

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 1.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JANUARY 4, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB, A. G. SEWELL, J. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Paul a Fanatic, Deceiver, or True Witness.....	2
Is Christianity Practicable? No. 2.....	3
Meeting God.....	4
Inspiration.....	4
Miscellany.....	5
The Death Roll.....	6
Home Reading.....	7
The New Year—What Shall be the Outcome?.....	8
Pressing Forward.....	8
Queries.....	9
Missionary Work.....	10
No Scripture for the Organ or Society.....	11
General News.....	12
Church News.....	13
Moral Courage.....	14

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The man who determines what to preach by the probable effect of what he says will have upon the people cannot be relied upon to preach the gospel. There is but one thing for a preacher to consider as to the matter of his sermons, and that is what the Bible teaches. As to the manner, or rather the spirit, in which he preaches every man should always be careful to speak in the love of the truth and with feelings of brotherly kindness for all mankind. The spirit of the preacher, however, is an entirely different thing from the matter of the sermon. To preach that which will please men in the matter of sermons is to love the praise of men more than the praise of God. To avoid controversy with men by failing to declare the whole counsel of God is to serve man rather than God. No man is worthy to preach the gospel till he is prepared to sacrifice popularity among men to gain the approval of God. If a man is not brave enough to declare the whole counsel of God and submit to the consequences in a spirit of Christian humility and with feelings of brotherly kindness for all mankind, he has not courage enough to be a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Many a preacher has lost power with God trying to maintain his influence among the people. The truth of God will not be found in a man long after he yields to the love of popularity among men. The preacher who weakens before the current of popularity strengthens the tide against God and the truth. One of the hardest problems of Christianity is how to be firm in the right without becoming sour in spirit or stubborn in disposition toward those who are steadily pulling in the wrong direction. It is no easy task to be on terms of friendly feelings toward those who are bent on mischief and strongly determined to go wrong. The temptation is strong to either yield to the current of public sentiment and "go with a multitude to do evil," or else give way to bitter feelings against those who oppose the truth. Those who avoid both of these evils will be crowned with everlasting life in the world to come.

A brother in Missouri sends me a private letter from another brother in Missouri, from which I quote as follows:

"The Lord gave us minds to use, and he is pleased when he sees his people using good judgment in working for the good of mankind. Some are great sticklers for the how of doing things; but our Lord cares nothing about such trifles. If you were going to build a six-story house for some man would you build it without using a scaffold because the specifications said nothing about the scaffold? The scaffolds are no part of the house; they are not for the master, but for the servants or builders. Missionary societies, Bible societies, Sunday schools, Bible colleges, church houses, publishing companies, religious newspapers, etc., are only the scaffolds. The master does not need them, but his servants do. The Lord has left us at liberty to use such things as we need them. He left the apostles free in these matters to use their common sense about how to travel, etc. If they did not adopt the best plan for their day and surroundings, others, after them, could improve on their methods, for their methods were never intended to be a law for all coming ages."

All this is in defense of what is commonly called organized effort among the Disciples. Exactly the same points are made in a paper before me in defense of organized effort among the Methodists. It has the same force in each case. How far God is pleased "when he sees his people using good judgment," and how far he "has left us at liberty to use such things as we need, or think we need, I will not now stop to discuss. A more important question than this underlies the whole fabric of organized effort. Has God "left us at liberty" to form denominational organizations? This question goes to the root of the matter. What is commonly called organized effort is denominational organization, pure and simple. Opposition to organized effort is opposition to denominationalism. To advocate organized effort is to defend denominationalism. Liberty to form organized effort is permission to form denominations. That is all there is of it. It is needless to make or answer special and plausible arguments about the liberty God allows Christians in doing things, without first clearly understanding the real issue. If God permits Christians to form denominations, why oppose denominationalism? If God does not permit Christians to form denominations, why try to defend denominationalism by an appeal to the liberty God allows Christians in doing things. What is commonly called organized effort among the Disciples is denominationalism. If any one denies this proposition, these columns are open to a discussion of the issue.

In another paragraph on this page I say that "the same points are made in a paper before me in defense of organized effort among the Methodists," which are made in a letter from which I quote "in defense of what is commonly called organized effort among the Disciples," and "it has the same force in each case." The Methodist paper to which I refer is the New Century Education, a monthly publication issued from the Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. I quote from this paper, as follows:

"Pastor (to applicant for church membership): 'Will you support the institutions of the church?'"
"Applicant: 'What is an institution of the church?'"
"P.: 'To answer you satisfactorily will necessitate first a definition of the word itself. The National Dictionary says: 'An institution is anything forming a characteristic and persistent feature in social or national life and habits.' To institute is to ordain. This can be done only by organizations or by an individual in a representative capacity. We say, 'The town instituted a search for a lost child'—i. e., it organized a plan, formed companies, and provided facilities for the search. A nation may institute a custom—say a memorial holiday in honor of a national hero—making it 'a persistent and characteristic feature of the national life.' Society, likewise, may by its unwritten law institute customs regulating social intercourse, which, when generally adopted, become 'persistent and characteristic.' The church is both a society and a government, and hence may have two classes of institutions. The early Methodists always spoke of individual churches as societies. In many places this designation is still kept up. Now in the 'social life and habits' of the church 'characteristics and persistent features' are formed and take their places as social institutions. The revival and the prayer meeting are such institutions. On the other hand, the Sabbath, the sacraments, and the ministry are governmental institutions, inasmuch as they were ordained by the founder of the church. Institutions resulting from the governing function of the church grow out of the experience and wisdom of the men who are its legislators. These may be merely temporary or they may be more permanent. An example of a temporary ecclesiastical institution is the class meeting. Some hold that it has served its day and has passed away in favor of other institutions, which may in their turn prove to be equally transient. The camp meeting is another instance of a temporary institution of the church. Perhaps most of the governmental institutions of the church are temporary, inasmuch as changing conditions and constant growth demand new ways and better adaptations on the church's part.

"A.: 'How may an institution be supported?'"

"P.: 'Any line of conduct on the part of a member or friend of the society or the government that shows his respect for and his devotion to that which has been instituted or ordained by it is in the way of support. A supporter of the Democratic or Republican party in this country would be a citizen who openly avowed the principles of the party and expressed that adherence by private conversation or public speech, and especially by his vote. In this way the weight of his influence, as we call it, would go to strengthen the party. An honorable member of such party would likewise contribute money in any proper way to the support of his party.'

"A.: 'But cannot an institution of the church accomplish that for which it was ordained by its own inherent force? If it is right and adapted to the times, why not leave it to work out its own results?'"

"P.: 'Institutions cannot work in this way. They must be supported by the intelligence, loyalty, and liberality of those who believe in them. Patriotism itself is dead without living patriots to incarnate it.'

"A.: 'Why, then, is it not enough for a Christian to incarnate Christianity and not be encumbered by so many institutions which men have ordained? You say that these institutions are the result largely of human wisdom and experience. Why, then, should I be bound to support them? May I not be a loyal Christian while at the same time I ignore them?'"

"P.: 'While the institution is the product of the consecrated wisdom of the church, it is, at the same time, the chosen way for the church to accomplish its work. Christ said, 'Go teach all nations;' but he did not provide the necessary plan. The church, after trying various ways, finally instituted the foreign missionary society as, in its wisdom, being the best method of doing this work. Likewise the church finds it to be her duty to train up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, but finds no plan given. Accordingly she has instituted the Sunday school and the denominational college. Now unless the individual is prepared to offer some better way of fulfilling these and other scriptural requirements he is bound to fall in with what has already become the 'persistent and characteristic feature' of the 'life and habits' of his church, in order to accomplish the desired results. Mark you, the church must do these things as a body. No one man or single congregation can do them at all adequately.

"A.: 'Then you would imply that connectionalism is a necessity in all great church movements?'

"P.: 'Certainly; whatever is to be done by any organization should be participated in by every member of the organization according to his ability. In this way there is secured not only the increased financial strength which comes from many givers, but, what is of far greater value, the solidarity of the organization, and the union of sympathy which give enthusiasm for the object in view and insure its success.'

"A.: 'It is said that Southern Methodism has a membership numbering one and a half million. What of the connectionalism and solidarity of this great mass of Christian men, women, and children?'

"P.: 'It would not be an extreme statement to say that less than half a million of our great church contribute regularly and adequately to the support of its institutions. If the remaining million could be induced to do their part, even as well as the half million are now doing theirs, we should be at least three times as strong as we are. The Twentieth Century Movement is a distinct effort to induce them to do this.'

"A.: 'Is the Twentieth Century Movement an institution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South?'

"P.: 'It is. It was instituted by the last General Conference, and is consequently a governmental, rather than a social, institution. It is, not one of the permanent institutions, but is intended to cover a given period of time. In a sense it will terminate with the present century, though it is hoped that the influence it will produce in promoting connectionalism and in training our members to liberal giving, both of their substance and of their prayers to the general interests of the church, will be permanent.'

From this it is perfectly clear that the whole fabric of Methodism rests on exactly the same basis as organized effort among the Disciples. It is also clear that disaffection among the Methodists rests upon the same basis as disaffection in other denominations. All denominational organizations rest upon the same basis. They all claim that God has left Christians free to use their judgment as to how they would do things, and each denominational organization is simply the judgment of those who constitute it as to how things ought to be done. Opposition to denominationalism is simply opposition to organized effort, and there is much of such opposition in all denominations.

Some months ago I republished in these columns a leaflet, prepared by Brothers M. C. Kurfees and G. A. Klingman, of Louisville, Ky., on "The Church," for general distribution. The demand was very great, and many thousands were promptly put in circulation. Since then they have revised and improved the leaflet, and they are now sending it out wherever there is a demand for it. The points are clearly stated and well sustained by quotations from the New Testament, and the leaflet will do good wherever it is circulated. As the subject it treats is of interest to many readers of the Gospel Advocate, I republish it in its revised and improved form to stimulate investigation and encourage Bible study on the subject of "The Church: "

"1. What It Is Not.—(1) It is not a meeting house. 'Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in houses made with hands.' (Acts 7: 48, R. V.) 'God . . . dwelleth not in temples made with hands.' (Acts 17: 24.) (2) It is not a denomination, nor made up of different denominations. (John 10: 16; Rom. 12: 4, 5; 1 Cor. 12: 13.) 'Is Christ divided?' (1 Cor. 1: 13.) 'There is one body.' (Eph. 4: 4.) 'And he is the head of the body, the church.' (Col. 1: 18.) 'Now, I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you.' (1 Cor. 1: 10.)

"2. What It Is.—It is the people of God. 'Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?' (1 Cor. 3: 16.) 'For we are members of his body.' (Eph. 5: 30.) 'And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.' (Eph. 2: 20; see also 1 Cor. 1: 2; Phil. 4: 15.)

"3. Different Uses of the Word in the Bible.—(1) It is applied to the people of God in a house (Col. 4: 13, etc.); (2) it is applied to the people of God in a city (Acts 13: 1, etc.); (3) it is applied to the people of God in a given district (Acts 9: 31, R. V.); (4) it is applied to the people of God everywhere in general (Matt. 16: 18, etc.).

"4. Bible Names for the Church and its Members.—(1) Collectively it is called: 'The church' (Eph. 1: 22); 'The church of God' (Acts 12: 5); 'The church of the firstborn' (Heb. 12: 23); 'Household of God' (Eph. 2: 19); 'Household of faith' (Gal. 6: 10); 'The body of Christ' (1 Cor. 12: 27); 'God's husbandry, . . . God's building' (1 Cor. 3: 9); 'Habitation of God' (Eph. 2: 22). (2) The individuals composing it are designated: 'Members' (1 Cor. 12: 27); 'Saints' (1 Cor. 1: 2); 'Branches' (John 15: 5); 'Friends' (John 15: 15); 'Disciples' (John 15: 8); 'Christians' (Acts 11: 26; 1 Pet. 4: 16, R. V.); 'Children of God' (Gal. 3: 26); 'Children of light' (Eph. 5: 8); 'The holy people' (Isa. 62: 12); 'The redeemed of the Lord' (Isa. 51: 11); 'Brethren' (Gal. 6: 18). (3) Referring to its existence in different localities: 'The churches [congregations] of Christ' (Rom. 16: 16); 'The churches of the saints' (1 Cor. 14: 33); 'The churches of the Gentiles' (Rom. 16: 4); 'Churches of Galatia' (Gal. 1: 2).

"5. Its Oversight.—See Acts 14: 23; 20: 17-31; 1 Tim. 3: 1-7; Tit. 1: 5; 1 Pet. 5: 1, 2; and compare Matt. 18: 15-17; Rom. 16: 17; 1 Cor. 5: 11-13; Gal. 6: 1; 2 Thess. 3: 6; 2 Tim. 3: 5; Tit. 3: 10, 11; James 5: 19, 20.

"6. Its Worship.—(1) In what it consists: Reading Scriptures, Exhortation, Prayer, Singing, Lord's Supper, and Contribution. (Acts 2: 42; Col. 3: 16; Heb. 10: 25; Col. 4: 16; 1 Thess. 5: 27.) (2) When they worshiped: 'Upon the first day of the week.' (Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2.)

"7. Its Work.—(1) Preaching the word and founding congregations. (Mark 16: 15, 16; 1 Thess. 1: 8; 1 Tim. 3: 15; 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) (2) Relieving the poor, caring for widows and orphans. (Acts 6: 1-6; 1 Cor. 15: 58; Gal. 6: 10; 1 Tim. 5: 3, 9, 10; James 1: 27.)

"8. Queries.—(1) Are you a member of the church? (1 Cor. 12: 13; Gal. 3: 26, 27.) (2) Are you a member of a denomination? If so, why? (Read 1 Cor. 1: 10-17; 3: 1-9.) (3) Can you not be and work simply as a Christian? Can you not be and work simply as a member of the church, without belonging to a denomination or society?

"9. Facts.—(1) Only one organization is authorized in the New Testament—viz., the church. (2) When used in plural it means several congregations in a district of country. 'The seven churches which are in Asia.' (Rev. 1: 4.) Not denominations, but congregations—one in each city mentioned—all belonging to the one body, the church. (3) Every Christian was a member of the church, and of nothing else. (4) Every Christian worked simply as a member of the church and of no other organization. (5) All kinds of work were done in the church. (6) No official distinctions or professional caste existed among the members. (Matt. 23: 8; Mark 10: 42-45; 1 Pet. 5: 2, 3.)

"Conclusion.—Will you not pray and labor that all may be one, that the world may believe? (John 17: 21.) No other way is God's way."

These leaflets will be sent free to those who wish to distribute them, but are not able to pay for them. I presume the actual cost of printing them is about $1 per hundred, and the publishers ought at least to receive this much to assist them in the work. Address all communications to M. C. Kurfees or G. A. Klingman, Louisville, Ky.

There and Here.

Behind he hears Time's iron gates close faintly;
He is now far from them,
For he has reached the city of the saintly,
The New Jerusalem!
A voice is heard on earth of kinsfolk weeping
The loss of one they love,
But he has gone where the redeemed are keeping
A festival above.
The mourners throng the way, and from the steeple
The funeral bells toll slow;
But on the golden streets the holy people
Are passing to and fro,
And saying as they meet: "Rejoice! another Long waited for has come."
The Savior's heart is glad; a younger brother
Has reached the Father's home. —Selected.

On Contributors.

Paul a Fanatic, Deceiver, or True Messenger.

Paul. "Brother Marcus, remember at the close of our last interview I promised when we met again to give you my reasons for believing that the death of the apostles would be necessary to establish the truth of the gospel of Christ before the world—reasons which, I am sure, you will see and appreciate."

Marcus: "Yes, that was the theme we had under consideration, and you proposed to prove and illustrate this subject from your own life and death, which, you tell us, is now near at hand. You have often been called the log-man of the church, and I shall expect some strong proofs."

P.: "I could use the life and death of any of the apostles and teach the same thing, but as you are more familiar with my work than of the work of the twelve, I will teach these truths from my own life. I have often received from men praise for what was due to the truth itself which I preach. I know enough about the praise of men to pay very little attention to it. Men are changeable and whimsical in their estimate of their fellow-men. For instance, at Lystra, when, by the power of God, I healed the cripple, the people ignorantly supposed the gods had come down to them in the likeness of men. They called Barnabas, 'Jupiter,' and me, 'Mercury;' and we could scarcely keep them from sacrificing to us as gods. But very soon the same people, being persuaded by the wicked Jews, stoned me to insensibility. On another occasion, as I reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, but postponed serious attention to these matters; yet attempted to flatter me and my friends by often communing with me personally, hoping a bribe for my release would be offered. The compliments of men are of doubtful meaning and small value, my son. Festus, Felix's successor, was also deeply impressed with the glorious facts of the gospel and in a loud voice interrupted me by saying I was beside myself in consequence of much learning, to whom I answered 'I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.' On the same occasion King Agrippa himself, under the power of the gospel, was almost persuaded to be a Christian. It is not me or my learning, my son, but the power of God's truth over a reasonable mind and honest heart which carries conviction. Do not accept it, because I say it, however much you love me personally, but because you see it proven true by the highest and strongest testimony. Beware of the praises of men. They affect me not, but there are accomplishments as a teacher and apostle of Christ I received in paradise which did endanger my salvation, of which I cannot now speak, which required a messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be lifted up with pride. For the present I must return to the theme we have talked upon."

M.: "Proceed, dear Father Paul, I will give my prayerful attention. I do wish to be built up in our most holy faith."

P.: "I would speak as to wise men. Judge you what I say. They are in great error who suppose that gospel faith is based on a mere begging of the question. The facts of the gospel, stupendous as they be, are laid down before the world, and alongside there is the proof which really challenges the faith of all who fairly examine it. Dear Marcus, I, Paul, a preacher and apostle of Jesus Christ, must be one of three characters—viz., a fanatic, a deceiver, or an honest man. In reason's name I say it, before you and all the world, I am bound to be one of these three—a fanatic, what men call a 'crank' or 'enthusiast;' a deceiver, willfully speaking what I know to be false, a liar; or, in the third place, I am an honest and true man, and testify to what I have seen and heard and know to be true. If you think, Brother Marcus, that you can place me as I now am, and have long been, before the world in any other character than in one of these I will now pause for you to do so. Think closely and speak out plainly if you find any weakness in this statement."

M.: "Upon a moment's reflection I fail to see how it is possible for you to be other than one of these."

P.: "Just so. I have preached in Damascus, Tarsus, Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth, at the Areopagus in Athens, and here in Rome, the mistress of the world; and before Jews and Gentiles, including kings, governors, and men of every caliber of mind; and in some form submitted this statement concerning myself as a witness to Christ, and never heard one offer a reasonable objection to it. Thousands have accepted Christ, some have trembled, some have postponed, some have been almost persuaded; but none have shown any fallacy in the gospel proof or impeached the witnesses. On this point I will add this remark, that if, upon further reflection, you can find any other character in which you can place me, I desire you to present your objection. For the present I will proceed with this much accepted. I, as a preacher of Christ, am bound to be a fanatic, deceiver, or true witness."

M.: "Proceed, dear Father Paul; I am greatly interested."

P.: "Now think well and closely upon what I say. If by any process of sound reason I can prove two negative propositions—viz., that, under the circumstances, I cannot possibly be a fanatic or enthusiast, and also that I cannot possibly be a deceiver, then it must irresistibly follow that I am a true witness, since it is admitted that I am bound to be one of these three. If I am a true witness, then I saw Christ, whom, if I saw, has arisen from the dead, his gospel is true, our sins are pardoned, and our hope of heaven is well founded; and, per consequence, the Old Testament is divine revelation, and the New Testament, about to be completed, is also the word of God. Do you, Marcus, clearly perceive this argument?"

M.: "I do, and can easily foresee the strength of that plea which is made for those things which are so surely believed among us."

P.: "I was sure you would, and desire to see you and all who profess faith in Christ established and confirmed in the faith which was once delivered to the saints. As I remarked before, those are in great error who think Christianity a weakling in the world and begging for recognition of its truth. Its Champion is Christ, whose gospel challenges the faith of all to whom its summons come. O, that the preaching were fully known and that all the Gentiles might hear. It was for this cause I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. If the gospel of Christ were only a theory it might be set forth defiantly before the world as superior to all others; but, Marcus, we must never forget to preach the truth in love, and consistently practice what we preach, and not simply outargue its opponents. In this way can we clinch all its claims; otherwise we do it and its divine Author great injustice."

M.: "I realize the importance of this and remember that while the proofs of the gospel are incontrovertible in themselves, our Lord said, that night in which he washed his disciples' feet, 'By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another;' and Brother James has said: 'Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.' I am now anxious to hear you prove those two negative propositions, which will be equivalent to the establishment of your affirmative: that you, as a preacher and apostle of Jesus Christ are an infallible witness to Christ and his gospel; which proof, as I understand, will be amply sufficient to convince the world of the truth of the gospel in time to come, when the signs and wonders now so prevalent shall all have been done away or ceased being wrought before the eyes of men."

P.: "What we have said in this meeting has all been preparatory to the argument that I shall set forth before you and all who may choose to meet with us here in this rented house, where I preach and teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. No man forbids me here, for, although I am bound, I thank the Lord the word of God is not bound. The Lord willing, at our next meeting I will prove to you that I am not a fanatic."

G. LIPSCOMB.

It is a bad sign when a person cannot be contented except in the company of other persons. Every one of us should have resources in himself; no life is complete that is not, in a sense, self-sufficient. We should seek frequent quiet times, apart from the voice of even our nearest friend, when the depths of our own character may be cultivated. Souls thrive in solitude. He is probably a shallow person who cannot bear to be alone.—Forward.

If God has planted you, there is a river of water somewhere near you; and you can do no better thing, nothing half so good as to find the river on your own ground. That is the stream adapted to strengthen your peculiar weakness and to nourish your peculiar form of power.—Marvin R. Vincent.

Is Christianity Practicable? No. 2.

The separation of life from religion seems to be more pronounced in this age of mammon worship than ever before. The line running through the world separating the good from the evil seems to have culminated in one tremendous effort to reconcile God and mammon in harmonious blending. We cannot serve God and mammon, but we are sure to serve the one or the other. God meant for his people to serve him with the things called "mammon." The things of the world are to be employed in his service as expressions of piety to God and devotion to man, not substituted for either. He means for them to steer clear of what is called "the world," but not to relegate religion to one corner of the universe and leave all the rest to serve self and the devil in. The differences in our way of talking about "things sacred and secular" betray our departure from the word of God, and the differences in our residences and houses of worship indicate a complete separation of life from religion. God cannot be honored by doing evil with even the best motives. Shall we do evil, that good may come? Men say, "Yes;" but Paul says that God forbids it. The only way of doing good to ourselves and bringing honor to God is by doing good with the right motives. This principle excludes all evil from the realms of Christian activity. Some things are evil and only evil, and are not, as some would affirm, only "good in the making." However good the motive in acting on objective evils, they remain unchanged—the messengers of darkness and death. Such may be readily perceived by all honest people who desire to know the will of the Lord. Others are good or bad, according as the motive in performing them may be good or evil. Eating meats, going to places of questionable resort, and many other things come under this head. Business, of itself, is neither good nor evil; but done "as unto the Lord," it is the means of serving man and honoring the Lord; but, separated from him, it is the means of untold evils. Every business essential to man's welfare in time or the world to come may, by the proper motive, be transformed into the ministers of righteousness and projected into the sphere of the spiritual. Such is the idea of the apostle Paul: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." An ordinary meal may be the means of glorifying God or it may be the occasion of denying him. Our business, as a rule, is wholly unconsecrated to the service of God; it is mostly devoted to the service of extracting gain at the expense of others' misfortune. Who can say that he has chosen his work or business because he believes it to be the Lord's will and the best way in which for him to serve the Lord? How can we test the matter of doing his will in the various callings of life? In this way: Can you ask God's blessing upon it? Do you expect him to be pleased with your work as he is pleased with the work of the preacher of the gospel? If not, you have missed your calling. Would you abandon it for the honor of God? Would you surrender it if you saw it was impeding your spiritual progress? Remember, motion is not progress. Going around on a mill wheel is not progress, neither is riding on a rocking-horse progress.

The passage quoted at the beginning of my former article demands that all that Christians do be done from the same motive: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." I know a man who serves in the double capacity of merchant and preacher. Does he sell goods for the same reason that he preaches the gospel? Who ever knew of a man that did anything of that character? The reason that Christians do not may be owing to the pernicious distinction between things that do not differ. We have unconsciously drifted into the habit of selling goods for one reason and preaching the gospel for another reason. It is of the fathers, not of God. You tell me why men should preach the word of God to sinners, and I will tell you why men, the same men, should sell goods to sinners. I know another man who practices medicine and preaches the gospel. One he does for money, without any conscientious scruples; the other he does without making any charges. By what authority does he distinguish between things that do not differ? Does it not leave God out of the healing of diseases? It is no matter of wonder that doctors so seldom pray for the healing of the sick. Such infidel conception of the medical profession leads to the most detestable practices. A Christian doctor who will give away all the gospel will attempt to monopolize a panacea for fatal diseases. I could just as conscientiously withhold the gospel from the perishing as I could the means of healing diseases. In one of these spheres he is supposed to serve the Lord, and in the other he leaves the Lord out of the matter and only supplies his own wants. Does the Lord have no will in the matter of healing diseases? "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Jesus had as much right to charge for the cures he wrought on the bodies as any other man that ever lived, and much more, because he is the maker of all things. There is a hypocrisy of the deeper character which is unconscious; there is an infidelity of the same character and repulsive attitude. If Judas were to return to the earth and read the description that inspired men have given of him, no one, perhaps, would be more surprised at the remark, "Judas was a thief," than Judas himself. Judas may have been a thief, but you may be fully assured that he never called himself by that name. Perhaps, like the most of his followers now, he called it business, or political economy.

Can a physician practice medicine in the name of Christ? That is the only name that any man can work successfully in. I do not mean that he should always be talking about Christ to his patients; Christianity does not exhaust itself in talk. Is he not honoring Christ when curing humanity of its ills? Was not that a part of the mission and work of the great Physician? Consider the opportunities of the medical profession for serving Christ. In the first place, it puts him into close proximity with all classes of humanity. He goes where the preacher cannot, in the nature of the case, go. In the second place, the people have the utmost confidence in the family physician. They believe whatever he says about the condition of the patient. This he can turn to the account of Christ and his work. In the third place, whatever influence he might exert for good is done incidentally, and that is the most effectual way of doing good. A visit from a preacher would not have the same influence for good. That is considered a part of the play. Surely a good physician is as much called of God to alleviate the sufferings of humanity as is the preacher of the gospel. I do not depreciate the "call to the ministry" by saying I believe in the divine call of all ministry. I believe in the divine call of some to preach the gospel, of some to teach school, of others to plow corn, and of still others to support the preacher. I believe John Ruskin was as much called of God to do literary work as was Martin Luther to denounce the man of sin of Paul. Some are called of God to make money, to make all they possibly can by all legitimate means. The next duty is more difficult than to make money—the duty of spending it for Christ and the good of his people. It requires more thought and honesty to spend money aright than it does to make it. Let us teach school for Christ, sell goods for Christ, plow corn for Christ, preach the gospel for Christ; in fine, let us do all, whether in word or in deed, in the name of Christ. Let us not leave him out of anything that we do. Take him as practically a partner in all business. He is by right entitled to the first place in all that we do. To fail to consider him and his claims in connection with anything that we do is to defy him and to fail in the crises of spiritual life. The average Christian in business is as much devoted to the matter of gain and mammon worship as the infidel who says he will not have Christ rule his business. We are under as imperative obligations to serve God and man in the use of temporal things as was Jesus in the use of the cross. The death on the cross is the glorification of all instruments to the one end of serving God and honoring him in all things. What is wrong for Jesus to do is wrong for any man to do. If one could not serve God and mammon, neither can the other. Jesus was under no more obligation to do God's will, give his time and means for man, to die for the world, than you and I are. God did not demand the sacrifice of his Son; he had no pleasure in the tragedy of Calvary. God was under no obligations to any man. I do not have to obey the voice of the God of heaven and earth. He will have nothing but voluntary service. Forced obedience is disobedience. I do not have to preach; but if I do it, I must preach the truth. If I choose to save my soul, I must call on Jesus. He will do it, providing I will do all he commands me. I am under as great obligations as Jesus was. Aside from his miracles, I ought to do all that he did to save the world. "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sakes, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ." (Col. 1: 24, R. V.; see also 2 Cor. 1: 5-7.)

Coal City, Ind.

W. J. BROWN.

MEETING GOD.

Israel had wandered away from God. Many of them had been destroyed. Amos (4: 11, 12) says of them: "I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand plucked out of the burning; yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord. Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel."

This was a very thrilling announcement calculated to make them think seriously of their sinful and fallen state. The admonition is not intended to fill them with hopelessness, but to the contrary. Sin unfits us all for dwelling in the presence of God. As the passage meant to Israel, so it means to us all—first, the necessity of preparation; secondly, the possibility of it; and, thirdly, an encouragement to do so. God is so full of compassion that his great, loving heart longs to forgive the sinner, if he will turn away from his evil doing. As an encouragement to lead us to prepare to meet him, he holds out to us motives as sweet as heaven, as awful as hell, and as enduring as eternity.

Do you ask why we should prepare to meet God? If so, I answer:

1. Because we must meet him; life is filled with uncertainties; our fondest hopes vanish like the morning dews before the scorching rays of the sun; our dearest earthly treasures brighten our pathway to-day to make us sad to-morrow; the refreshing showers and the genial sunshine nurture our flowers into their sweetest fragrance for nature to soon cut them down by a killing frost; mutability, uncertainty, and disappointment are written upon the things of life; the hopes of to-day may be buried in the grave of to-morrow. But there is no uncertainty about death. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." (Heb. 9: 27.) While we all may be uncertain about life, we are all sure we must meet death. There are no exemptions. The high, the low, the rich, the poor, the king, and the peasant—all alike must die. Those who do not bow before Jesus in this life will see the day when they will wish they had done so. "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. 2: 9-11.) When the summons comes for us to cross the river, it will not be as it was with the man who made a great supper and bade many. We may make excuses in this life, but then no excuse will avail. The meeting with God will be universal. Prepared or unprepared, all must meet God. No one can postpone the meeting a day beyond the Lord's appointed time. Furthermore, every one must meet God for himself. The meeting is a personal one; no one can meet the Lord for us and be accountable to him for our lives. People in this life frequently represent one another by proxy, but there will be no proxies at the judgment. The meeting with God will be final. If all the mistakes of life have not been washed out in the blood of Jesus, we will not be granted another meeting. The characters formed in life will remain with us throughout eternity. If this meeting finds us unprepared, we must sigh too late: "Lost forever!" How sad will be that bitter wail!

2. We should prepare to meet God, because we are unfit to meet him without preparation. We are polluted by sin, and, like the leper, should cry: "Unclean, unclean!" As the seraphims cried of old, so we should sing to-day: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory." In sin, the best of us feel as did Isaiah: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." Jacob, while in his sins, when in the presence of God, cried: "How dreadful is this place!" God is holy, while the sinner is unholy. Heaven would be a hell to the vile sinner. The vilest and most corrupt dread the association of the pure and good in this life. Here a gulf is between them; in the next world this gulf will be far wider and deeper. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." (Rev. 22: 11.) The man who is selfish throughout life will be selfish in hell. If the goodness of God does not lead a man to repentance in this world, he will live in impenitence throughout eternity. To enjoy heaven, we must get heaven within us while living. Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people.

3. How prepare? This is a great question. It involves the issues of eternity. Our lives will be most woeful failures if we do not find the correct answer to this question. The Savior promises salvation to the one who believes and is baptized. (Mark 16: 16.) Of course, repentance is included. The commission, as given by Luke, says: "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Peter commanded believers to repent and be baptized; the Samaritans believed and were baptized. Other examples might be given, but these are amply sufficient. Hence the alien sinner must believe, repent, and be baptized in order to enter the body of Christ. Those in Christ prepare by walking after the spirit, and not after the flesh. They must take unto themselves the whole armor of God, must fight the good fight of faith, must be faithful until death.

4. When should we prepare? When would you think best? Delays are dangerous; death will come as a thief in the night. Now is the golden time, for God says: "Now." "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

"Now" is the watchword of the wise,

"Now" is written on the banner of the prudent.

Now may be your only time. You may be cold in death before another sun. No preparation after death—only the judgment then. "Are you ready?"

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

INSPIRATION.

Brother Lipscomb: In the Gospel Advocate of December 21 you write a most excellent article on "The Spread of Skepticism," and in it you touch upon the unbelief of J. H. Garrison and others in the "inspiration of the Scriptures." I am uninformed as to just what the Christian-Evangelist teaches on this subject from a personal reading of the writings of its editor or contributors, as I am not a subscriber to that paper; but I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate for some twenty-five years, and have read several works on the integrity of the Scriptures, such as J. W. McGarvey's and Milligan's works, but in all my reading I have never seen a clear definition and application of the word "inspiration" as used in the Bible. I, therefore, ask you to kindly tell us through the Gospel Advocate what is the inspiration of the Bible. I once saw this question propounded to ten or twelve of the most intelligent brethren in the country, some of them preachers of the gospel, and there were no two of them who gave the same answer. The cause of this, no doubt, was that they got their ideas from some other source than the Bible.

What does the Bible mean when it uses such terms as "the inspiration of the Bible," or has it failed to use them?—What is the difference in the working of the providence of God and his work in inspiration? To get the point which I wish you to bring out more clearly before you, I will say that I am very confident you will say inspiration is a miraculous process, and its products are the fruits of miraculous force; while the providences of God overlook, control, and guide both law and miracle to attain an object. If inspiration is not a miraculous process and its product a miraculous thing, then what is it? If this is true, then were all the writers of the Bible miraculously endowed with a knowledge of all the things they have given us in the Bible? It appears to me that the Bible clearly teaches that God is as infallible and certain in his providence over law and men as he is in miracles, and that he only used the miraculous as a creative and generative power in both the formation of the Bible as well as in his works in nature, and that the miraculous is not used for the general propagation and preservation of the things created. A clear defining of distinctions along this line by the word of God will give great light to many.

J. E. THOMPSON.

We do not usually use the word "inspiration" in a very definite or exact sense. We generally mean that the thing is revealed or guaranteed as true by God, regardless of how it is made known or assured to man. When we say Garrison and his class of men deny the inspiration of the Scriptures, we mean they deny they are guaranteed by God as true. They deny that the Scriptures as written are always correct histories of what they report. They claim they were written by men liable to make mistakes, and they did often make mistakes. What are called "higher critics" claim that the original writings of the books of the Old Testament have been revised by later writers, and that they are able by the terms used and the style to determine what sentences have been added by the later writers. The grounds on which they base such claims would show to men of common sense they are often ridiculous if the reasons were given. In Gal. 3: 16 Paul said: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." I remember what G. W. Longan said about this scripture. He contended that Paul made a mistake, because "seed" is used to mean more than one. All Paul meant was that God had not used the plural form, but the singular; so that it did not imply more than one seed. Alexander Proctor said Paul thought the way to get good olives was to graft the branches of bitter olives into a good root, instead of the opposite, because Paul said of the Jews and Gentiles that the branches of the tame olive tree were broken off, referring to the rejection of the Jews, and those of the wild olive grafted in (Rom. 10: 17-24), making Paul a fool in order to appear smart himself. These are samples that I heard myself from them; and while all just and fair criticism is good, much of this called "higher criticism" approaches foolish blasphemy.

"Inspire" means "to draw in." "Inspiration" definitely means to draw the Holy Spirit into the soul, so that he will direct the thoughts and words of the individual. It is not surprising that persons gave different answers, because there are different methods of making known God's will to his servants. There are two methods—revelation and inspiration. Revelation was made by dreams or by speaking in an audible voice and telling what he wished them to know; inspiration is the entrance of the Holy Spirit into the heart so as to mold and direct the spirit of the person. Both methods of making God's will known to men were used by God. He spoke by dreams to Jacob and Joseph; he spoke in words they heard to Abraham, Moses, and Saul on the way to Damascus. In other instances the Holy Spirit entered into, abode with, and directed the minds and words as one's own spirit does. This is properly inspiration. 2 Pet. 1: 21 says: "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The will of the man did not control this, but the Holy Spirit in him moved him to speak the words of the Spirit. The prophets did not always know the meaning of what the Spirit spoke through them. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." (1 Pet. 1: 10, 11.) They understood blessings were promised, but not what, when, or where they should be bestowed; were anxious to know, but did not understand. The apostles received the same kind of inspiration on the day of Pentecost. They spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance. Peter prophesied that all that were afar off, as many as the Lord God should call, would receive the Holy Spirit; but he did not understand that this referred to the Gentiles. There were degrees in this kind of inspiration, graduated from those endowed with the teaching gifts up to the apostles, who were fully endowed and whom the Spirit would guide into all truth and call to their remembrance all things that Jesus had said to them. The apostles possessed this highest degree of inspiration, so their teachings must be accepted as the teachings of God and infallibly true.

There seems to be no doubt that on Pentecost the Spirit gave the very words that were spoken—that is, the Spirit used the mouths of the apostles to speak the words he dictated. But that degree of inspiration was not needed in all the narratives made or teachings done, and the degree of inspiration seems to have been graded to the requirements of the occasion. The promise of Jesus was that the Holy Spirit would guide them into all truth. All the truth of God needed for their works would be made known to them, and they would know to reject all error. I am sure all these forms and degrees of revelation and inspiration were used by God in making known his will to men. The apostles would be guided into all truth, and whatever degree of inspiration was needed to make known the truth was supplied.

All making known the will of God to man, whether by revelation or inspiration, was miraculous, and pertained to the preparatory and creative age of God's work. The Jewish age was preparatory to the permanent and perfect kingdom. When the people were obedient to the law of Moses, the prophets did not appear. Blessings came through obedience to the laws of God. Now the blessing for obedience is just as sure and as much to be depended on as if bestowed through miracle, but the kingdom was established and the law given by miracle to attest they were from God. Man was created by miracle. His life is perpetuated and transmitted through the laws God gave to regulate this procreation of the species. The same order prevails in the spiritual world. "Providence," as we use the term, could lead into truth, but cannot reveal it.

D. L.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother E. S. B. Waldron's address is changed from Lavergne to Tom's Creek, Tenn.

Brother I. B. Bradley and wife, of Russellville, Ala., were in the office Saturday.

The address of Brother E. S. Elkins is changed from Celeste, Texas, to Ethel, Texas.

Brother F. B. Srygley preached at Tenth and Russell streets, this city, last Lord's day.

Brother E. G. Sewell preached morning and night at Foster street, this city, last Sunday.

Inclosed find $1.50. Please send me the Advocate for one year. The paper is just too good to do without.—O. T. Crouse, Dixon, Ky.

Brother S. R. Logue, of Pinewood, Tenn., was in the office on Friday. He had come to Nashville to meet some pupils for his school.

We made an error in reporting ten additions, as the result of Brother E. A. Elam's meeting at New Liberty, Ky. He preached about ten days, but there were no additions.

Brother T. B. Larimore is in this city engaged in a meeting with the church at College street. We hope they will have a great meeting. Brother Larimore's address while here will be 1009 South Market street.

Brother J. W. Shepherd has been receiving complimentary letters on his series, "A Tour Around the Globe." He has thought of publishing them in book form. He would be glad to have expressions concerning this from our readers.

I rejoice to report that God is blessing the work in this mission. On the fourth Lord's day in December we enjoyed the blessed privilege of seeing another one obey the glorious gospel. We all desire the prayers of God's people that the old Jerusalem gospel may be firmly established at this place.—J. A. Klingman, Hubbardsville, N. Y.

You can count on my unqualified support of the Advocate as long as it holds to the principles of truth as it has done. I have ever regarded it as the soundest and most unflinching paper published. I have always upheld it and expect to continue to do so. . . . The Gospel Advocate is the grandest medium for doing good I have ever known.—L. M. Owen, Mineola, Texas.

Since last report, which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of December 21, 1899, we have received $3 from Brother G. E. Hoffman, of West Virginia, to assist us in completing our house of worship. This makes $35 to date. I am working every hour I can spare putting on the lath, and we hope to get it plastered in a few weeks. I shall borrow the money needed, and trust to the Lord and the faithful in Christ Jesus for help.—W. J. Rice, Covington, Ind.

EDITORIAL.

Always ready, never sorry.

Only the Christless are hopeless.

Without Christ every man is a failure.

A grateful contentment is very noble.

How sweet will be our rest in heaven!

God demands gifts of us, because he wants to save us.

Fear makes us cowards when sin reigns in the heart.

You degrade your life, by looking on that which is vulgar.

Christ was not above an audience of one; why should we be?

Rainy days are as necessary to growth as sunshiny ones.

Those who live solely for themselves are in very poor business.

It is nobler to think of helping others than to think of helping self.

Influence is like a torch: it may be used for burning or for lighting. How are you using yours?

As long as we do our duty in the living present we will have no frightful visions of the future.

The influence of the good we may do can never die. God could use the dead Elisha as well as the living. So our influence will live throughout the countless ages. How anxious we should be to do good!

Conversation is an art worth learning. Its keynote is unselfishness. To listen without interrupting, to speak without trumpeting our opinions, are accomplishments which the selfish find difficult, but which must be acquired before the charm of conversation begins. When this is learned, then our conversation should always be on those things which are pure and elevating.

A lady whose right hand was very slowly becoming helpless from paralysis very seldom spoke of her affliction. A lady friend remarked to her one day: "You are growing no worse; at least your disease is at a standstill." "No," she replied; "while you can perceive no difference in one week, yet in two or three months you can see quite a difference." Even so it is with our spiritual decline. It comes on so imperceptibly that at the end of one week we cannot discover our, decline. Gradually we take less interest in our prayers, and less in the worship, and less in teaching those around the word of God. How insidiously sin does its work! We should keep close watch on ourselves. It is so easy to slip downward that we are often on the down grade before we know it.

Doubtless you have all heard of the man who said he had been a member of the church for twenty-five years and it had not cost him twenty-five cents. How low is the estimate some people place upon Christianity! The man who has any money does not love the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ much who does not pay far more than that for its support. A man delights to work for that in which he has an interest. A man has no special interest in a bank in which he has no stock further than that he would be glad to see it succeed. But let the same man have $10,000 stock in a bank; he will watch the proceedings of that bank with great interest and will labor to make the stock declare a handsome dividend. Just so it is with the church of God. Men who are interested in it will work for it. They will give it their thought, time, and money. Such as they have they will give unto it.

Tables have been published recently in which it appears that in the Bohemian fraternal benefit societies of this country the number of suicides is most startlingly large. The societies are overwhelmingly infidel, it being characteristic of some of them, as the one known as "Jednota Taboritu." In this particular society it is said that every year there are 33 suicides to every 10,000 members, and that out of 1,000 deaths, 333 of them are suicides. The Knights of Maccabees have 2 suicides to each 10,000 members, and 30 suicides out of each 1,000 deaths, respectively; the A. O. U. W., 4 and 30; while in this Bohemian society one-third of all the deaths occurring among its members are from suicide. Infidelity and suicide are thus associated in a most startling and terrible manner. Infidelity puts a low estimate on life and its responsibilities. True religion emphasizes life and seeks to make it worth living.—Christian Leader.

Standing on the threshold of the new year, every church throughout the land should resolve to do more than ever before in preaching the gospel. No Christian can afford to put money in the balance against souls. The church that gives only a few dollars per year for preaching the gospel in destitute fields is a failure. Every church should more than support itself. Every Christian should endeavor to take some one to heaven with himself. The man has not the spirit of Christ who is willing to go to heaven alone. Christ died that he might redeem the whole world. The Christian should covet liberality. His highest aim should be to do good in every laudable way. The work of sowing the seed of the kingdom and thereby being instrumental in the salvation of souls is the grandest work in which mortals ever engaged. If the church will do its whole duty, the missionary society will soon be a thing of the past.

Always there are men and women who long for an education and yet find it impossible to satisfy their longing. But an education is not the putting into the mind of certain facts; it is the drawing out of one's powers and abilities. A well-known educator defines education as "the product of the contacts and experiences of life." There is no one so poor that he may not, if he will, have great experiences. The Bible suggests many. There is the experience of the cheerful giver. The translation weakens it; the Greek is "a hilarious giver." How many of us know what it is to be joyful, merry, hilarious at the opportunity of giving? Then there is the peace that passeth understanding. No text-book from the highest university can teach that; but God can teach it. There is the joy that Christ gives "not as the world giveth." Does any college diploma cover a course in joy? Books will perish, and the knowledge of them, but to be educated in these greatest things is to be in training for the experiences that have not entered into the heart of man—which God has prepared for them that love him.—Forward.

"We build our heaven as we go along," said a dear old lady. "I once had friends who were traveling abroad for several years. They intended to build a home on their return, and the dream of that home was ever present with them on their journey. They purchased a beautiful picture, vase, or statue at a great cost and at even a temporary sacrifice, which they sent home to await their coming. Curiosities and rare treasures which would afterwards be linked with pleasant memories, they forwarded for their future enjoyment. I love to think that we are doing the same for our heavenly home in these pilgrimage days on earth. The kindly deed that made a rare picture in somebody's life, the little sacrifice that blossomed into joy; the helpful friendship, cut suddenly short, it may be—all these we shall find again; and the patience we have gained, the 'song in the night' which we have learned—whatever of beauty, tenderness, faith, or love we can put into other lives or our own—all these will be among our treasures in heaven."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Our calendar is the nicest and prettiest we have ever made. See our premium offer in regard to same on last page.

"The Christian's Duty toward Civil Governments and Carnal Wars" is a tract recently published by us for Brother William J. Miller, of Lometa, Texas. It will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of 10 cents.

The American is in receipt of a neat calendar from the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. Unlike most calendars, the dates, months, etc., are printed from original type. The result is a remarkably clear impression. Surmounting the calendar is a pretty picture, set in the midst of a picturesque landscape.—Nashville Sunday American.

We have just finished another edition of that popular storybook, "Sunshine; or, Uncle Minor's Stories." This is a book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. It is a splendid book for the young, and is also read with pleasure and profit by the older members of the family. The book has 256 pages, 6½ by 9½, and is attractively bound in cloth. Price, $1, postpaid.

One of the prettiest of New-year calendars put before the Nashville public has been turned out by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. It is a beautiful specimen of the printer's art. A notable feature is a landscape and river scene in colors, a delicately and artistically executed piece of work—as good as any turned out in the large cities of the East.—Nashville Daily Banner.

We want the hearty cooperation of all our subscribers for 1900. Let each old subscriber send us a new one. We feel encouraged over our renewals and the new subscribers coming in now, and we want to increase our list all we can this year. As heretofore, we shall endeavor to make the best paper we can. We call your attention to our liberal offers on last page. If you are behind on your subscription, we earnestly request that you pay up and renew. If your time is about to expire, do not allow yourself to fall behind. If you are not a subscriber, we would be glad to have you on our list. If you need a Bible, send us new subscribers under offers mentioned. We assure you that we will appreciate all your efforts in behalf of the paper.

"The Gospel Plan of Salvation," by T. W. Brents, clears away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes: "Predestination," "Election and Reprobation," "Calvinistic Proofs Examined," "The Foreknowledge of God," "Hereditary Depravity," "Establishment of the Church," "Identity of the Church," "The New Birth," "Faith," "Repentance," "The Confession," "Baptism—What Is It?" "Who Should Be Baptized?" "The Design of Baptism," "The Holy Spirit." As a book of reference, it is invaluable, and is highly recommended by the press and brotherhood. Pages, 667; 8vo, good paper, clear type, well bound. Eight editions have been sold. Price, $2.

The Death Roll.

Brother McQuiddy: I wrote the following some time ago and thought I would send it to you as a private solace in your bereavement, but did not:

All the balm of Gilead may be poured into the soul of him who has lost a good wife, and still there will be aches not touched, wounds not healed, an immense chasm totally empty. The fruits gathered from the heights of Calvary soothe much the aching heart, but nowhere is the sweet solace to bereaved mourners found like that in the small vault hewn out by Joseph of Arimathea. After all, who wants to live always. The very idea of living forever, as we are, tires the mind that thinks. Having to die makes life wondrous sweet. We pass through death and the grave to be ready for eternity—yes, fit for it. When a boy, I used to hear my mother sing:

I would not live away, I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er my way.

As her clear voice rang out in sweetness upon the air, and her deep-blue eyes seemed fixed upon something away in the distance and her thoughts fixed upon eternity, I felt like saying: "Ma, how can you sing this song?" I have changed, however; I have different ideas now. Yes, there is enough of life in its completeness, full enough for its cheer. Death is the Christian's escape from life. But it is sad to have to leave one's work before it is done; it may be sadder to have others leave us before they have finished their work.

My brother, I have tried to stand on your desolate grounds and survey your rough and rugged surroundings. Notwithstanding I have passed through the valley of sorrows, I do not believe I can take in your situation properly; it is too much, it is too real, for ideal work. There is only one person whose taking away from earth is missed more than wife, and that is mother. I have always had exalted ideas of wife and mother. They grow; in fact, my early conceptions were poor, poor as they so feebly grasped the vastness of the subject. Mother—I see her, with the helpless babe at her breast. I wonder what can surpass the spectacle. The scene is changed; the actors on the stage have increased in number. This time the same mother moves, queenlike, among her grown daughters, or her sturdy boys lay their arms tenderly and carefully and trustingly on her, and I am lost in ravished delight. I ejaculate: Where does she appear to the best advantage? Anywhere, everywhere. I have sorrowed for you, but most of all that your dear children will never on earth know the full blessedness of mother. God took only one rib from man's side; he knew just what man needed. He could have taken more, but more were not necessary. He who is not satisfied with one wife sets aside creation and the law of God, too; he who has more than one, he who has less than one, lives abnormally with God's order. God said it is not good for man to be alone. "Alone"—yes, that is the word. The world is full of people; the streets are crowded; the church runs over; there are human beings here, there, everywhere; yet the man without a wife is "alone." Sisters, brothers, kin, friends, father—yes, even mother herself—cannot keep the poor creature who has buried his heart, a great part of himself, from being "alone." Some may not realize this; but you do, Brother McQuiddy. God made it this way, and it is another of his wise plans which reflect his glory. All men do not know woman's true, intrinsic worth; they do not even avail themselves of it. Her society, her companionship, keep man from being alone. O how you, my brother, pine for your lost one, to tell her something, to hear something that she could tell as no one else! "Alone!" It is an awful word. How good, how wise was God in his creation! There are times when man craves to shut out the whole world and to be left to God and his thoughts. But, even then, wife helps him draw nearer to his God. Alone!

When in affliction's valley
I'm treading the road of care,
My Savior helps me to carry
My cross when heavy to bear;
My feet entangled with briars,
Ready to cast me down,
My Savior whispers his promise:
"I'll never leave thee alone."
No, never alone; no, never alone;
He promised never to leave me,
Never to leave me alone.

The heavens do not declare the glory of God more clearly, the firmament does not show his handiwork more forcibly and effectually, than does woman, his last creation, as she points to his omnipotence, omniscience, beneficence. God said it was not good for man to be alone, and he made him a companion. It is strange that man can be satisfied with anything but the divine arrangement. Man ought to think more of himself for being the object of God's special favor and special creation. What is meant by "helpmeet?" What by "helpmate?" They do not mean the same thing. "Helpmate" means a coworker, a helper. God did not call woman by this term, but he said she was a "helpmeet" for man—that is, help fitted, suited, made for man. O how helpless the home that has lost the helpmeet! She is man's self. When he talks to her he communes with himself; he can trust her counsel, for she is bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh. Man can trust a true wife as himself; often with more confidence. She is the wonderful wisdom of God—walking, talking, living, acting in perfect accord with God's name for her—helpmeet. Her power in her sphere is boundless; her tact at once novel and without limitation, as she reflects the glory of God.

I wish you and your dear children to know that away down in Alabama one shares your grief and ponders in sadness over your irreparable loss. I remember, when I shared your and your dear wife's hospitality, with what dignity, and, at the same time, simplicity, she acted the part of mother, wife, and mistress of the household. Tell the children to cherish the model life of their dear mother.

Yes, Brother McQuiddy, I wrote the above, but did not send it in time, and now the mail has brought me a black card, with the picture of a cross, encircled by a crown, and all this in the midst of the radiant sun. On this card are printed in gilt letters the sad, sad words: "To the memory of Dr. J. W. Long. Died on August 7, 1899. Aged thirty-two years, nine months, and two days." Then, on a beautiful banner, are these words:

One precious to our hearts has gone,
The voice we loved is stilled;
The place made vacant in his home
Can nevermore be filled.
Our Father, in his wisdom, called
The boon his love had giv'n;
And though on earth the body lies,
The soul is safe in heav'n.

You have had a lengthy piece in your paper about our brother, but it would be difficult to say too much about Jimmie Long. The church has sustained a great loss. I feel my loss. It will take a lifetime for his family to get through with feeling their loss. My sympathy, my tears, my prayers all belong to Sister Long in her deep grief and severe trial. But before I get through with my sad work, here comes another message, by mail, from J. Waller Henry:

"I have just returned from Athens, Ala., and will not have time to see you before going on to Mobile. Papa asked me to give you these dates: 'Amanda M. Payne was born in Butler County, Ala., on October 17, 1843; married on October 17, 1860—her seventeenth birthday—to A. C. Henry; baptized on December 15, 1867, at Mims, by David Adams; died, after an illness of several weeks, on October, 25, 1899, at Athens, Ala.; aged fifty-six years and eight days. Eight children—four boys and four girls—survive her; four boys are dead.'"

This is a short history of a good woman, a good wife, a good mother. Amanda and I boarded at her grandfather's, William Payne's, in 1853, and went to school. Afterwards she went to school to me until she had secured a good education. In 1867, while at Mims (Fatama, properly), I found her and the Doctor in the wilds of Wilcox County or Monroe County and preached to them the unsearchable riches of Christ. She was baptized at once; the Doctor, a short time afterwards. To her I have always given the credit for the Doctor being a preacher. I desired much to see her before she died and ask her why it is the Doctor wastes his extraordinary ability in fondling innovations. I did not start them that way. I had framed her answer. "Mack [she always called me "Mack"] the word of God is all-sufficient." I intend to ask her on the other shore.

I would not be satisfied to close without mentioning the name of James R. Shepard. He died not far from Big Sandy, Texas. He was a good man, an earnest disciple. He was my first cousin. We spent much of our early boyhood together. He was ever an agreeable companion. He was discharged from the Confederate Army during the war to work his way back to his Texas home. This was a big job. He came to my mother's, sick with chronic dysentery—wasted, feeble, looking almost like a dead man. O, he was anxious to get to Aunt Polly's, for he loved her as a mother, having spent much of boyhood under her guardian care! She, by painstaking, soon had him ready to start to his "Queenie," of whom he talked so much—the mother of his far-away Texas home.

After much trouble—walking, worrying, eluding the enemy, crossing the big river—he came to the neighborhood of home. A friend met him plodding along, worn out, and told him his "Queen" was buried the day before. He married another most excellent woman, reared a large family, and lived respected and loved by all.

I have just received news of the death of Brother Eben Lavender, at Cross Roads, Lowndes County, Ala. He was a disciple of long standing, and a man much loved. I close the death roll, but still it rolls on.
J. M. BARNES.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer the following questions: (1) If a man were to commit the unpardonable sin that our Savior speaks of, would He ever have any more hope? (2) In the cases of Judas, Ananias, and Esau, if I understand the Scriptures right, they knew that there was no other way for them to be saved, but went their way deliberately; am I right? (3) Is a presumptuous sin always unpardonable? (4) If a man, after he has become a Christian, gets out of the way and wants to come back, but on account of brethren condemning him for what he has done and through his timidity he does something that God did not say do, would it be a willful sin, or would it be weakness? (5) From the connection, it seems to me that Heb. 6 and 10 teach that a man might give up Christ before he had reached a certain state of perfection and repent and come back; am I right?
A BROTHER.

(1) "Unpardonable" means "that which cannot be pardoned." If it is unpardonable, there is no hope for the person who commits it in this world or in the world that is to come. (2) We are not told that these were presumptuous sins. Judas knew Jesus was innocent. I suppose Esau knew he was going wrong, but his wrong related to his earthly relations, and it is used to illustrate sins against God. But Esau, whatever he knew, went so far his father could not change what he had done; so he was cut off from the rights of the firstborn. Ananias, of course, knew that he was sinful. He did it under temptation, and the crime was so great a one—lying to the Holy Spirit—that he was killed as a warning to others. It is nowhere said this was a presumptuous sin, and other sins not presumptuous lead to ruin. Any sin persisted in leads to death. (3) "The soul that doeth aught presumptuously, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him." (Num. 15: 30, 31.) This shows what constitutes presumption. To despise the authority of God, set it aside, and think we can do better than he commands, is presumption; yet there are doubtless degrees in presumption. Sometimes it is not deliberate and intentional, and God seems to overlook it so far as to give opportunity to turn. We find a case of this kind in 1 Sam. 13. When Saul forced himself and made offerings to the Lord, God condemned him, but not utterly. He tried him again, in chapter 15. He repeated the sin in an aggravated form, and God rejected him. (4) What is done through timidity is a weakness, not a presumptuous sin. But a man's timidity is wrongly directed if it makes him timid before men, yet bold to sin before God; and when a person comes excusing his sins because of the course of others, he has but partially repented. Others' mistakes are no excuses for our sins against God; and when we repent, we ought to openly and freely say: I have sinned. That is the way the true servants of God did, without seeking to lay the blame on others. (5) The Bible certainly teaches it is possible for a man to turn from Christ, then repent and come back to him and be received. Peter did this. But we are taught and warned it is a dangerous course to pursue; and if it is done recklessly and indifferently, there is danger of a man's falling away so that he can never repent and be restored to God's favor.

Provision is the foundation of hospitality and thrift the fuel of magnificence.—Sir P. Sidney.

Home Reading.

"THERE IS."

Is there beyond the silent night
An endless day?
Is death a door that leads to light?
We cannot say.
The tongueless secret locked in fate,
We do not know; we hope and wait.
Yes, there is beyond the silent night
An endless day.
Death opens the door, lets in the light,
Christ leads the way.
'Tis not a secret locked in fate;
We need not doubt, we need not wait
Faith lifts the veil, that we may see
A glorious immortality.
Were there no Christ to be a light,
Or show the way,
How dark, how drear the hopeless night!
Well might we say,
And wish and hope the grave might be
Our resting place through eternity.
'Tis no weak fancy of the brain,
We know in part,
To reap, we sow perchance of grain,
Perchance some other sort.
We see our likeness in our Lord;
We trust his grace, we trust his word.
—D. B. Harris, in Union City (Pa.) Times.

WHITEWASHING FOR GOD.

There was one righteous man in Ortonville. There may have been more; but of this one we are certain. At first sight you would perhaps be surprised when he was pointed out to you as "the best man in town." But the town was small, and, really, when you knew him, you would say: "Ah, well, even if he is the best, there is plenty of room left for the others to measure up." For Miles Cornish was a giant—every way. It is of his spiritual size we write.

Here, then, is his portrait—the portrait of the outer man: Tall, thin, sprightly; light hair, blue eyes; teeth to make a dentist smile, or frown; firm, pleasant lips; voice so merry you smiled, however commonplace his words.

As for his spiritual portrait, it has never been taken—on earth. Snapshots, it is true, have been taken. You cannot get a good picture of a giant with a small, cracked camera. Human cameras are very small and imperfect. But here is a snapshot: Dressed in white overalls, splashed from head to foot with calcimine, singing as he went, Miles swung down the village street. He had been standing all day, his whitewash brush jollily flap-flopping on walls and ceilings. He was tired, for he had worked through his noon hour and past the "quitting time." No one had asked him to do this. But he had heard that a man with a sick wife was to move into the house where he was at work, that the small hotel was comfortless, and the sick woman was in need of the quiet of her own room. Ordinarily, the work would have been a day and a half. Miles' employer was in no hurry, but the workman worked from five o'clock in the morning to eight o'clock at night, finished the job, stopped at the hotel to tell the sick woman's husband that the house was ready for them, and to ask—since he (Miles) was, in one sense, a neighbor—if he could help them in any way. The pay for the extra time of the day's work, the whitewasher dropped into the hand of an old man who was shuffling along the road.

"What, Miles? No, no, boy. You work hard for your money. See, I have a little left from what you gave me before."

"That's all right, grandfather. That's some extra money; that'll do to go on account of the days when you worked all day and I was too little to do more than eat the food that cost so dear. We must even things up in this world."

Miles hurried on.

"Bless the lad," muttered the old man. "He's queer, but he's got the soul of a white angel. Anybody'd think I was really his granddad. Now who ever heard of a young man evenin' things up that way? Most young fellows think the world owes them a livin'. Bless the lad! If I get to heaven it'll be because he made the way light for me; and, if they'll let me, I'll speak a good word for him. But maybe—maybe they know him better'n I do. Bless the lad!" "The lad," already forgetting what he had done, was hurrying on. His was the kind of haste that has no selfishness about it. It is the haste born of freedom from care; light-heartedness and readiness for the next thing—rest or work or prayer.

At the door of a cottage a girl of fifteen years was standing. She had been crying. At the sight of Miles walking toward her, her face brightened. She did not know him very well. She only knew that he was "a good man." To have a good man pass near is enough to make any woman's face brighter.

"Good evening, Miss Jennie. How is the mother getting on?" Miles' sharp eyes had seen the tear flush on the girl's face, and he stopped.

"She is coming home from the hospital in the morning."

"O, that is good! Home is a good place."

The girl's lips trembled. "This isn't a good place for mother."

"Why, child?" She was indeed a child before this man, who stood six feet two in his stockings.

"It's so dingy and dirty. How can I clean it, when I work all day? If father finds me cleaning at night, he beats me. I don't know why."

Miles Cornish stood still. He was thinking. These were the words that were passing through his mind: "A cup of cold water." That means to give people what they need. This little sister needs the help of a strong man. Miles Cornish, here's your chance!

The girl was looking at him curiously. Many people looked at him that way. It was because they seldom saw a face that shone with unselfish devotion and pure delight in doing good.

"Jennie, run in and make me a cup of coffee. Have you bread in the house? Very well. In twenty minutes I will be back with some fresh whitewash. Then I want a bit of supper. By morning your house will be clean—walls and ceiling. What say you?"

"O, Mr. Miles! But you are tired."

"Tired? Me? Bless you, there is all eternity to get rested in. If your father comes in, tell him big Miles is coming to see him."

All her care turned to gladness; the girl hurried in. In twenty minutes Miles was back. In five minutes more he had swallowed his hot coffee and was putting up his ladders and boards. In still five minutes more his brush was going flip, flap, while Jennie watched and blessed him with the thanks of a good, tired little heart.

The poor, drunken father staggered home and fell prone across the floor in a whisky sleep. Miles picked him up, carried him out to the woodshed, covered him with some old horse blankets, and left him there.

The cottage was very small, and Miles' big brush did rapid work. The smoke, the grease spots, the fly specks, were disappearing as if by magic. When the last flap of the brush had been given, Miles looked around. Jennie was scrubbing in another room. "Poor little fly," said the big man. "Factory all day, a sick mother, a father who cannot behave himself! I wonder what God gave me these big hands for? Miss Jennie, give me that brush! Did you ever see a man scrub. Child, how white you are! Tell you what you do: You just scamper home to my mother, and let me stay here to-night. Come, now, hurry along. Mother is lonely, and so are you. Let her tuck you away. I'll keep house till morning."

Every one obeyed Miles. Jennie was too tired to scamper, but she made all haste, leaving the cottage to the care of the giant.

What was it the angels saw, looking down that night for some new, good record to write in the great books of heaven? They saw a man in white overalls, down on his knees, scrubbing, rubbing, cleaning; they saw a man who had been up since four o'clock, polishing little panes of glass by the light of a kerosene lamp; they saw a giant sweeping, brushing, dusting, polishing. At daybreak they saw a man kneeling in a woodshed, beside a sleeping drunkard, praying in whispers, as children pray; they saw a soul so white that all heaven rang with a song of joy.

An hour later, just in time for his simple breakfast, Miles Cornish entered his own humble home. His mother, white-haired, with a face written over with the peace of God, met him at the door. "Well, my son, and what have you been doing?"

He kissed her reverently. "Mother, I have been whitewashing for God."—Ada Shaw, in Michigan Christian Advocate.

What you are speaks so loud that I cannot hear what you say.—Emerson.

THE LAND OF SWEET SOMETIME.

Over the water we'll sail some day
To the land of Sweet Sometime,
And we'll anchor there for a year and a day,
In the ripples of gold on the lower bay
In the sunset's rays sublime.

It's over the river in Somedayville,
By the lake of Soon-to-Be,
And Later On is the mighty hill
That arises out of the laughing rill,
The river of Wait and See!

It's always summer, the whole year through,
In the beautiful Sometime land.
There are happy skies that are deep and blue;
There are roses waiting to bloom for you,
To blossom at your command.

So out to the breeze let us spread the sail,
Till it beats in a merry rhyme,
And off we'll go in the moonlight pale,
Till we reach the land of the fairy tale—
The land of Sweet Sometime!

—Exchange.

THE LUXURY OF FAITH.

"What will Mildred do?" "How can she bear it?" "How hard it all is!" So Mildred Lawson's girl friends exclaimed over what they called her hard lot.

It was the old story of loss and changes, but it was a new story to this family, and Mildred's part of the burden seemed peculiarly heavy. "To think," said one of the girls, "that Mildred must go away now, when her mother is so far from strong! How anxious she will be! And then there is no certainty about her finding work to do. Her friends in the city only promise to do all they can to find something for her."

So the friend went on lamenting, and all the rest bewailed Mildred's lot. But Jean Fraser, the most intimate friend of all, talked with Mildred herself. "You will have to give up so much and do without so many things!" she exclaimed, with passionate sympathy. "You don't know how things will come out, either. O, it is so hard!"

But Mildred's young face was bright as she answered her mate: "Mother has made me feel," she said, "that I have one great luxury left that is worth everything. She calls it the luxury of trusting. She says there is a wonderful rest in simply believing that God will keep his word and bring out everything right, and then leaving it to him to do it. Of course, when we see just how it is to be, there is no faith needed; but when there is nothing else to do but trust, we can try the luxury of leaving it all to our Father. I mean to try it, Jean." And she did. She had many an opportunity to fall back on this one luxury, and she was richer in faith because she was poorer in other things. The luxury of simply trusting is within reach of all. Who will prove its rest and comfort.—Julia H. Johnston, in Classmate.

A STORY OF OOM PAUL.

President Krüger is in one respect the most remarkable man on earth. He is the only man in all history who has ever been president of a republic for twenty years in succession. He was born on October 10, 1825. His parents were Boer farmers, too poor to provide him with shoes, so that he had to trudge in his bare feet on the veldt. Like Nelson, Krüger has never known what fear meant. When taking home a span of oxen when he was only seventeen years old, and had his little sister with him, a large panther frightened the oxen. The animals bolted and the little girl, flung on the ground by the jolting wagon, was at the mercy of the ferocious beast, which stood over her with gleaming eyes. Though unarmed, young Krüger instantly engaged in a fierce battle with the panther. Though cruelly clawed, he held his grip on the panther's throat till he strangled the beast to death. He was badly lacerated and the blood flowed from many wounds, but he carried his fainting sister safely home. This exploit made Krüger the hero of the Boers.—Midland Methodist.

Patience is the ballast of the soul, that will keep it from rolling and tumbling in the greatest storm.
—Bishop Hopkins.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JAN. 4, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year..... $ 1 50
 Single Subscriber, Six Months..... 75
 Preachers and Widows, One Year..... 1 00
 Sample Copies..... Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter; unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

THE NEW YEAR—WHAT SHALL BE THE OUTCOME?

It is well, at the beginning of years, and seasons, and weeks, and days, to take our bearings and estimate what will be the outcome of our course. The course in which we start and continue, and the earnestness with which we pursue the course, will determine the end. There is but one course that can bring good to the man or can bring true good to others. Good to self and good to others have been joined together by God, and no man can put them asunder. The essential and elemental principle in the reign of God is that the good of one can be gained only in seeking the good of all. This principle is making perceptible headway among the nations of the earth where the Bible has gone. It is shown in the mutual combinations and associations among men for the good of each and all. In these each seeks good in the good of others. It is not always wisely done, but it shows the obligation is felt, which is a great step in the right direction. The association itself may be an unwise direction of the activities and labors of life; still one step is gained which may be directed in the right channel. The recognition of the truth is seen in the uses that men who attain great wealth are making of that wealth. Such large donations and gifts as the men of wealth have made for the help of the masses have never been seen in the world's history before. Mr. Carnegie stated that it should be considered a disgrace for a man to die rich, meaning he should distribute his riches before he dies. It may be well doubted if this is near to the scripture standard of Christian business. But it is a step in that direction, a recognition of the principle that the good of one can be found only in seeking the good of all. It may well be doubted if when the Christian standard is practiced a man can become a millionaire. Indeed it may be settled as true that a man cannot become a millionaire while his workmen remain poor and ignorant and his customers are pressed and pay more than a fair and just compensation to him for his goods. When the Christian spirit and the Christian principle prevail, the workmen and the customers will so share in the profits of the business that the proprietor will never become a millionaire, nor will his workmen be oppressed with poverty, or the customers charged exorbitant prices. When the Christian rule obtains, all who labor will share in the profits, and the head, as well as the workmen, bear the burdens of adversity. When the Christian rule prevails, it will be a disgrace to become a millionaire, in any ordinary methods. Instead of gaining money to become a millionaire, it will be used and distributed as made. Still there is ground for rejoicing that the obligation to help others is recognized. Where the influence of the Bible has never gone, the idea that a man must distribute his wealth for the good of others is unknown.

The growth of the idea that the good of one is found in seeking the good of all is seen in the recent wars waged. When, before the present, did rulers and governments ever feel it necessary to proclaim war was made for the good of those warred upon, or for the good of others, and not the war-making power? Now this claim may all be pretense with the leaders and the politicians, but it shows the prevalence of the sentiment that selfish ambition and greed must no longer prevail, and the rulers must show deference to the public feeling on the subject. Then, too, while all war is contrary to the spirit and principles of Christianity, the prevalence of the sentiment "has softened the asperities and assuaged the horrors of war." These are only the reflex influences of the Bible on those who have come under these influences. But the Christian is he who receives the direct influences and is guided by these and the agent through whom they are borne to others and to the public. To him there is but one pathway to good for himself or for others. All paths, all labors, all services, all worship that are not directed and sanctified by the word of God bring evil to him and to the world. No good to the child of God or to the world can come, save as he walks closely and faithfully in the way God has marked out for him. Wealth, riches, whatever of earthly favors or honors that come otherwise than through conformity to the laws of God, bring evil, and not good. "Treasures of wickedness profit nothing; but righteousness delivereth from death." (Prov. 10: 2.) "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it." (Prov. 10: 22.) The Lord gives only when the blessing comes through and in obedience to the laws of God. All riches, all honor, all success in the material or the spiritual world that does not come through obeying the laws or doing the will of God is evil and will bring evil to the doer and to the world, and not good. Let us learn this truth: "Riches profit not in the day of wrath: but righteousness delivereth from death." (Prov. 11: 4.)

All success in a wrong way brings evil, and not good. The greater success gained in ways not pointed out by God, the more work to be undone. The highest, the only true standard of righteousness, is the will of God as given in his law. Man's only good is found in doing that will, in walking in his ways. Success gained in this pathway comes as the blessing of God, and to it no sorrow is added.

To all who seek success in this line, good will come; no sorrow will be added, whether the success gained be much or little. To all who seek success in any other pathway than that of obedience to God, sorrow will be added, whether the success be great or small.

Then, if we will start out in the path of faithful obedience to God, and continue in it, the outcome will be one of good to us, good to mankind, good to God. If we are able to do but little, and we do that little in faithful obedience to God, we build upon the rock. God will watch over and preserve that good, though it be but little, and it will remain through all the eternal years of God, blessed of God, a blessing to man and an honor to God.

All departures from God's order in work, worship, or in any service of God, are evil, spring from an evil heart of unbelief, and no matter what the apparent success, work evil to men and dishonor God. They must be destroyed. God's honor and man's good (one and inseparable) demand it.

Thirty-four years ago we started out to maintain this principle of loyalty to God through the Gospel Advocate. We have tried to be faithful to it, in insisting upon walking in God's appointments, in seeking entrance into Christ, in opposition to the various denominations around us. To maintain this principle and insist on doing what God required as the only way of honoring him and saving our souls, is to be true to God, is to stand with Jesus, whose meat it was to do the will of Him that sent him. The denominations have fiercely assailed us for the position. I have not for a moment doubted in doing this they have persecuted us for Christ's sake; that in standing firm and loyal to Christ we have been persecuted for Christ's sake. While we labor and pray for the deliverance of the misguided from their wrong way, we can rejoice when we realize we suffer persecution for Christ's sake. The same condition of affairs has presented itself in the churches, claiming to be governed solely by the law of God. In the worship and work of the church they have as plainly changed the order of God in its spirit, its worship, and its work as others have changed that order in the conditions of entrance into Christ. Loyalty to God and his law left open but one course: to be faithful to the order God has given in his word. To change here seems to me as much disloyalty to God as to change the terms of admission into Christ; to stand by his order is to stand with Christ; to depart from and oppose this order is to oppose, is to fight against him; and to oppose and malign those who stand for his order is to persecute Christ; to bear opposition and be faithful to Christ is to bear persecution for Christ. In this "rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven," says the Master.

We have, for thirty-four years, stood as loyally to the Master in these things as we could. Our success in inducing others to stand with us in this matter has not been what we had hoped and desired; but if our course were to go over again, we would abate nothing of our fidelity in this course. We have but one more of the threescore and ten years allotted to man on earth remaining. If we knew how, we would emphasize and deepen the impression we have made along this line. About this, so long as we believe the Bible is from God, we can have no doubt; and as we approach the end, the more we study the word of God the more anxious we are to meet him, knowing we have opposed all innovations and changes upon his order at any point along the line of duty drawn by him. A closer walk with God is one more loyalty and fidelity to his laws and zeal and devotion in his appointments; and for this I daily pray and strive; and in this walk failure is success. In any other, the highest success is miserable failure. Shall this year be one of success or failure before God?
 D. L.

PRESSING FORWARD.

"Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.)

When the apostle speaks of forgetting things that are behind he does not mean that we should forget everything that is past, he does not mean that we should forget the love of God that brought Jesus from above, or that we should forget the sufferings and life of Jesus. These things are never intended to be forgotten; but there are many things in life that should be forgotten, or that should at least pass out of consideration. We meet with many crosses and losses, trials and tribulations, in this life that, when once passed over, can never be changed; but people are inclined to dwell upon these things after they are past, and when all the unpleasant memories of them that we can ever exercise can never change or improve them or us. All such things should be allowed to pass as part of the inevitable, and not be permitted to interfere with present privileges and duties toward God or our fellow-men. Some people so distress themselves over lost opportunities that they often fail to improve the present, or prepare for future, opportunities. All these things should be so forgotten, so pass out of consideration, as not to in any wise hinder present work or future plans and arrangements. For example, another year has passed over our heads and we are one year nearer the judgment seat of Christ than we were at the end of the preceding year; and during the past year we made many mistakes, lost many opportunities, and did and said many things that it is now too late to change, and all the fretting and troubling that we can do over them will never accomplish any good for us or any one else. Things like these should all so pass out of consideration as not to interfere for one moment with the work of this year.

Should anything have occurred in the past that we can yet make amends for, we certainly ought to do it; but it is wrong for Christians to brood over things of the past that are unchangeable to the hindrance of present duties and obligations. We should go to work with renewed energies and resolutions to do more and better work this year than in any year of the past; and, like Paul, press toward the mark. We should go to work earnestly before God to do all the good it is possible for us to do—both in our own lives and for the benefit of others—while at the same time we should improve as much as possible by the mistakes of the past, and not make the same ones over again. But it is never worth while to sit down and cry over spilled milk, for when milk is once spilled and lost no amount of trouble and crying can gather it up again. All we can do in such case is to replace it as quickly and fully as possible. Crying over it for an hour or a day is only a loss of that much time to replace the loss. So it should be regarding past blunders, mistakes, or losses that cannot be gathered up or changed. Instead, therefore, of brooding over past mistakes and things we cannot change, let us dive right into the present and work with a will for the present and open up the way to improve the future also. Let us be always striving to make forward movements and never retrograde.

When Paul said, "I press," the word "press" is a very significant word and implies a very earnest and strong effort; and then he pressed toward the mark. He did no haphazard work; his work was ever toward the prize. That means that all the time he was striving toward a full discharge of his duty, toward the doing of the Heavenly Father's will. Paul lost no time in experiments; he wasted no time in getting up new inventions; nor did he lose any time in studying what would be popular among men. The will of God in all things was his watchword. He knew well that if he sought to please men he would at the same time displease God; so he spent his time in teaching and practicing the will of God as revealed in his word. He strove, he pressed, he gave the very energies of his soul to doing the work the Lord required of him. He also prayed abundantly for the help of the Lord in his life work. Let us imitate him in this; and in laying out our plans for the future, let us not forget for a moment the Lord's work. Paul never lost sight of his Father's work. He was terribly persecuted, publicly whipped, and unmercifully treated in every way the ingenuity of wicked men, instigated by Satan, could invent; but none of these things moved him. He did not stop to talk and whine over his misfortunes, and hinder and trouble other people over his woes and troubles. Few men ever suffered so much with as little complaint as did the apostle Paul; and he never considered his work done as long as he was alive and permitted to labor. He kept reaching out after things before, not stopping for a moment to confer with flesh and blood.

Then let us reach forward, and not backward, and be always striving to do all the good that lies in our reach. Our time is short. When we live out our threescore and ten it seems but a little while; and if by reason of strength we reach our fourth score of years, the time will even then seem short when we look back over the past. Our lives are so short on this earth that if we lose much time we have but little time in which to work for eternity, which is the most important of all work. We are represented as soldiers, but those soldiers that drop out of the ranks and never get to the seat of war or to the field of battle are of no service to their country; and equally true is it that if we, as soldiers of the cross, drop out of line from time to time, and linger around after the pleasures and treasures of earth, we shall never be of any service as soldiers of Christ.

The Christian life is represented as a race for a prize, and if we drop out of the course to enjoy the shade of earth's pleasures by the way, we shall never reach the prize. Paul never understood that his work was done till he knew that he was at the end. So long as he was permitted to live and work, he said, "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway" (1 Cor. 9: 27); and as it was thus necessary for Paul to labor and strive to the end of life, it is certainly quite as important that we should do so. It was not until he was imprisoned and under condemnation to die that he could say: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Never till this time did he say he had finished his course; neither can we say we have finished our course till our working time is ended.

As we start, therefore, into this new year, this last year of the nineteenth century, let us press forward. "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." (Heb. 12: 1, 2.) When a prize is offered in a race, that prize can only be secured by the one that runs to the end of the course. Those that stop before they get to the end can have no showing for the prize; neither can those that wander from the track and lose time by the way. Only those that run to the end can ever hope for the prize. So we, as Christians, have no time to lose. If we loiter and fool away our time on the way through life, we shall lose all in the end. We must not allow anything to hinder us from running successfully; we must lay aside every weight, every besetting sin, everything that will hinder from making a successful race. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life are all weights that must be laid aside.

There are many things to hinder us in running the race that is set before us. One part of this race is to sound out the word of God to those that are not already blessed with it. In our own country, and not far from us, there are many that need to hear the word of God in its purity, some of whom would doubtless embrace it and be saved. Congregations everywhere should look out such locations and see to it that they have an opportunity to hear the plain truth, and if they are not in a condition to send the gospel to them, interest others in the work till it is done. We, none of us, know how much we can do in these matters till we try. Surely there are many churches in our country that are not doing all they might do in this work. It occurs to me that the brethren in Middle Tennessee are not doing anything like as much work, in proportion to number and strength, as they did in years gone by.

Brethren, let us go forward in this work and not let the work drag and souls be lost because we do not sound out the word. Paul said, "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel," and surely all of us are under obligations in this matter. If we cannot preach ourselves, we can surely have it done; and we are under obligations to the Lord to do all we can in that line. Sinners are perishing, while many children of God are floating along at their ease, and with plenty of this world's goods to do wonders in saving souls, if they would use the Lord's means that have fallen into their hands in that way. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," while Christians are only stewards under him, to use his means for his honor and for the blessing of humanity. If Christians everywhere will stir themselves and do more of this sort of work they will be better Christians themselves, and the number of the saved will more rapidly increase.

For a year or two past there seems to have been a sort of lull, or standstill, in our land. Churches seem not so active as they once were, and there were fewer additions by far than formerly in this country. There was a slight improvement, at least in some localities, during the past year on this line, and if all will arouse themselves and go to work in earnest this last year of the nineteenth century may be an exceedingly fruitful one, both in zeal and earnestness on the part of Christians, and in the enlightenment and salvation of sinners; and if we do not do so, there will be an awful responsibility resting upon our shoulders. Evidently the conflict that has been going on over plans and inventions of men have, in a measure, thrown a damper over the Lord's people and over the Lord's work. These things ought not to be so. The Lord's work ought not to cease because some are not satisfied with the simplicity of his divine arrangements for extending the truth abroad in the earth. Those that are for the Lord and for his truth ought to be the more diligent in their work, that the beauty of the Lord's wisdom may shine above that of men. The best and most powerful argument ever made in behalf of the Lord's divine arrangements for spreading the truth is for the Lord's people to practically carry out those arrangements by doing the work as God ordained it to be done. It is right to defend the truth at all times and under all circumstances, but it is not right to spend all our time only in discussing and hearing discussions on the truth and let the work go undone. So let us look forward and press forward in the great work that is before us and the Lord will be honored and our efforts will result in great good.

If all will go to work in earnest in doing the Lord's work, this last year of the century will be one of the most successful years in the pure work of the Lord ever seen in this country, and a tide of influences will be set to work that will run on into the new century and continue to enlarge as the years go by. Our only reliance to save a ruined world is the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe and obey it. Nothing but the word of the Lord, believed and obeyed, can ever civilize, purify, elevate, and ennoble our race. Let all the Lord's people, then, be diligent in sounding out that precious word, which alone can elevate mortals of earth to the glories of heaven. E. G. S.

To hear God is the beginning of wisdom, because God is the source of all wisdom, all truth, all light. In him is no darkness at all. There is no true wisdom in the world, save that which comes from God; and all that he reveals is true wisdom, unmixed truth, and pure light, unshaded with darkness. Why should we not, then, come to God and learn the wisdom that comes from him alone? D. L.

Possessing little maketh no man poor. His poverty is in desiring more.—Carrie Blake Morgan.

Queries.

Brother Sewell: For the benefit of our class, please explain Matt. 4: 23. What was "the gospel of the kingdom?" We know that repentance and remission of sins began to be preached in Jerusalem. Was it baptism unto repentance? WILLIAM RUEL.

The word "gospel" means "good news," "glad tidings." The kingdom spoken of in the passage was the kingdom of heaven, that John preached as being then at hand, as drawing near, and also preached by Jesus in person, and by his apostles under their first commission. This kingdom was fully established on the day of Pentecost; also called "the church," "the church of God," and "the church of Christ." The news that this kingdom was near was especially good to the Jewish people at that time, as they understood from their own prophets that such a kingdom was to be established. John's baptism was for the remission of sins, but his baptism was not in the name of Jesus Christ. But on the day of Pentecost, and from that time until now, people are required to believe the gospel of Christ, and to "repent, and be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." The baptism of John was unto or into repentance, and he required those that accepted his preaching to be baptized for the remission of sins, and Jesus taught and practiced the same baptism until his death. Then, after his death, baptism is "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

Brother Sewell: Please answer the following questions in the Gospel Advocate, and oblige a seeker after truth: (1) If a man had kept the old law of Moses to perfection, never having violated it in any way, would he have been saved by it? (2) In Eph. 1: 1-13, does Paul mean the apostles alone, or all Christians, in reference to election; and were the Ephesians a part of the elect? J. S. WESTBROOKS.

Link, Tenn.

(1) It is certainly true that as many as kept the law of Moses perfectly were saved by it. I do not know who did this, or whether any did or not; but if any did, they were saved by it. Paul says: "And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them." (Gal. 3: 12.) "For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." (Rom. 2: 13.) These and other passages indicate that such as did keep the law were saved and will live in heaven. (2) This passage—Eph. 1: 1-13—likely refers to the Jewish Christians, including the apostles, who first became followers of Christ. The gospel was preached to the Jews several years before it was preached to the Gentiles at all, and many of them embraced it before Gentiles had the opportunity. But when it was preached to them it was the same gospel and upon the same conditions precisely as to the Jews; hence all that embrace the gospel are God's elect, are his predestinated ones. The gospel is God's foreknown and predestinated plan of choosing, electing, saving men, and all, whether Jews or Gentiles, that obey the gospel, are alike elected by it; while all that refuse the gospel are nonelect; whether Jews or Gentiles, because they reject God's only plan of election, or salvation. Without obeying the gospel no sinner can be saved, and this is the matter to be concerned about. No sinner need trouble himself about foreknowledge and predestination. If he will believe and obey the gospel and live it out, he will get all the election there is for any man in matters of salvation.

