we to understand it to be a real truth, or is it all a falsehood? And if a cheat, by what authority do we come to the conclusion that it is a mistake?—[Thos. Hunsaker, Little Elm, Texas.]

When men set out to tell what God can and cannot do consistently, they make themselves very wise,—much wiser than God. God could just as consistently do what it is said he did, as he could make a pretence of doing it, when not doing it. We know of no reason to reject the record as a history of a veritable transaction.

THE BRETHREN AT TELES CHAPEL.

On the second Lord's day in April, 1884, we met with the brethren at Teles Chapel. While there, we had the pleasure of hearing Bro. W. H. Carter, of Lafayette, Tenn., preach a sermon from 1 Cor. xii: 13: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Our brother handled the subject well; a better discourse we never heard preached from the above quotation. In his sermon he showed the sects the absurdity of claiming a baptism of the Holy Ghost in order to conversion. Bro. Carter has been preaching for the brethren at Teles Chapel for two years, and has done a good work in building up the cause. We need more earnest preachers in the field like Bro. Carter, that will hew closely to the old land marks of primitive apostolic Christianity, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints like Jude of old. Bro. Carter is a young man and is calculated to make a great debater. He is not what we might call an eloquent speaker, as he makes no effort at display of eloquence and oratory. His object in preaching is to make a discrimination between the truth, the doctrines and the traditions of men. May God own and bless his labors.

We have a large congregation at this place; a better working congregation cannot be found in this section of the country. They seem to realize that there is a work for all to do in the church. The band of disciples at this place are fully determined to walk in the Scriptural way by going on to perfection, by continuing steadfast in the apostles doctrine, in fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. They meet every Lord's day for the purpose of commemorating the death and sufferings of Jesus. They engage in prayers, songs, warm exhortations, and reading the Scriptures for religious edification. There are five men in the congregation who engage publicly in teaching, and many that lead in prayer when called on by the elders. Well there is a work for us all to do in the church. If we cannot preach like Paul, we can pray and sing. If we cannot pray in public, we can work to feed the poor. The lazy, idle, indolent and slovenly man cannot be of much service in the Lord's vineyard. We need more working men in the church, and not so many good-for nothing drones.

May the Lord help us to employ our time well that we may devote our time to something useful. God forbid that we should spend our time in idleness when there is so much we can do for the cause of Christ. This congregation was planted since the war by Bro. Asaph Alsop, Jr., and has been growing fast since its organization. The congregation was enlarged last fall under the preaching of Bro. Harding; quite a number of the Baptists united with us during Bro. Harding's meeting, and are now taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. The brethren at this place do not meet together to worship the big preacher. If they do not have preaching on Lord's day, they do not forsake the assembling of themselves together; they are capable and competent to work without a revivalist to warm them up during the fall season. The elders that rule over the flock are continually striving to build up the members in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and to develop their capability for teaching others. God grant that they may by precept and example continue to do good. This is the loudest preaching we can do. We can exert more influence by being good, doing good, and practicing Christianity, than we can by preaching long cut and dried sermons on Lord's day.

HISTORY OF DESIGN OF BAPTISM—No. 6.

Bro. M.: We design in this number to present the views of Mr. Wesley, the founder of the Methodist church. The quotations are taken from Wesley's Doctrinal Tracts, a work "published by order of the General Conference," "for the Methodist Episcopal Church," J. Collard, printer, 1836. Mr. Wesley says of baptism, "It is the initiatory sacrament which enters us into covenant with God. It was instituted by Christ, who alone has power to institute a proper sacrament, a sign, seal, pledge, and means of grace perpetually obligatory on all Christians." Page 242-243.

"What are the benefits we receive by baptism?" * * * And the first of them is, the washing away the guilt of original sin, by the application of the merits of Christ's death." Page 246. "By baptism we enter into covenant with God; into that everlasting covenant which he hath commanded forever." Page 247. "By baptism we are admitted into the church, and consequently made members of Christ, its head. * * * For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, 1 Cor. xii: 13, namely; the church, the one body of Christ. Eph. iv: 12: From which spiritual, vital union with him, proceeds the influence of his grace on those that are baptized, as from our union with the church, a share in all its privileges, and in all the promises Christ has made to it." Page 248. "By baptism, we who were by nature children of wrath, were made the children of God. And this regeneration which our church in so many places ascribes to baptism is more than barely being admitted into the church, though commonly connected therewith; being grafted into the body of Christ's church, we are made children of God by adoption and grace. This being grounded on the plain word of our Lord, Except a man be born again of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. John iii: 5. By water then, as a means, the water of baptism we are regenerated or born again; whence it is also called by the apostle, the washing of regeneration. Our church therefore ascribes no greater virtue to baptism than Christ has done." Page 248-249.

"Herein we receive a title to, and an earnest of a kingdom which cannot be moved. Baptism doth now save us, if we live answerable thereto; if we repent, believe, and obey the gospel; supposing this, as it admits us into the church here, so into glory hereafter." Page 249. "In all ages, the outward baptism is the means of the inward; as outward circumcision was of the circumcision of the heart." Page 250.

"If infants are guilty of original sin, then they are proper subjects of baptism; seeing, in the ordinary way, 'they cannot be saved, unless this be washed away by baptism.' It has been already proved, that this original stain cleaves to every child of men; and thereby they are liable to eternal damnation. It is true, the second Adam has found a remedy for the disease which came upon all by the offence of the first. But the benefit of this is to be received through the means which he hath appointed; through 'baptism in particular' which is the ordinary means he hath appointed for that purpose; and to which God hath tied us, though he may not have tied himself. Indeed, when it cannot be had, the case is different; but extraordinary cases do not make void a standing rule." Page 251. "To sum up the evidence, if outward baptism be generally, in an ordinary way, necessary to salvation, and infants may be saved as well as adults, nor ought we to neglect any means of saving them." Page 259. So taught good John Wesley a century ago—and so published the Methodist Conference in 1836.

IN GOD'S SCHOOL.

"I love to think of my little children whom God has called to Himself as away at school—at the best school in the universe, under the best teachers, learning the best things in the best possible manner."

The idea accords with Longfellow's well known lines on this subject:

"She is not dead, the child of our affection,
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection, Where Christ Himself doth rule."

Those parents who have children in heaven may well rejoice in the thought that they are at home in our Father's house, and safe from every harm. Faith follows them there, and learns to joy in their security and bliss. "Taken from the evil to come," they wait for us on the other side, where, at the coming of the Lord, if not before, we shall rejoin them.—Exchange.

Revivals do not militate against the steady flow of spiritual life any more than reservoirs stop the steady flow of the stream, while the treasured force is mighty when the foregates are uplifted.

Life means, be sure, both heart and head—both active, both complete, and, both in earnest.

Obituaries.

Mrs. Ella J. Harper, daughter of E. C. and Annie J. Chambers, was born in North Carolina, June 22, 1859; was married to the late Dr. Thos. O. Harper, September 22, 1878; died May 8, 1884, of typhoid-pneumonia. Though young, her life had been clouded with many cares. She leaves two little children, a loving father, five sisters, and two brothers, to lament her early death; but they have the precious promises of the Savior to sustain them in these sore afflictions. Sister Ella was an accomplished lady and a devoted Christian, and has frequently written for our Christian papers. She seemed to have no fears as to the future, but was anxious to live for her children. May that God who has promised to be a father to the fatherless, sustain and care for them in her absence.

C. W. SEWELL, JR.

Departed this life, April 28, 1884, sister Annie J. Chambers, wife of Bro. E. O. Chambers, of Thornton, Texas. Deceased was a daughter of William C. and Elizabeth Campbell, born in Moore county, North Carolina, April 13, 1837. She was married in January, 1853, and moved to Texas in the year 1860. She was adopted into the family of God in the year 1864. She left an husband and eight children to mourn her loss. One of the latter, however, soon followed her to the grave. As a wife, Sister Chambers was affectionate and devoted; as a mother, she faithfully brought up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and lived to see all of them, except the youngest, become obedient to the one faith; as a Christian, she was ever zealous for the cause, and anxious for the salvation of others. She was matron of Thornton Institute, of which her husband is principal. In this capacity she carefully watched over those committed to her care as if they were her own, never forgetting their spiritual wants. Often would she express herself as sorry to see so much labor and anxiety spent preparing the young for this life, while so little is done to prepare them for the next. She bore her ten days' suffering of typhoid-pneumonia with patience and Christian fortitude. Two days before she died, she said to her husband, "Oh, yes! I can trust in Jesus." To the bereaved ones I would say, with the rich promises of the gospel to comfort you, and the example of a pious mother for imitation, may your end be as peaceful as was hers.

C. W. SEWELL, JR.

Arthur Towles died at the residence of his brother, John W. Towles, seven miles north east of this place, at seven o'clock, Sunday morning, May 27. He was born in Culpepper county, Va., in 1809, and moved with his father to this county in 1818; and after gaining his majority he went to Nashville, where he resided some thirty years, and was well and favorably known for his honesty and generous impulses. Some twelve or thirteen years ago he returned to this county, and has since made it his home. Soon after his return he connected himself with the Christian church of this place, since which time he has maintained an unblemished Christian character, challenging the admiration of all who knew him. His funeral was preached by Elder P. G. Potter, who spoke advisedly of his liberality and goodness of heart. He died in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and his remains were interred in the family bury-ground near this place, attended by many friends and acquaintances.

The above is from the McMinnville "New Era." In addition, we wish to say that Bro. Towles, before he obeyed the gospel, was a sporting man, and led a life in harmony with this. When he became a Christian, no man more heartily and cheerfully laid aside the old habits and associations, and devoted himself more earnestly to trying to learn and do his duties as a Christian. In his life as a Christian, he was up-right, earnest, and liberal in his beneficence.

D. L.

It becomes my painful duty to chronicle the death of a dear father, who departed this life, and passed through the "dark valley and shadow of death," October 9, 1883. James Darwin Petty was born December 17, 1807, in Union District, South Carolina. His parents emigrated to Tennessee in 1814, and settled in Jackson county. Father, during his life, had almost the patience of Job of old. In 1824, or about the age of seventeen, he contracted a white swelling on his ankle which gave him great pain all the days of his life. About 1857 his ankle bones were taken out by Dr. Bowling, of Nashville. In 1840 he moved to Illinois, and was sick nearly all the time he stayed there, (six years,) losing three of his children while there. He returned to Nashville in 1846, and in 1850 he lost his wife and eight children, by cholera, only one being left. In 1851 he was married (the second time) to Mahala A. Petty, of Dickson county, Tennessee, and in 1867 they moved from Nashville to Dickson county, near Charlotte, where he lived till the time of his death. Father confessed the Savior in 1846, and was baptized in the Cumberland River, near Nashville, by J. R. Graves, and lived a firm Christian till the time of his death. He often said he wanted to go and see Genie, (his little grand-child, who preceded him one year and four days,) but dreaded the sting of death. In 1878 he fell on the frozen ground and broke his thigh. In 1881 he broke his back, and never walked another step without crutches while he lived. Take all his troubles and trials together, during life, and he must have had the patience of Job to have stood them and lived a Christian. He leaves a large circle of friends and acquaintances to mourn his loss.

THE BEST

Hair restorative in the world is HALL'S HAIR RENEWER. It cures all diseases of the scalp, and stimulates the hair glands to healthful action. It stops the falling of the hair; prevents its turning gray; cures baldness, and restores youthful color and freshness of appearance to heads already white with age. The following are a few illustrations of what is done by

HALL'S

Vegetable Sicilian

HAIR RENEWER:

Mrs. HUNSBERRY, 244 Franklin Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., after a severe attack of Erysipelas in the head, found her hair—already gray—falling off so rapidly that she soon became quite bald. One bottle of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER brought it back as soft, brown and thick as when she was a girl.

Mr. KESLING, an old farmer, near Warsaw, Ind., had scarcely any hair left, and what little there was of it had become nearly white. One bottle of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER stopped its falling out, and gave him a thick, luxuriant head of hair, as brown and fresh as he ever had.

Mrs. A. T. WALL, Greenfield, Cheshire, Eng., writes: "I have found the greatest benefit from the use of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER, it having restored my hair, which was rapidly falling off, and returned its original color."

Dr. ENIL SEIT, Detroit, Mich., certifies that "HALL'S HAIR RENEWER is excellent for hair growing, and gives back the natural color to faded and gray hair."

Mrs. S. E. ELLIOTT, Glenville, W. Va., says: "One bottle of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER restored my hair to its natural, youthful color."

No injurious substances enter into the composition of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER, and it is not a dye. Its vegetable ingredients render it in the highest degree beneficial to the scalp as a preventive of disease. Its effects are natural and lasting, and it does not make the hair dry and brashy, like the so-called restoratives compounded with alcohol.

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM
ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

EVANGELIC SUPPORT.

Dear Bro. Harding: Among all our writers I know of none whose views of certain departments of church work are more in accordance with the Scriptures than those expressed in your department of the ADVOCATE. Evangelists and their proper work have been most scripturally presented and admirably defended. There is one feature related to these subjects, however, which I will be pleased to see further investigated. I do not know that we think differently about the matter at all, and it is not because of such apprehension that I write this communication, but simply to call your attention to it, that we may mutually express our views and compare notes. I am anxious for such expression from other than personal considerations. We have several hundreds of preachers in Kentucky and Tennessee, who are now located with churches, and whose legitimate work is in the field. This appropriation of the work of the eldership by the evangelists is disastrous and ruinous to the churches, in that it stunts episcopal growth and development, and leaves the world around to perish in their sins. Indeed, there is no telling the amount of mischief wrought in many ways by the subversion of the divine arrangement. In no small degree I think this state of things grows out of misapprehension of ministerial support. Preachers in plain violation of the gospel which they profess to preach, are asking, "what shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewith shall we be clothed?" And prompted by this exhibition of unbelief, enlist in the unchristian struggle for place. Influenced by such a spirit, it is no wonder that a half hundred applications should be made for the "pastorate" of a single church. It is not difficult to trace the legitimate results when the mind and hearts are filled with such miserable forebodings. In truth, a preacher's life in that case would be as replete with unhappiness, as the poor unfortunate sinner.

In the net-work of human life our pathways have frequently crossed, on which most pleasant occasions to me we have frequently and freely conversed upon the strange and remarkable providences working unseen to us that have brought blessings to our humble but happy homes. It has been a constant source of delight to me in my meditative hours to trace these most wonderful confirmations of faith in His most gracious promises. At our personal interviews it has been a grateful relief and support to feel that at least one of the many I meet realizes that the eye that sees all, sees us, and that the arm that upholds the universe is around us. Twenty-years of preacher-life enables me, with great confidence, to look into the future with an unblanched cheek, and an unfaltering heart. He that numbers the hairs of our heads and sees the sparrow fall, will feed us when we are hungry, and take care of those in our charge.

Through what media do these blessings flow? An answer to this question is solicited in the light of human experiences. God is not only rich in supplies, but he commands every avenue of blessing. To the farmer, the mechanic, and the merchant, there are ten thousand channels through which blessings come. The winds, the rains, the sunshine, the air, the earth, the great waters, with their multiplied millions of attachments, serve as so many ministering angels under the special control and direction of him who rules in the minds of all, for the good of his people. Now, just as the Lord stands behind nature, with an eye overlooking all its complicated machinery, and with a hand holding, and governing its varied, massive and intricate forces, in order that the faithful husbandman may gather in his harvests and fill his stores, so God sees to it that the faithful evangelists shall not be forsaken, nor his children begging bread. There are just as many, and certainly as efficient channels transmitting blessings from the full hand of God to the door of him who publishes the good tidings of salvation, as there are supporting the wants of others; and any other hypothesis would be an impeachment of both the wisdom and goodness of God, as well as a shipwreck of faith in the Holy Scriptures. God's providential arrangements are over the minds, and hearts, and lives of men, just the same as they are over the material things of nature; and the springs of bereavement, clarity, and religious obligation, are as much affected by those providences as are the winds, and seas. With a world full of men and women with minds and hearts susceptible of impressions from the most delicate touches of a myriad of agencies fully and completely under the command of Him who orders all things aright, how can it be otherwise than such a being, under such circumstances, will meet the necessities of his own laborers in the faithful discharge of appointed duties? Now, while we mutually believe, as I think, the same things all along this line, I wish you, in the light of the Bible and your own experience, to answer the following questions:

1. Is the evangelist to take into consideration the means by which he is to be sustained?
2. Is he to discriminate between the varied means which God provides which shall be relied on by him for his support?
3. Is it certain without such consideration and discrimination upon his part, God will now, and in every period of his life, and under the multiplex circumstances and accidents of life, provide for his wants.

By answering these questions do doubt much good may result.

G. G. TAYLOR.

There has never been a time when it was more necessary to "contend earnestly for the faith," than the present time. Jesus said, "If you know the truth, the truth shall make you free," and Peter said, "All things that pertain to life and godliness come through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Many of those who hold the key of knowledge to-day are blind guides to those who are led by them. The doctrine of "total depravity, the necessity of a direct operation of the Holy Spirit, justification by faith alone, infant baptism, and sprinkling and pouring for baptism, are still held by men in high places. God should be praised for such a man as James Harding, who is giving the people of Sulphur a feast of fat things this week in his debate with Elder Hiner, of the M. E. Church. Elder Hiner is a fine debater for his side of the question, but one can see him almost shudder at every stroke of the sword of the Spirit in the hands of Bro. Harding. Bro. Harding has confidence in the word of God, and is not afraid to contend for it. This is the second day of the debate, and everything is moving on grandly on our side. Very large congregations every day, and dinner on the ground. Those poor, sickly people, who are "opposed to discussions," and believe in "letting the people alone," and will tell the preachers they meet to "say nothing about other denominations and try to be popular with everybody," would not be very well satisfied with Jesus Christ or Paul if they were here and were to preach as they once did. Truth has nothing to fear by an investigation; error does. Truth is our friend; error, our enemy. Truth will make us free, and error will hold us in bondage. Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life; and he who contends earnestly for the faith of the gospel, is a friend to Jesus and his fellow-men.

T. D. M.

The following preaching brethren are in attendance at the Harding-Hiner debate: G. G. Taylor, T. D. Moore, F. D. Srygley, J. T. Hawkins, H. G. Fleming, H. W. Baker, P. H. Duncan, J. H. Beasley, L. A. Bersot, W. S. Willis, Wallace Tharp, H. W. Elliott, William Pinkerton, Paph. Julian, William Buchanan, G. W. Combs.

As this is only the second day of the discussion it is probable that a number of others will yet come in. There are five or six Methodist preachers present.

It is a notable fact that at the religious discussions that have been held in Kentucky a far greater number of disciples have attended than of any of the denominations. It is quite evident that they enjoy them; this can be seen by the brightness of their faces during the debate, and is further demonstrated by their eagerness to attend another.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER.

NUMBER I.

"Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do." 1 Thes. v: 11.

My much respected friend, from our many pleasant conversations in the past, upon the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, I think we understand each other, and am sure that there never has been a single word uttered in our private talks that caused anything but brotherly love to increase toward each other, and an increase in our desires to love and serve our heavenly Father more and more in accord with his will, as revealed to us in his holy word. And as those "talks" were necessarily unconnected in the subject matter before us, I propose to begin at the beginning of the subject of religion, as I understand its bearing, upon you and me, as representatives of those living since the gospel of the New Testament, from Matthew to Revelation included, was first promulgated.

You will see at once that I propose to touch upon those points wherein our past "talks" showed that there was some difference of faith or opinion between us. This, I know, will be agreeable to you, as wherein we agreed, it would be useless to repeat at this time. You are aware that I restricted acceptable worship to our heavenly Father under the administration of Christ, to the direct commandments of Christ himself and those of his apostles, (qualified by the Holy Spirit,) whom he chose for that express purpose. And in doing this, it brought us at once to the New Testament. You will bear in mind a statement of mine, in answer to "cutting off the Old Testament Scriptures, viz.: That while we should go to them to find out what God has made known to man in past ages, and to learn his principles of government to his creatures, and how those principles were to be carried out by those to whom they were presented, that they might receive the blessings promised: it behooved us to learn the fact that there is a great difference in the specific commandments of God, from Adam down to the setting up of the Jewish institution; so great a difference that a Jew could not have rendered "acceptable worship" to God—that he had done all that was commanded of the patriarchs, and had not complied with the specific commands given to him as a Jew, by Moses and those under him. And so now, you nor I could be accepted of God as his servant, though we did all that was commanded the Jews, and refuse to submit to the specific laws given us through his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ; for "God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son," (read Heb. i: 14, and Heb. ii: 1-9,) and by him he has given us specific commands that was so different from the Jewish commands, that every Jew who would inherit the blessed promises must, and did, submit to them, and in doing so he admitted there was an end of acceptable ceremonial worship.

This must suffice for the present. And until my next, you keep up the division of dispensations in your mind, and you will naturally keep up the "proper divisions of God's word," and keeping these up, you will be prepared for the specific commands under each dispensation of God's mercy.

A DISCIPLE OF CHRIST.

I obeyed the gospel about the first of October, 1882, and lived as near to the track as I could, for some time; but finally got so far off as to go to a little one-horse dance, and danced. And oh! my feelings since! I feel like one cast entirely away. The church has never said anything to me about it, and I don't know what to do. Will you please give me your advice through the ADVOCATE? My conscience is whipping me all the time. I am afraid to go to preaching, for fear some old brother in his sermon will call me "brother," not knowing what I have done, and then I will feel worse. And then if I was to go, and not take the Lord's supper with them, somebody would wonder why. And if I did take it, that dance would be on my mind all the time. So I stay at home every Lord's day, not knowing what to do. Will you be so kind as to give me your advice?

AN EARNEST ENQUIRER.

Just have honesty and courage to go to church, confess your wrong, and promise to do so no more; let the brethren and the Lord forgive you, and feel like a man.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. Larimore is booked to preach the introductory sermon for the Athenæum, at Columbia, on Sunday, June 8.

Bro. K. M. Vanzandt, of Fort Worth, Texas, spent several days with us on return from a business trip to New York.

The protracted meeting at Tullahoma, Tenn., will begin, "The Lord willing," the fourth Lord's day of June, and perhaps continue two weeks; this, however, as the interest may demand.

Bro. Poe's matter that is in this number was post-marked, Longview, Texas, May 23. It reached us June 2. Uncle Sam has some fast trains between Longview and Nashville.

H. L. Walling, McMinnville, Tenn., writes: "Tell Bro. J. R. Bradley, down in the mountains, to stand still, and he shall see the salvation of the Lord. In the meantime, to read my essay once per day."

Bro. Cave preached the commencement sermon for Howard Institute, Gallatin, Tenn., the first Sunday in June. It is highly spoken of by the secular papers as an earnest appeal in behalf of the Christian religion as the only true foundation for character.

We are still receiving goodly lists of subscribers on proposition to send from first of May to the end of the year, for one dollar. Some days we receive only a few; but others, twenty to thirty per day. We ask our friends to use diligence in extending our circulation. They do good in this. Help us, but especially help the reader.

W. B. Wright, Coopertown, Tenn., writes: "I preached to a large and attentive audience the fourth Lord's day in May, at Sycamore Mills, Cheatham county, Tennessee. We have a few earnest brethren and sisters at that place, who are anxious to build up the cause in their midst. I have engaged to preach for them once a month. If any of our preaching brethren would call on them, they would appreciate it."

Bro. C. W. Sewell, Thornton, Texas, May 28, writes: "Held a meeting at Thornton, Texas, last week. Two young men confessed their faith in Christ. I rejoice to see so many of the young men entering Thornton Institute, coming out Christians. We had the heaviest rains while I was there that we have had since I have been in the State. All trains were stopped for some time, and much damage done to the growing crops."

Brethren from Texas write that the rains have been so incessant that the country has been flooded. Much damage has been done by high waters, the crops in many places ruined by too much rain. Then we heard of heavy rains and high waters in West Tennessee. Now the rains are coming down in torrents here. If it continues many days, it will greatly damage the wheat and clover crops.

F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., writes: "Preached at Water Valley, on the fourth Lord's day, in our union (?) house. We have had many things with which to contend since our work began here, but we thank God four have been added to the Church. Paul labored a long time at some places; so must we, if we desire to accomplish much good. Bro. W. Anderson will occupy the pulpit in my place at Water Valley, next fourth Lord's day. At eight o'clock p. m. I preached at Williamsport, in the Methodist house, to a large congregation. We can't expect disciples to be made at such places, unless we go and preach to the people the gospel of Jesus. We find it's not much trouble to find places where the gospel ought to be preached, but the great difficulty is getting it preached."

We have been receiving a goodly amount of poetry, of late. When there is good hard work-horse sense in poetry, we think we can appreciate it. But we have no poetical talent, and not much poetical taste, in our office. So when it is only pretty poetry, we are no judges of it. If some of the writers think their poetry is not appreciated, please attribute it to our lack of taste, pity us because we can't appreciate it, but don't get hurt at us,—we don't know any better.

Bro. W. N. Moore, Tenn., June 2nd, writes: "I met with the brethren at Flat Creek the third Lord's day in May; preached to a large and attentive audience; found the brethren there alive and watching as usual, for the church's best interest. Yesterday was my regular day here; had a good meeting, five being added; two redeemed, two who have moved in took membership, and one from the world. In the evening I preached out five miles from town, at a new point; had a good hearing, and think good impressions were made."

J. Harding, 3307 Bank Street, Louisville, Ky., May 31, writes: "I closed my meeting with the church at Antioch, Oldham county, Kentucky, last night, with eighteen added to the congregation. It was a glorious meeting. The brethren at Antioch made me a present of a handsome buggy, and I did not get it before I needed it. There is a noble little band there. Bro. Srygley preaches for them once a month. I will begin a meeting with the Central Church, this place, to-morrow night, in their new house, corner Second and Kentucky Streets. I forgot to mention that the brethren at Antioch gave me $52.75, for the new meeting-house, 25 Portland Avenue, this city. To the Lord be all the praise."

J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., writes: "I was at Antioch, Coffee county, third Lord's day in May. This congregation was organized about twenty years ago, taken mostly from the Philadelphia congregation, and was a zealous, working congregation; but it has been greatly weakened by death; all the members that were old when it was organized have passed over the river; but there is still a small congregation there that meets on the first day of the week to break bread and study the Scriptures, and teach their children the way they should go; and while they are not, perhaps, as zealous as they should be, they are, nevertheless, doing a good work, and I pray that the blessings of the Lord may attend them, and that they may be built up."

It was reported in the Review that Bro. Creath is in a state of destitution. He writes as follows:

"It is true, as stated by Bro. Rowe in the notice he took of his visit to my house last winter, I have no income or revenue; but in our conversation he received the impression that I was in 'need of the temporalities of life,' it was an impression which I did not design to make, and which was a mistake unintentionally made by him from the best feelings of his heart towards me, without any intention of misrepresenting things. My faithful Christian wife and myself have so managed our affairs as never to have been in want of any of the comforts of life; and it is our sincere belief and hope that He who has hitherto taken care of us will continue to do so until our race is finished on earth and then He will take us home. We thank you for the kind words you have spoken of us."

Sister Fanning and Bro. A. J. Fanning think I am mistaken in saying Bro. Fanning did not understand that baptism was for the remission of sins, when he was baptized. I may be wrong; I know the first time he heard the gospel preached, he obeyed it. I know it was taught that those who obeyed him would be accepted of him, that man could obey God, and that so soon as he heard this he readily accepted it. But that any of them were teaching at this time that baptism was for the remission of sins, I doubt. I am sure he preached with others that called mourners to the altar. Near Owl Hollow, in Franklin Co., during a meeting, he concluded the whole practice was wrong, and with characteristic courage and promptness during a cessation in the meeting, he dragged the altar with all its appurtenances out of the house and into the woods. This created quite a commotion in the meeting, but it ended the practice there. Will some of our aged brethren, having knowledge of these things, give us information on them.

Blaine, of Maine, for President, on the fourth ballot. Gen. John A. Logan, of Illinois, was placed as Vice-President. This captures both sides of the party. Mr. Blaine, a liberal, and Mr. Logan, a stalwart, will make a ticket that will poll the full strength of the party.

PLEA FOR THE BABIES.

Be kind to the babies,
The dear little babies,
Then with you they seldom will cry.
Touch gently the babies,
Speak softly to babies,
As softly as if mamma were by

Be patient with babies,
The poor little babies,
Remember they cannot tell why
They make up wry faces,
With pains in all places,
Enough to make any one cry.

Rock softly the babies,
The sweet little babies,
They all will grow up by-and-by;
And we hope fill their places
With charms and with graces,
So never to cause us a sigh.

We all have been babies,
Just such little babies,
For babies were both you and I,
With fathers and mothers,
And sisters and brothers,
So, to help other babies, pray try.
—[The Little Housekeeper.]

THE FAIRY SISTER.

Sallie stood in the middle of the floor with three little discontented wrinkles in the middle of her forehead.

"I wish I was a fairy god-mother!" she said listlessly, picking up one of Baby Harris' dresses and dropping it again in another wrong place for mother to hunt after.

"What for?" asked Aunt Helen, laughing to think of fourteen-year-old Sallie being a fairy god-mother.

"Oh, why, lots of things! Just now I'd wave my wand and this room would be dusted, and Baby Harris would stop his screeching, and the boys would find something else to do besides plaguing him, and I'd have a little peace of my life."

"Why don't you try being a fairy sister," said Aunt Helen, smiling.

"What would I do?" cried Sallie, eagerly. The idea struck her fancy.

"Everything her royal laziness wants a fairy god-mother to do!" laughed Aunt Helen.

Sallie laughed, too, with a little blush. She wasn't too stupid to take a broad hint like that. She tucked on her little blue lace trimmed sweeping-cap, and soon appeared with the broom for her wand. After some vigorous flourishes the floor was clean as a new pin, and Aunt Helen was sneezing with the dust.

Next, Sallie exchanged the broom for another magic wand called the duster and, presto! all the dust had vanished, the mantle ornaments were speckless, the books stood in orderly rows, the window shades were snapped up to just the right height, and the sunlight looking in with an approving smile, came and stretched itself contentedly on the rug like a great yellow lap-dog. Aunt Helen looked up and gave her a funny little nod which meant, "So far, so good!" and Sallie took broom and dust pan into the kitchen to look for further labors. You never heard such a hubbub as there was out there. "Not unless you have three boys and two babies in your family."

"Pity sakes!" cried Sallie, trying to put her fingers in her ears, and so dropping the broom and spilling the dust-pan. In the minute that it took to pick it up she thought of her new character.

"Billy's bin an' gone an' tumbled wight in the fl'w bar'l head first!" said little Paul solemnly, stooping over to look in her face, as she bent over the dust-pan. "Spoiled all the fl'or to make bikkets wiv!"

"Ain't!" sputtered Billy in a hollow voice from the bottom of the barrel.

"Ain't! hear him, Sallie," cried Johnnie, doubling up with laughter at Billy's antics in trying to get out. "P'raps tisen't Billy's legs sticking out, oh, no! P'raps it's some other boy's legs sticking out! Oh, yes! long may they wave!"

Sallie couldn't help laughing, but she went into the pantry and gave the empty flour barrel a little tip that sent Billy out squirming on the floor.

"Wanted to make some paste, that's all," explained Billy sheepishly.

"Let's mix him up in some cold water then," said teasing Johnnie, "I'm sure there's plenty of flour in his hair."

"No such thing," said Sallie laughing. "Let me brush you, Billy, and then I'll scrape some flour off the boards for your paste. Didn't do any harm to the 'bikkits,' puss cat, 'cause there wasn't any there."

She comforted him so well that he was soon able to be around and tending to his usual occupation—that of bothering the babies.

"Boys!" cried Sallie suddenly, "sposen there was a fairy should come right in, and say she would do any identical thing you wanted her—what would you ask her?"

"Cut tags for my kite," answered Billy promptly.

"Make some 'lasses candy," (from Johnnie.)

"Put the pockets in my trowsers so the mar-buls will stay," pleaded Paul.

The twins placidly sucked their thumbs for a wonder, as if trying to decide what they did want.

"'Twould need three or four fairies to go around," said Sallie, "I'll do one of the things."

"My kite!" cried Billy.

"Candy!" shouted Johnnie.

"Pockets!" piped Paul.

"Draw lots," said Sallie. The trowsers were in luck. Sallie went and begged Aunt Helen for "sheet iron to make pockets out of," and sat down on the bottom stair to work while Paul clustered around her head, as Johnnie said:

"I could show you about the kite while I am basting," said the very obliging fairy sister.

"And couldn't you 'spose, tell me how to do the candy?" put in Johnnie.

"If mamma's willing, I guess so," said Sallie. "Mamma's taking a nap. Ask Aunt Helen."

Auntie said "Yes, indeed!" so Johnnie went to work. He obeyed orders like a soldier, and just as the candy was ready to burn, the pockets were done, and Sallie could hop up and "tend to things."

"What has my little girl been doing to keep the babies so still the whole afternoon?" asked mamma coming down from her long sweet nap with a rested face and shining eyes.

"Just playing," said Sallie blushing to think she had never played this beautiful game before.

"She did ezactly everything anybody wanted her to do," cried Johnnie and Billy, who were "trying the candy in sticky cups of cold water. "Playing she was a fairy."

"Better 'n'at," said Paul, standing, as Johnnie said, three feet in his pockets. "She's a first-rate, sheet, fat girl!"

Sallie accepted this compliment "from whence it came." She knew it expressed unbounded admiration.

The fairy sister came so often after that first visit that mamma said she should have to believe in the changelings.

As for Sallie, I heard her saying to Aunt Helen the other day that it isn't worth while to go around wishing for fairy god-mothers, when you can do the thing yourself.—Advance.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"STICK TO YOUR BUSH."

I find an article in the Sunday-School Visitor with the above heading, and it is appropriate that I must say a few things about it; it reminds me of the advice my father gave me when a little boy.

One day a large party of boys and girls were going out into the field to gather blackberries. It was intended as a frolic; yet we wanted to gather berries, as our good mother had promised if we would gather her a sufficient quantity to preserve and make jam, she would give us enough sugar to have a "candy pulling" that night. So we were all wild with joy and delight, each of us having a bucket or basket. Just as I was leaving with my basket and cup, my father called me to him. I supposed he wanted me to attend to some business which would break into all my plans for fun that day. But not so; for as he laid his hand lovingly on my head, he said, "my son, I have one request to make of you to-day; and that is, 'Stick to your bush.' He said, 'I want to tell you when you find a pretty good bush, stick to it until you gather berries from it. The other boys and girls will be running about, picking a little here and a little there, and every now and then you will hear some one hollow out in rapture. 'Here it is; I have found the best place.' But remember, my advice is for you to 'stick to your bush,' and my word for it you will have a nice lot of berries to night."

Away we went, just as happy as children could be, every one telling what he or she was going to do. This strange request was ringing in my ears all the way. By and by we neached the field, and Oh! it was a grand sight—the berries just ripe. To work we went; but most of the children went to eating, and running, as father had said, from place to place; and when it came time to go home, very few of them had any berries in their buckets or baskets. none was full, and I shall never forget how proud I felt when I reached home. My father said, "now, my boy, see what 'stick to your bush' means. It was a good lesson for me, and I tell it that others may be benefited."

Many boys and girls, as well as grown people, are never satisfied, and are always changing. If you want to succeed in life, select your employment early in life, and stick to it as long as there any berries on the bush. Of course I do not mean that after you have all the berries picked off you should stand idly by until some more grows on it; but hunt up another bush. Many young people unite with the church, and are very zealous for a while; but they do not stick to the bush; they get tired of monotony, and want to wander out in the path of sin. My advice to you, if you want to be successful and happy, "stick to the bush."

UNCLE MINOR.

LETTERS TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am eleven years old. I live thirteen miles west of Athens Alabama, on Elk River. My father takes the Advocate, and I like to read your good letters. We have a good church close by us, and we have a nice Sunday-school out there, and Bro. Weatherford preaches out there every Lord's day, and the brethren meet to break bread every Lord's day. I suppose I have written enough for the first time.

ROMA ROGERS.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am eight years old. I have been wanting to write to you, seeing that you are so good to answer the little children's letters. I go to Sunday-school every Lord's day, at Mars Hill. Papa and mama are members of the church, also two brothers. This is my first letter. Bro. Mankin says you are a preacher. I hope you will stop and preach some time, as Mars Hill is close to the railroad; then I will get to see you.

COLA GOWIN.

Dear Uncle Minor: As I see so many nice little letters in the Advocate. I thought I would attempt to write. I am ten years old. I went fishing with sister Fannie, and we carried the fish for the boys. There is a right smart of sickness in our country. I wish you would come down and go on Cumberland Mountains with us. We have a right smart fun wading in the creek. We have got twenty little turkeys. I will close. So, good-bye. I hope my letter will not be thrown in the waste basket.

SUE LIPSCOMB.

P. S.—Bro. James E. Scobey preached at Salem last Sunday.

S. L.

Dear Uncle Minor: As there are nephews and nieces writing to you through the Advocate, I thought I would join the cousins. Grandfather takes the Advocate, and I like to read it, and especially your letters to the children. I would like very much for you to pay us another visit. I am glad to say we have organized a Lord's day school since you were here last. We have preaching by a Baptist preacher every second Lord's day, and by a Christian preacher every fourth Lord's day. Crops are late, but fine. The health of the country is good. My letter is growing lengthy and I must close, by wishing the Advocate and its readers success and happiness.

SONG WORSHIP!

THE NEW Sunday School Song Book,

—BY—
L. O. EMERSON AND W. F. SHERWIN.

Price 35 cts.; $30 per hundred.

The advent of a new Sunday-school song book by two such men as the gentlemen above named, is a notable event.

Mr. Emerson stands confessedly in the very front rank of church-music composers, and Mr. Sherwin, also eminent as a composer, has had great success in the compiling of the best-known Sunday-school music books, and has for years had charge of the musical department at and other famous assemblies of Sunday-school workers. The music and words of SONG WORSHIP mark a step in advance, being far above the ordinary Sunday-school "jingles," and are dignified without being dull.

The HYMNS are by eminent writers, and are full of the best religious truth.

The MUSIC is of a high order. Superintendents will be pleased with the INDEX OF SUBJECTS, of which there is a great variety.

Ministers cannot fail to like the hymns.

One specimen copy mailed post-free for twenty-five cents. Specimen page free.

IMPROVED METHOD OF STRINGING.

MASON & HAMLIN

IMPROVED

Upright Pianos.

Entire iron frames to which the strings are directly attached by metal fastenings, securing

1. Best quality of tone, which is very musical and refined; free from the tinny which is common.

2. Greater durability and freedom from liability to get out of order; adaptations to trying positions and climates.

3. Increased capacity to stand in tune; will not require tuning one-quarter as often as pianos on the old system.

Having tested this new system of construction for two years and proved its advantages, this Company are now increasing their manufacture of pianos, and offer them to the public generally. Every piano of their make will illustrate this supreme excellence which has always characterized their organs, and won for them highest award at every great world's exhibition for sixteen years.

Illustrated and descriptive Catalogues of Pianos and organs, free.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

LOVEST THOU ME?

If Christ, the Lord, should come to-day,
As once to Peter by the sea,
And low and tenderly should say,
"Oh, my disciple! lovest thou me?"
To thee and me—
What would our answer be?

"Yea, Lord, thou knowest," if we should cry,
With ready lip and beaming glance,
"We'd stand for thee 'neath any sky,
With flag unfurled and lifted lance,"
For thee and me
Would this the answer be.

And if he showed his hands and feet,
Sore wounded on the cruel cross,
And asked us still in accents sweet,
"Nay? lovest thou me in pain and loss?"
From thee and me—
What could the answer be?

Just this: "We surely love thee, Lord;
Our wills are weak, our hearts are poor,
But clinging to thee, in thy word
We trust, and we shall aye endure;"
For thee and me—
This would the answer be.

RICHES.

Very few people admit that they want to be rich, and yet everybody wants a little more. When approached directly, every man admits that riches are corrupting, and that most men who are rich are such at the cost of their souls. It is a noted fact that rich men are seldom religious at all, and that fewer still are devoted Christians. And yet the desire for more is universal. And this desire does not, by any means, depend upon how much a man has already. If a man is worth but five hundred, he is exceedingly anxious to be worth a thousand; and if worth five thousand, he is very desirous of being worth ten thousand; and if worth fifty thousand, then a hundred thousand is with him a necessity; and so on, upon the same principle, into the millions. This desire, to a certain extent, and properly guarded and directed, is all well enough. Something of this desire for more is necessary to stimulate men to a necessary amount of industry to make an honest living. But the trouble is to keep it under proper control. Instead of desiring an honest and independent competency, and something with which to do good to others, most people are so anxious to possess large sums that it really amounts to a desire to be rich, than which few things are more dangerous to the interest of the soul. The Holy Spirit, through Paul, says: "But they that desire to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare, and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition." (1 Tim. 6: 9, Revised Version.) They that desire to be rich. There is a vast difference between desiring and laboring for an honest living, and desiring to be rich. Every child of God should not only desire his daily bread, and for those dependent upon him, but it is every man's duty to labor industriously for it. And it is every Christian man's duty and privilege to pray for his daily bread. And Christians have the assurance that if they do their part faithfully, living in the service of God by day and by night, that the Lord will hear their prayers, and that their efforts will be successful in securing such an amount of this world's goods as will make them comfortable, and enable them to assist others that cannot help themselves. But to keep this desire to accumulate money and property, and become wealthy, down, while we are desiring and working for a competency, is something that needs special and prayerful care on the part of every child of God. We do not know of any one thing at the present time that is more injurious to Christian character, and more hurtful to the church of God, than the great and constantly growing greed for gain. Professed Christians are running as greedily and recklessly into all sorts of speculations as others.

It was astonishing to see how many members of churches ran heedlessly into the marriage associations of a year or two ago. Immense were the losses they sustained in this direction. They knew the thing was of doubtful morality, to say the best that could be said of them, and that by very many good men they were only regarded as frauds of a very palpable character. Yet the greed, the anxious desire to make more money, and to make it faster and easier, and without full equivalent paid, rushed into these things, losing thousands, and blunting their own consciences to a keen sense of right that was a thousand times more injurious to them than the money they lost in them. If a man loses money, he may regain it, or make more. But a blunted, damaged conscience, is hard to restore. A man better lose all the money he has, by far, than to lose a tender conscience. And at the present time, the disposition to deal in futures, and to hang around headquarters of trade to deal in the miserable uncertainties of stocks and bonds, are not a whit better, either morally or financially. Month by month, and day by day, numbers are throwing away their present means for the uncertainties of future rise or fall of grains and stocks.

And the individuals who thus sport and speculate, and lose their means, are, by no means, the only ones to suffer. Innocent wives and children, friends and relatives, all suffer more or less, and not unfrequently sink their all in thus trusting too far those they think to be shrewd and successful. And frequently the inherited means of minors and orphans is thus sunk, and they are left to take the world as best they can without it. These are the almost certain results of speculations indulged in with the desire to be rich. But if, on the other hand, these speculators should prove successful, then the result is a loss of interest in Christianity, and ultimately a loss of the soul, which is far more serious than a loss of all the money in the world.

The only safe way is for every man to follow some honorable calling, be industrious, live within his income, and be content to go slow. He who lives within his income, and saves up just a little of his honest, hard earnings, will soon find these little savings growing up around him, till he may soon not only have something to do good, but to furnish a fixed and comfortable home for his wife and children, so that they may have a settled place to dwell. All this can be done without any doubtful callings, or wild speculations, if only men will be honest, economical, live within their income, save a little every year, and thus be content to go slow and sure. They that desire to be rich fall into temptation and a snare. Nothing is surer than this. They also fall into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in perdition. The chances are all against those who desire to be rich. The more they reach out in speculations to accomplish this end, the more likely they are to lose all. But if successful in these speculations, then the soul becomes entangled and ruined. Will not Christians study to be quiet, to be industrious, honest, economical, and learn to make haste slowly. Every body knows that the practical, safe, and happy people of this world are the people who work industriously and honestly, and thus make a living, do good, and are contented with what they have. Honest work is good for health; good for morals, good for happiness, good for the soul, for the church, for mankind in general, good for everything and everybody.

That course of life which God in Christianity requires at the hands of men is the very thing for them in this life, even if there were no hereafter involved in the matter at all. The world seems to be running especially wild just now in the matter of speculations. Look at the millions sunk on Wall Street in these speculations in the last month or two. The mania also seems to have caught all over the country about the same time. The Penn. Bank at Pittsburg, about the same time, sunk over two millions and a half. Nearly one and a half millions of this amount belonged to depositors, many of whom doubtless had labored hard and long to lay up a few dollars for future use, and now all at once lost, and not likely ever to be repaid. And all this mischief done by bank officers in wild speculations in oil and such like things. This sort of speculation is dangerous and ruinous to all classes of people. There is no safety to any man, nor to those dependent on him in such a course. But the financial loss is a small matter compared with the loss of morality, the sacrifice of honesty, and of Christian principle that are involved in these things.

Every effort to obtain money for which an honest equivalent is not paid, or to be paid, is a gross violation of honesty and of Christian principle. The honest and slow gains that are made in legitimate trade are not included in this category. It is honest and Christian to buy and sell and get gain in honest trade. But all these wild speculations in stocks and bonds are demoralizing, infatuating, hazardous and ruinous. All dealings in futures, and such like speculation, are but games of chance, and are as complete gambling schemes as the card tables, faro-banks, or horse racing, and no man can engage in them and not become demoralized. Then, young men, touch not, taste not, handle not these unclean things. Learn some honest trade, or some honorable calling, in which honest labor will yield you an honest living. And if in this way money comes slowly, it will come surely. And when a man works faithfully for what he gets, he generally learns at the same time how to take care of it, how to save it. Be sure not to cultivate any taste for high life and fast living.

Thousands of young men are annually sacrificing their honor, their money, and their souls at the shrine of high life and fast living. Nor are women free from this same evil. But we do not now particularize with reference to them. But the number of young men that go to ruin on this line is immense. Not merely the young men of the world, but young men of the church. They start up a fast life, for which a small honest salary will not suffice. They begin to fall behind, creditors begin to oppress, and something must be done to supply the demand.

Honest labor proves insufficient, and then scheming, gaming, defaulting, speculations, thefts and such like are resorted to, to supply the deficiency. Thus crime, debauchery, robberies and such like are filling our land, while wrecks of young men are going about the streets, and filling prison houses and criminal's graves. O! young men; young Christians, stop and think, and pursue a different course. Let honesty and industry be your motto, as directed in the word of God. Keep the ordinances of the Lord's house, and don't forget to read the word of God, and pray. Look after those things that make for peace and happiness here and hereafter. Let honesty, truthfulness and sincerity be your watchwords. Read the word of God every day, and allow its hallowed and heavenly influences to permeate your very souls, and direct all the thoughts, purposes and actions of your lives. In this, there are purity, honesty, safety, beauty, elevation, happiness, respectability and everything that is desirable in life, satisfactory, consoling, and sustaining in death, with an assurance of happiness full and enduring in heaven. But on the other hand avoid all stepping stones to high life; fast living, all anxious desires for making money fast, all doubtful and uncertain pursuits, and wild speculations as you would avoid poisons, or the broad open road to outer darkness and eternal ruin. Young Christian, the road to honesty, purity, happiness, usefulness and heaven is plainly open before you, if you will only walk therein.

We make this earnest appeal, especially to young brethren, hoping that some of them at least will be benefitted thereby. E. G. S.

PROPHECY.

I am persuaded that there is no subject fraught with more real interest to the world of mankind than that of prophecy, nor one susceptible of more conflicting and often contradictory meanings. And is this owing to any real obscurity in prophecy itself, or is it chargeable to a want of proper understanding in quoting and applying them? Be that as it may, our daily experience in reading and examining the writings of authors on these subjects, proves it to be true. And lest, as a new hand, I may be thought presumptuous, I will give the statements of one who I suppose will be regarded as good authority, to-wit: J. W. Monser, as given in the Christian, of St. Louis, in recommendation of Bro. Johnson's book termed, "A Vision of the Ages," thus: "With what gall does one turn away from the thousand attempts to interpret the revelation of Jesus to John! Cummings is too confident, Martin too venturesome, Barnes too prosaic in his moralizings and discussions in historical portions; Lange to encyclopedic and fantastic. This effort (Bro. Johnson's) shoots well between wind and water." Just so; and I wish he had given the exceptions, if there were any. And is it not also true that some at least of such writers lay aside that charity that thinketh no evil, speaking slightly of those who may oppose their views, thus apparently arrogating to themselves a knowledge that their productions hardly justify, when the Bible declares itself that its teachings are of no private interpretation? Hence Christians, separate or combined, are no more than so many miners digging in this inexhaustible mine, the Bible, and if one happens to strike a more valuable lode or prize than another, what cause is there for jealousy, emulation or envy? Are not all about equally benefitted? Besides, none of us originate anything. Then let all the glory rest and remain where it properly belongs, namely, with the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Now, I believe that all these writers claim that the second coming of Christ is as plainly pointed out as his first coming. Let us compare a little: Alexander Campbell, in his debate with Robert Owen, page 335 says: "That even among the pagans the expectation was universal. That Appion, Sallust, Plutarch and Cicero all say that a prophecy of Sybil's stirred up Cornelius Tertullus to think he was the man who should be king of the Romans. Some applied it to Caesar, but Cicero laughed at the application, and affirmed that this prophecy should not apply to any born in Rome." And the Bible proves to us that neither the Jewish scribes nor the Eastern Magi were mistaken with reference to the time or place. Is this true of our scribes? And if not, is it not even astonishing that we who are now living under the new and better covenant, in the open day of gospel light, and under the boasted intelligence of the 19th century, should fall behind Ancient Pagans in the proper understanding and application of these God given prophecies? For certainly they could have had no more Biblical knowledge than that which was rather obscurely afforded them through the Septuagint, or Egyptian translation under Ptolemy. And may we not justly inquire into the probable cause of this lack of prophetic knowledge? Hosea says, 4: 6: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because thou has rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me. Seeing that thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children." Again, Daniel 12: 10: "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried, but the wicked shall do wickedly and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This latter to me is a very remarkable passage, and most assuredly applies to the book of Daniel itself, of which Bishop Newton says, as quoted in Smith's Bible Dictionary, thus: "Sir Isaac Newton regards Daniel as the most distinct and plain of all the prophets, and the most easy to be understood, and therefore considers that in things relating to the last time he is to be regarded as the key to the other prophets." Query: If Bishop Newton is right in relation to the key, what of those who are trying to enter the prophetic house without applying the key? And for my own part, I have long since regarded the Great Image, as presented by the Almighty to Nebuchadnezzar, the great king of Assyria, in a vision or dream by night, which Daniel reproduced and interpreted, as embracing the future fortune or history of the world in a nut-shell. Allow me just here to strengthen this position by quoting from another good man, to-wit: A. Campbell, in his debate with Robert Owen, page 332: "The prophecy of Daniel more circumstantially describes the time in the wonderful vision which he explains for Nebuchadnezzar. In this view there was a prospective view of the history of the world from the time of the Chaldean or Assyrian monarchy down to the end of time. That this vision might sufficiently attract and interest the feelings of the world, it was vouchsafed to an Assyrian king and explained by a Jewish prophet. The Jews and Gentiles are both concerned in it. Nebuchadnezzar had the vision, and Daniel interpreted it. Thus Babylon and Jerusalem attest its truth. In this vision and in the interpretation of it, the four great Pagan empires are most accurately defined. The golden head of the image which the king saw avowed by Daniel to be the Chaldean dynasty; the silver shoulders and arms were the Medo Persian dynasty; the brazen body, the Macedonian empire; the iron legs, the Roman empire. These were the only four empires of the world which attained to universal dominion. The Assyrian began 2,233 years before the birth of Christ, lasted 1,400 years, and ended 770 years before Christ. The Persian empire began 538 years before Christ, continued 200 years, and fell 336 years before the Christian era. The Macedonian or Grecian only continued 10 years; it began 334 and ended 324 years before Christ. The Roman began 31 years before Christ, and after continuing 500 years, ended Anno Domini 476. Now it was directly said that in the days of the last empire the God of Heaven would set up a kingdom in the world, which should obtain the universal empire of the world, and that it would break and bruise to atoms every particle of the pagan governments, and most astonishing of all, it would begin without human aid; or it would resemble a stone cut out of the mountains without hands, which, self-propelled, should roll on, increase, smite this wonderful image of the pagan government, demolish it, and fill the whole earth. Such was the image of the vision. And was not the Messiah born in the days of the Caesars, who first named and governed the iron empire?"

In quoting so largely from the great teacher and reformer, Mr. Campbell, it is proper to state that my first object is to get the full scope of his ideas on the subject of the image, that the reader may be assured that the great importance that I do and may hereafter claim for a proper understanding of the image, in order to gain an intelligent view of prophecy, is not a hallucination of my own brain, but that Sir Isaac Newton and Alexander Campbell were similarly affected. Besides, the dates are important.

It will be noticed that after Mr. C. lays down his predicate that all governments simply worldly would continue from the Chaldean head of gold to the end of time, consequently not yet ended. And the dates show that through the metallic symbols which ended with the iron legs, or Roman proper, Anno Domini 476, determines the time. And to add these years, from the head of the gold down to the end of the iron legs, of course terminating at the ankles, we have about 1,100 years. These governments were all universal in the manner of governments, and great tyrants, and, as Mr. C. claims, in this last or Roman government, the God of Heaven did set up a government which, self-propelled, as described, as a stone cut out of the mountain without hands, (that is, human aid) is yet destined to destroy the image-governments, and fill the whole earth.

Now it is proper to notice the time and character of government that has intervened between the year 476 and our own date, say 1880, which will be found to be 1,404, of which time neither Mr. C., or any other writer known to me, gives any particular or definite account. It will be admired that this is a long leap, 1,404 years, without any well defined character of government. Now is the Bible silent here? He that would affirm this, I will advise him to turn and read Daniel 2: 41-43, which certainly does embrace this time, and the end is not yet. I now offer no further comments on these symbols at present, but will assure you that the image is not represented as being either maimed, halt, or blind, but is now, as it ever has been, a living, active animal, and indefatigable in attending to all affairs of the different phases of his government. I am aware that many writers claim that this 1,400 years are simply the broken fragments of the old Roman empire. But I thought our motto was that "where the Bible speaks we will speak, and where the Bible is silent we are silent." Let us not violate this God-given rule, but show at once where the Bible justifies this departure, or admit that we cannot.

Now, to show how wild, if not fanatical, writers on prophecy may become, I will cite the reader to a very popular work, which I lately procured from the Christian Herald office, but published in London, England, and styled "Forty Coming Wonders," fourth edition, being popular, of course, both in Europe and America. This work claims that the Napoleonic dynasty fully represents the great Anti-Christ and that Jerome Bonaparte, now living, is to become the confederate head of ten European governments; that he is to make a seven years covenant with the Jews; that the great battle of Armageddon is to be fought, and the saints are to be victors. The millennium is then to set in, and then all this world is to become the kingdom of our Lord and Christ. And, most wonderful of all, this is all to take place between now and 1890, a little over six years. I offer no comments; a statement of facts to sensible Bible men is sufficient. But does it not prove to us that the time has come when if there is anything in the Bible on prophecy that is reasonable and tangible, it is time it was presented. Not that I claim any superiority that others may not possess. In my next, I will call the readers' attention to the Great Image as presented to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.—John Cameron, in Christian Preacher.

L. R. Sewell, Donelson, Tenn., June 7, writes: "I preached last Saturday night, Lord's day and night, at Carthage. Had large audiences all of the time. We have a live congregation at this place, notwithstanding the very strong opposition against which it has had to contend from its earliest existence. But there is much work to be done there yet. May the Lord bless us all, and make us more earnest and humble."

RE-BAPTISM.

In Bro. Lipscomb's reply to my article, he says, "Bro. McGary and I refer to Bro. Campbell for different purposes." I referred to him as an example to which we could look back without prejudice, to see the length and breadth of, and to illustrate this position. Bro. McGary refers to him as authority for certain teaching."

My brother, how do you expect to allay such prejudice as is aroused by comparing modern conversions with those on record, by pointing to Bro. Campbell? Will they examine Bro. Campbell's case with less prejudice, or greater pains than scriptural cases? Those who will, are "Campbellites." It has been very sagely said that Campbellism is a myth, but that is a mistake, there is just such an ism in existence. The thirty-six little Popes in Texas who have issued a decree to excommunicate all who agitate this baptismal question, is Campbellism run mad, or "gone to seed." But I do not desire to be understood as putting Bro. Lipscomb in a class with these little Popes. I will give them the best send off I can, by dignifying them with a capital. Some of these Popes might be useful men in Rome, but in Texas they are too plentiful. While Bro. Lipscomb is as badly in the dark on this question as the little Popes, he is not afraid to meet the question openly. But the biggest of these little Popes have sought security against the question, through the pad-lock system. Yes, within their cloistered precincts, they tread the old paths (?) without molestation from without, by annoyance from "heretics" who disturb the equilibrium of "our plea" with their clamorings for the "binding" way of God's apostles over Dr. D's little Popes, presiding elders, etc.

Bro. Lipscomb, what did you mean when you said that I referred to Bro. Campbell "as authority for certain teaching?" If you meant what a fair construction of your language would indicate, then you were certainly entitled to credit for candor, when you wrote that you "saw brethren sometimes act in a way that was hypocrisy, when tempted; and that "others perhaps saw the same in me." I would score this for once when you were guilty of that sin, but I do not think you meant what your language indicates. I shall not insult the good sense of your readers by entering into an explanation of my purposes in quoting from Bro. Campbell's writings. You have more than once said "that if you or Bro. Campbell were inconsistent on this question, you did not have sense enough to see it." As I have said before, I do not think your inconsistencies should be attributed to a lack of sense. I have no hopes of your being let off on that plea. There is a sinful cause for the veil that is obscuring the truth from you; but when you determine to accept the truth, and earnestly contend for it, the veil will disappear. When the veil is gone you will see, that for one to be saved, he must hear the same gospel that the apostles preached—the same facts to be believed, and the same commands to be obeyed, for the same ends or purposes set forth through them by the Spirit. You will then see that the disbelief of what they preached is to be damned, immersion or no immersion. Not what you, or I, think they ought to have preached, but just exactly what they did preach. I see you think Peter ought to have left off "for the remission of sins." I judge this from the way you said in your last, that those on Pentecost were guided, and as Peter did not leave it off, you have been kind enough to do it for him.

My brother, the "word of the Lord is settled forever in heaven," and I can't see why you should try to settle it differently here. You say, "I believe no man can enter the kingdom of God save as he is guided step by step into the kingdom by the Spirit of God." You do not believe the kingdom is entered before baptism; so please show your readers where the Spirit ever directed such "steps" as these sectarians have taken. Will you do this? Those converted by the Spirit speak the same thing; will you give your readers an example from the book of conversions, when any of the converts said before baptism that they believed God for Christ's sake had pardoned their sins? You also say you believe the Spirit gave the direction "full and complete." I do too. It is a pity men don't give it that way yet, but I have quite recently seen a portion left off. Well when a man says that it is not necessary to understand that baptism is for the remission of sins—as you do—it is to say the least, consistent in him to leave it off, as you have done. It is worse than folly to ever teach it, if it is not necessary to understand it. You ought to give me credit for learning you this much, because you did not know it, it seems, when you were dealing with Mr. Nichols, but took pains to give it the old way every time. So, then, if you are right now, you were wrong then, and this discussion has done that much good.

If your theory is right, then if a man were to fall off of a foot-log into the water, and go under, he would be in the kingdom, provided that some one on the bank had pronounced some one of the sectarian or scriptural formula while he was falling; and provided he believed. I do not mean to say that you do not claim that it must be done to honor God, but I mean that the falling man would present a case with more "honor to God" than those you are defending. I suppose you want the proof. Well the proof is plain. The falling man would not have time to say, I believe God for Christ's sake has pardoned my sins; while those you are defending have said this before being baptized, which is a plain denial of what Peter said on Pentecost; what our Savior said in the commission, and what he said to Nicodemus. Paul said, "You have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you, being then made free." Those you are defending said they believed they had been made free before they obeyed the form of doctrine. So I claim that the man who does not openly deny God's word, comes nearer "honoring God" than that man who will give a flat denial to his word. I have heard of some things being "as easy as falling off of a log," but you make scriptural baptism easier than "falling off of a log." I ask the readers of the ADVOCATE to compare Bro. Lipscomb's last article on this question with what he said to Mr. Nichols, and see how the foibles of weak human nature can bend and sway a great mind, and cause it to stifle the very words of God, to carry a point. The fact is, if Bro. Lipscomb was fair in his argument against Mr. Nichols, he has been unfair with me, and vice versa. I defy him to escape this conclusion in the minds of impartial readers. I want Bro. Lipscomb to understand that I do not consider the question of the remission of sins, the strongest point for my side of this question, but I have pressed that upon him because I saw that his inconsistencies could be shown from that standpoint so easily. I hoped when they were shown, he would shift, and might in his change, accept the whole truth. As for the confession, I had hoped that some of "our representative men" would meet him on that and make short work of it. I know if I were the author of a certain commentary on Acts of apostles, in which this point is very plainly set forth, I should overturn Bro. Lipscomb's positions, even if it did show inconsistent practices "of our people."

I presume, however, the author referred to, is too busy manufacturing modern "pastors." What Peter taught on Pentecost and what all the apostles taught everywhere, is the truth. What any man has taught that is at variance with their teaching, is a lie. Any man who will try to show that sectarians have by the lies they have propagated, led persons to acceptable obedience, simply because the acceptance of those lies were followed up by immersion in water, must place a very low estimate upon the words of our Lord, when he said, "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Bro. Lipscomb will persist in trying to make his readers believe that I am arguing that one must understand all about the "hows and wherefores" of God's promises, before he can be scripturally baptized. I only persist that one must be led to the act by the Spirit of God, and not by the spirit of anti-Christ. What sectarian converts say before their baptism demonstrates that they are led by the spirit of anti-Christ. Those led by the Holy Spirit expect salvation where the Holy Spirit has said it is; while those who are led by the spirit of anti-Christ expect salvation where that wicked spirit has promised it. One is true; the other a lie. Now, if Bro. Lipscomb has the power to convert a lie into the truth, then he may have some hopes of gaining this question; otherwise, he must fail. Bro. Lipscomb says, "I doubt if there is any real difference between Bro. McGary and myself on this question." Now brethren, I must solemnly protest against this, we are as wide apart as the poles. I could believe Mr. Ingersoll's doctrine easier than I could accept Bro. Lipscomb's teaching on this question, and the Bible, at the same time. I shall have to suffer excommunication by the little Popes, I fear. Bro. Lipscomb, why will you not show the proof texts upon which you base your faith on this question? You need not say that I promised to prove that you are wrong; for I have done that, in the minds of many of your readers. You did not expect me to show it to those who would not see, did you? You do not deny that those who do understand, are scripturally baptized, so we are agreed upon that; but it is upon what you teach that we are disagreed. Now, then, you ought to affirm what you teach in a clear proposition. Do this, and this discussion will wind up very quickly. I challenged you to the defence of your teaching. Just affirm, as you teach, that those who did not understand the design of baptism before their baptism are in the kingdom, or some clear and fair proposition, embodying your teaching, and we are eager for the proof. How did the idea ever get into the world, that one was saved before baptism? Did it come from God's word? Bro. Lipscomb says, "whoever submits to baptism to honor God, is acceptably baptized." This argument has not been met." Well, I am going to meet it right here. No one can be scripturally baptized until they are taught. They must be taught what Christ sent the apostles to teach, and what they did teach; because that is "binding." If baptism without this teaching is honoring God, I want the proof.

A. McGARY.

General News.

The most exciting topic of discussion throughout the United States for the past week, has been the nomination of James G. Blaine and Jno. A. Logan, by the Republicans at Chicago. Perhaps the majority of the journals are pleased with the result of the convention, but a strong dissatisfaction, and great dissatisfaction exist with some of the most prominent and pronounced papers. The New York Times, New York Herald, Springfield Republican, are very bitter in their opposition to the Plumet Knight, as Mr. Blaine is called. Mr. Blaine is perhaps the most decidedly American public man of the United States, believing thoroughly in American supremacy in the Western world. His progressiveness and aggressiveness have no doubt engendered the opposition to him in the great commercial centers, business men fearing the results of a too aggressive policy. While on the other hand his spirit of dash and enterprise has endeared Mr. Blaine to the young men of his party. Charges of bribery and corruption were made on some of the Tennessee delegation, which have been denied. One of the worst features of American politics is this suspicion of bribery that attaches itself to every convention, assembly, legislature and congress. Samuel J. Tilden has written a letter to a friend, positively declining to accept the nomination for President if offered him by the Democrats. His letter is spoken of very highly, embodying noble sentiments of patriotism and plans of true State polity. His declination has only made his friends more importunate in their demands for his nomination. Should he be nominated and forced to accept, the two opposing parties would have more brilliant talent leading them in the coming conflict than perhaps has been the case before; for Blaine and Tilden are men of distinguished ability and fine literary culture. The people of Clarksville and Montgomery County, this State, have been thrown into a fever of excitement, by startling revelations of a series of terrible murders committed in the 9th district of that county during the last several years. A mystery has always shrouded the repeated crimes, and now a wealthy farmer named Morrow, his two sons, William and Charles, and his son-in-law, Dr. J. F. Bellamy, are charged with these murders. It seems that the bodies of the victims were secreted in passages of Bellamy's Cave, which almost rivals Mammoth Cave in extent. It is a most fearful paradox in human nature if these men are guilty, as they are men of wealth and position in society, and members of the church. The Morrrows' holding membership with the Baptists and Dr. Bellamy with the church of Christ.

CURIOUS THINGS.

Not long since, while attending a certain church during a protracted meeting, I saw a strange phenomenon, which, possibly, others may have seen, and may be able to account for. I should like very much if some of our Baptist or Methodist friends would explain the matter, if they can. It was this: I saw a church willing to save sinners, and I saw "mourners" at the bench willing to be saved, and I knew that Jesus was willing to save them, for he has said, "I will in no wise cast off him that cometh." I saw and knew all this, and yet, strange to say, none were saved, but went away unsaved, as they had come. What was the matter? Here was a willing Savior, a willing church, and willing sinners, and no one saved.

There is utterly a fault among religious teachers who send mourners away uncomfortable, and the fault should be removed. It was not so in the days of apostles. No mourner ever went away uncomfortable. Any one could be a Christian at once—the same hour of the day, or night, in which he asked for admittance into the kingdom of Christ. There was no mystery nor trouble about it. Will the religious teachers of this age make a note of this, and try to find out what the difficulty is which lies in the way of mourning penitents, who are willing to be saved? Something is wrong.

Maj. Penn has closed a Baptist meeting here, with fifty-three added. His style is tragic and highly sensational. Still, in some things, he has advanced toward the Bible. Instead of asking persons to come and relate a "Christian experience," he simply asks them to come and confess Christ. He still prays them through to pardon, however, which shows he still is orthodox. His meeting has had the effect to awaken many would be infidels, and we are glad he came.

The Methodists and Cumberland Presbyterians are now holding a "revival" meeting on same plan as that of Penn. If big meetings will save the town, we certainly ought to be. Oh! that some of these evangelists would have the boldness to step over sectarian tenets, and tell the people what the Lord requires men to do in order to salvation. If they ever do, we hope they will not quote it, "He that believeth," etc. The question is not "what our church" teaches, but what does the Lord say about it?

Dear Bro. Poe: Will you tell me where to find "Blessed is he that bloweth his own horn; for if he bloweth it not, it shall remain unblown forever." I thought it was home-made Scripture, until it was quoted in the ADVOCATE, some weeks since, from the second chapter of Jude. There is only one chapter in Jude. Please answer through the ADVOCATE.—[W. M., Lewisville, Texas.]

It is a home-made affair. There is no second chapter to Jude. The reference was made simply to teach persons that there is but one chapter in Jude. Of course the Bible student knows this, but there are many persons who would naturally turn to Jude for the quaint Scripture, not knowing but Jude might have half a dozen chapters. This sister will never forget it.

Bro. A. Clark entered upon his tent work last Monday. Says he don't know how he and the tent will suit each other, but he is going to find out. He is authorized to take money and subscriptions for the ADVOCATE.

Bro. Poe: I enclose a circular that explains itself. I want agents all over Texas. I will give liberal terms to agents. It will be out first of July.—[Clark Braden, Wilber, Nebraska.]

This book is a debate held by Bro. Braden and a Mormon preacher; and from what we know of Bro. Braden's power in logic and reasoning, we anticipate a treat in reading it. Let all who desire a copy, send me their names at once. It will be out first of July. Price is not yet announced, but we think Clark Braden's books cheap at any price.

Eastern Texas has been literally ruined by rain and hail. It has rained almost incessantly for six weeks. Crops cannot be saved. Fences are gone, and lands washed away. The outlook is gloomy, indeed. This comes on top of a very short crop last year.

We expect to preach in Henrietta, Clay county, third Lord's day in June; to visit Jacksboro, Decatur, and several other points. We greatly desire to meet as many brethren as we can while out, and hope all will be ready to take the ADVOCATE.

Add-Ran College, and Orphan Home and school, have been combined, and it will hereafter be called "Add-Ran Christian College."

HEREDITARY TOTAL DEPRAVITY.

I wish to offer some reasons why I do not believe the above dogma.

Jesus says to adults, "Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xviii: 3. On the hypothesis that children are without sin, the Scripture quoted is easily understood; but if they are born totally depraved, the language is not intelligible.

2. On another occasion, the Savior says of little children, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Mark x: 14. If little children are without sin, then we can understand the Savior's language; otherwise, we cannot.

3. Paul says Jesus "took on him the seed of Abraham," and in substance, we are often taught that he took upon him our nature. But if the human family are born with a nature that is totally depraved, would it not follow that as Jesus, our blessed Savior, wore our nature, that sin did attach to him—that to a certain extent. He was a sinner? But no one can believe that sin attached to Christ, although he did wear our nature; neither can the writer believe that sin attached to any one till he, of his own accord sins.

4. We do not believe that doctrine because the phrase "Hereditary Total Depravity," is not in the Holy Volume. Words are the sings of ideas; and if the idea was there, the words would be there.

Conclusion: We conclude in the language of David, "Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord: and the fruit of the womb is his reward. Psalms 127: 3. May the Lord help us to train them right. T. M. SWEENEY.

Dear Bro. Poe: In ADVOCATE of June 14, John D. Evans says: "I can find recorded only ten cases of conversion in Acts of apostles. Faith, as a condition of pardon, is mentioned in two instances, repentance twice, confession once, baptism once. If I am wrong, will some of the class set me right?" Faith, repentance, and baptism, being conditions of pardon, I consider that when either is mentioned in cases converted, it is mentioned as a condition of pardon. I think I find eighteen cases of conversion: Acts 2: 41, Acts 4: 4, Acts 5: 14, Acts 8: 12, Acts 13, Acts 38, Acts 9: 6, Acts 10: 44, Acts 11: 21, Acts 24, Acts 13: 12, Acts 48, Acts 16: 14, Acts 17: 4, Acts 12, Acts 34, Acts 18: 8, Acts 19: 5. Faith: Acts 4: 4, Acts 5: 14, Acts 8: 12, Acts 37, Acts 10: 43, Acts 13: 12, Acts 16: 31, Acts 17: 4, Acts 18: 8, Acts 19: 4, Acts 20: 21, Repentance—Acts 2: 38, Acts 3: 19, Acts 5: 31, Acts 8: 22, Acts 11: 18, Acts 17: 30, Acts 20: 21, Acts 26: 20. Confession—Acts 8: 37. Baptism—Acts 2: 38, Acts 8: 12, Acts 13, Acts 38, Acts 9: 18, Acts 10: 48, Acts 16: 15, Acts 33, Acts 18: 8, Acts 9: 5. I think that those that ask questions, excepting for information, should send their answers to the editor. How many of the class can tell the greatest number of times the word God occurs in a single chapter in the New Testament, also the greatest number of times it occurs in one verse?—[E. L. L., Pleasant Retreat.]

Dear Bro. Poe: I send you a report of a series of meetings, held by Bro. N. S. Williams, at Bethany school-house, in the southeast corner of Delta county. On the first Lord's day in March, at his regular appointment, he had three additions—one from the Baptists, two from the world. At his last meeting, on Saturday night before the first Lord's day in May, which he closed on the night of the second Lord's day, he had eleven additions—nine from the world, and two reclaimed. Bro. Williams has been preaching some eight or ten months, and bids fair to make one of our most successful evangelists, being a fine speaker, and knows how to rightly divide the truth.—[L. Jones.]

JAMES E. SCOBEE.

We learn with regret that our State is to lose the services of this distinguished educator. Bro. Scobey severed his connection at the close of this session with Hayne's Institute, at Murfreesboro, which school he has made a success by his untiring energies, and faithful devotion to the best interest of his pupils. For thirteen years, Bro. Scobey has labored at Murfreesboro with an enlarging influence each year, and many girls in the South can remember now, with feelings of gratitude, the excellent mental training, and pure Christian culture, and kind home-like associations that this good man offered them at his school. It is to be regretted that he deems it best to leave Tennessee and go to Kentucky, but no man should be blamed for desiring to better his worldly condition when the cares of a family are on him, and when the field chosen demands as earnest labors as the one left.

Bro. Scobey goes to Hopkinsville, Ky., and will be vice-president and instructor in South Kentucky College. He will have charge of the boarding department for young ladies, and all who commit their children to his guidance, may rest assured that they will not lack kindly oversight. His lovely and accomplished daughters will aid him in his work. He has done good in his life, and we pray the Father's richest blessings to follow him to his new field of labor.

DESPAIR NOT.

Did you ever have a period in your life when you felt as if no one wanted you? I had that experience for about two days, and it nearly broke my heart. I wanted to die. It was a terrible thought that no one wanted me. I was a stranger in a strange city looking for work. I went from place to place and got only a gruff answer: "No, sir;" "No, sir." No one wanted me. It seems as if the Son of God must have had something of that feeling down here; no one wanted him. The world did not want him; it took him and put him to death. If he should come into this audience, and go from seat to seat, would you say, "No, Jesus, I do not want you; go thy way this time?" or would you open your heart and let him in? In one place it speaks of his locks wet with the dews of the night. O, may God help every unsaved soul here to receive the Son of God! He has gone up on high to make room there for us. We are told in one place that he looked toward heaven and sighed. He saw sickness and disease and death all around him, and no one wanted him, so he looked toward home. I can imagine he was homesick. There he was loved by all. O sinner, won't you have this rejected King? Won't you do as Martha and Mary did—receive him into your heart and home this very hour?

If you would not fall into sin, do not sit by the door of temptation.

Stick to Your Bush.

A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS MAN'S STORY.

One day, when I was a lad, a party of boys and girls were going to a distant pasture to pick whortleberries. I wanted to go with them, but was fearful that my father would not let me. When I told him what was going on, he at once gave me permission to go with them. I could hardly contain myself for joy, and rushed into the kitchen and got a big basket, and asked mother for a luncheon. I had the basket on my arm, and was just going out of the gate, when my father called me back.

He took hold of my hand and said in a very gentle voice: "Joseph, what are you going for—to pick berries, or to play?"

"To pick berries," I replied.

"Then, Joseph, I want to tell you one thing. It is this: When you find a pretty good bush, do not leave it to find a better one. The other boys and girls will run about, picking a little here and a little there, wasting a great deal of time, and not getting many berries. If you do as they do, you will come home with an empty basket. If you want berries, stick to your bush."

I went with the party, and we had a capital time. But it was just as my father said. No sooner had one found a good bush than he called all the rest, and they left their several places, and ran off to the new-found treasure. Not content more than a minute or two in one place, they rambled over the whole pasture, got very tired, and at night had a very few berries. My father's words kept ringing in my ears, and I "stuck to my bush." When I had done with one, I found another and finished that; then I took another. When night came I had a large basketful of nice berries, more than all the others put together, and was not half as tired as they were.

I went home happy; but when I entered I found that my father had been taken ill. He looked at my basketful of ripe berries, and said: "Well done, Joseph. Was it not just as I told you? 'Always stick to your bush.'"

He died a few days after, and I had to make my own way through the world as best I could. But my father's words sank deep into my mind, and I never forgot the experience of the whortleberry party; I stuck to my bush. When I had a fair place and was doing tolerably well, I did not leave it and spend weeks and months in finding one a little better. When the other young men said, "Come with us, and we will make a fortune in a few weeks," I shook my head and "stuck to my bush." Presently my employers offered to take me into business with them. I staid with the old house until the principals died, and then I took their place. The habit of sticking to my business led people to trust me, and gave me a character. I owe all I have and am to this motto: "Stick to your bush."—Sunday School Visitor.

Extempore Listening.

In the late discussion before the Unitarian Club as to the comparative merits of extempore and written sermons, Rev. Brooke Herford touched upon a thought that deserves emphasis. He says: "It occurred to me that there might be something said, distinctly in connection with the value and power of sermons, upon extempore listening. I am inclined to think that a great deal of this present craving for special vivacity of manner arises from the listening of the present day being so largely extemporaneous. Did it ever occur to you that listening, in order to be worth much, needs preparing for, as much as speaking, and that there are a great many persons who listen extempore, who never think upon these great topics upon which they expect the preacher to speak, up to the last moment of entering the church?"

A great deal is written and said in these days about how to preach. In the days of Christ and Paul what to preach seemed of vastly more importance. How to listen, what preparation of mind and heart is needed, what attitude toward the truth,—these are more important questions than extempore or written preaching. "Take heed how ye hear," is a divine injunction; "Take heed how ye preach," is a human command. When the sower went forth to sow, he was as faithful to one kind of soil as to another. The seed was as good, the action as graceful, but much of the labor of the sower and the vitality of the seed was wasted, because of the birds and the soil. Soil pressed by busy feet and laden wagons six days in the week is well fitted to be a table in the wilderness for unclean birds the seventh day; soil that is thin by reason of an under stratum of rock is just the place to destroy seed. Soil that is always mortgaged to weeds has nothing left for the seed. The soil needs preparation quite as much as the sower and the seed.

The family altar at the end of the daily furrow will keep the birds away. An hour a day of Bible study and prayer will bar out the traffic of the world. A practical application of truth already accepted will break up the fallow ground, deepen the soil of the stony ground, and kill out the weeds that spring up and choke the harvest that is unto life.

Peter on the day of Pentecost preached to prepared hearers, "devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Paul on Mars Hill preached to extempore listeners. "For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing." When Peter's audience heard the truth, "they were pricked in their heart and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" In Athens "When they heard of the resurrection of the dead some mocked; and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter."

Brethren in the pew, the graduate of a fishing boat can succeed with a devout audience, but a graduate of Gamaliel's school will fail with an Athenian audience. "Take heed how ye hear."—Watchman.

Tribulation cannot separate you from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. But the love of God will, in the end, separate you from tribulation, and bring you out of it, and give you fullness of joy.

RE-BAPTISM—REPLY TO BRO. MCGARY.

Every error in the world is from the Evil One. Neither Bro. McGary, nor I, nor any human being, is free from these, or understands all the designs and promises of God. The reason is, we are born weak, helpless, into the world ruled over by the devil, our minds are prejudiced, our hearts are blinded, we see only through a glass darkly, in our best estate. Because we do not understand all the promises or truths in the Bible, is it a sin for us to preach the authority of the Bible? Is it a sin to obey what we do understand? Alexander Campbell believed in Christ, his heart gave him glad homage; he preached his right to rule; he proclaimed the sufficiency of the divine word to guide men; as he learned, he obeyed. Several years before he learned that baptism was for the remission of sins, while he thought his sins were pardoned through faith in Christ, he saw that baptism was commanded. Like the Son of God, he desired to fulfill all righteousness, to do the whole will of God. With this desire of honoring God, of doing his whole will, he was baptized. Did he sin when he was baptized to obey God? If he did not sin, he would have sinned to repeat it. There are thousands in the same condition. Owing to their prejudices and human frailties, they see that baptism is a command of God, before they see it is in order to the remission of sins. When they desire to fulfill all righteousness, and are baptized in order to obey God, do they sin? If they do not sin, they would sin to repeat that baptism.

Bro. McGary says I leave off part of the teaching on the day of Pentecost. I do not. I only distinguish between the command and the promise—between what the Holy Spirit commanded man to do, and what he promised God would do. I insist when man does all the Spirit commands him to do, God will do what he promised, whether man understands the promise or not.

Many and diverse blessings are given as the result of baptism into Christ. Different reasons corresponding to these differing blessings, are promised, owing to the peculiar condition of the individual. Christ was baptized to fulfill all righteousness, because he had no sin. His crucifiers, steeped in sin, were baptized to gain remission of these sins. The general purpose of baptism, expressed in the commission, is to put them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. For entrance into these embodies all blessings.

Any scriptural motive leading a man to baptism, makes that baptism acceptable. To be baptized to honor God, to obey him, to fulfill all righteousness, is a scriptural motive. Baptism submitted to for this end is acceptable baptism. To enter Christ is a scriptural motive. When a person is baptized to enter Christ, it is acceptable baptism. To be baptized for the remission of sins, relying on Christ, is a scriptural motive, and renders baptism valid.

To make a mistake in reference to one of the points, is no worse than to make it in reference to another. It is no more a lie of the devil, or a following of the devil, to fail to see the promise of remission, than it is to fail to see any truth or promise revealed in the Bible.

Bro. McGary says the whole process of induction into the church of Christ, all the conditions of remission, are laid down in Acts 2, as given on the day of Pentecost. Not a word or allusion, by precept or example, is made concerning a confession with the mouth before baptism; yet he insists that baptism without a previous confession, is not acceptable baptism.

Bro. McGary's argument seems to be based on the assumption that when the Holy Spirit told a thing, and man failed to understand it, this was a condemnation to him. The failure to understand always arose from the sinful and prejudiced state of man's heart, never from the failure of God or Christ to reveal clearly what was told. But is it true that God condemned every one who failed to understand all his promises and statements? Jesus told his mother and father when they sought him, when he lingered behind at the feast of Jerusalem, disputing with the doctors. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? But they understood not the saying which he spoke unto them." Here his own mother, owing to the veil over her heart, failed to understand him. Again, (Luke 9: 44,) when Christ cast the devil out of the child, he said to his disciples, "Let these sayings sink deep into your ears. But they understood not this saying, * * * and they feared to ask him." Again, (Luke 18: 31,) "Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning him shall be fulfilled. He shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated. They shall scourge him and put him to death, and the third day he shall rise again. And they understood none of those things." Jesus, on his last journey to Jerusalem, said, (John 12: 14,) "Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy king cometh, sitting on an ass' colt. These things understood not his disciples at first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him."

We refer to these things to show that Christ did not reject the service of his servants, because they failed to understand some of his explanations, some of his promises. But when they obeyed him, he accepted the obedience, despite the failure to understand all he said or promised. But he forbore with their ignorance, accepted the obedience, and afterward, when their heart was so relieved of its prejudices and pre-occupied conclusions, they saw the truth more fully, and rejoiced in it.

This principle of God's dealings is found exemplified in the Old Testament and the New—by Christ and the apostles—and clearly teaches that God accepts obedience rendered to him, by hearts desiring to obey him, even though they fail to understand many things that he plainly tells and promises them. He accepts the obedience, and afterward when the practice of obedience removes the hindering prejudices, they see the truth revealed by God, but hitherto unseen by them and rejoice in it. It was no sin to them to obey while yet not perceiving the whole truth God has spoken. The obedience is not vitiated by the failure to perceive plain promises and statements of God, but this obedience helps to the perception of the whole truth, and when perceived, it would be a great sin to reject it or fail to teach it to others.

This clearly established principle of dealing with men, applied to the case under consideration, leaves not the shadow of doubt as to how God regards those who see it their duty to be baptized, and who, through prejudice and through holding other theories, fail to perceive that baptism is for the remission of sins, yet are baptized to obey God. He accepts the obedience, and when they are led to see the further truth, they are to accept and teach it to others.

When man is anxious to obey God, the Father is patient, forbearing, and long-suffering with the infirmities of his erring creatures here. It is only men that are impatient of human weakness, intolerant of human infirmity, and would cut off without mercy those who are humbly doing his will, yet fail to see all his promises.

We have not given ourself the least concern about who is, or is not convinced, but only as to what is right before God. Hardly a single new thought has been advanced in the two last articles. I think Bro. M. and I have said about all we know on the subject, and that is a good time to stop.

QUERIES.

One of our brothers states that the demons cast out of the Demoniad, of Gadara, were spirits of wicked dead men. Now if the spirit of a wicked man after he dies does a work for the devil, by going into living persons, distracting them, why not the spirits of good men when they die go and work for God, by going into a man and making him righteous, etc.? I ask this because I think that our brother is mistaken about demons being wicked dead men's spirits. —[W. T. R.]

It is all guess work about the matter. Our brother's reasoning seems good, but the premise is uncertain.

I sent you a copy of Zion's Watch-Tower yesterday. I am not taking it, but a brother is. I would like to hear your decision on it. I also wrote and enquired of the editor of the Watch-Tower, he said he was simply a Christian. —[J. L. Hodgson, Claybrook, May 21.]

It needed little examination to tell the paper is an Advent paper, and is in harmony with them. A man that can take up his attention and time with such dreamy non-sensical dissertation on prophecies as this is filled with, ought to be ashamed to call himself a Christian. We do not see how men in earnest about their salvation and the salvation of their fellow men, can desire or have a taste for such things. There is not one saving truth in the whole dreamy system. To call a lot of idle dreams on prophecy Christianity, is to slander the Christian religion. Men whose claim in religion is that they can do what Christ plainly said no man can do, are not worthy the attention of any Christian.

"The word of God is the seed of the kingdom." All spiritual fruit must come from the word of God. Every custom, instruction or practice in the church, not springing from the word of God, is a noxious weed, sown by "an enemy's hand." "Every plant not planted by my Father shall be rooted up."

A VISIT TO FAYETTEVILLE.

We spent the second Sunday in June in Fayetteville, Tennessee. We found a good, earnest band of brethren and sisters worshipping at this place. Long years ago, when we were a boy, J. R. Collinsworth and some others used to preach there. There was a small congregation, chiefly of women, that would meet in a private house, read the Scriptures, sing and pray, and perhaps attend the Lord's supper. But there were no churches near the place to strengthen them, and they grew weaker. Afterward, Bro. Morton, formerly of Murfreesboro, and Bro. McDearis moved to the place, and revived the worship. Bro. Brents and Bro. Jesse Sewell and other brethren visited them, and added to their numbers. There has been a slow but healthy growth since. They have a good house nearly completed, and quite a number of good, earnest brethren and sisters, who meet to worship God every Lord's day. Quite a number of brethren conduct the worship acceptably, and are faithful in their attendance. The house was built without incurring debt, and we believe without help from abroad.

They are now without regular preaching, save as Bro. Little preaches about once a month, at night. But we find a growing feeling among brethren that even in the towns, if they will meet and worship, study the word of God, exhort and encourage each other, they will do well.

In McMinnville and Lewisburg, the two strongest and most active town congregations in our State, have grown up without regular preaching. In Gallatin, Fayetteville, and Shelbyville, they are doing well—meeting, interesting the brethren, and to some extent attracting the presence of those without, by their own worship. Some of them say they have better attendance of brethren and sisters, and larger congregations, than when they had preaching every Sunday—larger than the denominations have with learned preachers, organs, and choirs, to attract the people. A congregation needs the help of a preacher, but we are satisfied that the constant presence of the preacher is a hindrance to the development of talent in a congregation. We never feel that the cause is permanently planted in a place, until the brethren feel their own competence and determination to keep up the worship, and can find interest in the worship of God, sufficient to attract them to the house of God. We do not believe worship is acceptable to God, unless we think enough of that worship to be led by it to the house of God. The man who is only drawn to the house of God by the attractiveness of a preacher, and then concludes as he is there, he will engage in the worship, does not have heart enough in that worship to make it acceptable to God.

The greater portion of the disciples at Fayetteville are plain, industrious, simple-hearted people, not learned enough, according to the Old Path Guide, to desire anything more than God and his appointments. So long as this condition continues, they will do well.

Until within ten or twelve years back, there were no congregations within the present limits of Lincoln county, except the little one in Fayetteville. There were a number baptized on Swan thirty years ago or more, but they did not meet or keep up services of any kind, and soon "scattered as sheep without a shepherd." Now there are eight congregations in the county, I think, meeting regularly every week, to worship God. The work of planting these churches was done first, greatly by Bro. Dixon; Bro. Granville Lipscomb, and others. More lately, Bro. Dixon, T. C. Little, who believed and turned away from worldly prospects to teach his neighbors the word of truth, and Bro. H. S. Williams, the county superintendent of education, have been doing good work in planting the truth in new places, and in building up and confirming the disciples where it is already planted.

The building up of the cause in Lincoln County is only a fair sample of what has been done in many counties in Middle Tenn. In Franklin, adjoining it, the growth has been as great. This has been done by earnest brethren without any organization outside of the churches of Christ. Not one of the preachers engaged in this work has starved, and although they have made sacrifices, and have not always been as well supported as is desirable, they are not of those who are complaining, faultfinding, or seeking to introduce devices of man to do God's work.

For years the building up of the churches of God in the towns has been a point of anxiety in the minds of brethren in Tennessee. The cause in Tennessee was introduced among the poor, and did not readily take in the towns. When society is once fixed in the towns and the lines drawn, it is hard to break through them and get a hearing. It is difficult too, to get town people to think they ought to be anything else than fashionable, so the idea of joining or worshipping with an unfashionable people, is hard to get into their hearts. But the spread of the truth in the counties around the towns, and the present tendency of population to the towns solve the difficulty. Most of the churches in the towns of Tennessee are being built up by influx from the country. The only draw back is when they get to town they or their children desire to be fashionable society people, and so help to corrupt the church they build up. It is as impossible to have fashionable society folks, true humble Christians; as it is to have drunkards or gamblers true Christians. May the Lord overrule all things for our help and his honor. D. L.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Col. 3: 1.

The Bible informs us that this is not our home. But beyond this land of sin and sorrow, toiling, sowing and reaping, there is a place called heaven. A home for the weary, worn and tossed ones, where, when the battle of life is over, they can meet together again, and rejoice with all the redeemed in the spirit land above. Who is it that does not desire to enter in through those pearly gates, into the many mansioned dwellings that our Savior has gone to prepare for his bride—the church? We read that eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love him. We can but catch a faint glimpse of that celestial city through John the revelator, who tells us that the gates are made of pearl, and the walls and foundations are of jasper and all kinds of precious stones, and the streets are all paved with pure gold like transparent glass, and out from under the throne of God flows the pure crystal river of life, and the beautiful tree of life on either side of it bears twelve varieties of fruits, and ripens her fruit every month, and there is no night there—no darkness. There is no sickness, no dying, no parting with loved ones, no more seeking or sighing, but all is radiant with light, joy, peace and love. And these are the blessings that our heavenly Father has promised to all those that love him and keep his commandments; and he has prepared the road that leads to that city, and we will not fail to reach it if we follow his directions. But we must be prepared by having our feet well shod with the gospel of peace.

The apostle Paul says, "if ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." Then in order to seek those things that God has promised us, it is necessary that we should be risen with Christ. But some might ask, how are we risen with him? Let us throw aside all of our prejudices and human theories, and take down the old family Bible and make an investigation, and see if we can find anything that Christ or the apostles ever taught concerning this most important subject. Our Savior before his crucifixion taught Nicodemus that it was necessary for man to be born again in order to enter into his kingdom or church, that he was about to establish here on earth. He says, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit. As much as to say a birth of the flesh has been necessary in order to introduce us into the natural kingdom of man; so is a birth of water and Spirit necessary to introduce us into the spiritual kingdom or church of God. Let us turn to Rom. 6: 3-4, and find out what process it takes to constitute this new birth that our Savior taught, and see if his words ever came to pass. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death. Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Now we have found out that this process consists of a burial. Let us now turn to Col. 2: 12-13, and find out how we are risen with him, and when we receive the Holy Spirit, the quickening power of God and when our sins are forgiven: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses." Then we must be buried in the liquid grave like as Christ was buried in Joseph's new tomb, and we arise and walk out of the water like as Christ arose and walked out of the tomb. We are now quickened with Christ, our sins are now all blotted out of the book of remembrance; we are now a child of God, because we have been born into the family of our heavenly Father. We have by the act proved the fact that we believe that our Savior was crucified and buried, and that he arose again from the dead; and we also show by the act that we have crucified our old sinful natures, and that we are dead to the sinful things of the world, and alive unto Jesus Christ our Lord.

My dear reader, you who imagine that you have entered this spiritual kingdom of Christ, by either sprinkling or pouring, I call your attention to this important subject. Remember your Savior has said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." And remember that God has said he is not a respecter of persons; what he requires of one, he requires of all. And remember that straight is the gate and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, but broad is the road that leads to destruction. The apostle Paul teaches us there is but one kingdom or church, one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Eph. 4: 5. He also teaches us how the church is sanctified. He says it is sanctified and cleansed by the washing of water, by the word. We should be consistent in all things pertaining to spiritual, as well as natural things. We all know very well if there had never been a true genuine silver dollar made, there never could have been a counterfeit dollar. So if there never had been a true genuine church established, there never would have been so many counterfeit churches. If there never had been a true genuine baptism, there never could have been so many counterfeit baptisms. Paul was told by Ananias to arise, be baptized and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Acts 22: 16. If sprinkling or pouring would have been the true way of baptizing, it would not have been necessary for him to have gotten up; he could have been baptized where he was sitting or lying, but it was necessary for him to arise and go where there was water, and much water, for afterwards in speaking of his conversion, he says he was buried with Christ by baptism. He was then free from all of his terrible sins that he had committed, because he humbly obeyed the voice of the Holy Spirit spoke by the mouth of Ananias. He was then prepared to preach the glad tidings of his buried and risen Savior, whom he had heretofore been persecuting. And if we, like Paul, humbly submit to the teachings of the holy apostles, we will be risen with our Savior and be prepared to seek those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. We should now seek after and grow in spiritual wisdom and knowledge; we should not always remain childish, either in the natural or spiritual kingdom; we should not be like young robbers that sit in the nest, with their mouths open, waiting for the old mother bird to bring them a stray worm or a bug; but we must grow in order that our wings may be plumed to fly away, and so we may be able to drop a worm or a bug into other little mouths that are waiting to receive it.

Mrs. L. A. SHELZ.

REPLY TO BRO. J. R. BRADLEY, DOWN IN THE MOUNTAINS.

My dear brother, I have reached out my hand and invited you to come up a little higher, and stand with Christ and the apostles; but you down in the mountains have been mixing things that should not have been mixed, and placing things where they do not belong; and as you have been doing those things, you cannot change, even to be in company with Christ and the apostles. I sympathize you, I know how it is; I have been there myself.

Now, Bro. Bradley, read my essay again and again, and see what is taught. And if you do see the truth, confess it. I think you now see through a glass darkly. I hope we shall stand face to face. You ask, "Is there not some kind of a change in the mind, before baptism?" Did I leave my readers in the dark on this important subject? No; I showed them that they must believe with all the heart, and that repentance and baptism follow. I would further explain, that believing with all the heart, might be said to be a change of heart, as the effect of faith on the heart is to turn its affections from the love of the world to the love of God; and loving God, he loves His word and everything that He loves, and his neighbors as himself. And the Savior says, if you love me, you will keep my commandments; hence he repents and is baptized, because he loves God and righteousness, and hates sin, and desires to be freed from the consequences of sin. He is freed from the practice of sin when he believes, but God purifies his heart (not faith alone,—faith before baptism) when he obeys the truth. See 1 Peter i: 22-23, as in former essay.

The Apostle Peter lets us know, that by obeying the truth, our souls are purified. The Apostle Paul, in Romans vi: 17-18, teaches, by obeying from the heart, the form of doctrine, we are made free from sin. Can you not see, my dear brother, from these two passages, what Paul calls making free from sin, Peter calls purifying the soul, both by obeying the truth. When God purifies the soul, he purifies the heart. He does not purify the heart in one way and the soul in some other, and at a different time. Make the heart (mind) pure, and the life will be pure. Matt. xiii: 33. Being risen with Christ, seek these things above. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; before, he was impure, unsaved, but now he is a new creation; old, impure man changed to a new man in purity and holiness.

The point between us is: "Is purify equivalent to justify," save. Now if I can convince you that it is, I imagine that you will stand with me. First, I insist that the word means free from guilt, (saved from sin.) See Worcester's Octavo Dictionary: not poetry. Poetry may do down in the mountains, but up here the Dictionary and the Bible are standards. Second, the Savior and the apostles so used it. See Matt. v: 8: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." He does not say they shall see God if they repent and are baptized. But this implies that they have done all the commands, and are saved from past sins, and are now ready for everlasting salvation. In Rev. xxii: 14: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (No doubt on this passage.) Can you not see that the blessing here is only equal to Matt. v: 8, and that entering through the gates and eating of the tree of life, is only equal to see God in Matt. v: 8, is not this enough from the Savior? Now let us hear from the Apostle Peter. Acts xv: 9: The Jews had been contending that the Gentiles must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, in order to be saved,—have their hearts purified. Peter replies that God put no difference between them and us, purifying their hearts by faith. When Peter said this of them, they had not only believed, but had been baptized, and hence were pure in heart, (saved,) and by these words the Jews were convinced of their salvation, by the faith (gospel) without circumcision, (deeds of the law of Moses.) If he had only said that their hearts were purified by faith alone, (faith before baptism) then the denominations would certainly be right in claiming salvation before baptism. My Brother is with them without knowing it; and should call them brother without a sprinkle, much less baptism. I take only those who believe and have been baptized.

It is said of those that they are new creatures pure in heart, pure in soul, saved, born again; that they are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Yes I will stand with these without rebaptism. If faith before baptism purifies the heart, then we are saved by obeying one command. This was my error. Do you not see it, Bro. Bradley? You say, however, that the Pentecostians were pricked in their hearts by what they heard, and that this is proof of their hearts being purified. I once believed it, but now I understand differently; being pricked in their hearts, shows that they believed what they heard, and they now love Jesus whom they once hated; loving him, they keep his commandments. Those who believed, but loved the praise of men more than God, did not confess him. See John xii: 42. They were lost not with a pure heart, but for the lack of it. (Failing to become obedient unto the faith,—gospel.) You admit that spirit and grace sometimes are used as equal to the gospel, and are used in place of it. Being so used, some one might accuse us of preaching what the denominations teach. All right. I teach that they save, justify and purify, when used as, and in the place of the gospel. I teach that God saves, Christ saves, the Spirit saves, and the gospel saves when obeyed. But God, Christ, the Spirit, gospel, faith, grace, and the blood of Christ, fail to save the disobedient.

But you ask, "Where is there any great error in teaching that the sinner must have his heart freed from the love of sin, his thoughts centered on heaven, salvation, the Lord, the Bible, and his mind—heart—perfectly filled with the love and a desire for these things?" There is no error in this, but if you put purify in this qualification and connection, as you have done in another place, you mix things that should not be mixed, and place purify where it does not belong. The Savior and apostles put purify after baptism. This is what you should do invariably. Your poetry is on my side scripturally considered; for "faith which works by love" leads to repentance and baptism, placing the person in Christ, where is purity, justification and salvation? We said in our former essay that there was not one single instance of any one being purified, justified or saved before baptism; after the cross. If my brother could have given one, it would have helped his cause wonderfully. But as he did not produce one such case, we take it that it could not be done, or he would have done it. I also said that there was no Scripture for baptizing any one who had been baptized; that one believing on Christ as the Son of God. (The one faith and one baptism forbid it.) If any apostle had ever baptized such a person, then some one would have given us the chapter and verse. All who baptize such persons, do so without divine precept, or apostolic example.

Now, my dear brother, I think we are safe in saying that the effect of faith is on the heart, and that baptism changes the relation (state) of the person prepared in heart and conduct, or life. And that faith, repentance and baptism all together are means of God, for the purification, justification and salvation of Jews and Gentiles,—every creature. Can we not stand together on the above? Give us your hand, I love a cordial shake. It is said, "an honest confession is good for the soul." H. L. WALLING.

THINKING THE BEST OF PEOPLE.

Our danger is in taking just the opposite course and making the most of their badness, and perhaps attributing to them motives which never entered into their head to conceive. Certainly there are some about whom it is difficult to find much to praise, but let us be at any rate sufficiently charitable to assume that they have some good in them. Why are we continually searching our brother's eye for the mote? Better for us to turn our attention inward upon ourselves, and see there, what need there is for humility and patience. We may not fail where others do, but they also have immunity, perhaps from our failings, and so we go on, needing ever the gracious aid of One who is ever-merciful and nigh unto all of a contrite heart.—Ex.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER.—No 2.

"And I beseech you (brother) brethren, suffer the word of exhortation: for I have written a letter unto you in few words." Heb. xiii: 22.

We are now at the beginning of the personal ministry of Christ, and we will simply state in a few words, the fundamental principles enunciated by him, and then proceed to state the specific commands he has given to those who would place themselves under him, in accord with these principles. In his sermon upon the Mount, he seems to lay down these principles in a more connected form; in fact, the most of his parables and teaching at other times, seem to be examples illustrating some element of these principles, or the happy consequences upon those embodying these principles in their lives. "The poor in spirit, those that mourn, the meek, the seeker after righteousness, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peace-makers, and the persecuted," represent the principles that govern in his kingdom, and the characters that are accepted by him as his own servants. And while these may not embody all the elementary principles, we may safely assert that not a single person whose life does not embrace these principles, will ever be accepted of him. See the closing of this grand explanatory sermon; Matt. vii: 21-28.

We come to the conclusion (and it is a great advance step towards becoming a recipient of the favors of God,) that if any person be accepted of the Father, it is only through filling the character of one who is in deed and truth the embodiment of these elementary principles, and the fulfillment of these can only be obtained through an unreserved submission to the specific commands—the will of the Father—as revealed to us through his Son—the constituted oracle to us in these days. This being true, it is nothing to us whether we ever heard of the creation and fall of Adam; whether we ever heard of the flood; whether we ever heard of the Jewish institution as set up by our heavenly Father through Moses. So we now hear of and submit to the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the head over all things to us. And he that recognizes this fact in its fullness, takes away the large amount of rubbish—such as original sin, the ceremonial law of Moses, the substitution of ordinances, continuation of the church, etc., that cause so much alienation among the sons of men—and makes a second grand and necessary step towards the truth as it is in Jesus.

Now we come to these specific commands, that embrace the will of the Father to us in these days. The first great command is this: "That all should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. And the affirmation is, He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." John v: 23. And, the reason why all must honor Jesus is, "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." 22nd verse. And also, "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." 24th verse. Now we may assert this, that a man may honor everything else in God's universe—refuse to honor Christ Jesus—and he could not have eternal life, is not passed from death unto life. Now, my friend, you see the foundation stone that God has laid for the building and securing of our salvation "in these days." Other foundation can no one lay,—no one can be safe upon any other foundation. And now, it behooves you and me to examine this much of our foundation and see whether Jesus, the Christ, be the chief corner stone, or only a chief one; whether he be the only foundation, or a part of our foundation; whether to honor him be the only aim of our building, or whether we are not honoring (whether we aim it or no) God through honoring men or men's foundation, or buildings. If through the words, the sayings of Christ, our honor would ascend to the Father, "we will not come into condemnation." But if through our own words, or the sayings of men, we would honor our heavenly Father, we are condemned already; because we believeth not the record God gave of his Son. 1 John v: 10-11. This must suffice for the present. May we both study to honor God our heavenly Father, through the person he hath appointed, is the desire of

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM
ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

THE SULPHUR DEBATE.

SCENE.

Sulphur is a small village in Henry county, Kentucky, midway between Louisville and Cincinnati, on the Short Line R. R., situated in the midst of a fine fertile region of country, and inhabited by a thrifty, intelligent, and religious population. There are only two churches in the place, viz., the Christian church, and the Methodist church. The membership of both churches seemed to a stranger to be honest, pious and earnest, and quite friendly disposed toward each other.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

James A. Harding, the representative of the Christian church, thirty-six years old, a good scholar, with fine talents, and a very impressive speaker. His mind is quick, and his speaking ability extraordinary. His memory is excellent, and he possesses the rare gift of calling to his service momentarily whatever is available for, and advantageous to, his cause. He is always prepared for any emergency, and his zeal and honesty make for him friends on both sides of the controversy. Take him altogether he has few equals in the controversial field.

Dr. Hiner is a man, I should think, above fifty years old. He is almost a perfect specimen of the physical man. Standing fully six feet high, dignified and commanding in his personal appearance, he reminds me of the stately bearing of Daniel Webster, as he is described in history. He speaks with ease and grace, his voice is strong and statesmanlike; and in point of talent and ability stands in the first ranks among his brethren. His manners, at least during this debate, were unexceptionable, and by them alone I feel sure he made a favorable impression upon the audience.

Mr. Johnson and the writer, moderators on the occasion, were factors so unimportant as to need no further mention.

The audience was large throughout the debate. Fully five hundred people were crowded in the neat little church which would probably seat comfortably three hundred persons. Although every inch of available room was occupied, still they preserved most excellent order, and gave marked attention.

I noticed about twenty preachers of the Christian church, and about six Methodist preachers, and all seemed to enjoy the proceedings.

PROPOSITIONS.

1. Infant baptism is authorized by the word of God. Hiner affirmed.

2. Christian baptism is immersion in water; in it there must be a burial. Harding affirmed.

Dr. Hiner, in discussing the first proposition, assumed some very strange grounds as the basis of his argument. After making an effort to answer some fancied objections to his propositions, viz., "what advantage the infant receives in being baptized," and "the destruction of individual liberty," which was very readily disposed of by Bro. Harding—he assumed that children were baptized because they were saved; and in order to place them in this state of salvation, he had them conceived in sin, but born again, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, by virtue of the atonement, before they were born the first time. Of course this absurd and ridiculous assumption was exploded by Bro. Harding; and, by quoting the discipline, was shown not only to be unscriptural and unreasonable, but otherwise in conflict with the standard authority of his church.

His arguments, such as they were, were founded upon what he called the unity of humanity in creation and redemption, the unity of the body of the church, the representative character of children, the organic law of previous relations, and the unity of covenants. Under this last item he made his principle defense, taking the old ground that baptism stood in the place of circumcision.

It is useless to say that Bro. Harding fully met and exposed these baseless assumptions. Besides doing this, he read a statement from the Graves-Ditzler debate, in which Ditzler positively admitted that the covenants had nothing, whatever to do with infant baptism, and on that account he and Graves agreed not to discuss the subject of the covenants. In answer to this, Dr. Hiner read from Ditzler's recent work on baptism, a statement that the publishers of the Graves-Ditzler debate—a Baptist publishing house—had allowed Graves to change, add to, and otherwise modify Graves' speeches, and that, therefore, as authority, was unreliable, and suggested the propriety of having the book ruled out of the debate. In answer to this, Bro. Harding read from the book a certificate signed by both Graves and Ditzler, that they had examined the proof, and that it was an exact reproduction of what was said in the debate; that the publishing house had given Ditzler $500 to do this work; and then produced evidence to prove that Ditzler was absolutely unreliable in stating facts. At this point occurred the only jar during the debate. Mr. Hiner's moderator, with considerable feeling, called Bro. Harding to order, claiming that he had no right to question Ditzler's reliability in his absence. The writer, as co-operating moderator, claimed that as Ditzler had been introduced by Hiner to discredit the statements quoted from the debate, it was perfectly competent to test his reliability, or even his veracity, if necessary, as a witness. Nothing further was said, and the debate proceeded without further interruption to the conclusion.

Bro. Harding, in affirming his proposition, introduced his argument by producing twelve standard Greek-English lexicons, all of which defined baptizo by dipping—not one by sprinkling or pouring. He also introduced all the standard histories which declare that immersion was the action performed during the early history of the church. Besides, he founded an argument in the use of the word, particularly as used in the writings of Josephus. The arguments founded on Jewish washings and New Testament examples, were fully presented. The effort of Dr. Hiner, at refutation, was tame and feeble. His principle effort to disprove was the introduction of a negative argument on Spirit baptism. It is needless to say that such effort was abortive.

The debate closed with good feeling all round, and the general impression among our brethren was that truth had been most triumphantly vindicated, and good would result. G. G. TAYLOR.

Dear Bro. Harding: Some time during the latter part of 1883, I wrote you, after reading some articles of yours in the Kentucky Department of the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, on the subject of "Temporal Blessings," and since you were kind enough to reply, and request that I write again, I now take advantage of your request, to express my hearty sympathy with you in your effort to stem the tide of infidelity, that passes current for scriptural teaching. The Ingersoll school of writers are battling against these false teachers, and supposing they are battling against Christianity. These false prophets only cease from their internecine strife to hurl a few anathemas at the Ingersoll school of fanaticism, and again settle themselves to controversies about the "doctrines of baptisms, laying on of hands," etc., falsely supposing they are proclaiming the gospel; when, if you preach to them the gospel, the power of God, as you did in the articles on "Temporal Blessings," they fly at your throat, and pronounce you an old fogey, a special providence crank, that has not learned that you have emerged from the old dispensation, and go to the Old Testament for your faith. Now, let me ask these advanced thinkers a question: What is the gospel that the Savior commanded his disciples to teach, and by believing which we are saved? They will answer: Read Paul's definition, (1 Cor. 10: 1-6.) The answer is correct as far as it goes; but then is there not other definitions, which do not mention the fact of the "resurrection," and still is the same gospel? Then in what sense is the "resurrection" the gospel? In that it demonstrates the crowning act of the power of God, for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and your faith must stand "in the power of God," (1 Cor. 2: 5.) Then whatever in the Scripture teaches the power of God, is the gospel. Where is it first found? In the first chapter, first verse, of Genesis. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Now, see Rev. 14: 6-7, for a definition of the "everlasting gospel;" also Acts 14, where Paul preached it to the priests of Jupiter; also Acts 17, where he preached to the Athenians, and see how perfectly they all agree.

The same gospel—the power of God—was preached to Abraham, and to the Israelites in the wilderness, "but it profited them nothing, because it was not mixed with faith in them that heard it." Heb. 4: 2. What is one instance of their unbelief? After having seen the plagues sent upon Egypt, the Red Sea divided—been fed with manna from heaven, having been constant witnesses of the gospel—power of God—they went to Moses and said, Let's see God furnish this people with flesh, and the flight of quails was sent, and the plague with it for their unbelief of God's power. "Though an angel from heaven preach any other gospel—or power—let him be accursed." Then we see what was the sin which Moses committed at Meribah, in saying "Ye rebels, will you have us to draw water from this rock?" ascribing the power of God—the gospel—to himself. The "oracles of God" in the possession of which the Jews had such advantage—Rom. 3: 1-2—is replete with the gospel of God's power, the last verse, as the first, teaching the same lesson of God's power, "Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Go on in the New Oracles and find the son of man preaching the same power of God and ascribing nothing to himself. See John 8: 14; Acts 2. Find him foretelling the crowning act of this power in the resurrection, and the apostles and the Holy Spirit bearing witness to the fact; and see the apostles always ascribing the glory or power to God through the Son, in all they did, and see the corner stone of the church laid in God's power, to give eternal life, which was a tenet of faith among the Jews, but was now demonstrated for the first time in the appearance after death, of Jesus of Nazareth, proving him to be "the Christ."

By what was he quickened? By the Spirit. He was anointed with the Holy Spirit, and he promised it and gave it to his disciples, and they the "gift of the Holy Spirit" to all that believed on him, and thereby were they to be raised up in the last day, as he had been. But there are those who deny any spirit but the word; then why not after having the word of truth, and believing, not be baptized "in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Word?" Why not say the "word of God is the sword of the word?" "If ye have not the 'word' of Christ, etc., etc.," "how can ye have the 'word' of God?" Ye have the "word," whereby ye cry Abba Father." "To one is given the word of wisdom by the same 'word.'" See 12th chapter of 1st Cor., concerning "wordal" gifts, which Peter promised on the day of Pentecost to all who believed. Unbelieving blasphemers against the Holy Spirit, are all those who attempt to rob God's word of its power by these vile constructions, and come under the head of the last apostasy prophesied by the apostle, who speaking by the Holy Spirit in 2 Tim. 3, as "having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," which power he says was "of the Spirit," but God be praised it is one of the last in the category, "then cometh the end." How many of us can say from the heart with the holy apostle, "Even so, come quickly?" W. H. KITRELL.

NOTE.—I use the small letter as in "he" above, unless beginning a sentence, because it is always so used in writing the pronouns referring to God in all the Scriptures—the word "Bible" is unauthorized. W. H. K.

F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn, writes: Preached at Cathey's Creek, first Lord's day in June, at 11 o'clock A. M., and at Cross Bridges at 4 o'clock P. M. We had large congregations at both places, and much interest manifested. We have but few brethren at the last mentioned place. Bros. Sammie Sewall and Willie Morton are working earnestly on the farm, and preaching somewhere every Lord's day. They expect to evangelize this summer. We have three retired preachers in Maury county, I am sure, more than we need. Bro. W. Anderson is doing good work. He is preaching and teaching. Bro. McQuiddy has resigned his pastoral work in Columbia, and is working for the Guide and preaches some where he solicits names. May our preaching brethren endeavor to manifest more zeal than ever before.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

M. Kendrick writes: "I have baptized seven lately at Wenasogo, Miss. The disciples are building a good house at Wenasoga—are working earnestly to build up the church of God. The Lord will bless them."

Bro. W. L. Crigler and Sister Lizzie Dean were married by Elder J. D. Floyd, at eight o'clock p. m., June 8, 1884. The ceremony took place in the house of worship at New Hermon, and was witnessed by a large audience of neighbors and friends."

Bro. J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., June 5, writes: "I was with the church at New Smyrna last Lord's day; preached two sermons to large audiences; one lady obeyed the truth. This church, I think, is doing well. They have had about thirty additions in the last twelve months. I went to McMinnville on Lord's day night, and preached to a good audience; had good attention; no additions. I think this is one of the best working congregations known to me."

The Lord requires that we should deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow him. In what have you, brother or sister, denied yourselves, that you might honor God? The command is daily to take up the cross, deny ourselves, and follow Jesus. We ought every day to seek to do something for God that will cost us something in means, time, service, denial of pleasure and comfort, to benefit our fellowmen. To benefit man with a true service, is to honor God.

W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., June 10, writes: "Bro. Rogers filled my appointment at Tiel's Chapel, last Lord's day. Preached three discourses to large and attentive audiences. Had one addition by confession and baptism. I visited the brethren at Clementsville, Clay county: Preached three discourses to good congregations. Had two additions by confession and baptism. On Lord's day we had to preach out of doors at both places, the house not being large enough to accommodate the people. There seems to be great interest manifested, and the prospects are more flattering than they have been for years."

On a test case from Memphis, submitted to the Supreme Court of Tennessee, to try the constitutionality of the gambling act, the decision of the lower court was affirmed, and the law declared valid. This places the tester in a close place, as he had been sentenced to pay a fine of two hundred dollars, and serve one year in prison, what the final disposition will be. The law licensing pool-selling on races outside the State was found invalid. These decisions of our Supreme Court are to be hailed with pleasure by lovers of order and legitimate trade.

AN OPENING.

Bro. Scobey has determined to remove from Murfreesboro, Tenn., to Hopkinsville, Ky. This was from no breaking down of his school, or dissatisfaction with him as a school manager; but because he thought the pecuniary arrangements at Hopkinsville suited him better than at Murfreesboro. There is no better position for a school in the South than Murfreesboro. One is needed. The buildings are in good order. The prestige of success is there, and only a good manager is needed to carry on the school. Who will take it?

W. Anderson, Carter's Creek, Tenn., writes: "I have been visiting places in reach of home on Lord's days, up to June 1; namely, Leiper's Fork, Beech Grove, Thompson's Station, and Dark's Station. Hope to be able to get further from home during vacation. What efforts I have been able to put forth, have been to arouse the brethren to more zeal in the cause. I certainly believe the congregations generally need zeal and brotherly love. I know of no other way to accomplish this much needed work, than for the preachers to present the teaching of the Bible upon this matter, and earnestly insist that we all come up to the standard. Elders in front at the head of the column."

We met at Fayetteville, Bro. J. T. Eanes, who has been teaching at County Line for some time. He has been speaking to the people for some time at his home church and at Lynchburg. He is a nephew of, and raised by Bro. Seitz, of Burritt College. He is a graduate of Burritt College. He desires to change his location; wishes to teach school during the week, and be so situated that he can preach on Sunday. He impressed us as a young man of solid parts, and one that would succeed. His address is Spencer, Tenn.

At Fayetteville we met with Bros. Hart and Leonard, elders and teachers in the church at Cane Creek. Both of these are earnest and competent do men good service. Bro. Hart is hindered, by catarrhal affection, from much speaking. Bro. Leonard claims he is in debt, and so hindered going from home. We suspect that there is a constitutional timidity and sensitiveness in his way that need to be overcome. From our conversation with him, and the few words we heard him speak at the ministration of the supper, we take it that he is, in every way, competent to teach, and capable of doing much good as a speaker, if he would give himself with determination to the work.

A. Kirby, Marrowbone, Cumberland County, writes: "It has been so long since I have written anything, I will give a report of my work in Cumberland County, Ky., since the winter broke up. I have been preaching the most of my time with good success in the Southwest end of the county. We have some strong churches. But up the Northeast end they are all sectarians. We have had twenty-two additions up to this time. On the second Lord's day in March, I went to Salt-lick Bend, on Cumberland river, preached until Tuesday night, and had two additions; a man and his wife. The lady had been a Methodist; when she came forward to confess her faith in Christ, her husband became very angry, though he did not disturb our meeting. After meeting was closed, he threatened my life and said he was going to kill me. The next day I baptized his wife, and the third day her husband came to me and made his acknowledgements, and demanded baptism. I baptized him. I went from there to Sulphur Creek, and preached five discourses, and the result was nine added to the church; three of the number were Methodists, two of them were baptized, the others were from the world by confession and baptism. Two additions in the Salt-lick Bend at my last appointment, the second Lord's day in this month, both of whom were Methodists. Went from there to Judao; preached there the third Lord's day; had two additions. One on Sulphur, on Monday. And so the good work goes on. I go to Wright's Bottom next Friday. Will report again after a while. I would be glad if Bro. Rodgers, after reading this, would come over and help me this fall."

Bro. Little was a good farmer, took premiums for good crops and fine stock, before he began preaching. He now is compelled to neglect his farm very greatly in his work, and while the brethren are doing fairly well, sustaining him, according to their ability, he does not get a big salary for preaching, but says somehow he succeeds in paying off his debts as fast, and gets along about as comfortably as when he was devoting his whole time to the farm and money-making. We suspect he is satisfied to live more economically, and the fine stock and farming cost about as much as they were worth, so it comes out about even. We mention this to impress the idea that a man that lives economically and contentedly, can do so preaching, as well as in any other calling in life. In Lincoln county, as we have elsewhere stated, the cause is new, the poor generally come into the church first, meeting-houses have been to build; yet the brethren do not complain of neglect, nor of being starved out. An earnest and true faith in God, and a determination to help save humanity, will succeed anywhere. This spirit is the great lack in our work.

Some of our most valued correspondents have concluded, from our notices of long articles, that we are over-crowded, and so fail to write. It is only of lengthy articles that we complained; and we do not object, nor do our readers, to articles of good length, that keep to the point, and argue closely and clearly questions. But many divert the mind, and scatter in a way that is not profitable. Again, in the winter, when our preachers can't get out, they naturally take the time in study and writing. When the good weather comes, they get busy, and fail to write. We are crowded in winter; in summer and fall we have a dearth of matter. But we are anxious for all to write. We try to profit by all, and will, in due time, find room for all we think worthy. We are now finding room to bring out articles we have had on hand over six months.

Our printers, last week, transposed a couple of our sentences when speaking of the positions of Bro. Srygley, and the editors of the Old Path Guide, which prevented the true sense appearing. Here is what we said:

"Changes have taken place; yes, a year ago—a little over, Bro. Srygley told me he was preparing or making ready to prepare a series of articles against societies, from the standpoint of Allen's position with Hobb's on the organ. He did not condemn the societies as necessarily wrong. He accepted the position of Allen in reference to enforcing expediences, as true, and if wrong with the organ, it was wrong with societies. But a year ago the entire editorial corps of the Old Path Guide was willing it should oppose societies. Some of them were wholly with us in sentiment, the others so opposed to their management, they were willing to have the paper absolutely oppose all societies. One of the chief owners called the society movement and cognate influences "canalizing of the church."

Bro. Williams, of Cyruston, Lincoln County, Tenn., met us at Fayetteville. Bro. Williams has only one arm and one finger on that arm, yet despite these maimings, he seems to be a man of energy and force of character. Is, at present, superintendent of public instruction in Lincoln County, and is preaching to several congregations. I take it is supporting his family and succeeding in making a living better than hundreds who are whole in body. Energy and perseverance, we have noticed, compensate for a multitude of bodily drawbacks, and overcome many obstacles and hindrances to success. Bro. Smithson conquered difficulties, and by his determination, made infirmities that would have made beggars of most men, the instruments of his success. The success of such men ought to put to shame, the whinings and complainings of vigorous, able bodied men.

T. E. Tatum, Lebanon, Tenn., writes: "I immersed three near Temperance Hall, DeKalb county, Tennessee, last week. I intend spending most of the summer in DeKalb and Smith counties. About Temperance Hall is a very destitute place. The gospel has been preached but little there. Many are perishing for the want of the bread of life. They gladly receive spiritual food. We have some good brethren and sisters here, who are willing and anxious to do all they can. The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," is heard here, and should be responded to. These brethren are mostly poor, financially, and can do but little. Brethren, let's help them. If we can preach let us preach for them; if we can't preach, let us send some one who can. Too many of us preaching brethren are seeking for a wealthy community, where brethren are numerous, and we will receive a large salary. Let us not be afraid of these destitute localities. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," is the language of the Bible. Then let us go and trust the Lord. If brethren offer us a salary take it; if not go, and preach, like Paul, make tents, if necessary. Some of our congregations, too, are too anxious to keep their preacher with them all the time. Send him out, and let him rescue the perishing." You don't deed him all the time.