To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Dean Farrar.

Missionary Work.

GIVING AND SENDING—A TWO-FOLD OBLIGATION.

He who goes must make his message the burden of his heart; he is not to give it up because he may have to suffer hardships while delivering it. Whether he receives much or little, he must not turn aside from his purpose. But this does not release those who send. They are as much bound to send as others are to go. If the preacher is bound to preach, the church is no less bound to follow him in fellowship and send once and again to his necessities. Because God has promised, it does not release the church; it binds the church, because through it he makes good his promise. We are not under the necessity to believe God will fulfill his promises miraculously or independent of all means. I have no less confidence in men because I believe the promises of God; but, on the other hand, faith in God gives more confidence in men, for I know God uses men to carry out his purposes; and a man in God's hands is to be trusted more than when left to himself. God promises, for example, to give the truth to every man who has a heart to do it (John 7: 17); but when fulfilling this promise to the Ethiopian nobleman he did it through Philip. (Acts 8: 25-40.) But we are to recognize God in this just as though he had revealed himself as if by a flash from heaven. In my own experience I have not been able to discover any miracles, but I believe I can see the hand of God almost daily in his dealings with me.

The objection is made that there is nothing definite in the Scriptures as to "giving and receiving," and that it is necessary to enter into some stipulation in order to be able to proceed upon some business basis; and, further, it is claimed that if churches do not enter into some definite agreement to raise some specified amount they will not do anything. I am aware that there are many churches doing comparatively little for the spread of the gospel; some may even make their objection to questionable methods a cloak for stinginess and a mere excuse for giving nothing and doing nothing; others, I fear, feel that when they have thrown on the brakes and locked the wheels to stop the church from going in the wrong direction they have done their duty, and so never lead out in the right way. But I am persuaded that there are more who are willing enough, if only they knew how to proceed. In the midst of so much confusion it is not always easy to see the way clearly. The Scriptures, however, are not at fault.

The church is the pillar and support of the truth. (1 Tim. 3: 15.) It refers to the local body. The church is the pillar and support of the truth in what way? By sending out men to proclaim it, by teaching it in its own circle, and by supporting those whom it has sent out. But how are we to get the means for their support? The church cannot steal; it should also ever be ready to say: "To beg, I am ashamed." There is a better way. It is clearly defined in the Scriptures, and is the best system for raising money that has ever been tried. No church following it need ever be in debt or behind. It is briefly stated thus: "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper." (1 Cor. 16: 2, R. V.) Every member of the body, then, is to give in proportion to his income. How much? As each decides he is able. (2 Cor. 8: 11, 12.) But does not this

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness, and flavor noticed in the finest cake, short cake, biscuit, rolls, crusts, etc., which expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

Made from pure, grape cream of tartar.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

give the liberty to give nothing at all? No. There must first be a willing mind. (2 Cor. 9: 7.) To suppose an unwilling Christian is as impossible as to suppose a drunken Christian.

We proceed, then, with the church willing to give as it is able. We will suppose it has just one hundred members. Supposing them to be poor in this world's goods, they could not live on less than $200 per year each. This would make the income of the whole church $20,000. Suppose they decide that they are willing to give not less than a tenth of their income; this would put $2,000 in the treasury. If they spent $1,000 at home, they would still have $1,000 to send to their missionaries, and this would amply support at least two in almost any foreign field.

I have been receiving about $700 per year from all sources, and have been in the habit of giving not less than one-seventh. This is $100 for self and wife, or $50 per member. At this rate one hundred members would give $5,000. (Mention is made of my own case to show that I am not theorizing. My hope for being excused is that Zaccheus told how much he gave, and Jesus commended him.) A church of only ten members would give $500, which would be sufficient to support a missionary. We do not find churches of less than ten members. The only excuse, then, for a church wanting to combine with some other church or churches, rather than to do its own missionary work, is that it wants to get off with doing less than its duty. But even if a church could only give ten cents—an impossible supposition—it could dispense with this as a church independent of any other congregation by visiting the fatherless or the widow with it. Whether much or little, any church can dispense with all the means it can raise independently of any other congregation and to the best advantage.

Just as the bread upon the Lord's table is a complete representation of a complete body, so the congregation partaking of that bread is a complete body. "The bread which we break, is it not a communion of the body of Christ? seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, one body: for we all partake of the one bread." (1 Cor. 10: 16, 17, R. V.) From the fact that other congregations have the same, it does not reduce the Lord's Supper in any one congregation to a part of a greater whole. Each is complete in itself; so each church is a complete organism in itself and cannot be considered as a fractional part of a greater whole. It is complete in itself. As the body of Christ, it must act. It would be just as seemly for a church to appoint others to partake of the Supper for it as to do its charitable or missionary work. But suppose the church will not do it?

If, after all efforts have been made, still the church will not do her duty, I know of no remedy. So far as I have been able to learn, the Lord has made no provision for disobedience. If Christians will not practice truth, honesty, purity, and love, there is nothing that can be substituted for these virtues. So if the churches will not obey the Lord in holding forth the word of life and proceed as he has directed, they must suffer the consequences of disobedience.

The objection, however, may be largely imaginary. From my own experience the churches are quite willing to work just as the Scriptures direct when encouraged to do it. Many act in connection with mission boards because they have not been shown how to do the work in the other way. Once they learn how easy it is, and what a joy it gives to be brought into such close communion with those to whom they send directly, they do not willingly turn aside from it. One of the tenderest and most touching letters Paul ever wrote was the one to the church at Philippi, called forth by an offering sent him by that church. It will do you good to open your Bible and read it. Think you the church at Philippi was not greatly benefited and strengthened by such a letter? My communication with the churches in connection with their offerings has been a blessedness and a source of strength I would not be willing to part with.

There is no difficulty whatever in churches sending directly to those with whom they have fellowship. Such are the mail facilities that you can reach one in any part of the world now with a letter. There is an international postal system that carries mail matter from country to country with as much certainty as if it were only from one town to another; there are also international banking systems that enable one to draw money by check in almost any part of the world; there are also money exchanges that will buy the money of one country and pay you in the currency of another. While in Japan—and the same is true in other countries—I have received money (1) by just having the money put in with a letter and sent on as an ordinary letter; (2) this can be made more secure by registering the letter for eight cents, as has been sometimes done; (3) others have sent by international money order, which can be had at the post office in almost any town; (4) checks on any of the leading banks are received by the banks of foreign countries. All of the ways that are open to the various mission societies are open to the churches or to individuals.

J. M. M'CALEB.

A little fellow was given a bulb and told to plant it, with the assurance that it would grow and by an by he would have a beautiful flower. He undertook the task with much pleasure, and promised flowers to his many friends; but at the end of one week he came to his mother, sorely disappointed. He had watched the bulb closely, had dug it up every day, and it had not grown any. "The bulb isn't good for anything," he said. How many of us garden in the same way in the spiritual world! We go to God in the same old spirit of complaint as did the Jews: "It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" We are ready to say the dishonest prosper more and the careless are happier. Where are the fruits of obedience, the promised rewards of righteousness? In our impatience, we forget that the harvests of God ripen slowly, but surely. As we sow, so shall we reap. It is an unchangeable law. Some time, somewhere, we will surely reap what we have sown.

For Nervous Exhaustion, Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. A. L. Turner, Bloomsburg Sanitarium, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "As an adjunct to the recuperative powers of the nervous system, I know of nothing equal to it."

"He Mistakes the Effect for the Cause."

That is what the person does who tries to cure rheumatism or any other disease by relieving the symptoms. Hood's Sarsaparilla attacks the cause of these diseases. It neutralizes the acid in the blood and thus permanently cures rheumatism. It tones and strengthens the stomach, restores its natural digesting fluids, and permanently cures dyspepsia.

HOOD'S PILLS cure constipation. Price, 25 cents.

The Youth's Companion Calendar for 1900.

The Calendar for 1900 is unique in form and beautiful in design. The oval centerpiece, in dainty colors and enclosed in a border of embossed gold and flowers, represents "A Dream of Summer," and is supported on either side by an admirably executed figure piece in delicate tints. The whole is delightfully in sentiment and in general effect.

Larger than any of our previous Calendars, it is equally acceptable as a work of art. As an ornament to the home it will take a pre-eminent place. The Calendar is published exclusively by The Companion. It cannot be obtained elsewhere. It will be given to all new subscribers for 1900, and to all old subscribers upon the renewal and payment of their subscriptions for 1900. PERRY MASON & CO. Boston, Mass.

"Great Haste is Not Always Good Speed."

Many people trust to luck to pull them through, and are often disappointed. Do not dilly-dally in matters of health. With it you can accomplish miracles. Without it you are "no good."

Keep the liver, kidneys, bowels and blood healthy by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the faultless blood purifier.

Dyspepsia—"I know a positive relief for dyspepsia and that is Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cured me. My neuralgia also stopped." W. B. BALDWIN, 164 Oak Street, Binghamton, New York.

Tired Feeling—"My appetite was capricious, my liver disordered and I was tired. Hood's Sarsaparilla relieved it all. It cured a friend of mine of female weakness." MRS. JESSIE A. MEARNS, Clayton, Del.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

No Scripture for the Organ or Society.

Last week we published a short article under the title, "Is It Right?" from the pen of Brother J. D. Tant. Brother Tant held a meeting at Norman, O. T., one year ago. J. L. Haddock, who favors the organ in the worship and missionary societies for doing the work committed to the church, recently held a meeting there, which was reported in this paper. Brother Tant protested against the report appearing in the Advocate without stating that J. L. Haddock is a progressive. The following contains, in the main, his reasons why we should not report this meeting through our columns:

"I preached in the Advent church house, which was unfinished and too small for our large attendance. The large digressive Christian church house, partly built by members who had been driven out by the organ and the society, was not used while I was there. J. A. Minton, a brother-in-law to Haddock, and a digressive preacher, went with me to hire their house to hold my meeting in, but they refused to allow me to preach the gospel in their house because I stood with the Advocate against innovations. Again, when we began to have confessions, I went with Minton to the same elders to hire their baptistery to baptize in. They refused to let me baptize there; and if the Baptist preacher had not allowed me to use their baptistery, I would have been forced to have gone seven miles, with snow on the ground and a heavy "norther" blowing, to have found water for baptizing. All of this was because I did not favor the organ. One of the elders went so far as to say he would kick any other preacher out of their house who wanted to preach there and not use the organ. . . . I also have letters from the elders of the church of Christ at Norman wanting me to meet J. A. Minton or J. L. Haddock in debate at that place on those innovations they are using and dividing the church of Christ."

Since publishing the article mentioned above we have received the following letter from Brother Minton, which speaks for itself:

"Norman, O. T., December 22, 1899.—J. C. McQuiddy, Nashville, Tenn.—My Dear Brother: I was very much surprised at Brother Tant's letter. Nothing is farther from the facts in the case. True enough my membership is in a congregation where there is an organ. Brother Haddock held a meeting for the congregation, in which seventy-four were added. I attended this meeting just as any one else would have done. Now, there is a faction of rebaptism brethren here, who are doing nothing and who are so 'sound' they will not have literature in Sunday school, etc. Now they challenged me and the church to discuss the differences. My reply to Brother Tant was that I was in no way connected with the society, and that I knew of no scripture for the organ or society, hence I had no contention to make with him on these questions, but that when mutual arrangements could be effected I would discuss the rebaptismal question, either orally or through the papers. My membership remains in this congregation till March; then I will move, and, of course, move my membership. I am in no way trying to build up either society or organ. You might write to Brother Tant and ask him to send you my two letters. I do not believe it absolutely necessary to understand that baptism is in order to the remission of past sins in order to its validity. This is the only proposition I agreed to discuss, but very stoutly declined to discuss anything more. So far as I know myself I am anxious to build up the church of Jesus Christ, and all my labors shall be directed toward that end. I wrote you fully yesterday about publishing, etc. What do you think about it?

"Yours, J. A. MINTON."

Mr. John Fiske, in one of his addresses, tells the story of a court officer who quieted a talkative culprit by saying, severely: "We want nothing from you, sir, but silence, and mighty little of that!" We laugh at the absurdity of the demand, without, perhaps, seeing that it implies a real and important distinction. There are two ways of keeping silence, two ways of holding one's tongue. One way is to bring every instrument and avenue of outward expression into harmony with the spirit of silence; the other way is to hold one's tongue in that aggressive, provoking, rebellious, and hateful way whereby silence truly speaks louder than words. The tongue may be still, but the eyes, the facial expression, the manner of the silenced person, are all alive and eloquent with "fight." That is the kind of silence that the court officer meant when he informed the prisoner at the bar that "mighty little of it" was wanted. It is a silence that exasperates and inflames far worse than words. We frequently see it resorted to when a person is defeated in argument, but is too aggressive and "set" and unfair in spirit to yield to conviction. It is a sinful and hurtful kind of silence, a sort of inarticulate ugliness that is more disagreeable and unlovely than even quarrelsome speech. How much better it would be to keep silence in the right spirit when we yield to the necessity of silence—to keep it harmoniously with every impulse and organ of soul and body, to keep it submissively and graciously and good-naturedly, as becomes a reasonable person, and, above all, a Christian! If we are ever tempted to ugly silence—as who of us is not, sometimes?—let us think of the whimsical warning of the court officer and remember that there is a kind of tongue holding that both God and man prefer in the smallest possible measure.—Forward.

We have small Testaments in flexible cloth covers, at 80 cents per dozen, by mail, postpaid.

URIC ACID

Causes More Diseases in the the Human System than Any Other Poison.

To Prove what Swamp-root, the Great Kidney Remedy, will do for You, Every Reader of the Gospel Advocate May Have a Sample Bottle Free by Mail.

Science has demonstrated that in a few days' time you brew enough Uric Acid in your body to produce death.

Your kidneys are your only salvation.

BECAUSE when they are well they filter out this deadly poison.

So when your kidneys are sick, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

They are all being slowly poisoned.

Uric Acid starts in the system more different kinds of trouble and suffering than any other form of poisoning. It irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless, and irritable; causes rheumatism and neuralgia, pain or dull ache in the back, joints, and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache; causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble; you get a sallow, yellow complexion; makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you lack ambition; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy.

It instantly relieves the congested, overworked kidneys, and gradually brings them back to health. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

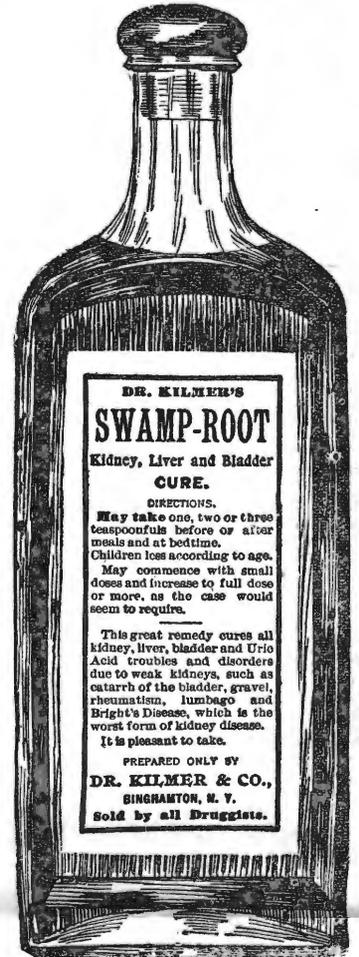

Healthy kidneys keep down the excess of uric acid, and you soon feel the benefit in new health and strength.

Swamp-Root should at once be taken upon the least sign of ill health. It will make you well and is for sale the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices—50-cent and $1.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful efficacy, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., mentioning the Gospel Advocate, when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book, by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured.

Christmas

A BEAUTIFUL

Present ...

FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

WOULD BE A FINE

PIANO OR ORGAN

You have been intending to purchase one for a long time, and haven't yet. Select now for the HOLIDAYS from the finest line, largest stock, and at lowest prices.

KRELL, WEBER, ROYAL, AND STUYVESANT PIANOS ESTEY, FARRAND & VOTHEY ORGANS

Sold on easy payments. Write to-day for Catalogues, prices, and full descriptions. Special inducements to ministers and churches.

210 N. SUMMER STREET P. D. CARR & CO. NASHVILLE, TENN.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY Established 1887.
THE E. W. VANDUZEN CO., Cincinnati, O., U.S.A.
Bells made of Pure Copper and Tin only.
FOR CHURCHES, COURT HOUSES, SCHOOLS, etc.
ALSO CHIMES AND PEALS.
Makers of the Largest Bell in America.

After Dinner

To assist digestion, relieve distress after eating or drinking too heartily, to prevent constipation, take

Hood's Pills

Sold everywhere. 25 cents.

General News.

Cincinnati will have an industrial exposition next year.

Greater New York proposes to expend $30,000,000 on two bridges.

Daniel S. Ford, owner of the Youth's Companion, died, aged seventy-seven years.

The conclusion of the treaty between Mexico and China will bring large numbers of Chinese laborers into Mexico.

One dealer in Fayetteville, Tenn., has shipped the present season 8,000 turkeys alone, besides great quantities of other poultry.

The Hamburg-American Steamship Company will introduce crude petroleum from Borneo as fuel for its East Asian steamers.

General Kitchener, of the British Army, who has been so successful in the war of the Sudan, has been ordered to South Africa.

Some disease is killing off horses in Nebraska at an alarming rate. A veterinary surgeon says the disease is rare, and is caused by feeding oats damaged by rust.

Ten car loads of mule shoes and one car load of nails were loaded on the Manchester City at New Orleans recently for shipment to South Africa for use by the British.

It is said the Mexican Government has abolished the export tax on coffee. This is expected to have a considerable effect in the United States by increasing the receipts of Mexican coffee.

The Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, telegraphs from Calcutta that there has been no increase of rain and that 2,451,000 natives, suffering from famine, are now receiving relief.

Governor Candler, of Georgia, after a conference with many physicians, vetoed a bill passed recently by both Houses of the General Assembly providing for the practice in that State of osteopathy.

A dispatch from San Francisco says the army transports Centennial and Newport, which arrived there from Manila via Honolulu, bring the startling news that the bubonic plague has reached that place.

Coal dealers in Knoxville, Tenn., announced that the fear of a coal famine was over, that the railroads had received all the cars necessary to relieve the situation, and there would be no further advance of price.

The bubonic plague has made its appearance at Noumea, capital of the French penal colony of New Caledonia. Ten Kanakas have succumbed to the disorder, and four whites have been attacked. The disease is said to be spreading.

Dispatches from Amalfi, the popular tourist resort on the Gulf of Salerno, where the landslide occurred recently, say that twelve persons are known to have been killed, that at least fifteen others were injured, and that many are still unaccounted for.

Lord Winchester, who was killed in battle recently, was the premier Marquis of England, and, like all the

THE SINGER CABINET TABLE.

Copyright, 1899.

MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.
SALESROOMS IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

Paulets, a very handsome, tall man. He was unmarried, and the marquise passed to his younger brother, Lord Henry Paulet, who, although married, is childless.

Smallpox among the Indians of the Indian Territory and other reservations has become so serious that Congress will be asked for the sum of $50,000 with which to stamp out the epidemic. In Indian Territory, Agent Wright has employed physicians to attend to the quarantine stations.

It has been found possible to make a thin, smooth, and strong paper of asbestos, which can be employed in the manufacture of paper lanterns and other articles which need to be at the same time light and fireproof. The asbestos paper can also be made waterproof. It is prepared with the same machinery used for making ordinary paper.

Queen Victoria has sent a letter to General Lord Roberts, the newly-appointed commander in chief of the British forces in South Africa, warmly sympathizing with him on the death of his gallant son and thanking him for the great patriotism he has displayed in putting aside his terrible private grief in order to devote himself to the affairs of the nation.

The United States battle ship Texas, Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee, arrived from Cuba, having on board the remains of the Maine dead. The interment of the bodies in Arlington Cemetery, Washington, D. C., with appropriate ceremonies, was attended by President McKinley, most of the members of the Cabinet, and a large contingent of army and navy officers and others.

The growing popularity of American corn in all parts of the world is illustrated by the November statement of

WE BUY lamp-chimneys by the dozen; they go on snapping and popping and flying in pieces; and we go on buying the very same chimneys year after year.

Our dealer is willing to sell us a chimney a week for every lamp we burn.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" do not break from heat; they are made of tough glass. Try them.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.
Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

SILK REMNANTS FOR CRAZY WORK
A big package of BEAUTIFUL SILK REMNANTS, 100 to 120 pieces, all carefully trimmed, selected from large accumulation of silks especially adapted for all fancy work. We give more than double any other offer; remnants are all large sizes, in beautiful colors and designs. Sent for 25 cents in stamps or silver. Address PARIS SILK CO., Box 3045, New York City, N. Y.

FREE! FREE! FREE! FREE! To every new subscriber to The Household and The Gentlewoman,
THE CHRISTIAN GUIDE AT THE REGULAR PRICE, $1.50.
And to all old subscribers renewing their subscription one year. These are both first-class one dollar monthly magazines. Thus you get $3.50 in value for $1.50—three papers for the price of one. The Christian Guide is the leading religious journal of the South. Samples FREE. Send a Postoffice Money Order for $1.50, which pays your subscription one year to The Guide, and as a premium you will receive FREE the two magazines above mentioned. If not as represented, money will be refunded. Address, exports of breadstuffs, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. It shows a larger quantity of corn exported in the eleven months ending with November, 1899, than in the corresponding months of any preceding year, and at a higher rate per bushel than in any year since 1895.
GUIDE PRINTING & PUB. CO., 315 W. Walnut, Louisville, Ky.

The negotiations which have been in progress for some time between China and Mexico for a general treaty of trade, navigation, and immigration now have been brought to a successful conclusion, and the formal signing of the document completed at the Mexican Embassy, in Washington, Señor Aspiroz, the Mexican Ambassador, signing for his country, and Minister Wu Ting Fang, for China.

Attention to the Bering Sea controversy between the United States and Great Britain has been renewed by the report of John M. Morton, United States agent on the Seal Islands, which says the seal herds have diminished twenty per cent within the last year, bearing out the United States claim that herds were being so diminished by poaching and pelagic sealing that the animals would become extinct at a very early day.

Dwight L. Moody, the famous evangelist, died at his home in Northfield, Mass. The cause of death was a general breaking down due to overwork. Mr. Moody's heart had been weak for a long time, and exertions put forth in connection with meetings in the West last month brought on a collapse, from which he failed to rally. The evangelist broke down in Kansas City, Mo., where he was holding services about a month ago.

Upward of forty school children were drowned recently in an ice accident at Frelingham, near the French frontier. The children of the district had been given a holiday, with permission to play on the frozen River Lys. When the merriment was at full height, the ice broke suddenly and the children disappeared. A few were rescued half dead, but the majority were drowned. Thirty-six bodies have been recovered, but others are still missing.

This government has finally adopted "Puerto Rico" as the official spelling of the name of that island, and hereafter all official documents will adhere to that form. The board of geographic names decided in favor of this some years ago, but the usage has not been uniform. The board required from President McKinley an expression of his views, and in making the decision he says the name should be Puerto Rico, in accordance with the custom of the people of the island.

The Philadelphia Times estimates that $10,000,000 was spent in Philadelphia for Christmas presents. It says in six large department stores the receipts were $3,200,000; four dry goods stores sold goods to the value of $1,800,000; the managers of five jewelry and silverware stores placed their receipts at $2,000,000; and estimated expenditures in other stores ran up to $3,000,000. The estimates of money spent in other large cities are: New York, $13,700,000; Chicago, $9,200,000; Boston, $5,000,000; and Washington, $2,000,000.

Her His Face
Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with Heiskell's Ointment the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.
Heiskell's Soap
Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.
Johnstor, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," by David Lipscomb, is an interesting and instructive book of the life of a truly grand man, together with a number of his best sermons. A new edition is just out. Price, $1.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR.

A Pleasant Lemon Tonic.

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

- For biliousness and constipation.
- For indigestion and foul stomach.
- For sick and nervous headaches.
- For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.
- For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.
- For loss of appetite and debility.
- For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir. Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys. 50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used. J. H. MENNICH, Attorney. 1225 F. street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable. 25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

Nonresident Notice.

J. J. Blair, Admr., et al. vs. Hugh McMurray et al. In this cause, on this the 20th day of December, 1899, it appearing to the satisfaction of the Clerk from the affidavit to the petition in this cause that the defendants—William Blair, James Blair, and Fannie Bridge and her husband, H. E. Bridge—are nonresidents of the State of Tennessee; therefore the ordinary process of this court cannot be served upon them. It is therefore ordered by the Clerk that said defendants enter their appearance herein at the February term of the Davidson County Court, to be holden at the courthouse in Nashville, Tenn., on the first Monday in February, 1900, it being February 5, 1900, and defend, or said complainant's bill will be taken for confessed as to them, and will be set for hearing ex parte.

It is therefore ordered that a copy of this order be published for four weeks in succession in the Gospel Advocate, a newspaper published in Nashville, Tenn. P. A. Shelton, Clerk, By Wm. B. Shelton, D. C. W. R. Chambers, Solicitor.

Remember "Allenroc's Book" and order one the first time you go to the post office. The price is $1, by mail, postpaid. Those who have expressed themselves in regard to it pronounce it a charming little book.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Refined Paraffine Wax

Church News.

FLORIDA.

Oxford, December 17.—I came here on December 8 and met Brother W. J. Borden, and on Sunday I preached to a small audience. At night we had a little larger crowd, and last night I preached to a large and seemingly interested audience. There are but few members here. They meet regularly and search the Scriptures.

J. B. HOBBS.

ILLINOIS.

Gillespie, December 20.—I am here in this mining town with a mission church in a revival meeting, assisted by Brother J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill. A warm interest is manifest; and we hope for good results, but the field is quite difficult.

JAMES W. ZACHARY.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, December 18.—Last Lord's day I spoke to the colored people that meet on Hancock street. They are a people eager to hear. I know of no greater field for missionary work than among the negroes of America. They are ten million strong, and are a nation of themselves. They are dependent on the white people for their educational, moral, and religious training. While many are greatly exercising themselves to try to "keep down the 'niggers,'" it rests upon Christian people to lift them up out of the mire of sin. There was one confession on Lord's day: A young preacher present said it was his purpose to go to Africa as a missionary.

J. M. MCALEB.

MISSOURI.

Nevada, December 25.—There were two additions at Richards yesterday—one by baptism and one by statement. I will serve the church at Richards during 1900.

S. MAGEE.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Harmony, December 17.—I want to let you know how the cause of Christ is prospering in this vicinity. We have but few members here, only eight—three brothers and five sisters. We met a few times, but we are scattered—some of us living six miles apart. I try to teach the people the best I can, not as a profession, but as my duty. We are all poor in this world's goods, and if we had some help to sound out the word, much good could be done in this community. The harvest is ripe, but there are no laborers, and the sects are bitter against us. They say that W. L. Butler has injured the cause here, that they cannot get up a revival any more. One acknowledged to me that Butler could explain the Scriptures better than any man he ever heard, but if there was no other church about here but ours he would not go to it, or let his children go. So you see what we have to contend with.

ISAAC A. HEDGES.

TEXAS.

Paris, December 25.—From November 27 to December 21 my time was spent in Arkansas. Marion, Tyrnza, Forrest City, Marianna, Palestine, Brinkley, Devall's Bluff, Lonoke, Little Rock, Conway, Morrillton, Russellville, Coal Hill, Alma, Van Buren, Fort Smith, and Fayetteville were visited. The past three days have been spent at Paris, Texas. I worshiped with the Second Church on yesterday morning, the 24th, and preached to a large audience at the First Church last night. Brother E. E. Faris went as missionary from the First Church to the Congo country, Africa, about two and one-half years ago; Brother William J. Bishop went as missionary from the Second Church to Japan only a few months ago. These two churches are proud of their missionaries. I go to-day to Honey Grove, where I will remain two days. I next go to Bonham and then to Sherman. I expect to remain in Texas several weeks. Any person or church desiring to have fellowship in our work in West Africa may send to Frank P. James, Mercer National Bank, Harrodsburg, Ky.

STROTHER M. COOK.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Morgantown, December 14.—I recently held a short, but interesting, meeting at Gladesville, W. Va., resulting in one baptism.

LAWRENCE W. SCOTT.

Sistersville, November 29.—On the 3d inst I left home and rode some fifty-five miles and stopped with the brethren at Dutchman (post office, Hartley), in Ritchie County, and preached until the 9th, inclusive, on which night, at eleven o'clock, two young women were baptized. The church there is in pretty fair condition. They will soon have a good frame house completed and paid for. From there I went to Newark, Wirt County (fifteen miles farther), and continued with the faithful few (about nineteen) until the 17th, inclusive. I had a successful meeting there, teaching, "from the ground up," the gospel system. The brethren were strengthened in the faith, and others learned that all hell cannot prevail against the faith we preach. I came next to Bear Run, where I found Brother and Sister Fonner with the brethren. The meeting had closed, after one week's run, on account of Brother Fonner's being overcome with a severe cold. I stayed over Sunday and spoke twice to interested listeners. Brother Fonner has certainly done some hard work here and excellent teaching. The congregation numbers about twenty now, and is in splendid spiritual shape—very poor in finance, but very rich in spirit, is my judgment. They will begin to build a house soon, and will succeed right along, for the backbone of opposition is broken. Those who have helped Brother Fonner to do this and other work should certainly be happy and thankful, for God has blessed their ef-

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 50 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in the U. S., Canada, and Europe. Ferd. T. Hopkins, Prop., 37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

RADWAY'S PILLS

Small, act without pain or griping, purely vegetable, mild, and reliable. Regulate the liver and digestive organs. The safest and best medicine in the world for the

CURE

of all disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder, nervous diseases, loss of appetite, headache, constipation, costiveness, indigestion, biliousness, fever, inflammation of the bowels, piles, and all derangements of the internal viscera. PERFECT DIGESTION will be accomplished by taking RADWAY'S PILLS. By so doing, sick headache, foul stomach, biliousness, will be avoided, as the food that is eaten contributes its nourishing properties for the support of the natural waste of the body.

DYSPEPSIA,

Price, 25c. a Box. Sold by Druggists or Sent by Mail. Send to DR. RADWAY & CO., 55 Elm street, New York, for "Book of Advice."

forts greatly. They should continue to help the dear brother to sow the seed of the kingdom in new hearts. He knows the Book, he knows what to teach, and he knows the art of teaching; hence his success in building up the cause in hard places. The brethren should stand by Brother Fonner until he "drives the stakes" deeper at Bear Run and other promising points. He hardly ever goes to an old congregation to preach, but to mission points almost all the time. The brethren should encourage such work and workers more than they do. I am glad I was at Bear Run and saw for myself. I would like to say more, but will not, only praise the Lord for the success of the gospel at that and every other place. On November 20 I preached at a schoolhouse on Dutchman Run, and on the 21st I began and gave four lessons at a schoolhouse on Hughe's River. I got sick, and then "got" home yesterday, the 28th. I will go to Walnut Fork (post office, Cork) on December 2.

COM. D. MOORE.

God's children cannot afford to compromise with error for the sake of peace. There is an everlasting conflict between truth and error.

WHY THE LARGEST?

Forty-five years of constant and healthful progress has put the

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

of Boston, Mass., at the top (both in size and standing) of musical institutions in America. Comprehensive in plan, moderate in price, thorough in practice and famous for results.

GEO. W. CHADWICK, Musical Director. FRANK W. HALE, General Manager. Send for an illustrated catalogue.

GUNS! GUNS!

WE CARRY THE BEST STOCK OF

GUNS AND SPORTSMEN'S GOODS

IN THE SOUTH.

We have the best Hammerless Gun in America for $25. We have a very fine imported Hammer Gun, worth $25, that we will sell for $19. We have only a few of these left; they are close, hard shooters.

Send us your name and address, and we will send you our Gun Catalogue.

H. G. LIPSCOMB & CO.

152 N. MARKET ST.

Nashville, - - Tennessee.

POOR HEALTH.

There are Thousands who Suffer and Do Not Know What Ails Them.

Victims of general debility who cannot give their disease a name. It is not necessary. This is all you need to know: you are run down, your blood is disordered, and through your blood your entire system suffers. Give life and purity to the blood and all will be well.

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is the blood's most wonderful purifier. Here is a tribute to its merits:

"Dallas, Texas, December 16, 1897. Publishers News, Dallas—Dear Sir—I gave the contents of one bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic to my little six-year-old son, who was convalescing from a severe spell of fever, and found it had a wonderful effect in strengthening him and building up his system.

"H. L. COOK,
"Oriental Barber Shop."

Read what a grateful man has to say of it:

"Lexington, Ky., February 2, 1897. 'I have found Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic the finest blood purifier of the times. One bottle has helped me more than anything I have ever taken. I can heartily recommend it.

"H. W. RICE."

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC has been on the market for forty-two years—ample time to prove its merit. It is prescribed by the medical profession in general as the only true iron tonic. It cures ague and chills.

Sold everywhere. Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O. Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE Strong and Healthy.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

● Shackelford & Shackelford, ●
OSTEOPATHS,
Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.
Telephones: Office, 1747; Residence, 1570.
WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

AN EDUCATION within easy reach of every young man or woman. For particulars and catalogue, address C. K. Hamilton, No. 13 Lyceum, Secretary of The National Normal University, LEBANON, OHIO.

The parent Normal. Founded in 1855. It has age and prestige. Excellent equipment. Superior instruction. Affords the most thorough preparation for teaching or any other profession or business. 50,000 students trained here are now filling good positions. 36 States and Territories represented. Over 30 teachers, each a specialist in his line. A most delightful and healthful place to live. Departments: Preparatory, Business Teachers', Scientific, Classical, Music, Oratory, Medicine, Law, etc. You can enter at any time without examination and select such studies as you desire. Chartered by the State to confer all college degrees. No better place to begin or complete an education.

PLYMNER BELL CHURCH BELLS
UNMATCHED QUALITY
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

Moral Courage.

On Sunday, November 19, Dr. J. I. Vance, of this city, preached on "The Influence of Moral Courage on the World," and we publish the sermon as reported by the American:

"Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work." (1 Chron. 28: 20.)

"This is the accolade with which God knights manhood. In the days of old, when a valiant and chivalrous youth sought entrance into the ranks of knighthood, if he were deemed worthy, after a vow pledging himself to espouse virtue and defend the weak, he was saluted formally by some noble sir knight. This salutation was called the accolade; it was the recognition of noble worth, and a summons to chivalrous deeds.

"My text is God's salutation to a knightly soul as it enters the peerage of service. 'Be strong and of good courage.' That is the token by which divinity recognizes the heart of chivalry; it is the formula with which Jehovah sends a man out on the quest of greatness; it is the word of command which has rung through the world from the central throne of power; and at its behest the world's noblest spirits have fallen into line and marched face forward, keeping step to the purpose of the ages.

"Be of good courage!' Moses heard it; Joshua, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah heard it. It flamed in the soul of the apostles, prophets, and martyrs; it is the imperial thing which God inspires and demands of every life which would represent him in the lists when right and wrong, virtue and vice, innocence and oppression meet and contend for the mastery. Courage—good courage, moral courage—is God's accolade for knighthood. It arrays man on the side of God and humanity and charges the soul with the might of victory. If you are to win in the contest, be courageous; if you are to break the ranks of error, pale the insolent face of tyranny, cheer the faltering spirits of the righteous few, and win the applause of destiny, be courageous.

"To-night I have a noble theme and plead for a peerless virtue. It is not common bravery that unfurls its colors in my text; it is that singular and eminent bravery which we call 'moral courage.' What is moral courage? It is more than the show of it; it is not the assumption of bravery; it is beyond the mere absence of fear. One may achieve that through sheer stupidity. Sometimes the absence of fear is the absence of gumption to apprehend the cause for fear. It is not that spectacular heroism which would bluff an enemy.

"The king of France and twenty thousand men Drew their swords, and put them back again.

That is as far as some men's courage ever gets. They buy a military cap for dress parade, they show their arms. Moral courage is more than the physical doing which walks exultantly into the blazing cannon's mouth. One may do that and be a veritable coward at heart. An officer rode up to a battery, and observing another officer at his side looking pale, said: 'You are afraid.' 'Yes,' said his comrade, 'and if you were as much afraid as I am, you would turn tail and drive spurs into your horse's flanks.'

"The difference between physical and moral courage is the difference between Samson and Daniel. Samson

Pearline
Leaves no dirt behind

The W. V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,

Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale
and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough
and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence
Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.
CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK.
311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

could carry off the gates of Gaza on his shoulders, and rout a whole army with the jawbone of an ass, but the witcheries of one little pagan woman made him a prisoner. Daniel was an exile and a slave, but his conscience was regnant and the lions were afraid of him, the king honored him, and the world got down on its knees before him.

"Moral courage is courage with an undismayed and unintimidated conviction at its back; it is the courage of morals. An immoral man cannot be morally courageous any more than a lie can be true. Moral courage champions right for right's own sake, and not because it is popular, pleasant, or expedient. It has won the mastery over self. Many a man can be as brave as Caesar before the enemy, and play the coward in his own heart. Moral courage is the highest type of courage. He who lacks it is less than a man; he who has it is already great.

"The struggle which moral courage must make to live at all is a mark of its greatness. It must face every weapon that iniquity can forge, and fight every foe that evil can muster; it must sometimes oppose respectability, wealth, position; it must be willing to suffer the loss of all things rather than surrender conviction. Prejudice must not be allowed to turn it aside, precedent must not give it pause, public opinion must not terrify. It must be reckless of consequences, and hazard the world for duty. It is great by contrast with its opposite. The most despicable thing in the universe is a coward. A coward is the cur form of man. The early Germans so detested a coward that they banished from their civil and religious assemblies a soldier who had lost his shield; the Lacedæmonians forbade intermarriage with cowards, and forced them to appear in forlorn clothing and with their faces half shaved.

"If moral courage be the highest form of courage, moral cowardice is the basest form of cowardice. The meanest coward is not he who runs in battle, but he who is ashamed to oppose wrong. Moral cowards are commoner than we think. Sometimes we try to cover up the disgrace with a specious name. We speak of 'caution,' when often what we mean is moral cowardice; we get behind 'conservatism,' when the truth is we are afraid to go forward; we speak of our 'doubts,' but it would many a time be more accurate if we called it the lack of moral courage. One may stand six feet in his stockings, speak with a big bluster in his voice, and walk with the swagger of a fearful threat in his gait, but if he is afraid to fight wrong and espouse right, he is small—just a midget of a man. His swell is all empty wind, and a puncture will bring his supposed greatness to collapse. One may hold a big place, draw a large salary, get mighty applause, but if he shows the white feather in a moral contest, he is a coward at heart.

"He's a slave who dares not speak
For the fallen and the weak;
He's a slave who dares not be
In the right with two or three.

"Moral courage is great because of what it enables men to achieve. By the splendor of it lost causes have been glorified; by the heroism of it forlorn causes have reached the throne. No great cause started with a majority on its side. Its first chord was struck in a minor key; but on its side was the thing we call 'moral courage,' and that at last carried the day. The imperial spirits whose prowess has determined the real progress of the world were not cringers at the feet of

NEW CURE

For Kidneys and Bladder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Gravel, Pain in the Back, Dropsy, Etc. You will Upon Request be Mailed A LARGE TRIAL CASE FREE.

Disorders of the kidneys and bladder cause Bright's Disease, rheumatism, gravel, pain in the back, bladder disorders, difficult or too frequent passing water, dropsy, etc. For these diseases a positive specific cure is found in a new botanical discovery, the wonderful Kava-Kava Shrub, called by botanists the piper methysticum, from the Ganges River, East India. It has the extraordinary record of 1,200 hospital cures in thirty days. It acts directly on the kidneys, and cures by draining out of the blood the poisonous uric acid, lithates, etc., which cause the disease.

Mrs. Fowler, Locktown, N.J.

Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, D. C., testifies in the Christian Advocate that it completely cured him of kidney and bladder diseases of many years' standing. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks the Kava-Kava Shrub cured him of rheumatism and kidney and bladder disease after ten-years' suffering, the bladder trouble being so great he had to rise from ten to twelve times during the night. Many ladies, including Mrs. C. C. Fowler, of Locktown, N. J., and Mrs. James Young, of Kent, O., also testify to its wonderful curative powers in kidney and other disorders peculiar to womanhood.

That you may judge of the value of this great discovery for yourself we will send you a large case by mail free, only asking that when cured yourself you will recommend it to others. It is a sure specific, and cannot fail. Address the Church Kidney Cure Company, 403 Fourth avenue, New York City.

Columbia Calendar for 1900.

The Columbia Desk Calendar, which has been regularly issued for the last fifteen years by the Pope Manufacturing Company, Hartford, Conn., makers of Columbia bicycles, is now being distributed. The company will send the calendar to any address upon receipt of five 2-cent stamps.

This calendar is unique among publications of its kind. At the top of each of the 365 inner pages appears a paragraph in prose or verse, furnished by a contributor; and those who have thus supplied the reading matter for the compilation include cyclists in nearly every country in the world. At the foot of each page are date lines, which, in clear and distinct type, denote the day of the week, month, and year. Between the opening paragraph and the date lines ample blank space is left for jotting down memoranda. The frame which holds the pad is arranged so that the calendar may be hung in any convenient location or placed upon the desk at any desired angle.

FITS STOPPED FREE
 Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
 No Fits after first day's use.
 Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery. Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. R. H. KLINE, Ld.
 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

policy; they had the courage of their convictions.

"Every now and then a brave man steps to the front. He may not be an intellectual giant; he may be poor, and at first obscure; but he is courageous. His comrades see in him the hope of redemption, and gather around him as a Savior. His courage is the harbinger of spring to the weak and oppressed. It may be a cyclone of destruction and an earthquake of disaster to evil. The world honors bravery as it honors little else. If one is courageous, he will at least have the admiration of his fellow-men; if he is morally courageous, he may lose the praise of the world, but heaven will echo with applause, and the angel who records all that is worthy to live will write his name above the stars.

"Moral courage makes its demands. Sometimes all that it asks of you is to stand, hold steadfast for principle, be a breakwater against the flood of corruption. 'Here I stand, I can do naught else, God help me,' has been the tocsin of more than one reformation. Stand firm! That is not so easy to do, but it is sometimes terribly effective. It requires patience. Patience has been called 'courage in repose.' Sometimes you must act. The hour comes to take the field; the kingdom of righteousness is not won by holding the fort. You must seek the enemy in his lair and demolish his stronghold; you must show your faith by your works. Faith is courage in action. Sometimes you must speak as well as act. Moral courage is not rhetorical; it never declaims; but it has its declaration and testimony. It insists on being understood. A brave man does not conceal his opinions; he scorns double-facedness and detests an acted, not less than a spoken, lie. There are times when suffering is all that moral courage has to give; it means for you to live under a gray, wintry sky and look into the bleak face of misfortune. Much of the finest moral courage the world knows nothing of. It fights out the battle in the silence between its own soul and God. The world looks on and says, 'Drudgery;' God looks on and says: 'Heroism.' Often the bravest man in the world has been a woman, and a woman whose glory crown was just suffering. It may tell you to stay poor; some men are poor because they are too brave to be rich. The chance offered to acquire a fortune at the sacrifice of principle. To seize the chance meant a moral rout. It was a fierce fight. Courage won, and he stays poor. Three cheers for such poverty! Heaven bends low to do it honor. Some men are not prominent because they are not cowards. Moral courage must despise ridicule and endure misrepresentation. Perhaps its loftiest Calvary is reached when, for the sake of principle, it parts company with dearest and lifelong friends.

"Was I wrong when I pronounced it the highest type of courage, and declared it God's synonym for manhood? There is as vast a difference between moral courage and physical daring as there is between a diamond and a glass bead. The world is not suffering for lack of physical bravery. Men make as good soldiers as ever. The Philippines and the Transvaal are proof enough of that. But the world needs moral courage. The merchant needs it, else trade will degenerate into trickery; the lawyer needs it, else justice will barter its ermine; the physician who lacks it is already a quack; the preacher who is without it is but a timeserving hireling. It is the only power that will regenerate society; it is the one thing that can cope with political corruption. No man is fit for any public office who is a moral coward. The Mayor of the city, the Judge of the Criminal Court, the Governor of the State, the President of the nation will woefully fail in all the trusts committed to them if there does not dwell within the man's own soul the courageous majesty of undimmed, unpurchasable, unterrifiable conviction. No man has any business with citizenship who is a moral coward. If a ballot does not represent an honest, true-hearted man, it is a peril to good government. Moral courage does not trouble itself about the future; it is overwhelmingly concerned with doing right just now; it is not agitated over what may be popular a year hence, but it is aroused for what is demanded at once.

"There are two spheres of modern influence in which the need for moral courage is imperative. I refer to the pulpit and the press. A cowardly pulpit is a traitor to the cause of religion. If it be infamous for the pulpit to ask what is expedient, is not the subjection of journalistic conviction to newspaper success the apostasy of the press? The world needs men who are courageous enough to stand alone. On the summit of a certain lofty peak in the East Tennessee mountains engineers have made a landmark of a single stately pine tree that stands on the highest crest of the range. All the surrounding trees have been felled, the underbrush has been cleared away, and the lonely tree lifts, clear-cut as a cameo, silhouetted against the sky. One afternoon last summer I saw a storm gather around that solitary pine. The heavens grew black, peals of thunder roared, the lightning flashed and leaped from cloud to cloud, firing volley after volley from the battery of the skies. The rain fell in torrents; the wind howled down the slopes and moaned through the valleys; the cattle fled to shelter; the grass fell before the tempest; but that solitary tree on the mountain top seemed to laugh at the storm, as he shook his branches full in the face of the thunder cloud, and said, as a tree would say it: 'Come on; I'm not afraid!' I felt like shouting: 'Hurrah, old tree! You are just one, but you are monarch.'

"God give us men that can stand alone; and God must give them if we get them, for moral courage is the product of faith. Add to your faith courage. Gurnall says: 'We fear man so much because we fear God so little.' Get up toward God, esteem his approval above all else, and the world cannot marshal enough terrors to this salute from the skies: 'Be strong men. As we stand in the lists, may make you afraid. May God knight us there ring clear for every one of us and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work.'"

The latest calculation of the velocity and direction of the sun's motion in space is by Prof. Simon Newcomb. He estimates that the solar system is being carried in a northerly direction at the rate of sixteen and one-half kilometers (a little over ten miles) per second. The point toward which we are moving is within a very few degrees of the extraordinarily bright star Vega in the constellation of Lyra.

Our Bible, No. 3750, is an American Revised Version, with references and maps. It is durably bound in cloth. Price, $1.50, by mail, postpaid.

"There's nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream."

It was meant to be so when woman was ordained man's helpmeet. But it was never meant that love's dream should have so sad an awaking. It is due chiefly to ignorance that young women are so rudely awakened from the dream of love. They enter on the married state without physical or mental preparation. They are entirely unaware of the great physiological change suggested by the one word "marriage."

Every young woman should be prepared for that change. There should be no neglect of irregularities. The perfect health of the peculiarly womanly organs should be the daily care. Thousands of women who entered in marriage unprepared, and passed from irregularities to debilitating drains, inflammation, ulceration and female weakness, have been altogether and absolutely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This great medicine is not a cure-all, but a specific for the chronic diseases peculiar to women. It does one thing perfectly; it makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"For two years I had been a sufferer from chronic diseases and female weakness," writes Mrs. Allen A. Bobson, of 1135 Rodman Street, Philadelphia, Pa. "I had two doctors, who only relieved me for a time. My niece advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did, and have been highly benefited. I am now a strong woman, and can recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all similarly afflicted."

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.

RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories. For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,

Atlanta, Georgia.

CUSTOMERS ASTONISHED AT OUR BARGAINS IN

REMNANTS OF SILK RIBBONS FREE

We have purchased, at recent wholesale auction sales several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length and many of them are the finest quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades; in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for bonnet strings, neckwear, trimming for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers. Our stock of Silk Ribbons, from which we put up these 50-cent packages, consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Satin Edge, Silk Brocade, Striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends. We put up carefully assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, assorted colors. No remnants less than one yard long, and all first-class, useful goods. We will send 1 package for 35 cents, silver, or 36 cents in 2-cent stamps. Carefully packed in boxes, postpaid, 7001, price of price. Address PARIS RYBON CO., Box 3045, New York City, N. Y.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

— FOR —

ARE YOU —A—SUBSCRIBER?

.1900.

READ
OUR LIBERAL OFFERS!

THE GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either new subscribers or renewals, and our ART BIBLE, No. 933, for $3; or if you will send us TWO NEW subscribers at the regular price of $1.50 each for one year, we will send YOU the Bible as a premium. This is a Large Type Edition, Self-pronouncing, Teacher's Combination Bible, having the usual helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one. Send us ONE NEW subscriber for one year, at $1.50, and we will send YOU a NELSON'S 32mo., TEXT BIBLE; flexible covers, with gold edges over red.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mamilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii. 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii. 30)

(The above is a specimen illustration from the Art Bible, No. 933.)

We send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals for one year for $1.50, with the choice of one of the following premiums:

1. Home and Farm, for one year.
2. A Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament.
3. Our New Calendar for 1900.

Nearly all of our readers are familiar with the merits of Home and Farm as an agricultural and home paper. Our calendar is superior to anything we have produced heretofore, is a work of art, and represents the high standard of work done by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company.

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY! Earn one or both of the Bibles, by sending us the NEW subscribers. ADDRESS

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.

232 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 2.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JANUARY 11, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB, E. G. SEWELL, F. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Was Paul a Fanatic?.....	18
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 24.....	19
The Importance of Sound Speech.....	19
Continued Watchfulness.....	20
Miscellany.....	21
Queries.....	22
Should a Child of God Swear?.....	22
Home Reading.....	23
The Faith that Saves.....	24
Preaching and Teaching.....	24
A Trayesty on Justice.....	25
Obituaries.....	26
General News.....	28
Safety in Weakness.....	29
Explanation.....	29
An Afflicted Family.....	29
Kansas Notes.....	30
Field Gleanings.....	31
Thompson-Lawson Debate.....	31
What the Other Side Thinks of Us.....	32
The Glory of Salvation.....	32
The Boaz-Mocre Debate.....	32

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The Christian Guide, of December 20, 1899, had on its front page a large picture, under which were printed the words: "John Wesley, founder of Methodism." The Midland Methodist, of the same date, had on its front page a large picture of Mary, with the infant Savior in her arms. I like the picture in the Midland Methodist better than the one in the Christian Guide, though I regard John Wesley as a man of many excellent traits of character. After all, it is better to get away from Wesley, Calvin, Luther, Campbell, and all other uninspired men and draw near to the Lord in full assurance of faith.

The papers are advocating the adoption in this country of a practice which, for years, has prevailed in Europe, of planting fruit trees along the roadside. In some countries the fruit crop from trees planted along the public highways yields a revenue of $2,000,000 a year, to say nothing of the comfort of shade and beauty of ornamentation to travelers. The waste land along the public roads in the United States would produce a revenue of several millions of dollars a year, with a little labor in planting and tending the trees and marketing the fruit. Moreover, the pleasure of travel would be greatly increased if every public road were an avenue between two rows of blooming boughs in spring and fruitful branches in summer and autumn. In like manner the way of life would be vastly more pleasant to travel if thickly set on right and left by genuine Christians, a-bloom with brotherly love and heavily loaded with the fruit of Christian charity all the year round. This would be a very good world, after all, if everybody would be good and do good to everybody else.

The following letter is in answer to a paragraph which appeared on this page two weeks ago:

"Franklin, Ky., December 29, 1899.—Elder F. D. Srygley, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Brother: Your favor of the 20th inst., with advance proof of an editorial in the Gospel Advocate of the 28th inst., has been at hand two days. In reply, I wish to say this: While I appreciate your offer to publish my views of the point at issue between Brother J. N. Hall and yourself concerning the term 'church,' I had made up my mind to write such an article for the Western Recorder, and should that paper publish the article, you are at full liberty to copy in full; but should the Western Recorder refuse to publish it, I shall certainly send it to you. Some of my brethren are anxious that I shall send the article to the Western Recorder because of the present controversy among our brethren concerning this question and because of the Baptist authors at my command. Providence permitting, I shall write the article next week.

"Fraternally, A. MALONE."

This assures the readers of this paper that Brother Malone's article will be published in these columns. If the Western Recorder publishes it, I will copy it; and if that paper declines to publish it, I will publish it direct from Brother Malone.

The following letter was delayed among other papers in this office, which explains why it has not received attention till now:

"Greenfield, Ind., December 14, 1899.—Mr. F. D. Srygley, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: I have noticed at various times you advocate that the church includes all Christians because they are Christians and as long as they are Christians. I also understand you that the same thing that makes one a Christian makes him a member of the church of Christ at the same time. Will you tell me what a man is before he becomes a member of the church? To what kingdom does he belong before he enters into the church? How does he enter into the church, or what particular act makes him a member of the church? I ask that I may more fully understand your position concerning this matter. Will you please answer in your next issue? R. W. THOMPSON."

Brother Thompson is editor of the Monitor and Advocate, a Primitive Baptist paper, published from Greenfield, Ind. As to his questions: (1) A man is a sinner before he becomes a member of the church. (2) Those who are not members of the church are in the world, sometimes called "the power of darkness." (Col. 1: 13.) If it be proper to call this a "kingdom," it is the kingdom of the devil. (3) A man enters "into the church" by being born again. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.) To "be born again" is to "be born of water and of the Spirit." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) To "be born of water and of the Spirit" is to believe and be baptized. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) It is to "repent, and be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38.) Those who were baptized were added unto those who were in the kingdom, or church. (Acts 2: 41-47.) The church is the body of Christ. (Eph. 1: 22, 23; 5: 22, 23; Col. 1: 18, 24.) People are baptized into that body, hence baptized into Christ. (Rom. 6: 1-5; Gal. 3: 26, 27; 1 Cor. 12: 12-14.) Those who by faith repented of all their sins—turned away from all their sins—and were buried with Christ by baptism into death and raised up to walk in newness of life, were in Christ, in the church, in the kingdom of God. They were all one body in Christ and members one of another. (Eph. 4: 4; 1 Cor. 12: 12-27; Rom. 12: 4, 5.) They were the people of God, the body of Christ, the church.

The following paragraph from the New York Weekly Witness is a remarkably clear statement of the scriptural position on the Sabbath question:

"To the Editor: Would you kindly explain, through the Witness, why we do not keep the same Sabbath as mentioned in our Sabbath school lesson two Sundays ago? When was the day changed? Who changed it, and why? Is there Bible authority for the change? I am sure this will be of great interest to thousands of Witness readers, for I believe it is a matter not very well understood.

"S. S. WORKER."

"It is generally believed that the apostles and early church observed the first day of the week in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ on that day, and that our Lord gave his sanction to that observance by appearing to them on at least two successive first days when they were gathered in his name. It is evident from the record in Acts that the Jewish Sabbath, the seventh day, was used by the apostles as an opportunity for preaching to the Jews in their synagogues, and Paul's letters contain references to the fact that some Christians continued to observe the Jewish Sabbath and that there were even in his time disputes in the church in reference to the observance of that day. Paul teaches us (Eph. 2: 15) that Christ 'abolished in his flesh . . . the law of commandments contained in ordinances'—that is, all statutory laws—and James (1: 25) defines the law of the Christian dispensation as 'the perfect law of liberty.' 'The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.' Until the coming of Christ the completion of God's work of creation was the greatest event in the world's history, and its commemoration was best calculated to raise men's thoughts toward God as their Creator. But a greater event took place when the Son of God, having suffered the penalty of man's sin—the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God—rose again triumphant over death and over 'him that had the power of death, that is, the devil' (Heb. 2: 14); and it is in harmony with all the teaching of the New Testament that the commemoration of God's 'new creation' should supplant the commemoration of his earlier work of creation. Church history informs us that for a long time both the seventh and the first days were observed by Christians. Some observed one; some, the other; and some, both. But by the beginning of the fourth century the observance of the seventh day had almost died out, and the great Nicene Council, A.D. 325, settled the question permanently in favor of the first day. Some half-educated writer, having learned this fact, announced the wonderful discovery that the first-day Sabbath was of Roman Catholic origin, and many persons who have not themselves read church history have adopted this view, supposing that the man knew what he was writing about. The truth is that the Nicene Council did not institute the first-day Sabbath, but only confirmed the practice of observing it which had already become general; and the Nicene Council was not Roman Catholic, for the Roman Catholic Church had not come into existence at that time."

In the foregoing excerpt a few sentences have been expunged because they drifted into collateral questions not essential to a clear statement and correct understanding of the teaching of the Bible on the Sabbath. Barring those sentences, one does not often see a better statement of an important truth than the above extract.

The worship and service of God must be conducted on a basis that will allow every Christian perfect freedom in following his convictions as to what the New Testament teaches. The church includes and consists of all Christians, and every member of it must be directed by Christ in all things. The right of each Christian to form and follow his own convictions as to what God teaches in the Holy Scriptures must be respected. No man has a right to make his convictions the rule of another man's life in religious worship and service; no church has a right to lay down a rule for the government of any member in its religious work and worship. Each Christian must walk by his own faith in all matters of religious worship and service. No Christian can walk by faith and at the same time worship and serve the Lord in ways he does not believe God authorizes. Whenever a church adopts anything in religious work or worship which any member believes is a violation of the law of God, that member must either part company with that church or cease to walk by faith. If Christians cannot agree as to what God teaches in the New Testament, they cannot worship and serve God together in things concerning which they disagree. If one of two Christians believes God requires him to do a certain thing, and the other one believes it would be a violation of the law of God to do that thing as worship or service, they cannot worship and serve God together in that thing. There is no alternative but for one of them to do it and the other one not to do it, if they both walk by faith. There is no reason why either one of them should feel unkindly toward the other. Each must walk by his own faith and assume the responsibility of answering to God for the course he pursues. Every man's practice must be consistent with his faith, and as long as men differ in faith they must differ in practice. If every Christian will preach and practice all the New Testament teaches, and nothing else, there will be unity in faith and harmony in practice throughout the whole church, which is the body of Christ. What the New Testament teaches to one, it teaches to all; what it teaches in one locality, it teaches in every community. Each congregation will be exactly like every other congregation in all matters of religious work and worship, if no one teaches or practices anything but what the New Testament teaches. If any Christian or any congregation teaches or practices anything but what the New Testament teaches, there will be discord in the body of Christ, which is the church. Christ does not direct one Christian or one congregation through the Holy Scriptures in a way to conflict with another congregation or another Christian guided by the same scriptures in religious worship and service. Harmony among Christians results from agreement between each Christian and God on the mathematical principle that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 7.)

The Discipline of Life.

Sooner or later we find out that life is not a holiday, but a discipline; earlier or later we all discover that the world is not a playground. It is quite clear God means it for a school. The moment we forget that, the puzzle of life begins. We try to play in school. The Master does not mind that so much for its own sake, for he likes to see his children happy; but in our playing we neglect our lessons. We do not see how much there is to learn, and we do not care; but our Master cares. He has a perfectly overpowering and inexplicable solicitude for our education; and because he loves us, he comes into the school sometimes and speaks to us. He may speak very softly and gently, or very loudly. Sometimes a look is enough, and we understand it, like Peter, and go out at once and weep bitterly; sometimes the voice is like a thunderclap startling a summer night. But one thing we may be sure of: the task he sets us to is never measured by our delinquency. The discipline may seem far less than our deserts, or even to our eye ten times more. But it is not measured by these. It is measured by God's solicitude for our progress, measured solely by God's love, measured solely that the scholar may be better educated, when he arrives at his Father. The discipline of life is a preparation for meeting the Father. When we arrive there to behold his beauty, we must have the educated eye, and that must be trained here; we must become so pure in heart—and it needs much practice—that we shall see God. That explains life—why God puts man in the crucible and makes him pure by fire.—Henry Drummond.

Our Contributors.

Was Paul a Fanatic?

Paul: "Brother Marcus, you remember the object of our interview, I hope. As some days have passed since our last meeting, in which many other interests have been interspersed, to refresh our minds I will ask you to restate the subject we have been discussing."

Marcus: "It was substantially this: I had heard you say the tradition among the disciples that the beloved John would never suffer death would receive no credence from you, because you believed the apostles were appointed to death, and that John would be no exception. You also taught that the death of the apostles was really necessary to fully confirm to the world in time to come the truth of the gospel of Christ, and that when the signs and wonders now wrought by the apostles and others had all ceased the world would still have strong proofs that the gospel is of divine origin and that Jesus, our Savior, was raised from the dead. You said there were divine reasons for this scheme and that these reasons were plain to the ordinary mind. You proposed to show me, Timothy, and these other brethren these reasons from proofs and illustrations derived from your own life, abundant labors, and prospective death, which, you claim, is so near at hand. In the close of our last interview you had submitted this statement as the ground of your argument: That as a preacher of Christ, you were bound to be one of three characters—viz., a fanatic, deceiver, or honest man—and in the event you clearly prove the two negative, your affirmative proposition was irresistible; that you, beyond doubt, would be an honest and true witness, and hence Christ is true, the gospel is true, the Old Testament and the New Testament, soon to be completed, are also true; in short, that heaven and all that we hope for in the name of Christ is certain and sure."

P.: "Brother Marcus, I am glad to note that you have a logical mind and a bright hope, as well as a retentive memory. It is very comforting to such a one as Paul, the aged, to see the younger brethren strong in the Lord. You have stated the question so well it is unnecessary that I do so at this time. I will therefore proceed to prove my first negative. In stating this proposition I will speak of myself in the third person. Was Paul, the preacher, a fanatic? I will take the negative. Do you, Marcus, and these other brethren, understand clearly the argument?"

M.: "You have made it clear and stated it so fairly I am sure we do."

P.: "Let us, then, proceed. Fanaticism always runs in the current of its victim's desires. No man ever did or ever could become suddenly, in three days' time, fanatical in favor of that which he despised and which he had volunteered to destroy; no man ever established the character of an ultra opponent to anything more than I did in my fight against Jesus of Nazareth and his doctrine. So marked had been my opposition that my reported conversion was alike marvelous to friend and foe of the new religion. This sudden and unlooked-for change in my life does not harmonize, and never will, with the idea that as a preacher of Christ I am a fanatic or even an enthusiast. There is only one view, Marcus, that can be taken of my case wherein it could be at all made to appear that possibly I am a fanatic, and that is to suppose that I have endured all these hardships to preach Judaism."

M.: "How is that? I do not know that I understand you."

P.: "Allow me to illustrate my meaning. Suppose that I had preached in all these countries, cities, and towns where you know I have endured untold hardships about this doctrine; that my name is Saul; I was born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia; though a free-born Roman in consequence of distinguished service rendered by my father to that government, by blood, education, and religion I am a thorough Jew, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; from my earliest training I was taught the Jews' religion; I was sincere in my convictions; I was exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers; I loved my people; I never saw the day but I would have given my heart's blood for their welfare and honor. I was an only son of well-to-do parents, who sent me, while yet in my youth, to Jerusalem, the city of David, and placed me under the instruction of Gamaliel, the most celebrated teacher of Judaism since the days of Moses; I studied hard and advanced rapidly, and was taught the perfect manner of the law; I was also thoroughly instructed in a literary point of view; I graduated with distinguished honors; I was thoroughly equipped to honor my family and nation. Having been, according to the custom of my people, taught a useful trade, I was as well prepared for life and its duties as any young man in the empire. About this time a fisher from Galilee, an illiterate man, named Simon Peter, and others of his class, created a sensation and furor in Jerusalem preaching that one Jesus, whom every one knew Pontius Pilate had put to death, was alive. They stoutly affirmed that he was risen from the dead; they declared him to be the Son of God, in whom men should believe. I did not believe it; indeed, I would not listen to it, though others heard and became obedient to that faith. It seemed opposed to the religion of my fathers. With other opponents I tried to argue it down, but, failing in this, we determined to destroy all them who called on this name in Jerusalem unless they would blaspheme; as yet it had not spread abroad. Among those put to death was one of their strong proclaimers, Stephen by name. I gave my voice against him and many others; I made havoc of them; I broke down the doors and entered every house in Jerusalem where they were supposed to be; I made no exceptions, whether men or women I dragged them to prison and death, unless they renounced what they called that 'holy name.' I was very successful, for the whole church of thousands of members was disrupted. Their apostles alone stood the storm of persecution, and one of them was at length beheaded. Not content with this wholesale destruction, I volunteered my services to go in pursuit of the flying fugitives, who, for the safety of their lives, had fled far away to distant cities. I received my commission from the chief priests, and, with a posse to make arrests, I journeyed on foot one hundred and forty miles to Damascus in quest of these people. I had almost reached that city. I remember distinctly it was about noon. The sun, in his bright meridian splendor, beamed down from a clear Syrian sky. My heart was burning with rage to arrest and imprison these people, when suddenly I saw a celestial being in the way. The heavenly light about him eclipsed the noonday sun and filled all the roadway about me and my companions with a heavenly light. We all fell to the earth. I heard a voice in the Hebrew language calling me by the name my dear old father called me. It said: 'Saul, Saul, you are doing right; do your duty; go forward, arrest, persecute, imprison, stone, put to death by any and all means all that call upon this name. Fail not, establish the religion of the fathers, put down this new religion, honor your father's and your mother's religion. Give the miscreants no alternative but to blaspheme the name of Jesus, and do not beg them to do that; but kill them without scruple.' If all this had been the purport of the vision which I have been preaching all these years, then some one might have had some reason to call me a fanatic or an old Jewish crank, for that was exactly what I was doing with all my powers. But you know the vision which I saw is exactly the opposite of this. It halted me, and in three days' time I was preaching the faith I had been destroying."

M.: "These are extreme views, Brother Paul."

P.: "Yes, but you know I was an extremist in the Jews' religion, and only such a view can harmonize with the idea that I can be a fanatic. It is simply impossible to think I, as a preacher of Christ, can be any kind of fanatic."

M.: "I perceive clearly the strength of your proof, for the effects of that vision could never have been the result of your imagination. May I ask if there be any other facts which disprove fanaticism on your part?"

P.: "Yes, the physical effects of that vision; for I opened my eyes and I could not see on account of the dazzling brightness of that heavenly light. No matter how wild and crazed a person may become in imagination, it never does put out the eyesight so he cannot see the road to town. Blindness for three days resulted from that sight of Christ in his glory, which required a miracle to remove it. This could not have been fanaticism. Not only so, but my companions saw, indeed, the light, and were amazed. This terror of theirs could not have resulted from a hallucination on my part if there had been no real appearance. No, my son, whatever may be true of me as a preacher of Christ no man can have a shadow of reason to say I was simply infatuated within my own mind. Do you now agree that my first negative proposition is proved?"

M.: "Yes, and I now understand and see the growing strength of your proofs. You cannot be a fanatic in preaching Christ, because you were utterly opposed to him and exceedingly zealous of the law. It was too sudden a change, and you had no inclination that way; and, furthermore, the physical effects in yourself and the consternation of your comrades could never have resulted from fanaticism."

P.: "I perceive, Marcus, that you have followed me closely in what I have said. I desire you to remember these things and to be mindful of the words of the apostles when we all have passed away, where I shall see the King in his glory, when I shall be strengthened to behold him as he is."

M.: "Yes, but O, that appointment to death! If it were not for that I could more heartily enter into your joy."

P.: "None of these things move me. I count not my life dear unto myself. Indeed I have a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; but it is more needful for you and others that I abide in the flesh. But let us not omit the proving of that other negative: 'Was Paul, the preacher, a deceiver?' This we will examine in our next interview. Join with me, dear brethren, in the benediction: 'Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.'"

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 24.

Before leaving this island it will be in place for me to tell a few more things about it and its people. It is 271 miles long, 139 miles wide, and contains an area of 25,742 square miles. It has a population of 3,000,000. It is a crown colony of Great Britain, having become such in 1802. Colombo, with a population of 130,000, is the capital. Colombo has a spacious artificial harbor, which has an area of about 500 acres. The length of the breakwater is 4,212 feet, and was constructed at a cost of $3,500,000.

The national religion of the Cingalese is Buddhism, which claims ninety-one per cent of the population, Ceylon, indeed, being looked upon by the millions of Burmah, Siam, and even China, as the sacred home of Buddhism. At Aluwihara there is a very remarkable Buddhist temple. The scene is a most extraordinary one. Huge masses of granite rock have been precipitated from the crest of a mountain, and on these other masses have been hurled, which, in their descent, have splintered those into gigantic fragments. In the fissures caused by these convulsions numbers of small apartments were formed at an early period, only two of which now remain. The principal one is almost concealed beneath the overhanging brow of an enormous boulder, in a gloomy recess darkened by beetling rocks and shaded by the surrounding forests. A century before the Christian era scribes employed by the Cingalese king reduced to writing the doctrines of Buddha, which had been previously preserved by tradition alone. Today there are three hundred million Buddhists in the world. They believe in the transmigration of souls—that is, that they will have to become perfect in the course of an incalculable number of incarnations in various shapes before attaining Nirvana, which is the condition of total cessation in changes, of perfect rest, of the absence of desire, illusion, and sorrow, of the total obliteration of everything that goes to make up the physical man. The main object of a Buddhist is to obtain merit, for the germinating power which determines whether the new being to be produced shall be an insect or a worm, a fowl, a beast, a man, or the highest of sentient beings, is the sum of merit and demerit. As evil was considered to be connected with all passing phenomena, poverty and mortification of the senses were inculcated as indispensable to salvation.

It does not strike me that the central part of Ceylon would suit our Utah Mormons, inasmuch as the order is changed from polygamy to polyandry, which still lingers there, and was formerly universal; it is now, however, said to be almost confined to the wealthier classes, among whom one woman has often three or four husbands.

As people are usually much interested in marriage customs among foreign nations, I will give an account of a marriage among the high caste Cingalese. This information I obtained from an eyewitness, who says: "Late one evening I received a note from a friend telling me of a swell Cingalese wedding which was to occur next morning, and suggesting that I get my tea and toast by 6 o'clock and be ready for the carriage that would be at my door at 6:30, as the marriage festivities would last all day. The early morning drive of ten miles along the beach, with the blue Indian Ocean to my right and the green-tufted cocoanut tree to my left, was refreshing and delightful, and just as the music on the tomtoms at the bridegroom's house was well begun we passed through the throng of people on the street and the crowd of relatives of the groom in the front room. We were ushered into a compartment, which was decorated most elaborately with pictures of Buddha, the royal family of England, actresses, and celebrated brands of American tobacco. In the center of the room was a huge flower-covered cake, to be presented at the proper time by the groom to the bride. The cousin of the bridegroom took us in charge, and, as he spoke English very well, his explanations during the day threw light upon many of the mysteries of this marriage according to the complicated rites of the Buddhist religion. It is the custom for the relatives only of the groom to gather before the marriage at his father's house, and as these numbered several hundred, we were entertained by watching these Cingalese men, women, and children—some in native, and others in half European, costumes—gathering in the rooms preparatory to taking up the march for the house of the bride's father. Six married women, nearest related to the groom (with the exception of his mother, who was not seen during the performances), were ushered in with great pomp, and I am sure that Barnum's agent never saw anything alive so wonderful as these painted, brilliantly costumed, powdered creatures. My self-appointed informer whispered to me that it was the first time these women had tried to dress like Europeans and Americans, and when I quietly said, 'Remarkable,' he seemed quite satisfied with the effect produced. The flower girls from the groom's house were dressed in bright bodices, white skirts, flaming red stockings, and, as it was a dry, hot day, several of them were shod with brand new, shining rubbers. But some of the party were sensible enough not to try to imitate Western dress, and these looked attractive and graceful. When the groom appeared in the handsome Cingalese dress worn by the upper classes, every one rose, shook hands with him, and the march was begun for the bride's home. Our carriage was placed next to the one containing the happy young man, and with him we equally divided the attention of the groups on the corners, who were expecting to see only the relatives of the groom and Cingalese followers of Buddha. For four miles along the beach of the Indian Ocean, through cocconut and palm groves, and along the cinnamon gardens we moved slowly, until suddenly there burst upon our ears the noise of many voices and the clatter of the tomtom, and our carriages were surrounded by the relatives of the bride, who gave evidence of their joy by the indescribable movements of their bodies and heads and the clapping of their hands. A white cloth was stretched over several hundred yards from the door of the house, white canopies were held aloft by gaily dressed young women; the father, uncles, brothers, and other male relatives of the bride came forward in stately procession; several tomtoms, each surrounded by five vigorous persons, gave forth the most execruting music; the female relatives of the bride, from near and far, dressed, if possible, more remarkably than the females of the other house, gathered in the front rooms, and after the bride had been adorned in a lace jacket brought her by the bridegroom, which was placed over her other bridal attire, she was led in, and more than an hour she sat upon the elevated seat, made for the purpose, in the center of the room—the bashful, if not blushing, object of the cruel scrutiny of curious eyes. The bride had just passed her fourteenth year; her white satin costume fitted not much better than the clothes of a Chinaman; her poor, cramped feet looked little at ease in the white slippers, and her long bridal veil, with the price tag still on it, was fastened to her jet-black hair with silver pins and white, red, and pink flowers, and hung gracefully over her hazel-brown face. After the scrutinizing process was over, and all the members of the two houses had examined her from every point of view, the bride was helped from her chair by the married women of the groom's house, and she was soon standing with her lover on a raised mat, covered with white cloth, in the large middle room, in the immediate presence of their maternal uncles. The marriage ceremony, according to the religion of Buddha, was commenced by the senior uncle; the thumbs of the couple were tied together with white cord, over which was poured cold water; the cords were untied, and the groom placed two rings on the bride's finger, and she put two on his. The gray-haired father of the groom then waved over the pair a tray containing lighted tapers, and the Buddhist ceremony was closed with words of advice to the new-made husband and wife, and with the announcement that presents were then in order. The young husband presented his wife with a satin dress and jacket, which were put on her publicly by two women, who looked like they had been kissing the inside of a flour barrel. The bride's father gave to his son-in-law a pile of rupees, which were counted, and the amount, six hundred and five, was announced, and a tract of land as a dower, and then smaller presents followed. After a general hand shaking, which was the only mode of congratulation, the procession moved off toward the office of the registrar, where the record of marriage was made according to English laws."

Just before sailing from Ceylon we had another exhibition, something like the one with which we were greeted on our arrival. We had to keep an eye on these fellows to keep them from stealing. I was in my cabin looking out at them through the porthole. One of them proposed to exchange bananas for bread, to which I readily agreed. We had several pounds of crackers, which we had brought from Australia. I wrapped some two or three pounds of these in a paper and let them down to him on a cord. He began to eat them at once and gave some to each one of his companions, who devoured them ravenously. All my powers of persuasion could not induce him to give me the bananas. He said, "Crackers no good; you give good crackers, I give good bananas;" but he never ceased to eat them; in fact, there were only a few left. As there was no virtue in appeals to his honesty and manhood, I decided to use other means; so I reached down and took up a new hammer, stuck the handle down my sleeve, and turned the face of it into the face of the nontrader. When he looked up at me, I said: "Hand the bananas to me at once; I will put up with no more of your foolishness." The sight of the hammer, which he thought was a pistol, gave him a fearful fright, and the bananas came without any further parley. It was very amusing to see what a change that hammer produced.

We weighed anchor at 5 o'clock on the evening of August 4, and sailed out into the Arabian Sea.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

The Importance of Sound Speech.

We learn from Matt. 26: 73 that it was by means of his speech that the apostle Peter was identified as a Galilean, and by the same means and with the same certainty we can establish the identity of man in the religious world of to-day. The strange fact about the matter is, that so little attention is paid to it; in fact, comparatively few persons seem to realize that soundness of speech in religious matters is of any special importance at all. There seems to be a general disposition to speak in harmony with one's religious atmosphere or surroundings, regardless of the will of the Lord in the case. The fact is: most persons talk and act as if they did not know that the Lord has expressed his will on the subject at all.

It is my purpose in this article to call attention to the matter of sound speech, and to lay special emphasis upon its importance. There are several points to which it will be profitable to give serious attention:

1. Let us note, first of all, the prominence given to it in the word of God. The apostle Paul exhorted Titus, a preacher of the gospel, to show himself "an ensample of good works; in thy doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned." (Tit. 2: 7, 8, R. V.) This is strong and significant language. It would not be on record if "sound speech" were not a matter of serious importance. Let us ponder the admonition and try to comprehend its solemn import. It is from an inspired man of God. It, therefore, comes clothed with the authority of God. Let no man esteem it lightly. If laxity or carelessness in the matter of speech were permissible, no such admonition would find a place in the New Testament. Its presence in this sacred volume, the God-appointed guide of religious teachers in all their speech, faith, and practice, is incontestable proof that the Lord wants them to respect it themselves and to teach all others to do the same. To Timothy, another preacher of the gospel, the same apostle delivered a solemn admonition concerning "the sound doctrine" (1 Tim. 1: 10), "wholesome ["sound," same word in original] words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Tim. 6: 3), and he distinctly made the prediction that "the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine." (2 Tim. 4: 3, R. V.) All of this, and much more that might be quoted, would not be in the instructions and directions recorded for preachers and for all religious teachers, if it were not important for them to observe it.

2. Let us inquire in the next place, how these requirements concerning the matter of sound speech can be practically carried out. On this point, there is but one proper answer, and that is to speak always of Bible things in Bible language. In other words, to speak in all things as the Bible speaks, and to be silent where it is silent. There is no justifiable excuse for ever departing from this safe rule; yet gray-haired men—men who are sages in Israel—gravely talk to the people about “our church,” “our teaching,” “our brotherhood,” “our distinctive plea,” “our movement,” etc. Why not drop all such unscriptural and antiscritural phraseology, fall in line with the language and teaching of Christ and the apostles, be members of the church and brotherhood they established, make the same distinctive plea which they made, fall in line with the movement which they started, and thus give them the credit and glory for all these things, just as is done in the New Testament? “But was it not necessary for Campbell and others to start a movement?” The same necessity was upon Campbell and his coadjutors that has been upon every other child of God since the mediatorial reign of Christ began—namely, to start nothing, but to fall in line with that which Christ and inspired apostles started nineteen hundred years ago. No man has had divine authority to start anything since that time, but it is the duty of all men in every age to help on that which had thus already been started. If we find ourselves out of harmony with the teaching, church, brotherhood, distinctive plea, and movement revealed in the New Testament and started by Christ and the apostles, let us straightway harmonize ourselves with them by dropping off everything that has been added, and by adding everything of New Testament teaching and practice that has been dropped off. Since the day of Christ and the apostles no man has had divine authority to found a brotherhood or start a plea; but it is the duty of all men to belong to the brotherhood and make the plea that are found in the New Testament; and no movement is needed now, or ever has been needed, except for every man to move into line with the teaching and practice of the New Testament, and to persuade all others to do the same. There is no need of starting anything. Everything was founded and started nineteen hundred years ago that the Lord wants people to have and to belong to, and it is incumbent upon every one who would please the Lord to found nothing and start nothing, but to fall into line with the things founded and started by inspired men. For all who pursue this wise course, it is easy to observe the will of God in the matter of sound speech. They utterly repudiate the confused and misleading shibboleths of modern denominationalism. With them, all such sectarian dialects are the language of “Ashdod,” and not the pure speech of Canaan. They will speak as the New Testament speaks, or not speak at all. This is the divine rule, and it is infallibly safe.

3. Finally, I will add a word concerning the apparent difficulty in the way of following this safe rule. Good people, long accustomed to the jargon of denominationalism, tell us that the people will not understand us or know where to locate us if we always speak thus. It is true they could not, in the light of such speech, locate you in a denomination; but that is where you should not be located, and hence the difficulty at this point is only one proof of the correctness of such speech. Let us ask: How would such persons locate the apostle Paul or other New Testament Christians if they were here? Certain it is that they would refuse to belong to anything in the way of a church or brotherhood that was founded later in time than nineteen hundred years ago, nor would they consent to speak otherwise than as they did at that time; hence they would be members of the church established at that time, of the brotherhood founded at that time, urge anew the movement that was then started, make again the same plea they then made, be known simply as the people of God, call the attention of men to the teaching of Christ, and speak in all things as the oracles of God. They could also remind us of what one of their inspired number said at that time: “If any man speaketh, speaking as it were oracles of God; if any man ministereth, ministering as of the strength which God supplieth: that in all things God may be glorified through Jesus Christ, whose is the glory and the dominion forever and ever. Amen.”

There are other points under this head demanding our attention. In the meantime, let the reader ponder the matters here submitted. M. C. KURFEES.

CONTINUED WATCHFULNESS.

When Jesus was foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, including, as is generally understood, the final end of time also, he said: “Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.” (Matt. 24: 42-44.)

In this passage Jesus makes two or three things very plain. One is the necessity of continued watchfulness on the part of Christians, and that they should be ready at any time and at all times for their departure out of this world. Another is that the end of life and the end of the world are certain. All men have got to leave this world, and there is no mistake about that. Another thing is that while the end of life and the end of the world are certain to come, the time is uncertain, so thoroughly uncertain that no man can know just when. Jesus even says that the angels of heaven do not know; not even the Son, but the Father; and as angels cannot tell, and as even the Son himself could not tell, how can uninspired men now tell when the end will come? But all may be perfectly certain it will come. The end of life is the same to a man as the end of the world. When a man dies, his destiny for eternity is fixed by the life he has lived, and he cannot possibly change it then. This knowledge regarding the end of the world is evidently withheld for a wise purpose. As no man can tell the time of the end, he can realize more the importance of being always ready for it, lest it come when he is not ready. If people could tell just how long they would live and just when the end of the world would come, many of them would go their own way the most of life and depend upon the last few days or hours of life in which to make their preparation for eternity. Many are inclined to do this, anyway, taking all the risk into their own hands; and if all knew when the end would come, they would nearly or quite all of them do that way; but as it is, they cannot tell, and this fact is calculated to stimulate people to strive to be always ready. In this way they lead a holy and useful life all the way and thus make this life so much more enjoyable and useful.

It is an exceedingly short-sighted view of Christianity to regard it as merely intended to prepare people to die; and yet that is the sense in which very many regard it. Suppose all were to regard it thus; then the world would be deprived almost altogether of the beautiful, holy, and godly life the religion of Jesus teaches us to live on the earth; and if all would live this life as the New Testament requires, heaven would in reality begin on earth. Paul says: “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world.” (Tit. 2: 11, 12.) This passage very forcibly emphasizes the true design of Christianity on earth, and shows that it is a life to be lived, and not a mere profession to be made or merely a preparation to die; but it is a very significant fact that this life that is required of us on earth is the very thing that prepares people to die, and without this godly and beautiful life no one can prepare for eternity. A man must become a Christian to make the start for heaven, and, in becoming a Christian, he becomes holy; and he must continue to be holy while life lasts.

All the passages that speak of the future destiny of man, and the principles upon which eternal life is to be obtained, indicate that the Christian must be faithful and constant in the service of God through this life; and if Christians will be faithful all the time, it need not trouble them for a moment, either as to when their lives shall end, when time shall end, or when the millennium shall begin; for no matter when the end comes, the faithful Christian will be ready for it. If not faithful, he would not be ready, although he might know the day and hour when the end should come. The apostle Paul says to the Hebrews: “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.”

Knowing when the end will come would benefit no man, for knowing this is no part of the preparation necessary to meet the Lord in peace. But the end will come, and all may be well assured of that fact. If it had been at all necessary for us to know beforehand the time of the end, the Lord would have made it known to us; and not only has he failed to let us know when the end comes, but he has plainly told us that we know not the day nor the hour. Not only this, but the word of the Lord warns us against untaught questions, which can profit no one, even if he understood all about it; and since no man can know these things, it is vain to be trying to find them out, and not only so, but it is certainly wrong to be trying to peep through the veil and find out things that the Father has, in love and kindness, hid from our eyes. These men are, therefore, worse than wasting their time trying to find out what is beyond their reach, and that would do them no good if they could. But, somehow or other, very many men are much more anxious to find out things hidden from them than they are to find out things that are plainly revealed. God has made the way of salvation so plain that all may understand it, both how to become Christians and how to live the Christian life. A great many men take no interest in these things at all; yet there are many cold-hearted professors of Christianity that will spend a lifetime in trying to find out what the angels of heaven, and even the Son of God, do not know, and neglect the plain matters of the Christian life, that are as plain as the alphabet, and without which no man can be saved.

I am not feeling any anxiety as to when the end will come. My anxiety is to live the Christian life, to “live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world.” I do not wish to spend my time trying to find out what the Lord has hid from my eyes and neglect matters that have been revealed and required at my hands, and upon which my soul’s salvation depends. God being my Helper, I want to be ready, and if I am always ready, that day can never take me unawares.

The whole world needs to see the Christian life manifested on the part of all Christians as a matter of encouragement to them to be Christians. How much better it is to be showing people how to become Christians, and how to live the Christian life, and encouraging them to do these things, than to be spending time trying to find out what no man can know and that would do them no good under the heavens if they did know! God does not trouble us with things that cannot benefit us. Moses said: “The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law.” (Deut. 29: 29.) The secret things mean things not revealed, not made known, to men, and include everything not revealed as a matter of service to God, no matter what it is. The whole matter of Christianity was a secret not revealed in the days of Moses. There had been some prophecies regarding a coming Messiah, but they were not understood, even by the men that uttered them. Hence at that time the whole plan of salvation was a secret even to Moses, because it had not been revealed then. Now suppose that Moses and the seventy elders had spent their time in getting up theories about a coming salvation, instead of teaching and enforcing the law of Moses upon the people, what good could they have done by it? None in the world. But, on the other hand, they would have turned them away from the law, the word of God, to mere speculations of men that could have benefited no one; and in so doing they would have brought sudden ruin upon the people by turning them from following the word of God to follow mere speculation of men that could not benefit or elevate any one. God, through Moses, in the above passage tells the Jews that secret, untold, unrevealed things belong unto the Lord, “that we may do all the words of this law.” God knew that speculative, unrevealed things would turn the people from his law; hence he notifies them that they are not to meddle with unrevealed things, with things not told them, and which do not belong to them, that they might devote themselves to keeping the law which had then been revealed, and which belonged to them and was their business to keep.

Since God has not revealed to men when the end of time will come, it will be just as vain for men to speculate about that now as it would have been for Moses and the prophets to have speculated about a coming salvation, which they knew nothing in the world about, save that it was coming. This they had a right to fully believe, and that is about all they could get out of it. So we may fully understand and believe that the end of the world is coming, but we know just as little about when it will be as Moses and the prophets knew when Christ would come and

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother M. H. Northcross was in the office last week. He was just from Blakemore, Ark., where he had held a meeting.

Brother F. W. Smith, of Franklin, Tenn., was in the office on Thursday. He is at present in a meeting at Winchester, Ky., having begun there last Lord's day.

The meeting at the church of Christ on South College street continues, Brother Larimore preaching afternoon and night to fair audiences. On Lord's day he preached morning, noon, and night to large audiences.

On November 30, in the parlor of the Hicks House, Murfreesboro, Tenn., Mr. G. L. Chumbley and Miss Jennie Upchurch were united in marriage, the writer officiating. As they go through life they shall be accompanied by my best wishes and attended by my heartiest prayers.—W. L. Logan.

A recent letter from Brother R. W. Officer to a sister, in regard to the serious illness of his wife, says: "This is the eighteenth week I have been by Lota's bedside. Doctors give us no encouragement to hope for her recovery." In this time of trouble Brother Officer will appreciate renewed expressions of love and sympathy and will need our hearty fellowship.

Mr. B. F. Hays and Miss Mary J. Victory were married on November 30, at the Barton House, in Murfreesboro, Tenn. The writer administered the vows. The groom is a successful real estate dealer of that place, and the bride is an excellent lady of Rucker, Tenn. May as much of happiness and prosperity attend them through life as is allowed to mortals here below.—W. L. Logan.

The Lord willing, I will spend the first half of February in Tennessee. I would like to make appointments somewhat as follows: Woodsonville, Ky., Thursday night, February 1; Galatin, Tenn., Friday, February 2; with the churches in Nashville, from Saturday night, February 3, to Thursday night, February 8; Columbia, Friday night, February 9; Dunlap, Saturday night and Sunday night, February 10 and 11; Beech Grove, Tuesday night, February 13; Franklin, Wednesday night, February 14. Of course these appointments are only suggestive. If they are agreeable to those concerned, I should be very thankful if the brethren would announce them accordingly; if not, a card to that effect would be a favor to me. Will the churches named please let me know.—J. M. McCaleb.

My wife and I are cozily settled in a Japanese house, with no close neighbors, save natives. We are studying the Japanese customs, manner of life, language, etc. We hope to accomplish some good by our manner of life among these people. We hope soon to be able to teach them. It is quite a trial to spend most of our time among people whose words are only strange sounds to us, and whose ears hear our English and mispronounced Japanese words without understanding us. But we all smile and bow to each other, make signs, and are altogether quite friendly. I am exchanging lessons with a Japanese teacher. I have purchased a small printing office and have begun to do some printing for the missionaries. I hope to begin, in 1900, the issue of a small Sunday school paper in Japanese for children. Pray for us. Address me at 15 Kamitomisaka Cho, Koishikawa, Tokyo, Japan.—William J. Bishop.

EDITORIAL.

So few people practice as well as they preach.

Always decide with conscience as against passion.

The man is a failure who has no convictions of his own.

Trust no future, however promising. Improve the present.

We should do right regardless of what men may say about us.

The man who never grows weary in this life will never rest in heaven.

The only safe course is to do your duty regardless of consequences.

We need not fear what man can do to us as long as we are true to God.

Let us not forget that it is easier to make resolves than it is to keep them.

Every time you compromise with error you invite the devil to enter your heart.

Heaven is never far from the man who spends his time doing the will of the Lord.

The man who has experienced the joy of salvation is anxious to tell others about it.

We should never be content with any mark but the highest. To strive for that which is less is unworthy of any one.

Wear a smile even if the heart is sad. The world cares little for your sorrows and is always shy of a gloomy face.

Many people are fonder of finding the moles in the eyes of others than they are of pulling the beams out of their own eyes.

It does not follow because you are persecuted that you are doing the will of the Lord; but blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake.

Money is not what we need for the conversion of the world so much as consecration. If we were all consumingly in earnest, all the money necessary would be forthcoming.

The man who is never persecuted may be sure he is not a servant of the Lord. The only absolutely perfect person this world has ever known was persecuted even unto the death of the cross.

God's way is always better than our way. Our greatest usefulness will not be attained until we are willing to humbly follow God's leading in the way of righteousness. We can never stumble or fall as long as we are content with his way and prayerfully follow him in the way he leads.

"Well," said the innocent bystander to the man whose automobile had exhausted its battery eleven miles from the nearest charging station, "you might get out of the difficulty by taking Emerson's advice. 'What's that?' asked the one who was in trouble. "'Hitch your wagon to a star.'"—Ex.

We should be patient with the faults of others, not forgetting that we may have greater faults. Adverse criticism is not always helpful, but it frequently discourages those we would make strong. Just forbearance with the faults of our associates often proves beneficial to them in correcting them. If God were to deal harshly with us, none of us would ever enjoy salvation.

Christianity means living right every day. It is not something that can be put on and off at pleasure; it is not like the man who said he left his religion at home when he went to a certain city to sell his logs. The religion of Christ accompanies a man everywhere. It is the same at home, abroad, on land, or on sea. The religion that a man can leave at home when he goes abroad is worthless; neither is the religion that a man puts off on Monday morning, like he puts off his Sunday clothing, of any value. The man who has the genuine article is religious every day, every hour, and everywhere. Not only this, but his religion is catching, like the measles and smallpox; it breaks out on the man in his conversation and in his actions. He is so full of it that he delights to deal tenderly with others and to tell them the wondrous story of Jesus and his love. He does not wait for some one to hire him to tell the old story, but he will tell lost and ruined sinners the way of salvation without money and without price.

A little girl at one time was sharing with her two little sisters one great big bed. Her father, on his return home late and his going to see his three wee bairnies, discovered her lying wide awake, while the other little tots were sound asleep. He began to talk to her, and said: "Did you ask God to take care of you during the night?" "O, no, papa!" The father opened his eyes in astonishment, and said: "What! Did you not?" "No, papa." "Why, where you not afraid in the darkness and the silence of the night to lie there without having asked God to take care of you?" "No, papa, I'm not afraid; I sleep in the middle." Do you see it? The poor little heart was so human that she thought, as she nestled down with a little sister on each side, that the middle one had no need to pray; and some sinners think if they are in the middle, in the crowd of ungodly companions, they are safe. You in the crowd of evil doers, you in the bands of wicked men, in the middle God's thunderbolt will reach you. It is nothing to you that all Glasgow will be damned, you will be damned also. O, do not let the delusion of the thought of the crowd deceive you! "Though hand join in hand," what then? "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." God help you, sinner, to flee the wrath to come.—Christian Scotsman.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

"The Christian's Duty toward Civil Governments and Carnal Wars" is a tract recently published by us for Brother William J. Miller, of Lometa, Texas. It will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of 10 cents.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man, by the author. The book is illustrated with first-class engravings, showing photograph of each preacher, log cabins in the mountains, baptizing scenes, camp-meeting scenes among the Indians in the far West, etc. Pages, 424; price, $1.50.

Quite a number of subscriptions expire this month, and there are many on our list whose subscriptions have already expired, and who have not yet renewed, of whom we earnestly request an early renewal. As an inducement to new subscribers, and to old subscribers to renew, we make the following liberal offers for a limited time: We will send the Gospel Advocate to new subscribers and renewals for one year for $1.50, with the choice of one of the following premiums: Home and Farm, for one year; a gold-edge Morocco pocket Testament; or our new calendar for 1900. Nearly all of our readers are familiar with the merits of Home and Farm as an agricultural and home paper. Our calendar is superior to anything we have produced heretofore, is a work of art, and represents the high standard of work done by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. We will send the Gospel Advocate one year and a Nelson's 32mo Text Bible for $2, or we will send the Bible as a premium for one new subscriber for a year. We also continue the offer of the Advocate one year, together with our Art Bible, for $3 to old and new subscribers alike; or we will send the Bible to any one sending us two new subscribers. We cannot give it with a renewal and a new subscriber, and to take advantage of these offers, orders must be made direct to us, and not through an agent; because when an agent claims his commission, we cannot afford to pay a second commission by giving the subscriber a premium. We will also take pleasure in sending the paper one month free to addresses sent us, at the close of which time the paper will be promptly discontinued, if we do not receive an order asking to be placed on our regular list.

We want to keep our premium offer before you. A number have taken advantage of the offer to secure the paper and Bible. The price of the paper is $1.50 per year, and we send the Bible alone, postpaid, for $2.25. You will, no doubt, appreciate the arrangement of this Bible. It contains the text of the Authorized Version, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version. Hear some of the expressions in regard to its arrangement and helps: "A modified parallel Bible." (California Christian Advocate, San Francisco, Cal.) "The most helpful Bible yet issued." (Christian Witness, Boston, Mass.) "The most complete Teachers' Bible we have ever seen. It is an invaluable treasury." (Peninsula Methodist, Wilmington, Del.) "This is one of the most valuable and useful editions of the Bible that we have yet seen. It gives the reader the benefit of both versions." (Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas.) "Eyre & Spottswood's Bible is good, Bagster's has some points in its favor, the new and improved Oxford is excellent; but each of the above, and all others, fall far short of the 'Combination' Bible. The type is large and clear." (Christian Advocate, Greenville, S. C.) "We have never seen a more helpful Teachers' Bible; it is a vast cyclopedia of the most useful information." (Church Messenger and Christian Endeavor, Providence, R. I.) "We cannot too highly commend this 'Combination' Bible, since it contains so many good features and is so complete." (Journal and Messenger, Cincinnati, O.) "One of the best offered to Sunday school teachers and Bible readers. It is approved by the leading ministers of all denominations." (Baltimore Methodist, Baltimore, Md.) "The very book for Bible students, teachers, and preachers; quite beyond anything of the kind we have ever seen." (American Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.) It contains quite a number of full-page illustrations, "Harmony of the Gospels," "Chronology of the Acts and Epistles," valuable tables of weights and measures, subject index, concordance, scripture atlas, and many other helps. The Bible is self-pronouncing, has gold edges over red, and is quite a handsome book. We send the Advocate one year, and the Bible, for $3; or, if you will send us two new subscribers at the regular price of $1.50 each, we will send you the Bible as a premium.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: "For the perfecting of the saints, . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ" (Eph. 4: 12), please explain through the Gospel Advocate the meaning of Matt. 5: 23, 24.
Franklin, Tenn. D. PAGE.

The passage referred to reads: "If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Revision.) This was spoken while they were yet under the Jewish dispensation. So he speaks of bringing his gift to the altar, where all gifts were to be offered to God under that dispensation. If while there at the altar he remembered his brother had aught against him, he was to leave his gift at the altar. His brother had aught against him only when he had wronged his brother. It means, then, when you come to the altar of God to make an offering, you must think of the wrongs you have done others; and if you remember a wrong you have done your brother, leave the gift before the altar. Do not offer it until you go and correct the wrong done your brother. That is the only way to be reconciled to him when you have wronged him. Remove that which he has against you. Then after you have corrected the wrong done him, come and offer your gift at the altar. It teaches that when you have wronged your brother you must undo it before you come to worship God. God will not accept the worship of one while he refuses to correct a wrong done his brother, and this applies to all worship of God, private as well as public. Jesus follows up that thought in the next verse to settle all differences with men quickly. Do not leave them to fester, grow worse. "Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art with him in the way." Do not let the difficulties and misunderstandings remain unsettled. Evil comes of such a course.

Brother Lipscomb: Will you do me the kindness to set me right as to my duty in reference to attending Methodist revivals here? When I attend, I am asked to "stand up" and in other ways to assent to and sanction many unscriptural "tests" and practices. Now, if I do not do as the preacher requests, he very angrily refers to certain stumbling-blocks that are present, etc. On the other hand, if I do not go to their meetings, they characterize my actions as full of prejudice toward them. I would be glad to hear from you, through the Gospel Advocate, as to the proper course to pursue.

Some time ago, in conversation with Brother Bersat, I believe it was, he spoke of the great debate between Alexander Campbell and Robert Dale Owen, saying that, at its conclusion, nearly every one of the infidels present, when a test vote was taken, voted in favor of Brother Campbell's side of the question, indorsing the Christian religion. I would be delighted to read an account of that debate from your pen, it to be published in an early number of the Gospel Advocate. I sincerely believe such an article would prove exceedingly acceptable and enjoyable to a host of readers of the Advocate. I hope you can see your way clear to grant my request at a very early date. I must say, before I close, that I heartily indorse the position of the Gospel Advocate in standing up for apostolic Christianity—unmixed with creeds, innovations, and other man-made institutions—and I feel especially proud to know we have such able Christian writers and preachers to contend against sectarianism wherever found. All who are connected with the Advocate—and the Advocate itself, as well—have my best wishes.

Irvington, Ky.

CHARLES F. REDMAN.

The first thing a man should fix in his mind is that he will partake in no wrong and do nothing that will encourage others in wrong. If that demands he should stay away from the Methodist or other revivals, he must do this. A Christian cannot do or encourage in religion what is contrary to the law of God. But I do not think it requires we should stay away from their services. When I was younger

I attended their services oftener than I find time of late to do. I frequently met the difficulties our brother mentions. Once in Maury County, this State, I held a meeting, preaching twice a day for ten days. A Baptist preacher attended every discourse and indorsed all I preached, he said. On Lord's day, when we attended to the Supper, he left the house. At the close of the meeting he told me the Baptists would hold a meeting soon, near by, and insisted that I attend. I promised him I would, and the first time I went he called on every one present who wished a revival of religion to kneel down and unite with them in prayer for it. I declined to kneel, as I did not wish the kind of revival they were seeking to arouse. He reproved me publicly for it. So soon as the services closed, I went to him and told him: "You attended our meeting, and we asked you to indorse nothing that you disapproved. When we attended to the Supper, you left, although you believe it is right to partake of the Lord's Supper; but no one complained. You asked me to attend your meeting and you ask me to do something you know I believe wrong. When I decline doing it, you reprove me." By the time I was through, he said: "I ask your pardon; I will not so treat you again." He did not, and I think he did not ask others to do it, because of my presence. I tell this to suggest that perfect frankness in letting all know your convictions and that you cannot violate them is the best and only way to avoid trouble. To let them know that you cannot approve things that are not required is the only true way out of all difficulties and is the only way to bear true witness for the truth.

The debate of A. Campbell was not with Robert Dale Owen, but with his father, Robert Owen. Robert Dale Owen sympathized with his father's skeptical views, but devoted himself to literature and politics. The debate of A. Campbell with Robert Owen is the best work of the kind I know. It is a masterful presentation of the evidences and claims of the Christian religion upon the children of men; it is stimulating and strengthening to the Christian faith. I know not how many skeptics were present at the discussion; but Mr. Campbell, at the close of the discussion, called for an expression of faith of the audience on the subject. A large audience was present. An almost universal response was made to his call for those who believed in the truth of the Christian religion to rise. Only three, as I now remember, rose when those who disbelieved were requested to rise. Yet I do not see how I could well present an account of it, short of giving the discussion. Much the better way would be to get the book and read the discussion and lend it to the doubters. While it does not meet some of the modern phases of unbelief that have grown up since the debate, it gives such testimony of a positive and aggressive character as will lead every sincere and honest heart into the belief of the truth. The book can be had for $1.25.

Should a Child of God Swear?

The above query is not intended to make inquiry in regard to profane swearing; the high plane of moral rectitude which Christianity occupies and the influence it has over the world forbid such inquiry; but I wish to inquire whether or not a child of God should take what is called a legal oath as administered by an official in our civil courts of justice. I am sure that a great many good and well-meaning brethren submit to this without stopping to think that they are doing something which the Master very positively tells us not to do. Others, again, in the face of Bible teaching, suffer themselves to violate this injunction for fear of being regarded as overparticular or strangely peculiar; but we ought to be glad to be classed as peculiar, for the mission of the Son of God to earth was to "purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Titus 2: 14.) In this connection I would say that large numbers of our brethren in the present day seem to be exerting every effort to rid themselves of that peculiarity which God has intended should characterize his people, leaving off authorized things and adding things that are unauthorized, being moved with a desire, as we suppose, to be more like other religious bodies around them. I would that the brotherhood would seriously consider this subject, remembering that God's word is the measure of our faith, and that if we stop short of this measure, or limit, our faith is incomplete. If we transcend or go beyond God's word or teaching, offering as religious service things not authorized in the word of God—this is not faith at all, but is presumption, which David looked upon as a very great sin, and from which he prayed to be delivered. (Ps. 19: 13.)

But back to the matter of Christians taking an oath. The injunction forbidding it is very clear and positive. Jesus says: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne; nor by the earth; for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." (Matt. 5: 34-37.) Now Jesus here says that it is an evil thing to swear, and we are taught to beware of evil. We learn through Paul that we must not only dislike evil, but he tells us to "abhor evil." "Abhor" is a very strong word, and means that we should intensely hate evil. We, then, as children of God, should refrain from the evil of swearing, because the Lord himself has commanded us to do so.

Then, again, we should not swear, because it is taking the name of the Lord in vain. In administering an oath it is presumed that in calling the name of God over the party it will make him tell the truth; but it does not always do so, as many under this name swear falsely; and hence it is using or taking God's name in vain. If the law would propose to swear Christians only, it would be more consistent within itself; but the name of God is called over the most wicked and unscrupulous characters to awe them into fear of telling a falsehood, a name which they publicly and openly avow by word and action day by day that they have no regard or reverence for.

It occurs to me that this form of oath might be dispensed with entirely, requiring simply a statement from the witness, with the same penalty following the telling of a falsehood as now follows the swearing of one. I am glad to know that the children of God may give testimony when called on to do so without swearing at all, as the law has made such provision as to allow them to simply affirm or make statement of such facts as they may be asked to give. I have frequently seen worthy tributes in the courtroom paid to parties who were so well known for truth and uprightness that when appearing as witnesses the attorneys on both sides of the case would say: "We do not care to have this man sworn. His simple statement will be taken as facts." What a beautiful recognition and indorsement this is of a true Christian life!

Have you ever stopped to think, my dear reader, that we are all writing a book, so to speak; that every day of our life is a page in that book; that it is being read by those around us, and is making impress upon their hearts and minds, as all reading matter does, either for good or for evil? Would, then, that all professing to be followers of Christ would strive to form such character as those parties in the courtroom just alluded to, the impress of which was made not only on the attorneys present, but on all those in the courtroom. Such character can only be formed by a close observance and determined adherence to the divine rule, endeavoring to be guided and governed by the plain teachings of God's word not only in the matter of taking an oath, but in all things, strictly by that which is "written," thereby enjoying the favor of God and the confidence of all who know them. Would not this greatly widen the gates of Zion, opening up fountains of truth and righteousness which would not only permeate communities, but would in their flowing soon reach to the uttermost parts of earth?

Tullahoma, Tenn.

M. N. MOORE.

A Christian man's life is laid in the loom of time to a pattern which he does not see, but God does; and his heart is a shuttle. On one side of the loom is sorrow, and on the other is joy; and the shuttle, struck alternately by each, flies back and forth, carrying the thread, which is white or black as the pattern needs; and in the end, when God shall lift up the finished garment, it will appear that the dark colors were as needful to beauty as the bright colors. —Beecher.

Home Reading.

A NUTTING PARTY.

"Halloo, Ned! I have been waiting for you this half hour. I have a jolly plan laid out, and I want you to join me."

Ned was in deep thought over his lessons and had not noticed his classmate, Herbert Waldo, seated on a rock by the roadside.

"Come and share my rustic seat, and I will tell you all about it."

"I think I prefer standing; it is nearly school time, and we might tarry too long," said Ned Dean.

Herbert went on to say: "Squire Lansdale is going to give Joe a nutting party; they have kept a tree on the hillside just for that purpose. I went around there to see it this morning; it is loaded with nuts. It would make you laugh to see the fine fellows with their black coats thrown back showing their white vests; a few raps would bring down lots of them. We shall have a light moon to-night, and I know of a hollow stump where we can hide them. Joe is one of those always-the-same sort of fellows that I don't fancy. Anyway, I like fun, and I mean to have it, too."

Ned had listened to the plan with a little surprise, and said: "Do you mean to say, Herbert, that you are going to steal Squire Lansdale's nuts?"

"Why, no," said Herbert. "I should not call that stealing; it is just having a good time."

"If I never get another nut without stealing it, then another will never go into my pocket," said Ned.

"Is that one of your Sabbath school lessons?" asked Herbert. "I wish Robert Raikes had never been born; there would have been much more fun in the world if he had never come into it. It was he that started Sabbath schools, wasn't it, Mr. Dominie?" Herbert continued. "If no one will go with me, I will go alone. You are not the first one I have asked."

Ned turned and walked rapidly away to school, carefully avoiding Herbert the remainder of the day, who alone, or with some comrade, succeeded in the nut-robbing scheme. Herbert went to the academy the next morning with his spirits a little clouded. He passed the boys without stopping to speak with any of them. From what he heard, they were greatly animated over some coming event, which he knew was the party. On his desk he found a cordial note from Joe's mother, inviting him to a nutting party the next afternoon. She wanted the whole class to be there. Herbert's stolen fun was not only clouded, but totally eclipsed, when he knew what a good time he had missed. He resolved to keep as far as possible from Joe Lansdale. Sitting down at his desk, he rested his head on his hands. A pleasant voice saluted him. Joe was standing by his chair in his usual polite and even way. He repeated the invitation and urged him to be present. Herbert raised his crimson face, not knowing what to say. Joe, seeing his embarrassment, thought something unpleasant had occurred. Without seeming to notice it, he walked on.

The next afternoon a bright and happy group left Squire Lansdale's piazza with baskets and poles to go over the hill and gather nuts. When they came to the tree, greatly to their disappointment, they found few there, and came back with empty baskets. Joe's mother, who was equal to any emergency, soon brought out a large basket that had been gathered and dried, which the boys greatly enjoyed cracking and eating. After that they had games, followed by "a jolly good supper," as one of the boys called it. Early in the evening they went to their homes, feeling that it had been a right merry party.

The next morning when the boys met on the school ground there was but one theme with them. When their teacher came, he stopped to hear the glowing accounts of the nutting party. He was always interested in anything that pleased his scholars. When they related the story of the stolen nuts, he looked troubled. One of the boys said: "We were all there but Herbert Waldo. There he comes now." But Herbert passed on with averted face. "How strangely he acts!" said another. The teacher's eyes followed him.

After class recitation, he spoke of the nutting party, and said that if any of the boys had been unable to attend, a note of regret was due to Mrs. Lansdale. He would like to have them written and left on the desk at the close of school on that day.

Only one note was left, and that was from Herbert. He gave a severe headache as an excuse for his absence. The teacher read the note, placed it in his pocket, and went to Mr. Lansdale's. "I have come," he said, "to talk about the nut robbing. I had feared from the first that Herbert Waldo had something to do with it, and now I feel sure of it. The boy has tried me until I can endure it no longer. I should have sent him home long ago if his father had not been one of my best friends. There is not a brighter intellect or a boy of more ability in the school."

"What do you know of the lad?" asked Mr. Lansdale.

"I will tell you," said Mr. Rowe. "Herbert's father and I have been friends since we were boys. This boy was early left to the care of an overindulgent father, who used to laughingly say: 'If my boy doesn't turn out well, it will be his own fault; for I let him do just as he has a mind to, and give him plenty of money.' Herbert was happy, and his father was satisfied, when one day Herbert came in, greatly excited, with traces of tears on his face. His father anxiously asked: 'What is it, my son?' 'Father,' he said, 'as I was going down the lane, I met Molly Donald's goat, with a broad new ribbon on his neck. I just took it off, and with it bound some nettles on his back. Well, you ought to have seen him jump and leap. He started straight for home, and I followed. I did not mean to be seen, but Mrs. Donald was standing in the door. She laughed and said: 'Cam on.' Then, coaxing the goat up to her, she said, 'Now, ye unpin the ribbon weel I hold him; and, father, I got my fingers so stung with nettles.' Then she smiled, and asked me if I did it, and why. I told her I did; it was just for a little fun. Then she said so pleasantly: 'Cam in wi' me.' When we were inside, she took me firmly by the arm, and, taking down a switch, she whipped it around my legs until they stung so I could hardly walk home. I kicked and screamed furiously. She only smiled, and said: 'Does it prick?' Then, giving me a few more, she said: 'Now ye can gae.'" Mr. Waldo was as indignant as his son, that he should be treated in that way by one of his own tenants. 'I will go down to Mrs. Donald's,' he said. He approached her door with some misgivings, knowing Molly Donald's straightforward way of dealing with things. She received him graciously. Mr. Waldo said: 'I have come to talk about your treatment of my son.' 'Aye,' she said, 'I'm glad ye cam; it's time it's taalkt aboot; he's getting to be one of the worst lads in the village; ye let him do just as he pleases. Dinna ye lo'e the lad?' Mr. Waldo did not say what he intended doing, but returned home resolved to govern his boy. He told him what he could and what he could not do, but things went on as usual, and Herbert rather enjoyed the 'new government,' as he called it. Reports came to Mr. Waldo of his son's doings, until he became thoroughly alarmed. In his dilemma he sent for a friend, the principal of a country academy; that was myself. He said: 'Take the boy and discipline him as you think best. I shall not interfere. He has conquered me.' I brought him home with me, thinking I could control him, if he could only be turned into the right channel. I cannot keep him any longer; he must be sent home," said the teacher.

"Mr. Rowe, do give him one more chance," said Joe, "and we will all give him a helping hand."

The next week, though the boys made an effort to be friendly with Herbert, he avoided them and seemed very unhappy. At the close of the week, Mr. Rowe asked the class to remain a short time; Herbert Waldo wanted to see them. He came before the class, looking frankly at them, and made a full confession of the nut robbing; told them how unhappy he had been, that he had disgraced the class, that he had resolved upon a new course, and he hoped they would yet be proud of him. Joe Lansdale was the first to step forward and offer him his hand; then came Ned Dean, followed by all the others. None doubted that if he willed to win honors he could, and he did.—Mrs. M. R. Holgate, in Presbyterlan Journal.

For all of us the road has to be walked every step, and the uttermost farthing paid. The gate will open wide to welcome us, but will not come to meet us. Neither is it any use to turn aside; it only makes the road longer and harder.—George MacDonald.

I count life just a staff to try the soul's strength on.—Robert Browning.

THE CARE OF BOOKS.

A good book is the product of talent, genius, thought, study, labor, pains, and money. It may embody the choicest elements of the best and greatest minds, it may enshrine the very thoughts of the living God.

Books should be treated with reverence and handled with care. There are books in my library (says a writer in the Christian) nearly four hundred years old, yet perfectly sound and legible. There are other books which are almost new, which show marks of barbaric usage. Here is a costly, well-bound book of rare value, which has been kept safe and sound for fifty years or more. A careless person gets hold of it, and in a month's time the back is torn off, the covers are loose, and the dilapidated volume is only fit for the bookbinder, and no one knows how it was done or who did it.

Some people read other people's books with pen or pencil in hand, and mark and underline and annotate till the book is an eyesore in a library. Some leave books lying open, liable to be soiled, soaked, or torn; others open them and lay them face down, where they may become soiled, and their backs are quite sure to be broken; some will go to a meeting and take up a Bible or a hymn book which is provided for them and bend the covers back till they touch each other, and then hold the book in one hand and think they are smart, while they are ruining other people's property. Some people forever put books out of place. They take them, use them, and leave them where they used them, instead of putting them where they belong. Some people borrow books and do not return them. Here is a rare book which, with some others, was lent to a student of ancient history. He kept it thirty years; he might have kept it still longer, but he died; and then this one of the lot came home, and was gladly received, though another had long before been bought to take its place, as no one could remember where it had gone.

A man who wishes to use books should know how to take care of books. He should open and close them carefully; he should not strain the bindings, soil the leaves, mark the pages, put pencils inside of them and shut the book; but he should treat books carefully, respectfully, reverently. Persons who do this will have books and will deserve to have them; persons who maltreat books can hardly expect to retain blessings which they undervalue.

A PRECIOUS VOLUME.

Perhaps the most beautiful volume among the five hundred thousand in the Congressional Library at Washington is a Bible which was transcribed by a monk in the sixteenth century. It could not be matched to-day in the best printing office in the world. The parchment is in perfect preservation. Every one of its one thousand pages is a study. The general lettering is in German text, each letter perfect, and every one of them in coal-black ink, without a scratch or blot from lid to lid. At the beginning of each chapter the first letter is very large—usually two or three inches long—and is brightly illuminated in blue or red ink. Within each of these initials there is drawn the figure of some saint, or some incident of which the following chapter tells is illustrated. There are two columns on a page, and nowhere is traceable the slightest irregularity of line, space, or formation of the letters; even under a magnifying glass they seem flawless. The precious volume is kept under a glass case, which is sometimes lifted to show that all the pages are as perfect as the two which lie open. A legend relates that a young man who had sinned deeply became a monk, and resolved to do penance for his misdeeds. He determined to copy the Bible, that he might learn every letter of the divine commands he had violated. Every day for years he patiently pursued his task. Each letter was wrought with reverence and love, and the penitent soul found its only companionship in the saintly faces which were portrayed on these pages.—F. H. S., in Forward.

The vanity of loving fine clothes and new fashions, and valuing ourselves by them, is one of the most childish pieces of folly that can be.—Sir Matthew Hale.

Drink is the mother of want and the nurse of crime.—Lord Brougham.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JAN. 11, 1900.

Editorial.

THE FAITH THAT SAVES.

Faith is the moving principle of the heart; it is the first step the heart takes toward union with God. A soul learns of God. God's position, qualities, character, work, laws that grow out of his own nature and by which he governs and directs all beings and all things, are learned, and the soul sees his power, majesty, justice, righteousness, goodness, mercy, and love to all beings, and it is attracted to God, admires, loves, trusts, and obeys this God, the Creator, Preserver, Ruler, and Benefactor of all beings and all things. There are different degrees and stages of faith. The soul first believes God is—that is, that such a Being as God, the Creator and Ruler of all things, exists. The letter to the Hebrews says: "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The first step is to believe that God is. This does not mean a belief in him that leads to trust and confidence. This latter grows out of our learning of his qualities and character. This latter is embraced in the latter clause: "He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." There is a difference in believing God is and in believing in him as a preserver and benefactor. We believe the devil exists, but we do not put our faith or confidence in him. There is nothing in his character to excite the confidence, admiration, love of our hearts; but the opposite qualities exist; so our faith that he exists leads on to distrust, dislike, hatred, and enmity. The faith that the being exists grows into trust, confidence, love, obedience; or, to distrust, dislike, hatred, and disobedience; according to the qualities of the being that we believe is.

To believe that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him involves understanding and believing in his position, his character, his work of love and mercy for a lost world. These two steps or degrees of faith constitute the foundation of the idea that repentance comes before faith. While these two degrees or steps in faith exist, they do not afford any true ground for the idea that repentance precedes faith. Faith is the leading act of the soul. The growth of faith is gradual. As it learns more and more concerning God it grows stronger; so there are steps of faith. Abraham's faith grew by steps or degrees; so did Jacob's; so did Peter's and John's; so does the faith of all disciples of Christ and servants of God; and repentance springs from faith. It takes its first start in the belief that God is, and, with every step of faith, the repentance grows. Repentance grows out of faith, faith is the root of repentance; yet repentance reacts upon faith and causes it to grow stronger. Faith depends upon two causes. The first and most important is, the heart desirous to know truth. A willingness to receive and know truth is essential to believing, were made more bitter, more furious, in and possessing truth, no amount of evidence will produce faith. We see examples of this in connection with Jesus and his work. Those who knew Lazarus had been raised from the dead, instead of believing were made more bitter, more furious, in opposition to Jesus, and in their fury sought not only to slay Jesus, but also to put Lazarus to death again to remove the evidence of the works of Jesus, which proved to those desirous of truth that God was with him. With a heart willing and anxious to know truth, then, evidence is essential to produce faith. The desire to know truth will demand clear and undoubted testimony. The love of truth demands full and satisfactory testimony. It will not be satisfied with doubtful and uncertain testimony. The love of truth casts out prejudice and partiality and begets the true impartial spirit, that looks upon all sides of a question, proves all things, and holds fast that which is good. The truth-loving spirit gives the judicial cast of mind, which gives just and impartial judgment. This ought to be cultivated by every one. It lifts him out of partisanship and frees him from a partisan spirit.

Then repentance is turning in purpose and heart from the selfish, partisan, and prejudiced temper and spirit to the fair and just and truth-loving spirit. This turning in heart opens the heart more and more to the reception of testimony, so that the same testimony more freely and fully received into a better heart causes faith to grow stronger. So repentance springs from faith, but reacts on and makes it stronger. Testimony exerts different degrees of influence on different states of heart. The same testimony presented to two persons will convince one and fail to convince the other. The reason is in the different states of heart. One loves truth, desires truth, is unprejudiced and unbiased in heart, and the evidence receives a ready reception and produces results at once. The other heart is partisan; it is not seeking truth, but party. The truth does not find a ready reception and produces fruit slowly, if at all. Sometimes the heart is so given over to error, so wedded to party, that it is determined to hold to party in spite of truth. Then truth infuriates that heart and makes it more bitter. When a heart loves party more than truth, then it will not receive truth. The greater the miracle Jesus wrought in the sight of such hearts, the more bitter they became and the more determined they were to destroy him. Such hearts are hopelessly given over to darkness and ruin. Some persons with honest hearts are yet bitterly prejudiced, and it takes time and testimony to remove these prejudices. But these may be removed. Paul was a striking illustration of this. He loved truth, but was blinded by prejudice that hindered his seeing the truth. The prejudice was removed, and he ardently embraced the truth. He was of a different type from those who love party or place above truth. This class of people can be reached by patience and fidelity in presenting evidence, and reasoning with them; but one who refuses to hear truth is wedded to party, is almost beyond hope. They are of that class who heard not Jesus because they were not of his flock. God knows the characters that are candid, frank, truth-loving, and ready to receive the truth, and he sometimes calls them his people before they hear the truth. God told Paul at Corinth, before they had heard the truth, that he had much people in that city; and Jesus said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold," before the door of gospel truth had been opened to persons not of the Jewish fold. A man must cultivate the truth-loving spirit, love truth for truth's sake, before he is in condition to receive and believe the truth. The knowledge and understanding of the truth helps the honest heart inclined to truth to love it more and more.

This much of predestination is taught in the Bible and exists in the dealings of God with his creatures. God foreordains and predestinates the heart that loves justice, truth, and righteousness to salvation, and that his predestination may be effective he sends the gospel to such hearts to save them. Whenever God predestines man to salvation he predestines he shall comply with the conditions of salvation. The only evidence any man can have that he is of the elect is that he faithfully and truly walks in the appointments of God. This ought, then, to be the matter of concern with him.

Sometimes persons who are mere partisans in spirit happen to be in many particulars on the side of truth. Such persons are raised in association with truth, and hold the truth because their party holds it. A partisan belief of truth, or holding of truth because our party holds it, can never lead a person to salvation. Such persons show the party spirit in many ways. They are unwilling to discuss questions if it injures the party, they will tolerate almost any error that makes the party popular; especially they will overlook errors and sins in a person that give popularity to the party. So often we hear it said: "That man has influence and weight, and he will commend our party to public favor." The truth a man holds from a party spirit does not count to him for truth with God. His belief of truth is from a selfish purpose; it is to honor and exalt party, and not God.

Sometimes a person's faith is molded by his personal likes and dislikes. I have known several persons to stand with me in opposition to all innovations in the service of God. They would, on personal grounds, fall out with me, and this would change their faith on these subjects. A person that is so actuated had as well be on one side as on the other, so far as his acceptance with God is concerned. God accepts faith or service on no such grounds. Many persons regulate their faith in the right or wrong of certain things by their popularity or unpopularity. "If you succeed, I am with you; if not, I am on the other side." This sin besets preachers; they like to be popular; they love positions of honor and the plaudits of the world. The loose and latitudinarian disciples are always on what is called the liberal side.

All these classes had better go with the popular and wrong side; their faith will not save them; their lack of faith would defile many who else might be true and faithful soldiers of the cross. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Jesus asks: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" (John 5: 44.) When a man starts out to please men, seek honor of men, and to rest his faith on anything save the reception of the word of God into a good and understanding heart, he is on the way to ruin. Only he who turns his back on all worldly considerations and seeks honor of God alone by doing his will, because he commanded it, can serve God or help men.

D. L.

PREACHING AND TEACHING.

Some papers and preachers have decided that the present methods of evangelization are not best, that there is not enough teaching. Peter first taught the people on the day of Pentecost and then exhorted them. It is scriptural and right to persuade men to flee the wrath to come, but it is not best to work on their emotions without first teaching them the facts, commands, and promises of the gospel. Many evangelists rely too much on the sensational, and not enough on the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation.

J. Z. Tyler proposes when he goes into a community to hold a meeting to preach only at night and to form classes to teach them the word of God during the day. This idea appears to me as a good one, and one which is worthy the serious consideration of every man who is concerned about the salvation of souls. Without knowledge of the wonderful truths of the Bible on which to build, it is impossible for any one to be a first-class Christian. When one has faith sufficient to lead him to obey the gospel, standing on the threshold of the kingdom of Christ, a newborn babe, he is to add to his faith knowledge. The church has been placed too much in the attitude of a beggar, sinners have been led to believe that the church needed them and could not get along well without them. The sinner has lost sight of the fact that he is the beggar, and needs salvation; he has a never-dying soul to be saved or lost. When the evangelist teaches and admonishes him to flee the wrath to come, his duty is done. The begging attitude in which the church has placed itself has done great injury to the cause of Christ. Jesus lovingly and tenderly invited sinners to come, but he never begged them until he made them feel their importance.

This teaching should not be confined to evangelists and protracted meeting work. The churches should teach more and depend less upon preaching. With the churches in the city, they care very little for any teaching in the sermon, but it must be entertaining. Not only is this so, but they must have preaching every Sunday morning and night. While the preacher may be greatly discouraged by having only a few to preach to on Sunday night, still he is expected to do so for the sake of keeping up appearances. Many people in the cities hear so much preaching that they really tire of it and do not care to hear it. This is clear from the fact that so many more attend the worship in the morning than attend to hear the preaching at night. When the preacher no longer has the ability to entertain and attract a crowd, he must start out on the tramp in search of another job. Hence it is not long until the preacher finds a change desirable, because his audiences are very small and the few who do attend are not very appreciative. Still the prevailing order here in Nashville and all the cities I have visited is to have preaching every Sunday and Sunday night. The church does not stop to seriously reflect whether any good is being done by the sermonizing twice each week, but under the claim that something must be done to hold the members together the unauthorized practice is continued. It is true most of the churches in this city do not have the same paid "pastor" every Lord's day, but they nearly all have preaching every Lord's day and night following. The difference seems to be about this: One pays the same preacher to do all the preaching, while the others get preaching almost all the time from different preachers without paying very much for it. Hence we might conclude that some object, not to the preaching on every Lord's day, but to paying much for it. It does not seem proper to object to preaching in a place every Lord's day—or every day, for that matter—as long as the preacher can do as much good there as anywhere else. Paul continued in Ephesus over two years because the Lord had a great work for him to do there.

The result of his preaching there was the conversion of many souls and "that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." But we do not find in all the oracles of God that Paul ever preached periodically at any place for the purpose of holding the members together. It is an undeniable truth that the unscriptural pastor system is a failure, even as a means of holding the members together. How few they hold together on Sunday night! On Sunday morning the audience is much larger. Why? Because the disciples realize that it is their privilege, as well as duty, to come together on the first day of the week to break bread. Paul admonishes: "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10: 23-25.) The disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread. (Acts 20: 7.) But there are other items in the worship. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." (Col. 3: 16.) "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine [teaching] and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." (Acts 2: 42.)

As teaching is a part of the worship, if we would impress on the churches the necessity of coming together to study and teach the word, the results would be much more satisfactory than they are under the unscriptural pastor system. There is often so little teaching in such preaching that it is hardly proper to dignify it by calling it teaching. Furthermore, God never intended one man to do all the teaching in the church. As every joint, every fiber, and every organ in the physical body has its functions to perform, so every member in the spiritual body has its work. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Eph. 4: 11-13.) Let the members study the Scriptures and seek to edify one another.

An exchange of thoughts and comparison of views will be found very interesting and very instructive. While preaching is not to be neglected, it is certain that much time could be spent very profitably in an investigation of the word of God. Every member of the church is under obligation to teach others to the extent of his ability. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

A Travesty on Justice.

The case of the State of Texas against Carlisle for the murder of Prof. William Lipscomb was called last week in the Criminal Court of this county and went to trial. The murder occurred last June, about six months ago, but was put off from time to time until the public had in some measure recovered from the shock of the crime. This is one method of aiding murderers to get a light penalty for their crimes. Instead of bringing them to speedy justice, as is done in the case of negro rapists, their cases are dragged along for months until interest upon the part of the people had subsided, and then the trial begins. This is true in the case of Carlisle. His crime was the most shocking and revolting in the annals of criminal jurisprudence in Dallas County. He became enraged at Mr. Lipscomb because the School Board refused to reelect him janitor of the High School. He deliberately, and with malice aforethought, sought an opportunity to take the life of Lipscomb. He waited until the teacher was seated in the church by the side of his wife and children, attending a revival service. Then the assassin, with murder deep-dyed in his heart, took a position at a window until he could locate his victim, and as soon as the minister invited people to come forward for confession, this bloody man slipped in at a side door, went forward as though he intended to speak to the minister, but just as soon as he reached the place where the unsuspecting teacher was sitting, he drew a pistol and fired its deadly contents into the body of one of the best and purest men who ever lived in this city. As soon as the fatal work was accomplished, the man whose hands were dripping in blood exclaimed: "He took my bread and meat away from me!"

This is the crime, as related by eyewitnesses, committed by the man whose case the Criminal Court tried last week. The evidence was overwhelming; but the "insanity dodge" was pleaded by the defense. This is the miserable subterfuge now resorted to by red-handed murderers when they realize that there is no hope for their guilty necks. They go ahead and plan their crimes with reference to this method of escape. The fact is, it has now come to pass that our Criminal Court is about reduced to a commission for determining the sanity of murderers, and our jail is the detention station for them until they can either get a light sentence or be sent to the insane asylum. But what was the outcome of the Carlisle case? Notwithstanding the fact that he pleaded insanity, the jury brought in a verdict of murder in the second degree, and assessed his punishment at ten years in the penitentiary. Now, if he was insane, the verdict is an outrage upon Carlisle; but if he was sane, the verdict is an unmitigated outrage upon justice and law. No sensible man who heard the testimony, and who has known the defendant since his residence in the city, believes that he was in the slightest degree insane at the time he committed that bloody deed.

Just here we wish to say that nobody wanted that poor old criminal hung simply to see him die, but all right-thinking people wanted to see justice done in order that other wicked men might be deterred from committing like crimes upon the lives of innocent citizens. This verdict will encourage any man of murderous propensities to select his victim and take his life under circumstances that will enable him to plead insanity; and, furthermore, verdicts like this are responsible for the existence of mob law. People grow weary of seeing criminals practically turned loose by the courts, and they take justice in their own hands. If the good people who witnessed the bloody deed of this man had anticipated a verdict like this, the probability is that the Criminal Court of this county would have been saved this miserable travesty on justice. We deplore mob law as a great misfortune and we condemn it as an outrage upon order; but as long as our courts send out verdicts like this one we may prepare ourselves for the worst. People cannot, and will not, stand such performances under the name of law and justice. This sort of thing brings the courts of the country into disrepute and contempt. Is there any remedy? Not unless we can get our miserable jury system revised. As it now stands, no decision in the jury room can be reached until the consent of all twelve of the jurymen can be obtained. This often places justice in the hands of one or two men who have not capacity sufficient to appreciate the moral gravity of an oath, and whose sympathy with criminals is so strong that they cannot be induced by any sort of evidence to bring in a verdict against the defendant until they have secured for him the minimum penalty; and lawyers who defend criminals are only too glad to secure the service of such men on our juries. If, therefore, our jury system is revised so as to require a two-thirds vote of the jury to bring in a verdict, it would largely do away with the sham work of our criminal courts. As our system now stands, murderers will go on with their bloody work, and our courts will continue to grind out for them just such wretched verdicts as the one under criticism. The thing is becoming a menace to life and safety, and if something is not done to check it, the patience of the people will cease to be a virtue. The press of the country needs to speak out upon these bloody outrages and demand a reformation. Murder in the second degree for the foul crime which took the breath out of this entire community last June! In the name of justice, in the name of human life, in the name of the broken-hearted widow and three orphan children, we denounce this verdict as an unmitigated disgrace to the civilization of this century. If allowed to go unrebuked, it will foster crime, encourage mob law in its worst form, and force intelligent people to look upon the processes of Criminal Courts with disdain and contempt. We have had enough of these legal farces, and it is time to call a halt. If we can do no better than this, then let every citizen, who values his life, prepare to look after his own safety.—Dallas (Texas) Christian Advocate, December 14, 1899.

I have four good reasons for being an abstainer from intoxicating drinks: my head is clearer, my health is better, my heart is lighter, and my purse is heavier.—Dr. Guthrie.

Great souls are always loyal, submissive, reverent to what is over them.—Carlyle.

CONTINUED WATCHFULNESS.

(Continued from page 20.)

what the plan of salvation would be. But the advocates of a definite time for the coming of the end of the world, while they admit they may not know the very day or hour of that coming, do claim that they can know about the time by the signs of that coming. The trouble about that is that one day with the Lord is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day—that is, a period that men would count a thousand years would be with the Lord as one day. So if we see the signs that are to precede the end of time, it may be a thousand years short of the actual time; for if the end comes within a thousand years after the signs begin to appear, the word of the Lord will be fulfilled. So from every point of view it is impossible for finite minds to tell when the end of time will come; hence time spent in that effort is utterly vain. If instead of trying to do a thing so utterly useless all men would spend time in teaching, enforcing, and doing the things the plain word of the Lord requires, they would do much greater good for themselves and for the world than trying to tell when the world will end, which could do no one any good, even if everybody knew it. Hence the appropriateness of the warning: "Watch: . . . for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

If all could know at just what time a thief would come, they could so watch at that particular time as to prevent him from doing mischief; but that is the very thing they cannot know. If a man is always on the watch, always fortified against thieves, then he is always ready to frighten them away. So it is in regard to the end of the world. If Christians are always watching and always ready, it will not matter that it shall come as a thief in the night, they will be ready for it; and the Lord has provided us with all the information necessary for us to be thus ready, and if we are not thus ready, it will be wholly our fault, and not the Lord's. There is no need that the last day of time should come as a thief in the night to any child of God, since the Lord has given us such plain instructions how to live, and then so many warnings of the danger of neglecting these things; and the time never comes that the Christian is done watching until his life comes to an end.

Every passage in the New Testament that speaks on this subject requires the child of God to watch to the end of this earthly life, this probationary state; and if we do this, then we will be just as safe as if we had known beforehand just when the end would be; and, besides, those that only do these things because they think the end is at the door have but one motive in view, and that is simply to escape eternal ruin. The question then arises: Can men be saved that way? Paul teaches that those who do not love the Lord Jesus Christ will be accursed when he comes, and those that will not serve the Lord till they think they are at the very door of ruin cannot prove that they really love the Lord; for had they loved him, they would have obeyed him sooner. Jesus says: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Those, therefore, that put off the service of the Lord till near the end of life had never loved Jesus before then, or they would have obeyed him. When they do not obey till they think life is at an end, they cannot possibly prove that they love God, and their salvation is doubtful, to say the best that can be said.

There is, therefore, no possible safety to man but in earnest and faithful service to God from the time we understand the way of salvation to the end of life; and the time of life is short, at most, and we have no time to lose. All should be up and doing "while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." Let all, therefore, watch, and stand at all times at the post of duty. E. G. S.

At a prayer meeting "down East" a man noted for his failure to meet business obligations arose to speak. The subject was: "What shall I do to be saved?" He commenced slowly to quote the words: "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, looked around, and repeated the words, when a voice from the assembly, in clear and distinct tones, replied: "Go and pay John Williams for that yoke of oxen." A great many people, before they can be saved or guide others to the Savior, will have to "go and pay John Williams" the money they honestly owe him.—Jennie M. Bingham.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

TURNER.

Miss Emma B. Turner was born on August 28, 1851, and died on November 30, 1899. At the tender age of fourteen years she became a member of the Methodist Church, and through life remained true to the teaching of that institution. She was held in very high esteem by all who knew her. The writer assisted W. H. Cotton, the minister, in the conduct of the funeral services.
W. L. LOGAN.

ANDERSON.

My dear daughter, Mrs. Carrie E. Anderson, after an illness of thirteen days, died on the morning of October 30, 1899. She leaves a husband and five little children. She was baptized by Brother C. B. Colvin, in the spring of 1889, and was a consistent Christian. She was a subscriber to the Gospel Advocate, which she dearly loved to read. May the bereaved husband bring up the dear little ones in the way they should go, and may we all meet her in that land where parting is no more. (Mrs.) S. E. HALL.
Sherry, Mo.

LOVETT.

Henrietta Josephine Lovett was born on August 7, 1882; died on December 13, 1899; aged a little more than seventeen years. Her maiden name was Hardison. She was married some two years ago, when only fifteen years of age. Her grandparents and mother, with whom she and her husband lived, were suddenly and unexpectedly called upon to give her up. She left a little babe, only a few hours old. How sad! Some two years ago she was baptized into Christ and has been faithful in the discharge of her duty as she knew it. May the aged ones, her mother, and companion be comforted, and may God bless the little babe.
W. ANDERSON.
Jameson, Tenn.

CALDWELL.

Sarah Amanda Caldwell was born on November 15, 1820; was married to John S. Caldwell on November 5, 1839; departed this life on December 10, 1899; aged seventy-nine years and twenty-five days. Such is the reading of a note handed me upon the occasion of the burial of Sister Caldwell. The most interesting and consoling thought in said note is this: "She had been a member of the church of Christ for a number of years." Sister Caldwell reared several children and was perfectly devoted to them, no sacrifice being too great for their good. Her companion, Brother John S. Caldwell, preceded her several years, leaving her to toil on upon the shores of time a while longer. I do not think I ever knew a mother more devoted to her children, a companion more devoted to her husband. She has lived her life, finished her course, and passed to the bourn from whence travelers do not return. May the bereaved ones so live that they can enjoy the promises made to the faithful and all finally be gathered home.
W. ANDERSON.
Jameson, Tenn.

RAINS.

William Lewis, son of Dr. James T. and Mrs. Ida Rains, was born on May 9, 1889, and died on October 16, 1899, at his parents' home in Malesus, Tenn. He died of blood poisoning. Willie was a very bright and sprightly child, being possessed of remarkable intelligence. As death approached him he gave to the different members of the family his little belongings—to one, his knife; to his mother, his pocketbook; etc. He directed his father to buy his coffin with his money, and requested to be buried by the side of his grandfather. He said he was not afraid to die. After this talk, he said: "I am now at the foot of the ladder and ready to go up." Thus the spirit of little Willie Rains took its will aid the cook as no other agent will to make

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

The dainty cake,
The white and flaky tea biscuit,
The sweet and tender hot griddle cake,
The light and delicate crust,
The finely flavored waffle and muffin,
The crisp and delicious doughnut,
The white, sweet, nutritious bread and roll,—
Delightful to the taste and always wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder is made from PURE GRAPE CREAM OF TARTAR and is absolutely free from lime, alum and ammonia.

There are many imitation baking powders, made from alum, mostly sold cheap. Avoid them, as they make the food unwholesome.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

flight from earth. Who can doubt he is in the paradise of God? The family, relatives, and many friends mourn his death; but they mourn not without hope, for they have the promise of the Savior: "Suffer the little children to come unto me: . . . for of such is the kingdom of God." I pray God's choicest blessings upon the bereaved parents, and that when their summons comes they shall be prepared to meet him there.

E. C. L. DENTON.

MACKEY.

It now becomes my sad duty to announce the death of Sister Nora Mackey. Sister Nora was seventeen years and two months old when the death angel came on Saturday, November 18, 1899. Death is sad under all circumstances, even when we have lived out our threescore years and ten; but O how much sadder is it when one is called away so young, and especially who had such bright prospects before her and was so useful in her sphere! She was so gentle in her ways and so kind in disposition that she won the highest esteem of all who knew her. Nora was but a babe in Christ, and O how it rejoices my soul to know that I had the pleasure of baptizing her in the sublime name of the Trinity only a few weeks ago! While her Christian life was short, yet she left an example worthy of the imitation of all the young ladies of her community. She was faithful in attendance at church and always ready to speak and work for Christ. Nora was the only daughter of Brother and Sister Pink Mackey, who also are faithful members of the body of Christ. I would say, by way of consolation to the bereaved father and mother and brothers: Weep not as for one of whom we have no hope, for blessed are they who die in the Lord. While you miss her in your home and we all miss her in the auditorium of Adairville, we have the blessed assurance that our loss will be her eternal gain.
J. H. MEAD.

ALEXANDER.

By the request of Sister Nannie Alexander, the wife of the deceased, I, with sadness of heart, write the obituary of one whom I loved in the Lord. After eighteen months of patient suffering, Brother J. P. Alexander quietly passed away to suffer no more. I am glad to know and say that Brother Alexander lived a consistent Christian life from the beginning of that life with Him to the end of his journey on earth. The divine Being was the object of his faith, and the Bible alone was the man of his counsel. He studied the Bible, contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, found no place for innovations in the church of God, and died as he lived. Brother Alexander was born on March 23, 1846, near Charlotte, N. C., and at nine months of age his parents moved to Madison County, Tennessee. He there lived until 1895; then moved to McComb, Miss., where he died on September 10, 1899. He made confession under the preaching of Brother H. H. Hamilton, at Henderson, Tenn., and was immersed by myself on October 7, 1886. Just before his death he exclaimed: "If I cannot get well, all will be right!" His last prayer heard was: "Father, I have done all I could. Why not now, why not now?" Weep not, bereaved wife, daughter, and friends as those who have no hope.
Commerce, Texas. H. C. BOOTH.

PACKWOOD.

The grim Destroyer has invaded our happy circle and borne away our dear mother. O how relentless is the hand of fate to snatch from our little ones their greatest treasure! Their happiest hours were when their grandma was with them. Her dear old hands were always ready and willing to do something to make them happy. Not only her grandchildren loved her, but everybody's children loved her. She was a great lover of children. It was her greatest desire to make some one happy. She was a devout Christian, hopeful of the reward of Christian living. Just a few hours before her death she remarked to her son that nothing hurt her and that she was happy. This dear one of whom I speak was Elizabeth Packwood. She was born on August 31, 1832, and departed this life on December 2, 1899. She was sixty-seven years, four months, and two days old. For fifteen years she battled this life without a companion to help her bear the toils and burdens of this life. Her husband, John Packwood, departed this life in 1884. They were blessed with six children—four boys and two girls. One girl and one boy have passed over on the other side also; three boys and one girl survive them—four in the grave and four on earth. But what a happy thought it is to know that the four in the grave were prepared to meet their God! For seventeen years Grandma suffered from a cough, which she bore so patiently until the end. She was confined to bed but one week. She passed quietly and peacefully away. She obeyed the gospel of Christ in her girlhood days and lived faithful until death.

(Mrs.) JOSIE PACKWOOD.
Elam, Texas.

HARDISON.

At 1:30 o'clock P.M. of Saturday, December 16, 1899, Seth Sparkman, the seven-year-old son of Dr. and Sister Thomas J. Hardison, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a shotgun, the load penetrating the right shoulder, producing instant death. The shock to the family and the community was dreadful in the extreme. Only those who have passed through the same ordeal can know just what it is. Little Seth was a bright, promising boy, upon whom a devoted mother, father, brothers, and sisters looked with pride and bright anticipations. He was indeed a noble, manly boy. But death is no respecter of persons, choosing, it seems, a shining mark. Had he lived until May 28, 1900, he would have been eight years old. While his stay was short, he lived long enough to leave an influence that will result, no doubt, in great good. While it is so sad, so shocking, still we are sure good will result to us all if we take the lesson. Little Seth is safe; freed from care, sorrow, pain, tears—indeed, all the trials to which the flesh is heir. Who would call the dear one back? We are glad to know that the bereaved ones look at this distress as Christians should, sorrowing deeply, but not as those who have no hope. They expect to meet the loved ones again. Were it not for this hope, such visitations would be unbearable. We are impressed again that "the sweetest and dearest—alas!—may not stay." The thought of a soul's being hurled into the Beyond in the twinkling of an eye is shuddering to the flesh, but how glorious, when prepared for the change! Since the sting of death is sin, we are sure death had no sting for Seth, and the grave can claim no victory. I trust the bereavement may have an influence for good upon sisters and brothers in bringing them nearer to the cross. May it impress us all with the importance of living close to God. On Sunday evening, December 17, Brother E. G. Sewell made some timely and comforting remarks to a vast audience of sympathizing brethren and friends, and all that was mortal of Seth Sparkman Hardison was consigned to the earth, to await the summons from on high.
Jameson, Tenn. W. ANDERSON.

HALL.

Our dear boy, Arthur Hall, died on August 12, 1899. We feel unusually sad, as this is the birthday of the dear one. We call attention to the peculiar occurrences. He was born on December 12, 1884; united with the Christian Church on August 12, 1896; left home on July 12, 1899; died on August 12, 1899. A sadder, more heart-rending trouble, it seems to us, never happened to parents than the above. This poor boy was persuaded off from home. He left on the above date, without a letter or daybook with his name written in it. We did not know for certain where he was until the Nashville American made mention of his death, stating that a boy, afterwards identified as Arthur Hall, was found dead on his knees in his room at the Virginia House, Nashville,

"Example is Better Than Precept."

It is not what we say, but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story. Thousands of testimonials are examples of what Hood's has done for others, and what it will do for you.

Scrofula— "Running scrofula sores made me shunned by neighbors. Medical treatment failed. A relative urged me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Did so and in few months the sores completely healed." Mrs. J. M. HARCH, Etna, N. H.

Inflammatory Rheumatism—"Two attacks of the grip left me with inflammatory rheumatism. Am 89 years old, but Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me and I can climb stairs and walk anywhere." J. LOVELAND, 373 Fargo Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Tenn., August 12. The paper gave a correct description of the child and also stated that he was buried in the potter's field. The writer went after the remains of his poor, unfortunate boy. His funeral services were conducted by Brother Holland and Brother A. G. Freed. Arthur was our oldest boy. He was a kind-hearted, industrious, noble boy. His leaving home was to the surprise of the whole community. O what a pleasure it would have been to us could we have known where he was during his last hours of sickness! How quickly we would have gone to him and ministered to his wants! He stopped with Mrs. Binkley, ticket agent at Vaughn, nine miles from Nashville. He was sick then. She treated him very kindly and insisted on him staying there until he was better; but he had fallen in company with a couple of roving painters, and they advised him to go on and get into the hospital. We trust that the publication of this sad incident may be a warning to many a boy, and demonstrate to him the fact that there is no woman so dear as mother, no man so true as father, no place so good as home. We ask the brethren and sisters everywhere to pray for us, that we may be faithful and be able to bear this continued trouble with Christian fortitude, realizing the fact that to all of the true followers of Jesus there is a better and brighter day coming.

FATHER AND MOTHER.

Gadsden, Tenn.

TROGDEN.

Death has no terrors to the faithful followers of Jesus. It came as a welcome messenger to Mother Trogden, who departed this life at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, George H. Morgan and wife, on April 5, 1899; aged eighty years and twenty-four days; having been born in White (now Van Buren) County, Tenn., March 11, 1819. Her maiden name was Parker, being a sister of the late Hon. Sam. Parker, who was a man of learning and prominence, having represented his district in the State Senate. Her venerable husband, Nathan F. Trogden, preceded her to the grave on July 27, 1896, at the age of eighty-six years. With her companion she embraced the Christian religion in early life, becoming members of the Baptist Church. A short time thereafter, under the teaching of Elder J. J. Trot, one of the pioneers of what was then called "the current reformation," she, with her husband, took the Bible as the all-sufficient creed, and from that time forward to the date of her death acknowledged and wore no other religious name but that of Christian. She was exceedingly well informed on the Bible and Bible subjects, up to her last sickness being a close student of the Scriptures of divine truth. She delighted in reading and studying the book of Revelation, endeavoring to fathom its mysteries and rejoicing in its promises. Without the least sign of fear she calmly awaited her approaching dissolution. When she came to the home of her daughter on December 21, 1898, having for years had a presentiment that when she reached the age of eighty years she would soon be called, she said: "Mary, I have come to you to die." Under the tender care and companionship of her daughters, Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. Donelson, she improved in health for a time, but finally succumbed to the feebleness of old age. Endeavoring to sing that comforting song, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," which was carried through by a Christian sister at her bedside, her pure spirit took its departure, her body going to sleep as a little child. Mother Trogden left five children—Wiley H. Trogden, of Santa Clara, Cal.; A. P. Trogden, of Union City, Tenn.; A. L. Trogden, of Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. Mary E. Morgan and Mrs. Margaret M. Donelson, of Cookeville, Tenn. G. H. M.

Cookeville, Tenn.

REYNOLDS.

James W. Reynolds was born in Franklin County, Tenn., December 12, 1873, and died on October 21, 1899. His death was caused by a fall from a building, after which he lived only a few hours. Though so sudden and unexpected, the summons did not find him unprepared, for in his boyhood he had entered the service of our Lord, and ever afterwards was a most devoted disciple of the great Teacher. He seemed to be one of the few of whom it might be truly said: "In whom is no guile." His nature appeared to be all gentleness and love and incapable of an ignoble action, while his calm and trustful face reflected a soul full of faith and hope. A dutiful and loving son; the joy of his parents, of brothers, and of friends; one of the kindest men, and a most exemplary Christian, he is sadly missed, though we are sure that our loss is his eternal gain. We are confident that the Savior whom he had so faithfully served was with him and sustained him in his last hours; for, without showing the least fear or dread of the change, he could calmly say: "The Lord is going to take me home. Don't grieve." The last audible words were: "Don't grieve." Could we but faintly conceive of the blissful home prepared for such as Billy, our sorrow would be lightened; but as it is, there is much to give us comfort; for "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The life he lived deserves more than an ordinary notice, so I quote from a letter to his parents, written by one of his school friends now in the West: "I have just received the sad intelligence of the sudden death of your boy and hasten to express to you my sympathy in this your time of sorrow. You have lost a loving son, I have lost a true friend, Franklin County has lost a model young gentleman. I knew him well. He was a good student, and stood as high in his class as any boy in school; he loved to work at difficult problems, and have the satisfaction of duty well done; he would never join with other boys in doing wrong; he had true courage, and never feared to do what he thought was right; he was so considerate of the feelings of others that he was admired by his teachers, and even boys who pursued a different course loved and respected him. Your dear boy's life work was short, but I can recall no one who was better prepared to go than was he." Young as was our friend and brother, we have proofs that his influence for good had been very great, and, though removed to a heavenly home, we believe the light of his example will lead others in the paths of peace. E. L. G.

Overexertion of Brain or Body.

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It is a wholesome tonic for body, brain, and nerves. Wonderfully quick in its action.

Those who aspire after a nobler life are sure to rise.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

For the First Time in the History of Medicine, a Cure for Bright's Disease Has Been Discovered.

Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy,

Has Proven by Thousands of Triumphant Tests Its Wonderful Success in Diseases of the Kidneys, Bladder, Blood, and Bright's Disease.

Gospel Advocate Readers May Have a Sample Bottle Free.

Just as sure as the break of dawn means another day, so does pain in the back mean kidney disease.

When your kidneys become weak and are unable to throw off the waste in the blood, they clog up with poisonous matter, break down, cell by cell, and the particles pass away in the urine. Then the albumen—which makes rich, red blood—leaks out, your system breaks down, and you have what is known to all mankind as Bright's Disease.

Bright's Disease is taking away more lives to-day than any other known ailment, excepting possibly consumption; and yet with small precautions and half the care you give to the appearance of your shoes, you may prevent such a calamity as Bright's Disease befalling you.

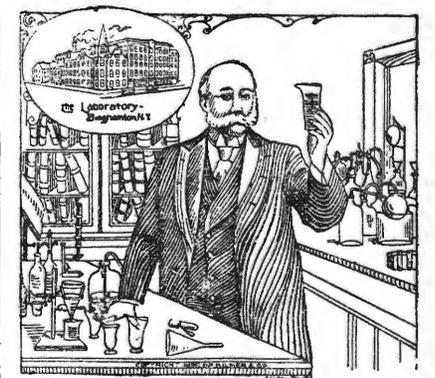

Are you fortified with the necessary knowledge about Bright's Disease? Do you know how to find out if there is anything the matter with your kidneys? Here is a simple test:

In the morning, on arising, take of your urine about two ounces and put it in a glass bottle; let it stand about twenty-four hours, and if, on examination, you find any settling or sediment, if it is cloudy, or if small particles float in it, then you may be assured that nature has warned you, and that your kidneys need attention.

The mild and immediate effect of the famous new discovery—Swamp-Root—is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of the eminent kidney specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and is not recommended for all diseases; but if you have kidney, bladder, or uric acid troubles, or diseases depending upon these disorders, you will find Swamp-Root just the remedy you need.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles.

The Eminent Kidney Specialist, Discoverer of Swamp-Root, in His Laboratory.

Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and in order that all afflicted may know its benefits, all readers of the Gospel Advocate who will send their names and addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., will be sent absolutely free, by mail, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root; also a book of value treating of all kinds of kidney diseases and containing some of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured.

Swamp-Root is for sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes and two prices—50 cents and $1.

Remember the name, "Swamp-Root," and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

The W. V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,

Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.

CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK. 311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY Established 1837. THE E. W. VARDUZEN CO., Cincinnati, O., U.S.A. Bells made of Pure Copper and Tin only. FOR CHURCHES, COURT HOUSES, SCHOOLS, etc. ALSO CHIMES AND PEALS. Makers of the Largest Bell in America.

Tonight

Just before retiring, if your liver is sluggish, out of tune and you feel dull, bilious, constipated, take a dose of

Hood's Pills

And you'll be all right in the morning.

General News.

The number of women studying medicine in London has increased nearly fifty per cent in three years.

New York City keeps a flock of sheep in Central Park as ornaments, curiosities, and for the good of the turf.

Surgeon General Sternberg has been chosen to represent the War Department at the International Congress of Hygiene, which meets in Paris this summer.

In many places in New York during the recent blizzard snow fell to the depth of six feet on a level. In the vicinity of Macon, Ga., the snowfall was six inches.

Tests of oil as fuel, made by the British navy, have not proved satisfactory. Patent fuel, made of coal dust and tar, was found to yield nearly as good results as coal.

Railroads belonging to the Eastern Trunk Line pool have put in active operation the new freight tariffs, involving an advance of twenty to twenty-five per cent in rates.

On account of the ill health of Judge Mumford, of the Clarksville (Tenn.) circuit, Governor McMillin has appointed Gen. W. M. Brandon to preside at the regular term of the court.

The Secretary of the Interior has sent to Congress an estimate of $641,105 for the expenses, surveys, etc., of the commission to the five civilized tribes, known as the Dawes Commission.

The Congregationalist tells that Mr. B. D. Spillman, at the age of ninety-five years, has resumed legal practice at the New York bar. He is a descendant of John Alden, and graduated at Yale in 1824.

The United States now has 65,000 troops in the Philippine Islands. They are being used to garrison the principal towns of the islands. The insurgents seem now to operate only in guerrilla bands.

Farmers' institutes have been arranged in Tennessee for the following dates: Pulaski, January 12 and 13; Humboldt, January 16 and 17; Lawrenceburg, January 22; and Lewisburg, January 27.

Complications have arisen between Great Britain and Germany over the right of searching the vessels. Germany has protested against the search, yet the British continue to search the German vessels going to and from South Africa.

The war in South Africa progresses slowly. Some slight battles have been fought, in which the British gained some advantages. In the meantime, both parties are using all efforts to concentrate forces and make ready for a final struggle.

For the first time in years the Tennessee River has been frozen over at points near and above Kingston, Tenn. Up-river boats are frozen in and several fleets of logs have been broken up by the floating ice, which has been running heavy at Chattanooga.

A letter in going from Key West to the Klondike travels a total distance of seven thousand miles, yet it is carried the entire distance by "Uncle Sam" for 2 cents. It goes by railroad, steamboat, stage, horseback, and dog sled, and is on the road for nearly forty days without rest.

The Secretary of War has sent to Congress a report from Major Knox, inspector general of the army, on the condition of the National Soldiers' Homes. It shows the homes in excellent condition. It is recommended that a law be framed to admit veterans of the Spanish and Philippine Wars to the homes.

The cattle industry of the Southwest has established a new record and has made a remarkable showing during the past year. Cattle receipts at Kansas City for the year 1899, including cows, aggregated 2,017,000 head, or close to 200,000 head above that of 1898. The average value of cattle received at the Kansas City yards during the year was $30 per head, or a total of $63,510,000.

Col. E. F. Fleming, who was appointed under Ex-president Cleveland as clock master of the Treasury Department, still holds that position. He has over five hundred clocks in his care, and is familiarly known in department circles as "Father Time." He starts on his rounds of winding his family of eight-day clocks on Monday and gets around to the last one on Saturday night.

Wisconsin produced last year 64,000,000 pounds of cheese, worth $5,000,000, and 100,000,000 pounds of butter, worth $20,000,000. It produced also 10,000,000 bushels of wheat, 32,000,000 bushels of corn, 75,000,000 bushels of oats, 16,000,000 bushels of barley, 3,000,000 tons of hay, and 13,000,000 bushels of potatoes. It has within its borders 1,000 creameries and 1,600 cheese factories.

Leprosy is very prevalent in Colombia, South America. It is said that lepers even keep hotels. It is estimated that about 50,000 out of 4,000,000 people of that country are lepers, and that the disease is increasing at the rate of fifteen per cent a year. Those who are so anxious for increased trade with South America should bear in mind this fact. It is a country over which we can have no control, and where proper precautions are not taken.

An important national industry of France, Germany, and Belgium is the cultivation of fruit trees along the highways. The annual revenue derived from the national roads of Saxony planted with fruit trees rose from $9,000 in 1880 to $42,000. In Belgium, according to the statistics of 1894, over 4,630 kilometers of roads were planted with 741,571 fruit trees, which furnished the almost incredible sum of $2,000,000; in France, the production of fruit trees is estimated at $60,000,000.

Thirty thousand fruit trees, comprising the entire orchards of D. C. & G. M. Bacon, in Mitchell County, Ga., will be burned by order of State Entomologist Scott, owing to the ravages of the San José scale. In the immediate neighborhood of Dewitt, Ga., in the counties of Irwin, Berrien, Worth, and Mitchell, are more than three hundred thousand fruit-bearing peach trees, and in justice to the owners of neighboring orchards, as well as to perform a service for the State, the trees will be destroyed. The work of destroying the orchards will require several weeks' time.

A stiff advance in hardware is announced. The advance on building ma-

Progressive.

During the half century of their existence SINGER SEWING MACHINES have been steadily improved in manufacture, kept constantly up to date and abreast with Time, always attaining higher excellence in design, construction and artistic finish.

Compare these machines with any other; investigate the experience of their users. You will find them the best in every point. The best is always cheapest in the end.

Sold on instalments. You can try one Free. Old machines taken in exchange.

MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.,
Offices in Every City in the World.

LACE CURTAINS FREE

These beautiful Royal Lace Parlor Curtains are of the newest Savoy design, three yards long, 36 inches wide, and will last a life time. You can get two pairs of these choice curtains, (same design as in cut), and four beautiful Sash Curtains (one yard square each) FREE by selling our GREAT COLD REMEDY and HEADACHE CURE. Cures Cold in One Day! Relieves Headache at Once! We will give the curtains absolutely free to anyone taking advantage of the great offer we send to every person selling six boxes of our Tablets. If you agree to sell only six boxes at 25 cents a box, write to-day and we will send the Tablets by mail postpaid. When sold, send us the money and we will send four Sash Curtains, unhemmed, so they may be made to fit any window, together with our offer of two complete pairs of Royal Lace Parlor Curtains, enough to furnish a room, same day money is received. This is a grand opportunity for ladies to beautify their homes with fine Lace Curtains of exquisite design. All who have earned them are delighted. Address: NATIONAL MEDICINE CO., 1010 Chapel St., New Haven, Conn. Box 137

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

material is eleven per cent, including locks, hinges, and, in fact, all hardware used in the make-up of a building. This advance follows an increase which went into effect only a few weeks ago. Nails and staples advance twenty-five cents per keg, while the same increase is announced on plain and barbed wire; an advance of fifteen per cent is placed on stove bolts, tire bolts, screws, and blacksmith bellows. In the notice of the advance the manufacturers claim that they are forced to increase the prices on their manufactured goods by reason of the big advances in raw material.

Of the two hundred teachers employed in the New York State Normal Schools thirteen receive the same salary as the messenger in the executive chamber and one hundred and thirty-five receive smaller salaries; thirteen receive the same salaries as the porters in the Department of Public Instruction, and a change to the position of porter would raise the salaries of one hundred and forty-nine teachers. More than half the teachers are worth less to the State from a financial standpoint than the janitors and firemen of the State Normal School buildings; two teachers are worth the same as the best janitor, while more than three-fourths of the entire number are worth less.

Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines afford a market to the United States, provided this country is able to supply the normal demand for foreign products, amounting to $100,000,000 annually. This estimate is based on their actual consumption in past years, and the probabilities are that the future will greatly increase the trade. The Bureau of Statistics has prepared tables showing that $26,000,000 worth of flour, shoes, leather, flax, woolen blankets, corn, iron, and other leading commodities were sent from Spain to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines in 1896. During the same period, the exports to Puerto Rico from Spain amounted to $7,268,498, while those to the Philippines were $7,403,047.

Water was turned into Chicago's great drainage canal, twenty-eight miles in length and built at a cost of $33,000,000. Its value to the commercial interests of the city is great, aside from the invaluable drainage feature. While the Chicago River has been deepened and widened in order to increase its flow and capacity, the canal itself, properly speaking, begins at the south branch of the Chicago River at Robey street and continues southward as an entirely artificial channel until it reaches the controlling works at Lockport. The State of Missouri proposes to contest in the United States Court the right of Chicago to turn its filth into the Mississippi River, claiming it would affect the health of the city of St. Louis and of the towns and people upon the banks of the river.

Free for Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist of Crawfordsville, Ind., will send free, by mail, to all who send him their address, a package of pansy compound, which is two weeks' treatment, with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe, and blood poison.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.

RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

ASTHMA

FREE. If you suffer from any form of Asthma we want to send you free by mail, prepaid, a Bottle of the famous Kola Plant Compound. It is Nature's Sure Botanic Cure for the disease, and we guarantee that it will forever stop all your suffering. We are sending out 50,000 Bottles free by mail to sufferers, to prove the wonderful power of this New Discovery, and we will be pleased to send one to you. Send your name and address on postal card. Address, The KOLA IMPORTING CO., No. 1164 Broadway, New York.

The only house in America handling all of the leading artistic instruments. Agents do not sell them because there is more money in the cheaper makes which they sell at a good price.

We can sell you the same direct, at factory prices and save agents' profits.

STEINWAY KNABE PIANOS
CUSTARR CHICKERING

JESSE FRENCH
PIANO & ORGAN CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers
St. Louis, Mo.

Write us, a 2c stamp may save you money. In doing so mention this paper.

Safety in Weakness.

I took my little boy to the depot with me to carry my valise. He was unaccustomed to the surroundings and seemed anxious to get away. When I told him he could go, he lost not a minute. I watched him as he ran till he had cleared the last track and was well out of sight round some freight boxes. I could imagine the relief of his pent-up feelings when he was clear away from the railroad, and I thought of Brother McCaleb's sermon on "Conscience." I remembered his position and argument that the weak are in less danger than the strong. I could only feel thankful that my little boy would run to get away from the railroad rather than linger around and watch for a chance to steal a ride by swinging to the steps or hand hold. I thought if he is always thus afraid of such places he will be in little danger of getting hurt. I thought, further, of the unnoticed, but more dangerous, evil of the language little boys learn to use, the impudent and dishonest pranks they learn to play, and the little pilferings they learn to engage in. A little boy that would blush to hear some of that language at first will soon learn to deal in their foul-mouthed jokes with a real relish. I fear to see little boys bartering fruits around the trains. They become familiar and careless; I fear for the body, but I fear more for the soul at such an innocent and unsuspecting age. There is a little money in it, but it may be dearly obtained.

Fathers, how would you like to pass the sporting grounds of your innocent little boys and see them chewing tobacco, smoking cigars, handling the bottle, swearing profanely, and dealing out their vulgar and indecent jokes? How would you like to go a step farther and see them standing about the depot on Sunday evenings, doing the same things? It would horrify you; and yet professing Christians will either engage in these things or give their unqualified indorsement by lingering around and helping to laugh. They either think it is no harm for men or that they are so large they are in no danger of being hurt. Clearly, they do not realize the danger.

There is safety in conscious weakness. God has said through his prophet, "But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word" (Isa. 66: 2); and the beloved Paul says: "When I am weak, then am I strong." The dangers to the moral and religious character are not realized or understood. Religious theorists are soothing the conscience with "no danger," "apostasy is impossible," "sanctified," "beyond the reach of temptation;" but the word of God says: "Beware!"

If there is security in weakness, then it is a blessing to be weak, is it not? It is most certainly safer to be conscious of danger, and to be conscious of weakness is to be conscious of danger. There is no such thing as being too strong to fall. It is a delusion. We are all weak. Some of us imagine we are strong enough to be in no danger, but that is just where the danger is truly great. That we may learn to realize the danger to ourselves so that we can truly pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and also learn to realize the danger to our children that comes from pushing them forward so rapidly into public life, is my earnest prayer.

L. M. OWEN.

Explanation.

For fear some harm may be done Brother J. A. Minton from my article of a few weeks past, under the title, "Is It Right?" I wish to say: The church of Christ at Norman desired to debate the society, organ, and sect baptism questions with the digressives. As Brother Minton was looking after the debate for the digressives, I naturally supposed he was with them on all these points; but since sending my article I have received a letter from Brother Minton, in which he says: "The society and organ I would not discuss under any circumstances. I know of no scripture for either and have no contention to make with you along that line." This I am glad to hear from Brother Minton. I was sure Elam's debate with Minton on the society would do him good. The only weak point I see in Brother Minton is his affiliation with the organ and society brethren at Norman when there is a scriptural congregation there. But as many come out of error gradually, I hope Brother Minton is coming back to the old ways. No one will rejoice more than I to welcome him back to where we were when he left. Minton is a strong man and can do much good as an evangelist in the church of Christ. J. D. TANT.

Hamilton, Texas.

An Afflicted Family.

On September 18, 1899, little Clarence Falk was attacked with typhoid fever; his brother Emmett, his mother, and his father were successively stricken down with the same disease. This was the entire family. After three weeks' sickness, the father died. The older son, Emmett, after a hard struggle with disease and death for five weeks, died. In the meantime little Clarence had recovered, but the sorely afflicted and bereaved wife and mother is still, after eleven weeks, vacillating between life and death. The relatives, neighbors, and especially the congregation of which Sister Falk is a loved and faithful member, had opportunity to exercise freely Christian sympathy and labors of love, which they nobly did, giving not only personal attention, but money and many other things. The Cross Roads Church, of which Sister Falk is a member, is justly noted for its readiness to help in the most practical way the distressed and suffering. Brethren James H. Coop and M. A. Clifford are the elders. They have the love and confidence of the congregation. Brother Coop and his family have taken Sister Falk from her own home, that is now associated with such sad bereavements, to his pleasant and hospitable home, where they are giving her all attention and care possible. The precious words of Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," surely apply to those who have ministered so faithfully to Sister Falk, among whom Brother and Sister J. C. Claxton, William Fields and wife, being the nearest neighbors, spent many laborious, sleepless nights in such ministries of love. Brother J. N. Armstrong, of the Nashville Bible School, has labored some recently with the Cross Roads Church and learned to love Sister Falk for her Christian worth. She has received from him a letter of encouragement and sympathy that she most highly appreciates. She said: "I wonder how Brother Armstrong ever found time, with all his busy work of preaching and teaching, to think of and write to me." The strangest and saddest of it all is that J. W. Falk, a man forty-five years of age, brought up under Christian teaching and influences, and who was moved to tears sometimes under the invitations of the gospel, should live and die in disobedience; that Emmett Falk, a young man twenty-four years of age, whose mother, from his infancy until he grew to be a man, took him with her to church, impressed upon him by precept and example Bible lessons, and pleaded with him often to obey, should defer it too long. How dangerous to dally with sin and to say, "Some other time I will obey the Lord!"

R. A. HOOVER.

Bellbuckle, Tenn.

We publish in another place an account of the trial of the assassin of W. Lipscomb, Jr., in Dallas, Texas, from the Texas Christian Advocate. The murder was as inexcusable as ever a murder was, so far as I have been able to learn. The criticism the Advocate makes on the trial is, no doubt, all just and proper. We understand eleven of the jury stood for hanging him; one, opposed. I do not know what he favored doing with the criminal. By way of compromise they agreed to make it murder in the second degree. This was ridiculous trifling with the oaths of the jurors and with the law. No one of the jury believed the verdict the proper one according to the law and the facts. It was either premeditated and malicious murder, or, if he was insane and unaccountable, it was not murder at all. We have not a doubt it was all the Advocate represents it. But we publish it to say this: W. Lipscomb, Jr., was reared greatly in our family, during the years of his youth making our house his home. He was very much loved by us, as he was by all of his intimate acquaintances, because he was always a good, clean, and pure-hearted boy and man. He sought the good of all, worked for the elevation of his race, and as little deserved the cruel fate he met as any man I know. While this is true, as a relative that loved him dearly, while I think the sentence fails in justice, I am glad his murderer was not hanged. If the laws had pronounced him guilty of murder in the first degree and imprisoned him for life, so he could not harm others, I would have much preferred it to his death, because I would leave him in the hands of the Lord, to whom vengeance alone belongs. This, I think, is what the Christian spirit demands, and which I try to cultivate. I would be glad for all his family and friends to cultivate the same spirit in reference to the matter. D. J.

A Piano for Sale.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

FREE

A Wonderful Shrub—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, Etc.

Disorders of the kidneys and bladder cause Bright's disease, rheumatism, gravel, pain in the back, bladder disorders, difficult or too frequent passing water, dropsy, etc. For these diseases a positive specific cure is found in a new botanical discovery, the wonderful Kava-Kava Shrub, called by botanists the piper methysticum, from the Ganges River, East India. It has the extraordinary record of 1,200 hospital cures in thirty days. It acts directly on the kidneys, and cures by draining out of the blood the poisonous uric acid, lithates, etc., which cause the disease.

Calvin C. Bliss.