TWO VICTORIES.

A hero came from battle, where the slain
Lay piled in bloody heaps upon the plain;
And all the people sang the hero's praise,
And crowned him with the victor's honored bays.

A simple child fought hard against a sin,
And won a mighty victory within;
No one rehearsed his praise, or sung his fame,
But Heaven's recording angel wrote his name.

HOW TWO LADIES FELL OUT.

Miss Morris and Miss Jones were young ladies and friends of the warmest kind. They were engaged in such Christian work as every well-ordered church provides for all its members who are able and willing to make themselves useful.

Educated, refined and intellectual, their Christian graces made them ornaments of society. Perhaps they were so generally admired, and so often-praised for their labors and love, that they were in danger of thinking more highly of themselves than they ought to think. Certainly they did not show it by word or look. But they were always working together: out and in each others' houses, and months and years of delightful social intercourse, with kindred tastes and pursuits, cemented their early friendship, and "their hearts like kindred drops were mingled into one." It is often said that love is blind. We cannot see faults in those dear to us as we can in others. We love ourselves so dearly that we cannot "see ourselves as others see us." So it was with Miss Morris and Miss Jones. Each admired the other; and each were just so true to human nature, she had not self-knowledge, the last attainment of the human mind. Said Miss Jones to her friend one day:

"I have been thinking it would be good for us both in proof of our friendship and our desire to do each other good, if we should point out whatever we see in the other that is not just what it ought to be, and so help in the way of personal culture: what do you think of the idea?"

"It is not a new thought to me," replied Miss Morris, "and I would long ago have suggested it but for the fear that we might neither of us like it, and so more harm than good would be the result."

Miss Jones—"What harm could come of it? We both want to improve in everything that is good, and to be cured of everything that is not lovely and of good report. It will help to make us watchful of our words and manner, and give us an impulse to higher and better living to have the gentle correction of one we love."

Miss Morris—"I suppose you are right. I have heard of societies for mutual improvement, where it was the privilege of each member and the duty of the officers to criticise every expression contrary to the laws of good taste and usage."

Miss Jones—"Did they speak right out, and make the fault known at once to the whole company: that would be mortifying and intolerable."

Miss Morris—"It was all done in good humor, and the correctness of the criticism was often challenged and discussed; sometimes the critic was condemned, but all had the benefit of the discussion, and the appeal to authority was highly instructive and helpful."

Miss Jones—"So it would be with us two! We might not confine our criticism to language, though we should always mention it when we hear the other make use of a phrase or a pronunciation not in good taste and right. But perfection in words is the least of all wants to be supplied to persons well educated. More than mere correctness or elegance in conversation is the cultivation of the heart, and you and I have tried to see how nearly we could live with the mind and spirit that were in Him whom we are serving from day to day. And yet we never ventured to say to one another wherein we fell short of the pattern."

Miss Morris—"It makes me tremble to think of 'finding fault' with anything you say or do. It is not in me to do it."

Miss Jones—"Faithful are the wounds of a friend, and I do not believe that either of us is likely to cut very deeply, if we take the knife in hand."

Miss Morris—"The proposal comes from you and I shall wait for you to begin the operation."

Miss Jones—"You call it an operation, as if we were about to cut one another's hand or head off. And that reminds me how we are told there is something worse than to have an arm cut off or an eye taken out. If there is any habit we have unconsciously formed, and perhaps have cherished till we love it as part of our nature, we ought to be told of it if the habit is evil, or if it is simply disagreeable to others. We should be willing to part with anything that offends our neighbor, and the sooner we find it out the better."

Miss Morris—"Yes, that is very well and very true, but it is all in general and does not touch either of us, unless you mean to say that I have some darling habits, bad habits, that are disagreeable to you and others: if so, you would do me a favor to name them and let me begin to reform them before I am a day older. I see now what you were aiming at when you proposed that we criticise one another. You wanted to get the opportunity of setting my faults before my eyes, that I might see myself as you see me, and perhaps you will like me better when I correct them and become a little more like yourself. Well, go on, begin, now is the time, I bare my bosom to the shaft: begin, the victim is ready."

Miss Jones—"Why, you frighten me: I had no thought you would be hurt and offended by what I proposed. But I might have suspected it, for it was my intention when it came my turn to speak, if we agreed to be frank in criticising, to say to you that quickness of temper, haste in taking offence, or resenting a supposed affront, is a weakness on the part of my dear friend, which I trust she will pardon me for speaking of, and will try to correct. It is greater to rule one's spirit than to take a city."

Miss Morris—"There, there, that's quite enough. My temper is just as good as yours any day, and it is not very kind in you to betwitting me for giving as good as I get, I have often had quite as much as I could do to hold in when you have been trying to make me do what I preferred to let alone, or to do in my own way. The difference between us is that I am quick to decide, but you are set in your own way and never give in. We got along well enough and all the more pleasantly because our dispositions are unlike. But when you undertake to make me over, and to be you instead of me, then we are no longer one, but two. And this is all that your criticism has come to. A 'mutual admiration society' is ridiculous, but a 'mutual critical circle' is dreadful. I have heard that some doctors take live animals and cut them all to pieces to study the effects of surgery or medicine on living persons, but this taking one's friends all to pieces, to put them together better than they were made before, is something that goes very much against the grain. So, my dear friend, I guess school's out."

In vain did Miss Jones seek to soothe the injured feeling of her friend. Indeed, her own feelings had been hurt by the plain truths from the warm lips of the young lady, who was in the habit, as she said of giving as good as she got. Miss Morris went off with a sore in her heart: her pride had been wounded, her friend had been unfeeling, and she could not think of her kindly as she did before. They did not quarrel. But they did not work together as aforetime. And by-and-by they were no nearer to each other than any other two members of the church or the same set in society.

In my experience in literary work, with thousands of writers, young and old, I have learned to say as Mr. Burke said of taxation, "It was never given to governments to tax and please." So it was never given to me, nor to any one else, to criticise and please. Self-love is offended. Criticism implies superior knowledge or skill. And every writer thinks himself as good as another. Criticism may be invited, but it is painful to the one who undergoes it. We receive criticism gratefully from a parent or a teacher whose duty it is to administer it, but from one who has no divine or human authority to chasten us we will not. It is the same in social life. If the habits of our friends are not pleasing to us it is better to bear with them and make the best of it, rather than to try to reform them. Criticism does them no good. It often separates best friends. Fault-finding is the most unamiable, disagreeable and useless of the social vices. It is very offensive to God and to all right-minded people. The good old rule to "say nothing of your neighbors if you cannot speak kindly of them" would renovate society, if it were universally obeyed. And with this criticism of criticism, this finding fault with people who find fault, I submit the case.—Ironides, in New York Observer.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JOSEPH.

I had ten brothers, but Joseph had eleven. Have you a brother? and do you always treat him kindly? Joseph's brethren did not like him because he had a dream and told it to them; in those days God often made known things to his servants by angels speaking to them and through dreams. But it is not necessary now, for he told his son at the proper time who spoke to the people and taught them great and good lessons, and good men whom he selected wrote down what he did and what he commanded. So we have those blessed books now, which we call the Bible, and by looking into them, we can learn a great deal of interesting history as well as commands and promises that are given us.

But I sit down to tell you something about Joseph; he was a good boy, and his father loved him very much; he made him a beautiful coat, of many colors. This in connection with his dreams caused his brethren to hate him. His first dream was that he was in a field binding wheat, and when he placed his bundle upright, in the field, eleven other bundles bowed down to it; this made his brothers very mad, and he told another dream that eleven stars and the sun and moon bowed down to him; this brought a reproof from his father. But we are told that Jacob, his father, kept all these things in his heart. Jacob was very rich in herds and flocks, and they had eaten up all the grass near them, so they had to drive their flocks to a far-off country, called Dothan. One bright morning Jacob called Joseph to him, and said, "Go and see if it be well with thy brethren, and bring me word again." Joseph took the long journey alone. While he was afar off his brethren looked up, and saw him coming with his gay coat of many colors on, and said, "Look, this dreamer cometh; let us kill him and say some evil beast has eaten him." "But Reuben, his oldest brother, said no; but let us cast him in this pit," for he wanted to save him after all. When Joseph came they stripped off his coat and threw him into the great deep pit; but while they were sitting by, and eating their dinner, they looked up and saw some merchants carrying goods down to Egypt to sell. So one of them said, "Come let us sell our brother." They quickly made a bargain and counted out the money. For twenty pieces of silver Joseph was sold. But what did they do with his coat? you ask. Well they killed a kid and dipped the coat in the blood, and when they went home they showed it to their father and said, "This we have found." And Jacob wept bitterly, and would not be comforted because he thought his favorite son had been torn to pieces by the wild beast. But I have not time to tell you more; will finish the beautiful story in my next.

UNCLE MINOR.

LETTER TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I have been long in writing you our thanks for the nice presents you made us last winter. I only wanted to learn to write plain enough for you to read without too much trouble. I know we little friends bother you with our letters, but you must blame yourself for having such friendly, cozy ways towards children. I finished reading the book of Psalms today. I am also reading Miss Hadley's Bible stories, and the story for this morning was young David playing and singing sweet music to King Saul, to help cheer the sad spirit of the King. I liked the story so much. I hope if no other cause, the interest of the Home-stead may bring you to our village, and then out to see your little friend.—[Pauline Montgomery, Childersburg, Ala., May 10, 1884.

We should accustom ourselves to self-denial and patient waiting; for the blessings that God reserves for his people are like fruit which will be wholesome when it has had time to ripen, but will certainly be noxious if greedily and prematurely gathered.—Scott.

JUST OUT. CHRISTIAN MISSIONS

and HISTORICAL SKETCHES of MISSIONARY SOCIETIES among the Disciples of Christ, with Historical and Statistical Tables, by F. M. Green, with an introduction by W. K. Pendleton.

"It is full of information which all friends of missions ought to know, and which, but few could be able anywhere else to find. It is an inspiring illustration of the evangelic spirit of the noble men whom we delight to honor as the pioneers of the reformation."

"It is believed that the sketches present the very light on our missions which the great mass of the Disciples need upon their missionary efforts in the past, and the necessity which is laid upon them in the present."

Complete information of the work of all the State organizations.

C. W. B. M., F. C. M. S., and General C. M. C. & Co. No Christian library is complete without this volume. Bro. Green has done us a valuable service in preparing this book. He has spent much labor and patient thought in its composition. He has written it in love of the work of which it is a history, and with a zealous eloquence which must touch our hearts. Let us reward him by giving it a wide circulation. Handsomely bound in cloth, 438 pages, only $1.50.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

FLORENCE, ALABAMA.

HEART HUNGER.

Give us to-day, our Father, daily bread ;
And grant, O God ! that not alone be fed
• Our perishable bodies, but supply
The cravings of our inner life ; we cry
With thirst all faint and hunger sore oppressed,
For bread of life, for living water, rest—
Rest from the tumult that will not be still,
Food for the weakness of our heart and will,
Drink for the burning, parching-thirst of soul,
That all the streams of earth may not control.
We breathe the prayer our Master's lips have said,
Give us to-day, our Father, daily bread.

KEEPING THE HEART.

Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Prov. 4: 23. "Who shall ascend into the hill of God, and who shall stand in his holy place? he that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Psalms 24. "I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes always, even unto the end." Psalms 119: 112. Often are we told that if a man's heart is right, he is all right, whether he does just the things that God requires or not. In this, it is plainly implied that in this Bible land, where all have access to the word of God, and have the privilege of knowing what that word requires at their hands, have every privilege that could be granted to know the will of God, that even with all these opportunities some may be so thoroughly negligent of the will of God as to be perfectly ignorant of it, and as to be perfectly innocent in disregarding, or leaving out portions of that will. And not only this; some talk about it in such a way as to make the impression that a man's heart may be right in the rejection of known commands. As for example, some say, if a man's heart is right, it does not matter about baptism, nor about his being in the church. We do not believe there is any one in this Bible land so ignorant of the Bible as not to know that it requires all to be baptized that would be saved. To say therefore that a man's heart can be right and he be in a saved condition without baptism, amounts to saying that a man can be saved in a willing rejection of a part of the will of God. It is therefore appropriate to examine the word of God regarding this matter.

We may first ask, whether in matters of religion a man has any control of his heart or not, and whether he is responsible for the condition of his heart. If a man has a good heart, does he deserve any credit for it, or if he has a bad heart, should he be blamed for it? The idea that a man in this land of Bibles can have a good heart, a heart right, and live in disregard of the word of God in any matter that is plainly commanded, must be founded upon the supposition that a right heart is something given directly by the Lord, and in which the man has little or nothing to do. And if this be true, it involves two absurdities too great to be believed; first, that God gives to some men a right heart that are living in known disobedience to his word; and in the second place it involves the idea that those who have bad hearts, have them because God does not give them good hearts. This whole idea of having a good heart and yet refusing some of the commands of God, is upon the basis that man is irresponsible for his actions,—that is, can neither do right nor wrong of his own accord. But is this true, as taught in the Bible? One of the passages above says, "I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes alway." As the Psalmist says, he inclined his heart to keep the Lord's word; this proves that he had control of his heart, and could incline it as he saw proper. He could have inclined it to disobey God, as easily as he could incline it to do his precepts. This being true, man is responsible for the kind of heart he has. If he has a good heart, it is because he has yielded it to the will of God, and if he has a bad heart, it is because he refuses to yield it in doing the will of God. To do the will of God, is to do what God commands. Not to do his will, is to refuse or fail to do what he commands. Man is therefore fully responsible for the condition of his heart, whether good or bad, right or wrong, as indicated by this passage.

But another one of the above passages says, keep thy heart, for out of it (the heart) are the issues of life, meaning the actions, the behavior of a man's life. And as man is commanded to keep his heart, that from which the actions of the life flow, this makes man fully responsible for his life, whether it be good or bad. He can keep his heart right, and do right, or he can keep his heart wrong, and do wrong. Therefore, whether a man's heart is right or wrong, depends upon himself. When Simon obeyed the gospel, his heart was right. When he thought the gift of God could be purchased with money, his heart was wrong. If a man in this land of Bibles can have a right heart when not doing all the Lord's will because he is ignorant of portions of it, then the more ignorant he is, the less he knows and does of the will of God, the less responsibility he has, and of course the less of that will it takes to save him. Surely ignorance is bliss in this case, and upon this principle the heathen are the happiest of all people, for they are all ignorant of the entire will of God, and will therefore be saved because they know nothing of the Lord's will.

This must be true, if it be so that men are irresponsible for their ignorance of the word of God where that word is. But this whole claim is a false one, and is contrary to the word of God, and amounts to an apology for the disobedience of men to the will of God. When the gospel was first proclaimed to the world, all had sinned and come short of the glory of God. When Jesus commissioned the apostles to the world, he never intimated that there were any that would be saved without the gospel and the obedience that it requires. He said, "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Not one was to be left out. He also said of the gospel, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But he never said nor intimated that he that believes and does not think baptism essential shall be saved anyhow. If he had said something like that, then this modern doctrine of man's heart being right, though he may fail to do some of God's command's, would be clearly made out. But nothing of the kind is said by the Savior. These things are only from men, not from God.

No man where the word of God is ever learns the gospel, the plan of salvation, and how man can be saved, without also learning that baptism is required. And having learned this, and then refusing to be baptized because he thinks it not essential, not necessary, places a man against God, and man's wisdom against the wisdom of God, and makes the man that does it a rebel against God. Can a man who is in rebellion against God have a right heart? the thing is impossible, and those who thus teach encourage rebellion against God. And if such men do not cease such teaching they may find themselves fighting against God.

Jesus said, "Whosoever shall break one of the least of these commandments and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven." Again he said, "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do." Luke 17: 10. If when a man does all the commandments he only does his duty, when he leaves out some of the commandments he does less than his duty. He that hears and does the teachings of the Son of God, does the will of God. He that hears, and does them not, does not do his will. Only those who do the Lord's will have the promise of entering into the kingdom of heaven. The man therefore that trusts in his heart being right, when he is rejecting part of the will of God, is only trusting in men, and Solomon says, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." Prov. 28: 26. A prophet of God said, "Thus saith the Lord: cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord." Jer. 17: 5. The man therefore that turns away from the word of God, and turns to his own heart, his own feelings and emotions, has a poor showing for his salvation. And it is a crying shame and sin for men to insinuate that a man's heart may be right when he is trusting to men, and the impulses of his own heart, while he is turning away from the word of the Lord. The man that encourages men to turn away from the word of God places himself in an unenviable light in the sight of God. The prophet again said: "My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains; they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting place." Jer. 50: 16.

The Jewish people at this time had wandered so far from the word of God as to be carried captives to Babaylon for their sins. But how came them to sin so heavily? It was because they followed their shepherds, their leaders, followed what men said instead of what God said when they had access to his word. Therefore the fact that they allowed themselves to be led astray by their leaders, by men, did not shield them: they were carried off into captivity. But how was it with the shepherds, did they go free? Nay verily. God said he was against the shepherds, and would require his flock at their hands. Eze. 34: 20. Neither shepherd nor flock will go free when the people suffer themselves to be led away from the plain word of God by their leaders. How fearful it is to depart from the word of God, and how dangerous for men who claim to be teachers to lead the people astray. God will not hold either party guiltless, as is plainly shown in above passages, and many others not given in this article.

THE GREAT IMAGE.

Although about 2500 years have passed away since the Almighty presented in a vision or dream by night to Nebuchadnezzar, the great king of Assyria, the wonderful metallic image. Yet if any of our best Biblical writers, commentators, or even those who have made the predictions of the prophets a special study, has, as yet, given to the world a closely written and well developed exposition of the types and symbols contained in the great image, it has not been my good fortune to have seen it. And why not? for certainly no one will claim that God presented this image to a heathen monarch, and inspired a chosen prophet to interpret and place it upon record in his Holy Bible for the benefit or instruction of angels; but certainly for the special benefit of his faithful children, of all after generations of men, even down to the end of time. Yet I have heard it asserted that these symbols were couched in such ambiguous language and obscure metaphors, that they were beyond the comprehension of uninspired men. If this is really true, the only reply that I can give, is that it shows a lack of foresight, foreknowledge, such as prediction requires, which no one who believes in the omniscience of God can for a moment retain. While others claim that predictions of the prophets are not intended to be understood until they are literally fulfilled. And yet such persons will claim that we most assuredly are under the seventh and last trumpet, as indicated in the Apocalypse of John, and at the same time cannot give you any real assurance of the fulfillment of any of the previous six. And I regard the subject of the image as being in a very similar condition; even taking the expositions of our best Biblical writers, authors, and commentators as examples. My prime difficulty is expressed in trying to reconcile the statement of Mr. Campbell when he affirms (and I accept as true) that the old Roman empire symbolized in the image by the iron legs terminating at the ankles, entirely failed (I think) to describe what other symbol the worldly governments have been under for these last 1404 years. That the stone kingdom or kingdom of Christ was cut out, or had its beginning in the days of the Cæsars, or iron legs is not disputed. But that it has become universal, no one claims. And as it was not a worldly government, it has nothing to do with the symbols that describe the feet and toes of the great image, but to destroy and supplant it in God's good time.

But I shall regard Mr. Campbell as treating the subject on rather general principles; and in order to obtain the particulars as taught at Bethany College, (as I suppose,) I have selected an excellent work written by R. Milligan, president of the College of the Bible in Kentucky University, and entitled "Reason and Revelation." This is, as I believe, a work of great merit; and (as I suppose) may be regarded as a fair exponent of the teaching of not only Kentucky University, but also that of Bethany College, as Bro. Milligan was for some time a very acceptable teacher in that renowned institution, which, I infer, is not a bit behind any in the world on Biblical subjects. And any one who has read old Bro. Campbell's Christian Baptist, and his other writings generally, have the assurance that he and all the Christian brotherhood hold their teaching and writings as being entirely open to criticism, and fair examination. This is certainly right, because I believe that it is not claimed that any one except Jesus the Christ has yet arrived at perfection in knowledge. And this, I think, is lamentably true in relation to the predictions of the prophets, and especially in relation to the great image, which Mr. Campbell assures us embraces all the governments of the world from the days of Nebuchadnezzar down to the end of time; yet, as stated in our former article, he only gives us four Pagan governments, the last of which terminated A. D., 476, and from some cause failed to tell us what symbol or government has ruled the world since that date, which, as the reader will notice, leaves a gap of about 1400 years unaccounted for; and not knowing what Bro. Campbell's private teaching was on that subject, I have examined this work carefully. Taking it for granted that the pupil would disclose the teaching of the Master. And I find a symbols or governments are all that either gives. Whereas, I claim that there are six plain symbols, the two last of which both symbolically and historically fills this gap of 1400 years, when properly applied, without calling in the aid of the "fragments of the old Roman empire," of which the Bible says not one word. And if so, why do we as Christians make use of the term? Is not our motto, "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; and where the Bible is silent, we must be silent." Indeed I am of the opinion that if Mr. Gibbon had not entitled his history "The Decline and fall of the Roman Empire," together with other profane authors, Christians would not have been led so far astray on that subject as to ignore or reject two plain symbols, as found in the feet and toes of the image. Daniel informs us "that the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." This clearly implies that God anticipated a very supreme character of knowledge on the part of believers.

And if we who greatly boast of the increased facilities of acquiring Biblical knowledge under the open day of Gospel light of this 19th century, do then pass over, ignore, or misapply plain symbols which God gave for our special instruction, what is the difference? Is not the result the same, whether believers or unbelievers? Now I propose to test this by first quoting from Bro. Milligan's book, and then contrast its teaching with the symbols bearing on that point. Page 64: "The fourth was the Roman empire; it and it alone fulfills all the conditions and specifications of this part of the prophecy; (1) because it succeeded the Greek empire; (2) it was universal; (3) it was on account of its great strength most properly represented by the iron; (4) but the Romans were weakened by their admiration for foreigners. And hence theirs was an empire composed of iron and clay. Mistake 1: The other three kingdoms were comparatively homogenous. Mistake 2: We have now clearly identified the image as a whole. Mistake 3: And also in its several parts." Mistake 4: This will do for the present.

Now, I think that it does not require a very discriminating mind to discover at once that our author had no just and proper conception of the true relation of the symbols, in their anatomical division, in regard to the physical man. For he uses the legs and feet interchangeably, thus confounding two symbols, making the legs the feet, and vice versa, the feet the legs; not, seemingly, considering that in the anatomy of the human body, the legs terminate at the ankles, and hence the feet are as distinct from the legs, as was the Medo-Persian arms and heart from Nebuchadnezzar's golden head; and, I claim, must be so regarded, or confusion will inevitably follow.

Having now premised this, I will quote Daniel 2: 40, which represents the legs, and not the feet at all, as I claim. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these shall it break in pieces and bruise." Now, the above Scripture certainly does embrace the symbol which represents the iron legs, and yet not one word about clay. But to make assurance doubly sure, I will call the reader's attention to the nineteenth verse of the seventh chapter of Daniel, where this symbol is duplicated, and the prophet is interrogating the angel with regard to this fourth beast, which David said had "great iron teeth and brazen claws." And no clay yet. Why not? Simply because the worldly governments had not yet reached the potter's clay and iron state. But the Romans had already inherited the brass, having conquered their dominion.

But I will here reproduce a portion of the author's reasons for his claims. "But the Romans were weakened by their admixture with foreigners; and hence theirs was an empire composed of iron and clay. The other three kingdoms were comparatively homogenous." Now, I think that his reasons are as much at fault as his premises. Let us see. I believe that Julius Cæsar's conquest of Pompey is regarded as the beginning of the iron legs, or Roman government, and was he not there in possession of say at least one-third of the world? Now, compare this with the beginnings of Alexander the Great; the small kingdom of Macedonia, and some portions of Greece, rather when he crossed the Hellespont and began the conquest of Persia, he was only able to raise an army of thirty thousand infantry, and five thousand cavalry—thirty-five thousand in all. The smallness of his army rendered him, at first, contemptible in their sight. But God had sent him, and therefore he not only succeeded in conquering the Persians, but in the short space of ten years brought the balance of the world to submit to the power of his arms.

Now, think of the iron and clay argument, and then draw your own conclusions. Why, only think of it! The very spots on the leopard symbolized and at once determined the great variety of conquered nations, at once brought into and under his extensive empire. Also the four wings on the leopard's back symbolized his rapid conquests, as did the spots the mixed-up nations, that composed his empire. The clay argument then is a failure. And next, thus: "We have now clearly identified the image as a whole, (if so you have left him maimed and not a foot to stand on,) and also in its several parts." Then, of course, the four universal Pagan empires constitute all his parts, and which ended A. D. 476. For in the same connection he says: "And it only remains, therefore, to consider the stone, or rather the kingdom of God, of which the stone is here used as an emblem." This last makes it very clear that our excellent author entirely ignores the feet and toes simply by confounding them with the legs, thus paying no attention to the anatomy of the human form. But that we may not misrepresent his meaning, I will make a short extract from page 67, where he is speaking of the early effect of the preaching of the gospel on Cornelius and others of his day: "The image was then smitten on its feet, (when chronologically the symbol lacked about four hundred years of reaching the feet.) But the wound was mortal to the whole body. The tyrant that had governed the world from the days of Nebuchadnezzar to that hour, was slain." Now let us notice time a little. This was say the latter part of the first century of the Christian era, about 700 years after Nebuchadnezzar's day. And about 1800 years have transpired since this image was slain, and their swords beaten into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks. Yet, strange to say that this slain image has been delighting itself in blood and carnage, for lol these 1800 years after its death, and is now just about as ready for war as ever. But again: "His spirit was vanquished, and his whole physical organization, consisting of gold, silver, brass and iron, and clay, was there broken into many fragments." "His spirit was vanquished." Only think of it! Yet the pen of Mr. Gibbon and other historians have indeed failed to give to the world a full description of the terrible crimes of that "vanquished spirit." And just as long as gold and silver is used as money, avarice and ambition and lust will continue, and brass and iron will be used to enslave and abuse mankind, and the clay which simply means tenant serfs on the soil. But what an indefinite term is these "fragments." Who knows anything intelligible about them?

God has given us the feet and toes of the image, and I propose now to inquire something about them. And by turning to, and carefully reading the forty-first and forty-second verses of the second chapter of Daniel, which embraces the symbol of the feet and toes of the image, which, I am satisfied, if understood and properly applied, exactly fills this 1400 years space, of which our learned men have been so long confused over. Now let us read: "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron: the kingdom shall be divided; but then shall be in it of the strength of the iron; forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay, and as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken." Now I claim, and according to the knowledge which God gives in his word, shall try to show, by appealing to history, that the broken up fragments of the old Roman empire is a chimera of the brain, as compared with the facts. And first we have the feet and toes of the image, which, as a natural consequence, immediately follow the iron legs, terminating of course at the ankles, A. D., 476. And next comes the toes as follows. The chronology is given by Bishop Loyd. (1) "The Huns A. D.

Visigoths, A. D. 378; (4) The Franks, A. D. 407; (5) The Vandals, A. D. 407; (6) The Lums and Alons, A. D. 407; (7) The Burgundians, A. D. 407; (8) The Hundi and Rugians, A. D. 476; (9) The Saxon and Anglos in Britain, A. D. 476; (10) The Lombards, A. D. 483." (Ibid, page 73.)

Now although these learned authors give these names, dates and divisions, yet they speak of them as the broken fragments, etc.; when according to the anatomy of the human body, they are as distinct as are the arms and shoulders from the head. And yet we never hear these authors claiming that the Medo-Persian government was nothing more than the fragment of the Chaldean Head, (consistency thou art a jewel) Do the potters clay and iron, and the miry clay and iron have no meaning. Does not potters clay signify that which is liable to break; and if so, nothing could more fitly represent these divisions; and again, it applies from the fact that these ten Tyrants claimed the soil and made slaves, serfs and tenants of their own subjects. The very difficulty that is now disturbing Europe to-day.

And next comes the miry clay, which as truly applies to the changes which have taken place in these kingdoms from absolute despotism to liberal or representative government like that of England, their Magna Charta being the entering wedge. Hence the difficulty now, and has been for a long time with these potter-clay kings, and their representative or miry-clay subjects, who are beginning to claim their right to that which they cultivate for these Lords over the commons; and they would accomplish it if it were not for the iron,—that is, the sword which the Lord saw would accompany all these governments. And just as long as the lion roars, and the bear growls, (gold and silver) the nations of the earth will tremble; because the Leopard (the brass) and the dragon (the iron) always furnish the lion and the bear plenty of human flesh, when they furnish the money to pay for it. Yes, indeed, the sword could be allowed to rest in its scabbard; the small arms would be thrown into the ditches where the last battle was fought; the artillery would remain on the hill; the ships of war would be allowed to rust and rot in their harbors, if it were not for the gold and silver that prompt their ambition and sustains their avarice, and feed their lust; yes, I will repeat it, you take away from these proud monarchs and kings of the earth, together with all character of monopoly and oppression, their gold and silver, which have been forced or drawn by some deceptions or pretext from their subject, and others, by monopoly and overreaching their fellow man. Destroy the covetous idolatry that there is in gold and silver, and they would all be like Sampson shorn of his locks. Yea, like him! They might all go out and shake themselves, but their strength would not return; and this is just why God will destroy the whole image; because man has so terribly abused these gifts of nature. And the apostle was right when he said "that the love of money was the root of all evil."

This may appear as a digression from the symbol in relation to the feet and toes of the image. But as the main feature, and that which appears to be least understood, is to arrive at the meaning of the potters clay and miry clay, and iron; and those who wish to examine this important matter farther, I would advise them to take up the history of England, whose advances from an absolute to a limited monarchy are very similar to that of the others, and Magna Charta, which the Barons forced from King John, A. D. 1215. But it was about 1688 when the bill of rights was signed. By this "bill" the powers of the sovereign and the rights of the people were defined. And from this time on, the miry clay or representative element began to have great influence in the councils of the English nation. But about this time there were three historic events which occurred, which served greatly to advance the right of man, and especially the common people, viz: The art of printing, the great Reformation under Martin Luther, and the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, 1492. And men of superior and marked ability seemed to arise,—such as Sir Isaac Newton, Milton, John Locke, Pope, and many others. The miry clay element became still more conspicuous.

on 'Toleration' first burst the chains that held England and Europe fast bound under a religious and civil despotism. This essay gave the first impulse to the spirit of inquiry, and laid the foundation for our present liberties. This Christian philosopher drafted the first instrument called a constitution, imported into America. It was a form of government for the Carolinas."

And now, in order to further eliminate the potter's clay and miry clay elements, we will turn our attention to the religious and moral aspects of Europe, and, as before stated, the great change in the intelligence of the people, (mainly brought about by Luther's reformation and the art of printing,) from serfdom to fair knowledge of the rights and wrongs of man. The effect of the preaching of the gospel in something like its original intention or purity, soon brought on a conflict between these reformers and the old bigoted Roman Catholics, and other forms of religion, supported by these potter's clay kings, which not unfrequently caused the shedding of blood, which the reformers (who certainly were the wisest and best men of that nation) were anxious to avoid. Of course entire separation was desirable, but Europe was too circumscribed in extent. But God had just now opened a large domain, America, which became an asylum, a place of refuge, for these oppressed people, and they eagerly sought its shores; they were quite willing to expose themselves to the danger of a sea voyage, three thousand miles across, and whatever hardships might await them on their arrival, if it would only be the means of separating them from their European oppressors. Hence the colonists of New England, Jamestown, and Lord Baltimore, in Maryland, and the settlers of the Carolinas, were all actuated by a very similar motive, viz., freedom in religion and politics, for one is the handmaid of the other. Yet these colonists had to endure many hardships in their new homes. The severity of the northern winters, the difficulties in obtaining provisions, and sickness, together with their hostile conflicts with native Indians, whom, perhaps, they did not always deal with on the pure principles of justice and equity. But in short, these conflicts not only with the Indians, and also with the French, were under the guidance of him who knows the end from the beginning—simply a military school and experience, where the officers and soldiers were trained for the inevitable conflict with the mother country, which, at the proper time, only needed a pretext to open the conflict of arms. England soon furnished this in her act, viz., "taxation without representation." This, with other grievances, led to the throwing the tea overboard; then the Lexington and Bunker Hill fights, and many other battles; the final result—after a seven years' war—being the declared independence of the colonies from the potter's clay and iron rule of Great Britain. And now comes the question, What character of government shall the colonists adopt? They had learned to hate royalty and crowned heads, by that which they had suffered at their hands; and to adopt a similar one would give no assurance that they might not even soon be oppressed from a similar cause. Hence it was a question of deepest thought and open debate, even after they had drafted their constitution. They had no real example in history; hence it was new. And Patrick Henry said that it was so new that it needed a name.

Having premised this much, let us now turn to the second chapter of Daniel, and carefully read the forty-third verse, which immediately follows the forty-first and forty-second verses, already quoted. Let us read: "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, (liberal principles supported by the sword,) they (the people) shall mingle themselves (voluntarily) with the seed of men: (that is, choose from among themselves their officers and representatives in this government;) but they (the citizens of this government) shall not cleave one to another (why?) even as iron is not mixed with clay, simply because they are two discordant elements, or principles, which cannot be perfectly united. This is Republicanism or Democracy. And if I am not mistaken, God knew and determined in the councils of his own will about 2400 years ago the character of our government before it had a positive existence. And notice, especially, in contrast with the former symbol, as contained in the forty-first and forty-second verses, that the words kingdom divided, "partly strong and broken," are not named in the forty-third verse. Besides you will notice at once that this is the very last symbol, and found at the very end of the miry, muddy toes of the great image. And just as sure as Daniel stood before Nebuchadnezzar, the great King of Assyria, and affirmed that he represented the head of gold, just that sure does this government, termed the United States, represent the three miry toes and iron; for do not forget that this government was also cut out and defended by the sword, even as our hundreds of thousands slain do testify; and even professed Christians strew flowers over their graves, and rejoice in the blood and carnage, and desolated homes, and murdered innocence that followed their bloody pathway; and expend large amounts of money in building monuments to their memory.

But you are ready to say that this is a Christian government. Very well; let us see first what God says will become of it, and of which the forty-fourth and forty-fifth verses assure us the character of government that entirely supplants and represents the miry clay and iron government. Let us read: "And in the days of these kings (the Cæsars) will the God of heaven set up a kingdom (not a republic) which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, (but to the saints) but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Will not all Christians rejoice to see that day? Forty-fifth verse: "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, (that is physical means) and that it break in pieces, the iron, the brass, (all the implements of war) the clay, (kingly right or claim to the soil) the silver and the gold, (banking monopoly) the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter, and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." Now certainly no Christian can read these passages without feeling an earnest desire to learn (if possible) something more definite in relation to the time of their fulfillment, lest we be overtaken as a thief in the night, which our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ warns us of. And if I am correct on the symbols of the great image, just as sure as Daniel assured Nebuchadnezzar that he represented the head, just so sure do we stand at the very end of miry and muddy toes. I have studied this subject long and with much interest, and if I have not arrived at the truth, trust that it may become an humble means of enlisting a more competent hand. Hence, I now throw my banner to the breeze, trusting in God for the consequences. JOHN CAMERON.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died June 10, at the residence of her husband in Edgefield, Tenn., Sister Emily, wife of James Morrison, aged sixty-six years. She has been a member of the church of God for more than forty years, thus having spent nearly a half century in the service of her Savior. And as her life was giving way, and death appearing, her faith and hope afforded her great consolation in the closing scenes of mortal life. Sister Morrison was a good wife, and tender and loving mother. She was a dear lover of home, and took great pains in making home a cheerful and happy place for husband and children, and for all that might sojourn with them. She adorned the premises with bright and beautiful flowers, and her house was made melodious with the cheerful songs of canaries. No one could enter and leave her home without being impressed with the cheerful aspect of everything around. Truly her home life, and her efforts to make home happy are well worthy of imitation by others. She leaves a husband and six children to weep over their loss of an affectionate wife and tender mother. But they have the assurances of the gospel, and the precious hope of eternal life for her, to comfort and cheer their hearts in this their sad affliction. Sister Morrison will be greatly and sadly missed by her family, will be missed by the congregation, and by the whole community. But doubtless their loss is her gain. Let all therefore strive to prepare through the mercies of God to meet her where parting will be no more. E. G. S.

WE MUST FIGHT THE FIGHT OF FAITH.

Time, talent, and money in great quantities have been consumed in writing and publishing books, in which are recorded the lives and earthly achievements of men. These are handed out to the world as great valuables, to be honored and cherished. But how quickly do they all pass into the back-ground of obscurity, when we read couched in few words, the life and success of the apostle "Paul." He sums it up thus: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." What a grand utterance. This is worth honoring, cherishing, and imitating. We may desire to, and strive to follow those that have attained to a high degree of worldly honor and fame; or to be rocked in the cradle of wealth and luxury, but this should not be. Every Christian's heart ought to be filled to overflowing with the desire to be ready, at any time, to exclaim, "I have fought a good fight," etc. Why? Because with the knowledge of God's word, we can look to the day of adjustment, and see suspended from the hand of "justice" the two rewards. One eternal life, the other eternal punishment. Reader, which do you prefer? Which do your actions in life indicate that you will obtain? What if you gain a great name, or acquire a large fortune, when in that dark and trying hour you see them fade away, while rises before you your just reward, eternal death? "What doth it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" While these words of the Son of God are placed before us all as a warning not to strive after perishable things, yet many Christians are walking in that direction. Paul showed a strong hope, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

But, dear brother and sister, Paul's hope had for its foundation a successful warfare, "I have fought a good fight." He says that all will receive a crown that love the Lord's appearing. Let us ask ourselves the question, whether or not we would love to see the Lord descend from heaven with his mighty angels. Many would be the answer, "I am not ready." Being a true soldier in the Christian battle gained for "Paul" the hope. And he knew that it was laid upon every soldier of the cross to fight. Hence he says to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life." While all are commanded to fight, yet full directions are given as to how, and with what to fight. We are not left to ourselves to choose our own weapons of warfare. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds," etc. 2 Cor. 10: 4. "But put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Eph. 6: 4. In the 17th verse he gives the finishing touch to the soldier. "And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God." But, say some, "this is a hard world, the devil is too strong, I can't conquer." Stop! look at the battle fought between the "captain" of our salvation and the king of evil ones—the devil. Luke 4: "And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread." What does the Lord do? He draws his weapon, the word of God, and levels his enemy with one stroke upon that proposition. And Jesus answering, saying, "It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."

Dear Christian, does the devil ask you to pull down your barn, build larger ones, and fill them, and say unto your soul, "Soul, thou hast much goods; take thine ease, eat drink and be merry?" If so, it is written, "Man shall not live by these alone, but by every word of God."

"And the devil taking him up unto a high mountain, showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and said unto him, all this power will I give thee, with the glory of them, for that is delivered unto me and to whomsoever I will I give it. If thou, therefore, wilt worship me, all shall be thine. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

Dear Christian, does the devil lead you up into the high mountain of sin, and show you all his kingdoms, his subjects arrayed in costly apparel, rustling silks, braided hair, dangling jewelry, how-ing to the pride of life, the lusts of the flesh, and promise that you shall be like unto one of these creatures? If so, it is written "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Does he plead with you to stay at home and entertain company upon the first day of the week? If so, use your weapon: "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." Does he ask you to sit still with the strings drawn tightly around your purse, and not put into the Lord's treasury? If so, it is so written, "Let every one lay by in store upon the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered him." Does he ask you to sit down to the table and fill your stomach, without returning thanks for the blessings before you? It is written, "In all things give thanks unto God in the name of Christ." Does he plead with you to creep off to bed without getting down in the presence of your family upon your knees, and thanking God for his goodness? If so, it is written, "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer." Does he tell you to harbor a bosom full of envy, and unforgiving spirit? If so, it is written, "If we forgive not, how can we expect to be forgiven?" Does he persuade you to join some "society," for the purpose of trying to save human souls? If so, it is written, "The church is the light of the world."

Clad in the uniform of heaven, in the armor of God, how beautiful does the soldier of the cross appear, in the ranks of Israel, and with ease he can conquer the great enemy. But upon the other hand, if we adorn ourselves with only a portion of the garment, while it trails in the dust of carelessness and indifference, what a spectacle do we present. We toil, we labor to adorn ourselves in the perishable garments, fashioned by the world, while we refuse to wear that "blood-bought dress, offered free to all, by him who endures forever. Dear soldier of the cross, let us rally to the front, the battle is raging. May the Lord help us fight the "good fight of faith."

A SEEMING CONTRADICTION.

In John 14: 2, the Savior says, "I go to prepare a place for you," and in Matt. 25: 34, he says, "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Now some, taking kingdom and place to mean the same, have concluded it is almost, if not quite, a contradiction. I think all would be plain, if we would consider the time when the Savior will say to those on the right hand, "Enter into the kingdom prepared for you," etc. This will be said in judgment. The Savior did prepare this place, or kingdom, before the commencement of the Christian age, and hence in judgment will say to Christians, "inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation (commencement) of the world," (age.) As regards what the Savior said in this preparation, I think we will never know. I would like to know that, that the Lord has revealed, but don't feel like trying to find out anything God has not revealed. Deut. 29: 29 will show that it is none of our business to know what the preparation was. The place prepared as it is, and when it was, has nothing to do with our part of the work. Jesus will be there, all our fathers and mothers who have done God's will are there; no death there; eternal life there, and what more do we want? O, that God may help us to do our "whole duty," so that we may go to that goodly land!

LETTER FROM BRO. KITCH.

Bros. L. & S.: On the morning of January 29, 1884, I and my wife bid adieu to kind relations and friends, and boarded the Nashville and St. Louis train, at 7 o'clock A. M. destined for Paris, Texas, for the purpose of joining Bro. Officer in his noble effort to establish the gospel of peace among the people, who are stretching forth their hands, pleading for gospel light and civilization. The next day we had the pleasure of dining with Bro. Officer and his family, having made the trip in about 30 hours. The route traveled was, via McKenzie, Memphis, Little Rock and Texarkana. This is the shortest and quickest route to either North or Central Texas. The entire trip was made without a single mishap or detention, other than a short wait at McKenzie, for the L. & M. train crossing the Mississippi river at Memphis, just as nature began to draw her sable curtains round and retire for the night, we bade good-bye to old Tennessee. Passing through Arkansas in the night, we arrived at Texarkana just as good morn had stripped the dark mantle from off the earth and waked the slumbering throng for another day of toil. 'Twas then for the first, our thoughts turned back to memoried scenes, and hal-lowed spots, and loved ones left behind; 'Twas then our mind began to grasp the quickened roll of time, and count the moments as they passed; 'Twas then we lisped a prayer to God for his protecting care.

After a stay of about a week at Paris, enjoying the hospitalities of Bro. Officer and learning of the death of Bro. Askew, our Indian evangelist; and that the sore hand of affliction was heavily laid upon Bro. Overton, Governor of the Nation; and finding our plans for Indian mission work disconcerted for the time being, a different field of labor suggested itself.

After consultation with Bro. Officer, I made up my mind to direct my course to this part of the Lord's vineyard. I accordingly directed my steps thitherward, leaving my wife at Bro. Officer's until I ascertained more definitely the situation of affairs. The whole route lay through a most beautiful country, passing on the way, Honey Grove, Bonham, Sherman, Fort Worth, Cleburne, and many other places of less note. Texas truly is a great country. On arriving here, I soon found kind brethren and sisters who welcomed me to their hospitable homes and fire sides. A more generous, kind-hearted and hospitable people can not be found than those of Crawford and vicinity.

After consultation with a few of the brethren, a business meeting was called for the purpose of taking into consideration the reorganization of the scattered remnant of a once congregated brotherhood, who had failed to meet—many of them for twelve months—as the Lord has directed. It required but a few moments to grasp the situation and the best course to be pursued. The wolf had found its way into the fold; trepidation had seized the minds of all; persecution had done its work; and, like a covey of frightened birds flushed by the huntsman's dog, some of them had sought cover in the world. Like Israel of old, they appeared content to dwell in the tents of Midian, rather than buckle on the armor of the Lord, to fight their way to the promised land. But, thanks be to God, a few blasts from the gospel trumpet had a good effect. The scattered band is rallying once more beneath the folds of the blood-stained banner of King Emanuel; zeal has taken the place of trepidation, and the walls of persecution are crumbling beneath the plastic touch of the gospel hand. The organization is complete, and the word is "onward!"

I have been with the McGregor congregation seven miles south of here on the G. C. and Santa-fe railroad twice, in regular appointment. The brotherhood at that place have built recently a house of worship. This we lack at Crawford, but hope to have one at no distant day. We are looking for Bro. Clark, of Add-Ran, to pay us a visit soon, and expect a treat on that occasion. Bro. Clark is said to be one of our ablest preachers now in Texas. My regular appointments now are Crawford, McGregor and Prairie Chapel, seven miles Northwest from here. I go to the Chapel on next Sunday on an extra occasion. Recent rains have done much damage in different parts of the State. All crops well cultivated look finely. Wheat and oats will make an abundant yield. I am expecting to start in the month of July on a trip to the Stake Plains country, to look out a location for a Ranch, with McClelland and Ford. Our objective point will be Hale county, in this State. Expect to be out about forty days. Wife and self enjoy health.

A Week in Obion.

The most of it was a week. I stood not on the order of my going, but went at 1 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, June 4, leaving the inmates of the "castle of indolence" in the arms of death's brother. Boarding the train at the Chattanooga depot, we plunged into the outer darkness toward rockless Obion, trusting our lives to God's care and the engineer's arm. I saw nothing of interest until we reached Johnsonville, on the Tennessee river, which, at this place, is a broad, sluggish, sullen-looking stream, that, lying between low, swampy banks, averts rather than invites admiration. The country between the river and McKenzie is noticeable chiefly for its monotonous repetition of uncultivated sand-hills and uncultivable swamps.

Changing cars at Paducah Junction we reached Obion Station about 9:30 o'clock. From this station an immense quantity of lumber is shipped every year. Fifteen saw-mills, with an average daily capacity of 225,000 feet, find an outlet through this place. From here I had a jolly, "bouncing" drive of ten miles over a mud-road patched with Mississippi corduroy, (and the patching not skilfully done.) Nothing to mention appeared on the road save a rather too frequent attempt on my part to carry away the top of the buggy with my head, which feat was induced by the unexpectedness of the road. A little past noon I rested from my journey in Wilsonville, my destination, and refreshed the inner man (not according to Paul) at the hotel kept by friend Dean.

Wilsonville is a smart little town surrounded by some of the finest farming land in Tennessee. Here I found the church to have on its roll somewhat over one hundred names. Bro. Henry Trickett, of Ohio, held a meeting here last year, and had fifty-three accessions to the congregation. But many of them have gone back to walk with the world. I think that the preacher who holds a successful meeting here any time soon, will have a Herculean work to perform; for the re-action after the fever of last year's meeting has left the church in a worse condition than it was before. It was like putting too much green wood on a feeble fire, making it more feeble. Not more than half a dozen of those brought in are continuing faithful to their vows. The watchword of many preachers seems to be, "With all thy getting, get additions, and make a showy report in the 'progress of the gospel.'" I preached nine discourses with no other apparent result than to persuade one erring sister to renew her allegiance to her God, and one man to determine for "newness of life." Most of my audiences were small, the excuse for which was the continual rain, the real cause of which may be found in what I have written above.

Of the faithful members at this place, I must make particular mention of Bro. Jas. M. Wilson, the oldest brother here. This good man had long been a member of the Masonic order, and had reached a high rank in it, but being convinced that it was perverse of God's honor on earth, he resolutely resigned his place in its ranks, and stands to-day unqualifiedly opposed to all human institutions that in any way supplant the church of God in the work of doing good to humanity. He also lately quit the use of tobacco.

This county is the field of labor of Bro. Isaac Sewell, an older brother brother of the junior editor of the ADVOCATE. W. L., Jr.

What is it to Follow Christ?

To follow Christ, includes attendance on his doctrine. John 10: 27: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." The sheep of Christ are not those included in any eternal decree, before the foundation of the world to the exclusion of others from the yearnings of the bowels of infinite mercy; but they are those who hear, believe in, faithfully, heartily, constantly follow and obey the Savior of the world in all his appointed ways. To follow Christ, includes strict obedience to all his commandments without murmuring or complaining, whether we comprehend the full import or not.

If we follow Christ, we will love and keep his commandments; if we keep his commandments, we will love him, and both He and the Father will love us. John 14: 21: "He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk even as he walked." He who not only professes to know Christ, but also to have communion with him, should prove the authenticity of his profession, by living a life of devotion to God, and of benevolence and beneficence to his fellow man. Neither can we follow Christ and hate our brethren. "He that saith he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now."

Kind reader, is there a poor child of God wandering about upon the earth whom you hate? If so, you hate your brother, if you are a child of God yourself. If you hate your brother, you are in darkness, and not in the light. If you hate your brother, you are not imitating the Savior's example; if you do not imitate his example, you are not following him; if you do not follow him, you will not be saved.

On the other hand, if we do not love one another, we do not love God, for this commandment we have from him: "That he who loveth God loves his brother also." "If any say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" Then to follow Christ we must not hate, but love our brethren. Often with an air of solemnity brethren will sing, "O, how I love Jesus, because he first loved me;" when, perhaps, there is a brother in the same congregation upon whom they would willingly lay the hand of violence and drag him down into the lowest depth of ruin and degradation. Then they don't love God.

Others will say, I can forgive the wrong of my brother, but cannot forget it. Are you one of the latter class? If so, your are acting under a delusion of the devil which will ruin you in time and eternity. Listen to what God says about those who rebel against him. "Their sins and iniquities I will remember no more." You are a follower of Christ, yet remember the faults of your brethren. What a delusion! just the opposite to what God does. When you thus speak, you have not forgiven your brother; if not, God will not forgive you.

Faith, though weak, is still faith; a glimmering taper, if not a glowing torch; but the taper may give light as truly as the torch, though not so brightly.—H. Muller.

JUDGE REID'S SUICIDE.

The Christian Evangelist in speaking of Judge Reid says:

"Having been attacked upon the street and horse-whipped, in a most cowardly manner, he was subsequently challenged to fight a duel by the same miserable, time serving spirit."

The Evangelist is mistaken; to have been attacked on the street would have been real bravery compared with the cowardly and prutal manner in which he was assailed. He was invited into the office of a brother in the same congregation, one whom he supposed to be his friend. No one else was in the office, and the office was up stairs. While the Judge was looking over a paper handed him, sitting down with bowed head, his supposed friend and brother hit him a terrible lick in the burr of the ear with a hickory stick. This blow, which knocked poor Judge Reid almost senseless, was followed up fast and furiously by other blows. The distracted man by instinct retreated to the street as best he could: his assailant, who is a tall, powerful man, following him with a cowhide, which he drew from under his coat, and with which he seemed to try to cut the Judge's eyes out. Taking into consideration Judge Reid's position before the world, and his known physical disability, Corneilson's attack was too cowardly for description.

He was not challenged to fight a duel. These are some of the terrible facts, Bro. Evangelist, as they are currently reported here.—Apostolic Times.

Why do not the brethren tell more of this matter? The secular papers publish that this disgraceful and cowardly attack upon one brother by another, which resulted in Judge Reid, under the reproaches of cowardice, shooting himself, was fomented, if not originated, by the animosity existing between the two rival missionary societies that had been formed among the women of the church of Christ in Mt. Sterling, Ky. Mrs. Reid, the wife of Judge Reid, was president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. Munnell, mother-in-law of Corneilson, was president of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. The rivalry and animosity between these two modern improvements on the church of Christ, for saving men, became so great that it was carried into the political field. Mrs. Reid, whose husband was a candidate for Congress, in her zeal for foreign missions, is charged with saying the souls of the poor mountaineers were not worth saving. Corneilson, to retaliate, is charged with publishing this up in the mountains, to prevent these same mountaineers from voting for the husband of this Christian woman, who thought their souls not worth saving. Excited by these things, the result above pictured followed. Then Reid, condemned and chided as a coward, for not shooting his cowardly assailant, by the devoted Christians, and especially the women of the Foreign Missionary Society, who should have encouraged him, shot himself. So the secular papers publish. If these things are not true, they should be corrected. If they are true, and are concealed for fear that they will injure these societies, it shows a corrupt Jesuitical spirit, that is unworthy of professed Christians. To conceal the truth is only a step short of telling a falsehood. God delights to honor "him who swears to his own hurt and changes not," who tells the truth as fully when it injures, as when it benefits him. The following extract is from the Times, of Louisville:

"Inquiring for particulars, he told me in substance that some difference had arisen between the Foreign Missionary Society of the Christian Church, of which Mrs. Reid was President, and the Home Missionary Society, presided over by Mrs. Munnell, Cornelson's mother-in-law. It was merely a question, I believe, as to which of these meek and lowly charities should occupy the higher seat in the synagogue, but produced a great deal of acrimonious feeling among the zealous members of the congregation. This matter had been published in circular form, containing also the statement that Mrs. Reid had said that the mountain people had not souls worth the saving, which naturally incensed the dwellers on the hill-tops against her husband. Mr. Thompson said this circular had been so adroitly distributed that it would have been impossible to counteract its effect before the community, and the thought that he was thus misrepresented, without power to set himself right, did much to drive Judge Reid to insanity. I have since seen something of this sort in the Mount Sterling Gazette of May 7. It is a full statement from Cornelson, containing the substance of what Mr. Thompson told me, and fills the entire paper except the advertising columns. I presume that is the circular he spoke of."

THE CAUSE IN TENNESSEE.

There is a great effort made just now by a number of young men connected with the Old Path Guide, to introduce new influences among the churches in Tennessee, and to change their modes of operation. What good is to be gained by this effort? Division will grow up among the disciples. More destitute points are being reached with the gospel in Tennessee, than in any State in the Union. The churches are as active, a greater portion of the members meet for worship, than in any community in the United States. A man who attends church to hear preaching, but who will not meet to worship God without the preacher, does not attend the worship of God.

Our most thoughtful brethren coming from abroad, and studying the condition of the churches, bear testimony to this as true.

We remember well that Bro. Lard, on a visit to Tennessee, some time before his death, said: "The outlook for the truth and for the purity of the churches, is much better in Tennessee, than in any State north of it, known to me." He added: "Could I see my way clear in my pecuniary affairs, I would prefer to cast my lot among them, to any people I know."

Dr. J. L. Richardson, a brother of Dr. R. Richardson, associate editor of the Harbinger, and author of "Memoirs of A. Campbell," wrote, last November: "I was aware of the fact that the plea for reformation, based upon apostolic authority, was more consistently maintained, and more intelligently plead, in the latitude of Nashville, than in other localities." Dr. Richardson spent much of his life in Northern Kentucky, and has been living, for some years, near Cincinnati, Ohio. He is a man of large observation and tried fidelity to the truth. He states that his brother, Dr. R. Richardson, saw that the reformatory movement in the main would prove an abortion; that is, the masses of those entering it would not be satisfied with the simplicity of the divine order, and said "another swarm will have to go forth and form a new hive, before they can be content to remain in the truth?"

Recently Bro. W. L. Butler, of the Apostolic Church, Louisville, made a visit to Tennessee, and spent some days in Gallatin. Brethren tell me that he said, "The hope of the reformatory movement is centered in Middle Tennessee." These young brethren in seeking to introduce these new and strange influences, and this new order are striving to destroy this last hope of the effort to return to apostolic ways.

These brethren spoke from no personal partiality for us here. On the other hand, we had given offence to both Bro. Lard and Bro. Butler. But they were men who did not let their personal dislikes close their eyes to the truths concerning the churches, or make them sacrifice the truth of God for personal interests and feelings.

QUERIES.

Where, in the New Testament, is the promise of pardon? Where does the Holy Spirit speak of one law of pardon for the alien sinner, and another for the erring Christian? Again, if a man has committed no crime, how is he in an unsaved state? Is not sin the transgression of the law?—[S. B. Grandstaff, Cherry Valley, Wilson county, Tenn.]

We do not know what is meant by asking where is the promise of pardon. If he means where in the New Testament, we answer in the commission as given by Matthew, Mark, Luke. In Acts 2: 38; 3: 19, and in every single example of conversion presented in the New Testament. If it is meant, where in the process of conversion, the promise of pardon is found. We answer when the man believes, repents and is baptized, he is promised pardon.

The alien sinner is told to believe, repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, as in the Scriptures and examples presented. When Simon who had believed and been baptized sinned, he was told, "Repent of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Acts 8: 22. James says, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed." John says, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." These are all for the erring Christian.

A man may be a very great sinner and never commit what is called a crime. Sin is the transgression of law, but to think evil, to fail to obey God is transgression of law. The moment an individual arrives at years of responsibility, to think or cherish an evil thought, or to fail to promptly obey God in all his commandments, is sin. Hence, "no man liveth and sinneth not." "If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar." All have sinned and fallen short of the favor of God. It is idle to talk of a man not being a sinner because he has not transgressed a law of God.

But a man may be in a state of sin and not be a sinner, just as a man may be in a republic and not be a republican, or may be in a monarchy and not be a monarchist. This world is a state of sin. Because man the ruler of the world is a sinner, and the devil by man's treason to God became the ruler of the world. But Jesus Christ was in the world, was in a sinful state, but was no sinner. Infants inherit a sinful state, are in that state where sin abounds, but are not sinners until they commit sin. A man may be in this world and not sin, but he is in a sinful state. But no child can grow to years of responsibility in this state of sin, without sinning. The sinful surroundings lead him to sin. Only Christ could resist these.

TRUE ORDER OF WORK.

Quite an opposition has been stirred to the ADVOCATE in a number of preachers. Bro. Harding's articles have been the cause of this. But why should they? The principles he set forth for the making and going forth of preachers, have been accepted by Bro. Allen, as shown in his discussion with Bro. Munnell.

That Bro. Harding has run to an extreme in some things, or given expression to sentiments that appear extreme, we think true. Not to have done so would have been more than human. In the discussion between him and Bro. McQuiddy, we were anxious to see the just medium of truth developed, but when Bro. McQuiddy run to the extreme of teaching that no temporal good is promised to the Christian, we knew that no ground of truth could be developed. We have been told, Bro. McQuiddy recently abandoned the position by requesting the brethren to pray for the recovery of a sick brother. Health is a temporal blessing.

We will note a few points in which it seems to me Bro. Harding has gone to an extreme.

1. Some expressions, rather than the general drift of his argument, led many to think that he taught that the preacher who preached trusting the Lord, would never have trouble about means of support. Paul had trouble. He preached. He was as faithful as any can hope to be now. He had to divert his attention from preaching to make tents, in order to supply his wants. God will not be more careful of the preacher's wants at this day than he was of Paul. When Bro. Harding puts it that this necessity of working with his own hands, that he might preach, was for his good, then we most heartily endorse it. All things work together for good to them that serve the Lord. Paul needed spiritual training as well as uninspired men. He had to labor and the Lord had to discipline him, just as is requisite with uninspired men to fit them for his work. Joseph's sale, slavery, imprisonment, all were requisite to modify his self-will and self-importance, and to fit him for the saving of his kindred and others.

The preacher now needs the discipline of trial to fit him for the Lord's service. It was a sin in the early Christians to let Paul be compelled to work for a living. It was good for Paul. It wrought God's purposes by training Paul. It was a sin in Joseph's brethren to sell him into slavery. It was good for Joseph. It wrought the Lord's purposes.

The failure to sustain every self-denying, true teacher of the word of God, laboring to bring men and women to Christ, is a sin for which Christians will be held to a strict accountability in the sight of God. But never has God let suffering or trial come upon one of his children, that was not for the good of the child, and that if received as discipline or judgment from God, would not work the good of that soul and the purposes of God. He is no true child of God who turns from the work of God, rather than endure the discipline, or submit to the trials God lays upon him. In other words, an All-wise hand so arranges and so overrules human wickedness and human weakness, that the delinquencies and sins of the one are made to minister the discipline needed to correct the faults and perfect the characters of the other. Bro. Harding, I know, will accept this, and with this explanation, his position is true. And he who turns from the work of God on account of these trials God lays on him, (it is God does it, whether through the sins and delinquencies of professed Christians or the persecutions of avowed enemies,) is no true servant of God, and it is a blessing to the church of God when those who by these can be, are driven out from among his servants. God uses these trials to purge out the unworthy from among his servants.

Bro. Harding refuses to communicate with his brethren as to his wants. The Phillippians communicated with Paul as concerning giving and receiving. Paul must have communicated with them. The revision says, "Not that I seek for the gift, but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." This clearly expresses that Paul sought a gift of them not as a gift to himself, but that it might increase to the account of the Phillippians. But the point is, he sought the offering from them. He used it not as a gift to himself, but as being enabled by this gift to labor, the result of this labor might be put to the account of those who aided him.

In writing to the Colossians 4: 7, "All my affairs shall Tychicus make known unto you, * * whom I have sent unto you for this very purpose, that ye may know our estate, (condition) and that he may comfort your hearts." "They shall make known unto you all things that are done here." No other conclusion seems possible than that Paul sent Tychicus and Onesimus to make known his condition, his wants and necessities.

To the Thessalonians, he says we might have been burdensome to you as the apostles of Christ. 1 Thess. 2: 6-9. The same to Corinthians. To the Ephesians 6: 21: "But that ye may know my affairs and how I do, Tychicus, the beloved brother and faithful minister, shall make known to you all things; whom I have sent unto you for this very purpose, that ye may know our state, and that he may comfort your hearts." Now these Scriptures seem to teach that Paul did write and send messengers to his brethren to let them know his condition. He writes to the brethren at Rome, "for I hope to see you in my journey (into Spain) and to be brought on my way thitherward by you." This was for means to help him on his journey, I take it.

These Scriptures clearly indicate that it is not violative of the most trusting faith in God, to let a congregation who desires to aid the preacher, know his condition, and when the church that desires to fellowship a teacher in his labors and through him bear fruit that shall abound to its account, asks to be informed of his wants and necessities, it is proper for him to let the church know them.

I don't mean by this that he is to barter and chaffer and dun and twist means out of unwilling hearts. It is better for the teacher to labor with his own hands, to work and suffer, than to accept other than a free-will offering to the Lord.

But when a man is laboring and the church desires to fellowship him, and knows not what he is receiving in the field of his labor, it is not wrong for him to make known his condition to it. Paul at least did it.

Again, I am not sure that Bro. Harding does not go to an extreme in refusing all aid from those without. That it is wrong to beg from those without I am well satisfied. All begging by preachers, or permitting others to beg from others to sustain the cause of God, is wrong. But when it is voluntarily tendered, I am not so certain. "Ye showed kindness to the children of Israel when they came out of Egypt," was told the Kenites as a reason why they should not be destroyed with the Amalekites. Israel accepted the kindness. David and Solomon accepted help tendered by those not of the house of Israel, in building the temple of God. So was done by the servants of the Lord in the rebuilding. It seems to me just as bad to accept food or other accommodation from an outsider, as to accept money. Will we refuse to eat a meal or take shelter with one when it is kindly offered? Did the Savior or the apostles do this?

Yet I am certain that the principle of not allowing the church to seek help of the world, or to depend upon the world in such way as to be tempted to court its favor, is one vital to the purity and life of the church of God. While we think that Bro. Harding in these matters goes to an extreme, no man is able to keep the exact line of moderation and truth in all things. And this is a much safer extreme than the one so common of not trusting God, but of seeking help of the world, and of applying the rules of an unbelieving world to the workings of God's church. The ministry of the church has greatly become mercenary, and there are so many out on that end of the balance that we can well bear some extra weight on the other end. There is not the least danger of the equipoise being lost by too much weight on the end of trustfulness in God.

The church needs badly the example, the teachings of men who have faith in God, who are willing to trust him, and who are willing by example and precept to teach the church, trust in God and in his workings. Nor do we see why any Christian should fall out with Bro. Harding in consequence of his teaching or practice. While we do not believe his course in the matters pointed out is binding; it is permissible.

Paul on certain occasions made known his wants. In certain others he refused to do so. All men have not the same talent, cast of mind or ability for certain kinds of work. If Bro. Harding sees fit to act on this principle, he does not sin in so doing. But the trouble in these matters is, so many preachers now make the gospel merely a matter of merchandise,—they preach only where they can get money for it. They have no confidence in God in the matter. They have no ground for it. God never promised to bless those who serve him for a living.

There is not only a lack of faith in God, but there is a wide-spread infidelity among the teaching of the religion of Christ. We hear many expressions, we see them in writing, that we know cannot spring from a heart trusting fully in God. Some teachers have gotten into the ministry as a profession. They follow the profession in that way that will make the best living for themselves, and in so doing fail to hold to the truth of God. We may some day point out expressions showing an entire lack of confidence in God. Other good men in the ministry look at things entirely from the preacher's standpoint. We are one-sided at best. Any position that seems not to build up and give importance and power to our position and our work, is set down at once as wrong. Hence we frequently find men that insist no church is doing anything unless it has a regularly employed pastor. We tell them that the brethren are as intelligent, they meet as promptly, they induce their neighbors to become Christians as much, they give as much or more for the spread of the gospel, and in all the elements of Christian character and work, they are equal to the best in the land. Still these brethren will not admit they are doing any good. The meaning is, the course of these churches does not make a place for a pastor, and we just know that what does nothing for us and our work, does no good. We have always maintained to get back to the divine model, is best for every true preacher of the gospel, best for the whole church, and best to purge the mere place-hunters out of the church of God. It seems to be every believer in Christ must recognize this. Then our whole object ought to be to get back to primitive ways.

We are constrained to believe the opposition excited by Bro. Harding's course, is much of it, from the feeling that it destroys the positions and places that support the professional preachers. While we would criticize any extremes into which we think Bro. Harding runs, we thank God that he is teaching the life of trust in God, instead of in human wisdom, that this age of rationalism, of unbelief, of infidelity, even among the teachers in the church of God, so greatly needs.

The thing needed in the church is self-consecration, self-denial, for Jesus' sake. Whatever does not produce this in teacher and taught, is hurtful. The teacher cannot impress self-denial on his hearers, without showing he is willing to practice it himself. The relief from self-denial and suffering on the part of the teacher, is to be found in the self-denial of his brethren, to help him. His self-denying, consecrated spirit, works a like spirit in those who are taught by him. And their disposition to self-sacrifice relieves him of the necessity of undue sacrifice. Suffering for Christ brings its own joys and reliefs. D. L.

Obituaries.

Died, at his residence, near Gadsden, Crockett county, Tennessee, September 6, 1883, H. W. Reaves. He was born March 12, 1819, and was married in March, 1861, to Miss Elizabeth McCorkle. He was immersed by Bro. James Holmes over thirty years ago. Bro. Reaves was a good man. His widowed companion, in her loneliness and widowhood, feels, perhaps, more keenly than any one else can, her loss in his death. Deprived of a loving husband's tender care and protection, left alone to bring up their young children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, she can but feel the need of Him to whom she had ever looked for counsel and guidance. An orderly, obedient family of children, the older ones of whom are members of the church of Christ, tells what he was as a father. The esteem in which his neighbors held him attests his worth to the community. The sadness, sorrow and gloom, depicted on the countenances of his brethren and sisters, the tears of sorrow and sympathy they shed over his lifeless remains, show what brotherly love that was felt for him, in the family of God. Although greatly afflicted, he was ever cheerful. His kindness of heart was ever manifest. Whoever visited his house felt themselves at home. He died at Milan, in Gibson county, having gone there to attend a horticultural association. After weeks of suffering, he said, "It is better for me to pass over the river, and rest under the shade." May hope give comfort to his bereaved companion, and may his children imitate his many virtues.

T. E. SCOTT.

Our beloved sister, Amanda C. Vantrees, died April 28, 1884. Sister Amanda, as we loved to call her, was the daughter of Henry and Mintha Borum. She was born in Tennessee, May 23, 1857; was married to William Bryan, October 23, 1878. He died soon afterward, leaving her a widow with one sweet little boy, whom she loved dearly. But her only hope of happiness in this life was soon to be destroyed by the death of little Willie. She was almost overcome by grief, but found comfort in the word of God, and in the belief that she would meet her loved ones again in heaven. She was married to her second husband, Nick Vantrees, November 5, 1882, with whom she lived as a devoted wife till her death. Sister Vantrees took her stand with the people of God during the year 1874. One more universally loved was not known to the writer. She was kind and affectionate to all. She told her sister, a few days before she was taken away, she did not fear death. Oh! what a great thing it is to say, "I do not fear death!" Sister Vantrees leaves a little babe, a husband, an aged father and mother, three brothers, one sister, and many friends, to mourn her loss. But we mourn not as those who have no hope.

"One by one we cross the river." Multitudes have been swept away from earth, and oblivion's waves have covered the last vestige of their memory. Friend after friend departs. Then those that knew them and loved them are taken, until after awhile the river of death has borne from earth all that was known of those once held in high esteem. But while those who now live, still live, the name of David P. McCorkle will not be forgotten. His memory will be kindly cherished by those that knew him best, for he was a man who had to be known to be appreciated. Our estimate of him was heightened as our intimacy with him increased. He was once a member of our congregation at Lamalsamac; and when I can first remember, his seat was seldom vacant. Endowed by nature with fine powers of mind, and with a memory very retentive, his mind at the time of his death was well stored with valuable information. His discriminating judgment, his strict honesty and integrity, made him prominently useful as a business man. I heard an old man say about the time of his death, that he had known him from his youth, and that he had never heard him accused of an intentional wrong. In whatever capacity we view him,—whether as a Christian, as husband, as father, as citizen, as magistrate, as surveyor, or as chairman of the court of his county,—we find that he always commanded respect. Having some years ago removed from his kindred to Obion county, where he died, and having been confined only one week, his brothers and sisters were wholly unprepared for the telegram that announced his death. His wife and children were surprised at his sudden demise. Sorrow reigns, but thank God the promise of a glorious resurrection gives hope of a brighter day. The sorrowful realization of parting scarce enters the heart until the joyful hope of meeting is there. Sorrow shall one day flee away, but joy shall fill the soul forever. Bro. McCorkle was born May 19, 1830; was immersed in 1852 or 1853; was married to Miss Margaret L. Scott, December 15, 1857; was married to Miss Bettie Amos in 1864; and died May 7, 1884.

A. M. Kenton died February 23, 1884, having been confined to his bed for five months and twenty days, with consumption. He was born January 6, 1854. Age, thirty years, one month, and seventeen days. There was, perhaps, no young man in our county more highly respected than he was. A high-toned gentleman in all his business transactions; a moral man, and one that took an interest in the country's welfare. When the Disciples of Christ undertook to build a house of worship in Livingston, he was one of the leaders; yet he had not obeyed the gospel, was not a Christian, until February, 1884. At this time the writers of this notice were sent for, and baptized him in a large box, prepared for the purpose. He was very weak, and some of his friends were uneasy, for fear he could not stand the shock. Yet he said he was going to be baptized, if he died in the act. He said the great mistake of his life was that he had not obeyed the gospel while in health. He died in hope of a happy resurrection from the grave, having obeyed that form of doctrine delivered us. He leaves a widowed mother, brothers and sisters, and many friends, that mourn their loss; but they sorrow not as those that have no hope. Believing that Jesus died and rose again, we expect all them that sleep in Jesus to be brought with him. We very much desire that his many friends, and especially his aged mother, brothers and sisters,—in fact, all his many friends, that have never submitted themselves to the gospel, would at once obey the commands of God, and live the Christian life, and be prepared to meet beyond the river, where parting will be no more. May we all live the humble and devoted life that God's will requires, is my prayer. His body was buried in the family grave-yard at Bethlehem church, by the Masons, as A. M. Kenton was a member of that body. Sleep, dear brother, sleep till God shall bid thee wake.

Bro. J. N. Cathey was born January 14, 1840, and died of consumption, January 4, 1884. He leaves a wife and six children to struggle with the hardships of life. Bro. Cathey obeyed the gospel in September, 1882. His religious life was short, still it is a consolation to his brethren and friends, to believe that he died with a firm and unwavering confidence in the God who gave him being, and the Savior who died for him. Farewell, dear brother; sleep on and rest until the Master shall call for you; then you shall come forth to receive your reward.

Died, of consumption, April 5, 1884, at his residence, near Salisbury, Tenn., Bro. James E. Tracey. He was born May 6, 1841; age, forty-two years, ten months, and twenty-nine days. He leaves a wife, an aged mother, and other relatives, to mourn his loss. His funeral (the assurance of the resurrection and subsequent judgment) was preached by the writer, at Commerce, Wilson county, Tennessee, on June 1, to a large audience, assembled to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of their departed friend and neighbor.

P. W. HARSH.

Sister Catharine Daniel, consort of Bro. James P. Daniel, was born August 11, 1826; died December 30, 1883; was married to Bro. R. B. Hardison, December 13, 1853, who died in January, 1861. She and Bro. Daniel were married January 25, 1866. Sister Daniel was a sister of Bros. D. R. and W. J. Sowell. She obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. J. K. Speer, in early life, and lived a consistent member of the body of Christ to the day of her death. When we say she was a good woman, we express enough; but we sometimes fail to receive the proper impression from language that embodies all, after hearing it so often. We feel that too much could not be said of Sister Daniel's virtues. We have known her for several years, and have always found her devoted to the cause of God, and the interest of the congregation of which she was a member. On a visit to her son's—a mission of mercy to the sick—the axle-tree of her buggy broke, and she became entangled, and was dragged by the horse some distance over a rough turn-pike. Her sufferings were intense for one week, but were borne with the fortitude of one who has confidence in God's promises. Not a complaint was heard; but words of encouragement to the sorrowing family and friends, entreating them to be more faithful to the Lord, assuring them of her confidence in the happy meeting of the righteous "by and by." She leaves a devoted husband, two sons, and many relatives, brethren and friends, to mourn her sudden departure. We should not sorrow as those who have no hope; for we can but believe that our sister and mother in Israel will be among those "who have part in the first resurrection." That we may all imitate her virtues, and the congregation at New Lasea, which she so much loved, may live in peace and harmony, and finally meet in that better world "where congregations ne'er break up," is our sincere prayer.

TO MY MOTHER.

How hard to realize that one
Who, a few short days ago,
Was full of life and tenderness,
Has gone forevermore.

As I stood by mother's bedside
And watched her fleeting breath,
I knew, before the sun went down,
She would be still in death.

And if the kingdoms of the earth
Had all been mine to give,
I would have given them every one
If mother could have lived.

But, alas! it was not so to be;
God said that she must go
To his dear home in heaven,
Where storms can never blow.

'Tis hard to give her up; but then
We know it's for the best;
Or God would not have called her
To his eternal rest.

Then, mother, up in heaven
Watch o'er your children two;
Guide their failing footsteps,
And make them good and true.

Then some time in the future,
When we both come to die,—
We'll meet you up in heaven,
Beyond the starry sky. DAVID L. PARMER.

Died, May 11, 1884, Mrs. Ruth Pruitt Hall, daughter of Yeatman and Sue F. Moore, aged twenty-one years. Mrs. Hall was born in Colbert county, Alabama, June 12, 1863; attended school in Tusculum from her eleventh to her fifteenth year; was subsequently a pupil of Dr. Blackie's, in Nashville, and completed her course of study in Columbia, Tennessee. She became a member of the church of Christ in October, 1879, which high and holy position she filled with becoming fidelity until called to a purer world than this. March 12, 1882, she became the wife of Mr. J. H. Hall. She leaves a host of admiring friends to lament their loss. Beautiful, intellectual and good, she was very captivating, and drew tenderly and bound strongly to her all those who knew her well. A short time before her death, but when she seemed to have promise of long life, talking to her mother of the Eternal city, she said, "Imagination can never grasp the resplendent glory, grandeur and beauty of the holy place." About the same time she said, "Those pearly gates will soon be opened for me." Farewell, dear friend, till we, together, shall behold the beauties of our eternal home.

A. FRIEND.

Death has again touched with withering fingers one of the jewels of the household, and sister Ella B. Holt, daughter of Thomas P. and Tabitha C. Holt, called to "come up higher." She was a worthy, consistent, zealous member of the church of Christ, and our congregation at South Harpeth loses one of its brightest jewels. Sister Ella peacefully passed away through the valley and shadow of death, at home, at 3:45 o'clock, on the morning of June 2, 1884. She was just verging into womanhood; had she lived until August 14, she would have been eighteen years of age. She was a loving, dutiful child; gentle, amiable, and affectionate, as a sister and friend; one of the loveliest girls of my acquaintance. Nearly two years ago her young heart bowed in submission to Jesus our Savior, to whom she yielded humbly; and I am sure she walked worthy of the high vocation whereunto she was called. But now her place is vacant: her voice, which used to be the music of her home, is silent, and we are left to mourn and miss her sadly. But we "sorrow not as those who have no hope." To the bereaved mother, father, brothers and sisters, and sorrowing friends, we tender our heart-felt sympathies; for we know what a shock—coming so suddenly, so unexpectedly—it was to them. She was only sick about sixty hours, from flux. She had just returned from the Normal College, where, for the past ten months, she had diligently studied; for she was ambitious that none should excel or be her superiors. She greatly desired to be qualified to teach, saying she "wanted to be useful in this life." Oh, 't is but a step across the dark river of death; we but close our eyes on the cares of earth, and then we wake in the lasting brightness, and gaze on the never-fading beauties of the Golden City of our God. Let the gospel of Christ be our solace; its commands, our delight to obey; its promises, our pleasure to enjoy; and if our armor has been worn in battle for truth, it will be exchanged for a robe of righteousness, to be worn in the rest that remains for the people of God. The writer, assisted by Rev. James Marshall, officiated upon the occasion of her obsequies; and seldom has he witnessed a more general expression of sorrow. Loving hands laid her body away in its quiet resting-place, to await the trumpet sound, when the voice of God shall bid death loose his hold, and set the prisoner free. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

A Safeguard.

The fatal rapidity with which slight Colds and Coughs frequently develop into the gravest maladies of the throat and lungs, is a consideration which should impel every prudent person to keep at hand, as a household remedy, a bottle of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

Nothing else gives such immediate relief and works so sure a cure in all affections of this class. That eminent physician, Prof. F. Sweetzer, of the Maine Medical School, Brunswick, Me., says:—

"Medical science has produced no other any-dye expectorant so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is invaluable for diseases of the throat and lungs."

The same opinion is expressed by the well-known Dr. L. J. Addison, of Chicago, Ill., who says:—

"I have never found, in thirty-five years of continuous study and practice of medicine, any preparation of so great value as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, for treatment of diseases of the throat and lungs. It not only breaks up colds and cures severe coughs, but is more effective than anything else in relieving even the most serious bronchial and pulmonary affections."

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

Is not a new claimant for popular confidence, but a medicine which is to-day saving the lives of the third generation who have come into being since it was first offered to the public.

There is not a household in which this invaluable remedy has once been introduced where its use has ever been abandoned, and there is not a person who has ever given it a proper trial for any throat or lung disease susceptible of cure, who has not been made well by it.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has, in numberless instances, cured obstinate cases of chronic Bronchitis, Laryngitis, and even acute Pneumonia, and has saved many patients in the earlier stages of Pulmonary Consumption. It is a medicine that only requires to be taken in small doses, is pleasant to the taste, and is needed in every house where there are children, as there is nothing so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL for treatment of Croup and Whooping Cough.

These are all plain facts, which can be verified by anybody, and should be remembered by everybody.

NOTES.

J. C. Mason, Texarkana, Ark., June 17, writes: "Fourteen added here recently, at our regular meetings,—seven from the world, four from denominations, and five by commendation."

Bro. F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., writes: "Preached to a large congregation at Shady Grove, Hickman County, second Lord's day. On account of rain our congregation was quite small at Elmwood, in the afternoon. The brethren at Shady Grove are getting stronger in the Lord. We try to give them a feast of heaven-born truth every time we visit them. The Bible teaches us the food that makes Christians must be feasted upon daily, in order to make perfect men and women in the kingdom of Christ. We must work, and now is the time, for it is day. Let us pray, for we are weak. We should try to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Truth and falsehood cannot dwell together. We should endeavor to possess the spirit that would battle for the Lord and against the devil. If we will live righteously here, we will bloom in perfection in the world to come."

W. B. C., Smithville, Tenn., June 16, writes: "Our church at this place is in a flourishing condition, but still room for improvement. Bro. J. M. Kidwill preaches for us twice a month. One accession last Lord's day, from the Baptists. Bro. S. W. Womack, colored, of Nashville, preached a few discourses here last week. He is the first colored preacher, of the church of Christ, we have had to visit our town. He is an able speaker, and made a very favorable impression while here. By the way, we should all turn our attention to enlightening the colored race more than we do. Christ said, "Go teach all nations," and here is a people who are groping their way in darkness, who are being led by those who need to be enlightened themselves, and we allow them to follow off after superstitious ideas and doctrines, and never proclaim to them the blessed gospel of Christ. Of course this is not universally the case, but such it is throughout the country away from cities and large towns. Brethren, we need more men like Bro. Womack in the field. Such as he can do more to bring the colored race out of superstition and ignorance on the subject of religion, than white preachers. Still we can all do something, and for the sake of Him who died for us, let us do it. Can't we take some steps to keep such men as the one referred to in the field, and prepare others for such work? Let us have a suggestion from some one."

"A letter from Borden Springs says: "We are almost dead spiritually. The loss of our meeting house by fire, last year, was a sad blow; and though nearly a year has elapsed, a bush arbor is the best we can do. There has been about enough money subscribed to rebuild, but the freshet of April 12, carried away the nearest saw mill, and it has not got fairly to work again. We have had no preaching this year, but an effort is being made to secure the services of Bro. Avery of Centre. On the night of April 12, Wm. Knighten, one of the oldest of New Bethel congregation, breathed his last. He died of consumption, that dread and delusive disease. During the following week Elder Washington Bacon (familiarily called by those who know him, uncle Bacon) was stricken with paralysis. For days we had no idea he could recover; but he has regained his faculties, and almost the use of his body. His tongue still troubles him, as there are a great many words he cannot call. Uncle Bacon is eighty-five years old; and no more will his voice be lifted from the pulpit, persuading men and women to be Christians. He is only lying patiently and resignedly awaiting the final stroke, which he knows must soon come. Several years ago, while living near Scottsboro, Ala., he had the first stroke, not so severe as the second one, and it is likely a third one will end his days. He says he will be glad to die that way, as he is unconscious, and feels no pain. His father died in that manner, his grandfather also. Oh! if the world was only filled with such men as he, how much better it would be! A short time before his illness I carried the Advocate, containing an account of the meeting at Scottsboro, over to him. He read it aloud, and his eye kindled, and his voice grew strong, as his heart warmed over the good news. He had known those people, and loved them, and his soul sang praises to God that another—a younger and better preacher, perhaps—had made a stand for Christ there, and gathered some into the fold. We who love the Advocate are very partial to Bro. Harding. I, for one, like every word he utters; and that he is thoroughly in earnest, none can doubt. And as for Bro. Poe, if I did not love him for anything else, I would love him for his cold-water principles. I don't mean baptism—I mean drinking."

THE LUTIE GRAPE.

The Lutie Grape, originated by Dr. L. C. Chisholm, near Nashville, Tenn. Well-rooted vines (one-year old) of this new seedling grape will be offered for sale this coming fall and spring. To avoid all possibility of deception, and to place the superior merits of the Lutie fairly before an intelligent fruit-growing community, the originator of this new grape gave notice last November through some of the Nashville papers, that in advance of all seasons, favorable or unfavorable, he would show this grape in bearing at his vineyard, five miles from Nashville on the 25th of July, 1884; and claimed that more good qualities were combined in the Lutie alone for profitable grape culture than fifty other varieties grown in the same soil and like cultivation. As the time is approaching, he hopes all who feel the least interest in the development of choice fruit will not fail to see the Lutie while in bearing. Will be able to show fifteen vines of second crop and over one hundred vines with first crop. The latter will have been set out two years and six months at ripening time. As stated in a former notice, H. R. Coleman has purchased a half interest in the Lutie, and this variety alone will be sold under the firm name of Chisholm & Coleman. As they have only a limited stock for the first season, and cannot hope to supply all, therefore will receive orders and place them on file as received; then the orders will be filled as they come till the present stock is exhausted, of which due notice will be given. Price will be given after the exhibit, say August 1, 1884. P. O. address 98 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn., Chisholm & Coleman.

SOME THINGS HARD FOR ME TO UNDERSTAND.

1. I cannot see how the M. E. Church can be right and wear a human name, and be governed by a human creed.

2. I cannot see how a man can belong to the M. E. Church, and endorse her name and creed, and preach the gospel acceptably to God the Father.

3. I cannot see how a man can hear such a preacher, with such influence, preach (as it is said by some) the gospel and Methodism mixed, and obey God, enter into the M. E. Church, live there, die there, and go to heaven. If a man can obey God and enter into the M. E. Church, will some one tell us why he cannot obey God and still remain there? If he cannot obey God and still remain there, why try to get him out? But if we cannot obey the Lord and remain in the M. E. Church, he certainly cannot obey him and get in there. They do not indorse Methodism any more to remain, than they do by becoming a member. Well, but, says some one, there is where he did wrong by uniting with the church. But can a man do right and wrong at the same time? The same thing that we say he obeyed God in, took him to the M. E. Church. Methodism says baptism inducts into the visible church of Christ. It also makes baptism its door. Now can a man enter into both churches at one and the same time, by one and the same act? If so, a man can do right and wrong at the same time. If he cannot do right and wrong at the same time, then the whole is either right, or else wrong. If right, then it is right to become a member of the M. E. Church. If so, every man refusing to join the M. E. Church is guilty of disobedience. But if the whole is wrong, what authority have we for receiving persons from them, and count their baptism valid? Here I stop, and wait for some one to answer the above.

Altamont, Kansas.

P. S.—The above can be applied to any organization that is not the church of Christ. F. H.

If the man was baptized to obey the Lord, it did not put him into the Methodist Church. If he joined it afterwards, he did wrong. D. L.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 3

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Jude 3.

We now come to examine further the will of God as expressed to us through the Son. We came to the conclusion in our last letter, that to honor the Father we must honor him through the specific commands of Christ. Now what are these? We may suggest, however, that in honoring the Father he has made special promises to us: "If any man serve me," said Jesus, "him will my Father honor." God proposes to pardon us of our past sins, to adopt us as sons and daughters, and make us the recipients of eternal life, and heirs of all that pertain to heavenly things in the New Jerusalem, with Christ as our elder brother, through whom these promises are made. But there are conditions to these different specific promises, and the conditions pertaining to each promise must be complied with, before that promise can be realized as ours. The first promise to us is the remission of sins; we must be saved from the effects of our past sins, before we can be adopted as sons; must be sons before we can inherit the blessings promised to sons, etc. And now, what commands of Christ will (when obeyed in accordance with the elementary principles evolved in his sermon on the mount) free us from sin? will obtain for us the pardon, the remission of our past sins? Paul, who was an authorized exponent of the will of God through Christ says: "But without faith it is impossible to please God: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. 11: 6. Seeing that Paul makes faith the first thing towards seeking a reward, we have only to see if Jesus confirmed this. Turning to John 8: 24, "For if you believe not that I am he, (Jesus Christ, the Son of God, see John 8: 15-18), ye shall die in your sins." Again, John 1: 12: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." We may then state it as a momentous fact, that faith is a condition towards the remission of past sins; that without it, there is no remission, no promise of pardon.

It is needless, at this point, to notice the many subdivisions of faith, or the power or office of each division of faith that has been made and suggested by men; for they only present a show of worldly wisdom. But we may notice how the will of God divides faith. Jesus said, "Not every one that heareth (believeth) the will of God, but he that doeth," etc. In the parable of the sower he makes the believing and doing constitute acceptable faith, while only hearing, receiving, believing, without the corresponding "bringing forth," doing something, not of any value. Paul inculcates the same idea in speaking of Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and others. And James speaks expressly of a living, a perfect faith, and a dead faith, James 2: 14-26. And he says emphatically, that a man is not justified, saved, by faith only. James 2: 24. We find that living faith, a faith that justifies, is made perfect by work; not works of our own, but the works of righteousness, the works of God—the things commanded. See Heb. 13, what Abel did, what Noah, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, and Moses did, the work, and wonders the ancient worthies did, works that God commanded them, and therein made their faiths perfect and accepted of God. We need neither to attempt to follow up the teachings of men as to how we obtain faith, but look into the perfect law of the Lord, and see what its expounders teach. Paul answers this squarely: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 11: 17. Faith in men comes by hearing the words of men; faith in God and in his Son comes by hearing the words of God. And hence Jesus said to his apostles, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, teaching them to observe all thing whatsoever I have commanded you, Matt. 28: 19-20. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 7. "Preach my words that they may have faith in me, a faith made perfect by doing the work that I have commanded them." That you and I, my friend may obtain our faith through the words of the Lord; that we may perfect our faith by the works he demands of us, is the desire of A DISCIPLE.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bishop Sympton, of the Methodist Church, North, lies at his home, sick, without hope of recovery. He has since died.

Bro. W. B. Carnes, of Smithville, editor of the Index, was in our office during the week. He is a grand-son of Bro. W. D. Carnes.

Owing to ill health, Bro. George W. Campbell has resigned his position as principal of Lynnville Academy, Lynnville, Tenn. The trustees desire to secure a competent teacher to take the position.

Our contributor, "Ailenroc," has been suffering much from catarrhal affections through the winter and spring. She is better now, we are glad to say, and will furnish our readers with an article soon.

Bro. Creel has recently held a meeting in the new house of worship at Martin, Tenn., with seventeen additions to the church. The brethren in their new house of worship feel that their prospects for the future are good.

Dr. A. J. Baird, one of the most prominent preachers of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, died on June 16th, in New York City. He had started as a delegate of the Pan Presbyterian Church, at Belfast, Ireland, and was taken sick and died in New York City.

Married, near Franklin, Tenn., at the home of the bride's mother, by F. B. Srygley, Bro. F. C. Sowell to sister Mollie Evans. They started immediately for Union City, where they will spend about a month in visiting her relations, and preaching as opportunity is offered.

A brother from Indiana writes: "I admire your reply to Bro. Srygley on 'Missionary Societies.' It is not too late to remind him that the Jesuitical 'Societa de propaganda fide,' is older than any protestant institution, and that we have simply borrowed it from the Man of Sin!"

Any information concerning his whereabouts, would be very thankfully received by the parents of Jimmie Smith, a boy sixteen years of age, (having dark hair, blue eyes, a large nose, and small mouth,) who ran away from home in May. Address Birch Smith, Beulah, Tenn., via Lebanon.

We have on our table a neat 28-page catalogue of Burritt College, for the session ending July 11, 1884. They catalogue 195 students for the session. This indicates a healthful prosperity for the school. This catalogue includes a list of all the graduates of Burritt College. Send to Pres't A. T. Seitz, Spencer, Tenn., and get a catalogue.

Bro. J. L. Bryant, of Rural Hill, Wilson county, Tenn., gave our office a call last week. Bro. Bryant is a young man that with few advantages of education, and with what is regarded unfavorable surroundings, heard the truth and obeyed it. He had that faith which led him to bear his part in the worship; he then began to talk in the retired nooks and corners of his neighborhood. His growth has been gradual but constant, and promises to be so for the future. He is doing a good work, and I am persuaded will abound more and more in usefulness, as he grows in years and experience.

W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., June 19, writes: "Preached at Flippen, Ky., last Lord's day. Owing to measles in the community, did not have a large crowd. Bros. J. H. Smith and U. Wright were present. Bro. Wright gave us a splendid discourse on "Love," at four o'clock, p. m. The church at Flippen is doing very well. It is quite a treat to be present at their Sunday-school. Bro. Isaac T. Reneau will begin a meeting at this place (Lafayette) on Saturday before the second Lord's day in July, and continue ten days."

We are sorry to have to go to press this week without any thing from our associate editors. Bro. Harding's article came to hand Saturday morning, but too late for this issue. In the absence of something from him, we keep his memory fresh by a little criticism of some of his positions.

From a circular just received of his school, we note that Bro. J. W. Grant, principal of Forest Hill Seminary, of Montgomery County, Tenn., near Guthrie, Ky., which is his post-office, will begin his next session of ten months on Monday, September 1, 1884. We are satisfied that brother Grant is a good teacher, and we hope he will receive liberal patronage.

H. L. Walling, McMinnville, Tenn., June 16, writes: "I preached here at 11 o'clock A. M., on third Lord's day, to an attentive audience, and at 3 P. M., at Kell's school house, two miles out, at which place we had one addition, from the Baptists, John said, 'He must decrease, but Christ must increase.' And so it is; and angels, (I imagine) rejoice."

John Marcrom, Winchester, Tenn., June 17, writes: "We are having a good interest at Shady Point, two and one-half miles southeast of Winchester. Baptized two last Lord's day. We have a good Bible class. But we have no church house. We would be thankful for any donations the brethren would make for the building of our church house. As ever your brother in the kingdom of God."

J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., June 12, writes: "I preached at Philadelphia, Warren County, last Lord's day, to a large audience, and one young lady came forward and confessed her faith in Christ. Philadelphia is the oldest congregation in this part of the country. All the members that belonged to this congregation when it was first planted have died, but one, and he has about reached his four score years; but there is yet a large membership, and they are doing a good work, both in the church and Sunday-school."

J. M. Kidwell, Smithville, Tenn., writes: "At Watertown we had one addition from the Missionary Baptist Church, the second Lord's day in this month. The third Lord's day we had one to unite with us at Smithville from the Primitive Baptists. Both men of mature age, heads of families, and good citizens. I expect, the Lord willing, to hold a meeting at Livingston, Overton County, beginning Friday night before the fifth Lord's day in June, and continuing one or two weeks."

F. B. Srygley, Lebanon, Tenn., June 13, writes: "I preached five times this week at Riddleton. There was a good interest manifested all the time, notwithstanding the rain. On Monday night it rained on me very hard before I got to the school-house, but I managed to preach myself dry, and my sermon was possibly dry enough to dry the entire congregation. At any rate they came back Tuesday night. One added, from the Baptists. I left a promise to preach a week for them in the summer. May the Lord bless the faithful few in that neighborhood."

A good Presbyterian said: "I endorse every word you said to day, except what you said about baptism. I think one drop is as good as an ocean." I had not said a word about a drop or an ocean of water, neither did I mention immersion. But I used Bible language, and said one should be buried with him by baptism. Now, why did he conclude that I meant immersion, and yet contend that Paul meant something else? We both used the same words; then why the difference? No wonder fire doesn't mean fire, and water doesn't mean water. If I say repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, every one knows what I mean; but there are a great many that can't understand the same statement from Peter. Let us state our propositions in the language of the book. It has a fine effect.—[F. B. Srygley.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Third Lord's day in July, at Pinewood, Tenn.; fourth Lord's day in July, and it may be over first in August, at Antioch, near Viola, Warren County, Tenn.; at Rich Pond Station, Ky., second Lord's day in August, beginning Wednesday night previous. This meeting in fact will be begun by Bro. B. F. Rogers first Lord's day in August, and we will join him Wednesday night. In North Mississippi from third Lord's day in August over first Lord's day in September, but do not yet know the points where meetings will be held. Will announce as soon as notified. At Watertown, Tenn, second Lord's day in September, and have promised one meeting or more in September, in Warren County, Tenn.—[E. G. S.]

We learn through a letter to Bro. R. Averitt, of this city, from Bro. Pink W. Lee, of Martin, Tenn., the congregation at that place have completed their new house of worship, with which they are pleased and quite thankful. Bro. J. C. Creel had just closed a meeting with some seventeen additions. The brethren greatly rejoice. Much prejudice removed, consequently much good accomplished.

General News.

A few days ago a man giving the name of Dr. Warren, of Philadelphia, but afterwards changing it to James K. Lawrence, of Dover, Del., was arrested in Chicago, on a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses, from two or three physicians of that city. He proves to be the notorious ex-governor Moses, of South Carolina.—It is reported that a large cave, possible a rival of Wyandotte and Mammoth, has been discovered near Nurom, Sullivan County, Indiana, the entrance having been unearthed by a recent land-slide. A skeleton of a man and a dog, and a number of Indian relics, were found in it.—A requisition has been made by the State Department for the extradition of John C. Eno, the defaulting president of the Second National Bank, of New York. The British Minister at Washington, telegraphed the Attorney-General of Quebec, ordering that Eno be held for extradition. The Second National Bank has brought suit in the Supreme Court against Eno to recover $3,185,000 and an attachment has been made against Eno's property in New York.—Mr. Tilden has written a letter, stating that he is not a candidate for the Presidential nomination of the Democratic party, and that he would not accept the nomination under any circumstances. His advanced years and feeble health is assigned as the reason.—Women now serve on juries in Washington Territory.—The total number of separate farms in the United States is 4,000,000, and their aggregate value is estimated at $19,000,000,000.—The number of female doctors in the United States has increased nearly 7,000 per cent in the last twenty years.—The State Democratic Convention met in this city on the 18th, to nominate delegates to the Chicago Convention, and a candidate for governor. Gov. Bate was re-nominated by acclamation. After a hard fight during the best part of two days, they passed a platform in favor of tariff for revenue only.

FOREIGN.—Theebaw, King of Burmah, has poisoned the Queen, and her mother, and has married the Queen's sister.—A Swedish explorer is going to London to make an appeal for a subscription to defray the expenses of an expedition to the South Pole. He estimates that expedition will cost £200,000. The Spanish government has promised to pay part of the expenses of the enterprise.—For the first time in many years the gates of the palace yard were locked the night after the sitting of Parliament. This is a sure evidence of the widespread fear of dynamite.—The project of erecting a monument to King Victor Emmanuel in the Pantheon at Rome, has been abandoned. A simple tablet will take the place of the proposed monument. A conflict with the Vatican will be avoided. The anti-clericals denounce this step as a weak concession to the church.

Home Reading.

A WEATHER PROPHET.

It rains; this morning on a tree
We heard a shrilly chirring;
We searched to find it carefully,
For well we knew the rogue must be A little tree-frog purring.

Blue as a larkspur was the sky;
The bees went booming, humming;
White clouds like slow fair ships sailed by;
No sign was there to any eye
Of sudden rain-storm coming.

But chirr, he piped, and chirr and chirr-r;
The children sighed "Provoking!"
Quite out of sorts indeed they were
That that small hidden thing should stir
The sweet air with his croaking.

Their play was planned for out of doors
When first they heard him calling.
And now a heavy darkness lowers;
Rain pattered first, but now it pours
As if the sky were falling.

I fancy he will find some chink
With twigs and leaves for cover,
Where he can safely sit and blink,
And thrust his nose out for a drink,
Until the rain is over.

You'd like to see him some fine day?
Only quick eyes can find him.
He has a most mysterious way
Of being gray if bark is gray,
Green, if there's green behind him.

His guesses are not always right
To the extent of bringing
A thunder rack of black in sight;
Yet sweet as the whistle of Bob White
Is the little tree-frog's singing.

—By Mrs. Clara Doty Bates.

UNCLE BEN ON GROWING.

"Here, youngster, if there isn't any hurry, bear a hand a minute, will ye?" shouted Uncle Ben, as Sam was passing his gate. The boys all called him Uncle Ben, for he was an old sea-captain turned farmer, and every boy of them longed to be just like him.

"What's the matter, Uncle Ben? I ain't in any hurry," answered Sam.

"Let me toss you up aloft then. This 'ere vine hain't no notion o' climbing up to the mast-head, but I've got a notion it shall. I'll hist ye. There now! You stand there on the roof, and hold it up so, while I lash it to the mast."

"Don't I wish I was tall as you, Uncle Ben?" And Sam looked on admiringly as the old sailor stretched up his tall figure to tie the vine. "I don't see's I'm ever goin' to grow. All the rest of the boys are growing, though."

"Don't be in a hurry, boy," said Uncle Ben. "I ain't so powerful tall myself, but then I didn't grow in a minute. Besides, what's the matter with your pants? I should say you'd been growing since those were made. Why, your feet are reaching down as if they were feeling for anchor-age far below; and as for your hands—why, they hang 'most a fathom out of your jacket sleeves. I guess there's some hopes o' you growing, so don't be discouraged."

"I don't see's I grow a bit, Uncle Ben. That's only because my clo'es are shrinking, I guess. Any way, I wish I could grow up all in a night like Jonah's gourd, and be as tall as you are all of a sudden."

"There, that vine's all right now," said Uncle Ben; "so down with ye again, my boy. Now, look here; I want to say a word to ye about this growing business. You'd like to grow up like Jonah's gourd, you say. Did you ever think of it, how that gourd wasn't good for anything after that first day? In fact, when Jonah wanted to sit down and cool off under the shadow of it, to be sure, it wasn't there. It had all perished, the Bible says, just because of a little worm that killed it. Now, I tell ye, boy, there's something that's a great deal better than growing tall, and that is, growing good. Don't let any worms of bad habits get in to eat out the right thoughts and right wishes which the Holy Spirit puts into your heart. There's one thing I've often noticed, and that is, that most things that are good for anything—are slow about their growing. Just look at that crop of toadstools down there at the foot of the tree. Why! there wasn't one there last night; but now, there they all stand, as pert as if they thought a great deal of themselves. But the fact is, they ain't good for anything,—don't you see? Now, look at that tall oak. What a nice shade it makes for us in hot summer days! And what a splendid mainmast it would make. If I wanted to build a ship, I should be for cutting it down, and then it would help carry me all over the world. That tree's good for something.

It might be good for lots of things. But how long do you suppose it's been growing? In the first place, the acorn didn't sprout in one night nor two. I don't know how long it took to make as much show as one toadstool, and now it's been growing a hundred years or more. I say, boy, don't be in a hurry to grow tall, but take care to grow so as to be good for something when you are grown up. Who wouldn't rather be an oak, if it does take a hundred years, than a toadstool or a gourd which are good for nothing?"—By Lillian Payson, in S. S. Times.

SHARPER THAN A SERPENT'S TOOTH.

A week or two ago a young man, belonging to an influential, honorable family, cheated a couple of business firms in a great Western city, by false representations, out of a couple of thousand dollars. The matter was brought before his father, an old man of stern integrity. The young man was his only child.

"Gentlemen, I can do nothing," he said. "I have paid nearly half a million dollars already to make up sums which he has embezzled. He has brought me to beggary. The law must take its course." He turned away. The road between him and death was short, and it would be dark and hard.

On the same week an elderly woman was seen to throw herself into the Schuylkill river, near Philadelphia. She was rescued with difficulty. She held in her hand a satchel containing gold, notes, and bank-books representing several thousand dollars. When she recovered her senses, she was asked—

"Why did you do this? You were in no danger of want."

"No; I had money enough. But I had five children once—three boys and two girls. They all went away. They have not wanted me to visit them, and they do not write to me. I have waited for years, and they have not come back. Folks tell me they were doing well, and were fine gentlemen and ladies; but they have forgotten their old mother. I was so lonesome that my head got queer. Indeed, gentlemen, I tried to do all I could for my little children; but when they grew up they were tired of me."

No words of ours can add to the force of these two chapters of actual life. Very few sons and daughters are as guilty as these, but how few are wholly free from such guilt? Many a man or woman who would not take the life of the poorest living creature kills the souls of those who love them best by years of passive, cold forgetfulness and neglect.—Youth's Companion.

THE PEACEFULNESS OF DEATH.

How peaceful is the dwelling-place of those who inhabit the green hamlet and populous cities of the dead! They need no antidote for care—no armor against fate. No morning sun shines in the closed windows and awakens them, nor shall, until the last great day. At most a straggling sunbeam creeps in through the crumbling wall of an old, neglected tomb—a strange visitor, that stays not long. And there they all sleep, the holy ones with their arms crossed upon their breasts, or lying motionless by their sides—not carved in marble by the hand of man, but formed in dust by the hand of God. No one comes to them now, to hold them by the hand, and with delicate fingers to smooth their hair. They heed no more the brandishments of early friendship. They need us not, however much we need them. And yet they silently await our coming. Beautiful is that season of life when we can say, in the language of the Scripture, "Thou hast the dew of thy youth." But of these flowers death gathers many. He places them upon his bosom, and he is transformed into something less terrific than before. We learn to gaze and shudder not; for he carries in his arms the sweet blossoms of our earthly hopes. We shall see them all again, blooming in a happier land. Yes, death brings us again to our friends. They are waiting for us, and we shall not long delay. They have gone before us, and are like the angels in heaven. They stand upon the borders of the grave to welcome us, with the countenance of affection which they wore on earth; yet more lovely, more radiant, more spiritual! He spake well who said that graves are the footprints of angels.—Longfellow.

FROM WINTER TO SPRING.

With respect to clothing, one needs to consult the thermometer at this season more than at any other in the year. In the middle of the day it may be expedient to throw off some of the clothing which was worn in winter, but it should be resumed promptly with change of temperature. The system cannot endure with impunity abrupt changes from heat to cold in the spring as well as it can in the fall. Shut up in the house as we have all been more or less during the winter, the blood hasn't been sufficiently oxygenated, and we have grown tender. Underwear, in this climate should not be changed from heavy to light until after the middle of May.

A change in diet is very seasonable. Heavy meats may be largely discarded. Rich puddings and pastries should give place to lighter forms of dessert. Vegetables and fruits are suitable articles of diet, and all the open air one can have should be enjoyed. With a light diet, warm clothing will not be uncomfortable. Put less coal in the furnace and give but little draught, and you reduce the temperature as surely as though you opened doors and windows to cool off. So, feed lightly, and dress warmly during the changing spring weather, and health will be secured. Said a druggist the other day: "It's astonishing how most every kind of medicine will sell. But you see most people eat too much, and these medicines that act on the liver and kidneys and bowels simply help to carry off the overplus of food that has been taken. One doesn't need as much carbon to keep up the health of the body when the mercury stands at 50°, 60°, 70°, as when it ranges near the freezing point or drops below zero, and the complaint of want of appetite is only an admission that Nature knows what she is about, and makes light demand when small supply is needed."

WARTS.

E. L. F. writes: "Our servant's wrist is covered with warts, but she does not want to burn them off. How can they be removed painlessly?" We give various remedies that from time to time have appeared in this column. 1. Burn a piece of linen or cotton on any piece of steel and rub the moisture left on the metal by the burning on the wart three or four successive times. 2. Rub the wart with a strong solution of potash till it disappears. 3. Wet gum ammonia and rub it on the wart at night just before going to bed. 4. Cover a few sprigs of arbor vitae with hot water; when the tea is quite strong, pour off and bathe the warts with this, or crush the juice of the leaf directly on the wart three or four times till it disappears. Take five cent's worth muriate of ammonia, wet a crystal in water and apply several times during the day. 5. Cover the warts with baking soda, wet with water and tie them up. A few applications will remove them.—Tribune.

LETTERS TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am a little girl, eight years old. My father takes the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, and I like to read your good letters. I go to Sunday-school, and read in the Bible class. I have two brothers and three sisters. We have preaching sometimes twice a month. But fearing my letter will be too lengthy, I will close, hoping you will write often.—[Maggie Simpson, New Castle, Ala.]

Dear Uncle Minor: Reading so many nice letters from other children to you, I thought I would write you one, and ask you if you ever heard of a little village called Plantersville, Alabama. We have a Sunday-school four miles from Plantersville. I attend regularly. My papa is superintendent. I received a nice picture of the ten commandments and Lord's prayer, Christmas, for good lessons. Wish you could come to see us. We have not had preaching since last July. For fear my letter will be too long I will close.—[Idell T. Walker, Plantersville, Ala., June 6, 1884.]

There is one place where the Lord cannot live, and where he will not live, and that is in the heart that has become lukewarm, in a proud and uplifted heart, a heart that is filled with its own self. The more we have of self the less of Christ

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:—"Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' In three months I was perfectly cured. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send full particulars to any one writing me for them and inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and earnestly advise them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks stating that they had commenced the treatment and were much better already." Mrs. E. F. Morgan, New Castle, Me.

It is an inspiring illustration of the evangelic spirit of the noble men whom we delight to honor as the pioneers of the reformation."

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

ACTS OF APOSTLES.

This book occupies a prominence among the books of the New Testament that can never be too highly esteemed by Bible students and teachers. How to enter into the kingdom of God, the different steps to be taken, what these steps are, and the order in which they come, can only be learned from Acts of Apostles.

However much may be learned of other things elsewhere in the Bible, and whatever of variety may be gleaned from other portions of it, when this one lesson of conversion, of becoming a Christian, of entering into the kingdom of God is to be learned or taught, to this book we must go, or this lesson can never be learned or taught. This book is the key-stone of the New Testament. The first four books bring us to this, and prepare us for it. The letters of the apostles to the churches take us up at the end of this, and give us in full the practical development of the church of God. But neither the gospels nor the epistles to the churches will supply the place of Acts. Every institution has its beginning, its gradual stages of development, and its full establishment, and then its practical workings. And it is surely as important to understand the full establishment of an institution, and the way of entrance into it, as any other part of its development. No matter how much one may learn of the preparatory state of the kingdom of God, or how well he may understand its practical workings, if he never learns the laws of initiation into it, he will be but little benefited by what he has learned. A man may study the origin of Free Masonry, and of its practical workings all his life, and yet if he does not learn how to enter into it, but remains outside, his other knowledge regarding it will be of precious little service to him. We need to learn the whole of the Christian institution in all of its parts, that we may be benefited by it. The gospels begin with the introduction of the Savior into this world, together with his forerunner, John the Baptist, and tells us how John introduced him to Israel at the river Jordan where he was baptized of John in the river. These books also give us an account of his personal life, his his heavenly instructions and his wondrous miracles. These books show us that the life of Jesus, though he appeared as a man, differed widely from that of any personage that had ever appeared before him. They give us a brief and unvarnished history of some of his wondrous miracles, that prove him to be the son of God. They make no attempt to give any coloring to these wonderful works. They were so much concerned about the facts themselves that they never for one moment thought about trying to beautify them with eloquence. In this regard these four books, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John differ from all the biographies ever written by uninspired men. Uninspired men in writing biographies take pains to present their heroes in the most attractive light possible, and make special effort to adorn and beautify their actions in the most eloquent language, and strive to present only those words and actions that will make the most favorable and agreeable impression upon their readers. This one characteristic of these first four writers of the New Testament is suffi-ent to prove them inspired by the Spirit of God. As men, they could not have written such books, if they would, and would not, if they could. Mortal men never did write any such books, and never would have written books so thoroughly condemning every impulse and desire of the human heart and flesh as such. But the main thing we wished to say regarding these four books in this essay, is that they give us a history of the plan of salvation prepared by the Son of God for lost sinners. They give us the history of his life, his death, his burial and resurrection from the grave, and some of them, of his ascension to heaven also. They also give us an account of the commission he gave to his apostles, when he ordained that they should go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. But the things to be preached by these apostles, and the things to be done by the sinner in order to salvation, are so briefly told, and in such comprehensive terms, that from these alone we could not learn how to enter into the kingdom of God. But these books also tell us that the Savior promised the Holy Spirit to these apostles, to aid them in carrying out this commission, and that he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, not to begin the work till endowed from on high. At this point these histories stop, and leave us without any instructions as to how they did their work. We learn from these books that the gospel was to be preached to all, and that faith in it would be necessary, and that baptism must be complied with, and that repentance and remission must be preached among all nations; but the order in which these should come, and precisely what these things were, is not given in these books.

This leaves a necessity for another book, to give us a historical account of the work of these apostles, in order to give us a full development of the whole matter. We need a history of their preaching, to teach us what the Savior meant when he commanded them to preach the gospel to every creature, promising salvation to all that would believe it and be baptized. We must know what the gospel is before we can believe it. And as the Savior did not tell when he commanded the apostles to preach it, and as these first four books close without giving the information, another book, to give a full development of this matter, is a necessity. The Lord knew this, and hence he has given us the book of Acts. And this book has been placed just in the right place by those who arranged the order of the books of the New Testament. If it had been placed at the first, it would have thrown everything into disorder and confusion, and would have appeared all out of joint. Or if Acts of Apostles had been placed after the epistles, it would have been wholly out of order, and utter confusion would have been the result. But as it is, placed immediately after the gospels and before the epistles, it is in the only truly natural place for it in all the oracles of God. Placed here, it gives us the right instruction at the right time, and in the right place. It tells us just when and where the apostles began to carry out the great commission that Jesus gave them, and tells us what they preached in preaching the gospel, and what sinners were required to do in order to obey it and become Christians, and the order in which these things were to come in every sinner's case. Drop out Acts of apostles, and this information is lost.

This book gives us the only account we have in the New Testament of how the apostles preached in making converts to the gospel, and how sinners were saved by it. It gives only a brief account of only a few of the apostles. But this account runs through a good many years, gives us an account of their preaching in many places, from Jerusalem to Rome, and of the conversion of thousands and tens of thousands of sinners. And the great importance of this matter is that it is the only account we have of the conversion of sinners under the last commission of Christ to the apostles. Leave this out, and you search in vain for this information. The letters of these apostles to the churches begin with them as Christians already, and teach them how to live the Christian life; but do not, in one instance, teach sinners how to become Christians. Brief and figurative allusions are sometimes made in these letters to the conversion of those addressed, but the details in order are never one time given, and no one can learn in fullness how to become a Christian from these.

This book of Acts, therefore, fills a grand place in the economy of man's redemption, and gives us instruction without which none could find their way into the kingdom of God. No man, therefore, can teach a single alien in fullness how to become a child of God, without appealing to this book for information on the subject.

The preachers of the denominational world draw but lightly from this book in preaching to convert sinners. They prefer the figurative allusions to conversion that are made in the gospels and in the epistles, such as they can more readily turn to favor their mystical ideas of conversion by the direct work of the Holy Spirit, and that without baptism. And even our own brethren are sometimes so much afraid of going along in the old beaten paths, and of preaching like our pioneer brethren did on these matters, and thus being considered old fogies, that some of them have almost ceased to use Acts of Apostles in their preaching. Even in protracted meetings, when the conversion of sinners is the object of their effort, whole meetings are sometimes gone through with, without one single case of conversion ever being clearly given from Acts during the meeting. When our pioneer brethren preached for the conversion of sinners, they dwelt largely and long upon the cases of conversion given in Acts. They would read them and present them one after another in their full connection from time to time during their meetings, giving line upon line, and precept upon precept from the pages of this book, until all who heard thoroughly understood the requirements of the gospel in their fullness, and in their proper order, so that if they were willing to be Christians, they knew exactly how to become such. In some sections this appeal to Acts of Apostles, and the repetition of its teaching, is not needed. But in other sections we are certain it is timely. When preachers are too far advanced in theology to preach Acts of Apostles where sinners are to be converted, need that some one shall them again the first principles of the Oracles of God. This book will never be too old-fashioned, or too old-timey, or too common to be preached, so long as there is one lost sinner to be saved. And when men are afraid they will be regarded as common, as old fogy, as being behind the age, if they repeat these cases of conversion found in this book when preaching to convert sinners, to save souls, they are surely ashamed of the wisdom of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of the wisdom and teaching of the Holy Spirit. Such men have progressed beyond that wisdom that inspired and guided the apostles of the Son of God in the glorious work they did in converting sinners, as recorded in this grand book.

We may in future take a few rambles into this book, and give in brief some of the specific cases of conversion so plainly and so beautifully given in this, the fifth book of the New Testament.

JOE HARDING, THE EVANGELIST.

The Christian church of the present day has many eloquent preachers and earnest evangelists, and their different styles of presenting the gospel are about as various as their number; but we have only one Joe Harding, with a style peculiarly his own. He is not what the people would call great; indeed, on first acquaintance, they are prone to say something to his discredit, though their denunciations might not develop in them a large amount of goodness of heart. Some go so far as to class him with fanatics, or cranks. The Louisville papers give him the appellation "Weeping Joe;" for what reason does not appear. The writer recently attended his meetings about a dozen times, and although the preacher grew earnest, and occasionally almost excited, still there were no signs of weeping. But the world and the papers may call him what they please, none of these things move brother Joe. No one, however, must call him ugly or lazy, as, he says, his wife would not be pleased with either designation. Besides, each is untrue. In personal appearance he is comely, with raven-black hair, a moustache and goatee of the same hue, and features forcibly reminding the observer of the French type. And as to energy and herculean labors, he has no superiors, and very few equals. Either appellation, therefore, would be singularly inappropriate. His education has certainly been neglected, and he prides himself that he never attempts to "polish" his sermons.

Objections to his mannerism, which occasionally borders on the theatrical, are loud and frequent, as, for instance, when he was recently preaching on "heart religion," the stage—a reasonably wide one—became too confined for his dramatic description of a Roman Catholic girl in Cincinnati under the influence of "heart religion." For a second or two the preacher was off the stand to show how he pleaded with the girl's employer, a hotel keeper, to allow her time to attend mass, brother Joe volunteering to be her substitute to wash dishes or do other work while she observed her religious rites. The point the preacher was making at the time, was that heartfelt earnestness in any religion did not make that religion right.

On another occasion he ran all along the aisle of the meeting-house to show how readily and quickly the prodigal son ran after he willed to return to his father's house. The change of will explained his repentance, which was the subject of discourse.

Yet, with all brother Joe's peculiarities, there is a magnetism about the man which is remarkable, and saints and sinners, the "learned and the rude," and people well-informed in biblical knowledge, go repeatedly to his meetings. They are attracted, no doubt, by the manifestation in brother Joe of an ardent desire for the salvation of mankind, shown in his indomitable energy and constant labors in their behalf, preaching to-day in the meeting-house, to-morrow in the grove, and daily from house to house, warning sinners of their danger if they continue in disobedience to the gospel. He waits for no call from a church to hold a meeting, but always obeys one when it is made; but the command is, says he, to go, and in obedience to it he goes to a grove, or seeks a large room in a populous district, for night meetings, while the hours of the day are employed in visits to invite people to attend his meetings. Occasionally he seeks large work-shops, and asks permission to preach to the men while they are discussing their mid-day lunch. If such constant, devoted work does not fill the measure of the exhortation to "be instant in season and out of season," it is difficult to know which way to turn to seek its fulfillment.

While at meeting every muscle in brother Joe's body seems to be moving. He rests not for one moment. If he is not singing, praying, or preaching, he goes from seat to seat to take the people by the hand and greet them. Failing eye-sight prohibits him from reading a chapter, and he manages to sit tolerably still while another reads and prays. But should a familiar face appear while brother Joe is leading the song, or is making an introductory speech, you need not be surprised to see him going half-way down the aisle to greet the new comer with "I am glad to see you, Bro. Lowber," and conduct him to a seat, and after that the speaker would calmly proceed with his speech.

While preaching, he holds a staff in his hand, and as he is not afflicted like Jacob after his wrestle with the angel, the use of the staff is not apparent, except that it serves as an implement for exercise to his disquieted muscles. With it he occasionally points to printed charts being up on either side and in the rear of the platform, of which he has four. One is in the form of a wheel, the hub being an open Bible, prominently displaying the words: "Preach the word" and "walk in the light." Between the spokes are Scripture reference, denoting the word in creation, in preservation, in redemption, among men, in regeneration, sanctification and glorification; the words of the commission serving as the tie. A second chart denotes the starlight, moonlight and sunlight ages of religion, and its prominent motto is our rightly dividing the words of the faith. A third is an inscription of the ladder of faith, which, with repentance and baptism, are at the bottom round; on the other rounds are inscribed the Christian virtues which are to be added to faith, while at the top is eternal life. The fourth chart is the downward ladder of apostasy, and people who start from the top round of that ladder (the loss of first love) get to the bottom (infidelity) very quickly, while the climbing of the ladder of faith is a life-time work.

In this I am not penning Bro. Joe's obituary. Far be the sad day when that solemn task should be undertaken! But I make an effort to show Joe Harding as he really is, "with all his faults and foibles," there being a disposition to undervalue his true worth as a preacher of the glorious gospel of the kingdom. In this connection I have but very few words to say. The results of his herculean labors overshadow all his oddities, insomuch that by some he is almost regarded as a "chosen vessel unto Jesus to bear his name before" the poor and the neglected of the earth; and the result of Joe Harding's labors is the best exponent of his worth, and the worth of other disinterested brethren to the church who go and do like him. The conversions and the additions to the church brought about through the labors of Bro. Harding, are large. His labors of a few months resulted in adding about one hundred and fifty members to the Portland Avenue Christian church, Louisville, Ky.; and two weeks' labors with the Central church in the same city, where he is still laboring, resulted in twenty-five additions.

Do the people still persist in calling Joe Harding a fanatic and a crank? And will Bro. Thos. Munnell classify him with the humble brethren whom he sometimes in his writings derisively designates "scalawags?" (Now wouldn't the reader like to be a "cultured" Christian gentleman, so that he with propriety might use that classic term "scalawag" when referring to a devoted class of laborers for the Master?) If Bro. Harding is placed in such ranks, then I pray the Lord to send us more fanatics, cranks and scalawags, and fewer pulpit dudes and starched parsons, whose chief joy are empty titles and fat livings.

BRO. H. L. WALLING—AGAIN.

Our brother admits that heart is used synonymously with mind, but still contends that the purification of the mind is equal to pardon of sins. Now is this not the same as saying, "an individual's sins are all in the mind?" As soon as the mind is purged—purified, (see Webster) the sins are gone. Gone from where? From the mind, of course. A sin of the mind would be to know a thing to be a sin, I understand. Paul sinned in persecuting Christians, but did not know it to be sin. "Did it ignorantly in unbelief," and found mercy on account of his ignorance. See 1 Tim. 1: 13-14-15. And, too, in this connection, says he was the "chief" of sinners. This is, of itself, sufficient to show that we may be in sin, and at the same time the sin not in the mind. Bro. Walling, will you—ah can you get yourself out of this difficulty?