Rev. John H. Watson testifies in the New York World that it has saved him from the edge of the grave when dying of kidney disease and terrible suffering when passing water. Mr. Calvin G. Bliss, North Brookfield, Mass., testifies to his cure of long-standing rheumatism. Mr. Joseph Whitten, of Wolfboro, N. H., at the age of eighty-five, writes of his cure of dropsy and swelling of the feet, kidney disorder, and urinary difficulty. Many ladies, including Mrs. C. C. Fowler, Locktown, N. J., and Mrs. Sarah Sharp, Montclair, Ind., also testify to its wonderful curative power in kidney and allied disorders peculiar to womanhood.

That you may judge of the value of this great discovery for yourself we will send you one large case by mail free, only asking that when cured yourself you will recommend it to others. It is a sure specific, and cannot fail. Address the Church Kidney Cure Company, 403 Fourth avenue, New York.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, is a book of 424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. There is a photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp-meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc., are the subjects of the illustrations. The book is intensely interesting, and the price is only $1.50.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

...BY...
A. P. STOUT,

Touches and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the man of sorrows almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. PRICE $1.00. Address

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING CO.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

WORRIED WOMEN.

Women Worry About Little Things More Than They Ought.

Not enough iron in their blood.

What has iron to do with it? The iron of rich, red, strengthening, nourishing blood is one of the chief builders of nerve power.

Iron makes strength.

Weakness causes worry.

Women who are weak and nervous are thin, pale, or yellow-faced. They lack the rounded form of beautiful womanhood; they are irritable and hard to please; they suffer from headache, backache, rheumatism, neuralgia; they feel weak, tired, unhappy, miserable.

Their pale color proves that they need iron to color their blood; their irritability and nervousness, that they need it to tone up and strengthen their nerves; their thinness, that they need it to cure their dyspepsia.

They can get what iron they need, in its best form, from Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Not an empirical solution of iron salts, but a scientific preparation of tested value—a preparation that for forty-two years has been curing the sick by hundreds of thousands.

Health comes with plenty of iron in the blood; so does a strong constitution. The strength of iron is made from iron.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic banishes pain, brings back roses to faded cheeks, builds up nerves, conquers sickness.

A worthy lady of South Portsmouth, Va., Mrs. M. J. Weel, corroborates the above in these words: "For many, many years my blood was iron poor, though I did not know it. I used to have fresh, rosy cheeks and a plump, rounded form, but by degrees my good looks faded away until I began to look like a ghost. I lost strength and ambition and suffered from pains in my stomach, head, heart, back, muscles, and bones. I gave myself up in despair. Finally a good friend induced me to try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. From the good symptoms which at once began to show themselves I saw what had been wrong with me. I had suffered from want of iron, and it remained for Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic to supply it and cure me. I am now in good health and feel better than I have for years."

Here is evidence from near at hand:

"Dallas, Texas, December 16, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: I can cheerfully recommend Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic to any one as a strengthening tonic. After suffering some months with slow fever, I used one bottle and can now thank this splendid remedy for the fact that I am living and well. Very respectfully,

"(Miss) MARGARITE GREEN.

"No. 112 Ervay street."

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's
IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

Patience is a virtue that grows by cultivation.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is now in Missouri in a meeting. We expect him with us at Belle Plaine on the first Lord's day in January. If circumstances do not become unfavorable we expect to have a fine meeting. I expect to be with them part of the time. I have labored with and for this congregation for eight years. We have, like other places, had our "ebbs" and "flows." We have some very faithful people here, and whatever success has been with us is due, first, to the God who loves us, and, next, to the faithfulness of the faithful part of this congregation. My humble labors are scarcely to be counted in the work. Whatever failures may be noted, none of them are chargeable to the Lord; none of them to the faithfulness of the brethren, but to the mistakes that we have made in our weakness. During the eight years there have been about one hundred and thirty-five added to the congregation. This is the total, but the majority of them have been by primary obedience. During this time there have been about sixty-five removals and deaths. The prospect for success now appears brighter than for the last two years. May we be faithful, that the Lord may bless us. We have had many disadvantages under which to labor during these years. Like other places, we have opposition from various sources. These we cannot avoid, but we can trust in the Lord and labor on.

Brother B. F. Martin is with the brethren at Round Mound in a meeting.

Brother Will. Ellmore is in a meeting near Riverdale.

Brother J. E. Cain was to be in a meeting at a mission point in Butler County this week (December 10-16), but the inclement weather and bad roads induced the brethren to postpone it.

I wish the brethren in Kansas would decide to have their meetings when the weather prospects are better. It sometimes appears as though we want to use all the good weather for ourselves and then give a few days of cold, stormy weather to an effort to save souls. I do not mean that they all do this, but many do; and it is hard on them to do much under such circumstances.

Charles M. Sheldon, a Congregational preacher, of Topeka, Kan., has attained much notoriety as author of "In His Steps" and other books. In addition to this he has made himself noted by revising the creed used by the Congregational Church. He claims that many things in the Apostles' Creed has become meaningless and obsolete. The congregation at Topeka has laid it aside and made them a new one. Here it is, as I find it published: "Dearly beloved, called of God to be his children through Jesus Christ, we give hearty thanks to God, who by his Spirit has opened your eyes to see, and your heart to receive Jesus as Lord, and who has led you to present yourselves here to confess him and unite with his church. Now, before God, your Heavenly Father, and Jesus, his Son, and in the presence of his people you promise to devote yourselves during your whole life to the love, service, and obedience of Jesus Christ. You promise to walk in his steps, so far as you know them now or may hereafter learn them through his Holy Scriptures, and to do his will so far as you may be able through the help of the Holy Spirit. You do cordially unite yourself with this church of Christ, and you promise to share with us in its worship and work by attending the services of the church, by aiding in the financial and social work of the church, and by taking upon yourself such responsibilities as you believe belong to you as a member of this church. Do you promise?" I may be asked to file objections to this matter. (1) Objection is founded upon the proposition that God was wise enough to know what was best for man, and the creed he gave is the only acceptable one. This may be said to cover all the objections, but there are others in the detail. (2) When we make a creed we infer that God did not understand how to make one, or he has granted man the privilege of doing as he pleases in the matter, and that is contrary to the spirit of unity taught in the Bible. (3) If a creed is in harmony with the Bible it must be unchangeable, for the God of the Bible never changes the law of induction into the church or the law to govern the church. If it is not in harmony with the Bible, it is certainly wrong. (4) If the Congregational Church had in the beginning accepted the Lord's creed, instead of their Apostles' Creed there would have been no necessity for a change. (5) This creed enjoins upon men that they unite with his church, when the Bible says that the Lord adds people to the church. Then, again, the demand is made that they "cordially unite themselves with 'this' church of Christ," which implies that Christ has a plurality of churches. These objections will suffice for the present. The good people of Topeka now have an opportunity of accepting a simple creed. I believe this is about as good as any creed that I have seen that has been inaugurated by man. I very believe the Lord's is best and the only one that he will accept. Let us think seriously about this matter, anyway. More love for Christ and less for creeds would be appropriate just now; more zeal for the church of Christ and less for men's churches would be better for our eternal good; more enthusiasm for the Lord's institution and less for all the institutions of men would be more acceptable to him and more profitable for man in eternity. These would build up the church among men, instead of having spiritual decadence.

More humility, instead of self-glory, is needed in this age. More honesty of purpose would not come amiss. Less two-faced work would work to better advantage in inspiring confidence between men. The world would be better if much of the backbiting now in existence was blotted out. Disappointments will come, but let us not become discouraged thereby.

Our hearts can never express what they feel in gratitude to friends who assist us in life's journey. Our gratitude to God should be unbounded, when we think of his mercies bestowed upon us.

D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

DIMPLES
on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

When we lose patience, we really lose our usefulness.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR, A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.

For indigestion and foul stomach.

For sick and nervous headaches.

For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.

For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.

For loss of appetite and debility.

For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir.

Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.

1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

Nonresident Notice.

J. J. Blair, Admr., et al.

vs.

Hugh McMurray et al.

In this cause, on this the 20th day of December, 1899, it appearing to the satisfaction of the Clerk from the affidavit to the petition in this cause that the defendants—William Blair, James Blair, and Fannie Bridge and her husband, H. E. Bridge—are nonresidents of the State of Tennessee; therefore the ordinary process of this court cannot be served upon them. It is therefore ordered by the Clerk that said defendants enter their appearance herein at the February term of the Davidson County Court, to be holden at the courthouse in Nashville, Tenn., on the first Monday in February, 1900, it being February 5, 1900, and defend, or said complainant's bill will be taken for confessed as to them, and will be set for hearing ex parte.

It is therefore ordered that a copy of this order be published for four weeks in succession in the Gospel Advocate, a newspaper published in Nashville, Tenn.

P. A. Shelton, Clerk,
By Wm. B. Shelton, D. C.

W. R. Chambers, Solicitor.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

OPIUM AND WHISKY HABITS.

A word of encouragement may be the means of saving a fellow-man from a life of misery. Many look upon the opium habit as willful and disgraceful; it is far from it. In most cases it is acquired from being used in the treatment of acute and chronic diseases, and not being warned of its danger. Thus the habit is formed, and the victim not to blame, and should have not only the sympathy of, but a helping hand from every one—at least a word of encouragement, and not of censure.

The Cause of the Habit.

The following are extracts from letters received by Dr. B. M. Woolley, Atlanta, Ga., from persons who have taken his Home Treatment for the Whisky and Opium Habits, and have given permission to use them and their names for the benefit of fellow-sufferers:

Cured of the Whisky Habit Ten Years Ago.—I have never since tasted a single drop, or even had a desire to do so. W. D. MILLER, March 19, 1899. Sardis, Miss.

I Have Never Used Morphine in Any Form since I took your treatment in June, 1899. Jan. 7, 1899. E. A. MULLEN, Toone, Tenn.

My Wife Had Used Morphine for Thirty Years.—I am sure she is now cured, and that her cure dates from September, 1897.

E. J. VANN, Attorney at Law, Madison, Fla. April 8, 1898.

I Had Taken One Bottle (60 grains) Morphine a week for six years, am now cured. MRS. A. H. BEHRENS, Rome, Ga. January 4, 1899.

Opium and Whisky Habits have been my special study for many years. Judging by the great number of cures I have made, I feel it but a truthful claim that I can help the Opium and Whisky afflicted more than any other physician. I have lifted up thousands of pain-worn, languid, nervous, and emaciated men and women into health and usefulness. Do not become discouraged if other doctors can't help you, for I cure where others fail to relieve. Call if you can or write Dr. B. M. Woolley, 201 Lowndes Building, Atlanta, Ga., for his book, FREE.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

● Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING, COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

AN EDUCATION within easy reach of every young man or woman. For particulars and catalogue, address C. K. Hamilton, No. 13 Lyceum, Secretary of

The National Normal University, LEBANON, OHIO.

The parent Normal. Founded in 1855. It has age and prestige. Excellent equipment. Superior instruction. Affords the most thorough preparation for teaching or any other profession or business. 50,000 students trained here are now filling good positions. 36 States and Territories represented. Over 30 teachers, each a specialist in his line. A most delightful and healthful place to live. Departments: Preparatory, Business Teachers', Scientific, Classical, Music, Oratory, Medicine, Law, etc. You can enter at any time without examination and select such studies as you desire. Chartered by the State to confer all college degrees. No better place to begin or complete an education.

GUNS! GUNS!

WE CARRY THE BEST STOCK OF

GUNS AND SPORTSMEN'S GOODS

IN THE SOUTH.

We have the best Hammerless Gun in America for $25. We have a very fine imported Hammer Gun, worth $25, that we will sell for $19. We have only a few of these left; they are close, hard shooters.

Send us your name and address, and we will send you our Gun Catalogue.

H. G. LIPSCOMB & CO.

152 N. MARKET ST.

Nashville, - - Tennessee.

Field Gleanings.

Several weeks have passed and gone since my "Field Gleanings" have appeared in the Gospel Advocate. Since that time death has visited our home and called to that land of fadeless flowers our darling babe, Thelma. Thelma had been with us seventeen months, and her presence was a great joy to us. She had learned to lisp our names and to ask for me when away from her, but now she is away from us, and our hearts are bleeding, and breaking with that void that only death can give. The many loving and tender letters of condolence and sympathy, the kind expressions of those around us, and the thought that some sweet day we will meet her where partings come no more, all help us to bear up under our sad bereavement. Kind and loving hands administered to us, and we can never forget the dear brethren and sisters who assisted us so nobly.

The meeting at Whitewright, conducted by Brother Larimore, closed with grand success for truth and righteousness. About twenty-five souls became obedient to the faith. We had to fight the world, the flesh, and the devil; but with all the combined efforts of wickedness the victory was glorious. Brother Larimore did some as able preaching as has ever been done in Whitewright, and those who heard him had no trouble in knowing just where he stood with regard to those things that divide. He came out plain and full, and we all rejoiced. We will ever remember him for his noble work in Whitewright, and pray that God may bless him with many days to declare the gospel of God's dear Son. I led the singing, when there, and when away it was ably led by Brother German, a young brother of promise. The singing was excellent, and I do not believe that even a "progressive" would have desired to add an organ to it; not unless he would have desired to ruin it and bring confusion, at least. I will continue my labors with them one Lord's day in each month. Many preachers visited us during our meeting and helped us greatly in song and prayer. May the Lord continue to bless the church at Whitewright, and may they ever continue faithful in the work and worship of God.

Brother J. W. Chism and J. C. Weaver have recently been in a debate at Lannius, Fannin County.

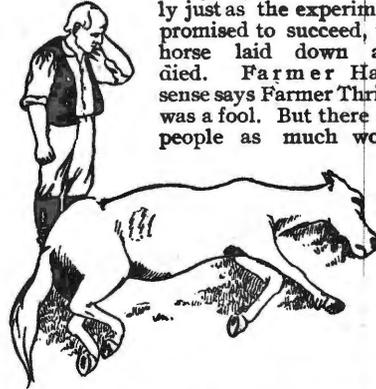

Brother Thomas E. Millholland, of Leonard, has recently closed a debate with a Baptist, near Leonard. Brother Millholland says his opponent was rather weak.

Do not forget that I am now located at Denton and will be glad to meet any of my old friends. May God bless all the faithful. J. H. LAWSON. Denton, Texas.

Thompson-Lawson Debate.

The above is a printed debate between Elder J. M. Thompson, of Indianapolis, Ind., and the writer. Each affirmed, as follows: "The church to which I belong as a member is scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice." "The Establishment of the Church," "Church Succession," "Communion," "Design of Baptism," "Apostasy," and many other subjects are discussed. Those who have read it say that it is one of the most interesting debates they have ever read. It contains 206 pages, 6x9, with a good picture of both disputants and a biographical sketch of both our lives. The book is certainly cheap at 50 cents per copy. But now, dear reader, in order to raise $100 in a very short time, Farmer Thrifty got the idea that if he could keep a horse without the cost of feeding, it would be a great economy, so he reduced the horse's food a little every day. Unfortunately just as the experiment promised to succeed, the horse laid down and died. Farmer Hard-sense says Farmer Thrifty was a fool. But there are people as much worse than old Thrifty as it is more foolish to work your own body under starvation conditions, than your horse's. But every farmer has plenty to eat. Yes, but it isn't what is eaten, it is what nourishment is obtained from food that decides the question of starvation. It wouldn't do the farmer any good to run a stack of wheat through a thrashing machine which was so out of gear that it didn't get the grain out of one head of wheat in fifty. That's just the way with the disordered stomach. It doesn't get the good out of the food that is eaten.

There is no medicine will so quickly act on the organs of digestion and nutrition, and put the stomach in perfect working order, as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It makes pure blood, and rich blood, and puts the body on a plane of perfect health.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Popplewell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co., Arkansas. "I felt there was no help for me. Two years ago I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets,' and improved from the start. I am now in good health."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy.

I make this offer: Send me post office money order for 50 cents and I will send you one copy of "Thompson-Lawson Debate," one copy of "Heart-felt Religion" (40 pages, by J. H. Lawson), and one copy of "Which Church Must I Join?" This offer is good for two weeks only. If you want all these, send at once. J. H. LAWSON. Denton, Texas.

What We Eat

is intended to nourish and sustain us, but it must be digested and assimilated before it can do this. In other words, the nourishment contained in food must be separated by the digestive organs from the waste materials and must be carried by the blood to all parts of the body. We believe the reason for the great benefit which so many people derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla lies in the fact that this medicine gives good digestion and makes pure, rich blood. It restores the functions of those organs which convert food into nourishment that gives strength to nerves and muscles. It also cures dyspepsia, scrofula, salt rheum, boils, sores, pimples and eruptions, catarrh, rheumatism, and all diseases that have their origin in impure blood.

Scholarship Free.

You may, by doing a little writing at your home, secure scholarship, free, in either of Draughon's Practical Business Colleges—Nashville, St. Louis, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, Shreveport, or Savannah. Best patronized Business Colleges in the South. For particulars, address The Illustrated Youth and Age, Nashville, Tenn.

The outlook is worthless unless it be an uplook.

Does the 20th Century Begin January 1, 1900, or January 1, 1901?

There is a great diversity of opinion as to where the new century begins. The New York papers have been discussing the matter and have devoted columns to it. Have you thought of it at all? It may pay you to figure on it. See what a handsome book can be secured. It is a beautiful 438-page edition of Shakespeare's complete works. The book is 8½ by 12½ inches, weighs over 2 pounds, is bound in leatherette (a flexible binding), and has over 60 perfectly elegant engravings printed on fine white enameled paper. It contains all of Shakespeare's works, with Taine's estimate of Shakespeare, Washington Irving's essay on Stratford, Shakespeare's life and times, with illustrations of his home, the haunts of his early life, etc. A complete work—a beautiful work—a marvel of elegance, and given away free. Here are some opinions of men who have examined it carefully: Governor Candler says: "I have examined this edition of Shakespeare with much care and interest. It is, considering its quality of paper, clearness of type, splendor of engravings, etc., a marvel of cheapness." Mr. Lucien Knight, literary editor of the Constitution, says: "The illustrations are such as are ordinarily found in the most expensive art publications, and the introductory features are alone worth more than the whole volume costs." Joel Chandler Harris ("Uncle Remus") says: "I am sure I shall never be able to understand how so beautiful a volume as your 'Works of Shakespeare' can be sent out so cheaply." Hon. G. R. Glenn, State School Commissioner, says: "I confess I cannot see how the Sunny South can afford to send the copy of Shakespeare's complete works as offered." Rev. G. A. Nunnally, of La Grange, says: "I don't see how you can make the offer you do, nor do I see how any one can decline it. You ought to get 500,000 subscribers on this proposition."

How to get this book: Send us $1 for The Sunny South, monthly, one year, and answer the above question as to when the new century begins. If your answer is correct, we will send you as a present, free and postpaid, a copy of the beautiful edition of Shakespeare described above. Address The Sunny South, Room 12, Constitution Building, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattahoochee, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

What the Other Side Thinks of Us.

"The truth is that where missionary coöperation is practiced is the most vital and forceful preaching of the old, ever new, plea. Our chief criticism of the unhappy group of brethren who oppose missionary societies is that they have practically forsaken the preaching of the famous first principles and have turned to bewailing the degeneracy of the times and the shortcomings of the churches. In scarcely a particular is their teaching apostolic; instead of the jubilant message of the first preacher, theirs is the weeping voice of Jeremiah."

The above clipping, from the Christian Standard, of November 11, is an utterance of J. A. Lord, editor of said paper, in an address before the great convention in October. It is only one of the numberless manifestations of the kind of a spirit that pervades the society he is advocating, and shows that he does not scruple to use any means in his power to utterly destroy the influence and good results of all the preaching of all those who refuse to help build his worldly institutions. It shows that instead of his being, as he pretends, so anxious for the salvation of the world, he is more than willing that all should be lost, except those who can be saved by the missionary society; and such expressions by the leaders of this movement well demonstrate the truth that the Spirit of Christ never dwells in any institution got up by man, but that every one of them has a worldly spirit, in direct opposition to the Spirit of the crucified Redeemer. Just think for a moment at whom this was directed: "In scarcely a particular is their teaching apostolic." Are we to take this man's word that the Franklins, the Sewells, the Lipscombs, the Sommers, J. A. Clark, Poe, Burnett, Tant, Butler, Kurfrees, Lawson, and their noble collaborators are so far departed from the truth?

I have not written thus in any spite toward any man living, but from a burning desire that the truth may prevail, and I earnestly appeal to the good men and women who have become entangled in the meshes of this movement to seriously consider these matters in the light of God's word.

Ethridge, Tenn. LUCAS NORTH.

The Glory of Salvation.

When angels have tuned their harps to the highest pitch and sing,

Glory to God in the highest, it is only half of the glory of gospel grandeur; for the echo comes back with the refrain:

Peace on earth, good will to men.

As the glorifying song reaches the heaven of heavens in praise to the Almighty Father, he returns it to earth with a benediction of grace, mercy, and peace.

Man, sinful man, standing on the outward confines of unlimited space, separated so far from God by reason of sin, is taken up by the love of God as manifested in the gospel through Jesus Christ, his Son, and carried back and placed next to God. No greater display of love and mercy than this can ever be manifested by divine love, grace, and goodness. Passing by all other created intelligences, God reaches out and brings back man from the outer regions of sin, degradation, and ruin, and places him next to himself; and as God can never raise a created being above himself, it follows clearly that to place man or any created intelligence next to himself is the greatest exaltation, grandeur, and glory God can ever bestow.

In adopting the saved as his own children, God places man above the angels—the most honored, the most glorified of all created beings. As the son has more honor in the house than the servant, and eternal salvation to sinful men; made like unto his own Son—shall have more honor than angels who stand ready to do the bidding of him who rules the universe. "Glory to God in the highest!" and let every tongue repeat it, since his mercy gives joy, peace, and eternal salvation to sinful men; and when the great drama of human redemption is complete and we gather around the throne of our loving Heavenly Father, shall we not then sing with the angels, Glory to God in the highest, while we realize that God has given peace to men and placed them next himself, beyond which none can pass? Blessed be his name forever.

JOHN T. POE.

The Boaz-Moore Debate.

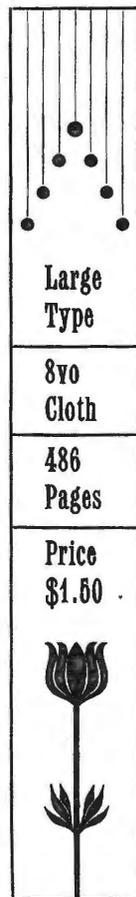

This debate took place at Walnut Grove church house, beginning on December 12 and lasting three days. Two propositions were discussed, as follows: (1) "The Scriptures teach that baptism to a believing penitent is one of the conditions of pardon of past sins." (2) "The Scriptures teach that a penitent believer has salvation or remission of sins prior to baptism."

Brother Boaz affirmed the first proposition. He began his affirmation by a definition of terms, followed by an array of scriptural arguments in support of his proposition. Many of these Brother Moore made an honest effort to answer; others, he did not get to during the entire discussion, notwithstanding he is a very much-experienced debater, having met nearly all of our debating brethren. Brother Boaz defended every position he took with a skill that showed that he had his work well in hand. Brother Moore asked Brother Boaz over one hundred questions, which were answered in almost the time they were asked.

Brother Moore began his affirmation on the second day at noon. His first attempt was to show that John's baptism was Christian baptism. Brother Boaz showed that it was not even in the name of Christ; also showed that repentance did not begin in the name of Christ until Pentecost (Luke 24: 47); also they were to baptize into the name of the Father, Son, and the Holy Spirit. (Matt. 28: 19.) To save his sinking cause, Brother Moore said that it was not necessary to use any formula in baptizing, that a man could be baptized without any of these names.

Brother Boaz asked him if he ever baptized any one without using a formula or if there was any one present that had ever seen or heard of a Baptist baptizing without any formula.

In his next speech Brother Moore offered $50 reward for a text showing that we had to do anything this side of the cross of Christ that those who lived before Christ did not have to do. Brother Boaz showed from Rom. 10: 9 that we were to believe in a risen Christ, while they did not; also that "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God" (1 John 4: 3); and asked Brother Moore if those back there confessed that Christ had come in the flesh. To this Moore did not reply. Brother Boaz insisted on Moore getting up his $50, but he had failed the last I heard from them.

Large Type

8vo
Cloth

486
Pages

Price
$1.50

HANDBOOK ON BAPTISM

BY J. W. SHEPHERD
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedo-baptists on the Design thereof.

The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities.

A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student.

It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY

232 N. MARKET ST.
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

Everything passed off very pleasantly. The weather was so cold that we did not have a large attendance, yet I think the debate will do good in that community. A. O. COLLEY.
Cottage Grove, Tenn.

"Self-preservation is the first law of nature." For this reason every one who is ill desires to become well. Those who have impure or impoverished blood turn to Hood's Sarsaparilla, because they know it will enrich and purify their blood and give them good health. To take this medicine on the first appearance of impure blood is an important step toward self-preservation.

HOOD'S PILLS cure sick headache, indigestion.

Life is low only to the man that looks down.

We are binding a new edition of "Uncle Mixor's Stories." This is a book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. It is a splendid book for the young and is also read with pleasure and profit by the older members of the family. The book has 256 pages, 6½ by 9½, and is attractively bound in cloth. Price, $1, postpaid.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Largest Foundry on Earth making
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

VOLUME XLII. NO. 3

NASHVILLE, TENN., JANUARY 18, 1900

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

EDITORS:

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. McQUIDDY, Office Editor,

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

God helps those who help other people.

There is not much force in the man who thinks he is trying to do wrong and fears his effort will be a failure.

A man never hits the truth when he tries to "split the difference," so as to save his popularity among men.

The next best thing to a good deed is a word of approval and encouragement to the fellow who is trying to do good.

The hardest and least promising fields for missionary work are in the ungodly churches which contribute large sums of money for foreign missions.

It may be true, as the old saying goes, that "it is never too late to do good;" but if that idea is encouraging any one to delay in any good thing, it would be well to amend the saying so it will read: "It is never too soon to do good."

It was stated in a recent issue of the Courier-Journal that the Broadway Baptist Church, of Louisville, Ky., had appointed a special meeting to discuss the question as to whether the Sunday school should be continued or discontinued in that church. The Western Recorder thinks there must be some mistake in the announcement, because it is a foregone conclusion that the Sunday school ought to be continued in every church. It is a fact, however, that many well-informed people in all churches are not satisfied with the Sunday school on the present basis. It is generally agreed that Bible teaching and Bible study ought to be continued and greatly increased in all churches; but it is an open question whether Sunday schools, as they are ordinarily conducted, are helpful to Bible teaching and Bible study, or merely a substitute for such teaching and study. The widespread and increasing dissatisfaction will probably result in radical changes, sooner or later; but whether that which is to be will be better than that which now is remains to be seen.

A general conference has been held and a national Christian Political Union has been organized at Chicago. The executive committee of this new organization has issued a declaration of principles and purposes to the country at large through the Associated Press dispatches in the daily papers, which reads as follows:

"We believe the fullness of time to have arrived when the eternal principles of justice, mercy, and love, as exemplified in the love and teachings of Jesus Christ, should be embodied in the political economy of our nation and applied in concrete form to every function of our government—national, State, municipal, and local. We believe that the most direct means of accomplishing this end is formation of a political body of United Christian men and women, who shall use their elective franchise for the selection of able, worthy, and conscientious public officials who will seek in their respective positions to perform the functions of government in the spirit of the Man of Galilee. We declare that this movement is in no sense ecclesiastical or dogmatical in its purpose and contemplates no challenge of any person's faith or creed; aims not to disturb church relationships or to unite church and State in politico-ecclesiastical bonds; but seeks solely to unify the forces of righteousness in the name and spirit of Jesus for political, social, and commercial reform."

The result of this effort to unite Christians to control politics will probably be a general organization controlled by politics.

President Harper, of Chicago University, discourses as follows:

"Nine-tenths of the teaching in the Sunday school is, as teaching, a farce. The work of many of these so-called Sunday school teachers, if judged upon the standard of ordinary principles of pedagogy, is ludicrous and at the same time criminal. It is ludicrous to call such work teaching. Their work is criminal if it is looked at from the point of view of the innocent pupils who suffer from it. For a long time people have engaged in this work, and have compelled their children to continue it because of a sense of duty. Already many parents have withdrawn their children from contact with such work because of a sense of duty. Ordinarily, the only person connected with the church at all capable of giving instruction in the Bible is the minister, and too frequently he is the last man who feels an obligation resting upon him to do it. That which is most fundamental to the interests of the church, which is, indeed, the most vital part, he generously turns over to a few uneducated, unskilled, and sometimes unconsecrated teachers, and does not even trouble himself to see that these teachers associate themselves to help each other. The condition of things in most of our churches is, in fact, appalling, when we remember that in these days the Bible is not studied in the family as in former days; and when we come to understand the character of the instruction which is furnished as a substitute, we need not be surprised at the pitifully meager results. Nor is this all. Our ministers fail not only to teach the Bible, but also to preach it. The average sermon contains less and less of biblical material and more and more of that which comes from outside the Bible. This is due in part to the ignorance of the minister himself concerning the Bible and in part to the indifference on the part of the people with respect to it. This ignorance is in some cases a phase of the individual's general ignorance; in other cases it exists even where large attainments have been made in outside subjects. It may be said without fear of sustained contradiction that the membership of our churches is gradually becoming less and less familiar with the contents and teachings of the sacred Scriptures."

Commenting on this, the Christian Leader, a Congregational paper of decided ability, says:

"This is a very severe arraignment of the guilty parties, but it is nevertheless shamefully true. The modern Sunday school, as ordinarily conducted, is a farce; and the factor that has contributed most largely toward making it a farce has been the substitution of the lesson leaves for the Holy Scriptures. The veriest ignoramus, wholly destitute of a knowledge of God's word, is competent to teach by means of the lesson leaves. Teaching by lesson leaves is a continual retrogression from the Scriptures, "which are able to make us wise unto salvation."

Unquestionably the cause of Christianity is suffering from the lack of constant, individual study of the Bible among the people in general and among church members in particular. To the extent other things are used as a substitute for such study the tree is evil and the fruit cannot be good. The only way to promote a knowledge of the Bible among the people in general is to encourage constant, daily, and prayerful study of the Bible itself by each individual. Anything that does not do this is wrong, and the sooner it is abandoned, the better.

There is a good side and a bad side to every man. We see only the good side of some man, and we wonder that he is not esteemed by all as we esteem him; we see only the bad side of another man, and we are surprised that others prize him as we cannot. We are right, and we are wrong, in both cases. Both men have both sides, and we ought to recognize this in our estimate of them. It is with ourselves as with our fellows; we have a good side and a bad side, and those about us are likely to judge us by the one side or the other. It will be well for us if we gain a lesson from the judgment of others as to our two sides. It ought to help us to make progress in the right direction, and to repress the faults and defects for which others judge us harshly.

Work thou for self alone, and life shall die at death;
For others live, and—lo!—death shall be God's own breath.

—Charles P. Nettleton.

Sweeney's

Sermons

By JOHN S. SWEENEY

and an interesting life sketch of the author written by an intimate friend

The subjects of the sermons are: The Simplicity that is in Christ, The Three Sides of Christianity, The Church of God—Its Foundation, The Word of Truth, Our Aim, Regeneration, Acts of Apostles, The More Excellent Way, Paul's Answer to King Agrippa, Action of Baptism, Baptism for Remission of Sins, What Must I Do to Be Saved? Infant Baptism, A Plea for the Church of God. Of the sermons, J. W. McGarvey says: "I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ."

304 Pages, Neatly
Bound in Cloth

Price ✻ $1.00

Biographies and Sermons

By F. D. SRYGLEY

424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. Illustrated. Photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc.

Intensely
Interesting

Price ✻ $1.50

The Life and Sermons

of Jesse L. Sewell

By D. LIPSCOMB

This is an interesting book. One hundred and twenty-one pages are devoted to a memorial of his life, work, and character, by David Lipscomb; one hundred and ninety-seven pages to sermons, by Jesse Sewell. Sixteen of his best sermons are here given, covering all the phases of conversion, and especially on points upon which disciples and denominations differ. It contains sermons on such themes as: The Conversion of Cornelius, Atonement and Reconciliation, Witness of the Spirit, Form of Doctrine, The Grace of God, The Name of Christ, In Christ, The Son of God, The One Foundation, etc. This book will well repay any reader, and gives a larger fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

12MO, 318 PAGES, CLOTH

Price ✻ $1.00

Seventy Years

in Dixie

By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

400 LARGE OCTAVO PAGES
LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

Price ✻ $1.50

Sunshine:

Uncle Minor's Stories

By V. M. METCALFE
(Uncle Minor.)

A book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. Uncle Minor's life was devoted to the young, and everywhere he went the children became attached to him. He thought there was too much reality in life to spend his time in writing fiction, so in this book he confines himself to real incidents and true stories which point the mind to "some virtue to practice or vice to shun." It is an exceedingly appropriate gift for the young. Sent post-paid.

256 PAGES, 6 1/4 X 9 1/2 INCHES
BOUND IN CLOTH.

Price ✻ $1.00

Civil Government:

Its Origin, Mission, and Destiny, and the Chris- tian's Relation to It

By D. LIPSCOMB

This book is the outgrowth of the author's most matured thoughts on this subject. "I think the book is worth its weight in gold."—A. Wilkinson. "It will be better appreciated, in my opinion, by future generations, as the light of Bible knowledge becomes more general."—J. E. Thompson.

158 PAGES

Price ✻ $0.75

Handbook on

Baptism

By J. W. SHEPHERD

With an Introduction by
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof. The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities. A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student. It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

Large Type
8vo Cloth
486 Pages

Price ✻ $1.50

The Gospel Plan of Salvation..

By T. W. BRENTS

Clears away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes: Predestination, Election and Reprobation, Calvinistic Proofs Examined, The Foreknowledge of God, Hereditary Depravity, Establishment of the Church, Identity of the Church, The New Birth, Faith, Repentance, The Confession, Baptism—What is It? Who Should Be Baptized? The Design of Baptism, The Holy Spirit. As a book of reference, it is invaluable. Highly recommended by the press and the brotherhood. 667 pages, 8vo., good paper, clear type, well bound.

Eight Editions
Have Been Sold

Price ✻ $2.00

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 3.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JANUARY 18, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Was Paul a Deceiver?.....	33
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 25.....	34
The Importance of Sound Speech—Further Specifications.....	34
Is Christianity Practicable? No. 3.....	35
Unwavering Faith.....	36
"The Church Supplanted".....	36
Miscellany.....	37
The Seven Churches of Asia.....	38
Home Reading.....	39
Questions by a Mormon.....	40
Spread of Mormonism.....	41
Missionary Work.....	42
In Tennessee.....	42
Field Gleanings.....	43
A Delusive Idea.....	43
General News.....	44
Confessing Jesus Before Men.....	45
Virginia Jottings.....	46
Labor in the Lord not in Vain.....	46
Kansas Notes.....	47
Length of Creative Days.....	48
Obituaries.....	48

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

Our Contributors.

Was Paul a Deceiver?

Paul: "Brother Marcus, I am glad to resume the examination of the subject we have had under consideration. Though I myself am a prisoner for Jesus Christ, as this chain constantly reminds me, the word of God is not bound. I am, therefore, very thankful to the Lord to meet you, Timothy, and others I see here with you in this rented room, and speak of those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. (Acts 28: 30, 31.) Marcus, will you please state, in a few words, the question we have before us in this interview?"

Timothy: "Please allow me, Father Paul, to interrupt you just for a moment. Before the question is stated I desire to introduce to you my friend, Quintus, of this city. He is the fifth son of the centurion, Julius, who had charge of the prisoners on board the ship of Alexandria, in which you sailed for Rome. Quintus has become much interested in you and your history, having heard his father, Julius, speak of the voyage, the storm, and the wreck, and how it was by your advice that two hundred and seventy-six souls were saved. I have told him much about you. He comes with us to-day to learn more. Though not yet a Christian, we hope he soon will be."

P.: "I welcome you, Quintus, with all the rest who are here. I can never forget the courtesy your distinguished father showed me while on that voyage. When the ship arrived at Sidon he allowed me to go and see my friends there and refresh myself; and when the ship was being destroyed by the storm, his desire to spare my life kept the soldiers from killing the prisoners to prevent their escape. I have a tender regard for him and all his people."

Quintus: "Thank you. Some time, when we have opportunity, I desire to speak further with you."

P.: "I shall be glad to comply with your wishes. Marcus, you may now proceed."

Mark: "You were to prove to us that no one could reasonably say that you were a deceiver in proclaiming the gospel of Christ. You have already proven that you could not be reckoned a fanatic; and if you were neither of these, the conclusion would irresistibly follow that you are an honest and true witness. I believe this about covers the case as we now have it."

P.: "Yes, and I will only add for the information of others present that the ultimate design of all this train of reasoning is to prove beyond doubt that Jesus is the true Messiah, the Bible true, immortality true, heaven true, and that all this testimony shall be strong proof for the use of the faithful in the day fast approaching when miracles and signs and wonders shall have ceased. In stating the proposition for the interview to-day I will again speak of myself in the third person. 'Was Paul, the preacher of Christ, a deceiver?' To have labored and suffered as I have in the gospel requires a motive. This is axiomatic. No man can endure what you all know I have borne without a motive. If I have been false in my proclamation, where can the motive be found?"

M.: "Brother Paul, if you were a deceiver, it occurs to me that you would have selected some falsehood to preach which would have been easier to believe than to boldly proclaim that a man had risen from the dead whom every one knew had been put to death. Some theme more moderate or less astounding would have been more credulous."

P.: "Exactly so, and one which was more popular, and that was not everywhere spoken against. It is clearly obvious that no man could have willingly passed the arduous toils I have suffered without some very strong motive. Upon the supposition that I am, and have been all these years, false and deceiving the people, I ask again: Where is the reasonable motive to support me from young manhood to old age in all these toils? Men frequently change their course in life from impure and sinister aims, I admit; but what aim, what motive, could possibly have prompted me to change or affect a change from the Jews' religion to that of Jesus of Nazareth, if I am false? Men sometimes change parties that they may be on the strong and popular side; but this could not have influenced me to make this change, as I was already on the strong side, as viewed by the world. The Jews with whom I stood had instigated the death of Jesus, and, at the time I made this change, were hounding his disciples to distant cities. They were, as I have said, everywhere spoken against."

M.: "Father Paul, men are sometimes willing to work with the minority, or weak side, for the sake of being leaders. You know ambition is a powerful source of good or ill. I do not state this by way of objection from myself, but to have you consider it. This is the only objection I see that an enemy might make to this point."

P.: "I am glad you have suggested this; I intended to cover this point. It is true, Marcus, that ambition may be a snare to our souls. 'That disciple whom Jesus loved' confessed to me that he had sorely repented the sin of evil ambition, and my thorn in the flesh, that messenger of Satan to buffet me, is a forcible reminder that I needed something to counteract that evil tendency in my own heart. But to suppose that I lacked position as a Jew and then claimed to be a Christian that I might become a leader of men is preposterous. The facts are all the other way. Not only did I already belong to the strong party, but I was already a leader among them who composed it. I say it not boastfully, but the Jews to this day know what manner of man I was among them; and when first a Christian, even the church in Jerusalem believed not that I was a disciple. All the facts show it is impossible to suppose that I became a Christian, or desired to be esteemed one, for the sake of worldly position. If, then, I could not have been actuated by a desire to be on the strong side, and could not have been led by evil ambition, what other impure motive could possibly have led me to live willingly, through toil and pain, such a false life? All of you think closely upon this point."

T.: "I am here reminded of one powerful motive to do evil you have not mentioned in this investigation; yet, according to your own teaching, it leads more persons to do wrong than any other cause."

P.: "To what do you refer, Son Timothy?"

T.: "In your letter to me from Laodicea you said: 'The love of money is the root of all evil.' Could it be possible for an opponent to urge this objection to you? Of course I know such a surmise untrue, but I would have you consider it because we wish to be ready to defend the faith."

P.: "I am glad you are so thoughtful. I will say to you and to all that this is the easiest to meet of any objection we have considered. O, Timothy, 'thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured!' Have these been money or money's worth to me? Where is mine accuser? Who is he that will prove himself a madman to say these have been worldly wealth to me? If he can be found, read to him that catalogue of sufferings I incidentally mentioned in a letter to the Corinthians. Call it my salary I received as a minister of Christ. 'Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one,' which means I was whipped five times by my countrymen and received thirty-nine lashes at each infliction. Put this down as the first installment of my salary, which was paid promptly. 'Thrice was I beaten with rods.' This you may call the second installment in my salary, and it was also paid promptly. 'Once was I stoned.' You remember, Son Timothy, this occurred at Lystra, where I was rendered insensible for a time. 'Thrice I suffered shipwreck.' Yes, three times, when I was on board, the storm struck the vessel and I went down with the wreck. I never can forget the day and night I was in the deep—in the cold waters of the Mediterranean—clinging to a broken piece of the vessel to save my life. Quintus, your father, the centurion, has probably told you how the tempest, Euroclydon, struck the ship. Time would fail me, dear brethren, to speak particularly of the perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by my own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in the city, in the wilderness, at sea, and among false brethren, that I have suffered. O, the weariness, the painfulness, the frequent watchings, the hunger, the thirst, the fastings often, the cold, the nakedness that I have endured! Yet these are only outside burdens; inside, on my heart of love, I bear a greater burden—the care of the churches—praying for Ephesus, praying for the Corinthians, praying for the Thessalonians, praying for the Philippians, praying for the Colossians; yea, praying for 'all the churches;' and praying for individual Christians—for you, Timothy, and Marcus, Titus, and Tertias (my amanuensis), for Onesiphorus and his house (he often refreshed me in this city, and was not ashamed of my chain), and for Philemon, whom I always mention in my prayers. 'Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not? If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not. In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me: and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.' I submit that it is not in the power of mortal man to have endured all these things simply for the pleasure of living a lie and preaching a lie, when it brought me no worldly wealth or honor or earthly benefit. No, brethren, the motive to have undertaken such a task under the circumstances is entirely wanting. In the light of the facts let the cheek blush with confusion and burn to cinder with shame that would even insinuate that I have preached Christ for money or money's worth. My life is an open book. 'These hands,' all cracked with toil, which I held up before the elders of Ephesus, have ministered to my necessities and to those who were with me. I have coveted no man's gold, silver, or apparel. God is my witness as to how holily and justly and unblamably I behaved among them that believe. It would have been morally impossible for me from youth to old age to have preached knowingly and willingly a lie, facing the great judgment day of God, in which I believed even as a Pharisee. I submit the case. I have proven two negative propositions. The affirmative irresistibly follows. I am a true witness; I saw Christ; he has arisen; he is the Son of God; he is the only Savior of men; he is the one Mediator between God and men; his kingdom shall stand forever. Our hope of heaven is sure and steadfast. It rests on the two immutable things; the forerunner has entered in through the veil. But one thing remains for me, and that is to seal my testimony with my death. I am in sight of the end; I am ready to be offered."

T.: "You seem dearer to us than ever. We admire your heroism. O that each of us might receive a double portion of your spirit, as Elisha asked of Elijah!"

P.: "If I were to ascend to heaven in the chariot of the Lord without the pains of death, I might wish you to see me depart, but I would spare you the sorrow of witnessing my departure. I must be beheaded. The Lord will comfort me. I bequeath to you now more than the mantle of Elijah—the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. Commit it to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also. Take heed to yourself and the doctrine. You will by this means save yourself and those who hear you. This may be the last interview we shall have on earth. Join with me in the benediction: 'Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.'"

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 25.

From Colombo our course was northwest to Aden, across the Arabian Sea, a little more than two thousand miles. The monsoon beat upon us most of the way, but our good ship plowed majestically through the troubled waters. On the sixth day out we ran under the lee of the island of Socatra, which sheltered us from the fury of the wind. This island is eighty-two miles long and about twenty miles broad, with an area of about sixteen hundred square miles. Its whole population is not more than a hundred, composed of Arabs and English. In 1887 it was formally annexed to Great Britain.

We reached Aden early on the morning of August 12. It is quite impossible to imagine a more desolate-looking place than Aden, whose bleak volcanic hills are unrelieved by a single sprig of verdure. The rain falls here not oftener than once in three or four years. Originally Aden was wholly dependent on the rainfall for its water supply, and in order to conserve it, more than fifty tanks have been constructed, some of them being more than thirteen hundred years old. The natural features of the ground have been taken advantage of, and connected by small aqueducts to insure no water being lost. The overflow of one tank has been conducted into the succeeding, and thus a complete chain has been formed, reaching the city. Now that condensers have rendered available the vast ocean itself to slake the thirst of man and serve the many purposes of fresh water to the civilized world, the storage of rain water is comparatively of less immediate urgency than heretofore; but with a large and increasing population, in a hot, dry climate, the value of reservoirs is very great. It is said that the only things manufactured in Aden are salt and water.

The peninsula on which the city stands has an area of about thirty-five square miles and has a population of 35,000. It was taken and fortified by Great Britain in 1839, and of late years has grown to immense importance, particularly since the opening of the Suez Canal. It is under the immediate control of the Government of Bombay.

Before we came to anchor, the Octana was surrounded by Arab boats, whose dark-brown passengers clambered on board to offer the produce of the country for sale—ostrich feathers and eggs, lion and leopard skins, antelope horns, large saws from the sawfish, prettily woven baskets, shells and coral. But the sellers were far more interesting to me than their merchandise. Some of them were genuine Arabs; some, negroes; some, Somalis and Abyssinians. Most were dark brown in color, verging, in some, on copper color or bronze, and in others, nearly black. Their long, black, curly hair was, in many cases, stained with henna, which gave it a reddish-orange color; in other cases it had been whitewashed with chalk. The clothing of most of them consisted merely of a white cloth around the loins; and very amusing, too, were the little brown and black boys, who came out singly or in pairs, in little canoes formed of tree trunks, and displayed their diving powers, as was done in Colombo.

Our stay at Aden was short, for at 9:30 o'clock the same morning of our arrival we sailed out of the harbor of Aden, and at 4:30 o'clock the same afternoon we passed through the Strait of Babel-Mandeb into the Red Sea. The strait is fourteen miles wide, and is divided by the Island of Perim into two channels. We passed through the northeast channel, which is a mile and a half wide, but the southwestern channel is ten miles wide. Perim was in plain view. Long, low ranges of hills, and salt, sandy plains, are the distinguishing physical features. It belongs to Great Britain and is of great advantage to England, both in a political and commercial sense. Here is a fort, signal and telegraph station, from which passing vessels are reported to London.

Soon after entering into the Red Sea we passed alongside twelve small islands, called the "Twelve Apostles," standing like so many sentinels facing the African coast. They are about a mile apart.

I have been on no sea that was more interesting to me than this one; hence I gathered some interesting facts concerning it. Why it is called "red" I do not know. There is nothing in the water to justify its name that I could discover. It is as blue as any ocean I have ever crossed, and usually as calm as a mill pond. The entrance at the Strait of Babel-Mandeb is only fourteen miles wide, and in consequence there is a great inflow of "fresh" salt water from the Gulf of Aden to balance the great evaporation always proceeding. It has been calculated that but for this continuous supply the level of the sea, by evaporation alone, would be reduced twenty-three feet per annum. It seems, then, that if it were possible to block the entrance for a hundred years, the bed of the Red Sea would be turned into a huge mass of salt. This evaporation is due to the fact that this region is one of the hottest in the world. The attitude of the sun; the almost continually cloudless skies; the arid, rainless character of the shores; and the complete absence of rivers emptying into this sea combine to make the mean temperature very high. The temperature of the water at the south end of the sea is usually in excess of that of the air, and it is on record that the water has attained one hundred and six degrees, while at the same time that of the air was only eighty-three degrees.

The sea is twelve hundred miles long, two hundred miles in the widest part, and has a coast line of three thousand miles; and yet, according to scientific investigation, there is not one single river that empties into it. The northern end of the sea divides into two gulfs—those of Suez and Akabah. Suez, over which we sailed, is one hundred and ninety miles in length, and the length of Akabah is one hundred and thirty miles. Between these two gulfs is the peninsula of Sinai, on which occurred most of the events recorded in the history of the forty years' wanderings of the children of Israel. It is now an almost uninhabitable desert. It is so nearly destitute of water that travelers passing through are compelled to carry water with them over long distances.

At noon, on August 15, we passed out of the Red Sea into the Gulf of Suez, and during the whole afternoon were in plain view of mountains, rugged and bare; a few narrow valleys between the mountains; and a narrow coast plain along the gulf. One of the officers very kindly located Mount Sinai for us, and I sat and looked upon it till it was obscured by intervening mountains. As I looked on that bald peak, which rose seventy-three hundred and fifty-nine feet above us, I tried to imagine the grandeur when "there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled. And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount. And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly. And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice. And the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the Lord called Moses up to the top of the mount; and Moses went up." Certainly no grander sight ever greeted human eyes, or overwhelmed the human heart, than was witnessed by Israel that day. Such was the view on the mountain top, while almost as sublime was the sight of Israel's millions, "arrayed in garments clean and white, and standing in solemn awe on all the plains and mountain sides as far as the eye could reach."

Late in the afternoon we approached the northern terminus of the gulf, and then I turned my attention to the crossing place of the children of Israel, in their flight from Egypt. On the west I could see distinctly two mountain ranges, running parallel with the gulf, between which is a valley, some two or three miles wide, and beginning at the mouth of this valley is a beach some two miles wide and nine miles long. In all probability Israel passed through this valley, but, on reaching the sea, could not turn to the right, because of the mountain in that direction; they, therefore, turned to the left and marched along this beach till their progress was checked by a body of water. Here they must have camped by the sea, as the Lord had directed. The sea was on their right and a mountain on their left; the water also passed around to the front of them and met the mountain wall to their left. While thus encamped, Pharaoh, with his army, came down the valley and closed the gap behind them, and then it was that the people "lifted up their eyes, and, behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were sore afraid." Seeing their condition caused them to cry unto Moses, who cried to the Lord, who "caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided." This opening must have been seven or eight miles wide to let all Israel pass through in one night. The sea is eight miles wide, and the beaches on each side slope gradually.

• On our right, opposite this camping place, are the "Wells of Moses," situated on a sandy plain a mile from the seashore. Here Israel was refreshed with an abundance of fresh water and could see the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host.

It was after dark when we cast anchor in Suez harbor. Quite a number of Arabs, wrapped in white, loose robes from head to foot, were at the wharf, and they looked more like ghosts than men. Suez is a city possessing unique interest as a city of the desert and as marking the spot where the great crossing place has existed from West to East. History gives successive details of Egyptians, Israelites, Phenicians, Greeks, Romans, Mohammedans, Turks, Portuguese, Italians, French, and English utilizing Suez in their migrations and their commerce. It now has a population of about 21,000 inhabitants. Before the opening of the canal it was dependent for water on that which was brought on camels' backs from the Wells of Moses, eight miles distant; but now it has a good supply, brought through a canal from the Nile, a distance of one hundred and fifty-six miles.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

The Importance of Sound Speech—Further Specifications.

In my former article on the matter of sound speech, attention was invited to the prominence given the subject by inspired men, and special emphasis was placed upon its general importance. In addition to the particular instances then cited involving a violation of the principle under discussion, I deem it important to call attention to still further specifications, and I shall confine myself to instances where the principle involved is most flagrantly disregarded. Unless special attention has already been given the subject, the reader will doubtless be surprised at the numerous ways in which the word of God is virtually trampled under foot along the particular line of religious speech, and I solicit, therefore, serious and thoughtful attention to the matters yet to be presented.

1. And, first of all, the popular use of the term "church" demands attention. Regarding the term as the equivalent of the original word of which it is given as a translation, which is the only proper way to regard its New Testament usage, it always means, without exception in the religious sense, the people of God. Let this fact be borne in mind. There are no exceptions to it. Now, what does the fact signify? Whatever else may be said, it shows us definitely the sense which the Lord and inspired men have attached to the word, and if we show proper respect for divine authority, we cannot attach to it any other meaning. From this position there is simply no legitimate appeal; and yet, but few persons can be found who do not make it mean the material house in which the church sometimes meets. This is a perversion of the word of God. There is not a single instance of such use of the term in the entire word of God. Why not stop it, then? Do we show proper respect for inspired men when we thus pervert their use of words? With all properly thoughtful and serious persons, to ask such a question is to answer it. Little children are trained up from infancy to hear this perversion, and they, of course, fall into the same habit of speech. The result is, they are not only taught to call a mere meetinghouse the "church of God," but to regard it as the house of God, and, hence, a sacred place; but the word of God plainly says God's people are the house of God. "But Christ as a Son, over his house; whose house are we, if we hold fast our boldness and the glorying of our hope firm unto the end." (Heb. 3: 6, R. V.) "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 2: 5, R. V.) Moreover, with equal plainness, the word of God declares that a material house built by human hands is not the house of God by declaring that God does not now dwell in such houses. "Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in houses made with hands." (Acts 7: 48, R. V.) "The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands." (Acts 17: 24, R. V.) Now, when we add to all of this the solemn and inspired admonition that we shall always use sound speech, always speak "as it were oracles of God," it becomes nothing short of high-handed disregard of divine authority to persist in the ordinary misuse and abuse of the term "church." It does not excuse the matter to say that it is a case of mere thoughtlessness on the part of those who thus misuse and abuse Bible language, for the thoughtlessness itself is the sin in this case. We should control our thinking, and the apostle specifically enjoins upon us the things on which we are to think (Phil. 4: 8), and among them he tells us to think on "things that are true." Many persons know better, but, because of thoughtlessness, fail to do better. They should think, and think till they think right, and never consider that they think right on such matters till their thoughts run in the channel where the Lord leads.

2. The popular abuse of the Bible word "Sabbath" is another instance of violating the word of God in the matter of sound speech. The application of this word to the first day of the week, together with all the scriptures that speak at all of the Sabbath, is well-nigh universal among the leading denominations of the present day. Without entering into the merits of the argument here, there are well-grounded reasons for the position that "the Lord's day" spoken of in Rev. 1: 10 is the first day of the week. Why not, then, honor it in the beautiful and divine light in which it appears in the word of God—not only in theory, but in practice as well—including the language in which we make reference to it? Why not call it "the Lord's day," or "the first day of the week," and thus speak as the word of God speaks? Surely the momentous event which it commemorates in the heart and life of all truly devoted followers of Christ is of sufficient importance to thus distinguish and magnify the day. Instead, therefore, of hiding the day behind a mass of sacred verbiage which applies to the seventh day of the week, and thus obscuring, in part, the sublime matters which it is designed to signalize before the world, why not all Christians proclaim, in word and in deed, that it is preeminently the Lord's day? The divine arrangement is that on one day out of every seven, and that on the first day of the week, the followers of the risen and glorified Son of God shall proclaim to the world his sacrificial death and triumphant resurrection from the dead. It is, indeed, the Lord's day, and Christians should rejoice to signalize it as such. Instead of calling it "the Sabbath," the inspired writers have so referred to it as to associate it with the Son of God, and the simple worship prescribed for the day is such as to perpetuate his name and work among men. It is doubtless a fortunate coincidence that the civil government has fixed upon this day as its Sabbath, thus giving Christians a better opportunity for reaching the world with the peculiar proclamation they are to make on that day; but besides refraining from the ordinary operations of labor and traffic, Christians have a positive work to perform in magnifying Christ before men. They should never lose sight of this fact, either in word or in deed; they should do on this day what the word of God directs, and speak of the day as it is spoken of in the word of God.

M. C. KURFEES.

Louisville, Ky.

The Well-spent Life.

Father Time is not always a hard parent, and though he tarries for none of his children, often lays his hand lightly upon those who have used him well, making them old men and women inexorably enough, but leaving their hearts and spirits young and in full vigor. With such people the gray head is but the impression of the old fellow's hand in giving them his blessing, and every wrinkle but a notch in the calendar of a well-spent life.—Dickens.

We only know what freedom is when we have surrendered everything to God.—George H. C. Macgregor.

Is Christianity Practicable? No. 3.

The principles upon which Christ lived are practicable and of universal application. The Christian life is based upon the principle of "giving and receiving." A Christian, whether in religion or the daily pursuit of business, will endeavor to give, of whatever he possesses, all that he can for as little in turn as he can do with. Of course, the support of his family is imperative, but he will not make that a mere pretext for gain and extortion. If he be anxious to honor God, he will have but little difficulty in finding out what it means to "provide for his own." Christ gave whatever of himself or the things that he possessed to enrich the people in temporal and spiritual things, and joyfully received whatever in turn they could give. The purse carried by the little band of disciples was the receptacle of the voluntary contributions of friends; and, by the way, you who object to accepting the gifts of outsiders, make a note of this. If you administer to the spiritually famished people the bread of life, you must follow the example of Christ and give as much as you possibly can for as little of the things of life as will suffice to meet the necessities of your family. This is what Jesus did. He never made enough preaching the gospel and healing the sick to even buy him a home; and he thought that the "servant was not above his master." Suppose we reverse the principle, and, as preachers of the gospel, give just as little of the gospel and our time and means to the people as we possibly can for as much of their means and services as they will give. You say any sinner can see that that is a base principle of conduct for a preacher. I know preachers who keep back their best ideas for the large audiences. Men that practice such strategy on the people are traitors to Christ and deceivers of good men. Beware of the leaven of the preachers! But if you are limited in your sphere of usefulness, and mean to serve Christ in connection with some legitimate business, how will you go about it? Suppose it be the business of serving the people with loaves and fishes. Will you have a place for Christ in such a humble sphere as that? Did not Christ exalt the humblest things of life by associating the most redeeming influences of his sacrificial life with the bread of universal need? Suppose you do with the bread of natural life as you think the preacher should do with the spiritual food of life: make as big loaves as practicable and give as much of it as the people need for as little as you can get along with. But unfortunately for the cause of Christ and the best interest of the soul, at this juncture the most of the people throw off the mantle of religious obligation and part company with Christ.

Not long since I entered the mercantile quarters of a member of the average church. I thought the price of a certain article of goods rather dear. The merchant possessed, in common with other people, the idea of selling goods for gain. How can people live and support dependent ones without selling and buying for gain? I asked him if it would not be the thing for Christians to sell the things that the people need and for as little profit as possible. He answered in the negative. If people felt their need of the gospel as they do the things pertaining to the life that now is, would not Christian people take advantage of their necessities and speculate in spiritual things, the same as they do in other things? This is just what the leaders of the people were doing in the time of the Savior; hence he entered the house of the Lord, which had become a den of thieves in spiritual traffic, and drove them all out. The way in which this work seems to be accomplished is by making the people feel their need of spiritual things; and the most effectual means of doing this is by the old process of monopolizing religion, like preachers, priests, and the lodges have adopted from time immemorial. I then said to the merchant: "Suppose preachers follow the example of salesmen—give just as little of time, service, and means as they possibly can to hold their places, for as much pay as they can, under all circumstances, get from the people." He thought that would not do at all. "Why, we would have no religion left in a very short time." I said that is what many of them are doing; they have "stolen the livery of heaven to serve the devil in." But surely they are no worse in the sight of God than Christians who take advantage of the necessities of the people and deal in the bread of the natural life simply for gain. It may be perfectly legitimate for me to speculate on the luxuries of life and artificial religion, for neither is necessary; the people do not have to have either.

I do not see for the life of me how any conscientious man can justify the practice of preaching the gospel gratis and work at anything else for gain. The Bible makes no distinction in the work of serving people as a minister of the gospel and serving your brother on the farm, in the store, or in any other capacity. Custom has reconciled us to a distinction that does not exist. If I build a house for money, I neither serve man nor honor God; if I preach the gospel for money, I neither please God nor save man. No man ever made a good soldier, a good mechanic, a good physician, a good statesman, a good school-teacher, a good farmer, a good preacher, or a good savior simply for money. Look over the long list of heroes and moral regenerators and tell me if the greatest benefactors of mankind have not done their work for nothing. The "inspiration of money" is largely responsible for the dilapidated condition of the church of Christ to-day. The quickest and most effectual cure of clerical jealousy and lay rivalry is the dethronement of mammon by withdrawal of salary. Get back to apostolic simplicity in "giving and receiving," and Christianity may be triumphantly restored to the world. Let us inaugurate a move all along the line to rescue Christianity from the mercenary prelates who have converted it into a den of merchandise by their deafening vociferations, "godliness is great gain," and have made void the commandments of God by their doctrine that "godliness is profitable in all things," especially for the life that now is.

The matter of eternal salvation stands about this way: Every Christian must honor God and serve his fellow-man in whatever sphere he moves, or bid farewell to the hope of entering heaven. If one have the ability and means of preaching the gospel, he must not hesitate to go at his own expense and do what he can to save men from sin and eternal ruin. In so doing he will both save his own soul and them that hear him. If he refuses to go, he will be lost. He can hire no substitute in this matter; God wants personal service in saving souls. The brother that can preach, but has not the means to support his family, must make a fair trial of the promises of God; and if the brethren who cannot preach the word and have means to supply his wants refuse or neglect to do it, they will lose their lives in the end. It is a matter of life and death with the people of God. None can beat their way to heaven, or go at others' expense. When we pray for the kingdom of God to come, if sincere, we must be willing to pay our part of the expenses; if we refuse to do so, all the good that we derive from the gospel—and that is a great deal—will extend no farther than the enjoyments of this world.

All religions have their gods, and each of them is some hero. One nation worships the god of war, another worships the goddess of fame, and others worship the god of this world. But who is the Christian's God? One acquainted with the teachings and character of the Christ would expect to find the hero of Christian worship on the battlefields of moral conflict, wrestling with the problems of moral and physical evils; but, strange as it may appear to the uninitiated, the spectacle of spiritual activity does not present that aspect of Christ's work. The greater part of the homage rendered to Christ is owing to the misconception that he is the special friend of successful warriors. Christ puts a greater laurel upon the saviors of life, men bestow the greater honors upon those who destroy the greatest number. It is a matter of great wonder to all right-thinking people that the feeding of the hungry and the clothing of the naked, even when practiced on a large scale, is not considered the greatest manifestation of heroism. "I never could make out how it is that people are ready to go on fervent crusades to recover the tomb of a buried God, but never make any effort to obey the commands of a living God; that they will go barefooted to preach their faith, but must be well bribed to practice it; and are perfectly willing to give the gospel gratis; but never the loaves and fishes." The same author says that we have a nominal religion, to which we give one-tenth of our money and one-seventh of our time; but we have a real religion to which we give nine-tenths of our money and six-sevenths of our time.

W. J. BROWN.

Coal City, Ind.

Wide is the sea through which I have to steer my course, and high its swelling waves; but grace is the breeze that fills the sails, my compass is faith, and my pilot is Christ.—Tholuck.

Good actions crown themselves with lasting days;
Who deserves well, needs not another's praise,

—R. Neath.

Unwavering Faith.

Some of the leading thoughts in this article were presented in the Gospel Advocate some weeks ago; nevertheless, they will bear repeating, although they may not appear in as forcible style now as they did then.

We can know nothing of God or his work except what he has revealed to us, and to the extent that he has revealed it. We can apprehend these things to the extent of his revelation, but cannot fully comprehend them. The idea of eternity is more than we can comprehend; to attempt to reason it out, the mind is lost in bewilderment. The finite cannot comprehend the infinite. It is worse than folly, it is wicked presumption, to attempt to subordinate God's works and ways to our reasoning. The wisdom of man is foolishness with God. We must accommodate our reasoning, our science, and our philosophy to God's revelation, and not try to accommodate God's revelation to our reasoning, science, or philosophy. We have no right to reject anything in God's word because it is "contrary to nature."

I heard a preacher say, in a discourse at this place, that the book of Job is a fable and that the book of Jonah is a myth; that a whale had not a gullet large enough to swallow a man. How did this preacher or any one else know the books of Job and Jonah are not what they purport in God's word to be? I examined Smith's Bible Dictionary as soon as I got home from the man's preaching to see if he said anything about Jonah and the whale. Smith says there are whales in the Mediterranean Sea that have gullets amply large to enable them to swallow a man, but my faith had not been shaken by what the preacher said. I value a faith like the little boy's, that I once read of. He read a lesson in school about Jonah and the whale. The teacher was an infidel. After the boy read his lesson, the teacher questioned him on it. "Do you believe that ridiculous story about the whale swallowing Jonah?" asked the teacher.

"I believe the whale swallowed Jonah," said the boy.

"And why do you believe the whale swallowed Jonah?"

"Because the Bible says so," replied the boy.

"You believe it because the Bible says so?" said the teacher, sneeringly.

"Yes, sir," said the boy. "I believe the whale swallowed Jonah, because the Bible says so; and if the Bible had said Jonah swallowed the whale, I would believe that."

This is the kind of faith to have. Believe the divine testimony, whether or not it harmonizes with our reason, science, or philosophy.

Some say the six days mentioned in Genesis are six indefinite periods of time, of about a thousand years each—for one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; and so it is as far as God's predictions are concerned. If he predicts a thing to come to pass in a thousand years, it is as certain to come to pass as if he were to predict it to come to pass in a day. But the science of geology says it is impossible for the earth to have been formed, with its present geological strata, in less than thousands of years. Was that impossible with God? I have learned of but one thing impossible with God: It is impossible for God to lie. But "day" is used frequently in the Bible as meaning an indefinite period of time. Very true, but when it is used in connection with "evening and morning" it always means a day of twenty-four hours. Could not God have created the earth, with its present geological strata, in one day just as well as it could have formed itself in ten thousand years? Shall we limit omnipotence?

But let us see what a fix your science gets things into. The sun and moon were created on the fourth day. There were two days of creation after this, each a thousand years or more in length. The sun was to rule each of these thousand-year days. When did the earth change her revolutions so that the sun now rules only the present length of days? Can your science tell us when this change was made? But there is another change necessitated. Then, one day was a thousand years; now it takes three hundred and sixty-five days to make one year. When was this change?

Let us look at this a little closer. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." "In the beginning"—when was that? Let us see John 1: 1, 2: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." Also the Savior's prayer in John 17: 5: "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." So, then, we see from these scriptures that "in the beginning" was a period before time began; it was in this period that God created the earth. When God came to set things in their present order in the six days' creation "the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." Now God has the material before him out of which to set things in the order of his new creation—namely, a shapeless earth, enveloped in water and covered with darkness. Now we can see his work upon the material at hand.

Let us see what was the first work of this new creation: "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." This was the first work of the new creation. "And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day." So there was the first day of time; then was when time began. You can read on and see each day's work of the six, and God resting on the seventh day, and no necessity of any thousand-year days about it.

A law to the Jews is prefaced by saying: "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day." Therefore the Jew was required to do all his work in six days, and, on the seventh, do no work. Was it six thousand years' work for the Jews and one thousand years' rest? If the days of creation were thousands of years, it was. Let us believe the Bible, though it make all human science false.

Thorp Spring, Texas.

J. A. CLARK.

"The Church Supplanted."

In the Gospel Advocate of November 16 is an article quoted from Marion Harland, in the Congregationalist, on the above theme; also an article from Brother Lipscomb touching the same subject. There is at present among all religious people an acknowledged lack of interest in the church worship, and a consequent nonattendance on the part of many professed Christians, especially the young people. Such a state of affairs calls for the prayerful consideration of all lovers of Bible truth. Again, to show the importance of this matter, it was recently stated by a Baptist paper that over eighty thousand people were disfellowshipped by that church last year, and Mr. Moody said that over half of the entire population of the United States does not attend church service at all. He even said: "The people have taken up with every new 'ism' that has come along, until they now have drifted into infidelity." This is evidently true; for unbelief, of one kind or another, is one of the great sins of the age. These facts, together with the known neglect of church duty by those who claim to be members of the church of Christ, ought to cause true Christians to pause and ask: Why is this true?

Of course, sectarianism, with its many contradictory doctrines and practices, is the cause of forty millions of people not attending church; the wonder is that not a greater per cent of the people are disgusted and driven into willful neglect or open infidelity. But this fails to account for the neglect on the part of those who claim to be Christians and abide by the word of God.

In the article first referred to, the writer accounts for the neglect in church attendance by the fact that the church has been supplanted by the Sunday school and the young people's associations. If this be true in sectarian churches, may we not also find here the trouble, in part, at least, in the church of Christ? Does not the formation of other organizations besides the church implant in the young mind the idea that the work of the church can be done without the church? Hence, they grow up with the impression that the church is not absolutely necessary. Besides all this, if such organizations had been necessary to carry on church work, it is remarkably strange that no apostle ever called such aids to the assistance of the early congregations. In speaking to the elders of the church at Ephesus, Paul said: "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Such organizations are certainly not in the "counsel of God." But Paul further says that he had "kept back nothing that was profitable" unto them. Then, if human societies are even an aid to church work and profitable, why did not the apostles use them? To say that we are living under different circumstances does not satisfactorily settle the question. If there would ever be need for such things, we cannot explain why some apostle should not tell us so, seeing they knew there would be departures from the faith, and so told us. But the preaching of the gospel and work of the church were more successful at the time when they used no societies than it has ever been since. Then, they certainly cannot be an aid to success. But aside from the facts that the apostles never used such or gave any instruction about the formation of them, let us look at the practical working of such organizations and their influence upon the church.

In the first place, the same objection of defectiveness can be urged against them that their advocates urge against the church. None of them covers the ground; new contingencies arise and call for new societies; hence the people are soon burdened with such aids. The problem is no nearer settled when the last society was formed than when the first was formed.

Next, they take time and money that should be devoted exclusively to the church. This leads more or less to making the church occupy a second place in the minds of the members. It also divides the honor that belongs to the church alone.

Next, they are very easy connecting links between the church and sectarianism, and the church and the world—county, State, and national conventions, in which professed Christians meet in religious union and fellowship with all forms of sectarianism. This is clearly contrary to the Scriptures. "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed: for he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." (2 John 10, 11.) Then societies call for fairs, festivals, picnics, banners, bands, and other worldly means to keep the people stimulated to go the rounds laid out by the various programmes. All this reduces religious work to the level of worldly matters and appeals to the flesh instead of the spirit. But it is often urged that such things are a necessity to draw the people, or interest them in religious work. This is a mistaken idea; in fact, it has been demonstrated that they are a failure along this line. When the eloquence of the blood of Christ fails to interest and draw a person, he will be a useless member if drawn some other way. To interest the young by worldly inventions will be to implant in their minds ideas that will lead them to pervert the truth when they are old enough to obey it. To use such for those who are already Christians will produce the results already mentioned. Instead of societies being a means to increase interest in church worship they are one great cause of leading so many to either abandon the worship or regard it lightly. In another article I will give another cause of this neglect of worship, and what I consider the scriptural way to remedy the defect.

JOHN T. HINDS.

Fayetteville, Ark.

The door of the inner house, or rather of the inner chamber, is barred sometimes by such a preoccupation with the work as tends to an oblivion of the Master; particularly by such a neglect of Scripture amidst a thousand efforts as leaves the Christian practically ignorant of what the offers of his Lord are and what are the blissful possibilities to which he is called.—H. C. G. Moule.

To-morrow hath a rare, alluring sound;
To-day is very prose; and yet the twain
Are but one vision seen through altered eyes.
Our dreams inhabit one, our stress and pain
Surge through the other. Heaven is but to-day
Made lovely with to-morrow's face for aye.

—Richard Burton.

Sweet satisfaction comes to those who try, no matter how humbly, to be earthly providences to the poor and helpless, and gild their mite with the gold of charity, before it is laid up where thieves cannot break through and steal.—Louisa M. Abbott.

The work God has given me to do is to amend whatever is amiss in my natural disposition; that is what he would have me do—correct my faults, sanctify my desires and longings, become more patient, more meek and lowly of heart.—Fenelon.

A humble man is a joyous man. There is no worship where there is no joy; for worship is something more than either the fear of God or the love of him. It is delight in him.—F. W. Faber.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother E. G. Sewell preached at the church of Christ on Line street, this city, last Sunday morning.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached for the church of Christ at Tenth and Russell streets, this city, last Lord's day morning. R. H. McLaurine preached at night.

My wife and I are just leaving for Florida. Leesburg will be our headquarters for six weeks. If any congregation or community wishes a meeting, I would be glad to preach for them while there. I would like to hold two or three meetings.—T. A. Smith, Chestnut Bluff, Tenn.

On the first day of the new year, at 11 o'clock in the morning, the destinies of Dr. L. L. Tilley and Miss Lillian Hill were blended for life. The marriage occurred in the presence of a large number of friends at the Bethlehem house of worship, near Tucker's Cross Roads, Tenn. The contracting parties are both active and useful members of the church of Christ and start out in life with bright prospects for happiness and usefulness in the future. I pray that their lives may never be overshadowed by the dark clouds of gloom and sorrow. The marriage ceremony was performed by the writer.—James K. Hill.

Brother T. B. Larimore preached to large audiences at the church of Christ on South College street, this city, last Lord's day at 11, 3, and 7:30 o'clock. His morning text was: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Jesus Christ unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 8-10.) He said that while there are seeming discrepancies, inconsistencies, and contradictions in the Bible, in reality there are none, and that there is no conflict between the doctrines of salvation by grace and salvation by works. "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." He said that while light, air, and water are free, we can only enjoy them in God's own appointed way; that salvation is free—by grace—but we can enjoy it only in God's own appointed way. He continues through the week and over next Lord's day, preaching on the week days at 3 P.M. and 7:30 P. M. All are cordially invited to attend.

EDITORIAL.

God's heroes do not attract much attention.

Every time the Christian frowns the devil smiles.

The boy who has his own way is sure to go to ruin.

With more good homes we will have fewer criminals.

We can perform God's work only with the strength he gives.

If the Lord never said "No" to our desires, how miserable we would be!

The man who does not control himself submits to being ruled by the devil.

No man ever yet went astray by spending his nights at home with his family.

The man can never fall who stakes his all on the right. God will not let him fall.

For every new responsibility the Lord places upon us he gives us new strength.

Men are more frequently drowned in the pleasures of life than in gall and wormwood.

The odor of whisky on the breath of one who claims to be a Christian is a bad advertisement.

Our lives must be brought into conformity with the divine will before our troubled souls can be filled with peace.

The Christian who will sacrifice more for societies than for the church of God does not have much love for the Lord Jesus Christ.

No trial is so severe that the Lord cannot bring good out of it to us, provided we always bow in humble submission to his will.

Sorrow that we can put away at our pleasure is no sorrow at all. Real sorrow is sharp and keen, and stings you in spite of all you can do.

God has use for every man who says: "Here am I." He has a living coal for his lips, and will inspire him with an eloquence that will move thousands.

The husband who has much love and devotion for his wife will sometimes tell her about it. Indifference will chill the fires of devotion in any heart.

The growing need of the hour is more consecration. With the church treasuries full to overflowing with money, still the world will not be converted.

The difference between the regenerate man and the unregenerate man is that the unregenerate man lives in sin, and he loves it; but the regenerate man lapses into sin, and he loathes it.—A. J. Gordon.

The drunkard is one who is controlled by his appetites. Excess, revelry, and drunkenness lead to crimes which would never be committed if the actors were sober. Mob rule of the internal forces will ruin any man.

Only those are truly great who do much good in the world. A big brain is not a blessing to its possessor if it is not used in doing good. The man who does the most good in the cause of Christ is the greatest man. The Savior judged men by their fruits.

If any little word of mine
May make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
May make a heart the lighter,
God help me to speak the little word
And take my bit of singing
And drop it in some lonely vale
To set the echoes ringing.
—Anon.

A bankrupt and disgraced promoter of fraudulent schemes, during the days of his seeming prosperity and while he was making lavish displays of great wealth, presented the famous cathedral of St. Paul, in London, with a communion service of solid gold which cost $125,000. Since then it has come to be known that this man was a shameless fraud; and that his money was filched from his dupes by cunning schemes. The trustees of the cathedral have, with a commendable sense of honor, returned the full cost of the communion service received by them to the scoundrel's creditors; in that way they have kept their hands clean and stainless. It would hasten the coming of the reign of Christ on earth if every Christian business man would thus hold himself clear of every possible connection with dishonest money.—Selected.

It is not those who make the greatest noise in the world that accomplish the most for the Master. "An empty wagon rattles the loudest." People of great force and strong will are not forever asserting themselves. The one who silently resolves and watchfully waits is sure to conquer in the end. Bluster is not courage, noise is not power, and a rude and domineering manner is no evidence of determination or force of character. Many people make a mistake just here. They are so afraid that they will be considered weak that they adopt an abrupt, on-the-defensive air, which is very unpleasant. Gentleness is no bar, to forcefulness. The man who has the most force in his home, in the community, and in the church is usually the calm, gentle man, who silently works out his plans and patiently waits for them to develop.

Sins of omission will shut a man out of heaven as well as sins of commission. Criticising those who make blunders will not save any man while he sits idly by and does nothing. While we contend for the faith we should war a good warfare; when we pull down the stronghold of error, on the ruins we should erect the edifice of truth; as we destroy the works of men's hands, we should labor to strengthen the walls of the church of God. Active work in building up the church of God is the most effective way of pulling down the strongholds of error. Crying out against innovations, while we do not show unto those in error the more excellent way, will be in vain. "Prove your faith by your works." Labor for God's honor and glory as you do for nothing else; run to carry the message of salvation to a lost soul; war a good warfare in helping him, as well as yourself, overcome the forces of evil; and gird your loins with the truth, that you may be supported and strengthened to overcome every power the wicked one may bring against you. Let every Christian and every church put on the whole armor of God and make the most aggressive fight possible against error in every form. Thousands are growing weary of so much machinery, form, and ceremony. Now is the time to emphasize what the church of God, unfettered, can do. Brethren, if we fail to do our duty, God will raise up others who will do the work; but if we fail, fearful will be our responsibility.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

I like the calendar issued by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company better than any I have seen.—F. D. Srygley.

Quite a number of subscriptions expire this month, and there are many on our list whose subscriptions have already expired, and who have not yet renewed, of whom we earnestly request an early renewal. As an inducement to new subscribers, and to old subscribers to renew, we make the following liberal offers for a limited time: We will send the Gospel Advocate to new subscribers and renewals for one year for $1.50, with the choice of one of the following premiums: Home and Farm, for one year; a gold-edge Morocco pocket Testament; or our new calendar for 1900. Nearly all of our readers are familiar with the merits of Home and Farm as an agricultural and home paper. Our calendar is superior to anything we have produced heretofore, is a work of art, and represents the high standard of work done by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. We will send the Gospel Advocate one year and a Nelson's 32mo Text Bible for $2, or we will send the Bible as a premium for one new subscriber for a year. We also continue the offer of the Advocate one year, together with our Art Bible, for $3 to old and new subscribers alike; or we will send the Bible to any one sending us two new subscribers. We cannot give it with a renewal and a new subscriber, and to take advantage of these offers, orders must be made direct to us, and not through an agent; because when an agent claims his commission, we cannot afford to pay a second commission by giving the subscriber a premium. We will also take pleasure in sending the paper one month free to addresses sent us, at the close of which time the paper will be promptly discontinued, if we do not receive an order asking to be placed on our regular list.

We want to keep our premium offer before you. A number have taken advantage of the offer to secure the paper and Bible. The price of the paper is $1.50 per year, and we send the Bible alone, postpaid, for $2.25. You will, no doubt, appreciate the arrangement of this Bible. It contains the text of the Authorized Version, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version. Hear some of the expressions in regard to its arrangement and helps: "A modified parallel Bible." (California Christian Advocate, San Francisco, Cal.) "The most helpful Bible yet issued." (Christian Witness, Boston, Mass.) "The most complete Teachers' Bible we have ever seen. It is an invaluable treasury." (Peninsula Methodist, Wilmington, Del.) "This is one of the most valuable and useful editions of the Bible that we have yet seen. It gives the reader the benefit of both versions." (Christian Courier, Dallas, Texas.) "Eyre & Spottswood's Bible is good, Bagster's has some points in its favor, the new and improved Oxford is excellent; but each of the above, and all others, fall far short of the 'Combination' Bible. The type is large and clear." (Christian Advocate, Greenville, S. C.) "We have never seen a more helpful Teachers' Bible; it is a vast cyclopedia of the most useful information." (Church Messenger and Christian Endeavor, Providence, R. I.) "We cannot too highly commend this 'Combination' Bible, since it contains so many good features and is so complete." (Journal and Messenger, Cincinnati, O.) "One of the best offered to Sunday school teachers and Bible readers. It is approved by the leading ministers of all denominations." (Baltimore Methodist, Baltimore, Md.) "The very book for Bible students, teachers, and preachers; quite beyond anything of the kind we have ever seen." (American Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.) It contains quite a number of full-page illustrations, "Harmony of the Gospels," "Chronology of the Acts and Epistles," valuable tables of weights and measures, subject index, concordance, scripture atlas, and many other helps. The Bible is self-pronouncing, has gold edges over red, and is quite a handsome book. We send the Advocate one year, and the Bible, for $3; or, if you will send us two new subscribers at the regular price of $1.50 each, we will send you the Bible as a premium.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.

From early remembrance I have heard the claim made that the seven churches mentioned in the first part of the book of Revelation were not real churches, but only figures, to represent and teach certain principles; in fact, in those days almost everything in the Bible was regarded as being figurative, and it was claimed that only the figurative or spiritual meaning of the word could do anybody any good; that the plain, literal meaning of the word had no power whatever to save any one. They claimed, moreover, that only the called and sent preachers could so expound the word as to give the spiritual meaning of the word. It was not at all supposed in those days that the common people could understand the literal word, obey it, and be saved by it; and this habit of interpreting, spiritualizing everything in the Bible, likely started the habit of regarding the book of Revelation, including the seven churches of Asia, as all figurative. But the idea that the seven churches were not real churches in existence then, but intended to illustrate something yet in the future, is still in the world. I do not know why it should be so, but it is.

So far as I am concerned, if I am not to understand that the seven churches were in actual existence then, and at the towns and cities named, I do not see how I am to understand there was really an Isle of Patmos in the case; or that, in reality, the apostle John was there; or how he could send the seven letters to the seven churches when no such churches were in existence. I would as soon doubt the existence at that time of the churches at Antioch, Philippi, Corinth, or anywhere else, as to doubt the reality of these seven churches. No doubt whatever exists in my mind about the actual existence of those churches at that time, nor do I see how any one can doubt that these letters were actually sent to those churches at that time to teach them more fully about the Christian life. There were defects in the lives of those churches, and as the New Testament had not yet been collected and given to the churches, the information given in these seven letters was just as important to them as were the letters to the Romans, Corinthians, or the churches of Galatia; and just as these letters to the churches just named were preserved and became part of the New Testament, so did the seven letters to the seven churches.

John says: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea." (Rev. 1: 10, 11.) These seven towns actually existed, and there were congregations of Christians in them, just as there are congregations of disciples of Christ in many towns and villages to-day; and most of those congregations were going wrong in some things, and Christ, in love and mercy, appeared in vision to John, while banished to the isle of Patmos, and told him what to write to these churches, that they might correct their wrongs and live nearer to God.

The first letter was addressed to Ephesus, a large city on the coast of the Ægean Sea, where Paul labored for two years and three months in establishing the cause, as we learn from Acts 19. After giving them credit for many good things they were doing, the Lord lets them know that there were very dangerous defects among them. He said: "Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." This letter shows that the work of Christians and congregations is closely scrutinized, and that all the good they do is seen and known, and all the evil. It shows that Christians may and do perform many good things, for which they get no credit, and may even be lost at last; for the Lord tells these people, after acknowledging many good things they did, that unless they would repent they should be destroyed; that their candlestick—their church—would be dissolved.

People may go along in a fashionable, easy-going sort of way that suits their fancy and that is popular, and do many good things, and yet not be the church of God, and be actually on their road to ruin. All churches in the land keep up a pretty good degree of morality in a general way, because it is popular in their eyes; and while they are not rejecting the word of God, yet, instead of doing what God says, they are doing something else that suits them better, showing that they have no respect for God and his authority, but that their own inventions suit them better than the word of God. Hence in this manner they turn away from what God says and do some other way that they prefer.

This is about what I suppose Jesus meant when he said: "Thou hast left thy first love." At first they loved God well enough to do just what he said do, and trust him for the blessing, and this is just what all will do that love God truly. Jesus said: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." All men that truly love God will keep his words, will do just what he says do; but when they begin to think more of the ways and inventions of men than they do of the word and ways of God, they will follow men instead of following God. These Ephesians had done this until their doom was fixed, unless they would repent, would go back to first principles, and do the will of God just as he gave it and for the sake of being in harmony with God. It is not sufficient that we do God's will because it seems right in our eyes and is popular with men; we should do just what God says, and because he says it, and not because it is popular with the world. There are thousands and millions to-day that are doing things that seem perfectly right in their eyes, and things that are popular with the world, and yet things which were never required and which God will never approve. At the same time, these people, like the Ephesians, are doing many things that God approves, things he has commanded; but they are done in a way and with a motive that show they are not doing God's will purely for his sake. Such a course is awfully dangerous; it was threatening the overthrow of the church of Ephesus, and will bring the ultimate overthrow of any other church that will pursue the same course. God is jealous of his will and will not allow any sort of rivalry in the hearts of his servants. If they love the ways of men more than his ways, he turns them over to work their own ruin.

The church of Ephesus went down and the whole city went down, so that for a great while past there has been no city there. If that church had continued faithful to God through the ages all along, it would have remained till now, and all the storms and upheavals of nations could not have destroyed it; and just the same principle is true now. The faithful followers of Christ have the promise of the life that now is, and also of that which is to come. Where Christians will be faithful, the good work goes on from generation to generation; it is where men forsake the Lord that the candlestick is removed and the light goes out. So long as congregations are faithful, the Lord walks and dwells among them; but as certainly as they forsake him he will forsake them and cease to dwell with and bless them.

The warnings to God's children are very strong in this letter to the church at Ephesus, and all Christians now should apply these same principles to themselves. That is the beauty of these seven letters to the seven churches; for congregations to-day can look into these letters and see their own defects as plainly as those churches could see theirs. In the closing part of this letter the Lord said: "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

The Spirit of God, through the New Testament, has taught all Christians how to live, and they must hear his words. It is not enough to hear what men say or what our preference requires; we must hear what the Spirit says. No man to-day is honoring God except in doing what the Spirit of God bids him do, and no church is worthy of the claim to be a church of God that does not hear and heed what the Spirit says to the churches. The promise of reaching the tree of life in the paradise of God is only to him that overcometh; and who is he that overcomes sin, overcomes the world and Satan? The answer is: Only he that continues to resist and overcome evil to the end of his life on earth. If a man resists till old age, and then gives himself up to sin, he has no promise of eternal life. We must keep up the struggle against sin to the end.

These same instructions and promises are given at the close of all these letters. Every time they are commanded to hear what the Spirit says to the churches, and the promise every time is to him that holds out faithfully to the end. These things were not alone for those seven churches; they are for the benefit of all churches to the end of time; they are just as valuable and just as important for all churches to-day as they were to those seven, and will be to the end of time; and it is a very important question as to what churches to-day are heeding the command to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Likely all churches are heeding in some things, but what churches are there to-day that are wholly following what the Spirit says? Some are following in many things, and yet in some very important particulars are following what men say. James (2: 10) says: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

This passage is a very important one. It does not mean that if a man unintentionally, and without any design, does a single wrong thing he is guilty of all; because we are plainly taught elsewhere that such sins can be repented of and forgiven. But the sin spoken of by James does not look very much like one that will be pardoned, when it makes him guilty of the whole law. It is evidently a case in which men know what God says, but do not like to do it, and go beyond the word of God and do what men say, because it suits them better. This kind of sin is seldom repented of. When men sin through weakness and become sensible of it, they repent at once and try to commit that sin no more; but men that turn away from God's word because they do not like it, and do something else because they like it better, seldom ever turn from it. On the other hand, they depart more and more from the word of God and adopt more and more of human inventions and get farther and farther from what the Spirit says to the churches. We know not of any promise of pardon for such sins. Our only safety, therefore, is to stick to the word of God. Then the blessing is sure. E. G. S.

Grover Cleveland's Bible.

There is a great deal of sentiment about Grover Cleveland, which he inherited from his mother, and a religious vein, which comes from his father. Upon his writing table, in the library at Princeton, lies the old-fashioned Bible, with covers of black enamel, which was given him by his mother when he first went away from home. While he was President, the little volume was always kept in the upper left-hand drawer of the desk that was presented to the President of the United States by the Queen of England as a memento of the Sir John Franklin expedition to the arctic region. At the top of the cover, in a little space surrounded by an ornamental border, is inscribed in gilt the name, "S. G. Cleveland," and upon the fly leaf there is a line or two of writing in a neat, precise feminine hand, from which we learn that the book was a gift to "My son, Stephen Grover Cleveland, from his loving mother."

Colonel Lamont says that he first saw this Bible on the table in Mr. Cleveland's law office in Buffalo, and other friends remember having seen it there. When Mayor Cleveland became Governor the book was generally on the bureau of his bedroom; when the Governor was about to become President, Colonel Lamont found the little Bible in the President's rooms at the Arlington, and, handing it to Chief Justice Waite, asked him to use it when he swore the new chief magistrate into office. There were about forty thousand witnesses on the plaza in front of the capitol when Stephen Grover Cleveland pressed his mother's gift to his lips, and before it was returned to him, Mr. Middleton, the Clerk of the Supreme Court, entered a formal record on the last fly leaf that it was used to administer the oath of office to Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, on March 4, 1885.—W. E. Curtis, in Chicago Record.

Let us be ourselves and nothing else, only let us be our better selves; let us not cease to breathe from the four winds of heaven; let us not give up our enthusiasms; let us not grow callous and tarnished with the passing of years. As one has said: "That only is great in art which comes from the depths of a pure and true soul."—Robertson Nicoll.

The moments we forego, eternity itself cannot retrieve.—Schiller.

Home Reading.

FAITH FOR A SIXPENCE.

I was walking along the streets of London one cold and wet night with a desponding friend, trying to cheer him, and longing to see a spark of hope kindled in his heart. In our walk we arrived at Victoria Station. While talking together, a little child stepped forward and said: "Any lights, sir?"

"No, Topsy," I replied, "I don't want any; I don't smoke."

"O, but please, sir, do buy a box!" she persisted in a pleading tone.

"No, no; run away, Topsy," I continued; "I have no use for lights."

But still she persisted. At last, seeing her earnestness, I asked her what she did all day, and at what time she was going home, for it was then past ten o'clock.

"O," she replied, "I go to school in the day, and after four o'clock I come out here!"

"But why do not your father and mother take care of you?" I asked.

"Father has run away, and mother is ill in bed."

"And what do you come out here for?"

"I come and stay here till I have taken sixpence."

"But you don't always take sixpence, do you?"

"Yes, I do, sir."

"But you won't get sixpence to-night."

"Yes, I shall, sir."

"Well, how much have you now?"

She seemed inclined not to let me know, but I said: "Come, Topsy, you must tell me all about it."

So, half afraid, she drew some coppers from a pocket in her cotton dress and counted out three-pence-half-penny.

"Well, now, you will never get sixpence to-night," I said.

"O, yes, sir," she answered, "I shall! I always take home sixpence."

"Now, Topsy, tell me what makes you so sure of getting sixpence."

For some time she would not answer, but after a little pressing she said: "Because, before I come out I kneel down by mother's bed and say the Lord's Prayer; and mother says our Father will help me to get sixpence, and he always does."

"O, but I thought you said your father had run away!"

"Don't you know, sir," she simply asked, "that we have a Father in heaven?"

"Yes; but you don't mean to say he hears you about a sixpence?"

"Yes, he does, sir; and he will send me sixpence."

"Well, if I were to give you twopence-half-penny, what would you do?"

"Why, sir, I should run home to mother, because my Father had given me all I asked for."

It is needless to say that the twopence-half-penny was speedily produced, and suitably acknowledged by the little one, who merrily tripped home. I turned to my friend, who all this time had stood by without saying a word; our glances met, and my only remark was: "There H—! You have got your lesson." We forthwith separated—I to my bachelor chambers, he to be led into hope and brightness by the faith of a little child.—John Shrimpton, in the Christian.

HOW FAST FRITZ GREW.

"Grandpa!" shouted a little boy, bounding into a sunshiny porch where an old, white-haired man sat reading his paper—"Grandpa, I'm seven years old today, and I've got on trousers, and I'm going to begin school."

"Why, why!" said the old gentleman, laying down his paper; "how many things are happening altogether!"

Grandpa was about as far from the end of his life as Fritz was from his beginning, and there seemed a wide difference between the bent, white head and feeble gait of the one, and the shining, bright curls that shook and nodded at the bounding steps of the other. Yet Grandpa and Fritz were great chums, and loved and understood each other perfectly.

"And now, Grandpa, measure me up against your wall," continued our new schoolboy, "so that I can tell just how much I have grown by the beginning of another term."

So Grandpa took out his pencil, and while Fritz stood with his back to the wall, very stiff and still and straight, Grandpa put his spectacle case on the boy's head to get the exact level, and marked him off on the clean, white paint, writing his name and age and the day of the month and year. "But stop, Fritz!" said Grandpa, as he was running away; "I have only measured one-third of you."

Fritz looked puzzled.

"Is your body all of you?" asked Grandpa.

"No, sir; I s'pect I've got a mind, too," answered Fritz, but he spoke doubtfully.

"Yes, a mind to do your sums with, and a heart to love God and his creatures with. Don't you see that I have only measured one-third of you? Come, and I'll measure your mind. How much arithmetic do you know? As far as multiplication? Good! And you are in the second reader? Very well! Now write your name down in my notebook, and put these facts down, so that I may take the measure of your reading, writing, and arithmetic."

Fritz, highly amused, took the pencil and wrote in a very clumsy hand: "Frederick Jones—multiplication and second reader."

"But what about my heart?" the little boy asked, presently.

Grandpa looked very grave, and was silent for a minute; then he said: "Did you please your mother by getting down in time for prayers this morning?"

"No, sir."

"Did you look for little sister Lucy's doll that she lost yesterday?"

"No, sir."

"Did you carry Mrs. Parsons the honey she told you to ask your mother for, to help her cough?"

"Why, Grandpa, I forgot all about it."

The old man did not say a word, but began to write in his notebook; and Fritz, looking over his shoulder, managed to spell out these words: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

A year passed away, and again we find Fritz at his grandpa's knees. Grandpa's step is slower, his words weaker, and his eyesight dimmer. Fritz is somewhat changed, too; his curls are shorter, and his trousers are looser; his shoulders are broader; and when he backs up to the wall, behold, he is away above last year's mark. He reads a fourth reader now, and knows something of fractions, and when he writes his name the letters do not tumble down and sprawl around as they did last year.

"And how about that other measure?" asked Grandpa.

Fritz is silent; but the old man puts his arm around him and says, tenderly: "I heard mamma say yesterday that Fritz was her greatest comfort, Lucy cried when she found Fritz's holiday was over, and old Dame Parsons said she would be lost without that boy's helping hand."

Again Grandpa wrote in his little book, and, though the writing was very shaky, Fritz could read it plainly this time: "'If ye fulfill the royal law, . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well.' Now, Fritz, boy," he said, "that's the best growing you've done this year."—Recorder.

SEA SOLDIERS.

Some of our readers who live far away from the ocean may not know very much about the little creature that dresses himself in a suit of armor, which he changes every year until he is full grown.

The lobster is a very curious animal. He is furnished with a complete suit of armor, which consists of a great many different pieces. This armor, or shell, is as hard as stone, of a purplish-black color, with pale spots here and there. When the lobster is boiled, its shell turns red. The lobster has no less than eight pairs of legs and arms—almost enough for a centipede. The front pair are much larger and stronger than the others, with huge pinchers at the ends. When he is seized by one of his claws, the owner quietly leaves it in the hand of the captor, as though he were saying, "I will make you a present of it," and tosses himself off as fast as possible; but when he seizes others by the claw, it is quite another matter, as his power of holding on is not easily exhausted.

A lobster thinks very little of a broken claw, as another claw takes its place, although it is some time before a new arm or leg is as strong as the old one. Numbers of broken claws are sometimes found among the rocks where the lobsters disport themselves. This is a sure sign that there has been a naval battle under water, or that the knights in armor have had a great fright from thunder or fishermen, or some other danger. When they are alarmed, these strange creatures drop their claws. Owing to these causes some lobsters are found with no claws; some, with one; and others, with one shorter than the other.

These two large claws differ both in appearance and use. One has short, blunt teeth, and the other, very sharp ones. The blunt-toothed one is used by the lobster as a support when he attempts to anchor himself to anything, and with the other he attacks and destroys his prey. But the teeth proper, with which he chews his food, are in his stomach; they are only three in number, and arranged in such a manner that they grind like a mill. This queer part of the lobster's anatomy is sometimes called "the lady in her chair." The head of the lobster has six pairs of jaws. In front of the jaws are two strong feelers, called "antennæ," which are very easily broken. Next come the little feelers, and then a pair of joints which support the eyes.

One peculiarity of the lobster is his habit of indulging in a new suit of armor every year. This is his style of growing; and when his old dress becomes too tight, there are no buttons to unfasten or seams to let out, and the poor creature is very uncomfortable. His flesh shrinks until it is much smaller than his shell; and crawling off to some retired place among the rocks, he waits until the walls of his house begin to crack about the head, go on cracking down his back, and then he pulls himself slowly away until his eyes are through. A jump backward leaves him on the bare sand, with only a thin garment of skin to protect him.

At first the lobster totters about in great bewilderment at the helpless condition in which he finds himself; but crawling among the rocks again, he waits for his shell to harden. Meanwhile he fills himself with water, which increases his size so much that he finally sallies forth much larger and more powerful than he was before. This yearly change goes on until the lobster is fully grown; after this he does not change his suit.—Morning Star.

CLEOPATRA'S PEARL.

History relates that Cleopatra, the beautiful queen of Egypt, luxurious and wicked, brought mighty men to bow before her charms. Once she was seated at her royal festal board, surrounded by haughty princes and nobles. All that could please the eye, the ear, the palate, the senses, was present. In her pride, the queen of Egypt desired to make a vain display of how little she cared for wealth. Stretching her jeweled hand to her brow, adorned with the royal crown, she plucked thence the chiefest jewel, an Oriental pearl, full-orbed and lustrous as the morning, and while the gaping courtiers looked on in amazement she dropped the shining gem into a goblet of acid wine, which, acting chemically upon the carbonate of lime entering into the composition of the pearl, dissolved it. Then, grasping the golden goblet, she raised it to her ruby lips, and drank the glowing wine, in which flowed the wealth of a kingdom. She did this in mere wantonness. She, in a moment, destroyed a pearl of great price.

"Foolish queen!" I hear you say. Truly, you speak well. But thou, immortal man, still without a deathless hope for salvation bought with the crimson tide which flows from Christ's pierced side—thou hast condemned not only the folly of the dark queen of Egypt, but thine own. Even now I see thee seated at the banquet of earthly joys. Jesus is inviting thee to come to him, the Spirit is pleading, but in vain. I see thee sporting with thy salvation; I see thee stretch thy careless hand and seize the pearl of great price, which cost the blood of Christ; I see thee drop this priceless gem of thy soul's salvation into the acid cup of the world's pleasures, there to be lost forever.—A. J. Reynolds, in Herald and Presbyter.

Perhaps it were better for most of us to complain less of being misunderstood, and to take more care that we do not misunderstand other people. It ought to give us pause at a time to remember that each one has a stock of cut-and-dried judgments on his neighbors, and that the chances are that most of them are quite erroneous. What our neighbor really is we may never know, but we may be pretty certain that he is not what we have imagined, and that many things we have thought of him are quite beside the mark. What he does we have seen, but we have no idea what may have been his thoughts and intentions. The mere surface of his character may be exposed, but of the complexity within we have not the faintest idea. People crammed with self-consciousness and self-conceit are often praised as humble, while shy and reserved people are judged to be proud. Some whose whole life is one subtle, studied selfishness get the name of self-sacrifice, and other silent, heroic souls are condemned for want of humanity.—Ian Maclaren.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JAN. 18, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

QUESTIONS BY A MORMON.

1. Who sent you to preach and baptize, or did you "fashion" yourself a minister? (2 Cor. 11: 13-15.)
2. Jesus appeared unto Paul "to make him a minister;" who appeared unto you?
3. If Timothy was baptized just the same as Paul, give proof that he was made a minister in a different way from Paul?
4. If Paul desired to "cut off occasion from them which desire occasion" by preaching "for naught," do you do as Paul?
5. If those who hear the apostles hear Jesus, do you hear James (5: 14, 15) and John (Rev. 1: 3) just as well as Philip with the eunuch, going down into the water and "up out of the water?"
6. As you are of those who call for "precept and example," do you anoint the sick when you pray for them?

1. The question of a truth seeker is not what affects me personally, but what the Scriptures teach. Unless Jesus has sent me to preach, I have no right to preach. Jesus said to the apostles: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." (John 20: 21.) "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (John 13: 20.) What Jesus did, the Father did through him; what the apostles did, Jesus did through them. Jesus, in the great commission, commanded the apostles: "Go, . . . teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them [those baptized] to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you [to "observe" is to do]." Jesus told the apostles to teach all baptized persons to do what he had commanded them. He had commanded them to "teach all nations," to "preach the gospel to every creature." So Christ commands every person taught and baptized by the apostles to teach and baptize others. This is the general and universal law, restricted as to persons and classes, times and places, by directions given by Jesus and to us through the apostles, through whom he speaks to the world. By this great commission every one taught and baptized by the apostles is under the same obligation to teach and baptize others as the apostles themselves. All disciples, restricted as above by the directions of God, have the same authority and are under the same obligation to preach and teach what Jesus gave that the apostles had. Mormon pretenders, who claim to work miracles and to receive direct power from God, fill the description of 2 Cor. 11: 13-15: "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works." That scripture has never in the world's history been more completely fulfilled than in the claims and pretensions of Mormons to apostolic and miraculous gifts.

2. The man since the days of the apostles that claims that Jesus appeared to him as he did to Paul is a false apostle, a deceitful worker, transforming himself into an apostle of Christ. I gave the authority by which I preach under Question 1.

3. The proof rests on you to show he was sent as Paul, if it be true. But it is so abundant against you I give it. Paul, in Gal. 1: 11, 12, says: "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Paul, as all apostles, saw Jesus and received from him directly what he was to teach. An apostle was one sent directly by Christ to bear witness of what he heard and saw of him. Ananias said to Saul: "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard." (Acts 22: 14, 15.) In verse 18 God spoke to him directly again; see also Acts 9: 15. "For I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and those things in the which I will appear unto thee." (Acts 26: 16.) See also 2 Cor. 12, wherein God did appear unto him. "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds." (Verse 12.) No true apostle ever demanded or expected people to believe he was an apostle unless he gave them the evidence of his apostleship by these signs. Timothy was not so called of God to be an apostle. He had first been taught the Old Testament Scriptures by his mother and grandmother. (2 Tim. 1: 5.) He was Paul's "own son in the faith" of the gospel (1 Tim. 1: 2), which means Paul taught him the gospel of Christ, or brought him to believe in Christ. Paul, after he had converted him, returned to his place and found him "well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium. Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him," etc. (Acts 16: 1-3.) So he was called by Paul to go with him, and whatever of spiritual gifts he had, he received from the laying on of Paul's hands, and not direct from God. "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." (2 Tim. 1: 6.) Paul received his teaching direct from God, and not of man; Timothy received what he knew from Paul and by reading and study of the Scriptures. "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 1: 13.) "And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 2.) Again: "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." (2 Tim. 3: 14, 15.) He admonished Timothy to give attention to reading and study, and recognized he in all things was dependent upon what he heard and learned of others. Paul says he was not, nor was any apostle of Jesus Christ. It is true Timothy had a spiritual gift, that was bestowed on him by the hands of the apostles. These gifts were given to remain with and guide the church until the perfect will of God should be made known; then these gifts, partial in their nature, were to give way to the more excellent and perfect way given in

1 Cor. 12, 13. "Charity [the better way] never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge [he is speaking of miraculous knowledge], it shall vanish away. . . . When that which is perfect [the perfect will of God] is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." He is speaking of the completion of the perfect will of God and the temporary spiritual gifts, which were partial and to pass away, as the context clearly shows. (See, also, Eph. 4: 12, 13.) It will be seen, too, that he tells Timothy that the truth is to be perpetuated by his committing it to faithful men able to teach others. This shows the miraculous gifts were not to be perpetuated, but the word of God was to be taught from one to another. Timothy did not receive the same kind of a call that Paul did, nor was he inspired to the degree Paul was. Paul declares he was not a whit behind the chiefest apostle; and the test he gave by which all men's claims to be spiritual were to be true was that they acknowledge the things he wrote (embracing the passing away of the miraculous gifts) were the commandments of God. (1 Cor. 14: 37.) Paul's call and Timothy's call were no more alike than the creation of Adam and that of his descendants. His was miraculous; others, by law.

4. I have never preached for money, and any man that does it is unworthy of Christ. Paul did receive help, but remained in poverty, so poor he could not support one wife. The Mormon apostles have grown immensely rich and powerful in worldly affairs and can support many wives to gratify their pampered lusts. They are greatly unlike Paul in this.

5, 6. I hear these and do them as commanded. I do not, as the Mormons, make a pretense of curing people, when they cannot present a single case of real cure by laying on hands or anointing with oil in their whole existence. If to cure people by this process is a sign of approval by God, the Mormons are of all people most miserable. They have pretended they had power to do this, and in all their history cannot present a single case of actual cure.

When you anoint the sick, do they get well? I saw a Mormon priest not long ago complaining greatly of suffering, and I suggested he have hands laid on him, and be anointed, and he was greatly offended. I pressed another, a few weeks ago, to give one single example, well authenticated, of any of them having worked a miracle of healing in all their history, and proposed that I would go five hundred miles to see one such. After much evasion he said a blind woman was restored to sight last year in Warren County, Tenn. I pressed him for the name or neighborhood, but never could get either. I showed him that Christ and his apostles healed multitudes. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them." (Matt. 4: 23, 24.) "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people." (Matt. 9: 35.) "And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him." (Mark 1: 32-34.) Here, as elsewhere, his miracles were numerous and in the presence of the whole city. Nothing did he speak or do in secret that he did not do openly. The apostles Peter and John healed the impotent man at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and "all the people saw him walking and praising God." (Acts 3. 9.)

Again: "And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; . . . insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one." (Acts 5: 12-16.) Here the numbers seem to have been so great the apostle could not go to each one of them personally; so they were laid along his pathway that they might be thus treated. A similar condition existed at Ephesus with Paul. "And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul: so that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them." (Acts 19: 11, 12.) These things were done openly before all the people in such numbers none could be deceived. These are only given as specimens. I feel sure we may safely say that no one suffering with disease ever applied to Jesus or an apostle for healing and failed to receive it. Had their claims to work miracles or to have the miraculous power of the Spirit been supported by no better or clearer testimony than the claims of the Latter-day Saints, no sane man ever would have believed on them. A more baseless and stupendous lie has never been perpetrated on the credulity of the ignorant than the claims of Mormonism to miraculous power. No miracle, no prophetic power, no ability to heal has ever been manifested among them, nor can be.

There are other questions we will answer next week.

D. L.

SPREAD OF MORMONISM.

Those who imagine that Mormonism is dying out, or is confined practically to Utah and contiguous States, are greatly in error. This insidious enemy is reported as invading with remarkable rapidity and success the States of Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. During the last year there has been a large increase in the number of converts in this section, in which there are now eleven hundred members of that body. The missionaries have met with the bitterest persecution, and yet they seem to prosecute their work of proselyting with remarkable devotion and success. In an article on the Mormons in a New York paper it is stated that these missionaries accept no pay, ask no alms, take up no collections, but maintain themselves at their own expense. They get nothing from the church at Salt Lake, from which they are sent out, and they must foot all their expenses from their own pockets. To do this they must either have parents behind them or work a year and preach a year. Many of them have to borrow money before they get home. They are in a sense martyrs to their religion and to the tenet of that belief which makes it a grievous fault to place a market price upon the work of salvation. Although they believe in polygamy, and say it is a part of their religion, they are not preaching its introduction. They abide, they say, by the law of 1890 against polygamy. The missionary effort of the Mormons is world-wide. There are at present about three thousand missionaries out in the work, about twelve hundred and fifty of them being in the Southern States. They have three hundred in Europe, and are doing effectual work in the Sandwich Islands, New Zealand, the Pacific and Society Islands, Tahiti, Australia, and Samoa. They claim a following now of three hundred thousand active communicants, two hundred and fifty thousand of whom are located in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Wyoming, and California. They are meeting with very great success in Mexico.—Religious Review of Reviews.

We give the above to our readers that they may see what people in error, fired with religious zeal and enthusiasm, are doing. Here is a great object lesson for those who are claiming that missionary societies must be organized to conduct the work of the Lord in the evangelization of the world. Three thousand missionaries! Three hundred thousand active communicants! In view of the vile errors held by these people and the midnight darkness through which they are groping their way, it must be frankly admitted that this is a marvelous showing. Still there are those who have a knowledge of God, but are lacking in that zeal which should characterize God's people, who are crying: "Nothing can be done without systematic coöperation; organize, build up a large human organization to guarantee missionaries their support!" Men are not of the stuff that martyrs are made of who will not tell the poor, lost soul what to do to be saved until their salary is guaranteed. The secret of Mormon success may be read in the following: "These missionaries accept no pay, ask no alms, take up no collections, but maintain themselves at their own expense. They get nothing from the church at Salt Lake, from which they are sent out, and they must foot all their expenses from their own pockets. To do this they must either have parents behind them or work a year and preach a year. Many of them have to borrow money before they get home. They are in a sense martyrs to their religion and to the tenet of that belief which makes it a grievous fault to place a market price upon the work of salvation." While "they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," yet the man who will place a monetary value on a soul has never realized the blessedness of salvation. It is an undeniable fact that the preacher who will not proclaim the world's Redeemer to a soul in darkness till his salary is guaranteed by man is thereby robbed of much of his power. He is like Samson shorn of his locks: he is selling out to the Delilahs of the world. When the preacher or any Christian puts the loaves and fishes between himself and the salvation of a soul, he at once impresses the people that he is more in love with money than he is with souls.

This is a good lesson for our society brethren. Look at what is being done without any human organization. Individual consecration is worth far more than all the combined machinery of the world. If Mormons in error are doing so much, how much more should we do who have the truth! Is it possible that the Mormons in their darkness are wiser than the children of light?

Here is a lesson for us all. The work of converting the world is not being done by boards and societies. They make great claims for themselves, and their secretaries know how to make flaming reports; they are good at sounding trumpets. Without any seeming difficulty they even claim that work that is done by individual consecration and independent of any board. But as of old the Lord was not in the boisterous wind, or the earthquake, or the fire, but in the still small voice, so it is to-day. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." With the religion of Christ within a man, with heaven in him now, he will sow the seed of the kingdom broadcast. While some Christians may be discouraged and are, with folded arms, weeping under the willows, yet the great bulk of the work that is being done for the conversion of sinners is being done by individual consecration. How much more rapidly a knowledge of God would cover the earth as the waters cover the sea if we were all in earnest, as was Paul! "Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." (2 Cor. 11: 23-27.)

There are hundreds of missionaries in foreign lands who are not supported by any board or society. B. F. Haynes, editor of Zion's Outlook, gives me the following information: The Christian and Missionary Alliance—Dr. A. B. Simpson, of New York, its head and founder—has over three hundred missionaries in foreign fields. The alliance is an independentism, pure and simple. It is backed and supported by no denomination; it is rather opposed and criticised by church boards, because its success is a rebuke to the expensive methods of these ecclesiasticisms. The alliance receives about $150,000 per year through voluntary contributions to missions. Last year the amount was greater than this. The China Inland Mission in 1898 had six hundred and eighty-two missionaries (including wives and associates); there were also six hundred and five native helpers. These go out in dependence upon God for temporal supplies. All the expenses of the mission at home and abroad are met by voluntary contributions. The income for the year ending May, 1898, was about $185,000 from all sources.

It will be observed that these missionaries all go without any guarantee of salaries from boards. While the alliance and the China Inland Mission are not denominational, yet they have not come to the full light of the truth; they still have some organization besides the church. But this all goes to show that a great missionary work is being done independent of boards and societies. The missionaries go and are supported by voluntary contributions.

With every disciple moved by the same purpose and guided by the same head, the Lord Jesus Christ, a great work will be done. Wherever there is a disciple, he will be about the Master's business. This is sufficient system. Filled with the same hope and cheered by the same precious promises, under this system the word of God should reach the earth's remotest bounds; under the same system the apostles preached the gospel to every creature under heaven. (Col. 1: 23.) "Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." (Rom. 10: 18.) This work was done without any human organization and without a tithe of the facilities that we now have for spreading the truth. How blind are those who will not see!

J. C. McQUIDDY.

Prayer is the forerunner of mercy. Turn to sacred history, and you will find that scarcely ever did a great mercy come to this world unheralded by supplication. Prayer is always the preface to blessing; it goes before the blessing as the blessing's shadow. When the sunlight of God's mercies rises upon our necessities it casts the shadow of prayer far down upon the plain; or, to use another illustration, when God piles up a hill of mercies he himself shines behind them, and he casts on our spirits the shadow of prayer, our pleadings are the shadows of mercy. Prayer is thus connected with the blessing to show us the value of it.—Spurgeon.

Many years ago a Welsh minister, beginning his sermon, leaned over the pulpit, and said, with a solemn air: "Friends, I have a question to ask. I cannot answer it; you cannot answer it; if an angel from heaven were here, he could not answer it; if a devil from hell were here, he could not answer it." Deathlike silence reigned. Every eye was fixed on the speaker. He proceeded: "The question is: 'How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?'"

I used to wonder at the striking resemblance of some of the false religions to the true, until I learned that the difference between the goose and the swan is only a few inches of neck.—Panin.

Of an idle, unrevolving man destiny can make nothing more than a mere enameled vessel of dishonor, let her spend on him what coloring she may. Let the idle think of this.—Carlyle.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR, A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.
For indigestion and foul stomach.
For sick and nervous headaches.
For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.
For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.
For loss of appetite and debility.
For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir. Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.
Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.
1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

Nonresident Notice.

J. J. Blair, Admr., et al.

vs.

Hugh McMurray et al.

In this cause, on this the 20th day of December, 1899, it appearing to the satisfaction of the Clerk from the affidavit to the petition in this cause that the defendants—William Blair, James Blair, and Fannie Bridge and her husband, H. E. Bridge—are nonresidents of the State of Tennessee; therefore the ordinary process of this court cannot be served upon them. It is therefore ordered by the Clerk that said defendants enter their appearance herein at the February term of the Davidson County Court, to be holden at the courthouse in Nashville, Tenn., on the first Monday in February, 1900, it being February 5, 1900, and defend, or said complainant's bill will be taken for confessed as to them, and will be set for hearing ex parte.

It is therefore ordered that a copy of this order be published for four weeks in succession in the Gospel Advocate, a newspaper published in Nashville, Tenn.

P. A. Shelton, Clerk,

By Wm. B. Shelton, D. C.

W. R. Chambers, Solicitor.

Missionary Work.

TO WHOM MAY WE SEND?

A brother writes: "We are desirous of sending some missionary money, but are at a loss to know where to send it." There may be others similarly situated.

Of my acquaintance there are several whom I think are worthy; they are doing missionary work without a salary and are trusting God for their temporal needs. If they get in need, they follow Paul's example and labor with their own hands to supply that which is lacking. They are as follows: R. W. Officer, Atoka, I. T.; Mr. and Mrs. E. Snodgrass, 14 Tsukiji, Tokyo, Japan; Miss Nettie Craynon, same address; William J. Bishop and wife, Koishikawa, Tokyo, Japan; F. A. Wagner and Otoshige Fujimori and wife, Takahagi, Kurimotomura, Katorigori, Shimosa, Japan; D. T. Jones and wife, Hanyang, Hankow, China. These brethren and sisters should have the fellowship of the churches. Any congregation of a hundred members can easily sustain one of these workers. In doing this the churches themselves would grow and be happy. I have had brethren to frequently say: "We expect to contribute to your work." I am glad to see churches inclined to do missionary work, but to consider an occasional contribution to me the full measure of their duty is not at all satisfactory. A great number of churches scattered throughout this land of ours, with all of its wealth and plenty, settling down to support one little, pitiful, puny missionary is the next thing to a shame. What I am anxious to hear the churches begin to say is: "We are preparing to send some of our own number and support them." This will show that you are thoroughly in earnest.

In addition to the brethren I have mentioned, there are no doubt other brethren laboring in these and other fields, but they are unknown to me.

At the present rate of preaching the gospel unbelief is increasing far more rapidly than the world is being converted. There are more heathen in Japan to-day than there were forty years ago. Every year brings into the world thousands who have never heard of Christ. The churches must wake up if they would keep pace with the work of Satan.

SEVENTEEN WEEKS.

This is the length of time Brother Officer has been watching by the bedside of a sick wife. As to any hopes of her recovery, Brother Officer says: "We know she cannot last long." Let us, brethren, show to Brother and Sister Officer our sympathy by our letters, our prayers, and our offerings. Sickness, besides calling the husband from his field of labor, always increases expenses. May the Lord be gracious unto Brother and Sister Officer.

J. M. M'CALEB.

In Tennessee.

My last letter to the Gospel Advocate left me at White Bluff, where I found the church in a sad and dying condition; but after two weeks' preaching all wrongs were rectified and all troubles settled among those dear brethren. They came together with a full determination to profit by their past experience, and try to do better work in the future. I truly hope they may carry out their resolutions, for there can be real happi-

ROYAL

Baking Powder

Made from pure
cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

ness in this life only as we do our Master's will. When brethren become offended at each other and have trouble, it not only gives the enemy occasion to talk, but causes the world to have no confidence in the religion we ask them to accept. A little more humbleness and humility upon the part of many brethren, a little more willingness to suffer wrong rather than do wrong, would go a long way toward settling many church troubles and healing many wounds that now exist in the church of God. I hope the church at White Bluff will continue to strive together for the upbuilding of the Master's cause in that town, and that I may be able to hold them another meeting on my return to Tennessee this year.

From White Bluff I went to Piney, ten miles south of Dickson, to hold a mission meeting supported by the churches at Bellview and Dickson, with some outside help. This meeting was different from all other mission meetings I ever held. During the past fourteen years I have made it a point to hold from one to three mission meetings each year at my own expense. I know many other preachers who do likewise, but this was the first time in my life that a congregation ever wrote me that they wanted to hold a mission meeting and would send me there at their own expense. For a number of years I have said that if all our brethren would make the sacrifice in the mission field that our preachers do we would be able to put missionaries in all fields, but few congregations ever think to support a meeting beyond their own home. Not only did the church at Bellview work up and support the meeting from a financial standpoint, but they sent Sisters Katie Rodgers, Maggie Larkins, and Cora Link—three of their best singers—along to help in the song service, and as I had Brother Will. Martin employed to lead the song service, that part was all that could be desired. At the meeting there were a number attended who were fifty years old and had never before heard a gospel sermon.

I found many good people at Piney willing to hear the truth, and I think the church at Bellview could not have made a better selection for a mission meeting. If Brother Mack Fussell will keep the work moving down there by getting the church again to help in another meeting, I am sure in a short time a congregation can be built up in that part. I mention Brother Mack Fussell in connection with the work, for I am sure he was instrumental in having the meeting held there. He is a good man and full of good works. I trust that many of our churches will follow the example of Bellview in the future and always send for a man to hold two meetings, instead of only one. Many of our churches forget that a preacher contributes from $5 to $15 in actual expense to each meeting he holds in going to and from the meeting. If they would always arrange for two meetings—one at their home and one at some mission near by—they would save the preacher some expense, help him to do mission work, and drive societyism out of the church by doing the work the society was organized to do.

My last trip to Tennessee was pleasantly spent with many brethren whose great desire is to do the Master's will; yet I found that there, as at many other places, indifference and idleness among many church members prevailed.

I held three meetings on this trip, which occupied about six weeks' time. At my meeting at Bellview I was paid $40; at White Bluff, $20; at Piney, $40. Total, $100. To those three meetings I contributed $28 railroad fare; I also paid Brother Will. Martin $10 for leading the song service at White Bluff and Piney; making a total expenditure of $38. This left $62 for the three meetings, or $40 per month, which was more than I was paid for part of my work last year. During January I was paid $7.50; during February, nothing; and during March, $21; yet in all these things I try to do my duty and be content. I only mention these things for the benefit of some members in Tennessee who claimed that my dear Brother Williams, of Nashville, and I were only out preaching for the money there is in it to us. Not only are such accusations made against Williams and me, but also against all other godly men who leave home and loved ones and go into the field to do their Master's will. Often have their motives been impugned by ungodly, covetous members, who desire to live at ease in this life and think but little of the life to come. But when I call to memory that all who live godly in Christ Jesus will receive persecutions, I let none of these things bother me, but try in all these things to do my Master's will, knowing for all this work I will be rewarded in the great beyond.

I am now at Seymour, Texas, for a meeting. I have been from home two months, but after this meeting I expect to rest a few days at home.

J. D. TANT.

For Seasickness,

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. Fourness-Brice, of the steamship Teutonic, says: "I have prescribed it among the passengers traveling to and from Europe, and am satisfied that, if taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

"A Heart as Sturdy as an Oak."

But what about the blood which the heart must pump at the rate of seventy times a minute? If the heart is to be sturdy and the nerves strong, this blood must be rich and pure. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes sturdy hearts because it makes good blood; it gives to men and women strength, confidence, courage, and endurance.

HOOD'S PILLS are nonirritating and the only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

FITS

STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT
NERVE RESTORER

No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and
$2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE
to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion, etc. DR. R. H. KLINE, Ltd.,
931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1872.

"A Fair Outside Is a Poor Substitute

For Inward Worth."

Good health, inwardly, of the kidneys, liver and bowels, is sure to come if Hood's Sarsaparilla is promptly used.

This secures a fair outside, and a consequent vigor in the frame, with the glow of health on the cheek, good appetite, perfect digestion, pure blood.

Catarrh—"I have had no return of the catarrh which troubled me for years, since Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me." Mrs. JOE MARTIN, Washington St., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Dyspepsia—"Complicated with liver and kidney trouble, I suffered for years with dyspepsia, with severe pains. Hood's Sarsaparilla made me strong and hearty." J. B. EMERTON, Main Street, Auburn, Me.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Field Gleanings.

The old year, with all its joys and sorrows, is now numbered with the past. We look back over our work and say we might have done more and better work had we known as much as we now know. But we must improve as our knowledge increases.

During the year I traveled about five thousand miles, preached about three hundred and fifty sermons, and held three debates. I received a very good support for my labor, for which I rejoice, thank God, and take courage. I have never yet received enough for my preaching to support my family, but have supplemented it by selling my books and working for the Primitive Christian and the Gospel Advocate. The sale of my books has netted me over $100 this past year, and commissions for the Gospel Advocate and the Primitive Christian, about $100; so, by careful living, I have been able to devote some time to destitute work. I have devoted six weeks to destitute fields at my own charges, besides giving $40 in money to the grand work of relieving the needy. I am fully determined to do more this year than I did last year. I held some meetings last year where the brethren made me rejoice in their liberality, thus enabling me to go to fields where otherwise I could not have gone; but at other points the carelessness of those who should have seen after the matter caused but little to be given. But I am sure that my lot has been one of great pleasantness compared to that of many others who are my equals as preachers and much older in the service of God. Hence I do not complain, but rejoice that I have been able to spend and be spent for. During the past year I baptized about one hundred persons, being about one-third less than for any year for the past five years; neither have I preached as many sermons as in former years. May God help us all to do our very best during 1900.

Brother W. A. Shultz, of Lometa, writes me that he has baptized sixty-six persons since September. Brother Shultz is an excellent preacher and a sacrificing Christian.

Under my special offer to give "Thompson-Lawson Debate," "Heartfelt Religion," and "Which Church Should I Join?" all for 50 cents, many orders have been received. This is by far the best offer I have ever made on books, and if you want the entire lot for 50 cents, send money order at once to Denton, Texas. If you want to take advantage of this special offer, you must send within two weeks after this appears in Gospel Advocate.

Brother E. H. Rogers has recently closed a meeting at Little Elm. I have not learned the results.

Brother A. W. Young and J. K. P. Williams are to hold a joint discussion at Crafton, Wise County, beginning on January 22.

The meeting at Whitewright was a grand success, and Brother Larimore showed himself a workman that needed not to be ashamed. The immediate results were thirty-two added to the congregation there. There were twenty-six baptisms; three came from the "Central Christian Church." The church was greatly edified, and I consider the meeting the best yet held in Whitewright. We expect Brother Larimore to spend eight weeks with the church at Whitewright in 1901, and I have promised to "lend a helping hand." Brother Larimore's work at Whitewright will be remembered for many, many years. May God bless him in his work.

I have several calls for orphan children. If you know of one needing a good home, send me name and address; if any one who reads this would like to take an orphan, send me name and also reference of some reliable person, to whom I can refer as to reliability. Always send stamp for reply. I consider this an important work and can place a number of children in good homes.

Denton, Texas. J. H. LAWSON.

A Delusive Idea.

My eyes recently fell upon a letter written by a brother to a sister nearly forty years ago. The writer was then just across his majority, and the diction shows a well-trained mind. The truth is, the writer, at that time, had the brightest opening of any young man in his county. With a vigorous body, a large and active brain, and means at his disposal by which to meet the expenses of attending school, there seemed to be nothing to prevent success. From the letter I gather that the sister had become alarmed for him on account of his occasionally indulging his appetite for a dram. He wrote to quiet her fears; he expressed the deepest abhorrence for drunkenness, and the misery, shame, and degradation going with it. For the drunkard he had only words of the strongest contempt. Far from him was the thought of ever being one; he indignantly repelled the idea that he was in danger. In full confidence in himself he proposed to escape the drunkard's fate; not by total abstinence, but by controlling himself in the amount he drank. He was a man, and a man could gratify his appetite occasionally without danger of being overcome. What has been the outcome? The same as in thousands of similar cases. The habit grew on him until he became as complete a wreck as drink ever made—wrecked in body, wrecked in property, wrecked in mind, wrecked in morals. The life that bade fair to be a blessing to the community has been an abject failure. I write this, not with pleasure, but in deepest sorrow, that some young men who read this and who reason as did this writer may take warning from his fall and determine to "touch not, taste not," the accursed stuff. The only one who is safe from the drunkard's fate is the one who never drinks at all. J. D. FLOYD.

CLOGGED KIDNEYS.

They Produce Poison in the Blood, Become Infected with Disease, Break Down the Entire System, and Bring on Bright's Disease.

You know what happens to a sewer when it becomes clogged, don't you?

Do you know what happens to the human system when the kidneys become clogged? They are unable to throw out the impurities from the blood, and become infected with poisons; they decay, fall apart, and pass out in the urine; the blood, unfiltered, carries the poison all over the system, and, if not checked, death follows. The kidneys are the sewers of the human system.

Laboratory of Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Home of Swamp-Root.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are: Pain or dull ache in the back; excess of uric acid; gravel; rheumatic pains; sediment in the urine; scanty supply; scalding irritation in passing it; obliged to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; puffy or dark circles under the eyes; sometimes the feet, limbs, or body bloat; loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

When you are sick, then, no matter what you think the name of your disease is, the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Perhaps you are in doubt about your kidneys and want to find out. Here is a simple test. Take from your urine passed when you arise in the morning about two ounces; place in a glass or bottle and let it stand for twenty-four hours. If, upon examination, you find any settleings or sediment, if it is milky or cloudy, or if particles float about in it, disease has got a foothold in your kidneys, and nature is calling for help.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, you would profit by taking Swamp-Root every now and then as a preventive, and thus absolutely forestall kidney and bladder troubles.

The famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, has been tested in so many ways—in hospital work; in private practice; among the helpless, too poor to purchase relief—and has proved so successful in every case, that a special arrangement has been made with the Gospel Advocate by which all of its readers who have not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent, absolutely free, by mail; also a book telling all about kidney and bladder diseases, and containing some of the thousands of testimonial tributes from men and women reclaimed to lives of happiness and usefulness by the means of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy.

Be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Swamp-Root is sold by all druggists the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices—50 cents and $1. Remember the name—Swamp-Root—and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

The W. V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale
and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough
and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence
Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.
CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK. 311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

There is an art in giving, as well as in receiving.

The Non-Irritating Cathartic

Easy to take, easy to operate—

Hood's Pills

General News.

The bubonic plague is spreading in Honolulu. The houses in which persons have died have been burned.

The Republic Steel Company, one of the two big steel trusts recently formed, has thirteen plants in Indiana.

The price of coal in France and England is going up with a rush, and industries are hampered by the scarcity of fuel.

Considerable excitement has been created in Germany by the seizure of German mail steamers by British cruisers.

It is estimated that 18,000,000 tons of coal are imported into London every year, of which amount 7,288,000 tons come by sea.

Colonel Denby and Professor Worcester, of the Philippines Commission, will return to Manila to aid in establishing civil government.

Work on the Paris Exposition has unearthed millions of rats, and the laborers are sometimes obliged to stop and do battle with the pests.

General Shafter has been ordered by the War Department to escort the remains of the late Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton from San Francisco to Washington.

The University of Pennsylvania has invited the Chinese Minister to deliver an address to the students and the public at the Academy of Music, in Philadelphia, February 22.

Packs of wolves, driven from the mountain districts of France by severe cold, are causing terror in the vicinity of Pidon. The villagers are keeping their houses and barns barricaded.

A branch of the Jacksonville Ostrich Farm will be started at Palm Beach, Fla., soon with fifty birds. Florida climate agrees with the birds, the plumage being glossy and very abundant.

The coal miners' strike in France threatens to be very serious in its consequences. Factories are closing for lack of fuel, and the price of coal has risen so high as to carry distress into many homes.

One thousand tons of steel trolley rails, each forty-five feet long and weighing 1,300 pounds, have been shipped to Rotterdam for use in equipping an electric railroad to be built in Holland on the American plan.

Andrew Carnegie has given $300,000 to Cooper Union, New York City, for the establishment of a day school in mechanic arts, the object of which will be to give such practical instruction as shall enable young men to become first-class and skilled workmen.

The answer of the British Government to Mr. Choate's representations respecting the seizures of American flour and other goods on the three vessels—Beatrice, Mashona, and Maria—has been received. It is conceded the American goods were not subject to seizure.

The State Geologist of Missouri declares that State to be richer in lead, zinc, copper, nickel, cobalt, and coal than any other State in the Union, and predicts that "within the next five years Missouri will startle the world," by her production of these minerals.

After eight months of imprisonment by the Filipinos, Lieutenant Gilmore and his comrades, with a number of other American prisoners, have been rescued and brought to Manila. Lieutenant Gilmore and party had lost all hope when help reached them, having been starved and otherwise mistreated by their guards.

The Secretary of War has sent to Congress a request for an urgent deficiency appropriation of $750,000 to supplant the $1,500,000 heretofore appropriated for the repatriation of the Spanish prisoners and their families held by the insurgents in the Philippines from these islands to Spain in accordance with the treaty of peace.

The Pacific Mail Company's chartered steamer Agloa, the biggest steamer that ever entered port, arrived at San Francisco from China and Japan by way of Honolulu. She brought no passengers, but carried twice as much freight as ever entered the Golden Gate in a single vessel. She left Hongkong with 12,000 tons of cargo, consisting chiefly of rice, tea, dates, and matting.

Latest mail advices from India aver that the situation there grows darker every week. Three millions are working on government relief work. The sale of children by starving parents is becoming common. Families are breaking up, each member for himself, in search of food. Abandoned children are found with frequency. Cattle are dying off by thousands, and no rain is expected until June.

A test of a steam plow was recently made at Morden, Manitoba, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The machine moved at a speed of one and one-quarter miles per hour, and dragged after it a gang of ten plows, which turned over a twelve-foot strip of earth to the depth of four inches. At the speed at which the test was made, the plowing done in one day would be about twenty acres.

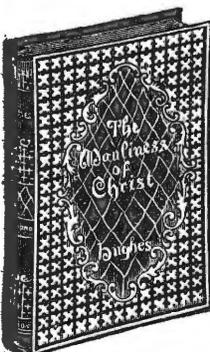

Many of the old-time employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad who have been retired under the new pension system that has just become effective on this road are making pathetic appeals to be retained in active service. One of the train baggagemen, who is ninety-one years of age, and who takes turn in handling baggage on the limited between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, says he desires to remain in harness until next August, that he may round out fifty years's service with the company; another desires to complete forty years; and a third says the pension granted him is not sufficient to support a large family.

The loving cup of silver made from the melted dimes contributed by over

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
cleans the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

FREE! FREE! FREE! FREE! The Household and The Gentlewoman,
To every new subscriber to
THE CHRISTIAN GUIDE AT THE REGULAR PRICE, $1.50,
And to all old subscribers renewing their subscription one year. These are both first-class one dollar monthly magazines. Thus you get $3.50 in value for $1.50—three papers for the price of one. The Christian Guide is the leading religious journal of the South. Samples FREE. Send a Postoffice Money Order for $1.50, which pays your subscription one year to The Guide, and as a premium you will receive FREE the two magazines above mentioned. If not as represented, money will be refunded. Address,
GUIDE PRINTING & PUB. CO., 315 W. Walnut, Louisville, Ky.

The Manliness of Christ,

BY

Thomas Hughes.

A handsome book. An appropriate present. Uniform with this we also have "Abide in Christ," "Like Christ," and "With Christ," by Andrew Murray; and "Lectures to Young Men," by Henry Ward Beecher. Price, each, 40c; three for $1.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn.

70,000 American citizens, the majority of whom were children, was presented to Admiral Dewey a few days ago. A small, but notable, gathering assembled in the parlors of the Dewey residence, on Rhode Island avenue, Washington, and participated in the ceremony. The cup, which is a massive and artistic creation nearly six feet in height and appropriately inscribed, occupied the bay window, draped about the base with the American flag. Accompanying the vase was a large silver-bound book, containing the names of those contributing the dimes.

An electric search light, mounted upon a wagon resembling, in general appearance, an ordinary fire engine, is to be added to the equipment of the New York City fire department. An engine and dynamo, carried by the wagon, supply two lights, each having an eighteen-inch lens. The light can be either concentrated on a particular point, or spread over a wide area; and, if necessary, the lamps can be carried to a distance from the wagon, the electric connection being maintained with insulated cables. The object of the search light engine is both to illuminate dark streets and corners where the firemen have to place their hose and to throw light into windows and upon roofs where people are to be rescued from the flames and smoke.

In view of the existence of the bubonic plague in the Orient and in South America, Surgeon General Wyman has requested $25,000 additional for quarantine service, to be appropriated as an urgency deficiency item. The first act probably will be to have quarantine laid upon all shipping coming from Manila. The town will be placed under the most rigid sanitary regulations. General Sternberg says that Colonel Greenleaf is well fitted for the emergency, and he has no doubt that the disease will soon be stamped out. It is noted that the cases are confined to the native class. It was probably from Hongkong that the disease found its way to Manila. The medical officers have been on the watch to prevent this; but, owing to the large traffic carried on in a small way by native junks, the ultimate introduction of the disease into Manila was inevitable.

Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith has appointed George W. Beavers to take charge of the American post office at the Paris Exposition. Mr. Beavers is chief of the division of salary and allowances of the Post Office Department, and he will go to Paris as a special commissioner, sailing for France in February. He will at once get ready and place in working order the United States post office. The department will show the canceling machines, models of pneumatic tubes, mail wagons, and novel and original devices that are used exclusively in the United States postal service. A half dozen expert clerks from this country have been assigned to duty in the post office. All American visitors, who desire it, can have their mail sent to the Exposition post office on the Exposition grounds. It will go direct from steamships to the grounds in a pouch which will not be opened until delivered in charge of the American clerks, thus doing away with the possibility of miscarriage if directed to the various boarding houses and hotels in the city. Two or three clerks from the French post office will also be on duty in the American office.

CUSTOMERS ASTOUNDED AT OUR BARGAINS IN REMNANTS OF SILK RIBBONS FREE

We have purchased, at a great discount, all wholesale auction sales several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length, and many of them are the finest quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades; in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for lounel strings, neckwear, trimming for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers.

Our stock of Silk Ribbons, from which we put up these 75-cent packages, consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Satin Edge, Silk Brocade, Striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends.

We put up carefully assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, assorted colors. No remnants less than one yard long, and all first-class, useful goods.

We will send 1 package for 35 cents, silver, or 36 cents in 2-cent stamps. Carefully packed in boxes, 10-stamp, 75-cent price. Address PARIS RIBBON CO., Box 3045, New York City, N. Y.

Read our premium offer on last page of cover. Add $1.50 to your subscription and get the Bible, or send us two new subscribers and we will send it to you for your trouble in securing them.

GET Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys; they are made of tough glass, tough against heat; they do not break in use; they do from accident.

They are clear, transparent, not misty. Look at your chimney. How much of the light is lost in the fog?

Be willing to pay a little more.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Confessing Jesus Before Men.

When sending out the twelve, Jesus said to them: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 10: 32, 33.) The same thought occurs in Luke 12: 8, 9, besides other places in the Scriptures.

What is it to confess Jesus? What is it to deny him? To what class of persons is the language above to be applied? Why is it a duty to confess Jesus? These and other questions are important in examining the matter of confessing Jesus Christ before men. To confess is to own, to acknowledge; to confess Jesus is, therefore, to own, to acknowledge him. But this definition is not complete without an additional thought—namely, the truth concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. The great central truth concerning him—that upon which all other truths depend—is that he is the Messiah, the Son of God, the Savior of the world. To confess Jesus is to own, to acknowledge him to be the Son of God. There are minor truths dependent upon this great central truth. To confess this central truth is to acknowledge all the minor truths flowing therefrom; to confess one or more of these minor truths is to confess, indirectly, all other minor truths, as well as the great truth concerning the Lord Jesus Christ; hence there is no one set form of words in which Christ is to be confessed. The failure to see this truth has led to much confusion concerning the matter of confessing Christ. If I confess him to be my Savior, I thereby confess him to be the Son of God; if I confess that he rose from the dead, that the miracles recorded of him are true, that he is now seated at the right hand of God, that "he shall so come in like manner" as he was seen go into heaven—by confessing any one of these truths I thereby confess all the others, as well as the great central truth taught by the apostles. "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." To acknowledge the sayings and writings of the apostles amounts to a confession of Christ.

To deny Christ is to disown him, to neglect or refuse to acknowledge the great, central truth concerning him. As with confessing him, there are many ways in which he may be denied. When a person denies a minor truth concerning Jesus, he thereby, in effect, denies all other minor truths, as well as the great central truth that he is the Son of God and the Savior of men. Peter denied Jesus in saying he did not know him; he was ashamed or afraid, or both, to acknowledge that he knew him.

"Whosoever shall confess me before men. . . . Whosoever shall deny me before men." Jesus was addressing the apostles, and they were believers. Jesus knew their faith and loyalty would be severely tested, that the temptations to disown him would be many and great. To fulfill their mission they must tell who sent them. In the very nature of things, then, they must be continually confessing Jesus. The language is applicable to the believer, from the days of the apostles on down to the end of time. To be a believer on Jesus Christ in a true sense is to be a follower, a Christian. This brings accusations from those not friendly to the cause; that is the time and the occasion of confessing or denying. The indifferent and unbelieving are not likely to either confess or deny, because there is never any occasion for it.

To confess Jesus is a duty. Jesus will confess those who confess him. "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Man is a social being, and religion is a social thing; at least it has its social features. No one can embrace the true religion without embracing its social features. It must be practiced in the presence of others; its truths must be to others declared.

The necessity of confessing Christ is the result of man's social nature and the social features inherent in the religion of the Bible. When should one confess Jesus, and how often? The Bible teaches that one should confess Jesus as soon as he decides to follow him, but he should follow as soon as he becomes a believer; hence a person should confess as soon as he believes. He should confess him thereafter just as often as the incidents, happenings, circumstances of his life, and loyalty to Jesus require. The confession taught in the Scriptures is oftener drawn from the individual by enemies than by friends, and it is to be made oftener in the face of wicked men than in the presence of Christians. G. W. BONHAM.
Berclair, Texas.

Some seek peace by avoiding conflict with the evil forces about them. Jesus came to inaugurate a constant warfare between good and evil. It is folly to talk about the true disciple living in peace with those who are in error. Jesus will never own the disciple that rests in compromises with error. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law." And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." (Matt. 10: 34-36.) Christ did not come to bring superficial, pernicious peace. Christ might have avoided a conflict with the money of constantly-growing success talk. That ought to convince you that there's "something in Pearline."

Let its twenty years

Twenty years ago Pearline was a new idea. And no new idea could have come into favor so rapidly and so largely, or would have been so copied and imitated, if it hadn't been a good idea. Pearline saves more, in washing, than anything else that's safe to use.

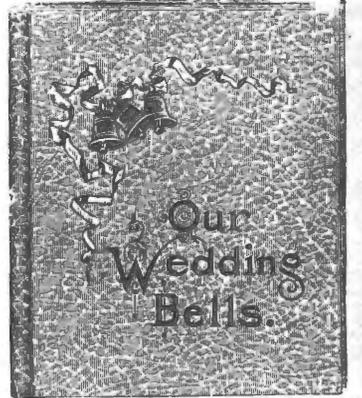

Millions of Noises Pearline

Have You Seen

OUR WEDDING BELLS?

A Beautiful Wedding Souvenir.

We have these bindings: Party-color Rose, Party-color Violet, White Art Vellum, Blue Art Vellum, White Embossed Leather. The book is 7x8 3/4 inches. A pretty design of "Wedding Bells" is stamped in gold on the cover. Contains a certificate, several pages for guests' names, and 21 pages of appropriate quotations, and is printed on heavy plate paper. Price, $1, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Company,
Nashville, Tenn.

sharks in the temple, he could have left the rulers alone in their sins and have enjoyed their good will, but he would not sacrifice every principle of right in order to be on good terms with them. Such peace is dear at such a price. When the evil is rooted out and the good sits on the throne, when the soul is in harmony with God, then, and not till then, will that peace which Christ brought be ours. Of this, Jesus said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Peace cannot be found in outward circumstances. Our lives are ever restless till they rest in Him. In vain do men seek the world's fleeting treasures, thereby hoping to find peace. They may drink the most refreshing draughts that the world can give, and then die of thirst. There is no peace to the soul away from God. Only those that obey God will ever enjoy that peace that passeth understanding. "Righteousness and peace have kissed each other."

"Handbook on Baptism," by J. W. Shepherd, with an introduction by J. A. Harding. This book contains the testimonies of learned pedobaptists on the action and subjects of baptism, and of both Baptists and pedobaptists on the design thereof. The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities. It is a great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student, and has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published. It is printed from large type, 8vo cloth, and has 486 pages. Price, $1.50.

As the years come and go we would do well to review our past lives. What did we write in the year 1899? What are our resolutions for the last year of this century? We cannot consider too seriously the follies of the past if we are fully determined to avoid them in the future. What we have written we have written, and no earthly power can alter the record. But now we can live nearer the cross. With prayerful hearts at the close of each day we can ask forgiveness for the wrongs of the day and resolve to be guilty of them no more. With a little improvement each day we will come to life's close with a noble manhood. If we are not better to-day than we were last year, we are worse. Growing worse as the years glide away, at last we will be fitted for the world of outer darkness. As we make the journey of life but one time, how essential that we should be ever on our guard so as to shun the dangerous places! May God help us all to grow purer and better as we approach the other shore.

Two-thirds of the world's sugar is now produced from beets. Cane sugar production has scarcely doubled during the past twenty-seven years, while that from beets has more than quintupled. Meantime the price has fallen more than one-half, the average cost in foreign countries of all sugar imported into the United States in the fiscal year 1872 being 5.37 cents per pound, and in 1899, 2.39 cents per pound. These facts are shown by a tabulation prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics in response to the demands for information regarding sugar production which have followed the meeting of Congress and the prospective consideration of matters relating to the sugar-producing islands which have recently come into closer relations with the United States. No development of the world's production of food stuffs has been more rapid or striking than that with reference to beet sugar. The sugar-producing area of the world has in less than a half century been shifted from the tropics northward, and the farmer of the temperate zone has shown his ability not only to compete with the low-priced labor of the tropics, but in doing so to reduce by one-half the cost of the article produced.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR
the grandest and fastest-selling book ever published,
Pulpit Echoes

OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART. Containing Mr. MOODY'S best Sermons, with 100 Thrilling Stories, Incidents, Personal Experiences etc., as told himself. With a complete history of his life by Rev. CHAR. F. GOSSE, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Chicago Church for five years, and an Introduction by Rev. LYMAN ARBOTT, D. D. Brand new, 600 pp., beautifully illustrated. $1.00 more. AGENTS WANTED—Men and Women. Sales immense—a harvest time for Agents. Send for terms to S. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

By D. L. Moody

Lofty ideals precede noble endeavor.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Refined Paraffine Wax

ARE YOU A MINERAL?

There are Minerals in Your Blood.
You Think You Belong to the Animal Kingdom.

And so you do; but your body contains minerals that are absolutely needed to keep you in health and alive.

You are like a quartz mine. There are veins of phosphorus, sulphur, magnesia, calcium, iron in your blood.

They are nerve and tissue foods; just as starch and meat are. What we call "poor" blood is nearly always the lack of one or more of these mineral physiological foods.

The rich, red strength and nerve power in good, healthy blood is due to its vein of iron.

Pale people are poor-blooded people. They lack strength and stamina; they are nervous; they catch cold easily; they suffer from headaches, rheumatism, dizziness, sleeplessness, depression of spirits, fever, ague, general lack of health and vitality.

They may build up an iron constitution with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Swallowing an iron bar won't help you. A chemical salt of iron is needed, so that it can go through the natural chemical processes of your body.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, a medicine which contains a new salt of iron, is more easily dissolved into the blood and turned into strength than any other.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic makes you as strong as iron.

Read this from a Texas man:
"Office of the Texas Farm and Ranch.

"Dallas, Texas, December 15, 1897.

"Gentlemen: It affords me pleasure to add my short testimonial to the merits of your Iron Tonic. I secured from the Palace Drug Store, of this city, a sample bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, and, after using same according to directions, can say that I derived so much benefit from the same that in future Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will occupy a prominent place in my medicine cabinet. I find that it builds up the system, aids digestion, and will greatly benefit those suffering from indigestion. Yours very truly,

"W. H. D'BORDE.

"343 Main street."
His experience is only one of thousands. Nature cannot do wrong. A weak system craves iron.

Give it to it.
Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.
Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's
IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard; ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.

RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

BLUMYER BCHURCH
UNLIKE OTHERS SELLS
SWEETER, MORE DUR-ABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE
TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

Virginia Jottings.

In the Gospel Echo, of November 16, 1899, Brother T. S. Hutson says of my tract on "Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War:" "The writer having read very carefully a tract on 'Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War,' herein presents a brief review. This is done that others may be led into a fuller investigation of this much-controverted subject. The author of this tract is Brother J. T. Showalter, of Snowville, Va. We give a few of his 'snap shots' and Scripture references. Let the reader take his Bible and read the Scriptures, and then if he is not satisfied with a taste, let him send for the tract and get a full meal." After giving quotations from the tract, Brother Hutson concludes as follows: "The writer recommends this tract to a careful reading. I owe it to Brother Daniel Sommer, on one side, and Brothers David Lipscomb, W. J. Brown, W. J. Miller, and J. T. Showalter, on the other, for stirring up my mind on this question. Brother Showalter's argument is as clear and condensed as any I have read. I 'fess up' that I have been losing interest in politics since reading up. I I fear it is not good literature for those who would be enthusiastic politicians. I may write more on this subject in the future. In the meantime, I will search the Scriptures." Brother Hutson is a writer on the "contributory staff" of the Octographic Review. I thank Brother Hutson for his complimentary notice of my tract. One was sent to the Gospel Advocate, with the request that Brother David Lipscomb examine and give his opinion of the same. The notice appeared in the Advocate of December 7. One was sent to the Primitive Christian, and a little general notice of my tract and others was served out a short time ago, which appeared to be "a little on this side and a little on that." By permission of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, I will say to the many thousand readers of the paper that the tract is now ready for delivery at 5 cents per copy, or 50 cents per dozen, sent by mail, by the author, J. T. Showalter, Snowville, Lunenburg County, Va. The title of the tract is "Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War." Send on, brethren, and get a tract, or a dozen, or one hundred, if desired. Terms per hundred given upon application.

On the second Lord's day in December the writer visited the church at Mechanicsburg, Bland County, Va. They are about as usual. Two weeks before that time only four assembled for the breaking of bread, and they were all of Brother J. Burton's family—Brethren Burton and Songer and their wives. It makes one think of "the church in thy house" (Phile. 2), or "the church that is in their house." (Rom. 16: 5; 1 Cor. 16: 19.) Very often nowadays the worship of the Lord will have to be attended to by the few, if attended to at all. Nevertheless, it should never be neglected. Jesus said: "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." (Matt. 18: 20.) This scripture ought to be enough to encourage all to go forward, even though only a few follow in the strait and narrow way. God and one constitute a majority, for the simple reason that God is greater than all else besides. When a man's ambition excels his mental caliber and piety, he and Christ then part company.

J. T. SHOWALTER.

A Singer Sewing Machine

THE BEST INVESTMENT ON EARTH, earning more in proportion to cost than any other purchase possible.

THREE DIFFERENT KINDS, either lock-stitch or chain-stitch.

BUILT LIKE A WATCH,
at the largest and best equipped factory in the world, where every machine is carefully tested on practical stitching.

Sold only by

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10

VOICE OF PRAISE.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75

WORDS OF TRUTH.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,

232 N. Market Street,

Nashville, Tennessee.

Labor in the Lord not in Vain.

To the one who sacrifices home and its comforts and goes with no hope of earthly reward, in order to publish the glad tidings of salvation in the unevangelized sections, there will be more or less anxiety as to the results of such labors. It is sometimes hard to learn the lesson to be faithful to duty and leave the result with God. While I have been a dull pupil along this line, yet there are continually arising things that ought to encourage. I have been led to these thoughts by being called to attend the funeral of an aged sister in Christ—Sister Ellen Bobo—who died on December 12, 1899, in her eighty-eighth year. She belonged to a noble generation of men and women that is nearly extinct. The generation that is coming on may be able to meet the responsibilities that will confront them, but it is certain that they could not meet those that this older generation had to meet. Sister Bobo was an old-time disciple, having been in the Master's service nearly sixty years. Away back in the forties, in sight of my father's house, in a beautiful grove, a stand and seats were arranged, where preaching was often done by God-fearing and self-sacrificing men, chief among whom was Calvin Curlee. These preachers, while claiming to be only Christians, and to preach none other things than those taught by Christ and the apostles, were often maligned and persecuted; "schismatics" and other opprobrious epithets were applied to them. No congregation was established there, and only the older people know that that particular locality was ever used for religious services. But were all those long rides and self-sacrifices by Curlee and his collaborators for naught? Certainly not. Though no congregation was established, a number of heads of families, among them W. P. Bobo and wife, Ellen, obeyed the gospel. These all contributed to the building up of congregations in adjoining neighborhoods. Counting those who accepted the truth at this stand in the woods and their descendants, who were trained in the truth by them, we will have several scores of persons. The preachers who labored there are all beyond the dark river.

In the death of Sister Bobo the last of the original converts is gone; yet in different parts of Tennessee, in Georgia, in Alabama, in Texas, and in Arkansas the leaven of Christianity is at work in the person of their descendants. From this and many similar cases all over the country the preachers of to-day should be encouraged to faithfully preach the word in season and out of season. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."
J. D. FLOYD.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book" and order one the first time you go to the post office. The price is $1, by mail, postpaid. Those who have expressed themselves in regard to it pronounce it a charming little book.

FREE TO SUFFERERS

The New Botanic Cure for Kidney, Bladder, and Rheumatic Diseases—A Wonderful Discovery.

Disorders of the kidneys and bladder cause Bright's disease, rheumatism, gravel, pain in the back, bladder disorders, difficult or too frequent passing water, dropsy, etc. For these diseases a positive specific cure is found in a new botanical discovery, the wonderful Kava-Kava Shrub, called by botanists the piper methysticum, from the Ganges River, East India. It has the extraordinary record of 1,200 hospital cures in thirty days. It acts directly on the kidneys, and cures by draining out of the blood the poisonous uric acid, urates, lithates, etc., which cause the disease.

Hon. R. C. Wood, a leading attorney of Lowell, Ind., cured of kidney and bladder disease, writes:

"I am now fifty-five years old, and have used various kinds of medicines. For the past ten years I have suffered from rheumatism and liver trouble, and have also suffered from kidney and bladder trouble for the past five years. I have been treated by all our home physicians and by three different specialists, besides having used various so-called specifics without receiving the least benefit. My bladder trouble became so troublesome that I had to get up from five to twelve times during the night to urinate. In fact, I was in misery the whole time, and was becoming very despondent. I have now used Alkavis, and am better than I have been for five years. I know Alkavis will cure bladder and kidney trouble, and can most heartily recommend it to all sufferers. I feel so grateful to you that I feel I owe it to you to write you this. Wishing you the success you deserve, I am,

Hon. R. C. Wood, Lowell, Ind.

"Respectfully yours,

"R. C. WOOD."

Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, D. C., testifies in the Christian Advocate that Alkavis completely cured him of kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies, including Mrs. C. C. Fowler, of Locktown, N. J., and Mrs. James Young, of Kent, O., also testify to its wonderful curative powers in kidney and other disorders peculiar to womanhood.

That you may judge of the value of this great discovery for yourself we will send you one large case by mail free, only asking that when cured yourself you will recommend it to others. It is a sure specific cure, and cannot fail. Address the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 403 Fourth avenue, New York City.

GUNS! GUNS!

WE CARRY THE BEST STOCK OF

GUNS AND SPORTSMEN'S GOODS

IN THE SOUTH.

We have the best Hammerless Gun in America for $25. We have a very fine imported Hammer Gun, worth $25, that we will sell for $19. We have only a few of these left; they are close, hard shooters.

Send us your name and address, and we will send you our Gun Catalogue.

H. G. LIPSCOMB & CO.

152 N. MARKET ST.

Nashville, Tennessee.

Kansas Notes.

Brother O. W. Thomason has been visiting Brother J. E. Cain. He recently closed a good meeting at Chalk. He preached at Peck on the fourth Lord's day in December, and on the following Saturday he began a meeting at Florence.

Brother Will. Ellmore closed a meeting at Riverdale on the fourth Lord's day in December. I have not heard the result.

Brother I. D. Moffitt has been in a fine meeting at Cleardale. While the weather was not good, that did not appear to break the interest. It was one of the most interesting meetings ever conducted in that community.

Brother B. F. Martin has been in a meeting at Round Mound.

Brother C. C. Houston preached at Mulvane on December 22. They were pleased with his work.

Brother J. E. Cain was recently called to Wellington to perform a marriage ceremony. From there he went to Butler County on the same business. He preached ten miles west of Caldwell on the last Lord's day in December.

Brother J. A. Perry is in a meeting near Alameda. After that meeting closes he will hold one near Belmont. He has been making a tour through Oklahoma, and is now on his way back north.

I was with the brethren at Gage on the fourth Lord's day in December. I preached on Saturday night, Lord's day and night, and on Monday night. On Monday, December 25, at noon, I pronounced the ceremony that legalized the marriage of Brother Bruce L. Millard and Sister Minnie E. Reed, both of Gage. They are both members of the one body at that place. On December 28, at 4 P.M., Mr. J. S. Bunch, of Beloit, and Miss Margaret Dull, of Belle Plaine, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, the writer officiating. The groom is a young druggist of Beloit; the bride, one of our most successful teachers.

Much enthusiasm has been exercised in celebrating the day that some people suppose that Christ was born on. I am afraid that many professed Christians will not be so enthusiastic in celebrating his resurrection when the next "first day of the week" comes. Men are much more enthusiastic over their own institutions than the Lord's. The celebration of December 25 as Christmas Day is man's institution; the Lord's day celebration is the Lord's institution. I presume it is human nature for man to think most of that which he makes himself, and that accounts for the way men act. We need more of the divine nature, that it may subdue the human, so that we will take more interest in the Lord's institution. This principle decides the "why" of many things we observe. A man once said to me: "I was once a church worker. I am now poor and I belong to three lodges, and it takes all the money I can spare to defray my expenses there. I have none left for the church; and, as I have no money for the church, I do not go." He talked very sincerely about the matter and made an honest confession; that is more than many will do. I knew one man that would not go to lodge on prayer-meeting night; he went to prayer meeting. I do not know many of that kind. Bad weather, rain, mud, snow, etc., do not appear to be great barriers when people want to go to Christmas trees, operas, or the lodge; but the rain is too much, mud too deep, or snow too cold for many to go to the Lord's with one of these surreys. They are handsome, strong, stylish, easy riding and durable. Selling on our plan you can examine it thoroughly before you are required to buy it.

Your Whole Family Would Be Satisfied

WE HAVE NO AGENTS but sell all goods direct from our factory to the purchaser at wholesale prices. We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. We have pursued this plan successfully for 27 years. You assume no risk as we ship our goods anywhere for examination and guarantee their arrival. Largest selection in the country as we make 175 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness. Catalogue free.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. Pratt, Secy., Elkhart, Indiana.

DOES THIS

CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

service on the Lord's day. One of these is the Lord's institution; the others belong to man. I presume they think that the Lord may take care of his and they will care for theirs. We must remember there will be a day of reckoning after a while, and the Lord will have charge of affairs on that day, and we will not have much to say in it then. Whatever we consider the most important we ought to give the preference when we have an opportunity to choose between them. No matter of how much importance men's institutions may be in their place, Christians should regard the Lord's institution of supreme importance and act thus toward it. Our institutions certainly ought to be secondary matters, at best; the Lord's must be first. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," etc. I will give you one sentence from a speech that I heard recently: "Without the principles for which Freemasonry stands, Washington could not have been immortal." What do you think of this?
D. T. BROADUS,
Belle Plaine, Kan.

Free for Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist of Crawfordsville, Ind., will send free, by mail, to all who send him their address, a package of pansy compound, which is two weeks' treatment, with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe, and blood poison.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy,
Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.
DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 50 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in the U. S., Canada, and Europe.
 Ferd. T. Hopkins, Prop., 37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

Purifies as well as softens the skin. No other Cosmetics will do it.

Length of Creative Days.

Does Moses say that God created the earth in six literal days of twenty-four hours each? Some think that the language in the first part of Genesis teaches it. It is also claimed that Adam was created on the sixth day and lived through the seventh, which shows it to be our natural day; but there seems to be no intimation in the Scriptures that the last statement is true. "And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day." But no such statement marks the beginning and ending of the seventh day.

If there was only one meaning attached to the word "day," and that meaning was always a period of twenty-four hours, we would then be left to but one conclusion; but most words have more than one meaning, and the word "day" is no exception. In Gen. 1: 5 alone the word has two different meanings, although the same word in the original is used to designate both. In the first two chapters of Genesis the same word has some five different meanings. In Gen. 1: 5 the word means (1) a proper name for light as distinguished from darkness, with no reference to duration; and (2) a period of time, a creative day. In Gen. 1: 14 it means a period of twenty-four hours; in Gen. 1: 16 the word "day" marks the time the sun gives light on the earth; while in Gen. 2: 4 the same word, "day," includes the entire period of creation—all the other six. From the meaning of the word itself, then, there is no necessity for making it mean just twenty-four hours, or one revolution of the earth on its axis.

The expression, "And there was evening and there was morning," does not necessitate twenty-four hours; it rather indicates the opposite. It is an expression used uniformly from the first day to the sixth; but the sun was not made till the fourth day. (Gen. 1: 14-19.) This indicates that the expression is used entirely independent of the sun, the luminary that marks the period of twenty-four hours.

In order to mark a period of twenty-four hours one must be located on this earth. But does Moses, in speaking of the work of the Maker, represent him as being on this earth? It would seem unreasonable to speak of the creative days from man's point of view. From the throne of his Majesty God made not only this world, but also many others, which, in like manner, are known to make their revolutions around the sun, marking days and nights. Why should God arbitrarily divide the periods of creating a universe by one of the least of the planets without the slightest regard to any of the rest? The thought is not plausible. "A day with the Lord" is not, from the very nature of the case, as a day with man; and why say "a day with the Lord" if it is not a different day from that with man? The difference grows out of a different relation that man sustains to the earth to what God does. "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night." (Ps. 90: 4.) It is worthy of note, also, that Moses wrote Ps. 90, as well as Genesis. He has, therefore, given us some idea of what he means by "day" when he speaks of it from the Lord's point of view.

Again, the expression, "And there was evening and there was morning," cannot apply to our natural day as we commonly use such words. Webster defines "evening": "The latter part and close of the day, and the beginning of darkness or night; properly, the decline of the day or of the sun." He defines "morning" thus: "Pertaining to the first part or early part of the day; being in the early part of the day; as 'morning dew;' 'morning light;' 'morning service.'" So the terms "evening" and "morning" do not commonly include any save the beginning and close of the day, and none of the night. From the style of the language, then, there is no necessity to make it mean twenty-four hours; no one thus designates twenty-four hours at the present time, nor is there any other place in all the Scriptures where such phraseology is used to denote a day and night. They were used in the same sense as now, and the morning was almost always put before the evening. When the natural day was referred to, such was the custom of both the Old Testament and the New Testament writers. "Morning" marked the beginning of the day and "evening" marked its close at nightfall. But in Dan. 8, R. V., where long periods of time are meant for the only time in all the Scriptures, the same expression as that in Gen. 1 occurs: "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred evenings and mornings; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." "And the vision of the evenings and mornings which hath been told is true: but shut thou up the vision; for it belongeth to many days to come." This "two thousand three hundred evenings and mornings" is admitted even by those that hold to the literal day view, as to creation, to cover a long period of time, reaching down to the present. So the very expression which is thought to be proof for a natural day is proof for a long period of time, since the expression never occurs anywhere else in the Scriptures, except in Dan. 8, where, evidently, a long period of time for each of the "two thousand three hundred evenings and mornings" is meant.

That the expression, "evening and morning," cannot refer to our day of twenty-four hours, a period marked by the relation of the sun to the earth, is seen in the fact that it was used three days before there was a sun. It is not the common expression used to denote twenty-four hours; it is defined by Daniel to mean many days to come. God's relation to time is not the same as that of ours, since he is not confined to this earth, as we are, and Moses explains that a thousand years to him is not what it is to us.

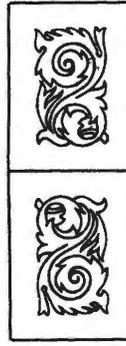

J. M. M'CALEB.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands, by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and lung affections; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all nervous complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 520 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

BY
A. P. STOUT

TOUCHES and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places are most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the "Man of sorrows" are almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. Address

Price, $1.00

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

RANDOLPH.

Brother P. M. Randolph was born on January 27, 1827, in Bradley or Meigs County, Tenn., and lived there till twenty-one years of age, when he moved to White County, Tenn., where he lived until the year 1881, when he moved to Franklin County, Ark., where he lived the remainder of his days. He married in White County, Tenn., and his wife preceded him to the grave about ten years. For many years he was a member of the church of God, as he and his wife were baptized in early manhood and womanhood. He is said to have been a very earnest and devoted member, striving to do his duty as a Christian, both toward God and his fellow-men. For thirty years he was nearly all the time a regular subscriber to and reader of the Gospel Advocate, and highly enjoyed its contents. He made many friends, and few, if any, enemies, and will be greatly missed by the surviving members of the family, the church, and the community. He fell asleep on December 10, 1899. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." S.

BROWN.

Brother Robert C. Brown was born at Pinewood, Tenn., January 29, 1874. He was baptized in the summer of 1892, at Pinewood. He was married to Sister Rachel Brooks, of Isom, Tenn., September 29, 1892, and died at Hohenwald, Tenn., December 21, 1899. Brother Brown was a very modest, unassuming man, but a very earnest and efficient member of the church. He has taken great interest in trying to build up the cause of truth at Hohenwald, where he has lived for a few years. A congregation was started there and a house of worship was erected, with good prospects for the success of the plain truth of the Lord's word in that community, in which he labored very earnestly. He was thoroughly satisfied with the word of the Lord, and had no fellowship with modern innovations and human inventions in religion. He was a faithful and earnest worker in the church and had the confidence of the whole community and was thus enabled to do much good, which he did in his quiet way. He carried the principles of Christianity into his business relations, and by his words and deeds convinced all of the reality of his claims to be a child of God, thus making the religion of Christ the rule by which he lived in everyday life. He was true and kind in his family, both as husband and father, and we truly sympathize with the bereaved wife and the three little children that he leaves to mourn for him. But they will sorrow not as those who have no hope; for he leaves to them, in all its fullness, the hope of the gospel of Christ; and if the family and friends will serve the Lord as he has done, they may meet him where no more sad farewells will be said.

E. G. S.

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL LIFE OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

—BY—
 Rev. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D., one of MOODY'S MOST INTIMATE COWORKERS AND NEXT TO HIM
 THE GREATEST EVANGELIST IN
 THE WORLD. The book will be replete with personal incident and anecdote, and tells the story of the GREATEST AND MOST USEFUL LIFE of the century—how by his eloquence and power vast assemblies in this country and England were held entranced and thousands of souls were blessed. It is a magnificent opportunity for Agents. TERMS LIBERAL. Send 20c to pay cost of mailing and get it QUICKLY.
 JOHN C. WINSTON & CO.
 328 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

A Piano for Sale.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Our calendar is the nicest and prettiest we have ever made. See our premium offer in regard to same on last page.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

OUR HOME

232 N. MARKET ST.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Estimates Cheerfully
Furnished

ON BOOKS, TRACTS, CATALOGUES, AND EVERYTHING DONE IN A FIRST-CLASS
PRINTING ESTABLISHMENT

TEACHER'S BIBLES

No. 14 B. & G. Self-pronouncing Sunday school teacher's large-type edition, flexible Morocco covers, linen lined, maps, subject index, concordance, and many other helps. Round corners, gold edges over red. Price, $1.75.

No. 7501½. Egyptian seal, divinity circuit, round corners, gold edges. Price, $1.25.

No. 933. Our Combination Art Bible. Full-page illustrations. Text of Authorized Version, with footnotes, showing changes made in the Revision. Large-type edition, self-pronouncing, usual helps, subject index, maps, concordance, etc. Flexible covers, gold edges over red. A nice book. Price, $2.25.

No. 4511. Self-pronouncing Sunday School Teacher's Bible, minion type, 8vo. Has subject index, concordance, maps, and the usual helps to be found in a teacher's Bible. Round corners, flexible covers, linen lined, gold edges over red. Price, $1.50.

Same Bible with index, $2.

No. 4722. Holman Self-pronouncing Teacher's Bible, bourgeois type, subject index, concordance, helps, maps, etc. Flexible covers, gold edges over red. Price, $2.

Same Bible with index, $2.50.

No. 836. Holman Self-pronouncing Teacher's Bible, large-type edition, flexible Morocco covers, leather lined, gold edges over red, latest helps. A fine Bible. Price, $5.50.

SOME BARGAINS IN GENUINE OXFORD BIBLES

We have in stock about twenty fine Oxford Teacher's Bibles. We have sold these Bibles at prices ranging from $3.50 to $7.50. The type is not as large as is usually desired; and if the size of the type is not too serious an objection to you, you can get a fine Bible very cheap. They are divinity circuit, flexible Morocco covers, and leather lined. The first order will get the best Bible; the second, next best; and so on through the list. If you want one, send $2.25 at once.

TESTAMENTS

No. 801. Flexible cloth, colors, ruby, 24mo. Price, per dozen, 80 cents.

No. 2316 P. French Morocco, linen lined, limp, gold side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, 90 cents.

No. 2326. French Morocco, leather lined, limp round corners, gold edges, emerald type. Price, $1.05.

No. 2326 P.* Same description as 2326, with Psalms added. Price, $1.20.

No. 201. Grained cloth, embossed bands, back and side titles, brevier type, red edges. Price, 40 cents.

No. 500 P. Large type, cloth, embossed bands, back and side titles, red edges. Price, 90 cents.

No. 693 P. French Morocco, flexible backs, round corners, gold titles on back and sides, large type, gold edges. Price, $2.

No. 255. Same description as No. 500 P, without Psalms. Price, 80 cents.

No. 2600 P. French Morocco, flexible backs, gold titles on back and sides, long primer type; edges, red under gold. Price, $1.10.

No. 2416. Grained cloth, embossed bands, gold title on back, red edges, large type. Price, $1.25.

No. 2443½ P. Large-print family Testament, Morocco gold titles on back and sides, round corners; edges, gold over red. Price, $2.15.

SELF-PRONOUNCING TESTAMENTS

No. 2300. Grained cloth, cut flush, red edges. Price, per single copy, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.50.

No. 2303. Russia cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, 50 cents.

No. 2313. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, embossed bands top and bottom, round corners, gold edges. Price, 60 cents.

No. 2902. Morocco, grained cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red burnished edges. This is large, clear pica type. Price, 85 cents.

No. 2914. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red under gold edges, gold roll. The type the same as 2901. A very handsome book. Price, $1.50.

No. 2303 P. (P means that the book has the Psalms.) Russia cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, 35 cents.

No. 2313 P. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, embossed bands top and bottom, round corners, gold edges. Price, 65 cents.

No. 2902 P. Morocco, grained cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red burnished edges. Price, $1.

No. 2014 P. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red under gold edges, gold roll. Price, $1.65.

POCKET TESTAMENTS—NOT SELF-PRONOUNCING

No. 20. Ruby, 32mo, leatherette, round corners, red edges. Price, 20 cents.