Bro. Walling says: "He (the sinner) is freed from the practice of sin, when he believes, but God purifies his heart (not faith alone—faith before baptism) when he obeys the truth." Now right here he introduces as proof, that God purifies the heart in obedience. 1 Peter 1: 22-23. Peter did not say so. He said that the soul was purified to the truth. Bro. Walling, please give us in your next your reasons for making heart and soul equal. Is it only the mind that has rest and peace with God after death? John saw the "souls" of them that were beheaded for a witness of Jesus." (Rev. 20: 4.) Was it only their minds that John saw? The Savior (Matt. 10: 28) teaches that "we are not to fear man, who only has power to kill the body, but to fear God who has power to destroy both soul and body in hell," and this is the mind, is it Bro. Walling?

My brother, I am perfectly willing that our readers may see who is into this "mixing" business. In my other article, I say: "Where is there any great error in teaching that the sinner must have his heart freed from the love of sin, his thoughts centered on heaven, salvation, the Lord, the Bible, and his mind—heart—perfectly filled with the love and a desire for these things?" To this, you reply: "There is no error in this, but if you put purify in this qualification and connection, as you have done in another place, you mix things that should not be mixed, and place purify where it does not belong." If "there is no error" in so teaching, and these thoughts are pure thoughts, and his (the sinner's) mind is perfectly filled with such thoughts, has he not a pure mind—heart? Now, Bro. Walling, are such thoughts as I named pure thoughts? If not, then the best Christian on earth has an impure heart, for such thoughts fill the Christian's mind. Now you must do one of two things—that is, deny that such thoughts are pure, or give up that new theory you have up there in the mountains.

Dear brother, I admit, and have always taught, that Rom. 6: 17-18, James 1: 21, 1 Peter 1: 22-23, all have reference to a purification of the soul, pardon of sins, but thought never for once of so "mixing" things as to make these Scriptures equal to a purification of the mind. You again speak of Matt. 5: 8, My brother, who is the Savior addressing in this language? His disciples, of course. Those who had "obeyed the form of doctrine." He has no reference in this to the state of mind with the penitent before he is baptized. Our Savior here is speaking of the blessings that God will give to Christians—those who retain "pure hearts." Christians must practice purity, or these blessings they cannot have.

Bro. Walling says: "When God purifies the soul, he purifies the heart. He does not purify the heart in one way, and the soul in some other, and at a different time."

This is the "mixing" to which I object. "If our brother would prove this, it would help his cause wonderfully." I wonder if "Worcester's Octavo Dictionary, not poetry," will help our brother here!

Bro. Walling, I have a suggestion for you which I hope you will receive kindly. It is this: You have become so frightened at the errors of Babylon, and in your flight from these errors, you have gone a little beyond Jerusalem. Why, my brother, I know that my mind was never more filled with pure thoughts, than when, with Bro. Larimore hold of my hand, I confessed the Savior. But then according to the gospel, I was not pardoned—not freed from sin—my soul was yet stained, for I had only believed and repented. My brother, I am going to hold you to it. You have already admitted that "it is no error to teach that such thoughts as I have named must perfectly fill the mind." Now can the mind be any more than perfectly full? And are such thoughts pure? Say yes, my brother, and then I am ready for that "cordial shake." Why, Bro. Walling, that "inner man," that "deathless spirit," the soul cannot be simply the mind.

Bro. Walling, I think we have said enough. I am tired of so much war in the camp. I tell you, I do believe that some of the discussions in the ADVOCATE are doing a great injury; especially so, when such little matters are the thing disputed about. You say: "If you do see the truth confess it." Bro. Walling, I want to be saved. I could not though if I were so dishonest as not to confess the truth when I saw it. Bro. Walling, I don't know that I will write any more against your position, I am afraid but little good will be done. I, though, would be glad to hear from you again.

THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Matthew 12: 32.

That this is true no one can doubt; but why it is so, is a question that but few have answered even to their own satisfaction. As to him who did or does sin or blaspheme, against the Son of Man, and against the Holy Ghost, at the same time with the same mind and purposes in so doing, I cannot see any difference so far as the sin and individual are concerned; but in both instances they would be the same as to character.

Therefore the reason why it could be forgiven in one instance and not in the other, must be in something else than its mere character. And when we remember that the Son of Man did and taught all that he did or taught by the Holy Ghost, and that he was in the Father and the Father was in him, and that the words he spake and works he did was the Father's that dwelt in him, (John 14,) it could not be because the Holy Ghost, was more authoritative or more superior than the Son of Man. And I conceive the true reason is found in the fact that the sin and blasphemy against the two were not, and could not be committed at the same time, and under the same circumstances. And if that be so, it turns out those pharisees did not sin and blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, when they charged the Son of Man with casting out devils through Belzebub, as is generally believed; but did sin and blaspheme against the Son of Man. And that they could not commit the sin against the Holy Ghost, until after it was given when the Son of Man had been glorified. Hence the difference in time and circumstances.

They might commit the sin against the Son of Man and be forgiven, for after the Son of Man should complete his mission, God in his forbearance would send the Holy Ghost by which he would make his last appeal to man to save him from sin, on the principle and conditions of his own choosing. To those who rejected these there would be no remission here nor there. And that I am right in saying the Pharisees and scribes did not commit the sin against the Holy Ghost in the life-time of Christ, I give the following:

"After the Savior had been raised from the dead in possession of all power of Heaven and Earth, he said to the Apostles, Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature—not one excepted. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. So we see no one at that time could be guilty of an unpardonable sin. And if possible to show the fact more forcible, we turn to Acts 2, in which is recorded the teaching of the Holy Ghost itself. It says, through Peter, to those who rejected and spoke against the son of man; 'you with wicked hands crucified and slayed him.' And to the same after they had believed, 'Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, etc., and not a word about an unpardonable sin. Also see the five thousand (4&4 of Acts.) and Saul of Tarsus, the chief of sinners and vilest of persecutors. In Paul's letter to Romans, not a word does he say about the sin against the Holy Ghost, but all Israel could be saved on faith in Christ in a Gospel sense.

Dear Bro Poe: I like your Bible class, and wish to join it. It is hardly fair to ask questions without first answering some, but I will ask this one.

Who unwittingly disclosed the nature and design of Baptism before the Gospel was preached?—[Joel M. Yowell, Hickory flat, Miss., June, 12, 1884.

Dear Bro. Poe.: I send a question for your Bible class. In Act 10, 16, we have this language; "And this was done thrice." What was done thrice? The class will turn to it and read the context carefully before answering. This is an interesting part of your department.—[John S. Durst, Junction City, Tex.,

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bro. Lipscomb: Your request in the ADVOCATE of June 18th, in regard to T. Fanning dragging the altar out of the meeting-house, carries us back over fifty years. For I have been a member of the church some over fifty years. In those days we had no meeting-houses of our own, had to preach in private houses, in groves, just anywhere a hearing could be got. So the brethren concluded to have a camp-meeting and hands went to work, and by the appointed time, all things were ready. A large arbor was put up with an altar fixed before the stand, Methodist fashion, tents put up and all had moved in for the meeting. T. Fanning and T. V. Griffin and one or two more preachers were on the ground in time. They went to their tent, for one was prepared for them. In a short time they came out to the stand, looked around a while, and as they started to leave, to go back to the tent, Bro. Fanning said that he would rather get people into the water than into that thing. So that night after meeting, and after all had gone to bed, that altar was pulled down, and carried down the hill out of sight of the stand. I have no doubt but Bro. Fanning was leader in it all; and as you say, I think that put a stop to the mourning bench business, with the disciples in that community. I do not know that Bro. Fanning himself ever made a practice of calling for mourners to come to the altar for him to pray for them, but as you say, I am certain that he preached with those who did do it in his presence. This is all that I think necessary to say, as these things took place a long time ago, though they are facts. My father camped at the meeting and I was there. At this place I joined the church fifty one years ago, if I mistake not. There my father and my mother united with the church and were baptized out of Methodism into Christ. There your father and mother took their stand with the disciples on the Bible. If I were as good a writer as I have been, I would like to fill out this sheet in regard to the past. I am well nigh my three-score and ten. I am nervous, my hands cramp, and I will have to stop, and had I known some one else would comply with your request, I would not have said a word.

FAILED AND SUCCEEDED.

Men admit that no man is equally great in all things. Yet they often do not see that a man's failure in one line of work is no reason why he may not succeed in a different calling.

An incident, which occurred some years ago in a London linen store, illustrates this blindness.

A young man whose bluntness was such that he was of no use as a salesman, was told that he did not suit, and must go. Seeking the head of the house, the youth said:

"Don't turn me away; I'm good for something."

"You are good for nothing as a salesman," replied the principal.

"I am sure I can be useful," continued the youth.

"How, tell me how."

"I don't know, sir; I don't know."

"Nor do I," said the principal, laughing at the boy's eagerness and ignorance.

"Don't put me away," continued the youth; "try me at something else. I know I can't sell, but I can make myself useful somehow: I know I can."

Moved by his earnestness, the principal placed him in the counting room. Immediately his aptitude for figures showed itself. In a few years he became the head cashier of the concern. Throughout the country he was known as an eminent accountant.—The Youth's Companion.

Bro. Larimore's meeting closed in Columbia, Sunday night, June 22, with five additions to the church. The people gave him a good hearing.

General News.

It is announced that the dedication of the Washington monument, in Washington, is to take place on the 22nd of February next.—Two police officers seized each other some nights since at Saugerties, N. Y., upon an alarm being caused by thieves breaking into a store, and held on to each other so long that when they discovered their mistake, the thieves had escaped.—Mrs. Sarah Koons, and Mrs. Annie Stern, aged respectively 60 and 70 years, were killed by a coal train last week while crossing the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad track at Walnutport, Pa. One of the ladies had fallen and the other sought to help her, when they were caught by the engine of the coal train and run over.—The people of Iowa are to celebrate the Fourth of July by beginning the practice of the State's prohibitory law. Unfortunately, again, a defect has been found in the law. It was intended to forbid all officials to grant licenses for the sale of liquor. It now appears that the country commissioners were not in the forbidden list, and some of them are granting licenses to wholesale dealers.—A big raid was made on Chicago gamblers last week, resulting in the arrest of nearly two hundred keepers and inmates, and the destruction of nearly $10,000 worth of fine gambling implements. The keepers were fined $10.00 each, and the inmates $5.00. New outfits were procured and the houses re-opened, all of them closed at 6 p. m. except one; there a half dozen dealers were arrested and $800 worth of new implements were destroyed. The gamblers declare war against the Mayor.—A conference of Independent Republicans of New York and vicinity was held last week. George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly, was made chairman, speeches were made Carlschurg, ex-Gov. Chamberlain, and others, resolutions were adopted opposing the nomination of Blaine and Logan, and looking to the Democratic party to nominate men that they can support.—A museum of natural history liberally endowed, was recently founded at Tuft's College, Mass., but until last week the name of the founder was kept a secret. At the commencement dinner, President Copen announced that P. T. Barnum, was the owner.

FOREIGN.—A dispatch from Paris says that the committee appointed to consider the advisability of widening the Suez Canal, or building a second one parallel with the present, have decided in favor of the former plan.—The French Senate, during a consideration of the divorce bill for second reading, adopted the article abrogating the law of 1816, which abolishes divorce by a vote of 158 to 115.—The freedom of the city of London has been conferred on Lord Shaftesbury as a recognition of his life-long services in behalf of the young, the suffering, the degraded, and oppressed.—The Prince of Orange did in The Hague on Saturday, June 21st. Since his death the Cabinet has decided to resort to the provisions of 1848, and will convene the chambers forming the States general in a plenary Congress. This Congress will proclaim Princess Wilhelmine successor, under the Council, to the regency, with Queen Emma as the regent and the President of the Council as Chancellor. The cabinet has determined to refuse to share tutelage with any German branch of the royal family. Prince Bismarck, during the illness of the Prince of Orange caused the German representatives of the various European courts to declare that any attempt to make the successor to the regency in Holland. A European question would find instant opposition from Germany. This declaration is taken to mean that Germany alone has the right to meddle in the affairs of Holland. The King of Holland is ill, and his death is near. On his death the Duke of Nassau, failing to obtain the throne of Holland, will claim the grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

Dear children, God has work for us all to do, and sometimes he calls very young people to do important work. He chooses only those whom he sees are fitted for the work. The pure in heart and life and the earnest and faithful ones are those he wants. Try to be what he would have you, that you may be fitted and able to do the work he gives you.

TOO LATE.

What silences we keep year after year,
With those who are most near to us and dear;
We live beside each other day by day,
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies just in our reach,
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

Then out of sight and out of reach they go—
These close familiar friends, who loved us so;
And, sitting in the shadow they have left,
Alone, with loneliness, and sore bereft,
We think with vain regret of some fond word,
That once we might have said and they have heard.

For weak and poor the love that we expressed
Now seems beside the vast, sweet unexpressed,
And slight the deeds we did, to those undone,
And small the service spent, to treasure won,
And undeserved the praise, for word and deed
That should have overflowed the simple need.

This is the cruel cross of life, to be Full visioned only when the ministry
Of death has been fulfilled and in the place
Of some dear presence is but empty space,
What recollected services can then Give consolation for the might have been?

LITERATURE NOT A SUBSTITUTE FOR RELIGION.

It is remarkable that some of the most prominent apostles of that sort of science which, if it be not strictly materialism, is materialistic in its drift and its actual influence, manifest a disposition to recoil from the consequence of their own theory. They discern that, if they were to make out their case the situation in which mankind would be left would not be altogether desirable. The pessimist philosophers put on a bold front. They bluntly declare that the world is a bad one in its essential make, and that human life is not worth living. Not so the materialistic or semi-materialistic school. They are, frequently at least, indisposed to give up the warmth and and hopefulness natural to unperverted men who have not given up all ideas of any good in the future. We may instance Mr. Tyndall, the famous propounder of the "prayer-gauge." He is, to be sure, not a consistent thinker. He asserts that there is a gulf between matter and consciousness, brain and thought, which nobody can ever bridge over. Yet he is inclined to assume that everything can be traced, in a genetic line of purely mechanical causation, back to a fiery cloud. Out of that imagined cloud, the primitive being, as the ultimate source, came the conceptions of Plato and Shakespeare. But Mr. Tyndall still suggests that religion is a demand of the emotions. He sees that man is not man, if the emotions are extirpated. No, we cannot wholly give up religion; we must take it out of the domain of thought, however, and relegate it exclusively to the emotive side of our being. How anything that deserves to be called religious faith—anything that can give strength or comfort to a human soul—can subsist in so tenuous an atmosphere—in a vacuum, we might say—passes comprehension. Nevertheless the suggestion of Tyndall is worth a good deal as an admission. It is a frank confession of a gifted man, that theories to which he appears to lend his sanction require supplement or qualification. Human nature, fed with them alone, would starve.

Others, who embrace agnosticism, or a more dogmatic denial of Christianity in its miraculous features, look to literature for consolation. An old philosopher, Boethius, wrote a famous book called "The Consolations of Philosophy." But these, of whom we now speak, are commonly little inclined to metaphysics. Literature is their delight. They would make it their main resource. They contend against the devotees of science who think lightly of the classics and belles-lettres, and insist that being now deprived of the spiritual help and comfort which modern views of the universe have robbed us of, literature is indispensable as an elevating power and as a solace. Something like this has been urged in a recent lecture of Mr. Matthew Arnold. We cannot live upon science; the old ideas of theology, it is said, are obsolete; without literature, our spirit will be given up to barrenness and ennui.

But when the men talk about the soothing influences of literature, as a surrogate for the Christian faith, it must be remembered that it is of literature with religious belief eliminated from it of which they are talking. Not to dwell on this consideration just here, it behooves every thoughtful person to ask himself whether literature has the supreme virtue, which is tacitly ascribed to it, of sustaining the human heart in the exigencies of life,—for example, in bereavement, in sickness, and in death. Leave out of view its greater or lesser capacity to guide and purify the tempted and erring soul. The question now is, whether literature, as distinct from religion, contains in it a balm for sorrow, anxiety, loneliness, the anticipation of death. Will it take the place of Christian faith and hope? No mistake can be more real and more contradicted by experience, than such a theory, which raises literature to the rank of an idol, and substitutes the worship of letters for the worship of God. The affections and yearnings of the human soul are such as books cannot permanently satisfy. Do they enable us to dispense with father and mother, wife and children, brother and sister, friends and country? No more do they avail to satiate those profounder yearnings of the spirit which demand an eternal resting-place and rock of refuge for our dependent finite nature.

Macaulay, in his younger days, wrote an eloquent essay on the Athenian orators, in which he set forth in glowing periods the pleasure to be derived from the rich and imperishable literature of Greece. In his review of Mitford's History of Greece, with still more brilliant declamation, he sets forth the inspiration and consolation which the works of Athenian genius have afforded to great men, especially in hours of pain and trial;—"by the lonely lamp of Erasmus, in the tribune of Mirabeau, in the cell of Galileo, on the scaffold of Sidney." Few men have drawn more delight from books than Macaulay. But let the reader turn to the last pages of Trevelyan's life of this eminent man. It will be seen there that as a physical infirmities and the prospect of death afflicted him something else than literature was needful. In a letter not included in the memoir, an English clergyman disclosed the comfort which the dying scholar and statesman gained from the Christian truth which he was now led to apprehend more practically and trustfully than he had viewed it before. It was with Macaulay as with Dr. Johnson, of whom he had written so much. It was in his very last days that Johnson was consoled by the perception of the way of reconciliation through the Savior's death.

There is one other consideration which those who would make literature do the work of religion, and of the Christian faith strangely overlook. Take out of literature the recognition of the truths of religion, expressed or implied, and you strip it of its real efficacy. The life and soul are gone. The comforting power disappears, as well as the kindling, elevating, purifying energy. This may be proved by experiment. One may take the greatest of the ancient poets, Sophocles. Divest his dramas of the sublime references to an all-governing Deity, watchful of men, whose throne is the seat of eternal right, and those glorious productions become flat and spiritless. It is the background of the supernatural, and of faith in the supernatural, which is the indispensable condition of their power to inspire the reader. The same experiment may be tried on any of the tragedies of Shakespeare. One may take Hamlet and perform, if he can, a like process upon it. Take out the recognition of God, of his retributive providence, of Christ and his salvation, of heaven, and of hell, and see what you have left.

To substitute literature for religion, then, is a vain dream. Besides, if it were attempted, the wheat which literature contains would have to be sifted out, or converted into chaff. We have instanced Shakespeare and Sophocles. We might refer, for another illustration, to the masterpiece of medieval literature, the Divina Commedia of Dante. Those solemn views of the divine government, of the sacredness of religious duty, of the world to come, which constitute in a main part the atmosphere of the work, when they are dissipated or resolved into mere illusions of mythologic fancy, leave these immortal poems shorn of their power. It would be curious to see what sort of literature would grow up in an educated community thoroughly permeated with Buckleism or Spencerism. We should have an absolute reign of Dryasdust. The deepest wells of imagination and sentiment would be choked up. Literature would afford about as much refreshment to the spirit as the Desert of Sahara yields nutriment to the flesh.—Prof. George P. Fisher, D. D. LL. D., in S. S. Times.

MAKING THE MOST OF IT.

Some of our pedobaptist brethren are working the newly-discovered "Teaching of the Apostles to the Gentiles" for all it is worth and a little more. Let it be remembered that it is the sole extant copy of an anonymous work of uncertain age; that, supposing the original work of which this single exemplar is known had the antiquity claimed for it, we have no evidence of the trustworthiness of the copy, from the want of other copies with which to compare it; that, conceding it to be a genuine production of the second century, we know nothing of the degree in which it is entitled to credit as a representative document,—how far it speaks the general belief and describes the general practice of the churches of that age. And even if it could be proved that at any time between the middle and the close of the second century anything like a general consensus of the oriental churches existed corresponding with the testimony of this manuscript, on what ground is such consensus invested with authority over our faith and practice, as against the unambiguous teaching of the Scriptures? Yet Baptists are solemnly called on to review their position in view of what is said of the baptismal rite in "The Teaching of the Apostles."

But Baptist, we are told, cannot "retreat" to this ground, for they have themselves appealed to Church History. Appealed, from what? Not from the Scriptures, certainly. Appealed, for what? Never for authority, but merely for testimony corroborative of the testimony of Scripture, of which there is enough and more than enough. Even in this newly discovered teaching it is clearly manifested that immersion is treated as the proper act of baptism. But in an emergency, when immersion is not practicable, something else may be done. And what is the emergency? A fancied necessity, due to the superstition that a person dying without baptism was lost. This doctrine of the necessity of baptism arose very early, and was the ground of both infant baptism and of affusion or aspersion for baptism. And yet, so evident is the testimony of Scripture to immersion that the Greek Church has never allowed of a substitute, and infants are thrice immersed in the coldest parts of Russia.

The Andover Review claims that this "Teaching" proves an early consciousness of liberty of variation." Variation from what? From the sense of Scripture? Only Scripture itself can authorize such a variation. An early liberty of variation was taken, but not till a perversion of Scripture had made the occasion, and led to the substitution of an ordinance of man for that of God. When the "Teaching of the Apostles" is more exactly identified, its source discovered, its date more satisfactorily fixed, it will be of considerable value, no doubt, as elucidative of what is called ecclesiastical "Development." But it cannot be admitted as in any sense an appendix to the New Testament.—Boston Watchman.

Bro. N. B. Wallace, from Athens, Ala., writes: "I think the prospect is somewhat better than formerly in North Alabama, for the gospel plea. Bro. Weatherford and I have too large a field, though working constantly, we cannot do enough preaching; we get a fine hearing everywhere we can attend; we very seldom have the pleasure of being together for lack of time, each having more than he can do. I will be off (Lord willing) for Salem, Lauderdale County, in the morning, (Saturday.) Our Father in the last great day will judge of the merit of our work. I hope we shall be able to do it to divine acceptance. It is useless to say anything of my humble appreciation of your great work, it speaks for itself, and will stand the test of honorable criticism, from whatever source it may come. It is useless for men to kick against the goads. Truth is mighty and must prevail. I am glad to have the privilege of reading it, and being refreshed by the fragrance exhaled from its pages. Its stand against the innovations sought to be introduced among us, is most commendable."

False Teachers.

The business of preachers should be to teach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. They should prayerfully seek to understand just what the Bible teaches, and they should preach the same without any mixture of error, remembering their accountability to God.

But this cannot be said of all professed preachers of the Gospel. There are those, and not a few such, whose aim and endeavor are, not so much to set forth the great truths of the Bible, as to pervert them. It is not so much their aim and endeavor to explain and enforce the truth, as to explain it away, and to teach error in its place. They employ their ability to this end. They take a plain passage of the Scripture, whose meaning, it would seem, none could mistake, and they seek to teach just what it was evidently not designed to teach.

For example, there are many passages which plainly teach the future misery of the wicked: their everlasting punishment." We don't see how any language could teach it more plainly. We don't see how any unprejudiced mind could read these passages and doubt that it shall be ill with the enemies of God in another world. Such passages are not single and solitary in the Bible, but they abound there. But there are many preachers whose ministry is spent in endeavors to give them a different meaning from what they were evidently designed to teach. They are false interpreters of the Divine word.

And the same is true of another class of passages, viz.: of such as teach the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Bible teaches he was God as well as man. It teaches His equality with the Father, not less plainly than his humanity. This great truth is taught both directly and indirectly. It meets us everywhere on the pages of the New Testament. But there are professed preachers of the Gospel who employ all their talents to controvert this doctrine, and to give to those passages that teach it another, a different meaning. They would have their hearers to believe that Christ was but a man, or at the best, but a finite, created being.

It is a solemn business even to preachers of the truth. "Who is sufficient for these things?" was the anxious question of the great apostle. But how fearful the business of those preachers whose great endeavor has been to undermine and destroy the faith of their hearers in the fundamental doctrines of the Bible? Truly may it be said of them: "They know not what they do."—New York Observer.

Concerning Advertising.

It is said by those who are posted in advertising, that the first time a man looks at an advertisement he does not see it; the sixth time he turns up his nose at it; the ninth time he wonders if there is anything in it; the fifteenth time he resolves to try it at some convenient time; this he does not do till the twentieth time, when he rushes frantically out and buys it. What is true of everything else, is true of the Christian Sower Tract Fund's wares. It is forced to advertise. It only wishes it could present you a notice daily, instead of occasionally. Not one third of our folks have ever heard that there be any such tract fund; not one in ten appreciate its needs and claims; not one in a hundred have ever resolved to help it; and not one in a thousand have ever sent an order to buy tracts, or a contribution with which to furnish destitute fields. Why all this apathy? What shall we do? Are you waiting for the twentieth appearance of its advertisement? While you are waiting through choice, scores of destitute fields are doing it through necessity. Let the orders and the gifts come quickly. Behold! now is the time. —[J. W. Higbee, Madisonville, Ky.]

A Correction.

Brethren L. & S.: I found published in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, dated June 18, 1884, that Dr. P. F. Bellamy, who has been lately charged with high crime, was a member of the church of Christ, which I desire to correct. I have known Dr. Bellamy ever since I was a boy. He has always been regarded as a gentleman; has lived in the ninth district of Montgomery county, Tenn., nearly all his life; is the son of a Methodist preacher, and has been a member of the Methodist church himself for quite a number of years, and never had anything to do with the church of Christ in any way, though he has been a citizen of our quiet little village for more than six years. Hoping you will publish this to vindicate the church we so dearly love, I am ever yours in the one faith. A FRIEND OF TRUTH.

Oakwood, Tenn., June 23, 1884.

[Our news reporter learned on what he regarded as good authority, that the Doctor was a member of the church of Christ, and so stated it. If true, we were willing it should be stated, as we are always willing for the exact truth to be told, whether it hurts us or ours, or not.—EDITORS.]

That Sermon Book.

Bro. A. G. Logue, of Morrison, and one of the elders of Philadelphia congregation, in Warren county, Tenn., writes: "I have obtained twelve bona fide subscribers for J. L. Sewell's book of sermons, if the cost of the book does not exceed two dollars. One good brother says he wants it to lend out. This is the true missionary spirit. In his life Bro. J. L. Sewell has been instrumental in the hands of God in showing thousands the way of life, and I desire that his sermons be published in a book that will continue to preach long after he shall have passed over the river. If all the churches in Tennessee will do even as well as this one, I think the book can soon be in the hands of many of our unconverted friends, preaching to them effectually, provided we do as the brother mentioned—lend it out. Brethren, let us assist Bro. Sewell in meeting the expense, so he will not lose anything. He has given his life from a boy to the cause of the Master, and the fruits of his labors have been an abundant ingathering into the fold of Christ, and his sermons, if put in a book and put in circulation, is destined to bring in thousands more. Let us have the book."

HOW DID HE KNOW?

"A brother in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE says: He lived a consistent Christian for some months, and then was tempted to attend the dance, which he did and engaged in the sinful exercise, soon he felt that he had committed a great wrong—his conscience hurt him. He did not feel like going to church and partaking of the Lord's Supper. It is a little curious that this brother had so much feeling upon these things, and recognized his feelings as evidence, and when God forgave all of his sins at the time he became a Christian, he discarded all feelings as being any evidence of his conversion—in fact did not claim to have any feeling upon the subject. Where is the consistency?"

Why is it that our Baptist friends will misunderstand the position of disciples on the various religious questions on which they have written? The writer says here that this brother "discarded all feelings as being any evidence of his conversion—in fact did not claim to have any feeling upon the subject." Both these statements are incorrect. That brother said nothing about his feelings at conversion. No one ever said feelings were no evidence of conversion. Conversion is something that takes place in and on man, and his consciousness is a good witness of what occurs in and on him. His consciousness is here called feelings. A man is conscious of his faith, of his repentance, of his baptism. His consciousness or feelings attest his faith, his repentance and his baptism. These are the steps that accomplish conversion. I do not think an intelligent Bible student ever said that consciousness or feelings did not give evidence of these steps in conversion. It is true the consciousness is an unreliable witness until faith and repentance have been tested by obedience. When tested by obedience, it is consciousness that attests the willingness to obey.

What the Bible teaches is not a subject of feeling, is not conversion, but remission of sins. Remission of sins is not the same as conversion. Conversion takes place in and on man; remission of sins takes place in the mind of God. Conversion is the change in man, in the heart, life and state of man; remission of sins is the change in the mind or purpose of God with reference to the individual who is changed or converted.

Feelings or human consciousness cannot take cognizance of, or be conscious of the change in the mind of God, save as God reveals that change to the person. That change is not revealed to man save through the Scriptures of truth. God there says, When man believes in his heart, repents in his life, and is baptized into Christ, God will forgive him. Human consciousness or feeling can tell when the changes take place in man, but man is dependent upon the revelation of God as to when he is pardoned, or his sins—remitted.

No disciple of the blessed Jesus ever said he had no feeling in conversion. The Missionary Baptist is challenged to present a single case. If it can not do it, a nice sense of honor would prompt a retraction of the statement, a low sense of it would forbid its repetition. The brother of whom he speaks did not give his feelings as an evidence that he had sinned. The word of God taught him he had sinned, and he felt bad because he believed he had sinned, he had violated the law of God, just as in the other case happy and joyful feelings are no evidence of pardon but are the fruit of the faith based on the promise of God. The feelings—good or bad—are no evidence of acceptance or condemnation with God. Our feelings can be no evidence of the mind of God, but are the fruits of our obeying or disobeying God, or of our belief that we have obeyed or disobeyed him. According to our faith, so our feelings are.

Did John baptize the Vipers that came to him? Elder Griffin (we take it) in the Missionary Baptist in an article on "remission of sins" assumes that John refused to baptize those, whom he commanded to bring forth fruit meet for repentance. I am not sure but this is the more popular idea, but I am constrained to believe it erroneous. The context is as follows:

"Then went out unto him, Jerusalem, and all Judea and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins. But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance; and think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father, for I tell you God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now the axe is laid at the root of the trees, every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance, but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

The point is, did John tell these persons to bring forth fruit meet for repentance before he would baptize them, or did he baptize them, and warn them no longer to trust in their fleshly relations to Abraham, but to bring forth fruit meet for the repentance unto which he had baptized them?

I am constrained to believe it was this latter that he did.

The context shows clearly that the people were baptized confessing their sins. The religious teachers, Scribes and Pharisees came in large numbers,—they had relied greatly on their descent from Abraham, and the observance of the traditions of the elders. Under cloak of religion they had deprecated and set at naught the commandments of the Lord. He calls them a generation of vipers, and tells them they cannot rely on their blood relationship. The axe is now laid at the root of the trees; every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down and burned up. Judgment is begun. Every institution and every man that does not bear good fruit shall be cut down,—he points them to Christ, then adds, "I indeed baptize you with water," but he who cometh after me will baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. Here John speaking to these very Scribes and Pharisees, says "I indeed baptize you," showing that he did baptize them. He first baptized the people. When these teachers came, he warned them that in being baptized, their life must correspond to the demands of the repentance unto which they were baptized—and gives as an incentive to this, Christ comes after me, he will baptize with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. He will purge his floor, the wheat will be gathered into the garner, the chaff shall be burned with fire unquenchable. Mark 1: 5 makes no distinction as to the two classes, but applies the language given to the two classes, to all, and says he baptized them, showing he treated all alike. Luke 3: 8 does the same; groups all together and applies the language spoken to each class to the whole. More specific instruction is then given as to the fruits that are meet, for this repentance unto which they had been baptized. Let him that hath two coats give one to him that has none. The tax gatherer must not collect more than is lawful. The soldier must do violence to no man. These things which constitute the fruits to be brought forth, were required of those who had been baptized, not before baptism as a prerequisite to it.

I am constrained to believe from these statements that all were baptized, that all were, on being baptized, warned to bring forth fruit corresponding to their profession. Each was warned in reference to the special besetment of his calling. Matthew mentions what was said to the Scribes and Pharisees, the religious teachers, Luke, what was said to the common people, the tax collectors and the soldiers. Mark groups together, and in general terms tells all were warned to bring forth fruit worthy of the repentance unto which they were baptized. They were baptized unto or into a state or life of repentance toward God. They were baptized for the attainment of repentance toward God; they were baptized in order to repentance. They were baptized with the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. We may notice some other things in elder Griffin's article, but it is so philosophical that the ordinary mind finds a difficulty in seeing the point he relies on to establish his position. D. L.

A NEW WORK COMING.

MANUAL OF BIBLICAL GEOGRAPHY, OR TEXT BOOK ON BIBLE HISTORY.

The above is the name of a book that will be issued soon, by the Continental Publishing House, Chicago. This work will be profusely illustrated by maps and charts, illustrating all Bible lands at different stages of Bible history, giving the land of Canaan as originally inhabited by heathens, and then as inhabited by the twelve tribes, and as inhabited and ruled by kings, and in the New Testament times, and the countries surrounding, and especially the countries and cities named in the New Testament. From what we can see, from specimen pages and maps, which we have examined, we think the work will be both interesting and profitable to Bible students, and worth far more than the price charged, though that may seem high to some. The book will be sold only by agents. Look out for them. J. T. Dawson of this city is agent for this county. The price of this work will be, in boards, $3.75. In cloth $4.50. Brief historical accounts of the countries, towns and cities mentioned in the Bible will be given making a good sized book of large pages, and good sized print. E. G. S.

Please State through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to whom Christ had reference in John 1: 47, "Jesus saw Nathaniel coming to him, and south of him. Behold an Israelite in whom is no guile." A very able preacher and his flock, have decided that Jesus had reference to himself, and not Nathaniel, when he said, "Behold an Israelite in whom is no guile;" while a very little preacher timidly rejects said exegesis, claiming that Christ had reference to Nathaniel. We agreed to refer the matters to the editors of the ADVOCATE. Now who is right?—[M. H. Northcross, Bunker Hill, Tenn.]

Nathaniel was undoubtedly referred to. Christ never commended himself in that way.

A young Brother preacher here, who left the Methodist church about one year and a half ago, preaches for a little band of brethren at this place. I heard him; he neither sings or prays in his meetings; and more than that, tells his brethren that it is a sin to pray in public. Please give us your views of such teaching through ADVOCATE. Many inquiring of the truth. The church is much concerned over this matter.—[J. Villanton, Prairie Plains, Texas.]

Christ and Stephen both prayed in public places in the presence of their enemies. Stephen kneeled down in the presence of them all and prayed. They prayed aloud so their enemies could hear them. Paul, 1 Cor. 14, gives direction how they shall conduct their worship in the church; he speaks of their praying and singing, and in giving directions, says, "If all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest: and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth." Here is clear evidence that unbelievers attended the worship of the church at which they sang and prayed, and that they were convinced and made believers through the worship. If it had not been customary to pray in the presence of the world, there would have been no occasion to tell the disciples not to pray to be heard of men. If it is right for one sinner to attend, it is right for a hundred. If it is wrong to pray before sinners in church, it is wrong for the father or mother to pray with or before the children at home. Such hobbies betoken evil to the individual and the church.

Will you please explain through GOSPEL ADVOCATE the following: Isaiah 44: 3; Isaiah 52: 15; Joel 2: 28. Does pouring out of the Spirit here mean that Christ was to pour out his spirit when he should come? Can pouring water spoken of in Isaiah 44: 15, mean baptism? If not, why not?—[Pupil.]

Pouring water cannot mean baptism, because baptism is immersion. Just as well ask can pouring mean immersion or burial, as to ask can pouring mean baptism. Baptism is as well fixed in its meaning as immersion or burial. There is not a lexicon in the world that does not so define it. If baptism is ever called a washing, a wetting, a dyeing, it is because these results are accomplished through immersing the thing. Pouring or sprinkling may antedate baptism or be preparatory to it. I have seen water poured into a box or trough, or bathing tub, to prepare for a baptism, to get the fluid in shape that a baptism may be performed in it. The Spirit of God was poured out from heaven until it filled all the house where the disciples were, that they might be buried or overwhelmed with the Spirit. They were then baptized in the Spirit. But the pouring was preparatory to baptism, constituted no part of it, no more than the pouring the water in the box constitutes a part of the baptism performed in the water, after it is collected in the box.

formed in the water, after it is collected in the box.

The passage in Isaiah 44: 3, the connection clearly shows, is the promise of showers on the earth after a season of drought. The drought had been brought about by disobedience, and the promise is, "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing on thy offspring, and they shall spring up among the grass as willows by the water courses."

Thirsty people are not baptized, nor is the dry land flooded by baptism. God promised to pour out his Spirit and bless his children, and make them numerous and rich, if they would obey him.

Isaiah 52: 15, when properly translated, means I will astonish all nations, or make them to wonder. The context shows this is its meaning. He refers to Christ, "Many were astonished at thee, his visage was so marred—more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men, so shall he astonish many nations, the kings shall shut their mouths at him, for that which have not been told them; shall they see; and that which they had not heard, shall they consider." None of these things accompany sprinkling. They all indicate astonishment, wonder. When the revised Old Testament appears, the passage will or ought to be changed as above.

Peter explains that the prophecy of Joel was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost when the Spirit was poured out on the disciples. Christ did not pour out the Spirit when he came. He said if I go not away the comforter will not come. If I go I will send him. The Spirit did not come to the till Christ went away.

The political excitement is already growing warm. It is true there seems to be no defined differences in the ends and aims of the parties. And it would seem that wise men would feel but little interest in the election. Party leaders manipulate these party organizations for their own ends, and through these organizations work up a fury among the people. If any man can tell any special advantage to come to the country through the triumph of one party or the other, he is a wiser man than any whose writings we have seen.

Does any ordinary working man believe he is the poorer for Hawkins having been Governor, or that he is the richer for Bate being Governor? Does any except office seekers and speculators think if one party or the other elects its President, they will be the richer or poorer? Do they think a higher standard of morality obtains in one party than the other? Every sensible man must answer, no, to these questions. Then why will Christians make themselves fools and footballs to serve the selfish purposes of ambitious partizans?

A healthy religious interest exists throughout the churches in the country in which the ADVOCATE circulates, as can be seen from the number of converts reported as occurring at the ordinary church meetings. If the brethren engage in the strife, this will all be destroyed, and coldness and indifference will reign in the churches, and sinners will cease to be converted to God. Brethren, why will we sacrifice the good of the church, the salvation of souls, for worse than a mess of pottage?

Scene—a Sunday-school. Young lady catechizing the children on the plagues of Egypt. Young Lady—"And what became of the plague of locusts?" A pause; then small boy at bottom, suddenly—"Please, miss, I know; John the Baptist ate them."

BAPTIZING A DYING INFANT.

One writing from Murfreesboro to the Daily American, gives the startling statement:

"It is with sadness that we chronicle the death of Jordan Stokes Dinwiddie. The little fellow was given in consecration to God, by his parents, and baptized by Dr. Leftwich, just a few hours before his death. Though but a few months old, he was the light and joy of the happy home. Why baptize an infant on its dying bed?"—Missionary Baptist.

That looks as though a dread of infant damnation, without infant regeneration through baptism, lingered in the minds of our Methodist friends.

NOT COMPLIMENTARY TO PROTESTANTS.

Ex-Senator McDonald, of Indiana, is spoken of prominently as a Democratic candidate for the Presidency. The great trouble in his way, seems to be he has fallen into the loose marriage ways of his State, and his wife has another living husband. The politicians seem afraid that this will offend the Roman Catholic vote. Why are they more afraid of the Catholic vote than the Protestant? Either because the Protestants do not regard the sanctity of the marriage relation as the Bible teaches, or because the Protestants fail to regard their religious convictions when their political interests are at stake. Neither of these are complimentary to the Protestants. Why are they less regardful of their religion than others.

A lack of moral courage is the fatal lack of the great portion of the human family. This is true of preachers especially, whose calling requires high moral courage. A sad manifestation of this is given in the case of a preacher, who testifies in the murder cases near Clarksville, that some years ago he was holding a meeting near the house of the murderers. The elder Morrow was the deacon in the church. He was putting up at his house; Morrow furnished the preacher a horse to ride to meeting. While at the meeting the horse was taken away, and the deacon told him it was taken away by the boy, to murder a negro, and the preacher says he became so interested in the meeting the whole affair passed out of his mind. He was so full of religion that this murder by the deacon and his boys as a variation of the religious exercises, was forgotten. They doubtless thought they could perform this godly work of murdering a poor negro during the prosy part of the sermon, and return to join in the closing "rousings," and the preacher went ahead with his meeting and forgot it all, until the murderers are under arrest years afterward. He doubtless shutting his eyes to this murder, was enabled with the help of the murderers to work up a glorious revival. The preacher was just as guilty morally, as the Morrows themselves. It is strange with such times serving worshipers of wealth, as teachers in the church, religion is not more despised than it is. Does any one believe if the Morrows had not been wealthy, the murder would have been forgotten?

We cannot go to that house where was the "upper room" where the disciples met on Pentecost: not to the site where it stood. These points are left unnoticed, after the mode of Christianity which is in nothing a religion of circumstance in everything a religion of principles.—Tongue Fire.

There are two plans of life. The right one is doing the will of God. The wrong one is willfulness, or doing our own will. Saul took the latter, and ruin followed. The ruin would be just as real if we did not see it in the subsequent life of the king.

Obituaries.

William Robb, our aged father, passed quietly away, June 11, 1884. He was cotemporaneous with Washington. Was born November 10, 1798, having lived eighty-five years, seven months, and one day. He united with the church of Christ in the year 1835, and lived a consistent Christian during half a century in the Master's cause. He filled a number of places of trust in early life. When he united with the church, he gave up all political aspirations, and did not even vote. He was a man of strong convictions, and did what he considered right, regardless of consequences. He was a loving husband, kind father, and benevolent citizen. He was married over sixty years to the wife who survives him. The closing sentence of the aged brother who preached at his funeral, was—"Bro. William Robb lived a Christian, died rejoicing, and is gone to glory. I never witnessed as triumphant a death."

BOLIVAR ROBB.

Brother Newton C. McGlasson was born in Jackson County, Tenn., March 1st, 1834, and departed this life at Spencer, Van Buren County, March 31, 1884; aged forty-six years and one month. At the age of seventeen he became a member of the church of Christ, and by his upright, noble and godly conversation during the remainder of his life, beautifully exemplified before men the excellence of the Christian religion. He was a paragon of truth and scrupulously honest, rendering unto all men the things that were due them. Bro. McGlasson was married on the 17th of January, 1859, and in the domestic circle ever exhibited that kindness of disposition that characterizes the true Christian. A few years ago he moved to Spencer to secure for his children the educational advantages of Burritt College. During his stay here, he made several successful business trips for that institution as many readers of the Advocate will remember. After an illness of fifteen days of measles, succeeded by typhoid fever, Bro. McGlasson quietly passed from life unto death, giving his family and friends who survive him, every assurance of his willingness to obey the call. We can but commend his bereaved companion and children, who survive him, to the fountain that healeth all sorrow, for consolation in their deep affliction. We can say with the poet:

"Dearest brother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel:
But 'tis God that hath bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the cares of life have fled;
Then, in heaven, with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

Gainesboro, Tenn.

J. R. HOOVER.

How fondly we cherish the memory of loved ones. A melancholy pleasure fill the heart while memory recounts the worthy deeds and kindly words of departed ones. A sad melancholy loneliness, a feeling that usually attends our reflections concerning those of whom death has robbed us, prepares us more effectually to ascend in thought and in affection to him who "gave" and who "has taken away." "By the sadness of the countenance, the heart is made better." While with a sad pleasure we review the past, hope points her joyful finger to the future, and points to our admiring gaze a picture all beautiful and bright. By the touch of her magic wand, sorrow flees away, and joy unspeakable and full of glory stands before us beckoning us on to the "land celestial." Surely none but the wicked can fail to be made better by thoughts of those gone before. The pure spirit of our much loved Bro. R. W. Locke, of Newbern, Dyer County, Tenn., took its flight from earth on the 3rd of May, 1884. We love to think of him whether as we used to see him at his home, at the house of God, or as by faith we now see him in Abraham's bosom. Let his faults be forgiven and forgotten. His brotherly kindness, his Christian love, his accommodating, obliging disposition can never be forgotten by those fortunate enough to be associated with him in any relationship of life. These traits shone with such brilliancy in his acts, his countenance, his friendly words and cordial greetings, as to characterize the man; so prominent in life memory dwells on them now he is gone. Remembered love and kindness endear him to many hearts. Bro. Locke outlived two companions, his last survives him. His children are both in their graves. His step-daughter, on whom he bestowed much love, still lives to mourn his loss. He was punctual in his attendance at church, and ever ready to help in every good work. He did more to circulate the Advocate than any other man in our community. Some men are praised, some are esteemed, some are admired; Bro. Locke was "loved." He suffered a long time, and finally fell a victim to consumption in the forty-eighth year of his age. For some time before his death, both his body and mind gave unmistakable signs of failure. May those that loved him meet him on the shores of deliverance and share with him, and all the redeemed the Christian's rest. T. E. SCOTT.

It is sad to contemplate death. Even when we truly believe that our dear ones are only "absent from the body" that they may be "present with the Lord," there is a feeling of melancholy connected with it that we cannot shake off. Sister Ruth Belinda Hodges, wife of Thos. Hodges, departed this life March 1st, 1884. Her disease was pneumonia with some chronic troubles. Sister Hodges was the youngest daughter of Bro. Calvin Curlee, who was known throughout Middle Tennessee as one of the pioneer preachers of the ancient gospel. She was born May 18, 1820. She obeyed the gospel in her fifteenth year, or thereabout; was married to Thos. Hodges September 16, 1835. She was the mother of ten children; six of these, three girls and three boys, are still living; her husband and one daughter having preceded her to the spirit land only a few months. Of those living, all are in the church of Christ except two boys. May God grant them time that they may yet repent! Sister Hodges, with her husband, moved from Tenn., where she was born and reared, about the year 1850, stopping in Arkansas. After living there several years, they again moved and settled in Denton County, Texas. In November, 1879, with her youngest daughter, she returned to the land of her nativity, to visit her relatives and also in the hope of improving her health. She died at the home of her brother, C. E. Curlee, only one of her children being present. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Rev. 14: 13. Our sister, of course, was not perfect, but she has left us an example of meek, quiet and cheerful submission to the will of God, that we may well follow. She expressed herself ready and willing to go, even before her last sickness came on; and during all she was patiently resigned to the will of God. O what consolation we find in the blessed promises of the gospel! We sorrow not as those who have no hope. God is able to heal our wounds. I would say, then, to her sorrowing relatives and friends, take courage and press on! Our sister is not lost, but gone before. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. 4: 14.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 4.

"If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." 1 Cor. 14: 37.

I believe that we may take it as a fact, that we showed from the word of the Lord, that faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God, is a condition to the remission of past sins. We may hope also that we showed that there is but two kinds of faith found in God's word—a living, or perfect faith; and a dead, or devil's faith. The first being made perfect by the works of righteousness (God's work) is well pleasing to our heavenly Father; the latter being of no service, standing alone. We trust, also, that we found (notwithstanding the theories of men) that the faith required of any person comes from hearing the word of God; that the reception of these words (being the spiritual seed) into honest and meek hearts will generate and grow on unto perfection, and become a perfect faith acceptable to our Lord. And as a conclusion, we may affirm that all the faith a person can have in God and in Christ, is to believe all that God has spoken to us in the Bible, his full revelation to us. And to believe this to that extent that we submit to everything he commands in that revelation, is as high degree of faith as man can have, and is acceptable to him. No one can have more faith in God than to believe all he has said; nor can any man do more (that is acceptable to God) than to yield a hearty submission to all he commands.

But we will now notice another condition (seeing that "faith only" is dead) required of man to obtain the remission of his sins "that are past." Luke, in speaking of the commission, says, "That repentance and remission should be preached in his name." Then repentance is connected with remission of sins in some way; what that connection is, is now what we want to know. We must call the apostle Paul again, as he seems to know what people should learn. Speaking of God's dealing in the past with man, he says, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at, (passed by,) but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Acts 17: 30. Jesus said, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Luke 13: 3-5. He also said, "For I am not come to call the righteous but sinners, to repentance." Matt. 9: 13. We need look no farther. "Sinners to repentance." That is what Jesus came for—to call sinners to repentance. Now, like faith, men have made many kinds of repentance, and how repentance works, etc. But we need only find a kind of repentance acceptable to our heavenly Father. Paul comes to our rescue at this time of our need, and says, "For godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death." 2 Cor. 7: 10. How is this godly sorrow produced? Jesus said, "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgement with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonah: Matt. 12: 14. There then we have an example of acceptable repentance, caused by preaching. What was preached? "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed." Jonah 3: 4. And by reading the chapter we learn that when the Ninevites heard the word of the Lord through Jonah, they believed, they sorrowed after a godly manner, did what was necessary to show their sorrow. That led them to a repentance not to be repented of. They turned away from their evil ways, turned unto God, and were saved. And Jonah was grieved. Yet God showed him that his principle was the same to all nations, for "he that worketh righteousness is accepted of him." Now we learn from this, and God's word harmonizes with itself, (though it does not with men's theories,) that the Ninevites' faith came by hearing the word of God, that it was perfected in repentance, doing works meet for repentance, and acceptable to God. We find not a little faith at the beginning, not an increase of that faith by mourning, nor a preparation by their fasting for a saving faith. But it was a faith so strong at the hearing of God's word that they set about the work of saving themselves, according to God's method, and accomplished it.

Thus we see God's way of doing things. "Preach the word, that the people may hear it, that they may have faith in the promises to that extent that they may perfect that faith by obedience, that they may enjoy the promises. That such may be the determination (by the help of God) of you and myself, with all who desire to be saved from sin, is the desire of A DISCIPLE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mrs. Mollie L. Driskill, Thornton, Texas, June 10, writes: "We have had many trials recently. My beloved mother (Mrs. Annie J. Chambers) died the 28th of April, of typhoid-pneumonia, and my dear sister (Mrs. Ella Harper) died just ten days later (May 8,) of the same disease. We have requested brother C. W. Sewell to write their obituaries.

Bro. Driskill's health has failed so much that he has not only had to discontinue preaching, but also to withdraw from his position as teacher in Thornton Institute, at least till fall. Thornton Institute of which my father, E. C. Chambers, is president, has been largely attended this session. Brother Sewell preaches for us monthly, and we think he is doing much good. At his last appointment two young men of the Institute made the noble confession. The church meets every Lord's day, but oh! the void that is made by the vacant seats of my dear loved ones! May the God of peace help us to be faithful to the end."

[We deeply sympathize with Bro. Chambers and family in their sad bereavement. We well remember our stay of several days at his house, on our last visit to Texas. We remember, too, the impression left on our mind by Sister Chambers, as a quiet, meek, but earnest and godly woman, and the daughters as modest and sweet-looking girls. We trust Bro. Driskill will soon be restored to health and usefulness.—D. L.]

E. A. Land, Linden, Tenn., June 18, writes: "I was with the brethren on Sulphur Fork of Beaverdam, Hickman County; preached on Saturday and Sunday; three persons confessed the Savior, and was buried with him in baptism; one man, about seventy years old, who had lived under sectarian teaching, but had turned his attention to the word of the Lord and learned the truth; and I am satisfied that there are several more at that place that are almost persuaded to be Christians.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla is a medicine that, during nearly 40 years, in all parts of the world, has proved its efficacy as the best blood alterative known to medical science.

SARSAPARILLA (extracted from the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla) is its base, and its powers are enhanced by the extracts of Yellow Dock and Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other potent ingredients.

IS your blood vitiated by derangements of the digestive and assimilatory functions? Is it tainted by Scrofula? or does it contain the poison of Mercury or Contagious Disease?

THE leading physicians of the United States, who know the composition of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, say that nothing else so good for the purification of the blood is within the range of pharmacy.

ONLY by the use of this remedy is it possible for a person who has corrupted blood to attain sound health and prevent transmission of the destructive taint to posterity.

THOROUGHLY effective renovation of the system must include not only the removal of corruption from the blood, but its enrichment and the strengthening of the vital organs.

RELIABLE witnesses, all over the world, testify that this work is better accomplished by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA than by any other remedy.

BLOOD that is corrupted through disease is made pure, and blood weakened through diminution of the red corpuscles is made strong, by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.

PURIFYING the blood and building up the system require time in serious cases, but benefit will be derived from the use of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA more speedily than from anything else.

A REPLY TO BRO. TAYLOR'S QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE SUPPORT OF EVANGELISTS.

In the Advocate of June the 11th, Bro. G. G. Taylor, of Fisherville, Ky., editor of the Question Drawer of the Old Path Guide, addresses a letter to me on "Evangelistic Support." Judging from this letter, and from the pleasant interviews we have had on the subject, I suppose there is little if any difference between us on this point. The following sentence from Bro. Taylor's letter expresses my understanding excellently well: "Now, just as the Lord stands behind nature, with an eye overlooking all its complicated machinery, and with a hand holding and governing its varied, massive and intricate forces, in order that the faithful husbandman may gather in his harvest and fill his stores, so God sees to it that the faithful evangelist shall not be forsaken, nor his children beg bread." So the Bible teaches most clearly; and hence it is only necessary for the evangelist to be faithful. When he does his duty as a minister of the Lord, trusting in God, he solves the "bread and butter question;" for he will be supported, as the worker in every other field is supported, by the providential care of the Lord. Bro. Taylor continues in this expressive way: "There are just as many, and certainly as efficient channels transmitting blessings from the full hand of God to the door of him who publishes the good tidings of salvation, as there are supporting the wants of others; and any other hypothesis would be an impeachment of both the wisdom and goodness of God, as well as a shipwreck of faith in the holy Scriptures. God's providential arrangements are over the minds, and hearts, and lives of men, just the same as they are over the material things of nature; and the springs of benevolence, charity, and religious obligations are as much affected by those providences as are the winds and seas."

Yes, the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their cries; the very hairs of their heads are numbered, and not one falls to the ground without his knowledge; he knows just what they need even before they ask him, and is readier to minister to their needs than the young mother is to care for her first-born; he tells us to cast our cares upon him, and promises that if we will ask we shall receive.

But notwithstanding all these rich promises there is one great trouble among us to which Bro. Taylor calls attention: the fields are white for the harvest but so few laborers go forth to the reaping. There are many preachers who desire to give their whole time to the ministry, but in concern they cry, "What shall we eat? and, what shall we drink? and, wherewithal shall we be clothed? and then they hasten away to seek a church that is able and willing to support them, that they may take the "pastoral care" of it. In the meantime the harvest fields go without reaping; the eldership is supplanted and falls into disuse, until it has dwindled away and become almost worthless.

Thus among the disciples there are hundreds of men who should be evangelists, that are worse than wasting their time as pastors of congregations. I say they are worse than wasting their time for they are not only neglecting their duty, they are subverting God's order by doing that which he has commanded others to do,—or rather by attempting to do it, for no man can properly do the work of the eldership. For the best of reasons, no doubt, God has committed this work to a plurality of peers.

All this confusion of work, and neglect, on the part of the evangelists, of the field, arise from two considerations, I think; viz. (1) a fear on the part of the preacher concerning the bread and butter question, and (2) a disinclination on their part to deny themselves and endure hardships incident to laboring where they have none, or very few brethren to help them by their presence or personal co-operation.

Bro. Taylor's letter asks three questions concerning the first trouble. He asks me to answer them in the light of the Bible and of my own experience. This I shall endeavor to do. His first question reads thus:

If by this question Bro. Taylor means to ask if the evangelist should see to it that his support is guaranteed by men before he enters upon his work in destitute fields, I reply, No; let him trust in God, and go ahead. Jesus says, "Be not therefore anxious, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek: for your heavenly father knoweth that you have need of all these things. But seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added to you."

If it be said that this passage applies to all Christians as well as to evangelists, I reply certainly it does. All that any Christian needs is to do now the duty of the hour; he should be perfectly free from care about the future; God promises to take care for that. If it is his duty to preach, let him preach. It is a fact that has been very generally overlooked, or, the importance of which has been very much underrated, that not a single preacher of the New Testament made any contract concerning his support with the church from which he departed, or with any co-operation of brethren, before entering upon his labors. When a man understood that it was his daily duty to evangelize, if he had the proper spirit he went about the work. God cared for him, sometimes by moving upon the brethren to send contributions to him; and sometimes, when it was better, by giving him an opportunity to make tents as he preached. But in the latter case preaching was the business, not tent-making. The preachers of those days realized that Christ sent them out, and that he had obligated himself to care for them. "Yes," it is said, "but he cares for us through means and we must use the means. He gives us the sunshine and the rain, the seed and the soil, the seed-time and the harvest, and we must use these blessings if we would have wheat, and corn, and cattle." Let us see about this. Suppose we apply the same reasoning to another matter. Suppose Washington's army had so reasoned in the days of the revolution. The soldiers would have said one to another, "We have not a week's provision in camp: it is a man's first duty to take care of himself and family: our commissary department does not do its duty at all, (and indeed it did not:) let us every one go forth and lay up stores enough to last us for a few years—say ten or fifteen—and then we can renew the fight, and gain our independence."

Had they so reasoned and acted there never would have been the glorious victories, achieved by self-denial, sacrifice, and toil, by which our government stands. Nor would any but idiots have reasoned thus. Verily, the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. The army has its commissary department, its garrison; its field forces, all under the direction of the General-in-chief. It is not the duty of the troops in the fortress, nor of those on the battle-field, while the fierce conflict is raging, to turn aside to see the commissary does its work, or to help it discharge its duty. Such a procedure would ruin any army on earth in a few days. Shall we act thus in our great conflict. Jesus the Christ is our great leader and Master shepherd: in the army are many companies with their elders and deacons and there ought to be many evangelists in the field, but, sad to say, the great majority of them have rushed back to join the foraging parties, and to help hold the forts. As I understand it, they do not sufficiently trust in the wisdom, power, goodness, and providing care of the great Commander. There are on this continent thousands of people who have never heard the gospel in its simplicity. "Why," said a gentleman to me in the south not long since, "I would have become a Christian thirty years before I did, had the gospel been preached to me in such a way that I could have known how to do to be saved." This gentleman is a diligent, earnest worker; as good one, perhaps, reader, as you have in your congregation; he has been thus faithful for several years; but by neglecting to go into his country, we lost thirty of the best years of his life for the cause of Christianity. Doubtless there are hundreds and thousands of cases like this. By the way, the case enables me to answer Bro. Taylor's question, "Is the evangelist to take into consideration the means by which he is to be sustained?" from another standpoint. Any true man who is at all fitted for the work may safely calculate that that he will turn a sufficient number of such men to the Lord to secure a sufficiency of food and raiment by their voluntary co-operation. Remember how the church of Philippi stood by Paul, how they ministered to him for years. He could not have foreseen as he stood before that little band of women on the river's bank, or as he and Silas lay in a prison at midnight that he was making friends who would always love him, and who would minister to him from time to time as long as he should live; but such was the fact.

It is a matter of very great consequence that we should preach the gospel. People are living in ignorance of the will of God; they are passing at every second into the unseen, many of them wholly unprepared to meet the great Judge. And there is a dreadful woe pronounced against the watchmen on the walls of Zion if they neglect to warn the wicked. (See Ezek. 33: 1-9.)

Bro. Taylor asks me to speak also from my own experience in answer to his question. It gives me pleasure to do this; for by it others may be encouraged to devote more time to the work.

I have been devoting my energies almost wholly to evangelistic work for ten years. During this period I have given much more than half of my time to very poor and weak churches, and of late have given the most of my time to laboring where we have no churches at all. It has often been the case that the field in which I worked did not furnish enough to pay traveling expenses, and that too when the brethren did much more in proportion to their ability than wealthy churches usually do. For instance, during the first five months of this year I conducted five protracted meetings. At only one of these places did the disciples have a meeting-house. Bro. Daugherty was with me at three of the places, and Bro. Vanhook at one. Several times the money we received from the brethren with whom we labored did not pay our expenses in coming to the place, and running the meeting, by a good deal. I do not believe that all the money we received in the field in the five months would have payed the expenses of the meetings, including our railway fare etc. How then did you live and support your families? you inquire. In the first place we try to exercise rigid economy; in the second, we receive in the most unexpected ways, and at the most unexpected times, uncovenanted contributions from brethren who are interested in the work; and in the third, Bro. Daugherty has occasionally found time to teach a class in music.

It is startling to receive, month after month, the supplies that you need, as you need them, and no more than you need, without being able by any possibility to foresee whence they would come!

When this has happened month after month, and year after year, you begin to realize that there is much indeed in the providential care of God. One thing is certain, I should not hesitate to go anywhere that a sense of duty might call me, without stopping for one moment to consider the question of support.

Bro. Taylor asks two other questions; but doubtless I have said enough in this to make clear what my answers to them would be. I trust that he may favor us with another letter on this most interesting subject, and that we may move many to greater diligence in the glorious work of saving men.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

He that giveth most largely, does not always give most liberally.

"He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them, shall have mercy."—Solomon.

He that giveth five hundred dollars out of a salary of five thousand dollars, does not give so liberally as he who gives five dollars out of a bare living.

Bro. Jesse L. Sewell will begin a protracted meeting with the Beech Grove church, near Carter's Creek, Maury County, first Lord's day in August.

Bro. Walling says, "I preached to a good congregation at Irving College last Lord's day. Bro. P. G. Potter preached at Sink Creek same day,—one confessed."

J. Harding, Louisville, Ky., writes: "I am in the midst of a grand meeting at this Central church in this city, in their new house on the corner of Second and Kentucky streets. Twenty-seven have been added during the meeting and a growing interest."

Prof. J. S. Hammond, of Kerrville, West Tenn., captured a fair daughter of Maury—Miss Rush Tyler. They were married on the 26th. We did not learn who officiated at the service. We hope their life may be useful and happy here, and happy in eternity.

We never know the result until the work is done. Our duty is to do the work God has given us to do, and leave results with him. Frequently, when all seems dark and gloomy, and it looks as though our work was in vain, it is but the darkness that precedes the dawn.

W. H. Sandy, Noblitts Chapel, Tenn., June 12, writes: "Several of our little band met here last Lord's day, but I am sorry to say that some of them passed the church and went to hear the old school Baptist; we have some very weak brethren, while others are doing good work. Bro. H. C. Abernathy has been called to Alabama to hold a meeting. Our Lord's day school class is getting along splendid; our lesson for next Lord's day is the 12th chapter of Luke, commencing with the 15th verse."

A. L. Glenn, Gadsden, Ala., June 16, writes to Bro. Harding: "The congregation here received, a few days ago, five dollars aid towards building a house of worship from a sister (no name given) in Oxford, N. C. Please acknowledge in ADVOCATE receipt of same, with many thanks."

Bro. Scobey, not satisfied with carrying his own family to Hopkinsville with him, decoyed sister Fanny Sowell away from the home of her parents in Maury County, and carried her to Kentucky with him. They were married by Prof. Wm. Lipscomb, at the residence of Bro. W. J. Sowell, on June 25th. We pray a Father's richest blessings may be with them.

Please answer the following questions for our Bible Class: How many of the Apostles were brethren in the flesh? Why is James, the less (Mark 15: 40) called the Lord's brother and also the son of Alpheus? Was Simon the Canaanite, he of whom Matthew writes. (Mark 15: 54,) or was he Nathaniel of whom John wrote? (John 21: 2).—[T. M. C. Moore, Elm Dale, Ala.]

H. G. Orr, Red Oak, Texas, writes: "Bro. T. W. Caskey, one of the fathers of the 'Louisville plan,' said in one of our State meetings a few years ago, that it was a failure, would not work, and Bro. Srygley knows he is not an advocate of societies now; yet no one has ever been known to abate in mental and will force on his side. I thank you for your article in last ADVOCATE."

W. H. Dixon, Petersburg, Lincoln County, Tenn., June 23, writes: "I preached yesterday at Friendship, Lincoln County, to a fair audience, and in the evening at Petersburg. We have no organization at the last place. Hearing was slim; divisions and indifference a great hinderance. Paul classes such with the things of the flesh. But it would be wicked in us to apply the language. We have a good little band at Friendship."

J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., writes: "I preached at Fairfield, Bedford County, last Lord's day. There are some ten or twelve members there; but they have no house, and are not meeting, but are speaking of meeting in one of their dwelling-houses until they can build. I preached in the Baptist house, attentive audience. I preached them two sermons. I think this a good field for preaching. There was one lady baptized."

T. C. Little, Lafayette, Tenn., writes: "Since my last report I have visited McAlister's chair factory, first Sunday in June; found them still improving; had a good hearing. There is a growing desire on the part of this people to hear the truth. Third Lord's day was at Flat Creek, Bedford County, Tenn. Here we always meet a good-sized audience, under favorable circumstances. The brethren here are doing good work for the Master. We always enjoy a visit to them."

J. M. Barnes, Highland Home, Ala., June 16, writes: "The bad weather caused us to stop work in Montgomery for awhile. We baptized four, and I will return on the fifth Lord's day to baptize another. We worked up a fine interest, and were having fine audiences when the rains broke them up. The gospel can be planted in the cities of Alabama, and if the Lord will help we will do it. I want to raise about four or five hundred dollars to carry on the work in Birmingham. As said before, Bro. Jordan and I will work at our own charge; the people feed us, and do it well. Gentlemen in Montgomery who did not believe as we do, told us to make their home our homes. All who wish to help the city work in Alabama, send us money. It shall all go in that way. Preachers who can give time to this, volunteer at once and we will assign them work. There is work for all. We want preaching and money, and we want the money because our country needs the preacher."

E. A. Land, Linden, Tenn., writes: "I have commenced my summer's work. My health has improved, am now able to preach some. Was at Boon's Creek, Carroll County, the first Lord's day in June. Preached at Clarksburg Saturday night, and at Pritchard's School-house Lord's day evening: had a good hearing at every place, but no confessions. Expect to be there again the first Lord's day in July, the Lord willing. Will be at Carmel, in Benton County, the fifth Lord's day in this month."

R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas, June 16 writes: "I am supported by the church here, and I go over and preach and scatter books, papers, etc., among them Indians. Since Bro. Askew died I have not been able to find a man who would undertake that work, but we will find one soon, and then can use all we can get, and more, no doubt, than we can get. If you wish, and will send me an extra copy or two, and pamphlets etc., I will put them to work. Two additions here last night."

F. C. Sowell, Columbia, Tenn., writes: "On account of rain our congregation was small at Thompson's Station, third Lord's day. On June 18, we (the one who joined me in the labors of life, on that day, and myself) left Middle Tennessee for this place (Union City.) Expect to begin work here next Saturday, and perhaps will continue several days. We hope to visit several places before we leave West Tennessee. We desire to get back to Middle Tennessee the last of July. We hope to be able to labor in Williamson, Maury and Hickman Counties this summer and fall."

APPOINTMENTS FOR PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Third Lord's day in July, at Pinewood, Tenn.; fourth Lord's day in July, and it may be over first in August, at Antioch, near Viola, Warren County, Tenn.; at Rich Pond Station, Ky., second Lord's day in August, beginning Wednesday night previous. This meeting in fact will be begun by Bro. B. F. Rogers first Lord's day in August, and we will join him Wednesday night. In North Mississippi from third Lord's day in August over first Lord's day in September, but do not yet know the points where meetings will be held. Will announce as soon as notified. At Watertown, Tenn, second Lord's day in September, and have promised one meeting or more in September, in Warren County, Tenn.—[E. G. S.]

Henry Hehorn, Jr., Whitleyville, Jackson County, Tenn., writes: "Bro. E. H. Rogers, of Lafayette, Tenn., began a meeting at Teles Chapel, on Jennings' Creek, Jackson County Tenn., on Saturday before the second Lord's day in June, and preached three sermons. The brethren speak favorable of his sermons as a true exhibit of Bible teaching. One was added to the church. The congregation at Teles Chapel is in a good working condition. Each and every member seems to realize that there is a work for all to do in the church. A better working congregation can not be found in this section of the country. Bro. Rogers is an earnest worker, laboring diligently in the Master's cause. Like Judah of old, he contends earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and for primitive apostolic christianity. He does not strive to make display of eloquence and oratory. But he labors to make a discrimination between the truth and the doctrines and traditions of uninspired men. We need men like Bro. Rogers, that will battle for the pure word of God, as it is now revealed to us in the Scriptures, and fight against creeds, man-made theories, human inventions and innovations. May the Lord own and bless his labors."

HESTER'S PARTY.

"Hester! Hester Arnold, where are you?"
 "Is that you May? Here—in the parlor."
 "What! asleep? I have been hunting you "hither and yon."—Your mother told me you had gone down to the cherry tree."

"Well, I did go; but I felt so warm I came back to the house, and this cool place was so—"

"Oh! never mind that, I have much more important news. Guess!—but I know you can't.
 Mrs. Mayfield is going to give a big party Thursday night. Oh! won't it be delightful? You know how large and airy her house is—so many halls and galleries to promenade in: but, best of all, she is going to send to town for the band and let us all dance. I declare, I can hardly wait for the time to come! Why Hester, what is the matter? You look like I had been telling you of a funeral instead of the nicest party we have had in a "month of Sundays." Aren't you glad?
 Don't you want to go?"

"You know, May, I joined the church not long since, and I don't think it is right for Christians to go to dances."

"Pshaw! Hester, I hope you aren't going to settle down and be an old woman just because you've joined the church. And you needn't dance if you don't want to; Mrs. Mayfield's parlours, I am sure, are attractive enough to detain you there—besides, Charlie Mayfield will take leave of absence from his school long enough to come and participate in the enjoyment of the evening, and you know very well whose presence will charm him most, although he loves to dance so well."

A quick blush stole over Hester's face. "But May—"

"But nothing! Come on, and let's go and see what your mother says on the subject."

So the two girls started, May ahead, for Mrs.
 Arnold's room.

"Say, Mrs. Arnold, do you think it will be any harm for Hester to go to the party?"

May almost startled Mrs. Arnold by her excited, emphatic speech.

"What party, child?"

"Why the grand one Mrs. Mayfield is going to give next week."

"No, I reckon not. Why! Mrs. Mayfield is one of the nicest ladies I know."

"But, mother, they are going to dance, remonstrated Hester, although her eyes could not hide the secret longing of her heart to engage in the coming entertainment."

"Yes, but I told Hester she needn't dance.
 Charlie Mayfield, I know, will forego the pleasures of the dance to bask in the sunlight of her smiles," and again the rosy blush mounted to Hester's cheek.

Mrs. Arnold was justly proud of her fair young daughter, and her mother-pride was gratified by the attentions of the wealthy, accomplished Charlie Mayfield to her, marked as they were, giving her a field in which to sow bright fancies of her darling's future; so she stilled any whis-perings of conscience which might have lurked in her heart and said: "Young people will be young people," and I can't see any especial harm (I wonder if the Lord makes the various differences in harmful things his followers do?) there will be in Hester's going, provided she doesn't dance."

"But, mother, brother Marks said in his sermon the last time he was with us that—"

Oh! never mind what "brother Marks" said, your mother is as good as he is. I know my mother is as good as anybody, and I have heard her say many a time she didn't think it was any harm to dance, much less just go to one. Now you have no excuse, and if you don't go it will be an everlasting offence," so with this final thrust from May, Hester yielded. ("Mother said so" has led many a pure, young life to eternal degradation and woe.)

The next day was the Lord's day, but too rainy to go to the assembly of the saints. Hester felt restless and sat down to read her Bible in order to try to assure the troubled conscience of her loyalty to its Maker. In turning over the leaves her eyes rested on the verse commencing, "Love not the world—." She thought within herself,
 "These epistle's over here are so hard to go by, I don't reckon any body ever was as good as they require; I will turn over to Psalms, they are so comforting and sweet." The first was the one her fingers turned to, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly—," here she stopped, the thought flashing across her mind that perhaps she was being lead by such a character. "But no, that doesn't mean May, I know—that word sounds too harsh for her," and when the enquiry came into her breast, "Who are the ungodly," she wouldn't take time to solve it. At that moment her brother Harry called her to come see his pet colt, and she answered the summons with alacrity. That night when she knelt by her bed-side, and the words, "Lead us not into temptation," framed themselves on her lips wounded conscience experienced a sharp sting, but it was silenced by the thought,

 "Mother wouldn't sanction anything that was wrong." (Ah! mothers, we little realize the power we have over the young hearts in our keeping.)

The next morning May came bounding into the room, all aglow with excitement, as was her wont.

"Hester, what are you going to wear to the party?" she asked of the sweet-faced girl, whose expression had gained its accustomed calm over the basket of mending which sat heaped up by her side.

"I expect to wear my new figured lawn—it will be cool and light."

"Oh! that will never do, all the girls are going to have thin, white dresses, made ball-room style, and it will never do for you to go in that."

"May, I'll not dance and I don't see that it will make the difference you seem to think," calmly returned Hester.

"Well, I would hate to be the only one there not "dressed up." Come, I am going to get mine now, get you one and we'll have them made alike. Can't she, Mrs. Arnold?"

Mother-pride again entered the mother's heart and she gave her consent for Hester to go.

The long-looked-for night came at last, and Mrs. Mayfield's elegant mansion was ablaze with light and life. Hester took her place in the parlours, having but few companions; but according to May's prediction, the young host lingered near her as much as politeness to the other guests admitted. As the evening progressed, the parlours were more and more deserted. Finally, Charlie Mayfield came in bearing May on his arm.

"Miss Hester," he said, "I have brought Miss May in to add her entreaties to mine to persuade you to go into the dancing-hall. She looks too pure to be contaminated, doesn't she?" he added, in an undertone to May.

And she did look like a snow-drop in her white, gauze dress, with her fair face surrounded by a halo of sunny hair.

Their entreaties proved too powerful for the young girl, and she suffered May's escort to draw her hand through his other arm, and lead her away to the "halls of mirth."

"Partners for another set," the prompter called out, as they entered.

A dashing young fellow came up and claimed May's hand, and left Hester alone with Mr.
 Mayfield.

"Miss Hester, I do wish you would dance this once with me, won't you?" bending over her, and adding in a lower tone, "You know that would give me more pleasure than to dance with the Queen herself." Then more tenderly, "For the sake of 'auld lang sime,' just dance this one last time with me."

Hester averted her head, and whispered, "It would be wrong; I cannot."

Just at that moment a voice called out, "Charlie Mayfield, you and Miss Hester come and fill up this set; the others say they are 'danced down.'"

"Won't you go?" he pleaded.

Under the excitement and impulse Hester suffered him to lead her away.

"Was ever a set so long?" Hester asked herself over and over; and before it closed she overheard a spiteful voice say,—

"I thought she was too good to even come into the dancing-hall the first of the night; her Christianity must have forsaken her suddenly. But I might have known Charlie Mayfield could have persuaded her to do anything."

The weary set ended at last, and with burning cheeks Hester begged to return to the parlors, where she could not be entreated to stay long.

 Deep tears of contrition rolled down her cheeks, as she disrobed herself of the filmy ball dress and sank down on her bed, feeling like the poor publican, who would not even so much as lift his eyes to heaven, but cried, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Let us be thankful she felt the sting of sin, and fled from its thorny way so soon. Many, many young lives have been lured to ruin by not having power to resist after yielding to the first temptation. Young Christians, beware of the enticing traps which Satan lays for your tender feet.

TRIMMING ELEPHANTS' FEET.

Yesterday, Prof. George Arstingstall and four assistants were occupied all day in trimming the feet of two elephants. The operation is performed three times a year—once on the road, once in the fall, and again in the spring. The sole of an elephant's foot is heavily covered with a thick, horny substance of material similar to the three toe-nails upon each foot, and as it grows thicker and thicker it tends to contract and crack, often laming the animal. When the work of trimming is undertaken, the elephant stands upon three legs and places the foot to be operated upon, across a big tub. Two men hold the leg down, and one stands at the animal's head to prevent him from turning. Then Prof. Arstingstall, with a two-foot drawing-knife, proceeds to shave off great pieces of bone from the sole of the foot.
 Shavings of bone six inches by four, and a quarter of an inch thick, are rapidly cut, the edges of the foot being carefully trimmed. Often pieces of glass, wire, nails, etc., are found imbedded in the foot, which have been picked up during street parades. Sometimes these irritating morsels work up into the leg and produce a festering sore.
 A large nail was found recently in Pallis's foot imbedded over three inches from the bottom.
 Prof. Arstingstall extracted it with a small pair of pincers, then syringed the wound with warm water, and subsequently covered it with tar. The professor, when hurried on the road, sometimes draws out such nails with his teeth. Pallis apparently suffered great pain, but seemed to know that the operation would give relief. He held the foot high and quietly of his own accord until all was finished, then flourished his trunk, trumpeted, and expressed almost in words his sincere thanks. After paring the foot, each toenail is cut between, and then filed down, giving each foot a white, clean look with its setting of polished nails. It takes about six hours to finish dressing an elephant's feet, and it is said to be one of the hardest bits of work that men have to do.—Boston Globe.

WIT AND HUMOR.

"This is the poetry of motion," said the editor, as he shied a bundle of very blank verse into the waste basket.

"I wonder what has taken away my appetite for breakfast?" asked a festive Fifth Avenue man. "I suspect it was your happy tight last night, dear," replied his wife.

"You just take a bottle of my medicine," said a quack doctor to a consumptive, "and you'll never cough again." "Is it as fatal as that?"
 gasped the consumptive.

"Excuse me," said a polite citizen to a colored man. "I didn't kick you on purpose." "No, sah, kicked me on de shin, sah. Scuze yer dis time, but don't git in de habit ob it, sah."

A dandy with a cigar in his mouth entered a menagerie, when the proprietor requested him to take the weed from his mouth, lest he should teach the other monkeys bad habits.

Teacher—What part of speech is the word 'egg'?
 Boy—Noun, sir. "What is its gender?" "Can't say, sir, until it's hatched." "Well, then, my lad, you can't tell me the case?" "Oh, yes, sir—the shell."

Josh Billings says: "There is one thing about a hen that looks like wisdom. They don't kackle much until after they have laid their egg. Sum pholks are alwuz a bragging and kackling what they are going to do be-forehand."

and HISTORICAL SKETCHES of MISSIONARY SOCIETIES among the Disciples of Christ, with Historical and Statistical Tables, by F. M. Green, with an introduction by W. K. Pendleton. "It is full of information which all friends of missions ought to know, and which, but few could be able anywhere else to find. It is an inspiring illustration of the evangelic spirit of the noble men whom we delight to honor as the pioneers of the reformation."

"It is believed that the sketches present the very light on our missions which the great mass of the Disciples need upon their missionary efforts in the past, and the necessity which is laid upon them in the present."

Complete information of the work of all the State organizations, C. W. B. M., F. C. M. S., and General C. M. C. &c. No Christian library is complete without this volume. Bro. Green has done us a valuable service in preparing this book. He has spent much labor and patient thought in its composition. He has written it in love of the work of which it is a history, and with a zealous eloquence which must touch our hearts. Let us reward him by giving it a wide circulation. Handsomely bound in Cloth, 438 pages, only $1.50. Christian men and women wanted to act as Agents in each congregation. For full particulars

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for
(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

THE FIRST CHAPTER OF ACTS.

While there is nothing directly on the subject of conversion in this chapter, there are some things preparatory to it, and they are very important, and well worth studying. Luke, the writer, goes briefly over the time, forty days, which intervened between the resurrection of Christ from the dead and his ascension home to heaven. There are a few things regarding the time of the establishment of the kingdom of Christ in the first part of this chapter of decided interest. Luke says that during the forty days that he was with the disciples, before his ascension, he spake with them concerning the kingdom of God. But the disciples did not yet understand the nature of his kingdom. They still thought it an earthly kingdom, and felt great anxiety for its establishment at once. When the disciples were with him just before his ascension, they imploringly said, "Lord, will thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" They thought his kingdom would be an earthly one, like that of David and Solomon, and they were impatient for its establishment. Jesus saw their difficulty and said to them, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons the Father hath put in his own power." That is the time had not come for them to understand the time of establishment, or character of his kingdom. But said he, "Ye shall receive power, after (when) the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses etc." The implication here plainly is, you will understand the nature and establishment of my kingdom when the Holy Spirit comes upon you. This is evidence positive that the kingdom of Christ was not established up to this time, and that it was not time yet for them to understand it. Surely it would be passing strange if the kingdom was then established, and the disciples in it, and yet did not know it. Such an idea is most unreasonable.

But the time for its full establishment was just at the door. He tells them "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." They were therefore to receive power, and be able to understand the nature and establishment of the kingdom in a few days from that time. This indicates most clearly that those who place the full establishment of the kingdom of Christ earlier than this are mistaken about it. It cannot be otherwise. For if the kingdom was then set up, the disciples were in it, and did not know it, this thought would be absurd, that these disciples should be in the kingdom, compose the kingdom, make up that kingdom, and yet not know anything in the world of it. It could not be so.

When this conversation occurred Christ was not crowned king in Zion, in heaven; he had not then been placed as head over all things by the Father. There was therefore no king crowned, no head over the church or kingdom. The Spirit though promised, had not then come to take up its abode in the church. The church is the body of Christ. But if a body then, it was a body without a Spirit. Impossible therefore that it should have been established then. But be assured the time for it to be is near at hand. Only eight days after this the Holy Spirit came as promised. And they were to know when the Holy Spirit came

These facts therefore show us the time Jesus ascended, the establishment of the kingdom was at the very door.

Up to this time, and even now, the kingdom or church of God is spoken as in the future. Such expressions as "on this rock I will build my church," "the kingdom of heaven is near at hand," "the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you," and many more like these, were all along from the time that John the Baptist began his ministry up to this last conversation of Christ with his disciples, just before his ascension. But after this time it never again so represented. But whenever the church or kingdom is spoken of after this time, it is mentioned as actually present. In the last of the second chapter we have the expression, "and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." This shows at this time the church was really present, and the people were being added to it daily. In the beginning of the first chapter, the kingdom was not yet set up, nor the time come when the disciples themselves could know or understand it. In the end of the second chapter, the church is actually set up, actually present, and people added to it daily.

With these facts before us, we may with certainty conclude that the full establishment of the kingdom, the church, was between the beginning of the first, and close of the second chapter. This being the time, it appears as a matter of certainty that the church of God was first fully established on earth on the day of Pentecost in the city of Jerusalem, and that three thousand were added to it that very day. In the first part of eighth of Acts, we are told that "there was a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem." Here again the church is present, and suffering persecution. And from that day of Pentecost forward, the church or kingdom is spoken of as present. This gives us a very important item regarding the kingdom of God. And that is, we need not go back behind the time of its establishment to learn the way into it. We cannot learn even from the first chapter how to enter, but must come to the second. Those who go back to any event, or to any system of teaching before this time, to learn how to become Christians, how to enter the kingdom of God, go too far back. Even the thief on the cross is entirely too far back.

Those therefore that want to be saved as they say he was, will be sadly disappointed. Just as well think of offering a kid or a lamb for a sin offering, and expect to be pardoned by that, as to think of being saved like the thief. He was too bad a man to want to be saved like he was. He never obeyed God in anything that we know of. When he saw he had to die he became apparently very humble, but it was too late then for him to obey God. Were I to take any man of olden time as my exemplar, I would rather take Abraham. He obeyed God from his youth. He never at any time refused to do anything God commanded, and thus lived and died a servant of God, and on this account is called the friend of God, the father of the faithful. But those of to-day that want to be saved like the thief, want to be saved without obedience, want to be saved in disobedience. They refuse to be baptized, and want to be saved that disobedience. The thief is a thorough example of disobedience all his life, till placed upon the cross to die, and even then if he had been turned loose there is not a bit of certainty that he would have been from that time on a servant of God, ready to do all God required. But good old Abraham never faltered, never failed to do anything God required. If people will act that way now, will go forward and obey the gospel as the Lord commands, will believe, repent and be baptized as the Lord requires, they will as certainly be saved as the Bible is true; that is, be pardoned. But if like the thief they disobey, refuse to repent and be baptized, but expect the Lord to save them without obedience, they will come under the condemnation of those who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is to be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. See first chapter of Thessalonians. People must obey God if they wish to be saved. Abraham did what was commanded him, and sinners now must do what the gospel requires them to do, or they can have no promise of salvation.

Not only can no one be saved like the thief, but it is also true that no one now can be saved like any one else was saved, before the ascension of Christ to heaven. Many were saved before this time, but not by doing the same things that are required to be done now. No one up to this time was ever required to be baptized into Christ. From Pentecost onward, all had to do this. So this first chapter of Acts just brings us up to the time when we can learn how to be saved by the gospel of Christ, how to become Christians. All denominationalism breaks down here. They all have the kingdom of Christ set up previous to this time, some at one period and some at another, but all of an earlier date, and are very ready therefore to have sinners converted and saved by something that was given before this time. Some even go to the Psalms of David to teach sinners how to be saved. Some to the miracles of Christ, as where he opened the eyes of the blind, cast out demons, healed the paralytic, or pardoned the sinful women by his word. But all these things took place too early in the history of time to be examples for people now. We must come to the right place, and the right time to learn what people now are required to do. And when we get to the right place the lesson is quickly, easily learned.

We have now reached the point where in one single chapter, the second of Acts, we are plainly taught how to become Christians. And surely when we have got to where by just studying one chapter we can gain full information on so important a matter as that of becoming a Christian, we will be willing to study that chapter patiently, carefully. It would not take long to memorize every word in it, and study the meaning of every word and its relations to others. The reason why conversion has seemed a mystery to so many, is because they have been pointed to the wrong place to learn it. They have been, and are referred to cases that belonged to other dispensations, and that were saved by different laws, and they cannot see how these things can be. And indeed if these things were correct, conversion would be mysterious sure enough. But in our next, we will show what will make a Christian.

E. G. S.

Jesus says, "Come now," not "Come when every thing else has turned out bitter."

BAPTIST SUCCESSION GIVEN UP.

There are some who contend that the fact of an unbroken succession of Baptist churches, from the days of the apostles to the present time, can be established from the records of history. Prof. Norman Fox, of Wm. Jewell College, Mo., took ground against this, and his position being criticised, he supplies this further article to the St. Louis Baptist. It is valuable for the record of opinions it contains. He says:

Rev. Heman Lincoln, D. D., Professor of Church History in Newton Theological Seminary, kindly writes as follows:

"In glancing over the columns of the Central Baptist I was attracted by your article. Its sober views, sterling common sense and candid historical criticisms pleased me greatly. Your views accord with those of all scholars who have given the question a thorough investigation. I have never known but one Baptist of large learning and sober judgment who held a different opinion—the late Dr. J. Newton Brown. He believed that a succession of true Baptist churches could be traced in direct line from the apostolic age to our own time. Therefore, the Publication Society employed him to prepare such a history. Five years or more passed, I think, before the first volume of the work was ready for the press; but when the manuscript was submitted to wise judges, it failed to receive their approval and was never published. Your position, I think, is the only safe one. We can attempt nothing more with our present data than to prove the existence of Baptist principles from the apostolic age to the present time. To trace a line of churches holding these principles, unmixed with radical errors, no wise and cautious student will undertake."

So much for our oldest Baptist theological school. And now let me quote another high scholar whom we all so profoundly respect—Dr. William Williams, who has so ably filled the chair of Church History in Greenville Theological Seminary. In a letter now before me he says:

"There can be no doubt in the world that in our so-called histories of the Baptists, many sects are claimed as Baptists, which, if now reproduced, would not be acknowledged as such by any church or association, e. g., the Novatians, Donatists and Paulicians. From the fifth to the sixteenth century inclusive there are no churches (unless we except the churches of the Mennonites with some errors) that can be called Baptist churches."

"As history now stands (what future researches will develop we can not tell) it is impossible to trace any chain of Baptist churches from the days of the apostles until now. Those Baptists who are urging our claims on the ground of an historical succession are only doing harm to us with all intelligent and well-read people. We do not need such aid for the success of our principles, however much Romanists and High Church Episcopalians may think they need it."

Our country has few scholars equal to Dr. R. J. W. Buckland, Professor of Church History in Rochester Theological Seminary. In a private letter, he says:

"My historical investigations make it perfectly clear to me that a continuous line of Baptist churches from the time of the apostles to the Reformation period has never been established. Orchard's attempt to do it is sadly weak, and would disgrace any historical writer. He quotes the Fathers as holding views which they condemn, ignores many facts which would utterly disgrace his position, and shows throughout the folly of working from secondary sources of information. The valuable collection of Benedict is marred with the same faults and mistakes, and Mr. Ray's 'Baptist Succession' falls into like errors. I am fully persuaded that, taking Baptist churches in the strict modern sense, Baptist succession can never be historically established. Your position, as you state it, meets my hearty endorsement. There were bodies which held some of our principles, but they held them only in part, and added to them others which we reject. We do reach a distinctively Baptist Church line in the Petrobrusians in 1104, and I believe that we may claim that our distinctive principles were perpetuated continuously from that date onward into the Reformation period, and so to and the line may be a broken one. What we ought to rest upon is the historic continuity of Baptist principles and their immortality."

Among some old letters, I discover one from Dr. Geo. W. Northrup, President of Chicago Baptist Theological Seminary, and one of our ablest Professors of Church History. He says:

"The idea of an unbroken succession of regular Baptist churches from the days of the apostles to our day is a sheer historical picture. My opinion is, that it is altogether impossible to make out an 'unbroken succession' of 'witnesses for the truth outside the Roman Catholic Church.' I should prefer to attempt almost any other intellectual achievement conceivable. The Donatists are often spoken of as an essentially Baptist sect, but the statement seems to me to be wide of the truth. The Donatists had their Bishops, Presbyters and Deacons, nor did they differ from the Roman Catholic Church in regard to the proper mode and subjects of baptism. It would not strengthen our denominational position one iota to make out an unbroken succession of regular Baptist churches from the earliest times to the present. We depend on the 'law and the testimony,' not upon an unbroken succession, for the evidence that the Church to which we belong is a scripturally constituted one."

Rev. David Weston, Professor of Church History in Hamilton Theological Seminary, says:

"I think your position entirely correct and tenable."

He also quotes the following from a private letter from Dr. J. M. Cramp, author of "Baptist History." Dr. Cramp says:

"Many of our brethren indulge in the pleasing thought that Baptist churches may be traced all the way back to the apostolic age. That they existed in that age I know very well, but from the establishment of infant baptism to the Reformation is a very dreary time. The chain may be there, but it only appears now and then, and the connecting links are wanting. Some of our historians are credulous, some careless."

Dr. Howard Osgood, Professor of Church History in Crozer Theological Seminary, and one of the most painstaking investigators that our country has produced, says, regarding this discussion:

"So far as I know, history does not tell us with a clear voice of Baptist churches from A. D. 500-1000. I do not think the unbroken succession necessary to establish the validity of any Baptist Church."

By the above letters it appears that in every single one of the six Baptist Theological Seminaries of our country the same views are enunciated. It really seems a pity that not one of our Baptist schools should be "sound!" Again: if not one of the able scholars whom I have quoted has been able to find a succession—if, as Dr. Lincoln says, "no Baptist of large learning and sober judgment" claims to be able to make out such a line, may we not conclude that history fails to make known to us this unbroken descent?

We clip the above from the Evangelist, the Baptist organ of California. We wish it preserved for the valuable information it contains. We are rejoiced to see that light is breaking upon the Baptists, through all their theological schools. We have often wondered how any man of "large learning and sober judgment" could hold to Baptist succession, or any other kind of succession. We bid these Baptists God-speed in getting out of the fogs of Babylon.—Bible Expositor.

HONOR THY FATHER AND THY MOTHER.

There is a touching story of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson, which has had influence on many a boy who has heard it. Samuel's father, Michael Johnson, was a poor bookseller in Linchfield, England. On market days he used to carry a package of books to the village of Uttoxeter, and sell them for a stall in the market-place. One day the bookseller was sick, and asked his son to go and sell the books in his place. Samuel, from a silly pride, refused to obey.

Fifty years afterwards Johnson became the celebrated author, the compiler of the "English Dictionary," and one of the most distinguished scholars in England; but he never forgot his act of unkindness to his poor, hard-toiling father; so when he visited Uttoxeter, he determined to show his sorrow and repentance.

He went to the market place at the time of an hour in the pouring rain, on the very spot where the bookstall used to stand. "This," he says "was an act of contrition for my disobedience to my kind father."

The spectacle of the great Dr. Johnson standing there in the storm, to atone for the wrong done by him fifty years before, is a grand and touching one. There is a representation of it (in marble) on the Doctors's monument.

Many a man in after life has felt something harder and heavier than a storm of rain beating upon his heart, when he remembered the acts of unkindness to good father and mother now in their graves.

Dr. John Todd, of Pittsfield, the eminent writer, never could forget how, when his old father was sick, and sent him away for medicine, he (a little lad) had been unwilling to go, and made up a lie that "the druggist had not got any such medicine."

The old man was just dying when little Johnny came in, and said to him, "My boy, your father suffers great pain for want of that medicine."

Johnny started in great distress for the medicine, but it was too late. "The father, on his return, was almost gone. He could only say to the weeping boy, 'Love God, and always speak the truth, for the eye of God is always upon you. Now kiss me once more, farewell.'"

Through all his after life, Dr. Todd often had a heartache over that act of falsehood and disobedience to his dying father. It takes more than a shower to wash away the memory of such sins. Dr. Todd repented of that sin a thousand times.

The words "Honor thy father and thy mother," mean four things—always do what they bid you, always tell them the truth, always treat them lovingly, and take care of them when they are sick or grow old. I never yet knew a boy who trampled on the wishes of his parents who turned out well. God never blesses a wilfully disobedient son.

When Washington was sixteen years old he determined to leave home and be a midshipman in the Colonial navy. After he had sent off his trunk, he went to bid his mother good-by. She wept so bitterly because he was going away, that he said to his negro servant, "Bring back my trunk; I am not going to make my mother suffer so by leaving her."

He remained at home to please his mother. This decision led to his becoming a surveyor, and afterwards a soldier. His whole glorious career in life turned on this one simple act of trying to make his mother happy. And happy, too, will be the child who never has occasion to shed bitter tears for any act of unkindness to his parents. Let us not forget that God has said: "Honor thy father, and thy mother."—Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in Youth's Companion.

A PORTION FOR THE AGED.

A youth setting out to attend a festival said within himself, "I should be perfectly happy but for the thought of what wretchedness I must feel in returning home, that high pleasure so long anticipated all gone by." However, when the hour arrived, his ardent soul had become sated, and his physical nature weary, and he said in leaving the place. "How I long for rest! To dream over the enjoyment of these scenes will be sweeter than to have them back again, if that were possible." So, commonly, the hardship of growing old and being compelled to drop the joys and activities of our prime, lies in the dread rather than in the reality. Man's decay, like his growth, usually embraces a period, and is effected gently, insensibly, the faculties meanwhile accepting the harmony of existing conditions, as a serene lake reflects the changing hues of autumn. To a reflecting, religious mind, all nature's processes commend themselves. The leaves, ripened and illuminated as the years decline, at least or detached from the bow easily, and float away as by their own instinct or tendency.—Watchman.

At the Congregational Club, of New York, Dr. Clapp said, among other evils of the present, one was the building of two costly churches. "Better build fifty churches for the poor than one $500,000 temple. I do not believe the Lord cares whether a church costs $10,000 or $500,000; but I do believe he cares whether there is one church or fifty

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: In looking over a copy of the Advocate, I see a reply to Texas correspondent, on law of divorce, in which you take the position that a man can be separated from his wife for "adultery," and marry again. Permit me to show that you did not "rightly divide the word of truth."

In the first place, I admit that Jesus taught that if a man put away his wife, save for the cause of fornication, and married again, it was adultery. You said Christ restored the "ancient order of things." In other words, Christ restored to the Jews the idea of the law of divorce, as given by Moses. He never instituted any law concerning divorce. Hence that law, as taught by Moses and by Jesus, he nailed to the cross; and unless we can find where it is bound into the new covenant, (for the apostles had power to bind,) then it is a nullity, so far as we are concerned.

Now, my brother, let us see if the apostles taught divorce, as did Moses and Jesus. Paul is the only one that speaks definitely on the subject. You might as well talk of Christians being divorced from Christ, and have divine right to be married to another, as to say that a man can put away his wife, and have the sanction of heaven in taking another. See Romans 7: 1-5. But in first Corinthians, seventh chapter, Paul speaks plainly on the subject, and it seems that the Corinthians had trouble about the divorce matter. Paul says, (verse 11,) "But if she (the wife) depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife." Again, (verse 39,) "The wife is bound by the law so long as her husband liveth; but if he be dead, she is at liberty to marry whom she will, only in the Lord." A man and wife are Christians in the fullest sense of the word, when they are married to Christ. They were married to him by complying to divine law. Now they live so that it is necessary for them to be divorced from him. Does this law of divorcing (withdrawing) make the law of marriage a nullity? If so, then when they come back to Christ, (their husband,) they (1) believe, (2) repent, (3) be baptized. This is the divine law of marriage to Christ. The law of marriage of husband and wife is divine law. Hence if they violate that law, it does not make it a nullity; it is binding till death. God said so. So of the marriage to Christ; it is binding till death. You may violate that law, so that it is necessary to be divorced, and you must remain single, or be reconciled to Christ (the husband) by repenting of your sins. The law of marriage is still binding on you. You violated that law, but that is only the worse for you; it does not change the law, nor make it a nullity. Now Paul teaches that a husband bears the same relation to the wife that Christ does to the church and to Christians. See Eph. 5: 23-32. The world and the church is to-day full of adulterers and adulteresses. Flee such things, O man of God.

J. W. DENTON, JR.

Why does our brother say Moses' law was the original law? I did not say it was. I carefully drew attention to the fact that Jesus said, "Moses commanded to give a writing of divorcement, but it was not so from the beginning." The original way is that which was in the beginning. Second, he who breaks the law is not absolved by his breaking it from the obligations of the law. No one ever contended he was. But how about the other party when one breaks the covenant? Is the innocent to suffer the penalties of the guilty? Is Christ still bound by the law to bless, and save, and observe his part of the covenant, when the sinner violates it? So is the innocent party to the marriage covenant bound, while the guilty one violates and tramples it under foot? There is no question about the guilty one. But if one violates the law so as to destroy the obligation, if one by adultery makes himself one with a harlot, is it right, is it permissible for the innocent one to continue one with him who is one with a harlot? Paul plainly says a brother or sister is not bound in such a case. If not bound, if released from the marriage bond by the other party breaking the marriage covenant, then is the innocent one not at liberty to marry? That is the only question of doubt. We do not see that it is touched in the above.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

RESOLUTIONS OF M'CLURE INSTITUTE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Whereas, It has pleased an allwise God to remove from our midst, our much-loved teacher, H. J. Griffis, who departed this life in peace, May 26, 1884.

It is seldom that any Sunday-school or community is called upon to mourn the loss of one so useful and so universally loved; one whose life is such a commentary on virtue, integrity and candor. While we feel that our loss is irreparable, he having faithfully discharged his duty as scholar, teacher and officer, and sadly realize that no more will we be encouraged in our labors by his genial smile and words of instruction, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well; feeling that he who has so faithfully labored with us so many Sabbaths on earth, and whose well known voice led us in hymns of praise, is now pouring forth strains divine, and enjoying a never ending Sabbath beyond the pearly gate. If we could hear his song to-day, we doubtless would hear—

"I am anchored in port, I have reached the bright strand,
And the voyage of life is now past;
With my Savior I'll dwell in this beautiful land,
And with rapture I'll shout, 'Home at last!'"

Therefore, be it resolved, That we tender the deepest sympathies of our stricken hearts to his bereaved brothers and sisters.

Resolved, That we as a school, while we cherish his memory; will remember his life as one worthy of the closest imitation. That we may ever be ready, as he was, to read a "title clear" to the rewards and glories "beyond the sunsets radiant glow."

Resolved, That these preambles and resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the school, a copy furnished the Marshall Gazette and the GOSPEL ADVOCATE with request to publish.

Committee. { ALICE ALLEN,

LOST IN SIGHT OF HOME.

A few years ago, during one of the severe storms that visited Colorado, a young man perished in sight of home. In his bewilderment he passed and repassed his own cottage, to lie down and die almost in range with the "light of his own window" which his young wife had placed there to guide him home. All alone she watched the long night through, listening in vain for the foot steps that would come no more; for long before morning dawned, the icy touch of death had forever stilled that warm, loving heart. The sad death made still sadder by the fact that he was lost in sight of home. How many wander from the Father's house and are lost in full glare of the Gospel light. They have the open Bible, overflowing with its calls and promises, the faithful warnings from the sacred desk, the manifestations of God's promises, all tending to direct their footsteps heavenward, and yet from all these they turn away, waiting for the more convenient season, and are lost at last, in sight of the many mansions.

KIND WORDS.

Never is the deep, strong voice of man, or the low, sweet voice of woman firmer than in the earnest but mellow tones of speech, richer than the richest music, which are a delight while they are heard, which linger upon the ear in softened echoes, and when they have ceased, come back to memory many years after, like the music of a distant hymn. It is pleasant to listen to such voices. I have heard such voices—voices that were music from the soul and to it—the very music of thought and of thought, that was the very soul of goodness. Very pleasant are such voices—pleasant on the fragrant air of a summer's evening; pleasant by the fire on a winter's night; pleasant while they last, pleasant to remember, even with sorrow when they are silent, when their melody shall never, never sweeten the air of earth.

How sweet and agreeable to our ears are kind words! Delightful and melodious they steal into our hearts in such a fascinating way that we cannot force them back. They never cause us to feel unhappy, but they ever come to us as a sweet message to cheer and encourage us.

O the power of a kind word on the hardest heart! And it costs so little. A word fitly spoken is oftentimes better than gold. Up and down this world go many fainting, discouraged ones, waiting for a kind word or smile. Give it to them; it will not cost you anything, and oh, how it may gladden their hearts! Words cost but little, and they too often mean but little and amount to little. But this is not the worst of it. If words do little good, they may do much harm. A word once uttered cannot be recalled. Many a friendship has been broken and a hope blasted by a thoughtless word. There are words which sever hearts more than sharp swords; there are words which sting the heart through the course of a whole lifetime.—Linda McHan.

PRAYING EVERYWHERE.

We are not like children, that must go out from our father's house in the morning to spend the working day away from him, and only to come back to him at evening. No; we are with Him, and He with us, all the day through. We never leave His presence; He is beside us through all our work, our weariness, our perplexity, our worry, all the day. And we may tell Him what we want, and how we are feeling—not stiffly and formally, twice a day at morning and evening—but as often as we please. He will not weary of listening to us if we do not weary of speaking to Him. We need not limit ourselves to morning and evening prayer. Twenty times, and far more than that, as you go through your day's work, the eye may look up for a moment, the heart may be lifted up; the brief word may carry up to God's ear the story of your need and of your trust in Him. Sitting down at your desk, and taking up your pen, if that be your work, oh, you do not know how much better you may do it for just covering your eyes with your hand for a minute, and asking God's blessing in prayer. Or, dealing with your fellowmen, some of them impracticable and wrong-headed enough, some of them sharp-set and low-principled enough, some of them provoking and stupid enough—how much better you will keep your temper amid the provocations of business—with how much clearer head and kinder heart you will treat with your fellow-sinners, for a word of silent prayer! If you desire to influence any for good, remember how wisely it has been said that the shortest road to any human heart is found by God; and explain to your heavenly Father all you wish to do. Every little pain will be better borne, and every little joy enhanced, by a moment's silent mention of them to God. You can, alone with Him, speak of a host of little things, which really make a great part in your thoughts and in your life, yet which are less suitable for speaking of in united prayer with other people.

WESTWARD THE TRACT FUND TAKES ITS WAY!

The Trustee of the Christian Sower Tract Fund, having accepted a call to preach for the church at Mexico, Mo., expects to move the tract fund to that place about the middle of August. He now has a large number of tracts on hand consisting of seven kinds of card tracts and eight kinds of pamphlet tracts, and desire to dispose of them at once partly to avoid the cost and trouble of transportation. During a trip lately made he was so fortunate as to raise money enough to relieve the present distress, and is thus enabled to give away a goodly number to those unable to buy. But this time of plenty will not last long, unless the brethren are liberal in sending orders accompanied with the cash, gifts to the work, and money to pay off old accounts. Owing to our splendid postal system the move will not in the least injure the work as tracts can yet be easily sent all over the world. Let us work while it is day. Address J. W. Higbee, Madsionville, Ky.

The faith of eighteen is that society exists for its sake. Middle age is generous and tolerant, and does not care to tell the young that they are valued mainly for their future, and that the real work of the world is done by men who have ceased to be ornamental.—Amelia Barr.

TO THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST IN SOUTH ALABAMA.

It will soon be big meeting time, and many are the calls I receive to hold meetings. I will venture if all were interrogated, I mean all the churches, there would not be one that would not say brother Mack ought to hold us a meeting in July, August or September. Now I am at the other end of the line, I cannot hold meetings for all in that short time, and I can see it, but it does not make you the less persistent in your demands that I shall visit you. Some brethren even take it in hand to administer reproof to me and that rather severely. I always allow myself to be scolded. I suffer men and women who have never done much for the kingdom, who have never planted a church, or built up a declining congregation, to file their objections to my ways in life; yes, I make no great objection to men who are very inconsistent in life and unpopular at home, to say what they please. I know not who may be the man that will stir or drive me on to duty, and this done, I should be very thankful, praise God and care not by whom it was accomplished. I can say freely and frankly that there is not a place in all this Alabama, that I would not gladly hold a meeting right now. But I cannot visit many places. I am at a loss what is best to do, and where best to go. The churches should learn this, that the prosperity of Christ's kingdom is not dependent upon one man. Whilst solicitous about my doing my duty, have you done yours? The spasmodic efforts annually made, with the sacrifice of a great many pigs, bullocks, goats, kids, chickens, ducks, turkeys, and the offspring of innumerable number of pies, custards, cakes, jellies, jams and preserves, is better than nothing somewhat, but it is far from what should be done. Now, do your duty and the cause will be built up where you live. Righteousness is like leaven, it will effect the whole lump. Now be certain to break bread on every first day of the week. The meeting should not be made up of a few "true blues" who put in their appearance on Lord's day, but all of the congregation who can, should be certain to be there. Do not wait for a preacher to help you serve God, you are priests, and can offer up your own sacrifice and look to the one Mediator, Jesus Christ the righteous. Teach your own children, your neighbors and their children the word of the Lord, and you will find that your members increase if you practice what you preach.

What course will the preacher follow when he has been transported to your place at some expense? If he be a good preacher, he will rely upon teaching from house to house. Then he can explain, and the man who does not know a thing can tell him his difficulty. Why not you do the same. Public speaking is not the only way of reaching sinner's hearts. When people are not going to do their duty or try to do it, what is the use of adding more of the same sort of do nothing, care nothing sort of material to a congregation? A lesson that we should learn, is that when born the new creature has life. A new born babe goes right to work drawing rations and lives. Activity belongs to Christ's kingdom. Preachers cannot do you any good my dear brethren, unless you practice what you know. You may send for big preachers, or little ones, and it will be all the same. Big guns cannot shoot you away to heaven, high flying orators cannot sail you to immortal bliss. It is written, "Work out your salvation with fear and trembling," and you must do it. It is not needful that I go around and feed you on spoon victuals ever and anon. I would teach the same lessons were I to go to see you again. I taught you years ago to pray, to have family prayer; do you do it? I taught you to meet every Lord's day to break bread; do you do it? I told you that you must help the poor and hold up the hands of those who preach the gospel; do you do it? Why do you not do these things? Is it too small a matter? Now I am going, the Lord willing, to do all I can for the cause in Alabama, but remember it retards the work whenever you fail to meet on Lord's day to wait upon Jesus. Now you may run off visiting, go to sectarian meetings and all this kind of business, but you are just tearing down the work others are doing by so acting, and I want you to know it. One thing more, be certain to encourage young preachers. Do not stifle the life's breath out of them by your coldness, by your remarks that you prefer some one else, or by failing to help them when they labor for you. With these remarks I close, trusting you will read them, and hand the paper around. J. M. BARNES.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 5.

"For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge to the end." 2 Cor. 1-13.

Well, my friend, I come to our subject at once in this letter. You will notice that we found that the Ninevites did two things—believed and repented—and we conclude that there were two conditions to them, and having complied with them, God saved them from destruction. We find that these two conditions are applied as commands that we might obtain pardon of our sins. We presume that if these be the only conditions, we shall find it so recorded, but if there be other conditions we shall be sure to find them in God's word. And I trust, we care nothing for conditions imposed upon us by man—in as much as we know, that they are vain, and sinful. The Apostle John says: "whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God." 1 John. 4-15. But this is spoken to those whom John calls his little children, and brethren, and refers more properly to those whose past sins have been pardoned, and called sons of God, 1 John. 3: 1, 2. Jesus said, whosoever confess me before men, him, will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven, Matt 10: 82. While this may not be a specific command to confess, it clearly involves the necessity of it, Paul says: "For it is written as I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. Rom. 14: 11. See also Rom. 15: 9. Also Phil's, 2: We see not how this could be made more strong—Jesus makes it a necessity, in order to be acknowledged by him before the Father. Paul says it is written, that every tongue shall confess. We learn also, that at Ephesus, many that believed came and confessed, and showed their deeds. We find then that confession of Jesus as the Christ the son of the living God necessary that we make ourselves assured of God, and we find that it is made after faith, because the Ephesians believed, came and confessed. I know that many suggest its unimportance, but when we see the blessing promised to those who do confess, and find it written that every tongue shall confess, and many did confess. And that the word of faith, which we preach, saith, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God has raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believed unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. We see not how righteousness, and salvation can be attained, "unto," without believing and confessing. Here then my friend, you see why I, as a disciple of Christ, teach the necessity of confession, it is an acknowledging of Jesus Christ as the son of God, the Lord of Lord and King of Kings. Our High Priest, our Mediator, Saviour, and the only one in whom to put our hopes of salvation from sins, and our anticipations of being resurrected from our graves, and of being clothed with immortal life, and having the privilege of enjoying the felicities of heaven, but us loose from faith, we could not attain "unto righteousness," cut us loose from repentance, and it would leave us with our sinful desires, our rebellious conduct, and without that meek and humble walk and disposition, that alone receives the blessed promises, cut us loose from confessing our Lord and Christ, and you sever a link in the chain of conditions through which the blessings are promised to sinful men and women. Let us never despise nor call a single means through which our heavenly Father dispenses his blessings unessential, if we do, they may never reach us, but leave us battling through this life in alternate hopes and fears, and launching into an unknown world, unprepared to receive a single blessing, but our presumptuousness and disobedience, we be driven from the Father and sanctified host that live in exstatic joys throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. That you and I with all mankind may humbly bow the knee, and confess our prince and Saviour before men, that we may be acknowledged before the Father in heaven the desire of our hearts.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bros. L. & S.: I see an article in GOSPEL ADVOCATE from Borden Springs, saying they are almost spiritually dead. There is something the matter. Is it possible, out of a membership of over two hundred and fifty, that they are going to die for the want of a preacher and a house to worship in? I am a member of that congregation. I live sixteen miles from New Bethel church, too far for me to visit them often. I am six to sixteen miles from any brother or sister except my wife. I haven't heard but two sermons in over twelve months. I am here where sectarianism reigns supreme, but I am not spiritually dead. I have the word of God to cheer me in my darkest hours. Now I like preaching as well as any body, but I am not going to die spiritually because I can't hear preaching every Lord's day. New Bethel congregation is the oldest in this part of Alabama. I tell you, brethren, you must rise and go to work, build a good log house if you can do no better, I will guarantee you can get a preacher. The writer was baptized about eight years ago unto John's baptism, into the Baptist church. After being a member of Christ's church two years, was baptized about one month ago in the name of the Lord Jesus. Now, brethren, let us put on the whole armor of God and go to work, quit talking about being spiritually dead. Shame to you! If I was to begin to weaken here where I now live, it would almost ruin the cause around here. I have said so much about the cause, but by the grace of God I will stand. W. H. DUKE.

New Goshen, Ala., June 28, 1884.

[A man must not only stand, but work; and a working Christian is not often alone long at a time.—D. L.]

Bro. Lipscomb & Sewell: We, the brethren of Potter's Springs church near Rodgersville, Ala., have a brother that is blind, and he has been preaching for us about a year. He has not the complete bible, has only a part, the brethren of this place would like for the brethren elsewhere to help us get necessary books for him, as the church here is not able to get all that he needs to work with. If any of the brethren feel like they could help us get books, we will appreciate it very much.

Brethren you will please publish this for us if not to lengthy. J. B. McMURRY.

P. S.—Our brother Martindale, if he can get the books, will make a useful man in the cause of Christ.

[We take the brethren desire books for the blind. We have heard from others of this blind brother, and the promise of usefulness he has. If any of the readers of the Advocate have books suited for his use, or means to aid in such a work, they will at once forward help to him.—D. L.]

MANY persons writes, Mr. Spurgeon, set small stores by any service unless it has a spiritual aspect. It seems to us that our Lord gave more prominence to cups of cold water, and garments made for the poor, and caring for little ones, than most people nowadays. We would encourage our friends to attend to those humble, unobtrusive ministries which are seldom chronicled, and yet are essential to the success of the more manifest moral and spiritual work. Those who are content to fill their niche and say nothing about it, have no reward on earth, but they shall not be forgotten in the world to come. If they show strangers into seats, cut up bread and butter at meetings, place forms in the aisles, or lead blind people to service, it may appear to be a small matter, but it shall have its reward. We want more Christian ministries of the practical sort, who do not despise "the fruit of the lips," but the work of the hands is by no means a secondary result of divine grace upon the heart.

A man is no better than the picture he loves to look at. If your eyes are not pure, your heart cannot be. One can guess the character of a man by the kind of pictorial he purchases. When the devil fails to get a man to read a bad book, he sometimes succeeds in getting him to look at a bad picture.—Dr. Talmage.

Cultivate a Sweet voice.

There is no instrument of love so hard to keep as a kind voice. A kind hand is deaf and dumb. It may be rough in flesh and blood, yet do the work of a soft heart, and do it with a soft touch. But there is no one thing it so much needs as a sweet voice, to tell what it means and feels, and it is hard to get and keep it in the right tone. One must start in youth, and be on the watch night and day, at work and while at play, to get an keep a voice that shall speak at all times the thoughts of a kind heart. But this is the time when a sharp voice is most apt to be acquired.

You often hear boys and girls say words at play with a quick, sharp tone, as if it were the snap of a whip. If any of them get vexed you will hear a voice that sounds as if it were made up of a snarl, a whine, and a bark. Such a voice often speaks worse than the heart feels. It shows more ill-will in tone than in words. It is often in mirth that one get a voice and tone that is sharp, and sticks to him through life, and stirs up ill will and grief, and falls like a drop of gall on the sweet joys at home.

Such as these gets a sharp home voice for use and keep their best voice for those they meet elsewhere, just as they would save the best cakes and pies for guests and all their sour food for their own board. I would say to all girls and boys, "Use your best voice at home." Watch it by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in the days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. And a kind voice is a lark's song to heart and home. It is to the heart what light is to the eye.

The Miracle of Enoch's Translation.

"He was not, for God took him." If these words were not so singular, if they did not present so strange a contrast to the standing refrain of "the book of the generations of Adam," we might put a very simple and easy interpretation upon them. We might say, "Walking with God is walking to God; and, of course, when the faithful and saintly Enoch died, God took him home to himself. But if Enoch went home to God through that gate and avenue of death through which we all have to pass in turn, why is this strange and exceptional phrase employed to denote an occurrence so common and inevitable? It must surely mean more than that.

It does mean much more than that. It was intended to convey, it did convey the idea—not of a death, but—of a triumph over death. How the ancient world, both heathen and Hebrew, understood it, we learn from their respective traditions. The Hebrews say (Ecclus. 44: 16) that Enoch was "translated" or as the word means, "transferred;" the heathen, that he was "transported into heaven." And the Scriptures, both of the Old Testament and of the New, demand and confirm this conception of his end. The very verb used by Moses to denote Enoch's translation is used in the Book of Kings to describe the the rapture of Elijah again and again (2 Kings 2: 3, 5, 9, 10;) while the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews puts the matter beyond all doubt, by telling us in so many words that Enoch was translated that he should not see death. . . . Read in the light of the New Testament, these singular words can mean nothing less than this—that God took him bodily into heaven.

This miracle of mercy speaks not to the men of that generation alone. It speaks to us all. It gives us, besides the kindly warning that it bore to them, a hint of what great things God had provided for men had they been true to the true law of their life and held fast to him. In the translation of Enoch, as in the rapture of Elijah and the assumption of Moses, we are taught that, for us at least, whatever it may have been to the pre-Adamite world, death is the consequence of sin; that had not we and our fathers "wronged our own souls," we need not have passed through the purifying agony of death, but have risen, with eyes yet undimmed and natural force not abated, from this life to more life and fuller, corruption putting on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, without strain or pang. And which of us can doubt that, though for our own sins we must needs die, yet in Christ Jesus there is provided for us something as good as, if not better than, the grace vouchsafed to those great saints of the pre-Christian world? and that we shall pass through the cleansing ministry of death to a life even more free and large and blessed than that which was revealed to them and of which they laid hold by faith?

In order to be thoroughly furnished to every good work we must study the word of God itself. We must read it daily in private and in the family. We must use it in the class and in public worship, so that the truth may be doubly impressed upon us through the eye as well as the ear. We must commit the Scriptures to memory in order to become familiar with the language of the Bible. If we do this we shall be able and "ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us," the word will be a lamp unto your feet and a light unto your path, and we shall be able to say with David, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee."

Referring to the riot in Cincinnati, the Century for June says: "A city that tolerates such Sundays as those of Cincinnati;—that opens its theaters, and its dance-houses, and its liquor-shops, and bids its people carouse and dissipate on this day of rest—will have always its streets full of a multitude, restless, excitable, turbulent, ready to be stirred up to all sorts of demoniac enterprise. And when the whirlwind is reaped, it will be easy to tell how and when the seed was sown."

An effort made for the happiness of others lift's us above ourselves.—Lydia M. Child.

Godliness consists not in a heart to intend to do the will of God, but in a heart to do it.—Jonathan Edwards.

It is only necessary to grow old to become more indulgent, I see no fault committed that I have not committed myself.—Goethe.

Queries.

Can you tell me how an officer can be made out of a king or priest? For I learn in the Scriptures that Christians are kings and priests unto God. I ask this sincerely for information, for it has been a stumbling block to me. The broad guage men haven't quite killed the Advocate; it is fast recovering. I hear those that believe in the truth pretty generally speaking up for it.—[Richard H. Wisenbaker.

We have heretofore been regarded as so heretical on the subject of officers, that we were inclined to not say much. But recently in a discussion Bros. Munfell and Allen, if we understand them, agreed an officer is one appointed to a special work or service. This conclusion gave us heart, and we now endorse their agreement, and say in this sense the word may be allowable, but in no other in connection with a church of Jesus Christ. A king and a priest may be appointed or directed to the performance of a special work.

I have a neighbor Adventist, who claims that we are keeping the wrong day; will you through the Advocate give us the strongest Scriptures bearing on this point, in order that I may be able to satisfy this Bro. Adventist he is wrong. He claims that Saturday is the right day. Also give your views on the first chapter of Revelation and tenth verse.—[James A. Wells.

You will not convince your brother Adventist unless he is a remarkable man. A man before he can be a sabbatarian must be wise enough to know the law written on stone was not taken out of the way—the glory of it was not done away—and that Christ did wrong in meeting with his apostles only on the first day of the week, and that the apostles and early Christians did wrong in meeting to break bread and worship on the first instead of the seventh day. He must be wise enough to know that the seventh day instituted as a memorial of God's rest on the completion of the old creation, is more important to be observed than the day on which Christ burst asunder the prison walls of hell and came forth a triumphant victor over death and hell, and brought life and immortality to light. The sabbatic observance is honor rendered to the institution of life on earth, the fleshly life, the material creator. The first day observance is honor to the institution or gift to man, of spiritual, eternal life. He who observes the first day exalts the fleshly, physical life, dishonors and depreciates the spiritual, eternal life. Hence our sabbatarian friends lay but little stress upon the resurrection of Christ. There are back of this question of which day of the week to observe, principles that lie at the very foundation of the claims of Christ to be the Son of God. If your friend understands what sabbatarianism is, and has adopted it, he is wiser than Jesus Christ or the holy apostles. He is gone.

Tenth verse, first chapter of Revelation says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." I think the Lord's day was the first day of the week, because that day had become the day of worship under the Christian dispensation.

Please give us an explanation of 15-17 verses of 6th chapter of 1st Timothy, and especially the 16th. Who is it that only hath immortality? 2. Are immortality and eternal life synonymous?—[J. R. Lane, Chilton, Falls County, Tex.

The connection is, Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life. * * * I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Jesus Christ who witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate, That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of Jesus Christ, which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting," which (appearing) in his (appointed) times God will show, who alone possesses immortality, and who dwells in the light inaccessible, (to mortals.) It has always seemed to me that in this last verse God and Lord Jesus Christ are spoken of and personified as one. Christ would be the grammatical subject of the sentence, but the sense requires a reference to God the Father, or the two, spoken of as one.

God alone is possessed of immortality, whether in his character of Father, Son or Holy Spirit. Men seek for it, and God confers it on them.

Eternal life as distinct from eternal death embodies immortality. Immortality is freedom from corruption, suffering or decay. Life, as it comes from God, is immortal; as corrupted by sin, it is eternal, but not immortal. Life corrupted by sin or derived from the evil one through service to him, may be eternal, but is full of corruption and suffering, hence is not immortal.

INVITATION SONGS.

We have had on hand for some time an article of ten pages of fools-cap, defending the idea that it is wrong to sing a hymn of invitation to sinners. Neither the matter, nor the style, nor the subject, justifies its publication. The only point made is in these words: "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Singing is not the gospel, therefore singing is not a means of salvation. Again, 2 Thess. 2: 14: "Whereunto he called you by our gospel to the obtaining the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." Singing is not the gospel, therefore singing is not a means of invitation.

His writing seems to indicate that he thinks all preaching is gospel; but in singing there is no gospel. The truth is, nine times out of ten there is a hundred-fold more gospel in the hymns sang, than in the exhortations delivered on the occasion of inviting sinners to Christ. Our brother singles out one hymn especially to condemn—"Come ye sinners, poor and needy." That hymn is only an exhortation to sinners to obey God. Why is it worse to sing than to speak an exhortation? Then this exhortatory hymn teaches the sinners they are poor and needy; poor in spiritual resources, and greatly in need of a Savior. This accords with the teaching of the Savior, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven," and "Come unto me, all you that are weary and heavy laden, and you shall find rest unto your souls," and it constitutes a part of the gospel. I believe there is not one exhortation in a thousand, delivered by our brethren or other exhorters, that have as much pure gospel truth and scriptural exhortation as this and other hymns sung in which gospel truth is sung. The gospel can be sung, and exhortations be made in song as well as in speech. A mind that cannot see this is hardly competent to teach the Scriptures to the world.

Bro. McQuiddy writes a lengthy "correction" of our statement that "he took the position that no temporal good is promised the Christian," and "he had abandoned the position by requesting the brethren to pray for the recovery of a sick brother." He quotes largely from the discussion between him and Bro. Harding, that we think not necessary to the understanding of his position. It is all stated in this. "I argued that the Lord did not bestow temporal blessings—temporal blessing used in the sense of money or its equivalent, on preachers for their support. In proof of this, I showed that the righteous did not have more than the wicked. That I did use it in this sense will be seen from the entire drift of my argument." This embodies Bro. M.'s explanation, and we understood this as his meaning and used the word in precisely the same sense. Our article was in reference to the support of preachers, and when we said that "he run to the extreme of teaching that no temporal good is promised to the Christian," we meant of course to the Christian as such, more and above what was promised to the sinner. What temporal good is promised to man as man, saint and sinner, is not promised to the Christian? Certainly no one but Bro. M. understood us differently. But then we claim health, in this sense is temporal good, is the equivalent of pecuniary blessing. It may be more than this, but to every one, it is this. Bro. M. says he has a thousand times prayed for health to the wicked. He has in this prayed a thousand times for temporal blessing as the equivalent of pecuniary aid to these sinners. And if his prayer has been granted, God has a thousand times in answer to Bro. M.'s prayer granted the equivalent of pecuniary aid to the sinner. Certainly he will do as much for the Christian in answer to prayer. We used the term in precisely the same sense that Bro. M. did; hence did not misrepresent him, and think his position is understood. For him to be inconsistent with himself would be nothing strange among the best of men. D. L.

THE STRIFE OF THE WORLD.

"Two nations are in thy womb and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels," is the language used by the Lord to Rebekah before the birth of Jacob and Esau. The two children, in their antagonism, struggled in the womb before their birth. Whether this was intended by the Lord to be typical or not, nature and providence love their own types and work after their own models.

In the womb of every movement there are two nations, two manner of people. I am not sure but that in every individual there are two diverse natures, struggling to lead in opposite directions. At one period of man's life, the self-reliant, aggressive tendency of his nature predominates, at another period, the conservative elements control.

There never has existed a movement in human society, that in it two tendencies are not developed. A principle becomes the basis of a movement in society, a community of people by the working of that principle are separated from the rest of the human family. Very soon in the application and development of this very principle two diverse tendencies are manifested. One is iconoclastic, destructive of authority, reliant upon human wisdom, having a tendency to follow the impulses of the flesh, to go with the crowd, rely upon human wisdom, interpret with freedom and looseness the obligations of law, and as consequence to take large privileges with laws and institutions established by authority. This class has confidence in its own wisdom and correspondingly lacks confidence in God, as the governor and guide of the universe. The other principle is conservative, recognizes authority, respects law, lacks confidence in self or in human wisdom, and is always willing to do the biddings of God, use his appointments and leave consequences with him.

The two principles doubtless struggled in Adam's bosom in Eden. The triumph of the one caused his sin, his expulsion from Eden, and brought sorrow and death to the earth.

In the next generation each principle found its distinct personal manifestation. Abel respected divine authority, was content to follow God's appointments, and brought the offering ordained of God. Cain's own judgment told him, and he just knew that, offerings of the fruit of the earth were just as meritorious, just as acceptable to God, as the bleeding lamb. So he taking counsel of his own wisdom, set aside divine authority, and followed the wisdom of his own heart and the reasoning of the world. Abel was content to follow God's appointments, to walk in them, to worship through them and receive the divine blessing that flows only in the channel of divine appointments.

In the days of Noah the development of the two spirits is again contrasted. Here the whole human family with its wisdom and learning stood the exponents of one principle, Noah and his family of the other.

When by the cataclysm of destruction brought upon the world by so few being left as exponents of the conservative principle, Noah and his family were the only occupants of the world. Even in this family so wonderfully saved, both principles are found. Wheresoever found, whether in the mother's womb or in external life, they are in a struggle. The conflict between them is irrepressible.

Ham represents the principle that relies on self, trusts fleshly wisdom, and fails to reverence authority human or divine. Shem and Japheth were representative of the spirit that regards authority, respects the proper relations of life, human and divine. Ham was the true type of what is known as young America, that fails in respect for age, for parents, for authority in those rightfully invested with authority, and transferred to God, this same spirit has little reverence for God, for his institutions, lightly changes them and thinks the ways and institutions of human wisdom of equal authority with the wisdom of God.

Passing over many examples, these two at war in Rebekah's womb became marked exemplifications of the two principles. Jacob and Esau. Jacob was less amiable, more unjust by nature, than Esau. Esau was the more genial nature, less overbearing, less unjust in his personal bearing, than Jacob. Jacob, with his personal faults, had regard for God. He revered him, sought God in his distress, and did not forsake him in his prosperity. This reverence for God was the means by which the personal faults were corrected. God esteems reverence for him above any personal qualities. One reason for this is, reverence for God will correct personal infirmities. Personal qualities, however amiable, have no tendency in themselves to correct our relations to God. Lying is bad, defrauding is bad, but neither is so bad as destroying respect and reverence for God. This injures humanity more than those do. This destroys the only true ground work for the maintenance of those. Esau's disrespect for God, his failure to look to the recompense of reward, his amiable indifference to the future, were worse in the eyes of God, than Jacob's lying, defrauding, selfish nature, while it respected God. Jacob's reverence for God was a means through which to work the cure of his wrongs. Esau's pleasant qualities arose from the absence of that firmness, positiveness, individuality, that is the ground-work of all true and positive good in men. The worst crime against humanity is to destroy its confidence in God. The greatest crime against God is to lower divine authority before the world; or to exalt human authority, human institutions, in the place of the divine, which is the same as to depreciate the divine.

While Jacob himself was the representative and exponent of the principle that looks with reverence to God and trembles at his word, soon in his family was developed the other principle that follows its own wisdom and devices, its own ways, rather than walks in the appointments of God.

The history of the Jewish nation, as given by God, is a history of the wandering off after the devices of human wisdom, the creating human devices in place of divine guidance; the adopting of what others not true to God had invented, and that seemed efficient, and the substitutions of these for heaven's appointments, the punishment God inflicted on them for this infidelity to him, and for their rejection of his appointments. The life of the Jewish people was a continued wandering off in ways, and in using means not ordained of God, until their final rejection and dispersion as a nation.

Christ came to give an example of a perfect satisfaction in divine ways, of a perfect walk in divine appointments, as an example of one who had no will but to do God's will, no ways but to walk in God's ways. He announced that to be poor in spirit and ways of our own, was the first foundation condition of divine favor. He emphasized that to walk absolutely in God's appointments was essential to divine favor. Among his followers, Judas thought the wisdom of the world preferable to obedience to God. Paul warned the Jews against the sin that at all times and in all places did so easily beset man; that sin was a disposition to forget God, to depreciate his institutions, their efficacy and power, and to follow in the ways and appointments of men. That is the sin that in all ages beset the followers of God, as a warning against which that long list of worthies, that great cloud of witnesses, was arrayed by Paul.

Paul warns that in his age the mystery of iniquity or lawlessness did already work. That can be nothing else than a disposition and tendency with man to go his own way, and use his own devices to accomplish God's purposes, rather than to walk with God; to substitute human wisdom for the divine law.

When Paul had passed away, the principle speedily grew and involved almost the whole church of God. The two principles were at work in every religious movement from the days of the apostles to the present day. One exalting divine authority, insisting on fidelity to the law of God, and claiming the all-sufficiency of the word and appointments of God for the accomplishment of all of the divine ends on earth. One guarding with a jealous eye all substitutions of divine institutions and displacement of divine ways, with those of human wisdom. These principles have been in conflict in every reformation, in every movement to turn back to God. It is the struggle between the flesh and the Spirit. Human wisdom is of the flesh, divine guidance is of the Spirit. Those who follow human wisdom, follow the guidance of the flesh. Its thoughts and influences control. Those who follow the divine guidance, cling to divine institutions, and object to all additions to them, or substitutions for them, follow the Spirit.

Are we to-day exempt from this tendency to follow human wisdom? Is not the same spirit that has tempted the human family away from God at work among us? It frequently has done this work under the guise of greater zeal, are we exempt from this temptation? In what direction is it tempting us who claim to exalt the word of God as our only rule of faith and action? Is it not under the guise of religious zeal tempting us to substitute human inventions for the appointments of God? Is it not decrying the sufficiency of the church of God for the conversion of the world, unless amended by these devices of human wisdom? We ask all to seriously ponder this question and their condition before God, lest they in these matters be found to fight against God. D. L.

F. C. Sowell, Union City, Tenn., June 28, writes: "Preached Saturday and Sunday nights at this place, and Bro. Roullac preached on Lord's day. Bro. Hall, of Louisville, Ky., is to begin a meeting here next Wednesday night. We have a goodly number of brethren at this place, and some very good, earnest, working brethren. We expect to start to-morrow for Palestine, where we will preach some. We have met some friends here from Williamson, Maury, and Hickman counties. Thus far our visit has been very pleasant. The country round about Union City is good, and people are prospering."

W. Anderson, Carter's Creek, Tenn., writes: "I went to Water Valley, fourth Lord's day in June, in place of Bro. F. C. Sowell, other matters of importance demanding his attention at that time. We had a good audience in every respect. Think this a good place for work. The fifth Lord's day in June we spent at old South Harpeth, our old home. We went on Saturday and returned Tuesday. Had a fair audience of good people. Was glad to meet the friends and brethren of our boyhood. The brethren seem to be doing well. This is an old congregation. A few of the old "stand-by's" are still there. We regret that we failed to see Bro. Wm. R. Hooten. Hope to be there again during the summer."

Obituaries.

Died, on Wednesday, June 25th, Mrs. Martha Lawrence, at her residence in Davidson County, Tenn., in the 65th year of her age. Her maiden name was Peebles. She was married in early life to Wm. Cato, to J. D. Lawrence in 1873. In early life she became a member of C. P. Church, in which she lived a consistent life for thirty-five years. About seven years ago the writer began preaching in her neighborhood, she attended and heard regularly, although she was a woman of strong feelings and decided character, she recognized the truth, and about six years ago united with the church of Christ. She was an industrious, economical woman, firm in what she believed to be right, conscientious in performing her duties, was a good and kind neighbor and true friend.

Bro. G. A. Foster died at the residence of his daughter, in Sumner County, Tenn., June 2nd, 1884, in the 69th year of his age. Bro. Foster was born in Virginia; was raised and lived in Nashville until 1856, when he moved to Gallatin, Tenn. Bro. Foster was baptized fifty years ago by Elder G. W. Elley. He was a quiet man, unaggressive in his temperament, but firm and unfaltering in his fidelity to the truth. He loved the church of Christ and the service of the Master. He was a tailor by trade, never cared to accumulate property, but was free in using it to help the needy and to advance the cause of Christ. He was one of the few members in Gallatin that for years stood faithful, hoping to see the church of God built up. He was a man universally beloved by those who knew him, and was respected as an honest man and conscientious Christian. He raised a large family of children, all of whom we believe are earnest members of the church.

With a sad heart, I announce the death of Sister Charlotte W. Bowman, wife of Bro. Z. Bowman. Sister Bowman was born in Gwinnett County, Ga., December 12, 1822; departed this life at her home, near Eden, in St. Clair County, Ala., April 10, 1884. She was sick nearly two weeks before she died, during which she suffered a great deal; yet she bore it patiently, seeming perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord. She was a true wife and a devoted mother, "who lived for the good of others. She leaves a husband and ten children to mourn her loss, all of whom are grown. She set good examples before her children, loving the cause of our Lord and Master, in whom her faith was strong. May they emulate the example of their dear mother, that when the Lord shall call for them they may be ready. It is in this life we must prepare to meet God in peace. I pray God to bless the husband of the deceased. May he be more useful to the cause of Christ than he has ever been. May he take courage at this dispensation of providence, put on the whole armor of God and having done all to stand. God help us all to be more humble and faithful.

W. A. Tipton.

Easonville, Ala., June 16, 1884.

Carroll McCanless died at his residence near Triune, in this county, at 10 o'clock, p. m., June 19th, 1884. He was 58 years' 3 months and 1 day old. In many respects he was a remarkable man. Commencing life as he did without a dollar, and succeeding in amassing the property he did by honest labor, is an example worthy of imitation. He was highly endowed with energy, industry and economy directed by good judgment and guided by honest motives. His neighbors testify that he was always ready to assist the struggling worthy poor. In early life he united with the Christian Church, in which he lived till death. For many years past he has labored personally and with a liberal use of his means to get his neighbors to see the plain, simple gospel of Christ, and a failure in this to a great extent was the source of his greatest earthly trouble. He leaves a sorrowing wife and nine children to weep for him and struggle still longer in the conflicts of life. He remained rational during the entire eleven days of his intense suffering, and a few hours before his death he called each of his children to him, and bidding them good-bye, exhorted them to a faithful discharge of the duties of life. When his grief-stricken wife approached him he said: "Bettie, seek for honor, for glory, for immortality." Such a life as his, rich with the golden fruits of the Spirit, is followed by memories that soothe the anguish of those who weep over his loss. Let us forget his faults and emulate his virtues, and "labor to enter into that rest prepared for the people of God." Peace to my best friend. S. T. F. K.

Sister N. C. Daniel, wife of Jas. P. Daniel, was born August 11, 1826, and was taken from earth across the "dark sea" December 30, 1883. She was baptized by old Bro. J. K. Speer, and continued earnestly in the vineyard of our Master till God saw fit to take her from the things of this world to the world which is brighter and better than this.

As long as I knew my dear aunt, she was a lover of the truth, because she always tried to do just as it directed her. We can have her here with us no more, but if we will obey the commandments of the Lord, we will have the privilege of living with her again "over there." My kind, affectionate and good aunt was taken by the Almighty, from the transient things of this life, over the dark gloomy river of death; the river over which all must pass in order to get on the shore of eternity. "Sometimes the shadows are deep;" but we are very thankful to the God of mercy that we are blessed with the precious light which comes from the fountain of eternal love; the word of God which strengthens and lifts up the drooping heart. A true, faithful and ready soldier was taken from God's army when the dear woman of whom I am writing was called to join the band on the bright, beautiful and happy side of eternity. She bore patiently, the time she was with us, her crosses, to which we are subject in this life, till she reached the dark deep river of death; and there, and then, they were taken off, and by the death angel she was conveyed quietly and gently over the river, and on that side she will be crowned with love, peace, joy and everlasting felicity. The great weight of her afflictions here is not worthy to be compared with the weight of glory, which will ever bloom upon that perfect, living monument in the Paradise of God.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

I was at Prof. Lintell's examination last Friday. He insisted that I should make a speech. In my little talk on the subject of schools and teachers, I insisted that the teachers ought to be paid better. It is a fact, any bar keeper, grocery keeper, whiskey vender, makes more money than he who day in and day out works at the little ones. I advised that the money thus spent by fathers should be withheld from him who corrupts society, and given to him who is trying to improve the mental and moral condition of the children. He who spends money in this way, and allows his children to be neglected, defrauds them of what justly belongs to them. It is robbing too, the helpless. Whiskey is a power for evil in the land. How shall its influence be overcome? That is the question. As much of evil as the dram seller and the worldly dram drinker produce, they are not the most guilty parties in the world at this time. Just consider the condition of the world when the small army was led forth from Gallilee and Judea, under the leadership of Prince Messiah. Look at the changes that were wrought by the preaching of Christ. Who could doubt for a moment that the Lord Jesus could drive from the land whiskey and all its friends, if he only had an army? Has he no army? Oh, yes! But when a great part of any force fights on the enemy's side, they give far more strength to their opponents than any member of one's own side. Traitors are always despicable. If those members of the church who frequent the bar rooms, saloons, or other dram shops, and those saints who slip into drinking establishments by the back door, and those "Christians" who drink three times a day and oftener, and keep it for that purpose, and those disciples who are even glad to meet a sinner with his bottle or flask, were to throw the full weight of their influence on the side of temperance, the conquest over whiskey would be easy.

While two forces are engaged, it is easy, for a few traitors, to turn the tide against the one side or the other. Shall the bar keeper, the whiskey maker, and the dram drinker, or the preacher, the school teacher, and the love of morality prevail? "That is the question." Society, church and State are alike interested in this subject. It stretches out its importance until every State in the union feels it, and many of the wise are asking anxiously, what shall be done? Some are urging that an appeal should be made to Caesar. It would be better, I think, to make a strong appeal to Jesus. But our Lord will never conquer in the fight with an army, the majority of which give encouragement to the enemy. Is it the part of wisdom to conclude that Caesar can do what our Savior cannot? or that Caesar can do it more successfully than Jesus? I believe that Christ can stop the manufacture of ardent spirits, the sale of it, and the drinking of it. How? How did he put a stop to so much wickedness in apostolic days? How does he make so much difference in natures where he reigns and where he is not known or little known? Is it alone in the particular of drinking that Christ is weak? I expect there is more drunkenness in what are called the enlightened nations, than in any others. Poor civilization! I have never seen any statistics on this subject, but I would not be surprised if England and America do not stand at the head of the list. Law makers, and law executors, Christian men league with the devil for money. I heard a man say this morning that the rulers of his town prescribed to the bar keepers that they should pay the eighteen hundred dollars necessary to defray the expenses of the burg. The love of money is a power that moves them; the love of whiskey drives them to spend their money, sacrifice wife, children, friends, character and life itself. Some crave money, others whiskey, and between the two Jesus' kingdom, morality and civilization suffer. When all the influence of God's people is withdrawn from whiskey, you will see it flourishes poorly under the closely cloud of Christian disapprobation. How many evils do well with God's people unitedly working against them? This is applied to all, is it not? Professed followers of Jesus may be found who apologize for every species of sin. Horse racing, and other gambling, dram drinking, theaters, circuses, dancing, yes murder itself and stealing, find so-called Christians with broad cloaks ready to conceal them, or microscopes to make them appear very small offenses. Here is the trouble; yes, here it is. Let your light shine before men, so that they seeing your good, may glorify your Father who is in heaven.

J. M. BARNES.

[This is the latter half of an excellent article, the first part of which we have mislaid.—Ed's.]

Only those who love God will keep his commandments. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous." It is vain to pretend to love and follow God, and still live in opposition to his will.

Every requirement of the gospel is obligatory on the children of God. A failure in any requirement is a sin. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," is a requirement. Therefore, not to assemble ourselves together is sin. Some, judging from their actions, would read the passage thus. "If convenient forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

Those same Christians can go fifteen or twenty miles to barbecues, political harrangues, shows, and such like, but can not go to church on a week to worship God. Yes, if there is money to be made, worldly honor to be gained, they can travel for miles over mountains, through valleys, and deserts, on dark and gloomy nights, while storms are sweeping and howling over the land, but can not go to church if there is a cloud to be seen even in the far off skies. Others have what is known as "big meeting religion," these are regular attendants while the meeting is protracted, and perhaps attend once or twice besides, that is if the preacher comes again. Sometimes they don't find out he is coming until he has gone.

Why brother is it plain that you are following the preacher and not the Lord. Your brethren meet each Lord's day to worship Him, why are you not there? You sing at the "big meeting."

"In all my Lord's appointed ways,
My journey I'll pursue."

Perhaps you will not be at church any more, until the next protracted meeting, to say nothing of the other requirements of the gospel. By so doing, are you following your Master? There are many other things that are binding upon the Christian which we can not now mention. Please remember, my brother, when you do anything not enjoined by Christ, either by precept or example, you are following man, and not the Savior. If we will lay aside all political affairs, all worldly honor, malice, hatred—clothe ourselves with humility, fall in obedience at our Savior's feet, resolve that we will be valiant soldiers in the Lord's Army, the cause will move on more grandly in the future than in the past. "Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there any praise, think on these things.

Thus we will follow Christ to a land beyond the reach of pain and death.

THE NEXT STEP, AND ITS PIONEER.

Doubtless most of our readers are familiar by this time, by report at least, with the "Teachings of the Twelve Apostles," an ancient manuscript, recently discovered. It was probably written at some time in the second or third centuries. Chapter 7 reads thus:

"Now concerning baptism, thus baptize ye, having first uttered all these things, baptize into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, in running water. But if thou hast not running water, baptize into other water; and if thou canst not in cold then in warm. But if thou hast not either, pour water upon the head thrice, into the name of the Father, and Son, and Holy Spirit. But before baptism, let the baptizer and the baptized fast, and whatever others can; but the baptized thou shalt command to fast for two or three days before."

In commenting upon this in a recent number of the Apostolic Times, J. W. Caldwell, of Corinth, Ky., says:

"If we receive this as an authentic document of historic value—as a faithful statement of the practices of the church in the first half of the second century—what are we to say about pouring water on the heads of those who cannot be immersed? Does the Lord tie us to immersion or nothing? I would be glad to see some of our able men answer this in the broad light of Scripture and learning. Who will solve the problem?"

This is the very first note, so far as I know, sounded by any worker in this "restoration movement" that seemed to favor under any circumstances, pouring for baptism. J. W. Caldwell seems to be in doubt as to whether we should pour water on the heads of those "who cannot be immersed." He asks plainly, "Does the Lord tie us to immersion or nothing?" And then he calls upon some one of our "able men" to answer "in the broad light of Scripture and learning." His question seems to indicate that he is a little restive under the burden of "immersion or nothing."

He wants it settled "in the broad light of the Scripture and learning." Well, without assuming to be one of "our able men" I nevertheless hasten to give the desired light. And for the encouragement of J. W. Caldwell let me preface my answer with this comforting remark: He shall have both immersion and pouring.

1. The immersion we get from the Holy Scriptures, seeing that the word baptizo means dip or immerse; and seeing that the baptizing was done in rivers, pools, etc.; and seeing that they were buried in baptism, and had their bodies washed.

2. The pouring we get "in the broad light of learning," seeing that Novatian had water poured upon him as he lay upon his bed, Anno Domini 251. By the way, this is the first case of pouring for baptism that the broad light of learning gives us. But it is a well established fact that it was gradually changed to sprinkling or pouring, until finally the laying of a moistened hand upon the head for baptism is not unusual. The old manuscript from which J. W. Caldwell quotes was written most likely after the case of Novatian. But had it been written by some one who lived in the days of the apostles, I would not, on account of its teachings, do "by the authority of Christ" that which he has given me no authority to do. The rule by which we should be guided is the "perfect law of liberty," the word of God. We are to look in that and continue in it.

As I have said, doubtlessly this document was written after A. D. 250, but suppose it had been written in the very days of the apostles, (which no one claims,) do we not know the apostles themselves tell us the "mystery of iniquity" was beginning to work even then? Do we not know that there were false teachers even at that early period? So the question is not simply, how early was it taught? but, who taught it? If it comes by inspiration, we must observe it; we sin if we do not: if it is a tradition of men, we become liars and vain worshipers when we do it in the name of Jesus Christ.

Grant, for the argument's sake, that these "Teachings" were written as early as A. D. 120, that was twenty years after John, the last apostle, died, and at least forty or fifty years after his active ministry. It is now only 108 years after the declaration of independence, (our national pentecost,) yet mighty changes and revolutions have taken place in our government. Within the last twenty years revolutionary soldiers, men who fought under Washington, Greene, Wayne and Putnam, have died. I am but thirty-six, yet I have lived for sixteen years or more cotemporary with such men. But consider the great changes that have taken place in affairs since the election of the first president; how differently has the constitution been interpreted by the different parties! how often have the "Fathers" been represented as teaching in that document that of which they never dreamed.

No, no, my friend, it won't do to practice, in the name of Christ, by the authority of Christ, that which was never heard of until many years after the last apostle died. That is, it won't do if we desire to follow the Lord: if we are willing to follow "able men" the case is different.

Does not J. W. Caldwell deserve the title of pioneer in this pouring business among us?

"INEFFICIENT ELDERSHIP."

"The one universal complaint of the brotherhood engaged in the work of restoration is an inefficient eldership. Of course there are many good and efficient elders, but, as compared with those who are otherwise, they are exceptional. We think it probable that we have been less successful in restoring the apostolic eldership than in any other feature of our reformatory work."—Old Path Guide.

This extract, written, I judge, by Bro. Allen, sets forth most clearly a sad fact. Very few of the congregations have scriptural elderships. In this particular our efforts at restoration have, for the most part, most signally failed. What are the reasons for the failure? The Guide gives seven reasons as follows:

(1) Want of ability; (2) Want of spirituality; (3) Want of realization of responsibility; (4) Want of application to preparation and work; (5) Neglect to discipline the church; (6) Unwise discipline; (7) Too dictatorial.

But in commenting on these various "reasons," it fails altogether, I think, to point out the real trouble; and hence it fails to give us a practical remedy for this sad state of affairs. It is with the hope of assisting in restoring the primitive eldership, and of committing it to the proper work, that I now write. What were the duties of the elders in the first age of the church? An answer to this question will help us much in solving the problem before us. By examining the Scriptures we find that the elders are (1) To take heed of the flock, the church; (2) To take the oversight of it; (3) To feed it, i. e. to teach it.

Paul says to the elders of the church at Ephesus, Acts 20: 28. "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, in which the Holy Ghost hath made you bishops (or overseers,) to feed the church of God, which he purchased with his own blood." And Peter, in addressing elders says: "Tend the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint but willingly, according unto God; nor yet for filthy lucre, but of the ready mind; neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." 1 Pet. 5: 2-3. If, in addition to these passages, the qualification which Paul gives in his letter to Timothy and Titus, as necessary to fit one for the work of an elder are considered, it will be clearly seen that I have not erred in giving his duties: he must take heed to the flock—be greatly interested in it; he must take the oversight of it, directing it in its work; and he must feed it, giving the "sincere milk," or "strong meat" according as the flock is able to receive. Hence Paul teaches that the elder must be a vigilant man, a man competent to rule, apt to teach. Now it is a fact which I presume none will deny, that this work, which the Holy Scriptures gave to the elders, has been in these last days given to the preacher. Most of the congregations have a nominal eldership, but, as a rule, they are nothing more than the preacher's cabinet, or board of counsellors; they neither take the oversight of the church, nor do they teach it; nor are they expected by preacher or people to do either. The preacher is expected to care for the church, to oversee it, and to teach it. And hence, to use the phraseology of the day, he is called to the "pastoral care" of it. He is paid to be the shepherd, to oversee, and teach, and care for it. That is, the work that God in his wisdom gave to a plurality of properly qualified peers, we in our wisdom give to one man, who often has few, sometimes not any, of the qualifications. This custom we have borrowed from Rome and her daughters.

No wonder Bro. Allen exclaims, "The one universal complaint of the brotherhood engaged in the work of restoration is an inefficient eldership." "We think it probable that we have been less successful in restoring the apostolic eldership than in any other feature of our reformatory work." He then begins to tell the elders about the defects in them. If he would strike more directly at the root of this trouble, he should, it seems to me, endeavor to induce the preachers to return to their proper work. As Bro. Allen very properly says the elders "were not itinerants;" the preachers or evangelists were: for while they sometimes remained at one place for more than a year, it was in building up the cause there; it was never with the view of making the place a permanent home. The evangelists went to a city, made converts, built up a church, remained with it till it was in a condition to meet, attend to the ordinances, and edify itself without him, and then he hastened on to another place to repeat the same work. Oftentimes also evangelists visited established churches to see how they prospered, and to encourage and strengthen them. But as we have just seen the elders were directed by the Holy Spirit to take the oversight of the church and to teach it; they are directed to be pastors to the flock.

I have had the good fortune to meet with several congregations that try, upon principle, to live in accordance with the divine requirement. And they are the best ones I know. I am, at this writing, in a meeting at Meaford, Ontario, Canada. The work of restoration was begun here about forty years ago by William Trout and a brother Geo. Jackson. In a little while this Bro. Jackson moved away, but his place was filled by Bro. D. L. Layton, who remains one of the elders this day. This has been the mother congregation of all this country, many of its members moving into the regions around about, and thus helping the cause on. The church now numbers about one hundred and sixty members who attend regularly, those who come to the meetings irregularly not being regarded as worth counting. This congregation has never called a preacher "to take the pastoral charge of it," or to speak regularly for it, at the Lord's day meetings. There are in it seven or eight men who preach and teach successfully. They not only speak at Meaford, but they have appointments at places round about for laboring in word and doctrine.

The talent of the church has thus been developed by the elders; brethren Trout (who has been dead for sometime,) Layton and Sinclair. I observe that the members generally in coming to church bring also their Bibles and hymn books. In this church, as in every other one thus conducted that I have visited, the attendance of the membership at the regular meeting is much better than is usual under the "pastoral system." God's way is better than ours.

We have received a catalogue of Kentucky University and Bible College, Lexington, Ky., for 1883-84, and announcement for 1884-85. The catalogue indicates a prosperous session, with a promising outlook for the future. This is true of both the University and the Bible College. Send for catalogue.

J. R. Lane, Perry, Falls County, Texas, June 30, writes: "I am on my way home from a new place where I preached yesterday at 4 o'clock, and one lady united with us by confession and baptism. I think good can be done here, and I have agreed to return in August and hold a meeting for the people."

A brother with comfortable surroundings, in a quiet neighborhood in North Alabama, with one little girl, desires to employ a Christian lady as teacher, competent to teach the English branches, Latin, Music, French and German, to instruct his and a few other children. Address this office and name will be given.

We are sorry to learn of the death of Bro. S. P. Lucy, superintendent of Midway Orphan School. We have no personal acquaintance with him, but since we have been trying to get in operation the Fanning Orphan School, we have sought information and counsel from him and others connected with Midway. These have been so cordially and fully given, and he manifested such a kindly interest in our effort that we felt sure he had a warm heart developed by Christian training that prompted it. We regret his death.

We have received an account of the commencement exercises of Bethany College, June 19. The report shows ninety-eight students in attendance the past session—fourteen of these young ladies. There were eleven regular graduates. Pres. Pendleton retires from active labor in the teaching and discipline of the school. Prof. Hagerman takes his place as chairman of the faculty, and is vice president, acting as president. Pres. Pendleton will engage in the work of increasing the endowment of the college.

E. B. Cayce, Franklin, Tenn., June 30, writes: "I preached yesterday and last night at Beasley's Chapel, on Lick Creek, in Williamson county. Had one confession last night, a beautiful young lady, (daughter of Bro. Wm. Sparkman.) I immersed her this morning. Made an appointment at Beasley's Chapel for Bro. Wm. Lipscomb, Sr., for the second Lord's day in July. I believe if a series of sermons, or a protracted effort could be made there just now, much good could be done, though there is strong or stubborn opposition to the church in that neighborhood."

B. W. Lauderdale, Bailey, Tenn., June 30, writes: I give my whole time to the ministry of the word this year. My field of labor is North Mississippi. Yesterday, the fifth Sunday, I preached to my home congregation in Colliersville, Tenn. A young woman made the good confession, and was baptized. Happy those who remember their Creator in the days of their youth. Bro. A. C. Henry, of Alabama, will preach for the church in Colliersville. He will begin a protracted meeting there Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in July, and afterwards visit the church once each month. We welcome Bro. Henry among us. May God bless his labors."

A. J. Denton, Spencer, Tenn., June 30, writes: "Bro. E. A. Elam, of Lebanon, Tenn., has just closed a series of sermons at this place. Thirty were added to the church by confession and baptism, twenty-eight of whom are students of Burritt College. Bro. Elam was for several years a student of Burritt College, and after an absence of five years, preaching the gospel continually, he re-visited the scenes of his school life, with the result mentioned above. The church was greatly edified, and a good impression made on the public mind, and it is to be hoped that the good seed sown may yet germinate and bear more fruit to the glory of God."

F. B. Srygley, Lebanon, Tenn., July 2, writes: "I preached three times this week at Heron's school-house, fourteen miles from Lebanon on the Murfreesboro pike. Fine crowds, good attention, but no visible result. This school-house is four miles from Hebron. Several of the brethren from that congregation were present. We learned they have no preaching, and are doing nothing to have the gospel preached to their neighbors. Sinners are dying all around them. We preach that "faith cometh by hearing," but our actions do not indicate that we believe it. Brethren, do you not desire to co-operate in the salvation of your neighbors? Consider this matter now. Talk it up among yourselves by fall. May the Lord bless you."

J. L. Sewell, Lebanon, Tenn., July 3, writes: "I preached last Lord's day and Saturday evening before, at Bellwood, Wilson County, Tenn.; had a large audience on Lord's day and good attention with some interest manifested, but no additions; and from what I saw and heard in the Sunday-school and Bible classes of the congregation, I think they are doing a good work. This congregation is capable of doing much for the cause of Christ, if they will properly use their talents. There are many of the members well informed in the Scriptures, and they are able financially to sound out the word of the Lord around them, and I pray that they be enabled to do their whole duty."

FOREIGN.—The cholera has broken out in Southern France. The head-centre thus far has been Toulon, where the first case, which was kept a secret, occurred on June 4th. So far as has been ascertained, thirty two deaths have occurred in Toulon. The disease has spread to Marseilles, where eight deaths had occurred before the first of July. In Marseilles the chateau, which formerly belonged to the ex-Empress Eugenie, is being prepared for the accommodation of 500 patients. At a meeting of the physicians in Toulon the majority expressed the opinion that the disease was Asiatic cholera. ### LOOK AT THE OTHER SIDE.

Should you hear a strange, uncanny tale
From the lips of gossip bold—
A tale of wrong, perhaps of shame,
That fills you with grief untold,
That makes you lose your faith in man,
E'en the trusty and the tried—
Don't take it too much to heart, my friend,
Till you've looked at the other side ;

Till you've weighed in the balance of the just
All the minute words and deeds,
Aye, winnowed the wheat and left the chaff,
And counted the golden seeds,
Who knows; when you let the sunlight in,
Open the window wide,
But you'll find more white than black, my friend ;
Then look at the other side.

Although in all your daily toil
To hurry may be your plan,
Go slow and let moderation reign
In judging your fellow man ;
Just put yourself in his place awhile,
And then be sure to do
As you, when the saddest trials come,
Would have men do unto you.

If we try to follow each day we live
This beautiful golden rule,
Be sure of this in the wide, wide world
The talebearers we may defy,
Whatever they may confide,
For we shall be sure ere we condemn
To look at the other side.

SOME STRANGE BIRDS.

Among our own native birds there are many that are most remarkable for singularity of shape, song, and plumage, but there are some foreign birds that far excel them in all these particulars, and are the oddest creatures in the world. Take the Campanero, for instance, about the size of a jay, with plumage as white as Alpine snow. From the centre of his forehead rises a spiral tube three inches in length. This tube is jet black, spotted all over with white patches. An air passage, which communicates from the palate with this tube, enables the campanero to inflate it at will. When inflated, it stands erect on his head, but when the bell is not tolling, it hangs flaccidly down. It is by means of this tube that the campanero produces his singular call, the notes of which are loud and clear, and are precisely similar to the sound of a deep-toned cathedral bell, which can be heard, so travellers say, at a distance of three miles. As the morning dawns you hear a solemn toll sounding through the woods. Then a pause of a minute, then another toll, then a pause, and the toll comes again; then a silence for six or eight minutes, and the forests echo once more to the bell of the campanero. It must seem Moslem-like that he sounded the time of prayer for morning and evening worship, for it is only at those hours that he is heard in the silence of the woods. This bird comes from Guiana, where some of the oddest birds are to be found.

In the forests of Guiana there are some marvellous old trees, called the mora, rising to the height of two hundred, sometimes two hundred and fifty feet, two-thirds covered with vegetation, which is not always all their own, for in their giant limbs the wild fig takes root and grows to be a goodly tree, while a hundred other parasites cover the old branches, almost deceiving one into the belief that it is its own bloom, when it really is only a false mask, for the entire top of the tree itself is bare and white, not a leaf visible. Here upon the topmost pinnacle, inaccessible to man, this singular bird loves to sit. There he feels safe, and there he tolls his matin and vesper chime until the woods echo and re-echo, like the aisles of some vast cathedral, to the vibrations of his solemn bell.

Another strange bird is the Ouizale, a Mexican bird, a very dandy in appearance; for there are birds as well as men who endeavor to improve their looks, having their own ideas of personal decoration. We often laugh at the people of the South Sea Islands for tattooing their faces and putting rings in their noses, so proud are they of their personal appearance; but here is a bird that builds his nest with two entrances, he is so proud of his tail, in order that he can pass in and out without the necessity of turning round, in this way saving any ruffle of the feathers, or other accidental hurt.

And then there is the Houton, of Guana, a very handsome bird with a green body, bluish wings and tail and a splendid top-not or crown on the top of his head. But the tail, handsome as it is, does not quite suit the bird, and it cannot be worn in its natural state by any houton that thinks anything of himself; for as soon as it is full grown the houton goes to work to get himself up in fine style, as he thinks, and he has a nice implement to work with in his bill, which is so made as to act as a sort of scissors, and with this he does his tailoring—cutting two large gaps, each an inch long, in the web of the longest feathers of the tail. Having accomplished this mutilation, the houton is fitted to appear in the best regulated society among the birds, with this strangely adjusted ornament.

Another bird that deserves particular mention is the Duck Bill Platypus, something like a camel on two legs. "All his feathers are hairs," as the Irish would say. This queer, hairy bird, with its long legs and invisible wings, is to be found in the dense forests of Australian slopes, feeding always by night, and has a exceedingly funny way of getting at his worms, as you will see. Selecting a piece of ground, he goes to work kneading it with his heavy feet; of course the worms have gone to bed hours before, but as they can hear as well as other creatures, they wonder what can the matter be, and accordingly creep to the top of the ground, pop out their heads to discover who it is that can so disturb their nocturnal slumbers, when suddenly the duck bill, who has been watching impatiently for just such a disclosure, pounces upon them, not only seizing the opportunity, but the worm.

The Garrulous, Honey eater, another oddity, would at once entertain you with his performances, were you to come in his wake, to lead you away from his nest. At any rate, the moment he sees you he begins a series of summersaults. At the end he deliberately stands on his head in the air! While you are astonished at this he will revolve like a wheel on the end of a twig, with his wings spread out horizontally. When over with this the next performance is to stand on one leg, turn his head on one side and look at you most attentively as if to see the effect, as much as to say: "Don't you think that is pretty smart?" and no doubt you would. You move away, and the strange bird follows you, still insisting that you shall watch his acrobatic performances, which he keeps up, at the same time uttering his sharp, shrill note.

What more wonderful bird lives than the Satin Bower bird, with which you are more familiar? It builds its long arcade of shapely sticks and delicate tree-tops, curving inward, so as to form an arch, while the walled floor is paved with a mosaic of small gay-colored stones and other decorations, while the roof and sides are ornamented splendidly with tapestries of colored grasses, and all this to serve, not as a nest or refuge only, but as a "pleasure house," a "golden house," where the birds play the livelong day; scampering up and down, stopping perchance on the way to change some decoration or to add a new one. The satin birds are inveterate thieves and help themselves to anything they can lay their hands on.

There is the Cloud bird, seen at a long distance with its wings spread, looking like a mass of white smoke, and the Lorient, whose blinding plumage glows like a lamp of gold. The Toucan with its wonderful beak, and the crested Aracari, from the banks of the Amazon, whose head looks as if it had been in the hands of a French barber for an evening party, and last on the list, the Central American "cock of the rock," that in spite of his gorgeous plumage, lurks in the very darkest holes of the mountains, where he so shines as to give them the appearance of being on fire.

Is there any end to the wonderful creations of God, and every one made by him for some particular purpose?

An old Negro at Weldon, North Carolina, at a recent lecture, said: "When I sees a man going home with a gallon of whisky and half a pound of meat, dat's temperance lecture enough for me, and I sees it every day. I know dat eberyting in his home is on the same scale—gallon of misery to every half pound of comfort."

MAMMA'S LOOK.

Mamma just looked at Flora; that was all. She never spoke a word, but Flora knew what she meant. The child had been disobedient. She had gone outdoors without her hood and overshoes. Flora had been sick, and mamma had forbidden her to run out in the cold, damp yard unless she was warmly dressed. But Flora was forgetful—very. She forgot her mamma's strict "must not."

Now breakfast was ready, and mamma called, "Flora! Flora!" and in popped the child at the back-door. Then her mother looked at her; she just looked, and then Flora cried.

Do you remember about Peter in the Bible? He had denied with strong wicked words that he ever knew Jesus. Jesus just looked at him when he came in sight, and Peter went out and wept bitterly. When I was a child, and my mother wished to direct or reprove me, she often had only to look. It makes me think of a verse in the Bible, "I will guide thee with my eye." If we keep close to God, and look up to him every day, he will guide us as easily as a mother can with her eye. How beautiful to be guided so, dear children, without a word—just by his eye. Let us keep looking into our Heavenly Father's face, so as to catch in a moment just what he wants us to do. When we have done right he will smile, and when we have done wrong how sad and grieved he will look, just as Flora's mother did.—Sunbeam.

LETTERS TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am ten years old; I live eighteen miles East of Nashville; three-fourths of a mile from the T. & P. R. R. I go to the Sunday school at Silver Springs. Bro. J. L. Bryant preaches for us once every month. We like him very much: We take the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, and I like to read your good letters to the children. We have a large fish pond; I wish you would come to see us and go fishing. Did you ever see any german carp? We have the mirror variety, and they are very pretty. I have seen so many nice letters in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE from Uncle Minor, and I would like to know something more about you. Have you got a little girl? I would like so much to see you. Fearing that Bros. Lipscomb & Sewell will not wish to publish my letter, I will stop.—[Hattie T. Carver, Mt. Juliet, June 16, 1884.]

Dear Uncle Minor: As the little folks are writing to you, I take pleasure in writing you a few lines. I am nine years old, I am an orphan child; I have neither father nor mother, sister nor brother, but I have the Bible to read. We have preaching once a month; Bro. B. C. Goodwin is preaching for us. The people are well pleased with him. I live in Elkmont. We have no Christian church, but we have preaching in the Cumberland church. As this is the first, I will close.—[Alice Chamber, Elkmont, Ala.]

The following are said to be the seventeen American inventions of world wide adoption: "The cotton gin, the planing machine, the grass mower and reaper, the rotary printing press, steam navigation, the hot air machine, the sewing machine, the indian rubber industry, the machine manufacture of horseshoes, the sand blast for graving, the guage lathe, the grain elevator, artificial ice making on a large scale, the electromagnet in its practical application, the telephone and the mint julep."

God made both tears and laughter, and both for kind purposes:—Tears hinder sorrow from becoming despair and madness; and laughter is one of the very privileges of reason, being confined to the human species.—Locke.

Our forefathers had clocks put on the outside of churches that they might not be late in getting to service; we put the clocks inside the churches lest we be late in getting out.—Rev. H. A. Tupper.

Man's works, even in their most perfect form, always have more or less of excitement in them. God's word's works are calm and peaceful, both in Nature, and in his Work.—Hare.

JUST OUT. CHRISTIAN MISSIONS

and HISTORICAL SKETCHES of MISSIONARY SOCIETIES among the Disciples of Christ, with Historical and Statistical Tables, by F. M. Green, with an introduction by W. K. Pendleton. It is full of information which all friends of missions ought to know, and which, but few could be able anywhere else to find. It is an inspiring illustration of the evangelic spirit of the noble men whom we delight to honor as the pioneers of the reformation. It is believed that the sketches present the very light on our missions which the great mass of the Disciples need upon their missionary efforts in the past, and the necessity which is laid upon them in the present.

Complete information of the work of all the State organizations, C. W. B. M., F. C. M. S., and General C. M. C. &c. No Christian library is complete without this volume. Bro. Green has done us a valuable service in preparing this book. He has spent much labor and patient thought in its composition. He has written it in love of the work of which it is a history, and with a zealous eloquence which must touch our hearts. Let us reward him by giving it a wide circulation. Handsomely bound in Cloth, 458 pages, only $1.50. Christian men and women wanted to act as Agents in each congregation. For full particulars

Address JOHN BURNS PUBLISHING COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

"THEY ARE AS THE ANGELS."

I have seen a vision of angels,
As I walked this earth of ours,
They had neither crowns, nor snowy wings—
Not so much as a wreath of flowers.
There is nothing about them glorious
That the common eye might see,
But faith's keen eye can look on high,
And discern what they shall be.
The grub has nothing of beauty,
But we know that enfolded there
Is the butterfly bright, that on wings of light
Will float on the summer air.
One is a poor blind woman,
Her life is a long, dark night,
But God gives her grace, with a smile on her face,
To sing "The Lord is my Light!"
And one is a wife and mother,
Toiling without a break;
But her cross and her cares she cheerfully bears,
All for the dear Lord's sake.
Her cross is a drunken husband,
Her cares are her children small,
Too busy to weep, or scarcely to sleep,
She works and she prays for all.
And one is a youthful sufferer
In the hospital's quiet ward,
He would fain share the strife and the battle of life,
But a wise and loving Lord,
Has chosen it thus—so he lies content
To suffer and not to do;
But he little conceives of the golden sheaves
He shall reap when he winneth through.
All—all—the blind and the toiling,
The suffering, fevered brow,
Shall one day shine with a glory divine,
They have some of that beauty now.
The beauty of trustful patience,
Of self-forgetting love,—
His beauty divine in Whom they shall shine,
With undimmed glory above!

SECOND CHAPTER OF ACTS.

In preceding articles we have advanced as far as the second chapter of Acts, and now we propose to give some items of its contents. This chapter should be carefully considered, on two accounts: first, because it is the first in the Bible from which any one can learn in fullness how to become a Christian, and the order in which the requirements come; secondly, because the things to be done in order to become Christians are more fully given in this than in any other chapter in the Bible. These facts make the study of this chapter a necessity. It serves as a sort of key to all the other cases of conversion recorded in Acts, which is the book of conversions. The first thing in this chapter is an account of the pouring out of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles, to inspire and prepare them for the work to which the Lord had called them; that is, the work of preaching the gospel to all nations, and in all languages. And this qualification was fully imparted, for the record says, "and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

These apostles are now fully qualified for the work of preaching the gospel in all countries, as they begin at once to speak with other tongues, in other languages. But when the Spirit thus came upon the apostles, and qualified them for the work enjoined upon them, none were present except disciples. Not an alien sinner was present, so far as the record shows. But there were many of them in the city at the time, and just as soon as the news of this wonderful inspiration was made known out in the city, the multitude came together, and were astonished beyond measure in hearing these uneducated apostles speaking distinctly in languages they knew they had never learned. This miraculous power manifested by the apostles, prepared the people to hear what they had to say to them. They were astonished beyond measure when they heard the Spirit of God talking to them through these uneducated men in their own language and tongue wherein they were born.

The next thing done was that Peter arose, asked their attention to his words, and explained to them that this wonderful manifestation of the Spirit which they then heard, was but a fulfillment of a prophecy of Joel, and closes the explanation by repeating the promise that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. Peter then again asks their attention to what he then had to say. This was in reality the Holy Spirit asking their attention to its words. The Spirit had now come down to make Christians, and in order to do this it talks to them in their own language, and tells them what they must do. In the divine commission the first thing to be done was to preach the gospel. Exactly true to this order, the first thing Peter did after having explained the miraculous occurrence, was to preach the gospel to the thousands then present. He said, "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders and signs which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves know; him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Acts 2: 22-24. Here in three verses the gospel is preached, in fullness and plainness.

Paul shows in first of fifteenth of first Corinthians that the grand facts related in these three verses constitute the gospel by which men are to be saved. The Corinthians were saved by it, and so are all others, that are saved at all. Paul there defines the gospel to be "how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." The above three verses therefore in second of Acts present to us the gospel plan of salvation by which men are to be saved. And these facts are so plain that they need no explanation. They need but to be told, and they are plain enough for any responsible being to understand them. The Holy Spirit therefore did not stop one moment to explain the gospel. God knew it was plain enough for all to understand it. If all preachers now would preach thus plainly, would faithfully repeat what the Spirit presented then as the gospel, the plan of salvation, and the things for sinners to believe in order to be saved, all would understand it without any difficulty in the world.

These few plain facts, which are so easy to be understood, are the things to be believed, in order to be saved. When Jesus commanded the apos-ties to preach the gospel to every creature, he added, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. So in this second chapter of Acts, when Peter had preached the gospel, he at once proceeded to prove the resurrection of Christ by the Psalmist David, closing that argument by a demand for faith. He said, "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." This is truly a strong demand for faith. There never was any thing any plainer on this earth than the gospel facts, the plan of salvation as preached on this occasion. They were so plain they could not be made plainer, and all that was needed was to give evidence of their truth, and require the people to believe. And no sooner was the demand made than many of them yielded.

The next item in order therefore is the statement, "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, 'Men and brethren, what shall we do?'" This verse shows that the people did understand, and that they did believe it. Never was anything plainer than the gospel, as presented, understood, and believed on this occasion. Those preachers in modern times who make the whole matter of conversion a mysterious sort of thing would be wonderfully enlightened, if they would humbly and earnestly study this chapter. One very short sermon was all that was needed to make three thousand believers on this occasion, although that was the first time they had ever heard it. And as they could so readily understand and believe it then, they could understand it quite as easily now, if presented with the same plainness, as then.

The next item is, that Peter in great plainness answered their question. The answer is just as plain as the gospel is, that brought about their faith. "Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This answer is so plain that explanation could not make it plainer. A simple definition of the words used is the only explanation that could possibly be needed, and this but seldom. Almost every one knows what repentance is, and what the baptism of the New Testament was. No definition, no explanation was needed then, and none was given. An earnest exhortation to do the things commanded was given, and the people began at once to comply. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." This shows what a plain simple thing it was to become a Christian in the days of the apostles, when the Holy Spirit of God directed, and when its plain directions were heeded. But these days, a very large number of the preachers do not believe that the plain matters required here will make Christians. This is the only trouble there is in the whole matter. All understand it, but many do not believe it. Not one preacher of the denominations in all this land has faith enough to take just what is written here and just preach that, nothing more, and nothing less, and urge the people to obey it, and trust God for pardon. Not one of them could do it, and not imperil his standing in his church.

Surely this is a pretty state of affairs, that those claiming to be ministers of the word of God are either afraid to preach that word as it is, or else do not believe it. But it is even so. They certainly take upon themselves a terrible responsibility in so doing. Why should frail men, not able to save one single soul from his sins, hesitate to proclaim the word of God, the word of him who is alone able to save? God promises that this will save when men obey. Men will not give this plain command and these definite and full promises of God to the people, but give instead their own wisdom, and their own promise. Preachers take sinners at the very point the above three thousand were at, when they asked what to do, and instead of giving the same answer, will give one entirely their own so far as this connection is concerned, and say, believe, only believe, and you shall be saved, when the truth of the matter is, they already believe, and only need to be told what the Spirit through Peter told the people on the day of Pentecost to do, which was to repent and be baptized. When preachers thus refuse to give the word of the Lord to the people, and then give their own words which have no power to save, they are withholding the word of God, the words of life, from perishing souls, and giving them instead the poor lifeless, powerless husks of man's wisdom, all of which is foolishness with God. These three thousand were as certainly saved, pardoned, as that the Bible is true. And as they were thus saved, so all will be saved that will do as they did. And if all had faith in the word of God, they would. How different the preaching in modern revivals from that of Peter on the day of Pentecost. And what makes this difference? Simply that men have made void the commands of God by the doctrines and commandments of men.

In no other chapter in Acts are the conditions of pardon so fully given, and in the very order in which they come, as in this one. But there is enough given in each case to show that just the same things were preached, and the same things done every time that a soul was converted to God. This is a most beautiful and harmonious order of things. We certainly need one chapter in which the matter of conversion is fully given, as a standard of fulness to which we may refer others not so full. This we have in completeness in the second of Acts. This was the beginning, the first preaching done upon the full establishment of the gospel dispensation, and it was most appropriate and opportune that on this occasion the whole matter should be given in full. For had there been a lack here, there is not another chapter in the whole Bible that would supply the deficiency. Any lack or imperfection here would be fatal to a full understanding of conversion. But thanks to God the full gospel plan, and all the conditions upon which pardon depends are given here in such fullness that no one needs fail to understand.

Reader, if you are not a Christian, study this chapter well, in connection with the last commission to these apostles, and the way to become a Christian will be as plain as words can express it. The Lord has manifested fulness of mercy and goodness in preparing for men a plan of salvation so fully and perfectly adapted to their necessities, and revealing it so plainly to them.

Queries.

In the Review of June 19, 1884, I find this question and answer, which you will please comment on. Did not Cornelius pray before he was baptized? Answer—Cornelius did pray before he was baptized, and God heard his prayer. (See Acts 10: 4.) But these prayers were made before baptism was commanded. After Christ came, and the command of baptism was in force, Cornelius must be baptized into Christ, and go to God in Christ. See Gal. 3: 27-28; John 9: 31. —[H. L. Thurman.]

It is very easy, but very needless, to run to an extreme on the subject of the sinner praying. A man does not pray at word of command, nor can he. Man prays because he feels or realizes his own weakness, helplessness, sinfulness, and has confidence in the goodness and power of God to help. When he realizes these he will pray. The prayer is only offensive to God when it is accompanied with a refusal to do the will of God. When man prays to God for a blessing, and refuses to do the things commanded by God on which the blessing is conditioned, when he prays to God while refusing to submit to and honor God, that prayer is unacceptable to God. Baptism had been commanded; but not made known to Cornelius when he prayed. Prayer must be in Christ, but so must eating, drinking, all that we do must be done in him. But while this is true, it is not a sin to eat, to drink, to live while seeking an entrance into Christ. Diligently striving to know and do his will. Nor do we think a prayer made to God while striving to know and do his will, unacceptable to him. It is the prayer that is made while turning away the ear from hearing his law, that is unacceptable. To teach this is enough to guard properly the truth of God in relation to prayer.

Jude 3rd verse, "Contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," does he mean the word or doctrine? In Hebrews 11: 1, "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." We cannot hope for the word, we have that; and of things not seen cannot mean the word, for we see that. The cause of my writing, a brother preacher said that faith always meant the word or doctrine. Answer the above and oblige.—[F. M. McMurray.]

In Jude it certainly means the truths delivered by God to the church to be believed. In Hebrews it shows what believing that word or truth does for man.

There must be always caution used in interpreting the word faith. The word faith is more frequently than otherwise used in the Bible to indicate the confidence of the person. Only when it clearly refers to the thing to be believed, is it to be used as synonymous with the word of God, or the truth of God.

The faith, the truth of God, addressed to man's faith never saved a soul, save as it was received by the personal faith of the individual. We think, over nine times out of ten, the word faith as used in the Bible, refers to the personal confidence of the individual in God. In interpreting Scripture, the usual meaning is to be attributed to a word unless the connection clearly requires a different one.

Please explain through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE Matthew 23: 15.—[Mrs. Julia A. Morgan, Bowling Green, Ky.]

The Scribes and Pharisees were the religious teachers among the Jews. They were laying much more stress on the traditions of the elders—the doctrines, inventions and devices of men, than on the commandments of the Lord. In their zeal to make converts to these things, they are said to compass or pass over sea and earth. After he is changed from his fidelity to the appointments of God to these devices of men, he is said to be ten-fold more the child of hell than themselves. Exactly why they could be worse than these teachers, I do not see, unless it is that new converts are more zealous and so run to a wilder extreme in rejecting God's appointments, and in advocating the teachings, devices, institutions of men than the teachers. This is generally true, the man who first teaches a doctrine, seldom develops in his own life the extent of its influences. Only those who come after, carry it to its logical results.

Please give me your views on the 29th verse of the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians.—[W. W. Dansbee, Gentry's Mill, Texas.]

The verse is, "What shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not?" We do not know what it means, and have no views on it. We have sometimes thought it might mean they are baptized in view of the fact they must die, but the construction is forced and unsatisfactory.

Your article on divorce does not seem to me to meet all the cases that come under my observation. First, a person living with his second wife, the first living, makes confession, what does the Scripture require of him? Second, a brother and sister have been excluded for adultery for living with a second wife, the first being divorced, they apply for membership, what does the word of God require of them that they may obtain membership? Please answer these questions, and oblige your brother in the faith.—[Thomas N. Saffoon, Earlington, Ky.]

Our sins cannot change the law of God. Nor can we take advantage of our own wrongs.

A man living with a second wife, divorced from the first, without Scriptural cause, while the first still lives, is guilty of adultery. He is as much guilty of adultery at the end of five, ten or twenty years, as he was the first day of living with her. And he cannot become a member of Christ or his church, without repenting of the sin quitting and putting away the woman.

So of the others, they must separate if the cohabitation is unscriptural before they can be accepted in the church of Christ. If this seems hard, turn and read the last chapter of Nehemiah and see how God required the Jews to put away their wives and children of unscriptural marriages, even when entered into in ignorance of the divine law, and see that God will not bend his law to suit our whims and fancies, or to accommodate us when in disregard of his law we rush forward into difficulties of our own making.

When a Christian gets behind in harvesting his small grain on account of much rain, is it right for him to run his reaper on the Lord's day through fear of not being able to save his grain the next day on account of more rain? I know a neighborhood where a meeting was appointed to organize a congregation, and when the day arrived, a few brethren—only four or five assembled, and soon learned that some of the leading brethren of the intended organization were in the wheat field with the reaper. It seems to me that a brother who would "neglect" to assemble with his brethren on the first day of the week to cut wheat, would find equally as good an excuse for disregarding every other requirement of the gospel under similar temptations. Would not a little of Bro. Harding's "trust theory" help such brethren.—[N. A. Bostick, Comanche, Texas.]

There is great lack of faith among Christians. Lack of faith is infidelity.

To deny as Peter did, is bad; but not to weep bitterly, as he did, when we have denied, is worse.—Payson.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 6.

"Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not." Gal. 1: 20.

My much respected friend, if you have examined my last letter, you are now ready for the present one. I dare say, you find that I write in a positive manner. To you, I need make no apology, for you are too well acquainted with me, and my manner of speaking, to attribute my manner of writing to egotism or presumption. I trust we, in our last letter, showed that there was at least three conditions, or three steps, (so to speak,) that intervene between a person called in the Scripture an alien, or foreigner, and in the state or relation called pardoned, redeemed, or adopted son of God. Or, if you please, at least three things a sinner must do to obtain the redemption of his sins. And if we were correct, he that assumes that a responsible person can be pardoned in accordance with God's will as revealed to us, without doing these three things, shoulders a responsibility that angels in submission to God never assumed, so far as revealed to us.

We then want to know if there be any other condition, or conditions, between a person who has taken (in humility and confidence in God's promises) these three steps, or has complied with the three conditions. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 5. Here is a fact stated plainly, unequivocally, that "except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." Now, if we can find what to be born of water means, and what the kingdom of God means, then may we know when a person is born of water, (and if born of the Spirit) and when he enters into the kingdom of God. Whatever "born of the Spirit" may mean, it is something beyond man's power to produce it. All men (as far as I am acquainted with their teaching) understand the kingdom of God to be his church. The church of God then (at least in this passage) is the same as the kingdom of God.

You will notice another thing just here. A man is passive in this birth. He does not do something himself that produces the birth, but submits, or suffers; is passive in something being done for him, or rather to him, that is called a birth, or born again, because he was born once from his mother's womb.

Whether all men agree as to how a man is born of the Spirit, or as to exactly the idea intended by the term kingdom of God, they are agreed that to be born of water is to be baptized.

I need not refer you, my friend, to all the different confessions of faith, nor Scriptures; because you are aware that you read this same passage of Scripture from your Discipline every time you baptize a person, and that the kingdom of God is his church. You will also see and know. Discipline, page 194. If, then, to be born of water is to be baptized, and without this birth of water (and birth of Spirit) no man can enter into the kingdom, the church of God, how important must be baptism, to obtain the remission of sins, to enter the kingdom, the church of God; for I understand that where remission of sins takes place with a person, he is then said to be in the kingdom, in Christ, in the church of God. Now we look to find what else Jesus has said upon this subject. After he had selected his apostles, had been crucified, had been raised by the power of the Father, and just before he ascended to the Father, he said to them, by virtue of the authority given him, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in (into) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. Here are positive commands given to the apostles—one as essential for them to perform, as the other. They were to teach all nations, and to baptize. There is no restriction here; but as all Scripture must harmonize, we will see if there be any restriction as to who shall be taught, or who shall be baptized. It is evident, however, that baptism is here restricted to those who are taught, for teaching is to be done first, and then to baptize the taught. And as the person to be baptized (as in the birth) is to be passive, we presume none are to be baptized who do not willingly submit to it.

We now turn to Mark 16: 15-16: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Now what do we find here? One command to the apostles to preach the gospel, and a promise to every one that believeth and is baptized, and a threat of damnation to every one that believeth not.

Now let us put the narratives together. To teach all nations is to preach the gospel to every creature. The taught and the believers are the same characters. The apostles are commanded to baptize the taught, and no others; the believers are to be baptized, and no others, for all unbelievers are to be damned. Here none but believers are to be baptized; there none but the taught, those who receive the apostles' teaching. If unbelievers are baptized, it does not free them from condemnation; they must be born of water and of the Spirit; not water alone, not Spirit alone, (if such an anomaly could be,) but of water and of the Spirit.

Let us think over this humbly in the sight of God, and for our own good, is the desire of—

A DISCIPLE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

I preached for the church in Ashland City, Cheatham county, Tenn., on the fifth Lord's day and night in June. The church at that place seems to be in good condition. They meet every Lord's day to break bread. They have a good Sunday-school, though not organized, but seem to be doing very well. We noticed the first Bible class, composed of the elders, deacons, and senior members of the church, using the little Lesson Papers, asking and answering such questions only as they find in the papers. While these papers are very good for children, it does look to me that men who ought to be teachers, and able to think for themselves, ought to get more out of the lesson than the little Lesson Paper. Bro. William Lipscomb, Jr., preaches for them regularly this year. But the most interesting feature connected with our visit to Ashland, was our meeting with the Rev. Dr. Orman, Presiding Elder of the M. E. Church, who happened to be holding his quarterly meeting at Ashland at the time we were there. Dr. Orman's fame as a ranting Campbellite killer, and a perverter of the gospel of Christ and the right way of the Lord, and a setter forth of strange doctrines, has already gone out, especially among the disciples of Christ. On this particular occasion he was advertised to preach on "justification by faith only," and as he could find nothing in the word of the Lord to support this peculiar dogma, he took his text from the ninth article of the Methodist Creed. He then turned all his artillery loose on an imaginary something vulgarly called Campbellism; telling his audience that A. Campbell, being a charter member of the church, he never practiced what he taught, and that he was converted in an old field and made gloriously happy, and upon this he depended for salvation. He also stated that our brethren in Kentucky and Tennessee had repeatedly been challenged to debate these questions with them, (the Methodists,) and that they would not accept, for Dr. Brents and others had said that no good comes to our cause by debating these questions with Methodist preachers. Now, who of our Kentucky or Tennessee brethren have refused to debate these questions with Methodist preachers? If so, why? Speak out and let us know who you are. The church at Ashland informed him at once that they would accept his challenge, and that if his church would endorse him, that a representative man from our ranks would be called to meet him in Ashland City. This bulldozing, bluff style won't ruin every time. The brethren are determined to put his back to the wall, or make him come to time. He has since been conferred with concerning it. Do not know what will be the result. If anything more comes of it, the readers of the ADVOCATE shall have the benefit of it.

A NEW METHODIST. W. B. WRIGHT.

RE-BAPTISM.

Bro. Lipscomb, I feel it my duty to aid you by way of suggestion; and if you can find room for my article, I think I will settle some, or you can have my suggestions at all events. I affirm that the authority of God alone makes the Bible binding. And submission to God's authority makes religious acts acceptable to him and right. In John 7: 22, Christ condemns the Jews for circumcising from wrong authority. He says you do it "Not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers." To receive immersion from the fear of hell, is not submission to the authority of God. If remission of sins is the primum mobile of my immersion, then the authority of God is not the moving cause.

I suggest that we are not commanded to believe in the Holy Spirit, in faith, repentance nor baptism. The faith that saves is, "I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." This faith sets up Christ in my heart as king; as having all power or authority, in heaven and on earth." Having such faith, Paul said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Paul asked for no whys or wherefores. Had he so done, it would have shown his want of full trust in Christ. Philip did not require the Eunuch to believe his sins were pardoned, nor that baptism was for the remission of sins. Baptism is the formal entering the new covenant. When the believer thus enters the new covenant, faith says all of the blessings of the covenant follow. John, in 20th chapter, says all he wrote was to prove "that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." This faith leads to obedience; obedience secures all promises. Peter Acts 2 says, "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the Holy Spirit." Then "the promise is to you." The promise here refers, certainly, to the Holy Spirit. The same promise is to us. Paul, in Heb. 11: 8, says, "By faith Abraham, when he was called, * * * obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." Abraham never asked for any whys; had he so done, he would have shown a want of faith.

So the conclusion that all who have faith in Christ, and are immersed to obey him, are pardoned, are immersed into Christ. There is only one faith, and one way to believe; and only one way to repent; and only one baptism. That is the immersion of a converted one, a true believer, into the name of the Father, Son and the Holy Spirit. This act of the believer receives its validity from the authority of Christ. And it is valid only when it proceeds from faith in Christ, and is done simply because he commands it. To do any act God commands to please any church or man, or by any authority but God, and to please him, is of no avail as to our salvation. God in Isaiah condemns "serving him by the precepts of men." For any one to say, "I joined the church of my choice, and I choose my mode of baptism," is entirely subversive of God's will and choice. A converted man says as Christ did in the garden of agony. He said, "Father, not my will, but thine be done." I must say God has set before us but two choices. To choose to serve God or not. Self-choosers must be damned. I suggest that the phrase, "baptism for remission of sins," is not Bible style. Paul says, "Obedience to the faith for his name." Let us so say, faith, repentance and baptism is thus included. All of these acts are for remission. I receive all immersed believers on the Bible. To re-dip such, I esteem a grievous sin.

JAMES L. THORNBERRY.

NOTES.

J. L. Bryant, Rural Hill, July 4, writes: "At our meeting at Scobey's Chapel on the night of the fourth Lord's day in June, two ladies took membership with the congregation at that place. At Corinth on Saturday night before the fifth Lord's day in June, a lady from the Baptists made the confession and was baptized the next morning."

W. Anderson, Carter's Creek, Tenn., July 7, writes: "We met with the congregation at New Lasea, yesterday, (first Lord's day). Had a very good audience of brethren, and a goodly number of the world. We spoke to the people of the importance of self-denial and cross-bearing—lessons very much needed by the brethren generally, in our judgment. New Lasea was a flourishing congregation in days gone by, but her influence has been badly crippled by intestine broils. Some of the brethren seem to be discouraged over the troubles, thinking that dissolution awaits them. We believe there are enough true and tried brethren and sisters to save the body, if they will only cleave together and contend for the faith. Were glad to meet Bros. Mills and Waldron there."

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

ON THE WING.

On Friday before the third Lord's day in June, left home for Henrietta, Texas, where, by previous appointment, I was to preach a series of discourses. My route lay through the Western prairies, and as I advanced West, the crops grew better, until it was delightful to gaze upon the vast fields of wheat, cut and shocked in the field, or standing ready and waiting for the sickle. Oats, too, were very fine. The corn crop abundant, and cotton fairly good. The country between Fort Worth and Henrietta, in Clay County, presented the best crops we had seen.

Arrived at Henrietta in due time, began preaching on Saturday night in the M. E. Church, they having kindly lent us the use of same. The pastor attended our meeting part of the time, and we found him to be an intelligent, social gentleman. We had a good hearing in Henrietta for one week, though no accessions. We found some twenty-five persons who were, or had been members of the church of Christ, at other points. They are as fine looking Christians as we ever saw, but are not organized for work, nor could we set them in order. They promised to go to work and secure a house of worship, and I am to go back in the fall, (D. V.) set them in order, and put them to work. The outlook for Henrietta is good, provided the brethren will organize and go to work. One reason we could not organize them now, was, they were too busy gathering cattle and shipping same. There were more Martha's than Mary's there. We were sick while in Henrietta, and preached each night when really we should have been in bed. The kindness of the sisters Jones and Burnett we shall never forget—they ministered to us in our sickness, and took the best of care of us, as though we had been of their own family. The Lord reward them for their kindness.

Henrietta is rather a small town—having perhaps 1800 inhabitants. It is high up in the prairie country, seventeen miles below Wichita Falls, the terminancy of the Fort Worth & D. C. Railroad. The people of Henrietta greatly fear the cyclones that we read about. Almost every house has its "dug out." That is a hole in the ground, covered over with boards and stones, and sufficiently large to hold a good sized family. There is but little timber in this country, and a cloud can be seen for perhaps sixty or seventy miles, and if one is in sight, it is almost impossible to get the people away from their "dug outs." Hence as clouds were in sight almost every night, many did not hear us who would have heard if the weather had been clear.

But Clay county is a good country, and is destined to be settled with farmers at an early day. The cow must go. Pastures must give way to the plow. In fact agriculture is fast driving the cow West, and the edict has gone forth that the cow and the Indian must go. The lands are a rich loamy soil, well adapted to cultivation. The only drawback is lack of timber and water. These are being supplied by wire fences, and artesian wells. The rains are becoming more frequent, and it seems that as man necessarily advances West, into the dry country, God sends and establishes rain. But I must close and get off to Wichita Falls, a place which just now is attracting much attention. We shall write of this next week.

SHORT NOTES.

We would like the class to tell us, if they can, how long Noah was building the Ark. Bro. T. M. Sweeny once told me it was five years. I would like to know how he found out.

Jay Gould lost four million dollars in one week. Well, we escaped the loss of over six millions recently, by not having it in Gen. Grant's care when he and Ward broke in New York. Wasn't that lucky?

Bro. J. M. Ratliffe has lately been instrumental in converting two Baptist preachers, and capturing a whole college for the cause of Christ. When Bro. Ratliffe hangs up his blackboard and begins work, sectarianism has to stand from under.

By reason of much travel and preaching, day and night, the Bible Class has been neglected; in fact, our whole department. We hope this will not occur again. It has showed us, however, that our Bible Class is greatly missed when it does not appear. Many letters have come asking about it.

We travelled with a stage driver, recently, who can get away with more mean whisky in one day than any man we ever saw. He said he intended to join the M. E. Church some of these times, and as we owe them a little grudge for refusing to let us preach in one of their houses last year, we advised him to do so. We will get even with them, if he does.

We preached a week in Henrietta; had a good hearing, but no accessions. Will return there and preach some weeks in the fall season, (D. V.) and hope to set in order the brethren there. They promised to provide themselves a house of worship, and be ready to keep house for the Lord. There are several members there, who could, if they would, build a house themselves, and scarcely miss the amount. Why not do it? What will property be worth to them after death, only as it shall be made to contribute now, to secure us an abundant entrance into the everlasting glory? These sisters, Burnett, Jones, Skinner, Stone, and others, can build a house themselves, if they will. A little effort on their part will secure help from the brethren, and it can be done. Sisters, won't you do it? Let us find you with a good house of your own next fall. Sisters Soward, Devroe, and others, are determined to build a house in Decatur, and they will do it, too. The brethren have an excellent house of worship in Jacksboro, gotten up and built mainly by the efforts of a few sisters. Sister Brown, with determination, led in the work, and the house soon went up. It can be done anywhere, if Christians are determined to have it so.

Dear Bro. Poe: Will you please give me your idea on Matthew 6: 6. Does the Bible condemn public prayer? I would like to hear from you on this subject through the ADVOCATE, and oblige one in search of the truth.—[Mrs. S. E. Sikes, Roanoke Prairie, Texas.]

Jesus prayed in public as well as in secret. Don't be afraid of praying too much. If we err at all now, it is in not praying enough. We think every Christian ought to pray and give thanks to God, at least twice every day. Read the Psalms, and see how a devotional heart can praise and pray.

Two baptisms last night (June 26th) after prayer meeting.—[R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas.]

OUR BIBLE CLASS.

Dear Bro. Poe: I took your advice and have searched carefully through Matthew, examining all the references, and in searching, I find it difficult to determine, but will give as my answer, eighty-eight. This has reference only to the prophecies fulfilled by Christ in person. Answer to Bro. Lauderdale's question in ADVOCATE of March 5, "How many years of the history of the world does the book of Genesis cover?" Two thousand three hundred and seven. By examining the 5th of Genesis, we find that Adam was 130 years old at Seth's birth, who was 105 at Enos birth, who was 90 at Cainan's birth, who was 70 at Mahalaleel's birth, who was 65 at Jared's birth, who was 162 at Enoch's birth, who was 65 at Methuselah's birth, who was 187 at Lamech's birth, who was 182 at Noah's birth, who was 500 at Shem's birth. Examining Genesis 11, we find that Shem was 100 at Arphaxad's birth, who was 35 at Salah's birth, who was 30 at Eber's birth, who was 34 at Peleg's birth, who was 30 at Reu's birth, who was 32 at Serug's birth, who was 30 at Nahor's birth, who was 29 at Terah's birth, who was 70 at Abraham's birth. Abraham was 100 at Isaac's birth, (Gen. 21: 3) who was 60 at Jacob's birth. (Gen. 25: 26.) Joseph was 30 at the beginning of the seven years of plenty (Gen. 41: 46); after two years of the famine Jacob went to Egypt; (Gen. 45: 6) therefore Joseph was 39 at that time; and, as Jacob was 130 at that time, (Gen. 47: 9,) Jacob was 91 at Joseph's birth. Joseph was 110 at his death which carries us to the close of Genesis. I agree with Ida and Ada Garrett that the shepherd had 7,554 sheep. Answer to the question, "Who are the witnesses referred to in Heb. 27, which Paul says surrounded us?" The characters mentioned in the preceding chapter. Answer to question, "Where and at what time did Christ appear to above five hundred?" At Jerusalem, and on the first day of the week. (Luke 24: 33-36; John 20: 19.) Answer to question in March 26, "How many quotations did Paul use in writing to Timothy?" One, viz: "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn," found in 1 Tim. 5: 18, quoted from Deut. 25: 4. Answer to E. L. L.'s question in same number, "But whenever it turns to the Lord, the evil is taken away; what does it personate?" The heart. (1 Cor. 3: 5) Answer to Bro. Reccord's questions in ADVOCATE of April 5. (1) The seven things which God hates are, "A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren." Prov. 6: 16-19. (2) Melchisedec was without father and mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, that he might be a type of Christ. "Having neither beginning of days nor end of life," referring to him as a priest, and not as a man, as he did not enter his office as did other men. Bro. Lauderdale's question in the same number: "What was the kinship between Queen Esther and Mordecai?" They were cousins. (Esther 2: 7.) Answer to his riddle, Balaam's ass. (Num. 22: 28.) ADA THURMAN.
McMinnville, Tenn.

THE ASSEMBLY.

Dear Bro. Poe: What day does Paul have reference to in tenth chapter and twenty-fifth verse of Hebrews. "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together as the custom of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day drawing nigh." (New revision.) Is it a command to the Christian to meet and partake of the bread and wine on every first day of the week? Please answer through the ADVOCATE and oblige, JAS. H. THORNTON.

The day referred to, we think, is the day of all days—the coming of Christ. The apostles themselves wrote, and exhorted Christians to be ready for the coming of the Lord, as though he were to come in their day. They did not know when he would come. The assembly which is not to be neglected, doubtless refers to our Lord's day meeting, for worship, exhortation, and edification. No Christian should fail to attend this.

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

The Bible Class.

Dear Bro. Poe: This is the beginning of the protracted meeting season, and I am afraid that during this season the "Bible Class" will be neglected by both teachers and pupils. I am afraid that even Bro. Poe will lose sight of his Bible Class. I hope this will not be the case. That it may not be, I lift a warning voice now. Those who go to protracted meetings, and hear and learn so much that is good, ought to remember that all of the Class are not so fortunate. Many cannot go, and this part of the Class, for that very reason, take most interest in the Bible Class. Let them not be forgotten. Let the good things that we hear and learn be given to the Class. It is a blessed thing to receive good things. This we all know by experience. There is but one thing more blessed—that is to give. Jesus says, "Freely you have received, freely give." This applies exactly to gospel knowledge. Let us act on it. When we learn anything that is good, let us be in haste to give it to others. He who imparts knowledge has none the less, but all the more, because he gives. If all the Class would act on this principle, what a noble class we would be. How Bible knowledge would grow, and good result!

I would remind the Class that there are many questions submitted, that have not been answered for the Class. Doubtless very many, if not all of them, have been answered in the minds of some of the Class; but this is not enough. Let all the Class have the benefit of the answers. Write answers to Bro. Poe. Remember if you love to read the answers given by others, they will enjoy just as well reading answers given by you. Hence, give as well as receive. I think the thanks of the Class are due to Bro. Elam for the clear and satisfactory answers given to questions in late number of GOSPEL ADVOCATE. There was one question he did not answer; viz., "What king had sixty daughters?" That certainly was a lively family where there were sixty girls. I guess all the boys knew who the old gentleman was, and where he lived. Those girls had only twenty brothers, and I expect sometimes they were right glad to see a beau. I re-commit the question to the Class, hoping some one will answer. What has become of Bros. Reccard and Gowen? I hope they have not lost interest in the Class. Let us hear from you, brethren.

I wish now to ask the Class several questions that I hope will engage their attention. There is more in them than at first appears. (1) What day is alluded to in John 19: 31, and Luke 23: 54-56, called "the Sabbath day?" This brings up another question. (2) How many Sabbath days belonged to the Jewish religion? If more than one, name them, and tell which one is alluded to in the above citations. An answer to this question will throw light on the question, how long did Jesus lay in the grave? (3) How many hours did Jesus lay in the grave? Do not answer before you have examined or re-examined the subject. I would like to see some of our scribes try their hand on these questions. Bro. Elam, I call on you as one among many.

B. W. LAUDERDALE.

How often do we say, with St. Augustine, "Make me holy, but not yet?"

Correspondence.

Prof. Florence Rees, of Bowling Green, Ky., is in our city. Preached for us last Lord's day night. He is here in the interest of his school in Kentucky. An excellent young lady made the good confession before many witnesses last Lord's day. Two took membership at night. Some bad boy had turned the water out of the tank, and therefore baptism was put off till Wednesday night. The church here has never been troubled with fits and jerks. It grows slowly; near one hundred additions within the last eighteen months. I have letters from the leading men in Indian Territory, which assure me we will be permitted to add to our Indian mission an Industrial school in October next. I will be in their council. The books, pamphlets and papers I sent over among them are doing good work. A number of Indians have called on me for books, papers, etc., since I returned from Arkansas, but I could not supply all; did the best I could. Since Bro. Askew died, we have no preacher among them, but our literature is effecting much. If the brethren would send by express, papers, etc., which they have piled away, and are not read, I could place them in hands where good might be done. No matter if they are old, religious papers are always fresh to those who have never seen them. Money to build our house comes in slowly. I think now I will give my whole time to our Indian Mission next year. It must succeed. I have circulated papers, books and pamphlets, among them until they know me, and expect something to read when they meet me. I received a number of Texas Christian this week. Many thanks. I sent them off at once. I want to flood the Territory with good religious literature. Thanks for all the help I can get.

R. W. OFFICER.

Dear Bro. Poe: What has become of your Bible Class? I have not heard of it for some time. I suppose that I have answered twenty or thirty questions in the last six weeks. Bro. Barnes being a teacher, and in a High School, at that, you should not allow him to ask your Class questions that he can't answer. He submits the following from a young brother: "Where did the river Jordan empty before the destruction of the cities of the Plain, and the forming of the Dead Sea? Well, I am not an adept in either ancient or modern geography, but I will venture to answer the question, and if any of the Class can give a better or more definite answer, we would like to have it. It emptied into—well, it emptied into a receptacle that God in his wisdom had prepared for it. E. L. L.

Bro. Poe: Had two additions by baptism at the Crawford school-house, Nacogdoches county. Set a little band of scattered disciples in order, and called it New Hope, because they now have a new hope of building up the cause of Christ. Promised to preach for them once a month. The brethren at Union, Rusk county, sent my wife a wagon load of provisions, in my absence, and made her heart glad, (and mine, too, after I got home.) That's right, brethren, don't forget the preachers' wives. The Lord of the vineyard said, "The laborer is worthy his meat."

GOD HARDENS THE HEART.

John said of Christ, "But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him. That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, Lord, who hath believed our report? And to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again, 'he hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart, that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart and be converted, and I should heal them.'"

We remark on this passage, (1.) We have heard brethren say, If it were impossible for persons to believe, God would not hold them responsible for their unbelief. But here it is said, God blinded their eyes and hardened their hearts, that they should not see, that they should not understand and be converted, and that they should not be healed."

This shows that a man may be unable to believe in Christ; yea, that God disables him to believe, and yet he is accountable for the inability. Indeed, we feel sure, that no one is unable to believe in God save through a perverseness of will for which the man is accountable.

The blinding of the heart is the same as the hardening of the heart. There is quite a number of examples of God hardening men's heart in the Bible. But not one heart did God harden until it had waxed gross, and refused to obey and honor God.

Matthew records the same prophecy of Isaiah and its application to these persons, and adds and gives as a reason why they could not believe, that "their heart is waxed gross, their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes, hear with their ears, should understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

What is attributed to God in John, is here attributed to the people themselves in Matthew. It is just as true that God has a part in the condemnation of every sinner, as it is that he has a part in the salvation of every child of God. The Christian is a co-worker with God in his salvation. The sinner is a co-worker with God in his condemnation.

God provides means and conditions by which man can be saved. God has provided conditions and means which bring condemnation to those who refuse to hear God. Man, by walking in the ways that God has provided for salvation, becomes a co-worker with God in his salvation. Man, walking in the ways ordained by God, is a co-worker with God in his condemnation. The gospel itself is a means of salvation to the believer, of condemnation, to the unbeliever.

God saves men in the sense of prescribing terms in which they can be saved, and characters worthy of salvation. Men save themselves, in the sense that they comply with God's terms of salvation! Make for themselves characters that God approves. God condemns men in the sense that he prescribes certain courses and characters that lead to condemnation. Men condemn themselves in the sense that they follow those courses that lead to ruin, and form those characters that are fitted for destruction. God is never in the Bible said to harden the heart or blind the eyes of a good man, or of one who desired to do right.

To a man who does not desire to do right, to honor or obey God, the gospel itself is a savor of death unto death. Again, Hebrews 4: 2, "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them, but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard." The failure to receive the word in faith, was the reason it did not profit. The reason it was not received in faith was that men did not desire to believe it. The will is the turning point with men in the reception of the truth. Men who do not desire to know the will of God, that they may do it, will never know it, in the sense of understanding and appreciating it. The good and understanding heart that alone brings forth fruit, is the heart that desires to know the will of God that it may embrace it.

It resolves itself into this then, that a heart set on doing evil, a heart that does not desire to do the will of God, God hardens. Why does he harden it? That it may not turn—escape the ruin its wickedness has brought on it. Take Pharaoh as an example. He was wicked, he was depraved, God raised him up to show his power to punish wickedness. To raise him up is not to make him wicked. He was wicked, God singled him out, held him up before the world as an example to the world of wickedness in high places, that "I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout the whole earth." To show his power and to declare his name, were the purposes for which he was raised up before the world.

His power was exerted as effectually in the case of every other persistent sinner as in that of Pharaoh, but it was not held up before the world in such way as to show his power and declare his name throughout the whole world. But in the trials of Pharaoh before the world, God, through Moses, demanded the release of his people to go into the wilderness to hold the feast. He refused, a slight punishment was visited upon him. He relented under that punishment for a time, so far as to agree they should go. There was no repentance of heart. It was merely a relenting so as to escape the punishment that was on him. God did not intend he should do this, so God hardened his heart that he refused to let them go. His heart was not softened, there was no desire to repent and do right. There was only a relenting while the punishment was upon him. God hardened his heart, that he did not thus relent so as to escape the divine vengeance that he had determined to inflict on him as an example to the world.

Hearts become so schooled in sin that they cannot repent. Whenever a heart delights in that which it knows is sin, I doubt if it can repent. Paul certainly intimates this when he declares that he obtained forgiveness because he committed his crimes ignorantly in unbelief. He thought he was doing right, so his conscience was kept pure. That is, he did not allow himself to do that which he knew to be wrong. A man who thus pollutes his conscience is beyond repentance; and when that man, under a sense of fear, might turn from a path that leads to a punishment for his crimes, God would harden his heart that he might rush down to his own deserved ruin. Not only did God harden Pharaoh's heart, that he did not turn away to escape the punishment, but he hardened the heart of the Jewish people, when they were set on going contrary to his will. When they desired to change his government when corrupted by the evil reign of the sons of Samuel, he testified the evil that would come upon them. That in doing it they were rejecting God as their ruler and king. Yet as they manifested clearly that they did not desire to honor God, he directed they should have their desires in a king. This was decreed by God as a punishment for refusing him as their only king.

God told Jeremiah he should not pray for the Jewish people. "I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim. Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me, for I will not hear thee." Chapter 2. Jeremiah brings a terrific arraignment against the Jewish people, saying, "I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice; yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart." He tells them, therefore, "I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them." In the fourteenth verse he tells Jeremiah, "Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble." The same is repeated in the fourteenth chapter. "From which we learn that God never hardens a man's heart, until he sins so heinously, persistently and knowingly that his destruction is determined upon. That when man, knowing the will of God, persists in his own way, refusing to hearken to God, and to defer to his wisdom, he very soon passes the line, beyond which he can find room for repentance. That man may so sin in turning from God and his will, that God will not hear him, will harden his heart to make sure and speedy his destruction, and that it is wrong for others to pray for him. Connect with this the language of John, "There is a sin unto death, I do not say you shall pray for it," and it is clear that man may pursue a course of sin, deliberately choosing to reject God's law, and very soon place himself beyond the pale of mercy.

These people who thus sinned beyond the pale of repentance were zealous worshippers of God in their own way. The sin unto death, spoken of by John, was by a brother, and was clearly not an immorality, but a deliberate turning away from the order of service ordained by God.

Place beside this the declaration of Paul, that they shall be condemned, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; and for this cause God shall send them a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." These were doubtless members of the church of Christ, moral men, but who refused to serve and worship God in God's own way, preferring their own ways of religious service. By these teachings we should be warned that we cannot too cautiously walk in the ways of God. We cannot too sedulously guard against following our own ways, or the ways of human beings, in serving the Almighty.

THE WAY THEY WORK.

A week or two since we gave a notice of the suicide of Judge Reid, of Kentucky, and of the fact that the bitter feeling that resulted in the cowardly and cruel beating of Judge Reid, by Cornelison, and in the suicide as the result of this, was greatly fomented, if not originated, by the bitter animosity that had grown up between the two societies formed by the women of the church at Mt. Sterling, Ky.,—one for helping home missions, the other foreign missions. Mrs. Reid, the wife of Judge Reid, was president of one; Mrs. Munnell, mother-in-law of Cornelison, was president of the other.

It seems that Mrs. Munnell is the wife of Elder Thos. Munnell, who has been the chief organizer and supporter of the societies in Kentucky. Bro. Munnell, in the Apostolic Times, of June 25, writes a lengthy article on the subject. We give a few extracts, merely to give an idea of the state of feeling that has been excited among the disciples, the rivalries and jealousies growing out of these societies. He says:

"While nobody seems to know anything definitely, the stories have it that I had in some way instigated the assault on Judge Reid; that the Woman's Home Missionary Society was also partly responsible for the assault, having hired it done; and as I favored that society's work, (as I do every other good work,) I became responsible from the quarter also. Then it is reported that both before the assault and after it, I had written and sent out a great many circulars over Judge Reid's district, and helped to defeat him, and in this way helped on the suicide. Then I seem to have gone before the elders of the Mt. Sterling Church and defended the assault. Then, again, it is said, I instigated all Mr. Cornelison's charges against Judge Reid; and it would not be very surprising, when I return from my next trip, if I should be charged with having instigated the Ashland horror; the murder of Judge Elliott; and that I shot Judge Reid.

"That while no man perhaps could endure the slanderous tongue as I have for the last two years and more, and come out altogether blameless, I believe I have kept fault down at the lowest minimum for any ordinary Christian man. I am entirely conscious of having taken the wisest course I could under the several trying circumstances in which I have been placed. But if judged by the holy hate of certain ones whom I expect to expose before long, I must appear far otherwise.

"The silly story, silenced by my private circular last year, was based upon my supposed opposition to the work of the C. W. B. M.—a society of which I am the originator, as I will soon show by letters in my possession. The real trouble, however, was not that. It was that I favored the Home Society (as well as the C. W. B. M.)—a noble society of sisters that, besides giving to Foreign Missions, have been and still are supporting three splendid missionaries in the mountains, who are the only missionaries we have in those regions this year. Our State Board is cultivating another part of the State, and is doing the most practical work it has ever done, and is taking no part in this disorderly, disreputable fuss promoted by the spirit of selfish ambition.

"Wise men going around in Lexington, shaking their heads and prophesying that my influence in Kentucky will soon pass away. No sooner had the foolish report that I had defended the assault upon Judge Reid, or something else equally foolish which I can't get them to tell me, reached South Kentucky, then they swallowed it whole and wrote me by the lightning express train that my name must come off the programme for the Mayfield meeting—such was the 'indignation felt' down there against me. This is not only surprising but discouraging. I have built up a standing among the leading minds of our brethren in all the States that kept me among the most trusted of our missionary leaders for twenty-one years, and yet any little ambitious upstart in Kentucky that assumes to know everything, has only to start some absurd report against me, and it is believed without question, and acted upon without a doubt. But notwithstanding all this, my influence will not suffer except with cranks, dudes and their supple friends.

"Nor has the home Society asked me to say what I have for them in this paper, but should they yet be compelled to defend themselves before the proper authorities, it will be a day of judgment to their detractors."

It will be seen how bitter the feeling that has been engendered by these societies. While differing across the heavens from Bro. Munnell on these questions, and believing his work hurtful to the cause of God, I have never believed him a bad man. But he, in his zeal for the societies, and in his success in building them up, has been put forward as the manager and organizer over his brethren. This has excited the envy and animosity of those under him. This must always so work. The whole action and spirit of these societies is contrary to the true spirit of Christ. It will be seen that Elder Munnell says the whole bitter feeling has grown out of his advocacy of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. According to him the other society tolerates no rival. He indicates the bitterness is on the part of leading men at Lexington. He intimates the end is not yet; that Cornelison is able to defend himself, and that the Woman's Home Missionary Society may be called upon to defend itself before the proper tribunal, whatever that may be, and that will be a day of judgment to the other side. Nor is all the trouble with the women. In the foreign Board, one set of partizans whisper charges of corruption against another set of the same Board. These whispers are so loud we hear them sometimes over here. We do not believe there is any corruption, but personal bitterness and animosity exist, and these societies afford the occasion of exciting them, and the means of spreading them.

The Lord not only knew what was in man, but he knew what was best for him. D. L.

APPOINTMENTS FOR PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Third Lord's day in July, at Pinewood, Tenn.; fourth Lord's day in July, and it may be over first in August, at Antioch, near Viola, Warren County, Tenn.; at Rich Pond Station, Ky., second Lord's day in August, beginning Wednesday night previous. This meeting in fact will be begun by Bro. B. F. Rogers first Lord's day in August, and we will join him Wednesday night. In North Mississippi from third Lord's day in August over first Lord's day in September, but do not yet know the points where meetings will be held. Will announce as soon as notified. At Watertown, Tenn, second Lord's day in September, and have promised one meeting or more in September, in Warren County, Tenn.—[E. G. S.]

THE TULLAHOMA MEETING.

As announced in the ADVOCATE, the above meeting was held, embracing the fourth and fifth Lord's days of June, and into first of July. It continued ten days and eleven nights, and resulted in six being baptized, and nearly twenty gathered in otherwise—some by letter, and some reclaimed. The few brethren that have been struggling hard and long to build up there, feel very much encouraged by the meeting. We were very much hindered by rain from time to time, during almost the entire meeting, and some nights almost rained out. But when not hindered by rain, we had large and attentive audiences, and thereby a good opportunity for seed-sowing, and we endeavored to improve it the very best we could, and we are satisfied much good was done in this way. The brethren have a good Lord's day school and Bible Class, and are doing much good, as we think, in this work. There is a noble little band of disciples here, and some real good workers, and we hope and pray that the cause may grow and become strong at this place. There are several churches of the denominations in the place, and, as is usual, there has been considerable prejudice and opposition. But we are glad to think this is giving way somewhat, and the generality of the people listen with more favor and attention, and we think if the brethren there will be faithful, there is a happy and prosperous future before them.

NEWSPAPERS, ETC.

What are newspapers for? What place do they fill? and why are they published? They are for disseminating knowledge of passing events, as they occur to mankind. They fill the place of the newgatherers of all vicinities, collecting and scattering for the benefit of the people. And they are published because there is always a desire in the human family to know the passing events of the present. These desires of men run out in many channels—such as commerce, politics, morality, religion, etc. Hence we have commercial papers, political, moral and religious papers; and none of these would be published were it not for this desire in the people. Hence it is an apt and true expression, that he that takes nor reads a paper "is far behind the times," or rather lives from day to day, as though he were in a land where no events ever occur, but where things that once were, remain the same. Suppose, in politics, that a person is contending for the same things to-day that were before the people twenty-five years ago, and attempts to agitate them upon the "stump," or in the papers, would he not be laughed to scorn,—those issues are dead, new and living ones are now before us—issues that must be met now, and now alone.

So in religion, suppose, instead of the present living issues that must be met now, people fight over again the issues of three or four hundred years ago, entirely ignoring those that are continually being thrust before us for action, would it be right—would it accord with the teachings of Jesus? Did he fight over the sin of Adam, the sins of the Jews in the wilderness? No, no; but the sins and evils of the then present. These were the issues he met and corrected. So then, with us, let us not hunt up the evils of the past (save only to illustrate) and belabour them, but let us meet in conflict the evils of the present, and bringing them to the standard, (God's holy word) dispose of them that they may not contaminate the rising generations; for they will have enough to engage their time and talents in contending against the evils that will arise in their days. Now, how and where are we to find these issues? Only in the papers of the present. And he who would know them, must seek them there. This, then, makes it incumbent upon every one who desires to "battle for the right," to know exactly where and against what to make the attack. And these can only be learned from the papers.

Then it is evident, that every disciple of the Lord, to do efficient work, should take a paper, and the paper that proposes to make it the business, of its publication, to present these issues as they arise; and in presenting them, show by the ever faithful gospel, their certain tendency for good or evil; and showing their evil, call upon every soldier of Jesus to take his stand against that evil, though he be in the minority. Then let us hear no more excuses for not taking a paper,—a paper published in the interest of the cause for which God, Jesus, the Holy Spirit, apostles and good men have done so much. The disciple that neglects to inform himself (and this can only be done through a paper published for that purpose) upon the present evils that are now pushing themselves against the truth as it is in Jesus, is procuring to himself condemnation, by hiding his eyes from the light as it is presented to us in the papers as it is shining day by day. Disciples, neglect not the Bible, but study it, that you may be able to meet the evils of the day as they are presented in the great vehicle of thought—the newspaper. J. K. BLACKMAN.

Matthew Henry says that no man has any more religion than he can show in time of adversity and trial.

Obituaries.

Died, at her home in Jackson county, Tennessee, Sister Rebecca Taylor, November 6, 1883. Sister Taylor was born July 21, 1804, and was married to Bro. Taylor in June, 1827, and became a member of the church of Christ in August, 1860, at Mt. Pisgah, in Bedford county, under the preaching of Bro. E. G. Sewell. It is due her to say she was a Christian after the apostolic order. She was loved by all who knew her. As Sister Taylor, though near eighty years of age, would make her way to the place of meeting, with her stick in hand, to steady her tottering limbs and furrowed face over the hills, her very appearance presented earnestness in the cause she was advocating. She seemed to have but one trouble when leaving this world. She had but one child out of the arms of Jesus here, and she was then confined to the bed with lung disease. She seemed to hate to leave her in that condition, but so it was she died, and the writer attended her burial. After the exercises were over, I was requested to go to Mr. Frizzell's, and preach that evening for the benefit of his wife—Sister Taylor's daughter, and the same evening, November 7, 1883, we took Sallie Frizzell to a trough of water, and buried her with her Lord in baptism. She rejoiced to know she had obeyed the Lord, but seemed to regret that she had put it off so long. I met with the brethren and sisters once or twice after that, and complied with her request, partook of the emblems with her. She enjoyed the company of the brethren and sisters. Sister Frizzell suffered on till February 11, 1884, when death took her from her loving husband, and five children. I believe though she is gone to join the family on the other shore. That her husband and children may all strive to meet her in a better world, is the earnest prayer of
J. P. WHITEFIELD.

PRAYER.

"Ask, and it shall be given you."—7: 7.

There is one thing very certain, my friends, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ, the great founder of Christianity, believed in prayer. Some people say they do not, and others do not know whether they do or not, but he believed in it. There are too great proofs that he did. First, he took great pains to teach his disciples to pray. By parable, precept, and illustration, he taught them to pray. Secondly, he prayed a great deal himself. Now if there ever was any one in this world that could afford to live without prayer that one was the Lord Jesus. He had no sin; he was God. Why should he pray? But he did pray a great deal, both in public and in private. Before delivering this great discourse on the Mount from which I have taken this text, he spent the whole night in prayer. On one occasion when the people sought to make him king, he withdrew into the mountain alone to pray. At another time having sent his disciples across the sea he went up into the mountain apart to pray, and was there alone when their ship was tossed by the wave. And finally, when the great trouble came upon him, he went out into the gloom of the garden and there kneeled down and prayed three times most earnestly. Do you not see that it is perfectly clear that he believed in prayer? Now, if he believed in it, I believe in it, for he is the source of all I know.

There are questions about prayer which any child can ask, but which no philosopher can answer. Some one tells me that he does not believe in prayer because he cannot understand it. In the name of sense, does he believe in space? He cannot budge an inch without moving in space, but he does not understand space. Does he understand time? Can he explain time?

Here in the text Jesus has taught us to pray. This duty he enjoins three times. Why did he waste words three times? He did not waste words like some people who utter the same words three times because they cannot find three thoughts to express. He repeated them three times for the very reason that makes it necessary for us to think of them here to-day. This is a very old text, and I presume that when I announced it, some of you were led to say that nothing new can be said about prayer. Why it is the old subject about which we have been hearing all our lives. It is so common. But, my friends, it is common only to our surface minds, and to our too common practical neglect.

How difficult it is for us to realize what we are when we pray. I was very deeply impressed once by a prayer of a peculiar kind. It was in a deaf and dumb institution. Every eye was fixed upon the leader whose slow and reverent movement led them in their prayer. Every soul was eager, and seemed to be straining every power to come into communication with God. It was so still—no sound, no voice. I could almost hear my heart beat. I said, this is prayer. Now the Lord knew our proneness to the lack of earnestness, and he seeks to impress our minds by repeating three times almost the same words.

And then he knew that we need to be stimulated to persevere in prayer. We are so easily tempted to give over to despair. And so he repeats them three times to stir up our hearts to persevere in prayer.

And in addition, he appeals to our sympathy by that tenderest relation, the parental relation, that he might encourage us to continue in prayer. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" There is one word here which I beg you to observe. Parents sometimes make mistakes. We are all so unworthy, and sometimes petulant and selfish. But practically parents know how to give good gifts to their children. But O "how much more" doth our Heavenly Father know how to give good things to them that ask him! How much more! As much as he is greater and better than man. As much as the heavens are higher than the earth, and his ways and thoughts than ours. He is never out of tune. He never can be overpersuaded. He is too wise to err; too good to be unkind. He will never give us what will not be best for us.

I remember many years ago one Sunday afternoon, far from here I sat in an upper room by the side of a coffin in which lay the body of a dear child—no matter whose child. A small boy came to me with a deep feeling, and showing how far sometimes children penetrate into the deep mysteries of life and spiritual things, said to me: "Uncle, I want to ask you something." I said: "Well." Said he, "Does God always give us what we ask him for?" And I hardly knew what to answer, and I said: "Why do you ask?" Said he, "Because I asked him to spare my dear little cousin, and he didn't do it, and I do not know what to think about it." The child touched bottom. We have all had the same difficulty. I said to him, "Suppose that your father should send you off to boarding-school, and should say to you, as he bade you good-by, 'Now, if you want anything, just ask me for it and I will send it to you.' You do not suppose that he meant to say that he would send you anything that would not be best for you? Now, God says, 'Ask, and it shall be given you;' but he does not say that he will give us anything that is not best for us." And I said, "Does that help you any?" And he said, "I think I see." Now that is just as far as I have ever been able to go, "I think I see."

But do you not see, dear friends, that right here is the very privilege of praying to God? Why, if God should give us everything we ask him for, the very best and wisest of us would almost be afraid to pray. How many times good people have prayed for certain things and they did not get them. Many years afterward they saw that it would have been a thousand pities if God had given them what they asked for. When we shall climb the shining steep of heaven and from the light of the eternal world look back on this enigma of human life, we shall have nothing for which to praise God more than for not having given us everything for which we asked him here on earth. He knows how to give. He sees what is best. So what at first may seem one of the greatest discouragements, may be a blessing in disguise.

Let us now try to see what connection all this has with the great discourse which Christ has been delivering. If you will turn back to the first verse of the seventh chapter you will there observe that he says, "Judge not." O how hard that is to do—never to pass judgment in thought or word on any one. Men and women, boys and girls, "Judge not." Who can obey that command? How is it to be done? "Ask, and it shall be given you." And then a little later he says, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs." We are not to judge men, yet we are to know them. Who can do both? "Ask, and it shall be given you." And then a little farther back he has told us to take no thought of the morrow; that is, be not anxious. To-morrow will bring its own cares.

You say, "I know that, but how hard it is to do it." Mothers, shall you not be anxious for your sons? Wives, shall you not be anxious for your husbands? Shall not the poor be anxious for the morrow? Our only freedom from anxiety is, "Ask, and it shall be given you." Then, again, you say that the morality Jesus taught is too high for you. He requires control not only of sinful acts, but sinful feelings. The murderous lust as well as the murderous deed, is sin; the lustful look as well as the lustful action. You shall be able to come up to this high morality only by praying, for Jesus did not cease his discourse till he had said, "Ask, and it shall be given you."

Why do we not all pray always? Some are ashamed to pray, but they are not ashamed of sin. The poet Coleridge wrote something to the effect that prayer is foolish. But on his death-bed he called his nephew to him and told him that he was sorry he had written those words, and that now he believed that prayer is the noblest act of man, and sinking back on his pillow he said, "Lord, teach us how to pray." Dear friends, shall we not all pray? O weak man, tossed on the billows of life's uncertain sea, is there no reason why you should pray? Are you perfectly safe? Have you no sins, no temptations? There are some of you here to-day who have ceased to pray. Let me call your attention again to those strong words we sung in the second hymn this morning. Did you notice them?

O may my hand forget her skill,
My tongue be silent, cold and still,
This throbbing heart forget to beat,
If I forget the mercy-seat.

RELIGIOUS INDIFFERENCE.

The one overwhelmingly sad truth that perpetually confronts us in this land of churches and religious opportunities is, that the great bulk of the people are living in absolute neglect of religion; in apparent unconcern about their soul's well-being. The question is discussed in religious papers, at ministers' meetings, and in conventions both in this country and in Europe. How shall we reach with the gospel the masses? They will not come to the churches. It was once hoped that through the efforts of evangelists, holding meetings in public halls, pastors and Christian people co-operating, they might be reached, but where hundreds come, thousands stay away—thousands who live on from day to day without God and without hope, who care nothing for the Bible, who never bend the knee in prayer, who are hurrying on, except they repent, to a woeful eternity.

Now with the accumulation of evidence that men have, in this Christian land, is this wisdom? Is this national? Is this what intelligent men, and many of them are intelligent, would call prudence? No! There is nothing in this world more certain to befall every man than death; and there is nothing more certain in the world to come than the judgment throne, at which every man must give account of himself to God. To trifle here; to be insensible to the piety and mercy of God; to refuse the love and blood of Christ; to neglect the great salvation, when it is brought to the very doors of the people, and urged upon them, is the most consummate folly of which they can be guilty. The Christian religion does not prohibit attention to their daily vocations; on the contrary, it enjoins "diligence in business;" at the same time, however, and with mightier emphasis, it enforces the cares of the soul, the importance of which is indicated by our Savior in the question; "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world"—all its riches, all its honors, all its enjoyments—"and lose his own soul?"—Christian Intelligencer.

The true spirit in which to come to study of the Bible is that of a little child, waiting to be taught, knowing that there is much to learn, and, by God's grace determined to learn it, if God will. No native brightness of intellect, no acquired power of critical insight, no wealth of knowledge, can take the place of that humility and teachableness which alone will reveal, through the blessing of God's Spirit, the hidden treasures of the word of God. Only in that of docility and in that spirit of reverent humanity will the study of the Scriptures become the best which it may become.—S. S. Times.

ROBUST HEALTH

Is not always enjoyed by those who seem to possess it. The taint of corrupted blood may be secretly undermining the constitution. In time, the poison will certainly show its effects, and with all the more virulence the longer it has been allowed to permeate the system. Each pimple, sty, boil, skin disorder and sense of unnatural lassitude, or languor, is one of Nature's warnings of the consequences of neglect.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only remedy that can be relied upon, in all cases, to eradicate the taint of hereditary disease and the special corruptions of the blood. It is the only alternative that is sufficiently powerful to thoroughly cleanse the system of Scrofulous and Mercurial impurities and the pollution of Contagious Diseases. It also neutralizes the poisons left by Diphtheria and Scarlet Fever, and enables rapid recuperation from the enfeeblement and debility caused by these diseases.

Myriads of Cures

Achieved by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, in the past forty years, are attested, and there is no blood disease, at all possible of cure, that will not yield to it. Whatever the ailments of this class, and wherever found, from the scurvy of the Arctic circle to the "veldt-sore" of South Africa, this remedy has afforded health to the sufferers by whom it was employed. Druggists everywhere can cite numerous cases, within their personal knowledge, of remarkable cures wrought by it, where all other treatment had been unavailing. People will do well to than AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Numerous crude mixtures are offered to the public as "blood purifiers," which only allure the patient with the pretense of many cheap doses, and with which it is folly to experiment while disease is steadily becoming more deep-seated and difficult of cure. Some of these mixtures do much lasting harm. Bear in mind that the only medicine that can radically purify the vitiated blood is

THE LORD'S MISSIONARIES.

A number of writers, in different papers, recently, in endeavoring to show that congregations should send out, direct, and sustain evangelists, have referred to the case of the sending of Barnabas and Saul, Acts 13: 1-5. As many erroneous ideas prevail concerning this passage, and it is made to do service in proving the very opposite of what it teaches, it seems expedient to me to call the attention of the readers of the ADVOCATE once more to its doctrine. The following facts are worthy of note:

1. It is not said that the church sent them on this evangelistic tour, or that it had anything to do with sending them.
2. Nothing is said by the church or by its teachers, about their support.
3. Nothing is said about the field in which they were to labor, or about their being directed in the work by the church.

These are facts which no one will gainsay. Is it not remarkable that the passage which is most confidently relied upon to prove that congregations should send out, direct, and sustain evangelists, is perfectly silent with regard to the congregation's doing any of these things?

But it is claimed that Barnabas and Saul were sent away by the prophets and teachers in the church at Antioch, and that the prophets and teachers, being the representatives of the church, acted for it; so that after all the church sent them away. It is claimed as the church sent them, it was under obligation to sustain them; and if it sustained them it had the right to direct their labors. There would be some plausibility in this reasoning if the statement upon which it is all based, viz., that the prophets and teachers represented the church in sending them away, were true. But this is not true as the passage plainly shows; they acted not for the church in this matter, but for another party. When the apostles of Jerusalem appointed the seven to serve tables, they acted for the church, since the church had selected the seven for this work. They were chosen, or called to the work, by the church; then they were separated to it, or formally appointed over it, by the apostles, by prayer and the laying on of hands. But not so in the case before us: the church did not call Barnabas and Saul to this work; it did not elect them to it, or in anywise intimate that it desired them to go about it. No, no; the Holy Spirit called them to the work, so the record expressly says, and commands them to be separated unto it.

It is evident therefore that the prophets and teachers in separating Barnabas and Saul to this work by fasting, prayer and laying on of hands, were representing the Holy Spirit and not the church at Antioch. We are expressly taught that the Spirit called them to the work, and sent them forth; we know that he went with them, guiding them in all that they said, and directing them as to where they should go. If a church is responsible for the support of a preacher when it sends him out and directs his labors, is not the Holy Spirit, for the same reason, responsible for the support of the preacher whom he sends and directs? Observe the Spirit's phraseology; he says "Separate me, Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." That is, turn them over to me; I have called them to a work, and I am now ready to send them forth to do it.

Evidently they were the Lord's missionaries, being "called and sent" by his Holy Spirit.

There is not a vestige of scriptural proof that any church or body of men ever, in apostolic times, sent a man upon an evangelist tour. There are cases in which the church sent men to visit young converts, to teach and exhort them, and to impart to them spiritual gifts; but not a single case in which a congregation sent a man to preach the gospel to sinners. These reflections lead me to call attention to the "Lord's plan" for spreading the gospel. The Lord himself is the sender of evangelists. In the great commission he says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation;" and he adds, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." But what does the expression, "I am with you," mean? It was a familiar one to the Jew, and he understood its meaning well enough. Read Deuteronomy 2: 7, "For the Lord thy God hath blessed thee in all the works in thy hand: he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: these forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing."

When God was with them they lacked nothing. It mattered not whether they were surrounded by friends or foes; whether men helped them or opposed them; whether they were encamped by the wells of Elim, under the cooling palm trees, or whether they marched through the arid desert; God was with them, and they lacked nothing. And just so it is with us; when God is with us we lack nothing. He withholds from us no good thing. God said to the preachers, go, I am with you; and that settled the question of support and direction with them. Hence no evangelist of New Testament times ever made a contract with any man or body of men for his support; nor does it appear that anyone of them ever desired such a thing. They understood that that matter was already settled. God had said, "I am with you," and that meant that they should lack nothing. That commission and contract has been handed down to us. Paul gave it to Timothy and directed him to give it to faithful men who should be able to teach others also. The contract lasts "even unto the end of the world."

The gospel plan for the spread of the good news, then, is this:

1. God is the sender. He strengthens and qualifies the faithful evangelist for his work, and directs him in it.
2. Every Christian should preach the gospel as he has opportunity and ability, giving all diligence to the work, and trusting God to guide him and care for him.
3. The Lord promises to such that he will be with them to the end of the world; (that is, they shall lack nothing that is good for them.) By this plan the work was done in the first age of the church. There was no human missionary society needed, for the Lord was the great missionary sender; the evangelist was not troubled about his support, for he believed God when he said that he would be with him: there were no financial agents, general secretaries, etc. to raise money for the evangelists, for they were not needed: God's people contributed liberally to those that did the work, the Lord himself seeing to it that each worker got enough. There were no "middle men" needed. It would have required as much to support them as to maintain the evangelist. We need not concern ourselves about God's part of the work; all that is necessary is for each individual to preach with all diligence as he can, being content with food and raiment for the day, and not desiring to lay up for the morrow.

If all who are gasconading about State meetings, missionary societies, conventions, co operations, etc., would thus go about the work, ever striving to see how much they can give to the Lord, how much they can do in his service, never stopping to compare themselves with other men, never making the performance of their duty dependent upon another's doing his, the Lord's plan would then be in full force, and a vast deal more would be accomplished than is now being done.

Of course men will not do this; they have never been content to work by the Lord's way, they are not now, nor is it likely that they will ever be. "For being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own, they have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God." Blessed is the man who dares to forsake the crowd, and to walk in the way of the Lord,

MEAFORD.

The church at Meaford, Canada, where I am now engaged in a meeting, met to break bread for the first time about thirty years ago. There were six members in all at that time. It was about ten years before they had a meeting-house; yet in all these years they have not failed to meet, except perhaps on one or two occasions. The church has not employed a pastor to take charge of it in all these years; but for a year or two they sustained Bro. H. B. Sherman as evangelist. The little congregations that are struggling without meeting-houses at Huntsville, Scottsboro and Gadsden, Ala., and at Savannah, Ga. should take courage from this example.

HERE IT IS.

A cotemporary writes as follows on the support of evangelists, in speaking about the "trust theory," he says:

"There is only one way that I know of to 'trust the Lord,' and that is to rely upon his promises. If he has ever promised the evangelist that if he will preach the gospel he shall be supported, I am willing to believe it, and act upon it, but it seems to me to produce the 'thus saith the Lord,' will prove a difficult task. I can see no trust in believing that my friend will give me a thousand dollars, unless he has promised it, and I fail to see how to expect our Father to do a thing that he has never promised is 'trust.' There is no promise made in the word of God for providences to evangelists as such."

I call the brother's attention to a document known as the Great Commission, found in Matt. 28: 19-20. It reads thus: "Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

The last clause of this quotation contains a promise which is very dear to my heart, a promise of God's presence even unto the end of the world. I wonder if our brother overlooked this? or if he considered it as unworthy of being ranked with the promises? or if he considered it as not being particularly applied to evangelists? Perhaps the latter supposition is the correct one. It is clear I think that this promise is made to evangelists and teachers. The nations are to be disciplined and taught; it required both evangelists and teachers to do these works. Here then we have Jesus addressing the public speakers of the church, (including evangelists evidently,) saying unto them, Go, make disciples of all nations; baptize them; teach them; and then comes the promise, I am with you to the end of the world. Here then is a promise to a particular class in which evangelists are included. What does this mean? Is there much in it?

Let all that are interested in settling this question carefully consider the following passages:

Deut. 2: 7, "For the Lord thy God hath blessed thee in all the works of thy hand: he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: these forty years thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing."

Deut. 31: 6, "Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee."

Heb. 13: 5-8, "Be free from the love of money; content with such things as ye have: for himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee," etc.

If a man can say in truth, "This promise is mine, the Lord is with me always," he need not be concerned about food and raiment.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

W. E. Hall has just closed a meeting of one week in Union City, with thirty additions.

As an offset to Bro. Bradley's church, that could only sing, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross," J. D. Wells tells of a young preacher, who, in his zeal for a singing class, forgot the Lord's supper at meeting.

Married, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Lucy A. Morris, on Hollis' Creek, Robertson County, Tenn., July 1, 1884. By W. B. Wright, Bro. J. M. Frey, to Miss M. J. Morris. May heaven's blessings attend them.

Sister E. A. Eddings has been on a three months' visit to South Carolina and Georgia. She writes: "I never saw a Christian in South Carolina nor Georgia, till I came to Atlanta. There I saw a few. I thought we had better send out missionaries to carry the gospel to them. They appeared to have no use for the Bible. Other books have taken its place."

Two appointments on our Mississippi trip are announced. The first one begins at Thyatira on the third Lord's day of August; the second one at Antioch on the fourth Lord's day of same month. The appointments in Warren County Tenn., are one near Towle's mill third Lord's day of September, and one near Irving College the fourth Lord's day of September. These two meetings are to be the missionary work of the congregation at McMinnville. How many other congregations will do likewise? E. G. S.

H. H. M., Rocky Mount, Bossier Parish, La., June 24, writes: "Our evangelist, J. B. Davis, is doing good work for the Master's cause, in his field of labor. Union Hill church has had six additions this year; two from the world, and four from the Baptists. On Friday night before the first Lord's day in this month, he began a meeting at a Union church-house, near Bellevue, (our parish site,) and closed Lord's day evening. Two took their stand on the Bible from among the Baptists, and one man confessed; and as his wife was not able to attend the meeting he was not baptized until fourth Lord's day, as she wanted to be baptized at the same time. Bro. Davis requested me to do the baptizing. I agreed, though I have not been set apart to the eldership, only by his request, in behalf the church. A few remarks from you upon such an action might be of some benefit. I am going to work with the few we have there, and try to build up this community. Bro. Davis will be with us again in August, and will try to bring Bros. Crawford or Breedlove, and hold us a week's meeting." [There is no doubt its all proper.—Ed.]

OWEN'S STATION SCHOOL.

We invite the attention of friends and brethren to this school. The seventh annual session will open August 18. The constant effort has been, and will still be, to conduct a school worthy of the confidence and patronage of Christian parents. We do not claim to have the cheapest school in the land, but we feel assured that for the advantages offered, and the good influences surrounding, a more satisfactory school cannot be found. We ask our friends to make inquiries. Address, W. Lipscomb, Brentwood, Tenn.

W. N. McCain, Coldwater, Miss., June 29, writes: "As our State has for many years been in a state of lethargy, and as I feel that there is some premonition of our people waking up, I think now is the time for us to make one grand effort to help throw off the sectarian yoke, and let the people be free. I had a meeting at Jackson's Grove, in Tallahatchie county, on the fourth Lord's day in June. Large and attentive hearing, and at the close of our discourse at eleven o'clock I extended an invitation, and a very excellent lady of the Baptist church came forward and took her stand on the Bible."

W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., June 8, writes: "On the fifth Lord's day in June, I preached to a small congregation at Bagdad. On Thursday following, I found Bro. Rogers at Hickory Grove, Monroe County, Ky., where I remained until Saturday. Preached Lord's day and night to good congregations at Tompkinsville; at Poplar Log, two miles from town at 3:30 p. m. to a large crowd. Bro. Rogers closed the meeting at Hickory Grove, with four additions, and one reclaimed,—three from the Baptists, and one from the world. One of the above number had been excluded from the Baptist church because he did not believe their doctrine. No wonder, for he had been reading the Bible."

T. C. Little writes: "On the 22nd day of June I had the pleasure of speaking twice for the congregation at Harpeth, near Eagleville, Rutherford County, Tenn. Our assembly was not large, though attentive and respectful. This was my first visit to this place since I united with the disciples. It is only a few miles from where I was born, and where I spent the first three years of my married life. Many changes with people and country since we left them nearly twelve years ago. Met and preached to relatives who do not hear much of our teaching, therefore have very incorrect ideas of it, friends whom we left without God or hope, have developed into active, earnest members of the church. This seems to be a live, earnest little band, struggling hard for the masteries. Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

W. A. Glenn, Sacramento, Ky., July 7, writes: "We are striving to save men and women on the gospel plan here, but the opposition is strong against us. We have had two protracted meetings in the last twelve months, and have gathered some strength to the cause. We have no house of worship of our own. We have been using the Methodist church, but have now secured the use of a neat school house; so we meet on Lord's day and break the loaf. We have no regular preaching; ask assistance in that line from any of our preaching brethren that can help us. With a little help, we will be out of the brush; then we can say come and preach for us and we will aid you. I write the above that you may know our condition, with the hope of your co-operation in the work of building us up. We are ten miles from the Owensboro & Russellville Railroad. South Carrollton is our nearest depot."

Robert Kirby, Marrowbone, Cumberland County, Ky., July 6, writes: "Another good meeting closed to-day at Hickory Ridge. On last Saturday I commenced a meeting at this place, and closed to-day. I preached seventeen discourses, and the result was seventeen added to the Lord; all by confession and baptism. We also organized a church at the same place. Our prayer is that the good Lord may bless them and the entire neighborhood. Better people we never met in all our life. We labored hard to show the people the way into the kingdom of Christ. We had to leave some almost persuaded to become Christians. But they said, like Felix of old, Go for this time, and at a more convenient season, I will call for thee. O, that we had more workers in this county. Sectarianism is giving way here before the truth. Brethren, let us all do our duty, and it will not be long until the battle will be fought and the victory will be won. May the Lord bless all of our labors, is the prayer of the writer."

IF WE COULD KNOW.

If we could know,
Which of us, would be first to go,
Who would be first to breast the swelling tide,
And step alone upon the other side—
If we could know!

If it were you,
Should I walk softly, keeping death in view?
Should I my love to you more oft express?
Or should I grieve you, darling, any less—
If it were you?

If it were I,
Should I improve the moments slipping by?
Should I more closely follow God's great plan,
Be filled with sweeter charity to man—
If it were I?

If we could know!
We cannot, darling, and 'tis better so.
I should forget, just as I do to-day,
And walk along the same old stumbling way—
If I could know.

I would not know
Which of us, darling, would be first to go.
I only wish the space may be long
Between the parting and the greeting song;
But when or where or how we're called to go—
I would not know. —Selected.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

FROM UNCLE MINOR.

You have written me so many kind letters of late, that I must thank you for them. I would be glad to notice and answer all your questions if I could, but this would make my letter too long; so you must be content to have mere mention.

Lizzie Lanier, I think you do very well for one so young; hope you will have a good Sunday-school at Salem, and that Bro. Turner will preach for you often, at least until he teaches many others how to preach the gospel.