No. 23. French Morocco, gilt edges, type good. Price, 30 cents.

LONG PRIMER TESTAMENT

No. 400. Seal grain cloth, round corners, red edges. Price, 50 cents.

SMALL PICA SQUARE 16MO TESTAMENT AND PSALMS

No. 331. French Morocco, divinity circuit, linen lined, round corners, red under gold edges. Large type. Price, $1.25.

Self-pronouncing combination Testaments, containing both versions in one. The Revised Version is read in the footnotes.

No. 1100. Style A. Cloth, sprinkled edges, illustrated. Has the Psalms, references, and large, clear, type. Price, $1.15.

No. 1102. Style B. Limp, leather back, gilt edges. Contains the same matter as Style A. Price, $1.50.

The above is only a partial list of the Bibles and Testaments we have in stock. We have cheaper Bibles and higher-priced ones. Write to us for anything in the line of Bibles and Testaments. We think we can please you.

For 25 cents additional, we will stamp your name (one line) in gold letters on cover of Bibles and Testaments ordered from us.

BIBLE LESSON PAPERS

Gospel Quarterly, Lessons for Advanced Classes, per quarter.....	$ 06
Gospel Quarterly, Lessons for Intermediate Classes, per quarter.....	3
Gospel Quarterly, Lessons for Primary Classes, per quarter.....	2
Little Jewels (in colors), per quarter.....	6
Lesson Leaves (single sheets), per quarter.....	3
Bible Lesson Picture Cards, per quarter....	2½
Bible Lesson Pictures (chart), per quarter.	75

PAMPHLETS

Acts of the Apostles, by E. G. Sewell.....	$ 10
Woman's Work in the Church, by G. G. Taylor.....	10
The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by E. A. Elam.....	10
The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by O. A. Carr.....	10
Prayer, by H. Pharris.....	10
Methods of Work, by James E. Scobey....	10
Out of Darkness into Light, by Z. T. Winfree.....	3
Truth Seeking, by D. Lipscomb.....	10
Christian Unity, by D. Lipscomb.....	10
Proper Division of the Word of God, by E. G. Sewell.....	10
Walking by Faith, by M. C. Kurfrees.....	5
Dalton-Burnett Debate.....	25
Hall's Questions Answered, by T. R. Burnett.....	5
Hezekiah Jones.....	10
Sincerity Seeking the Way to Heaven, by Benjamin Franklin.....	5
The Sabbath—Which Day Shall We Observe? by D. Lipscomb.....	2
Church Organization, by E. G. Sewell.....	10
The New Birth, by J. A. Harding.....	1
Pump Reset, by J. M. Kidwill.....	10
Grub Ax Upset, by J. M. Kidwill.....	10
New Name, by J. M. Kidwill.....	10
Justification, by T. W. Brents.....	10
The Who and the What of the Disciples, by J. W. Lowber.....	10
Review of L. W. Bates, D.D., on Water Baptism, by R. H. Bonham.....	10
Heartfelt Religion, by J. H. Lawson.....	10
Instrumental Music in Public Worship, by E. W. Herndon.....	5
Grub Ax Turned, by W. L. Butler.....	10
Valid Baptism: A Discussion between A. McGary and T. R. Burnett.....	10
Valid Baptism—A Debate: Wilmeth-Burnett.....	10
Bible Geology, by I. N. Jones.....	10
How to Study the Bible, by J. D. Tant.....	10
Woman's Work in the Church, Taylor's Review of Kerley.....	10
Ray-Burnett Debate: A Discussion of the Doctrines and practices of the Missionary Baptist Church.....	25

Send all orders to
Gospel Advocate Pub. Co.
232 N. Market St., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,

No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US
TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS
AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF
$1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR,
WE WILL FORWARD THE BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO-
NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mámilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii. 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii. 30).

(The above is a specimen illustration from the Art Bible, No. 933.)

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either
NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a

NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE, $2.00 flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium for ONE NEW subscriber. * * * * *

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals, for one year, with the choice
of ONE of the following premiums, FOR $1.50

- (a) Home and Farm, One Year;
- (b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
- (c) Our New Calendar for 1900. * * * *

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES
BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. * * * ADDRESS

* GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. *

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

NASHVILLE, TENN., JANUARY 25, 1900

VOLUME XLII. NO. 4

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

Sweeney's Sermons

By JOHN S. SWEENEY

and an interesting life sketch of the author written by an intimate friend

The subjects of the sermons are: The Simplicity that is in Christ, The Three Sides of Christianity, The Church of God—Its Foundation, The Word of Truth, Our Aim, Regeneration, Acts of Apostles, The More Excellent Way, Paul's Answer to King Agrippa, Action of Baptism, Baptism for Remission of Sins, What Must I Do to Be Saved? Infant Baptism, A Plea for the Church of God. Of the sermons, J. W. McGarvey says: "I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ."

304 Pages, Neatly Bound in Cloth

Price ❀ $1.00

Biographies and Sermons

By F. D. SRYGLEY

424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. Illustrated. Photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc.

Intensely Interesting

Price ❀ $1.50

The Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell

By D. LIPSCOMB

This is an interesting book. One hundred and twenty-one pages are devoted to a memorial of his life, work, and character, by David Lipscomb; one hundred and ninety-seven pages to sermons, by Jesse Sewell. Sixteen of his best sermons are here given, covering all the phases of conversion, and especially on points upon which disciples and denominations differ. It contains sermons on such themes as: The Conversion of Cornelius, Atonement and Reconciliation, Witness of the Spirit, Form of Doctrine, The Grace of God, The Name of Christ, In Christ, The Son of God, The One Foundation, etc. This book will well repay any reader, and gives a larger fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

12MO, 318 PAGES, CLOTH

Price ❀ $1.00

Seventy Years in Dixie

By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

400 LARGE OCTAVO PAGES
LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

Price ❀ $1.50

Handbook on Baptism

By J. W. SHEPHERD

With an Introduction by J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof. The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities. A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student. It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

Large Type
8vo Cloth
486 Pages

Price ❀ $1.50

The Gospel Plan of Salvation.

By T. W. BRENTS

Clears away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes: Predestination, Election and Reprobation, Calvinistic Proofs Examined, The Foreknowledge of God, Hereditary Depravity, Establishment of the Church, Identity of the Church, The New Birth, Faith, Repentance, The Confession, Baptism—What is It? Who Should Be Baptized? The Design of Baptism, The Holy Spirit. As a book of reference, it is invaluable. Highly recommended by the press and the brotherhood. 667 pages, 8vo., good paper, clear type, well bound.

Eight Editions
Have Been Sold

Price ❀ $2.00

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,

No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US
TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS
AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF
$1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR,
WE WILL FORWARD THE BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO-
NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mamilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii. 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii. 30)

(The above is a specimen illustration from the Art Bible, No. 933.)

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either
NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a

NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE,
flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium for ONE NEW subscriber.

$2.00

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers
and renewals, for one year, with the choice of ONE of the following premiums, FOR

$1.50

- (a) Home and Farm, One Year;
- (b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
- (c) Our New Calendar for 1900.

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES
BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. ADDRESS

* GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. *

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 4.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JANUARY 25, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Questions for Paul, the Prisoner.....	50
Offenses.....	50
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 26.....	51
Go, Preach the Gospel.....	52
Miscellany.....	53
Queries.....	54
Home Reading.....	55
Questions by a Mormon.....	56
Letter to the Laodiceans.....	57
Obituaries.....	58
General News.....	60
Church News.....	61
A Letter of Thanks.....	61
Book Reviews.....	62
Will the Churches Do It?.....	63
Salvation from Sin.....	63
"The Sin"—What is It?.....	64

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

Brother J. W. Atkisson, of St. Louis, writes as follows:

"Brother J. M. McCaleb's article in the Gospel Advocate of January 4, 1900, ought to be printed in leaflet form and distributed freely to all Christians. It certainly sets forth a scriptural method of doing the financial part of missionary work—a method on which all can agree—and, besides, it has not got the fat-salaried secretary. Put it in leaflet, if you can."

I am putting as many things as I can in form for general distribution; I can do no more than I am doing in that line just now; but perhaps some one else can carry out Brother Atkisson's suggestion. I will do all I can to encourage and assist anybody in that or any other good work. In this connection I suggest that every Christian should do all he can to publish and distribute sound teaching on all subjects. The disposition to depend too much upon a few men to do everything in this line tends to unscriptural centralization in publishing corporations, which will logically result, if not counteracted by individual effort, in stagnation of individual energy, if in nothing worse. To prevent this, every Christian who sees something in this line that ought to be done should feel it his duty to do it.

The following letter refers to a quotation from a letter written by Brother Frost, which recently appeared in these columns:

"Dear Brother: If the organ and society (Brother Frost's scaffolds) are really necessary in the building of the kingdom of heaven, why did not Christ and the apostles say so, or at least adopt some such methods? Methods of travel—walking, horseback riding, etc.—are inventions of men, and were used by the apostles; but they at no time used the society for the furtherance of the gospel. But Brother Frost often refers to the palace car as an improvement over riding on horseback, thereby implying that the society is as far in advance of the church, or as far superior to the church, as the riding in a palace car is superior to riding a horse. If I believed as he does, I would quit the church at once. Again, Brother Frost thinks that the ancients built very small, inferior houses, therefore they needed no scaffolds in building them; but in this age of skyscraping houses we need scaffolds to build them. The implication is, here, that evangelization in this age is far more difficult than in the apostolic age, and the worship in this age is as far in advance of the apostolic age as a six-story house is superior to a hovel or dugout. Instead of leading to Jerusalem, he is leading to Rome. But Brother Frost is a good man, a strong and well-trained debater, a shrewd logician, and a long-winded controversialist. But why advocate societyism to the dividing of the church when he acknowledges that the Bible does not teach it?

J. W. ATKISSON.

"4117 Peck street, St. Louis, Mo.

"P.S. Of course it would be a difficult matter to build a six-story house without scaffolds, but the point I wish to press is that if the modern church is as far superior to the New Testament church as a six-story house is to an ancient hovel, dugout, or cave, why not quit the New Testament altogether? If the wisdom of men is superior to the wisdom of God, why not give up God entirely and follow men exclusively?"

J. W. A."

If organized effort is the scaffolding and preaching the gospel is the building, the chief objection to it is that the scaffolding costs more than the house.

In the following letter I publish only the statement of facts, erasing comments which are pertinent and timely and which I would publish but for lack of space:

"Brother Srygley: I came to this town about ten days since and found a congregation of disciples in confusion, and, upon investigation, I soon learned that there were two kinds of people here trying to work and worship together, one side insisting on work and worship as it is written; the other insisting that all things be done as the Executive Board of the Christian Missionary Coöperation of Alabama directed. The State evangelist was sent for, who is Mr. Hawkins. Upon reaching the grounds and surveying the situation, he began to cunningly gobble up all that was in sight, both present and future, with all the liberties and rights of the Christian. I give you below his bill of sale to their church property, with every right and privilege of the individual Christian. The following is a correct copy of Mr. Hawkins' bill of sale:

"December 10, 1899.—To the Members of the Executive Board of the Christian Missionary Coöperation of Alabama—Gentlemen: The undersigned, members of the Christian Mission of Greenville, Ala., do hereby agree to turn over our individual interest and the money paid into this work by us as individuals to the Christian Missionary Coöperation of the State of Alabama, to be owned and controlled by the Executive Board of the Christian Missionary Coöperation. It is understood that you will appoint our treasurer and any other officers whom you may deem we have need of, the same being responsible to you and subject to your authority. It is understood that this agreement continues and holds good until such time as the Executive Board may deem wise to create an independent congregation of disciples at this place (Greenville, Ala.), with its elders, deacons, trustees, treasurer, etc."

"There are thirty names to Mr. Hawkins' bill of sale, many of whom were deceived by being told that it was only an agreement to settle a difficulty in the congregation. These are all dissatisfied and intend to turn loose the human machine and cling to Christ and his word. S. I. S. CAWTHON.

"Greenville, Ala., January 7, 1900."

The policy of the Executive Board and State evangelist, as defined by themselves in this contract, is to "own and control," not only church property, but Christians and churches, without any provisions for Christians to be governed by what they believe the New Testament teaches. If it had been their purpose to encourage or allow those Christians to form and follow their own convictions from a study of the New Testament, they should have said, in the contract, "until such time as" those Christians believe the New Testament teaches them "to create an independent congregation." The Executive Board will hardly deem it wise "to create an independent congregation" in that place "until such time as" they can create a congregation which they can control. What the board and the State evangelist have done in this case is what they are trying to do, and will do, if they can, everywhere. They want to own and control things. Where there is no church they can control, they propose to own and control everything they can "until such time as" they can "create a congregation" which they can control. The thirty persons who have signed this contract cannot be governed by the New Testament. They have agreed "to be owned and controlled" by the Executive Board, and what they believe the New Testament teaches cuts no figure in the case. Suppose they should conclude the New Testament requires them to constitute an independent congregation before "the Executive Board" deems it wise to change the situation; what then? They have obligated themselves to be governed by the Executive Board, and they cannot do what they themselves believe the New Testament teaches. Suppose "the Executive Board" should "deem" they "have need of" officers which they themselves believe the New Testament plainly teaches they should not have; what then? They have agreed to be governed by the Executive Board, and they cannot do what they themselves believe the New Testament plainly teaches. This is one way "to settle a difficulty," sure enough. Another way, and a better way, to settle the difficulty would be to worship and serve the Lord as the New Testament teaches. The Christians in Greenville or anywhere else are the church in that place, and their plain duty is to worship and serve God, if there are only "two or three" of them, as the New Testament teaches. Whenever they do this "an independent congregation" is already established. They cannot worship and serve God as the New Testament teaches without constituting an independent congregation. An agreement that they will not constitute an independent congregation is a covenant that they will not worship and serve God as the New Testament teaches. The New Testament makes no provision for a protectorate in an executive board over Christians in the worship and service of the Lord.

I have before me a letter written from Hongkong, China, by a practical business man who is traveling in foreign countries and seeing things with his own eyes from his own standpoint. I quote as follows:

"I came down from Shanghai a few days ago to this place and will leave here on Saturday for Calcutta, stopping off at Singapore four days. From Calcutta I will go across India to Bombay by rail. I will reach Calcutta about December 20, and possibly spend Christmas in Bombay. I am anxious to cross India, as it is a noted country for many things. There is very little in Hongkong to entertain an American sight-seer. There are only three places of interest here—the 'Peak,' 'Happy Valley,' and the botanical gardens. Happy Valley is one of the prettiest places I ever saw. It is grounds laid off for football, tennis, etc., and in one corner is the cemetery. Hongkong is situated on a small island, and that island is one great big, high mountain, and the town is right down at the foot of the mountain on the bay. From the Peak you get a fine view of the bay, city, and surrounding country. The town is run almost entirely by Chinese, and only positions are filled by Europeans or Americans that cannot be intrusted or filled by the Chinese. I have seen nearly every specimen of humanity, and I find the Chinese to be the lowest, as they are entirely devoid of honor or character. I do not believe one of them has ever been converted, and it is time and money thrown away to send missionaries out here. In the first place, about one-tenth of the money collected for missionary work is all that reaches its proper destination. The present parties engaged in the work here have taken advantage of their jobs and built for themselves, with missionary funds, fine houses, and are living with ease, with all the comforts of life and a yard full of servants. Missionary work is all right when it is properly carried on, and in the future, as they have in the past, my donations in that line, which are small and few, will go direct from my hand to those in need. There are about four hundred millions of Chinese, besides an equal number of other heathens, over here, and at the present rate of progress of the missionaries it would take about that many years to gain anything like a headway. These are facts, as I have been right here among the missionaries for two months. They go to work and fix themselves up, and if there is anything left, they give a part of that to some one who does not need it. I did not intend to air this subject so fully by letter; however, this is the way things stand."

I withhold the name of the writer, but publish what he says, because it is worthy of consideration. When competent, practical, and reliable men write such letters from personal observation, it seems to me that it is worth while to consider what they say and investigate the situation.

Our Contributors.

Questions for Paul, the Prisoner.

Quintus: "Most excellent Paul, the apostle, you may remember me. I am the young man who was introduced to you by Timotheus at your last meeting; I am a son of Julius, the centurion, who had charge of the prisoners when the ship was wrecked off the coast of the island, Melita. I have become much interested in you; and, learning that you were to suffer the death sentence, I have made bold to be present and lighten, if possible, your burden with the small aid that human sympathy may give. I would that you were entirely relieved from this cruel sentence. If I had the power, it should be so. When my eye first saw you to-day, led forth in the custody of these soldiers, I felt for you as I never have for any prisoner before. In this interim wherein you are allowed to say a few words before the execution of the sentence, I will be glad to speak freely a few friendly words to you. May I ask, are you cast down in your hopes? Is that why you appear so wan, so stooped, so feeble?"

Paul: "I thank you for your kindly feelings and well-meant, sympathetic expressions, though at heart I do not really now feel so much the need of human sympathy. My feebleness is physical infirmity only. Though the outward man fails, the inward man is renewed day by day. You wonder why I appear so old, so pale, so wan, so stooped! Bear in mind, dear Quintus, I entered the service of Christ a young man; now I am 'Paul the aged.' Of the Jews I received five whippings, with thirty-nine lashes at each infliction; three times was I beaten with heavy rods; once I was stoned until they regarded me dead; three times the storm struck the vessel in which I sailed, and I went down in the wreck. Your father has told you, perhaps, of one of these, when the tempest Euroclydon bore down upon our ship. I have been in perils of rivers, in perils of the sea, in perils in the wilderness, in perils—"

Q.: "Allow me to interrupt you, Paul. Please tell me no more of what you have suffered. I now change my wonder and marvel that you appear as well as you do. Even with that old cloak about your feeble frame you begin to appear, in my eyes, with more grandeur and dignity than any man in the empire. I perceive my pity for you was gratuitous. If you will favor me, I desire you to answer a few questions. I feel deeply interested in you."

P.: "Yes, I will answer in the fear of God. But you must need be brief, for I now have but a few moments. I am ready to be offered."

Q.: "I know you have been through much suffering. I have been wondering if that scar I see upon your temple was received in that shipwreck off the coast of Melita, of which I have heard my father speak; and this rough scar under your shoulder—it seems to have been a wound that did not heal up very smoothly. If you will pardon my curiosity, I would like for you to tell me where and when you received these which would appear to have been mortal wounds."

P.: "O, Quintus, my dear young man, I love you for your kind father's sake and for the sake of Christ, whose side was pierced for you! I would to God that you and these soldiers and spectators were all Christians. In answering your questions, I will say I have been through so much suffering I can scarcely remember all; but this scar upon my temple was received at Lystra, the birthplace of my beloved son, Timothy, where I was stoned. The last thing I remember was the stone which struck me upon the temple; for a time I was insensible of what transpired about me. The next thing I remember was when the brethren stood around me as I revived. I arose and told them that we must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God. What I was then suffering for Christ was but a reminder of that truth. This ugly seam under my shoulder, which, as you say, never healed over very smoothly, was caused by a splinter of the mast broken by the storm, which was driven into my body here. My dear Quintus, I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

Q.: "Paul, you are a real hero. O how superior you now seem to rise above all men I ever knew! Allow me to beg pardon for offering you sympathy a little gone, for these scars are glorious testimonials. From them, and the comfort you derive from the promises of Jesus of Nazareth, I should have tendered congratulations. I have a few more questions to ask you."

P.: "Proceed, Quintus; for while I take pleasure in conversing with you, I may be ordered any moment now to go forward to the exact place of execution. I am ready to be offered."

Q.: "I understood you to say that you enlisted in this work while yet a young man, just out of Gamaliel's school in Jerusalem, and that throughout your whole life, until you are now an old man, you have suffered much for Christ, and that at this instant you are a doomed prisoner for Christ. Paul, do you not think you have had a heavy burden and grievous to be borne? If any one may tell of sufferings, you could relate more than any one on earth. How do these things appear to you?"

P.: "Our light affliction worketh for us a reward which far exceeds it every way. Our light affliction worketh—"

Q. (interrupting): "How can you call five whippings 'light,' or three beatings 'light,' or stoning to unconsciousness 'light?' Paul, how shall I understand you? How can it be possible to call all these sufferings 'light?'"

P.: "I was only comparing those things in the aggregate which I have suffered with that eternal weight of glory which is so momentous and now, happily, so near. All that I have suffered seems light in comparison; 'for I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.' If you could only realize what I do, you would understand that I have not spoken extravagantly, but what is literally true from my point of view."

Q.: "I begin to appreciate this truth; but, Paul, since you have spent your long life, from young manhood to old age, in this work, really does it not seem to you that you have suffered a very long time? You know that pain makes time drag so heavily. Does it not seem to you, Paul, that you have suffered an age?"

P.: "Our light affliction is but for a moment, a short time, it seems to me now."

Q.: "Paul, how can you, in truth, call a long life 'a moment?' Paul, are you not growing extravagant in your speech from that joyous hope you entertain?"

P.: "I was only comparing my long and eventful life to eternity, which is now so near, thank God. O, eternity, eternity! Our boldest and strongest thoughts are lost and overwhelmed in that word. The lengthened days of the oldest patriarch are very short in comparison. Let ages as numerous as the buds of springtime be multiplied by ages as numerous as the blossoms of summer time, and these be multiplied by ages as many as the leaves in the autumn time, and these again be multiplied by ages as numerous as the drops of rain, hail, and snow which fall in the winter time, and all pass, eternity—vast, boundless eternity—will be but beginning. I am correct; my long life is but 'a moment.'"

Q.: "You open to my mind new views—hopeful views, glorious views. Pardon my inquisitiveness; I have one more question to ask you."

P.: "Proceed. I am ready to be offered."

Q.: "I rejoice to know, Paul, that you survived those five whippings. They were severe, but you got well; the beatings were painful to bear, but in time you got over the effects; that stoning was bloody and brutal, but you returned to consciousness and continued to preach; in every shipwreck, somehow, you always got safely to land; when you were imprisoned, the earthquake opened the doors and you at last demanded an honorable release; when thrown to wild beasts in the arena, you were 'delivered out of the mouth of the lion;' when every gate of Damascus was watched and guarded to arrest you, loving hands, through a window and by the wall, swung you down in a basket and you escaped the hands of your enemies. Somehow, or somehow else, you always escaped death. But, Paul (pardon me for this hard question), you now come to the hardest conflict of your life. You know there is no release, no escape; it is certain death. Do you not think, when you presently come in full view of the implements of your death—the sharp sword in the hands of a stalwart soldier, the empty basket to receive your aged head, the coffin in which your body will be conveyed—that you will say: 'I renounce Christ, and choose to die a natural death?'"

P.: "Do you mean to ask me if that will separate me from Christ? Is that your question?"

Q.: "That is about the plain meaning of it."

P.: "My answer is: 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? . . . For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.'"

Q.: "I thank you, Paul, for your kindness. Your unwavering attachment to your Leader; your noble, unselfish life, has given me the type of the true hero. Farewell, thou mighty man of God. I never expect to meet your equal as a conscientious, courageous, and noble spirit. Farewell, a long farewell!"

P. (aside): "O Lord Jesus, save this young man by thy grace!"

Q. (aside): "The noblest and grandest character I ever knew! When I asked him that final question, I noticed his stooped form became proudly erect, and the fire of youth returned to his eye when he said: 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?' His life is inspiring; his death is more so. I would fain apply to myself the words of one of their old prophets, 'Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his,' in that I may be as strong in humble trust, as bright in hope, as warm in tender love. This is a matchless man, the truest hero. I must look into that gospel which made him what he was, which, he said, was the power of God unto salvation. The bare possibility, not to mention the moral certainty, that it is all true, compels a fair examination."

G. LIPSCOMB.

Offenses.

In this world offenses abound. They are one character of sin which man commits against man, and must exist on earth till "the creation" shall have been "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." "It must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" The verb "offend" and the noun "offense" are used in two senses in the Scriptures. These two significations are given by the dictionaries about as follows: "(1) 'Offend'—to displease, to make angry, to affront; (2) to draw to evil or hinder in obedience, to cause to sin or neglect duty, to cause to stumble." An offense in the New Testament is either "something that excites anger" or an occasion of stumbling; most generally the latter. The people of Nazareth were offended in Jesus (Mark 6: 3); his disciples were offended at his hard sayings (John 6: 61); the Pharisees were offended at his teaching (Luke 15: 2); to the unbelieving Jews he was "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense;" Simon Peter threw himself in the way as a stumbling-block for the Savior. (Matt. 16: 23.)

In the sense of provoking the displeasure or rousing the anger of our fellow-mortals, not only must it needs be that offenses come by some who are foredoomed to perdition, but they must needs come by every person, whether saint or sinner. The wicked may displease the righteous by their sins, and the righteous offend sinners by their righteousness. In this sense Elijah was a great offender; Jesus stirred up the bitterest hatred of the world and worldly-wise professors; the apostles and martyrs met death at the hands of men who were offended in this sense; the church is a standing offense to the world and world-pleasing professors. In this sense offenses must come by every one who does his duty.

To offend in the sense of drawing away from duty to God and causing to fall into sin and be lost is a most serious matter; to offend in the sense of making mad, bad as it might be, pales into insignificance here. I might offend a brother to the extent of making him very mad, and yet he be strong enough to stand firm in the faith and not let the sun go down on his wrath. Christians are often too particular about hurting people's feelings, and they compromise the truth in order to avoid displeasing their neighbors. It is well to seek to please and not offend, but when our desire to please is stronger than our zeal for the truth, it becomes a curse to us and may cause us to become offenders in the fatal sense; for it is a fact that people are more easily led to stumble into ruin by what pleases than driven by what displeases. It was not possible for Paul to offend and destroy the weak brother by eating meat in a way to displease him or make him mad. (1 Cor. 8: 13.) If the eating had offended him in that sense, he would have abstained from it, in which case, of course, he could not have eaten it with "conscience of the idol." No; the offense is not making mad. Far from it. It was the example of those who ate without conscience of the idol, causing weak people, in that they had idolatrous proclivities, to eat with conscience of the idol, and so commit idolatry and be lost. Serious matter!

I sometimes hear talk of offending Christians by playing the organ in worship. Some are displeased with it and desert the place of worship where the organ is played. They are offended, but not seriously; they can worship elsewhere, and their being displeased with the organ in worship cannot possibly impair their prospects of ultimate salvation, unless it should discourage them and cause them to neglect to worship at all. As long as you can make people mad at the introduction of an unauthorized practice they are not in much danger of being offended at it in the awfully serious import of the term. The people who are pleased with the organ and unauthorized practices generally are certainly in danger of being offended in the sense of being caused to stumble. One innovation calls for another, and where Christians become pleased with such works, they weaken in faith and serve the Lord by works, until, like Israel of old, "being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness," they fail to submit "themselves unto the righteousness of God." This is to stumble and be lost.

Our Savior has faithfully warned us: "But whoso shall cause one of these little ones which believe on me to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea." (Matt. 18: 6.) The Revised Version, from which I have just quoted, puts "cause to stumble" for "offend," and sheds much light on the subject in hand. How may I cause one of these little ones to stumble? By preaching the truth to him? Nay, verily. You may make him mad by giving him the whole truth, but cannot by that means cause him to stumble.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which ye learned: and turn away from them." (Rom. 16: 17.) The Revised Version here again makes plain the deadly offenses of this text. To cast a stumbling-block in the way of a brother contrary to the doctrine is a most serious matter. We are warned to turn from such leaders.

In order to avoid stumbling we should take firm hold on the truth. Unstable, excitable people have shallow convictions, and "when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended ["they stumble"—R. V.]" We should be faithful and constantly engaged in the work God appoints. "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall." (2 Pet. 1: 10.)

We should make constant war on the unruly members of our flesh. "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." (Matt. 5: 29.) Cultivate love for the truth. Those who "receive not the love of the truth" can never be saved. Worldly things choke the word where it is lightly appreciated. "Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them." (Ps. 119: 165.)

Shelbyville, Tenn. W. L. BUTLER.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 26.

At Suez an additional rudder was put on our vessel and a powerful search light arranged, which delayed us till two o'clock, when we weighed anchor and sailed into the world-famed Suez Canal. When daylight came I went on deck, where I remained the greater part of the day, not on account of beautiful scenery, but I was then in a region through which many ancient worthies had traveled and which was once covered by villages, towns, and cities. It is supposed that the canal passes through the land of Goshen.

Possibly most of my readers know something of the canal, but I venture to give a few facts concerning it that are of great interest to me and may also be to others. It is popularly supposed that the union of the two seas was not affected till de Lesseps came upon the scene, but this is a mistake. The idea of forming this connecting link is of very ancient origin. A canal for small vessels was formed as early as six hundred years before Christ and existed for about fourteen hundred years, after which it fell into disuse. The idea of restoring this ancient canal on a scale suited to modern times is due to Napoleon Bonaparte, who obtained a report from a French engineer, which was, however, followed by no result, and it remained for de Lesseps, in our day, to realize what were thought the dreams of commercial speculators by carrying out the long-desired passage between the two seas. The engineering difficulties in the way of carrying out the scheme were long considered insuperable; but in this we see that the impossibilities of one age become the accomplished facts of another.

About 1849 the idea flashed across the mind of Ferdinand de Lesseps, and after five years of careful study of the subject he matured his project, coming to the conclusion that the achievement was feasible. In 1854 Said Pasha became viceroy of Egypt, and sent at once for de Lesseps to consider with him the propriety of carrying out the work. The prince saw the commercial advantage that would follow from its execution, and took it up most eagerly. This interview resulted in the signing of a commission at Cairo, charging de Lesseps to form "The Universal Suez Canal Company." The first step was an exploration of the isthmus, which was undertaken by de Lesseps, accompanied by three French engineers.

"Our first exploration," says de Lesseps in his graphic account, "was long and difficult; but the final result was that which I had anticipated—that the waters of the Nile could not be utilized for the navigation of the Suez Canal. During our journey the feet of our camels trampled on the salt crusts of the Bitter Lakes. These are forty leagues in circumference, and are evidently the ancient Gulf of Heropolis. In 1854 our caravans, in traversing it, carried our water, our victuals, sheep, and fowls. Beyond these animals there was not even a fly in this hideous desert. At night we opened the cages of our fowls, full of confidence, for we were sure that the next morning all our beasts would come round us, not to be abandoned in these desolate places, where solitude is death. When we struck our camp of a morning, if at the moment of departure a hen had lurked behind, picking at the foot of a tamarisk shrub, quick she would jump up, frightened, on the back of the camel to regain her cage."

The fellahs in this caravan were in constant anxiety, for the inhabitants of the borders of the Nile regard the desert with almost superstitious terror.

This exploration accomplished, and the preliminary plan drawn up, he repaired to Constantinople and secured the sanction of the Porte, and arranged measures for raising the necessary funds. England at that time, under the guide of Lord Palmerston, opposed the scheme, from a mistaken notion that it would prove injurious to her commercial interests; though, in truth, no power in Europe had so much reason to desire a shorter route to the East. But, notwithstanding this, de Lesseps persevered. He formed an engineering commission, in which all nations were represented; and having laid his designs before its distinguished members, he received their warm approval and support. Armed by their recommendation, he proceeded to form a company with a capital sufficient for the execution of the work. With indefatigable energy he visited Germany, Italy, France, and England, soliciting the support of their great capitalists. In England he again encountered the hostility of Lord Palmerston, who, in the House of Commons, spoke very strongly against both de Lesseps and his scheme. "The obvious political tendency of the undertaking," said he, "is to render more easy the separation of Egypt from Turkey. It is founded also on remote speculations with regard to easier access to our Indian possessions. I can only express my surprise that de Lesseps should have reckoned so much on the credulity of English capitalists as to think by his progress through the different commercial towns in this country he should succeed in obtaining English money for the promotion of a scheme which is every way so adverse and hostile to British interests." Notwithstanding this, de Lesseps found many friends and supporters in England, though, owing to the opposition of the Palmerston Government, the number of shares taken up was inconsiderable in comparison with the subscriptions which poured in from France, where a spirit of national rivalry had been awakened. Thus England lost an opportunity of gaining from the first that influence over the management of the canal which her government acquired in 1875 by purchasing 176,602 shares from the khedive of Egypt for the sum of over $20,000,000.

The company was formed, grants of land were obtained from the Egyptian viceroy, men and provisions were collected at Port Said; and difficulties having been surmounted which would have fairly conquered any man less possessed with the enthusiasm of an idea than was de Lesseps, the great enterprise was commenced in April, 1859. An order was also obtained from the viceroy which authorized the company to impress Egyptian laborers into its service. Some thirty thousand of these impressed laborers worked for years, when Said Pasha died and was succeeded by his brother, Ismail, who, alarmed at the largeness and uncertainty of the grants to the canal company, and anxious to retire from the obligation of finding forced labor, refused to ratify or agree to the concessions granted by his brother. But, as it turned out, the abolition of forced labor was the turning point in the construction of the canal. The inventive faculties of the French engineers and contractors were set to work to replace manual labor by machinery. The result was a triumphant success. It is impossible to imagine how many years might have been occupied in digging out the canal, for when forced labor was withdrawn the real work had hardly commenced. The very novel and powerful dredging machinery which was then invented and set to work was the means of opening the canal in six years afterwards.

The distance from a little to the southeast of Suez, the mouth of the canal, to Port Said is only seventy miles, but the distance actually traversed by the canal is eighty-eight geographical miles. The additional length is more than compensated by the facilities which the actual route obtained of utilizing the beds of Lakes Menzaleh, Ballah, Timsah, and the Bitter Lakes. Of this distance, sixty-six miles are actual canal, formed by cuttings; fourteen miles are made by dredging through the lakes; and eight miles required no work, the natural depth being equal to that of the canal. The depth is 31 feet; bottom width, 108 feet; and surface width, 420 feet. It cost about $100,000,000.

When first opened it took a vessel about forty-eight hours to pass through it, but the continued improvements—making the crooked places straight, deepening, and widening—have reduced this rate very much. The entire length of the canal is lighted with electricity, so that vessels can proceed as well by night as day. Now the average time of transit is about eighteen hours, this being about the time it took us. About thirty-five hundred vessels pass through it annually, and the annual net profit to the company is nearly $2,500,000.

From the deck of the ship the canal appeared like a narrow, glossy ribbon stretched across the desert. We arrived at Lake Timsah about noon. This lake is a large basin of salt water, which supplies what water is necessary to keep the canal to its proper level between the two seas. On the shores of this lake de Lesseps built his house when he commenced the work. He brought the water from the Nile through a lesser canal, and planted a garden. Contractors came there to reside, a town grew up in the Arabian desert. But the Frenchman made his town very beautiful. A population of 15,000 gathered there in seven years. Broad avenues and streets were marked over the sand and were soon well paved. Catholic churches, foreign consulates, villas, banks, shops, and all other elements of a city were soon there. The town was named "Ismailia," in honor of Ismail Pasha, the khedive, and became at once a provincial capital. All this was done while the canal was being constructed. What more could the young town want? It wanted only the formal opening of the canal to assert herself a commercial and political center. The day which the new city so impatiently desired came at last. Ismailia determined to introduce herself by a grand festival. The khedive appointed a day for a celebration—November 17, 1869—which he endeavored to make the greatest of the age. He invited all the kings and queens, all the princes, and all the presidents, statesmen, warriors, and servants of the earth to come to Ismailia. Nearly all who were invited came, either in person or by representative. They were received on the seashore at Port Said. While awaiting the appointed day, splendid steam yachts conveyed them up the Nile showing them the Pyramids, the ruins of Memphis, and Thebes. Meantime the khedive built a palace at Ismailia and gave it all the spaciousness and embellishments suitable for the entertainment of the majesties of the world. They came and passed in barges, as brilliant as Cleopatra's, through the canal from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. "They spoke, they drank, they danced, they made the dreary desert for the first time a field of merriment and chivalry. Ismailia was happy in the lofty discourses she heard, the superb pageants she saw, and the majestic entertainment she enjoyed. As she was proud in the prestige which this magnificent celebration confirmed, all Egypt was happy."

At 7:30 P.M. we arrived at Port Said. Here I was somewhat disappointed, owing to the fact that there is not that Oriental appearance that I had expected. The modern appearance is due to the presence of representatives from all nations. It is a very modern place, having grown up since the commencement of the canal. It has a population of 21,000 inhabitants, and is the greatest coaling station in the world, a million tons being annually supplied to vessels.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

GO, PREACH THE GOSPEL.

The zeal displayed by the Salvation Army in going to the people is commendable. It is to be regretted that they do not teach them more of the gospel after going to them. As was shown in an article last week, the Mormons are very earnest in going and preaching their pernicious doctrine to the people. Further, it can be easily shown that the great majority of missionary work is being done by those who are being supported by voluntary contributions and who go without being backed by boards or societies.

The Lord Jesus Christ commands: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost [Spirit]: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) The Lord nowhere instructs his people to build fine meetinghouses and then sit down and wait for those who are lost to come to them. Everywhere the command is: "Go!" The commission, as recorded by Mark, reads: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.)

The apostles did not form themselves into a board and wait for this board to guarantee their salaries before they would preach the gospel to the people; neither did Paul wait for somebody to assure him that he would be supported while preaching the gospel of Christ. Will you listen to him? "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus." (Gal. 1: 15-17.)

The saved man with the message of salvation, and who is prepared to teach others the way of salvation, is never commanded to wait. By faith he should sow the seed of the kingdom broadcast and leave the results with our Heavenly Father. Faithful labor in the Lord can never be in vain. The sun, moon, and stars will fall from their positions sooner than God's promises fail. As pants the hart for cooling streams, so the soul, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, longs to bear the precious news of salvation to those who are in darkness. To the enlightened soul thus filled with a consuming desire to teach and enlighten others, God never says: "Sit down in a fine house and wait for them to come to you." He never bade them wait till a missionary society was organized to guarantee them a living while they devoted their time, talents, and energies to preaching the gospel. I repeat, I emphasize, the command is everywhere: "Go!" When the twelve were sent out under the first commission, Jesus said: "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat." (Matt. 10: 5-10.)

The soul that has been so freely saved by the grace of God delights to give unto others in the same way. "Freely ye have received, freely give." When we appreciate in the least degree what God has done for us, when we have but a faint conception of that love that brought a Savior down to redeem us, the greatest desire of our hearts is to bear the glad tidings of salvation to those who know not the Christ. In the last great commission, which is a license to every Christian to teach others the way of life, we read: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." (Rev. 22: 17.) Every Christian who hears is to say: "Come." Our obligations to do so are as lasting as eternity. In every possible authorized way we should say: "Come." The issues of eternity are depending on the actions of Christians. It is wonderfully strange that we can be so indifferent when we know that so many souls are dying daily without a knowledge of the truth. Contenting for the truth while doing nothing will not excuse us. That church that does not give over one hundred dollars per year for the spread of the truth is a poor one. The consecrated soul is ready to use pocketbook, hands, feet, brains, and all for the conversion of the world. Christianity is active, thoughtful, and diligent. Jesus, while on earth, gave us an example of ceaseless activity. Filled with heavenly emotions and sublime truths, he journeyed throughout Judea until, weary, he sat down on Jacob's well to rest. How pleasing to think of growing weary in this most blessed and glorious of all work!

Again, as he went everywhere, losing no opportunity to heal, to teach, and to bless, we hear him say: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) Life, the day, is so fleeting and uncertain, and death, the night, is so sure, that we cannot be too active now. All heaven is interested in the work of the Christian. How soon our working day will be over! Just a few moments, in comparison with eternity, and we will work no more. Are we improving the golden now? Every Christian throughout the whole world should endeavor to follow the example the Master has given us.

A great persecution arose against the church at Jerusalem. In dismay, the disciples fled. The hatred against them was relentless and cruel. Still the consecrated disciples turned this very hatred and persecution into good to themselves and to the upbuilding of God's kingdom. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) Even so every Christian should go everywhere preaching the word to-day. The man who has been saved himself should be able to tell others what to do to be saved. Every Christian is a preacher. All are not public proclaimers of the gospel, but by our lives, our examples, our deeds, we are all preaching. Is our preaching good or bad?

The command is, "Go;" not wait. Only in one instance has Christ ever told his disciples to wait; he told them to tarry in Jerusalem till they received the Holy Spirit. Without the Spirit they were not able to represent his claims truthfully, to say nothing of infallibly. Before the Spirit guided them into all truth, they thought his kingdom would be an earthly kingdom. But after they were filled with the Spirit they were never again told to wait. Ever after this the command to those sent by the Lord is to "go." It is true Paul asks: "How shall they preach, except they be sent?" But the Lord sends us when he commands us to go. He does the sending, and we should do the going. He sent Philip from the city of Samaria, where he was doing a great work, down to the way which leadeth from Jerusalem to Gaza, which is desert. Philip's example of obedience is a beautiful one. He did not say: "I am doing a great work here, Lord, and I can't see why you wish me to go there." "He arose and went." The obedience that must know why is a very imperfect one. I tell my boy to bring me a drink of water. If I must explain to him why and argue the case at length with him, I would rather go for the water myself. When God tells us to be baptized he does not expect us to ask him why. He is not pleased with that obedience (?) that must know a reason for all his commands. It is his to command; ours, to obey. When he commands us to go we should go. Brethren, are we doing this? How much work are we doing for the Master? How earnestly we all should work, for the night of death is coming, when no man can work!

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

LIBERALISM IN THE CHURCHES.

"We have had 'troubles in our midst,' also. The ordination of Professor Briggs to the priesthood in May raised a storm in the diocese of New York, and caused grave apprehensions in the minds of loyal churchmen everywhere. Not the man, but the spread of latitudinarian and destructive views and principles in the church, was the real cause of anxiety. But views and principles will be well sifted, as well as men, in the church, and sometimes both are sifted out, as was the case with one clergyman who was very prominent in the controversy, and who has sought peace in Rome, the original home of destructive biblical criticism."

The above is from the Living Church, Episcopal, Chicago. Two statements are made in it, to which we direct attention: First, it says the Romish Church was the original home of the destructive criticism of the Bible. This we stated some months ago in response to statements of the secular press that the Romish Church was free from this destructive criticism. The destructive criticism began in the Romish Church in France and Germany. The truth, as then stated, is: the worst forms of infidelity are tolerated in the Church of Rome, so no opposition is made to the outward peace of the church and the authority of its official dignitaries.

The claim is made, next, that the Episcopal Church is able to cope with and control these "latitudinarian and destructive" teachings. The truth is, Briggs went into the Episcopal Church because he knew he could find a rest and peace within that church that he could not find with these views in the Presbyterian Church; and, next to the Church of Rome, the Episcopal Church affords shelter and protection to these "latitudinarian and destructive views."

The truth is, the more popular the church is in its forms, the more easily it can be purged of evil men and heresies, because popular sentiment can be the more easily directed against them. What are known as the churches with more organization, and hence considered the stronger institutions, have less power to free themselves from the evil men and evil teachers than the less organized ones. Evil men and theories intrench themselves behind the officials and within the organizations, and popular sentiment cannot reach them. The evils arise most readily in the churches with ecclesiastical organizations, and in them they find a permanent home and protection—the Church of Rome, the Episcopal Church, then the Presbyterian Church as the stronger in organization, the less under control of the common people. These views, destructive of all positive faith in the Bible and in God, have been slower in developing themselves among disciples than among any other religious people in the land. But they are among them. The business partners of J. H. Garrison could not conscientiously longer work with him, so dissolved their connection with him in the publishing business, but his connection with the society organization will enable him to continue his evil work.

D. L.

O, the littleness and meanness of that sickly appetite for sympathy which will not let us keep our tiny Lilliputian sorrows to ourselves!—Faber.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brothers W. L. Logan, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., and Paul Slayden, of Columbia, Tenn., were in the office on Monday morning.

My meeting here becomes more hopeful, with eleven additions to date—three from the Baptists.—James W. Zachary, Sciotoville, O.

The meeting at the church of Christ on South College street, near Ash, this city, continues. Brother Larimore preaches at 3 o'clock P.M. and 7:30 o'clock P. M. on the week days and at 11 o'clock A.M., 3 o'clock P.M., and 7:30 o'clock P.M. on Sunday.

My work in preaching last year was reasonably successful. There were seventy-six additions to the churches and at mission points under my labors. I held three meetings at mission points. I want to do more missionary work this year than I did last year. I wish brethren isolated from congregations and churches also to write to me for meetings at missionary points. I am engaged to preach for four churches once a month each the ensuing year, with the privilege of holding meetings where good can be accomplished. I love to do this kind of work.—E. C. L. Denton, Milan, Tenn.

At the request of the brotherhood I preached the first sermon in the new house at Liberty, Tenn., January 7, 1900. They have a very neat house, well furnished; and, best of all, they are out of debt. While there are but few of them, yet they can be a great power for good if they will only do their duty, and from the interest that was taken while I was there I have every reason to believe they will have a large membership some day. I stayed over and preached until Tuesday night. There was good interest manifested throughout. Brother Sutton will hold them a meeting this coming summer, and I have promised to go back about November 1 for a meeting. Brother O. P. Barry, of Alexandria, Tenn., has promised to be with them every first Sunday of the month this year. May the Lord bless them and may they prove to be the salt of that town and community. I have decided to give my entire time to evangelistic work this year. Some congregations have already asked me to assist them in their meetings, and I will be glad to arrange all my work as soon as possible; so congregations desiring my services will write me at 713 Fatherland street, Nashville, Tenn. I would be glad to arrange all meetings in the same locality at dates so as to avoid unnecessary expenses. I would be glad to visit Texas again if I can arrange work that will not conflict with my work here; so I will be glad to hear from all congregations at once that desire my help.—P. H. Hooten.

EDITORIAL.

True penitence always leads to confession.

Some of us must fall before we learn to forgive.

Those who come to Christ weeping, go away rejoicing.

Our debt to Christ we do not pay in gold, but in love.

Penitence leads to justification; pride, to condemnation.

Christ seeks the humble in order that he may exalt them.

The tears of penitents are jewels for the crowns of Christians.

The first element of greatness is a spirit of genuine self-sacrifice.

When we humble ourselves before Christ he takes us to his heart.

Those are highest in God's favor who are lowest at the feet of Christ.

Self-exaltation is a little uplift. God humbles us that he may exalt us to heaven.

If we are fully satisfied with our own righteousness, we may be assured God is not.

Careful forethought and painstaking preparation are needed to fit us for heaven.

When Satan cannot harm a good man in any other way he makes him self-righteous.

How helpful we can be to each other if we will only lose sight of self and seek to bless those around us!

The Lord Jesus Christ commands us, "Go, . . . preach the gospel;" not to wait for somebody to send us.

Duty would be oftener done if we always tried as hard to be faithful as we do to find an excuse for not doing duty.

The members of the family can make the home circle a happy one by rendering loving service for each other.

The love of God made the way to heaven as wide as possible. Infinite love could do no more to widen the narrow way.

The man who knows where the places of temptation are not and does not know where they are is not liable to be led into sin.

How mean and selfish is the soul that would share all its blessings alone! Deeds of loving service brighten and cheer the pathway of our associates.

If you are true to your Master, he will succor you when tempted; the victory that overcometh is your faith, not in yourself, but in the omnipotent Son of God, whose you are and whom you serve. Triumphs over temptation will strengthen you.—Cuyler.

"Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward on the weary road." Life without the sweetness of love and sympathy is a failure, though it be covered with gold. Let us scatter flowers along the pathway of our friends to refresh them in their troubled hours. Flowers on the grave will not atone for our neglect to the living.

No one's virtues should be discounted because he does not appear to be aware of them. Unconscious goodness is the finest quality of goodness. To be good as the flowers are fragrant and as the sun is bright is the highest moral attainment, for it shows that one has forgotten himself in the contemplation and assimilation of the divine goodness. No man is as good as he should be as long as he is conscious of his own goodness.

How weak and frail is man without God! Man without Jesus, the light of the world, is but

An infant crying in the night,
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry.

Jesus says: "I am the way." He is the way out of darkness, and ignorance, and sin, and wretchedness, and death, and hell; and the way into light, truth, joy, peace, blessedness, holiness, and heaven. Christ meets every need of the soul; he is the Physician that can cure the sin-sick soul.

The faith that ignores duty and fidelity, that reposes on the omnipresence and omnipotence of God as a weak and weary child lies in its father's arms, is degenerate; it is fatalism. Mohammed tried to teach the ignorant Arabs to believe in the overruling providence of God, but they regarded this teaching as relieving them from all care. Hence, when a tired soldier at night said, "I will turn my camel loose, and trust in God," he was surprised at the prophet's reply: "Better tie your camel, and then trust in God."—Selected.

Jesus went away to prepare a place for us, and also to fit us for heaven. We need to be fitted for heavenly enjoyment and heavenly service till we become Rich in experience that angels might covet. Rich in a faith that has grown with the years. It is as essential that we should be prepared for heaven as that heaven should be prepared for us. He is opening doors of opportunity, and preparing a sphere, a place for us on earth, and also fitting us for the sphere he would have us fill and the work he would have us do. This world is a quarry where the living stones of God's beautiful temple in the heavens are being shaped and polished for their places. The cares, burdens, sorrows, joys, work, trials, are all instruments for fitting us for our heavenly home.

So much of our labor here is mixed with doubt and fear, we cannot always be sure that we have done the very thing that should be done. When an article is finished, I am by no means sure that I have written exactly the right thing; in delivering a sermon, I sometimes fear I have blundered and not said what should have been said; I can never feel perfectly satisfied with my best effort at doing good; but I feel rejoiced in the belief that in heaven there will be no disappointment, doubt, or fear. Our efforts there will never fail of success. We shall do joyfully what it is ours to do, and be happy in the realization that we shall win all that belongs to us. This thought should encourage us now. God will not allow our labors to return unto us void. Our very failures God can convert into good for us.

Last week we published an article on "The Spread of Mormonism," in which it was shown that the great bulk of missionary work was being done by those who went without any guarantee of a salary. Since writing that article I have received a letter from G. W. Buld, secretary of "The Pentecost Bands," from which I take this statement: "In short, our plan is similar to that of the early Methodists under Mr. Wesley. All our workers, at present about one hundred and twenty-five in number, come voluntarily. No salaries are paid to any officers or workers. Our expenses are met through voluntary contribution from the people. The foreign work is carried on on the same basis exactly as the American work." Many are going "without scrip or purse" and preaching the gospel of Jesus. While they are not made rich in this world's goods, still they live and are doing a great work for the Master. Paul was rich in labors, but poor in this world's goods.

There is a deep significance in some of our common phrases—some so common that we let them fall on our ears or slip from our lips with scarcely a thought of the meaning they hold. We speak of the sacrifices demanded from us by duty or necessity—the hopes, ambitions, pleasures that we put aside—as "given up." Said a young girl, recently: "I had hoped to spend my vacation at the seashore, but I found that it would leave mother so lonely that I gave it up." "I wanted to go to college," said a young man, "but father isn't young any longer, and he needs me in the business; I gave it up." It was something precious and desirable, something that would have been within reach if love or duty had not stood in the way; but for right's sake it was given up—up into his hands whose providence called for it. That is what every sacrifice should be—a lifting up of the hope, the purpose, the treasure we may no longer rightfully hold, into the hands of the Father whose love has asked it of us. We do not fling it aside bitterly or hopelessly; we give it up.—Forward.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

We carry a splendid line of tracts, a few of which are advertised in this number.

Lovers of good books should read the offers we are making. See our cover pages this week and send us an order. If you do not see what you want, write to us, and if we do not carry it in stock, we will get it for you.

We are glad to announce that our list has for the past few weeks been on the increase. Quite a number have availed themselves of our liberal offers. We feel encouraged to continue these offers for the present and hope they will be the means of adding many more names to our list. We are still sending the paper one month on trial to names and addresses sent us. These names are not put on our regular list, but the paper is sent for one month and promptly discontinued at its close, unless the one to whom it is sent becomes a regular subscriber. You can earn a good Bible by a little work. We will send Bible No. 933, postpaid, to your address for two new subscribers at the regular price of $1.50 each for one year. We sell this Bible regularly for $2.25. It is a large-type, self-pronouncing teachers' combination Bible. It has the usual helps to be found in a teachers' Bible—subject index, maps, concordance, etc.; the covers are flexible, and the edges are gold over red; the text is the King James, with footnotes, showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically embodying both versions in one book. Why not earn this nice Bible? We will also send it with the Advocate one year for $3 to either renewals or new subscribers. If you can only secure one new subscriber for one year, for this we will send you a nice Nelson's 32mo text Bible. All renewals or new subscribers sending the regular yearly subscription, $1.50, are entitled to their choice of one of the following premiums: Home and Farm, one year; gold-edge Morocco Testament; or our calendar for 1900. Of course we can give only one premium with one subscription. Old subscribers must pay up arrearages, if they owe any, in order to entitle them to a premium with their subscription. Send us one, two, or more new subscribers and secure one or both of the premium Bibles. We want each old subscriber to send us at least one new subscriber. When premiums are taken by the one sending us new subscriptions we cannot also send the subscriber a premium, as this would make us pay double premiums

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain how the lot was cast in the Sunday school lesson of October 8, 1899. It is spoken of in Esth. 3: 7, also in Matt. 27: 35 and Acts 1: 26. Was it by vote or expression by word, or was it by chance, as drawing straws, or as our civil courts draw names from a hat in selecting their jury?

W. S. LONG.

This has been mislaid, and now turns up. The "lot" was what man would call "chance." It was not chance, but an appeal to God to direct; so the choice would be his, not man's. "They prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen." (Acts 1: 24.) In the vote those who vote choose; in the lot God chose. When they prayed to God and cast the lot, he directed it as he chose; when wicked men cast lots, it was chance. "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." (Prov. 16: 33.)

Brother Lipscomb: In case of an offense being committed publicly (before the whole congregation), should the one who gave the offense thus publicly confess that wrong just as publicly before the same congregation, or should he make a private confession to only a few of his best friends? And should such a private confession be made on paper for those few friends to see, but the offended must not see it? Then I ask: Do the Scriptures anywhere teach that the one thus publicly offended is bound to accept any such private confession of wrongdoing, while knowing only a part of what was confessed, and only getting even that in fragments from different ones who saw the confession? If so, please give chapter and verse.

R. I. GREER.

To confess a fault is to make it known that one has done wrong. So far as it is kept back from any one it is not a confession. It is not a confession to any one from whom it is kept back. Any one who has repented of a wrong is anxious to let the one he has wronged know he has wronged him and he wishes to correct the wrong. A repentance that does not lead to this does not meet the Scripture requirements, and is not repentance. David and Paul wished to let the world know for all time that whereas they had done wrong they were sorry for it and were doing better. This is the spirit of all true repentance. I find no distinction in the Scriptures between private and public offenses. They are all to be repented of and confessed.

Brother Lipscomb: Your commentary on Acts 17: 23 has been read publicly and construed to teach that you hold to the idea that one can ignorantly worship the true and living God; that the altar with the inscription, "To the Unknown God," was consecrated by real and true worshipers of him. How do you harmonize that with the doctrine that God makes himself known to man, as was the case with Paul, Cornelius, the eunuch, and others, and is no respecter of persons? We would be pleased to hear from you through the Gospel Advocate for the benefit of those that have not access to your work.

G. B. MEARS.

Paul said they worshiped him ignorantly. I say the same. Neither of us said anything about the ignorant worship being acceptable. Here is what I said: "Among the altars devoted to the worship of the gods Paul perceived an altar consecrated to the worship of the 'unknown God.' This was most likely intended for the God of heaven and earth. They had heard of him through the Jews; and while erecting altars to the gods that other nations worshiped, they erected one for the worship of the great unknown God. Paul could present, without exciting their prejudices, the God of heaven as this unknown God whom they ignorantly worshiped. . . . This was an adroit and skillful, but just and fair, method of presenting to them the true and living God. He at once presents the character of God that distinguishes him from other gods, and shows his transcendent and infinite superiority to all whom they worshiped as gods. The world and all things in it are the works of his hands. Since he created, he rules heaven and earth. The gods they worshiped were the works of man's hands. (Acts 17: 25.) The gods they worshiped had to be cared for and protected by human hands. The God of heaven does not depend upon human hands, as though he were in need of help." I do not think I can make that plainer.

Brother Sewell: Is it true that God can reach man in no way save by language? If it is, how do you account for the many things that took place in Bible times, where there was no language used by the Lord, so far as I can see, such as the seeking a wife for Isaac; the revolt of the ten tribes, and many other things I could mention? If the doctrine be true, as stated by Ashley Johnson, that nothing can come into the human mind except by language, how does Satan get in his little temptations? Some say by his agents or mediums; but how does he reach these agents, and how were these mediums brought about?

Scott's Hill, Tenn.

B. L. POWERS.

Men often get themselves into trouble by taking extreme and unnecessary ground, or by expressing things in an extreme and untenable way. There is no need of stating such a proposition as that God cannot in any way impress or influence men except by language, in our common acceptance of that word. That God can and does influence wicked men to do things to accomplish his ends, by so ordering affairs that their avarice leads them to do things he determines shall be done, when the men that do them neither care for God or his will, we do not doubt. He thus influences wicked nations to punish or destroy other wicked nations, when perhaps neither nation cares a cent for God's will and does not realize that his will is being done. But as to the gospel plan of salvation, how to become Christians, and how to live the Christian life, these are all matters of direct revelation, and no man can know anything about them, except through the word of God. No man can know anything about Christ and how he saves except through the word of truth; no man has ever become a Christian or known anything about the Christian life in any other way; and it is but folly to think of learning these things any other way. But it is needless, and even folly, to say that God in no way influences men except through language. God uses wicked men to lead others to punishment, or to ruin when their case is hopeless; and even Satan himself is used for such purposes. But this sort of influence is never used to save men through Christ. Where the word of God is, various influences may lead men to accept and obey the truth; but nothing else can take the place of the word of God in saving men. We need not trouble ourselves about what God can or cannot do; but if we will utilize what he has revealed to us, we will be all right.

Brother Sewell: A lady standing high in the Missionary Baptist ranks of this section, having read Brother Allen's book of "Sermons," makes the following comment: "Page 222: 'Children by Adoption.'—For a scriptural view and a most excellent statement of this subject, please read Brother Allen's twelfth sermon in this book. 'The New Birth: Its Nature and Necessity.'—He proves clearly from the Bible that the only way to become a child of God is by spiritual birth, 'born of water and of the Spirit,' not adopted. The inner man is the subject of this new birth, and the outward man is the subject of adoption. The spirit is regenerated; the flesh is not. The inner man is freed from sin; the outward man is subject to temptation. The inner man is invisible and immortal; the outward man is visible and mortal. Hence the warfare between the two from conversion to death; hence our need for Jesus as our Advocate with God." The point seems to be this: If (as Brother Allen correctly contends) we are born into the spiritual family and become children by reason of such a birth, how is it we are called "children by adoption?" I am sure if the New Testament makes this plain, you can show where it does so, and I would be glad if you would, in the Gospel Advocate, elaborate upon this subject. I thank you in advance for your help, and I am also grateful to this Baptist friend for the subject, that we may arrive at the truth relative to it.

E. W. MOON.

We are certainly born into the kingdom, or church, of God, if we enter it at all; for Jesus says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) Jesus knew just what he was talking about, and his words will stand forever. The trouble with the above lady is in separating baptism from the new birth. According to the above passage there can be no new birth without baptism, for Jesus says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." As this passage stands, there is no such thing as to be born of the Spirit without water; for the Savior puts water first, and while that fact may be of no other special significance, it does of necessity connect water, which all understand to be baptism, with the new birth, and there can be no new birth without it. Brother Allen shows this up very clearly in his sermon on the new birth. But he teaches, and that correctly, that the change brought about in the new birth is not in the physical man, but the spiritual, or inner, man; that a man has the same appetites and propensities after his conversion that he had before his conversion; but that after his conversion the inner man must control the outward man, must keep the physical man in subjection. It is also true that the inner man has to do its work through the physical man, both in conversion and in living the Christian life. No Christian can visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction except through the physical man; and in conversion the inner man obeys the overt acts or requirements of the gospel through the physical man. Turning away from evil in the matter of repentance is done through the physical man. The inner man makes the resolve to turn from evil, and accomplishes it through the physical man; the inner man resolves to obey the command to be baptized through the outward man, and cannot obey without it. If the outward man is not involved in being born of water, then the Savior required an impossibility, for the inner man cannot be born of water, except through the body. The inner man, the spirit of man, cannot be buried in water separate from the body; but through the body it can easily be done. The heart, the inner man, resolves to be born of water, to be baptized in water, but can only carry it out through the body, by the body being buried in the water; hence there is no such thing as to be born of the Spirit without being born of water. As to the matter of adoption, that is simply the result of the new birth. The new birth is accomplished by obedience to the gospel in faith, repentance, and baptism; while this faith, repentance, and baptism constitute adoption, introduce one into the family of God, make the individual a son or a daughter of the Lord Almighty. Hence, when a man obeys the gospel of Christ, he is born again, and is an adopted son of God and entitled to all the privileges of a child of God. As a man cannot be born again without faith, repentance, and baptism, neither can he become an adopted son of God without doing the same things. Hence the expressions, "born again," "born of water and of the Spirit," and "adoption," all involve precisely the same things; and no man is either born again or adopted into the family of God, except by doing these things.

Notwithstanding our frequent statement that we take no notice of queries or articles without a name, we continue to receive them. Of five queries received recently, there were three without signatures. They go into the wastebasket without being read when noticed in time. Will you not understand this and cease to send such? When a person does not wish his name published, we comply with the wish; but we must have the name.

D. L.

Home Reading.

STORY OF A LITTLE LIFE.

"What is your name?" asked the teacher.

"Tommy Brown, ma'am," answered the boy.

He was a pathetic little figure, with a thin face, hollow eyes, and pale cheeks, that plainly told of insufficient food. He wore a suit of clothes evidently made for some one else. They were patched in places with cloth of different colors. His shoes were old, his hair cut square in the neck in the unpracticed manner in which women sometimes cut boys' hair. It was a bitter day, yet he had no overcoat, and his bare hands were red with the cold.

"How old are you, Tommy?"

"Nine years old come next April. I've learned to read at home, and I can cipher a little."

"Well, it is time for you to begin school. Why have you never come before?"

The boy fumbled with a cap in his hands, and did not reply at once. It was a ragged cap, with frayed edges, and the original color of the fabric no man could tell. Presently he said: "I never went to school 'cause—'cause—well, mother takes in washin' an' she couldn't spare me. But Sissy is big enough now to help, an' she minds the baby besides."

It was not quite time for school to begin. All around the teacher and the new scholar stood the boys that belonged to the room. While he was making his confused explanation some of the boys laughed, and one of them called out, "Say, Tommy, where are your cuffs and collar?" and another sung out: "You must sleep in the rag bag at night, by the looks of your clothes!" Before the teacher could quiet them, another boy had volunteered the information that the father of the boy was "old Si. Brown, who was always as drunk as a fiddler."

The poor child looked around on his tormentors like a hunted thing. Then, before the teacher could detain him, with a suppressed cry of misery he ran out of the room, out of the building, down the street, and was seen no more.

The teacher went to her duties with a troubled heart. All day long the child's pitiful face haunted her; she could not rid herself of the memory of it. After a little trouble she found the place where he lived, and then two kind ladies went to visit him. It was a dilapidated house. When they first entered, they could scarcely discern objects, the room was so filled with the steam of soapsuds. There were two windows, but a tall brick building adjacent, admitting only an occasional ray of sunshine even in clear weather, shut out the light. This was a gloomy day, however, with gray, lowering clouds that forbade even the memory of sunshine.

A woman stood before a washtub. When they entered she wiped her hands on her apron, and came forward to meet them. Once she had been pretty, but the color had gone out of her face, leaving only sharp outlines and haggardness of expression. She asked them to sit down; then, taking a chair herself, she said: "Sissy, give me the baby."

A little girl came forward from a dark corner of the room, carrying a baby that she laid in its mother's lap—a lean and sickly looking baby, with the same hollow eyes that Tommy had.

"Your baby doesn't look strong," said one of the ladies.

"No, ma'am, she ain't very well. I have to work hard, and I expect it affects her."

"Where is your little Tommy?" asked one of the visitors.

"He is there in the trundle-bed," replied the mother.

"Is he sick?"

"Yes'm, and the doctors think he ain't going to get well." At this tears ran down her thin, faded cheeks.

"What is the matter with him?"

"He never was very strong, and he's had to work too hard, carrying water and helping me lift the washtubs and things like that. Of late he has been crazy to go to school. I never could spare him till this winter. He thought if he could get a little education he'd be able to take care of Sissy and baby and me. So I fixed up his clothes as well as I could, and last week he started. I was afraid the boys would laugh at him, but he thought he could stand it if they did. I stood at the door watching him going. I can never forget how the little fellow looked," she continued, the tears streaming down her face—"his patched-up clothes, his poor little anxious look. He turned round to me as he left the yard, and said: 'Don't worry, mother; I won't mind what the boys say.' But he did mind. It wasn't an hour before he was back again. I believe the child's heart was just broke. I thought mine was broke years ago. If it was, it was broke over again that day. I can stand almost anything myself, but—O—I can't bear to see my children suffer!"

Here she broke down in a fit of convulsive weeping. The little girl came up to her quietly and stole a thin little arm around her mother's neck. "Don't cry, mother," she whispered; "don't cry."

The woman made an effort to check her tears, and she wiped her eyes. As soon as she could speak with any degree of calmness, she continued: "Poor little Tommy cried all day; I couldn't comfort him. He said it was no use trying to do anything. Folks would only laugh at him for being a drunkard's little boy. I tried to comfort him before my husband came home. I told him his father would be mad if he saw him crying; but it wasn't any use. Seemed like he could not stop. His father came and saw him. He wouldn't have done it if he hadn't been drinking; he ain't a bad man when he is sober. I hate to tell it, but he whipped Tommy, and the child fell and struck his head. I suppose he'd 'a' been sick, anyway. But—O—my poor little boy; my sick, suffering child!" she cried. "How can they let men sell a thing that makes the innocent suffer so?"

One of the ladies went to the bed. There Tommy lay—poor little defenseless victim. He lived in a Christian land, in a country that takes great care to pass laws to protect sheep and diligently legislates over its game. Would that the children were as precious as the brutes and birds! Would that the law was more jealous of the little waif's rights!

His face was flushed and the hollow eyes were bright. There was a long, purple mark on his temple. He put up one little wasted hand to cover it, while he said: "Father wouldn't have done it if he hadn't been drinking." Then, in his queer piping voice, he half whispered: "I'm glad I'm going to die; I'm too weak to help mother, anyhow. Up in heaven the angels ain't going to call me the drunkard's child, and make fun of my clothes; and, maybe, if I'm right up there where God is, I can keep reminding him of mother, and he will make it easier for her. He turned his head feebly on his pillow, and then said, in a lower tone: "Some day—they ain't going—to let saloons—keep open. But I'm afraid—poor father—will be dead—before then." Then his eyes shut from weariness.

The next morning the sun shone in on the dead face of little Tommy.—Our Young Folks.

ROBBING A KINDNESS OF ITS BEAUTY.

The kindness that we show to another is robbed of half its beauty if we do it in a grudging and ungracious way. There is something for us all to think over in the account by a recent writer of an incident that occurred during her visit to her sister's home.

Mary, the older of her two nieces, had announced at the breakfast table that she would have to go down town that day, as she had several errands to do. She was almost ready to start when her brother Tom came to her with a short penciled list.

"Would you mind getting these for me, Mary?" he asked. "There are two books that I can't get at the school store, and there's a piece of music that my teacher wants me to have for my violin. If you will get them for me, I won't have to go down myself."

Mary's face clouded over. "Why, yes, I suppose I can get them," she said, ungraciously. "I wasn't going anywhere near that store, though, and I have lots of errands to do for myself."

"Well, then, don't get them," said Tom, hastily. "I don't want to make you a lot of trouble. I can get down myself in a day or two, and perhaps I can borrow somebody's book till then."

"O, I'll go!" Mary said, taking the list from his hand. "Only it isn't very convenient."

Tom turned away with an indignant look upon his face, and Mary put on her wraps and started for the city. A moment or two later the second niece, Margaret, came into the room with a sweeping cap upon her head and a broom and dustpan in her hands. She set to work at once, and I was preparing to leave the room when Tom came in again. There was a rueful look on his face.

"See what I've done, Margaret!" he said, pointing to a great three-cornered tear in his coat. "I caught it on a nail in the entry just now. What will I do?"

It's the only school coat I have, and I'll have to be off before long."

"I'll darn it for you, Tom," Margaret said, standing her broom in a corner and getting out her work-box. "It won't take me long."

"But you're busy," Tom said, hesitatingly, remembering his previous experience. "I don't want to bother you now."

"As though I wasn't always glad to help you when I can! Give me your coat and we'll have that tear mended in a jiffy," Margaret rejoined with a laugh.

"You're the right sort, Meg!" said Tom, gratefully, as he put on his coat again, a few minutes later. "You never seem to think it's a bother to do a fellow a kindness."

The love that binds together the members of a family circle should make it sweet to do these small acts of kindness. There should be none of the grudging, ungracious spirit and the counting of cost in the shape of trouble that we so often see.—Christian Observer.

CURE FOR TETTER.

Put one-half pound of sage in a quart of cold water and boil down to a pint. Strain this and add two tablespoonfuls of honey, one tablespoonful of golden seal, 5 cents' worth of cocoa butter, or a heaping tablespoonful of fresh (unsalted) butter; as much pulverized borax as can be heaped on a nickel, and half as much pulverized alum. Boil to a thick salve, and it is ready for use. Vaseline bottles are nice to put it in, as tin spoils it, unless it is used up in a few weeks. This is excellent for nursing mothers when the nipples become sore, and has, no doubt, saved the life of many a child by preventing it being weaned when only a few weeks old. Apply every time after the child nurses, and persevere even if the case seems hopeless. If the baby's mouth is sore, put a little salve in warm water and wash thoroughly with a soft cloth. This salve is also good for piles, and, when mixed to a stiff paste with sulphur, will cure "scratches," or "grease," in horses. A SISTER.

WHEN THE NEXT CENTURY BEGINS.

"Hundreds of persons contend that the twentieth century will begin with January 1, 1900, while other hundreds contend with equal positiveness that the correct date is January 1, 1901," writes Edward Bok, in the October Ladies's Home Journal. "The 1900 contingent argue that, of course, the new century begins with its numeral date, and go on to figure out very deftly that with the last day of the year 1899 the hundred years will have run their course. They argue that if the year ended with December 31 of the year 1 the nineteen hundredth year must, of course, end with December 31, 1899, and that the first day of January, 1900, is, therefore, the first day of the new century; and, curiously enough, this latter figure is correct, but only in a numeral sense. These statisticians overlook one very important fact, however: that it requires one hundred years to make a century; and it calls for no expert mathematician to figure it out that the full hundred years of the nineteenth century will not have run their course until 12 o'clock midnight of December 31, 1900. Numerically, we enter the twentieth century with January 1, 1900; but, nevertheless, we must complete the entire year of 1900 and go through its 365 days before the actual nineteen hundred shall have run their course."

THE SCHOOLBOY'S RIDDLE.

"Now," said an English schoolmaster, as he displayed a bright five-shilling piece between the tips of his finger and thumb, "the first boy or girl that puts a riddle to me which I cannot answer will receive this as a gift. Any more?" he asked as soon as silence was restored and no one had claimed the coin.

"Yes, sir," sung out a little fellow from the farther end of the school. "Why am I like the Prince of Wales?"

"The Prince of Wales?" said the master, thoughtfully. "The Prince of Wales?" he repeated to himself. "Really, Johnny, I see no resemblance in you. I'll give it up."

"Because," cried the lad, joyfully, "I'm waiting for the crown."—New York Tribune.

His daily prayer, far better understood in acts than words, was simply doing good.—Whittier.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JAN. 25, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

QUESTIONS BY A MORMON.

7. Will you be kind enough to give a precept to pray for the sick without anointing with oil?

8. As the gospel was preached by the apostles—those who did not fashion themselves ministers—to “every creature” in Paul’s day (Col. 1: 23), “once for all delivered unto the saints” (Jude 3, R. V.), how are we to know that you are not of those who have “crept in privily?”

9. If the word of the Lord is now all written just as the Lord wanted it and so plain that “a fool shall not err,” how are we to know that he has left any place for your words, oral or written? (Ezek. 13.)

10. As the apostles baptized Jew and Gentile into one body, family, or fold eighteen hundred years ago, and as there is no wall in this field, world, or “age,” how do you know that the kingdoms of this age are not Christ’s? (Rev. 11: 15.)

11. If you are a valid teacher, can you “declare the whole counsel of God?”

12. If so, is John’s Revelation a part of the “counsel,” and can you declare it?

7. The question asked here meets no point of difference between Mormons and Christians. Many Christians believe that it is right to call for the elders, and that they should anoint with oil and pray for them, with no expectation that a miracle will be wrought to heal or that all will be healed. I am sure if every one on whom the elders laid hands and anointed with oil had recovered, those Christians of early days would yet be alive; and if the Mormons could cure by laying on of hands and anointing with oil, none of them would die. The fact that Mormons die as much as other people proves the falsity of their claims to heal by laying on of hands and anointing with oil. All candid people recognize a difficulty in understanding this passage. Many claim it refers exclusively to the miraculous age of the church; others, that since the use of oil as a curative agent was common, it was an admonition to connect with the remedies used the prayers of the elders, and all who could be cured would be by this course. The Mormons claim it was miraculous, and that they can cure by miracle now. This we insist is a blasphemous claim of divine power without a shadow of ground on which to base the claim. As told last week, all the sick and diseased in all the country of Judea, Samaria, and Phenicia were brought to Jesus, and they were healed before all the people, before all the city. All that were brought to him were healed; no one was left in doubt. If Mormons have such power now, it was given to them, as it was to Christ and the apostles, that they might convince the world that they speak by the authority of God; and if they refuse to show this power, they betray the trust God committed to them. All talk of unbelief as a reason for not exercising the power until they have given infallible proof of possessing it is false pretense. Neither Christ nor his apostles ever refused to exert their power, save after it had been shown, and then people refused to believe. But to the question: I cannot find where men were commanded to pray for the sick without anointing with oil, because this verse is the only command in the Scriptures to pray for the sick; but I can find quite a number of examples in which persons did pray for healing for themselves and others, and they were healed without the anointing. These as fully show God’s approval as a command could. In the Old Testament Scriptures is the case of Hezekiah. (2 Kings 20: 1; Isa. 38: 1.) He was sick unto death, and he prayed the Lord, and he heard him and extended his life fifteen years. Then Isaiah applied a plaster of figs instead of anointing with oil. In the days of Jesus many besought him to heal them. He did it without the anointing with oil. (See Mark 1: 40; 5: 35; Matt. 8: 5; Luke 7: 3; 9: 38; John 4: 47; 11: 1.) These, with many others, show men did pray for healing and receive it without anointing with oil.

8. The true Christian can easily determine he has not “crept in privily” by his willingness to follow the law of God, without addition, change, or subtraction. “If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love.” (John 15: 10.) God says all effort to add to, take from, or change his will is presumptuous sin before him. So the true child of God takes it as it was given by Jesus Christ and his holy apostles, without the Mormon additions. He knows the Mormons are false apostles, because they do not accept the gospel as having been “once for all delivered unto the saints,” and which had, in its fullness and completeness, been preached by Paul himself, and Christians had become complete in Christ as preached. (Col. 2: 10; 4: 12.) These claims of the completeness and perfection in “faith once for all” cut off all later revelations and brand all who claim them as false prophets. All true believers know Mormons are not true apostles of Christ or servants of God, because they turn the grace of God into lasciviousness. Mormons fill the bill exactly of those of whom Paul warns: “For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.” (2 Tim. 3: 6, 7.) That is Paul’s picture of Mormonism. Christians know Mormons are not true teachers of God, because they do not follow Christ. He came into this world and found polygamy existing, tolerated by God under the law of Moses on account of the hardness of their hearts, the ungovernableness of their lusts. Christ corrected this perverted order: “And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.” (Matt. 19: 4-6.) Mormons found Christians trying to enforce this law of God and pretended to receive a command from God annulling God’s law and substituting for it a command to take many wives unto themselves. They set aside that gospel “once for all delivered unto the saints” and preached another gospel which is no gospel, and God says let such be accursed. They show their utter antagonism to Christ and his apostles in another thing. When these were in the world, they found the laws of human government frequently contrary to the law of God. In all such cases they said, “It is better to obey God than man;” and when punished unto death often for disobeying the human law in such cases, they counted it all joy to suffer for the name of Christ. Mormons claim to have received a revelation from God commanding them to practice polygamy. Mr. Roberts, before the congressional committee, testified the revelation was mandatory, not permissive; yet when the government of the United States passed a law punishing polygamy, the Mormons, through their highest authorities, annulled it and ordered their members to disobey what they claimed to be the law of God. No true prophet or servant of God ever obeyed human law in preference to God’s law. Either Mormons do not believe God commanded them to establish polygamy or else, as a whole body, they have set at defiance the law God gave to them. This of itself brands them with treason against God.

9. The words, oral or written, of no human being are to be accepted, save as he speaks according to the words of God. Nothing can be added to, nothing taken from. Hence we know all added by Mormonism is false and to be condemned. Any one who adds a thing not commanded by God is guilty of presumptuous sin. No Christian is guilty of this. The whole Mormon establishment is added to the commandments of God.

10. I know the nations are not the kingdoms of God, because they do not obey his laws; I know the nation of Mormonism is not a kingdom of God, because they do not submit to his law, but set it aside with their own inventions, violate the spirit of his kingdom, which is one of gentleness, not force, warfare, and bloodshed, as they have shown their kingdom to be.

11. I can, as I study and learn it.

12. “Secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children forever.” There are many truths clearly and plainly revealed in the book of Revelation. These we may understand and teach. There are many things in the book of Revelation, and to a lesser extent in all the books of the Bible, that are not revealed. These should be left to God. The things that are revealed I teach. What the different figures—the beasts and the vials, etc.—mean is not revealed. No man can reveal them. Guessing at them is not revealing them; it is doing as the Mormons do—imposing their guesses on the ignorant as the revelations of God. I try to avoid this. While we do not understand what the different figures refer to, we can easily learn the practical lessons they teach and teach them to others.

I have answered these questions according to the Scriptures. Every passage referred to by our Mormon condemns them and their teaching plainly. Especially it was self-destruction for them to quote the passage that commands: “Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints.” That means it was delivered and finished, when the foundation of Mormonism is that it was not once and for all delivered, but that parts of it have been delivered in these latter days through Joseph Smith and others, who falsely claim to be prophets of God. By virtue of these later revelations they call themselves “Latter-day Saints.”

But the interpretation given to one passage or another really has but little to do with the truth or falsity of Mormonism. The foundation stone of their fabric is that they have received revelations from God. If this is true, their interpretations of Scripture and teachings must be infallibly true. If it is not true, if their claims to receive revelations from God are not true, they, in pretending to do it and in presenting their own teachings as from God, are guilty of the highest crime possible for men to commit against God.

In Deut. 18: 15-22 we have the sinfulness of setting forth man’s inventions as the commands of God: “The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him shall ye hearken. . . . But the prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die. And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? when a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him." Tested by that rule, all the Mormon prophets would die. He always enabled his prophets to give ample evidence to both friend and foe of his presence with them. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 8.) That "gospel," in its fullness, had already been preached to them, and could not be added to. If Mormonism is true, the Bible is false; if the Bible is true, Mormonism is false. D. L.

LETTER TO THE LAODICEANS.

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." (Rev. 3: 14-16.)

The expression, as found in the first of all of these seven letters, "I know thy works," is a significant one. In knowing, in taking cognizance of the work of the church as a whole, he takes notice of the work of all the individuals that compose the church or make up the body of Christ in any given locality. Thus he scrutinizes the conduct of each individual and sees all that he does; takes notice of all his works, whether they be good or bad. No member can hide any part of his life from God. Members may, and do, hide many things from their fellow-men; but they can hide nothing from the Lord. The apostle says: "All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do." It is a solemn and fearful thing to realize that all we say and all we do is known and taken account of by the Lord. Jesus said, while on earth, that for every idle word that men speak shall they give account in the day of judgment. Some men argue that the Lord takes no notice of what men do on earth, and that, therefore, he does not hear and answer the prayers of men; yet in every one of these seven letters the Lord says: "I know thy works." This contradicts all this cold, philosophic claim that God takes no concern over what his people are doing. He does take notice of his people, and tells us: "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers." This is, indeed, precious to the faithful child of God; but the expression, "I know thy works," is a terror to unfaithful members.

We certainly should be very careful in our walk and conversation, when every act we perform and every word we speak is open before the Lord, and we shall have to give an account for everything at the last day. If all would realize this fact, and live with reference to it, it would save them from many missteps and from many heartaches and sore regrets. Then the question also arises: Why does the Lord say to these Laodicean Christians: "I would thou wert either cold or hot?" Can it mean that it would be better for them to be real bad than to be lukewarm? It evidently has reference to their influence upon others, and that the influence of lukewarm people is worse upon society than if they were openly bad. The better imitation a counterfeit bill is of a genuine one, the more likely people are to be deceived by it. Any one can detect a real rank counterfeit, but it takes a good judge to detect a well-executed one. So it is regarding influence, both of individual members and congregations. If a man is known to be a bad man by everybody, he can do but little harm to people that want to do right. An open, outspoken infidel can do but little injury to people that want to do the Lord's will. They know him and will not be influenced by him; but the dangerous man is one that makes the general impression that he believes the Bible, but who avails himself of every opportunity he can to adroitly undermine the faith of people that do believe. This sort of a man can reach and ruin people that an out-and-out infidel could not touch; they spurn him and keep out of his way.

So it is in regard to lukewarm Christians and churches. Such are not on the way to heaven, and yet they make the impression upon others that they are. They do nothing openly bad, and are looked upon by the world around as an honest, clever sort of people, and are thus palming off a spurious, counterfeit sort of Christianity as genuine; and in so doing they lead others to think that sort of religion will take people to heaven, when it will not. Jesus says of these Christians that because they were neither hot nor cold he would spew them out of his mouth. A cold drink does not nauseate, neither does a hot one; but a lukewarm one does. Thus the Lord uses this figure upon these people to make known to them how distasteful their course is to him, and that he will get rid of them, will cease to regard them as a church, as the body of Christ at that place.

What is it, on the other hand, for a church to be hot? Evidently it is for them to be alive and earnest in the work of the Lord—to be aggressive, active in doing what the Lord requires. It is to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might by putting on the whole armor of God, by growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. With such a congregation as this the Lord dwells. They become a habitation of him through the Spirit. Such a congregation becomes the salt of the earth, the light of the world, a city upon a hill that cannot be hid. It is wonderful what an influence for good a live, earnest, and faithful congregation of Christians will exert upon the people of the community where they live and where their light is shining all the time. The people see a beauty in the religion of Jesus in that way that they would not see in any other way. But a church that is only lukewarm, like the Laodiceans were, is a fraud in every way. They defraud themselves out of salvation, and they defraud the community by palming off upon them something for Christianity which is not, and thus misleading all who suppose such a life will save men, and disgust all those who see and know that they are not living the life that Christianity requires of them. Such a people do inestimable harm in a community by being lukewarm. No wonder Jesus should say that he would spew them out of his mouth, would cease to regard them as his followers; and the principle of this whole matter is just as applicable now as it was then. The Lord will treat a lukewarm congregation now, that does not speedily repent and do the first works, as he said he would treat the Laodiceans and the church at Ephesus; he will remove the candlestick out of his place, will discard any congregation that will not do his will or manifest the purity and power of his religion.

Christianity is of a twofold nature: it not only saves those who live it, but tends to save those around them, so far as the gospel can reach them. Thus the righteous are doing double good, while the lukewarm are doing double evil by losing their own souls and dragging others down to perdition with them. This is an awful work. All churches, all Christians, should carefully study these letters to these seven churches, that they may see just how they stand in the sight of the Lord and keep striving all the time to grow and to become stronger in the Lord and the power of his might. To be strong in the Lord not only requires work, service, but it requires that we work just as God says work. If we work as men say work, we can only have human strength, not the strength or might of God. No stream can rise higher than its source. If we follow human wisdom in the religion of Christ, we can never be stronger than men; but if we follow the wisdom of God, by following his word in all things, then will we be strong in the Lord and the power of his might. This is something lukewarm people do but little of. Such people may have some dead forms of service, but no might or power of God is in it, because they use not the word of God. The Laodiceans were not strong in the Lord or in the power of his might, because they were not doing the will of God.