And here is little Mary Hill, of Cedar Plains, Ala. Am glad you call Sunday Lord's day, and Bro. King elder, if he is an old man. You say you have a large church house, do you have a large congregation when you have no preacher? Have you a good church-school, or Sunday-school, as it is sometimes called?

Dear little Gus Sweeney, away out in Texas, thinks enough of Uncle Minor and the readers of the Advocate, to give us some news that always cheers our hearts. He tells about his good father being a preacher, and the day he wrote there were two additions to the church at Posterville. I have never met your father that I know of, yet I love him for the earnest work he is doing for the Master. I hope you will grow up to be a good man too; and if you are not a little soldier of the cross already, hope you soon will be.

Little Gerty Goodwin, your letter was so simple and good that I just wished I was near enough to take you up in my arms and give you a kiss for it. You will soon be old enough to be a Christian. Learn to read the Bible, and as soon as you find out what Jesus wants you to do, do it the best you can, and you will then be a Christian. I hope your grand-pa and ma will come to see you often, and that you will always be good and kind to them.

Ida Collins, you are very thoughtful. I hope your Sunday-school will prosper, and that the disciples will meet every Lord's day to break bread; this is more important than to have preaching. I was in your section since you wrote me your letter, but did not have time to call and see you; hope next time to spend Lord's day with you, and have a good time with all the children. I think your question has been answered by some little girl, don't remember who at present. Dan went off into idolatry, possibly this was the cause of his name being omitted.

Robbie Neil, I know you have good preaching. You ought to be a good people, to have such good men as Bros. Brents, Kidwill, Larimore, Campbell, and Williams, to instruct you; very few churches are thus blessed. I met with your congregation once several years ago, and heard Bro. Officer preach, I then thought you were getting on very well, except your Sunday-school was not as full as it should have been. My love to your papa and mamma, Bro. Brents, and others who remember me. I hope to see you all next fall.

Roma Rogers, I thank you for your first letter, it is a very good one; glad to hear prosperity of the church. If you are not a little Christian now, hope you soon will be; this is the object of Sunday-schools and all other work of church to teach old and young how to become Christians, and how to continue such.

And here is little Cola Gowan, only eight years old, who is blessed with the pleasure of living near Mars Hill, who has two good little brothers who are trying to live Christians. Cola, you should be very happy when you have such a good mother and father, and are surrounded so pleasantly. God has blessed you, and you should love him a great deal for his goodness to you. I will stop and talk for you all when I can.

Sue Lipscomb, am glad you have so much fun wading in the creek and carrying fish for the boys, but you must be careful, or you will get into water that is too deep for you. Do you always ask permission of your good mother when you take such pleasure trips? I believe in children having fun and pleasure, but your parents know best when and where you should go, so always consult them. I have spent many pleasant days on Cumberland Mountain, and would be glad to go with you this summer. Bro. Scobey is now living near me at Hopkinsville, hope you can go to school to him some of these days, and then I can get to see you. Watch your turkeys and be a good girl. My letter is already too long. May God bless you all, and help you to be good children, so that you may be happy in this life and happier in the life to come.

A YOUNG SAMARITAN.

A TRUE NARRATIVE.

"Why can't you get out of the way?" an impatient voice demanded as Marshall brushed rudely by and entered his uncle's gate.

"I beg pardon, I did not hear any one coming," answered a courteous, manly little fellow who had been jostled almost from the village plank walk.

Marshall entered the pleasant room where his aunt sat with her work, threw his cap in one direction, his books in another, and then dropped noiselessly into a chair.

"What an attractive boy Rufus Thorne is," said Auntie, still gazing out toward the street, "always so courteous and gentle."

Marshall looked up with a slight flush. "Oh, Auntie, he's too slow, too 'goody-good' for me. I don't see the use of being so awfully polite anyway. I don't intend to ask anything from anybody. I'm just going on my own way, and will be satisfied if people will let me alone."

Auntie looked at him gravely; this was a new home to Marshall, and its inmates were not yet quite accustomed to each other.

"You expect to go through the world following your own lead, going your own way, my dear?" she asked quietly. "You are a little fellow to be so self-satisfied."

"Oh, well, it's such a bother to have people around and to please them instead of one's self, it don't pay."

"Whether it pays is not just the point we should decide first. Is it right or is it wrong—true politeness is true kindness; it is consideration for the wishes and feelings of others. Do you remember where we read 'no man liveth to himself'? This would be a very unhappy world if each individual went his own way, caring nothing for others; we would have troublous times in such a realm of selfishness."

Marshall was fidgeting about in his seat, and when Auntie paused, started up suddenly and hurried out into the yard. Auntie sighed heavily and looked after him with tender solicitude. He was a strange boy in many ways, and so selfish and arrogant that often her loving heart ached with anxiety for his future.

Marshall played very little with other boys of his age, and never seemed to care particularly for their companionship; he worked with his tools, sat engrossed with a book, or occasionally would go off on a ramble with some acquaintance.

One afternoon, a warm, sultry day in early June, several boys started on a fishing excursion. Marshall being one of them. They sauntered down the long, shaded village street, out across the commons, then upon the narrow foot-bridge that spanned a deep ravine; here they paused a few moments, looking down and chatting merrily.

Loud voices were approaching and directly, turning an angle in the lane, came a large party of negro boys on the way to their baseball ground. They were jesting, frolicking and throwing stones, and suddenly, before they had discovered the boys on the bridge, as a sharp, smooth stone sped across the distance, a shrill cry of pain startled them all. It came from Marshall. The poor boy was clinging to the railing and the blood flowing copiously from a wound in his bare foot. His companions urged: "Come on, quick, we will get to the spring and bathe it." But the tears rolled down his cheeks as he cried: "I cannot move."

The party of negro boys came on and passed them, but a moment later one of them turned back, a strong, sturdy fellow with a kindly face, and asked sympathetically: "Can't you walk? Mercy, what a cut!" stooping down to look at the foot which now was injured. "Heah, you put yo arm roun' my neck, dis way," and Marshall was lifted tenderly, carried across the bridge and laid on the soft grass in the shade of a tree.

"Now you jes wait a minute," and off went Sam (this was his name) to the spring at the bottom of the ravine. He carried the fish bucket and directly returned with the clear cold water; with this he bathed the wound, then bound the foot with a wet handkerchief.

"Now you can't walk none, youngster, an I'll jes fotch you to de roadside by dat tree, an de fust wagin comes long you jest ax fur a ride."

Sam was very warmly thanked by all the boys and then went off whistling merrily after his companions.

Poor Marshall, it was a week before he could walk without pain, and the close confinement proved more irksome than he would have supposed. At last, however, the days when he could go no further than Auntie's sitting room were gone, but he found that their influence remained with him always.

How often he reverted to Auntie's tender care and teachings, and one day he said very humbly: "Now, Auntie, I know what you meant, true politeness is true kindness, it is not an empty, useless thing at all. I see now that this would be a very miserable world if each individual lived only for himself. I was so independent and said I would ask nothing of any one and just an unexpected stone made me helpless. Sam taught me a good lesson, though he is only a poor negro; how much more God must expect of me than of him."—Anna Robinson Watson, in New York Observer.

CLOSE QUESTIONS.

Your tempers. How are they? Do you become impatient under trial? fretful, when chided or crossed; angry, revengeful, when injured; vain, when flattered; proud, when prospered; complaining when chastened; unbelieving, when seemingly forsaken; unkind, when neglected? Are you subject to discontent, to ambition to selfishness? Are you worldly? Covetous of riches, of vain pomp and parade, of indulgence, of honor, or ease? Are you unfeeling contemptuous of others, seeking your own, boasters, proud, lovers of your own selves? Beware! These are the sediments of the old nature. Nay, if they exist in you, in however small a degree, they are demonstrative that the old man of sin is not dead. It will be a sad mistake if you detect these evils within, and yet close your eyes to them and continue to make professions of holiness. These are not infirmities; they are indications of want of grace.

If a man gives himself to evil, and leads his fellows astray, and their souls are lost in consequence, his subsequent repentance and forgiveness can not restore those lost souls to the first estate, in order to their being under his better influence. This is a terrible truth; but is none the less a truth for that. Let no one be encouraged to sin with the hope that by and by he can seek and obtain a forgiveness which shall not only be to his salvation, but the recovery to others of all the evil consequences of his transgressions.—Sunday School Times.

Before we can lift up other hands, our own must have been lifted by His good Spirit, and our own feeble knees must have been confirmed by much bowing at His footstool.—F. R. Haver-aal.

Godliness, like the river Nile, overflows its banks to enrich the soil and to throw plenty into the country.—Collier.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

Just to take the joy or pain

All we can not understand,
All that stings ;
Just to let him take the care

Finding all we let him bear
Changed to blessing.
This is all ! and yet the way,

Secret of a happy day,
Secret of his promised rest.

THE THIRD CHAPTER OF ACTS.

This chapter is not a long one, and is not as full in its details as the second chapter. Yet, having the fullness of the second chapter to go by, we can easily determine that the very same things were preached, and the same things done by the people. A very remarkable event occurred, which brought an immense number of people together at Solomon's portico at the temple. A man over forty years old that had never walked, was suddenly and thoroughly healed, so that he walked, and leaped, and held on to Peter and John, so that in a short time an immense throng of people were gathered together, and by this miracle were made both willing and anxious to hear men preach that could perform such wonders. And by this miracle they are prepared to believe what these men, Peter and John, may say. This is what miracles were for. No man was ever converted by a miracle. There is not an instance of anything of the sort in all the Bible. But miracles were to confirm the truth, and prepare the people to hear and embrace the truth, that the truth may make them free. We doubt not that this man that was healed, heard, believed, and obeyed the truth. If he did, he was saved ; if not, he was condemned. The miracle of healing had nothing to do toward saving him except to prepare him to believe the truth when spoken, and to embrace it and be saved by it. The miracle, so far as that was concerned, had just as much effect toward saving others as the man himself. It convinced others, as well as himself, that God was with these men, and thus prepared them, as well as the man himself, to hear with favor and confidence what the apostles had to say. Beyond this, the miracle of healing has no significance whatever to them or us.

So soon, therefore, as the people came together, wondering at the wonderful miracle performed, Peter began to preach the word of the Lord to them. He said : "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this, or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk ? The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jesus : whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you ; and killed the prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses. And his name through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know : yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all." Any one can see at a glance that the apostle preached the same gospel here at the temple that he preached in the second chapter of Acts. He preached the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, which is the gospel, the thing to be believed by all who would be saved. There is nothing said directly in this case regarding faith. But enough is said to show that they did believe. The miracle was before them to convince them of the truth of the gospel, which was plainly presented to them, and everything indicates that they believed, even in this chapter. They are soon commanded to repent. The second chapter shows that faith comes before repentance, and therefore Peter saw that they believed, or he would not have commanded them to repent, a thing which comes after faith, as is plainly shown in preceding chapter. But if this is not testimony enough that these people believed the gospel, the fourth verse in next chapter settles the question forever. It says : "Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed ; and the number of the men was about five thousand." This leaves no possibility of doubt in the matter. They did therefore already believe when the command to repent was given. Thus far, therefore, everything was precisely in the same order as in second of Acts. First the preaching of the gospel, secondly faith, thirdly repentance.

But in the next words the trouble comes in. The whole sentence is, "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." The only trouble is in the expression be converted. This in the common version is in the passive voice, as if it expressed something done for man, and not something he is to do for himself. But in the Greek this word is in the active voice, and in the revised version is rendered turn again. In some versions, simply turn. This shows that men are active in the whole matter of conversion. They were commanded to believe, to repent, and here to turn. But what is meant in this place by the word turn ? It embraces whatever comes between the word repent, and the promise of remission, or blotting out of sins. In second of Acts the command was, repent and be baptized, with the promise of remission of sins. But can baptism be represented in anywise by the word turn ? Certainly it can. Baptism is the act that puts men into Christ, as says Paul in sixth of Romans. Therefore baptism is the act that passes people across the line from the world into the church, and puts them into Christ, "in whom they have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. There is, therefore, a very great turning accomplished in baptism for the penitent Believer ; a turning from the world into the church, from out of Christ into him, and from a state of sin into a state of forgiveness. The word turn may therefore very appropriately be applied to baptism, as that ordinance accomplishes a wonderful turning.

A comparison of Peter's answer to the three thousand, and to what was said here in third of Acts, will show them to be in effect the same. In second of Acts we have first repent, secondly be baptized, thirdly for remission of sins, and fourthly you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. In third of Acts we have first repent, secondly turn, which necessarily involves baptism, thirdly that your sins may be blotted out, and fourthly times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. This comparison shows that there is not, and cannot be one particle of difference in what Peter preached on these two occasions. The same gospel, the same obedience, the same promise. The revised version putting the word turn instead of be converted saves us much labor in presenting this matter. And this version is especially significant on this point, since the version was made by the denominations altogether, our brethren having nothing to do in it. And it is a known fact that most of these denominations engaged in this work teach that man is passive in conversion. And as this is their teaching, would they not have so put it in their version if they could have found authority for it ? And as they have not so done, it is certain they could find no authority in the original word for it. Thus we are relieved by the very ones who have heretofore opposed us, from any further labor in the premises. And besides, as Peter was speaking as the Spirit gave him utterance, or rather as the Spirit of God was preaching through him, he would not, could not have preached one thing on the day of Pentecost, and another at Solomon's portico.

The very same gospel, and the same conditions of pardon were to be preached to every creature, and it cannot be that one thing was preached on the first occasion and another on the next. The practice of many preachers in seeking to make a difference in Peter's two sermons as given in these two chapters, makes the word of God contradict itself, and is better calculated to make infidels than believers. And besides, this passage in the third of Acts shows beyond all controversy what the expression for the remission of sins means in second of Acts. Some claim that for means because of, and some one thing, and some another, but nearly all the preachers of the denominations try to show that it does not mean what it says. They seem to care but little as to what else it may mean, just so they can show that it does not mean what it says. But this passage in third of Acts says "that your sins may be blotted out." This admits of no explanation, and must mean just what it says. Let any one make this mean 'because of, if he can. That your sins may be blotted out shows that their sins were not pardoned when the command was given, and could not be till the things commanded were done. And as the Spirit gave the same conditions of pardon on both occasions, the command to repent and be baptized was that their sins might be blotted out, might be forgiven. Thus the word of God is its own best interpreter. There need be no difficulty if men would only read and believe. And an immense amount of labor would be saved to the preachers, and a wonderful relief to the people would thus be made, if preachers would only read, think, and believe, and preach the word as Peter preached it. But very many preachers think they know better than Peter did, and some people even say that Peter ought not to have said what he did on the day of Pentecost. The trouble is, they cannot reconcile what Peter taught on these two occasions with their own theories of religion, and their experiences so called, and they think Peter must be wrong. If Peter were to come into any revival where people are taught that they must get religion, and preach as he did on Pentecost, and at Solomon's portico, he would be denounced as a Campbellite, and silenced or prosecuted for disturbing public worship. Let any man go into one and undertake to repeat what Peter said, and he will see how he will be disposed of. Now is not this strange, that Peter, the Holy Spirit, must be ostracised, silenced, and not allowed to speak to the people, while the opinions of men, not named in the word of God, must be presented instead? When did Peter, or any other inspired man, say to an alien sinner you must pray and be prayed for, that your sins may be pardoned? Never. And yet these are the very things said to alien sinners now, and that too at the very time that Peter said repent and turn, that your sins may be blotted out, thus leaving out the word of God and putting in the words of men. As the leaders of the Jews caused those people to err, so the leaders in modern revivals cause the people now to err. They cause them to follow men, and obey men rather than God. This is truly a serious matter. Brethren, let us be earnest and faithful everywhere in proclaiming the word of God in such plainness that all may understand and embrace the truth and be saved. E. G. S.

HOLDING FORTH THE WORD OF LIFE.

In speaking of Hebron, Wilson county, Bro. Srygley exhorts the brethren to do more toward sounding out the word. Bro. Jesse Sewell, in the same column, likewise exhorts Bellwood, in our county. Amen! Bro. Sewell, we are glad to hear you exhort our congregations in this matter. Pure minds have to be stirred up by way of remembrance as long as we are in this tabernacle. Bro. Harsh preaches once a month for and around Bellwood. His works will follow him, no doubt, long after his spirit rests from its labors. But could not Bellwood do more? is the question frequently asked. When asked to help our county evangelist for the present year, the brethren there said they were going to build a house of worship for the colored brethren near there. They still talk of building the house, and also a school-house for their own purpose. Other congregations do not understand this, perhaps, and I say this much in behalf of Bellwood. Whether the colored brethren should continue to worship at Bellwood, or have a house to themselves, is a question not to be discussed here. It is hard for us to learn that Christ on Calvary tasted death for every man, and that God is no respecter of persons, "but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Another question is to be determined, whether the building of a school-house excuses these brethren from their obligations to send forth the gospel to others. Now, brethren, fix these matters all up squarely, and be ready in the prosperity of the Lord to lend a helping hand in 1885 toward evangelizing the territory around you.

I beg leave to offer a word to all the congregations in the county. Bro. Srygley is working well in his field, and needs your continued encouragement and love. He remained in the county at your solicitation, and every one now should meet his obligations according to promise. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Let each congregation, as she reads this, examine herself. Let us be ready for the new year, and begin on a clean sheet.

We are told by brethren that there is more spiritual interest in Wilson county than has been for some time. This is owing to the interest taken in holding forth the word of life. Brethren have preached in nooks and corners where the gospel sound was scarcely ever heard. Bro. Bryant, I understand, is doing good work in his field. I only have to mention Bros. Alsop, Kidwill, and Rice Sewell, to let the people know they are doing us good. Bro. Alsop lives in the county, and preaches a part of his time here. He has a regular appointment at Bethel, on the river. Bro. Kidwill preaches monthly at Watertown, and Bro. Sewell at Philadelphia and Bethel, on the Sparta pike. These also preach in the vicinity of their congregations at school-houses. Occasionally other brethren preach in the county. This preaching, to say the least of it, shows a willingness on the part of many to send the gospel to neighbors and friends.

The continuance of this work depends upon the continued interest of the congregations. I know there is not one ready to say, let it stop. Why should it stop? Perseverance, a faithful continuance in well-doing, will not let it stop. The Christian work and life can never stop; it is onward and upward, even unto the perfect day. Evangelizing the world must continue until all have heard of Jesus and his love. Let us consider then our efforts to evangelize thoroughly our territory a permanent work. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is a sin." This work has been successfully done for two years. It can, therefore, be done. It is a good work; therefore it is a sin to neglect it. I am not at all writing under the feeling that it will be discontinued. It requires exhortations, prayers, even tears, self-denial and self-sacrifice, however, to keep it going. There is not a congregation so small, but that it can do something toward sounding out the truth. "Let your light so shine before men, that others may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven." That they may see your good works should be emphasized. When a congregation is shining as a light in the world, she is most certainly not only prospering at home, in the pure and holy lives of her members, but is doing something toward sending the gospel to others. Paul says the Philippians shone as a light in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, holding forth the word of life. The word of life! Think of it; spiritual life, eternal life is meant. Read Phil. 2: 14-16. Who would not do all he can to get this word before the whole world? If we do not do good works, God's will; if we do not hold forth the word of life, our lights will not shine before men; God will not be glorified; people will be eternally lost, and we will be held responsible. There is no doubt that God holds every congregation responsible to some extent for the salvation of the surrounding people and therefore of the world, for if one church does her duty she will do much toward establishing others, and they in turn others and still others, and thus on and on will the good work go, each church doing her duty.

Let the members give as God prospers them, only as he prospers, and they will always be able to do something in this great work. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him," is the divine instruction. Every one on the first day of the week. How much? Only as God has prospered. The Lord asks no more than this. Give, and you will be prospered and have wherewith to give. Cultivate a giving disposition and you will love to give.

1884 will soon be waning. Arrangements for '85 will have to be made. Let us endeavor to retain our present help and much more good can be accomplished. After awhile when the work is done, when the last prayers have been said, when the last tears of anxiety are shed, when all, now sacrificing and working for the spread of the gospel, are resting from their labors, the good work will go on triumphantly. Then, "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Most earnestly and prayerfully the remarks are submitted to the serious consideration of the churches mentioned. E. A. ELAM.

Verily love either takes away the bitterness of trial, or else gives us courage to accept it.

Hall is having an interesting meeting at Union City at this time. We have met several friends here since we have been here, from our home county. Our visit thus far has been quite pleasant."

A. R. Kendrick, Corinth, Miss., July 11, writes: "For the last four months I have been contending with severe sickness for a little longer stay away from the cold river. Tried to fill an appointment, last Lord's day, at Good Springs, near Luka, but it did not serve me well in the result. Some of our too far advanced congregations here could do no better than step back a little and take a few lessons at the weekly meetings of the brethren at Good Springs, who seldom have a preacher. Expect to work as my health improves, and will try and keep you informed as to matters of interest. We are not without our mourning over old land-marks that are defaced by some, and new and improved ones marked by others. But we sincerely hope and pray that they may have strength in their feeble knees, and bow them to God alone, and let the pride and vanity of the world remain in its place."

T. C. Little, Fayetteville, Tenn., writes: "At our regular appointment at Green Spring, on July 16, we met a fair sized audience, and talked of the importance of more earnestness and piety on the part of Christians. The church here seems to be awaking to a sense of their duty, and we hope yet to be able to give a report of them that would be a credit to any congregation. I learn they have ordered a lot of new Popular Hymns, and are going to spend more time in singing. They will try to have everything in order for a good meeting when Bro. Floyd comes on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. If all churches would do this, our short meetings would be more successful. On the 13th, at 11 o'clock a. m., we spoke to reasonably large congregation at Liberty, a Methodist house a few miles from Fayetteville. We have no brethren here, but the people seem anxious to hear. Will hold a protracted meeting here, beginning third Lord's day in August. Here we met Bro. Cameron for the first time. Bro. Cameron is making a good impression where he goes, and will do good. At night we preached at Fayetteville. Had a good hearing, and two baptisms "same hour of the night." This was the first time we have preached for this people for a year, and it afforded me real pleasure. This is my home congregation, and among them are some of my best friends. I will ever hold this people in high esteem, although adverse circumstances may in the future, (as in the past, direct my labors elsewhere.

A LETTER TO GEORGE H. MORGAN.

DEAR BRO. MORGAN: On Saturday before the second Lord's day in May, I went to Bagdad, to help the brethren in building up our Master's cause, by way of preaching. The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," came to me at Tiel's Chapel, to which I gave heed, and agreed to spend each fifth Lord's day with them this year; the brethren at the Chapel reluctantly agreeing for me to be with them a second Lord's day occasionally. The church at Bagdad is weak, and needs all the assistance they can get. It is very weakening to the cause to have the brethren and their means divided—to have some using time and money to advance the Savior's kingdom, while others give their time and money to build up a human institution.

Now, at the above mentioned time, there were but few brethren at the Saturday evening meeting. On Lord's day a brother told me that he would have been there, but was engaged in other business. I asked what this other business was; to which he replied, "We were laying the chief corner-stone." I told him I thought that was laid over eighteen hundred years ago. "Oh, yes," said he, "I know you think we are wrong, but we had Bro. Morgan, one of the ablest men in Jackson county, leading us in it." Of course I learned that it was a Masonic building that was being erected. Now, my brother, I want to say a few things to you on this subject. I shall try to write in the spirit of love, and trust that you will thus receive what I say.

In the first place, I insist that if you can make Masonic speeches, you can make gospel speeches. We certainly were not laboring together for the same purpose. Could you not accomplish more good by preaching the gospel, and inducing people to obey it, than in making masons? Had you been with me at Bagdad, doubtless those brethren who showed by their works that they loved masonry better than the Lord's cause, would have been with us in our effort, and the meeting would have been much more encouraging, both to the church, the world, and myself. The building that you were constructing will cost money, and it is reasonable to suppose that those brethren who belong to the Masons will have to help pay for it. Would it not be better for us to try and get those brethren to use that money to advance our Master's kingdom among men? Are you and those brethren not trying to do a work through this human institution that you should do through the church? And by so doing, are you not dishonoring Christ and his body, the church, to build up a human-made society? Now, is it right? and does the Bible teach that brethren should join the Masons and give their means to support it? If so, then we should all join them; if not, we should be content with the church of God. I shall take the position that it is wrong to join, and work in and through this institution, for the following reasons:

First, it takes about all the spare means one has to make him a Mason, and then support it, thus leaving but little if anything to lay by in store on the first day of the week as God has prospered him. 1 Cor. 16: 1-2. Hence he is made to violate God's commandment in this matter.

Second, Paul says: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. 3: 16-17. As the Scriptures do not say anything about Masonry, it certainly is not a righteous institution, and cannot be the place to do acts of righteousness, such as giving our means to feed and clothe the poor and educate the orphan. As the Scriptures do not say anything about this institution, it certainly is not a good work; for the Scriptures will furnish us unto all good works. Then Masonry cannot be a good work, is not of God and should not be engaged in by God's children.

Third, Peter says: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." 2 Peter 1: 2-3. Now as the divine knowledge (New Testament) does not give us anything concerning the order of Masonry, we are bound to conclude that Masonry does not pertain either to life or godliness. If it does not pertain to life nor godliness, to what then does it pertain? An answer to this, my brother, will certainly show that you had better make gospel speeches. I have other reasons for thinking masonry wrong; but not desiring to consume too much space, must withhold them for the present.

Now, Bro. Morgan, will you please show us through the ADVOCATE that the Bible teaches that it is right for God's people to join the Masons, and give their means to support Masonry. If the Bible teaches it, we should all know it, that we might all join, and thus do the whole will of God. If not, then I insist that brethren should not go into it, and those that are in it should "come out of her, lest they be partakers of her sins."

W. H. CARTER.

ANSWER TO QUERY.

In answer to third query on page 423, ADVOCATE No. 27, it is said, The Spirit of God was poured out from heaven until it filled all the house where the disciples were, that they might be buried or overwhelmed with the Spirit. If the book says so, of course we must accept it as true. Please tell us where it may be found. I know that this is used by some to prove that Christian baptism is immersion in water, but have we not enough evidence of that fact that can't be set aside without resorting to evidence that is doubtful, or must be explained or warped by a theologian to fit the case; this appears to me like taking 1st Tim. 5: 22 to prove that laying on of hands is the Scripture way of ordaining evangelists, elders, deacons and deaconesses. When we use doubtful evidence to sustain a position, don't we throw a shade on our positive proof in investigating minds that are hunting for the truth, and incline them to reject all? Acts 2: 16 certainly says that this is that which was spoken by Joel; but Acts 2: 2 says a sound filled the house, and the sound was as (or like) a mighty wind; and verse four says they were filled with the Holy Spirit, (not buried in); burying and filling are two different ideas, but both might be carried out in the same act; but where is the instance of both being done, either in Christian baptism or in the baptism of the Spirit? If Christian baptism and baptism of the Spirit is the same process, then we must be filled as well as be buried in water. Now is not this the fact, Christian baptism is an immersion in water of the properly prepared convert or believer into the three adorable names? And in the baptism of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit took full control of body and mind, and the subject moved and spake as directed by the Spirit, and where it pleased; both termed in the book as baptisms, but quite different operations.

AS TO DESPONDENCY.

The trials and discouragements of life are many and great, it is true, but there is no occasion for despairing, yielding to their depressing influence, and ceasing to hopefully stem the tide of adversity, however strong may be its current. There are troubles greater now than those which have been experienced in countless instances, and through which a great many of earth's troubled ones have been carried, and from which they have been delivered, or in which they have been sustained, comforted and blessed. The fondest hopes may be disappointed, but they may give place to better hopes, in the realization of which the most annoyingly and distressingly balked, may be abundantly compensated for their most grievous failures and losses, even as was Jacob and Job, and as have been multitudes who have found that to be for them, which they have had regarded as against them, and who have gained more than they lost.

Doubtless there is much mental and spiritual depression arising from merely imaginary ills. Multitudes worry about what will never adversely affect them as they presume it may. They fear that dreaded evils will come, but their fears are never realized. Who has not had the occasion to say, "The thing I greatly feared has (not) come upon me?" or if it has, there have been alleviations and enjoyments therewith, such as could not have been foreseen or imagined. The tasks which at a distance seemed stupendous in magnitude, patient and prayerful efforts has been enabled readily and pleasantly to perform. The trials that were portentously anticipated, in actual contact with them, lose their forbidding aspects, their frowns being changed even to smiles. Never yet has the promise failed: "As thy days so shall thy strength be." Trust in God, therefore, is always in demand, and borrowing trouble should never be allowed to jeopardize all that belongs to hope and joy.

Neither should trouble be magnified any more than imagined. To exaggerate it is as reprehensible as to borrow it. Many do the one as well as the other of these forbidden things. They may have some bitter ingredients in their cup, but it is not all bitter. Were all the sweetness extracted they would see a great difference. When in trouble we should think that there are others who are worse off than ourselves, and yet they, perchance, are happy and contented. And we need not go far to find those with whom we would not exchange conditions. A gentleman, some years ago, said he was walking down Broadway, New York, entirely out of business, after having exhausted all conceivable methods for procuring employment. He had a solitary sixpence in his pocket, and hunger gnawing at his vitals. He was in that desperate mood which may properly be called partial insanity, and in the fullness of his woe he was contemplating suicide. As he passed along, a collection of people gathered about the door of a princely mansion diverted his attention. He said: "I beheld a decrepid old man, bent double with age, and so feeble that two colored domestics were, with their united strength, aiding his trembling and uncertain steps. He was nearly blind, quite deaf, and possessed only to a limited extent the faculties of taste and smell. He was walking his customary morning walk, hobbling from the door of his dwelling to the nearest corner. It was the famous millionaire, Astor, of world-wide reputation as one of the richest men of his times. 'I thought,' said the desponding man, 'that I, with my single sixpence, was in a glorious situation compared with that man before me, and now I went my way with a beaming heart, thanking Heaven for the health and strength I then enjoyed, but had despaired. I have, said he, 'never despaired since.'

To appeal to all is:

"Look at the bright side! Recount all thy joys:
Speak of the mercies which richly surround thee;
Muse not forever on that which annoys;
Shut not thine eyes to the beauties around thee."

— Watchman.

OBERBECK COMPLIMENT.

Little Ottoline Oberbeck, the well-known child-actress of this city, will be the recipient of a compliment at the Central Christian church, corner Elliott avenue and Wash street, next Tuesday evening, June 3, under the auspices of the church, Rev. Dr. Foy, pastor. A musical and literary entertainment will be given, in which the beneficiary will be a feature. Among the volunteers to assist are: Prof. J. J. Voellmecke, Prof. E. L. McDowell, Mrs. Flora Pike-Hirsch, Mr. Charles Shattinger, Miss Nellie Haynes, Miss Lillie B. Pierce, Miss Ada McClellan, Miss Orelia Kerney, Mr. Guy Lindsley, Mr. Mills, Mr. John Curran, Mr. Ulrich, Miss Anne Oberbeck, Central Christian church quartette, and the little brother of the pretty beneficiary, only six years of age, in his wonderful recitations.—Democrat.

The above slip was taken from the St. Louis Democrat, a few days ago. I send it that your readers may see how far a Christian church may go astray, when given up to worldly pleasure. The Rev. Dr. Foy, pastor, will give this young theatre his personal attendance and supervision. No doubt they had an enjoyable occasion. And this is not all I learned while in that city. One other congregation, in order to have a full house on prayer-meeting night, had adopted the plan of having regular ice cream, strawberries, and other kinds of suppers, with a modest request from the pastor, that it was important for each one to bring a quarter along with them. Now, the next thing I expect to hear from this church, if they don't break up in a row, they will decide to take up the benches in the large room and let the young people have a dance, in order to raise money to send the gospel to the heathen.

THE CHURCHES IN CAPTIVITY.

Letters are coming in daily in which our correspondents complain bitterly and seriously of the carnalized condition of many of the churches, and, in their desperation and defeat, they are asking, "What shall we do?" One correspondent writes as follows: "The church is not poverty-stricken in the world's goods. Heretofore we have paid as high as $1,200 (for a pastor,) and be out of debt at the end of the year. We have also all the helps of modern times—the organ, all the various missionary societies, clubs, festivals, socials, and the church, with few exceptions, are readers of the —, using the lesson leaves in Sunday-school, besides hiring an organist (who belongs to the Methodist Church) to play the organ during worship. Our 'pastors' for the last ten years have been good men. We have, in the meantime, had the labors of some talented evangelists, and yet we are in a bad shape—without a preacher, and the membership will not attend church unless we have preaching."

No, it is not a lack of money, a lack of talent, a lack of church accommodations. The cause is to be found deeper down than this. It is all told in one word—the world has the church in captivity. We shall specify some of the chief causes of their captivity:

1. A lack of faith in the promises of God and in the power of the truth, and a disposition to walk by sight alone, backed by the cowardly pretense that we are only certain of present happiness, and have little assurance for the future.

2. No daily reading of the Scriptures, no prayers and no religious culture in the family, with no example of pure and sincere devotedness to the cause.

3. No recognition of law and authority anywhere—neither in the family nor in the Church, nor in the State; a determination not to live under check and restraint. Worldly pleasures the chief thing sought after; and the preacher or elder who interferes with a flow of sensuous pleasure in the Church, and who attempts discipline, will suffer decapitation. Hence many of this class, for want of moral backbone, succumb and surrender their Christian manhood, and so far forth have betrayed Jesus Christ.

4. The displacement of pure worship, and the pollution of the house of God, by the introduction of secular music and profane operatic music; by ungodly, irreverent, paid choristers, sopranos, altos, etc., in the choir; by choirs composed largely of frivolous boys and girls, town gossips, fashionable pimps, and of men and women of doubtful reputation. Hence the so-called worship is a burlesque. God is not in their thoughts.

5. No prayer, no praise, no thanksgiving, no spiritual songs in the home circle. Children of Christian parents, and children who are members of the church sing and play most secular songs at home; and hence in the house of the Lord their lips are sealed to spiritual songs and to the praises of the Lord. At home they play and sing waltzes, marches, schottisches, polkas, quadrilles, etc., and in the house of the Lord they sit as mute and statuesque as dummies in show-windows and on the side walks.

6. In many homes there is no religious literature. A good deal of it is very light literature; and if you wish to find the Bible, you will discover it, in all probability, under a pile of nasty political papers and operatic music sheets.

7. Secular music and trashy literature in our Sunday-schools; the substitution of "lesson leaves" for the Bible; much of the Sunday-school music too airy and trifling; entirely too many kinds of papers in the Sunday-school. In fact, in many schools the Bible is the least read of all books in the school; the Bible is made to take a subordinate position, and hence the Bible is hardly regarded as of divine origin. The displacement of the Bible, by that device of the devil, the lesson leaves, and the presence of so much rotten literature in our Sunday-schools, have all a fearful tendency to thrust aside the Bible as of no more consequence than any human composition.

8. Things, called missionary societies, are made to supersede the churches of Jesus Christ; human methods are substituted for divine methods; novices have been allowed to govern the churches; it has become a matter of honor and distinction to be recognized as a pastor—a reverend clergyman—a man of plausibility and platitudes—a clergyman among clergymen in the upper seats of orthodoxy; hence when a pulpit is declared vacant, in twenty-four hours, as by instinct and intuition, ten, twenty or thirty applications for the vacant pulpit are traveling on the wings of the wind.

9. The multitude followed Christ for the "loaves and fishes," and because they "did eat and were filled," and not because of the miracle he performed. Because he filled them and satisfied them with perishable food, they would have made him King of the Jews. The multitude still follow in the same direction. In many places the kingdom of God is no longer "love and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit," but "meat and drink"—festivals of fun and frolic, eating and drinking and reveling in the house of the Lord, and making merchandise of the gospel by all the tricks and arts of fashionable gambling.

10. Jesus Christ is betrayed in the house of his friends. In a word, there is no Christ in much of the pulpit preaching; there is no Christ in the worship; there is no Christ in the choir; there is no Christ in the song; there is no Christ in many families of professed Christians; there is no Christ in much of our literature.

11. In many places the Sunday-school occupies a higher place in the affections of church-members than the Lord's table and the regular worship. Thousands of children are put through a Sunday-school routine, in a sort of a waltzing whirl, who hardly ever gaze upon the sacred symbols of the broken body and shed blood of our suffering Savior. A sort of moral respectability—a sort of refined rationalism—is consuming the vitality of the Church and of the Sunday-school.

It may be said that these phases of society represent "the spirit of the age." Truly they do. This "spirit of the age" is the spirit of the world, and not the spirit of God; and it is this spirit of the world that has carried the churches into the captivity of the world. Very few preachers, under this spell of the world, dare stand up and rebuke sin and sinners as did John the Baptist, as did Christ himself, as did the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament, as did the prophets of the Old Dispensation. There is no longer conviction of sin. Sin is rebuked in a very polite, careful, round-about way. The ordinances of Jesus Christ are regarded as "mere forms;" the offense of the cross has been set aside because the outside money patrons of the Church will not endure it. The morality of many churches is not any better than the morality of the world. Men and women are permitted to live in open adultery without rebuke, and once in a while the preacher himself is in the same fix. Libertines—men and women of bad repute—are permitted to stalk brazenly about in the churches. Speculators, who dishonestly deal in "futures," and make money without capital, and waste other people's money in the "longs" and the "shorts," are allowed to occupy a high "social position" in the fashionable church of the day, because, forsooth, he contributes largely to the support of the pastor and smiles benignantly over the dear children of the Sunday-school.

In view of these undeniable facts, a regular overhauling of the churches is demanded—a thorough cleaning out of these worldly elements, with a consentaneous restoration of apostolic simplicity and Christian purity. Who will undertake this work? Who will assume the responsibility? Certainly not those pastors and editors and college presidents who follow the people to please the people. The work will rest upon those godly, conscientious, courageous, self-reliant, self-sacrificing men who will not "shun to declare the whole counsel of God, whether the people hear or forbear." Conformity to the world among Christians must cease, and transformation of character by the knowledge and spirit of Christ must be developed, or else the world will continue to hold the church in captivity.—A.C. Review.

The legend is told that the devil once tempted an old monk of the dark ages, telling him there was no hereafter, and urging him to seek for happiness by plunging headlong in the follies and vices and sinful pleasures of the world. "Well," said the old monk, "if what you say is so, and if there is no world beyond this, then I will seek the highest and purest happiness that can be found, by loving and serving Christ while here on earth."

HE WAS TRIED.

It was Saturday night, and meeting had been appointed. After supper, when getting ready to go to the house of the Lord, J. said to his wife, timorously, "Wife, I am going to join the church to-night." Woman is a powerful element in a house. She can send forth approbation or disapproval from her look, from her glance; she can insinuate objection; it can be expressed with emphasis by the toss of her head; it can be said most positively, and not a word said. The very silence of the home shows that all is not well. A wife should learn early and well how much cloud and sunshine there is in her actions, looks, and words. Upon this occasion it was not all a mimic show. A few words, pregnant with meaning, were uttered. The head of the family was reminded that he "already belonged to a good church, (the Episcopal,) that he had changed once before, (from the Methodist,) and now how did he know that he would be satisfied?" Here I volunteered to suggest that in preaching I had offered them the Bible, and that alone; and if he was dissatisfied hereafter, he must fall out with that book alone. Not willing to be outdone, she said others had the Bible, too. To this I replied, "Yes, the Bible, and something worse than the Bible." At last she reminded her husband that his children were all members of the Episcopal church, and he ought not to leave this church while they were not at home. I saw this was potent, and as he walked away from his home, he said, "I'll wait awhile, then." As soon as we had reached the street, I said, "You have done wrong." He replied, "I expect so." "Does not the Lord command you to be baptized?" "Yes," he answered promptly. "Then whom will you obey—the Savior or your wife?" I know there was a perfect conflict in that man's heart. He must tear loose from his loving companion, his children, his old church associations. In other words, this little Abraham must get up and get out from among his kindred, and leave behind his old associations, and go over into a place the Lord showed him, the church of Jesus Christ. This was no small trial and this was no easy fight. The lines wavered and the result was doubtful. It was the Lord on one side, and this world on the other. I was not sorry that he had such a conflict. I do not cry, even at my own trials. They have their blessed fruits. "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. Let patience have perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." He answered that he expected he had done wrong, he ought to obey the Lord, but he did dislike so much to displease his wife. "Did you not quote that Scripture to me where the Lord said, 'He that loveth father, mother, sister, brother, wife, yea, life, more than me, is not worthy of me.'" Yes, he had thought about that. We were nearing the church when I propounded this question: "Do you not want to know that when the Lord commands, you will obey?" He said he did. "Well, perhaps you have the greatest trial of your life. I should think you would wish to see that you would do right under such heavy pressure. Do you not? Well, how will you act? The Lord commands; will you obey?" "I will," he said, and that night confessed, and was baptized next morning. He lived in the frigid zone one night, but after that it was all right. His wife's face regained its sweet serenity, and smiles took the place of the lowering scowls in sight. He afterward said to me, "I am so glad you would not let me off." And his wife, I think, appreciated him more for his fidelity to Jesus. In this little transaction I learned a lesson. This is often done while making strenuous efforts to teach others. Should we all not want to decide, ever now and then, whether under trial we will obey God? Our Heavenly Father tried Abraham several times, and he stood the test every time. When the Lord said come, he came; when he said go, he went, and offered up Isaac.

I carried a piece of metal to a jeweler, and I thought it was gold. It was handed down from my grand-father. I thought it was sent out before the days of humbuggery and galvanism, but the strong acid showed it up as it was. We need to be tested, so it can be known what kind of metal we are made of. We should be gold, silver, or precious stones,

Faith and Superstition, Expediency and Principle.

Two hundred years before the battle in which Saul was slain, another leader of Israel had stood upon that same battle-range of Gilboa. A like innumerable hostile array was encamped below, or upon the opposite slope of Little Hermon.

But Gideon, to meet the enemy, had only three hundred men; Saul had "all Israel," certainly three hundred thousand. Gideon's band was armed with trumpets, pitchers, and lamps; Saul's host was panoplied with all approved equipments of war. Gideon was unknown heretofore, his family "poor in Manasseh," and he "the least in his father's house;" Saul had been forty years a king. Yet Gideon made ready for the onset, hopeful and stout-hearted, while Saul "greatly trembled," because Gideon's sword was also "the sword of the Lord," while from Saul the Spirit of God had long since departed.

Within twenty-four hours preceding either battle, both these chieftains had taken brief excursions from their camps. Both were attended by only one or two retainers. Both stole away by night clandestinely. Both went where it was peril to go: Gideon within the enemy's lines, Saul into a witch's den. Yet Gideon returned exultant, while Saul "fell all along on the earth, sore afraid," because Gideon went where God had sent him; Saul against God's express statute.

Gideon was the greatest of the judges, notable even among those heroes as a man of faith and of principle. In every step, he sought counsel or encouragement directly from God, and then did precisely what God said.

Saul was weakest of kings, notable, even among the many of Israel's wicked rulers, as a man of superstition and of expediency. He appears often very religious, eager to worship. At Gilgal, he could not wait for the high-priest to come, but must needs usurp the sacerdotal office. At Bethaven, he builded an altar; or, as the margin reads, "began to build." This, like most of his good resolves, seems to have been abandoned soon after the beginning.

Saul had a rare taste for sacred music. Days together, he listened to David's harp and David's psalms. Doubtless he would have sighed devoutly under the trills of a prima-donna in a modern quartette choir. But none the less the javelin sped swift from his hand towards David's heart. He prophesied, and slaughtered the prophets. He put away the wizards, and traveled ten miles to consult a witch.

To be sure, Saul had always pious and plausible excuses for disobedience. "Neither by Urim nor by dreams had the Lord answered me." "The best of the sheep and oxen the people spared for sacrifice." "The Philistines were advancing, and my forces deserting; so I forced myself to offer the sacrifice before the battle." All has the appearance of signal piety, but really it is signal presumption, self-will, "stubbornness and rebellion."

"I have sinned," said Saul, over and over. "I have played the fool," he says again. "Is this thy voice, my son, David?" But, with all, he never radically changed his course. Even at the moment when he had received at Samuel's mouth his sentence of final, irremedial rejection, with the next instant he could but still implore the Seer's prayers as a measure of policy: "I have sinned, yet honor me now before the people, and turn with me to worship." As written in Hosea, "Israel hath forsaken his Maker and buildeth temples." Men may be most solicitous for the forms of godliness, when they have most denied its power. They will then make gain of godliness.

Saul, alas! considered himself the architect of his fortunes; strangely unmindful that he peculiarly, patiently beyond all men, had been anointed king by God alone, and that only God could crown him with success. And still, Saul's career is not exceptional. Rather is it a most vividly detailed, inspired picture of the natural human heart. A sadly tragical picture also; since Saul evermore chose as the ruling purpose of life his own way rather than God's ways. Handel found no biography more mournful, and to-day the step to which funerals tread is the "Dead March" in "Saul."

Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice. By faith the elders obtained a good report. If ye love me, keep my commandments.—S. S. Times.

Shaking Hands.

Some Churches in the North have a committee for shaking hands with visitors. The idea is not a bad one. An improvement on it can be made when the Church is resolved into a committee of the whole and each member makes it his or her duty to say a kind word to every visitor who enters the sanctuary.—Texas Advocate.

A further improvement would be for the church members to shake hands with each other; if they would do this, they would shake hands with others.

The head of the Women's Art School of Cooper institute writes of Peter Cooper in the Century: "One day he stood watching the portrait class, who, to the number of thirty pupils or more, were drawing likenesses of the same model from from different positions. One scholar made the face in profile; another had it turned a little into the shadow; a third saw more of the full face; while others worked still further into or away from the light. He had stood observing the scene for a few minutes, when he said, 'Such a sight as this should be a lesson in charity, when we perceive how the same person may be so different, according to the way he is looked at by the various people.'"

A young man wrote Dr. Prime for advice about the way to get an education. Said the Doctor: "The way of the world now is for you to look about and see who will help you to get it. This is not the right way. Look about and see what you can do to help yourself. Grind your own axe. Support yourself by honorable industry, and earn your bread while you improve the odds and ends of time in study. When you get something ahead use it to support yourself while you learn. Ten thousand men are now serving their generation with usefulness and honor who never asked anybody to grind an axe for them."—Well Springs of Truth.

TRUST IN GOD.

Bro. Harding's response to our criticism a few weeks ago will be found in his department. We offer a few comments.

Solomon proposed to compensate Hiram for his help, still the animus of Hiram was to help Solomon and to help in the work of building a house to the Lord. It was accepted in this spirit. Hiram had helped David as his friend, although he may have received pay.

The account (1 Kings 5: 2) is that Hiram had sent congratulatory messages to Solomon on his ascent to the throne, "for Hiram was ever a lover of David." Solomon then proposed that Hiram should have cut and delivered cedar to build the Lord's house. "When Hiram heard the words of Solomon, he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which has given unto David a wise son of this great people. * * * I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and timber of fir." Showing plainly that while compensation was given and received, it was very much a matter of kindness in bestowing and receiving the labor. I believe I am safe in saying if it had not been done in this spirit of help, it would not have been received.

In the re-building, from those who proposed help without good will or for sinister motives, it was refused. From those who tendered it with a desire to do good to the people of God, it was received. Cyrus, who helped to build, was king of Persia. Nebuchednezzar, king of Babylon, had carried captive the people, and had taken away the vessels of the Lord's house. It would be difficult to make it a case of paying indebtedness. Cyrus said of those who were in any place, "Let the men of this place help with silver and gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the free-will offerings for the house of God in Jerusalem." It was to be a free-will offering, not the obligation of debt.

The Egyptians helped the Israelites, and the gifts went into the tabernacle of God. The kindness shown the children of Israel in their journeying from Egypt, by the Kenites, was accepted and rewarded by God. Luke 7: 3: The Jews plead for the Centurion on the ground "he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue." The Savior seemed to recognize the claim. Christ and the apostles received kindness, food, and shelter, from friendly aliens. The verse in third John, "They went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles," is not clear as referring to those outside. The epistles of John deal rather with heretical Christians than outsiders. Paul received help of the barbarians on the Island of Melita, "who honored us with many honors, and when we departed laded us with such things as were necessary."

This was done to all, chiefly as kindness and honor to Paul. One case of an inspired man receiving help when kindly tendered by an alien, is sufficient to establish the right to do it.

If we understand Bro. Harding, he admits that Paul to the Romans did notify them that he expected them to help him on his way. This was a request. It matters not whether they sent him in a conveyance of their own, hired a conveyance, or whether they gave him money to pay his way in a public conveyance, he asked. He let his wants be known, that they might supply them. The connection is, "I trust to see you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled with your company."

If Bro. Harding had treated us last winter, as Paul did his Roman brethren, we would have taken pleasure in helping him on his way. But we are not contending that Bro. Harding sins in not conferring with the brethren as concerning giving and receiving. Paul did in some instances, in others he did not. We are only contending it is right to do so.

Bro. Harding thinks that Paul sent the messengers to let the churches know how well he was getting on, and so comfort them. Let us see a few more of the facts connected with the matter and see if they will bear this interpretation? First, it is a mistake to suppose the Phillippians had sent only once or twice to help Paul. In the beginning of the gospel they sent once and again, were the only Christians who at that time did it. Yet through years afterward they did it regularly. He begins the letter by thanking God for them, "always in every prayer of mine for you, making request with joy for your fellowship in the gospel, from the first day until now." This shows that except a time in which they lacked opportunity, they fellowshipped him in his work in the gospel.

That Paul's condition was not so prosperous at the time he wrote this letter, is shown by his declaration, that he desired to send Timothy to see them. But 23rd verse of 2nd chapter, he says, "Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me." The 17th verse, "Yea, if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all." He was in prison a crisis in his prison, life was at hand. He might be condemned to death. He was unwilling to let Timothy, his most faithful and trusted friend, leave him until he saw the result of his trial. While he could not spare Timothy, he did send "Epaphroditus, your messenger and he that ministered to my wants." He tells them that Epaphroditus "has not regarded his life to supply your lack of service toward me."

When in this distressed condition, not knowing whether death, imprisonment or freedom awaited him, he could not part with Timothy, he sent to them Epaphroditus, who had been their messenger, who, when the opportunity was cut off for their sending help to him, remained with him and supplied their lack of service by his own labor. Paul tells them he had sought, or now sought, (it does not change the bearing on this question) a gift that would increase to their account. He clearly sought it through the messengers sent to them. To my mind, the whole letter shows he had communicated with them as to his wants, that they had fellowshipped him from the beginning of the gospel, save when the opportunity was cut off, and now at the imminent period of his imprisonment, he sends them a messenger to let them know his condition.

To the Colossians he says, "All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you." The wants of the flesh as well as the comforts of the Spirit, are embraced in this. Again, "that ye may know our state, (literally the things concerning us) and shall make known to you all things done here."

To the Ephesians he sends messengers to make the same report. These messengers were the messengers that brought help from the churches to him; when he sent them again to the churches to let the churches know his condition, what other meaning can be placed on it than that it was his condition in reference to the very objects of their mission? To the churches from which he did not receive help, he asserts his right to have demanded help. To reprove a church for failing to help him in the past, or to thank it for help, and to speak of his need, is to ask help in the future.

The same principle Bro. Harding has contended applies to the Christian doing his duty in any other walk of life as to the preacher. The apostles did ask help and send messengers to stir the churches up to their duty in giving to the poor saints. If it is wrong for a Christian to make his own wants known to his brethren directly, it must be wrong to do it through another, or for another to do it for him. So when the apostles made known the wants of the disciples in Judea, to stir the churches up to their duty, he authorized the same to be done for all Christians in need.

We think if Bro. Harding will review these points, he cannot fail to see he has run to an extreme in saying a Christian ought not to make his wants known to his brethren, for this would nullify his trust in God. We do not wish to oppose, but to heartily approve the general drift of Bro. Harding's teaching on the subject of Christians doing their duty and trusting God, but it seems to me an extreme position hinders the working of the principle, and thus cuts off from one of God's chosen means of fulfilling his promises.

If Bro. Harding's church or any church desires to communicate with him as concerning giving and receiving, he does no wrong in letting them, as Paul did, know all his affairs. This is no kith nor kin to that spirit so prevalent now, as it was in Paul's day, which prompts "all to seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's."

We can easily reason ourself into Bro. Harding's position, have frequently done so; and particularly as to receiving help from outsiders, it seems good policy, only the examples of Scripture stand in my way.

D. L.

Elder Ogle, in the Missionary Baptist, says he undertook, recently, to tell what the disciples teach in reference to the influence of the Spirit and the word in the remission of sins, and that Bro. Srygley told him he misrepresented us. He asks the editors of the ADVOCATE to give their teaching on the subject. He says they would convey a great favor on the people of Wilson county, if they would do this. We are perfectly willing to do this. But those people in Wilson county, who read the ADVOCATE, already know what we teach; therefore, to favor the people of Wilson county, and others who feel anxious on this subject, it will be necessary that some other paper publish what we say. If the Missionary Baptist will publish our article, we will write what the Scriptures teach on the subject, and what we believe every disciple in the land will endorse. Will the Missionary Baptist publish it?

OUR JEALOUSY.

The Old Path Guide accuses us of jealousy because we spoke of the evil influences that the young brethren who have espoused the cause and positions of the Guide, were striving to introduce among the churches. We confess we are jealous of every evil influence introduced. But, like Paul, we can say, "I am jealous over you with a godly jealousy; for I espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a pure virgin to Christ. But I fear, lest by any means as the Serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and purity that is toward Christ." That is just precisely our condition. We have tried honestly and faithfully to maintain the purity and simplicity toward Christ, among the churches, that they might be presented as a pure virgin espoused to Christ; and we are jealous of any and every influence that has a tendency to corrupt that purity and simplicity, and wean them from Christ. We not only are jealous of these influences, but we intend to oppose them, so far as we are able.

We have never been jealous of any paper or man who labored to maintain the truth and the purity of churches in Tennessee or elsewhere, as a pure virgin, faithful to Christ in all things. Never a word have we had, save of encouragement and good-will to these. When Bro. Srygley was through Tennessee, claiming that the Old Path Guide was occupying a medium ground, only not quite so extreme as the ADVOCATE, in opposition to societies; when he was telling me, had he known the work in Tennessee and understood our position fully, he would have pursued a different course toward us and it. When he was telling me that he was intending to write a series of articles against the societies, although the ground was not wholly satisfactory, when Bro. Allen was denouncing the societies as "unjust, unwise, unsafe, unscriptural," we encouraged, rather than discouraged, the circulation of the Old Path Guide. Then Bro. Srygley believed the trend of thought among the brethren was against the societies, toward Bro. Butler's position. But when he went to Cincinnati, and became intoxicated with the excitement of the social gathering, and allowed himself to be announced in full sympathy with the most advanced mode of society operation; and when, instead of publishing the articles against the societies, he had conformed to this announcement, and has depreciated our work and the work of the churches when the Old Path Guide's agents, to build up the Guide, was depreciating the ADVOCATE and its work, we became jealous of its influence, and we are certain its influence is against the purity of the churches and the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. We "are jealous over them with a godly jealousy."

We last year proposed to Bro. Cline to surrender all pecuniary interest in a paper, if one better and stronger could be built up, under circumstances that would guarantee its fidelity to the truth. We are still willing to do this. Our success as a publisher has not been sufficient, either to flatter our vanity or to fill our purse. We have been more than willing to let the burden of the work rest on other shoulders than our own when the truth will not be compromised thereby.

The friendly professions of the Guide do not harmonize with the course of its agents. Bro. Creel made some time since an uncalled for, and bitter attack on me through its columns. One means of extending the circulation of the Guide has been through denouncing the ADVOCATE. Recently he vociferated in a crowd, The ADVOCATE opposes all missionary work, when remonstrated with, for the statement, he repeated it. Bro. Creel also said to brethren recently, Have you heard of the paper we are about starting in West Tennessee to break down the ADVOCATE? Bro. Creel is connected with the Guide as its agent and correspondent. Not able to injure the ADVOCATE as he would like with the Guide, he encourages the establishment of another paper that he thinks on local claims can injure the ADVOCATE. Why this bitterness of opposition? What truth of the Bible does the ADVOCATE oppose that it must be destroyed? Bro. Creel was a few years ago in Glasgow. He wrote against the large or extended co-operations or societies, subscribed for the ADVOCATE, complimented it for its unfaltering fidelity to the truth. He moved to Western Kentucky. He is a great advocate at once of societies. He is employed by the Old Path Guide, The ADVOCATE is opposed to all mission work, and must be destroyed.

When Bro. Creel was opposing large societies with Bro. Munnell, had Bro. Munnell charge that Bro. Creel is opposed to all mission work, he would have thought Bro. Munnell was unjust and untruthful as well as disposed to wrong his brethren. We think just that way of Bro. Creel when he makes these statements of us or the ADVOCATE.

We hear too of Bro. McQuiddy running down the ADVOCATE as a means of circulating the Guide. We have never known that system of circulating a paper by disciples until the Old Path Guide sent out its agents. The ADVOCATE does not object to open competition. It has no hidden works in public for what it seeks to destroy in private. Until Bros. Srygley, Creel and McQuiddy became interested in the Guide, they thought the ADVOCATE a good paper. Bro. Srygley wrote that he shed tears at parting with it, only as he did when leaving his mother. The ADVOCATE has not changed a particle.

at the commission given to them. Hence we see Peter teaching the assembled multitude, teaching the gospel to them (1 Cor. 15.) Notice Acts 2: 14-36. Now what effect had this gospel upon those who heard (and believed) it? It pierced their hearts, made them cry out, men and brethren what shall we do? Acts 2: 37. What did Peter tell them? "Repent (for repentance and remission of sins should be preached) and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, (that are past,) and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. And with many other words he testified and exhort, saying, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

Here is repentance and baptism mentioned. It is exhibited in their being pricked in their hearts, and confession may be couched in the expressions, "Save yourself from this untoward generation. How? By confessing me before it, in its presence. If so, have we not the four conditions presented by Peter to the multitude; and what farther? "Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized." And what else? And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. (Their state relation is changed from murders.) (23d verse) They have attained to a saved state, (47th verse) and "praising God, and having favor with all the people." Now if we could not find another example in all of the Acts of the apostles, this would be sufficient, unless we find them saying and doing differently, and telling the people to do something different. Peter, in Solomon's porch, said, "But ye denied the Holy One, and killed the Prince of life, whom God raised from the dead." (Acts 3: 13-14-15.) Preached the gospel facts, and the gospel commands, "Repent therefore, and be converted, (turn) that your sins may be blotted out; when (that) the times refreshing shall (may) come from the presence of the Lord;" 19th verse. See also 22nd to 26th verse. Now what have we here? Repent and be converted, a term different, it is true, but when full meaning is obtained, includes with repentance all that is needed to have sins blotted out or remitted. For in fourth chapter and fourth verse, we read, "Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, believed; even to about five thousand men." In 32nd verse we further learn that the multitude that believed, were of one heart and of one soul.

We have not been confining ourselves to Union City all our time, but have been preaching the gospel where opportunities were given. The county (Obion) affords a wide field in which much good could be accomplished, were there preachers in the field to lead in the work.

The Palestine congregation is letting her light shine in this respect. The people here are wonderfully blessed with fine wheat crops this year and this should create a zeal to do more for the advancement of the cause of Christ. Round about Palestine the farms are level, and rich, and free of rocks; which of course, makes it very encouraging for the man who labors so earnestly and faithfully under the heat of the sun. Bro. W. H. Donalson is the evangelist in this county and from what we have seen and heard about him, he will create quite a wave that will carry with it much success.

On last Lord's day we preached two discourses at Moriah, a Baptist church.

Since writing the above, I have heard Bro. Hall preach his crowning discourse at the close of the warm meeting, which has been going on at this place for one week. His subject last night was, "Triumph of Christianity," which, I think was handled successfully. Bro. Hall labored to show the weakness in infidelity, and the strength and power in Christianity. At the close of the discourse a good song was sung, people were invited to come to Christ, and in humility to love eight persons confessed before a great crowd of witnesses that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. To stand on the side of love purity and true happiness we must be on the side of Christianity. We will go to Fulton, Ky., (D. V.,) tomorrow, and preach there on Lord's day. We will long remember the kind hospitality of our good friends have so willingly manifested to us during our stay here. May the Lord continue to bless them, and may they labor in the vineyard till God sees fit to take them from the transient things of this world to the bright side of eternity, to crown their pure spirits with everlasting joy and happiness. F. C. SOWELL.

FLIPPIN, KY.

The Baptist church at Indian Creek met on Saturday before the fifth Lord's day in June, after preaching by Elder F. C. Childress, pastor of that church, from this text, "Why I believe what I do believe," chapter 5, verse 5, the meeting was called to order by the moderator, and then he read the minutes of the preceding meeting, the cause of which ran thus, "On motion an amendment was excluded for joining another church. In the reading of the minutes, the moderator said he was not in favor of that part of the minutes. For, said he, if you let it go in that way, you acknowledge the Campbellites as a church, and I don't consider them a church. So after considerable consultation, it was decreed that the minutes be changed, and the Campbellites excluded for joining the Campbellite society. Now, said the pastor, that will show to all future generations what it was done for. There are some things I cannot comprehend or understand, and would be glad to have them explained by some one that knows. I have before me the minutes of the Barren River association of Independent Baptists held with the Indian Creek church in August, 1882. Now in these minutes we find the pastor and messengers of Indian Creek church appointed as a committee on divine services, and in their report, when referring to the house of worship belonging to the church of Christ, they call that house the Christian church. Now find these same persons denying the disciples the right to be called a church, and will admit no other name but that of Campbellite. How can these things be? How can they call the house the Christian church, and at the same time deny those who meet there to worship, the Campbellite society? N. I. S.

There is a difference between receiving a favor and striking a blow for a supposed injury with Baptist friends.—D. L.]

There are two ways in which money especially touches the Christian character, and subjects it to a severe test. One is, the way in which we use money; the other, the way in which we bear loss. Hard as the former is, the latter is yet harder.—New York Examiner.

Please explain John 13: 2; was it a subtle influence over which he had no control?—[S. A. Arrington.]

The expression is, "the devil put it into the heart of Judas to betray him"—Jesus. The influence was just such as presents itself in the way of temptation to every individual in life. All men are tempted to do evil by the presentation of motives. Every man is tempted to steal at some time in his life, to commit adultery, to kill. The devil is the author of all temptation to sin. I take it, he tempted Judas in this way. Judas was a money lover. The prospects of Jesus were under a cloud. It seemed that he was about to fail. The suggestion came to Judas that as Jesus is about to fail, you can make money by betraying him. His weak faith, his lack of true strength of character, and his love of money, caused him to yield and betray the Savior. Every other disciple was tempted as he was. They did not feel it so strongly because they would not parley with it, their strength of character was greater. They had a truer regard for right, hence did not run in the way of temptation. We can see nothing in the influence brought to bear on Judas, different from that brought to bear on any other man that parleys with the evil. Nor do we believe Judas' sin was greater than that of any other being who deliberately betrays right for the sake of gain. There are thousands of men in the church, even among the teachers in the church, that for gain and popularity betray the truth, do the same thing that Judas did, make for themselves the same character; only they do not show his remorse, nor have the grace to hang themselves, as he hung himself, but they will share the same fate in eternity.

Romans 5: 17, "For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which received abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ." Is there but one death referred to, and which one.—[J. M. Fincher, Woodlawn, Ark.]

One death brought both physical decay and spiritual ruin; or rather both spiritual ruin and physical decay are results from one cause. Life and death were used originally in a sense different from their present use. Life meant freedom from corruption or suffering, both spiritual and material. Death was the opposite of life, subjection to corruption, to suffering, to decay. "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," was literally fulfilled in the sense in which the word die was used. It is frequently used in the same sense in the Bible. Paul says "I die daily." Our existence here is but a continued death, a continued suffering and decay. What we call death is but the end of that continued death. In this sense, the separation from God is the death, the effect of that death upon man's material being is suffering, disease, decay, ending in the return of dust to dust. The effect of that death on the spiritual man is anguish, sorrow, fear, spiritual woe, ending in eternal sorrow unless redeemed from this destiny by Christ the Savior. It is one death, but one, bearing fruit in the material and spiritual world. D. L.

A. C. Henry, Huntsville, Ala., July 18, writes: "Our meeting is getting to be interesting. We have four now added to the little band here; one by letter, one from the Methodists, one from the world and one from the Baptists. He will preach, is a man of influence, and has been an exhorter in the Baptist church."

F. B. Srygley, Lebanon, Tenn., July 18, writes: "I preached six times this week at Rocky Grove school-house. Fine crowds, good attention, but no visible result. There are a great many good people in that neighborhood that know how to make a preacher feel at home. May the Lord bless them. I preached to people this week who rarely ever hear us, though they live almost as near to one of our churches as they do to this school-house. If we were to go to every old school-house near our old congregations, we would reach a great many people who will never hear us."

J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., July 11, writes: "I preached at Union church, Sumner county, last Lord's day and night; had fair audiences, and the brethren and sisters seemed much interested in the preaching; no additions. This church is not manifesting as much interest in the Lord's day meetings as I think they should. But they are at peace among themselves; they have been weakened recently by the death of two of their efficient members. But I think they are still wielding a good influence."

M. C. Leslie, Willis, Texas, July 7, writes: "I will try and send you several subscribers as soon as crops come into market, when the people will have money. I find that the ADVOCATE is doing a good work here in removing sectarian prejudice, and in planting the good seed of the gospel. We have had a hard struggle here in the past, but thank the Lord, our labors are being rewarded, and the cause is onward and upward. We have now some faithful laborers in the field, and the congregations are trying to hold up their hands while they work, and the truth is taking strong root in the very hot-beds of sectarianism."

Obituaries.

Died in Christ, July 8, 1884, Sister Adaline, wife of J. M. Haynes, at the residence of her husband near Murfreesboro, Tenn. Her funeral on July 9, was attended by many sympathizing friends, relatives, and brethren and sisters. Sister Haynes was first a Methodist, early in life. But when she had an opportunity of hearing the word of the Lord as it is in Jesus, she entered into the church of God, of which she was a faithful member till the day of her death. She was a faithful wife, modest and gentle to all, and faithful in attendance upon the Lord's day service when able. But she has been a great sufferer for a long while. And while her husband will greatly miss her, yet it will be comforting to him to feel assured through the gospel and its precious promises that her sufferings are all at an end. Death to a faithful Christian is no calamity, but on the other hand, "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Living friends sustain great loss when Christians die, but it is gain to the godly ones that pass over to the happy shore to be with the Lord. Many brethren and sisters sympathize most heartily with brother Haynes in his great loss. But if he, like she, will be faithful unto death, he will meet her in the upper and better home, where parting will be no more, and all will be happiness forevermore.

Sister Annie S. Pugh died on the 8th of June, 1884. She was born January 23rd, 1862; was a daughter of Bro. Thomas Castleman, and was married to Bro. Pugh July 13, 1879. She obeyed the gospel in October, 1883; was a member of the church of God worshipping at Phillippi, Davidson County. Sister Pugh endeavored to live a consistent Christian. Her sufferings were great during her sickness, and for twenty-three days she endured them. But death at last came to her relief. Her spirit returned to God, kind friends laid her body in the grave to sleep until the resurrection, when it will be raised, we trust, to be crowned with glory, honor, immortality and eternal life.

Sad, sad, news from brother Adams' family; Sister Maggie Lloyd passed a few days ago. Brother and sister Adams have nurtured and cultured some of the sweetest flowers of earth just to see them wither and fade before their eyes. First, sister Ella Luckey, then Maggie's babe, now the mother has been placed away in the cold earth home. I do not know how to tell my dear sister and brother to bear their heavy loss. No one can comfort like Jesus; no one can aid like our Savior; no one can cheer like Christ; then I would suggest, get a little nearer to the loving Redeemer. Sing "Nearer my God to thee, nearer to thee." I went with Bro. Jordan last Monday morning to baptize Prof. A. B. Brooks, an intelligent gentleman. His wife will also unite with the church at Saville next opportunity.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 7.

"What I have written I have written." John 19: 22.

My much respected friend, I think we concluded in our last letter that baptism is another condition, another step between the sinner and the pardoned, between the alien and the adopted son. And now the question is, is there another condition? The evangelist Luke tells us that Jesus said, "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among the nations, beginning at Jerusalem," Luke 24: 47. Paul, speaking of sins and redemption that is in Christ, says; "Whom God hath set forth * * * to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past," etc. Rom. 3: 25. With these Scriptures and others before us, we conclude that it is remission of past sins that we must have, and that it is from these past sins we are saved after doing certain things the last, by submission to baptism. Hence when we interpret Mark's record of the commission, we understand that he "is baptized" (having taken the three preceding steps) "shall be saved" from past sins; and being saved from these, is an adopted son of God, is redeemed from the kingdom of Satan and enrolled in the kingdom of heaven, the church of God, with Jesus Christ as the head, the lawful ruler.

Now we are ready to follow the apostles in their obedience to the high commission given unto them and see what they did, and what they commanded the people to do, or submit to, and what it effected in those who obeyed them. Jerusalem is the place to look for their beginning Luke 24: 47-49. See also Acts 1: 4; 15: 8. Now (Acts 2: 4) we find that this blessed promise being fulfilled, they were fully prepared to carry out the commission given to them. Hence we hear Peter teaching the assembled multitude, preaching the gospel to them (1 Cor. 15.) Notice Acts 2: 14-36. Now what effect had this gospel upon those who heard (and believed) it? It pierced their hearts, made them cry out, men and brethren what shall we do? Acts 2: 37. What did Peter tell them? "Repent (for repentance and remission of sins should be preached) and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, (that are past,) and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

Here is repentance and baptism mentioned. Faith is exhibited in their being pricked in their hearts, and confession may be couched in the expressions, "Save yourself from this untoward generation. How? By confessing me before it, or in its presence. If so, have we not the four conditions presented by Peter to the multitude; and what farther? "Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized." And what else? And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. (Their state relation is changed from murders.) (23d verse) They have attained to a saved state, (47th verse) and are "praising God, and having favor with all the people." Now if we could not find another example in all of the Acts of the apostles, this would be sufficient, unless we find them saying and doing differently, and telling the people to do something different. Peter, in Solomon's porch, said, "But ye denied the Holy One, and killed the Prince of life, whom God raised from the dead." (Acts 3: 13-14-15.) Preached the gospel facts, and the gospel commands, "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, (turn) that your sins may be blotted out; when (that) the times of refreshing shall (may) come from the presence of the Lord;" 19th verse. See also 22nd to 26th verse. Now what have we here? Repent and be converted, a term different, it is true, but when its full meaning is obtained, includes with repentance all that is needed to have sins blotted out or remitted. For in fourth chapter and fourth verse, we read, "Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, believed; even to about five thousand men." In 32nd verse we further learn that the multitude that believed, were of one heart and of one soul.

We have found then that those who "gladly received the word were baptized and added unto them, showing a change of state or relation," such as all must have to God, before they can be saved from past sins. May you and I see the truth as it is in Jesus, is the desire of

A DISCIPLE.

NOTES FROM WEST TENNESSEE.

We left the dear ones at home on the 18th of June, and came to this part of our State for the purpose of preaching, visiting, and to do all the good possible in our power, within one month, the time we had appointed before leaving. The joy, pleasure and comforts of life, which we have experienced since we came here, are almost indescribable. We have had the pleasure of meeting a great many good brethren and sisters who have given us much encouragement in the work of the Lord. We have a large congregation of brethren and sisters at Union City, and some of them seem to be deeply interested in their soul's salvation. I had the pleasure of addressing them twice, and much interest was manifested on both occasions. And now I am happy to say, we are having quite a feast, as Bro. W. Hall of St. Louis, Mo., is here preaching the gospel with much power. Bro. Hall is a great worker, and, for this reason, he meets with much success in his undertakings. It is very probable the meeting will close to-night. Much interest has been, and is being manifested. About twenty-two have been added to the church, and we hope for more yet. During the day Bro. Hall doesn't take any certain subject and talk on it, but grants his congregation the privilege of quoting different verses on which he comments and gives explanations which are interesting to all and creates a great interest in the work both with preacher and hearers. Bro. Hall is about thirty-five years of age, medium size, with a good, honest, smiling face, a black, piercing eye, and speaks distinctly and forcibly.

We have not been confining ourselves to Union City all our time, but have been preaching the gospel where opportunities were given. This county (Obion) affords a wide field in which much good could be accomplished, were there preachers in the field to lead in the work.

The Palestine congregation is letting her light shine in this respect. The people here are wonderfully blessed with fine wheat crops this year, and this should create a zeal to do more for the advancement of the cause of Christ. Round about Palestine the farms are level, and rich, and free of rocks; which of course, makes it very encouraging for the man who labors so earnestly and faithfully under the heat of the sun. Bro. W. H. Donaldson is the evangelist in this county, and from what we have seen and heard about him, he will create quite a wave that will carry with it much success.

On last Lord's day we preached two discourses at Moriah, a Baptist church.

Since writing the above, I have heard Bro. Hall preach his crowning discourse at the close of the warm meeting, which has been going on at this place for one week. His subject last night was, "Triumph of Christianity," which, I think, was handled successfully. Bro. Hall labored to show the weakness in infidelity, and the strength and power in Christianity. At the close of the discourse a good song was sung, people were invited to come to Christ, and in humility and love eight persons confessed before a great crowd of witnesses that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. To stand on the side of love purity and true happiness we must be on the side of Christianity. We will go to Fulton, Ky., (D. V.,) tomorrow, and preach there on Lord's day. We will long remember the kind hospitality our good friends have so willingly manifested to us during our stay here. May the Lord continue to bless them, and may they labor in the vineyard till God sees fit to take them from the transient things of this world to the bright side of eternity, to crown their pure spirits with everlasting joy and happiness.

FLIPPIN, KY.

The Baptist church at Indian Creek met on Saturday before the fifth Lord's day in June, and after preaching by Elder F. C. Childress, pastor of that church, from this text, "Why I believed what I do believe," chapter 5, verse 5, the meeting was called to order by the moderator, and the clerk read the minutes of the preceding meeting, one clause of which ran thus, "On motion and vote I was excluded for joining another church." After the reading of the minutes, the moderator arose and said he was not in favor of that part of the minutes. For, said he, if you let it go to record in that way, you acknowledge the Campbellites as a church, and I don't consider them a church. So after considerable consultation, it was decreed that the minutes be changed, and read excluded for joining the Campbellite society. Now, said the pastor, that will show to all future generations what it was done for. There are some things I cannot comprehend or understand, and would be glad to have them explained by some one that knows. I have before me the minutes of the Barren River association of united Baptists held with the Indian Creek church August, 1882. Now in these minutes we find the pastor and messengers of Indian Creek church appointed as a committee on divine services, and twice in their report, when referring to the house of worship belonging to the church of Christ, they call that house the Christian church. Now we find these same persons denying the disciples the right to be called a church, and will admit no other name but that of Campbellite. How can these things be? How can they call the house the Christian church, and at the same time call those who meet there to worship, the Campbellite society?

[There is a difference between receiving a favor and striking a blow for a supposed injury with our Baptist friends.—D. L.]

There are two ways in which money especially touches the Christian character, and subjects it to a severe test. One is, the way in which we give money; the other, the way in which we bear its loss. Hard as the former is, the latter is yet harder.—New York Examiner.

BRO. LIPSCOMB'S CRITICISMS.

In the ADVOCATE of June 25th, Bro. Lipscomb, under the heading, "True Order of Work," takes occasion to criticize some of my positions. As a difference exists between us in this matter, I am glad that he has expressed himself; for truth is that which I most ardently desire. I am perfectly certain that the perfection of happiness and utility that man may attain, is to be reached by believing, and teaching, and obeying the truth. By the grace of God, therefore I intend to make the question, "What is truth?" the leading one of my life, realizing that it should be every man's highest ambition to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is with pleasure therefore that I begin this review of Bro. Lipscomb; for I recognize in him one possessed of great critical acumen, boldness, and loyalty to the truth: I have had opponents that I felt sure did not have the moral courage to see the truth when by so doing they would be brought into conflict with the great body of the leaders of the reformation; nor did they have the magnanimity to surrender when conscious of defeat.

Bro. Lipscomb says: "That Bro. Harding has run to an extreme in some things, or given expressions to sentiments that appear extreme, we think true."

That I have given expressions to sentiments that appear extreme, I have no doubt. I make no claim to infallibility. Doubtless there are, in my writings, sentences taken by themselves would misrepresent that which I believe and teach. Since I began to write for the ADVOCATE I have delivered more than seven hundred discourses, have written nearly a page a week for the paper, and have read the Bible through a number of times; doubtless I have learned something in these twenty months, and could the writing be done over, I would hope to do it better.

But while this is all true, I am quite confident that in the matters to which Bro. Lipscomb excepts I am correct. In these things I have not yet seen reason to modify or in any wise to change my convictions.

He says, (1) "Bro. Harding refuses to communicate with his brethren as to his wants;" (2) "Again I am not sure that Bro. Harding does not go to an extreme in refusing all aid from those without."

Let us consider these matters one at a time.

1. Did the apostles and first evangelists make personal appeals to their brethren to minister to wants? Bro. Lipscomb thinks they did; I think not. Let us consider his proofs.

(a) Bro. Lipscomb says, "The Philippians communicated with Paul as concerning giving and receiving. Paul must have communicated with them." Read Philippians 4: 10-20 2 Cor. 11: 8-10. The facts are these: after Paul left Philippi, he labored in Thessalonica, Athens, Corinth, and so on, till he was finally imprisoned at Rome. Twice while he was at Thessalonica the Philippians sent supplies for his needs unto him: while he was at Corinth brethren from Macedonia, (probably from Philippi) came to that city and found him supporting himself by daily labor: they ministered unto him: in writing to the Christians he says, "In all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself;" when at Rome, a prisoner, the Philippians sent unto him again, by the hand of Epaphroditus abundant supplies for his wants. This grand church did not forget him who had ministered to them in Spiritual things. They communicated with him as concerning giving and receiving; the revised version has it "no church had fellowship with me in the matter of giving and receiving, but ye only."

The church at Detroit knowing of Bro. Creath's age, and infirmity, and devotion to the cause, had fellowship with him by sending a generous contribution; the first he knew of it, he learned on receiving the gift. Of course he acknowledged the gift, and expressed his thanks. Numbers have had fellowship with me in the same way. There is no more evidence that Paul wrote asking the gift than that Bro. Creath did. I don't believe that either of them would do it.

Bro. Lipscomb quotes, that I seek not for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account.

Let it be borne in mind that this was written by the apostle after he had received their last gift. Bro. L. thinks this clearly implies that Paul had asked them for the gift. I think not. Had he intended to express such an idea he would have used a different tense—the past instead of the present. Paul compliments the Philippians by telling them that when he departed from Macedonia no church "had fellowship" with him in the matter of giving and receiving but them only. Doubtless if he had asked all the churches, all would have helped him; for all loved him; I am sure that if I were to make an appeal to any church I ever labored with to help me, it would do it; much more would they have helped the apostle: but the merit of the Philippians was that without being asked they ministered unto him; he says to them "Ye have revived your thoughts for me;" he does not say, "I have revived your thoughts for me." Indeed he says they had remembered his needs before, but had lacked an opportunity to minister to him. He was not one to tell about his wants, for in this very connection he says, "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."

(c) Bro. Lipscomb quotes from the letter to the Colossians, "All my affairs shall Tychicus make known unto you: * * * whom I have sent unto you for this very purpose, that ye may know our estate, and that he may comfort your hearts." "They shall make known unto you all things that are done here."

Bro. Lipscomb infers that Paul sent Tychicus and Onesimus to the Colossians to make known his wants and necessities." This is not a necessary inference, (and any other kind is worthless in this place;) for it can not be shown that Paul at any time had any necessities; indeed all the intimations are that he was well supplied: it was written about the same time of the one to the Philippians, to whom he says, "I have all things and abound; I am filled," etc. At the same time that he sends the letters to Ephesus and Colosse, he writes one to Philemon, a member of the church at Colosse, in which Paul says, speaking concerning Onesimus. "If he hath wronged thee at all, or oweth thee ought, put that to my account; I Paul write with mine own hand, I will repay it." It is hardly to be supposed that he would write so freely about paying what this slave owed, if he were at the very same time appealing to this very church by Tychicus and Onesimus, telling them that he was in want and asking them for gifts. If I were to write to the church at Nashville, telling the brethren that I needed help, and asking them to send me a contribution, I would not like to say to Bro. Lipscomb, by the same mail, "I am informed that Bro. Jones is indebted to you; just charge whatever he owes you to me; I will pay it. But that is what Paul did on Bro. Lipscomb's theory."

Moreover Paul expressly says he sends Tychicus "that ye may know our estate, and that he may comfort your hearts." I have just read Colossians, and it is evident that the great care of the apostle for them is that they may not be discouraged or led away by false teachers; troubles likely to beset them, seeing that this greatest of their leaders, their apostle, the apostle to the Gentiles, was a prisoner in bonds. So he sent Tychicus with good news concerning himself that they may be comforted and strengthened.

As the letter to the Ephesians was written at the same time, and sent by the same messengers, these remarks will apply also to Bro. Lipscomb's quotations from that epistle.

I have seen nothing yet from which I can get, as a necessary inference, the idea that Tychicus and Onesimus were financial agents sent out by Paul on a collecting tour. Most preachers have written letters to their friends, or sent messengers to them, to let them know how they do, and to comfort their hearts; certainly I have, many times; I have observed that preachers are very apt to send messages when they are succeeding extra well. Paul was having remarkable success at Rome, notwithstanding his bonds: the gospel was having excellent effect in the most unexpected quarters; so much so that he was persuaded that his imprisonment was for the good of the cause. It is not strange therefore that he should send his companions to comfort the brethren, and to make known to them what was being done at Rome. Our brother is evidently strained for proof texts when he appeals to the mere facts of Paul's having sent such messengers as evidence that he asked for supplies.

(d) Bro. Lipscomb refers to 1 Thess. 2: 6-9, in which Paul tells the Thessalonians, "We might have been burdensome, as apostles of Christ." It appears evident, from a number of passages which I will cite if necessary, that Paul made it a rule to refuse all help, upon going to a place to plant a church, even from those who became disciples during his stay. He might rightfully have allowed them, after their conversion, to support him in the work, and thus have been burdensome to them; but he declined even to do this. The passage has no bearing upon the question between Bro. Lipscomb and myself that I can see.

(e) Bro. Lipscomb quotes Rom. 15: 24. "For I hope to see you in my journey (into Spain,) and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first in some measure I shall have been satisfied with your company." From this we learn that Paul expected to visit Rome and spend awhile there; and then, he hoped they would convey him into Spain. He intended to give them "a benefit," to hold them a meeting, and he hoped they would take him to his next appointment. That is all there is in this passage.

So much then for the first extreme into which Bro. Lipscomb thinks I have run. Let us now consider the second.

2. "Again I am not sure that Bro. Harding does go to an extreme in refusing all aid from those without," says he. As I must be very brief on this, I call the reader's attention at once to what I regard as a very satisfactory proof text. I quote from the third epistle of John:

"Beloved, thou doest a faithful work in whatsoever thou doest toward them that are brethren and strangers withal; who bare witness to thy love before the church: whom thou wilt do well to set forward in their journey worthily of God: that because for the sake of the Name they went ferth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We ought therefore to welcome such, that we may be fellow-workers with the truth."

This passage seems to me most fully and satisfactorily to sustain my teaching and practice. Here we have these teachers in the spiritual Israel, going forth taking nothing of the Gentiles (the world). And John most heartily approves of and commands their course.

But, says Bro. Lipscomb, "David and Solomon accepted help tendered by those not of the house of Israel, in building the temple of God. So was done in rebuilding."

Yes, Hiram king of Tyre helped in building the temple, but he was paid for it according to an agreement into which they had entered. I cannot call to mind any help, which David or Solomon received in this work for which they did not pay.

Concerning the rebuilding, it is said that the adversaries of Judea and Benjamin desired to help Zerubbabel and the Jews under him; but it was said unto them, "Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us."

It is true that Cyrus and Artaxerxes caused their people to contribute to the work, but that was a matter of debt; for they had destroyed the former temple, and had taken away its treasures; but being convinced that the God of the Jews was the true God they seek to repair their wrong.

With regard to the matter of making known wants however, I may add that I have rarely had any. I have sometimes thought it looked as though I would want by the next day, but with the need came the supply. I have sometimes made foolish expenditures, and then have had to be a little rigid to get even again. Generally when men make known their wants, they are wants they may have in a year, or month, or week.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

The article on prayer last week should have been attributed to W. F. Broadus. We found it in Christian Advocate.

We have W. W. Hickman's name at Cherry Mound, Tenn. There is no such office. If he or some friend will give his correct address, we will send paper to him.

B. C. Goodwin, Elkmont, Ala., July 13, writes: "I visited Reunion on the first Lord's day in this month, and there were two added to the army of the Lord. The church is in good working order there. I expect to hold them a meeting the first Lord's day in October. Tell Bro. Barnes to send an appointment to Athens, Ala."

FUNNY.—Before the recent National Democratic Convention there were two parties in the party, one favoring free trade or tariff for revenue only, the other, tariff for revenue, so laid us to encourage American manufactures and mechanic arts. The convention adopted a plank on this subject which both parties heartily endorse, but they are in bitter controversy as to whose theory has been sustained.

A. C. Henry, Huntsville, Ala., July 15, writes: "I have had a very sick family for the last three or four months, so have done but little work. Had two additions at Landersville the first Lord's day, and have had two at this place to date, one by letter and one from the Baptists. Began here on Lord's day, the 13th. Bro. Daugherty (Bro. Harding's Sanky) is with me to do the singing."

Lee Jackson, Thyatira, Miss., July 16, writes: "Bro. E. G. Sewell, of the ADVOCATE, is expected to be in this section three weeks, beginning the third Lord's day in August, to hold meetings for the churches at Thyatira, Senatobia, and Antioch. A good time is anticipated. We were with the McCain's Chapel congregation on last Lord's day, and preached to an attentive audience. This church is located four miles east of Hernando, in a thriving district of country. Bro. B. W. Lauderdale is doing good work here, and stands very high as a model man and preacher. Will all those in Mississippi who read this, forward us all the information they can relative to the churches in our State. We will correspond with any brother who will give us his address."

J. M. Kidwill, Smithville, July 11, writes: "I spent three or four days, beginning Monday night, the 23rd of June, with the congregation at Gainesboro, Jackson County. The brethren seem to be growing in many of the elements of Christian life and strength. Gainesboro is the present home of Bro. Hoover, well and favorably known as a teacher and successful preacher of the gospel. He is a recent graduate in medicine, and is now giving attention to the maladies that flesh is heir to. I hope he will continue to tell the lost ones of earth of the Great Physician. It is important to look after the body, but infinitely more important to look after the soul. This is also the home of our Bro. W. D. G. Carnes, who teaches school, and preaches as occasion may offer. Bro. Carnes is an earnest worker, and if the brethren would keep him in the field, he would do a good work. Bro. N. B. Young, the Postmaster, is a close student and preaches occasionally with acceptance. The brethren in that country are abundantly able to sustain both these brethren, and ought to do so. Or rather these brethren ought to go out and trust the Lord for a living; brethren may call me fanatical or superstitious, but I believe the living will come. From Gainesboro, I went to Livingston, and began a meeting Friday night before the fifth Lord's day in June, and continuing day and night; preached twenty-one discourses. The immediate result was eight added to the one body. Brethren Fleming and Owensby were present a part of the time, and aided much by their songs and prayers. These brethren seem to have the confidence of the people generally, and are able to do good by preaching the word. Livingston is a town of, I presume, four or five hundred inhabitants, and is the county site of Overton county. There is but one church house in town, owned by the Methodists and Presbyterians. The Methodists have a monthly appointment for preaching. There is no other regular preaching in the town. There is no Sunday-school at present in the place. I found the people hospitable, intelligent, and disposed to think for themselves. I found them freer from religious prejudice than most places of the same size. I was invited to use the church house, and the second Lord's day of our meeting, was permitted, by Bro. Wilson the Methodist preacher in charge, to occupy his regular hour. Our crowds were large, considering the busy season and daily showers, and increased to the close of the meeting. I hope that much good will result from our meeting. The brethren have the frame up for a meeting house, and they promise to finish it and go to work for the Lord. If they will, they can succeed. In my judgment I never saw a field so full of promise for the gospel. One incident connected with our meeting is too good to be lost. Little Bessie Hall is three and a half years of age. Her mother died before she could remember. Her grandmother cared for her, till last February when she too passed away, leaving Bessie alone with her father and grandfather. She remembers the burial of her grandmother, and often speaks of it. I do not know whether the family is religious or not; but the child was carried down to the water where I was baptizing, and while a young man was being baptized she said, "O, Pa, they are burying that man!" Bro. Sweezy, with all his logic and learning, never said half as strong a thing for the truth as this little child. What a grand commentary of the truth, still 'hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed to babes.'"

JANET'S WAY.

"You couldn't spare me a very little money, could you, father?" Janet leaned over him as he counted some bills.

"If it is for something positively necessary, my daughter."

"I can't say it is exactly that, but I never get a cent of pocket-money now, father."

He sighed heavily as he answered: "I know it and I'm sorry, but the pressure seems harder and harder every year. Wants seem to increase faster than the means of supplying them. Hand this to your mother, Janet."

"Forgive me for worrying you, dear father. I ought to be making my own spending-money, but there are so few ways of doing that unless I go away from home."

"We can't let you do that. There's enough for all if we are careful."

"Take it out to Bridget," said her mother, as Janet gave her the money from her father.

"Twelve dollars. Dear me!" said Janet to herself, rather fretfully, as she slowly walked toward the kitchen. "Bridget has earned it and I don't grudge it to her, but how I wish I could earn twelve dollars!"

"Wirra, wirra!" Bridget sat on the floor holding an open letter and rocking herself backward and forward with dismal groans. Pots, pans, and kettles were around in their usual confusion. "It's meself must be lavin' yez the day, Miss Janet."

Servants were hard to find, and Janet's face wore the accustomed expression of dismay with which such notices were always received as she asked:

"What's the matter, Bridget?"

"It's me sisther's got the faver bad, an' it's meself must be goin' to her. An' it's six weeks intirely I'll be shtayin' whin it's so far to be goin'."

As Janet handed her the money a sudden thought came to her.

"I'm sorry for you, Bridget. Of course, you must go if you must. Perhaps we can get along without any one till you are ready to come back."

"Mother," she said, returning to her, "Bridget's going away for a few weeks."

Mother's face grew as dismayed as Janet's had, for she was not strong, and there were four boys.

"An' plase ye, ma'am, it's after comin' to thry to get the place I am."

"What do you mean, Janet?" said her mother, laughing as the young girl curtsied low.

"I mean, mother, will you pay me the same you pay Bridget if I do her work?"

"You can't do it all, Janet."

"What I can't do I'll hire. I want to do something, and I wan't to get a little money I can feel is my own and that I have a right to spend if I want a new book or a bit of music or anything else. I can't get a school—there are forty applications where there is one vacancy. I can't get more than one or two music scholars. I can't dispose of fancy work or painting, and if I could I might dabble over them for a month and not clear more than Bridget does in a week, there are so many wanting to do that kind of work. Kitchen work is the only work there seems to be plenty of for girls."

"You may try it, but I think you will get very tired of it."

Janet spent a good share of her first week's wages in buying gingham aprons, rubber gloves, and paying a stout woman to come for half a day and scrub and scour until the last traces of good-natured, slovenly Bridget's presence were removed. Then, with clean kitchen, clean utensils, and clean towels, Janet took hold of her work with a right good will.

"We'll all co-operate," said father, when he heard of her intention.

"We'll all co-operate," cried the boys, and they kept their word well in bringing wood and water and sweeping walks. And after the first morning she found that Tom had made the fire and ground the coffee before she came down.

"There's a great satisfaction in doing things thoroughly," said Janet to her mother, after the first day or two. "Before, when we have been without a girl, I have always hated it, because I tried how little I could get along with doing, and how much I could shove out of the way. Now that I am making a business of it I don't feel that way. And, mother, you would be astonished to see how little cleaning there is to be done when nobody makes any unnecessary dirt or how much work can be saved by using your wits to save it."

She never told mother how her back ached during those first few days of unusual exercise. This wore off as she became accustomed to it. Every day she learned more and more to simplify her work. A few minutes in the kitchen just before bedtime arranged things so exactly to her hand that there was no hurrying or crowding at the busy time in the morning. Careful handling of table linen and other things made the wash smaller, so that the stout woman could do two weeks' wash in one. Janet found that there were few days in which she could not sit down when the dinner work was over.

Other surprising things came to light.

"What's the matter that you don't burn any wood nowadays?" said Tom; "I have so little splitting to do." Bridget, like so many of her sisterhood, had always seemed to consider it her bounden duty to keep up a roaring fire all day, regardless of whether there was need of it or not, and father always looked blank over the fuel bills. One-half the quantity was now found amply sufficient, and a difference was soon apparent in many other things. The food for one person is always noticeable in a small family where a rigid hand must be kept upon expenses, besides which, Janet was not slow in perceiving how many things went further than before. Odds and ends were utilized which had been thrown away or had counted for nothing; for no one felt afraid of scraps done over by Janet's hands.

"We never were so comfortable before," said father.

"We never had such good things to eat," declared the boys, who had highly appreciated the dainty, though plain, cookery, as contrasted with Bridget's greasy preparations; for Janet, full of an honest determination to earn her wages, had given much attention to the getting up of palatable, inexpensive dishes, seeking a variety, where Bridget had moved in one groove.

"I almost dread having Bridget come back," said mother.

But the time came when she was hourly expected. Mother sighed as she took note of the spotless kitchen, in which it was now so pleasant to come and lend a hand at the cookery or sit with her knitting while Janet moved briskly about.

"It's time I was settling with you, Janet," she said. "Six weeks—I owe you eighteen dollars."

"No; six off for hiring Mrs. Bolt, and a few other things."

"Not a bit off, dear; I've been looking over the bills for the month and I find quite a difference, more than pays all your extras. Not only in meat and groceries and fuel, but I notice it in the wear and tear and breakage—dear me! I don't think five dollars a week covers the expense of Bridget being here."

"You don't, mother dear?" said Janet, in great delight; "then you are not tired of you new girl and anxious to have Bridget back?"

"No indeed," said mother, fervently.

"Then she isn't coming back. I've found my way of earning and I'm going to stick to it for awhile. It isn't all pleasant, to be sure, but I don't know of any kind of business that is." "Only," she said, laughing, "I shall insist on having my wages as regularly paid as if I were Bridget. I shall clothe myself out of them, and so be saving dear old overworked father about five dollars a week, if you are right in your calculations, mother."

"What will you do with Bridget when she comes?"

"Mrs. Whitcom wants a girl, so she can go there. O mother dear! it's a real comfort to feel as if I were supporting myself. And I wonder why I never thought before how pleasant a way it is, this doing kind and pleasant things for you all."

And Janet worked on, feeling sure she had found her best way of securing her pocket-money in this expending of her energies for those she loved. How many daughters, restless and fretful for want of something to do, might find the same way blessed to themselves and to others in homes made bright and sweet by their faithful ministrations.—Sydney Dare.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

JOSEPH.

The history of Joseph is one of the most pleasing and instructive stories we have in the Bible, especially for the young. Notwithstanding he had been so cruelly treated by his wicked brothers, yet he was meek, quiet and forgiving, for we never find that he said an unkind word.

When Joseph was taken to Egypt by the merchants, he was sold to Potiphar, the captain of the king's guard, who was so well pleased with him that he made him overseer of all his house. The Lord was with him, and everything that he had anything to do with prospered. But a false charge was made against him, and he was cast into prison. And he behaved himself so well that the keeper placed in his hands the watchcare of all the other prisoners. And the Lord was with him even in prison.

The king was offended with two of his servants, and they were placed in the same prison with Joseph. Each of them had a dream. Joseph interpreted the dream; that is, he told them what would become of them, which came to pass just as he had said. One of these prisoners was put to death, but the other was restored to his place before the king. Joseph had asked them to remember him when they were released; but to show how forgetful the king's servant was, he let two years pass before he thought of the young prisoner. At last Pharaoh had a dream, and the wise men of Egypt could not give the meaning of it. So Joseph was sent for. In haste he washed and dressed himself, for he was to appear before the king. God told him what to say, and the king was so well pleased with the speech and manner of Joseph, that he made him ruler over all the land.

Joseph told the king that there would be seven years of plenty, and seven years of famine; and if he wished to keep his people and beasts from starving, he must gather up in barns enough food during the years of plenty to last during the famine. Famine must be dreadful in any land. Just think of it! No bread in the house, and money can't buy it, for there is none to be had at any price. We often read of famines in olden times; and even in late years, many of us can remember when something to eat was very hard to get. But God has always been with his children, and blessed them, when they trusted in him. He will provide some way for them, if they will only obey him. We worship the same God that Joseph did. His ears are ever open to our cries, and he has promised to hear and answer us, if we ask in faith.

Joseph was very wise and good; so when the famine came all the countries around about Egypt sent down to that country to buy bread. Jacob was very old, and had a large family, who lived a long way from Egypt; but hearing that there was plenty of bread in Egypt, he sent his sons after it. Joseph recognized them as his brethren who had treated him so cruelly, but he was kind to them. Finally he made himself known to them, then there was great rejoicing. He finally sent for his old father and all the family, and gave them the best part of the country to live in.

There are many more interesting things I might tell you about Joseph, but this is enough. And now, dear children, I want you to learn this lesson from the history of Joseph: Always be kind to those who treat you badly; be forgiving to everybody; be useful; and especially be thoughtful and kind to your father and mother, as well as your brothers and sisters. May God bless you and help you. UNCLE MINOR.

LETTERS FROM THE LITTLE FOLKS.

DEAR UNCLE MINOR: You asked my papa, when he met you at Dawson, if we read your letters in the ADVOCATE. Oh, yes! and enjoy them, too. I remember your visit and talk to us children five years ago, when you were with us, and would be glad to have you come again. We have no Sunday-school near us now, as I live six miles in the country; but hope they will yet organize one at our school-house. We had an interesting one there last summer. I think I know why Dan was left out in the seventh chapter of Revelation. It was on account of his idolatry. I hope you will continue to write for the ADVOCATE.—[May Crabtree, Madisonville, Ky]

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

BEGIN WITH GOD.

Begin the day with God!
He is thy sun and day;
He is the radiance of thy dawn,
To him address thy lay.
Sing thy first song to God!
Not to thy fellow-man;
Not to the creatures of his hand,
But to the Glorious One.
Awake, cold lips, and sing!
Arise, dull knees, and pray:
Lift up, O man, thy heart and eyes;
Brush slothfulness away.
Look up beyond these clouds!
Thither thy pathway lies;
Mount up, away, and linger not,
The goal is yonder skies.
Cast every weight aside!
Do battle with each sin:
Fight with the faithless world without,
The faithless heart within.
Take thy first meal with God!
He is thy heavenly food!
Feed with and on him; he with thee
Will feast in brotherhood.
Take thy first walk with God!
Let him go forth with thee;
By stream, or sea, or mountain path,
Seek still his company.
Thy first transaction be
With God himself above;
So shall thy business prosper well,
And all thy days be love. —[Bonar.]

FOURTH CHAPTER OF ACTS.

While Peter and John were still preaching in Solomon's portico to the vast throng that had gathered on account of the healing of the lame man, and large numbers of them were embracing the gospel, the Pharisees and captain of the temple came upon them and laid hands on them, and kept them confined till the next day. And when they had brought them out, they enquired of them by what name or what authority they had performed that deed—that is, of healing the lame man. Then Peter boldly told them that it was done by, or through the name of Jesus of Nazareth. And the man that was healed was standing in the crowd, to show the miracle was a real one, and with all this force of testimony they could say nothing against the miracle as such, but still they were determined that the matter should spread no further, and so they took the apostles aside and commanded them strictly not to preach or teach any more in that name. But Peter said, "whether it be right to hearken unto you more than God, judge ye." For, said he, "we can but speak the things we have seen and heard." And when they had further threatened them, they let them go. They were afraid just then to try to punish them, lest they should be hindered by the people, for the masses of them were glorifying God over the healing, and were disposed to receive the gospel, as thousands did.

This was the beginning of persecution against the apostles for preaching the gospel of the grace of God to the people. This case shows the blindness, and the unyielding disposition of error and prejudice. These Pharisees and elders had the positive testimony of thousands, and the living testimony of the old man himself, who was still present, being above forty years old, and fully competent to testify, as he had never walked before. And prejudice, and the bitterness of error and partisanship has never improved, or grown any milder or gentler than it was then. It is just as unyielding now, as when those Jews threatened the apostles and commanded them not to preach the gospel any more. The very same thing would be done to-day, if men had the power. But the apostles assembled themselves together and prayed. And there are a few things a little remarkable in this prayer, as compared with prayers at the present time for a similar object.

The design of the prayer was doubtless for the spread of the gospel, and the conversion of sinners. And in these days when men are praying for a similar end, they pray devoutly to quicken and convert them. But not so with the apostles. They prayed thus: "And now Lord behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thine hand to heal, and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child, Jesus." If it had been God's order to send forth his Spirit to convert sinners, the apostles would have known it, and would certainly have prayed for it at this time. For how was especially an opportune time for such a work. The apostles had been arrested, and threatened, and hindered from the work of preaching, and this would have been the very time, if ever, when such a work was needed, and would likely be done. And surely the apostles would have prayed for it at this juncture had it been according to the will of God. For these prejudiced and wicked Jews could not have arrested the Holy Spirit of God, could not in anywise have hindered its work upon the hearts of sinners, and this would have been the very time for a prayer to that end. But it was not done. Not one word of the kind was in this prayer. But realizing that God had commanded them to preach the gospel to every creature, they prayed for help to accomplish that work. And their prayer was at once answered; for the place was shaken where they were, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness. And in the entire history of the apostles, they never one time prayed the Lord to send his Spirit into the hearts of sinners to convert them; nor did they ever direct Christians to do such a thing. Paul directed the church at Ephesus to pray for him, that utterance might be given him, that he might open his mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the gospel, for which, says he, I am an ambassador in bonds. He also told the Thessalonians to pray for him, that the word of God might have free course, and be glorified among the people.

But never one time did he instruct Christians to pray God to send the Spirit into the hearts of sinners to convert them. The Spirit of God will not dwell in an unholy temple. The sinner must purify his soul in obeying the truth before the Spirit is promised him. Jesus said of the Spirit, when promising it to the disciples, "Whom the world cannot receive." John 14: 17. Hence there is not only no precept or example in the word of God to pray for the Holy Spirit to be sent into the hearts of sinners to convert them, but Jesus says the thing cannot be. Therefore every man that prays for it, prays that the word of Christ may be overturned, and thus makes himself a rebel in the government of God. The Lord has established the gospel of Christ as his power to save. But the gospel can only save those that obey it. To pray God to send his Spirit into the hearts of sinners to convert and save them, is to set aside the gospel, and ask God to save sinners otherwise. What could be more insulting to God than to set aside the means he has ordained to save sinners, and ask him to save them some other way. It is an actual repudiation of the wisdom and word of God, and asking him to set aside his own plan, and save sinners by man's plan. Not one of those men that pray God to send forth his Spirit into the hearts of sinners to convict and convert them, will ever urge them to obey the gospel as directed in his word. And in this way, by the so-called prayers of men, the power of God to save sinners is set aside. When will men learn to respect the word and authority of God, and trust the plan he has ordained to save sinful and rebellious man?

In the latter part of the fourth chapter of Acts we have some things that every child of God on earth might well and profitably study, and that is concerning the use of our means for the advancement of the Lord's cause. It is here said: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things he possessed was his own. But they had all things common." Verse 32. These disciples were of one heart and of one soul. They were perfectly united together in faith, in sympathy, in judgment, and in work. At this time man's wisdom had not begun to usurp authority in the church and set the wisdom of God at naught, as is so extensively the case now. These people had just obeyed the gospel, and their souls were full of love, full of devotion, and they were perfectly willing for the Lord to rule in all things. And this is just what ought to be now. And if there is not a very great lopping off of men's plans and devices for doing the Lord's work by the children of God, there will be a terrible overthrow of human plans in the end. None of these will stand when Christ comes to judge the world; and if not destroyed sooner, they will be then. And woe be then to those who have invented and held to them in life. Every plant, every plan and device of human mould in matters pertaining to things divine, that God himself has not ordained, will be rooted up, will be destroyed. It is an utter impossibility for disciples to be of one mind while some are adhering to the letter of things God has ordained, and some inventing and running plans of their own invention. And so far as the disciples of Christ are concerned, the worst divisions existing among them is regarding humanly devised plans for using our means for the advancement and upbuilding of the Master's cause and kingdom in the earth. Plans and schemes, societies and organizations of man's device, are continually multiplying, and constantly extending their encroachments upon the church and ordinances of God. Some of these State and district plans are now proposing to furnish standing committees of brethren to settle church difficulties. This is a species of usurpation of the few over the many that must necessarily result in the principles of popery, if not in that very thing itself. Any step by any assembly or association of Christians, to assume any authority or control over the churches or congregations, in their individual capacity, is popery in its principles, and that as large as life. And as long as these things exist with some, while others are fighting against all innovations of every description, unity, oneness of heart and soul is impossible. And yet Christians are positively commanded to do this. Paul says, (1 Cor. 1: 10,) "Now I beseech you brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you: but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Thus the word of God plainly demands that Christians shall be thoroughly united in one mind, in one judgment. And this is just what existed in the church at Jerusalem at the time named above, and this is precisely what should exist now.

But the question is, who is in the wrong, and how shall they be settled? The answer is plain. Those who introduce these human plans, and try to supplant the word of God by them, are the responsible parties in the trouble. Those who stand planted upon the word of God, and that alone, cannot yield without just giving up the word of God, and adopting human wisdom for their government. This they cannot do while they love God and respect his word. The grand principles of eternal truth, and an earnest love for truth and its author, compel them to contend for truth, for God's word, as the rule in all things. Thus an unending warfare must go on till the advocates of error, of human wisdom and human plans, abandon them and become willing to accept God's word, and that alone, as their guide. Then, and not till then, will this warfare end. And whenever this takes place, then again will all that believe be of one heart and of one soul.

Brethren, let us stand fast in the liberty where-with Christ hath made us free, and not become entangled in the meshes of human wisdom, human plans and inventions for doing the Lord's work. Those early disciples were one in their entire practice. When their goods were to be used for the Master's cause, they sold their possessions and goods, and laid the money at the apostle's feet, and distribution was made to each and all, as their needs required. There were no human plans for this work then. All were guided in all things by the apostles, and they were guided by the Holy Spirit; and thus God ruled in all things in the church, and so it should be now. Those Christians were so whole-souled that none of them said that what they possessed was their own. They realized that they, together with what they had, belonged to the Lord, and so used it. So should all Christians consider now.

QUERY.

Please explain the death that Paul-Saul of Tarsus died.—[T. W. G., Hollow Rock, Tenn.]

There is no record of the death of Paul in the Scriptures. The last account given of him in the Bible is that he was in prison in Rome. Profane history states that soon after the writing the letters to Timothy and Titus he was beheaded in the persecution then raging. The letters were evidently written in anticipation of an early death of martyrdom. Hence he said, "I am ready to be offered up." He says in one of his letters, "I die daily." This evidently means I suffer the anguish, sorrow, even the pains of a living death, daily in my labor and service of God.

ADULTERY.

This vice seems to be on the increase in the United States; owing too, I think, to the people looking to the laws of our land, for advice in this direction, instead of looking to the law of Him, who intended that the marriage vow should be sacred. Oh! this divorce business, how it is corrupting our country! Nay, more, we see it taking root and springing up in the church among us, and our teachers seem to have nothing to say on the subject. I have never heard a discourse upon this subject in my life; neither have I ever heard an elder teach and admonish his flock in regard to this grievous sin, and you scarcely can find a congregation but what has members living with divorced companions, and all resting comparatively easy, and drifting with the tide of public opinion, that a written divorcement granted by the courts of our county dissolves the relation existing between man and wife: this ought not so to be, and I fear, brethren, that God will hold the congregation accountable where such be. If he requires as much of us under this, the gospel dispensation, as he did of the Jews under the Jewish economy, and no doubt with me but what he does, he will require that we put those "strange wives (and husbands too) from among us." We find under the law (Deut. 7: 3) that the Jews were not to intermarry with the nations around them, they were to perish if they did so; but after they began to have kings for their guides and leaders, they departed from this a most positive command of Jehovah. What was the result? God caused thousands of them to perish by the hands of their enemies for their disobedience in setting aside His law and being governed by their own desires and inclination. Now in the days of Cyrus, king of Persia, the people "build the house that was builded"—not a new house observe, but rebuilt the house that once was. That is our mission to-day; "we build the house that was builded" in Jerusalem over eighteen hundred years ago, and we should try to keep this adulterous material out of the walls thereof.

The people under Cyrus after the temple was built wished to worship God as he had directed. They wished to turn their backs upon all the innovations and teaching of men that had been introduced into their god-given worship; they had discarded all but their "strange wives," and Ezra went up from Babylon, and being a ready scribe in the law, he saw that the Jews had sinned in taking wives of the nations around them; he wept before the temple, and was in great distress, (is there no one to weep before God's temple to-day on the account of this divorced adultery?) but one Shechaniah encouraged him to reform the strange marriages. He said to Ezra: "Let us put away our strange wives and all that are born of them, and let us do it according to the law. Ezra rose up and made a proclamation to the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem, and whosoever would not come in three days, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation." Ezra 10th chapter. Remember the proclamation and the consequences if any failed to comply. "And they gave their hands that they would put away their wives, and being guilty, they offered a ram for their trespass." Observe also the process of pardon. At the end of the reconing one hundred and sixteen "strange wives" were sent away. What do we learn from this? Paul answers, "These things happened unto them for ensamples, and they are written for our learning," they are a solemn warning to those who should live under the gospel; they happened to them, for a warning to us, against those evil practices: therefore, "Let us not commit fornication as some of them committed and fell in one day, three and twenty thousand." The Spirit said: "Fornicators, idolaters, and adulterers shall not inherit the kingdom of God." This is in the imperative; not that they ought not, but they shall not.

Well, says one, what are you going to do with those in the kingdom that have divorced their first companion and married again? Do as Shechaniah advised Ezra; it is no harder for us now, than for them then; for the Savior says, "If we forsake not father, mother, house and lands for his sake, we are not worthy of him." If you have such in your congregation, do as Ezra—issue the "proclamation, notify them of their sin, show them their error that they may see their guilt, and make their offering to the Lord for their trespass,—not a ram of the flock, but confession, repentance, and prayer. If they refuse to hear, carry out Ezra's plan: cause them to forfeit their substance—their rights and privileges to the church of the Most High, and "separate them from the congregation," do it as Shechaniah advised, "according to the law"—the New Testament under which we live and by which we will be judged in the last day. Wake up, brother elders, to your duty; teach your young converts their duty in marrying, and what the consequences will be if they separate and marry again. Come, do not go to judgment, and there tell your Master you could not teach your congregation on this important theme on the account of timidity. Yours for a pure reformation.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

TO THE FRIENDS AND PATRONS OF HAYNES INSTITUTE, AND TO THE PUBLIC GENERALLY:

Once more, in the providence of God, we have been permitted to reach the close of a scholastic year. For eleven successive years we were permitted to issue this Circular Letter as President of Murfreesboro Female Institute. Once—last June—we addressed you as President of Haynes Institute. Under our thirteen years' management, I may say the Institute has been fairly prosperous, and I believe has been the means of doing much good.

But circumstances have induced me to sever my connection with this institute. It is with some feelings of regret that I take this step. To a generous public, for past patronage, I return my profoundest thanks. To my personal friends, who have always befriended me, I may say, I shall never be able to repay you. You have the gratitude of a heart which has been subdued and softened by the had experiences which are the concomitants of life's misfortunes.

It is painful to sever the ties of personal associations which have been pleasant; I, therefore, leave Murfreesboro with regret. I have been elected to a place in the Faculty of South Kentucky College, at Hopkinsville, Ky. I have accepted, and will enter on the duties of the office at once. I shall be in a large, new, elegant building, which is now approaching completion. I feel that I shall there be able to do for my friends all that could reasonably be expected in the education of their daughters. I shall have sole control of the Boarding department.

The faculty will be composed of four gentlemen and two ladies in the Literary department, all of whom are experienced, practical teachers. Besides, there will be a Musical Department, under my especial personal control, which shall be second to no school of the kind in all the country. Whatever I may have been able to do in the past, in any respect, I feel safe in saying that I will there have increased facilities for doing better. Those who entrust their daughters to my care may rest assured that their welfare, in every way, will be my constant care. Every comfort will be afforded them. My large experience as Principal of a boarding school will enable me to provide intelligently for the wants of any pupil who may be placed under my charge.

The rooms will be new, and well furnished. Seasonable, well-cooked, nutritious diet will be served, and the attention of an experienced matron will at all times be devoted to the health and well-being of the girls.

Young men and boys will be admitted to the recitations, but will not be permitted to board in college. Good board for them, under proper restrictions, can be had at very reasonable rates, either with Prof. M. L. Lipscomb, or in private families. Boys and girls can find one of the most desirable schools in South Kentucky College. There is a growing demand for this class of schools.

Now, friends, we place ourselves at your service. We solicit your patronage. We promise you a school unsurpassed in all that pertains to the proper education of your children. Send your sons or daughters to South Kentucky College, seventy-two miles north of Nashville, Tennessee, to a school having one of the best buildings in the country—having a Faculty, each member of which has experience and character, and you will, perhaps, save yourself of some regret in the future.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

EZRA'S FAITH AND MODESTY.

Oftentimes the most important lessons are set forth in some casual remark; and indeed very frequently the character of a writer and the springs that move him to action are more clearly portrayed in an incidental utterance, than in many pages of labored argumentation. I have been particularly impressed by a sentence from Ezra to which I invite the readers attention.

This man of God had found favor with the king of Persia, and had been permitted by him to gather together all the children of Israel, who desired to return to the city of their fathers, with their little ones and all their substance, that he might lead them up to Jerusalem. Such a journey was exceedingly dangerous in the days of lawlessness; for large bands of armed men frequently traveled the country, who scrupled not to kill and rob those they could overpower. Ezra realized that his party would be an exceedingly tempting one to such marauders, and it occurred to him to ask the king for a band of soldiers and horsemen to protect them. The thought arose in his mind, but he did not make the request, for a reason which he gives; he says:

"For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoke unto the king, saying, 'The hand of God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.'"

It seemed to him that it would be inconsistent for him to ask protection of the king, after having expressed such confidence in the Lord. For doubtless the king would say, "If the hand of your God is upon all them for good that seek him, why do you call upon me? why do you not seek him?"

As Ezra himself expresses it he was "ashamed" to make the request. Instead therefore he turned to the Lord: "So we fasted and besought our God for this; and he was intreated of us." The result of the matter is expressed in these words: "Then we departed from the river Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way."

The promises to Christians are much richer and more precious than were any that Ezra ever heard. In the New Testament the Father promises in the most emphatic and unequivocal way that he will give us everything we need for this life, and in the world to come, eternal life. These promises of everything that is good, for time and eternity, are conditional; they are to those who will love, and serve, and trust the Lord. As long as a man is a faithful servant of the Lord therefore, he can say, "I am daily receiving all that is good for me;" and he can appreciate at their full value the apostolic injunctions, "Rejoice evermore; in everything give thanks." "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgivings let your requests be made known unto God." "And my God shall fulfil every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus."

I have sometimes had this feeling of shame which Ezra mentions upon being tempted to make known "my wants." Not that I have ever had any real wants, (without, with the want, receiving also a supply for it,) but I have often been desirous to have to-day, supplies for the wants that I expected would come on the morrow, and have been tempted to make them known. Indeed I used occasionally to "borrow twenty-five on thirty dollars for a few weeks" when I thought I could see wants, for which I had no supplies, coming. There is a brother living in my native county to whom I used to go at these times, who assured me that he took more delight in lending than I did in receiving. He would insist on letting me have more if I thought I needed it, and say, "Now don't return that little till it suits your convenience if that is never." He required neither note nor witness, nor would he have interest.

But for all that it did not seem to me to be the right thing to do. "Owe no man anything," saith the Scripture. I did not feel as independent as it seemed to me a king's son whose father is rich, and strong, and loving ought, to feel. In brief, I never made such a request that I did not feel humiliated and ashamed. I would reflect thus:

Do not the Scriptures teach that all things work together for good to those that love God? Does not Jesus plainly teach us that our heavenly Father is readier to give good things unto us, when we ask him, than our earthly parents?

Does he not say that food and raiment—all things needful—will be added to us if we will but do our duty as best we can? Does he not in the most positive way promise that he will give, even in this present time, a hundred fold to us for every time that we sacrifice for him?

Yes, all these things are certainly true: and the apostle Paul therefore tells the Philippians to be anxious for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to make known their requests unto God.

So it seems the scriptural way is to make one's requests to the Lord and not to men.

Let any man try it, and if he does it according to the scriptural directions, he will not only be freed from the "shame," but he will indeed be a free man in Christ—a king's son who is as rich as any man.

If men would be content to try this divine rule, we would hear no more about missionary societies, general boards, state boards, co-operations for spreading the gospel etc., now, than they did in apostolic times. We would do as those men of faith did; we would do the work, and God would keep his promises.

HE IS LOOKING THE WRONG WAY.

"This thing of preaching and 'trusting' (?) while the wife and children are battling the wolf from the door, and brethren are sitting under the sound of your voice with their thousands tightly grasped is an injustice, not only to the wife, the child, the preacher, and the Creator, but it is a cruel injustice to these covetous brethren themselves," shouts Elder Human Plan as he looks across from his pulpit to brother Tightfist in the corner. Our dear brother Human Plan is looking the wrong way. Let him turn and with the eye of faith look on the other side. There stands Jesus, (for he is always in the assembly of saints,) with his pierced hands and feet and side, saying, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "The world is lost; hundreds and thousands are dying daily and going down into the pit. Hasten to publish the gospel, for it is the power to save them. I will be with you to the end of the world. Give yourself wholly to the work: endure hardness as a good soldier of mine: be content with food and raiment: be not anxious about the morrow; for godliness has promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Work, pray, sacrifice, agonize to save these dying souls. See how much I have given, and done, and suffered to save them, and be thou like me. Remember thou owest all to me, and that I am your great model."

I wonder if Bro. Human Plan can find it in his heart to say to that lowly one of the pierced hands and feet and side, who thus exhorts him to go, or so freely promises to go with him:

"This thing of preaching and 'trusting' (?) when the wife and children are battling the wolf from the door, and brethren are sitting under the sound of your voice with their thousands tightly grasped, is an injustice, not only to the wife, the child, the preacher and the Creator, but it is a cruel injustice to the brother himself." "Therefore, dear Lord, you cannot expect me to go in obedience to your command until a proper salary is made up for me. Surely you do not wish me to be unjust to my wife, my children, myself, my Creator, and then cruelly unjust to my dear brother Tightfist. Let them make up the money, and then I will go."

I am very glad that the apostles and first evangelists did not belong to the Human Plan family; for had they been members of it, the gospel would not have been preached to the ends of the earth in their day, so much of their time would have been taken up in devising ways and means to raise their salaries, and it would have been necessary in their judgment to pay so much attention to their neighbors the Tightfists: especially am I glad that our dear Lord came from the great Father through faithful Abraham and trusting David, instead of through the Human Plan or Tightfist family; had he imbibed the spirit of the latter he would never have preached, and prayed, and sacrificed, and died for such selfish, unthankful, unsympathetic beings as we are.

Don't look over at Tightfist, my brother, while you are preaching, for if you do you are liable to think you are doing wonders, that you are marvellous self-sacrificing, that you are really unjust to yourself and your family in doing so much, in fact, that it is a gross piece of injustice all around for you to preach so much, work so hard and receive so little: don't look over to Tightfist, but rather turn your eye to the other side, and consider the Lamb of Calvary; remember then that he has bought you, and meditated upon the price he has paid for you, and surely you will exclaim, "Unworthy, unworthy am I, O my God Almighty, to stand before thee, or to receive the least of all thy rich gifts; when I have done all that I can, even to the utmost, I am still but an unprofitable servant." No, no, my brother; the Tightfists are not on the Lord's side, they are hypocrites: shall we neglect to do our best for Christ because they are hypocrites? They have never yet learned the glorious lesson that it is "more blessed to give than to receive;" have not you? Of all the people in the world there are none that need preaching more than the Tightfist family, (for they are lost,) and there are none less inclined to support the teacher. Let us therefore, if need be, work with our hands, and support ourselves, while we labor for them and others that are lost, for their souls are as valuable as any, when they are saved; let us by all means strive to save some, remembering that "they that be teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

P. S.—The first quotation in this article I take from a cotemporary who writes on the support of evangelists.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The history of the past very clearly demonstrates that the developments of mind, the exertions of talent, and the labors of industry, are all subjects intimately interwoven in a moral character and moreover they progress in a degree proportionate to man's trust in God. And savages who have no God but idols, no religion but superstition and human inventions, force and violence are king, cruelty is lord, and gloom more dense than night, prevails throughout the realm. Take from the skies the sun that breaks over the mountain's tops and floods the world with light, and the effect would be perpetual darkness; but go to a land of idols, where anthems and orisons do not rise to the portals of heaven, and greater, a ten-fold greater, darkness is there. Alienate from the world the belief in the existence of God, and the wickedness of man would be unrestrained, hell would be equalled and every man in himself a devil. Then how can men here in the nineteenth century, wise in their own conceit, however fools in reality, rise before the world, and with all the flower of rhetoric and a course of philosophical reasoning endeavor to prove the non-existence of God? How can they ridicule the Bible and denominate it a book of deception when all nature declares in language too plain to be confuted, that there is a Creator, an Almighty One in the skies? The whole universe bears the character and stamp of a First Cause, infinitely wise, infinitely powerful.

Let us cast our eyes on the earth which bears us, and ask, "who laid the foundation, who caused so many sweet perfumed flowers to spring forth, and who laid the bed of the roaring ocean and bound it round with a sandy shore, who created the rock-ribbed mountains and covered their tops with perpetual snow?" and the answer would be borne back from all creation, "we fell from the plastic hand of Jehovah." Every star, every plant, and every atom bears witness of a Deity. The thunders proclaim His wisdom in their rumbling sound; the lightning's lucid glare bears witness of His glory as they flash from the overshadowing cloud; the blue abyss above us declares his immensity, and Ætna speaks in eloquence of His omnipotence. If all these lovely scenes that environ us, all these beauties above us did not fall from the creative hand of omniscience, why would not the river turn its course and run up the mountain's side, rather than down; why would the sun not in his fiery course depart from his circuit in the heavens and pass on many years through the immensity of space, leaving this little sphere of ours dark, bleak, oblivion? Seeing everything controlled by such perfect order and decorum, then infidel, haughty deceiver of man, hush and speak no more. For in a land of Bibles where God is adored, civilization has reached its greatest and highest pitch, and man's wisdom grows deeper and more profound in him as belief and trust in him increases. On the contrary, in the dark ages when the bright light of the Bible was buried in sackcloth; when God was forgotten, men became demons, and corruption and barbarity were everywhere. "Allah ilallah," God is God says the mussulman; knowing then that he is God, and that he will both reward and punish, we should turn our aspirations and thoughts from this fleeting shore around us and place them upon things in eternity, for too well we know that without the trust of an all-pervading spiritual God of the Bible in our thoughts, nature's sweetest music would lose its charm, the universe its highest significance and glory. When our minds are lost in a vast sea of troubles, how cherishing it is to turn to a God who promotes love and good will among men, who lifts up downcast heads, who heals wounded spirits, who dissipates the gloom of sorrow, who sweetens the cup of affliction, and who blunts the sting of death. Then let us all prepare for it. So when you and I shall have laid aside these earthly tabernacles, we may share a part in that kingdom whose law is truth, whose king is love, and whose donation is eternity, and may it be as an author has said, "when this hand of mine shall be pulseless and cold, and motionless as the grave wherein it shall lie, when the damp, dewy vapors shall replace this sensible warm motion, and death weave my shroud; when the winding sheet shall be my sole virtue, and the close sealed sepulchre my only home, and I shall have no familiar companion, and no rejoicing friend but the worm. O, thou cold hand of death, unlock for me then the portals of eternal life, that whilst my body rests in its bed of earth, my soul may recline on the bosom of God." J. D. GARRETT.

CARP CULTURE.

Having some experience in raising carp, I feel I will be doing a favor to my brethren readers of the ADVOCATE, to call their attention to this new means of food supply. I only began last year, and my success thus far has been beyond my most sanguine expectations.

I made my pond, which is about 55x110 feet, in the spring of last year. It is supplied by a two-inch pipe from my spring, and is so situated as to be in no danger of floods, no water going in only what enters through the pipe. On May 10 I put ten — Carp, which were from four to seven inches long, in it. About the middle of June they spawned, but not expecting an increase that year, I had not put the necessary amount of grass or brush in for the eggs to adhere to, hence only raised, last year, about three hundred fish. These fish, the first week in November, when I drew the water from my pond, ranged from seven to ten inches in length, while my ten old fish were from fifteen to eighteen inches long. These went through the winter safely, though my pond is not more than three feet deep. I disposed of all but one hundred and twenty-five of my young fish. Some of these we have used, so now I have about one hundred left. My old fish spawned on May 1, this year, and again on May 13, and I now have a great number of young fish, some of which are fourteen inches long. My year-olds are from twelve to fifteen inches long.

I now propose to answer a few questions that are often asked:

Who can make a Carp pond? Any person who has land with sufficient clay in the soil to hold water, so situated that a small stream can be turned in, while all surplus water has an open way around.

How deep should the pond be? The main part from twelve to eighteen inches, while a portion of it should be as much as four feet, for the fish to winter in. Mine, though, have done well in three-feet water.

Upon what must the fish be fed? They are not choice as to quality, but want quantity. I feed on anything left from the table—bread, potatoes, cabbage, beans, peas, lettuce, cut up fine. When the fish are young, I give them dough made of shorts. I know of no better or cheaper food than Irish potatoes.

Are they a good table fish? The general verdict is in their favor. I find the flavor excellent, but those we used were most too oily for my taste. Some like them the better for this.

How long will I have to wait for fish? If you stock your pond with well-grown fish in the spring, by the following September you can begin to use them.

J. D. FLOYD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

In looking over the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, I noticed a request for an explanation of 1 Cor. 15: 29, which reads, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" The answer in the ADVOCATE was not satisfactory to me, and I concluded to give an answer that would be more satisfactory to myself at least, than the answer in ADVOCATE. The apostle was arguing the subject of the resurrection. The Sadducees did not believe in any resurrection in view of this; the apostle tells them, They are baptized in the name of a dead Christ, if your Sadduceic doctrine be true, but the apostle makes a strong case of it. He says, But now is Christ raised and become the first fruits of them that slept. Now if men and women are baptized, it should be done in the name of a living Christ, and not a dead one where there is no life to animate them. As this is my first article, lest I get too lengthy I will stop.—[B. H. Doomer, Hillsboro, Ala.]

[The trouble is that the word dead for the dead, is in the plural number in the Greek, so cannot refer to Christ.—D. L.]

PHEBE'S CHARGE.

Phoebe was a servant, or deaconess, of the church at Cenchrae. Having business at Rome, Paul, who was then at Corinth, some nine miles distant, learning of the opportunity, improved it to send a letter to the Christians dwelling in that city. The journey, both by land and by sea, was a long one for those days. We follow, with no ordinary interest, this good woman all along her way with that precious treasure in charge. It is the most important of all Paul's Epistles, and we are solicitous that it shall be carried in safety. It has to run the gauntlet in various perils. There are perils in the form of robbers, of shipwreck, and of loss in many ways. And what if, in the midst of them all, this letter should fail of its destination? Then there would be a serious loss to the Christians for whose spiritual benefit it was designed. They would miss its important instructions, as regarded both doctrine and practice. They would ever after be different Christians from what they would have been had this letter been received to shape their faith and their lives. And then, too, this Epistle had failed to constitute a portion of the inspired Word of God, as it has now done for these eighteen hundred years, and all the millions that shall live during all the ages to come, would have failed of all the good that this portion of the Holy Scriptures would have done them.

But the letter did not fail. It was the purpose of God, by whose inspiration Paul wrote it, that it should not fail. That humble woman on her journey to Rome carried something more important than Caesar; and all the way, whether by land or by sea, she was under the special care of the providence of God. The same Providence that shielded Paul in all his many perils, also shielded this servant of the church at Cenchrae, so that she was also made a servant to the church at Rome, to convey to it a treasure more precious than gold, and also to be a servant to all the churches of Christ in all places, and in all ages, to the end of the world. She was immortal, at least, till that work was done. That treasure was in safe keeping till it was deposited where God designed.—H. S., in New York Observer.

GETTING TO HEAVEN.

Getting to heaven is as much a matter of works as making corn and cotton. God has provided the means and appointed the conditions. We must use the one and comply with the other, or suffer want in this world, and perish eternally in the next. We must "work out our own salvation, while God works in us both to will and to do." If God gives power both to will and to do, and we will neither will nor do, we defeat the plan of salvation, so far as we are concerned. In all good works faith is implied; but, alas! how many seem to have faith without works. Many in the Church seem to believe more than God authorizes us to believe, viz: that God will save them, though they live in the habitual neglect of known duties. Surely we have not so learned Christ. We hear many complaints of such for their inconsistent lives and their ungodly conduct, but never did we hear of any one who kept the commandments daily being complained of for lack of faith. What the church expects and needs, and what God requires, is obedience.

NOTHING TO PAY.

A poor woman, seeing some grapes in a royal garden, wished to buy a few for a sick child at home, but the reply of the gardener was:

"We sell nothing here; all these grapes are for the king's table."

The king's daughter overheard the conversation and told the woman she had made a mistake.

"My father," she added, "is a king not a merchant, but I will give you some of the grapes for nothing for your child;" and she did.

You cannot buy salvation: God is King of kings and Lord of lords.

"When they had nothing to pay he frankly forgave them both." The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Satan selects his disciples when they are idle, but Christ chose his while they were busy at work, either mending their nets or casting them into the sea.—Farendon.

An Aged Pilgrim.

"Who lives in that room?" I asked of a woman, pointing to a door in a house in my district.

"A very old woman, but I do not think she would care to see you," was the reply.

Some days after, being in the same house, I thought I would ask the old woman herself if she would like a visit from me. So I knocked at her door.

"Come in," said a sharp, clear voice.

I opened the door, and then saw before me indeed a very old woman—she was tall and erect, with a clear blue eye, but her face was literally furrowed with wrinkles.

"I have called to see if you would like a visit from me sometimes when I come to this house," I said.

"Very much, ma'am. I am obliged to any lady who will take the trouble to come and see me," said my old woman in a brisk, cheerful voice.

So I sat down and told her the house was a part of my district, and that it was a pleasure to me to come, and I hoped sometimes a visit of sympathy and kindness would be a pleasure to her.

"Do you like living quite alone?" I asked.

"Oh! yes, I have long outlived all who belonged to me. I am very old, I am ninety-three."

"And can you do all you require for yourself?"

"Yes people tell me of the infirmities of old age, but as yet I know little of them. I can do all I need—I don't require much for my support, and that I gain by taking in washing; and my employers are very good to me, and do not hurry me. I am very well—no pain, no aches; my sight is quite good, and as you may perceive I am not at all deaf. I have many and great mercies—still with all this I shall be glad when my summons comes."

"Why should you be glad?" I asked. "You seem to have much to make life desirable?"

The old woman's face was lighted up by a smile so bright and sweet, it seemed almost to chase away the wrinkles, as she answered, "Why should I be glad? Because I long to see Him who all my life long has cared for me, watched over me, redeemed me."

"Then you love the Savior who has done such great things for you, and therefore you long to be with him. You will rejoice to see the city whose streets are gold, and gates of pearl."

"Yes!" she replied, "but not because of golden streets or gates of pearl. I never cared for smart things in this world, and I am very sure I shall not care for them in my Savior's presence. My delight will be to sit in the very lowest place near to my Lord and my God."

I saw this dear old woman was indeed ready for the home prepared for her. I soon went again, and found her the same holy, cheerful, happy person. She welcomed me with true Christian courtesy, and listened as I read God's word to her with rapt attention.

I had seen her well as usual, when, on going a few days later, I was surprised on knocking at her door, to hear a feeble voice say: "Come in," and on entering her room I found the old woman in bed. "Ah," she said, "I think the summons has come, I find now what are the infirmities of old age. On trying to rise this morning all power was gone. I cannot move—I am quite helpless, but I am very happy, the Savior is so gently leading me. The woman in the next room, of whom I knew little, not hearing me move, came in to see what was the matter, and has been so kind, and now you have come. I seem to have all I want. But I cannot see you, my sight is becoming quite dim, but it is all right, and I am just waiting for my final call."

"You have perfect peace," I said, according to the promise, "because your mind is stayed on Him."

"Yes," she replied, "it is just that. This morning there came to my mind the text: 'And he said: Let us make man.' Surely if the blessed Trinity took all that trouble to make me, they will indeed never let me go—I am safe, quite safe."

She dwelt with a kind of rapture on the prospect of so soon being in the presence of her Lord; and she lay on her dying bed a picture of peace and trust.

Very soon her dearest wish was realized, and the spirit left its earthly tenement to enter that home prepared by the Savior's love for his faithful children.

On going, after her death, into the next room to thank the neighbor who had shown her such prompt kindness, she said: "I need no thanks, I gained more than I gave." I never before saw such real faith in God and the Savior as in that old woman. I saw religion was indeed a reality with her. I hope I may never forget the lesson I learned from that dying saint.

"My Father's house on high,
Home of my soul! how near,
At times, to faith's foreseeing eye,
Thy golden gates appear!"

"Ah! then my spirit faints
To reach the land I love,
The bright inheritance of saints,
Jerusalem above!"

Sunday at Home.

God is There Too.

Nurse came in and found Bessie wide awake, lying very still in her little bed.

"All alone and in the dark," said nurse, "and not afraid at all, Bessie, are you?"

"No, indeed," answered Bessie, "for I ain't all alone. God is here; and I look out of the window and see the stars, and God seems to me looking down with all his eyes, nurse."

"To be sure," said the nurse; "but God up in the sky is a great way off."

"No," spoke little Bessie; "God is here, too, because he seems sometimes hugging me to his heart; then I am so happy."

Oh, how sweet to feel God near—to be resting on his bosom, like a little child in its father's arms! This is the blessed privilege of a believing child.—Child's Delight.

From the brevity of life we may learn patience under all our crosses and troubles; they may be shorter than life, but no longer. In all the bitter blasts that blow in thy face, thou who art a Christian indeed, mayest comfort thyself in the thought of the good lodging that is before thee.—Leighton.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS USE CARNAL WEAPONS?

Bro. McGarvey writes an article, saying that Judge Reid's wife did not chide him for his course in refusing to take vengeance on Cornelison, as some of the secular papers have stated, but encouraged him in the course he pursued. He tells, however, that when she learned of the attack upon her husband, she ran out with a pistol, ready to use it herself. The explanation is given that she was in the habit of keeping the pistol as a protection to herself during her husband's absence, and this was done at his request. Bro. McGarvey seems to think this is all right; at least, tells it without a word of disapproval as a justifiable explanation of her having the pistol.

Mrs. Reid is an active, zealous woman in church affairs, I take it, as she is president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Mt. Sterling church. The question that is suggested by this, is, Is the habit of keeping weapons for defense, compatible with the profession of Christians? Many zealous followers of Christ do just as this woman does. They keep the weapons with the intention of killing some one if they come to rob. Is this right? Is a Christian man justifiable, under the teaching of the Bible, in preparing beforehand and determining to kill some one, if they rob him of his property? Does not our trust in God involve a confidence in his care and protection from robbers, thieves, murderers, as well as protection in other things.

It is said that a Methodist preacher, in traveling through the wildest portion of Texas, years ago, among a lawless class, consulted Bishop Marvin as to the propriety of carrying weapons of self-defence. Marvin replied, "I believe I would not take the matter out of the Lord's hands." Is the preacher doing his duty, in the hands of the Lord? Is the preacher more in the hands of the Lord than the humblest Christian in the land? Does not God care for the humblest Christian that serves him?

It has never seemed to me that this excessive dread, this anxiety and fear about storms, about robbers, this continued apprehension of evil, can be compatible with confidence and trust in God. I know that this timidity and dread of evil are somewhat constitutional; they are cultivated by association with foolish and superstitious people. But faith in God is intended to counteract these natural and acquired evil elements of our nature, and to give us confidence, calmness, trustfulness, in the care, protection, and overruling good to us of our Heavenly Father. Ordinary prudence and caution are right; but the apprehension, anxiety, dread, that destroy happiness, and which lead us to familiarize our minds with the idea of using deadly weapons as a means of protection, are wrong, and show a lack of cultivation of the grace of trust in God.

We are not sure that Judge Reid's death may not be an example of those who take the sword, perishing by the sword. He relied on the use of the deadly weapon to protect himself and family. He died by the weapon he trusted.

We think it cruel in parents to raise children with a continued sense of dread, and to school them to the habit of trusting to weapons and human strength, rather than to the Father who is in heaven, for protection and care from robbers, murderers, and all other ills that beset us. If God does not protect us, other protection is all vain.

The trouble we apprehend is, our faith is too much theoretic, not enough real and practical. We do not let it enter into our lives as we should—as a part of our every day practice. We profess faith in God and in his protecting care, yet we dread evil are as anxious for the future, are as apprehensive of evil to us as the most wicked infidel in the land. There is great need that our faith become more a part of ourselves, and that it control our feelings, actions, hopes and fears. How many of us make faith in God a basis of action in our lives? If we so make it, how do we show it? It is care, anxiety, that arise from a lack of faith in the providence of God, that make people fear for food and raiment in the future. The Savior specifically rebukes this. But it certainly is as great distrust of God to fear, lest the storms, the robbers, the murderers will destroy us.

Ezra had said to the king, "The blessing of our God is upon all them for good that seek him, but his power and his wrath are against them that forsake him." Because he had said this to the king, when enemies threatened his way. He says, "I was ashamed to ask of the king a band of soldiers against the enemy in the way." He was ashamed because this request would seem to belie his professed trust in God. So, when we say God cares for us and protects us, and leads us in ways of safety and peace, and yet rely upon human governments, human arms, death dealing weapons for protection, our conduct seems to contradict our profession. A respect for our professed trust in God would make us ashamed to do this.

MEETING AT PINEWOOD.

As previously announced in the ADVOCATE, the meeting began at the above place on Saturday night before the third Lord's day of July. The first part of the meeting we were gladdened and assisted by Bro. W. Anderson, of Beech Grove neighborhood, of Maury county, Tenn. Bro. Anderson is a man of good talent, good education, and a man of strong faith in the word of God as our only and all-sufficient rule to guide us in all things divine. He has made special study of the practical work of Christians, and spends much of the time that he spends in preaching, in that department. He has been teaching school in the neighborhood where he lives, for a number of years, and is doing much good in that line, we doubt not. And in the latter part of the meeting we were assisted by Bro. Willie Craig, second son of Bro. O. T. Craig, of Williamson county, Tennessee, and we left him to continue the meeting over fourth Lord's day, as we had to leave on Friday. We are glad to see young men engaging in the good work. We trust Bro. Willie will do much good in the Master's cause. He is young, and if he lives to be old, he has a long while to work in the vineyard. Having known him from childhood, we feel a deep interest in his success. As to the meeting, we had large and attentive audiences from the beginning. In fact, have never witnessed better order and attention than was manifested throughout the meeting. There had been nine confessions when we left, and the interest growing, rather than diminishing, and we hope to hear of others coming in during the meeting. There is an active, earnest congregation at this place, having a number of active, earnest members, that are as regular as a clock in carrying on the work, and are doing a work for good that eternity alone can fully develop. They have had an encouraging number of additions every year for many years past, and if they continue working faithfully, they have very bright prospects for years to come.

A SPOT WITH A HISTORY.

There are now no holy places upon the earth. There have been none since the destruction of the temple, God's "holy house," by the Romans. And yet there are places that to our thoughts and feelings, for one cause or another, are invested with a sort of sacredness. Such a place I have visited to-day. The place is in a secluded part of one of the most secluded hill towns in Massachusetts. It is on a by-road but seldom traveled, and is encompassed by forests and wooded hills. The only human habitation in view is on a hillside far away. A large branching elm marks the spot, and stands a solitary sentinel over it. Beneath its shade half a century ago stood an humble cottage, the abode of a goodly couple in the low walks of life, who after the manner of Zacharias and Elisabeth, "were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." Beneath the shade of this noble elm their only son was born and "born again." His godly parents did for him what they could: they brought him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Early exhibiting more than usual talent and a thirst for knowledge, he was prepared for college by the clergyman of a neighboring town, took full collegiate and theological course, and was chosen to a professorship in New England college, the better to qualify himself for which he resorted to Paris. There he received a pressing invitation to become a missionary to Palestine. "But what," said he, "will become of my aged parents in America?" "I will be a son to them in your stead," responded the Christian merchant from this country, to whom the question was addressed. "Then," said the consecrated young man, "I go up to Jerusalem, 'not knowing the things that shall befall me there.'"

The merchant remembered his promise, from time to time sending gifts to those aged parents, and, on his return to America, taking the trouble to go some twenty-five miles out of the way to make them a visit. On the occasion his driver was the little son of the landlord in the place where he was tarrying. The wagon was freighted with good things for the needy pair. Most affecting was the interview. The heart of the old man overflowed with gratitude, which was again and again expressed in fervent prayer. When asked by his generous benefactor: "Do you never regret the sacrifice you have made by giving up you only son to be a missionary?" the aged father replied: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" and shall I withhold my only son from obeying the command of our ascended Savior, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature?'"

Per Contra. We know a mother—a Christian mother she claims to be—whose son at the age of fourteen wished to become a Christian, and the mother objected and dissuaded him from his purpose for fear it would interfere with his worldly advancement.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL AND MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The Old Path Guide provoked this investigation by an announcement that "A. Campbell, so early as 1849, discovered the position of the ADVOCATE was wrong." We showed that in 1849 A. Campbell was sixty-three years old, thirty-nine years a preacher, twenty-seven years an editor. That he declared these human societies to do the work of God, were the nostrums of "quacks"; that the advocacy of them as a means of converting the world was the reverie of those in febrile condition; and that he never announced a change in his position. He never took back these statements. He never answered the arguments here made against them. The Guide then, instead of meeting these issues, makes an appeal to the popularity of the societies, to the fact that all the learned and the institutions of learning are on that side, but closes by saying, "At another time we will look into the writings of A. Campbell, and see whether he ever wrote a word indicating a change. For the present we close by suggesting that Mr. Campbell has not been fairly represented by the ADVOCATE in this matter. What he said against missionary societies has been greatly exaggerated."

To this we replied (June 11.). And, instead of publishing this reply, and doing what he promised to do, or acknowledging he was mistaken, and had done A. Campbell a wrong, had done the ADVOCATE injustice, it ignores its former promise, and says, "President Pendleton was as intimate with Mr. Campbell as his own father. He had every opportunity to know the condition of Mr. Campbell's mind, as well as the state of his feelings concerning missionary societies. The ADVOCATE had no such opportunities. It may be mistaken, President Pendleton cannot be. He has deliberately and premeditatedly stated what he knows is not true, or the GOSPEL ADVOCATE is mistaken about the matter. It might be well to remark, in this connection, that according to the ADVOCATE's own showing, Mr. Campbell did his writing against missionary societies from 1823 to 1830. If he ever opposed missionary societies after 1830, the ADVOCATE has not shown it."

It reduces itself to this, then; that A. Campbell had bitterly denounced these societies, had said no Christian could "give them a cent or a prayer," and he changed his position, but concealed that change from the public, had not the courage or manliness to declare that change, but secretly let his friends know it; and while he was writing voluminously and speaking on the subject, never wrote a sentence to indicate or justify the change. If this be the plea, A. Campbell may well plead, "Save me from my friends."

He says we showed nothing from A. Campbell after 1830. We did say he referred to these very writings in 1844 with approval. He says, "The Christian Baptist in seven volumes, * * * affording such a gradual development of all these principles, (of the Christian system,) is, in the judgment of many of our brethren who have expressed themselves on the subject, better adapted to the whole community, as it now exists, than our other writings. In this judgment I must concur." Harbinger, page 240, 1844. On same page is a reference by D. S. Burnet, especially to the excellency of the articles on "Ancient Order of Things," the pith and marrow of which are found in the extracts we have given.

In February, 1843, Mr. Campbell published an article that seemed to smack of an organization outside of the churches. Walter Scott called attention to it, and said, "I have vouchsafed that the Scripture organization is (1) that of individual disciples into a church, with bishops to oversee them and deacons to serve them; (2) that of all the churches into one body, under the head, Christ Jesus our Lord."

"The formation of a number of churches into one organization 'is a new church, a new organization, and a new name—a distinct church.'"

In response, A. Campbell says, "I used an island for the whole world. * * * How any one conversant with all that I have written on the subject through so many years, could otherwise understand me, is to me a rather mysterious problem. I proposed no new, unscriptural organization, nor was I writing on the organization of congregations; that matter was fully developed almost twenty years ago, in the Christian Baptist, and more recently, in my extra on "Church Order."

On page 331, year 1844, the church at Georgetown, Ky., wrote to a meeting of brethren at Lexington, "It has been resolved on their part to engage in the circulation of the Bible, both at home and abroad, and the congregations throughout the State have been solicited to engage in the work." The meeting recommended "that the church in Lexington is solicited to appoint an agent or agents, to keep on hand a supply of Bibles and Testaments, to which agent or agents the contribution of the church aforesaid can be transmitted, and through which agent or agents Bibles and Testaments can be obtained."

A. Campbell, commenting on this, said, "The Christian church is of itself a Bible society, and general co-operation is all that is required." It is thus seen that he still held to the idea expressed in the Christian Baptist, that the church is the true Bible society.

But what of President Pendleton's assertion? During the years 1842-44, A. Campbell wrote sixteen articles on "Christian Organization." In them are found the sentences quoted by President Pendleton, referred to by the Old Path Guide. We read the speech of President Pendleton when it was delivered; and we now say that speech intended to convince the world that A. Campbell had changed his position on the subject, before the shock to his mental and will power came; and the investigation to which it led me, satisfied me of the very opposite.

President Pendleton knew all that he had said and written on the subject; and out of it all he could find only some general expressions in favor of co-operation, and the necessity of messengers, or occasional meetings of the elders, to confer about the spread of the gospel and the interests common to all the churches.

But in those essays a writer insisted that only the germs of the church organization could be found in the Scriptures, and their development must be sought in the work of the church of the succeeding centuries. He combats this whole idea, and insists that the perfect church is developed in the New Testament. He says, "A tree whose trunk is divine, and whose branches are human, from all analogy must produce human fruit." "If the germ of the apostolic tree only is found in the New Testament, and the branches are gathered from human tradition, must we not have a faith in it of a mixed and doubtful character?" In the last article but one, he says, "We are supremely desirous of having a divine model as well as a divine charter of Christian organization. We never expect to find it in any age after the apostolic." The last article concludes with an affirmation of bishops, deacons and evangelists connected with the churches as the only ministry of God. In all this discussion, over one hundred pages, there is only an allusion in general terms to the necessity of co-operation and a common understanding in work, and a suggestion of the necessity of occasional conferences between churches, by messengers, or the meeting together of their elders, and says this language must be interpreted in the light of his well-known writings.

On the other hand, during 1844, the year in which he is claimed to have indicated his change, the Christian Baptist was re-published, was advertised and sold anew. It was done with his approval and help. Certainly, if in this work there had been positions that he had come to regard as unsound, arguments that were not valid on a question so largely dwelled on, as this had been, a candid man must have openly acknowledged his wrong, and warned the reader against the errors. So far to the contrary, he pronounced these the best of his writings on the subjects treated, and especially commended the essays in which these subjects were treated. And when his writings seemed to bear a contrary meaning, as when Walter Scott criticized them as quoted already, he insisted his writings should be interpreted in the light of his well-known and expressed principles.

I esteem President Pendleton as a scholarly and conscientious man, but on this subject a prejudiced juror. I accept all he states as a witness. His conclusions drawn from the facts, I doubt. At the first meeting that organized the General Society, W. K. Pendleton took the position, "No single congregation has a right to send out an officer whose duties pertain to the whole church," referring to evangelists, and "the liberty of a congregation was nothing more than the liberty to attend to the internal affairs of itself." That is, it had no right, as a congregation, to send out men to preach the gospel. President Pendleton, holding these positions entirely out of harmony with the cherished teachings of A. Campbell, desirous of the support of A. Campbell, naturally caught at every expression that could be so construed, and used them. And he put a construction on the language that, taken in all its connections, it will not bear. He claims no other evidence than these sentences for his convictions. When he gives the testimony, many others are as competent to judge of it as he.

These things, taken in connection with that disinclination, even after he had been president of the association, to transfer the hymn-book to it, or to make permanent a society separate from the church, leaves no doubt that however, at times, Mr. Campbell may have, by difficulties around, seemed to be in doubt what was best, he never did change his mind on the subject. He could not have done it, as a candid man, without avowing the change.

We have not misrepresented or exaggerated Mr. Campbell's position. It is of no practical importance, but a matter of justice to him; for whosoever accepts a position out of respect for Mr. Campbell, does not believe as he should, but his faith stands "in the precept of men."

The trustees of the Fanning Orphan School propose to open the school about the first of September. The house is undergoing thorough repair, will soon be in good condition. The trustees have as yet failed to arrange for a superintendent. They confidently expect to secure a suitable person before the time of opening. They would be glad of assistance in finding a suitable person.

Obituaries.

Sister Catharine R. Snell, wife of Bro. H. T. Snell, of Rutherford County, Tenn., was born January 17, 1853, was married January 17, 1867, moved to Texas in 1869. While there, in September 1874, it was her privilege to hear Bro. E. Dabney declare the ancient gospel of Jesus, the Son of God, to which herself and husband submitted with anxious obedience. Remained in Texas, until March, 1881, at which time they returned to Tennessee. Manifesting deep concern about the salvation of relatives, friends, and neighbors, labored much to have preaching done in the community in which they had been reared, and had cause to rejoice that their efforts were not in vain, for much good has been done; among the number of obedient ones are the sister and aged father of Bro. Snell. While inspired with hope to see the conversion of many more. She became the victim of a disease which, on the 3rd of June, 1884, resulted in her death. Sister Katie died as she had lived, "in the one faith," regretting only to leave husband and seven children, for whom we entertain tender and anxious feeling; and would say to the sorrowing husband, be faithful to the end, and you shall have a crown of eternal life where sorrows will never come. To the children I will say, your kind mother loved you, did what she could for your happiness here and hereafter, but has now gone to a "better country." Do you desire to meet her there? If so, do as your mother,—obey the gospel of Jesus Christ, live faithful to the end of life, and the promises are yours. "Old Path Guide" please copy.

CHRIST THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

John, the harbinger, said: "He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." John 1: 8-9.

Few, we apprehend, understand this declaration with its full import. It is not generally taken in that broad sense to which it is entitled; therefore it is, that the greater part of our social and political improvements of this age, over that of pagan ages, are attributed by many to man's own power of reason and selfability to make that wonderful progress. History does not support this conclusion, but clearly shows that wherever the least rays of this Light has been shed, its benign influences are correspondingly felt. This Light, therefore, is not confined to Christians only, but to "every man that cometh into the world." We have, then, so-called Christian nations, but no nations of Christians. It requires many to make a nation. But the Savior said, "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. 7: 14. We are, therefore, not looking for a nation of Christians.

The light afforded by the Savior's advent into the world was the inculcation of those moral precepts, entirely above man's reason to discover, and whose influence would bring peace, order and tranquility to whatever extent accepted, and also to bring to view, a resurrection to life eternal reserved for those who so fully conform to those precepts as to qualify them in disposition of mind, humility and subordination to his will, to enjoy the kingdom of heaven. Therefore the great conquerors, civilizers, and legislators of the world may be greatly under the influence of this light, and their severity in war, or rigidity in law be greatly modified, but the principles governing these do not tend to the cultivation of dispositions for the enjoyment of that peace and quietude that reigns in heaven.

Let us then investigate a few of the leading principles that govern men, not only out of, but in the church, and see if they are calculated to qualify us for heaven.

Valor, for instance: This principle of active courage is admired by almost every class of human beings. By many who profess to be guided by the precepts of the meek and lowly Savior, it is exalted to the dignity of a Christian virtue. Active courage or valor, for the most part, is constitutional, and can have no more claim for moral merit than wit, beauty, health, strength, or any other endowment of body or mind. So far is it from producing any good effects, by introducing peace, order and happiness in society, it is the usual perpetrator of all the villainies which from retaliated injuries, distract the world with bloodshed and devastation. It is the engine by which the strong plunder the weak, the proud trample the humble, and the guilty oppress the innocent. In short, it is the chief instrument which ambition employs in her unjust pursuits of power and wealth, and therefore so much admired by her votaries. With pagans, this was the chief of religious virtues, whose gods were mostly deceased heroes, exalted to heaven for the mischief they had done on earth. But whatever merit it may have assumed among pagans, or may still hold in this civilized land, it can have none with Christians. They are taught forgiveness, not to recompense evil for evil. 'Vengeance is mine: I will repay saith the Lord.' Rom. 12: 19.

We object not to the praise and honor bestowed on the valiant; they are but a small tribute paid them by those who enjoy safety and affluence through their dangers and sufferings. We assert only that active courage can never be a Christian virtue, because totally incompatible with that institution.

Passive courage is often inculcated under the title of patience and resignation, and is a direct contrast to the former. It arises from the noblest dispositions of the mind—from contempt of misfortunes, sufferings, or even death, and a fixed confidence in the promises of the Almighty.

Active courage is the offspring of pride and revenge; the parent of cruelty and injustice. In short, passive courage is the resolution of a Christian; active, the ferocity of a savage.

Valor, therefore, is not that force by which the kingdom of heaven is entered. Nor are the turbulent spirits of heroes and conquerors admissible into those regions of peace, order and quietude.

Patriotism, also, that celebrated virtue of all nations and ages, cannot enter the list of Christian virtues. It is too narrow, and falls short of its requirements. Its principles are not sufficiently broad to take in all mankind. A Christian is confined to no country in his benevolence, and though a subject of the government under which he lives, he is a citizen of the kingdom of heaven, and his acts of benevolence must be co-extensive with that kingdom to which he belongs. Christianity commands us to love all mankind. Patriotism, to oppress all other countries to advance the imaginary interests of our own,—the former, to imitate its author in dispensing blessings to all nations,—the latter, that mean partiality of a parish officer, who thinks cruelty and injustice meritorious, when they advance the supposed interests of his own inconsiderable village.

We cannot fail to see that these principles which control the world of to-day, are totally incompatible with, and nonconductive to the prime object of Jesus' mission; still, when contrasted with the violence to which such principles were carried in former ages, we can easily see the mollifying influences of the Sun of Righteousness, who "lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Nothing, perhaps, has done more to corrupt the spirit of Christianity, than that partiality which we contract from early education, for the manners of pagan antiquity. From this source comes the greater part of our ideas of morality, notwithstanding the soft and gentle rays of heaven's light is beaming in our faces daily. We learn to applaud false virtues, to be guided by laws of honor, and to imitate characters wholly repugnant to every principle of this institution.

Heroes, conquerors, patriots, and even suicides are looked upon in great admiration, and their acts lauded as virtues of the highest type. We mean not by this to pass any censure on the principles of valor, patriotism, or honor, so far as this world is concerned. They may be useful and, perhaps, necessary in the commerce and business of the present state of things, and those who are actuated by them may be virtuous, honest, and even religious men. All we do assert, is that they cannot be Christians.

A Christian has faith to believe that every principle taught by the Savior is true, and every promise fulfilled. He may be overpowered by passion and temptation, and his actions, at times, may contradict his principles; but his abiding faith and humble trust in God, made living and active by diligent labors in love and mercy to all mankind, will keep him in Christ, who is the especial Savior to all that trust him. But a man, whose ruling passions are honor, valor, patriotism, etc., erects a standard of duty diametrically opposed to all that the Savior taught. It is, therefore, no reflection on him to say his teachings are adverse to worldly pursuits. He never claimed it, but emphatically declared to the contrary. James 4: 4. L. C. CHISHOLM.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 8.

"To write the same things (again) to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe." Phil. 3.

My friend, to commence where we left off in our last letter, we will turn to Acts, 8th chapter. We learn that the church being persecuted, many of the disciples were scattered abroad, and as they went they preached the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Christ, they were baptized, both men and women; 4th, 5th, and 12th verses. They preached the word. Philip preached Christ; and doing this, he preached the things concerning the kingdom of God, etc. What things? That God had a kingdom—a church—Jesus was the head. That the commands of the gospel must be obeyed, and those that believed did obey. "And Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." What is it to preach Jesus? The same as to preach Christ, to preach the gospel. And in this case, at least, Philip must have preached something about being baptized, for as soon as they came to a certain water, the eunuch said, "What doth hinder me to be baptized? And as soon as he was baptized he went on his way rejoicing." Acts 8: 26-40. And Saul yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, met with Jesus on the way, and was told to go to the city and it shall be told thee what thou must do. Acts 9: 5-6. And the eighteenth verse tells us that he arose and was baptized. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the son of God: verse 20. Paul, when he was apprehended, and in making his defence, used this language in regard to his salvation, "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 16. I might go on, and on, to every case of pardon of sins, of adoption, of becoming disciples of the Lord, and while in each a somewhat different expression is used, (and all are reported in general, and not in detail) yet in every case the evidence is clear that the same facts, the same commands, the same promises were preached, and all did the same things in order to receive the remission of sins, to become disciples of the Lord; and though faith is left out in report of some cases, repentance in others, confession and baptism in others, we are not to presume that the thing or things left out in the reports were not required of these at that time.

Now we have found the four conditions, the four steps, the four commands necessary to obtain the remission of sin. Shall we say you can be saved, I can be saved, that any one responsible to God, having these commands in his own will before us, can obtain remission of sins by obeying one command, or two commands, and disregarding the others, making them nothing in our minds and hearts? Notice—When did the Pentecostians praise the Lord after baptism? When did the Samaritans cease to be bewitched by the sorcerers of Simon after baptism? The eunuch rejoiced, persecuting Paul preached after baptism. Why should Cornelius be baptized if it is nonessential? And now concluding this part of our subject, I am sure, my friend, that if you cannot see the necessity of obeying all commands of God in the same light that I do, you must admit that if there is any safe ground for a single son or daughter of Adam to rest an unshaken hope of pardon of sins, of adoption into the family of God, it is in obedience to his will in every point. But I propose in my further examination of this subject, to notice it from another standpoint, which, I trust, will bring the beauty, the harmony and the necessity of the things whereof we have had many pleasant conversations in the past, more pointedly before you.

WASHING THE SAINTS' FEET.

JOHN 13: 13-14-15; 1 TIMOTHY 5: 10.

"Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

To all lovers of the truth as it is in Jesus the Christ: For several reasons the writer has undertaken to set forth the mind of the Master and the will of God on the subject heading this article. The request of a number of brethren from whom he differs; a conviction that a full statement of the grounds of his divergence from the common understanding among us, is due to the brotherhood at large; the unsettled and unsatisfactory state of many believers of all creeds and churches touching this matter, together with the best of all reasons, that we may be established in all the truth which makes us free from every error, constrain the writer to the task undertaken. Among churches and believers who have not washed the saints' feet, there is a great diversity of understanding on this subject. Some writers find foot-washing to be only an oriental custom; others regard it as a mere ceremony or rite of domestic life; others again consider it a good work when done by the Savior, but without any binding authority now, except as a domestic hospitality as necessary and common among the wicked as among believers in Jesus. Indeed, all agree only in one thing—that the example of the Master in this is not binding, and that they have not washed the saints' feet.

A late writer on this subject in Christian Standard (Bro. John Evans, of New Berlin, Ohio) concluding a series of arguments both ingenious and specious, declares he is "satisfied that a close perusal of Scriptures intending to find out what they teach, will disclose the fact that foot-washing does not belong to the institutions of the Christian Church." In his second article, answering the question, why should the disciples wash one another's feet? he says, "Because it was needed." Not only was it a custom, "but necessary for health, cleanliness, and comfort." That is, Jesus commands them to wash one another's feet for the very same reason that we wash our hands and faces,—for the same reason that a mother preparing her children for the repose of night commands them to wash their feet—to take away the "filth of the flesh!" Thus the solemn service of our Lord and Master which he bound upon us because of his own example, is relegated to the catalogue of carnal and ceremonial services, and perished with its using as every other ablation of the flesh! Quis credat? Judaeus credat, non ego. On the contrary we believe that "washing the saints' feet" is a religious obligation as binding upon all believers now as any other commandments enjoined by the Master upon his followers, and whenever observed as the example given requires, is pleasing to the Lord as every other service in his name.

That the scriptural grounds on which our faith is resting may be obvious to all, permit me first to clear the subject of ambiguous and improper dealing received from the hands of writers in general. It is usually considered under the untaught and misleading question, "Is foot-washing an ordinance in the church?" This is unfair and objectionable, because, in general, neither writers nor readers have any scriptural or well-defined understanding of the terms 'ordinance and church,' the main words in the proposition. The word ordinance is not more variable perhaps than most other scriptural terms, yet it has some uses wholly unknown in the house of God. It is used to denote a positive, periodic service, having all the circumstances attendant, especially of time and place, accurately defined and specifically enjoined. Such was the passover, a great anniversary festival among the Jews. The circumstances of time and place were most specifically settled. Not where they pleased, but only in the place that God had chosen for them they could sacrifice the passover. And as to the time, not only the month, but also the day and the exact time of the day were appointed. (See Deu. 17.) Again, it denoted a carnal service, as in the various fleshly ablutions and legal offerings among the Jews. Such were "carnal ordinances imposed upon them until the time of reformation." (Heb. 9: 10.) Referring to such like, the apostle says, "Why as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances?" Collos. 2: 20. In this use or meaning of the word there is not a single ordinance in the house of God.

If we allow that the specification of time is in the Lord's supper, that of place is essentially and absolutely wanting. Neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father, but "they that worship must worship in spirit and in truth." (Joc. 4.) The time of foot-washing as the service is not an ordinance proper, has no specification from its founder. Augustine, a voluminous writer of the fourth century, as quoted by his readers, refers to it, and says 'that doubts were entertained in his day as to the time when the ceremony ought to be performed. The obligation of believers to attend to the service was then (A. D. 354—A. D. 403) generally recognized, the disputed point being the circumstance of time. Subsequently the Synod of Toledo declared that foot-washing should take place on the 14th day of the Jewish month, Nisan; (our March)—the day on which the Savior himself observed and appointed it. The Pope of Rome on Holy Thursday washes the feet of thirteen Bishops arrayed in white, and representing the twelve apostles and an angel. He both washes and kisses the right foot only of each of the thirteen, to each of whom he gives a nosegay and a gold medal, closing the ceremony. These perversions of the divine appointment to make an ordinance, like the corruptions of baptism in most of the centuries, point to a real original, however imperfectly understood it may have been, and yet may be, among believers.

The term ordinance, however, may be used to include all God's commandments, or to denote specifically the decalogue, the ten commandments being plainly "ordinances of justice" as necessary and binding now as when they were first spoken from Sinai's awful summit. The word is also used to represent the obligations imposed on the Gentiles by the great council of "apostles and elder brethren" of the first century, convened at Jerusalem to consider the heresy of Judaizers at Antioch. Having shown that the Gentiles who had turned to God should not be required to come under the yoke of circumcision, the council decreed as follows: "That they abstain from meats offered to idols, from blood, from things strangled, and from fornication." Paul and Barnabas, Judas and Silas, chosen to accompany them, were entrusted with these decrees which they "delivered as they went through the cities." (See Acts 15th and 16th chapters.) Referring to the same with all others not excepted by the context, the apostle Paul says to his Corinthian brethren, "Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you." 1 Cor. 11: 2. Commenting on this passage the writer already quoted makes the palpable mistake of seeing the ordinances referred to, exclusively in the Lord's supper, which is the very service plainly excepted by the context. For, the apostle first praises his brethren because they "keep the ordinances as he delivered them," and afterward censures them severely for their gross and dangerous perversion of the supper.

See the following: "Now in this I praise you not, that ye come together, not for the better, but for the worse. * * * When ye come together, therefore, into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper." Verses 17-20. Their eating was not a spiritual repast in memory of the crucified One, as it should have been, but a bacchanalian feast to gratify their carnal hunger and thirst. While, therefore, the apostle could praise them for their faithful observance of ordinances or traditions which he had delivered to them, not specifically named here, as it reflected the memorial supper he could only censure them, and admonish them to keep that also as he had received it from the Lord. Instead, therefore, of the ordinances in this verse being the Lord's supper, the latter is clearly distinguished from the former, for the Corinthians who had faithfully kept the one were criminally perverse in their regard of the other. This text, therefore, used against foot washing, is as completely perverted as it would be if used against the sermon on the Mount, the two great commandments, baptism, or any other appointment of the Son of God. The word church in the proposition before us is equally as ambiguous and vague in the general understanding. But few, I am persuaded, will receive the word in the same or even a similar sense in the query, "Is foot-washing an ordinance in the church?" Not a few will take it to refer to ecclesiastical officials and to the decrees, dogmas, and doctrines of Synods, Councils and Ecumenical convocations of the Christian age. Some indeed may ascend the stream of Christian antiquity to the port of the apostles, yet all are liable to leave out of their conception the One absolutely essential member, the very life of the whole church,—that is, Christ himself the head of the church, to whom all the members growing up in him, apostles no less than uninspired followers and new-born babes, are subordinate and submissive!

Here again, if we were in a formal review of any one's objections to foot-washing, we would show how egregiously Bro. Evans errs in his comment on Acts 1: 2; but intending to show the truth rather than to expose captious objections against it, I will only advert briefly to the remarkable position that the authoritative and binding teaching of Jesus is limited to the forty days' association with his disciples, beginning after his resurrection and terminating with his ascension. True, this is only an individual avowal for which the brotherhood at large are not responsible, yet it is the more remarkable coming as it does from one identified with a people professing to go back to the Master in all things, and to have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, for their faith and practice. The very first verse of Luke in Acts connects his gospel narrative of what Jesus began to "do and teach" with the subsequent and full development of his kingdom through the Holy Spirit. "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Spirit had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen." Acts 1: 1-2. How any one with these suggestive words before him could think of limiting the Savior's authoritative dominion over us to the very short interval between his resurrection and ascension, is wholly inexplicable, save on the ground of undue bias against the institution of foot-washing, which he was opposing.

Notice, readers, Luke's former treatise, that is, the gospel written by him, consists of all the doings and teaching of the Son of God; it embraces his entire ministry, not merely what he taught and did during forty days of his post-resurrection manifestation to his disciples, but equally every utterance and deed of the wonderful prophet before his passion,—all that he taught and did in the incarnate state being connected with his ascension. Luke's gospel is a record of what the Savior began to "do and teach" from the beginning "until the day in which he was taken up." He does not claim the character of an eye witness, but urges as the ground of his fitness for the work undertaken, his "perfect understanding of all things from the very first, even as they delivered them unto us, who were eye witnesses and ministers of the word." (See Luke 1: 2-3.) The object of the writing is plainly told by the writer, That Theophilus, to whom personally it is dedicated, (and all who will take knowledge of the true Messiah) may know the "certainty of the things wherein we have been instructed—the things most surely believed among us." Now this record of "things from the beginning" as they were received from eye witnesses and ministers of the word, so carefully made by the evangelist is joined to his second treatise by his historical narrative and inseparably connected with the ascension of the Son of God made perfect through suffering. This shows that the two books (whatever may be their relative value) are inseparable links in the wonderful chain of redemption and revelation through Jesus the Christ. Why the Savior connects his commandments given to the disciples after his resurrection with the Holy Spirit, (Acts 1: 2,) is found in several obvious reasons. He was endued with the Spirit "without measure." John 3: 34. The Holy Spirit having descended upon him—abode upon him—remained with him. The continuance of the Spirit on him was a sign to John the Baptist pointing him out as the Lamb of God. John 1: 33. Now as the Spirit is the revealer of all we know of the redemption in Jesus Christ, his connection with the unfolding scheme at every stage of its development, was an insuperable necessity, and, therefore, instead of cutting off the grand antecedents of the Messiah's teaching as non-essential to his church, serves the divine purpose of connecting them together, and joining them with the future developments into one harmonious whole.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

The carp spoken of by Bro. Floyd is scale carp. Our printers, not being versed in fish lingo, failed to make out the name, and so left it blank.

Bro. Robert Keeble, Leiper's Fork, writes: "Bro. Marshal Keeble preached for us second Lord's day in July. We had a good meeting with one addition."

We are sorry to note that Bro. Srygley has had to leave his post in the Guide office on account of ill health. He is at Savannah, Tenn. We hope he will soon be restored to health and to his labor.

G. Lipscomb will begin a protracted meeting, on Friday night before the fourth Lord's day in July, at Hebron, eight miles out on the Murfreesboro pike, and continue through the following week.

WANTED.—A male teacher of experience and good character, to take charge of a mixed school, (ten months' session,) at Leiper's Fork, Williamson Co., Tenn. We are prepared to offer a liberal salary. Apply to S. S. Hughes, Secretary of Board of Trustees.

J. Muckle writes: "Bro. George Harvey is preaching for the congregation in Montgomery once a month; he is doing good work; he is in love with the word of God; he is a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

S. S. Dupy, Thyatira, Miss., July 15, writes: "I am preaching at five different points; three in Tate county, one in Marshall county, and one on the line between Tate and Marshall counties. We have had a good hearing. Don't know whether we preach well or not. Some tell us we do better than they expected; but perhaps they did not expect much."

We direct attention to the advertisement of Prof. Scobey, of South Kentucky College, at Hopkinsville, Ky. Bro. Scobey has been a successful teacher for years. He is careful and conscientious, and capable in the care of his pupils. Has given satisfaction to those who have committed the care of their daughters to him, and we trust in his new position he will meet with success commensurate with his merits.

We have received from the publishers, H. S. Hastings & Co., a neat little volume, of eighty pages in cloth, entitled The Corruptions of the New Testament; in which is an examination of the corruptions of the New Testament Text. While they are reported as many, the great majority consists simply in variations in spelling. They are examined and treated in a plain easily understood manner. It is well for all to understand what these changes are, and how far they affect the real integrity, authority and meaning of the revealed will of God.

James H. Mulliniks, Bakerville, Tenn., July 21, writes: "Bro. R. P. Meeks has just closed a meeting of two weeks duration, with thirty-two additions—five from the Methodists, one from the Baptists, thirteen from the world, and the balance took membership, or was restored; those additions of the best material in the neighborhood. Brother Meeks is truly a workman that needs not be ashamed. May he be spared long to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. He has gone to Waverly, where he will remain several days. I will join him in the meeting, to-morrow, the Lord willing."

Rufus Green, Kent, Newton County, Mo., July 21, writes: "I preached two discourses the third Lord's day in this month at Pleasant Flat, in this county, to large and attentive audiences, resulting in four accessions. I am well pleased with my visit to this country; think it will result in much good."

Elder Geo. W. Elley, of Lexington, Ky., died recently. Bro. Elley was eighty-four years old at the time of his death. He was always a feeble looking man, but possessed a tough sinewy frame, with strong will power. He labored in his younger days much in Tennessee and States farther South. Although, for years, by virtue of his age and feebleness, incapable of active labor as a preacher, so not well known to the masses of our present readers, many of the older readers of the Advocate will hear of his death with sorrow and regret. He was faithful to his convictions of duty, and we trust has entered into the rest that remains for all the faithful in Christ Jesus.

R. O. Sharp, Bluff Springs, Tenn., July 20, writes: "Bros. C. N. Sparkman and James Litton began a meeting at Little Rock Church, Tenn., Saturday night before the second Lord's day in this month. Preached eleven discourses up till Thursday night; had three additions and closed the meeting. But when the crowd was dismissed it was raining, and while the people were waiting for the rain to quit, some of the brethren suggested that Bro. Sparkman should preach Friday night, as he was in the neighborhood and had nothing to do. So he agreed to preach one more time. He preached then Friday night and had ten additions. Some of the brethren said the meeting relapsed; we think if all relapses would do that well, that relapse would be a great thing. The brethren of this place say that Bro. Sparkman has done a good work here preaching and teaching. Bro. Sparkman is holding a meeting at Little Lot now, began the 20th of this month. I wish Bro. Sparkman such success everywhere he goes."

S. W. Wommack, Memphis, July 21, writes: "For the three months passed I have spent my whole entire time preaching to my people through the following counties: Marshall, Rutherford, Davidson, Wilson, DeKalb and Putnam, and I found the prospects for the growing up of new congregations through these counties very encouraging. One of our great needs, is the educated ministry and money. Bro. W. B. Carnes, of Smithville, has made a suggestion in regard to our condition. I hope to hear of the brethren saying something good about, or concerning us who are in Macedonia. On Friday before the fifth Lord's day in June, I had a dispatch from the church of Memphis to be the occupant of their pulpit a few months. The church is doing finely, seven added recently; two of those on last night, the third Lord's day. This congregation's facilities for worship are very inviting; they have a house well arranged, it costing near, or quite three thousand dollars; and the white brethren contributed near or quite one thousand dollars. This is a staring example to our brotherhood at large. To the Lord be all the praise."

DOMESTIC.—Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormack, widow of the great mechanic of reaping-machine fame, has recently given another $20,000 to the chair endowed by her husband in Washington and Lee University.—The rich mines at Cueviro, Mexico, belonging to the late Mr. Polk, ex-treasurer of Tennessee, have been deserted practically, the people being too warm-hearted for our Americans, who are unable to live peaceably, unless they marry dark-eyed senor it as and become citizens of the Greaser Republic. Since Senator Cooper's sad and tragic death, a series of murders and depredations have disheartened those in charge.—At a meeting of the Cabinet in Washington, last week, it was decided to take prompt measures to prevent the introduction of cholera into the United States. An order will be issued prohibiting importation from all infected countries for a period of at least ninety days. A man has only to become famous in this free country to find himself beset with a filthy crowd of revilers, slanderers, and mud-slingers.—The present presidential campaigns promises to eclipse all previous ones in the amount of personal abuse showered upon both tickets by their respective partisans. If one-fifth that is told of Mr. Blaine or Mr. Cleveland, is true, both men deserve to be in prison rather than occupying the exalted position of chief magistrate of fifty million people. While both men may, and doubtless do, possess many faults, we are constrained to the opinion that if they are so black, they would neither have enjoyed the great popularity of their parties so long.

FOREIGN.—The cholera epidemic in France is abating. In Marseilles alone nearly 800 deaths had occurred up to Sunday, the 20 inst. In Toulon during the twenty-four hours ending at six o'clock Sunday evening, forty-six deaths were reported, and in the same time 171 cases were received in the hospitals. The Preface of Marseilles said, last week, that over 46,000 inhabitants had fled from the city by the railway and 20,000 by roads leading out of the city. On Saturday three cases of the disease was reported in Paris, and two of them proved fatal. There have been five deaths from the disease in the Department of the Lower Alps. The fumigation of the railway stations at Toulon, Marseilles and Paris has been discontinued, as it proved a useless precaution. The Academy of Medicine in Paris decided, by a unanimous vote, that a land quarantine in France is impracticable. The health officers of London have held a meeting for the purpose of organizing a hospital service throughout the city, so that in case of the appearance of cholera the patient can be immediately cared for. The governments of Italy and Switzerland have agreed to co-operate in measures to prevent the introduction of cholera, into their territories. Switzerland has expressed its willingness to guard the French frontier in order to examine all persons and goods crossing it. Hospitals for the accommodation of cholera patients have been formed at Chiasso, Switzerland, and Luino, Italy.

—The House of Lords defeated the Franchise Bill advocated by Mr. Gladstone, and thereby raised a furore of excitement that may jeopardize the stability of that dignified body, which has ever stood in the way of all progressive civilization. A revolution may yet place a republic in all England ere this century closes.—The following was the program laid down for the demonstration at Hyde Park, London, on Monday last, in favor of the Franchise Bill: "The procession will form on the Thames embankment, and at 3 o'clock this afternoon will march, six abreast, to Hyde Park. It will be composed of eight sections representing the different trades, and twelve sections comprising various political clubs. There will be speaking at the park until six o'clock. The address will be made from seven different platforms. The putting of resolutions favoring the Franchise Bill will be announced simultaneously from the different stands by a bugle call, when it is expected they will be adopted unanimously." The Tories are organizing counter demonstrations to the move favoring the Franchise Bill, to be held in London, Liverpool and Manchester.—The Governor of Sonora telegraphed that the yellow fever at Guayamas, is a mild type and is not spreading.

BIBLE STORIES FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY UNCLE MINOR.

Day follows night, and night follows day; one season goes, and another comes. The sun rises, the earth moves, every year, month and day brings changes.

You are now children, in a few years you will be old people, and die to make room for others who shall come after you. Do you ever think about this? Long before you were born, there have been many people who have lived and died upon the earth. In the Bible we read the history of many good and many bad people; some of them were tempted, sinned and fell, but some were faithful; among the most noted was Abraham, who, on account of his strict obedience to God, was called the "father of the faithful." We know little of his early history, but when he was about seventy years old, (three hundred years after the flood,) he was told to get up and leave his country and people and go into a country that God would show him; this required great faith, for it is hard enough to leave our kin-folks and those we love when we know where we are going, and have had a glowing description of the place by some one who has been there; but we are told Abraham "arose and went," he did not ask any questions why he wanted him to go, what good would it do, or anything of the kind. Abraham loved God and was willing to obey him; and just so now, every child should be willing to obey God. We read in the blessed Bible God's commands to us, and it is our duty to obey them, then God will do for us just what he has promised.

Abraham had only one son by his wife Sarah, and of course he thought a great deal of him, for God had promised to make a great nation out of him, and give him so many descendants that he could not count them. But God wishing to try his faith still further, told him to go to a certain mountain some distance away, and take his son Isaac and offer him as a sacrifice. This, no doubt, almost killed the old man, as he looked on his dear good boy and thought of the pleasure and comfort he would give him in his old age. But we are told he "staggered not at the promises of God;" for He was able to raise him up again. Read this beautiful story and write me something about it. Tell me if you cannot find something in the New Testament that looks like this story.

We next read of Sarah's death when she was a hundred and twenty-seven years old. Abraham was now also getting very old, and his son Isaac was not yet married; so he told his servant to take ten camels and load them with presents and provisions and to go back into the country where his kin people lived, and seek out a wife for his son Isaac. There were no doubt many good looking young women in the land of Canaan where he dwelt. But he did not want his son to marry a woman that did not worship the true God. And just here is a good lesson for young people who are thinking about getting married; it is a very serious matter to be united for life to a partner. If you are a Christian, never marry any other than a Christian; for if you do you may destroy your usefulness and happiness for life. Abraham thought this way; so he told Eliezur, his servant, to go to the land of Mesopotamia and there he would find a suitable companion for his son. In that country the people were very rich in flocks and herds; there were no running streams and bubbling springs to gladden the hearts of the dusty, weary traveler, but they had to draw water from wells for themselves as well as their flocks. So late one evening Eliezur was tired and thirsty, hesitated at the well waiting for some one to come and draw water. He, like his master, was a praying man, and asked God to send him some one suitable for a wife for his young master. God heard his prayer; it had hardly been ended, before a beautiful, sweet girl came tripping along to draw water, and seeing the weary stranger, she offered him water and his camels. Children should always be good and kind to strangers, for they may be God's messengers of love and mercy. This young girl, whose name was Rebecca, proved to be a distant relative of Abraham, and when her father, who no doubt knew Abraham, had heard of the mission, he readily consented that his daughter should become the wife of Isaac. In those days old people were thought to know who would make suitable companions for their children. I think they should be consulted at least in this age, especially the mothers. But I must not tire you. May God bless you all, and help you to learn a valuable lesson from the faithfulness of Abraham.

LETTERS TO UNCLE MINOR.

Dear Uncle Minor: I am twelve years old. I live in a large beautiful prairie near Akin, Ill. My papa took the Advocate as long ago as I can remember. We have a good church close by us; one sister and my mama are members of the church, and my papa was a member of the church at the time of his death, six years ago. Bro. Brown of Mt. Vernon, Ill., is the preacher. Several members of the church are talking of sending for the Advocate; I hope they will. May your paper long continue its usefulness.—[Emma Puckett, Akin, Ill., July 3, 1884.]

Dear Uncle Minor: Seeing so many nice little letters from the children, I thought I would write to you. We live about one mile from Bloomsdale. We have a nice Sunday-school there. We have preaching every fourth Lord's day by a Baptist preacher. We also have preaching at Hackberry by Mr. R. C. Horn, a Christian preacher, every first and third Lord's day. Papa and mamma are members of the Christian church. Grandma takes the Advocate, and we read it and like it very much. I like Uncle Minor's letters to the children very much. For fear my letter will be too long, I will close. I wish you would come out here and preach for us.—[Estella Scott, McKinney, Texas.]

Dear Uncle Minor: I will now answer your kind letter which I saw a long time ago. I see letters in the Advocate from little girls and boys; I like to read them. I am like the little boy that wants you to make a "little Advocate" for us little folks. When we get the paper, the first thing we do is to see if Uncle Minor has anything to say. You did not say anything in your last letter to mother about coming to see us. Uncle Samuel is coming to Texas this fall to see us and teach school. We are going to school; our teacher is a Mrs. Green, from Jackson, Tenn. All five of us were going last fall, but now only A. and I are going; brother Charley and John have to stay at home to help papa on the farm. Hugh learns at home; he is reading in the second reader, and knows most all the multiplication table; he is just six years old. Little sister is three years old. I know you never heard a little three year old darling that can sing like she can. I was ten years old the 22nd of February, but not very large for one of my age. We have to memorize verses for Friday evenings. Those I learned for last week I think are pretty, don't you?

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going,
Do not strive to grasp them all,
One by one.

One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn what present duties teach,
One by one.

I am too tired to write any more. With love for my cousins, and a kiss for the little twins, I close.—[Jennie Low Lacy, Hutchins, Texas.]

EDDIE'S SAD EXPERIENCE.

It was all Sam Rust's fault. He ought not to have asked me to go. That is, I think it was his fault, because I would have never thought about going, if he hadn't asked me. Ma says nobody is to blame but myself, when I do wrong, and I

'spose if I'd—but I'm going to tell you all about it.

Ma gave me a quarter and told me to run down to Mr. Kane's and get a spool of silk to finish sister Annie's dress with, and come right back with the change. Well, I was almost there when Sam Rust came flying by and says, "come on, Ed, the boys are having lots of fun where Robertson's drug store burned last night." He ran off and didn't say what the fun was, but Mr. Robertson was our next neighbor, and I'd been crazy all day to see how his store looked, all burned up. I had to go to school, though, and now when all the other boys were having a good time, I was sent on errands just like I didn't want to enjoy myself too.

After I got the thread and the dime in change, I put them in my pocket and ran down a minute to see what the boys were doing. Of course I couldn't stay, but I just wanted to know. Whew! what a lot of boys there was, all digging and poking in the cellar to see what the could find.

"Pay your dime and come on," ever so many called to me. "What dime?" I said, and then I saw Max Pedro, who stayed at Mr. Robertson's, and he said, pay your dime, Ed, and you can have all you find in the rubbish."

Just then every body set up a shout, and out climbed Hooper Crawford with a whole half a dozen bottles of perfume in a box, and in no time he sold every bottle for twenty-five cents apiece. I tell you it didn't take long to give Max that dime, because you see if I could find only one bottle of perfume, I could pay ma back her dime and have fifteen cents left, and how did I know maybe I might find a dozen.

Well, I looked and looked, and dug under the bricks and dirt with a stick, and got my shoes full of ashes, and soot all over my gray clothes, and some men and boys pushed me over and mashed my hat, and I never found a thing, not one single thing.

I had been there a great deal longer than I thought I had when I started for home, and then I felt so dirty and miserable that I wouldn't go till 'most dark. The front door was open and I slipped in softly, and I wanted to see mamma first—you know a fellow always does, somehow, when he don't feel like he has been doing exactly right.

Cousin Laura was in ma's room and I heard ma say, "Yes, I hoped to get Annie's dress done for her to wear to-night, but the silk gave out so I could not finish stitching it."

Then it all came over me how sister Annie had counted on wearing that dress to sing in the sociable, and because of me she was going to be disappointed. I felt for my handkerchief but it was lost, the spool was gone too, and my elbow hit against the door and ma said, "There that must be Eddie. Where have you been, my boy?"

But I sat right down on the floor, and I don't remember exactly what I said, but Cousin Laura laughed, and said, "I'm going up stairs, Ed, so you needn't be afraid to come in." Then ma came out and drew me in and shut the door. She thought I had been fighting, and I never did see her look so sorry, but when she washed my face and hands, and specially when I could catch my breath and tell her, no indeed, I hadn't done as bad as that, she looked better. But my! how she did talk. All about being true to one's trust, and not giving way to temptation, and about being faithful in little things, so's one could be depended upon.

She though I'd better put on clean clothes and go to supper, though I didn't want any. Nobody said anything to me particularly, and pa talked 'most all the time about a young man who has lately run away with a lot of money that didn't belong to him. Pa said it was a warning to boys to be careful how they handled what wasn't their own, for fear they might get into bad habits and finally do something disgraceful and wicked.

Before I went to bed I rattled five nickles out of a bank, where I've been saving money to buy a bicycle, and took them to ma and she kissed me, so I knew she understood.

Now I've told you the whole story, and I don't believe you think Sam was to blame after all. Perhaps it is best, most always, for a boy to do like he's been told.

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen, mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of;
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain;
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
For so the whole round world is every hour
Bound by gold chains around the feet of God.

FIFTH CHAPTER OF ACTS.

There are no conversions recorded in this chapter except in very brief terms, such as "And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes, both of men and women." But this expression explained by the second and third chapter plainly indicates that the same things were done here that were done by the three thousand and five thousand. Conversion is the same to all. Whatever was done by the three thousand at the beginning on the day of Pentecost must be done by all who would be saved. But after recording in full what was required at the beginning, in the case of the three thousand, it would not be needful to record all the requirements in full every time. This would make a very large book, and would contain a great many repetitions of the same things without adding any additional information. It is, therefore, a matter of divine wisdom, that after one or two full presentations of all the conditions of pardon, only enough should be said on other occasions to indicate that the same things were done as in this case. While it is only said that multitudes believed, yet the preaching was still done by the same apostles, guided by the same Holy Spirit as on the day of Pentecost; and it is certain that the Spirit did not teach one way at the beginning and require three thousand to submit, and then teach another way in a few days to others, and that too when precisely the same gospel, with the same conditions of pardon were to go into all the world, and to every creature. Such a thought would be absurd. When this chapter says multitudes believed, it means a faith perfected by obedience, by repentance and baptism as required in second chapter of Acts. No faith can be a saving faith short of this, Jesus said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Not he that only believes, but he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. And as is plainly shown in second of Acts, repentance comes between faith and baptism. Therefore a faith that saves must be perfected by repentance and baptism. This expression that multitudes believed is just the same therefore as if it had said multitudes believed, repented, and upon confession of Jesus as the Christ, were baptized.

Every confession must contain faith, repentance, and baptism, and short of these there is, there can be no assurance or pardon. But with these requirements humbly and earnestly submitted to, pardon is certain. Hence when we have learned what the three thousand did, we learned what all others must do to the end of time. The word of God, the plan and conditions of salvation are so exceedingly plain that all can understand them. And all would understand them if the preachers would all present them as they are.

In the first part of the fifth of Acts is a case that is worth the study and investigation of every child of God. This is the sad case of Ananias and Sapphira. They were no doubt impressed by the liberality of others who had sold their possessions and laid down the money at the feet of the apostles, and they sold their possessions and laid down a part of the money, conspiring together to keep a part of the money for their own present use, while they made out as if they had laid it all down. Peter, by the miraculous power of the Holy Spirit detected them in their complicity and hypocrisy, and confronted them with it. Ananias came in first, and Peter confronted him with his attempted deception, and said to him, "Why hast Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land." This statement of Peter must have broken in upon the ears of Ananias like a thunderbolt. It rendered him speechless, having no explanation for his terrible sin. It had been deliberately planned by the husband and wife, and had been coolly entered into, and there was no palliation for it. The apostle asked, "why hath Satan filled thy heart," showing that this hard deed was instigated by Satan. But some may ask, if Satan concocted the whole affair and led in it, why blame Ananias? how could he help it?

The word of God teaches plainly enough elsewhere that Satan has no power to force men to sin. James says, "resist the devil, and he will flee from you." Ananias and Sapphira did not resist, but invited the awful insinuation. Hence Peter says further on, "why hast thou conceived this thing in thy heart?" This makes Ananias and his wife responsible for the whole thing. They could have resisted Satan, and he would have left them, like he left the Son of God when he resisted him with the word of God. But the thing was pleasing to them, and they seized hold of the opportunity gladly. There are several bad features in this affair. But the apostle names too. One was the deliberate lie they tried to palm off, and the other was the inordinate desire for money that caused them to keep back part of the money for which they had sold their land. Hence Peter said, "Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie, and to keep back part of the price of the land." They were greedy of filthy lucre, and willing to lie in order to carry it out. The sin was not in the fact that they did not give up all the money to the apostles, but, in the fact that through their avarice they had lied and tried to deceive the brethren. Peter indicated that they might have kept it all without any great sin. But they wanted to make the impression of being very liberal, and the same time provide liberally for themselves.

Thus at the very commencement of the Church of God a terrible example is made of an inordinate love of money, and of falsehood and deception. Both Ananias and his wife fell down dead, and were carried out and buried by the young men. Upon this occasion great fear came upon all, and the name of the Lord was glorified, and many wonders and signs were done by the hands of the apostles. All Christians should learn a lesson from this fate of Ananias and Sapphira, resulting from their terrible sin.

There is perhaps no one thing over which men more deliberately and wilfully sin than over the love of money. The word of God requires Christians to give as they are prospered. But how can they do this? As a sort of basis to calculate by in our giving, we have the Bible fact that the Jews gave one tenth of their income, and a little more. Christians could easily keep their calculations so made as to at least approximate this rule, and should be honest themselves before the Lord, and should act accordingly. It is certainly a great sin for Christians to hoard up for themselves that which belongs to the Lord, and is needed for the advancement of his cause. And we should all remember that we cannot hide these things from God. He will know our most secret thoughts regarding these matters, and we cannot escape his judgement. "All things are naked and open unto the Him with whom we have to do.

When the Jews first entered into the promised land, Achan, one of their number, appropriated to himself some things that were devoted to the Lord. For when Jericho was taken, all the gold and silver were required to be put into the treasury of the Lord. But when Achan found a wedge of gold and two hundred shekels of silver he appropriated them to himself, for his own use, instead of giving them to go into the Lord's treasury as he received. And because of this sin, his sons and daughters were stoned to death, and a heap of stones raised over them, and the place was long afterwards named the valley of Achor. These two cases are very much alike in their leading characteristics. Achan was made an example to the Jews against avarice and deception, while Ananias and Sapphira were made an example to Christians regarding the same things. Let us all keep our eyes wide open, and our hearts wide awake regarding this matter. Let every Christian see he hoards up nothing for his own individual use that of right belongs to the Lord, and that should be used for the advancement and upbuilding of his cause. It is an awful thing to deceive ourselves in these matters, or try to deceive others. Christians sometimes deliberately do things that are very much like this case of Ananias and his wife. A man speculates, or lives extravagantly, and after awhile sees that a crash is evident, and that it is only a matter of time. He then goes to work, his wife generally being privy to the whole thing, and conveys his property, on account of which men have trusted him, to wife or children, or conveys through a fraudulent pretense of sale, and puts it where his creditors can never reach it; and yet he and his family live on it and enjoy it the balance of his life, and live comfortably and well, while his creditors have to lose their hard and honestly-earned money.

Christians who think they can go to heaven on this line, will find themselves much mistaken. And congregations that encourage such to live among them as members, will find in a short time that they have lost the confidence and respect of the community. This sort of dishonesty can never prosper as Christianity. Men must be honest, if they desire to go to heaven themselves, and must prove themselves honest in the sight of others, if they would show to the world the beauty and the purifying influences of the word of the Lord, the religion of Jesus. Complicity in things like these show a very low state of morals, a very corrupt heart, and an utter indisposition to do right, to submit to the Lord's will, and let him reign over us. A disposition to live fast, and to enjoy the needless luxuries of a fast and vitiated age, is causing an immense amount of corruption in the church. When men start and run for a time on this fast line, they do not like to stop, and will do almost anything rather than give it up. And even people that have plenty, and do not live beyond their income, devote all their means that way, and have nothing to spare for the upbuilding of the Master's cause, and thus, like Achan, like Ananias and his wife, consume upon their own lusts much that ought to go into the treasury of the Lord to carry on the Lord's work. We cannot study these things too closely, nor be too careful in our actions upon them.

It is also noticeable how the bitter persecution of the Jews against the apostles was manifested still in this chapter. Notwithstanding the many miracles that were done, and the fact that when they thrust them into prison an angel from heaven turned them out, and set them to preaching again in spite of the jail guards, they were still disposed to put them down; and had it not been for the prudent counsel of Gamaliel, no doubt they would have tried to put them to death. And even as it was, they beat them before they would let them go, and commanded them again not to preach any more in the name of Jesus. How utterly unrelenting is religious prejudice. E. G. S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRETHREN L. & S.: A brother in Texas, and cousin of mine, wrote me and asked me two questions, to-wit: Who were the spirits in prison, and when did Christ preach to them? When did, or when will the millenium come? I have answered them to the best of my ability, and send you a copy.

You propounded to me two questions, your first question is, To what spirits, and when did Christ preach to the spirits in prison? I do not know that I fully understand you, (as to whom and when.) There is nothing plainer than Christ did the preaching by the spirit; as to when he did the preaching, there is not many things much plainer to my mind, than it was when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah. See 1 Peter 3: 19-20. I know that the idea is in the world that Christ's Spirit went and preached to the spirits in prison, while his body lay in the grave. Now, that idea will not do, for at least two reasons. First, he never commended his Spirit to the spirits in prison, but he commended it to God who gave it. Second, it is contrary to the teachings of the Bible; if God is no respecter of persons while the spirit dwells in it, he certainly will not be any respecter of spirits after they leave the body; and if he gave those wicked spirits a chance to come out from where the rich man was, don't you know they would come out as quick as the rich man would have done? And if he gave those wicked spirits a chance to repent after the body is dead, he will give all others an equal chance, and hell will be an empty space, and universalism will be true. Some people talk of this as though Christ never existed until he was conceived in the womb of the Virgin Mary. "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God." John 1: 1. "And the word was made flesh and dwelleth among us." John 1: 14. "And before Abraham was I am." John 18: 58. I might refer to many more passages showing the existence of Christ before he was born of Mary, and if he was in the beginning with God and existed as the word of God, then if there was ever any preaching done before he was made flesh, and it was God's word that was preached it was Christ. And as Noah was a preacher of righteousness (2 Peter 2: 5,) and as this preaching was done by the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead, we must find out whether that Spirit was in Noah. "Yet many years didst thou for bear them and testify against them by the Spirit in thy prophets." Nehemiah 9: 30. And as Noah was a prophet and preacher of righteousness, we are bound to conclude that Christ did the preaching by the spirit in Noah. As to when did, or when will the millenium come, I answer, I do not know. Palestine, Ala. GARDNER WHEELER.

REPLY TO BRO. J. R. BRADLEY.

MY DEAR BROTHER: On reading your last criticism on my reply to you, I at once decided that you would be all right, as soon as you had time to reflect and settle down; but a number of my brethren say that an answer is demanded. I therefore proceed to try to clear the mist away. I am no metaphysician, neither do I propose a treatise on metaphysics. The dictionary and Bible are my only treasure, upon which to draw to drive away the fog rising down in the mountains. We would like to avoid the effects of its settings. However, malaria is easily cured up here. My brother has Webster, and admits that he says, "As soon as the mind is purified the sins are gone." This is on my side. Thank you for the definition, (purify and sins are gone) sins gone, saved. In this, my brother sets up all that I claim on purify. He next says that he understands, "A sin of the mind would be to know a thing to be a sin." Bad understanding, my brother. This would be a great sin, (presumptuous sin). But to sin not knowing it to be sin, is the sin of ignorance. Paul obtained pardon on this account. His sins were in his mind nevertheless, and from the heart (mind) it proceeded. Let us hear Christ, see Matt. 15: 18-19-20, "But these things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart, (mind) and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. These are the things which defile a man." Make the fountain pure, and the stream will be pure. This cannot be done by faith alone, (faith, before baptism.) I would advise you to not stop short of the blood of Christ.

Paul consented unto Stephen's death, and breathed out threatening against the disciples, and was chief of sinners, because of his having a mind that could have learned better. If he had no mind, he could not have sinned against God or government as is fully set forth by the Savior. The things that defile proceed from the heart (mind). Where there is no mind, there can be no sin; hence no man can be lawfully punished when it is established that he has no mind. The Savior also teaches where much is given much will be required. The true logic of this is, where nothing is given nothing will be required. My brother being a metaphysician, I cannot tell how many men he will make out of a man. The Bible speaks of the inward and outward man. 2 Cor. 4: 16, and in 1 Peter 3: 3-4, speak of outward adorning and hidden man of the heart. So I would understand him to teach that the heart represents the inward or hidden man, and the flesh the outward man. From Jer. 31: 33, we learn that God will put his law in their inward parts, and Paul in Heb. 8: 10, calls it the mind. So flesh and mind in some instances represent the inward and outward man. My brother remembers where Christ said fear him who can destroy both soul and body. So you can see (I hope) that mind, heart and soul are all terms used in the Scriptures to represent the inward man, and flesh the outward man. My Bro. Bradley thinks the mind can be purified by faith before baptism, and yet the soul is left impure until he is baptized. Thus the heart is blessed, but the soul is condemned. Worcester defines mind to mean soul. He also defines spirit to mean mind and soul. And he defines soul to be "that part of man which is considered distinctly from the material body: immortal spirit of man, the mind."

The above being true, we are prepared to reaffirm; that when God purifies the mind, (heart,) he purifies the soul. He does not purify the heart in one way, and the soul in some other way, and at a different time. When John saw the souls of persons, the mind was near by. And I reaffirm that there is not one single instance in the Scriptures (after the cross) of any one being pure in heart, justified or saved before baptism; and I will go further and state that there is not one instance of the mind being pure, and the soul unsaved. My highly esteemed Bro. Bradley, failing to find a case in Scripture to suit his theory of a pure mind and an unsaved soul, comes nobly forward and presents himself as pure in heart before baptism, and that his soul is impure. I would take Bro. Bradley as soon as any one, from what I know of him; but I would not give my dictionary and Bible for the experience of all the men on earth. My denominational brother says that he knows his sins were pardoned before he was baptized. He gives as his reason that his mind is full of love, of heaven and heavenly things, and asks with Bro. Bradley, can the mind be more than full? And are these not the thoughts that fill the mind of a Christian?

But I must be permitted to say to Bro. Bradley and my sect brother, that the blood of Christ enters into this purification, (See Heb. 9: 14) and we come to his blood in him and not out of him. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. Faith, repentance, and baptism bring us into Christ, and his blood cleanseth the mind, heart, soul, spirit and body. All sin. In him we are new creatures; old impure mind, heart, spirit, soul and body purged, purified, justified, saved in Christ. Not by faith alone, (faith before baptism) or by grace alone, or the blood of Christ alone; but by all the means ordained by the Lord to this end. I never again expect to preach that faith before baptism purifies the heart; no apostle ever did it, and my brother admits that Christ in Matt. 5: 8, has no reference to the state of mind before obeying the form of doctrine, when he says "blessed are the pure in heart." The pure in heart being those who have obeyed the truth. Thank you again, my brother, for being on my side in every scriptural quotation. I also thank you for mentioning Babylon. I have no fears of getting too far away from the errors and confusion of Babylon. I am, however, greatly alarmed for my brother down in the mountains, in the midst of so much fog and smoke, writing about persons obeying the form of doctrine before the doctrine was made known, and of purity of heart out of Christ; mind (heart) pure, and soul not pure, offering his experience and poetry to help out his theory. I do thank the Lord that I have learned the way of the Lord more perfectly. It was through ignorance that I ever preached that the heart was purified out of Christ, (short of his blood); and like Paul, I find mercy on this account. Bro. Bradley, pray for me, that I, like the householder of old, may bring out of my treasure (the dictionary and Bible) things new and old. My brother is opposed to war over small matters. Who started this war? H. L. WALLING.

A LETTER TO BRO. W. S. EDWARDS, OF COLUMBUS, MISSISSIPPI.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST: I received your letter of July 11, on July 24, asking for information concerning the church at Borden Springs. As you were to leave Columbus in two weeks, I did not have time to answer it, so I will answer through the ADVOCATE, hoping your eye may fall on it, for all Christians should read the ADVOCATE. New Bethel church is in Cleborne County, Ala. Borden Springs is the postoffice, is in North Alabama, near the Georgia line, thirty miles below Rome, Ga., in three miles of the E. T. V. & G. R. R., is near the line of Cherokee County, Ala., thirty-five miles East of Gadsden, Ala. You will find plenty of work to do up here, and you will find a warm welcome. We need a revival of religion here; come over and help us. How I have longed to see Bros. Harding, Lipscomb or Sewell come to our aid. I am young in the cause, but doing all I can in my humble way. I think I will cast my lot with the people of Texas after this year. We want help, and we want it now. Brethren, of Tenn., come and help us; come and hold us a protracted meeting, we need help. W. H. DUKE.

New Goshen, Ala. July 27, 1884.

SHALL THE GOOD WORK GO ON?

The Christian Sower Tract Fund, which will be moved to Mexico, Mo., the middle of August, greatly desires to continue the good work. It has given away its stock of tracts, and has not the means to renew the supply. About $75 is needed. Now brethren be so kind as to heed this appeal at once by sending a liberal contribution with which to buy a new stock of tracts and to continue this good work. Surely you do not intend to see it die. There are too many destitute fields yet unsupplied. The Trustee will do his part of the work if you will do yours. After August 15 write to Mexico, Mo.; until that time address the Trustee at Madisonville, Ky. J. W. HIGBEE.

PEACE.

"Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man can see God." Paul to Hebrews. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace." Paul to Romans. "Let him seek peace and pursue it." Peter.

From these passages it appears to be the duty of Christians to make an effort to secure peace with their fellow beings. This subject was brought afresh to my mind by some things which occurred while making peace between two brethren. The difficulty was about two years old, and no one had made any effort to reconcile them, and they had made none worth counting. Peace is not so highly prized by men as by God. "Follow peace," "seek peace," are terms used. Any one who has lived in this world long should know that persons cannot enjoy enmity, either that in which they are parties, or that in which those, in whom they have an interest, take a hand. So greatly does our heavenly Father esteem peace, that he enjoins, "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." In the first place then the parties to a feud should do all they can to be reconciled to each other. They should not be satisfied without making a great effort for peace. Christians must remember that they are taught, "If possible, live peaceably." Again as far as they are able live peaceably. And still further, "Live peaceably with all men." This injunction is very much in harmony with the character of the religion of our Savior, and with the dignity of an heir of God and joint heir with Christ. Christianity was never intended to make our joys less, but to insure our happiness. Take a man or woman fresh from the tangle and wrangle of an unpleasantness of the fuss order. Pump awhile, what do you get? Do you draw out such expressions as "oh it is nice to have quarrels?" "Oh it is perfectly enjoyable to pass by others and never speak to them?" Then it is so very, very pleasant to be talked about, and have all your imperfections examined and magnified, also have all your peccadillos manufactured into great sins! Just think what is the character that could enjoy the possession of an enemy. Could a member of Christ's body do it? Could one redeemed from all iniquity delight in a foe? Demons from hell might do it, and these infatuated by them might, but saints of God should not, could not.

On the other hand sound the depths of his heart, who bore much for peace and exercised great long-suffering in its interest; of him who put himself to much trouble to have peace, and will he not say he enjoys really the concessions and sacrifices he has made striving for peace? Few persons know how to live. They think a little bit of dignity, petted, cultivated and preserved is worth more than peace. Hence you often find a man calling himself Christian, swelling and swelling, puffing and puffing, fit to pop right wide open, demanding that some other person who has offended him shall come forth and unbuckle the belly band that he may get his breath freely. Add to your faith dignity is not in the book, but brotherly kindness is there. There is such a thing as a false dignity. A Christian should have too much real dignity to notice small things, and make out of them huge causes for taking offense. A Christian should have too much dignity to make a toad out of himself by swelling over injured importance. Verily gas will puff up as light as it is. I have actually seen a man whose name disgraced the church book, ruining his reputation for piety and righteousness, and all the time flattering himself that he was scrupulously preserving his dignity. Did you ever see a persevering old hen persistently setting upon a nest with not an egg in it? She pecks this way and that; pecks when there is no other, and when there is none. Here is your fac-simile of the church "dignitary." Oh! how much happiness is lost by men's not knowing what will really serve them best. One wants revenge, and when obtained its fruits are bitter. Another wants others to confess their wrongs to him, that he may be justified and honored. But oh! how sweet to lie down at night on our beds at peace with God and all mankind. Like health, peace is easily preserved if the proper pains are taken at the right time. A very good way to look at a trouble is to count up the cost. Are the things in the way of peace worth more than peace? If they are, they are valuable. I have, myself, rolled and tumbled in my bed over bad feelings, that a few words set all right. A few explanations, and a fair understanding, do much towards doing away with troubles of this character. It is a difficult thing for a man to persist in thinking hard of you when he knows you love him, or at least hold him in esteem. Too often talking stops when hard feelings are engendered, unless it be talking about your supposed enemy to some open ears evilly disposed. Never fail to talk to him who is hurt with you. Be sure to be calm. You may fail to win your enemy, but you will think none the less of yourself. But suppose two have managed by some means or other, or without any cause, to get up a first-rate misunderstanding, and they take no steps to come to better feelings, then what? They simply fail to "seek peace and pursue it," "to follow after peace." In other words, they have ears, and hear not what the Spirit says to them. That is not all. The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace. Then he who does not seek peace, simply fails to show one of the fruits of the Spirit. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Christians should remember that they are important members of society. Their actions, under the rule of Christ as king, should be "worthy of their calling." Do not, my brother or my sister, pout, fret, sulk, or fuss over small things. Serving God Almighty is a great thing.

J. M. BARNES.

PEACE.

In the second place, it is my duty to seek the peace of others. Peace belongs to the children of God. Wherever it is lost, neglected, or sacrificed, the church of God suffers. So then, from two considerations at least, all the children of God should labor for its re-establishment. First, because it benefits those who are at "outs." Second, it must exist among a people, or they cannot justly claim to be children of God. Christ left his peace with his people. Paul told the Thessalonians "to be at peace among themselves." Now, we are too apt to think when an alienation takes place among us, that it is none of our business, and talk over the matter to others, and agree around to play hush mouth and hands off, while the storm rages. This is cowardly, it is unchristianly, it is wholly wrong.

Our Savior's blessings are upon peace-makers, and his curse upon the breakers of the same. Are the blessings of the Savior of men worth working for? Then, my brother, or my sister, are there not persons in your reach who are distressingly at war? What have you done to allay the bad feelings, and generate a right Spirit? If these persons had any money you could get by a little honest effort, would you not make it? Oh, yes. Then why not be consistent, and labor to be blessed of the Lord? I have seen persons that really could not adjust their own difficulties. They needed help. I have seen a hundred brethren and sisters around, who watched on with seemingly stolid indifference.

The Lord has a hundred fields in which men are invited to work. Men here have the "old sand hill field," "the prairie place," "the black bottom," "the long cut," "the field the old cow died in," etc. So God has different places calling for labor: "Help the poor," "preach the gospel," "prayer," "singing," "going to church," "breaking bread." Then our hearts are fields, which should be plowed down in "love," "joy," "peace," "long-suffering," "gentleness," "goodness," "meekness," "patience," "temperance," "godliness," and "brotherly-kindness." But in no field can a man labor with greater assurances of blessings from the Lord, than in the "peace-maker's cut."

A timidity often prevents those well disposed from making an effort to reconcile others at variance. This is not best. There is no doubt that much courage (Peter's virtue) is needed to attack some of the strongholds of Satan. Some of these are in the church. When you find there is enmity or hard feelings among your brethren, my brother or sister, go to work. If you can do no more, shout in their ears that God hath said, "Be at peace among yourselves." Do not be drowned out, do not be intimidated; for God's word, if repeated in earnestness, will take effect. You hear of rifles that will shoot a ball through this thickness or that; but no weapon is more powerful than God's word; "it is not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." When a man labors, he should act so that he can look back over his work and rejoice, being pleased with the fruits of his industry. The farmer looks at his corn, cotton, rice, potatoes, sugar cane; the blacksmith, at his plows, horse-shoeing, wagons; the carpenter, at his houses; the doctor, at his cured patients; the school-teacher, at his brightened intellects; the bar-keeper, at his sots, red noses and eyes, miserable women and children, fights, oaths; and each in his turn should have feelings in accordance with the fruits of his work.

He who makes peace will certainly enjoy sweet satisfaction from a noble and holy work. He that works in this department of spiritual life will find that much of the fuss is over nothing, and he must make up his mind to exercise great patience, and deal at length with very small things. Nations have fought and shed much blood over an imaginary insult that was never offered; tribes have warred for a long time over a difficulty which sprang up from children at play; Greece lost its best blood, and Troy was uprooted from its foundation stones, all for a very bad woman, not worth a drop of good honest sweat, much less such great sacrifice of labor, life, and treasure.

We can only then expect men to exhibit the weaker parts of their nature in big feuds over little things. "Oh, but when men and women are born again they ought to be wiser!" Who said that? Did not some one thus remark? Truth, yes that is the truth. We "order." But do we? When God has invited men and women to go to his storehouse and ask for blessings, assuring them that there is therein wisdom from above, that is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and hypocrisy, and the fruits of righteousness are sown in peace of those that make peace, and that this is for all who ask in faith, for God giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; it does seem that all would be too wise to engage in little petty quarrels. It should make all feel mean to have fusses. There are some people that will have them. Of course they get them just like you get anything else—go to work for them. However, quarreling is catching just like the measles or the itch. If you keep company with persons affected with it, you will be infected, if you do not take a preventive. The best one I know is God's word. Every neighborhood and town has its quarrelers, sometimes it has two or more. They are fuss makers. They are generally, however, like Harvey Jones' mule. The fact is, that notorious animal was secured in the inner stable the other night; he broke out his own confines through the barricades or his neighbor mule, and put out for the nearest orchards and corn patches, where he tore up things and he tore down things. So no boundaries hem in some tempers. There are two classes of mankind for whom I feel deeply sorry; one is the tornado and cyclone sort. The other, those whose sensibilities are so extremely attenuated that you cannot use them with enough violence to puncture a rabbit's hide, but they shrink away into the grubs and studs, and a thousand explanations and apologies and bows and smiles, leave you in doubt whether they are readjusted, reconstructed and fit for life again. Some things are so very delicate that it is a wonder how one of them was ever raised or brought to full maturity. If I had a regular touch-me-not disposition, I would have it rubbed to get it used to hardness. I would have it blistered to draw all the soreness out. I would have it poulticed to take the swelling out. I would regard it a misfortune to be so sensitive if I thought people could not cultivate a more durable temper. It is astonishing, the amount of hard feeling, generated from nothing more than an over nervous habit some have fallen into. Let nothing prevent you from striving to make peace. "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to which ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful." J. M. BARNES.

Rufus Green, Kent, Newton County, Mo., July 30, writes: "I preached two discourses at Elm Flat the fourth Lord's day in this month, resulting in two additions. Will commence a meeting at Hazel Green, in this county, next Friday night. We have some good brethren in this country."

TEXAS WORK AND WORKERS.

CONDUCTED BY JOHN T. POE, LONGVIEW, TEXAS,
TO WHOM ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

WHAT CONSTITUTES THE BEST PREACHER?

While at the State Meeting, we put the above query to a crowd of preachers, and some who were not preachers, to see what answers would be given. Below we give the several answers, with name, etc.

J. W. Gillespie—"One who preaches the gospel straight."

J. W. Jackson—"Best teacher of the word."

A. McGary—"Him whose life is best, and who preaches the word of God."

T. M. Sweeney—"He whose preaching is attended with most permanent success." (Of course, but who is he? Very indefinite.)

H. W. D. Carrington—"He who makes most converts to Christ."

T. Gillespie—"He who preaches the word without adulteration."

J. McCaleb—"He who preaches the gospel in its purity, and lasts longest in one place."

Thomas Nance—"He who preaches the gospel clearly, and teaches the church best."

A. J. McCarty—"A good hand-shaker, courteous and kind. Preaches the word, and practices what he preaches."

G. T. Pruitt—"He who sticks to duty."

J. A. Lincoln—"Simplicity."

Here we have the opinion in brief of eleven good men, as to what constitutes the best preacher. Bro. McCaleb, in our opinion, has given the best answer of any. The man who preaches the gospel, who preaches the gospel in its purity, and lasts long in one place, is not only a good preacher, but must be an extraordinary man. We might select from all these, and put up a model preacher.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Christian is a follower of Christ, one who has had the name of Christ, called upon him in entering the church of the living God, the body of Christ. But in these modern times we have Christian papers, Christian colleges, Christian books, etc.

Bro. Poe, is not this a departure from "pure speech that cannot be condemned?" I see Add-Ran College has recently taken upon itself the name of Christ; that is, it is now called the Add-Ran Christian College. I very much doubt the propriety of taking the name of Christ on to everything that a Christian has to do with.

Add-Ran has a perfect right to wear the name of its founders, but has no right to wear the name Christian, for in the very nature of things it cannot be a Christian. This applies equally to every other institution. To call scriptural things by scriptural names is right. To give anything unknown to the Scriptures a scriptural name, is decidedly wrong. This may hit pretty hard in some places, but who dares say it is not so?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Bro. Poe: I will close our meeting here to-night. Twenty-one added up to date. Two to be baptized to-night. I start for Hillsboro tomorrow, and will go from there to the State Meeting. Hope to feast on good things for the soul. Of course all will agree, and do all the good we can, and no harm.

Mrs. Katie J. Price (Lappo-Nubba her Indian name) is with us, on her way to Little Rock, to sell lands in Arkansas, and use the money for building on our Indian Mission lands, a part of her head-right, which she offers to us, upon which to locate mission and school. She will be at the State meeting. The leading object of her life is to make the mission a success. She has an English education, speaks the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek and Comanche languages. She was born and brought up in Choctaw and Chickasaw nation. Her interest is there. She is middle age, possessed of great will power, much endurance, and business ability to run two large farms and stock of cattle successfully. She is a great addition to our work over there, and is willing to give her life to it. R. W. OFFICER.

CLERICAL SCANDALS.

In looking over the ADVOCATE for 1875, I came across an article in number 33, by Bro. D. L., under the above heading, containing so much sound sense, that I copy a portion of it for republication in the ADVOCATE. The article was called forth by the development of a scandal connected with the name of a noted preacher in the State of Tennessee.

"One great cause of these scandals is the worshipful adoration paid the flippant talker, disregarding of his moral character. It is exceedingly difficult to get a congregation or a church to condemn a good talker. We have never formed an opinion of the guilt or innocence of Beecher on the charges preferred against him. It is a matter of comparative indifference. He is certainly guilty of higher crimes than a temporary yielding to the strength of passion under temptation. He reveals that his association with the female members of his church has been of a hurtful character. * * * A common man, without speaking power, would have been ruined utterly in public esteem, on one-tenth of the evidence on which his friends now claim his justification. * * * Among the Disciples who claim to recognize no man, save for his true personal worth, we see the same adoration of public speaking power, that sacrifices morality for the sake of a pleasant talker. We can call numerous instances of it to mind. In our own city, a few years since, a man of pleasing address and soft manners came; and although it was soon clear that he was bankrupt in morals, and a recent occupant of a Louisville work-house, old, experienced and good brethren were disposed to hold on to him. We know to-day preachers who cannot be depended on to tell the truth when there is the slightest temptation to falsehood, who are not to be relied upon in simple business transactions, whose characters in these respects are well known, yet are sustained because they are flippant speakers. * * * This reluctance to give up a good, pleasant talker; this spirit that worships eloquence, that prevents us from seeing wrong in one who is a pleasant speaker, is a great cause of corruption in the church. * * * A church pursues an unwise, a suicidal policy, in retaining a man known to habitually violate one law of morality. He will sooner or later bring ruin and disaster on himself, and shame to his supporters. Religious people should learn to esteem truthfulness, morality, honor, true manhood, and virtue, in a teacher or preacher, as above and independent of all the blandishments of the orator, or plausible appearance of a public speaker. Religion should be vindicated by the holy lives and godly works of its professors; not by the astuteness of the reasoner, or powers of the orator. The teachers and professors will not be pure and holy until this divine standard of excellence is adopted by the churches. This admonition is needed badly by all religious bodies known to us."

NOTES.

Am at present in Columbus, Ohio. We have a fair congregation here, but they are not doing the good they should, owing to the want of harmony among themselves, as the politicians say. The Central Church is regarded as rather progressive, and can't get along without a pastor. A few of the brethren who have started a mission school at Hunt's Hall, are doing good work. I spoke for them Lord's day evening; had a good hearing, and think good was accomplished.

I spent several days last week at Detroit, Michigan. Found the brethren, as usual, at Plum street glad to see me. This always makes one feel good, especially when among strangers. They are still contending for the old gospel, and edifying themselves without a "popular pastor." Bro. George Taylor had just closed a good meeting, and had started home the day I reached there.

Sorry I did not meet Bro. Taylor, as I have long wanted to see him, and shake his hand, and say, "God bless you for your good work in the querist department of the Old Path Guide. But I very much fear, as I did not see your name in the last number of that paper, that your head has been cut off! Yes, that is the way it has been always; let a man contend for a "thus saith the Lord," fight innovations and corruptions, and out and down he goes. I trust, however, this is not your fate.

I learned also that Bro. Harding had just left the city, on his way to Canada, to hold a meeting for the brethren in that dominion. I learned he would return to Kentucky in time for the debate at Benton. I regret not seeing him, as I always feel better after meeting him.

I was also in St. Louis not long since, and met with Brother Johnson, one of the editors of the Evangelist. I like him very much, especially since I found that his wife was a cousin of mine. Had a talk with him about most of our churches in St. Louis. I am glad he does not endorse their broad-gauge departures from the simple gospel. But I would like Bro. Johnson much better, if he and Bro. Garrison would hoist the "black flag" in the Christian Evangelist against all societies and associations, other than the simple, divinely organized church, for the spread of the gospel. Am glad to see they are not giving much quarters to innovations and corruptions in the church, in order to make it popular. Many of our brethren, especially in Kentucky and the North, are giving such loose reins to expediency that there is a grand re-action taking place. There are thousands all over this land that are calling aloud for the old paths, and saying, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord," "We will not serve strange gods longer."

There has been much said in the papers the last year or two about dividing the disciples. I cannot conceive how such a thing can be, as long as we have no "ecclesiastical organization" to bind us or pronounce decrees. But I do say the time has come when the humble, true disciple of Christ should earnestly contend for a "thus saith the Lord," and should countenance no preacher who does not contend for the completeness of the Scriptures, and, above all, that they are divinely inspired.

If many of the readers of the ADVOCATE could step with me into some of the so-called Christian churches in the larger cities, they would see so much conformity to the world, such pandering to the devil and the flesh, that you would turn away with shame, and blush to think that any of our brethren should ever come to this.

I write thus, my brethren, not needlessly to alarm you, but to earnestly pray you to stick to the "old Book," walk in the "old paths," contend for the "old faith," and let people call you "old fogey," if they want to. This is the road that leads to eternal life; that, to darkness and death. May God help us all to be true, no matter what may be the cost. V. M. METCALFE.

CHURCH NEWS.

H. L. Walling, McMinnville, Tenn., July 29, writes: "The fourth Lord's day in July, Bro. P. G. Potter preached at Pine Creek, and baptized two. I travelled in the mud and some rain thirty-one miles, preached once, and baptized two. This is what Bro. J. M. Kidwill calls the ten hour system. We praise the Lord for the increase, and for power to plant and water."

F. C. Sowell writes: "We had a very pleasant visit to Fulton, Ky. Preached two discourses there on second Lord's day. We met some good-hearted brethren. Bro. Cook preaches on first and third Lord's days, at Fulton, and on second and fourth Lord's days in the country. We were glad to meet Bro. Cook. He seems to be an earnest, good man. We will long remember the politeness manifested by the Fulton brethren. We left Union City, July 17, and reached Thompson's Station, July 18. Have been riding around this evening to get a congregation to hear me preach at Bethesda to-night. Expect to preach two discourses at Thompson's Station to-morrow, and hope to get home on Monday. Will begin our first protracted meeting (D. V.) at Hill's Chapel, on fourth Lord's day."

Faith.

Willie was a little boy about seven years old. His father was a drunkard, and his mother had a hard time to get along. One day in the winter Willie said: "Mother, can't I have a pair of new boots? My toes are all out of these. The snow gets in and I feel awful cold."

The tears came into his mother's eyes as she said: "Well, Willie, my dear boy, I hope soon to be able to get you a new pair."

After waiting for some days Willie said:

"O Mother, it's too bad! Can't I get some boots somehow?" He stood thinking for a moment and then said: "Oh, I know what to do, I'll ask God to get them for me. Why didn't I think of that before?" Then he went up to his own little room, and knelt down by his bed, and covering his face with his hands he said: "O God, father drinks; mother has no money; my feet get cold and wet; I want some new boots. Please, Lord, get me a pair. For Jesus' sake. Amen."

Then he went down stairs and waited for an answer. Shortly after this a kind Christian lady, who lived near them, called in, and asked Willie to take a walk with her. Willie went. Pretty soon the lady saw Willie's toes coming out of his boots. Then she said:—

"Why, Willie dear, look at your feet. They'll freeze. Why don't you put on a better pair of boots?"

"These are all I have, ma'am."

"But why don't you get a new pair?"

"Mother has no money to get them with. But I asked God to get me a new pair, and I'm waiting till He sends them."

"Tears filled the lady's eyes when she heard this; and leading Willie into a shoe store, she had him fitted with a nice pair of new boots. This made him very happy, and he thanked the good lady for her kindness. As soon as he returned home he went up to his mother and showing her his new boots, said:—

"Look mother; God has heard my prayer, and sent me the boots. Mrs. Gray's money bought them; but God heard me ask for them, and I suppose He told Mrs. Gray to get them for me." Then he knelt down by his mother's side and said, "O God, I thank thee for these nice new boots. Make me a good boy, and take care of dear mother. For Jesus sake. Amen."

Willie had just the same kind of faith that Abraham had. We can think of him as an example of prayer-faith. And we need not have a better illustration of how we are to pray and how we are to have faith in God than this history of Willie gives us.

Notes on Open Letters.

How easy it is to get puzzled over a difficulty that is of our own making! Many a man first assumes that there is a contradiction in Bible statements, and then wonders if that contradiction can be explained away. No puzzling in this line is more common than that which is indicated in this question of a Tennessee reader, about the effect of prayer:

If you think it is of sufficient importance, I should like to have your opinion on the following: Do we propose to change the mind of the Lord respecting his creatures? and, if not, why pray at all? The Lord is said to be immutable. I have had a great deal of thought on this, and I wait to hear in Notes on Open Letters.

No, we do not expect to change the mind of the Lord; nor do we want to change it. The Lord's mind is announced in his Word, as being set on giving certain things to his creatures, and on doing certain things for his creatures, when those things are prayed for in faith. To neglect to pray under such circumstances, is to decline to seek the things conditionally promised to us. To pray for those things is to evidence our desire for the promised blessings, and our confidence in the unchangeableness of God, who has promised them to those who ask them in faith, and who will not fail to do as he has promised. When the Lord says, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it," it is for the man to open his mouth wide, as a condition to the Lord's filling that mouth. Does the man expect to change the mind of the Lord by this mouth-opening? On the contrary, man's mouth-opening is so far a proof of his confidence in God's immutability in mouth-filling. So also, when the Lord says: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you," it is for a man to show his confidence in God's unchangeableness by asking, seeking, knocking in prayer, in order that God may give to him as he has promised to give.—S. S. Times.

Christ's sustaining, upholding power is infinite; but it is only secured to us "through faith." If that connection is cut, we are gone; and it is in our power to cut it. The same Peter who had been upheld once from sinking in the waves, afterwards detached himself from Christ, and instantly fell. The spirit of boastful presumption. The reckless tampering with sin, and every wilful disobedience of Christ's commandments, forfeit the protection of divine grace. Grace never suspends law—never nullifies law. The Christian who asks God to keep him from falling must also keep his own heart with all diligence, and keep himself in the love of Christ, and keep a conscience void of offense. When we have done our best and utmost, we have been dependent on the divine help for that very doing. Without the indwelling grace, and without the enfolding arm, not one of us would be safe for a moment; without that, a whole church might slide away from the sacramental table into apostasy and perdition.—New York Evangelist.

A SENSIBLE MOVE.

The St. Louis papers announce, "The Rev. J. H. Foy, pastor of the Central Christian Church, St. Louis, Mo., has applied for orders in the Episcopal Ministry. J. H. Foy has been a popular preacher in St. Louis for a number of years, reported to be sensational in his methods, clerical in his bearing and aspirations. He has an attractive style, is a man of some thoughtfulness, and has been a popular preacher in the city."

He was elected to the honorary degree of D. D., by some school, a few years ago. As a man we know nothing against his character. He was among the leaders that have been, and are seeking to make the disciples like the denominations. To a man that thinks the Disciples ought to be a denomination, or that wishes to stand orthodox with the denominations, or that wishes to make human additions to the church of God, I certainly say it is a sensible move to go to one of the denominations, rather than to strive to denominationalize the disciples of Christ. Certainly there are denominations enough to suit the tastes of all who love denominationalism. And we say it honors both the sense and heart of a man that wishes to belong to a denomination to go to those that are established, rather than to add others, and give trouble to those who strive simply to be disciples of Christ.

The central truth, the foundation principle of the reformatory movement of this century, is to restore the church, in its form, work, worship, to the original model, as God gave it. A man that is not working to that end is wholly out of place with the disciples of Christ. It is more honorable in every way for a man that cannot harmonize in this, the chief and leading aim of the work, to go to those with whom he can work in harmony, than to remain with those with whom he cannot harmonize, and strive to thwart their aims, divide their counsels, and destroy their work.

A man who thinks the work of the Christian is to vindicate the truth that baptism is for the remission of sins, and to crystalize around this as a kind of central truth, into a denomination, has never half-appreciated the aim of the movement, or imbibed the spirit of a true child of God.

In the restoration of the church, in form, worship, work, to the divine model, the first requirement is to take the law of God, as given by God, as the only rule of faith and action. This law followed out, without addition or subtraction, made the primitive churches just what they were. The same rule followed now will develop the same church organization, the same worship, the same manner of work. When something else was added to that rule, it changed the church organization, the church worship, the church work. It requires addition to this law to change the organization, the worship, the work of the church. A man who cannot accept the law of God as all-sufficient, without the addition of any human institution in its operation, ought to go out from us, to manifest that he is not of us.

We have no complaint to make of Foy leaving the associations of disciples. With his ideas and principles, his lack of sympathy for the true aims, and regard for the fundamental principles of the reformatory movement of the disciples, it was eminently the proper, honorable, and wise thing to do. Nor is he a sinner above others in lacking this sympathy. He is one of a class that have been, and are, educating themselves and the people away from the true spirit of the Christian religion, and from the fundamental principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. "To this man will I look, saith the Lord; to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word." The man who possesses the spirit that fears and trembles, lest he fail to obey, or go beyond the word of God, is the one who alone possesses the spirit necessary to appreciate the foundation principle of God's government in the world, or that is capable of building up the pure temple of God, in which God, through the Spirit, can dwell. Men who lack confidence in the wisdom and sufficiency of God's appointments, and who have confidence that human wisdom can supplement and complement and make more effective the word of God, are not fitted to engage in the work of restoring the divine order in its purity.

The mission of the church of Christ is to restore the law of God as the only authority in religion, the church of God in its organization, work, and worship, just as God gave it, as the only means of converting the world and perfecting Christians, and to bring the lives of the children of God up to the pattern of excellence that God has given for man. A man who does not believe in the sufficiency of God's provisions for accomplishing these ends, cannot work for these ends, and is a hindrance instead of a help to the church of Christ. He must not only believe that God's appointments are sufficient to all good to the world, but he must believe that all human additions and amendments grow out of sacrilegious assumptions upon the part of man, and that they separate man from God, so weaken the influence of God in the world, corrupt his holy religion and despoil it of its efficacy to save.

A man that cannot accept God's appointments as the perfect and only source of all good to man, cannot work in the true church of God, and he honors his head and heart by saying so and leaving it. Regretting Foy's lack of faith in the sufficiency of God's appointments without human addenda, we yet say, Honor to the man who, not being able to adopt the fundamental principle of the church of Christ, leaves it instead of staying with it, and so in his work corrupting it.

Thousands of others are being educated up to a lack of confidence in this living principle of the Christian religion; and if they do not leave the church, and unite with some of the sects, their labor will tend to sectarianize the church of Christ.

The former is the more honorable and less burlesque course. Nor do we see that the change to become an Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist, or Baptist, involves any greater violence to the law of God, than to introduce human machinery into and over the churches of God, and for these to assume the work God has committed to the churches.

CASKEY'S BOOK.

We have received the above named work, neatly gotten up, 350 pages, from the publisher, John Burns, St. Louis, Mo. It contains a biographical sketch of Bro. Caskey, a number of addresses, and a series of letters entitled, "Experiences of an Old Preacher." It is hard to describe the book to those who do not know Bro. Caskey. To those who know him, the best idea of it can be conveyed by saying, it is a reflex of Thomas Caskey, and is properly named "Caskey's Book." It abounds in logical statements, profound reasoning, burlesque and ridicule. It contains things tender and touching, grotesque and repulsive. There are in it truths that will help all who will appreciate them, and something that will do good if avoided. The work is a reflex of Caskey's mind. It is sold at $1.50 per copy. We trust it will be bought and read by a large number. The publisher desires agents to sell the book. Address, John Burns, St. Louis, Mo.

Bro. A. M. Jones calls attention to the fact that the Old Path Guide said none had ever changed from supporters to opponents of the societies. Bro. Orr mentioned Bro. Caskey as one who had changed. Bro. Jones now mentions Bro. Franklin as another. We did not pay any attention to this statement because no man ought to be moved by such considerations, but almost all who oppose them have been in them. Bro. Fanning always having doubts, yet worked in a State meeting. Bro. Kendrick is published by some friend of the societies as having worked with them in the beginning, yet not doing so of late. Bro. Rowe worked with them years ago, but of late has opposed them. Bro. P. S. Fall is frequently published as favoring the societies. We do not know on what ground; possibly because he has attended a meeting or two of Kentucky society, and made addresses. But were these addresses intended to favor them? If Bro. Fall favors any institution outside of the churches of Christ, as the proper medium of Christian labor, he was greatly misunderstood here in Nashville, both by the friends and opponents of the societies. While we know that Bro. Fall is greatly averse to anything like controversy, we would be glad that he would give a simple statement of what he believes is right in reference to these associations of Christians, not acting through the churches, that he may not be misrepresented.

Our reports from the field show unusual religious interest in many sections. Without protracted effort and in the busiest season of the year, there have been many additions to the church. This is as it should be, only we would it were more so. That is people ought to be made to realize that they should not wait for a periodic excitement to become religious, but that at any time they may become interested in religion, and become Christians. If the church would cultivate a constant living interest in religion, and not depend upon periodic excitements to develop itself, the world would soon learn to partake of the same spirit in this matter.

HOW SHALL PREACHERS BE MADE?

A young brother from Missouri writes, to ask, "Is there a Bible school in Tennessee that teaches the Scriptures as they are taught in the Advocate? Is there one in Nashville? I would like to attend such one if I could find it."

We are sorry to say there is none in Nashville. The church in Nashville is practically against these teachings. We do not know exactly what is taught in the schools in Tennessee. There is but one college in Tennessee manned by disciples, and I am not sure it has a specific Bible department—Burritt College. Bro. Larimore at Mars Hill, Ala., just across the line, has turned out more preachers in Tennessee than any other school. I had supposed that the instruction there was mainly in sympathy with the positions of the Advocate, but Bro. Srygley, one of his graduates, and who claims to know, says, "all of the institutions of learning" are against the positions of the Advocate in reference to the additions of human institutions as helps to do the work God has committed to his church. Of this we are not certain, but we do know it is so much the worse for the colleges that so teach, or will be in the day of final account.

We have always doubted whether a Bible college, as we use the term—that is, a school to especially train young men for preachers, is the best way to develop true, earnest preachers faithful to God. We believe in the Bible being taught in all schools and in all colleges, to all who attend, regardless of whether they are Christians or not. It seems every Christian who teaches ought to be careful to do this. Then in after life, those who in the services of the church find an inclination and taste for teaching our holy religion, and who by piety and zeal for the truth of God, show a fitness for the work, should be encouraged by the churches to devote their time and talent to the work of teaching the world the way of righteousness. With this order, it seems to me these would never find themselves in the position or calling of a preacher, without a real taste for the work. The number, at least, would be comparatively small. Young men having spent means and time in preparing for it, and having been put into the calling without growing through labor and real love for the work, into it, are liable to find themselves in the calling without real taste for the work. Then there is a temptation to use it merely as a means of livelihood. Any man preaching simply as a means of making a living, will injure and demoralize the church of God, and will corrupt the truth of God, because his leading purpose is not to maintain that truth in purity as the only good of human souls, but to make a living. There will be a constant temptation to such, to adopt the methods and preach the things, and in the manner that will gain the greatest amount of money. Where there is constant temptation many will yield. Recognizing the advantages that come to a young man from study with those who have made the teaching of the Scripture his life-work, it seems to me that all the advantages might be gained, without the evils incurred by a different course. I am not meaning to intimate that the great majority of those who attend the Bible colleges are not true to the truth. Many of the best and truest, and most independent thinkers, and men most faithful to God we have, are those who have attended Bible colleges. Some who never attended are as mercenary in their course as any we know. We apprehend that there is more in the true faith in God and in the moral stamina of the man himself than in the school he attends as to his being firm in fidelity to the principles of the Bible.

There is a constant temptation to all men who are dependent on the public, to cater to and please the public. This is recognized as true almost universally of politicians. They sacrifice their own convictions for that which is popular, and by thus sacrificing them they come to have no convictions as to what is true or right, but only what is popular. Conventions are not expected to enunciate truths they regard as best for the good of the country, but to enunciate a platform that will be popular with the people. Not the man who is most worthy and capable of maintaining the principles of right, but the one that will carry the crowd even at the sacrifice of the principles proclaimed when he is nominated. The meaning of it is, men who seek position and office lose regard for principles of right and consider what will gain popularity.

As little as it may be considered, under the present order of electing and dismissing preachers, no class except the political office seekers are so tempted to seek popularity as the preachers.

How many churches call preachers now because they are faithful to the truth of God? Is not the question always, can he attract and hold the crowd? The highest salaries are given to those who can hold the popular crowd, not to him who is most faithful to the truth of God.

The churches that do their own worship and seek the aid of a preacher occasionally to reach their neighbors, act on the same principle. They offer a premium in this, to men not to be true to God and his institutions, and his ways, but to please and draw the people. The tendency of the preachers treatment by the church is to make them a set of office seekers. Many of them elect a man a pastor for a year. He knows his reelection depends not on his fidelity to the truth, his humble walk in the ways of God, but in the crowd he is able to draw to the church. Or if he fails of a re-election there, he knows his success in obtaining good positions elsewhere, depends not upon his adherence to the form of sound words, delivered by the Holy Spirit to the church, or upon his humility, fidelity and zeal in walking in all the Lord's appointed ways, but in the success he has met with in attracting a congregation. When a man is elected for an indefinite time as teacher of a congregation, the conditions are not materially changed. He knows that he can remain as long as he succeeds in making the church popular and drawing the crowd; that when he fails in this without regard to his faithfulness to God and man, he will be compelled to leave.

This condition of affairs explains what otherwise is inexplicable. That many preachers are faithful to the truth under these circumstances, shows the power of truth to save those who study and practice it, and is a compliment to their fidelity and love of the truth. That many fail to maintain their convictions, and soon lose all convictions on many subjects of Christianity, is not strange, when human weakness under temptation is considered.

To illustrate what I mean, the Bible College at Lexington, especially Bro. McGarvey, is strong in his opposition to the use of the organ in the worship. I know of none more opposed to it than he. This opposition, I take it, is freely taught his students. A year or two ago, I met a young brother just out from the Bible College, on his way to a section where the ruling sentiment was favorable to the organ. He introduced the subject, remarked he believed it all wrong, but the churches would all introduce them sooner or later, and he did not see the use of opposing them. I venture by this time he has lost his conviction on the subject. It is strange how many preachers have no convictions on questions that are controverted. The reason is, they learn that they are appreciated not for their convictions or for fidelity to the truth of God, but for their success in drawing a crowd; hence a habit of having no convictions on questions that may affect their popularity, is cultivated.

The trouble is not in convincing people that certain things are wrong, and certain other things are right. The trouble is in getting men to stand to and maintain that right when it is understood. I think that nine-tenths of the persons who contribute to and maintain the societies believe they are not the scriptural way of working, that they violate some principle of Scripture. They will say they are wrong, but still they maintain them, work through them. As an example, Bro. Rowe published in the last Review that Bro. Cowden, the teacher in the first Lexington (Ky.) congregation, stated to him that a different system entirely was the scriptural and effective one. Yet he, with Allen, McGarvey, and others attesting this, work in and through the societies. Why do they do this? It is easier to go with the current than to stem it. We persuade ourselves that, although wrong in principle, good can be done, and we will be excusable for the wrong. The wrong is in existence; it requires labor, patience, and faith, to put the right in operation. Humanity is more persistent in carrying out its own devices, than in carrying out the institutions of God. Advocates of the wrong are more persistent and intolerant than those of the right. There are prominent churches, over half of whose membership who ever think of these questions, oppose these societies; yet by the persistence of a few officious friends of the societies, exclude from the church all teachers and teaching, even those of their own members, opposed to these societies, yet welcome all teaching on the other side.

The disposition to yield, on the part of those holding the truth, rather than create apparent division, helps the error. God says, "Whosoever believeth a thing to be sin, to him it is sin." Whatever it may be to others, it is sin for those who believe the societies wrong, to work in and through them.

What is needed to give efficacy and strength to the opposition to the wrong, is a determination to stand by and work in the right way. Too many of us, while we oppose the wrong, do nothing in favor of the right. I believe that were one-half of those who believe the societies embody principles contrary to the will of God, to give emphasis to their convictions by refusing to work in the way they believe to be wrong, and by working earnestly in the way they believe to be right, the societies would cease to exist.

What is needed then, above all else, is a school that will teach men to be true to their own convictions, firm in the advocacy of truth, and entirely unwilling to compromise with, or practice that which is wrong, but will labor in that which is right. Whenever God finds such servants, he will use them to maintain his cause, and to build up his institutions. Other characters he will not use.

D. L.

There are two ends that may move religious people. One is to build up a large, strong denomination, based on some one or more truths. The other is to make humble, obedient servants of God; to build up churches just as God ordained them, composed of earnest, faithful, obedient children of God, contentedly doing his work, and leaving all results with him. For which of these ends are we working?

LETTER FROM BRO. MCGARY.

Dear Bro. Lipscomb: I see where Bro. Thornberry has come to your relief, for the maintenance of sect baptism as equal in value to Christian baptism. Bro. Thornberry says: "I affirm that the authority of God alone, makes the Bible binding." The sects affirm that faith alone, saves the sinner. Now, Bro. Thornberry will loudly say no to this, but he insists that those who are deceived by this false teaching of the sects, are fit material for the building, if they will only be immersed in water. Now, if Bro. Thornberry and you are right about this, it is not "the truth that makes these parties free," but the water—they have been begotten of false teachers, and born of water. How different from the process of the Son as God! I do not write this as an answer to Bro. Thornberry, for I suppose that the ADVOCATE is not inclined to pursue that question further at present. But I write this to inform the ADVOCATE readers that on the first of September next, will appear a monthly,—i. e., the first issue will appear there,—which will be devoted exclusively to the dissemination of religious thought: and there will be in every issue of it, allotted ample space for any man who may desire to affirm and prove the teachings on your side of this baptismal question. This is what Bro. Thornberry should have affirmed in his article instead of "I affirm the authority of God alone makes the Bible binding." Who does the old soldier suppose will deny this? But if he will affirm his teaching on this baptismal question—the very thing he ought to do in a clear proposition, then he may raise an issue that may result profitably to the cause of Christ. The monthly, referred to above will point out some inconsistencies in "Our Plea," as well as in some of our ablest men.

Bro. Lipscomb, I hope you will publish this article in your paper, as you have mildly suggested to me that the baptismal question was not sought after by the ADVOCATE. If you think this partakes too much of the nature of an advertisement for the monthly pamphlet, then send me the bill and I will cheerfully settle it.

All who may wish to see what several old soldiers have to say about the inconsistencies between "Our Practices" and "Our Plea," in a monthly to be known as the Firm Foundation, may do so by sending $1.00 and their address, legibly written, to the undersigned, at Austin, Texas.

A. MCGARY.

[We cheerfully give the above announcement of Bro. McGary. We did not intend to stop Bro. McGary or any one else. Only we thought as the two last articles were but a repetition of the same ideas, if we had nothing new, it was well to stop. The ADVOCATE stands now, and ever ready to give the opportunity to any brother to give his reasons on this subject, but not too much.—D. L.]

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 9.

"For if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." 2 Cor. 5: 7.