From one verse in this chapter it is supposed that these Laodiceans were a wealthy people, and that, being so, they were likely satisfied with mere forms, without life or power. No sort of zeal or earnestness can have God's might except by his word. The Jewish people, in the days of Paul, had a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge; the scribes and Pharisees, in the days of the Savior, would compass sea and land to make one disciple, but they did not use the word of God as the means of making that disciple, and Jesus says that they made him more a child of hell than themselves. People that do not work in God's way can never have God's might or power; and no matter what or how much the Laodiceans may have done, they had no might, no power from God. Their love and zeal for him had so waned that they were not doing God's work, and in that matter, at least, were lukewarm.

There are plenty of fashionable churches of to-day that work immensely that have no love for God and his truth, do not walk by his truth, and are in no better condition than the Laodiceans; then there are churches that are so swallowed up by the world and its cares that they do not work much in the church at all, either good or bad. These are so thoroughly lukewarm that if not already dead, they soon will be. No people can remain in the church of God and live that way; and when we read what was said to the Laodiceans, we should take warning from their doom and not do as they did. Any church, no matter how poor in this world's goods, can be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might by doing faithfully the Lord's will; while no church, no matter how wealthy or active, can be so without doing that will.

The town itself where this church was has faded away from the earth; and it is wonderful how the towns, cities, and countries where Christianity was first established, and where they proved unfaithful, have gone down. The land of Palestine, where the Christian religion had its birth, scarcely bears a semblance to-day to what it was then. A few wandering Arabs, with tents, to-day are seen where thousands and millions of thrifty people once lived. The cities where the seven churches were, and upon which severe censures were passed, have since faded out, while the two—Smyrna and Philadelphia—against which no censure was pronounced are said to still exist, with professed Christians in them. Departure from Christianity always leaves a blight upon any country or any people. It is impossible to tell what an awful blight would fall upon this country, prosperous as it is now, if all Christians were to depart from the faith, and none be left to cling to the word of God, the gospel of Christ. Christ is the light of the world, and his religion is what keeps this country and others out of heathenism to-day. Sodom and Gomorrah so thoroughly abandoned God that they were destroyed and scarcely a footprint remains to tell where they were.

No people can long reject God with impunity; ruin will certainly overtake them. Then, as churches and individuals, we should never allow the love of God and the gospel of Christ to die out upon our hearts. The consequences will be awful if we do. We shall lose our souls and the country will lose its civilization. Darkness will then cover the earth, and gross darkness, the people. If civilization and refinement are to be perpetuated in this country, then Christianity as the Lord gave it must be perpetuated; it must live in the hearts and lives of men. If Christians would impress the world for good, they must put on the whole armor of God; they must add the Christian graces—virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity; they must deny "ungodliness and worldly lusts, and . . . live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;" they must "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," and keep themselves "unspotted from the world." Churches that live this way have all the promises of God here and hereafter. "The eyes of the Lord are over them, and his ears are open to their prayers;" and as, one by one, they cross over the dark river, they "rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." The influence they exert for good goes on and will still bless the world while they are at rest. None need claim the blessings of God upon any other principle. Christ is the author of eternal salvation to those that obey him, not to such as disregard his authority; and only the finally faithful will enter the eternal city.

E. G. S.

A tried, steadfast woman is the one jewel of the set. She points to her husband like the sunflower; her love illuminates him; she lives in him, for him; she testifies to his worth; she drags the world to his feet; she leads the chorus of his praises; she justifies him in his own esteem. Surely there is not on earth such beauty.—George Meredith.

Friendship is the shadow of the evening, which strengthens with the setting sun of life.—La Fontaine.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR,A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.
For indigestion and foul stomach.
For sick and nervous headaches.
For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.
For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.
For loss of appetite and debility.
For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir. Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.
Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.
1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

Nonresident Notice.

J. J. Blair, Admr., et al.
vs.

Hugh McMurray et al.

In this cause, on this the 20th day of December, 1899, it appearing to the satisfaction of the Clerk from the affidavit to the petition in this cause that the defendants—William Blair, James Blair, and Fannie Bridge and her husband, H. E. Bridge—are nonresidents of the State of Tennessee; therefore the ordinary process of this court cannot be served upon them. It is therefore ordered by the Clerk that said defendants enter their appearance herein at the February term of the Davidson County Court, to be holden at the courthouse in Nashville, Tenn., on the first Monday in February, 1900, it being February 5, 1900, and defend, or said complainant's bill will be taken for confessed as to them, and will be set for hearing ex parte.

It is therefore ordered that a copy of this order be published for four weeks in succession in the Gospel Advocate, a newspaper published in Nashville, Tenn.

P. A. Shelton, Clerk,

By Wm. B. Shelton, D. C.

W. R. Chambers, Solicitor.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

DENNEY.

The angel of death visited our congregation on the morning of December 31, 1899, and took from our midst Brother Thomas B. Denney. Brother Denney was baptized on August 22, 1899, since which time he has been proving his faith by his works. He has been a great sufferer from consumption, but has borne his afflictions with the greatest patience. To know him was to love him. He told his many friends and relatives that he was prepared to meet God and that death was welcome. How sweet to die in the triumph of a living faith!

Carter, Texas. W. E. HALL.

MAXWELL.

J. T. Maxwell was born in McNairy County, Tenn., July 5, 1853; died in Fannin County, Texas, January 3, 1900. Brother Maxwell was married in the fall of 1873 to Martha J. Jordan, and moved to Texas in December, 1883. His first wife died on September 28, 1888, leaving four children. He was again married on April 9, 1889, to Mary A. Campbell. With her he leaves five children, making nine in all, who are left, with a host of friends and his brethren in Christ, to mourn their loss. He was baptized into Christ by Brother J. C. White, at Leonard, Texas, in August, 1893. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

LEHMAN.

Mrs. Mary Ann Lehman was born on June 5, 1837, in Meriwether County, Ga. Her maiden name was Slay, and she was married to her cousin, W. R. Slay, February 19, 1852. He died in the Confederate Army on April 1, 1863. On February 11, 1887, she was married to J. M. Lehman, who died in Falls County, Texas, on August 23, 1896, where they had lived for some time. For the last fourteen months she has lived in Terrell, Texas, with her daughters, Sisters Clyette and Taylor. She died of measles on December 28. She was baptized by A. C. Borden, some thirty years ago, in Randolph County, Ala. Sister Lehman was an earnest and intelligent Christian, always loyal to her faith, and a faithful attendant on the worship of God. She will be sadly missed by those who meet at Odd Fellows' Hall, as well as by her daughters and granddaughter. May her example help us all to be true to God.

Terrell, Texas. G. F. MARTIN.

BAKER.

Mrs. Sophia C. Baker was born on January 12, 1825, and fell asleep in Christ at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Meacham, Pinewood, Tenn., October 11, 1899. She was the widow of William A. Baker, who preceded her to the grave several years. She was a member of the church of Christ about thirty years, and was a faithful, humble, devoted, and sincere Christian. Grandma was kind and gentle and talked so sweetly of the "home of the soul." She fell asleep as sweetly as a tired child upon its mother's bosom. To her death had lost its sting, and the grave gained no victory. In the home of her daughter she was most tenderly cared for during her last sickness by her two chil-

ROYAL Baking Powder

Made from pure cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

dren, Mrs. J. M. Meacham and Mrs. C. W. Craig. The funeral services were conducted by Brother S. R. Logue, and the body was taken to Duck River, Tenn., and placed in the family burying ground to await the resurrection of the righteous.

E. J. MEACHAM.

Lewisburg, Tenn.

DOWNNEY.

Little Walter Aaron Downey, son of I. L. and Xalisco Downey, was born on March 9, 1899, and died on September 5, 1899, making his stay here short—only five months and twenty-six days. But his life was long enough to confirm God's promise: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die." It is hard, dear brother and sister, to kiss Walter good-by; but let me admonish you to raise your tear-dimmed eyes and aching hearts to Christ, who died that we might live. While we stand in need of the shed blood of Christ, little Walter does not; for he was never lost, but ever safe. We are suffering, both in body and mind, yet it is not so with your sweet baby; he is with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and free from earth and death. Do not weep for him. One blessed thought should entwine around your hearts: "We cannot bring him to us, but we can go to him." May God help you to so live that you, with your whole family, will be united in glory, where sad partings never come.

R. T. SISCO.

HARDISON.

Sallie E. Hardison was born on October 17, 1868; obeyed the gosel in August, 1886; lived a Christian life thirteen years; was married to W. A. Hardison in December, 1891; and departed this life on January 11, 1900, after living on this earth thirty-one years, two months, and twenty-three days. Her mother being an afflicted woman for a number of years, and she being the oldest daughter, the duties of housekeeping were put upon her quite early in life. She learned the great and important lesson which Paul gave to women: "To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." In her death the kind-hearted husband has been robbed of a devoted Christian wife, and the four precious little children have lost a very kind and affectionate mother. Her life, which is an open book, is now left to the world, and we trust we may gather some things from it that will assist us in beautifying our lives. It was my pleasure to know her as a true, good woman, and I believe she will have her place in the home of sweet rest.

F. C. SOWELL.

RODGERS.

While it is painful to chronicle the death of saints, it is joy to know they are crowned with glory. Sister Rodgers' maiden name was Wood—Amanda Wood. She was born on April 9, 1840, and was married to Brother W. K. Rodgers on October 18, 1857. She and her husband have been citizens of the community of Commerce forty-three years next March. She has lived a consistent member of the church of Christ about thirty-seven years. Sister Rodgers died of pneumonia at 11:10 o'clock P.M. on December 29, 1899, leaving a bereaved husband, four daughters—three of whom are married and one single—and one son, having lost by death three boys. Ten of her grandchildren are living, and two are dead. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and a good neighbor. She could well say with Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." We condole with the bereaved family.

H. C. BOOTH.
Commerce, Texas.

NORTH.

Sister M. E. North, wife of Brother Ira North, Jr., died at the home of Brother Ira North on December 21, 1899. Our dear sister was born on December 19, 1850, and was married to Brother Ira North on October 6, 1880. Her maiden name was Gooch. I had the honor of performing the ceremony at her marriage, and it was under the preaching of Brother Spivy that she came into the church in the year 1881. She was forty-nine years and two days old. I have been acquainted with our dear sister about twenty years. She was a member of the congregation at Wayne Station, Tenn., and was quite regular in her attendance upon the regular Lord's day meetings; and I think that no sister of that congregation living as far from the church as she was there any oftener than she. The family and church will miss her very much, especially our dear Brother North, who lost a dear old father only a short time ago and also a beloved son not long before; but he will not sorrow without hope, for he has the assurance of the Lord's word that those who die in the Lord are blessed. Dear children, remember your mother desired you to be good, for the last time I saw her alive she expressed herself as being anxious to bring you up to be good Christians; so if you want to see her in the good world, be sure to prepare to meet her there, where you will have a happy reunion in the sweet by and by, and will no more be called to say, "Farewell."

HENRY BLAKE.

RAINES.

What comfort does the apostle give to us in 1 Thess. 4: 13-18! Though we lay our loved ones in the grave, out of our sight, after a while the Lord shall come and awaken from the slumbering dust those who are near and dear to us. But with our rejoicing we should remember that his coming will be a blessing to none but those who have lived lives of devotion to Christ and his kingdom. That Sister Raines' life was one of truth and righteousness I am satisfied. She had passed her seventy-third year at the time of her death. Her life was one

"Every Well Man Hath His Ill Day."

A doctor's examination might show that kidneys, liver and stomach are normal, but the doctor cannot analyze the blood upon which these organs depend.

Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood. It cures you when "a bit off" or when seriously afflicted. It never disappoints.

Dyspepsia.—My husband had dyspepsia and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured him. Our little boy was nervous and the baby had ulcerous sores. It cured both." Mrs. EMMA BEBE, Portage, Pa.

Indigestion.—"I could not eat for some months on account of distress and indigestion. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me so that I can eat and sleep well." Mrs. G. A. GURTZ, Taylor and Walnut Sts., Wilmington, Del.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

worthy of imitation. Being dutiful in her childhood, unto her was given the promise: "Thou mayest live long upon the earth." The writer knew her well and was always impressed by her life. I do not remember meeting one who was more diligent to speak just the truth and to let her conversation be free from any idle talk. She suffered much during her last illness, but not one word of complaint ever passed from her lips. The spirit has gone to Him who gave it. Sorrow not, friends and loved ones, as those who have no hope. After a while we shall pass over to the beautiful shore, soon we shall be out of the storm; and how tranquil will be the rest, the calm, of that beautiful shore—that home free from sorrow, sickness, and death—where hearts neither ache, bleed, nor break; where life is eternal and a treasure sublime! "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Mooreville, Ala. JOHN HAYES.
Firm Foundation please copy.

GOOCH.

Melinda Elizabeth Mitchell was born in Pettis County, Mo., October 31, 1847. She became the second wife of T. M. Gooch, in 1875, and died at her home, in Hanson, Ky., October 31, 1899—on the fifty-second anniversary of her birth. She obeyed the gospel in October, 1872, and lived a devoted Christian life to the end—no, not to the end; to the beginning—the beginning of the true life on the other side of the river. Sister Gooch was one of the best of women. This is not mere eulogy, but the statement of a fact well known to all who knew her. When the sad news that she was dead was spoken on the streets every one said, "She was a good woman"—the grandest just compliment that was ever paid to anybody. One man who had lived a neighbor to her, and who belongs to another church, said of her: "She was one of the best women I ever saw." No tramp called in vain at her kitchen door; no sickness in the cabin homes of her acquaintances but she went to see and assist; no death but she was there to console and see to things. I have been her minister three years, and two years of that time I have lived next door to her; yet I never heard her speak an unkind word about anybody or anything. But she has gone from us for a season. Everything that human skill and love could do for her was done, but all to no purpose; as the twilight shades were fading into the deeper shadows of evening she left us. She leaves a loving husband and four noble children—two daughters and two sons—besides all who knew her, to mourn her death. All the loved ones left behind—save little Hardy, who is scarcely old enough yet—are Christians, fighting the only battle that death does not gain. We can only say to them: Be faithful, and it will not be long until you meet her again at the great reunion in the Father's house.

Hanson, Ky. W. H. LIGON.

EDWARDS.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) How strange it seems that we so feebly grasp the truth thus joyously uttered by the psalmist! Surely, if we could catch but a tithe of the fullness of this statement, we would not feel the sadness and sorrow we do at the departure of our loved ones when, worn out with watching, waiting, and toil, they softly steal away from us, as it were, to be with God and the Lamb forever and ever. It looks all darkness and gloom from this side, but over there it is joy and brightness for evermore. Elizabeth Billings was born in Davidson County, N. C., July 11, 1812; was a daughter of Frederick Billings. She was left an orphan at an early age and came with an uncle to Wilson County, Tenn., in the fall of 1833. She was married to John K. Edwards some time in 1834, and in the summer of the same year she obeyed the gospel and was baptized by Edward Sweatt. She was familiar with the trials of pioneer Christianity in the days when Sandy E. Jones, J. J. Trott, and others preached outdoors by piles of burning logs in the dead of winter. She was one among the first members of the old Bethlehem Church, Wilson County, Tenn., and was well acquainted with the preaching of the above-named men, together with that of J. K. Speer, Tolbert Fanning, John D. Eichbaum, and others. She was a reader of the Gospel Advocate from its very beginning, and loved and cherished it till the day of her death. As a faithful wife, she came with Brother Edwards, in the fall of 1851, to Upshur County, Texas. Brother Edwards was fortunate in making a good crop the first year in Texas, and, at his wife's suggestion, began at once to look about for a gospel preacher and to invite the neighbors in to preaching, who were always bountifully cared for. J. P. Elder, Samuel Henderson, and others were the pioneer preachers of East Texas. Thus Sister Edwards again showed her faith and zeal by helping to plant and establish upon a substantial basis the cause of truth in Texas, as well as in Tennessee. For many years she has been familiarly known as "Aunt Betsy," and has been as universally loved as she was known. Certainly she deserves more than a passing notice. Nothing in the way of visiting and waiting on the sick, caring for the poor, preparing for and attending meetings, ever escaped her attention, and in none of these was she ever surpassed. She had remarkable vigor, both of body and mind, and never seemed to lose her energy. In August, 1898, the writer conducted an interesting meeting within one and one-half miles of her home. She was then eighty-six years old, but she never missed a sermon out of the fifteen. Day and night, the same, Aunt

Betsy could be seen in her favorite corner, with her trumpet held to her ear, eagerly catching every word of comment on the blessed book she so dearly loved. Her husband had long since passed to his reward, and she, lingering on the shores of time, was truly "a mother in Israel." On the night of December 16, 1899, about 9 o'clock, she suddenly began to complain, but within a few minutes she told her widowed daughter, with whom she still lived at the old home, what the trouble was, and told her not to send for a doctor. Within one hour she had gently fallen asleep in the Lord; the trials of her long and useful life had ended. Was she dead? Ah, it was only the body that was dead, because the spirit had taken its flight. Jesus has said: "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." She was only absent from the body to be present with the Lord. She had made three special requests that she wished carried out at her burial: (1)

That Brother W. P. Mings be present to make the funeral talk; (2) that Rev. 3 be read; and (3) that the old hymn, "Hear the Royal Proclamation," be sung at her grave. Two of these requests only could be carried out. Brother Mings was engaged elsewhere and could not come. The writer, being not far away, was then summoned; her favorite admonitory chapter was read, with some comments; and after a few words of tender memory and soothing consolation were said, we, with saddened and subdued voices, joined in that grand old hymn she had so often sung. But while we were sad for a little while at the thought of our loneliness without Aunt Betsy, we truly do not sorrow as others who have no hope. May God give us opportunities, and may we all be as faithful and as patient as she was, that when our time shall come we may all be as sure to meet our God in peace. L. M. OWEN.
Mineola, Texas.

The Means to the End.

The best inventive talent on both sides the Atlantic is constantly used to improve Singer sewing-machines; thus they are always "up-to-date." Only the best materials and the most modern automatic machinery are used in the manufacture of Singer sewing machines.

THEY ARE
"BUILT LIKE A WATCH."

Every genuine machine carries the trade-mark.

Sold on instalments. You can try one Free. Old machines taken in exchange.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.
OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

The W.V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale
and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough
and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence
Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

BY
A. P. STOUT

TOUCHES and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places are most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the "Man of sorrows" are almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. Address

Price, $1.00

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Your Liver

Will be roused to its natural duties and your biliousness, headache and constipation be cured if you take

Hood's Pills

Sold by all druggists. 25 cents.

General News.

The fund for the relief of General Lawton's family reached the handsome figure of $80,101.

The German Government has prohibited the Krupp Works from making steel shells for Great Britain.

The farmers of Maryland have petitioned the Postmaster General to discontinue the rural delivery of mails and return to the former method.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has a magnificent copy of John Eliot's Indian Bible, printed in Cambridge, Mass., in 1663, for which he is reported to have paid $1,000.

According to an investigation made by Henri Rochefort, two hundred and eleven French officers have thrown up their commissions and have already taken service in the Transvaal army.

A recently organized company will put into public service in the streets of New York next week two hundred automobile carriages and one hundred automobile omnibuses. The charge for cabs will be 25 cents a mile and 75 cents an hour.

The United States Senate confirmed the following: Frank Simmons, to be United States Marshal for the Southern district of Alabama; Collector of Customs, L. J. Winston, district of Natchez, Miss.; C. J. Greene, Receiver of Public Moneys, at Natchitoches, La.

The recent rise in the Ohio River started the coal barges. One million three hundred and ninety-five thousand bushels of coal were sent off from Pittsburg, Pa., in one day, while eight million bushels are said to be waiting shipment to Southern cities.

The mounted New Zealanders in South Africa are said to be worrying the Boers by hazardous moves, driving small parties from place to place. The importance of cavalry or a mounted infantry to the British becomes more important as the war goes on.

Reports which pass the censor in South Africa indicate that the British Army is gaining in position and that some important movement is at hand. General Buller has crossed the Tugela River. Sir Charles Warren has arrived within seventeen miles of Ladysmith.

Two famous Indian chiefs had a conference with President McKinley. They were T. M. Buffington, principal chief of the Cherokees, and Pleasant Porter, chief of the Creeks. Chief Buffington is six feet seven inches tall, and before his election as chief was a judge of the Indian court.

The East Tennessee Telephone Company, of Russellville, Ky., notified their subscribers that the rates would be raised 50 cents per month, and immediately every grocery house, all the railroad men, numerous private residences, and other business houses ordered their telephones taken out at once.

The government of Chile has leased the island of Juan Fernandez, the scene of Robinson Crusoe, to the Germans, who are using it for a canning factory, and also for raising goats and cattle. The island lies about four hundred miles west of Valparaiso, and is about twenty-three miles long and ten miles wide.

Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, Canada, denies the report that the Indians of the north have become greatly excited over the Boer War, adding that a thorough investigation proves that the Indians do not even know there is a war in South Africa. The Indians are all quiet and contented.

Fort Bayard, N. M., has been discontinued as a garrison post and the buildings will be turned over to the Surgeon General of the army for use in connection with the general hospital to be established there as a sanitarium for the treatment of officers and enlisted men of the army suffering from pulmonary troubles.

Lord Strathcom, the Canadian High Commissioner in London, has offered to provide a force of four hundred mounted men from Manitoba and the Northwest Territory, to arm and equip and convey them to South Africa, at his own expense. It is estimated that the cost will be a million dollars. The proposal has been accepted.

The Orange Free State has made a third levy on all able-bodied men of that country. The new requisition is due to desertions, losses in killed and wounded, and the refusal of the burghers to serve in the first and second levies. The new levy calls into the field all men between the ages of fourteen years and sixty years.

Steel ties, tried for experimental purposes on the New York Central Railroad, have proved less satisfactory than ties of oak. The chief difficulty appears to arise from their vibration. It is said that they shake away the stone ballast from around them, and make a disagreeable rattling sound audible to passengers in a train.

A number of American concerns will build manufacturing plants in Russia. The Westinghouse Electric Company will build a large plant in St. Petersburg, to cost $2,000,000; a combination of pump manufacturers will invest about $2,000,000 in a factory; and the Singer Sewing Machine Company intends to build a large factory in St. Petersburg.

Fifty years ago there were few persons employed or gaining a livelihood by the utilization of electric energy; now in England and America there are over a million—very likely two millions in the world. In 1827 George Stephenson started his first railway train, possibly with a dozen employees; now in the United States there are nearly eight hundred thousand railroad workers.

Near Ashcroft, in British Columbia, are a number of small lakes, whose shores and bottoms are covered with a crust containing borax and soda in such quantities and proportions that when cut out it serves as a washing compound. The crust is cut into blocks and handled in the same manner as ice, and it is estimated that one of the lakes contains 20,000 tons of this material.

Dr. Adam Paulsen, the head of the Danish Meteorological Office, is leading an expedition to the north coast of Iceland for the purpose of studying, during the winter, the northern lights, which are magnificently displayed in that country. Elaborate electric and photographic instruments, in the use of which the members of the expedition have been trained for several months past, were taken along.

Mr. S. W. Dickinson, an agent for the American Bible Society, has just brought the interesting fact to light that the first book printed in Minnesota was a Bible. It was printed in 1836, about thirteen years before the first issue of a newspaper in St. Paul. The Bible was in the Ojibway language, and was printed on the mission press at Lake Pokegama, Pine County, under the supervision of Mr. Ayer, who likewise had charge of the mission farm at that point.

In the Public School Officers' Association, in session at Nashville, Tenn., the Committee on School Attendance submitted a report on "How to Secure Best Results," in which it says: "We believe a law with proper restrictions and modifications requiring the attendance of pupils from nine to fifteen years of age two-thirds or three-fourths of the regular term of public schools in their own district is a necessity and should be enacted by Tennessee in the near future."

The attempt of the Russian Government to adopt in that country the Gregorian calendar, which is in use in nearly all the rest of the civilized world, has failed. The reason given is that it has been found impossible to establish an agreement between the dates of religious festivals appearing in both the Julian and the Gregorian calendars—that is to say, the people want to keep on celebrating Christmas and Easter and the other days on the dates to which they have been accustomed.

The heirs of the late Anthony Pollok, of Washington, have offered a prize of 100,000 francs ($20,000), to be awarded during the exhibition in Paris this year, to the inventor of the best apparatus for saving life in case of disaster at sea. The prize is open to universal competition. The award will be made by a jury sitting in Paris. It is provided that the entire prize may be awarded to a single individual, or a portion of it may be awarded to each of several persons, as the jury may decide.

Director of the Census Merriam suggests to the agriculturists of the country that they use some of their time between now and June next in thoroughly preparing themselves to answer promptly and accurately the questions relative to the acreage, quantity, and value of crops; the quantity and value of all farm products, animal and vegetable; the cost of fertilizers and farm labor; and, in fact, all the items of farm operations for the calendar year 1899, which the census enumerators are compelled by law to ascertain. This, he says, will result in a full and accurate census.

White Island, in the Bay of Plenty, New Zealand, is composed mainly of sulphur mixed with gypsum and a few other minerals. Over the island, which is about three miles in circumference, and which rises between eight hundred and nine hundred feet above the sea, floats continually an immense cloud of vapor, attaining an elevation of 10,000 feet. In the center of the island is a boiling lake of acid-charged water, covering fifty acres, and surrounded with blowholes from which steam and sulphurous fumes are emitted with great force and noise. The sulphur from White Island is very pure, but little effort has yet been made to procure it systematically.

Details of the blizzard which swept over Southwestern New Mexico are coming in slowly, and they indicate that it was the severest storm ever experienced in that region. A stretch of territory fifty miles in width, with White Oaks and Nogal for the center, seemed to suffer the most, although the severity of the storm was fully felt throughout the Sacramento Mountain region. The velocity of the wind was terrible. All roads and trails were obliterated, and the driving snow made it impossible for travelers to see their way in the storm. When the storm abated, wagons which had been abandoned were found strewn all over the section. Several fatalities are reported, including the driver of the White Oaks-Lincoln stage. It is feared that many sheep herders have lost their lives. Thousands of head of stock perished, and it is believed that the loss will aggregate over half a million dollars. Between Carrizozo and Capitan, on the El Paso and Northern Railway, the snow was eight feet deep, and the down train to Almagordo was in the drifts a day and a half before being liberated.

Remember "Ailenrock's Book."

CUSTOMERS ASTONISHED AT OUR BARGAINS IN REMNANTS OF SILK RIBBONS FREE

We have purchased, at recent wholesale auction sales several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length, and many of them are the quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades; in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for bonnet strings, neckwear, trimming for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers.

Our stock of Silk Ribbons, from which we put up these 50-cent packages, consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Satin Edge, Silk Brocade, Striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends.

We put up carefully assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, assorted colors. No remnants less than one yard long, and all first-class, useful goods.

We will send 1 package for 35 cents, silver, or 36 cents in 2-cent stamps. Carefully packed in boxes, postpaid, upon receipt of price. Address PARIS RIBBON CO., Box 3045, New York City, N. Y.

If You Are Going North,
If You Are Going South,
If You Are Going East,
If You Are Going West;

PURCHASE TICKETS VIA THE

AND SO SECURE

The Maximum of Safety,
The Maximum of Speed,
The Maximum of Comfort,
The Minimum of Rates.

Rates, Time and all other information will be cheerfully furnished by

C. P. ATMORE, G. P. A.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Church News.

GEORGIA.

Valdosta, January 4.—Once more I come forward with my annual report of work done. The following is a summary of results for the past year: Sermons preached, 90; additions, 10; reclaimed, 1; money received, $94.75. As I look back on the time now gone I realize that I have made many mistakes; but if God wills, I will profit by them and do more for the Master and strive to live nearer my Father than I have ever done before. May more souls be fitted for heaven this year than ever before. W. A. CAMERON.

ILLINOIS.

Watseka, January 4.—I have been on an evangelistic tour now for three months in Barry County, Mo., and in Grant County, O. T. I have preached eighty-seven times, have visited nineteen points, and there have been twenty-eight additions under my work. I have three or four meetings still before me. ANDREW PERRY.

KENTUCKY.

Delaware, January 5.—Brother L. C. Hollaway, of Union County, commenced a meeting at Shady Grove Schoolhouse on Friday night before the second Lord's day in September and continued over the next Lord's day. He preached the gospel with great power, and the fruits of his labor were four added to the one body by baptism and one reclaimed. Brother Hollaway, like the writer, reads the Advocate and will not accept anything except "thus saith the Lord." The schoolhouse is about five miles from our meetinghouse, and I think there can be a great deal of good done by preaching at the schoolhouses. We would like to have Brother Hollaway with us again soon. Brother H. C. Ford, of Nebo, Ky., labored for us last year at Beech. He did a good work and we have called him to labor for us this year. Success to the Gospel Advocate. J. H. MACKEY.

MICHIGAN.

Quincy, December 25.—I am now ready to give a report of my work in Saginaw, Mich. You will recollect that, five years since, I called for contributions to aid me in a mission work from house to house among the poor of Saginaw. Circumstances have prevented me from doing that work until recently. Four years since Brother C. L. Palmer, the only brother in the church of Christ in Saginaw capable of teaching the way of the Lord, was suddenly called from his earthly work. He was the only brother of any financial ability. Since then they have been obliged to meet in a private house, and at present there are but two families meeting regularly for worship. Outsiders do not care to attend meeting in a private house. I have visited many houses, conversed on Christianity, and left religious tracts. The depth of ignorance I found on the subject of religion is wonderful, even among members of sectarian churches. Why should there be large sums of money sent to foreign lands to preach the gospel to the heathen when our own country is full of them? O, brethren and sisters, let us have our lamps trimmed and burning and oil in our vessels! Let us, as we visit among our neighbors, speak of the things of the kingdom. By so doing we may benefit our neighbors and receive a blessing ourselves. May it be said of us, as of one of old: "She hath done what she could." The amount that came into my hands for the work was about $10. (Mrs.) N. P. LAWRENCE.

TENNESSEE.

Andrews, January 16.—I preached at Bethel, Maury County, on the second Lord's day in this month and had a good meeting. Two ladies made the confession and were baptized on the same day. I start this year with stronger faith than ever before and hope to do much in the service of the Lord. F. C. SOWELL.

Nashville, January 5.—A few of the brethren and sisters and congregations were thoughtful enough to remember me during the holidays; among those who were so kind was Sister Joe D. Martin, of Gallatin, who sent me a big turkey, which was the very best of its kind. I present my heartfelt thanks to her and to all who thus remembered me. Praise the Lord! S. W. WOMACK.

Smithland, January 8.—Beginning on the fourth Lord's day in last October Brother J. R. Bradley, of Gurley, Ala., held a meeting for us here, which continued for eight days and nights and resulted in two persons being baptized. He also gave us practice in music for a week, beginning on Monday night after the third Sunday in November. NAOMI BOGGS.

[This communication has also the following additional signatures: P. L. Boggs and wife, John Boggs, Fannie Jacobs, Willie Roland, and John Luttrell and wife.—Eds.]

Simmons Bluff, January 8.—Brother C. M. Pullias, of Lebanon, Tenn., held a meeting at this place, commencing on the second Lord's day in November and continuing one week. The visible results were three precious souls added to the one body. The brethren and sisters were greatly strengthened. The interest was good throughout the meeting, with very little opposition. Brother Pullias is a good preacher of the old Jerusalem kind. May God bless him and ever help him to uphold and defend the true plan of salvation. He has promised to preach for us again next summer. The brethren are preparing to build a house in which to meet and worship. W. A. ETHRIDGE.

TEXAS.

Bazette, January 11.—On Monday night after the fourth Lord's day in December I began a meeting for the brethren at Godley and continued till the following Thursday night, when the meeting closed prematurely on account of my contracting a severe case of la grippe, from which I have not recovered up to the present time. If any good was done, other than preaching the word, I failed to hear of it; but I endeavored to impress upon all, both Christian and alien, the importance of obeying the word of God as addressed to each. This meeting ended my work until summer, as I am compelled to go into "winter quarters" on account of an afflicted ear, which makes exposure to cold very dangerous. If any brethren desire my services in the summer, they may address me at Bazette, Texas. WILLIAM M. JORDAN.

WASHINGTON.

Goldendale, December 23.—My two-months' labor for the brethren at Pleasant Valley and Sand Springs

The Manliness of Christ,

BY Thomas Hughes.

A handsome book. An appropriate present. Uniform with this we also have "Abide in Christ," "Like Christ," and "With Christ," by Andrew Murray; and "Lectures to Young Men," by Henry Ward Beecher. Price, each, 40c; three for $1.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Company,
Nashville, Tenn.

Have You Seen

OUR WEDDING BELLS?

A Beautiful Wedding Souvenir.

We have these bindings: Party-color Rose, Party-color Violet, White Art Vellum, Blue Art Vellum, White Embossed Leather. The book is 7x8 3/4 inches. A pretty design of "Wedding Bells" is stamped in gold on the cover. Contains a certificate, several pages for guests' names, and 21 pages of appropriate quotations, and is printed on heavy plate paper. Price, $1, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Company,
Nashville, Tenn.

closed with six additions to the one body by obedience. Three weeks were given to the cause at Pleasant Valley and thirteen days were given to the cause at Sand Springs. My time the balance of the two months was given chiefly to educating a small number of disciples in the valley. The six additions were to the Sand Springs congregation, two being added in my first meeting of six days and four being added in my last meeting of seven days. This is a great field and should not be neglected. I go from here to the beautiful city of Colorado Springs, Col., to build up the cause. Any brethren who might live in or about the springs may call on me or write to me at 721 South Tejon street, Colorado Springs, Col. M. J. WALTERS.

A Letter of Thanks.

My house and contents having been burned, leaving us in very destitute circumstances, I made an appeal for aid through the Firm Foundation, of October 10, 1899; and as some who contributed wish me to acknowledge receipts through the Gospel Advocate, I ask space to say I have received the following amounts from the following friends and brethren: Church of Christ, Antioch, Hopkins County, Texas, $8.45; Dr. J. A. Coppage (Methodist), Evanspoint, Texas, $4; John Hatchel (Baptist), Saltillo, Texas, $1; Dove Pharr (Baptist), Evanspoint, Texas, $1; Patrick Wynn (sinner), $1; church of Christ, South Ballinger, Texas, $2.50; church of Christ worshipping at Gravel Hill, Williamson County, Texas, $2.45; Brother W. J. Young, Coalgate, I. T., $1; Brother J. M. Copeland, Siloam, Texas, $2.10; Brother H. B. Millard, Georgetown, Texas, $4; Brother J. J. Heckman, Charleston, Texas, 25 cents; Brother T. S. Elliott, Charleston, Texas, 50 cents. Making a total of $28.25. Now to those who remembered us, I wish to say I have not the language to express the many thanks that are due them; on those who have obeyed the Lord and are members of the one body, I pray God's richest blessings; and to those who are yet in sin, I ask God to give opportunities of hearing the gospel, and may they turn and be saved before it is too late. I will continue to sound out the word of the Lord this year at the following places: At Long Branch Schoolhouse, Texas, every first Lord's day; Charleston, Texas, every second Lord's day; Antioch, Hopkins County, Texas, every third Lord's day; Cleveland Schoolhouse, Texas, every fourth Lord's day. May God bless the faithful.

G. CALHOUN ISABELL,
Charleston, Texas.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR the grandest and fastest-selling book ever published, Pulpit Echoes

OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART.
Containing Mr. MOODY'S best Sermons, with 500
Thrilling Stories, Incidents, Personal Experiences, etc., as told himself. With a complete history of his life by Rev. CHAS. F. GOSS, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Chicago Church for five years, and an Introduction by Rev. LYMAN ARBOTT, D. D. Brand new, 600 pp., beautifully illustrated. 75¢ 1,000 more AGENTS WANTED—Men and Women. Sales immense—a harvest time for Agents. Send for terms to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

By D. L. Moody

That girl was a very wise economist who, when advised to give up domestic work for literary work, replied that she was determined to do so just so soon as she became convinced that there were too many loaves of bread in the world and too few essays and poems.—Exchange.

NATURE MEANT IT.

When Nature Put Iron Into Your Blood She Meant It.

She didn't do it for fun; it wasn't an accident.

Our bodies need iron or we would never find it in the blood, in the gastric juice, in the chyle, in the lymph, in the bile, in the pigment of the eye, in the milk, and in other natural secretions of the body.

What is the iron for? It is for strength; it is a food; it is necessary for certain processes of living.

The want of it makes us sick.

How can we tell the want of it?

Paleness is a sign. Weakness, thinness, general debility, depression, nervousness, rheumatism, chills, ague, and lack of ambition and vitality.

All these mean the want of iron.

People who are always ailing, who catch cold and other diseases easily, who suffer from aches and pains, who are too weak to work and too depressed to enjoy life—such people need iron. Do you?

Many remedies for all these ills contain drugs and minerals that are never found in the body unless put there. Can they be natural?

Better take a medicine containing ingredients which nature uses herself in building up the body.

You would not patch up an iron building with wood.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic puts iron in your blood—iron in the form most easily used. Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic builds you up and makes you strong as iron.

"Dallas, Texas, December 15, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: Answering your inquiry of to-day, I cheerfully recommend Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic for a general household medicine. I have used several bottles in my family, and for building up the system, loss of appetite, and indigestion it can't be beat. In future I will always have a bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in the house.

"J. J. BINGON.

"218 North Harwood."

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic has been used by and has brought health to thousands. A letter received from one of the most prominent men in Ohio, Hon. J. W. Cruikshank, of Troy, Ex-clerk of the Supreme Court of Ohio, will serve as an example. He says:

"For the benefit of other sufferers I consider it my duty to speak of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. My wife was an invalid for several years, had lost nearly all vitality; she could not eat and was reduced in flesh to an alarming extent. All medicines failed to give relief, until we tried Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, which restored her usual health and strength in a very short time. Words cannot express our appreciation of this valuable remedy. It is certainly a wonder and worthy of a place in every home."

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's
IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

Remember "Allenroo's Book."

Book Reviews.

All books, etc., intended for notice should be sent to J. W. Shepherd, 1019 South Spruce street, Nashville, Tenn. Publishers will please note this. Any good book, not sold by regular subscription, can be purchased from the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, 232 North Market street, Nashville, Tenn.

"Woman's Possibilities and Limitations. A Message to the Young Women of To-day." By Stephen W. Dana. Pages, 110; price, 50 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company.

In these pages the author gives seven discourses, in which he presents a very thoughtful discussion of woman and her mission. He discusses "Woman's Characteristics—Her Weakness and Her Strength;" "Woman's Work, or Something to Do;" "Woman's Education," "Marriage," "Divorce," "Woman's Relation to the State," and "Woman's Relation to Christ and the Church." His handling of marriage and divorce is especially strong and just. The final chapter, in which he presents Christ's especial claim to woman's loyalty and devotion, fittingly closes the book. He closes by asking: "Shall not women preach?" "Yes, I reply, but not as a man. The manlike preaching of woman has not proven a success. It never will. The fact that Jesus Christ sent out no women with the twelve or the seventy, and the fact that the Holy Spirit set apart and endowed no women to be pastors, teachers, or evangelists, cannot be set aside as a mere accommodation to the times, or the omission of what was then a necessity. Great principles underlie these facts; they interweave with the great purposes of God; and who violates them, even for the best ends, manifests a zeal which is not according to knowledge."

"The Christology of Jesus: being His Teaching Concerning Himself according to the Synoptic Gospels." By James Stalker. Pages, 298; price, $1.50. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. For sale by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Only the material found in Matthew, Mark, and Luke is discussed in this volume. After devoting forty-two pages to "The Importance of the Teaching of Jesus," the author investigates the following titles of Jesus: "The Son of Man," "The Son of God," "The Messiah," "The Redeemer," and "The Judge." All the resources of modern scholarship have been used in the preparation of this volume, and full bibliographical lists of recent works accompany each chapter. Two appendices give Wendt's untranslated volume on the teaching of Jesus, and a dissertation on the apocryphal book of Enoch. The author is candid, thorough, and scholarly in his treatment. He thinks that the conception of many concerning Jesus and Christianity falls far short of that which is taught by inspiration, and that in order to have the real Christ and genuine Christianity we must go to the days of Jesus and the apostles.

"Frederick Douglass." By Charles W. Chestnut. Pages, 141; price, 75 cents. Small, Maynard & Co., Boston. 1899.

This volume is the latest issue of "The Beacon Biographies," the aim of which is to furnish brief, readable, and authentic accounts of the lives of those Americans whose personalities have impressed themselves most deeply on the character and history of their country. On account of the more formal lives often running into large volumes, the average busy man has not the time or inclination to acquaint himself with American biography. In this series everything that such a reader would ordinarily care to know is given by writers of special competence, who possess in full measure the best contemporary point of view. The volume on Frederick Douglass, like the other volumes of the series, is equipped with a frontispiece portrait, a calendar of important dates, and a brief bibliography for further reading. Fred. Douglass was unquestionably a man of great ability as an orator, and was a conspicuous and active participant in the antislavery movement, and after its consummation a conspicuous figure about Washington. This biography is an interesting contribution to the history of abolition times, and properly has a place among the lives of those who figured prominently in this movement.

MAGAZINES.

The Postmaster General has written for early publication in the Youth's Companion a most entertaining article on "Curiosities of the Postal Service," and the Attorney-general of the United States contributes a chatty, anecdotal article "About Lawyers" to the same periodical, which also announces an article by Secretary Gage, on "Character, Credit, Capital."

If, as some think, Mr. Rudyard Kipling has been the subject of too much laudation, a wholesome corrective is afforded in the keen and biting treatment which he receives at the hands of Mr. Robert Buchanan, in the paper called "The Voice of 'The Hooligan,'" which the Living Age for January 6 reprints from the Contemporary Review. The true estimate of Kipling lies somewhere between the extreme of laudation and such unsparing criticism as this.

The January number of Scribner's Magazine contains the first installment of the most important features of the magazine for 1900—Gov. Theodore Roosevelt's "Life of Oliver Cromwell." Governor Roosevelt's historical style is marked by a quiet dignity which does not lose the force characteristic of everything accomplished by the dashing Colonel of the Rough Riders.

Among the valuable features of the Self Culture Magazine for this year will be a series of articles contributed by experts and experienced writers, reviewing the great scientific achievements of the century now closing, and the trend of national progress and literary and art development in the various countries of the world. The present is an era of astounding activity in every department of human thought, and it is the purpose of the magazine to give current résumés of that activity in the chief fields of historical, religious, educational, and literary thought and opinion.

The only house in America handling all of the leading artistic instruments. Agents do not sell them because there is more money in the cheaper makes which they sell at a good price.

We can sell you the same direct, at prices save agents' profits. Pianos and factory and you profits.

STEINWAY
KNABE
PIANOS
CUSTARR
CHICKERING

JESSE FRENCH
PIANO & ORGAN CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers
St. Louis, Mo.

Write us, a 2c stamp may save you money. In doing so mention this paper.

FREE TO SUFFERERS

A Wonderful New Botanic Discovery, which is a Positive Specific Cure for Kidney, Bladder, and Rheumatic Diseases.

Of All Diseases that Afflict Mankind Diseases of the Kidneys are the Most Fatal and Dangerous.

Disorders of the kidneys and bladder cause Bright's disease, rheumatism, gravel, pain in the back, bladder disorders, difficult or too frequent passing water, dropsy, etc. For these diseases a positive specific cure is found in a new botanical discovery, the wonderful Kava-Kava Shrub, called by botanists the piper methysticum, from the Ganges River, East India. It has the extraordinary record of 1,200 hospital cures in thirty days. It acts directly on the kidneys, and cures by draining out of the blood the poisonous uric acid, urates, lithates, etc., which cause the diseased conditions.

Rev. W. B. Moore, of Washington, D. C., testifies in the Christian Advocate that Alkavis completely cured him of rheumatism and kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Hon. W. A. Spearman, of Bartlett, Tenn., describes his terrible suffering from uric acid, gravel, and urinary difficulty, being four months confined to his bed, and his complete cure by the Kava-Kava Shrub. Rev. A. C. Darling, of North Constantia, N. Y., who suffered greatly, being compelled to rise as often as sixteen times during the night, after life had become a burden, and, as he said himself, after he had lost all faith in man and medicine, was promptly cured by this wonderful botanic product. Hundreds of others give similar testimony. Many ladies, including Mrs. Sarah Castle, of Poestenkill, N. Y., and Mrs. L. D. Fegeley, of Lancaster, Ill., also testify to its wonderful curative powers in kidney and other disorders peculiar to womanhood.

Mrs. Sarah Castle, Poestenkill, N. Y.

That you may judge of the value of this great discovery for yourself we will send you one large case by mail free, only asking that when cured yourself you will recommend it to others as it deserves. It is a sure specific cure, and cannot fail. Address the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 403 Fourth avenue, New York City.

GUNS!  GUNS!

WE CARRY THE BEST STOCK OF

GUNS AND SPORTSMEN'S GOODS

IN THE SOUTH.

We have the best Hammerless Gun in America for $25. We have a very fine imported Hammer Gun, worth $25, that we will sell for $19. We have only a few of these left; they are close, hard shooters.

Send us your name and address, and we will send you our Gun Catalogue.

H. G. LIPSCOMB & CO.

152 N. MARKET ST.

Nashville, - - Tennessee.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Her Face His Face
 Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with Holskell's Ointment
 the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.
Holskell's Soap
 Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.
 Johnstor, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Will the Churches Do It?

Some are inclined to say "No." The facts are against them. We wish here to present a good example:

Only a very few years ago there was a struggling little congregation on Portland avenue, Louisville, Ky. There was discord among them; they actually divided and met at two places. Three years ago they numbered about twenty-five. Brother George A Klingman came into their midst and began to do the work of an evangelist. Some discouraged him on the ground that they could not support him and his family. He declined to consider a salary and asked the church to cooperate with him. Soon they began to take courage, sinners began to turn to the Lord, the dissatisfied members came back and took hold. The church now numbers two hundred and sixty-one members. They are living in peace and they love as brethren. What are they doing? On Lord's day at 10 A.M. they meet to study the Bible, both old and young; at 11 A.M. they break bread and have preaching; at 3 P.M. they hold meetings at New Albany, Ind., across the river, at a mission; at 6:30 P.M., preaching again at Portland Avenue Church for the German population and the Lord's Supper for the same and such of the church as could not be present in the morning; at 7:30 P.M., gospel meeting for the world. Such as can of the church also meet for the following studies: Mondays, 7:30 P.M., Bible study, praying and talks by any and all of the brethren present (this meeting is for the brethren only); Tuesdays, 7:30 P.M., studies in the life of Christ; Wednesdays, 7:30 P.M., prayer meeting; Thursdays, 7:30 P.M., study of the Bible by topics; Saturdays, 3 P.M., Bible class for children—simple Bible stories for the little ones, and more advanced studies for the older ones. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, from 10 to 11 A.M., they also have studies in English; from 11 to 12 A.M., studies in the New Testament. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 2 to 4 P.M., the Old Testament is studied. Once a month the church meets to talk over the Lord's business, and once a month to report the finding of strangers, poor, etc. They have divided the ward into thirty sections, and certain members work in certain parts, so as to go over all the ground; it is "order." Every first Lord's day in the month is "missionary day." They have sent as high as $75 at one time to the missionary in the foreign field. One of their number is now laboring as a missionary in a destitute part of the State of New York, and two others have signified their willingness to go to Japan, one of whom is already studying the language to that end. The church has just completed a neat cottage (at a cost of $350) of four rooms, for widows and orphans, the same being now occupied by four widows and one orphan. Brother Klingman has a family of seven—five children—yet he has been well supplied for the last three years and continues to be, though not on a stipulated salary.

There is no sort of organization whatever connected with this work, save the church, "the church at work." They are able to do all they are doing and are contemplating more, simply as members of the body; they are fraternally connected with all other churches of Christ, but have no organic connection with any other body whatsoever; they are able under Christ as their Head to do everything God wants them to do, and be everything God wants them to be, with no necessity for becoming affiliated with any organization whatever outside of themselves, and this they were also able to do when only twenty-three strong.

Here is a practical illustration that a church, however few, can serve God for itself, independent of all other organizations or combinations of whatever kind. Last year the church gave $1,275.60 for various kinds of Christian work. They held no church fairs, cooked no suppers, nor went on any Sunday school picnics to raise this money. Upon the first day of the week each laid by in store.

While this is a better showing than most churches, it is not high-water mark. The brethren are not satisfied, they expect to grow more this year than last year. What they are doing any church can do. But think of it! Suppose all the churches were to wake up like this; it would not be long till all the nations would hear. It will take something like this before they can all hear. At the present rate heathens are born much faster than Christians. Let us work while it is day.
 J. M. M'CALEB.

Have You Eaten Too Much? Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

If your dinner distresses you, a few drops in half a glass of water give quick relief.

Salvation from Sin.

1. The love of sin is destroyed by faith.
 2. The practice of sin, by repentance.
 3. The state of sin, by baptism. (Rom. 6: 3, 4.)
 4. The guilt of sin, by pardon.
 5. The consequences, by the resurrection from the dead.
- St. Louis, Mo. J. W. ATKISSON.

"Deeds Are Fruits,"

Words are but leaves." It is not what we say, but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story. The many wonderful cures effected by this medicine are the fruits by which it should be judged. These prove it to be the great, unequalled remedy for dyspepsia, rheumatism, scrofula, salt rheum, catarrh, and all other ailments due to impure or impoverished blood.

HOOD'S PILLS are nonirritating, mild, effective.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.
 RAPHAEL CO.
 Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

OVERWORK WEAKENS YOUR KIDNEYS. Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

The Prompt Way to Cure Yourself when Symptoms Show that Your Kidneys are out of Order.

The way to be well is to pay attention to your kidneys.

They are the most important organs of the body—the blood filters.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys strain or filter out the impurities in the blood; that is their work.

Purifying your blood is not a question of taking a laxative or physic.

Does your blood run through your bowels?

What the bowel cleaner does is to throw out the poisons confined in your bowels ready for absorption into your blood; but the poisons which are already in your blood, causing your present sickness, it leaves there.

There is no other way of purifying your blood except by means of your kidneys.

That is why bowel cleaners fail to do their work; they fail to help the kidneys.

When you are sick, then—no matter what you think the name of your disease is—the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney Remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Dr. Kilmer, the eminent physician and specialist, has attained a far-famed reputation through the discovery and marvelous success of Swamp-Root in purifying the blood, and thereby curing chronic and dangerous diseases, caused by sick kidneys, of which some of the symptoms are given below.

Pain or dull ache in back or head, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, dizziness, irregular heart, sleeplessness, sallow complexion, dropsy, irritability, loss of ambition; obliged to pass water often during the day, and to get up many times at night; and all forms of kidney, bladder, and uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—50 cents and $1. Remember the name—Swamp-Root—and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, every reader of the Gospel Advocate will be sent free, by mail, prepaid, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book about Health, Diet, and Disease as Related to Your Kidneys. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a sample bottle and to kindly mention the Gospel Advocate when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. OER, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.
 CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK.
 311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, $1,000,000.00.
 W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.
 GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
 Nashville, Tenn.

MAKE MONEY!
 By Writing Stories.
 For particulars, address
THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
 Atlanta, Georgia.

"The Sin"—What is It?

"Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." (Heb. 12: 1, 2.)

What is "the sin" to be laid aside? Paul here admonishes that every weight, whatsoever it may be, be laid aside; but he designates a certain sin—"the sin which doth so easily beset us"—that is to be laid aside. What is "the sin?"

"Wherefore" indicates, or rather implies, that something has gone before, for which reason Paul admonishes that "the sin" be laid aside. What has gone before that would indicate in any way that a certain sin should be laid aside?

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." (Heb. 1: 1, 2.)

Here Paul begins to contrast the two covenants. In the Jewish days, God spoke to man—the fathers—by the prophets; but in these last days, in the Christian dispensation, he speaks to man through Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, the greatest prophet that ever lived. Throughout the entire first chapter of this Epistle Paul labors to show that Jesus is Lord paramount—"being made so much better than the angels," "in the express image of his [God's] person." "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: they shall perish; but thou remainest." Prophet after prophet was born, filled his mission, and passed away; but Jesus Christ, through whom God speaks to man to-day, has lived from the beginning and will live throughout eternity. "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," a wonderful Mediator, who shall survive the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds!

"Therefore [because God speaks to us through his own Son, who is far superior to all the prophets of the past] we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard [of him], lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" (Heb. 2: 1-3.)

Paul tells us that every transgression under the law, though it was only the violation of the word spoken by the prophets, was punished. Then how shall we escape if we violate the word spoken by the Son of God?

"He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sacrificed, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" (Heb. 10: 28, 29.)

The greater the mediator through whom God speaks to man, the stronger should be man's faith in the word spoken. Jesus is shown to be vastly superior to all other prophets, priests, and kings; and God has confirmed the salvation through him by his own oath. (Heb. 7: 20, 21.) Therefore we should have unwavering faith in his word, and to this end Paul seems to have labored in writing this Epistle. He tells us that it was the "sin of unbelief" that kept nearly all of the children of Israel from entering the promised land. "So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief." (Heb. 3: 19.) They had been promised a home in the land of Canaan; they failed to enjoy it because of unbelief. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." (Heb. 3: 12.) Every child of God is promised a home—not in the land of Canaan, but in the heavenly Canaan. Unbelief will exclude us from this, as it did the children of Israel from their earthly home.

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." (Heb. 4: 1, 2.) "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief." (Heb. 4: 11.) "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast [or have unwavering faith in] our profession." (Heb. 4: 14.)

From chapter 5 to chapter 10, inclusive, Paul sharply contrasts the two covenants, with special reference to the priesthood, showing that Jesus, who is our High Priest, "forever after the order of Melchisedec," is far superior to all other prophets and priests.

Now in our review we have learned (1) that God speaks to us to-day through his own Son, which is ground sufficient for a stronger faith than that of the "fathers" to whom God spoke by the prophets; (2) that every transgression under the law was punished, though it was only the violation of the word spoken by the prophets; (3) that we shall suffer a sorer punishment if we violate the word spoken by the Son of God; (4) that the "sin of unbelief" kept the children of Israel from entering the promised land, and that the same sin will keep us from entering the land above.

Now after showing the results of unbelief, Paul turns to that of faith in God (chapter 11)—giving as examples Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, etc., showing that their acceptable work and worship was all by faith—for "without faith it is impossible to please him." "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." Who are these witnesses? Those who have fallen through unbelief witness, or testify, to us positively that we can never win the race through unbelief; those who have won victories through faith witness, or testify, to us that through faith we can successfully run the race and wear the crown of righteousness which is a reward to the finally faithful. Therefore "let us lay aside every weight, and the sin [sin of unbelief] which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

Hornbeak, Tenn. G. D. SMITH.

No life can be a success without Christ.

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU, YOUR NEIGHBOR, YOUR FRIEND, YOUR RELATIVE, YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO., ATLANTA, GA.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

Table listing prices for Christian Hymns, Voice of Praise, and Words of Truth in Music and Word editions, available in board and cloth formats.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO., 232 N. Market Street, Nashville, Tennessee.

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL LIFE OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

Rev. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D., one of MOODY'S MOST INTIMATE COWORKERS AND NEXT TO HIM THE GREATEST EVANGELIST IN THE WORLD. The book will be replete with personal incident and anecdote, and tells the story of the GREATEST AND MOST USEFUL LIFE of the century—how by his eloquence and power vast assemblies in this country and England were held entranced and thousands of souls were blessed. It is a magnificent opportunity for Agents. TERMS LIBERAL. Send 20c to pay cost of mailing an outfit QUICKLY. JOHN C. WINSTON & CO. 328 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

New England Conservatory of Music. The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1859. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

Remember "Allenroo's Book."

Men who are happy in the storms and scatter rays of sunshine along the dark way are true heroes.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED. CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING, COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Largest Foundry on Earth making CHURCH BELLS & CHIMES & PEALS. Purest copper and tin only. Terms, etc., free. MOSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, Baltimore, Md.

EVOLUTION—PHOTOGRAPHIC AND AUTOGRAPHIC.

R. W. Jennings

1855, age 17 years—Holding position as bookkeeper with the Trion Manufacturing Co., at Trion, Ga., being the commencement of his career as a bookkeeper.

R. W. Jennings

1860, age 22 years—Holding position as head bookkeeper with the wholesale firm of Gardner & Co., Nashville, and receiving a salary of $1,200 per annum.

R. W. Jennings

1866, age 28 years—Junior partner and head of the counting room in the two wholesale firms of Evans, Gardner & Co., New York, and Evans, Fite & Co., Nashville.

R. W. Jennings

1874, age 36 years—Senior partner and head of the firm of the wholesale house of Jennings, Eakin & Co., Nashville.

R. W. Jennings

1884, age 46 years—Retiring from the wholesale business in Nashville and opening up Jennings' Business College in Nashville.

R. W. Jennings

1892, age 54 years—Eight years' experience as a business educator.

R. W. Jennings

1899, age 61 years.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

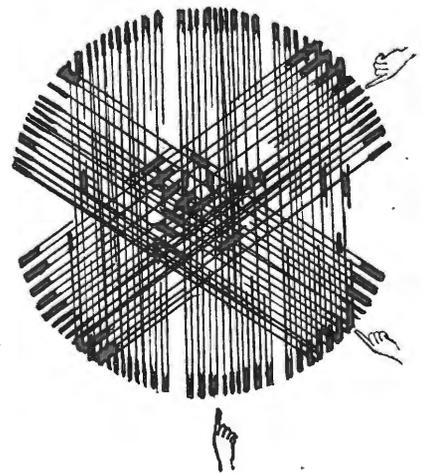

The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Vol. 2, page 130, says:

"R. W. Jennings, the founder and manager of Jennings' Business College, Nashville, was born in Edgefield, S. C., March 19, 1838, where his father and grandfather had been raised. At the age of sixteen he commenced clerking in a retail store, and in 1855 he became bookkeeper for the Trion Manufacturing Co., at Trion, Ga. In January, 1857, he came to Nashville and secured a position as bookkeeper for the wholesale house of Gardner & Co., where he remained until 1861, when he entered the Planters' Bank as bookkeeper. In 1864 he filled an important position with the great house of A. T. Stewart & Co., New York, where he was directed to overhaul and examine into the books of that firm, running back for a period of nineteen years. In 1865 he was teller of the Falls City Tobacco Bank, Louisville, Ky., resigning this in December of that year to accept a partnership in the two firms of Evans, Gardner & Co., New York, and Evans, Fite & Co., Nashville, the latter being the largest wholesale house which has ever been established in Nashville. Withdrawing from these firms in 1872, he was until 1884 the senior partner in the wholesale houses of Jennings, Goodbar & Co., Jennings, Eakin & Co., Jennings, Dismukes & Woolwine, and R. W. Jennings & Co. Thus Mr. Jennings brings to his work as a business educator the ripe experience of thirty years in actual business."

SUMMARY.

- 45 years a business man.
- 44 years a bookkeeper.
- 35 years an expert bookkeeper.
- 30 years an expert on handwriting.
- 15 years a business educator.

To read this, hold up before you, following the directions of the  shut one eye and sight down as you would on a gun barrel, and you will read plainly the name and location of the best school of its kind in the world.

SEE LAST PAGE OF COVER FOR "GOOD POSITIONS AND GOOD SALARIES."

Sunshine:

Uncle Minor's Stories

A book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. Uncle Minor's life was devoted to the young, and everywhere he went the children became attached to him. He thought there was too much reality in life to spend his time in writing fiction, so in this book he confines himself to real incidents and true stories which point the mind to "some virtue to practice or vice to shun." It is an exceedingly appropriate gift for the young. Sent post-paid. 256 pages, 6½ x 9½; bound in cloth.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.00

By V. M. METCALFE
(Uncle Minor.)

Civil Government:

Its Origin, Mission, and Destiny, and the Chris- tian's Relation to It

By D. LIPSCOMB

158 PAGES.

This book is the outgrowth of the author's most matured thoughts on this subject. "I think the book is worth its weight in gold."—A. Wilkinson. "It will be better appreciated, in my opinion, by future generations, as the light of Bible knowledge becomes more general."—J. E. Thompson.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $0.75

GOOD POSITIONS! GOOD SALARIES!!

STRONG LETTERS FROM RECENT GRADUATES.

A STRONG LETTER.

One of Jennings' Students Achieves Great Success in Nashville.

Office of Richardson Bros. & Co., Nashville, Tenn., November 25, 1899.—Mr. R. W. Jennings—Dear Sir: After completing a course in your school in the spring of 1894, I came with this concern as head bookkeeper, and served in that capacity until about two years ago, when I was promoted to the position of credit man. I consider your course thoroughly practical, as it enabled me to take charge of and keep a very large set of books without any additional training or previous experience as a bookkeeper. The system we use is substantially the same as that taught in your school, only differing in a few minor details.

Your long and varied career as a bookkeeper in bank and mercantile houses, together with the fact that the student gets your personal instruction, gives your school a peculiar advantage, one not offered by any other business college in my observation.

H. H. NANCE

Richardson Bros. & Co., as is well known, is one of the largest wholesale shoe houses in the South. Their assistant bookkeeper is also one of Jennings' graduates.

$65.00 PER MONTH.

One of Jennings' Graduates Gets Good Position in Florida.

The following letter explains itself:

Escambia, Fla., November 7, 1899.

Mr. R. W. Jennings: I have secured a position as bookkeeper with the Skinner Manufacturing Company, of this place, on a salary of $65 per month. I have no trouble to keep the books, and I feel sure that without the instructions I received at your school last summer, I could not have procured and filled the position.

I shall labor to perform my duties so as to reflect credit on the grand old institution from which I obtained my practical business knowledge. I wish you much success.

ARTHUR M. M'DAVID.

ANOTHER $65.00 POSITION.

One of Jennings' Graduates Secures Position in New York City.

A letter from W. J. Black, addressed to Prof. R. W. Jennings, says that the former has secured a position as bookkeeper. He says: "I wish to inform you that I was not here more than a day before I secured a position as one of the bookkeepers with the firm of B. Blumenthal & Co., of New York, one of the largest houses of the kind in the United States, and with a good prospect for a still further raise in the near future. I owe this all to your good teaching. I get $65 per month."

FIVE WITH ONE FIRM.

That is the Number of Jennings' Graduates at D. Loveman & Co.'s.

As an evidence of the popularity of Jennings' College and the effectiveness of the course given to graduates of that school, the extensive and well-known firm of D. Loveman & Co., of this city, has the following employees, all graduates of that school:

Mrs. Minnie Gosling, head bookkeeper.
W. R. King, assistant bookkeeper.
Henry Teitlebaum, partner and buyer.
Alex. Teitlebaum, salesman.
Henry Loveman, salesman.

Young people of either sex desiring employment would do well to make a note of this.—Nashville Banner.

TWO POSITIONS IN A BANK.

Jennings' Graduates Get Good Places, One as Cashier and One as Bookkeeper.

A letter from Mason Sanders says: "I am getting along very nicely with my position as bookkeeper for Waverly Bank & Trust Company (at Waverly, Tenn.). I find no trouble to keep the bank's books. I am well pleased with the course you gave me. Mr. Hugh Arnold, another one of your graduates, is our cashier." All this is the result of the training to be had at this popular school.

HEAD BOOKKEEPER IN BANK.

A Mississippi Bank Gives Good Position to a Jennings Graduate.

A. N. Halliday writes from Okolona, Miss., as follows: "I am now head bookkeeper for the Merchants' & Farmers' Bank, of this place. I am well pleased and have a good position, and I am sure my success is due to the practical training I received at Jennings' Business College." This school has no vacation and no classes, every pupil getting individual instruction.

BISHOP McTYEIRE'S ADVICE.

It was said of him that "he was a leader of men and a lover of children" and that he never gave an opinion without careful thought. While President of Vanderbilt University, he said to a mother whose son wanted a business position: "Send him to Jennings' Business College; a certificate from R. W. Jennings to your son, recommending him for a position, will be of more benefit to him than any other influence he could have."

A BIG COUNTING ROOM.

It is in Nashville Where Bookkeepers Are Employed by the Dozen.

The counting room of the Cumberland Telephone Company in this city is by odds the largest in the city, if not in the South. It is located on the first floor of their building, running back to the rear, besides two additional offices on the second floor, where are employed more than a dozen bookkeepers and assistants. Ten of this number came to the company from Jennings' Business College, where they had been instructed by that veteran business educator, R. W. Jennings, and where two or three months' training did the work. The college has no vacation and no classes, every pupil getting individual instruction.—Nashville American.

A SON OF GEN. CHEATHAM.

He Gets a Good Position After Attending Jennings' Business College.

R. W. Jennings, President of Jennings' Business College—Dear Sir: I take pleasure in stating that I attended Jennings' Business College, and found it in all respects what it is claimed to be, a school of thorough instruction and perfectly equipped to prepare a young man for a business life. From the responsible positions held in this city by its graduates, I know this school to stand in the highest favor with Nashville business men. The best advice I can give to a young man entering business is to take a course under Prof. Jennings.

PATTON R. CHEATHAM.

(Mr. Cheatham is a son of the late Gen. Frank Cheatham, a hero of two wars. The position of Secretary for the Nashville Board of Underwriters, was given young Cheatham as soon as he left Jennings' College.)

QUICK PROMOTION.

A Jennings Graduate Promoted to Head Bookkeeper of Hardware House.

H. G. Lipscomb & Co., Wholesale Hardware, Nashville, Tenn., November 22, 1899.—Prof. R. W. Jennings, City—Dear Sir: Knowing that you are always interested in your old students, I would state the day I left your college I entered the office of the wholesale hardware firm of H. G. Lipscomb & Co., as an assistant bookkeeper; later was promoted, and am now head bookkeeper and credit man. I attribute my success to your practical instructions, and heartily recommend the same to any one desiring a practical knowledge of bookkeeping. Wishing you continued success, I am, Yourstruly, H. G. SENSING.

IN A WEST TENNESSEE BANK.

A Bank at Dyer, Tenn., Gives Position to a Jennings Graduate.

W. T. Becton, who holds a position in the Farmers' Bank at Dyer, Tenn., writes: "I am getting along satisfactorily as bookkeeper in this bank. I had the management of the bank myself for some days, the cashier being absent. I am doing all I can for your school."

POSITION IN MISSISSIPPI.

A Jennings Graduate Gets Good Position with a Lumber Company in Mississippi.

W. R. McGowan writes from Sanford, Miss., as follows to R. W. Jennings: "Through your excellent business training I am holding the position of manager at Eastabuchiel Lumber Company at this place, and am getting a good salary."

This school teaches not only how to keep books, but gives instruction about business generally, so that its graduates can fill such positions as they may be best suited to.

9 YEARS A HEAD BOOKKEEPER.

Another Jennings Graduate Filling a Position of Responsibility and Trust.

Nashville, November 23, 1899.—Prof. R. W. Jennings, City—My Dear Sir: I completed a course at your school more than ten years ago, and have been idle only two weeks since that time, and for over nine years have been head bookkeeper for W. C. Collier and Collier Grocery Company, and do not hesitate to say that it is all due to the excellent business training received at your hands. I think yours the best institution of the kind in the South, and to the rising generation would say, secure a certificate from Prof. R. W. Jennings if you would be well equipped for a business career. Very truly yours,

LEWIS M. HITT.

A BRILLIANT SUCCESS.

H. Blair Smith, who has been filling the position of cashier of the Cumberland Telephone Company, has been elected by that company to the office of Auditor. He says he owes this primarily to the business training he got at Jennings' Business College, he having procured a position with this company immediately upon his graduation from that noted school. Young men who contemplate a business life should make a note of this, for if you have the metal in you, or if it can be put in you by this school, you will succeed.—Nashville Banner.

For Circulars from this School, Address R. W. JENNINGS, Nashville, Tennessee.

PAMPHLETS

Acts of the Apostles, by E. G. Sewell.....	$ 10
Woman's Work in the Church, by G. G. Taylor.....	10
The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by E. A. Elam.....	10

The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by O. A. Carr.....	10
Prayer, by H. Pharris.....	10
Methods of Work, by James E. Scobey....	10
Out of Darkness into Light, by Z. T. Winfree.....	5
Truth Seeking, by D. Lipscomb.....	10

Christian Unity, by D. Lipscomb.....	10
Proper Division of the Word of God, by E. G. Sewell.....	10

Gospel Advocate Pub. Co.

232 N. Market St., NASHVILLE, TENN.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 5.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, FEBRUARY 1, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Paul's Last Words.....	67
The Everlasting Kingdom.....	67
Queries.....	68
Go, Preach the Gospel.....	68
Miscellany.....	69
The Church Supplanted. No. 2.....	70
The Apostle's Teaching.....	70
Home Reading.....	71
Union of Christians.....	72
The Church at Sardis.....	72
Brother McCaleb's Report for December and Summary for the Year.....	74
Mary Hall.....	74
Read Carefully.....	75
General News.....	76
Church News.....	77
Obituaries.....	77
Field Findings.....	78
Boaz-Thomas Debate.....	79
Kansas Notes.....	79
When I Die.....	79

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The following communication dodges the issue:

"TESTS OF FELLOWSHIP.

"To the First-page Editor of the Gospel Advocate—Greeting: My brother, you have in time past said a great many good things; for instance: 'Any church that does not contain all Christians is not the church of God.' This is unquestionably true, and should prove to all denominational churches that they are simply human parties, and as organizations do not constitute any part of the church of God. The fact that the book of Revelation foretells that God's church, under the symbol of a woman, would be driven into a state called 'the wilderness,' and would remain in that state for twelve hundred and sixty years, called 'days' in symbolic language, proves the same thing; since the denominations came into being as organizations before the time for the return of the church of God out of the wilderness. I often make this point in preaching, and no denominational preacher has ever even attempted to call this teaching in question. That the Christian brethren of to-day as a people constitute the church of God as an organization is easily proved from the book of Revelation, since no other organization under the sun appeared at the right time with all the characteristics of apostolic congregations. It is equally true that every individual wearing a worldly denominational name, and thereby connected with religious confusion or Babylon, is a Christian and a member of the church of God at large, if he or she has truly obeyed from the heart that form or system of doctrine or teaching which the Roman Christians had obeyed as taught by Paul. I find the editors of the Gospel Advocate very sound upon all doctrines that the Bible teaches, but exceedingly absurd on some things of expediency, about which God has left his followers free to use their judgment; in fact, the course of the Advocate has been so contrary to sound judgment along this line that many congregations under the influence of the Advocate are upon the verge of making a man's private opinions about the way of doing certain acts of worship tests of Christian fellowship. The church at Florence, Ala., is an instance. You are aware, my dear Brother Srygley, that a few years ago Brother E. G. Sewell and I had a controversy along this line, and that I so completely drove him to the wall that he claimed the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company was getting out the Advocate purely as a matter of business. To this position I demurred, and showed he was so hard pressed as to slander himself and his associates in attempting to defend himself against my charge of inconsistency. I still make the charge of inconsistency against the Advocate. The Gospel Advocate Publishing Company is an association or society, the primary object of which is to teach the truth, and a secondary object is to make a living in this service of God. I dare you and every editor of the Advocate to announce that you are getting out a religious paper and have as your primary object the making of money. You have too much good sense to slander yourselves in this manner, since you know you would merit the contempt of all true Christians. Wherefore it unquestionably follows that the course of the Advocate has been and still is inconsistent; for the preachers of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company have formed an association or society or combination to sound out the gospel truth through a religious paper, but the Advocate calls in question the right of all other preachers and servants of God to form any other association, society, or combination to act together as God's servants in carrying forward the teachings of the Bible. I want to say to you, Brother Srygley, in all candor, that if you and your associates were as unsound on all other questions as you are upon the manner of doing things in which the manner is not designated in the Bible, you would certainly land in the lunatic asylum, or at least would be fit subjects. If you are so blind that you cannot see your inconsistency, as Brothers Sewell and Lipscomb are evidently blind, as was made apparent in their discussions with me a few years ago, then you are to be placed in that class designated by Christ when he said, "Neither cast ye your pearls before swine," evidently meaning that you cast not pearls of truth before men who are so blinded with prejudice, or the want of general information, that they cannot perceive them, and would pass them unnoticed, the same as hogs would do should we cast genuine pearls before them instead of Indian corn or mast. Now, my brother, you remember I tried to get you to take up your side of this question of Christian liberty a few years ago, after I had driven Sewell and Lipscomb to the wall, and you wrote me that Lipscomb and he was not through with me; but you now see he had enough. I am ready to give you your dose of medicine. I do not belong to any religious society under the sun, but I claim I have the right to associate myself with any of God's servants who may wish to join me in any good work, such as building church houses, preaching the gospel, publishing a religious paper, or in any other work tending to carry forward the teaching of the Bible, and that such action is not denominational action, your statement in the last issue of the Advocate to the contrary, notwithstanding. You are doing denominational work, are you, in publishing the Gospel Advocate? Before you make such charges against brethren you had better get out of your glass house. Now come on with your affirmation that any servants of God—preachers or not preachers—who may associate themselves together to sound out the teaching of the Bible—either by sustaining preachers, building church houses, publishing religious papers, or books—are guilty of denominationalism, and I will certainly make you sorry you threw down your gauntlet in your last issue; and I will do it all for the sake of the right. Do not act a coward, as did Lipscomb, and refuse to publish. If you think you are right, stand your ground.

JO. A. CUNNINGHAM,

"One of the elders of the church at Savannah, Tenn., where he may be addressed; or 850 Sixth street, Louisville, Ky."

Of course I think I am right, or I would not have said what I did, and I shall stand my ground till I see some scriptural reason to evacuate.

Another brother quotes all the paragraph referred to by Brother Cunningham and comments as follows: "We do not suppose that any one will be likely to deny this proposition, but to us a difficulty presents itself. To our understanding the position taken by the Gospel Advocate is suicidal. The meaning of 'denominationalism,' as defined by Webster, is "a denominational or class spirit or policy; devotion to the interests of a sect or denomination." 'Denomination,' 'class,' and 'sect' have the same import when applied to religious parties. We are constrained to adopt the established meaning of words; so if we establish the above proposition, what have we gained? Those who advocate organized effort can, with equally good logic, affirm, 'What is commonly called unorganized effort among Christians is denominationalism;' and this would place us in as serious dilemma as our proposition placed them. Those who oppose organized effort are a denomination, a party, a class, or a sect in as full sense as are the others. I see no escape from this conclusion. A denomination, party, class, or sect can exist without formal organization as well as with it. Please publish this.

"Moss, Tenn.

J. W. M'D. MOORE."

It will be seen that Brother Cunningham has denied what this brother says "we do not suppose that any one will be likely to deny." I might leave these brethren to answer each other, as one of them affirms and the other one denies that organized effort is denominational organization; but since the question is of general interest and more than ordinary importance, it will not be improper to submit a few thoughts upon it. "Unorganized effort" is not denominationalism; it is New Testament Christianity. There cannot be a denomination without denominational organization. Christians who preach and practice all that is in the New Testament and nothing else cannot be a party, a class, or a sect. It takes party organization to make "a party, a class, or a sect." Without denominational organization they are nothing but Christians, and they belong to nothing but the church, which is the body of Christ, and of which every Christian is a member. They cannot belong to anything but the church if there is nothing but the church to belong to, and there can be nothing but the church to belong to if there is no organization except that which is in the New Testament. It is impossible to have organization that is not in the New Testament without constituting something that is not in the New Testament. The thing thus constituted is a denomination, because it is "a party, a class, or a sect," and all who belong to it or work in it are partisans and members of the denomination. Can a man be a Christian and not belong to a denomination? If so, how can he do it? If the thing cannot be done, why oppose denominationalism? If it can be done at all, the only way to do it is to belong to everything that is in the New Testament and nothing else, and preach and practice all that is in the New Testament and nothing else. A man can belong to all that is in the New Testament and preach and practice all the New Testament teaches, and yet not belong to any denomination. I know this can be done, because Christians did it in New Testament times. There is no denomination in the New Testament for any Christian to belong to; nothing but the church, which is the body of Christ, and of which every Christian is a member.

What I affirmed is that organized effort among the Disciples is denominational organization; it is denominational organization because it is the organization of a denomination. Brother Cunningham says it "is unquestionably true that any church that does not contain all Christians is not the church of God." The Disciples do not "contain all Christians," and it is unquestionably true, therefore, that they are "not the church of God." What are they? They are a religious party, organized and denominated—named—to distinguish them from other religious parties? What is a religious denomination? It is a religious party, organized and denominated—named—to distinguish it from other religious parties. The brotherhood of Disciples is a distinct and compactly organized religious party which does not include all Christians; it has everything in the way of general denominational organization that any other denomination has; and it has these things, not because they are in the New Testament—for everybody admits they are not there—but because other denominations have them and human judgment approves them. They are all copied from other denominations or suggested by human wisdom; not one of them is taken from the New Testament. This network of general organization, commonly called “organized effort,” is the skeleton which holds the party together. It is denominational organization because it is the framework of the denomination; it centralizes, solidifies, and unitizes what Brother Tyler calls “the communicants and congregations” of the Disciples, and makes them a denomination separate and distinct from all other Christians and denominations. There is no name in the New Testament for such a religious party, because there is no such party there. The only way to name it or denominate it is to either use an unscriptural word or a scriptural word in an unscriptural sense. The point I make is not against the right of Christians to “associate themselves together to sound out the teaching of the Bible, either by sustaining preachers, building church houses, publishing religious papers, or books,” as Brother Cunningham puts it. What I deny is the right of Christians to organize a denomination, as the Disciples have done. In the editorial paragraph which called out Brother Cunningham’s article I distinctly declined to discuss these specific issues and aimed my point at the denominational organization. Organized effort will not allow Christians to do what Brother Cunningham says they have a right to do. How can Christians “associate themselves together” to build meetinghouses, for instance, under organized effort among the Disciples? There is a meetinghouse building board which proposes to take charge of all the money the whole denomination can be induced to give for that purpose and build all the meetinghouses. The right of Christians to “associate themselves together” to build meetinghouses is exactly what I am contending for against organized effort. To the extent organized effort prevails this right is forfeited and the denominational board monopolizes the business. How can Christians “associate themselves together” to support preachers under organized effort among the Disciples or anywhere else? The whole preacher-supporting business at home and abroad is monopolized by boards which propose to control all the money the whole denomination can be induced to give and manage all the preachers the money will support. The right of Christians to associate themselves together in local congregations, according to the New Testament, to support preachers and do everything else in the way of religious work and worship, is exactly what I am contending against organized effort for. The only way for Christians to have this right is to keep out of organized effort and manage their own business. To the extent organized effort prevails Christians forfeit this right. The Disciples have done more than Brother Cunningham tries to defend. All he claims is that Christians have a right to “associate themselves together” to sustain preachers, publish papers, build houses, and print books. The Disciples have done more than this; they have associated themselves together to constitute a denomination, and the denomination has deprived Christians of the right to associate themselves together to do anything by taking control of all the money Christians can be induced to give and managing everything Christians can be persuaded to do. The Disciples are a religious denomination, compact and complete; simply that, and nothing more. Brother Cunningham talks about “the Christian brethren of to-day as a people.” Why does he not say “the Christian brethren of to-day as a denomination?” That is the way to talk the English language. He says they “constitute the church of God as an organization.” There is no such thing as “the church of God as an organization.” The Christian brethren of to-day, or any other brethren of to-day or any other day, cannot constitute anything but a denomination “as an organization.” The fact that the Christian brethren of to-day exist “as an organization” is the proof that they are a denomination; it is also the proof that organized effort among them is denominational organization. There is no religious organization but local congregations and denominational organization. Party organization—or general organization of a part of the people of God—is denominational organization. The church of God is not a general organization, but a spiritual body; Christ is head over it; every Christian is a member of it; and there is no organization in it but local congregations. How does Brother Cunningham know that God grants Christians liberty, to form other organizations than local congregations for religious work and worship? Where did he learn that God grants any such liberty? If God grants them liberty to form other organizations than local congregations, how many and what sort of such organizations does he grant them liberty to form? Is there no limit to Christian liberty in this line? If there is a limit, who knows where the limit is, and how does he know where it is? If there is no limit, why is not the organization of Methodism as scriptural as organized effort among the Disciples? All denominational organizations rest upon exactly the same assumption—viz., the right of Christians to form such organizations as their judgment approves. If any of them are right, why are the others wrong?

Brother Cunningham thinks the Gospel Advocate and the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company are exactly like organized effort. Suppose they are; what then? Does that prove that organized effort is scriptural? Hardly; it only proves that the Gospel Advocate and the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company are unscriptural. Why does he not try to show that organized effort is exactly like something in the New Testament? Is it because he knows there is nothing like it in the New Testament? More than likely. Suppose he convicts Lipscomb and Sewell of inconsistency, and drives them to the wall; then what? They may be inconsistent and driven to the wall and still organized effort may be unscriptural. The fact that a man who opposes a thing is inconsistent does not prove that the thing is scriptural. A man who really wants to know and to practice exactly what is in the New Testament and nothing else need not waste time trying to show that other men are inconsistent and driven to the wall. Brother Cunningham says Brother Sewell “claimed that the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company were getting out the Advocate purely as a matter of business,” because he “so completely drove him to the wall.” If I catch the meaning of this, it is that Brother Sewell made a statement that is not true because he was driven to the wall. I think Brother Cunningham is wrong for two reasons: (1) I do not believe he drove Sewell to the wall; and (2) I do not believe Sewell would have tried to get away from the wall that way. How does Brother Cunningham know what the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company is getting out the Advocate for? I believe the men who are getting it out know better than Brother Cunningham the basis on which they are operating. Brother Sewell is one of them; and if he said they are doing it “as a matter of business,” I believe he told the truth. I agree with Brother Cunningham that Christians ought not to get out a religious paper and have as their “primary object the making of money.” The fact that they are doing it “as a matter of business” does not prove, however, that they have as their “primary object the making of money.” Cannot Christians do a thing “purely as a matter of business” and still not have as their “primary object the making of money?” Brother Cunningham says Christians who get out a paper ought to have as their “primary object to teach the truth, and a secondary object to make a living in this service of God.” That is exactly what every Christian ought to do in everything he undertakes “as a matter of business.” Where did Brother Cunningham learn that any Christian is authorized to do anything as a matter of business and have as his “primary object the making of money?” Why does this doctrine apply to Christians who get out a paper and do a publishing business any more than to Christians who follow any other occupation or engage in any other business? The making of money as a primary object is not one of the Christian graces. The love of money is the root of all evil, no matter what business it is in. I recognize that it has more power for evil in preachers and religious publishers than perhaps anywhere else, because of far-reaching consequences and demoralizing tendencies in those places. For this reason I am frank to say I do not believe any combinations are scriptural which create chances to make very much money, either preaching or publishing religious papers, because that would attract money lovers to become preachers and religious publishers for the hope of gain. I believe organized effort does this, and if the time ever comes when the Gospel Advocate and the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company are owned and controlled by men who have for their “primary object the making of money,” my candid opinion is that they will be run in the interest of organized effort or something else the New Testament does not teach that will pay better. However, to keep Brother Cunningham from trying to show my inconsistency and drive me to the wall, I will explain that I have not now and I have never had one cent of financial interest in the Gospel Advocate, the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, or in any of the business or publications of that company. If he is correct in the opinion that these things rest on exactly the same basis as organized effort, I will borrow his expression to say it is “unquestionably true” that the whole thing is unscriptural and wrong. So far as I am concerned, the man who defends them must show that they differ from organized effort. If he discusses the question of organized effort with me, he must show that it is scriptural, not because it is just like the Gospel Advocate and the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, but because the New Testament teaches it.

Mother.

Young people, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, and notice the feeling of even a touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand. Make much of it while yet you have the most precious of all good gifts—a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes; the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life you may have friends—fond, dear friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and tenderness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world for the deep, sweet security I felt when of an evening, resting in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender, untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep; never her kiss of peace at night.

Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the cold churchyard, yet still her voice whispers from the grave, and her eye watches over me as I visit spots long since hallowed by her memory.—Lord Macaulay.

Our Contributors.

Paul's Last Words.

The second letter of Paul to Timothy is thought to be the last authentic communication of that apostle to be found on earth. It contains these words: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept my faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." A few remarks upon these words and the triumphant spirit they breathe will be, it is hoped, a fitting close to this series concerning this eminent saint.

To understand and better appreciate these remarkable words, a study of the connection in which they are found will be necessary.

The letter is to a young preacher, who had been, with the concurrence of the brethren in Christ where he was reared, chosen to the ministry of the word. He was a convert of the apostle's, yet the character he sustained among the brethren is mentioned in connection with his becoming a companion of Paul in preaching the gospel. (Acts 16: 1, 2.) Hands were laid upon him by the apostle, as well as by the presbytery or eldership. Paul calls him his own son in the faith. (1 Tim. 1: 2.) He had learned from Paul's teaching the divine revelation of the gospel which had been committed to his trust; he had been an eye-witness of Paul's afflictions, and had fully known his doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience.