My much respected friend, I propose to call your attention again to the subject of "pardon of sins." Not "that I may seem to terrify you with letters," but that we may both understand our duties to ourselves, and to those whom we endeavor to instruct in the way of the Lord, that our labors may be blest, and we accepted as faithful servants of our Savior. I shall speak as plainly as I possibly can, knowing that you are so well acquainted with me as to know that I desire not to wound, but to strengthen your heart in the doctrine of Jesus. The apostle Paul declares a very important truth, to you and to me, to any man, to any woman, and that is this: If you, if I, or if any one be in Christ, he is a new creature. If we know what is promised in Christ, and what is meant by in Christ, and when any man is in Christ, and how any man can get into Christ, then may you and I, if we desire to obtain these promises, know if we are in him, and are assured in our hearts that we are in blessed relation to our God, our heavenly Father. We shall overlook some of these promises as though we had never heard of them before, that we may increase our (already) longing desires to be clothed with them as our heavenly Master deems us worthy. David, by the Holy Spirit, declared "His name shall endure forever, and men shall be blessed in his name." Ps. 72: 17. We have "redemption" in Christ, (Rom. 3: 24; Eph. 1: 7; Col. 1: 14,) we are "reconciled," have no "condemnation," "forgiveness of sins," have "salvation in no other name," are made nigh. Gentile (though one time without Christ) with Jew is made one new man in himself; are framed into one body in Christ, and are all one and triumph in him, and those that die in him are raised first, are blessed and made alive in him. Though these are not all the promises we will place them together and we have salvation, redemption, reconciliation; no condemnation, forgiveness of sins. Nearness to God, made one, and triumph and dying are made alive and are resurrected, and enjoy the blessings of heaven in Christ, and not out of him; without Christ is no hope of God, because there are no promises, only in him are yea and nay. And just here let me suggest to you that though men may wrangle as how and when sinners are pardoned of their sins, (I mean alien sinners, and not Christian sinners) there is no man that can affirm with the Bible before him that a single one of these promises above enumerated can be claimed by "any one" unless he be "in Christ." And this being true, we are ready to see what is meant by "in Christ." We know that it cannot mean in his literal body; he is in heaven, we are here upon earth. If it does mean this we must wait till we reach heaven; we cannot die in him, we cannot be raised in him, and if we fail in these promises we will fail in others. It must be a figurative expression, meaning a state or relation to him—so dear—so close that "in Christ," in him, expresses it better than any other figure that God, that Jesus, that the Holy Spirit through the apostles could use to convey it to "any man." Paul tells us "that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." 2 Cor. 5: 9. Jesus said to Philip, "Believeth thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me, * * * but the Father that dwelleth in me." John 14: 10-11-20. "At that day (when the comforter comes) ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." Again, to the Jews, he said, "Believe the works, that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me and I in him." Chapter 10: 38. Here, then, it is evidently an expression of close relation or state existing. Oh! what a glorious relation to God and to Jesus is vouchsafed to us, to any man is the one expressed by the term "in Christ." May you and I, my friend, with every "one," so appreciate it that we shall earnestly and humbly strive to gain it, that we may claim the precious promises made to mortals "in him."

A DISCIPLE OF CHRIST.

There is such a thing in life as unconscious progression. Two men lie down at night in the same city; but when the morning comes, one wakes to find that he has been borne in his sleep over rivers and through forests and beyond mountains; while the other wakes in the same city in which he lay down. Neither has been conscious of any act of progression: in the one case, there was none; in the other, there was swift movement through all the hours of unconsciousness. There is a like unconscious progression of the soul. It is not enough to say that you are not conscious of going either upward or downward; that may be, and yet you may be moving swiftly and surely to the gates of light or to the gulfs of darkness and despair. The traveler knew, before he yielded himself to sleep, where these rushing cars were bearing him; and in that knowledge he could lie down trustfully. But who could choose to lie down to sleep in a boat that was drifting gently round the whirlpool? You must often be content to let your progression be unconscious, but you are never justified in not knowing along which of the two great paths of life that progression is carrying you. First be sure that you are moving along the right road and in the right direction; and then, whether you are conscious of your progression, or unconscious of it, you will know that He to whom you have committed your way, will direct and shape your paths to a prosperous ending.—S. ## Obituary.

Died, on the 13th day of May, 1884, Sister May Ann Watson, leaving her husband and six children to feel how lone and desolate is home without mother and wife. Our dear sister was a subject of affliction for many years with lung trouble, but bore her suffering as patiently as any one with whom we have ever met,—nothing but the Christian's hope can enable one to endure such trials as she was called upon to bear. She died as she had lived; no getting ready when the messenger claims its victim; like the great apostle to the Gentiles, ready to go, having finished my course. Sister Watson was a member of the Cane Creek congregation, Marshall County, Tenn. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may enter through the gates into the city. Farewell till Jesus comes.

WM. H. DIXON.

Departed this life May 17, 1884, in the city of Waco, Texas, Mrs. Mary Wallace, wife of W. D. Wallace. Sister Wallace was born in Sequatchie Valley, Tenn., February 25, 1826. Joined the Baptist church in early life, of which she continued a faithful member until August, 1868, when she joined the church of Christ at Philadelphia, Warren County, Tenn., under the preaching of Elder E. G. Sewell. Deceased was married to Bro. Wallace in 1867. In 1880 they moved to Waco, Texas, where they attached themselves to the church of Christ. In her death her husband lost a devoted wife, and her children an affectionate mother; and the church of Christ a zealous member. We sympathize with Bro. Wallace and family, but know that they can comfort their hearts in the promise of the gospel.

C. W. SEWELL.

Sister Mary M. Sweatt, col'd, was born December, 1832, consequently a slave for thirty-two years. She was married to Daniel C. Sweatt, col., in 1851; she obeyed the gospel in March, 1860, with the writer and several others. When freed she took the name Sweatt, the family to which her husband belonged. Her name was on our church book as Mary M. Sweatt. She was a woman of deep religious convictions, and notwithstanding the severing of relations which took place after the war, she never severed herself from the congregation of which she was a worthy member. Two years ago we congregated our colored members to themselves; and they have met regular for worship on the first day of the week, which meetings Aunt Mary loved to attend. She leaves a husband and five children, two of whom are members of the church, one of which gives promise of usefulness in the ministry, of which the old sister was very proud. Her disease was consumption, which she bore with great fortitude. She talked a great deal about death, and expressed her entire resignation to the will of the Master. She exhorted her friends and husband, and children to meet her in heaven, and sang her favorite song only a short time before her death, "Why should we start and fear to die," etc. When the summons comes may we all be ready.

JNO. P. TUCK.

By request of those who loved her most, I give a brief obituary of sister Mary F. Tucker, who was born May 16, 1824, and died June 16, 1884. She obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. Ephraim Osborne, about forty years ago. She has ever, from that time, lived an earnest, consistent, Christian life. Those who knew her, loved her. Firm and unshaken she stood true to her religious convictions. Though opposition's tide rose high, she wavered not. Her Christian influence, like a star that cautiously breaks through the clouds to guide the storm-tossed sailor safe to the far off port, ever shone out on life's dark ocean to guide the benighted seaman clear of the perilous rocks and breakers safe into God's eternal port of rest. She died very suddenly. She was at church on Lord's day—enjoyed sweet communion with the dear Savior; went to bed that night feeling as well as usual, but never to see the light of another day. The next morning's sun found her cold, in death's icy embrace. Her last moments on earth remind us in very impressive symbols of heaven—the house of the Lord, "home," heaven. May we, like her, be found at the post of duty. We pray thee, our heavenly Father, to sustain these afflicted ones in their sad bereavement, and help them to be prepared to go from the house of the Lord to heaven.

Columbia, Tenn.

And when it is all over, and our feet will run no more, and our hands are helpless, and we have scarcely strength to murmur a last prayer, then we shall see that instead of needing a larger field, we have left untilld many corners of our single acre, and that none of it is fit for our Master's eye, were it not for the softening shadow of the cross.—Edward Garrett.

DYSPEPSIA.

Sedentary habits, mental worry, nervous excitement, excess or imprudence in eating or drinking, and various other causes, induce Constipation followed by general derangement of the liver, kidneys, and stomach, in which the disorder of each organ increases the infirmity of the others.

The immediate results are Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Foul Breath, Heartburn, Flatulence, Dizziness, Sick Headaches, failure of physical and mental vigor, distressing sense of weight and fullness in the stomach, and increased Costiveness, all of which are known under one head as Dyspepsia.

In every instance where this disease does not originate from scrofulous taint in the blood, AYER'S PILLS may be confidently relied upon to effect a cure. Those cases not amenable to the curative influence of AYER'S PILLS alone will certainly yield if the PILLS are aided by the powerful blood-purifying properties of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.

Dyspeptics should know that the longer treatment of their malady is postponed, the more difficult of cure it becomes.

Ayer's Pills

Never fail to relieve the bowels and promote their healthful and regular action, and thus cure Dyspepsia. Temporary palliatives all do permanent harm. The fitful activity into which the enfeebled stomach is spurred by "bitters," and alcoholic stimulants, is inevitably followed by reaction that leaves the organ weaker than before.

"Costiveness, induced by my sedentary habits of life, became chronic; AYER'S PILLS afforded me speedy relief. Their occasional use has since kept me all right." HERMANN BRINGHOFF, Newark, N. J.

"I was induced to try AYER'S PILLS as a remedy for Indigestion, Constipation, and Headache, from which I had long been a sufferer. I found their action easy, and obtained prompt relief. They have benefited me more than all the medicines ever before tried." M. V. WATSON, 162 State St., Chicago, Ill.

"They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and vastly improved my general health." REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, Atlanta, Ga.

"The most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain." W. L. FARR, Richmond, Va.

"A sufferer from Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Neuralgia for the last twenty years, AYER'S PILLS have benefited me more than any medicine I have ever taken." P. R. ROGERS, Needmore, Brown Co., Ind.

"For Dyspepsia they are invaluable." J. T. HAYES, Meza, Texas.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

WHAT IS THE HEART.

Perhaps there is no word in the sacred writings which is oftener used and less understood than the word heart. Especially do we hear much about heart-religion, as distinguished from head-religion. It is thought that if the heart is right it does not so much matter about the head; it is of comparatively little consequence whether the understanding is correct or not, it is supposed.

Those who thus think have never given the most superficial attention to the use of the word heart in the Scriptures; for it is certain that no man of responsible mind can read the verses in which the word occurs in the Old and New Testaments without obtaining better information. I advise all who have not done so to take a good unabridged concordance and hunt up and consider every occurrence of it in the Bible. We propose in this essay to investigate a sufficient number of these passages to throw some light on our question.

WHAT IS THE HEART?

Generally it is held that the heart is the seat of affections, that it is that which loves and hates; while the mind, that which hears, understands, which receives and weighs testimony, and draws conclusions, is supposed to be something quite different. Hence another question arises, the answer to which will doubtlessly assist us in arriving at a proper conclusion in answer to the first; it is this:

WHAT DOES THE HEART DO?

1. It hears, meditates upon the words which it has received, understands, believes, and becomes wise unto eternal life; or, else, it refuses to hear, will not consider, and hence disbelieves, and is lost. In proof of these statements consider the following from the parable of the Sower:

"Those by the wayside are they that hear; then cometh the devil and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved."

"But that on good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their eyes they have closed; lest haply they should perceive with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should turn again, and I should heal them." Mark says the word was sown in their hearts; Luke explains that the devil comes and takes away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved; Matthew then explains that the people have gross hearts, dull ears, and that they have closed their eyes, lest they should see with their eyes, hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and turn and be saved. So we see as the eye is for seeing, the ear for hearing, the heart is for understanding. David prays that the meditation of his heart may be acceptable in the sight of the Lord; and Solomon asks the Lord for a wise and understanding heart. Paul says that with the heart man believes; and Jesus explains that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." It is not strange therefore that Paul exhorts the brethren thus: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." For as a man thinks in his heart, so does he talk. Well did Solomon say, "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." Jesus explains, "The things which proceed out of the mouth come forth out of the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, railings: these are the things that defile the man."

From these passages it is clear that it is the heart that hears, considers, meditates, concludes, etc. One more passage and we pass to another phase of the subject. When Jesus was at Capernaum on one occasion, certain ones brought to him a man sick of the palsy, and because of the crowd let him down to the Master through the roof. "And Jesus, seeing their faith, saith unto the sick of the palsy, Son thy sins are forgiven. But there were certain of the Scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts, Why doth this man thus speak? he blasphemeth: who can forgive sins but one, even God? And straightway Jesus, perceiving that they so reasoned within themselves, saith unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?" From this passage it is clear that the reasoning and meditating and talking which one does within himself is done in the heart. To talk therefore about heart-religion in contrast to head-religion, is to be guilty of foolishness.

2. The heart loves and hates, desires and fears. It is the seat of affections as well as of the understanding. As people are very generally agreed upon this, it will not be necessary to discuss it at any great length. I call the reader's attention to a few passages only.

We are exhorted to love the Lord with all the heart in Deut 10: 3; 30: 6; Matt. 22: 37; Mark 12: 30-33; Luke 10: 77. Hence the heart loves. David says, "My heart shall not fear." Ps. 27: 3. And Isaiah talks about "them that are of a fearful heart." Isa. 35: 4. Hence the heart fears.

Asaph says of the wicked, "Their eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish." Ps. 73: 7. Hence the heart desires.

3. The heart wills, purposes. It is the seat of the will.

It is said that Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank. Dan. 1: 8. And in Hebrews 4: 12, the word of God is represented as being a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. So the heart purposes—has intents. Barnabas exhorted the young converts at Antioch that with purpose of heart they should cleave unto the Lord. Acts 11: 23.

The faculties of the ego, or inner man, of the metaphysicians are usually divided by them under three heads, (1) the intellect, (2) the affections, (3) the will; we have seen that the heart of the Scriptures includes all of these. The heart, then, is that which considers and understands, which loves or hates, and which resolves. In the light of these reflections it is easy to understand what is a change of heart, and how to open the heart. When the understanding is enlightened, the affections aroused, and the will moved upon, the heart is changed or opened. When one refuses to be enlightened, or obstinately declines to walk in the light that he has, his heart is hardened. Pharaoh would not fairly consider, nor promptly act upon, the tremendous influences that were brought to bear upon him; thus he hardened his heart: those of the Libertines, and of the Cyrenians, and of the Alexandrians, that disputed with Stephen, when they could not refute his arguments, could not resist the wisdom with which he spake, suborned witnesses that they might falsely accuse him. They were determined not to listen to, and act upon, the truth. Finally they stopped their ears and rushed upon him. They hardened their hearts by refusing to weigh fairly that which they heard, that they might walk in the light. There are many, no doubt, to-day who are hardening their hearts just as guiltily as did any of these; for they do not want to understand the truth that they may walk in it. On most of the much debated questions of the day the light shines as clearly as the noon-day sun, and, in so far as duty is concerned, only they do not understand who will not. The man who inquires with a perfect heart, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? will certainly find an answer to his question.

Let us, dear reader, hunt for the truth with a perfect devotion. Let us not desire to change it in the slightest degree; for it is good, very good. Let us bear in mind always that it is best for us to walk just as God would have us walk, for he loves us very tenderly, and never directs us in any way that is not the very best way for us.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Bros. L & S.: Will you please allow me to ask our preaching brethren for an explanation through the ADVOCATE: I am trying (in my mind) to keep account of all the additions reported by the brethren through the paper, which I am sorry to say, is very difficult. For instance, J. L. Bryant writes from Rural Hill, "Two ladies took membership at Scobey's Chapel; and a lady from the Baptists made the confession, and was baptized at Corinth." Now, I understand that, in this report two persons united with the congregation worshipping at Corinth, and one was baptized into Christ. Now I count this this way: One addition to the church of God; two took membership with the church at Corinth. This is all very plain to my mind, but how about this? Bro. R. writes, "I had six additions at T. two by confession and baptism, four from the Baptists; or two from the world, and four from the Baptists. Now, brethren, I am at a loss; I do not know how to set this down! I do not, I mean it; do you mean to say six were added to the church of God and that two of these were from the world, and four from—where, brother, oh, tell me, where? and how added, and to what added? Were not these persons in the church of God where Bro. R. found them? if so, why does he say he had six additions. If not, by what means was these additions made? Brethren, I do hope some one of the many who report thus will answer and oblige your brother in the hope of a better understanding of God's will. B.

CHURCH NEWS.

J. M. Long, Oxford, Miss., July 26, writes: "I spent last Lord's day week with our little church at Winona, where I met for the first time Bro. Manire, who had been preaching for them for several days. The brethren here have a new house, neat and pretty, and need only patience to succeed. They have no regular preacher. I think a young man active and efficient could find a good field in this part of the State where he could be sustained. Bro. Manire speaks hopefully of his prospects in Florida. He will remain in this State till after the State meeting which is proposed to be held at West Point.

W. G. White, Unionville, Tenn., July 20, writes: "Bro. J. L. Sewell is to hold a meeting at this place embracing the first Lord's day in September. And we hope the many brethren that know Bro. Sewell will attend and give interest to the meeting."

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

A. C. Henry, Colliersville, Tenn., July 29, writes: "A good meeting going on at this place. Five baptized on Lord's day, and more expected. There were eight in all at Huntsville."

We call the attention of our readers to the announcement of Owen's Station School. The seventh annual session will begin August 18th. The past session has been the most successful one the school has had. For particulars, address Prof. W. Lipscomb, Brentwood, Tenn.

Please tell us what voice it was that the men heard that was with Paul when the light shined about him, and he fell to the earth. See Acts 9: 9; Acts 22: 9.—[J. N. Holloway.

I presume it was the voice that spoke to Saul. They heard the sound, but not what was said.

J. P. Prince, Purdy, Tenn., July 28, writes: "Since opening of spring, have been preaching in surrounding neighborhood on Lord's days; no additions thus far. On first Lord's day in June organized a congregation of fourteen or fifteen at Antioch, a new house built by friends and a few brethren. Bro. B. S. Carr preaches there once a month. Bro. Lee Thompson is to hold them a meeting, commencing Saturday before first Lord's day in August. I anticipate some good results."

Dr. Fitzgerald, in Christian Advocate, says of Bishop McKendrie: "His hand put in place heavy stones in the solid masonry of Methodism, and there they will remain. Methodism made him, and he in turn was, under God, a chief instrument in making Methodism what it is." Would it not be better to have a religion exactly what God made it, than to have one made by even the best and purest of men? Would it not be better to have a church, every solid stone in which was laid by God—a city whose builder and maker is God?

E. A. Elam, July 28, writes: "Friday night before the third Lord's day in July, our meeting began at Fayetteville, Tenn., and continued over two Lord's days. Bro. Jesse Sewell doing the preaching after the first week. Six additions up to my departure. The congregation there was glad to see Bro. Sewell. He has done much faithful work to establish that congregation. He now has the pleasure of seeing a nice house of worship with many faithful disciples in it. I found ten or twelve there who will take his book of sermons if it should be published."

B. W. Lauderdale, Baily, Tenn., July 30, writes: "Bro. A. C. Henry, last night, closed a six days meeting with the church in Colliersville. Five girls, just blooming into womanhood, confessed faith in Jesus the Christ and were baptized into fellowship with him. As usual, the meeting closed too soon. Bro. Henry is a workman that needeth not be ashamed. He cuts out his work after the Jerusalem pattern; hence it fits well. He won many, if not all, hearts. I was so fortunate as to hear him in five discourses. I was delighted. May God bless his labors, himself and family."

Wm. Robinson, Antioch, Monroe County, Ala., July 28 writes: "The saints at Antioch have and are still having a feast. The spark has been kindled, and the altar put in place in each heart, and upon it burns brightly the sweet incense of love, that is moving the little band onward and upward in their great works that reach across the plains and to the highest mount in Beulah. Ah! sweet Beulah Land. Yes, we have just had a feast. Oh! the rich heavenly viands! Our protracted meeting began before the third Lord's day in July, by our beloved brother, S. I. S. Cawthorn, of Andalusia, Ala., who came to do the work of the Lord in faith and love, failing at no time to declare the whole counsel of God, wooing the prodigal away from the day pastures of the stranger to the verdant plains in our Beulah Land, burying with Christ two precious souls, removing much prejudice from the minds of the people. Thirteen restored, and a hope of a rich ingathering in the near future. The saints have been feasted, and strengthened, and planted firmly on the rock, Christ Jesus, with a determination to be diligent, patient and faithful, that they may reach the highest mount in our Beulah Land, that they may look away across the sea, and behold the mansions prepared for those that love our God and do his will. I am glad to say that the liberality of the saints at Antioch will aid our dear brother to carry the heavenly words of eternal life to other undying souls. May God keep our brother and open a door for him, with all the Israel of God."

FIRST AND FINEST OF THE SEASON.

Dr. L. C. Chisholm favored our office with a basket of luscious grapes, the past week. They were the first grapes we had seen ripened in this latitude. The grapes were of the Lutie variety, a seedling grown by Bro. Chisholm. The sample we saw was a large, pinkish grape, of delicious flavor. The bunches were large and compact, the grape firm and well suited to handling. Bro. Chisholm claims for the grape the following qualities: The vine a rapid grower, early and prolific bearer. The grape during six years trial, entirely free from rot, early ripening, compact bunches, grape large, firm, fine looking, suited for market, and unsurpassed as a table grape. He has a number of well rooted vines that he proposes to sell the coming fall. He gives price list in another column.

J. Harding, 3307 Bank Street, Louisville, Ky., July 26, writes: "I thought I would write you through the ADVOCATE and let you know that I have been holding a meeting at the town of Bedford, Trimble County, this State. I preached day and night for three weeks; the number added to the congregation was fifty-three; and twenty-seven of them were Methodists; and a glorious meeting it was, the brethren greatly encouraged. This is the first time I was ever in that county. This is where the father of our beloved Bro. John H. Harding, now of Missouri, lives. I made my home at his father's house, and a grand old man he is; and a number of them promised to take the ADVOCATE. I will begin a meeting at Waco, Texas, the second Lord's day in September, and will continue for some days. After I am through at Waco, will go to Dallas, Texas, and from there to Paris. The brethren in Texas request me to make the announcement through the Guide and ADVOCATE. I was to be at Waco the first Lord's day in September, but I cannot be there till the second Lord's day in the month. Brethren, pray for me."

LUTIE GRAPE VINES.

In offering this remarkable grape for sale, we wish to say to all grape growers that we have been growing and experimenting for these twenty years on different varieties, numbering a hundred or over, and so far have found nothing to equal the Lutie in all the essential qualities for profitable grape culture. We gave notice a year ago of this claim, and repeat it in this, that we challenge the world to show a better grape for this climate—hardier and thriftier in growth, free from rot, or finer in size or quality. But these are not its chief merits. It will produce more fruit at two years old, than any grape known to us can be made produce in three. We challenge the test. If any have failed to see the Lutie in bearing, it is not our fault. We have invited all to come and see for themselves. Now, gentlemen of the vitis craft, come to taw, or close the way for "Miss Lutie."

We offer well-rooted one year old vines of this grape at the following rates: One vine, $2.00; two vines, $5.00; five vines, $10.00; twelve vines, $20.00. Orders for Lutie vines will be received till our fall delivery, which will be November or until our present stock is exhausted, due notice of which will be given. From the number of orders coming in at this early day we cannot hope to be able to fill any spring orders at all. Therefore all desiring vines for the coming spring must order early and secure them this fall. Our fall delivery for city and country orders will be made at Nashville, on Saturday, November 1; 1884. Orders from a distance will be sent by mail or express, as desired. Money must be sent in by November 1; or paid on delivery of vines. Address Chisholm & Coleman, 98 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn.

THE INVENTOR'S WIFE.

It's easy to talk of the patience of Job. Humph! Job had nothin' to try him; Ef he'd been married to 'Bijah Brown, folks wouldn't have dared come nigh him.

Trials indeed! Now I'll tell you what—ef you want to be sick of your life, Jest come and change places with me a spell—for I'm an inventor's wife.

And sech inventions! I'm never sure, when I take up my coffee pot

That 'Bijah hain't been "improvin'" it, and it mayn't go off like a shot.

Why, didn't he make me a cradle once that would keep itself a-rockin'?

And didn't it pitch the baby out, and wasn't his head bruised shockin'?

And there was his "patent peeler," too, a wonderful thing, I'll say;

But it hed one fault—it never stopped till the apple was peeled away.

As for locks, and clocks, and mowin' machines, and reapers, and all sech trash,

Why, 'Bijah's invented heaps of 'em, but they don't bring in no cash.

Law! that don't worry him—not at all; he's the aggravatin'-est man—

He'll set in his little workshop there, and whistle and think and plan,

I'ventin' a jew's harp to go by steam, or a new-fangled powder horn,

While the children's goin' barefoot to school, and the weeds is chokin' our corn.

When 'Bijah and me kep' company he warn't like this, you know;

Our folks all thought he was dreadful smart—but that was years ago.

He was handsome as any pictur' then, and he had such a glib, bright way—

I never thought that a time would come when I'd rue my weddin' day;

But when I've been forced to chop the wood, and tend to the farm beside,

And looked at 'Bijah a-settin' there, I've jest dropped down and cried.

We lost the hull of our turnip crop while he was inventin' a gun;

But I counted it one of my marcies when it bu'st before 'twas done.

So he turned it into a "burglar alarm." It ought to give thieves a fright—

'Twould scare an honest man out of his wits, ef he sot it off at night.

Sometimes I wonder ef 'Bijah's crazy, he does sech cur'ous things;

Hev I told you about his bedstead yit? 'Twas full of wheels and springs;

It hed a key to wind it up, and a clock face at the head, All you did was to turn them hands, and at any hour you said

That bed got up and shook itself, and bounced you on the floor,

And then shet up, jist like a box, so you couldn't sleep any more.

Wa'al, 'Bijah he fixed it all complete, and he sot it at half-past five,

But he hadn't more'n got into it, when—dear me! sakes alive!

Them wheels began to whiz and whir! I heerd a fearful snap, And there was that bedstead, with 'Bijah inside, shet up, jest like a trap!

I screamed, of course; but 'twa'n't no use. Then I worked thet hull long night

A-tryin' to open the pesky thing. At last I got in a fright; I couldn't hear his voice inside, and I thought he might be dyin';

So I took a crowbar and smashed it in. There was 'Bijah peacefully lyin', I'ventin' a way to git out ag'in. That was all very well to say,

But I don't believe he'd have found it out if I'd left him in all day.

Now, sence I've told you my story, do you wonder I'm tired of my life?

Or think it strange I often wish I warn't an inventor's wife?

NOTES FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY UNCLE MINOR.

I have been telling you many Bible stories, and no doubt you are all interested, But I will now tell you a few of the places I have been lately, and what I have seen.

At Louisville, Ky., I met many good brethren who are working hard to spread the gospel, none of them doing more than Bro. Jo. Harding, especially among the poor. I visited the Sunday-school at Portland Avenue, where he has been preaching, and I was surprised to find so large a school, and especially so well conducted. While some of us may not like Bro. Jo. Harding's eccentric and odd ways, yet he is doing great good in working so earnestly for the Master. I would be glad to hear from some of these dear children.

At Ghent, Ky., I also met many of the young people at prayer meeting; this speaks well for their training at home as well as at Sunday-school. I occasionally find large schools which are held in the morning, but few of them remain at the regular meetings of the church, and fewer still are found at prayer meeting; this is all wrong. I have much better opinion of the church at Ghent than ever before. I find great many ADVOCATES taken at that place, and soon found I was well known among the children as Uncle Minor. I learned one little girl and her mother thought one of my letters good enough to repeat at examination of her school. Sometimes, I, like every body else, get discouraged and think I am doing no good writing so much for the children. But then when I read their dear little letters, and especially when I see them and have them throw their little arms around my neck and thank me for writing, am encouraged to do what I can.

Was at Cincinnati a few hours, and after getting through with my business, like most children who go there, I went out to the Zoological garden to see the animals. I seldom go to Cincinnati without going to see them, as I never get tired of seeing the elephants, bears, monkeys, birds and such things. They were all looking much better this season than usual. Their keepers had been very good to them in feeding and watching over them. The great white, black and grizzly bears were sleek and fat, and enjoyed their morning bath very much, as they rolled and tumbled in the pool of water in their cage. The old lion, Jack, was getting so fat that he looked lazy; but when they brought around his dinner, he roared and jumped as though he would tear everything to pieces. The old baboon had not grown any better-looking with his blue nose and tail. I could seldom induce him to get up, when he would take his seat. He looked like he might have the gout or rheumatism, and did not want to move. But the noisiest chaps I saw were the little monkeys. Last year when I was there, I saw a little baby monkey. Its mother appeared to be very uneasy about it—rubbing, patting and licking it; then when it would cry, she would hug it closer in her arms. I asked the keeper what had become of it, and he said, "There it is," the noisiest chap in the lot. It had grown to be as large as its mother, and although it was about grown, yet the mother made him stand around. I saw her smack its jaws a time or two, and at last sent him to the top of the cage, crying. I don't care how old a child gets, mother and father should be the boss, and make them behave themselves. So this monkey thought, and so I think.

I wish I had the time to tell you more about the many beautiful birds and other animals I saw; but this is enough at present. I would advise you to study natural history, and tell me something about animals sometime.

UNHEALTHY HOMES.

It is undoubtedly true that the most favorable conditions for healthfulness of mind and body are to be found on the side of country life. Sunshine, pure air, and out-door exercise are each conducive to strength of body and length of days. But a feeling seems to exist among many who live in country homes, that by virtue of their naturally healthful surroundings, their out-door life and occupations, they may safely set at naught the plainest hygienic and sanitary rules. No doubt the pure air, which they cannot help but breathe when out of doors, and the vigorous open-air employment, in which they must engage, does tend for a time to counteract the influence of unhealthful habits and improper ways of living. But the imprudent exposures, the improper diet, the lack of cleanliness, the tainted, damp air of sleeping rooms, begin to show their effects before the prime of life is past in many painful and disagreeable ways. Rheumatic and dyspeptic troubles and nervous affections are some of the methods by which nature punishes these transgressors of her laws. It is a fact that diseases coming under the head of those mentioned, are more common in the farming regions than anywhere else. A distinguished medical authority has put it on record that insanity, which so frequently breaks out in farmers' families, is mainly caused by the severe and constant manual labor, with innutritious food, improperly selected or poorly cooked.

In the building of country homes generally very little attention is paid to proper ventilation, drainage and other health considerations. The sleeping rooms are often constructed in utter defiance of the plainest sanitary regulations. Their situation as respects light, heat and ventilation are often quite as bad as circumstances will permit. The living rooms in winter are poorly and irregularly heated, and the inmates are constantly exposed to sudden drafts and chills from open doors and casements.

And as a breeder of disease there are few things that excel the average farm-house cellar. It underlies the whole house, with nothing to prevent its exhalations rising into the upper rooms except a thin board floor. In this cellar all manner of things for family use are kept the season round. Meat, vegetables, milk, butter, bread, pastry, preserves, pickles and fruit are here stored in their various receptacles. There is very seldom anything to separate the fruit and vegetables from the other parts of the cellar, and there is usually more or less decaying vegetable matter to load the air with poisonous germs. At various seasons of the year the cellar walls collect dampness, or small pools of water lie under their loose board floors, sending up malarious odors into the rooms above.

It is very frequently the case that there is no system of drainage at all, unless the process of nature can be called by that name. The rain water from the eaves, and the slops from the kitchen sink and the dairy-house are carried at the most but a few feet away and are then left to sink into the ground or to form festering pools on top, at their pleasure. A condition of things that would put the inhabitants of a city block in a panic of alarm, and cause the peremptory interference of the health officers, is suffered to exist for years under the shadow of country homes. Water for family use is often drawn from springs and wells that cannot be otherwise than affected by the surrounding drainage, and especially by their contiguity to the farm yard and other unsavory places.

In matters of diet there is the same reckless disregard of the rules of health. In the busy season especially, the meals are eaten hurriedly, bolted down, with scarcely an interval of rest afterwards for the digestive organs to perform their work.

And there is very much less attention paid to personal cleanliness than considerations of health and comfort would seem to require. This is owing largely to a lack of those facilities for the use of water that are so common in city homes. For people who are employed in fields and around farm yards, toiling and sweating all day, it would seem that frequent and general ablutions would be quite essential. It might not be an easy matter to build country residences with a heating apparatus and hot and cold water pipes, but they might be constructed with a view to proper ventilation and drainage, and it would cost but little more in the beginning to furnish them with bath-rooms. The cellar could be arranged with some regard for healthfulness and, at least, kept free of garbage. The barns and other out houses could be placed at a respectable distance from residences, and the surroundings of the latter might be kept pure and clean. There might be less haste and more manners at the family table and fewer luncheons before retiring at night.—N. Y. Observer.

LETTERS FROM THE LITTLE FOLKS.

DEAR UNCLE MINOR: I have been thinking about writing to you for some time, as I see other little girls writing. I am eleven years old. My parents live in Lincoln county, Missouri, but I am at my grandpa Frank's, going to school. I have been here since last October, and am going to stay another year. I attend the Christian church regularly, and try not to miss a meeting of any kind. I love to go to day school as well as Sunday-school. My teachers are so good and kind, and so is our minister. I saw you and heard you talk when you were here. Hope you will come again.—[Linnie Haines, Ghent, Ky.]

DEAR UNCLE MINOR: I am ten years old. Mamma takes the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, and I read your good letters. I go to Sunday-school every Lord's day. We have eighty scholars in our class. We go to old Philadelphia. I will start to school next Monday. I hope my letter will not be thrown into the waste basket.—[Mary Alexander.]

JUST OUT. CHRISTIAN MISSIONS

and HISTORICAL SKETCHES OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES among the Disciples of Christ, with Historical and Statistical Tables, by F. M. Green, with an introduction by W. K. Pendleton.
"It is full of information which all friends of missions ought to know, and which, but few could be able anywhere else to find. It is an inspiring illustration of the evangelic spirit of the noble men whom we delight to honor as the pioneers of the reformation."
"It is believed that the sketches present the very light on our missions which the great mass of the Disciples need upon their missionary efforts in the past, and the necessity which is laid upon them in the present."

Complete information of the work of all the State organizations,
C. W. B. M., F. C. M. S., and General C. M. C. &c. No Christian library is complete without this volume. Bro. Green has done us a valuable service in preparing this book. He has spent much labor and patient thought in its composition. He has written it in love of the work of which it is a history, and with a zealous eloquence which must touch our hearts. Let us reward him by giving it a wide circulation. Handsomely bound in Cloth, 438 pages, only $1.50.
Christian men and women wanted to act as Agents in each congregation. For full particulars rapidly than before. JUST OUT.—"HAND-BOOK OF CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE," revised and enlarged,

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen;
mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

A MITE SONG.

Only a drop in the bucket,
But every drop will tell;
The bucket would soon be empty,
Without the drops in the well.

Only a poor little penny—
It was all I had to give;
But as pennies make the dollars,
It may help some cause to live.

A few little bits of ribbon
And some toys; they were not new,
But they made the sick child happy,
Which has made me happy, too.

Only some outgrown garments—
They were all I had to spare;
But they'll help to clothe the needy,
And the poor are everywhere.

God loveth the cheerful giver,
Though the gift be poor and small;
What doth he think of his children
When they never give at all?

—[Selected.]

SIXTH CHAPTER OF ACTS.

The first part of this chapter gives us an account of the seven that were selected to look after the wants of the Grecian widows. These seven men are usually called deacons, and this is supposed to be an example for selecting and ordaining officers in the church.—But when we come to read the passage, we find the seven are not called deacons, nor are they called officers in any sense, nor is the word ordain used in the entire connection. The trouble in the whole matter is that they have these ideas in their minds when they come to this passage; and having these ideas already fixed in their minds before they read the passage, they imagine they see them as large as life, when in reality there is no such idea in the passage.

The religious world is full of the official idea, and that only officers have right to do anything in a public capacity in the church. From the pope of Rome down through all the denominations of protestantism, and to a considerable extent among the congregations of Christ, this official idea, and idea of office making, and of inducting into office obtains to such an extent that among denominations it is generally thought to be sacrilege for any man to administer baptism or the Lord's supper without having been ordained. And with them the process of ordaining or inducting men into office is a very solemn ceremony, that imparts dignity and authority to the one ordained that he could not otherwise possess; that it imparts authority to do things that the man had no right or authority to do before he was thus ordained. And the translators of our common version were so full of this idea that they have put it in everywhere that they possibly could, whether it was in the original Greek or not. And people that have been taught these things from their childhood, and then read a version in which this coloring is put in at every place possible, will very readily think there is plenty of authority for it. Upon this same principle thousands who have the prayer system of conversion fixed in their minds as a part of their very being, imagine they can see it upon almost every page of the New Testament, when in reality there is not a syllable of anything of the sort to be found in the entire volume.

It is all in the minds of the people before they read, and when they read the image of the thing is so large in their own eyes that they imagine it to be in the word of God. So it is with the words office, officer, and ordain. The ideas are already in the minds of the people when they read, and they imagine them in the word of God. But this is a mistake. We challenge any man to find the word office in the Roman Catholic or denominational sense in connection with the church of God in the Greek New Testament. I know the word office is in our common version, but I deny that it is in the Greek. It was put in by the translators on account of notions they had before and when they made their translation. No such an idea was in the minds of the writers of the New Testament. Paul says in Rom. 11: 13, "Inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." The word office here is from the Greek word diakonia, which means servicing, service, waiting, attendance, etc. A great service was laid upon Paul, which was to preach to the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, and he was industriously attending to this work. This is just what the word means. It has no reference to the common idea of office at all, but only to the work that was laid upon Paul, and he was faithfully performing it. And besides, if this word in this case relates to office at all, it would make Paul a deacon only, and that would spoil the idea that Paul had a much higher office than that of deacon. But the word as defined in English from the Greek only means service, work that Paul was required by the Lord to do.

The word office is again used in Romans 12: 4. In this he says all members have not the same office. In this the word rendered office is praxis, from the Greek prassoo, which means to do, to execute, perform, practice. Hence this passage only means that the members at Rome did not all have the same work or service, but that all had some work. The word means work, not office. Then in our common version the word office is found three times in third of 1 Timothy; office of a bishop once, and office of a deacon twice. But in these passages there is no word in the Greek for the word office. Let any one find it who can. The idea was in the mind of the translators, and they put it in. But nothing of the sort in the Greek. The word rendered bishop means to oversee, to superintend. Hence if any man desire the overseership, he desires a good work; this is all of it. And this is a work, but not an office in the church. The word deacon means a servant. Hence instead of "office of a deacon," simply serve would fill the bill. Work, not office, is the idea in the word used. Diakoneo is the word used, and no man can find the idea of office in that unless in his mind before he examines it. The church of England made the common version, and the Roman Catholics themselves scarcely have any higher ideas of office in the church than they. This whole idea of church office as found in these passages came from the Episcopal church, and they brought it with them from the Catholics, and the whole idea therefore is from popery.

But it so turns out that the seven that we are now to examine are neither called deacons nor officers, in any sense, in their entire history.

But, say some, they were ordained, and the design of that is to induct men into office. But where is it learned that the seven were ordained? The word ordain is not used in the entire passage. And as the word is not used, whence the idea? In the revised version, the word ordain does not occur at all. This fact is heavy on the idea of ordination since all the translators were on that side of the house. Brother F. G. Allen, of the Old Path Guide, however set out sometime since to prove that ordination is a divine ordinance, but broke down before he had scarcely made a start, and who will next undertake the work, we know not. But whoever does, will undertake to build a house without a particle of foundation to build it on. Nearly all the divisions on matters divine arise from using words to express what we think the Bible means in words of our own, not found in the Bible. And as the word ordain is not found in this passage, let us not put it in, and we will get rid of the trouble. But, say some, hands were laid on the seven, and what was that for, if not to ordain them? We find in some twenty passages in the New Testament where miraculous power was exerted through laying on of hands, either by Christ or the apostles, and some ten or more mentions made of cases where the Savior touched persons with his hand, or took them by the hand, and thus performed miracles of healing. And while all these cases are found on the one hand as connected with miraculous power, there are only two cases in Acts which any body claims that laying on of hands was done in ordination, and it so turns out that the word ordain is not used in either passage. One of these two passages is the sixth of Acts regarding the seven, and the other is in thirteenth of Acts, where hands were laid on Paul and Barnabas.

Then the case of Timothy is claimed by some as a case of laying on hands in ordination. We will point out some facts regarding these. Not only is it true that the word ordain is not mentioned regarding the seven, but it is also true that the apostles were the ones, and the only ones so far as the record shows, that laid hands on the seven. It is certain that these apostles could, and did confer and perform miraculous power through laying on of their hands, in several instances, as when they conferred the Holy Spirit on the Samaritans, and on the twelve at Ephesus, and where Paul healed the sick by laying on of hands, and the Savior healed very many this way. It is also a fact that there is not one word said about any of the seven ever performing one miracle before hands were laid on them. But it is a fact that immediately after the laying on of the apostle's hands, they did perform miracles. Now since it is positively certain that hands were generally laid on to perform or work miraculous power, and since those who laid on hands in this case are known to have had power to work miracles in this way, and since those upon whom hands were laid in this case are never known to have worked miracles before this, but did do so immediately afterward, is it not most reasonable that hands were laid on them for that same purpose? This reasoning is sound, and no one can show it otherwise, we are sure. These conclusions are founded on facts, and not on speculation. A certain work was needed that no one was doing, and these men were selected and appointed to do the work, and when that work was done, when the demand for it ceased, these men were free from that obligation, and ready to do any other work that presented itself. Hence Philip was soon afterward out preaching the gospel, and casting out unclean spirits, showing that he, as well as Stephen, could exercise miraculous power. Stephen was soon after this appointment put to death for preaching the word of the Lord. But the seven were to be appointed. Next, what does this word appoint mean? Does it involve any particular ceremony? It certainly does not. This word occurs a number of times in the New Testament, and is translated from near a dozen different Greek words. It sometimes means merely to set a time or place where something is to be done, as to appoint a time and place to preach, or transact business. It sometimes means to name or designate, as a chairman of a meeting appointing a committee. In such cases as this it is understood as a matter of common consent that the one appointing has the authority to do so. An officer in authority may appoint a man or men to certain other offices, but in none of these cases is there any particular ceremony to make the matter binding and authoritative. The authority is in the one appointing, and it is only necessary for him to designate the man or men to do the work, and that is enough. The apostles, acting under the divine guidance of the Holy Spirit had the right to put these men to doing that particular work in the church. The word appoint we think in this passage just means to set these men at that particular work. Paul appointed, that is directed Titus to ordain elders in Crete. The revised version has it, "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge." Titus 1: 5. The word here rendered appoint in common version, means to charge in the new, while the word ordain in common version means appoint, to give charge, or set to work in the new. We might give many similar illustrations of the word appoint, but these may suffice for the present.

This is sufficient to indicate that in sixth or Acts, when the apostles appointed the seven to attend to the Grecian widows, they directed, charged them to do the work as apostles of Christ, and by the authority and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, while the laying of the apostles hands on them was for the usual purpose of conferring miraculous power, which they soon after manifested with decided strength and boldness. And so far as deacons are concerned on this occasion, the apostles are the only ones called deacons. When they directed the church to look out the seven they added, "but we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry (diakonia, diaconship) of the word." The word ministry here is from the same Greek word as the expression office of a deacon, from third chapter of 1 Timothy, except that here it is a noun, and there it is a verb. The apostles had already been appointed, charged by the Savior to preach the word, the gospel, and they proposed to still serve in that work. We do not believe that there was in this case any ordaining ceremony, or ceremonial induction into office. But on the other hand, we understand that the apostles conferred miraculous power upon the seven that were selected by the church, and gave them charge to do the work for which they were chosen. And as there are no apostles here now, and none others to impart miraculous power by laying on of hands, that part of the work, laying on of hands, would be a meaningless ceremony now. But the church to certain work which they are competent to do. Having thus given at some length our understanding of this passage regarding the appointment or so called ordination of the seven, it can be plainly seen from this what we would say upon the case of Barnabas and Saul, and of Timothy, and we will therefore not dwell upon their history now.

We submit the above conclusions to all who will calmly and scripturally consider them in the light of heaven's truth, feeling satisfied that when they do this, they will reach the same conclusions. From the idea of office and official authority in the church have arisen all the ideas of centralization now existing both in Romanism and Protestantism, and from hence all the councils, assemblies, synods, associations, and conferences and such like assemblies to make laws for the government of their churches, and to decide upon their doctrines. And the sooner the disciples of Christ leave off these things the better for them and the cause. The apostles themselves were not officers in the modern sense of that word. They had no authority to do anything by virtue of their position as men, any more than others. The work of preaching the gospel and edifying the churches was laid upon them, and they were inspired to qualify them to do that work, and their words and decisions were authoritative only in so far as they presented the word of God. No elders or bishops today have any authority in things divine only as they speak, teach, and enforce the word of God. If the apostles had enacted laws for the government of the church when not directed and guided by the Holy Spirit of God, they would have been worth no more to the world and would have carried no more authority for the people of God than a Methodist district conference of uninspired men now. No man has authority to rule in the church now only, as he rules by the word of God, by teaching and enforcing that word. The idea of individual official authority in the church is unknown in the New Testament, and is subversive of, and destructive to the authority of God whenever used. The idea is the foundation of popery, of all councils and so called authoritative bodies of religious men from the council of Nice down to the last denominational synod, presbytery or conference ever held. Let us shake off these things and be free.

E. G. S.

ANTIOCH, WARREN COUNTY, TENNESSEE.

The fourth Lord's day of August we began a meeting at the above place under most favorable circumstances, with an immense audience, and one of the most attentive ones we ever preached to. They had dinner on the ground and two sermons that day. After that, we had preaching at eleven and at night. But the rain set in on Lord's day afternoon, and we had rain more or less every day, as long as the meeting lasted, which was eight days. We do not remember when we have tried to hold a meeting under such hindrance from rain so long and constant. The people seemed anxious to hear, and we never tried harder to afford them an opportunity. One noble soul confessed her faith in Jesus, and was buried with him in baptism, while the brethren seemed deeply interested and much edified. We made a decided effort for the edification and encouragement of the members, and think decided good was effected in that direction. We think this should always receive a good degree of prominence in our protracted meetings with congregations. Edifying Christians is quite as grand a work as the conversion of sinners.

Antioch is in a good section of country, and a far as we could tell. At Viola, near by, they have put up a good and convenient school building, calling it Viola College. They have just begun their first session, with prospects beyond their most sanguine expectations. They had enrolled 136 pupils when we were there, the school is conducted upon the Normal system, and all the patrons seemed much pleased. We hope it will be a success. Prof. Harding seems bent on doing good work in the school; but we think he will have to lower his tone of voice a little, if he expects to continue long in that business. The plan upon which he is teaching requires much talking, but we think he talks louder than the strength of his voice will justify. We hope he will see this. The people of this community are a quiet, hard-working, happy people. There is another meeting-house, Philadelphia, in five or six miles from Antioch, with a large congregation of disciples, and, both congregations meet every Lord's day, and almost that whole section of the country belongs to one or the other of these congregations. True, there are some of several different denominations, but none of them very strong. The brethren in the main have the field, and we hope they will make still greater effort to sound out the word to their neighbors round about them. They have it in their power to do great good in this country, and we hope they will make earnest efforts in that direction. We were never more hospitably cared for in any community for one week than myself and wife were in the neighborhood of Antioch. And we trust these brethren will abound more and more in the work of the Lord, in spreading and building up the church of God and bringing more souls to the Lamb of God.

E. G. S.

"The prayers of the wicked availeth naught." "He that liveth and saith he sinneth not, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Brethren, are the above scriptural quotations, if so, where found?—[M.]

They are not scriptural quotations. The ideas are there. Prov. 28: 9. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination." The blind man, whose eyes were opened, said, "We know God heareth not sinners, but if any man be a worshiper of God, him God heareth." John 9: 31. There are numerous other passages of the same import. Solomon (1 Kings, 8: 46) says, "There is no man that sinneth not." 1 John 1: 10: "If we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar and the truth is not in us." There are other passages of the same import, but the language as above stated is not in the Bible.

As Christ came and purged out all the corruptions of Judaism, and fulfilled the pure, perfect law of God, and so presented it to the Father, so also Christ "will present that church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." That church must be kept simple and pure in organization, free from the defilement of human hands, else God will never own it. If defilements are added to it, they must be purged out by fire, and every one whose work is burned up in this purifying process will suffer loss.

"If in this life only we have hope, we are, of all men, most miserable," says Paul of the Christians; and if most miserable, of course the greatest of fools to follow the course that makes most miserable. Of all men, those ought to be most miserable who make a pretence of being Christians, yet so live as not to make their calling and election sure. That man is the greatest fool who makes a profession of religion, yet fails to live so as to be sure of heaven and immortality. The mere professor in religion has all the torture and fear without the comfort of religion.

BRO. LIPSCOMB'S CRITICISM—No 2.

The senior editor of the Advocate and I agree more perfectly in our understanding of the divine rule concerning the sending out and sustaining of evangelists than it commonly falls to the lot of mortals to do. Indeed I know of no writer among the disciples whose teachings as a whole I can more heartily endorse.

But there are two minor matters about which we differ. On both these points of difference Bro. Lipscomb is in the affirmative; he has given our readers two articles, while I have written one in the discussion. It seem to me that a little more attention may be profitably given to the matter.

1. Bro. Lipscomb affirms that the apostles and early evangelists received gifts from worldlings to assist them in their evangelistic work. And he thinks that I have gone to an extreme in refusing to accept help from those without.

In reply to him on this point I quoted from the third epistle of John. The apostle there says to Gaius, "Beloved, thou doest a faithful work in whatsoever thou doest toward them that are brethren and strangers withal; who bare witness to thy love before the church: whom thou wilt do well to set forward on their journey worthily of God: because that for the sake of the Name they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We ought therefore to welcome such, that we may be fellow-workers with the truth."

In considering this quotation, which I think perfectly establishes my position, Bro. Lipscomb has but little to say. He says, "The verse in third John, 'They went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles,' is not clear as referring to those outside. The epistles of John deal rather with heretical Christians than outsiders."

This passage is not clear to Bro. Lipscomb. Well, I am not astonished at that. Acts 2: 38 and James 2: 24 are not clear to these faith alone people; they cannot understand them, while they hold to their theory: John 14: 17 and Acts 5: 32 are not clear to those who believe in the direct operation of the Spirit on the sinner's heart; these people cannot understand the passages while they hold to their theories, for their theories contradict the passages. Neither can Bro. Lipscomb understand this quotation from third John, I think, while he holds that Bro. Harding has run to an extreme in refusing contributions from those without; for John expressly says these went forth for the sake of the Name, taking nothing of the Gentiles. He commends them for it, and exhorts Gaius to help them.

The only question to be settled here is this, what does the word Gentile mean here? It does not mean one who is not a Jew by birth, for Gaius himself was a Gentile in that sense; the name Gaius is not a Jewish name: in the nineteenth chapter of Acts, Gaius, a Macedonian, is mentioned in connection with one Demetrius; in this third letter of John, Gaius is addressed, and in the letter one Demetrius is mentioned. Compare also Romans 16: 32 and 1 Cor. 1: 14. It is evident therefore that the word Gentile here means one who does not belong to the spiritual Israel, i. e., one who is not a member of the church of Christ. I might say more in proof of this position, but it seems to me to be very nearly self evident.

There was a class from whom these preachers would not take anything; that class is called Gentiles. It could not have been heretical Christians, for the term Gentile is never limited to the class of heretics; it could not have been those not of Jewish blood, for Gaius himself, as we have seen, was not a Jew by birth. The only possible satisfactory explanation is that these evangelists went forth accepting contributions from the church of God, but refusing help from those without and be it observed the apostle John heartily approves of their course: he does not charge them with having run to an extreme. Now if Bro. Lipscomb still thinks that those evangelists received aid from outsiders, I ask him, who were those people from whom they declined to receive anything? What does the word Gentile mean in this place? I prophesy that any man who takes his position, and endeavors to answer this question, will find himself in trouble; the passage will not be clear to him.

Bro. Lipscomb in endeavoring to sustain his position that we may receive help from aliens, said Hiram helped David and Solomon in building the temple. I showed that he was paid for what he did. Bro. Lipscomb replies, true, but nevertheless what he did, he did in the spirit of friendship, "it was very much a matter of kindness in bestowing and receiving labor."

True enough, no doubt; they were good friends. But for all that Solomon asked Hiram to help him, promised to pay him if he would do it, and did pay him when the work was finished; and it is a fact worthy of Bro. Lipscomb's consideration that Hiram was not well pleased with the pay. See 1 Kings 9: 10-13. I am sure I don't see what comfort our dear brother can obtain from this passage.

It is true concerning the rebuilding that it was Nebuchadnezzar who destroyed the temple and took away the gold, silver, etc., and that it was Cyrus who undertook to restore these treasures and to assist in the rebuilding; but it must be remembered that when Cyrus became possessed of the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar, he understood that these treasures belonged by right to the Jews, that they had been taken away by force in unrighteousness, and that in giving them back, and in helping to build the temple he was simply giving to them that which was their own. No doubt, too, he believed that disaster had come upon Nebuchadnezzar because of his injustice to the Jews, and because of his robbing and destroying the temple of their mighty God. He was anxious therefore to restore to God and his people that which properly belonged to them. If a man should knock me down and take my watch, and another man should afterwards become possessed of it by inheritance, I would not refuse to receive it back from him, if he desired to give it to me, even though he were an outsider. The Jews were glad enough to take back their temple and their treasures from him who had taken them from the spoiler. But I must say again I fail to see how this case helps Bro. Lipscomb in his effort to show that we should receive voluntary contributions from outsiders in sustaining us in our evangelistic work. By the way, Bro. Lipscomb says we should not ask outsiders for help; he is as much opposed to that as I am; but we may receive that which they in good will offer of their own accord. Let him notice therefore that Solomon proposed to Hiram that he should help him, and Nehemiah asked Artaxerxes to help him in rebuilding Jerusalem. Evidently for this reason also these cases do not suit Bro. Lipscomb.

"Christ and the apostles received kindness, food, and shelter, from friendly aliens," says Bro. Lipscomb. Christ and his apostles were Jews; the kingdom of Heaven, the church was not set up in the days of the Master's sojourn on earth; they received from their brethren, the Jews; it is not in proof that they ever received anything in those days from the Gentiles.

"Paul received help of the barbarians on the island of Melita, 'who honored us with many honors, and when we departed laded us with such things as were necessary,'" says Bro. Lipscomb, in the next place.

Let the reader observe in the first place that the "us" whom the barbarians honored and helped were the shipwrecked sailors, soldiers and prisoners, all of whom were under the control of the Roman centurion; hence Paul was not responsible for what was received; and in the second place Paul had just cured all the sick of the island, and doubtless the barbarians felt very much indebted to him.

If Bro. Lipscomb has found a single passage that shows that any apostle or apostolic man received help from outsiders that he might pursue his evangelistic work, I have not been able to see it. And I would like well enough to see it, for I do not want to cut myself off from any legitimate source of supplies. On the other hand, I have shown that John did most highly approve certain ones who went forth for the sake of the Name refusing to take anything from the Gentiles.

In another article I will consider Bro. Lipscomb's second position, viz., that the evangelist should make known his wants to his brethren. I have not space for it in this issue, nor have I time to write it.

I am now in a most prosperous meeting at Euphrasia, Ontario, Canada. We have received nine confessions at this writing and prospects are good for a number more. My address is still Meaford, Ontario, Canada.

The disciples at Thomasville, Georgia, have completed their new house of worship, I am informed. I pray that they may obtain favor with the people of their city that they may turn many to righteousness.

Several notable errors have occurred in the printing of my articles lately, several of which materially change the sense. In one place I am made to say that Paul did not at any time have any wants; I said he did not at that time have any wants.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

Robert Kirby, Marrowbone, Cumberland Co., Ky., July 24, writes: "On Saturday before the second Lord's day in July we held a meeting which lasted seven days. The result was three added to the Lord; two by confession and baptism, and one from the United brethren. This meeting was held in Salt Lick Bend, on Cumberland river; we preached to about four hundred on Lord's day. The meeting was attended by a tolerably good congregation all the week. I went from there to Judio on Saturday before the third Lord's day in same month, and commenced a meeting which lasted six days; eight were added to the Lord; four from the world by confession and baptism, and three reclaimed and one from the Methodists. I am going to Sulphur to-morrow, and from there to Poplar Grove, and will report soon again. May the Lord bless all of his people, and may a good work be done in the name of Jesus Christ this year."

B. C. Goodwin, Maysville, Alabama, August 4, writes: "I closed a meeting at Owen's Cross Roads, on Friday after the fourth Lord's day in July. Fifteen were added to the church. To the Lord be all the praise. I commence at Maysville, Alabama, to-day."

THIS DEPARTMENT MUST BE ADDRESSED.

MEETING AT DUPRE.

Have just closed a meeting at Dupre, Hayes County. While the accessions were not as many as expected—nine in number—still the meeting was a success in other respects. We found the congregation badly organized; in fact, not organized at all. Everything at loose ends. Nobody ready for the meeting. The brethren made the sad mistake which is often made in same way. I was solicited to go two hundred and eighty miles to hold this meeting, thinking all things were in readiness. I left home just after burying my little daughter; would have backed out and stayed at home to try and comfort my dear wife in her loss, or to weep with her, but having made the appointment, I feared it would cause heavy disappointment, and as I might do the cause of my Master injury it was thought best I should hold the meeting. So I went to Dupre with a saddened spirit, and a bleeding heart. After all this sacrifice, I found the church not ready—coldness and indifference prevailed among all. Some few had wanted the meeting, and these the true members who were least able to bear the expense of a meeting, and they had solicited it without consulting those who could and would support a meeting. It was threshing time, and many were busy about their crops. We preached until Wednesday night, beginning Friday night. We got the brethren to unite, to re-organize, to resolve on prompt duty, and left them in love with one another, and we hope the church at Dupre may work out their own salvation yet. Some eighty names belong to this congregation, but we did not notice over twenty present at any time during the meeting. We were promised a good support in the work, but did not get it. We received some fifty dollars less than promised.

Brethren A. J. McCarty, of Austin; D. W. Pritchett, of San Marcos; J. J. Williamson, of Manchaca; Nelson, of Dupre; and J. D. Tant, were the preaching brethren present during the meeting. These rendered valuable aid. We cannot see why the brethren at Dupre should send so far for a preacher, when all the above named live near them, and can preach just as well as any foreign preacher. It is done however to cater to public opinion—to furnish a new man, and to draw hearers by the novelty of having a new preacher from a distance. The idea is a wrong one. We spent much converse with the above named brethren, while we made our home at the hospitable home of our brother and sister L. D. Carrington. Bro. Carrington was baptized years ago by Bro. T. Fanning. His house is made the home of guests. They were deeply concerned for one of their daughters, Mrs. Chandler, whose husband had fallen dead suddenly only a few days before. Her nervous system was so shocked, that her life is even yet despaired of. Oh! death, what sad havoc thou art making with happy hearts and homes! Not even our dearest treasures wilt thou leave us.

A SADDENED HOME.

A shadow hangs over our home; tears have taken the place of smiles, and sorrow is on every countenance; because death has invaded our home-circle, and taken from us one of our dearest, brightest, and loveliest members. Valverde, next to our youngest child, took fever on Thursday evening (2 o'clock) July 24th and at daylight next morning she was a corpse. Taken from us in one short night. She ate dinner with the family the day before her death just as usual, and at 2 o'clock we thought her only a little bit feverish, by sun down she was in spasms; congestion followed, and spasm after spasm shook her little frame until daylight next morning, when she passed away. Papa's baby was gone. The most sparkling, bright and happy mind we ever knew. She was the joy and light of home; she wove her little life into everything, and into every heart during her short stay with us, of nearly four years. If father planted a tree, a shrub, or flower, she insisted on holding it while he packed in the soil. If mother trained a vine, she would hold it up while it was being tied. She called herself "Little Helper." And truly she was,—not so much by what she was able to do, as by her cheery willingness to lighten the burdens of others. And the angels have never gathered a brighter jewel than the one they took from among our treasures on Friday morning, July 24th. And now, who will run to greet papa with an affectionate kiss, and "howdy papa," on each return from his work? Whose cheery voice and pattering feet will make music in our home? Who shall lighten mamma's toils? What "little helper" will soften life's burdens for her? We have others left, lovely, and dear, but we had only one Valverde.

INCIDENTS OF THE STATE MEETING.

T. M. Sweeney was a looker on in Bryan.

Bro. J. A. Lincoln is a whole team. So is Bro. J. W. Jackson.

Bro. Diminitt knows how to influence the sisters to make them give.

Brother and sister McClintoc of Groesbeck gladdened our hearts in Bryan.

Bro. McGarvey impressed all with his greatness, by the simplicity of his style and manner.

Judge Ford dined us nicely. He and his noble wife captured us in Bryan, by their kindness.

We had a home with brother and sister Miller, while at Bryan. They made it very pleasant for us.

R. W. Officer is some on ice cream. We saw him buy twelve saucers in less than half an hour.

The Reception Committee deserves praise for their untiring energy and effort to make all happy.

T. W. Caskey and Bro. Carlton were at the State Meeting, and as usual, one balanced the other.

W. H. D. Carrington seems to be getting better as he grows older. Effect of association, we suppose.

Got acquainted with brother and sister Gates, at Bryan. Never met more noble or pleasant people.

Homan in the Chair, and McPherson as Secretary, was the right men in the right place to run a meeting.

Lawrence W. Scott was present with his hand book. By the way, have you bought one? The best book out.

Bro. Cline loses no opportunity to purify the worship as far as in his power. He showed clearly that he had no love for festivals, grab-bags, etc., to raise money for the Lord. He is decidedly down on the organ.

Bro. A. McGary was at the State Meeting. He did not ride a donkey, as some suggested, but he rode his hobby. He thinks a great deal of the old horse, and is going to spend much money to take care of him.

Bro. Wilmeth having fully committed himself to the State Meetings, and his mouth and pen gagged the altar is ready for another victim; or, possibly the chances will be taken on sending a straight-out plan-man. Brethren in Texas, look out for breakers ahead. And don't imagine your oldest men are your soundest men.

Caskey remarked at the State Meeting, he had a great mind to offer a resolution to dissolve the meeting, and then organize one specially for those who wanted State Meetings. Said he: "It must come sooner or later; and the sooner, the better." This is just what we have known since its commencement. It will finally be made a test of fellowship.

A FAITHFUL CHRISTIAN.

When our lamented Bro. George W. Elley was alive he came and preached the word to us as if we had been white. I said in one of the columns of the Apostolic Times two years ago I wanted to find fifty good Christian brethren that would give $50.00 apiece to pay off the debt on the Lord's house. Five dear brethren responded to the call, and said we will be five of the number. This same Bro. Elley saw the call. He got in his rockaway and hunted me up, and he was so weak he could not walk. He said to me, trembling, "Put me down for fifty dollars. I will give you that much." Did he not show his works by his faith in Jesus?

I must say the Christian Church (Colored) in Kentucky has lost a good friend. I cannot tell who will take his place, but I have his name and four others. When I will get forty-five other names I cannot tell you—cannot find them every day, but I hope to find them some day.

Bro. Elley, when he got so bad off he could not talk to me whenever I called to see him, would get the New Testament and turn to the book of John, and have me read from the 14th to the 18th chapters, also Romans 8th chapter and 2nd Corinthians, 5th chapter. Then he would have me try to pray with him and his dear wife. He had become so weak he could not kneel, but he bowed to the blessed Master. Then he would have me sing the 738th song—

"They are gathering homeward from every land,
One by one, one by one."

Oh, you could see the joy in his eyes!

Oh, blessed are they who do his commandments. They shall have right to the Tree of Life; yes, enter through the gates into the City. O blessed God, rest my dear elder brother!—H. M. A., in Apostolic Times.

On Sunday, May 11th, Henry Ward Beecher sprinkled thirty-three children in Plymouth Church, and after the ceremony he said, "We do not perform this ceremony with any belief that it has any immediate effect upon the child. It is an ordinance, that has come down to us from a faith, that in our denomination has ceased to exist. It was originally that ordinance by which the Mother Church hoped to cure original sin, which all mankind was thought to have inherited from Adam. There never was such sin, and it never did them any good, and never did them any harm. We don't administer it because it was enjoined. We found the ordinance, and have continued it."

Believe me, every heart has its secret sorrow which the world knows not, and oftentimes we call a man cold when he is only sad.—Longfellow.

Correspondence.

I came home from Colliersville, Tennessee, on Wednesday, July 30, thinking it useless to run against the opposition brought to the front there on that day, in the person of a female lecturer on temperance, prohibition, etc. I could only have remained until Friday, August 1, anyway; and rather than have my audience taken from me, and suffering defeat after an inglorious contest, I concluded to retreat in good order beforehand, and pay wife and babies a flying visit.

If the weather will permit, I expect to go to Moulton this evening, to baptize a young lady, and go on to Russellville, to-morrow, to protract a meeting.

The meeting at Huntsville was a very pleasant and successful meeting. Eight in all were added to the congregation. The church at Huntsville is as zealous and determined as any one I ever saw, without any exception. They have the services of Bro. J. W. Shepherd, twice per month, who is a young preacher from Kentucky, of very fine talent, and exemplary piety. His praise is in the mouth of all who know him. He was present at our meeting all the time, and rendered very valuable assistance. Bro. Daugherty did the singing, or lead it rather, as only he can do. I have not had the pleasure of hearing Sankey, but will venture to assert that he cannot excel Bro. Daugherty. If the brethren want a class in vocal music taught, they cannot do better (in my humble judgment) than to secure his services. His address is Leonard Daugherty, Elizabethtown, Kentucky.

From Huntsville we came by home, and spent nearly two days, before starting to Colliersville, Tenn. Arrived there on Wednesday evening at 8:45 o'clock, and went at once to the house of worship, found a very good audience, the organ, accompanied by a few voices; making very good music. We remained until the following Wednesday, preaching twice per day, or rather day and night, except one day, when we prevailed on Bro. B. W. Lauderdale to preach. The interest increased all the while, and the meeting closed with five added by confession and baptism, as before stated. This is our first meeting with Bro. Lauderdale. I fear somewhat for him; not for anything that he is doing that is wrong, but on account of the language of Jesus. Luke 6: 28. His time is nearly all spent in Mississippi, with five congregations. He is doing a good work, and doing it well. Bro. W. H. Windes was with us at Colliersville, a part of the time, and rendered valuable services in the meeting; also lectured the Sunday-school in a short, but very pointed lecture on Lord's day. He is a Morgan county (Ala.) boy, and has done some good work in this field before going to West Tennessee. He is now the principal of the Saulsbury High School, which was nearly dead when he took it in hand, but is now very prosperous, paying him well.

Sister Reynolds, of Butler county, Alabama, is now with us. She has been visiting relatives in Tennessee, and is giving us a few days, on her return to her pleasant home in Dixie. We were glad, indeed, to find her here on our return, as she always carries sunshine and joy into every house she visits. And if there is a family that can appreciate such a visitor as she should be, it is the poor family of the traveling preacher. Almost always alone, in sickness, or poverty, as well as in health, (always in poverty,) what a ray of sunshine penetrates each lonely heart as she enters, and oh! how her words, "like apples of gold in pictures of silver," chase for the time all care away. We know how to appreciate our good sister. In 1879 she was at our house when little Benjamin, our darling little bright-eyed boy, died, within three hours after he was attacked, and that, too, in our absence. No one could have been there to have poured words of love and consolation into a mother's broken heart, with such tender sympathy and Christ-like affection, as she. And oh! how we needed her sympathy then! God will reward her, we cannot.

A. C. HENRY.

It is in vain to expect to do any real work of reform in the world without making enemies for oneself. You may start out with intention to attack only the wrong, not those who are involved in the wrong; but the moment you begin to smite the idol, is the moment its priests cry out with pain. The truth is, that abuses are maintained in the world, because it is to some one's interest to maintain those abuses; therefore you can never attack a wrong without thereby attacking the worldly interests of those concerned in the maintenance of the wrong. But it would be a great mistake for you to conclude that you must attack no evil, because it would involve you in a conflict with those with whom you would prefer to remain at peace. It may be your duty to incur the enmity of others, because you are called to be God's worker for the destruction of some giant or some apparent pigmy, form of evil. All that you need care for, is to be sure, first, that the thing you oppose is an evil, and, second that you are a person whom God calls to aid in the destruction. These things settled, it is your duty to go straight on with the work of destruction, and let God take care of the consequences.—S. S. Times.

They that deserve nothing should be content with anything; bless God for what you have, and trust God for what you want; if we cannot bring our condition to our mind, we must bring our mind to our condition; if a man is not content in the state he is in, he will not be content in the state he would be in.—Erskine Mason.

BEST BAKING POWDER.

INTERESTING TESTS MADE BY THE GOVERNMENT CHEMIST.

Dr. Edward G. Love, the present Analytical Chemist for the Government, has recently made some interesting experiments as to the comparative value of baking powders. Dr. Love's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use, and as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder. Dr. Love's report gives the following:

Name of Baking Powders.	Strength Cubic Inches Gas per each ounce of Powder.
"Royal" (absolutely pure).....	127.4
"Patapsco" (alum powder).....	125.2*
"Rumford's" (phosphate) fresh.....	122.5*
"Rumford's" (phosphate) old.....	32.7*
"Hanford's None Such," fresh.....	121.6
"Hanford's None Such," old.....	84.35
"Redhead's".....	117.0
"Charm" (alum powder).....	116.9*
"Amazon" (alum powder).....	111.9*
"Cleveland's" (short weight $\frac{3}{4}$ oz.).....	110.8
"Sea Foam".....	107.9
"Czar".....	106.8
"Dr. Price's".....	102.6
"Snow Flake" (Groff's, St. Paul).....	101.88
"Lewis'" Condensed.....	98.2
"Congress" yeast.....	97.5
"Pearl".....	93.2
"C. E. Andrews & Co.'s" (contains alum).....	78.17*
"Hecker's".....	92.5
"Gillet's".....	84.2
"Bulk".....	80.5

* In his report, the Government Chemist says:

"I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and Tartaric Acid powders liberate their gas too freely in process of baking, or under varying climatic changes suffer deterioration."

Dr. H. A. Mott, the former Government Chemist, after a careful and elaborate examination of the various Baking Powders of commerce, reported to the Government in favor of the Royal brand.

GOD SENDS DELUSIONS.

But when does God send delusions on the human family? When they know his will and fail to obey it.

"When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations and their foolish heart was darkened." When men honor God by obeying him, they learn more and more of the truth. "Whosoever desires to do the will of God shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." John 7: 17. Men who desire to do the will of God are more and more led into the knowledge of that will. But those who do not honor him when they know his will, by doing that will, have their heart darkened, so that they lose the knowledge of his will. God in his providence opens his will more and more to those who desire to do his will. He closes it to or withdraws it from those who do not desire to do his will.

Paul says, 2 Thessalonians 2: 11, "For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they shall believe a lie that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

As the belief of the truth is the means to lead to salvation, so the belief of a lie is the means to lead to damnation. But they believe a lie only because they did not believe the truth and have pleasure in righteousness that is in doing the truth, but were pleased to live in unrighteousness. We present these matters to show plainly that God overrules man's faith to his salvation or destruction.

If a man at heart desires to do the whole will of God, that will in its fullness will be opened to him that he may do it. But God does not cast his pearls before swine. When a man or people do not desire to do the will of God, God withdraws the knowledge of himself from them. We might infer that when man wishes to do only a part of his will, he permits only a partial knowledge of himself to be known. This doubtless explains why so many of our religious neighbors seem never able to see portions of the will of God. They do not wish to do it all. They see only what they wish to do. "Blindness in part" has happened to those people.

But this brings us to another thought: Why is it that in the matter of sending out the gospel, so many who profess to take the Bible as the only rule of faith in religion, fail to see what the Bible teaches in reference to it? The answer is, they do not wish to do what the Bible teaches on the subject. They wish to do these things in their own way. Hence blindness on this subject has happened to them. A delusion is sent upon them that they establish some other way that will give the donors, glory, honor and power, and save the workers self-denial and toil, but brings no glory to God.

The only way to keep the faith clear and strong is to gladly act according to that faith, to find pleasure in doing the will of God.

Those who oppose human innovations and societies are promoting these very things, by refusing to work actively and earnestly in the divinely appointed way. If we do not desire to do these things in God's way, he will send a delusion so that we will do them, if at all, in a way that will corrupt our faith, separate us farther and farther from God, and finally destroy us.

We cannot stand still and object to the human way and so oppose it, effectively. Our objections are naught, unless we work gladly, earnestly in the right. Are we doing this? One example of good, active work in the right way will do more to stop the work in the wrong way than all the arguments that now may be made without this. The examples of the spread of the gospel in our own communities, not what they ought to be, have done much to stop the wrong tendencies in that direction among disciples at home. The States that have no organizations but churches of Christ, that work at all, have doubled in the last twenty years the rate of increase of any State working with an organization. They have kept harmony and peace, and the churches in a pure state.

But the idea prevails that churches without some outside organization cannot send missionaries to a distant people. This is as great a figment of the imagination as the idea that prevailed twenty years ago that evangelists cannot be sustained to preach in destitute places in the country by the churches.

The first and most important item in the work of sending the gospel to a people, is to find the man determined to carry it. A man willing to sacrifice for the sake of carrying it—a man whose heart is in the work and who cannot be deterred from it by any ordinary difficulty.

When the man is found, it is proper for him to communicate his determination to the elders and members of his church, and to seek to interest them with him in the work. It is proper for him or them to write letters or to send messengers to other churches to enlist their help, if it is needed. The best way is for the man bent on the mission to go to work, and his church send messengers to other churches to enlist them. Writing a letter or publishing an appeal is well enough, but a living messenger going to the church is God's chosen plan, and his is always the wise and effective plan. The messenger makes a direct and personal appeal to every member. His presence imparts something of his own fervor and zeal to those with whom he comes into contact. One of the objections to the plan—arrangements, is they never reach the masses of the members of the church. In this way a proper help can be given, with no machinery, with no organization, with no excitement of feelings of envy or bitterness, and with the least cost of getting help to the work.

I am not saying that Christians should wait until some one in person calls. We are in an abnormal condition for Christians—we are not in the habit of working for God and humanity. This is an abnormal condition. A Christian not working to save sinners is a contradiction in terms. A Christian not willing to sacrifice to save sinners and honor God, belies the name.

But we are not in the habit of working. Every idle Christian—every Christian refusing to send the gospel to the lost, is an invitation to Satan to lead them in ways that will corrupt more and more their profession of the Christian religion. It is a challenge to God to send them a delusion, because they will not obey the truth. Then whenever an opportunity offers of working in the right way, if a Christian refuses it, he invites a delusion that will lead him to work in a way that will corrupt the church, and work his own ruin.

One example, then, of a mission of the churches of Christ among heathens, will do much to save your own faith, brethren, and correct the faith and life of others. It is a lack of faith in God that makes us distrust the efficacy of divine appointments. But lack of faith is infidelity.

We were hopeful when Bro. Officer presented the Indian Mission, that it would be promptly taken hold of by the churches, and being convenient to us—appealing to many feelings of the heart of our people in behalf of those dispossessed by our ancestors, of their homes, and needing help as thus impoverished—the mission would have been promptly established. It is true it has been somewhat indefinitely presented. Bro. Officer has not told us that he would enter into the work, or who. The sum proposed to be raised before beginning has seemed large. And it has not been presented to the churches by persons having it at heart. If Bro. Officer will get it in tangible shape, let it be understood that he or some good man whose heart is in the matter, will go—is ready to make sacrifices to go—and then will spend a short time in presenting it to the churches in person, it will not take half as much time to put it in practical and permanent operations as it would for any society to work it. Then it would encourage some one, with self-devotion, to go to Mexico, and the same work can be easily sustained there. But if we falter and neglect these opportunities, we strengthen others in the wrong way, we invite delusions upon ourselves. We trust Bro. Officer and the church at Paris, will take scriptural steps in pressing this work forward. If so, they will be benefactors of not only the Indians, but greater benefactors of the disciples and professing Christians everywhere, as well as bring honor to God. Will they not in Christ's name do this work in his way? Will not the churches, to encourage them and strengthen them in the work, promptly respond to their appeal without waiting for personal appeals?

An idle, do-nothing believer in the right way, is a strong helper of the wrong way. Remember unless you make your faith perfect by works, your faith will damn you instead of save you.

P. (Porter,) of the Missionary Baptist, of this city refers to our article as to the relation of feeling to the forgiveness of sins, criticizes and misrepresents, but does not give the article. He asks, "Will he not give us chapter and verse in the Bible, where Christ or any of his disciples taught that in order to have a consciousness of the forgiveness of sins, it was necessary to be baptized, or perform every act of obedience by which man could know that his sins were forgiven?" Yes; and we will do it, if the Missionary Baptist will publish our article. Will the Missionary Baptist give us chapter and verse in which men are taught that they know by feeling that they are pardoned without obedience? And we will publish the article. The Missionary Baptist has greatly improved in manner, but it must give both sides before it will reach the standard of fair journalism.

D. L.

The obituary of Bro. S. B. Giles, which appears in this number of the ADVOCATE, will recall him to the minds of our older readers, as one that, in his young days as a preacher, labored through Tennessee and Alabama. About fifty years ago he was an active preacher of the gospel in this country. I have no recollection of ever seeing him, but a pleasant family tradition says he gave me the first book I ever owned, as a reward for counting correctly, sixteen slaughtered hogs, as they hung upon the pole. I have no recollection of the book—of what kind it was. But books were scarce then, as were childish toys. And the tradition has had something to do, I dare say, in keeping alive a kindly feeling toward him. He was one of the men who, with Bros. Fanning, Griffin, Hooten, the Kendricks, and others, but few of whom remain to this present time, in their young days planted the truth in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Bro. Caskey, in his book, carries us back to the experiences and hardships of an "old preacher," who preached in Mississippi on five hundred dollars a year. While this brought discomfort and hardship, these older preachers yet, could tell a tale of labor and self-denial, when there were no churches to pay five hundred dollars, or one hundred dollars either, a year; when often it was doubtful where a night's lodging could be obtained, and when the work must be done without pay or earthly reward, or the world left in ignorance of the way of life. These old heroes of the faith did not hesitate to make the sacrifice, to endure the self-denial, and, under bitter opposition and persecution, to plant where we now reap. They were a sturdy type of true, heroic men. We believe that, despite all faults and personal infirmities, their names are recorded in the Lamb's book of life, as worthy of reward at the Father's right hand; and their names, their memories, their heroic labors, ought to be cherished and emulated by those who on earth have entered into their labors.

Bro. McQuiddy quotes what we said concerning his hard speeches about the ADVOCATE, and some remarks that we made on the course of himself and others, and applies it all to himself. We did not intend it all for him. He is sick and tired of the controversies between papers. I never had a controversy with a paper, or brother, in my life, that was not trying to introduce innovations into the churches of God. I am sick and tired of these changes of heaven's appointments. When these cease, controversies will cease. But he who sees the evil approaching, and fails to give warning, is an unfaithful watchman.

He deduces from our statements that he is hypocritical, mercenary and other ugly things. I stated facts. He made the deductions. It is a well established law of controversy, that no man is to be held responsible for any deductions from his positions unless he makes them himself. So as I did not make them and do not believe them, I will leave Bro. McQuiddy to deal with them as his own children. But he thinks it all originates in my sensitiveness. The trouble is, it had offended the sensitiveness of about a score of others, else it had never reached mine. Brethren from Bro. McQuiddy's own congregation, or at least his postoffice, whom I do not know, first wrote me complaining of his course. Some of his own relations have done the same. I am sensitive of course, and nobody else is, but it is not about the paper. The ADVOCATE has a larger circulation and more promising outlook than ever before, but we will surrender our interest to any one who will maintain the truth that it has maintained and work for its success with energy. The reason, I wish to do other work, and the work on this wears me out and unfits me for the other work. I proposed last year to surrender the paper, merge it with the Old Path Guide, if the combined paper would maintain these truths. The only difficulty in the way of the combination, was, we were afraid to trust the advocacy of these truths to the influences and atmosphere of Louisville. We see Louisville connections exercise an evil influence so far as these truths are concerned, so we conclude we were wise. It is the truth, not the paper, that is dear to our heart.

There are two points that should be sedulously guarded in our work. First—The teachers should see that in coming to the confession of Christ, the young converts should have deeply impressed upon their hearts the necessity of a thorough repentance from sin, which involves a willingness and anxiety to heartily obey God in all things, to be faithful in attendance upon the service of the Lord's house, and a willingness to live righteous and godly lives. This the teachers should see deeply impressed upon the young converts. Our object should be to make faithful and true Christians, rather than to swell numbers at the expense of godliness. Second—Every Christian ought to feel and engage in a holy emulation as to who will sacrifice most in sending the word of truth to the lost, and in building up the church of God.

In the political world the demand now is for men of independent, upright character. Men who stand for the truth and the right, regardless of the popular current and of self-interest. There is no doubt but that the age demands this, because in the struggle for wealth and position, right and truth are lost sight of and manliness and integrity are sacrificed. This is true of the teachers in the church as well as the leaders in State. The number of men who are willing to work on either side of a question that will pay, would be surprising to those not in position to know and who have not become accustomed to such things. It is the discouraging feature about the work of the churches to-day. So few men are willing to stand to their convictions,—nay, are willing to have convictions on any subject that will interfere with their worldly success. But truth never can be maintained, save by those who are willing to honor their own convictions, cherish a keen sense of right, are afraid of the least participation in that which is wrong, and will honor and maintain the truth, let it cost what it may of personal popularity or private prosperity. Let us, then, while the political parties are trying to restore to honor and position purity of character and high personal honor and integrity, drink more deeply of the same ourselves. It is of the essence of the Christian religion. Without it the Christian religion cannot exist.

BROS. LIPSCOMB & SEWELL: I have been taking the ADVOCATE from the days of its publication by Tolbert Fanning down to the present time, with the exception of some vacations, one during the war, and I can say to you that I expect to continue my subscription so long as I live, unless it falls into that strange dilemma to which Bro. Lipscomb alludes,—that is, should it advocate these human outside getups. I have no use for them, as I tried to live under them for above three years of my time while under the Methodist rule, and I think I know something of human tyranny. I believe the church of Christ is fully prepared to do all that the Master wants it to do. He has given it the Scriptures furnishing each member unto all good works, and when we get out of these directions we are sure to get into bad work. Be that remembered. I said I tried human rule while trying to be a Methodist, for something over three years. I speak with all due respect to them as a people; I love them as a people; for they gave me good advice; they told me to read the Bible, which I did with my limited qualification and greatly to my satisfaction. I found that not only Methodism, but all other humanisms are entirely different things to Christianity as marked out by the divinely inspired writings. I am now in my 72nd year, which will end the 8th of November next, and think that I can safely say, with Bro. Lipscomb, that the ADVOCATE, with all other papers and all the brotherhood, may follow off after these human getups, but I, for one, never expect to be trapped again by them. I don't want to be anything but a Christian, and I would to God that I could be as good one as I should; but I am like all other human beings, I have this old flesh to contend with; and I am glad that my Lord and Master knows our weakness as he was in all things tempted as we, and knows how to succor those that are tempted. Yes, brethren, we have not only been a reader of the ADVOCATE, but we have been as close an observer of the brotherhood in discussions on the various points of differences, as the circumstances by which we have been surrounded would admit; and we think that there is a great departure from the original motto among them, which was to take the Bible and where it speaks, we speak; and where it is silent, we are silent. We do believe that the apostles of our Lord and Master are preaching the gospel and giving the law of Zion as much to the people, both saint and sinner, to-day, as they did while personally here on earth, though through a different medium; and if the people will not hear them, they would not hear though they were to come to them from the dead. Thus it is that the boldness and firmness of the ADVOCATE have gained our affection. We love to read it, we love its editors—all of them—and we pray God each one of them a long life, that they may be able to man its pages with that firmness and stability which has ever characterized it as a defender of truth. We have said that we would be seventy-two years old on the 8th of November next; forty-nine years of that time a member of the church of Christ, though deprived a great part of that time of the privilege of meeting with the brethren to worship according to direction of the Scriptures, at least from the war to the present, as the congregation among which I had my membership at the commencement of the war have nearly all died and left the country. There are scattering brethren enough through our country to make a large congregation; but they are so scattered it is hard to get up a oneness about anything scarcely among them. When I became a member there were but few members in all the western district, and I do not know that there were more than three congregations that had embodied themselves; one at Paris, one at Roans' Creek, one at Mason's Grove. There were a few members about Jackson, Madison County. The first that I ever heard preach was at Roans' Creek, the second at Mason's Grove, the fall following, at which time and place I was baptized by old Bro. Dunn, I living at the time between thirty-five and forty miles from either place. We go to hear our brethren at other places as opportunity affords. Don't forget to bow yourselves in prayer for your old gray-headed brother, in the one faith and hope afforded in and through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ by the gospel in its fullness.

JESSE STURDIVANT.

We do not think scattering brethren should be without worship of a congregation. Two or three met in the Savior's name, secure his favor. Two or three never meet long without increase. When two or three determine with God's help to do their duty, others are inspired thereby, and will unite with them. But if all hesitate and wait and draw back, and will not do their duty—will not worship God—they grow indifferent and discourage all around them. Use your own house; determine if only one other will meet with you, you will do your duty. And you will not be in a scattered condition for the next ten years.

He who sees the right, and fails to practice it, is as much a friend and helper of error, and as much an enemy of truth, as he who shuts his eyes to the truth, and blindly maintains the wrong.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 10.

"But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts." 1 Thess. 2: 4.

My friend, I trust that we understand the claim made in my last letter, viz., "that all the promises made by our heavenly Father, to man, are in Christ." And now we must see if "any man" was out of Christ, then in him; and if he knew how or when these relations were changed.

Paul requests salutation to be made to Adronicus and Junia, who were in Christ before him. Rom. 16: 17. Here, then, were some in Christ, when Paul was not. He also tells the Ephesians that "at that time ye were without Christ, but now in Christ are made nigh." Eph. 2: 11-13. Now, if we can find what was done to, and by, the Ephesians, that changed their relation to God, we will have some light on this. Acts 17: 16-34, tells how, and what, Paul did for them, and what certain men did for themselves—cleaved unto him, and believed his teaching, viz., the death and resurrection of Christ, repentance, and the judgment, with their necessary concomitants. See Acts 20: 17-36. He tells the saints in Colosse, that at one time they were alienated, now are reconciled in Christ. Now, what caused this change? Epaphrus taught them, they learned and obeyed; and are warned, as they have received him, to walk in him. And also that they are circumcised in him, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him; and though dead in your sins, are quickened (made alive) with (or in) him; all trespasses forgiven, and ordinances (Jewish) against them taken out of the way. Colossians, first and second chapter. Now, we find this much: that preaching the gospel was done; and that hearing, believing, and obeying it, was the means that accomplished this change.

Now, we wish to go back and see if this was in accord with the Savior's instruction. Mark records it thus: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 15-16. Here, then, we have the gospel preached, and (if any man) believed and obeyed, shall be saved, pardoned from past sins, and hence must be in Christ, for even the forgiveness of sins are in him. Matthew says: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, (the gospel,) baptizing them in (into) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Matt. 28: 19. Here we have, teach all nations, (preach the gospel to every creature,) baptizing them (those that believe the teaching) into the dread names of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I write "into" by authority of learned critics and the revised version, and I wish you to ponder well the difference between in and into in this sentence. In means a state of rest, or by the authority of. Into means passing from one place, state, or relation, to another. Hence a person in a lost relation to God, by believing the gospel, (in its facts and promises,) and obeying its commands, the last of which is baptism, passes into a saved relation to God, according to Mark. A person out of Christ, being taught the gospel, and desiring to obey it, is passed into that relation so near to God, to Christ, and the Holy Spirit, by being baptized into those names.

Now, just here, you know that we are represented as teaching water baptism as all that is required of God. But I am sure you can but see that we only make it the consummating, the last condition, the condition—the preceding ones having been fully met—that passes us into that relation called "into Christ," where alone we may obtain even the forgiveness of past sins. And this accords with the commission, with the teaching and practice of all the apostles, so far as the records show. (See cases reported in Acts.) And Paul speaks to the Romans (Rom. 6: 3) as if they knew it: "Know ye not, that so many of us (not one excepted) as were baptized into Jesus Christ," etc. To the Galatians, he affirms that "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put him on." Gal. 3: 27. Did they put him on in faith, in repentance? They were necessary steps in order that they might put him on in the last, in baptism. The dipping of a person under the water, and raising him up again, without faith and repentance, does not put him into Christ; but with them God has promised pardon of sins, entrance into Christ, adoption, and all other blessings, if we continue faithful to the "all things" commanded. Stop, my brother, think! Shall we separate God's conditions, make one of more importance than another? That we may never thus dishonor God, is the prayer of—

A DISCIPLE.

HINTS TO GIRLS AND YOUNG LADIES.

I shall, in a familiar style, call you all girls. To a man of pure and refined mind, an innocent, modest, polite, loving little girl is an attractive and beautiful object. But a coarse, saucy, rough little girl is an object of pity and disgust. Little girls, you should love and obey your parents, and be kind to brothers and sisters. Never mind if you are poor and cannot dress fine; the sweetness of girlhood does not consist in dress, but in your purity of mind and love. You will soon be young women, and the young women will soon have to fill the place of the old ones who are passing away. The purity, refinement, elevation and greatness of our country must arise from virtuous, loving mothers and wives. King Lemuel's mother well said: "The price of a virtuous woman is above rubies." Society never rises above the standard of its virtuous, hightoned women. Much then depends upon you, girls. You can mould society for time and eternity. Then love your parents; and above all, your best friend, Christ. Pattern after the loveliness and charity taught by Christ and his apostles. Your greatest power for good arises from your purity, modesty, intelligence, and loveliness. Hence I oppose your being called to fill public stations that may make you too masculine. Read your Bibles constantly; and read such literature as will strengthen your minds, purify and elevate your sentiments and feelings. Do not read love sickening novels; read well written histories. Do not attend theatres nor circuses; going to such places will, in spite of all you can do, blunt and injure your finest nature. Do not spend precious time in croquet or any foolish games. Do not attend dances or frolic-ing plays. These things neither improve your head nor heart. Remember the finely cultivated hightoned mind is what adorns woman. Do not hinder your loveliness by cutting off your beautiful hair, nor make it appear like a brush fence. Do not disfigure your beauty by dressing in such a style as to show anything but "the human form divine." Plain, neat, modest apparel shows the woman best. Some women waste much unnecessarily on dress. When you wish to marry look to the good qualities of your intended. Don't be blinded by the frenzy called love. Lasting love must have a solid foundation of good qualities to rest upon. Never be contrary, scold nor show ill temper to your husband; such things cut to the quick a hightoned man. If you cannot rule by gentleness and love, you cannot at all. To my girls and all.

NORTHERN NOTES.

After spending a few days very pleasantly at Detroit, I came to Columbus, Ohio. Lord's day morning I heard a brother preach, whose name I have forgotten. Also heard a colored brother, Lowry, who made a short talk, and appeal for help to build a colored church and school at Huntsville, Ala. This is the first time I have met him. He ought to be a good man, as he was educated, he says by Bro. Fanning, and is a son of old Bro. Peter Lowery, whom I have known, and thought a great deal of, for many years. Don't think he met with much success in getting help. I spoke at night to a good audience in Bro. Hunt's Hall. While they have not formed a separate organization from the Central Church, nor do I think it necessary at present, yet they are showing the true missionary spirit, by carrying the gospel to those who are too far away to attend the regular service. They have a large school at the hall on Lord's day evening, and I am satisfied much good is being accomplished. I visited many other places in Ohio, got acquainted with only a few brethren, and they badly scattered. I see one encouraging sign, however, that many are calling for the old paths, and are becoming convinced that the "clergy" will kill the church, if allowed to have their way.

I stopped a few hours at Holiday's Cave, in West Virginia. This is near Bethany, where we have one of the oldest congregations in the reformation. While sitting at the depot waiting for the train, a large, portly, fine-looking young man came up. I asked him if he was a preacher, he said, Yes, he was a Disciple minister. I asked him what he called his church. Well, he said, he hardly knew. But after discussing the matter with him for some time, he reckoned the church of God would be the best name. I found he was one of the professors of Bethany College, also preached for the church at that place. I found him a very pleasant agreeable brother; but learned he had a poor opinion of our Kentucky and Tennessee schools. As he was at the fountain head of wisdom of course we might expect this. Am sorry I have forgotten his name.

At Williamsport, I met Bro. Long, the preacher who has been working in this section for eight years past. Found him an earnest man, but not willing to trust in the Lord and his plans, as he says Bro. Harding is. I am not astonished at this, as much allowance is to be made for his surroundings. If he was in Tennessee, he would be with us. But he is a good man, and wants to know the truth. I spoke to the brethren at that place last Lord's day. Had a good crowd and attentive hearing. I learned from Bro. Mitchell, one of our old-time preachers, that we have a good many congregations in this part of Pennsylvania, who have not gone after strange gods, but are keeping up the simplicity of apostolic worship, and not depending on a "clergyman" to keep them alive. They are beginning, too, to have more influence among the people.

I had expected to find much more excitement among the people in this section, on political questions, than I do. But all is quiet. You would not know it was presidential election times, unless you chance to hear some one comment on the probabilities of the candidates. But I suppose the politicians have not gotten down to their work yet. It may be too soon after the nominations. I urge brethren wherever I go, whether Democrat or Republican, to "keep cool," and save their enthusiasm for the cause of Christ, as he wants and needs all their money, time, and talent.

In all my travels this summer in the North, I have found good crops of almost everything, especially wheat and hay; and this is their principle crop in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Many of the coal companies and iron manufacturers are having frequent troubles with their operatives. I witnessed a strike not long since among coal miners, and I don't want to be in another soon.

There are many other items of news that would interest a few of your readers, such as comparative growth and development of this section with the South; but enough at present.

Obituaries.

Our aged and much esteemed brother, S. B. Giles, died at his residence, in Travis County, Texas, May 17, 1884. He was born in Pittsylvania County, Va., December 25, 1808. His father moved to Tennessee when he was a boy, where he joined the Church of Christ, under the preaching of B. W. Stone and brethren. He commenced preaching in early life with the pioneer preachers of that State, and preached in Alabama, Mississippi and Kentucky until the close of the year 1836. He moved to Eastern Texas early in the year 1837, and established the cause in many places in that part of the State, then moved to Austin, where he, in connection with Bro. J. R. McCall, established and organized the First Christian Congregation. He continued to preach at Austin and in that portion of the State until about the year 1866; at which time his kidneys became diseased so that he could not stand up to preach, which disease continued to prey upon him until death. Bro. Giles was esteemed by his brethren that knew him as one of our best and ablest preachers, and during his sickness he frequently wrote pieces for the "Review," to the soundness of which, I doubt not, you can testify. He was a man of strong likes and dislikes; he liked his brethren who were disposed to be governed by the able in their teaching and practice, but disliked those who were disposed to introduce innovations. He was a kind neighbor, especially to the needy. ELIJAH H. BROUGH.

THE SEVENTH CHAPTER OF DANIEL.

"There is but one eye in the universe that pierces all nature through, and before whom the past, the present, and the future are all equally plain. God alone knows the future. In the seventh chapter of Daniel, now lying before me, we have one great meridian line, which runs from the Euphrates to the ends of the earth. And from the days of Nebuchadnezzar, the proudest of Assyrian kings, to the ultimate triumph of the gospel throughout the whole earth. I shall rapidly sketch the contents of this chapter which contains more of human destiny than can be gleaned from all human records." A Campbell in debate with bishop Purcell. I infer that the above eulogy of Mr. Campbell on this chapter, is as true in fact as it is beautiful in expression. Judging from the known candor and admitted ability of the author, we suppose that he has not over-estimated the interest to mankind of the contents of this chapter; and if so, should there not be more interest taken in trying to ferret out and apply its wonderful emblems to, and for the benefit of the human race? And hence the influence of these examples has inspired myself in an humble way to search into and call the readers' attention to some things as found near the surface of this invaluable mine. And first, I will say that in my examination of this chapter, I have found that it very naturally divides itself into two about equal parts. The first up to the fourteenth verse contains the vision of Daniel; and from that to the last, is taken up in Daniel's interrogatories to the angel, or Spirit, and the angel's instructive replies to the prophet, who seems to be greatly troubled about their meaning.

This is a very important discovery to me, and I think I will be much profited by it in searching out the truth. I will therefore begin at the second verse, including my comments in brackets, believing it to be more easily understood in that way. Seventh chapter second verse, "Daniel spoke and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea." (Many nations of different languages and habits, in a state of violent commotion and war.) Third verse, "And four great beasts came up from the sea, (from among the people) diverse one from another." In the seventeenth verse the angel informs Daniel that these represented four kings that should arise out of the earth, (or people,) the first was like a lion, (Nebuchadnezzar) and had eagle's wings; (rapid in his motions, and blood-thirsty and cruel in war); I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, (after the death of Nebuchadnezzar the Babylonians made no more conquests,) and it (Nebuchadnezzar) was lifted up from the earth, (that is, above the common people in knowledge) and made to stand upon the feet as a man, (emblematic of the many visions interpreted for him by Daniel) and a man's heart was given it. Yet God had to teach this proud king humility, by giving him the heart of a beast, for seven years, after which time he honored and praised the name of God, a man's heart was restored to him. "And behold, another beast, a second like to a bear, (the Medo-Persians) and it raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it, (to wit, Egypt, Syria and Babylon) and they said unto it, Arise, devour much flesh." "After this I beheld, and lo, another like a leopard, (Alexander the great) which had upon the back of it, four wings of a fowl, (indicating the wonderful velocity of his movements, and his rapid conquest,) and the beast had also four heads, and dominion was given to it," (alluding to the division of his empire among his four principal generals.) After this, I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly; (the Roman empire); and it had great iron teeth: (the Cæsars, Julius Cæsar being the first tooth,) it devoured and brake in pieces, (that is, itself into ten pieces,) and stamped the residue with the feet of it: (that is, left upon these nations that it stamped out of it the mark of iron teeth and brazen claws,) and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns," (representing the ten kingdoms into which the Roman government was divided.) "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, (the Pope of Rome, the man of sin of Paul) before whom three of the first horns were plucked up by the roots: (viz, the Vandals, of Africa; the Exarchate, of Racmea; and the Lombards;) and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, [cunning, crafty, sagacious,] and a mouth speaking great things," [eloquent and presumptuous.] [Here the subject changes.] "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did it."

As this is a controverted point among commentators, Bishop Usher and others assuming that the proper rendering would be thrones cut down, but in my opinion this would reverse the whole order of the great image in Daniel second chapter, [because this is but duplicated from it] when everything in it and of it is downward to its end, when the stone kingdom first strikes it on the feet that were of iron and clay, thence the iron, the brass, the silver and gold, prostrating and destroying every thing pertaining to the whole image; and another thing the context forbids it thus, "and the Ancient of days did sit," etc., of course alluding to the Advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, which, as all admit, was in the early reign of the Cæsars. Hence I shall turn the attention of the reader to the head of gold, the lion or Chaldean dynasty, throne and dominion, which fell down, and not up. The night Belshazzar was slain, and Cyrus the Persian was there ready to receive the Chaldean throne, with all that pertained to it; and after the Medo-Persians used and abused this throne or authority for about two hundred years, Darius Longimanus was met and overcome in three successive battles by Alexander the great. And then the Medo-Persian throne and dominion, with all that pertained to it, fell down to him, and after his death this throne or authority continued under the four heads and their successors according to the fortune of war for about three hundred years. And after the battle of Pharsalia, which gave to Julius Cæsar nearly the empire of the world, these thrones, powers and dominion fell down to the dragon or iron legs of the image. And thus ended the four universal dominions or thrones, when that of Jesus Christ began, viz., under the fourth empire. I simply offer this for examination.

And having made this digression, I will now go back to the middle of the ninth verse, and quote in connection the purity of the advent of Christ, "whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool, (being in direct contrast with those four beastly tyrants before described,) his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire." As corroborative of this, read Mal. 4: 1. "A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened." I will offer no comments at present. "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake." It should be closely noticed that the little horn existed in a kind of embryo state, even previous to the advent of Christ. (See eighth verse.) But the voice of his great words are not heard until after that event. But the apostle Paul warned and assured the Thessalonian brethren that he saw in his day the beginning of the working of this deceitful power; hence before the destruction of the old Roman beast, which the context here shows. "I beheld even till the beast was slain,"—the old Roman dragon,—and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." That is, to terrible, savage, unrelenting war. "As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time." "The rest of the beasts"—only four really beastly governments, with their successors—were allowed of God to rule and control the world; which are represented by the lion, the bear, the leopard, and the dragon; the last of which, the dragon, was made to act as a sort of pivot, in whom all the powers and dominions of the three which preceded him centered, and from whom all that followed simply heired their father's estate, the dragon's. And the prolonging of their life, or lives, was certainly and simply a perpetuation of the active principles which controlled them while in actual existence, viz., avarice, ambition, and lust; and gold and silver being the means by which this was accomplished, the "season and time" will be exactly commen-surate with its use as money. (Submitted to the thoughtful.) "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him." "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Now I have a theory on the reign and dominion of Christ, which I am sure is new, yet I think is true. I simply ask the question, what is it to reign? After kings are crowned their subjects swear allegiance to them, and it is high treason to violate that oath; yet their subjects are not allowed or required to swear by them. But before the king is crowned, he takes the oath of fidelity to Christ or God, which is the same, to administer the affairs of the government in fidelity to God, and all of his subjects swear by the same supreme power. If this is not reigning, what is it to reign? Besides, not one of the officers under these governments, no member of parliament, no Judge on the bench, no witness on the stand, can testify without first calling upon Christ, who is Emanuel—God with us. Otherwise his act is of no value in law or a penal offence. Witness the case of Mr. Bradlaugh, the infidel who tried to force himself into and upon the British House of Commons; although re-elected and sent back by the voice of his constituents, yet every time thrust out. And not because Mr. Bradlaugh was charged with any want of fidelity to the State, but of infidelity to Christ. Hence it will be admitted at once, that in the estimation of the representatives of the most enlightened nation in the world, that infidelity to God is of far more importance than infidelity or high treason against the government of England. And does this not fulfill another Scripture in speaking of the vial being poured out on the seat of the beast? They gnawed their tongues with pain; had to submit, but still were determined not to. All characters of infidelity are represented here; hence if this is not reigning, what is it to reign? Not that all his subjects in the strict sense of the word believe in and obey him. But does not David in the Psalms say, "Reign thou amidst thine enemies?" Just what he is doing this very day.

Having again made a digression, I will now call the readers' special attention to the fifteenth and sixteenth verses, which show that the prophet was greatly troubled about the vision, and appealed to the Angel for relief, thus, "I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the visions of my head troubled me. I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things." I regard this as very important in this investigation; and the first thing he does is to relieve his mind in relation to these four beasts, assuring him that they really represented a set of tyrannical kings, that should for a time rule and ruin the world. But immediately adds, [no doubt to give some relief and comfort to the troubled mind of the prophet,] "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." This information, no doubt, relieved him greatly, but not entirely; because he immediately follows up with several other questions, prominent among these is about the fourth beast. Now Daniel, no doubt, was quite familiar with the outward appearance of the three first, viz., the lion, the bear and the leopard, but the fourth was a monster of such terrible and frightful appearance, and savage ferocity, that no man of any feelings for his fellow man, would have conceived that the cruelty of the fourth government would so far exceed that of the three first, [for which God had about exhausted the ferocity of the wild beasts of the forest,] that God, in order to symbolically express its exceeding cruelty, was under the necessity of introducing a fabulous monster. So multiform was his affairs, so cruel and unrelenting his disposition, that he is represented as having teeth of iron and nails of brass; [thus reaching back to the brazen kings] he devoured and broke to pieces and stamped upon them as they passed from under his feet, and those ten terrible horns on his head which partook of the nature of the beast; and especially did the prophet notice the eleventh which came up last.

Now it will be noticed that these eleven horns were all secular, and came out of the Roman beast, and all that distinguishes the eleventh which came up last, is his remarkable craftiness, cunning and sagacity. No doubt but that he belonged to the pagan priesthood, and hence soon discovered that through the half pagan state of the minds of the people, their superstition, he could assume the Christian religion, and by adulterating it could soon introduce saint worship as a substitute for pagan idolatry. And Daniel saw that after he had through his wonderful, artful duplicity plucked up three of the kingdoms of his fellows and made men tools of the balance, that he made successful war against the saints, [that is such as the true and real Christians that was not deceived and overcome by him.] Yet he saw that the real Christians eventually prevailed. Of which at the twenty-third verse the angel explains, and at the twenty-fifth deposes thus, "And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hands until a time, and times, and the dividing of time." Now the last mentioned items of the times and half, or dividing of time, is generally understood as equivalent to 1260 years of time, and applied to the dark ages or while the Popes ruled supreme.

But the next verse marks a great change: "But the judgment shall sit, and they (the saints) shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Now, here is a most important inquiry; thus, Has the judgment yet set, and have the books been opened? See the latter part of the tenth verse, which the angel certainly explains not only for Daniel, but mainly for us. The books being opened, shows that they had been closed, which neither God nor his saints had any disposition to do, because the proper knowledge of the Scriptures is God's means of enlightening the world; but this did not suit the Man of Sin, hence he closed up both the Old Testament and the New. And hence as soon as these were again thrown open to the world, the judgment was set, for in them he was exposed, and hence by them he was, and is to-day, judged. Hence, if I were asked when the "judgment was set," I would reply, when the books were opened; and if I were interrogated further, and asked when the books were opened, I should say that they were at least thrown half open when Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five theses (or objections to popery) to the wall of the church-house at Wittenburg, and declared that he would defend them, if every tile on the church-house was a devil. Then the books were opened, and the judgment set, against the Man of Sin, the son of perdition; and from that day to this he is being gradually consumed by the open preaching of the gospel, by such discussions as Alexander Campbell held with Bishop Purcell, and the infidel, Robert Owen. These things opened the books much wider; and in all our business transactions with men, the Bible should be made the standard, and hence the judge between man and man. Those who submit to its teaching, God accepts; those who do not, God rejects.

And this language of the apostle closes the scene: "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. 1: 7-8. This evidently closes the judgment scene. And its equivalent is found, as I think, in the twenty-seventh verse of the seventh chapter of Daniel. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." "Hitherto is the end of the matter." This ends the explanation by the angel, and I regard it as of great importance to observe it strictly; and the prophet closes the scene in these words: "As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart." This latter goes to prove that Daniel did not yet fully understand the meaning of this wonderful vision, and we ask, how could he? and again, what advantage would it have been to him if he could? The Apostle Peter informs us very plainly that these visions and predictions were not given for the instruction or benefit of the prophets, by whom they were revealed and recorded, but for us, who "through Christ shall be heirs of salvation."

And now another thought, and I am done for the present. The reader should understand that in relation to time, that at least 2,500 years have already transpired since the first beast, or king, ruled the destinies of the world; and although we can read the whole vision over in five minutes, its final end is yet in the future. And I regard this vision as simply belonging to the great metallic image, as shown in the seventh chapter. As that symbolized the outward, or external, so this by the beasts expressed the internal, or spirit that should characterize these governments, as they passed down from one phase or change, until they reach their final end, "when the end of the Gentiles will be come in," "the consummation of all things." No one, not even a ready writer, could do anything like justice to so important a subject in so little space; hence they are as hints to the reader. And trusting that they may become the means of enlisting a more able pen, I subscribe myself—

JOHN CAMERON.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. Granville Lipscomb commenced a protracted meeting at Leiper's Fork, on last Lord's day.

We regret a number of items and reports of meetings are crowded out of this number, that will appear next week.

Bro. A. E. Myers writes of Bethany College: "We are repairing and overhauling the College building and the Ladies' Hall, and endeavoring to bring the expenses within the income."

The editorial staff of the Old Path Guide has been re-organized. It now stands: F. G. Allen, Editor; C. P. Williamson and J. B. Jones, Associate Editors; J. C. Creel, Field Editor; Charles Francis, Business Manager.

WANTED.—A male teacher of experience and good character, to take charge of a mixed school, (ten months' session,) at Leiper's Fork, Williamson Co., Tenn. We are prepared to offer a liberal salary. Apply to S. S. Hughes, Secretary of Board of Trustees.

In our notice of Bro. McGary, last week, the printers stopped a word short. We said, "The ADVOCATE now and ever stands ready to give opportunity to any brother to give his reasons on this subject, but not too much repetition." The word repetition was left off.

The article we copy from the Times concerning Bro. Elley, was written by Bro. Ayres, a colored brother. For this we copy it. It shows how Bro. Elley was interested in the colored race. We would rather have the tears and blessings of the humble, and lowly, and outcasts, over our grave, than the approval of the great, and the praise of the most eloquent tongues of earth.

We call attention to the advertisement of Bethany College, in this number. Bethany is the oldest college claiming to make the Bible alone the text-book in religion. While it did not catalogue so large a number of students as some other colleges, it showed a larger number of graduates, which shows a healthy state of perseverance and industry among the students.

Bro. Poe writes that he has sent matter for the last two numbers preceding this, of the ADVOCATE. Neither of them reached us. We, as well as our readers, are always glad to hear from Bro. Poe. Uncle Sam's mails would bear looking after in that direction. We received a letter from a brother in Texas, recently, threatening to expose us in the papers, because some books he had ordered from James F. & Harry Lipscomb, did not reach him. While we have nothing to do with the sending of books, we have no doubt they were properly sent. A man who buys books to sell again, especially the Popular Hymns, at the low margin now given on them, cannot be responsible for the delivery of them, especially with the bad mail management now in the direction of Texas.

HIGHLAND HOME-MALE AND FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The next session of this school will open on October 13, continue seven scholastic months, and close April 24, 1885. We offer to the public a very mild climate, healthy locality, moral surroundings, a wide-awake school, and an active corps of teachers. Those of colder latitudes will find it both pleasant and profitable to their children to send them down among the pines, with freestone water to drink, coarse sand to walk upon, and plenty of work to do. Terms very reasonable. Those desiring to teach or preach will find our school well suited to their wants. Send for our catalogue. Address, J. M. Barnes, president, S. Jordan, or M. L. Kirkpatrick, at Argus, Crenshaw county, Alabama.

A large building has been secured by a number of ladies, and fitted up for the reception of citizens given up to death by the physicians.—An inventory of the estate of the late Cyrus McCormick, of Chicago, Ill., has been filed in the Probate Court of Cook county. The total is not far from twenty million dollars. The executors furnished a bond for thirty millions.—On Sunday evening, August 3rd, the United States Hotel, one of the oldest in Washington City, almost tumbled to ruins. At midnight three persons were rescued from the ruins alive, and three others, it was feared were dead. There were some names of missing persons on the book of the hotel, though it was hoped they were not under the debris.—The forthcoming annual report of the Postmaster General will show an increase of 12,000,000 in the number of postage stamps sold during the year up to about 1,215,000,000, or an average of about twenty-four each for the population of the country during the year. There were, in addition to this, about 220,000,000 stamped envelopes, bringing the total to about 1,500,000,000. Adding 375,000,000 postal cards, which will be shown to be about the number used during the year, will bring the total mail communications of the year up to 1,800,000,000, in round numbers, or an average of about thirty-five letters or postal cards for the whole population.—A dispatch from San Francisco states that nineteen Chinese lepers were sent back to China, last week. One escaped before sailing, but was re-captured. The city paid full fare, and gave each of them five dollars.

FOREIGN.—The Papal Consistory has been officially fixed to meet in Rome, in September. Probably twelve Cardinals will be created.—The present estate of affairs between France and China is a matter of uncertainty. Peace exists at present.—Mr. Morton, the United States minister to Paris, has subscribed a thousand francs toward the fund which the American artists in Paris are raising for the purpose of presenting that city with a large bronze model of Bartholdi's statue "Liberty Enlightening the World."—According to information which has reached Berlin, Dr. Schliemann will not conclude his excavations this year at Tiryns, where he is searching chiefly for the graves of the ancient sovereigns of the place.—There has been built at Milwall, London, England, a large steel lighter for the service of the Orient Steam Navigation Company. This craft is intended to be used solely for the conveyance of the mails to and from the company's steamers at Suez, and will carry no less than eighty tons of mail. It is fitted with large air cases at each end to insure the safety of the mails by making it unsinkable. The hull is constructed of steel, with water-tight steel deck cased with teak.

SHE DIED OF MORTGAGE.

We worked through Spring and Winter, through Summer and through Fall,
But the mortgage worked the hardest and the steadiest of them all.
It worked on nights and Sunday; it worked each holiday;
It settled down among us, and it never went away.
Whatever we kept from it seemed almost as bad as theft;
It watched us every minute, and it ruled us right and left;
The rust and blight were with us sometimes, and sometimes not;
The dark-browed, scowling mortgage was forever on the spot.
The weevil and the cut-worm, they went as well as came;
The mortgage stayed forever, eating hearty all the same.
It nailed up every window, stood guard at every door,
And happiness and sunshine made their home with us no more.
Till with falling crops and sickness we got stalled upon the grade,
And there came a dark day on us when the interest wasn't paid;
And there came a sharp foreclosure and I kind of lost my hold,
And grew weary and discouraged, and the farm was cheaply sold.
The children left and scattered, when they hardly yet were grown;
My wife she pined and perished, and I found myself alone.
What she died of was "a mystery," and the doctors never knew;
But I knew she died of mortgage—just as well as I wanted to.
If to trace a hidden sorrow were within the doctor's art,
They'd ha' found a mortgage lying on that woman's broken heart.
Worm or beetle, drought or tempest, on a farmer's hand may fall,
But for first-class ruination trust a mortgage 'gainst them all.

AUNTY PARSON'S STORY.

I told Hezekiah—that's my man. People mostly call him Deacon Parsons, but he never gets any deaconing from me. We were married—"Hezekiah and Amariah"—that's goin' on forty years ago, and he's jest Hezekiah to me, and nothin' more.

Well, as I was saying, says I: "Hezekiah, this poor 'sinner talk has gone on long enough. I suppose we are poor sinners, but I don't see any use of being mean sinners; and there's one thing I think is real mean."

It was jest after breakfast; and as he felt poorly, he hadn't gone to the shop yet; and so I had this little talk with him to sort o' chirk him up. He knew what I was comin' to: for we had had the subject up before. It was our little church. He always said: "The poor people, and what should we ever do?" And I always said: "We never shall do nothin' unless we try." And so when I brought the matter up in this way, he just began bitin' his toothpick, and said: "What's up now? Who's mean? Amariah, we oughtn't to speak evil one of another." Hezekiah always says "poor sinners," and doesn't seem to mind it: but when I occasionally say mean sinners, he somewhat gits oneasy. But, I was started, and I meant to free my mind.

So I said, says I: "I was goin' to confess our sins. Dan'l confessed for all his people, and I was confessin' for our little church."

"Truth is," says I, "ours is allus called one of the 'feeble churches,' and I am tried about it. I've raised seven children, and at fourteen months old every boy and girl of 'em could run alone. And our church is fourteen years old," says I, "and it can't take a step yet without somebody to hold on by. The Board helps us, and General Jones, good man, he helps us—helps too much I think—and so we live along, but we do not seem to grow strong. Our people draw their rations every year as the Indians do up at the agency; and it doesn't seem sometimes as if they ever thought of doing anything else."

"They take it so easy," I said. "That's what worries me. I do not suppose we could pay all expenses, but we might act as if we wanted to, and as if we meant to do all we can."

"I read," says I, "last week about the debt of the Board; and this week, as I understand," says I, "our 'application is going in for another year, and no particular effort to do any better, and it frets me. I can't sleep nights; and I can't take comfort Sundays. I've got to feelin' as if we were a kind of perpetual paupers. And that was what I meant when I said: 'It is real mean!' I suppose I said it a little sharp," says I, "but I'd rather be sharp than flat any day, and if, we don't begin to stir ourselves, we shall be flat enough before long, and shall deserve to be. It grows on me. It has jest been 'Board, Board, Board,' for fourteen years, and I'm tired of it. I never did like boardin'," says I: "and, even if we are poor, I believe we might do something toward settin' up house-keepin' for ourselves."

"Well, there's not many of us: about a hundred, I believe; and some of these are women folks, and some is jest girls and boys. And we have all to work hard and live close; but," says I, "let us show a disposition, if nothin' more. Hezekiah, if there's any sperrit left in us, let us show some sort of a disposition."

And Hezekiah had his toothpick in his teeth, and looked down at his boots and rubbed his chin, as he always does when he's goin' to say somethin'. I think there is some of us that show a disposition."

Of course, I undersood that hit; but I kep' still. I kept right on with my argument; and I said: "Yes, and a pretty bad disposition it is. It's a disposition to let ourselves be helped when we ought to be helping ourselves. It's a disposition to lie still and let somebody carry us. And we are growing up cripples—only we don't grow."

"Kiah," says I, "Do you hear me?" Sometimes when I want to talk a little he jest shets his eyes, and begins to rock himself back and forth in the old arm-chair; and he was doin' that now. So I said, "Kiah, do you hear?" And he said, "Some!" and then I went on. "I've got a proposition," says I. And he sort o' looked up, and said: "Hev you? Well, between a disposition and a proposition, I guess the proposition might be better."

He's awful sarcrostatic, sometimes. But I wasn't goin' to get riled, nor thrown off the track; so I jest said: "Yes; do you and I git two shillin's worth a piece a week out of that blessed little church of ours, do you think?" says I. "Cos, if we do, I want to give two shillin' a week to keep it goin', and I thought maybe you could do as much." So he said he guessed we could stand that; and I said: "That's my proposition; and I mean to see if we can't find somebody else that'll do the same. It'll show disposition, anyway."

"Well, I suppose you'll hev your own way," says he; "you most allers do." And I said: "Isn't it most allers a good way?" Then I brought out my "subscription paper." I had it already. I didn't jest know how to shape it, but I knew it was something about "the sums set opposite our names," and so I drewed it up, and took my chances. "You must head it," says I, "because you're the oldest deacon, and I must go on next, because I am the deacon's wife, and then I'll see some of the rest of the folks."

So Kiah sot down, and put on his specs, and took his pen, but did not write. "What's the matter?" says I. And he said: "I'm sort o' shamed to subscribe two shillin'. I never signed so little as that for anything. I used to give that to go to the circus when I was nothin' but a boy, and I ought to do more than that to support the gospel. Two shillin's a week! Why, it's only a shillin' a sermon, and all the prayer-meetin's thrown in. I can't go less than fifty cents, I am sure." So down he went for fifty cents, and then I signed for a quarter, and then my sunbonnet went onto my head pretty lively; and says I: "Hezekiah, there's some cold potato in the pantry, and you know where to find the salt; so, if I am not back by dinner-time, don't be bashful; help yourself." And I started.

I called on the Smith family first. I felt sure of them. And they were just happy. Mr. Smith signed, and so did Mrs. Smith; and long John, he came in while we were talkin', and put his name down; and then old Grandma Smith, she didn't want to be left out; and so there was four of 'em. I've allers found it a great thing in any good enterprise to enlist the Smith family. There's a good many of 'em. Next I called on the Joslyns, and next on the Chapins, and then on the widdle Chadwick, and so I kept goin'.

I met a little trouble once or twice, but not much. There was Fussy Furbut; and bein' trustee, he thought I was out of my spear, he said; and he wanted it understood that such work belonged to the trustees. "To be sure," says I, "I'm glad you've found it out. I wish the trustees had discovered that a leetle sooner." Then there was sister Puffy, that's got the asthma. She thought we ought to be lookin' after "the sperritoalities." She said we must get down before the Lord. She didn't think churches could be run on money. But I told her I guessed we'd been down enough, if that would do any good; and that I guessed we should be jest as spiritual to look into our pocket-books a little; and I said it was a shame to be 'tarnally beggin' so of the Board.

She looked dreadful solemn when I said that, and I almost felt as I'd been committin' profane language. But I hope the Lord will forgive me if I took anything in vain. I did not take my call in vain, I tell you, Mrs. Puffy is good, only she allers wanted to talk so pious; and she put down her two shillin', and then hove a sigh. Then I found the boys at the cooper shop, and got seven names there at one lick: and when the list began to grow, people seemed ashamed to say no; and I kept gainin' till I had jest an even hundred, and then I went home.

Well, it was pretty well toward candle light when I got back, and I was so tired I didn't know much of anything. I've washed, and I've scrubbed, and I've baked, and I've cleaned, and I've biled soap, and I've moved; and I 'low that almost any one of that sort of things is a little exhaustin'. But put your bakin' and movin' and bilin' soap and all together, and it won't work out as much genuine tired soul and body as one day with a subscription paper to support the gospel. So when I sort o' dropped into a chair, and Hezekiah said, "Well?" I was past speakin'; and I put my check apron up to my face as I hadn't done since I was a young foolish girl, and cried. I don't know what I felt so bad about, I don't know as I did feel bad. But I felt like cry, and I cried. And Kiah, seein' how it was, felt kind o' sorry for me, and set some tea a steepin'; and when I had had my tea and my cry, and so mingled my drink with weeping, I felt better.

I handed him the subscription paper, and he looked it over as he didn't expect anything; but soon he began saying: "I never! I never!" And I said: "Of course you didn't; you never tried. How much is it?" "Why, don't you know?" says he. "No," I said; I ain't quick in figures, and I hadn't time to foot it up. I hope it will make us out this year three hundred dollars or so."

"Amy," says he, "you're a prodigy—a prodigal, I may say—and you don't know it. A hundred names at two shillin' each gives us $25 a Sunday. Some of them may fail, but most of 'em is good; and there is ten, eleven, thirteen, that sign fifty cents. That'll make up what fails. That paper of yours'll give us thirteen hundred dollars a year!" I jumped up like I was shot. "Yes," he says, "we shan't need anything this year from the Board. This church for this year, at any rate is self-supporting."

We both sot down and kep' still a minute, when I said, kind o' softly: "Hezekiah," says I, "isn't it about time for prayers?" I was just choking; but, as he took down the Bible he said: "I guess we'd better sing somethin'." I nodded, like, and he just struck in. We often sing at prayers in the morning; but now it seemed like the scripiter that says: "He giveth songs in the night." Kiah generally likes the solemn tones, too; and we sing "Show Pity Lord," a great deal; and this mornin' we had sung "Hark from the Tombs a Doleful Sound," 'cause Kiah was not feeling very well, and we wanted to chirk up a little.

So I jest waited to see what metre he'd strike to-night; and would you believe it? I didn't know that he knew any sech a tune. But off he started on "Joy to the World, the Lord is Come." I tried to catch on, but he went off, lickerty-switch, like a steam engine, and I couldn't keep up. I was partly laughing to see Kiah go it, and partly cryin' again, my heart was so full; so I doubled up some of the notes and jumped over the others, and so we safely reached the end.

But I tell you, Hezekiah prayed. He allers prays well: but this was a bran new prayer, exactly suited to the occasion. And when Sunday came, and the minister got up and told what had been done, and said: "It is all the work of one good woman, and done in one day," I just got scared, and wanted to run. And when some of the folks shook hands with me after meetin', and said, with tears in their eyes, how I'd saved the church, and all that, I come awful nigh gettin' proud. But, as Hezekiah says, "we're all poor sinners," and so I choked it back. But I am glad I did it; and I don't believe our church will ever go boardin' any more.—Presbyterian Journal.

LUTIE GRAPE VINES.

In offering this remarkable grape for sale, we wish to say to all grape growers that we have been growing and experimenting for these twenty years on different varieties, numbering a hundred or over, and so far have found nothing to equal the Lutie in all the essential qualities for profitable grape culture. We gave notice a year ago of this claim, and repeat it in this, that we challenge the world to show a better grape for this climate—hardier and thrifter in growth, free from rot, or finer in size or quality. But these are not its chief merits. It will produce more fruit at two years old, than any grape known to us can be made to produce in three. We challenge the test. If any have failed to see the Lutie in bearing, it is not our fault. We have invited all to come and see for themselves. Now, gentlemen of the vitus craft, come to taw, or clear the way for "Miss Lutie."

We offer well-rooted one year old vines of this grape at the following rates:

One vine, well-rooted, one year old,	$3 00
Two " " " " " "	5 00
Five " " " " " "	10 00
Twelve " " " " " "	20 00

Orders for Lutie vines will be received till our fall delivery, which will be November or until our present stock is exhausted, due notice of which will be given. From the number of orders coming in at this early date we cannot hope to be able to fill any spring orders at all. Therefore all desiring vines for the coming spring must order early and secure them this fall. Our fall delivery for city and country orders will be made at Nashville, on Saturday, November 1, 1894. Orders from a distance will be sent by mail or express, as desired. Money must be sent in by November 1, or paid on delivery of vines. Address

Thousands Hastened to their Graves!

Relying on testimonials written in vivid glowing language of some miraculous cures made by some puffed up doctor or patient medicine has hastened thousands to their graves; believing in their almost insane faith that the same miracle will be performed on them, and these testimonials make the cures, while the so-called medicine is all the time hastening them to their graves. We have avoided publishing testimonials, as they do not make the cures, although we have of them, of the most wonderful cures, voluntarily sent us. It is our medicine, Hop Bitters that makes the cures. It has never failed and never can. We will give reference to any one for any disease similar to their own if desired, or will refer to any neighbor, as there is not a neighborhood in the known world but can show its cures by Hop Bitters.

A LOSING JOKE.

A prominent physician of Pittsburgh said to a lady who was complaining of her continued ill health, and of his inability to cure her, jokingly said: "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.

FEES OF DOCTORS.

The fee of doctors is an item that very many persons are interested in. We believe the schedule for visits is $3.00, which would tax a man confined to his bed for one year, and in need of daily visits, over $1,000 a year for medical attention alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.

A LADY'S WISH.

"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters that makes pure, rich blood and blooming health. It did it for me as you observe."

GIVEN UP BY THE DOCTORS.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die, from Kidney and Liver trouble!"

Will purify the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH. Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, and Tired Feeling absolutely cured. Bones, muscles and nerves receive new force. Enlivens the mind and supplies Brain Power.

LADIES Suffering from complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. Gives a clear, healthy complexion. ## Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen;
mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

EIGHTH CHAPTER OF ACTS.

The seventh chapter we pass over with but few words of comment. It is wholly taken up with Stephen's great sermon, and his death, as the first Christian martyr. His speech is one of the finest ever delivered or read. He gives a compact history of the Jews and their behavior, their rebellious disposition and the punishments heaped upon them, and the general dealings of God with them from the calling of Abraham to the crucifixion by them of the Son of God, and tells them that they like their fathers, do always resist the Holy Ghost. This they did in resisting the words, the teaching of the Holy Spirit. Stephen spoke by inspiration of the Spirit, and they resisted his sermon and put him to death. The apostles had been for a long time preaching as the Spirit gave them utterance, and they had resisted that. Thus they were filling the cup of their iniquity, and preparing themselves for the destruction that awaited them as foretold by the Son of God. It seems strange that people should persist in such wickedness, under such surroundings. This was in the city of Jerusalem, where the apostles had been preaching and teaching ever since the day of Pentecost, and where they had performed many wondrous miracles, and they had had every needed opportunity to detect and expose them if they had been deceivers, and yet they madly closed their eyes and ears against all these things and grew worse and worse.

Their wickedness had now begun to reach its climax. Enraged over the execution of Stephen, they began to persecute the whole church at Jerusalem, as stated in first part of the eighth chapter. And on this account the whole church at Jerusalem was driven out, "were all scattered abroad, except the apostles." But God often makes the wrath of man praise him. These Christians had been taught by the apostles in Jerusalem until they thoroughly understood the word of the Lord, the gospel of Christ, and were able to teach others also. And hence when these thousands of Christians were driven out of Jerusalem, they "went everywhere preaching the word," and thus the Lord sent out more preachers to go and proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ than all the societies of modern times have ever done. And these were sent out without any boards, or plans, or any pledges of support. These wicked Jews would not let them remain in Jerusalem, and the Lord so ordered things that they were sent out promiscuously everywhere over the country, and as they went, they everywhere made known a Savior's precious love.

Eternity alone can reveal the amount of good done by these humble, earnest, faithful children of God who had given up their earthly all for the cause of their Master. These men did not go forth as employees, to do so much work for so much money pledged, but for the sake of truth, the salvation of their own souls, and with a burning desire for the salvation of others, they went forth as the servants of God to proclaim his word, and to find places where they might live and serve him who had done so much for them. These Christians, it may well be supposed, spent but little time in preparing fine sermons, or in delivering orations. But they had one grand, yet simple story to tell,—the story of the cross, the love of a crucified but risen Redeemer. This they doubtless told in an artless, but earnest manner which carried conviction to many that heard them. They went with their hearts all mellowed down by the sufferings they endured, and in the midst of sadness no doubt from leaving near relatives and former friends behind, who loved the ways of sin more than the Lord and their soul's salvation. These Christians were leaving all for Christ, and there would naturally be such earnestness depicted upon their very countenances, that what they said would carry conviction to those who heard them. Thus those wicked Jews at Jerusalem who caused these Christians to leave their homes in their efforts to put down the gospel, only caused it to be increased at a ratio of which they had no conception.

The people in Jerusalem had proved themselves unworthy of gospel privileges, but the Lord forces their wrath to carry it to others. Thus very wicked men may be instrumental in accomplishing immense good for others, while they themselves will be hopelessly lost. It is very poor business therefore for societies and plans that God never ordained to claim good resulting from their sending out the gospel as evidence that they are right, because God often overrules the rebellion of some for the good of others. But this fact by no means proves them right in what they do. The gospel sent to the world may do the people good, even if the devil sends it. But that will not make the devil right. Men are only right when they do the Lord's work in the Lord's way. It was really the devil that sent out those thousands of preachers from Jerusalem. Neither the devil nor his ministers, those wicked Jews, meant it so, but the Lord overruled this wickedness for the good of others. And so he may overrule the human plans that are got up in rebellion against him and his word so as to accomplish good among the people where the gospel is sent, but this by no means justifies the rebellion of those who formulate these societies and plans contrary to, and in addition to the word of God.

Brother Briney not long since brought up an array of good done by the gospel as sent out by missionary societies as proof that the societies that sent the gospel were of God. Never was a more absurd argument presented. It was the gospel that did the good, while the societies as such were an organized rebellion against God. Satan is the prime author of all rebellion against God, whether organized or unorganized. Nebuchadnezzar did not mean that his campaign against the Jews should be a sword in the Lord's hand against the Jews to humble them, and turn them from sin and idolatry, but the Lord made it so. And while the Jews were humbled and turned from their idolatry, Nebuchadnezzar and his army died idolaters and rebels against the government of God. The good that resulted to the Jews from their action did not do them any good, did not make them right. They were simply the sword of the Lord, doing work for the Lord, while they themselves were lost in their own iniquity. Let no man, nor society of men claim that because their action may result in good that therefore their action was right. If the Lord's people as such, and in accord with his truth fail to send the gospel to people ready to receive it, and to whom he opens the way, he may, and doubtless does in some instances, overrule human plans, societies and schemes for the accomplishment of good through the truth, when the truth is sent out. But this fact is not one particle of proof that these human plans are themselves right. These things should be well considered, and the Lord's people, and by the Lord's own appointments should send the gospel everywhere the Lord opens the way; then the Lord and his own appointments will be honored, and his people will thus save themselves, and those that obey the gospel sent out by them.

It may be that the church at Jerusalem was tarrying there too long and doing too little for the cause ahead, that caused them thus to be driven out into the wide field around them. And if as Christians and churches we sit still when the Lord has a grand work for us to do, he may force us by chastisement, and under calamities to do what we ought to do voluntarily, but neglect. Or he may accomplish the end some other way, and leave us out as rebels, if we fail to do his will. Let us awake and look around, and see what we can do. As to how much all those Christians scattered from Jerusalem did by their preaching, we have no means of knowing. But the historian singles out one, Philip, and tells about part of his work, and if the balance did anything to compare with him, eternity will resound with praises to God for the work done by these persecuted, homeless Christians.

"Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did." Here it is only stated that Philip preached Christ to those people. But what follows shows that he must have preached him as a Savior. And in preaching him as a savior, he would have to preach him in his death, his burial and resurrection from the grave, for these things constitute him as our Savior. And these facts constitute the gospel of Christ. Therefore when Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans, he preached the gospel to them. And the people on their part gave heed to the things which Philip spake; they listened to what he said in such a way as to be impressed by it. They did not do as many do now, reject the truth and refuse to hear it because it is different from what they already believe. But with one accord they gave heed. And they beheld without prejudice the miracles he performed in attestation of the truth he proclaimed. This produced conviction in their hearts, and "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." From this it is certain that Samaritans believed the gospel, and they were baptized. And from second of Acts we learn that repentance comes before baptism. This being true the Samaritans must have repented, for they were taught by an inspired man, that would not have reversed heaven's order in any way. Besides it is said here that he preached the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ. Repentance is one of these, for Jesus himself said "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." We are plainly told that Peter commanded those on the day of Pentecost to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Thus repentance was preached in the name of Christ at Jerusalem, and so it was at Samaria. Just the very things therefore were preached by Philip that were preached by Peter at the beginning, and the same things were done by the Samaritans that were done by the three thousand. Thus the conversion of the Samaritans is very briefly told, but enough is told, and that in such a way as to force the conclusion that the same things were preached and done at Samaria that were preached and done at Jerusalem at the beginning. Nor could it be otherwise when the same Holy Spirit was guiding the work in both instances. But we have not space in this number to finish up this chapter.

WE ARE BUILDERS.

We are all mechanics, shrewd and skilled, and build our castles grand and fair; and in the realms of thought erect each one a castle in the air.

Yes, we are all castle builders. The gay, laughing school-boy, who seems to us to be engaged only in idle sports and amusements, may be found sometimes sitting and thinking: "Some day I'll be a man and how proud I'll be." He then pictures his future self, and many hours does he idle away in day-dreaming and in castle building.

The bright-eyed, golden-haired girl, sporting with dolls and toys, thinks too, often, in glowing colors, upon the walls of the airy structure which she builds, her conquests when she "gets grown," her gay flirtations with the boys, and finally her future home with one she loves.

The young man and young lady, starting upon life's mystical journey, "who have not yet entered upon its bustling, thronging highway, but are lingering in rosy bowers by the wayside, and gathering flowers redolent of unalloyed happiness," build their showy air castles too. They imagine for themselves honors, fair renown, fame, wealth and all wealth affords. Each one strives to make his or her picture the brightest, leaving out all darkened hues.

Even old men and mothers, who have passed many milestones in the journey of life, who have gone through the morning with its gayety, its bright expectations and glorious prospects, and the noon with its labors, its active duties and responsibilities, and are in the evening with its frosted hair and stooped forms, even they sometimes build for themselves air castles for the future.

But these airy structures fall, these bright pictures fade, and we find, too late frequently, after we have spent so much valuable time, the golden moments—precious jewels from the ocean of eternity, that we have made one grand mistake, in picturing and planning too much and in acting too little.

God requires of us something grander, more substantial and enduring than this; and indeed, my readers, as little as we think of it, and as careless as we may be, we are building a structure, our characters, that will last forever.

How are we building? Upon what are we building? Are we building a true Christian character, upon a firm foundation? These are questions of vast importance concerning which all should have some sober thought.

Jesus Christ, the great master-builder, has provided for us a grand model, and has given us all the plans and specifications necessary to enable us to construct one after his perfect pattern.

The life of Jesus Christ, full of love for fallen humanity, and pity for all of Adam's posterity, stands out before us as the only perfect model, and we are called upon to build our characters after it.

"He has laid for us a foundation, and other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." We are to accept this foundation and build upon it. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." Lest we might build improperly upon this foundation, specifications and plans for building are given, and there is no necessity of any one building improperly. God's word stands out as the book containing the rules and directions for working. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Let us set before us the grand model, the life of Christ, alone, and build "upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." We build thus by "hearing and doing" the commandments. If we act under the guidance and instruction of the Bible, having faith in its authority, and laboring continually, we will build for ourselves a Christian character, a building that will stand all the blasts of envy, storms of persecution, and darts hurled by Satan's soldiers, and will finally remain unshaken and immovable as the "Rock of Ages."

We can but say in conclusion:

On what are you building my brother,
Your hopes of an eternal home?
Is it loose, shifting sand, or the firm solid rock,
Are you trusting for ages to come?

On one or the other, my brother,
You are building your hopes day by day;
You are risking your soul on the works that you do:
Will the dark waves sweep you away?

Your Savior has warned you, my brother;
I pray you, give heed to his voice.
True is life on the rock, but there's death on the sand,
Oh! my brother, pray tell you my choice.

No matter how careful, my brother,
The sand for your house you prepare;
Twill all be swept away when the flood shall descend,
Leaving nothing but death and despair.

BOOKS FOR THE INDIAN MISSION.

BROS. LIPSCOMB & SEWELL: To-day I put up, in a box, nine hundred and twenty-five religious periodicals, ready to be sent to R. W. Officer, Paris, Texas, for the Indian Mission, in the Indian Territory. If he receives them, I have a few left which the box could not contain, which I will send him. I have sent all, or nearly all, of the numbers of the ADVOCATES, since their re-publication by Bro. Fanning, which, I believe, began in 1860 or 1861. I also sent Bro. Fanning's "Religious Historian," and the Review, the Pioneer, the Harbinger, and other papers, too numerous to mention; and from the price I paid for these papers annually, I suppose I sent nearly, or quite, three hundred dollars worth of papers. I hope and pray God may bless these papers to the conversion of the readers of them. The conversions of the Bible are active; sectarian conversions are passive, or miraculous. Man has no more agency in them than Lazarus had in his resurrection. John, the immerger, was sent to convert the Jewish nation, and did it, except the Scribes and Separatists. "He shall turn the hearts of the fathers to their children, and the hearts of children to their fathers." Mal. 4: 5. "Many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God." Luke 1: 16. Sectarian conversions all differ from each other. Many of them are infant conversions. When men are converted from one sect to another sect, who does that? If men can receive the Spirit before faith to convert them, what becomes of our Savior's word, "whom the world cannot receive?" John 14: 17. Is there one passage in the Bible which says God gave his spirit to a man before he believed in him, to work faith in him? If there is such a passage, let us have it.

TO THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN NORTH ALABAMA.

Dear brethren, the congregation at Huntsville, Ala., is without a house. They have been using the Circuit Court room for preaching and the weekly meetings, and still are, but this is only as the commissioners or other authorities of the county may be pleased to allow. They are now trying to raise what they can among themselves to build a house, and will strain to the very uttermost. They have a lot, well located, and are thoroughly in earnest, determined to succeed. I have been among them and know them. Now, without their solicitation or knowledge, (as a body) I have this proposition to make to the churches. Let us all state the case of the Huntsville brethren, and publicly too, and then give to them one Lord's day collection or contribution, or two, or three, in proportion to the amount needed, to enable them to build their house. They do not expect a costly or fine house; they are plain, and will be satisfied with a plain, substantial house. This course will not hurt any, not even the poorest congregation, and will help the Huntsville brethren very much, and will be money, treasure, laid up in heaven where moth nor rust do not corrupt.

Though the congregations in North Alabama are directly addressed in this letter, it is by no means intended that a gift from South Alabama or from other States would not be just as acceptable. As Corinth and Galatia sent help to the poor saints in Judea, then we ask you, will you help Huntsville? Send money to J. W. Shepherd, Huntsville, Ala.

A. C. HENRY.

Huntsville, Ala., August 13, 1884.

[We are sure the above appeal is worthy of consideration, and the church in Huntsville is worthy of aid.—D. L.]

NOTES FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

J. H. Webb, Corinth, Miss., August 8, writes: "Bro. M. Kendrick closed a series of meetings at Wanasoga, Miss., last Sunday night. Immediate result, twenty-two added to the church. The brethren have a good house there, and the church is rapidly building up."

E. W. Hookings, Beuna Vista, Ark., August 7, writes: "The co-operative meeting of the disciples of Christ in South Arkansas, will be held at Whitefield, Ouachita County, Ark., beginning August 22nd, and embracing the fourth Lord's day, to which all our brethren, preachers, and friends are cordially invited. Come, brethren, and let us have a good meeting; let us work for the Lord while it is day. If you come by rail, get off at Center, T. & St. L. R. R."

J. L. Sewell, Viola, Tenn., August 13, writes: "I was at a meeting at Beech Grove, in Maury County, embracing the first and second Lord's days in August; had a very pleasant and interesting meeting. It is a zealous, warm hearted working band of disciples. This is the home of Bro. William Anderson, who is an acceptable school teacher and a good preacher, and especially a good teacher of practical Christianity. The result of the meeting was seven added to the congregation."

P. J. Puckett, LaCrosse, Izard County, Ark., August 11, writes: "Bro. F. P. Tankersley, of Marshall County, Tenn., is visiting our State, and has been doing some good preaching. Preached nine discourses at Pleasant Spring; immediate result, two additions. Seven at Sandy Flat, no additions; but the interest seemed to increase during the meeting, and we hope the good seed sown will bring forth fruit abundantly. He is one of Bro. Larimore's students, and I think his preaching speaks well for the school."

W. H. Dixon, Booneville, Tenn., August 11, writes: "I visited Paint Rock Valley at a point near Paint Rock Station, on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, found three members; preached ten discourses, resulting in nineteen recruits to the cause, and considerable prejudice removed. These brethren agreed to meet and keep house for the Lord. Bro. F. M. Wallace had preached some during last year and one visit this, sowing the good seed. He agreed to teach these new converts, and preach the gospel to the world. I am satisfied that this Valley is ready for the word. The cry is, come over and help us. My preaching brethren, let us take heed to this cry."

Brown Godwin, Flatwoods, Tenn., August 11, writes: "Labored in Perry County through July and up to the present time. The first week in July I assisted Bro. Frank Davis in a meeting at Linden; two were immersed. The second week was spent at Chestnut Grove. No visible good at this place. Spoke the next Lord's day and night in a school house on Cane Creek; at this place the people are willing and anxious to hear, but as I had promised to assist Bro. Cain Land in a meeting on Cypress Creek, I had to go. At this place (Cypress) eight were immersed. We have but few members at this place, but they have determined, the Lord willing, to meet on the first day of the week. The next week I spoke at Lagoon, Lobelville and Border's Springs. Had seven confessions; two at Lobelville and five at Border's Springs. At this last place I had no brethren to assist me; nothing but a good and quiet audience to encourage me. Think, I will visit that place again in September. Spoke last week at Farmer's Valley; one confession. Am now in a meeting at this place. To God be all the praise."

Obituaries.

On Saturday, August 9th, little Fanny, daughter of H. M. Notgrass, was thrown from a carriage and received injuries, which resulted in her death on Tuesday night following. Our dear little cousin was a bright and engaging child, about four and a half years of age, the first-born of her parents, their joy and pride. Her death makes a great vacancy in their little family circle, and leaves an ache in their hearts that only time, the great healer, can soothe. We extend to them, our friends, kindred in the flesh, our brother and sister in Christ, our warmest sympathy in this hour of trial. The parting is hard to bear, but your little daughter has but gone before you to our Father's home in heaven, and to the tender care of him, our adorable Redeemer and gracious elder Brother, who on earth took little children in his arms, and said, "Forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Let this thought comfort you. M. L.

It is my sad duty to chronicle the death of sister, Lucy Mosely, wife of Bro. Thomas F. Mosely of Salem, Franklin county, Tennessee. Sister Mosely was born in South Carolina, January 24, 1824, and died July 18, 1884. At the age of sixteen she obeyed the gospel, and lived faithful to its precepts until the summons came for her to go up higher. In the varied relations of wife, mother, and neighbor, she was ever faithful; and had endeared herself to a large circle of relations and friends by whom she will sadly be missed. We deeply sympathize with our dear brother in his bereavement, and pray that the tender mercies of our Heavenly Father may overshadow him, and preserve him and all the sorrowing ones unto his heavenly kingdom. J. D. FLOYD.

[Sister Mosely was first married to John C. Lipscomb, an uncle of ours. She endeared herself to his children as their own mother. She was a kind-hearted and good woman, deserving and receiving the esteem and affection of all who knew her. We sympathize truly with her children, Bro. Mosely, and all the relatives and friends that will miss her.]

Died, at his home on Thompson's Creek, in Bedford county, Tennessee, July 10, 1884, Bro. Thomas Roberts, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. Bro. Roberts was born on Stone's River, in Rutherford county, Tennessee, and, when an infant, was brought to the community where he died—living, from then, on the farm upon which he died. For many years he was a member of the Baptist church; but about four years ago, while the writer was preaching near his home, he and his wife took their stand with the disciples, upon the Bible alone. In the fullest meaning of the word he was a good man—peaceful, honest and just in his association and dealings with his fellow man. He raised a large and respectable family, having a good home and the comforts of life, and all this time he adhered to the apostolic injunction to "owe no man anything," his neighbors and children not remembering when he ever contracted a debt. We extend to the bereaved widow and children our deepest sympathy, and pray they may be comforted in the thought that the loved one is relieved from his long afflictions, and is at rest.

CONTEND FOR THE FAITH ONCE DELIVERED TO THE SAINTS.

BROS. LIPSCOMB & HARDING: Strange to say the issues to-day between you and the denominations are no more clearly defined, than those between you and the majority of our brethren. I have no preference, that I know of, for minorities; still I often find myself standing in mind and labor with those who can call few to their support. I often need encouragement; it does me good.

I have seated myself in the cool of the morn to say a few words of approbation and encouragement to you. You are perfectly satisfied that you are right, and some might conclude that a consciousness of this alone would furnish all the cheer that one needs. I do not think so. I am sure Paul enjoyed the approbation of good men. He knew he had God's favor; but the battle is tedious to those who have no help in the affray, from well-mated fellows. I have tried it. You, brethren, contend that all the schemes of men to preach the gospel, are not only human, but in rebellion to the great law-giving head. I believe this, and here is my heart and my hand. If our brethren have not started out with a "thus saith the Lord" for everything, "speak when the Bible speaks, and be silent when it is silent," in matters of faith, emblazoned upon their banner, and I had seen the working of societies, I would have come to two conclusions. First, they are not expedients; that is to say, they hinder, rather than further, the preaching of the gospel. In the next place, they tend to the centralization of power or ecclesiasticism, and, as a consequence, supplant the church of God, and elevate man's authority, instead of that of Jesus, the great king. This is an age of helps. Machinery now does nearly everything in the business of life. When it comes to doing good, the world acts as if they were ready to say, "Jesus, we can get along very well without you." While in Montgomery, I found Knights of Pythias, Knights of Honor, Masons, and Odd-Fellows, were acting a more prominent part in life, than the church. And in Atlanta there were these and the Order of Workmen, the Order of Red Men, etc. The business of taking care of widows and children, a work of the church, is now usurped by institutions of men, and this is done greatly by those arrayed on the side of Jesus. These are not expedients. I mean to say they do not work best for society and State. Men cease to be economical, depending on human charities (societies) for the support of their families when they are dead. These widows and orphans, coming suddenly into possession of wealth, for which they have not worked, and of which they know not how to take care, they are injured rather than benefitted, and society certainly suffers in several respects. Work and economy are God's laws of living, and should not be interfered with. Anything that prevents the bringing to play the activities of mind and body of the members of society, is injurious. All prodigality is a curse; frugality, a blessing.

The real wealth of a country is that made by hard work, active thought, and old-fashioned taking care. Mushroom inheritance, or unsweated acquisitions, do not enter into the real values of a people. There is nothing that really fills the place of the church. It is just suited to the wants of a people. It built up America, and crowned her with her present glory; it poured into her lap her vast treasures; it gave her a name all over the earth. I have heard that Thomas Jefferson took his pattern for this country's constitution from a single independent Baptist church, having all the elements of being in itself. Then the church was in the land, and the government was modeled after it. As long as the church, by her quiet influence, sways the people, that land will be blessed. As long as the church feeds the poor, in the Lord's way, the church and people will be blessed. As long as the simplicity, purity, honesty and frugality of the New Testament, are carried out, all will be well.

It is even the same in preaching the gospel, teaching the children, building churches, and so on. I know of no way of honoring God, save through his appointments. If the church, in districts where societies prevail and Sunday-school institutes flourish their trumpets, is not a small factor in the living, moving and being of active elements, and a second or third consideration, then I have read the papers like a squint-eyed partisan, and am not fit to say a word.

Bro. Lipscomb's pieces on centralization, a few years ago, were good, and ought to be re-published. The ADVOCATE has been filled with good things of late. That would seem to convey the idea that sometimes it is not thus burdened. Well, I do not intend that. I mean the stones were more weighty. Somehow Bro. Harding's article on the Spirit's sending the preacher, and not the church, and, of course, no human substitute for the church, has started very many agoing afresh. If you sustain that, my brother, you will prove that all of our co-operation meetings and missionary societies, in sending out preachers, have been trampling rudely on holy ground, and arrogating to themselves prerogatives that belong alone to the Spirit of Almighty God. Well, go on; I am much interested.

On the subject of preaching, you are putting into practice what I have urged a long time. That is, all that men need to successfully plant the gospel banner anywhere and everywhere, is plenty of common sense, (wisdom from above,) plenty of faith that works by love, and plenty of knowledge of God's word. But you, my brother, have out-stripped me in faith, and I thank God for your confidence in our Savior. I have never doubted that, if I would go to work in the name of Jesus, I would be supported, and that among those who did not believe in him. There might be cases in which I would have to work with my own hands, as did Paul, for my support; but a man of God should not hesitate here. I do not know that you believe this. If we could get up the church statistics and place along-side in two columns, those churches which were founded by men sent out and supported by societies, and then those planted by men who went out at their own charges, or without any promises, or who settled in neighborhoods, towns, or cities, and preached and followed their business of life, those who contend for societies would certainly be satisfied that societies are not even expedients. The Lord's way is best. "Nothing succeeds so well as success," is an admitted proverb of this fast age. The gospel was planted, in apostolic days, by men full of faith, full of the Spirit, full of the love of God and man. One hundred churches have been planted in the same way, during the working of the present reformation, for every one propped up by a society. Facts are stubborn things. The logic of facts is the strongest of all logic. I know this is not the best way to reason upon this subject. I know the question is simply, "What does God say about it?" But there are good men urging the building of societies. First, build churches, then let them build societies that they may build more churches. Like begets its like ordinarily, but here the miller makes the caterpillar, this turn to a chrysalis in his cocoon, which makes the fly.

But I said good men advocate these societies. Yes, they do. They say they are expedients, they are effectual helpers. Some say the organ is another expedient. Well, those who take this position must arrive at one of two, or three, or four conclusions, or all of them. First, that a man of God is not, by God's word, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, since a society fits him in a more complete way. If more lives can be saved by societies than without them, then "all things are not given that pertain to life and godliness," for here is more life depending upon the ingenuity of man. That the New Testament is not the perfect law of liberty, because a little amendment made by man offers liberty to more people than they have without it. That the apostles might have added great strength to their labors, and rendered their efforts far more efficient, by concentration of work. That the apostles, though full of the Spirit, speaking by it and guided by it, did not know it all. The Spirit did not guide them into all truth, if it is a truth that more people can be reached by societies, and reached more effectually, than in the old way. It is the good men who give the trouble. They are not satisfied with the work of the apostles or the first preachers of the reformation. I mean by this, they are not willing to work as they did, though they flaunt in the face of the world a "thus saith the Lord," "silence when the Bible is silent," "speak as the oracles of God," "hold fast the form of sound words." I went to look for the "Christian Baptist." It perished in the flames when my house burned. My recollection is that A. Campbell wrote several articles about and against the "clergy." Well, who has a more aristocratic, pampered, and well-fed clergy than the "current reformation?" You will find the nice young pastor, on Monday morning, buried in his sanctum writing his sermon for the next service; rubbing up his canon, for he belongs to the heavy artillery. Well, this is not the old paths, but what is to be done about it? We must contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and do it in the right spirit.

I must stop to welcome Justus Rawdon Barnes, who arrived at eleven o'clock to-day, August 8. I have been at home for a month and over, watching for his advent.

I must not close without saying to Bro. Lipscomb that his piece about Sister Reid, carrying or keeping a pistol, had the Bible ring, but we do not all accept the Bible as an every day book. It is too much a Sunday book, and for guidance going to church and back.

Meeting at Highland Home will begin to-morrow. I expect to join Dr. A. C. Henry during his meeting at Mooresville. It will begin on third Lord's day. J. M. BARNES.

The best preparation for the future is the present well seen to, the last duty well done.

WASHING THE SAINTS' FEET—No. 2.

Moreover, the expression "through the Holy Spirit" was a necessary and most fitting anticipation of the Spirit's future work of bearing final and complete testimony to the Son of God. The idea which some writers and speakers seem to have that the expression limits the binding teaching of the Savior to the brief interval between his resurrection and ascension is, therefore, so far from the truth that it is even too ludicrous to be serious. What do we know of the commandments given during that short time? How many were given, and what were they? Only one, just one is specified! "He commanded them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which (saith he) ye have heard of me." Verse 4. Here, however, we are confronted with the seemingly plausible relief that "what Jesus taught and commanded the apostles, can be ascertained only by seeing what the apostles taught and did." Evans in Christian Standard, April 12. Now, as an elementary principle to guide us to the field of spiritual investigation, this saying is commendable, but as a statutory sanction of what we may or may not do, of what we ought or ought not to do, it is environed with assumptions and vagueness that divest it of all its value and make it really dangerous in its tendency. Taken in its literal and statutory sense, the plan of salvation is thereby graded in its personal instrumentalities as follows:

First, John the Baptist, the Elijah of prophecy, makes manifest the true Messiah and inducts him into his personal ministry. (This was all he could do.) Second, the Son of God endures the cross, despises the shame and is made perfect through suffering: yet he leaves the work unfinished, and having obtained of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, surrenders the whole situation to the agency of the promised Paraclete, who comes in due time and miraculously guides the twelve who received him; yet finally himself retires from the work, confining our knowledge of positive spiritual obligations and services to what we see in the apostles' lives and teaching divorced from the antecedent teaching and doing of the Son of God! This may not be building on Peter alone, but it is building on Peter and the rest of the apostles without "Jesus Christ as the chief corner stone." "Honor to whom honor is due," is an axiom as reasonable as it is divine. Giving all due prominence to the work of the Spirit as the final and perfect witness of Jesus, and fully recognizing the miraculous and indispensable mission of the apostles, whom the Holy Spirit inspired and guided, we held that Jesus himself is the animating head over all, in all and for all. Although this may be conceded by the many, do they consistently hold it? Not they who make only what they see in the teaching and doing of the apostles their statutory law of spiritual obligations and services. But is it true? Is the binding authority of Jesus in his incarnate ministry as well as in the subsequent work of the Holy Spirit through the apostles? Most assuredly. "He who built the house hath more honor than the house." Hebrews 3: 4.

Jesus himself built the house—the church—on his divinity. Matt. 16: 18: "On this rock, my divinity, which you, Peter, have confessed, I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The Holy Spirit and the apostles were simply the divine agents and instrumentalities employed by the head to accomplish his work—to build his church, which he has done by his own presence and power through his chosen agencies, being inseparably connected with the work in every grade of its development, and, therefore, the author and finisher of the faith. Any conception therefore of the church giving authoritative finish to the work, either in the ministry of the Spirit, or the lives of the apostles divorced from him, as the saying in question, dethrones the only constituted head over all, and subverts the kingdom of which he is the founder. "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord." Matt. 10: 25. The apostles were not appointed to be above the Master, or to do anything whatever in the work of building the church without the dominating presence of the head. For when he gave them the great commission, he plainly assured them of his continued presence, saying, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." The Holy Spirit, his final and best agent, must not be exalted above the head, as the saying in question does; for he, like the harbinger, is not the light, but only a witness of the light.

His mission was to bear testimony to the Son of God. "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." John 15: 26. His mission was not to speak of himself, "but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak." John 16: 13. This shows the perfect subordination of the Spirit to Jesus, the only divinely constituted head. Some of the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ most essential to the perfection of the church, were committed entirely, almost, to the Holy Spirit, through the apostles. Among others, the great facts of his resurrection, coronation, and universal sovereignty, which could be more fittingly and effectually proclaimed after his ascension than by his personal ministry: therefore a part of the coming Spirit's work was to show the apostles "things to come." "He will show you things to come." John 16: 13. Yet never for one moment was the Spirit an independent sovereignty, or free from his divine and rightful subordination to the Son of God. "Whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak." Whatever he heard in counsel with the highly exalted head, that only he communicated to the apostles. His authority to speak was not ab intra se, from within himself, but ab intra Christo, from within Christ, the head over all. Therefore the Holy Spirit possessed no jurisdiction whatever over the antecedent teaching of the Son of God. He could re-publish through the apostles, as has been done many of the Master's wonderful sayings; or he could simply reveal, as he, in a few instances, certainly has done, the doings and teachings of that exalted name and person, to whom all spirits minister, and to whom the Father has put in subjection the world to come!

What, then, have we gained by this disclosure of truth? Much every way; this, chiefly, as it respects our present investigation: That the want of a direct positive command from the Holy Spirit, through the apostles, to wash the saints' feet, has no weight whatever against the perpetuity of that service. Since the binding authority of Jesus reaches back of the apostles, back of the Holy Spirit, back of all prophets and powers, terrestrial and celestial, divesting all of repealing right, and equally binding all to his own unrivalled throne, his doings and sayings, personal and represented, are forever enjoined upon his followers. This truth, to some extent, is practically recognized everywhere. We do some things solely in consideration of the Savior's personal authority, without the Spirit's re-appointment through the apostles. What is our authority for the baptismal formula, "into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit?" The words of the Master in the commission as given by Matthew 28: 19. No re-appointment of this formula appears in the subsequent mission of the Spirit, yet the Church in all the centuries have used it. Mosheim, giving the history of the church of the second century, among other things concerning baptism, adds the following: "The persons to be baptized were immersed under water, and received into Christ's kingdom, by a solemn invocation of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, according to the words of Jesus himself." Eccle. His., page 49.

Again: Where do we get our obligation and practice—our conscience and life—on the great considerations of adultery and divorce? In the personal ministry of the Master himself, and nowhere else, if we walk after the Spirit. On these paramount questions the Spirit, through the apostles,—that is, in his revelation of things subsequent to the Savior's ascension,—it is simply referential, and indeed, touching the latter he is absolutely silent. What can you see in what the apostles taught and did after the descent of the Spirit on this most essential matter of dissolving the marital relations? Nothing, absolutely nothing; for the Spirit made no communication, as far as the record goes, upon that matter. The world on this subject acknowledges no law from God, and but little from man; indeed, many nominal believers are shamefully obnoxious to the law of the Master, making the most trivial causes a pretext for divorce, and through civil toleration and wicked licentiousness make void the institution of God, refusing to hear his Son who speaks from heaven. But to the disciples, indeed, made free by the Son, there is no lesson more important, and no obedience more imperative, than the requirement of Jesus in this matter. According to the original law of God, our Savior limits the permission of divorce to the single cause of adultery, leaving all parties dissolving the marital connection for any other cause under the ban of exclusion from the kingdom of heaven!

Now, if the Holy Spirit, fulfilling through the apostles the mission on which he was sent, could leave the great law of rightful divorce in the personal ministry of Jesus, where it was instituted and properly belongs, surely the less weighty matter could be safely deposited with the same infallible tribunal. For if we may deny the perpetuity or binding authority of feet-washing because the Spirit did not positively institute it in the sayings and doings of the apostles, we may also, indeed for the very same reason, we must deny the binding authority of the Master in the great consideration of lawful divorce! His silence, therefore, in the connection here viewed, instead of being against the service of feet-washing, is simply one other circumstance of corroboration of his perfect subordination to the one only constituted head, the only Savior of the body. If, therefore, we believe in devout ascriptions to the third of the adorable three, our acclaim must be, "Come then, expressive silence, muse his praise!" The mission of Moses and the prophets was typical and evanescent; that of John the harbinger was introductory and temporary; but the ministry of the Messiah was substantial and permanent; for what he spake must be done, and what he commanded stands fast for ever! Any view of the church, then, apart from him, giving the prophets before him, apostles with him, or to his final witness after him, the Holy Spirit, whom he sent, authoritative power in his kingdom, is a complete misconception equally derogatory to the glory of the Master and the interest of the servant. Instead, therefore, of the misleading query, Is feet-washing a church ordinance? in which both the terms are misconceived, the word ordinance being limited to a sense that is absolute, and the term church being used without a suitable recognition of the head, the truth demands the following question: Is washing the saints' feet a divine obligation perpetually binding upon the disciples of the Lord? This enables us to grapple with the question on its own true and real merits, and to reach an answer founded in the satisfaction of divine sanction. What, then, is it? and what is its design? It is not an oriental and a Jewish custom as many writers and speakers regard it; for that was variable being sometimes performed by the host, but usually by the guests themselves. When Abraham entertained the three angels who announced the birth of Isaac; (see Gen. 18: 1-15,) he did not wash their feet, but commanded or entreated them to do that service. Lot likewise, receiving two angels into his house, entreated them to wash their feet. (Gen. 19: 2.) So also Laban, Rebecca's brother, entertaining Abraham's servant sent to secure a wife for Isaac, provided his guest water to "wash his feet." Gen. 24: 32.

Now, the Savior has not commanded us, or anywhere taught us, that we ought to wash our feet, an obligation that civilized nature itself properly inculcates; his command is not, "ye ought to wash your feet," but "ye ought to wash one another's feet," as he, on that occasion, had washed theirs, not his own. The intent of the command given is that we may serve one another, whereas in the Jewish custom the guests were only furnished with the means to serve themselves. Now, if we simply and only provide water that another, or others, may wash their own feet, have we fulfilled the Savior's injunction to his disciples? Can we, by merely furnishing the water, satisfy his demand and follow his example? Is that doing as he did? Does it fulfill the divine example of our Lord and Master who plainly said, I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done? About as nearly as re-baptism by sprinkling or pouring approaches the Savior's example in the Jordan.

at the hands of the harbingers. That is, it is just about as far from the original copy set for our imitation, as skillful perversion can go. He "riseth from supper" in the words of our late revision "and layeth aside his garments; and he took a towel and girded himself. Then he poureth water into the basin, and began to wash the disciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. * * * So when he had washed their feet, and taken his garments, and sat down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, the Lord, the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example that ye also should do as I have done to you." Discerning readers are likely to discover some difference between this solemn example of the Master, and the mere civility of furnishing water for a guest to wash his own feet.

Again, when the performance of his hospitably of oriental life varied from the guests' own hands to the hands of others, the host did not perform it, but a servant of his house appointed to that service. Servants appointed to wait on guests in that capacity were also the lowest classes, since the service itself was judged to be of the most menial character. This is evidently what Abigail Nabal's beautiful widow meant in her response to David's messengers sent to take her to be the king's wife. "Let thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord!" Let me be the lowest servant doing the meanest service. This was a very modest and fitting acknowledgement of the distinction conferred upon her in becoming King David's wife. By her marriage, however, she was raised entirely above a servant's place, and for this reason there is no account of her doing a servant's work.

This shows another marked difference between the Jewish custom and the Savior's appointment; for in the former, when the service was taken out of the guest's own hands, it was required of the lowest class only, while in the latter it is always reciprocal without distinction of class, the highest being bound equally with the lowest to the performance of it! "I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, and ye ought also to wash one another's feet." Another consideration sharply distinguishing the institution of Jesus from the hospitable custom of feet-washing among the Jews, is seen in the circumstances attending the former. In the custom the service was evidently performed on coming into the house, being the first act of hospitality due to the incoming guests. The people wore sandals, and not shoes covering the feet as we do. Hence when guests came their feet were covered with dust, and needed to be washed at the door before the guests were ready to recline at the table.

Now the institution of the service of washing the saints' feet was at the end of a Paschal feast, in an upper room, and while the disciples were reclining on couches. (See Mark 14: 15; Luke 22: 12.) The passover was eaten in a large upper room furnished and ready, on the last evening before the Savior's crucifixion: and the supper being ended, he washed the disciple's feet as written in John 13th chapter. Now is it probable that the first hospitality due to a host and to his house furnished and ready for the assembly had been entirely omitted up to that late hour? If their feet needed washing with the design merely of taking away the filth of the flesh, evidently the most suitable time for that carnal service was upon their coming into the room, (and not after the feast, when they were nearly ready to leave it) as their custom of hospitality positively required! The feet-washing, then, taught by the Savior, has not one single resemblance to the Jewish custom, but is most clearly distinguished from it by all the essential marks of an original institution. Because (1) this service is mutual, whereas the custom was individual. (2.) The appointment of Jesus has no respect of persons, being equally binding on the highest and lowest; but the Jewish custom was fulfilled only by the lowest grade of servants. Peter, the apostle, improperly regarding the Master's service as the carnal custom of washing feet well-known among them, and realizing its incongruity with the exalted character and position of the Master, repulsively exclaimed, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Verse 8. (3.) That was attended to at the door where the sandals of incoming guests were unloosed; this was instituted and observed at the end of a Paschal feast, sometime after the guests had been together. (4.) The Jewish custom was simply a carnal ablution intended only to take away the filth of the flesh, whereas the Master's appointment evidently relates to the higher and better interest of the spiritual man.

We lately had the pleasure of traveling a short distance on the cars with Bro. W. F. Cowden, of Lexington, Ky., who has charge of one of the churches in that city, where his labors have been most abundantly blessed within the last few years. The chief question discussed by us was missionary work, or church co-operation, on which we found little cause for disagreement. He believes that every church should be a missionary society within itself, and that if every church were a missionary society as contemplated by the Author of Christianity, there could be no need of a separate organization, except a board of men by whose aid the contributions of the churches could be distributed. Bro. C. teaches his congregation, as a fundamental doctrine of the Christian religion, to give, and to give regularly and continuously for the spread of the gospel; and he teaches them to give, not in the name of human organization, but in the name of the Church of Christ, or in the name of the local church, which is the same thing. If one church cannot sustain a missionary two or more can; and if the churches wish to put their aggregate contributions in the hands of a distributing board, as a matter of convenience it their Christian privilege to do so. This "plan" is as simple and as free from mechanical complexity as the gospel itself. We heartily endorse Bro. Cowden's missionary idea.—A. C. Review.

BAKING POWDERS CONTAINING LIME.

Why "Royal" is Absolutely Pure.

Analysis shows the presence of Tartrate of Lime in several brands of Baking Powder placed upon the market.

"DR. PRICE'S" Baking Powder contains Tartrate of Lime.

"PEARL" Baking Powder contains Tartrate of Lime.

"GROFF'S SNOW-FLAKE" Baking Powder contains Tartrate of Lime.

"DE LAND'S" Baking Powder contains Tartrate of Lime.

All BULK Baking Powders contain Tartrate of Lime.

The presence of this substance in the above-named Baking Powders results from the use of inferior Cream of Tartar in their manufacture. The Cream of Tartar of the market, from which they are made, contains Tartrate of Lime in amounts varying from six to ten per cent, and hence these powders contain this impurity as a foreign substance to a corresponding extent, which is of no value, but a positive detriment in any powder in which it is found.

The Royal Baking Powder is made from Cream of Tartar specially refined and prepared for its use by patent processes by which the Tartrate of Lime is totally eliminated. This highly important result has been attained only with great care, labor, and expense. In money alone a quarter of a million dollars has been invested in patents, machinery and appliances by which the crude Cream of Tartar, being procured direct from the wine districts of Europe and subjected in this country to these exclusive processes, is rendered entirely free, not only from the objectionable Tartrate of Lime, but from other foreign substances. This adds greatly to the cost of manufacturing Royal Baking Powder; but, as all its other ingredients are selected and prepared with the same precise care, and regardless of labor or expense, an article is produced that is entirely free from any extraneous substance, and chemically pure in all respects. No lime, earth, alum, or impurity of any kind can, by inadvertence, or by the use of adulterated articles or otherwise, be introduced into the "Royal," and it contains no ingredients except those certified by the Government and other eminent chemists necessary to make a pure, wholesome, and perfect Baking Powder.

It costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the only "absolutely pure" Baking Powder made.

FALSE TO CHRIST.

"In the Christian Evangelist, Bro. N. E. Cory says:

"In a city not one hundred miles from here, we have no church. Our worthy State Evangelist, of that State writes me that there are some seventy-five persons there who have been disciples, and others coming; but some of the good, leading wealthy ones had joined some of the sects, and were not willing to leave. One of those families went from one of our strong churches in Ohio, and another brother went from one of the churches in Chicago, and was a worker here. They join other churches, probably, some of them, for a home for a little while, until we get a church there. But they form associations and attachments that they soon become unwilling to break. Hence, at the cost of the total rejection and non-fellowship of the church and its doctrine and practices of the Lord Jesus Christ, as they before believed and practiced, they remain with the sects, when the same money and effort on their part, used in getting the believers in the one faith together, would have started and built up the cause and church of Jesus Christ in that as in any other city. Then Christians are responsible to God for the light they have. And no enlightened members of Christ's Church can innocently or ignorantly go and join and sanction the isms and errors of the sects, which are contrary to the teaching of New Testament, without God holding them responsible for so doing."

It is morally impossible for one who understands and appreciates our undenominational plea for restoration and union, to abandon it and become identified with the sectarianism which it is pledged to destroy. Some thus abandon our position because they really do not understand it, and others because they have weak convictions and a tough conscience. We are bold to say that to one who understands our position can abandon it and unite with any party in Christendom, without disloyalty to Jesus Christ. There are simply no circumstances under which it may be innocently done. The true, undenominational disciples of Jesus will stand alone, if necessary, surrounded by all that makes sectarianism attractive, wearing the name of the Master, and bowing to his authority only, till the conflict is over. Instead of surrendering to sectarianism, it is one's duty, under all circumstances, to labor to make sectarianism surrender to Christ."

That is well said by the Old Path Guide. But does not this disposition to find a home with the denominations arise very greatly from the affiliations that are continually going on with the denominations, from the effort to have ourselves recognized as one of them, as orthodox? Do all the efforts to consolidate the churches of Christ into an organic body directly lead to this? Has not the right to add the society and convention organizations familiarized Christians with the idea that human beings may change the ordinances and appointments of God somewhat to suit the circumstances of time and place, and has it not made them tolerate the idea of union with the denominations? If the denominations are worthy to be affiliated with, and encouraged as was done in the late Sunday-school convention, and which seemed to so highly please the Guide, why are they not worthy to be fraternized with in the congregations as well?

The affiliation in the Young Men's Christian Association directly leads to and prepares for this further church affiliation. The Young Men's Christian Association is as much committed to the doctrine of salvation by faith alone as is the Methodist church. They will tolerate no teaching of what are called peculiarities of church faith, and hence the man who affiliates with them as much encourages the denominational idea, as much condemns the Scripture teaching as does he who affiliates with the Methodist or Presbyterian church.

The leading advocates of the society within my knowledge, all look with approval upon the recognition of the sects as Christian bodies and of close affiliation with them. An elder in one of our largest churches said to me, "It is only a difference of opinion as to whether immersion or sprinkling is baptism. They have as much right to their opinion as we to ours." Then added, "I do not know whether I am in the right church or not." A prominent and successful preacher said to me last year, "If I had been raised in the Methodist church I would have remained there."

With these positions, it is not wonderful that a prominent Methodist preacher should write in the Christian Advocate as Mr. Green, of Franklin, did in last week's issue, as follows:

"As to the Church of Disciples (called Campbellites) it is only a question of time when it will become conservative, fall into line with the other co-operative Churches, and march on to the great conquest of the world. If I am not mistaken, the more advanced people in the towns and cities have ceased to annoy themselves or others about water; those in the more obscure country neighborhoods, may be a little bigoted yet, but in my recollection the whole Church has much improved in spirit, and I believe a few years will bring them to a consciousness of the truth that 'love is the fulfilling of the law.' This Church is quite young yet, and we must not expect it to graduate at once in charity. A young tree must have a heavy top, and a young man fresh from college must be a little conceited. I have many warm friends in this Church, and rather than give them up I'd let water baptism go. There is now a gulf stream of Christian toleration in the hearts of the people which is an earnest of a great hand-shaking between the dippers, plungers, pourers, and sprinklers. Until this hand-shaking takes place we are not fully prepared for the conversion of the heathen."

This is the impression the fraternization with the pædo-baptists is making on them. Certainly all can see the force of the plea for a return to primitive practice, is destroyed on Mr. Green and others like him.

If it is "false to Christ" for brethren to affiliate and worship with the denominations in the church associations, it cannot be that fraternization and association with them in that way that gives public and authoritative endorsement to them and leads thousands to be satisfied in these churches are harmless. Let us be careful that we be not guilty of that which we condemn.

We mean no disrespect in calling Mr. Green Mr. We call no man Reverend, because none are entitled to such honor. Mr. Green says:

"I have many warm friends in that church, (the disciples or Campbellites) and rather than give them up, I'd let water baptism go altogether."

Mr. Green, for the sake of the friendship of the Methodist church, has already let water baptism go, and adopted water rantism in its stead. I take it, he means now he would let the whole use of water as a religious service go, rather than give up these friends in that church.

Mr. Green and the Methodist church have not been willing to give up sprinkling and return to the divine baptism for the sake of honoring God, and of union and peace among God's people. "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." While Mr. Green is not willing through friendship to God, to lay aside the commandments and teachings of men, he is willing to let the whole of the commandment of God, in reference to water baptism go, rather than give up his friends in this young church. But who authorized any human being to let the appointments of God go, for the sake of any friends in the world? What kind of an assumption of power is it that presumes to let one appointment of God go? To let an appointment of God go, is to annul it. Who has power to annul, to abrogate, to make of no effect a commandment of God?

The effect of these "more advanced and christianized" disciples, on the bodies is easily seen in this. They are supposed to be approximating the same point that Mr. Green has reached.

I do not know Mr. Green personally, but did know his father for whom I entertained the highest respect and friendship, not only as a courteous gentleman and man of honor and integrity, but as having a higher reverence for the word of God than is common among Methodists. He evinced this in the memorial he presented to the Tennessee Conference in 1866, and through it to the General Conference, in which he besought the conference—

"Furthermore, let it be considered whether every other condition of membership now contained in our book of discipline, not clearly found in the word of God, should be taken away, and no inferential or conventional offence be incorporated, as such condition of membership, that the word of God alone be consulted as the all-sufficient rule, in so great a matter."

Although we thought Dr. Green should have acted on his conviction and conformed his practice to the word of God, even though the Methodist conference failed to conform its practice thereto, we honored him for his frankness in avowing that it was not in accord with the word of God, and for his protest and memorial to bring it to conformity with the divine word.

Then we had a true regard and friendship for the father which we transfer to the son, having heard of the son inheriting the kindly feelings of the father. But we suggest this, that the liberty he takes with one institution of God, one command of God, is just the same that the infidel takes with all the commands of heaven.

Our friend thinks a full and free hand-shaking of all Christians will be the forerunner of the conversion of the heathen. In this we agree with him fully, but it must be a hand-shaking in accepting the full and complete word of God, without one single institution of God or command of heaven, "let go." In assuming to let one appointment of God go, in order to a union that the heathen may be converted, we make unbelievers and infidels, the worst of heathens in our own household, and among our neighbors and friends.

Nothing so destroys the unbeliever's respect for the Bible as to see Christians treat lightly, set aside, "let go" the institutions of God. Beside, union of professed Christians is impracticable save as the union is effected through the words of the apostles. The words of the apostles can never unite men, save as they tremble at that word, walk in that word, do just what is commanded in that word, adding nothing thereto, taking nothing therefrom. All who do this, will be made one by the word.

Then acknowledging that none go beyond me in a true desire for the union of God's children, I yet maintain that he alone works for that union who clings to the word of God, and works in the institutions ordained in that word, without addition or subtraction, without change or modification. All cry for union on other grounds is delusive and ruinous, is a cry of peace where and when there is, and can be no peace.

The union, the only union that can convert the heathen, is the one that holds in highest reverence and observes with truest devotion all the commandments of the living God, and so leads men here to love and honor God while converting the heathen. Then too, "This is the love of God, that ye keep his commandments."

Then the idea of talking of coming to a love that is "the fulfilling of the law," through violating the law, is a contradiction in terms. Love leads a man to fulfill the whole law of God, then letting go a single command of God, cannot fulfill the law, is the direct opposite of the love that fulfills the law.

D. L.

The Old Path Guide reports us as saying Bro. Srygley used bitterness to the ADVOCATE in soliciting help for the Guide. This is a mistake. We never heard of his doing it, and have been careful not to say so. Bro. Allen makes this statement in Old Path Guide:

"Some weeks since Bro. Lipscomb stated, in the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, that a little over a year ago the entire editorial staff of The Old Path Guide were willing that the paper should oppose missionary societies. This we promptly and emphatically denied. By correspondence with Bro. Lipscomb we have learned, what we believed before, that he made this statement on what he regarded, and had a right to regard, as good authority. Yet this authority was very misleading. Its statements were without our knowledge or consent. Hence Bro. L. was justifiable in making his statement, and we were equally so in denying its correctness."

Our authority was both verbal and written, and claimed to speak by the direct approval of Bro. Allen. Hence we had a right to believe it correct.

The Old Path Guide refers to the discussion between Bro. Harding and myself as a family difference. We told the Guide some time ago that the editors of the ADVOCATE, like all free thinking men, differed in some minor points, and did not desire to conceal it. We now suggest to him, that the ADVOCATE family, each one of them, we trust, desires truth, and to see its own family possess and hold the truth above all others, as only the truth can benefit. Hence are more anxious to correct the errors of its own family than those of others. All may be assured that no error will be winked at because it happens to be put forth by one of the ADVOCATE family. Bro. Allen thinks that both Bro. Harding and Bro. Lipscomb hold extremes on several subjects. They would be glad to have them pointed out.

DEAR BRO. LIPSCOMB: I notice in the last number of the ADVOCATE that a young brother in Missouri is desirous of attending a Bible school that teaches the Scriptures as they are taught in the ADVOCATE. I have been a student of Mars Hill ever since January 1881, and aim to return in October. I think Mars Hill is the very school our brother is looking for, and we would be glad to have him with us.—[Brown Godwin, Boston, Tenn.]

[I had thought this was true, but the positive statement of Bro. Srygley, whose relations to Mars Hill are such that he ought to know, made me a little doubtful.—D. L.]

ITEMS.

R. C. Abernathy writes: "Married, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Giles County, on Thursday, August 7, 1884, Mr. Wesley Malone to Miss Mason Harwell, by Elder H. C. Abernathy. We trust that Sister Mason may lead her dear companion to see the truth, that the same may make him free."

J. D. Floyd, Flat Creek, Tenn., August 1, writes: "There now! after all my care in my article on carp culture not to tell a 'fishy' tale, the printers make me say very small fish are fourteen inches long, when I wrote four; but I don't blame them; with my poor chirography, I wonder they don't make me say more unreasonable things. I simply guessed when I said the fish were four inches. I measured yesterday and find them six. In the last few days we have used several year-old fish that were fourteen inches long, and all pronounce them first rate."

Rufus Green, Kent, Newton County, Mo., August 11, writes: "Since my last report from this county, I closed a meeting at Hazel Green, resulting in thirteen accessions to the church of Jesus Christ; six from the Baptists, all by confession and baptism. Among the number was an ordained Baptist preacher, aged eighty-one years, a man of some considerable note. Surely this was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, to see the old soul come tottering on his cane and publicly confess that he never was in Christ, and demand baptism as the means of entrance into him. May the Lord bless us in doing all we can for the advancement of his cause at this place. I was assisted some by Bros. Smith and Sutherland."

W. H. Carter, Lafayette, Tenn., August 8, writes: "Bro. Reneau came to his appointment here on the second Lord's day in July, but being in bad health could do but little preaching. Had one addition. Bro. Rogers and I had nine additions at Alexandria, Monroe County, Ky., week before last; one of them a Baptist preacher. We have just closed a twelve days meeting at Antioch, Trousdale County, Tenn., with twenty-one additions; eighteen by confession and baptism, and three reclaimed. This is Bro. Huffman's old neighborhood. We had the pleasure of visiting old sister Huffman several times during the meeting. They know how to make a preacher feel happy and at home. We were made to feel very sad when we were pointed to Bro. Huffman's coat and vest by his bed, hanging on a nail that he drove with his own hand. Sister Huffman is old and quite feeble. May the good Lord bless and strengthen her in her declining years."

T. C. Little writes: "Begun preaching at Rover, Bedford County, Tenn., Sunday July 20, and continued until Tuesday night. Preached in a Methodist house to attentive audiences; were treated very kindly indeed by this people. This is entirely a new field. July 27 commenced a series of meetings at Harpeth, Rutherford Co., continued until Thursday, but failed to fill three appointments during the meeting on account of excessive rains. We had a good interest for such weather, and had the pleasure of baptizing three young ladies. These brethren and friends know how to make a preacher feel at home, and that he is among brethren who appreciate the Christian religion. May the Lord bless all their efforts to advance his cause. August 3rd, at Gum Spring, Lincoln County, we commenced a meeting that continued until the night of the 8th inst. Bro. Floyd joined us on Sunday and did nearly all the preaching, which is to say, it was a clear and forcible presentation of the gospel, he fully met the most sanguine expectations of the brethren. Six were added to the army of the Lord. August 10, we met a large audience at Liberty, Lincoln County, (Methodist house) and continued to meet them morning and evening until Tuesday night. The interest was good; two were added to the fold and others seemed 'almost persuaded.' Bro. Cameron assisted us much in song and prayer. This is where we are doing mission work this year, and think it the most inviting field we know for such work. We have never been treated better than these friends treated us. We hope yet to see the cause firmly planted here. Will continue to visit them once per month."

RICH POND, KENTUCKY.

On Wednesday, August 6, we began preaching with the congregation at the above named place. The meeting, however, began in the week before, in the way of a Sunday-school Institute, by Bro. Duncan, of Kentucky, who is at present in Bro. C. C. Cline's place in that work. Bro. Tuck also, of Butler county, was present first of the week, and continued the meeting with Bro. B. F. Rogers, till I got there, and remained some two days after my arrival. Bro. Tuck is an earnest worker, and a very useful man. A little more than ten years ago we began preaching in this community, when we could hear of only four or five members in the neighborhood. We first preached at Locust Grove meeting-house, some three miles from Rich Pond. The number of members has been gradually increasing ever since. They now have a good meeting-house at Rich Pond, with baptistry, and a very comfortable, roomy house, and very convenient of access, in the midst of a good community. We continued the meeting eight days, and five persons were buried with their Lord in baptism, and the congregation much encouraged and strengthened in the work. Bro. B. F. Rogers is living there, and teaches school, and preaches there once a month generally, and then preaches at other points around, also, on Lord's days. Bro. Rogers is doing a noble work in that community, and we hope the brethren will aid him all they can in getting up a good school, and keep him there for many years to come. The brethren and sisters were earnest and regular in their attendance, both day and night, except as hindered by sickness, and thus co-operated heartily with us in the meeting. They are truly hospitable, and know how to make a laborer feel at home among them. May prosperity attend them in their work.

OFFER EXTRAORDINARY.

For the purpose of introducing the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new readers, we offer the ADVOCATE from September 1, or from time of subscription, to the end of next volume, for two dollars. This is giving the paper four months free to new subscribers. We ask our readers to give prompt attention to this, and during the protracted meeting season to see brethren and friends and make an effort to extend our circulation. We believe the ADVOCATE is amply worth two dollars. It pays no profit at this price. Those familiar with the paper know its value. If they do not esteem it worth two dollars, we will not find fault with them for not taking it. Our object in these inducements is to make a larger number of readers familiar with the ADVOCATE and its positions. Our aim is the restoration of a religion "pure and undefiled," with all the institutions of heaven, just as God ordained them. We ask the active and earnest co-operation of all who sympathize in this work.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 11.

"Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." 1 Tim. 4: 15.

My much respected friend, I trust that I showed from the word of God in my last letter, that the design of baptism as ordained of God through Christ, is the putting of a believing penitent into a relation to our heavenly Father, called "into Christ," in which relation alone pardon of sins is promised. And we are assured that it is the only ordinance that places the prepared person into that relation. And hence, believing this, we teach it, and persuade all believing penitents to submit to it as the only ordinance that inducts them into Christ, where "even the forgiveness of sins" is promised. And we dare not make a promise where we think God has made none. It is then the only safe ground of remission of sins, of adoption, and of a single promise of good to man from God. "Meditate upon these things," reflecting that where there is known safety, it is madness to stop short of it. And now, with these thoughts before us, we propose to notice the action (called the mode) of baptism. And, as in the other matter, we propose to point out what the word of the Lord teaches and submit to that, believing that whatever the action be, that the word teaches us is the safe, the only assured baptism that places us into Christ where all the promises of God center; we teach it alone, and persuade all to submit to that action, and that alone, that our heavenly Father demands of us all.

Men claim that there are three actions (modes) of baptism, but I suggest to you, that inasmuch as there is but one way to believe, one way to repent, unless we find the word of God expressly says that there are three actions of baptism, and what they are, we may rest on safe ground only in submitting to that action so denominated in his word. And now, to be brief, Is there a single passage of Scripture, that in speaking of water baptism, calls its action a sprinkling? Has any man ever found it? not one; why not? Surely because it is not there. Is there a single passage that calls pouring its action? Has it ever been found in the Testament, has any man ever asserted that it was there? No one has ever named the chapter and verse where it can be found so far as I have seen or heard of. I know, and you know, that the best that has been said of sprinkling or pouring, as the actions (modes commonly called) of baptism, is only in inferences; but from what do these inferences arise—from the meaning of the word baptize in the original language? not at all; for when resort is had to that it is far from sprinkling or pouring; these inferences arise from supposed impossibilities, unless these words are used as the action of baptism. I am no linguist, neither do I presume you to be; we are at the mercy of those who translate for us. Yet I have never seen (and I have before me while I write) a large list of lexicographers, commentators and different versions, all agreeing that the primary meaning of baptism, the original is neither sprinkle nor pour. Well what of dip or immerse? This list just mentioned is unanimous in giving the words dip, plunge and immerse; but what of that? Well, simply this, if these words represent its true meaning, they can be used where it occurs. Let us try one passage. Matt. 28: 19: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in (into) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,"—sprinkling them, pouring them, immersing them in the name of, etc. Now if you will look at the meanings of sprinkle and pour in your dictionary, it is impossible to perform the action of either as commanded in the commission. But the action is easy when performed by immersion. Yes, we can dip and be dipped; immerse and be immersed, bury and be buried in the element of water, as commanded by the Savior.

Hence we hear Paul, "Therefore we are (were) buried with him in baptism." Rom. 6: 4. "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him." Col. 2: 12. Here are two examples that emphatically speak of a burial in the action of baptism; we cannot represent this burial nor resurrection in sprinkling nor pouring, but in immersion we find the burial. And we may say that not a single case of baptism with water mentioned in the New Testament conflicts with the meaning of immersion, but none agree with the meaning of sprinkling or pouring. And all sects of professed Christians agree that immersion is baptism—many believe that neither sprinkling nor pouring is baptism. Then we, wishing to stand on safe ground, take the meaning of the original, take the general connection of the Scriptures, take the express declarations of Paul, take the unanimous verdict of the learned commentators and linguists, the universal agreement of all sects of professed Christians, and believe that there is "one baptism" in water, and teach it and persuade all to submit to immersion in water as the baptism commanded by the Savior, practiced by the apostles, taught by the learned, agreed to by all professed Christians. That action about which there has been, nor need be doubt by any of any age of the world since it was commanded. Is this not safe, is it not the only safe way? I know your heart tells you it is. I know you are interested in your salvation, in the salvation of others; you preach for that purpose; you must desire a safe way; you cannot love a doubtful way; what God has promised us he will perform, when we do what he says, and not what we will. That you and I may be so desirous of our salvation, of the salvation of those around us, that we may be humble enough, have courage enough to do and teach the Lord's will, is the prayer of—

A DISCIPLE.

NEWSPAPERS.

I know of but few papers—in fact, I cannot at this time call to my mind a single one, that has not its opposers. It would seem, upon first thought, that it would be an easy matter to publish a paper that none would object to; yet I dare say there is not a single editor or publisher of a paper, but has received many notices, "I object to something in your paper. If you will only exclude such and such, your paper will be perfect." And the exclusion of said condemned articles has brought in at least two to one objections. Then we may conclude that there can be no paper with nothing unobjectionable in it. And why? Because no mortal man is perfect; therefore he cannot produce perfection. And perfection produced, the imperfect man could not see, could not appreciate it. What then, may we conclude about papers? That none but a simpleton—and he is not likely to make a paper—will ever think he is making a paper beyond the ken of opposition. The readers, the friends of a paper, do not expect perfection; but they expect their paper, in its main features, to inculcate principles, precepts and facts, in accord with prospectus or head lines; and these corresponding with their own views, they pay the money that they may have these principles ventilated and spread among the people, that they may unite for one common cause. Hence we have Temperance, Masonic, and various denominational papers. No temperance man, however, expects to endorse everything published in his temperance paper; neither does the Mason, etc. Yet each expects his peculiar paper to make prominent the main features for which the paper is published; and as this is done to the exclusion of mooted, violent, personal wrangle, so may the prosperity of the paper be counted. It would seem amusing for two temperance papers, both professing to advocate true temperance principles, slashing at each other; it proves one of two things, (and sometimes both,) that both are wrong, or that the love of money is the main lever that is prizing up so much bitter trash, and scattering it to the four winds to be inhaled by the readers of each, thereby making parties of a party. I think I can appreciate a "clinger" to correct principles (as he conceives them). I think I could detest a "truckster" to popular favor. But the nice point is to know when a principle is worth clinging to, and when popular favor is crawling after.

But I have wandered a little. I set down for the purpose of asking if editors or publishers, belonging to the same fraternity, ever thought how wrong it was to thrust their personal matters between each other, upon their readers, when it only created partyism, or (generally) disrespect for both belligerents. Remember, I say, personal matters. But he is a traitor to his readers, who sits quietly by and sees the fundamental principles, upon which the paper proposed to launch out its existence upon, uprooted or overspread with disorganizing seed. Come to the rescue in those fundamentals, but let immaterials beat themselves out upon the waves of opinion.

I do not think readers ought to endorse everything they read in a paper, even though it be called "our paper." Yet I do think that the hands of the publisher ought to be held up, when battling for what we conceive to be fundamentals and essentials, to the cause we espouse, though these pertain to the affairs of this life. And men do in politics, in worldly institutions, rally to the support, when these principles are supposed to be in danger of being subverted. But truth compels me to admit (so far as my experience has taught me) that while men rally for earthly principles, though they disagree in many minor points, yet religiously they let minor points of difference keep them from sustaining the hands of him who is guarding the door, and beating back elements of dissensions, schisms, and heresies. I have known some to refuse simply because of worldly institutions, or hopes of honor; and yet deep down in their hearts fealty to the Lord Jesus reigned supreme, and it only wanted the touch of a kindling ray to make it burst out into a flame of love and charity. Disciples of Jesus, the fundamentals, the life-giving principles inaugurated by the Father through his Son, are being overspread by fundamentals of men; the necessities of Jesus, by the conventionals of men. And there are but few of the heralds that are giving out certain and distinct warnings. Will we not aid them in exposing fallacies, before these engulf the only craft (the gospel ship) that can carry travellers of time to the portals of eternal bliss? J. K. BLACKMAN.

NOTES FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Closed a meeting of eight days at Hickory Flat, in Benton County, last Lord's day; only one made the good confession. The floods of rain did much to prevent a hearing. My son, W. E. Crum, is now engaged in a meeting at Hopkins' Crossing in this (Tippah) county. I begin a meeting at Damascus next Saturday, and at Antioch in Tenn., Saturday before the fourth Lord's day instant, will write again.—[W. A. Crum, Ripley, Miss., August 6, 1884.]

The fourth Lord's day in July we began our work at Hill's Chapel, and continued six days. During our meeting three were added to the church and much interest manifested all the time. Bro. Willie Craig will address the people to-night and conclude the meeting. We are now on our way to Baxter's Chapel, where we desire to begin work to-morrow (first Lord's day in August.) We have much work before us, and with the aid of God we hope to do some good.—[F. C. Sowell, Brentwood, Tenn., August 2, 1884.]

I commenced a meeting at Oak Grove, Tenn., Lincoln County, fourth Lord's day in July. Bro. F. W. Smith, my fellow companion in the gospel, joined me on Monday following, and helped us throughout the meeting to rightly divide the word, giving to each his portion in due season. We continued until Thursday following, sowing the good seed of the kingdom. The visible result of which was the removal of three subjects from Satan's government into the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. We found that Bro. Jno. Alsop, who lives there, was not ashamed to exhort his friends and neighbors to obey God. The interest was good and seemed to be on the increase up to the last.—[M. H. Northcross, Bunker Hill, Tenn., August 2, 1884.]

Saturday before the third Lord's day in July, I went to my regular appointment at Lankford, near Wills Point, in Van Zandt County, and began a meeting which was continued over the fourth Lord's day. There were six additions. Three brethren were chosen to serve them as elders or overseers, and three as deacons. Bro. V. I. Stirman, of Terrell, was with me and did some very good preaching; also Bro. J. L. Robertson, of Dallas County, was with us. Bro. S. R. Ezzell, of Greenville, is conducting a meeting for us at Bethel, near Mineola. We have had seven additions up to this time, all by confession and baptism but one, who is from the Baptists. I am aiding by exhortation, prayer and song. May the word of God, through the GOSPEL ADVOCATE, "run and have free course" everywhere.—[W. Lyles, Mineola, Texas, August 2, 1884.]

A Safeguard.

The fatal rapidity with which slight Colds and Coughs frequently develop into the gravest maladies of the throat and lungs, is a consideration which should impel every prudent person to keep at hand, as a household remedy, a bottle of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

Nothing else gives such immediate relief and works so sure a cure in all affections of this class. That eminent physician, Prof. F. Sweetzer, of the Maine Medical School, Brunswick, Me., says:—

"Medical science has produced no other anodyne expectorant so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It is invaluable for diseases of the throat and lungs."

The same opinion is expressed by the well-known Dr. L. J. Addison, of Chicago, Ill., who says:—

"I have never found, in thirty-five years of continuous study and practice of medicine, any preparation of so great value as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, for treatment of diseases of the throat and lungs. It not only breaks up colds and cures severe coughs, but is more effective than anything else in relieving even the most serious bronchial and pulmonary affections."

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

Is not a new claimant for popular confidence, but a medicine which is to-day saving the lives of the third generation who have come into being since it was first offered to the public.

There is not a household in which this invaluable remedy has once been introduced where its use has ever been abandoned, and there is not a person who has ever given it a proper trial for any throat or lung disease susceptible of cure, who has not been made well by it.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has, in numberless instances, cured obstinate cases of chronic Bronchitis, Laryngitis, and even acute Pneumonia, and has saved many patients in the earlier stages of Pulmonary Consumption. It is a medicine that only requires to be taken in small doses, is pleasant to the taste, and is needed in every house where there are children, as there is nothing so good as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL for treatment of Croup and Whooping Cough.

These are all plain facts, which can be verified by anybody, and should be remembered by everybody.

KENTUCKY CONTRIBUTIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE.

BY J. A. HARDING, OF WINCHESTER, KY., TO WHOM
ALL COMMUNICATIONS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT
SHOULD BE ADDRESSED.

BRO. LIPSCOMB'S CRITICISM—No. 3.

In a former article we considered Bro. Lipscomb's first affirmation, viz., that the apostles and first preachers sometimes received aid from those who were not members of the church of Christ. In this we propose to consider the second one, which is as follows:

2. The apostles and first preachers made known their wants to the brethren that they might receive gifts for their support in the work of preaching. This is Bro. Lipscomb's position; in it I am quite sure he is mistaken; though I must confess that I have been so heartily disgusted with the selfish, time-serving, money-loving spirit that seems to animate so many of the preachers, it behooves me to write with caution on the subject.

"I owe a duty to my family," shouts one man, "and the moment my brethren cease to pay me for preaching that moment I will cease to preach," "I can make two thousand dollars per year at law," says another, "and I ought therefore to receive that much for preaching." "It is unjust to my family, to myself, and to the brethren themselves for me to preach unless they will pay," claims a third. "Pay me thirty-five dollars per week and my traveling expenses and I will come and hold you a meeting; otherwise I will not," says a fourth. And so they go on belching forth their covetous cries, seeming not to realize that the Christian is the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, that he has been bought with the blood of the Lord, and that it is his duty to spend and be spent in his service.

It is every Christian's duty to preach the gospel, as he has opportunity and ability, with all the power that is in him, whether any body else does right or not. It is an obligation which we owe to the Lord Jesus Christ. He who refuses to perform it unless he is well paid for it, is clearly of the class that supposes "godliness is a way of gain," of which Paul speaks in such a strong, contemptuous way.

The readers of the Advocate, however, know well enough that Bro. Lipscomb is as strongly opposed to this money-loving, time-serving spirit as I am, or as any man is. We are perfectly agreed that the Christian should preach, pay or no pay, as much as in him lies. But the question about which we differ is, Should the preacher appeal to his brethren to give him money for his support in the work? Should he make known his wants and solicit contributions? Bro. Lipscomb and almost all others say, yes; I say, no. But before we come to the question of making known wants, another may be profitably considered, viz., Should the preacher solicit contributions for his support before he has any wants? This is an eminently practical question, too, for it is not unusual to find preachers, worth from five hundred to five thousand dollars, soliciting contributions for their support, stipulating for salaries, and saying they will not preach unless they can get them. And occasionally we find men worth much more than the larger of the above named sums making such appeals. Now it seems quite clear to me that when a Christian has any of his Father's money in his possession, money that has been given into his hands by the Giver of good gifts for the advancement of the cause of Christ, and the good of humanity, that he should use this before he asks for more of God or man. We should use wisely and liberally what we have, working diligently always for the advancement of the cause, realizing that the salvation of the souls of men is of infinitely greater importance than the attainment of all mere earthly acquisitions combined. Jesus says, "Be not anxious for the morrow: for the morrow shall have anxieties of its own. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We are to be content when we have enough for to-day. Hence he taught his disciples to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread;" and hence Paul says in the letter to the Philippians, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content;" and to the young preacher Timothy, he says, "We brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us therewith be content;" and to the Hebrews he says, "Let your conduct be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said I will never leave thee." But Jesus makes a still stronger statement than any of these, for he says, "Sell that ye have and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." "Seek not what you shall eat and drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind." "But rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you."

It seems to me therefore that as long as a man has money he should use it freely in the Master's service, without concerning himself in the slightest about where more will come from when that is gone. If he has five dollars, and needs to use five dollars, let him use it freely. More will come when that is gone, and just as fast as he needs it. Bro. Lipscomb refers to a matter in his last that will illustrate what I mean. He says, "If Bro. Harding had treated us last winter as Paul did his Roman brethren, we would have taken pleasure in helping him on his way." The facts were these: I left home about the first of January for Nashville, expecting to hold a meeting at Franklin College, near the city, having enough money to pay my way and one or two dollars more. Upon arriving at the city I hastened to the office of the Advocate. Neither of the editors was in the office. Bro. Lipscomb had just left for the stable to get his horse and buggy to go out home. From some cause or other he came back to the office, which I understood was an unusual thing for him to do. This suited me as I was anxious to spend the night with him. From him I learned that there was much sickness at Franklin College. That night it became extremely cold, and I determined it would be wise to go on south to my next appointment. Indeed I was assured that it would be almost impossible to hold a meeting at the College. But it would require at least six or eight dollars to pay my way and I had not more than two. Of course the question arose, what shall I do? Bro. Lipscomb told me, when he found that I was not disposed to stop in Nashville, about a congregation below the city on the line of my travel, and about a brother there who was anxious to see me. He wanted to know if I could not stop and spend the next day (the Lord's day,) with this brother and meet there with the brethren. I knew well enough if I asked him to lend me ten dollars he would gladly do it; but I thought of my rule and determined to go while I had any money, and then stop and make more; for I was sure the Lord would either send me money, or open up a way for me to make it.

After breakfast we drove into the city, where we met Bro. Sewell, (whom I then saw for the first time,) and, to my surprise and delight, Bro. Daugherty who was also on his way south. The mercury stood at nine degrees below zero and every one kept close about the fires.

While sitting in the office talking and waiting for the train, which was several hours behind time on account of cold and snow, Bro. Sewell remarked, "Bro. Harding there is some money here for you. You sent in too much with the last list of names. So you can credit yourself with it in sending in subscriptions hereafter. I will see just what the sum is." I answered with great promptness, as doubtless the reader would expect, saying, "If you have any money of mine, you can just hand it over, as I am going south among brethren few in numbers and poor in purse." Bro. Lipscomb laughingly remarked, "I suppose it will not do to trust the Lord then, when you go south." "Yes," I said, "I will take what he has given me, and go and trust him for more when the need comes." Bro. Sewell handed me six dollars which paid my way to the next appointment. Bro. Lipscomb little imagined that even then I was receiving another of many startling illustrations of the fact that with the want comes the supply. Indeed the statements of Jesus' are so simple and unequivocal, and I have received so many most unmistakable illustrations of them within the last few years, that it seems to me it would be in me the very perfection of infidelity not to believe. Doubtless Bro. Lipscomb, as he says, would have taken pleasure in helping me on my way. I fondly believe that the Heavenly Father took pleasure in helping me, that he was pleased at my delight in receiving the six dollars; and I am sure that the satisfaction that I had in the thought that I had asked HIM to supply all my needs, and that I had looked to HIM alone, was not displeasing in his sight. If a man will do his duty, and postpone making known his wants just as long as he can, ever looking to God and trusting in him, he will never publish them; for the supply will come before the publication every time.

But Bro. Lipscomb reminds us that Philipians communicated with Paul as concerning giving and receiving. He thinks Paul must have communicated with them; that is, that he must have told them his wants. The argument here is based upon the meaning of communicate, to tell, to inform, to consult. Now let the reader remember that communicate is not the proper word for the place, that the revised version has in its place the expression "had fellowship;" no church had fellowship with me in giving and receiving. It is simply intimated in the text that the Philipians had sent supplies to Paul, and that he had received them; and thus they became partners with him, had fellowship with him, in his work. There is not the slightest intimation that he had petitioned them to do it. I once received through the mail a check for thirty-one dollars, and with it a letter from a friend, in which he said, "My wife and I want an interest in your work." They had fellowship with me. If I were to write them saying, "After I left your city you alone had fellowship with me in my work as concerning giving and receiving," could it be legitimately inferred from my letter that I had written asking for a gift? Certainly not. No more can it be in the case of Paul and the Philipians.

But the mailing hour has arrived, and this must go, in order to be in time for insertion in the next issue. I may have more to say hereafter on the subject.

END OF KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT.

Those are the most dangerous seducers who suggest to sinners that which tends to lessen their dread of sin and fear of God.

ITEMS, PERSONALS, ETC.

Bro. Shelton, of Franklin, is engaged in a protracted meeting at Cairo, West Tennessee.

Bro. Larimore begins a meeting at South Harpeth, on Saturday before the fourth Lord's day in this month.

Bro. F. M. Davis, who has been in Kansas for the past two or three years, was in our office last week. He is back on a visit to his family.

R. W. Officer, Paris, Tex., August 8, writes: "Bro. A. B. Smith is preaching here this week at night. Two baptisms last night after the sermon. The Indian mission is the work of the church in Paris."

We are sorry to learn that on Saturday, August 9, Brother and Sister Loos were called upon to give up their youngest child, a little girl a few years old. They had gone on a visit to Louisville, and the little girl sickened and died at Sister Loos' father's. The parents have our earnest sympathy in this bereavement.

A. C. Henry, Hartselle, Ala., August 10, writes: "Just returned from Russellville. Had a good meeting. Four added by confession and baptism, three of them good men, the heads of families. Three were then also added by letter. Preached at Moulton on my return; one added by confession and baptism. Am to preach here to-day."

We call attention to the advertisement of Williamson County Nursery. W. H. Smith proprietor. Bro. Smith is an old experienced nurseryman, and familiar with the fruits that do best in this country. He claims to have an unusually good stock of nursery plants on hand. Our readers needing such things can address him as directed in advertisement.

We are pained to learn of the sudden death of Bro. W. J. Sowell, of Maury County. Bro. Sowell is the father of Bro. Felix Sowell: was a good man and will be greatly missed both in the neighborhood and church. The family that has so often of late, been called upon to return the loved ones to mother earth, has our sincere sympathy in this saddest bereavement—the giving up the husband and father."

B. W. Lauderdale, Bailey, Tenn., August 12, writes: "I have just returned from a meeting of nine days with the church at Piny Grove, Lafayette county, Miss. I preached nineteen discourses. Our house was the grove, God's first temple. The interest was not so good as usual. Five persons were added to the church by baptism. I have three days rest, then go to Thyatira to begin a meeting there."

W. L. Butler, Caseyville, Ky., August 14, writes: "I am engaged in a meeting at Cypress, Union county, Ky. Several additions to date, and fine attendance. Bro. J. F. Story, of Caseyville, Ky., expects to leave this field and go to Texas. He is an industrious, faithful, preacher. You might aid him by announcing his intended change, and requesting any church desiring to aid such a preacher to write him at Caseyville, Ky."

C. B. Colvin, Dexter City, Mo., August 12, writes: "I have been preaching for the people of Morley, Mo., once per month for twelve months, and have immersed ten persons into Christ, and organized with fifteen members. They seem to be at work. I also commenced a meeting at East Prairie on Saturday night before the first Lord's day in August, and held until Thursday night, and I immersed twenty-seven, and organized with thirty-seven. They have agreed to go to work according to Scripture. To the Lord be all the praise. Let us work on faithfully to the end. We need more preachers here."

The Fanning Orphan School will be opened September 15th for reception of pupils. A few destitute orphans over twelve years of age of good health will be received as pupils, to be supported by the school. Churches, charitably disposed persons and associations, may send destitute orphans at the rate of forty dollars per term of five months. Others, not destitute orphans, will be received subject in all respects to the same discipline and regulations, at fifty dollars per term of five months. The inmates of the school will be required to do the entire domestic work of the establishment except the cooking, they will in turn assist in this, so as to learn something of the most important accomplishment connected with this life; will be thoroughly taught in the elements of a good English education, and as practicable, will be taught to cut and make their clothes, and will be schooled in all work suitable for women to do, to prepare them for making a living. Having failed for the present to secure a suitable superintendent and manager, the school will be opened under the instruction of Miss Emma Page, with the advice and assistance of Mrs. C. Fanning and Prof. A. J. Fanning. Miss Page graduated at Hope Institute, under the supervision of Pres. T. Fanning and wife, and afterwards attended the Tennessee Normal School, Nashville. She has taught at Burritt College and other places, and has proved herself an excellent teacher and manager of children. In connection with this school, a day school for girls will be opened, in which pupils from the neighborhood will be received at the rate of $2.50 per month tuition. John H. Ewing, Secretary of Executive Committee.

In our news department will be found an account of the terrible murder of a number of Mormon elders, in Lewis County, Tenn., by a disguised mob, one of whom was killed. The Mormons are a great disgrace and shame to this country, but that style of dealing with them is more disgraceful still. We think that while the public press denounce these acts, they are greatly responsible for them. They frequently speak of the threats to treat them to a coat of "tar and feathers" or other violence, approvingly. Even the religious press occasionally notice such threats without condemnation. This encourages the idea. When the threats are put into execution it is too late to then condemn them. The whole spirit of violence is wrong, and it ought to be discouraged in its first manifestations. Any form of violence is liable to lead to murder. It is more than probable that this mob did not intend murder. But when violence was used to repel, then it was met by violence and a number of murders is the result. We are sure that Mormons have been consolidated and strengthened by the appearance of persecution. While we say nothing as to how the law should deal with the crimes which constitute a part of its life, we do know no Christian should encourage violence, and should with reference to this as to all other evils, rely upon those weapons which "are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong-holds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God." The Christian should discourage the first buddings of the spirit of violence. If we encourage the spirit, we must expect to reap the fruit.

J. J. Sessions, Awins, Wilcox County, Ala., August 13, writes: "I have just returned home; have, with Bro. T. G. Gafford, of Honoraville, just closed a meeting at Little Rock, Butler Co., Ala., with twenty-one additions; four restored, five baptized, twelve from Baptists and Methodists. I wish to state that there will be a consultation meeting held at Little Rock, Butler Co., Ala., Saturday and Sunday, October 6 and 7, 1884, to make an effort to evangelize South Alabama. Come one, come all; let's go to work brethren, help in a good cause, help is needed; let us meet and divide labor. Then work for Christ."

General News.

DOMESTIC.—On the morning of August 10, occurred one of the bloodiest tragedies ever enacted in this State. For several years there has been an organization of Mormons in Lewis county. There has been a very bitter feeling against them among the citizens, but until the 10th no forcible means were taken to get rid of them. About ten o'clock, on Sunday morning, three Mormon elders held a meeting at the house of a man name Condor. While the meeting was in progress, ten or twelve men in disguise entered the house and ordered a young man named Hutson and Condor's son to surrender. They showed fight, when one of the masked men knocked young Condor down with a club, killing him instantly. Hutson fired, and killed one of the disguised men, who afterwards proved to be Dave Hinson, a respectable citizen of Hickman county. The attacking party then fired on the elders, killing two of them. Four persons were killed outright, and two elders who are missing are supposed to have been killed also. Condor's wife was shot, and will probably die.—On the afternoon of Sunday, August 10, the people along the Atlantic coast were startled by a severe earthquake shock, which lasted about ten seconds. The shock was felt from Maine to Maryland. The severest shock was felt at Sea Bright, N. J., where the depot was shifted from side to side, shaking up the contents, and alarming its sole occupant. Another shock was felt on the day following, but not so severe as the first.—Terrible disclosures have come to light in regard to the Greely expedition. It is established beyond all question that cannibalism was resorted to by the starving men of the party, and shows that the lives of those saved were preserved only by eating the dead bodies of their companions.—The Wall Street Bank has been forced to suspend. The cashier, Dickinson, is behind about $500,000, and is supposed to be in Canada. President Evans, who was formerly a resident of Nashville, says that depositors will be paid in full, and stockholders about fifty per cent.—There are now five hundred men engaged at work on the Muscle Shoals Canal, and work on it is being pushed.—Nashville was treated to a $60,000 fire on the night of August 14. The Nashville Cooperage Company, one of our leading manufactories, was destroyed by fire. The insurance was only about $38,000.

FOREIGN.—Parliament was prorogued on the 14th inst., with the usual ceremonies.—The agitation against the house of Lords now outweighs every other question in English politics.—The English do not like the suggestion of American arbitration in the quarrel between France and China.—The London Truth states that the Queen has made a new will. She is said to have saved a great amount of her income annually.—The Congress of the two houses of Parliament at Versailles agreed to accept a reduced salary for the past four months, the balance to be donated to the sufferers from cholera.—The magnificent stables of Prince Chilkoff, of Tootla, the leading manufacturing town of European Russia, were burned last week. About one hundred valuable race horses perished in the flames. It is thought the Nihilists set them on fire.—The cholera is on the increase at Marseilles, but it is thought the excessive heat is the cause.

J. T. Eanes, Spencer, Tenn., August 4, writes: "I held a meeting of three days at Cold Springs Bledsoe County, Tenn., including July 20. I preached five discourses, and had, as an immediate result, one addition; a young man from the world. This was my first protracted effort and first baptism, but if God wills, it will not be my last."

W. H. Sandy, Noblett's Chapel, Tenn., June 7, writes: "I was with the brethren at Cherry Hill last Lord's day. They have Bro. H. J. Spivy to preach for them this year. He is a good speaker, and I believe a good man. They have a good Lord's day school, and are doing some excellent work. I opened services for them, and then took charge of the class. I am only a boy, and have not been working for Christ very long, but I hope you all will pray for me that I may continue in work."

NOTES FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY UNCLE MINOR.

Come, dear children, and let me tell you of some of the wonderful places and sights in this great country. And as Chicago is said to be the most wonderful city in the world in rapid growth, let us commence there. It is situated on the South shore of Lake Michigan. The name is of Indian origin, said to mean, "wild onion." It was first settled about the year 1831, previous to which time it was a frontier post called "Fort Dearbourn." I remember hearing my old father telling of a long spell of sickness he had in this fort in 1813 while he was a soldier fighting against the British and Indians. I have always regretted not writing down what he said of his early trials and suffering in those early times. But Chicago has grown like magic since then; to give you some idea of its growth, in 1840 it had 4,000 inhabitants; 1850 it had 28,000; 1860 it had 150,000; 1870 it had 300,000; 1880 it had 500,000; 1884 it had 650,000. There is no city in the world growing so rapidly. The principle business streets of the city are wide and well paved. It has many magnificent buildings, such as the Custom House, which is said to have cost three million dollars. Also the Palmer and Grand Pacific Hotels; also thousands of fine residences, many of them costing over one hundred thousand dollars. The city also has many beautiful parks and drives, as well as many large manufacturing establishments making ploughs, reapers, threshers, engines, coaches, and almost everything you can think of, employing over 125,000 people in making things to sell. Chicago is said to handle more grain, pork and lumber than any city in the world. I might continue to tell of its wonders until you would get tired, but before we leave the place, I want to tell you that there are a great many good people in the great city, but the great majority are very wicked. While they have many houses built for the worship of the true God, yet the most of the people know nor care but little for the simple story of the cross of Christ.

Now let us take a long ride of about six hundred miles to Pittsburg, Pa. This is called an "iron city," because they have so many iron furnaces, forges and foundries. It is a black looking city on account of their burning so much coal in their manufacturing establishments, but they have lately discovered that they can get gas out of the earth which will answer for coal, which makes no smoke and gives just as much heat. I was in one large rolling mill that was using gas almost exclusively. This gas was discovered by some parties who were boring in the earth for coal oil, or petroleum; they did not get enough oil to pay them, but after boring two thousand feet deep they struck this gas, which threw out water, rock and everything else that was in the well. They finally succeeded in confining the gas and are now conveying it to different parts of the city for lighting the streets and houses, as well as heating and cooking. Since the first well was discovered about a year ago, there have been large companies formed and several hundred wells have been bored, all of them finding some gas; and it is thought by many that the time will come when they will have no use for coal or wood. What a great blessing this will be for very poor people who have but little money to buy with in these great cities. The gas cost very little, as it comes up out of the earth of its own force, and there is no cost except boring and piping to get it. Pittsburg, too, is a large city of three hundred thousand inhabitants, most of them engaged in manufacturing iron into something useful or ornamental.

But now let us take a ride through the mountains; here we go up the Alleghany river, it is a beautiful stream, not so large as many rivers you may have seen, but it is usually very clear and swift, the grass and trees grow down to the water's edge, making it look cool and pleasant on a hot summer day. The railroad usually runs along on the banks of the stream, but sometimes they tunnel through a hill of solid rock in the place of going a long ways around.

One hundred miles brings us up to Oil City, Petrolia, and the region where they get so much petroleum out of the earth; from our car window now we can often see hundreds of derricks which have been erected for the purpose of boring wells. A derrick is a high wooden structure, and looks at a distance like a church steeple. I have counted at one sight as many as two hundred. Many of the wells were being pumped, but many abandoned because they did not produce enough oil. One man usually attends to twelve or fifteen wells. They seldom use coal or wood to run their machinery, as they have enough natural gas to give them all the heat they want, and the wells are usually close together. I have seen as many as five on one acre of ground, but they do not usually bore them this close together. Some of the wells do not produce more than two or three barrels in twenty-four hours, but many of them produce five hundred to one thousand barrels, especially when they are first bored. No wonder coal oil is so cheap. The railroad facilities are not sufficient to carry it all to market, so large companies are formed called pipe companies; they have large iron pipes layed under the ground running to Cleveland, New York, and other places at distances of five hundred miles or more; the oil is pumped into these large pipes, (from one to two feet in diameter) and thus forced to market, but a great deal is hauled on the railroads. No doubt you are anxious to know how they keep so much oil as they pump it out of the wells. Often when they strike a large flowing well, the oil is wasted, but they are usually prepared to take care of it by pumping it into large iron tanks which hold from ten to fifty thousand gallons. You can see these great iron tanks in every direction. The oil is kept in these tanks until wanted. It is a beautiful sight at night to see the whole mountains lighted up with gas from these wells. While at Bradford one cool rainy morning, I told the hotel porter I would be glad to have a little fire, he instantly lit a match and set fire to the gas in my little stove, and in a few moments I had all the heat I wanted.

Now, let us start from Redbank, and go up into the mountains, sure enough. Up, up and down we go, along little streams, for one hundred miles, to Driftwood. There is nothing to be seen but great high mountains, jaggy cliffs, wild woods, saw mills, poor people, and huckleberries. I would not like to live in Pennsylvania, if there were no better country than this. Yet these people make a living by getting saw-logs and making beautiful pine lumber. Usually the mountains were too steep for wagons and teams, and they would cut the logs on the mountain sides, and pitch them down to the creek, floating them to the mills in high time of water. Yet I saw several old-fashioned sleds in use along these mountains.

By-and-by we reach Lock Haven, a beautiful little city in a good section of farming and mining country. Here we had a pleasant stop over Lord's day. Met the children at Sunday-school, and spoke for the congregation of disciples at eleven o'clock. These dear little children sang the same sweet songs that you do, and learned the same Bible lessons. Would be glad to stop here and show you several places of interest, but must pass on.

As we leave the city, near Mill Hall we must stop a few moments, and go into a large axe factory, and see them making such useful and common implements. All the machinery is run by water power. First, they take a large bar of iron, cut it up into pieces suitable for making an axe; then it is placed into a furnace and heated; then it is placed under a heavy tilt hammer, shaped and turned for the eye; then it is welded ready for the steel, which is usually put on like a clip or cap over the iron, and then welded; after it is shaped, which is all done by a man turning it under these heavy tilt-hammers, it is then taken to the grinders; then it is polished and tempered, then polished again; and lastly it is painted, branded, and boxed, ready to be shipped to any part of the world. I know many of the boys would be delighted to see them making axes, hatchets, drawing knives, and augers.

Our next stop is at Altoona, said to be one of the highest points between the oceans. Here is a very large, fine hotel, and many fine residences, where the city people who are rich come to spend the summer. Here, too, are located the great car shops of the Pennsylvania railroad. They build engines, coaches, and everything a railroad needs. The scenery from here to Johnstown is beautiful. The railroad men, at many of the sharp curves and high cliffs, have planted flower-gardens, and have fountains, making one think he is almost in a fairy land, until he looks down thousands of feet below, in the valleys, where trees look like little bushes, and houses look like specks. All along the line of this road, from New York to Pittsburg, they have double track. The fast trains make but few stops, seldom taking coal, and never stopping to take water. But they have water in long iron troughs, which are laid in the centre of the track. They are about eighteen inches wide and six inches deep. They drop a spout, or shoe, down in front of the water-tank, and while the engine is running along the water runs back into the tank, thus saving a great deal of time.

At Johnstown is another place of interest. Many foundries, mills, and forges, are here. A look into the nail and tack factory, as well as to see them making wire, would interest you. Will have to take you back some other time.

From this place to Cumberland, Maryland, is across the Alleghany mountains. Nothing of interest to be seen, except the coal mines, and a few large, abandoned iron furnaces. The scenery in many places is beautifully grand—high mountain peaks, with here and there a beautiful little valley and stream. Cumberland is a place of about ten thousand inhabitants, located among the mountains and valleys. It is said to have been settled over two hundred years. I was shown many houses over one hundred years old. I have always had a reverence for old things and people. This may be owing to my early training. I reverence and love the memory of my old grand-mothers and grand-fathers, and the old places at which they lived.

From Cumberland we will now take a ride of one hundred miles, on the fast train of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, to Grafton, West Virginia. We start just twenty minutes late. The conductor cries "all aboard," and off we go, up the creek, winding through the mountains. Slowly we go for ten miles, for it is up-grade; but now, as we have twelve large coaches crowded with people, another large engine helps us pull up around the curves, which are often so short that, looking ahead, you can see the broadside of the engine, and looking back, you can see the people sitting in the rear coach. Now we begin to get higher and higher, almost to the top of the mountains. Look out below! See the great river, which, a few hours ago, was so still and quiet; now it is surging among the rocks, white and foaming with rage! Two hundred feet below, you see trees, little houses, men, and rocks—solid masonry built upon the side of the mountain to keep it from sliding in. But now we are on top of Alleghany mountains. We dismiss one engine and glide along on a level plain for fifteen miles, stopping only at Lake Park, where there are many beautiful houses and flower-gardens, built by wealthy people as summer resorts. The country is poor and barren. The trees are small, and look like they may have been stunted by the long, cold winters. But soon we start down the mountain, among as many high cliffs and winding streams as when we came up; but we go so fast that you cannot see much. Dashing down we come, until all the passengers are excited. "What's the matter?" cries out one. "Twenty minutes late," says the conductor. Whizzing, whirling, turning, jumping, we go, until we find ourselves first on this side of our seat, then on that, then again holding fast to the back of our seats. You try to count between telegraph poles, and you commence, one—then one, possibly two. But everybody is excited; the thing must be running away! We dash again around short curves, over high bridges, through dark tunnels, all alike—no stop—until everybody is tired with anxiety. At last we stop at Grafton, still among the mountains.

But I must leave you here, as the ride has been too much for my nerves. I must lay down in a quiet hotel, and rest. So, good-bye. We are yet just twenty minutes late.

The Lord's Prayer is not, as some fancy, the easiest, the most natural of all devout utterances. It may be committed to memory quickly, but it is slowly learnt by heart.—Maurice.

LUTIE GRAPE VINES.

In offering this remarkable grape for sale, we wish to say to all grape growers that we have been growing and experimenting for these twenty years on different varieties, numbering a hundred or over, and so far have found nothing to equal the Lutie in all the essential qualities for profitable grape culture. We gave notice a year ago of this claim, and repeat it in this, that we challenge the world to show a better grape for this climate—hardier and thrifter in growth, free from rot, or finer in size or quality. But these are not its chief merits. It will produce more fruit at two years old, than any grape known to us can be made to produce in three. We challenge the test. If any have failed to see the Lutie in bearing, it is not our fault. We have invited all to come and see for themselves. Now, gentlemen of the vitis craft, come to taw, or clear the way for "Miss Lutie."

We offer well-rooted one year old vines of this grape at the following rates:

One vine, well-rooted, one year old, -	$3 00
Two " " " " " " " " " "	5 00
Five " " " " " " " " " "	10 00
Twelve " " " " " " " " " "	20 00

Orders for Lutie vines will be received till our fall delivery, which will be November or until our present stock is exhausted, due notice of which will be given. From the number of orders coming in at this early day we cannot hope to be able to fill any spring orders at all. Therefore all desiring vines for the coming spring must order early and secure them this fall. Our fall delivery for city and country orders will be made at Nashville, on Saturday, November 1, 1894. Orders from a distance will be sent by mail or express, as desired. Money must be sent in by November 1, or paid on delivery of vines. Address

Mars Hill College.

With pleasure we lay before our readers the following extracts from the Fourteenth Annual Announcement of Mars Hill College, an institution perpetually wielding a wonderful and wide-spread influence for truth, refinement and righteousness.—EDITORS.

POSITIONS PROCURED FOR OUR PUPILS.

We make a specialty of preparing pupils for

(1.) PREACHING; (2.) TEACHING; (3.) PREACHING and TEACHING.

Many educated here—among whom are successful lawyers, physicians, merchants, salesmen;
mechanics, farmers, editors, authors, teachers and preachers—have so demeaned themselves, that the humility, fidelity, integrity, accuracy and ability of "Mars Hill students" have become proverbial. There is, consequently, such a demand for the services of our pupils, that we deem it perfectly safe to promise to procure pleasant, profitable and honorable positions for all who qualify themselves here for usefulness. Indeed, for several years we have been able to fill comparatively few of the positions tendered.

HEALTHFULNESS!

Mars Hill as a Health Resort.

Our school was founded in 1870. All the "doctor bills," for services rendered our pupils, from then till now, do not, we think, amount to twenty-five dollars—probably not to one dollar a year. Those who have come here pale and puny, from malarial districts, have, without an exception, we believe, returned to their homes enjoying health.

What "Watering Place," or "Health Resort," then, can justly claim more, as a health-preserver and health-restorer, than Mars Hill? Address,

T. B. LARIMORE, President.

FLORENCE, ALABAMA

will fully prove what we claim. Bear in mind, we sell strictly for cash, which enables us to offer the greatest inducements.

EIGHTH CHAPTER OF ACTS—No. 2.

SIMON, THE SORCERER, AND THE EUNUCH.

We do not think it necessary to investigate the how that Simon became a Christian, except in showing up the two laws of pardon, as given in his case. His history shows plainly that there is one law of pardon to the alien sinner, and another to the erring child of God. And the Lord, to impress this as a certainty, has given us both laws in the same person, thus making the matter so definite and plain that no one can reasonably mistake it. The conversion of Simon is told very much in the same language as that of the Samaritans. "Then Simon himself believed also, and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done." The Savior says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

The divine record shows that Simon believed and was baptized. He was therefore saved or pardoned. And he that does not believe that Simon was saved, needs to be convinced that the word of God is true, and means what it says. Of course every thoughtful reader will understand that Simon, like other sinners, repented also of his sins, for without repentance no sinner can be saved. But Simon was a very sinful, corrupt man, and had formed some very bad habits before obeying the gospel. And when men live long in habitual sins, these habits become so fixed that they are hard to break up at once. So it was with Simon. Although he had obeyed the gospel and become a Christian, he still had the flesh and his old habits to battle against. And when Peter and John came down from Jerusalem and bestowed the miraculous power of the Holy Spirit by laying on of their hands, Simon's fleshly mind and old habits returned upon him, and he yielded. His old habit was witchery, or some slight of hand trickery, by which he made money to gratify a fleshly mind. And when he saw the Holy Spirit given by laying on hands, his old money making business came up like a flash in his mind, and he at once thought of making the Spirit of God a matter of trade or money making business. And in this view of the case he was willing to pay money for it. He therefore offered money for the power to bestow it by the laying on of his hands. The very fact that he offered money for it indicates that he intended to make money out of it if he could get it. But this thought of buying the gift of God with money was a very great sin. Peter therefore says to him, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter."

Here is an example of a Christian yielding to temptation and falling into sin. And from this comes the development of the fact that there is one law of pardon to the alien sinner, and another, and very different one for the erring Christian. In the law to the alien, baptism is the last step, and connects him with the promise of forgiveness. But in the law to the erring Christian, prayer is the last step, and the one that connects him with the promise of pardon. In both cases this step has to be preceded by other conditions, or the last one cannot be taken. The alien is required first to believe the gospel with the heart, and secondly to repent, and then upon the confession of the name of Christ, he is ready to scripturally take this step. The erring Christian must continue in God and his word, must walk by faith. Faith in Christ, his word and promises must be continually in his heart. And when he sins, he must repent of the sin committed, as Peter commanded Simon. And John in his first letter says to Christians, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." When these exist in the erring Christian he is ready for the last step, prayer.

The differences in the two laws are chiefly these: the alien must believe the gospel and its promises, while erring Christians must not only continue to believe these, but must believe all that God says to the Christian, both as to his commands and promises. The alien must repent in general of all his sins, of a sinful life, while the erring child of God must repent of the sin or sins committed after becoming a Christian, or since he last sought for pardon. Peter said to Simon, "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness." This was the first sin so far as we know that Simon had committed after his obedience to the gospel, and Peter was showing him how to seek pardon for it.

Then the last step to the alien is baptism, and this connects him with the promise of pardon, and that with perfect certainty, while to the child of God that has done wrong, the last step is prayer. But modern teachers of religion have reversed this order, putting prayer to the alien just where the Holy Spirit put baptism, and then they put baptism to the one said to be pardoned. If modern revivalists would only put this matter back as the Lord put it at the start, the present troubles on the subject would soon cease. But just so long as aliens are taught to pray at the very point the Spirit of God says be baptized, just so long will confusion and discord on the subject of conversion prevail. And every time the alien is taught to pray for pardon instead of being baptized as the word of God directs, he is simply following human wisdom, is simply following men, not God. But when a man has believed, repented, and has been baptized, and then does wrong, he needs the second law of pardon as much as he needed the first in order to become a Christian.

Christians indeed should be very watchful that they do not allow their sins to accumulate against them and remain unforgiven. The Lord has instructed us plainly in all these matters, if we will only follow. Then again the conversion of the eunuch as given in this chapter is a very plain exemplification of how people were made Christians in those days when nothing but the word of God was followed. Philip preached unto him Jesus, preached the gospel, he heard, believed, repented, and was baptized, and went on his way rejoicing. And his case is a very beautiful illustration of how the Spirit of God works in making Christians. Before any light came to the eunuch as to how to become a Christian, he had to hear preaching, for Christ had ordained that the gospel should be preached to every creature under heaven. He also ordained that all who refused to believe and obey the gospel should be damned. But there was no preacher present, and the eunuch was in a wilderness, desert region as some say. And he must be enlightened or lost. But how was it done? The Holy Spirit did it, but how? by entering his heart to enlighten him? no; but a preacher was sent for. First an angel went for a preacher, Philip, and told him to go to a certain road, or way. He arose and went. When he reached the place, the Spirit told him, the preacher, to go near, and join himself to the chariot, which was then in sight. And as soon as he reached the eunuch, the way was opened for him to preach the gospel to him, which he did, and the eunuch at once obeyed.

Thus an angel and the Holy Spirit were brought into requisition in order to the conversion of the Ethiopian, but neither one of them went direct to him. Both went to the preacher, and led him to the man to be converted, and he preached the gospel to him by the inspiration or direction of the Spirit, and by hearing and obeying the words of the Spirit as preached by Philip he became a Christian. And this is the way the Spirit always worked in making Christians. There is not one instance on record in which it worked otherwise. If on any occasion the Spirit without the word would have entered the heart of any one, sure this would have been one of the cases. And especially since the direct power of the Spirit did work in this case. If there ever was a case when such an operation would have been suitable, it was certainly this one. He had no knowledge of the gospel, and without it he must perish, and no means at his command of obtaining it. And when the Spirit was sent on a direct mission in order to his conversion it only went after a preacher, and when it directed the preacher to the man that was to be saved, all direct work ceased, and the preacher did the work. All men have the word of God now, as preached by the apostles, the same word that made thousands of Christians then, and will make millions more, if people will hear and obey now as they did then. It was the word of the Spirit then, and it is the word of the Spirit now, and every man that hears and obeys that word is made a Christian by the Spirit of God. But no one ever was made a Christian by the Spirit any other way. No man can show one single instance of any thing else.

And then again the baptism of the eunuch gives us a very good illustration of how baptism was performed in those days, when done by inspired men. First, they came unto a certain water. Some preachers undertake to say there was no water, that it was in a desert place. Men that talk thus do not believe the word of God, and it is really very little use to talk Bible or anything else to such men. They are set in their ways, and all the world cannot move them. But there is some chance to teach the Bible to the young and unprejudiced, and for them I write. There was water there, and plenty of it to baptize in, as certainly as the Bible is true. Then in the second place, "they went down, both, into the water, both Philip and the eunuch." They went down into the water. This means they both entered the water, and were actually in the water when the third step was taken, which was, "and he baptized him." If Philip and the eunuch were not in the water when the baptizing was done, then the swine were not in the water when they were drowned. The record says they ran down a steep place into the sea, and were drowned. But according to the interpretation that a good many preachers give this passage regarding Philip and the eunuch, the swine just ran down to the sea, and were drowned on dry land. One interpretation is just as scriptural and just as sensible as the other. Nor can any man prove that Christ entered into heaven, if Philip and the eunuch did not actually go into the water. Neither can it be shown that any one will actually enter heaven, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, if they did not go into the water. And finally, if those two men did not enter the water, and were not in the water when the baptizing was done, we have no use for the Bible any way, for nothing definite can be learned from it, and there is no certainty in anything in the English language. And as they were in the water when the baptizing was done, it is very plain that immersion was the thing done, the action performed, which is precisely what the word itself means. There would be no meaning in going into the water for any other purpose. If we had a literal rendering of the word baptize, it would be immerse, which is the action expressed by the Greek word used.

LETTERS TO A METHODIST PREACHER—No. 12.

"But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes." 2 Tim. 2: 23.

My kind friend, if you have examined the letters that I have written, you will see two very essential points to be observed in teaching sinners how to be saved from past sins, and be enrolled as sons and daughters of God. The first is this: That God does not demand a faith in any theories in order to be saved from sin; but a faith in facts, and an obedience to certain positive commands. And hence many theories of salvation that have been generated in the minds of men, and have been formulated into creeds, disciplines, etc., and made essential to the acknowledgement of an individual as a child of God, by those originating and believing in them. I am fully persuaded that the evils of division and strife in those claiming to be the children of God, originate in these foolish and unlearned questions, upon theories that have no place in the whole revealed will of God to man. And hence I have confined my thoughts to the things taught of God." And as he has spoken to us in those days by his Son, we have gone to that part of his will spoken to us by his Son; namely, the New Testament. And hence a large amount of destructive and destructive theories have been left out of the question, "what does God demand as essential to the pardon of a sinner from his past sins." And doing this we find preaching the gospel, (in its facts, commands and promises,) believing those facts, obeying those commands, is all that intervenes between a sinner and the promises; all that is needed, that is required, to change the relation of an alien to that of a Son. This is all, and yet it must all be fulfilled, every item in its proper place. "The last cannot be first" in this work of renovation; no more is needed, none the less to suffice, so far as God has revealed to us.

Now, my friend, if you realize your responsibility, to your heavenly Father, and are assured that you will be held accountable to him in that day of all days, for what you teach sinners to believe and do in order to pardon of sins, does it not behoove you, and me, and all teachers and preachers, to preach facts, instead of theories? The commands of God, instead of men, instead of the conditions imposed by men upon those who would be saved from sins?

And now I come to the points, the practical points, the question I long to ask you, the question I would have you to answer to yourself with all the responsibilities, anathemas, and precious promises of God before you. Do you believe that God has spoken his will in "these days" to us by the Son? I feel sure you do; you have expressed that much to me over and over. Do you believe that God demands more of a sinner than he has revealed to him through his son in the New Testament? Never having heard you answer this question directly, I can only say, that by inference from your teaching, preaching, and your discipline, to which you have vowed allegiance, (obedience,) I think you do.

I would not misrepresent you; I love and respect you too well for that. I would state a few items of your teaching from which I infer you transcend the requirements of the New Testament.

You teach total depravity. Can you find it in the New Testament? Can you even find it in the old? You teach the penitent sinner to believe in God; for through "faith only" comes justification. Can you find "justified by faith only" in the New Testament. You also teach penitent (mourning) sinners to pray for pardon through faith alone. Do you not go beyond the New Testament in this? You teach that baptizing a believing penitent is not needed, not essential. Do you find that doctrine in the New Testament. You teach, in connection with the above, that children, infants, ought to be baptized. Can you find this in the New Testament.

And in teaching these contrary doctrines of baptism, you are exactly in accord with the quotation at the head of this letter. These are the main questions which have engendered strifes and divisions in the professed family of God. Again, I ask you are these contrary doctrines taught in the New Testament as facts, as commands that all must obey? If so, where are they? Has the chapter and verse ever been named? Do you believe that a sinner will be pardoned of sins when he knows what is commanded of him, and refuses to submit to that commandment? I am sure you do not. Do you believe that God requires faith in Christ as the Son of God, "repentance" for sins committed, and baptism into the glorious names of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, of an alien sinner, in order to the remission of sins past? If so, does he command it by Jesus Christ his son? Do you believe any will escape who refuse to submit to these commands.

These questions I have profounded to you, not to try to show you insincerity in your worship to God, for I believe you are sincere; if I did not, I should never have penned these lines to you. But, believing in your sincerity and your interest in the subject of the religion of Christ Jesus, I have written these open letters to you, that you may know what and why I teach the things that pertain to salvation. I have not hunted up the opinion of any man, or men, as to facts taught in the New Testament; the only use I have made of "wiser" human heads, is to find out the universal undisputed meaning of words. But, as to doctrine taught, Jesus is great teacher. I have full faith in the records of his sayings and doings; I have full faith in his authority; I have full faith in the Holy Spirit as he worked in, upon, and through the apostles. I believe Jesus commanded faith in him as son of God; I believe he "commands all men now to repent;" I believe that he demands confession (of him) with the mouth; I believe that baptism is just as much a command of Jesus Christ, as faith or repentance, as such, is essential to the pardon of sins, so far as an alien sinner is concerned; I believe these are essential, and nothing else, save humble compliance with them, will procure pardon of sins. And believing this, I have endeavored to obey them, have been assured with my acceptance with God; and if I continue faithful to him, I will receive the glorious promises that pertain to a life beyond. I have not only risked my salvation upon the commands and promises of God, but I try to persuade my fellow mortals to fly to Jesus in his appointments for his promised blessings. I avoid all questions not taught by Jesus, or by his authority, knowing they but bring strifes into the family of God. What Jesus requires, that I believe and teach must be obeyed; what he leaves out, I have no right to insert. And I pray God our Father that you and I may learn more of his will every day of our lives; that we may honor his commands in a more humble and courageous way; that we may think less and less of our own ways, have less and less faith in men's theories every day of our lives. That we may speak where Jesus speaks, and what he speaks, give the commands that he alone gives, obey the commands upon which his promises rest, to the exclusion of all earthly kings, potentates of whatever character, is the prayer of a humble

DISCIPLE OF CHRIST.

LETTER FROM BRO. OFFICER.

DEAR BROTHER LIPSCOMB: Yours to hand. Four years ago, I drove the wedge in Indian Territory that opened a way for an evangelist from the Christian church. I settled the same winter in Gainesville, Cooke county, Texas, only six miles from the line of Indian Territory. I gave all my time I could in the nation, preaching and distributing papers, books, etc., among those who could read. The demand for a preacher grew, until I sent for Bro. M. Askew, of North Alabama, who promptly answered the call. The interest increased. I attended the council last September, at Tishomingo, and they encouraged us to go to work in view of planting a mission and Industrial school. (It will be remembered that Bro. Askew was of Indian descent.) Soon after Bro. Askew died, leaving the whole work in my hands. The heathful advantages of Paris over Gainesville induced me to move to Paris, for the benefit of my wife and our little boy, after Bro. Askew came out and took the Indian work. While I was at Gainesville the church there supported me, I was working in and out of Indian Territory as the evangelist in church at Gainesville. After I came to Paris the churches at Gainesville and Paris worked together, commended me to the council, etc. But at this time the church at this place has full control of the work, I have been over in Indian Territory often since I have been here, preaching, giving out papers, etc., to the Indians, (as city evangelist, Paris, Texas.)

I was at the last State meeting. A resolution commending me to the next Choctaw council, in view of adding an Industrial school to mission, was presented and favorably considered by the brethren at Bryan, Texas. Why? The Indians can not understand why I am not endorsed by a convention, association, conference, or something like it. The difficulty was mine, and I suggested the remedy; but the work is still, and I suppose will ever be in the hands and under the oversight of the church at Paris.

By your letter you leave on my mind the impression that four thousand dollars is necessary in order to begin work. You are laboring under a mistake; the work is going on, pulse beats feebly, but we are doing what we can. We want to be able to keep a man in the Indian field. Four thousand dollars can be spent in building, if we add a school; but the work of the evangelist is quite another thing, and must go on.

I ask the brethren here to let me off a few months, as our church house and other building makes a demand on their pocket, and I will visit the churches in interest of our mission in Indian Territory. We are willing to rob other churches in the sense that Paul did in order to supply our mission, but need not, as we think, resort to any farther society. Our object is to lay the matter before the churches as they are, and receive any help, much or little. After the first of November we want to keep an evangelist in the field all the time. Our religious neighbors have planted in the name of their peculiar sect, and association, convention, Synod, or something else added to their endorsement which they (the Indians) demand before they will countenance any man. They demand the highest indorsement, or that they regard highest. Our Indian evangelist will be employed by the church here. I have been doing what I could; have not had a regular evangelist employed since Bro. Askew died. The church has enabled me to employ three of the brethren to hold meetings in Indian Territory. I have held four. Our claims strike them favorably, they are less prejudiced than our religious white neighbors. I give it as my opinion, the Indians, as a rule, are more honest than the whites, once they pledge themselves.

Bro. A. B. Smith will divide time with me after this month. May be he will give all of his time to the Indian mission work.

A thousand thanks for the interest you take in the Indian mission work, the work of my life. I will soon be out and lay the matter before the churches, a robber, as Paul was.

I did not write this for publication, but use any of it you wish; it is public property.

Paris, Tex., Aug. 12, 1884. R. W. OFFICER.

NOTES FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

E. A. Elam, Fosterville, Tenn., August 16, writes: "For four years we have conducted the meeting for Rigg's X Roads, Tenn. We think the last the most interesting. Twelve additions. This congregation is in good working condition; is one of the best we visit, and cannot be surpassed in kindness. Our meeting closed Thursday after the second Lord's day in August with a promise to return (D. V.) next year."

Sister M. Temperance Terrell, Tyro, Tate county, Miss., August 17, writes: "Bro. B. W. Lauderdale, of Tennessee, began a meeting at Enon, near this place, Friday before the first Lord's day in August which continued over second Lord's day. Five were added to the church; four from the world, one from the Methodists. Two of those who made the good confession were sweet little girls, whose tender hearts had been opened to the melting influence of the gospel. Oh! what a lovely sight to see blooming youth boldly take their stand on the Lord's side.

"Grace is a plant, where'er it grows,
Of pure and heavenly root;
But fairest in the youngest shows,
And yields the sweetest fruit."

We feel assured there was much and lasting good done toward building up the cause. Bro. Lauderdale is a bold and fearless teacher of the word, and did not fail to declare the whole counsel of God. Oh for many more such men. To God be all the praise."

REPENTANCE.

BROS. LIPSCOMB & SEWELL: At your request, I write for the ADVOCATE some essays. As we have many readers who have not read our first writings, and who, consequently, are ignorant of our teaching on the subject of repentance, as well as on other subjects; and as we are constantly making new converts to "our restoration;" and as I cannot say in one essay all that I desire to say on the word repentance, I hope you will indulge me in several essays.

I congratulate you on the fortunate choice you made of a co-editor, in choosing Bro. J. A. Harding, of Winchester, Ky., who is the right man in the right place.

I shall first define the meaning of the word repentance. There are two nouns rendered repentance in the Common English Version—metamelomai and metanoia. This is unfortunate, as it leads the English to suppose they both mean the same thing. The first means sorrow for what a person has done, without saying whether the action was a good action or a bad action. For after giving alms to a man who spent it for liquor, we are sorry, or dissatisfied, with ourselves, for giving him money to spend for liquor. This is repentance. The Greek verb, metamelomai, applied to Judas and to Esau, means the same as the noun. They repented, and did nothing more than repent. And so men who drink and gamble all night, repent next day. But then they do not amend their ways and doings; they do the same things again, until they lose all their property. These men often destroy themselves, instead of doing better. The apostles used a Greek noun and a Greek verb to express that great change of heart and life, which ends in remission of sins and eternal life. The noun they used to express a change of mind and conduct was metanoia—meta, after, and noia, consideration—change one's mind so as to influence one's conduct. The verb, metanoeo, occurs thirty-four times in the New Testament, and the noun rendered repentance occurs twenty-four times.

But no change of mind which does not result in a change of life, will fill up the measure of the positive command, Repent and be immersed. Acts 2: 38. A change of heart without obedience to the gospel, is of no more value than faith alone without obedience. A change of heart must, of necessity, precede a change of conduct. Many persons have changed their minds or purpose, and resolved to do better, who did not do it. Pharaoh said or promised to let the Jews go out of Egypt on the infliction of every plague, but he lied, he did not do it. He repented while smarting under plague, but failed to do what he said he would do while the plague was on him. He was destroyed in the Red Sea, with his repentance, like all other disobedient penitents will be. The three thousand penitents on the day of Pentecost, after their repentance, after their change of heart, after their sorrow, were told to do something. "Be immersed, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, (eis) in order to the remission of sins," say A. Clarke and many other eminent critics. Had these three thousand penitents refused to be immersed, they would have been in the same condition that all paedobaptists are in to-day, in an unpardoned state, under the guilt of sin, without any evidence of the pardon of sin. "Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." John 20: 23. This promise or prophecy was future when he spoke these words. They were to preach repentance and the pardon, remission of sins, or the absolution or delivering from sins, among all nations. Luke 24: 4-47. They were to begin at Jerusalem, not at Rome.