This personal charge to Timothy properly begins at verse 14 of 2 Tim. 3, in which he says: "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." He had learned these things from Paul, who is now to give him his dying charge. In this connection the apostle's mind reverts to the childhood training Timothy had received. His mother, Eunice, and grandmother, Lois, doubtless are referred to here; for the same faith dwelt in them as in Timothy. (2 Tim. 1: 5.) It was "first" in his grandmother. This is no reference to a natural hereditament destructive of personal faith upon the part of Timothy, but a favorable providential circumstance of which Timothy had taken advantage. It is in itself always a goodly heritage. These good women had taught the Scriptures in childhood. These Scriptures were doubtless the old Scriptures; they made wise unto salvation because they led to faith in Christ. The mention of the Old Testament Scriptures seems to have led the apostle to refer to "all" the sacred writings in general; hence he used these words: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God." He might have used words to mean the Old Testament only, as in verse 15; but these words, "all scripture," were evidently designed to cover all that class of writings, whether they be found in the Old Testament or the New Testament. This very letter Paul was writing to Timothy was included in this mention of "all scripture." This is clearly proven by the fact that Peter calls all Paul's Epistles "scriptures," meaning, thereby, sacred writings. (2 Pet. 3: 15, 16.) The Scriptures being completed would make the man of God perfect and thoroughly furnish him unto all good works.

These closing words of 2 Tim. 3 should be studied in close connection with the beginning of chapter 4. The reader is aware of the fact that the division of these scriptures into chapters and verses was no part of the work of the inspired writers. Chapter 4 begins: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word." Reading it thus in close connection with chapter 3, it is easy to see that "the word" Timothy was to preach was the "all scripture" given by inspiration of God mentioned just before. The importance of preaching the word is impressed by reference to the fact that the time would come when they would not endure sound doctrine, but would heap to themselves teachers who, to please them, would turn from the truth unto fables. Hence Timothy is admonished to faithfulness in doing the work of an evangelist. There seems, too, to be an intimation that in some measure he should be stirred up to the work, in view of the fact that Paul's work was over. He was ready to be offered. This, in brief, gives us the connection of Paul's charge to Timothy.

He is pleased to call death his "departure." There is nothing gloomy or that forebodes evil in this mention. It was to leave this world to go to another; it was to join the companionship of more friends than he knew on earth; it was to be with them under better circumstances, freed from all the corroding cares of earth; above all, it was to be with Christ, which was far better.

He says: "I have fought a good fight." He was conscious of a constant conflict, but it was a "good fight." It had been a battle for souls—his own and all who would hear him; it had been for the honor of the name of Christ. These words have in them a ring of triumph; they are satisfied with results.

"I have finished my course." These words sound like those of a strong racer who has arrived in victory at the goal. They, too, are satisfactory, and echo the shout of a triumphant contestant.

"I have kept the faith." This shows pureness in teaching; this shows avoidance of all departures from the simplicity of the gospel; this shows strict adherence to the gospel which had been committed to his trust. This spiritual athlete is now ready to be rewarded, this triumphant competitor is now ready to be crowned.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown." To talk of crowns suggests royalty. Paul is one of the kings to be crowned. But there is no selfishness in this ambition, for here is a fellowship of royalty. "Not to me only"—O, no!—"but unto all them also that love his appearing." These are glowing words, they are triumphant words. This is, indeed, the shout of a real conqueror, who has accomplished all through Christ, "who always causeth us to triumph." It sounds like the masterful cry of a hero who has fought a thousand victorious battles and has come to the last greatest conflict of his life and is again master of the field, with his last foe fallen.

There are two views here. One is looking backward from the point already attained. The backward view is indeed conflict and suffering, but it has been a success. The forward view is glorious in the extreme. No tongue can describe it.

It would seem to be an insult to intimate that the student of this wonderful life would not see anything to admire. It is hopeful as it is thrilling, it is true as the gospel, it is lasting as eternity.

This subject calls to mind the precious old hymn so frequently used by Jesse E. Sewell, which the writer has often heard him read, repeat, and sing:

Rise, O my soul, pursue the path
By ancient heroes trod;
Ambitious view those holy men
Who lived and walked with God.

Though dead, they speak in reason's ear,
And in example live;
Their faith and hope and mighty deeds
Still fresh instruction give.

G. LIPSCOMB.

The Everlasting Kingdom.

"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." (Dan. 2: 44.)

From this scripture it is generally understood that the kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up refers to the establishment of the church in the days of Cæsar. I can find no well-defined application of things which denotes its fulfillment then, and for the following reasons I beg to dissent from the conclusions of very many wise and scholarly men who have placed the fulfillment of this scripture at Pentecost, A.D. 33, or thereabouts: (1) These kings (the four mentioned by Daniel) were not contemporaneous, and Daniel says, "In the days of these kings," meaning, doubtless, in the days of the reign of a plurality of kings referred to in his interpretation of the dream; (2) the kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up was to break in pieces and consume "all these" kingdoms; (3) the kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up was to fill the whole earth and assume universal rule over the world; and (4) this kingdom was to have no end, but it was to stand forever.

Now I respectfully submit that with these four objections standing against the conclusion that the prophecy refers to the setting up of the church in A.D. 33, there is not a man on earth who can truthfully and properly make such an application. "In the days of these kings" indicates not one king, but a plurality of reigning kings, at the time the God of heaven should set up the everlasting kingdom.

At the commencement of the Christian era the Roman Emperor ruled the world. Three other kings of universal empire are mentioned by Daniel, but their rule was brought down and vested in Augustus Cæsar, whose empire was universal, but was the last of universal empires mentioned by Daniel. This kingdom, Daniel said, should be as the mixture of iron and clay, especially toward its close. The legs of Nebuchadnezzar's image were of iron, indicating great strength; but as it approached the end, the feet and the toes, it was partly iron and partly clay. So the kingdom was to become weak and was to be divided into several kingdoms, a thing which actually occurred when the Roman Empire was at last divided into ten kingdoms.

Daniel says (ve. se 34) that the stone "smote the image upon his feet," clearly indicating that it was to smite the image in its divided state or condition. Now these kings, or their successors, still reign and are not yet scattered to the four winds and destroyed. Daniel said that the kingdom which the God of heaven would set up should "break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms." Has the church done this? Did the church smite the Roman Empire on its feet, near its close, and break it in pieces, and has it attained universal empire over all other kings and kingdoms?

I challenge the world to show one single kingdom over which the church or kingdom of God now reigns supreme. Is there one nation on the globe, one State, or one county, parish, shire, or community where Christ now reigns supreme? The kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up was to fill the whole earth. Now we know this is not yet fulfilled; and if the church, after nearly two thousand years, has not yet subdued one kingdom, when shall it subdue all kingdoms?

Brother Christopher, in his "Remedial System," argues, if I understand him, that it will be done by the gospel, but that it "will probably take myriads of ages to do it." So it will, if the present ratio of increase (?) in favor of Christianity is to be taken as a criterion.

The kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up, as in Daniel's prophecy, was to have no end, but stand forever. Now we know that the present kingdom of Christ on earth shall have an end, for Paul plainly tells us (1 Cor. 15: 24) that this kingdom shall be delivered up to God. Not only so, but Christ himself, the now reigning King, shall give back to the Father his delegated authority (Matt. 18: 18), and he himself become subject to the Father. (1 Cor. 15: 28.) Thus we see this kingdom give place to one which we constantly speak of as the "everlasting kingdom."

In view of what I have now said, I conclude that the God of heaven has not yet set up the everlasting kingdom spoken of by Daniel (2: 44), but that he will do so at the second coming of Christ. The kingdom he shall then set up will fill the whole earth; it will have destroyed all other kingdoms and will bear universal and eternal rule; it will never give place to another; and the time is at hand. We are living in the last period of the Laodicean age of the church. Christ now stands at the door and knocks. He is knocking at the door of the church by all the signs which he said would be apparent at his coming. Let the church take warning, and repent, and be ready for entrance into that everlasting kingdom which the God of heaven is now about to set up.

JOHN T. POE.

Fling wide the portals of your heart;
Make it a temple set apart
From earthly use for heaven's employ,
Adorned with prayer and love and joy.
So shall your Sovereign enter in,
And new and noble life begin. —Weissel.

The consciousness of clean linen is, in and of itself, a source of moral strength, second only to that of a clean conscience. A well-ironed collar or a fresh glove has carried many a man through an emergency in which a wrinkle or a rip would have defeated him. —E. S. Phelps.

A dead Christ might have been a teacher and a wonder-worker, and be remembered and loved as such; but only a risen and living Christ could be a Savior—the Life and Life Giver—and as such preached to all men.—Edersheim.

Queries.

A brother asks us questions, which we answer as follows: Smith's Bible Dictionary, in its unabridged form, is in four large volumes, making 3,000 closely printed pages. It has been abridged by different persons and is sold in a small volume. More than one abridged edition has been published. They have verbal variations, but, so far as I have seen, substantial agreement. The reference to Cyrenius in the Quarterlies has "A.D. 1," where the dictionary says "B.C. 1." The quotation in reference to Jacob's well is an abridgment of the full statement, but substantially correct. Johnson is dead. His commentary is published by the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo., in two volumes. The price is $2 per volume. I have never examined it carefully, but, so far as I have, I think the comments are generally in harmony with the truth. He has a commentary on John and one on the whole New Testament, in two volumes.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain the parable of the two sons and the vineyard (Matt. 21: 28); also the parable (Matt. 21: 33) of the householder and the vineyard. Who is that "son" mentioned in verse 37? What is that "stone" in verse 42?

Odum, Texas.

(Mrs.) M. W. HUNT.

In the parable (Matt. 21: 28) the first son represented the publicans and the harlots; the second, the chief priests and elders, who were questioning him. (See verse 23.) Then the explanation is given in verse 31: "Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." Read the whole from verse 21 to verse 31. God was the householder, the chief priests and Pharisees were the husbandmen, Jesus Christ was the Son, and Christ was the stone. If they stumbled on it, they would be broken and might recover; if they rejected him and were persistent in rejecting him so the stone fell on them, it would grind them to powder. He seems to address them as classes in these parables, and the class that stumbled at him would be broken; the one that rejected him, so as to bring his wrath upon them, would be destroyed.

Brother Lipscomb: If one of our brethren were sick and were to send for you to come and pray over him and anoint him with oil, would you do it? Brother Kidwill, one of the best men and one who had as much faith as any man I ever knew, told me he had it from reliable authority that a man living in Kentucky, north of him, was sick and given up to die, and he sent for the elders. They did not have much faith, but to satisfy him they prayed over him, anointed him with oil, and stayed with him that night; and the sick man sat with him the next morning at the breakfast table, ate with them, and rode a part of the way with them as they went home that day. If he had faith to be healed, he also had faith to be forgiven of his sins. Please give your views on this subject. T. C. HOLT.

I have frequently given my conviction on this scripture. I do not believe there were ever miraculous and sudden cures effected by this work, or that all who had hands laid on them were healed; if so, those persons would be living yet. All it meant was, by doing this, those who could be healed would be. The anointing with oil was a common curative agent used at the time this was written. I am not satisfied whether the scripture intended to teach that oil should be used as a specific in all cases of disease, or whether it was intended to teach that with whatever curative agents that are used the prayers of the elders and of all Christians should be connected. In the doubt I could not use the oil with much faith, though I believe it is a good curative agent in many cases. I am sure Christians do not rely upon and so engage in prayer for the sick and for the sins of one another as they ought. I do not believe there was healing, as you report, in the sick man. If he did as reported, he was not much sick to begin with.

GO, PREACH THE GOSPEL.

In the last paper on this subject it was learned that Christ and his apostles went about preaching the gospel, healing the sick, and doing great good. Even the life of the blessed Master was one of ceaseless activity. His whole life was as one day filled with noble deeds.

The apostles never hesitated to go when the Lord commanded them. Philip left the city of Samaria and went in obedience to the command of the Lord to the desert way, which led from Jerusalem to Gaza. There he preached Jesus to the eunuch and baptized him in the name of the Lord.

The intention now is to follow Paul in some of his missionary journeys. If the apostles had waited for some board to guarantee them a support before they would go and preach the gospel of Christ, we would feel justified in doing the same way now. But when we find there is no divine warrant for such conduct, and further, when we realize that missionary boards and societies are failures in preaching the gospel to the people, it behooves us to encourage the people to abandon human institutions for doing the work of the Lord and to return to the Bible order of sowing the seed of the kingdom. "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." (Eccles. 7: 29.) But one thing is sure: man with all his inventions can never improve upon the work of the Lord; man may improve upon the work of his fellow-creatures, but not so with God's works. His works are all perfect for their purposes.

The Scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God unto every good work. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) The Scriptures nowhere furnish us with an example of any preacher waiting for a society to guarantee his support, so we must conclude that God's order is not for the preacher to wait, but to go.

All of Paul's missionary journeys began from Antioch, on the river Orontes, the capital of the Roman province of Syria. From here, Barnabas and Saul, having been called by the Holy Spirit and separated for this work, are sent out. "So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus." (Acts 13: 4.) Cyprus was the native place of Barnabas. At Salamis they preached the word of God in the synagogue. After traversing the island in a westerly direction, they reach Paphos, the capital, where they found Bar-jesus, a false prophet. Sergius Paulus, a prudent man, and the deputy of the island, is converted. Elymas, who tried to frustrate the plans of Saul, is struck with blindness. Ever after this Saul is known by the Roman name "Paulus." They now cross to the southern shore of Asia Minor, and land at Perga, the ancient port of Pamphylia. Here John Mark leaves them and returns home, while the apostles make their way across range to Antioch of Pisidia. On the first Sabbath day after his arrival, Paul preaches his first recorded sermon (Acts 13: 16-41) to Jews, and on the next Sabbath to Gentiles, also. (Acts 13: 16-48.) Driven out by the rulers, who were filled with envy, they follow the great road to Iconium. Here they stay a long time and many are added to the Lord. At length a factious mob of Jews and Gentiles set upon them to stone them. Thereupon they fly to Lystra. At this place Paul heals a cripple. The people taking them for the gods, Jupiter and Mercury, are ready to offer sacrifices to them, when Paul prevents them. By arguments, he prepares their minds to receive the Christian faith. Led by the Jews from Antioch and Iconium, they stone Paul and leave him for dead. On his recovery, Paul flies with his companion to Derbe. "And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed. And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia. And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia: and thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled. And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. And there they abode long time with the disciples." (Acts 14: 21-28.)

Thus we have briefly followed Paul throughout his first missionary journey. When it is finished he does not make a report to the "general board," but gathers the church together that had recommended him to the grace of God. At that time there was no "general board." The "general board" is of post-apostolic origin. It is believed and earnestly contended that with the same zeal and earnestness that characterized the apostles, we would get far better results than we do in the kingdom of God to-day. Earnestness, zeal, and consecration should alike characterize all God's people. Every member of the one body is under lasting obligation to be consumingly in earnest in the glorious work of preaching the gospel. Let no member conclude that God will excuse him for hoarding up gold while sinners all around him are perishing for the bread of life. All are expected to present their bodies, living sacrifices, holy, acceptable unto God, which is their reasonable service.

This example of Paul is worth much to every lover of the Lord. Sent forth by the Holy Spirit and recommended by the church at Antioch, he did not stop to consider the sacrifice, the trials that must be endured, and the pleasures that must be foregone, but went earnestly forward in declaring all the counsel of God.

Why should not this example have the same weight with us that any other does? Because we read that "upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them," all consecrated Christians regard it their duty as well as privilege to meet upon the first day of the week to break bread. As we find Christ, the twelve apostles Philip, Paul, and many of the early Christians going to preach the gospel of Christ without waiting for some body of men to guarantee them a support, why should we not esteem it our duty to do likewise to-day? Why should we make a difference between the examples the Lord has given us?

On his second missionary journey, we find that Paul abides at Corinth one year and six months. He worked with Aquila and Priscilla, making tents. Any preacher filled with a desire to save souls will be ready to do this if necessary, but this does not lighten the obligation of the member of the one body at home to contribute to the support of those who are in the field preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. The more earnest preachers in the field, going because the Lord says, "Go," the greater is the necessity for liberal contributions by the members of the church at home. During Paul's second missionary journey, we have the example of the Philippians contributing to his support. "Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity." (Phil. 4: 15, 16.) These scriptures warrant us in drawing the following conclusions:

1. Paul went without his support being guaranteed by a board.
2. He was so in love with the truth that he would preach the gospel, even though he found it necessary to labor with his own hands for a support.
3. It is the duty of the church to contribute to support such earnest, godly preachers as they go forth proclaiming the gospel.
4. The Philippians communicated directly with Paul, for if the funds had been placed in the hands of some general board, he could not have told what church made the contribution and would have given the board credit for it.

The preachers need fruit, the churches need fruit, yea, we all need fruit to abound to our account. God will not excuse us if we fail to do our duty.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

When once faith has taken its stand upon God's word and the name of Jesus, and has yielded itself to the leading of the Spirit to seek God's will and honor alone in its prayer, it need not be discouraged by delay.—Andrew Murray.

Insincerity in man's own heart must make all his enjoyments, all that concerns him, unreal; so that his whole life must seem like a merely dramatic representation.—Hawthorne.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. A. Harding is in a meeting at Paragould, Ark.

Brother E. A. Elam began a meeting at Smithville, Tenn., last Sunday.

Brother L. L. Hollaway's address is changed from Hermit, Ky., to St. Matthews, Ky.

Brother T. B. Larimore's address is changed to 900 South College street, Nashville, Tenn.

Brother A. Elmore, of Covington, Ind., writes that he is in a grand meeting at Petersburg, Pike County, Ind.

Brother T. Q. Martin, of Winchester, Ky., made us a very pleasant call on Saturday. He is here to enter the Nashville Bible School.

Brother F. W. Smith, of Franklin, Tenn., has just closed a splendid meeting at Winchester, Ky. The meeting resulted in thirty-four additions.

A few days ago I received a good, kind letter from J. M. T. White, a brother of long acquaintance; also an expression of fellowship. I answered his letter and addressed him at Chick, Tenn. The letter was returned to me. I want him to know I got his letter.—R. W. Officer, Atoka, I. T.

On January 10, 1900, in this city, Mr. C. H. Parker and Miss Susie Rather were married, the writer saying the ceremony. Mr. Parker is a very prosperous young farmer of Rutherford County; while his bride is an excellent young lady, much beloved by those who know her. Their large host of friends shall ever rejoice in their prosperity.—William L. Logan, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Brother C. M. Pullias and Elder John T. Oakley (Baptist) will engage in a debate one and one-half miles west of Henderson's Cross Roads, in Wilson County, Tenn., beginning on February 6 and lasting four days. Each will for two days affirm that the church to which he belongs is apostolic in doctrine and practice. The place is twelve miles southeast of Lebanon, and all are cordially invited to attend.

A large number of friends were present to witness the marriage of Mr. E. M. Yerwood and Miss Theta Smith, which took place at Dillton, Tenn., on December 13, 1899. The vows were administered by the writer. If their married life continues as it has begun, it will indeed be worth the living. Mr. Yerwood is a Baptist; Mrs. Yerwood is a member of the church of Christ. May prosperity ever attend them.—W. L. Logan, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Married, on December 20, 1899, near Christiana, Tenn., Miss Clara Johns to Mr. Arch. Rucker, the writer performing the ceremony. While the bridegroom is not a member of any church, the bride is a very devout member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Rucker is an excellent young man of much principle. Mrs. Rucker is possessed of much attractiveness and many charms. If the fond hope of many friends is realized, their lives will be far from unpleasant.—W. L. Logan, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

A discussion will take place at Brush Creek, Smith County, Tenn., beginning on Thursday, March 15, and continuing six days, with a mid-Sunday rest. The following propositions will be discussed: (1) "The church of which I, D. S. White, am a member is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." L.

S. White affirms; T. J. Eastes denies. (2) "The church of which I, T. J. Eastes, am a member is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." T. J. Eastes affirms; L. S. White denies. Elder Eastes is a Missionary Baptist and has had large experience in preaching and debating, and stands high among his people.—L. S. White, Gallatin, Tenn.

Brother Officer writes that for the last month he has received more letters of sympathy full of comforting words, and occasionally substantial aid, from the brethren than he has had time to answer. He writes: "My patient, suffering wife is no better. This is the beginning of the twenty-first have been by her bedside. I am impressed more and more with the fact that this world is full of goddness. It is said that gratitude is the heart's recollection. Then my heart will be bubbling over with fond recollections of kindnesses bestowed, words of sympathy and comfort, and expressions of fellowship the rest of life's journey. The doctors give us no encouragement to hope for Lotta's recovery. She, like all the faithful, is resigned." We believe that the Christian people will not allow Brother Officer and his sick wife to lack for anything.

EDITORIAL.

Real joy is a prize worth seeking. Trust no future, however flattering the prospects.

Songs in the night are a sign that the morning will soon dawn.

Our faith blesses not only ourselves, but all connected with us.

Life is none too long for serving God and helping on his kingdom.

Take care of the present; the future is the fruit of the living now.

As soon as we know Christ, we should seek to lead others to him.

Wicked men cloak their opposition to the truth under false pretenses.

Many good persons are slandered by our reporting as facts our inferences.

It is easier to disturb that which is quiet than to quiet that which is disturbed.

There is a "too late" in life when the possibilities of the present are no longer possible.

Bad men oppose the gospel because it interferes with their wicked schemes for making money.

Every Christian has a work of his own to do, and cannot do that work through a preacher.

The man who is not afraid of the displeasure of his fellow-creatures, but of God, is truly good and great.

God sometimes lets his people suffer that they may show forth to the world the triumph of a living faith.

God fulfills his promises in unexpected ways and brings relief from unforeseen sources, like lightning out of a clear sky.

Any burden that we cannot bear is not put upon us by Jehovah. God gives us strength to bear the burdens which he sends upon us.

The preacher who will not preach the plain gospel of Christ because somebody will get offended at it loves the praise of men more than the praise of God.

In a dungeon, at midnight, their backs bleeding and torn, Paul and Silas, praying, sung praises to God. Songs in the night and under such circumstances are a proof of faith.

How sad to think of passing off the stage of action without doing any good! How sad must be the thought if, when one comes to die, no one in the world has been blessed by me!

Glorious will be the thought when we come to die if we realize that numbers can point to our lives and truly say of us: "They were humble instruments in God's hands in leading us into the kingdom of Christ."

Elisha lived after he had passed to the other shore, Abel is still living, and so will it be with every Christian. Your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars in the heavens on a beautifully clear night.

The work of the church is to go among the most hopeless of men and transform them by the gospel and people the world with living children of God, "a great multitude." It is a glorious work to be instrumental in transforming the vile sinner into a consecrated saint.

The only real cause for weeping is sin. Sin brings upon us all the aches, pains, and sad separations of life.

Weep not for her broad lands lost; Weep not for fair hopes crossed; Weep not when limbs wax old; Weep not when friends grow cold;

Weep not that death must part Thine and the best-loved heart, Yet weep—weep all thou can— Weep, weep, because thou art A sin-defiled man.

The afflictions of God's people are blessings in disguise, like bitter medicines to bring back health. They are to purify the heart, to ennoble the character, to lead to a higher and better life by breaking the power of sin. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." God's children should never murmur when afflictions come upon them.

God wants volunteers for his work. They will do the best, the most earnest, and the most conscientious work. Their work will be also more enthusiastic and more effectual. When consecrated men volunteer to go into the field to preach the gospel of Christ, those who remain at home should contribute liberally to their support. The man who contributes nothing for the spread of the gospel of Christ is in poor position to criticize the preacher who will not go until his salary is guaranteed by a board.

There is an Oriental legend of a fountain, into whose waters a good angel infused a mysterious power, such that a new fountain arose and gushed wherever some drops fell on the barren plain, so that a traveler, carrying a few drops of this water, could safely traverse any desert, because he took with him the secret of unfailing springs, and he could impart their water to others.

Beneath the cross those waters rise, and he who finds them there All through the wilderness of life the living stream may bear; And blessings follow in his steps, until where'er he goes The moral wastes begin to bud and blossom as the rose.

Read this slowly, and think. Does my life please God? Am I studying my Bible daily? Am I enjoying my Christian life? Is there any one I cannot forgive? Have I ever won a soul to Christ? How much time do I spend in prayer? Am I trying to bring my friends to Christ? Have I ever had a direct answer to prayer? Is there anything I cannot give up for Christ?

Just where am I making my greatest mistake? How does my life look to those who are not Christians? How many things do I put before my religious duties? Have I ever tried giving one-tenth of my income to the Lord? Is the world being made better, or worse, by my living in it? Am I doing anything I would condemn in others?—Presbyterian Endeavor.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

We will send our pocket price list of publications to any one writing for the same.

Brother George Gowan, in a letter to Brother Brents, from Gunterville, Ala., under date of November 24, writes: "I am in a meeting here now. One of the best men in the town made the confession on Monday night. He was a Presbyterian. When I spoke to him after the service, he said: 'I have been reading Dr. Brents' "Gospel Plan of Salvation," and decided that I could no longer remain a Presbyterian.' This is the story so frequently told me wherever I go. You are preaching the gospel effectively wherever your books have gone. I established the church here ten years ago. I am back to hold them a second meeting. . . . I hope you are well. I remember you gratefully for what you have done for me." "Gospel Plan of Salvation" is indeed a great book and has done, and will yet do, great good in teaching the gospel. The price of the book is $2 by mail, postpaid.

We are glad to be able to report that our premium offers now running in the Gospel Advocate are popular and are bringing us many new subscribers. We know these are liberal offers. Every one who has arrived at the years of accountability should have a Bible of his own, and every family should, if possible, have one or more good religious papers. The young men especially, as a rule, read something; and if they are not provided with literature that is wholesome, they will read that which is not wholesome. What people read, to a very great extent, molds their character. We should be glad to place the Gospel Advocate in every home in the land where there is any one who will read it. We want to increase our list this year, and intend doing what we can to make a good paper. It shall be our endeavor to teach the truth as "it is written." We offer the Gospel Advocate one year and our Art Bible No. 933 for $3. This offer is good to either a new subscriber or an old one renewing, provided the old subscriber pays up all arrearages, if he owes any. Or we will send the Bible as a premium to any one sending us two new subscribers at the regular price of $1.50 each per year. We will send the Gospel Advocate one year, to new subscribers or renewals, and a Nelson's 32mo-text Bible, with flexible covers and gold edges over red, for $2; or we will send the Bible as a premium for one new subscriber. We will send the Gospel Advocate to new subscribers and renewals alike for one year, with the choice of one of the following premiums, for $1.50: Home and Farm one year, a gold-edge Morocco Testament, or our new calendar for 1900. Quite a number have sent us two new subscribers and have received for their trouble in securing the same our Art Bible No. 933. This is a nice Bible—large-type edition, self-pronouncing teachers' combination Bible—and sells at $2.25. We are sure you will be pleased with it. We would be glad if every subscriber to the paper would interest himself enough to send us at least one new subscriber.

"The Church Supplanted." No. 2.

In a former article I quoted from a prominent writer who assigned Sunday schools and societies as a reason why so many had no interest in the church. That many are exceedingly careless no one pretends to deny. In addition to the baneful influence of human societies I want to present a few other reasons which lead to neglect of church worship:

1. The one-man pastor system supplants the true work of the church. That there is in the New Testament such a personage as "the pastor," meaning the preacher, no well-informed Bible student will claim; he is simply a usurper. This fact is so plain that it seems strange that intelligent people will talk about "our pastor," "pastor of the church," and use other such phrases. But how does the pastor's work supplant the divine order? In this way: He does all the teaching, almost all the praying, and takes general management of the whole affair. Hence the elders—"the pastors" that God set in the church—are relegated to the rear, while the pastor attempts to do the work God gave the elders to do. People who thus accept an individual that God says nothing about soon find it easy to do things God does not command. In addition to this, the scriptural officers are soon regarded simply as the preacher's cabinet, while he is supreme as "the pastor in charge." In this system of doing things the talent of the members is not properly developed. They learn to rely upon their pastor for all the teaching, when Paul says this is one qualification of our elder.

2. Again, the system of congregations meeting just once a month, when there is going to be a preacher present. This, too, soon gets the members to thinking nothing can be done unless the preacher is present. It shows what such people attend meeting for—to hear the preacher. The divine rule is to meet to break bread. (Acts 20: 7.) The preaching is another matter. Then this practice soon causes many to conclude that it is useless to go to meeting unless the preacher is to be present. This is all wrong and unscriptural.

3. Another reason for a lack of interest in church worship is a want of knowledge on the part of many who are baptized as to what it requires to live the Christian life. Faith, repentance, confession, and baptism have each been discussed. These have been dwelt on till the sinner understands them. Then he obeys them, but has no idea of what he should do as a Christian. It would be well to put enough stress on Christian duties that alien sinners would count the cost and know what the Christian life meant. I would say, then: Let the items of church worship each be carefully examined, and presented often, so that all would get a correct idea of what the Lord requires. I have failed much in my past experience as a preacher because I did not give enough attention to these things.

How, then, can we get the members of the church to be more zealous, or how can we remedy this state of affairs that now exists? (1) By getting rid of all we have for which there is no Bible warrant; (2) by doing what it tells us to do. We should dispense with all societies, human inventions, and unscriptural people. We can never get the people permanently interested in anything of human origin. No need for societies and the pastor; both are a hindrance.

Then let congregations quit playing at the worship by meeting only once a month. Let this be made an individual matter and pressed upon the hearts of the people. Then, on Lord's day, let us make the worship the all-important thing. If necessary, in order to accomplish this end, better dispense with the Sunday school and sermon. The apostles' doctrine or teaching comes first. We teach in song. All can do this. Then let the elders see to it that the young members, as well as the old, take part in this item of worship. Many a young man would have been saved to the church if he had been pushed right into the service. Give him a passage to read at first. After a while he can add a comment or offer a word of prayer. In other words, let us learn that when we come together on the Lord's day, it is for worship, growth in grace, and not for entertainment. Unfortunately many congregations have gone into the show business. As soon as we put the young men to work, give them something to do in the worship, we will not only get them to see the necessity of the worship, but the necessity of their being there. Let the teaching and reading services be reasonably brief, but work two or three members into taking a part, and never stop till you go all through the male part of the congregation. Then start again. I am sure such a course is scriptural and will be successful in creating interest on the part of many who are useless servants in the Master's vineyard.

I will be glad to hear from others on this subject.
Fayetteville, Ark. JOHN T. HINDS.

The Apostles' Teaching.

The apostles were charged to preach the gospel to every creature on earth (Mark 16: 15, 16); to teach it to all nations; to baptize all who believed the word into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) They were not to undertake this until the Spirit came to guide them. He came on the day of Pentecost, and they that day began to preach repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ in the city of Jerusalem. He assured them of the high authority of the preaching done in his name: "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." (Matt. 10: 40.) "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." (Matt. 10: 20.) "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Matt. 19: 28.) The teaching of the apostles is the highest authority on earth. To listen to them is to listen to God himself. Their teaching is the true message on life and salvation.

When we open the book of Acts of Apostles we have reached the age of the reign of Christ from his throne in glory. The age of humiliation and suffering is now past, and we are in the age of his glory and power which followed his suffering. This is the good time foretold by the prophets: "Those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." (Acts 3: 18.) "Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days." (Verse 24.) We need not go back to records written before Acts in search for the times of glory and power in Christ. Here we have all fullness.

In the teaching of the apostles people learned such facts as the coming and incarnation of the Son of God, the demonstration of his divinity among men, his death for sinners, his burial and resurrection, his enthronement to reign till all enemies are subdued. His reign had been foretold by the prophets, and the teaching of the apostles gives a history of the fulfillment of the prediction. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." (Ps. 110: 1.) "When he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." (Heb. 1: 3.) "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." (Heb. 10: 12, 13.) In this message of glad tidings sinners are commanded to believe; repent, and be baptized in order to obtain remission of sins (Acts 16: 31; 2: 38), and saints are taught to deny themselves ungodliness and worldly lusts and live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. (Tit. 2: 12.) Here also are clearly revealed the exceedingly great and precious promises of God—salvation, reconciliation, and adoption; the indwelling of the Spirit, the resurrection from the dead, and ultimate perfection; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 21.)

God has here given us "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (2 Pet. 1: 3); "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 17.) He most solemnly charges his servants to "preach the word," to not add to it or take from it, beseeching and persuading them not to go beyond its teaching, and faithfully and tenderly warning all of the horrible ruin that awaits those who transcend the limits of this teaching in any effort to serve God.

"They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching." This is all the light God gives, and no grace or saving power can reach those who turn from it. Those who go beyond this teaching become carnal, sensual, and separate themselves from those who have the Spirit, and become puffed up for the one against the other. They have not God or the Spirit of God. "Now these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and Apollos for your sakes; that in us ye might learn not to go beyond the things which are written; that no one of you be puffed up for the one against the other." (1 Cor. 4: 6, R. V.) "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9, R. V.) "But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit." (Jude 17-19.) All sorts of arguments and inducements are held out to influence Christians to add to, take from, or in some way change God's appointments. Romanism is a species of Christian religion founded on the authority of the clergy, divorced from the teaching of the enthroned apostles. Protestantism is the exhibition of a struggle for freedom from the papal system; in profession it acknowledges the sufficiency of the apostles' teaching, but in works it denies it, and under influence of money and clerical domination is turning its back to the Bible and facing the direction of absolutism under the man of sin. So a choice now between Romanism and Protestantism is simply a choice between two different positions in the broad road. The only remedy and the all-sufficient remedy for all these spiritual disorders is for every Christian to "continue steadfastly in the apostles' teaching." It is a sin to do and teach others to do as duty to God things that are not delivered to us in the "apostles' teaching."

We should feel highly grateful that Christians of the apostolic age were faithful to their charge. In this their examples become equally authoritative with the express commands of the gospel, since their practices were simple enactments of the word spoken to them. If their practices and works had been partly exhibitions of their own wisdom, they could not be of any binding authority upon us. God has no covenant with those who work their wisdom, but he will dwell in those who keep his word. "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (John 14: 23.)

The end of this teaching is love. "But the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart." (1 Tim. 1: 5, R. V.) Beautiful visions of the golden age of love and peace were presented to the Old Testament prophets. "Ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree." (Isa. 55: 12, 13.) "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2: 2-4.) "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Isa. 11: 6-9.)

And is the gospel love and peace,
Such let our conversation be—
The serpent blended with the dove,
Wisdom and meek simplicity;
Whene'er the angry passions rise
To tempt our thoughts or tongues to strife,
On Jesus let us fix our eyes,
Bright pattern of the Christian's life!

Shelbyville, Tenn.

W. L. BUTLER.

Do not wait for extraordinary opportunities for good actions, but make use of common situations.—Goethe.

Home Reading.

THE AMERICAN INDIANS.

The Lord "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." (Acts 17: 26.) Nations rise and fall, and degenerate peoples give place to others possessed of greater vigor and less enfeebled by vice and sin. The story of the nations that have inhabited this continent is yet unwritten. Perhaps it always will be. There are mounds, monuments, and relics of a past civilization, but the record is incomplete and it may be impossible to complete it.

The aborigines of America were probably made up of many races. Some of them are apparently from Tartary. They have the same forms, features, customs, living in the same style of wigwams and cabins, and it would be but a short sail for some of the Asiatics to cross the Bering Sea and reach the western shores of North America. Others are of a different race; they differ in physiognomy, and in manners and customs. Some have a Jewish cast of features, and customs enough resembling the Jews to raise the question whether they are not indeed a portion of the lost tribes. Then it is altogether possible that mariners, sailing westward and driven by storms, may have reached these shores and remained here, losing all memorials of their former history. One class of Indians has been found who were white, and who, in appearance, manners, and in their methods of boat making, etc., resemble the Welsh. There are also in Central America immense monuments and architectural remains of long-forgotten races.

A recent writer calling to mind the fact that the Phenicians were the great maritime nation of the ancient world, and that Solomon put them in possession of the seaport of Ezion-geber, where he and King Hiram built a navy and sent their ships on three-year voyages in search of gold, to mines situated in some region unknown to us, draws the conclusion that they sailed down the Red Sea to India and Ceylon, thence to Java, Sumatra, the Caroline Islands, Tonga, Samoa, Rappa in the austral group, then to Easter Island, and thence to Mexico and Peru; and he claims that along this line of travel there are still fine remains of substructures or foundations like those that may still be seen under the remnants of Solomon's temple which we well know were the work of Phenician builders. Down ninety feet below the surface, on the stones which form the great plateau on which Solomon's temple stood, have been found the same marks of the Phenician stone masons which are found on stones in the harbor at Tyre, thus confirming the scriptural account of the association of Solomon with Hiram and his artisans.

The question of the origin of the peoples who formerly dwelt in this country is one of extreme interest; but there is another question still more interesting, and that concerns the duty of Christian men to the remnant of the aborigines which has survived "a century of dishonor" and bad treatment, and which, notwithstanding the influence of the white man's gunpowder and the white man's whisky, still lives and is increasing rather than diminishing. It has been found after generations of experience that it is cheaper to convert Indians than to kill them, and Christians should be awake to the importance of doing what their hands find to do for the conversion of a people whose history indicates that it has elements of character and greatness which are worthy of more consideration than they have received at the hands of rascally agents and money-loving politicians.—The Common People.

ONE SOURCE OF CULTURE.

Two public school teachers have recently said that among the Protestant young people in their departments they found a singular hesitation when it came to an acknowledgment of acquaintance with the Bible. The young people seem to think that there was something to be ashamed of in such knowledge. No misconception could be greater and no loss more serious even from the standpoint of education. As it affects a broad and generous culture, no error could be more radically weakening.

It is time that we were impressed more deeply with the extraordinary riches of biblical history, prophecy, and life. We need to learn how large and vital a place the Bible may hold in the matter of education. The teachers just mentioned, in the same conversation, said: "Those who do show acquaintance with Bible facts and use them are found without exception to have a stronger, clearer, and more definite grip upon the events and doings of the day than do others." This is a statement that deserves thoughtful attention. The book has in it the means and power of awakening. It holds within itself the vital forces of education. "Hence it is that Christian duty and redemption, draped as they are in the most moving history and poetry on earth, energize the torpid soul, which is stirred to true activity by nothing else."

Some of the best writers and most cultured, both of men and women, have not hesitated to acknowledge their debt to the stirring, life-giving qualities that God's book had imparted to their minds. Shakespeare is an almost constant witness to the influence of the book upon him and his masterpieces. John Ruskin, in the story of his life, gives the chapters of the Bible to which his mother held his attention until he had committed them. Then he adds: "Though I have picked up the elements of a little further knowledge, . . . these chapters I count very confidently the most precious, and, on the whole, the one essential part of my education."

It is time that we had outgrown our childish shame of knowledge of the book. Such acquaintance should be sought. The times in which we live are more and more appreciating the elevating and enlarging qualities of this literature. To study it closely, to drink deeply from its fountains, means larger thought and larger capacity for the best things. To enter into touch with its characters is to have intercourse with the highest and most heroic thinkers and workers that have moved the world. There are education, culture, inspiration of immeasurable kind in a growing knowledge of what is written in this text-book of the ages. It holds the past in its history, the present in its teachings, the future both in its teachings and its prophecies.—Baptist Outlook.

THE SINGLE AIM WINS.

Many a man who has failed would have succeeded had he concentrated his fragmentary and fitful efforts upon a single thing. One of the principal causes of his shipwreck of endeavor is "scatteration"—a habit of desultory, disconnected, fitful, spasmodic effort. In this age of sharp competition, the only way in which it is possible for a young man to succeed is to focus all his powers at one point; he must resolve with an energy that knows no restraint upon the accomplishment of some definite thing in life, and then never turn a hairbreadth from his purpose, under any consideration. The moment you divide a man's attention, you break his force. It is in the union of all his faculties that he becomes invincible. This was the secret of Napoleon's power. He had a masterly habit of massing all his forces on the weak point of the enemy. He used to say that when his resolution was fixed everything else was forgotten, and nothing could turn him from his aim.

The same is true of all the great leaders of men. Having arrived at a decision, Grant could not be turned from his purpose, and in his military operations he was determined to fight it out on the line selected, if it took all summer. It did not matter to him that he was severely criticised in Washington, and by the other generals of the army. His purpose was fixed, he had a definite plan, and no power could deflect him from it. Had even Lincoln attempted this seriously, Grant would have resigned. It is said that when Hazlitt began his day's work he would stick a little red wafer on his forehead, and no one who knew him would interrupt him when this sign was in place; it was a signal of danger to all intruders. His housekeeper did not venture to speak to him, even if the prince called to see him.

All who have accomplished great things have had a purpose running through their lives. Each has had the single eye which sees but one thing, the undaunted will which cannot be bent from its course. Whatever else they have lacked, men of achievement have ever had this characteristic of being able to throw themselves with undivided earnestness upon the work in hand. No young man can hope to accomplish much until he acquires such power, and he must be content to be ignorant of many things. When Agassiz was asked for his opinion touching a matter which bore upon the chemical analysis a plant, he replied: "I know nothing about chemistry." He was a naturalist, not a chemist, and he was great enough not to be afraid to be found ignorant on many things out of his line. The mind can retain only so much. If the eye is single, the whole body is full of light; if not, there is nothing but darkness. This explains why many mediocre men, commonplace plodders, men of one talent, have succeeded; while the so-called geniuses, many-sided men, have failed.

Do not be afraid of being known as a man of one idea. The men who have moved the world have been of this kind. It is ever the single aim that wins; it is the man who has his purpose burned into every fiber of his being, who never loses sight of his goal, and who has the faculty of focusing, like a burning glass, all his scattered rays, that succeeds.—Success.

"SEARCH ME, O GOD!"

Two great nations contended for years on the sea and on the land; they spent freely their blood and their treasure, the one claiming, the other denying, the right to search its vessels. At last the contention became so fierce that it ended in war. So humiliating was it regarded by a proud nation to have its vessels searched by rude foreigners that it took up arms rather than submit to it.

I shall never forget the look of mortified pride on the face of a little boy when some one proposed to examine his pockets to see if some article that was missed could be found in them. "You are not going to search me, are you?" said the little fellow, with a look of the deepest mortification on his face.

Very different was the feeling of the psalmist when he cried out: "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." The psalmist knew he could not trust his own investigation; his heart was deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and he could not trust to any report it might bring; for he knew that "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." But he laid it bare to the search of the Most High, though he knew the search would be thorough, for it would be made by One who even understood his thoughts afar off, by One whose quick and powerful word is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; who would make no mistakes, for his judgments are always according to truth; who would not be deterred by unwise tenderness in permitting any sin, though it should be a little one, to pass unnoticed and unrebuked; yet mistrusting himself and trusting in the superior wisdom and skill of another, he earnestly prayed to be searched.

There was no humiliation on the part of the psalmist, for he was subjected to no foreigner's search, handling with coarse, prying fingers that which was sacred in the sight of the owner. Love was in every touch of the great Searcher, and even when it was necessary by a painful operation to remove from the heart something that was hurtful, perhaps dangerous, it was so mixed with mercy that it caused him who was searched to cleave to the Searcher with greater love, with more perfect submission, with larger faith; he found out that though the chastening had been grievous, yet to him it had yielded the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

How many of us make this prayer our prayer? How many lay steadily to heart the words of the wise man: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life?" Are we not satisfied to keep the outside of the cup and the platter clean, while the inside is full of extortion and excess? How can we be temples of the Holy Ghost as long as we submit willingly to the defilement of indwelling sin?—Herbert T. Bacon, in Christian Observer.

O for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame;
A light to shine upon the road
That leads me to the Lamb!

—Cowper.

Interest, ambition, fortune, time, temper, love—all kill friendship.—Roux.

We rise in glory as we sink in pride;
Where boasting ends, there dignity begins.

—Young.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEB. 4, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year	$1.50
Single Subscriber, Six Months	.75
Preachers and Widows, One Year	1.00
Sample Copies	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

UNION OF CHRISTIANS.

This subject is forcing itself upon the attention of Christians from without. It ought to be a very dearly cherished principle and desire from within, because it was so near the heart of Jesus and the apostles. Jesus saw with anguish that his spiritual body would be torn and rent, and as a result the world would refuse to believe in him as the Sent of God, and would go down to the darkness of eternal separation from God. In view of this, he poured out his soul in prayer to God that those who believe in him might be one. This anxious prayer of Jesus ought itself to make the hearts of his followers intently seek the union of the children of God in one spiritual body. But those who claim to be his followers grow indifferent to this union, or, worse than indifference, claim the union in the separate denominations and organizations that divide the professed children of God, and claim that these different bodies are all the better for the world and the religion of Christ. What the desire and prayer of Christ failed to impress on the, outward conditions and circumstances are used by God to impress on them. Men are generally more readily reached by the external and material conditions than by spiritual and living truths and principles. The question confronts Christian as to how the gospel shall be carried to the newly acquired territories and peoples of the United States. They have all been hitherto dominated nominally by Romanism. Wherever Romanism has been free from contact with Protestantism it has become a dead and meaningless order of ceremonies, more for the support of the priests than of good to the people. In all these possessions it has lost its power and influence and the people are in a state of complete indifference, hardly surpassed by open idolatry itself.

The question is: How shall these people be approached by the Protestant churches to uplift them? Shall they go there as divided and warring parties to convert them from their condition of indifference and ignorance of the Bible? Some of the strong partisans are rushing into Cuba to get into advantageous positions; others hesitate. They see the evil of carrying the division and strife of contending parties into these lands and are seeking means to avoid it.

The Independent, long the organ of what is called "liberalism in religion," now nearly given up to literature and politics, advocates the plan of the Sunday School Union. Its plan is: "It establishes Sunday schools all over the country, and upon its board of managers are representatives of eight or nine different denominations. Its work is pioneering work, preparing the way for churches, and in outlying districts where it labors it establishes union Sunday schools, which awake no denominational antagonisms, for they have no creed, observe no sacraments, adopt no church polity—simply invite all people in the community to join in the study of the Bible; and when the Sunday school has developed so that a church should be formed, the Union never interferes, but leaves entirely to the judgment of the people on the ground what denomination it should connect itself with. . . . Why not let the work in our new possessions be along the same line?"

The meaning of that is they will teach the Bible by repudiating its leading and fundamental principle, which is: "the Bible is the word of God; and no man may add to or take from its teachings." The Bible teaches men must have a creed, that the Bible itself is a God-given creed, to be accepted without change; the Bible teaches "sacraments," as they are here termed, must be observed, that people must obey the Bible and observe a church polity; and all effort to teach the Bible and ignore its great and living truths is a mockery and mutilation of the word of God and is calculated to bring it into disrepute by those to whom it is taught. Paul kept himself pure from the blood of all men by declaring the whole counsel of God. (Acts 20: 26, 27.) No man with a sense of his responsibility to God can go into any arrangement of men by which he is called upon to ignore any portion of the counsel of God. To do that is to be guilty of the death of our fellow-men whom we fail to teach the whole will of God. The course of schools to lightly regard the will of God accustoms them to set aside the requirements of the Bible and possibly educates them to form churches in which the commands and ordinances of God are ignored.

Then it does not remedy the evil; it only postpones the division and strife until the churches are formed. Then the division comes up. If this division is an evil in heathen lands and in destitute fields, it is an evil everywhere. The divisions confuse men's minds, destroy faith in the Bible and in God, and everywhere and in every way work evil. It does not cure or help the evil to cover up the divisions with hollow truces and empty shams of harmony, when people cannot set aside the divisions and be in deed and in truth one. Parties are wrong; they are sinful before God and ruinous to man. Nothing can satisfy God or help man but the destruction of the parties and the union of the people of God as one brotherhood, one body in Christ Jesus. God does not ask peace between parties; he asks the destruction of all parties and the unity of his children in one body in Christ Jesus.

This unity cannot be brought about by agreements and terms of union between denominations. Denominations themselves are sinful and must be abolished; multiplying more denominations now adds to the evil, adds sin to sin. Denominations are parties, and parties, no matter how liberal, are sinful. To be liberal in changing or setting aside or adding to the commandments of God is the highest sin against God.

There is one way, there is only one way, in which the unity can be brought about; that is, by all adopting the Bible as the one and only creed given by God to man, and by all striving to walk by this. This course will lead them in the same path, cause them to walk together and be one people in Christ, and nothing else will. This is God's way to make his children one, and he will tolerate union in no other way or on no other conditions. I do not see how people can teach unity to the Cubans or others until they learn unity at home, and become one.

I know we are met with the claim that we cannot all understand the Bible alike; but this is not true. There is substantial unity among those who study the Bible as to what it teaches. As a rule, all translators and commentators agree as to the meaning of the language. Especially this is true of men who free themselves from a narrow partisanship; and if all parties and denominations were abolished, the partisan commentators would be eliminated. There would be no parties for them to defend. I had as lief have Clarke's commentary as to the teaching of the Bible, or Wesley's translation, or the "Bible Union" by the Baptists, or the commentaries of Hackett and Hovey, as any I know. The translators and commentators substantially agree as to the teachings of the Bible. The disagreements among the professed Christians are not as to what the Bible teaches, but they arise over things not taught in the Bible. Bringing things not taught or required in the Bible is the flood gate that brings in division and strife. Close this, and the occasions of division and strife are abolished. That is God's order to promote and maintain unity among the children of God. Every division among the people of God has been brought about by bringing in things not required by God. The only remedy is a simple one, that emphasizes true loyalty to God, while promoting unity. All appeals for unity on any other ground than this are vain and really promote division. He who proposes to set aside a single law or order of God or to admit a single practice not required by God in order to promote unity defeats what he aims to secure and sets up another party and promotes a new division. When Jesus prayed for unity he prayed his disciples might be sanctified by the truth, then said: "My word is truth." Only this can sanctify or set them apart as the children of God and keep them one.

Sometimes we are accused of not dwelling enough on unity, and I am not sure but this is the first principle with which some charge us with forsaking. While we may not have said as much about unity as some, talking about it does not always promote it. There is but one way to promote it; that is, insist on men following the only rule that will bring it about. For thirty years we have not written a sentence that we did not believe and intend should promote unity and union among the children of God, because there is but one ground on which unity can rest; that is, follow the law of God—add nothing to it, take nothing from it. This alone is true loyalty to God, this alone will bring union; and he who maintains this position is the true and only true advocate of union if he separates from every living being and stands alone in maintaining it. This is God's union ground; and only on this ground can God's children find union. All I write is for union with God, and in union with God alone can be found the union of God's children. D. L.

THE CHURCH AT SARDIS.

"And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." (Rev. 3: 1-6.)

This arraignment of the church at Sardis is a fearful one. It is an exceedingly serious matter that the Lord is all the time looking upon us and knows what we are doing. If we do or say ugly things, they are all open before him, and he sees, hears, and knows everything. Our whole lives are open before him, and Jesus says that for "every idle word that men speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." When we speak an idle or ugly, harsh word it goes to record, and, if not repented of, will stand against us at the last day. To be able at all times to bridle the tongue and to never say anything wrong is a wonderful acquisition on the part of the Christian. His words should "be always with grace, seasoned with salt." No child of God can do any little mean thing in his family or against his neighbors that the Lord does not hold it against him till he repents of it. But if we repent and turn from our sins and confess them to God, he is faithful to forgive and to remember them against us no more. This is a wonderful arrangement of mercy in behalf of poor, frail children of God on earth; and but for this provision, who could be saved?

These people were claiming to be a church of God, and thus had a name to live, but were dead, dead to the life the Lord required them to live. When men from any cause become spiritually dead, the Lord knows it; if they fail to do anything in the service of God, he knows it; if they turn away from what the Lord has ordained and do something, he has not ordained; he knows that also. People are spiritually dead already when they become dissatisfied with what God requires and prefer to do something else. Turning away from what God requires is turning away from him. When Nadab and Abihu deliberately turned away from one item of God's requirement, he not only turned away from them, but smote them with death, as an example to all that afterwards should turn away from him to something after their own wisdom and preference.

This church at Sardis is notified that though they had a name and a claim to live, they were dead; they were lifeless so far as doing his will was concerned, no matter what else they did or how earnestly they did it. God requires that his people shall hear what the Spirit says to the churches. The Spirit of God tells aliens what to do to become the children of God, and tells Christians what to do to live the Christian life; it teaches aliens to hear and obey the gospel, obey the word of God, in order to be saved. Now if those claiming to be teachers lead aliens to depend upon an abstract operation of the Spirit for their conversion, they are perverting the gospel and leading sinners to turn aside after the doctrines of men, and not after Christ; and if the teachers of the younger members of the church impress them that to hear preaching on the first day of the week is the all-important matter, and that breaking bread is of small importance, they are leading them away from Christ, because the Spirit teaches churches to meet on the first day of the week to break bread, to eat the Lord's Supper; and if they meet for some other purpose, and do not eat the Lord's Supper, they turn away from Christ in so doing. If they meet to break bread, and can hear preaching, too, then that is all right; but if they meet to hear preaching and do not break bread, then that is all wrong, and those that do that way are dead to the Lord's will, and will be so long as they follow that course. Others are dead because they take no interest in the work of the Lord in any way; they take no interest in the work of sending out the gospel to the world, and seem not to care whether others are saved or not. These are dead to a very important part of the will of God. The will of God must be done, or those who claim to follow Christ will be dead. It is not the amount of work people may do that keeps them alive in Christ, but it is doing just what the word of the Lord requires to be done. Some of the dearest churches I know of are as great workers as I know, but they are doing their own work, and not the Lord's; they have all sorts of societies and society meetings almost every day in the week, and are always at work, but not doing the will of God; they have Endeavor societies, aid societies, young ladies' missionary societies, and Christian women's missionary societies; and they are always meeting and working in these societies, and for the advancement and honor of the societies, while no work is being done for the church or by the church. When a church gets into this sort of condition there seems to be no chance to bring that church into spiritual life again; they are soon wedded to their ways. There are two reasons why people love to work in these societies. One reason is, they love prominence and notoriety, for when you divide a church into a half dozen or a dozen different societies nearly all of them get to be officers of some grade or other and are thus thrown into greater prominence and notoriety; and, in the next place, people love to have authority and be bosses, and as so many get to be officers and are endowed with official authority, a large number get to be bosses of some grade or other, and thus this desire of humanity is very largely gratified—to boss somebody.

The idea of doing work simply for the Lord's sake and because the Lord has required it enters not into their calculations; and although the word "organize" is not found in the Bible at all, such churches are forever organizing societies of one sort or another and making bosses. I do not know of any sort of a church that can be more truly dead to the will of God than one whose members are worked up into these society organizations and working for their respective societies. When people once become wedded to these things it is like giving up life itself to get them out of them and to get them to working purely for the Lord. Somehow most people would much rather work after man's wisdom than after God's, anyway; and yet the word of God says: "For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" (1 Cor. 1: 19, 20.) All those, therefore, that are trying to build up societies and run the church by human wisdom are trying to build up something already doomed, something that is foolishness with God and which he is certain to destroy. Jesus also said: "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 1.) All these human societies are plants which God never planted, and are as certain to be rooted up that the word of the Lord is true. No device of uninspired men will stand the test at the judgment seat; but those that do just what they find on record in the word of God are infallibly safe.

There were a few at Sardis that were faithful and did not defile their garments, did not spot and stain their characters with sin of any sort; they did not in any matter depart from the word of the Lord; they were fully satisfied to take the word of the Lord for it in all the work and worship of the church; they were not of those that are contentious and do not obey the truth; they loved the Lord and his truth, and walked in his ways, and he says of them: "And they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy." People that are willing to be directed by the Lord through his word have nothing to fear. "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" There is no power on earth that can harm a faithful and trusting child of God. "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."

This is safety, indeed. Why not all do this and be safe? If all who claim to be the Lord's people would faithfully follow out this command to all the seven churches, to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," there would be the most perfect unity and harmony among them all; they would all teach the same things, and would all practice the same things; there would be no parties or denominations; there would be no divisions in churches over human wisdom and human devices, for those who hear what the Spirit says to the churches will never introduce such things. Those who hear what the Spirit says to the churches will cultivate brotherly love and good will toward all and will be found "always abounding in the work of the Lord," will always do all things as the Lord directs, as nearly as possible, and will give God the honor of all that is accomplished through the church, while man's wisdom will be in the background. When such "shall have done all those things which are commanded them," they will only say: "We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."

People who hear what the Spirit says to the churches will not forsake the assembling of themselves together on the first day of the week to break bread. They will put away all anger, wrath, malice, and evil speaking, and will be kind one to another, tender-hearted, and ready always to forgive; they will visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and keep themselves unspotted from the world; they will deny "ungodliness and worldly lusts," and "live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." There is no sort of life so lovely as the life the Spirit requires of the churches. No violence, no injustice, no sort of dishonesty, no falsehood or intended deception will ever prevail among those who hear and heed what the Spirit says to the churches. No matter where you find such people as these, you will find them in the line of duty, will find people striving to overcome the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life; and such as these, without any sort of doubt, are the people that will fill the mansions the Savior has gone to prepare.

E. G. S.

Brother Sewell: Please explain 1 John 3: 9: "Who-soever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

J. J. ALLEN.

Tharpe, Tenn.

The verses immediately preceding the one quoted above are: "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." The verse immediately following it is: "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." Taking the whole connection, it is plain that the apostle was showing the difference between the righteous and the wicked; that when a man is born of God, and the seed, the word of God, by which he was born, remain in him and becomes the guiding principle of his life, he is then a righteous man, and is all the time striving to do the Lord's will, and cannot purposely sin. But the wicked man that repudiates the word of God, the only guide for man in righteousness, is wicked all the time, not making any effort to do the Lord's will, and is emphatically of the devil, following the devices of Satan, and not God. It was just upon this principle that Jesus said: "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." The tree must be good to bear good fruit, but a corrupt tree cannot. It is the same also as when he said: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." The same man cannot serve two opposing masters, with one of them requiring him to go one way, and the other, the very opposite. Could the same man loyally and faithfully serve the United States and at the same time loyally serve Aguinaldo in the struggle now going on in the Philippines? Every one knows that would be an impossibility. So no man can serve God and Satan at the same time; and this is just the principle expressed in the verse in this query. The whole soul of the righteous is bent on doing God's will, while the whole desire and effort of the wicked is to walk in sinful ways; and in this sense the righteous man who is led by the word of God cannot sin. But this does not at all mean that a righteous man may not, through weakness of the flesh, sometimes do wrong. Hence John, in chapter 1 of this same letter, including himself and those to whom he wrote, says: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." All the Lord's people are in danger of this sort of sin and have to guard against it all the days of their lives. When Paul was far advanced in the Christian life, he said: "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." (1 Cor. 9: 27.) Hence there is no conflict between these two passages. While a man loves God and loves his truth, and is living by the word of God, he is not serving sin, and cannot, except through weakness or by mistake in judgment. No man to-day can faithfully serve England in South Africa and the Boers at the same time; but a man very faithful to England might make mistakes and blunders that might even give aid to the Boers. But if he did, it would be through weakness and mistake, and not intentional; and so it is with the child of God. Hence the Christian must strive to be always abounding in the work of the Lord.

New Lights for Old.

"When I was a boy and read 'Aladdin and his Lamp,'" said Uncle Silas, reflectively, "I used to wonder that the old magician should have had any idea of getting back the lamp he wanted by traveling through the streets and offering 'new lamps for old.' I thought the offer was enough to make folks suspicious, and that they'd be likely to think a good while about the usefulness of the old ones before they'd trade for new that might be worthless. But I've found since I've grown older that his cry was a very taking one; there are plenty of people answering to it all the time. Let some fellow claim that he has a new light on prophecy and knows when the end of the world is to come, and people will flock after him and give up the teaching of years. If some traveling lecturer calls out that the light of the Bible, there are young men that will think it is a wonderful illumination and be ready to give up the faith that lighted their fathers and mothers through the world and took away the gloom of death. 'New lamps for old' is an offer that's going on all the time; but it's a sort of trade one wants to make carefully."—Forward.

There is no better time for the exercise of humility than when we succeed.—Mary Lyon.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR,"A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.

For indigestion and foul stomach.

For sick and nervous headaches.

For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.

For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.

For loss of appetite and debility.

For fevers, malária, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir.

Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.

1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.

RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

Begin now to make this the best year of your life.

Brother McCaleb's Report for December and Summary for the Year.

During December I received the following amounts: From Brother F. W. Smith, $10; Utica Church, Ind., $5; church at Second street and Kentucky avenue, Louisville, Ky., $8. Total for the month, $23. During the year I have received from the churches $646.27; earned in the schools of Japan, $317.50. Total amount for the year, $963.77. In addition to this I realized during five months about $75 for the rent of our home, but some $15 or $20 of this was spent for repairs on the same; making a total of about $1,018.77 for the year. Of this amount one-seventh has been given directly toward carrying on the work in Japan; it took $388 to pay our passage home; I have paid $10 on amount still unpaid for our home. This left about $385.24 for family expenses. This amount seems small to support a family on for a year, but it is to be noted that the $388 for the trip home includes the eating, and that since our return home our friends have not allowed us to be on full expenses. Since leaving Japan our house has been renting for $25 per month, about $15 of which has gone regularly to keep up chapel and school expenses, besides some more repairs that have been done, from which, I suppose, we are keeping about even there; but as yet the brethren have not reported to us definitely. I have received during the year especially for the support of the children's school, $27.10, which has been appropriated to that end. I have also forwarded, by request from various ones, to Brother Snodgrass, $13.

While the above figures are approximately correct, having to deal both in Japanese and our money and also frequently receiving gifts without an estimate in dollars and cents, it is impossible to be exact; but since I am not on a salary and will send out no duns to the churches for arrears, I suppose a few cents' difference in the reckoning will not be serious. I should also note that the Antioch Church gave $1.35 and the Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., gave about $10 (I failed to note the amount) for the fire sufferers in Japan. I forwarded the same to Brother Snodgrass, and no doubt it has been used well for the distressed.

Those who stand aloof from denominational boards are frequently given a tilt by the "orthodox missions." A year or two ago the Independent, one of the "leading" journals of this country, wrote up Brother Snodgrass and myself, in which the editor paid me the compliment of being connected with only a "waning constituency" of my "denomination." The criticism was so unfounded in every point (and there were several) that a fellow-missionary, though himself a member of one of the orthodox missions, kindly volunteered to write a correction, which the Independent has never seen fit to publish. As to my denomination, of course I have none; as to whether the brethren and churches of my acquaintance that are having fellowship with me independent of all denominational boards, and even independent of the Independent, constitute a "waning constituency," perhaps a few facts may not be amiss; and especially since money measures the zeal and activity of all the orthodox missions, this ought to be conclusive. The year 1892 was the year I went to Japan; buying an outfit necessarily cost me a good deal extra. In 1892 I received about $900; in 1893, $678.73; in 1894, $588.08;

ROYAL Baking Powder

Made from pure cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

in 1895, $670.62; in 1896, $671.65; in 1897, $595.38; in 1898, $626.38; in 1899, $646.27. These figures, covering a period of eight years, do not show a "waning constituency," judging even from the money point of view. I do not judge by this rule; to those who do, this ought to be satisfactory. But the Scriptures never so judge. The poor widow's two mites were more in the Lord's sight than all that the rich had contributed put together.

My eight years' experience gives me a deeper faith in God and more confidence in his children. With gratitude both to him and them, I press on toward the mark. It is my purpose to travel among the churches till next summer one year hence to encourage them more and more in missionary work, when, the Lord willing, I shall return to Japan to continue to labor among that people.

J. M. M'CALEB.

Mary Hall.

By this name her friends familiarly called her. She was admirably frank and plain-spoken, but agreeable and friendly withal. Buoyant and happy in disposition, full of faith and hope, she was sunshine and cheer in her home, a joy in her community, and a light in the congregation with whom she worshiped God. It is sad to think that she is no more on earth and this is her obituary. Realizing this, I weep again in sympathy with the bereaved family and relatives and over the loss to myself and family of a true Christian friend. We realize more sensibly every day how fast our friends are falling about us in death. It is joyous and glorious to believe in heaven, "the home where changes never come," from which sin and death are banished, and where God's own hand shall wipe all tears from the eyes of his children. It is triumphant to know that death is only a sleep.

The golden dawn of the day of God
Shall smite on the sealed eyes;
The trumpet sound shall thunder around,
The dreamers shall wake and rise.

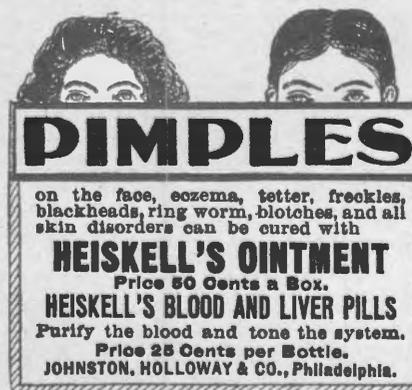

The night is over, the sleep is slept;
They are called from the shadowy place;
The pilgrims stand in the glorious land
And gaze on the Master's face.

Mary Hall was the eldest daughter of James A. and Susan A. Mentlo, and was born on the Mentlo Farm, near Gallatin, Tenn., June 22, 1857. She became a Christian under the preaching of Brother B. W. Lauderdale, at Union, near her home, in the summer of 1873. She was married to William Hall, in the Old Union house of worship, by Brother E. G. Sewell, October 14, 1874. She died on December 8, 1899, in Nashville, Tenn., a few days after a very serious surgical operation for appendicitis. Thus early, when her life seemed most useful, in the vigor and bloom of womanhood, she passed away. She was in the church over twenty-six years, and was a wife over twenty-five years. She was the mother of five children—two boys and three girls—who survive her. She was a true Christian wife and mother. She loved her husband and children in every sense of that word; she loved her home, and labored to keep it neat, orderly, and a place of comfort and rest; she was truly a "worker at home" (Tit. 2: 5, R. V.); she was industrious, diligent, and economical; she was "not afraid of the snow for her household" (Prov. 31: 21), because she was always up with her work, and the heart of her husband did safely trust in her. (Prov. 31: 11.) Thus he writes of her: "For a little more than twenty-five years Mary was my companion, my earthly comfort, my help, and my counselor. If misfortune befell me, she was always ready to cheer me; and if prosperity blessed me, she was prompt to remind me of the fact that 'the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.' In fact, she has been everything to me that a wife could be."

Sister Hall was independent in thought and action and did what she conceived to be right, regardless of public opinion. She cared nothing for fine apparel, outward adornment, or display; she requested to be buried plainly and without ostentation; she loved the truth and the service of God and endeavored to read the Bible daily; she said she did not know why she should die when she did, unless it was to impress her boys and to bring them into Christ, and since her death they have become Christians; she also said that it was sweet to die as she was dying, surrounded by her friends, conscious, and in the precious hope of the gospel of Jesus. We feel assured that it can truly be said of her: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

E. A. ELAM.

DIMPLES
on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL
LIFE OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

—BY—
Rev. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D., one of MOODY'S MOST INTIMATE COWORKERS AND NEXT TO HIM THE GREATEST EVANGELIST IN THE WORLD. The book will be replete with personal incident and anecdote, and tells the story of the GREATEST AND MOST USEFUL LIFE of the century—how by his eloquence and power vast assemblies in this country and England were held entranced and thousands of souls were blessed. It is a magnificent opportunity for Agents. TERMS LIBERAL. Send 20c to pay cost of mailing an outfit QUICKLY.
JOHN C. WINSTON & CO.
328 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Do not worry if you wish to be happy and useful.

"No Eye Like the Master's Eye."

You are master of your health, and if you do not attend to duty, the blame is easily located. If your blood is out of order, Hood's Sarsaparilla will purify it.

It is the specific remedy for troubles of the blood, kidneys, bowels or liver.

Kidneys—"My kidneys troubled me, and on advice took Hood's Sarsaparilla which gave prompt relief, better appetite. My sleep is refreshing. It cured my wife also." MICHAEL BOYLE, 3473 Denny Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

Scrofulous Humor—"I was in terrible condition from the itching and burning of scrofulous humor. Grew worse under treatment of several doctors. Took Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills. These cured me thoroughly." J. J. LITTLE, Fulton, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Read Carefully.

Some four years ago the digressives took possession of the meetinghouse of the church of Christ at Longview, Texas. They put in the organ, organized all the society fads, stained the glass in the windows, hired a pastor, and drove out many of the old members who had stood by the truth and a pure worship, and thus ruined what was once called "a model church." They are dragging along, but, as far as I can learn, are doing no good, being now only a sect among sects. There is no longer anything "peculiar" about them. Some twenty-three members protested against their high-handed doings, but it did no good; their hearts were set on Egypt, and back they went. For a while the faithful met from house to house, until, by removal and death, they numbered but eight or ten.

Three years ago I was compelled to move my business. I went to Corsicana, from there to Terrell, preaching at these places and in the surrounding country as I could.

I have now returned to Longview and think the times propitious for building up the cause of Christ again in this town; but I am poor, and as there are only two other brethren left here, who are both very poor, I am constrained to call upon the brethren at large to help in this mission.

If every reader of the Gospel Advocate will send me what he can—a nickel, dime, or quarter—just inclose it in a letter and send it. We can then rent and seat a hall, buy hymn books and Testaments, and start the work at once. If any are disposed to send more—the Lord bless you!—send it along. Any one who will take the matter in hand can interest his or her home congregation in this mission and make up a few dollars easily. I shall expect a good shower of nickels and dimes right out of Nashville, Tenn., where I have held three good meetings. I hope to hear from the church in Montgomery, Ala., too.

A few years ago I made a call for help for drought-stricken brethren in West Texas. The response was generous and noble. More than $2,000 reached me from the churches and was sent on, at my expense, to the sufferers. Eternity alone will tell how much good these noble contributions did. Here is now a spiritual drought. Will you help in this? A dime is not too small for you to give; but if a thousand others fellowship you in the work, we will get $100, and, I think, will succeed in again planting a Bible church here.

We will call this the "Longview Mission," and report as we proceed. Who will fellowship us in this mission? Address JOHN T. POE, Longview, Texas.

We trust our readers will respond liberally to Brother Poe's appeal. The people are growing weary of denominationalism; it has been tried, and found wanting; it is a failure. Many who have been led astray by the fads and fancies now wish to return to the worship in its primitive simplicity. The time is ripe for a bountiful harvest in the kingdom of God.

Those who love the truth in its simplicity should rise in the strength of Israel's God and fight his battles as they have never done before. God has always overruled the folly of man for his own glory and the good of his people; but while he does this, he demands fidelity of his children. There is a work that we must do. "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." (James 2: 14-18.) We will make slow progress in leading people out of error while we are not actively engaged in the work of the Lord. The active, diligent servant of the Lord is always blessed. Only those who obey the commandments of Jesus are his friends. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14.) "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1: 25.) "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 2, 3.) Earnest work as God directs is never in vain. May God speed the day when all will be willing to work vigorously and earnestly according as "it is written" for the growth of the kingdom of God throughout the whole world.

J. C. McQUIDDY.

If You Are Tired,

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. M. H. Henry, New York, says: "When completely tired out by prolonged wakefulness and overwork, it is of the greatest value to me."

We carry a splendid line of tracts, a few of which are advertised in this number.

Sewing Machines of the Present are very different from those of the past. Very few users of sewing machines know the technical differences; patents have expired on generic features, but "the world moves," and radical improvements have been made in sewing machines, so that the one of to-day shows a tremendous improvement on its predecessor. Women who have used both kinds quickly realize the difference between a cheaply made imitation of some ancient type and the modern light-running machine which is easily adjusted, does all kinds of work, and is always ready to go. The Silent Singer of to-day is the latest result of constant improvement in mechanical excellence. For practical use it compares with the old-time sewing machines sold at department stores much as a modern railway train surpasses a stage-coach of the last century.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care, from the best materials, fitted in its place with the utmost exactness, and tested and re-tested so many times before leaving the factory, that it never gets the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty. Singer machines are sold directly from maker to user; they are guaranteed by the maker, always ready to furnish parts and supplies in any part of the world, and not by a middleman totally unable to render this service. Buy a sewing machine of the Present, and not one of the Past.

Get a Singer. You can try one free. Old machines taken in exchange.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Offices in every city in the world.

The W. V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,

Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40

VOICE OF PRAISE.

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.	WORD EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10

WORDS OF TRUTH.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75

VOICE OF PRAISE.

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.	WORD EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,

22 N. Market Street,

Nashville, Tennessee.

No Gripe, Pain

Or discomfort, no irritation of the intestines—but gentle, prompt, thorough healthful cleansing, when you take

Hood's Pills

Sold by all druggists. 25 cents.

General News.

Thirty-four deaths from the bubonic plague are reported from Honolulu, one white woman being a victim.

Criminal prosecutions in Tennessee for the last fiscal year, which ended on December 19, 1899, cost the State the sum of $155,198.79.

The Penitentiary Commissioners recently turned into the State treasury the sum of $14,646.74. This money was derived from the sale of coal at Brushy Mountain mines.

Osman Digna, the principal general of the late Khalifa Abdullah, who escaped when the Khalifa and other officers were slain in battle with the British, under General Kitchener, was recently captured and brought to Suez.

The steamship Hutton, from Galveston, cleared from New Orleans with 5,000 square bales of cotton, 1,600 round bales, and 1,800 tons of phosphate rock. She cleared for Kobe, Japan. This is the fourth vessel hence this season for Japan direct.

Gen. Lorenzo Torres engaged the Yaquis at Macoyota, killing over two hundred of them and taking five hundred prisoners. It is said that this last important victory of General Torres will have the effect of scattering the Yaquis and will result in ending the war.

A. M. Shook, Whiteford Cole, Percy Warner, J. Hill Eakin, Ar W. Wills, Robert Ewing, and H. W. Buttorf have been appointed by Mayor Head as delegates to represent Nashville at the meeting of the International Mining Congress at Milwaukee, Wis., on June 19-23.

Smallpox has broken out among the fifteen hundred students at the University of Indiana, at Bloomington. The State Board of Health was last week notified that five students who lived at one boarding house had been stricken and many others had been exposed.

Signor Guarini has patented an apparatus which is apparently an improvement upon Signor Marconi's method of wireless telegraphy. It will be tested between Brussels and London. He talks of wireless communication between London and New York as well "within the range of probability."

There are now one hundred and fifty-six cotton mills operating in Mexico, and many new mills are building and old ones being enlarged. Many cotton mill owners believe that Mexico is now in a position to export cotton textiles to South America in competition with England and the United States.

The remains of John Ruskin, who died on January 20, were interred in Coniston Churchyard. The Dean of Westminster offered a grave in Westminster Abbey. This honor, however, was declined by Mr. Ruskin's relatives, who say in their reply to Mr. Bradley that it was the Professor's own wish to sleep in Coniston Churchyard.

Korea's first railway was opened to traffic on September 18. It runs between Seoul and Chemulpo, and track is now laid to within five miles Seoul. It is of standard gauge, and is twenty-six and one-quarter miles long. The Japanese Government appropriated $900,000 for its completion. American material and cars are used throughout.

The annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry was sent to Congress a few days ago. In regard to the inspection of Southern cattle, the report says that during the quarantine season of 1898, 32,937 cars of cattle, containing 911,455 cattle from the splenic fever district, were unloaded in quarantine divisions of the stock yards at various points and inspected.

Professor Todd, of Amherst College, and Percival Lowell, of Boston, are making preparations for a trip to Africa to observe the eclipse of the sun in May next. Mr. Lowell's interest in astronomy began in an amateur way six or seven years ago. He founded the Lowell Observatory, at Flagstaff, Ariz., in 1894, and since then has made some very important observations.

A sharp and prolonged shock of earthquake was felt in Mexico City a few days ago. The duration was one minute, according to the observatory. There was much alarm, owing to the severity and duration of the quake, and the audiences in the theaters were much frightened. Many houses and churches were cracked, but no loss of life or injury to individuals was recorded.

Thirty thousand additional Austrian miners have gone on strike, their employers having refused the demands for higher wages and an eight-hour day. The total number now out is 70,000, and it is thought that 20,000 others will join them. The employers threaten dismissal and eviction within three days. Police precautions have been taken to prevent violence. The coal famine threatens to check every branch of Austrian industry.

General Otis reports from Manila that General Schwan is conducting the campaign in the southern part of Luzon with the greatest energy. He has located southeast of Laguna de Bay what is probably the last considerable force of insurgents remaining in one command, and the report shows that, with small loss to himself and heavy loss to the enemy, he has managed to completely dissipate this force, probably beyond the possibility of reconstruction.

President Newell Sanders, of the Tennessee River Improvement Association; Z. C. Patten, secretary; and Maj. Daniel Kingman, engineer in charge of the Tennessee River improvements, have gone to Washington by invitation to appear before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress in behalf of an appropriation for the Tennessee River. These gentlemen will be joined in Washington by committeemen from Alabama towns interested in the river improvement, and by a committee from the Knoxville Chamber of Commerce.

According to the Irrigation Age, the waters of the Great Salt Lake, in Utah, have receded a mile within the past year, and some persons think that within the coming century this wonderful body of water may be completely dried up. The cause of the lowering of the water is ascribed to the rapid extension of irrigation ditches, which draw their supply from the streams emptying into the lake. There is now a "salt desert" not far from the lake, which was once covered with water. The salt deposit on the floor of the lake itself is believed to be of great business.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

BY
A. P. STOUT

TOUCHES and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places are most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the "Man of sorrows" are almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. Address

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Price, $1.00

It has been noticed that many plants, not natives of the locality, are to be found growing in the neighborhood of great railroad yards. Sometimes the seeds of these plants have been brought thousands of miles from their natural habitat. Often they flourish amid their new surroundings, and gradually spread over the surrounding country. Thus the railroads carry unsuspected emigrants, which travel to and from every point of the compass. In the Mississippi Valley are to be found plants which, within a few years past, have been thus brought together—some from the Atlantic seaboard, some from the Gulf region, and some from the other side of the Rocky Mountains.

In reply to a resolution of the Senate, the Secretary of the Interior has sent to that body an estimate for topographical and geological surveys of Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines. The report shows that there is great necessity for this work, owing to the imperfect maps on hand. The geological work proposed to be done, it is said, will protect agricultural conditions in many instances and show whether or not the Philippines contain gold or other valuable minerals in paying quantities. The most difficult part of the work will be found in the Philippines, where the topographical survey, under the present plans, will extend over twelve or fifteen years. The estimates for the surveys are as follows: Puerto Rico, $16,000; Hawaii, $29,000; Philippines, $50,000; and Cuba, $36,000.

Wondrous Works.

The manufacture of the American Pianos and Organs by Messrs. Cornish, at their immense factories at Washington, N. J., is one of the most interesting exhibitions possible. The vast works are really wonderful, and the making of the Cornish American Pianos and Organs can be followed in all stages, from the rough lumber brought in from the extensive drying kilns, and cut up by the big circular saws in the lower end of the first machine floor, to the examination of the exquisitely finished product in the warehouses. The magnitude of their business has made it necessary for them to still further increase their factory space, and they have just finished an addition to their main building, which will give 20,000 cubic feet more room; they have also enlarged their office facilities, so that they are now in better shape than ever to handle orders, and can now build and ship at the rate of sixty pianos and organs per day, or 18,000 per annum.

The Jubilee Illustrated Catalogue issued by this enterprising firm, the frontispiece of which is printed in colors and is a unique reproduction of a celebrated painting representing St. Cecilia and the Heavenly Choir, will be sent free to any one addressing Messrs. Cornish & Co., at Washington, N. J., and mentioning this paper.

Nearly all can recall that favorite fiction of their childhood, the voyage of Sindbad the sailor into the Indian Sea. They will remember that magnetic rock that rose from the surface of the placid waters. Silently Sindbad's vessel was attracted toward it; silently the bolts were drawn out of the ship's side, one by one, through the subtle attraction of that magnetic rock; and when the fated vessel drew so near that every bolt and clamp was unloosed, the whole structure of bulwark, mast, and spars tumbled into ruin on the sea, and the sleeping sailors awoke to their drowning agonies. So stands the magnetic rock of worldliness athwart the Christian's path. Its attraction is subtle, silent, slow, but fearfully powerful on every soul that floats within its range. Under its enchanting spell, bolt after bolt of good resolution, clamp after clamp of Christian obligation, are stealthily drawn out. In an hour he is a wreck; he cannot hold together in a tempest of trial, because he is no longer held together by a divine

LIFE AND WORK OF MOODY DWIGHT L. MOODY

Official and only authentic edition. Written by his son, WML R. MOODY, and IRA D. SANKEY, his life-long associate and friend. 100,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE. Liberal terms. Freight paid. Credit given. A golden opportunity for you. Outfit free. Write to-day. P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., 215 Locust St., Phila., or 324 Dearborn St., Chicago.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. & P. CO., Willshorn O.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE,
LOWER PRICE
OUR FREE CATALOGUE
TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati

Church News.

FLORIDA.

Inverness, January 15.—I have arrived in Florida. I stopped for two weeks at or near Oxford, where I found a small band of disciples. Brother David Martin is their preacher. He is a true man and an earnest student of God's word. I went from Oxford to Lecanto. I preached there a few times. This little congregation is moving slowly. A few meet in Sunday-school service and read a lesson from the book of God. I am now at Inverness, at the home of Brother W. C. Zimmerman. He and his wife are faithful to the "one way." I preached here once. They are few in numbers and the outlook is not hopeful. I go from here to Dade City, and from there to St. Petersburg, or to some point on the Gulf of Mexico, to aid my health. I will preach to all as I go. God granting me power, I want to hold a meeting in an entirely destitute point and try to build up the cause of Christ in the midst of sectarian circles. Now how many will agree to go out in the world of sin where Christ is not preached and hold forth the word of life to the misguided ones? Shall we try this? God be with us in our efforts to do good while the days are going by. Brother Biggs of Ocala, has launched forth a little paper, which he styles the "Stumbling Block." I hope it may prevent some from stumbling and help them to stand firm against sin and the vain delusions of this world. I expect to remain in Florida a year, if not all the time, and will do what I can to show sinners the way of life.

J. B. HOBBS.

OKLAHOMA.

Cordell, January 16.—I spent the entire month of December in the field. The first Lord's day I spent at Brother Kelley's, near Combs, where I preached three discourses. I then went to Willowvale and spent a week. There I tried hard to get the brethren to go to work, but failed. I went from there to Quartz and spent a few days. The brethren worship according to the gospel at this place. I went from Quartz to Ural, where Brother J. E. Dunn has held two meetings. I spent the holidays very pleasantly at that place. The audiences were good all the week. I was pleased to see the young people attend and enjoy the service of the Lord while others were reveling and making themselves and others miserable. I came home on New-year's Day and have been at home most of the time since. I am trying to make good use of the time preparing for better work in the future. B. C. YOUNG.

TENNESSEE.

Milan, December 9.—My protracted meetings for 1899 are over. I have held nine meetings, two at mission points, all of which have been reported, I believe. My work among the churches has been moderately successful in the way of additions to the church of God and satisfactory to the brethren. I will preach regularly for four or five congregations during 1900. I want to do more mission work next year than I did this year. Weak churches, mission points, churches wishing to do mission work, and isolated brethren wishing preaching will please notify me of their locality and desires, so I can arrange to help them that desire my help. There is no board or society backing me in this work. I am simply, as I have always done, trusting in the Lord for the help necessary to carry on this work. Brethren, do not hesitate to write me if you want my services in preaching the gospel of Christ. E. C. L. DENTON.

TEXAS.

Wimberley, December 23.—My ministerial work is closed here now for the time being. I have several calls and some promises for Northeast Texas, Arkansas, and Indian Territory. It is not possible that I will fill these promises this winter, owing to the cold, bad winter so far. It is probable that I will evangelize in Arizona and Mexico a part of the time next year. A few calls from friends and brethren in those destitute regions demand that I go there. Brethren that need and want help in those parts of the West can write me at once at Wimberley. I hope all will renew their subscription for the Gospel Advocate. Brother Leath, of Wimberley, who has been a regular subscriber for thirty years, says that the Gospel Advocate is better now than ever before, and as long as it continues as pure as it now is the editors may consider him a lifetime subscriber. He is now seventy-three years old, and is full of faith and good works. As we grow older we should grow better and wiser, knowing that the trials of life will soon be over, and those that are laboring in the kingdom of Christ have the promise. Why it is that some brethren slacken their energy and live so cold and indifferent is more than I can account for, knowing that it is a life and death case. Brethren, let us be faithful and work for our Heavenly Father. H. H. TURNER.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

Even Bright's Disease is no Longer Regarded as Hopeless.

If you are suffering from kidney, bladder, or uric acid trouble, and have despaired of getting help, you should try Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. Every reader of the Gospel Advocate may obtain a sample bottle free, by mail, so you may test it for yourself and fully realize the truth of what your friends and fellow-citizens say as regards its marvelous efficacy and worth.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root has been tried and tested by thousands who stand high in this community. It is not recommended for everything; but if you have kidney, bladder, or uric acid trouble, it will be found just the remedy you need. It brings back the rosy flush of health and strength; it is a purifier and rebuilders, and is a boon to the weak and ailing.

To be confronted suddenly with the knowledge that Bright's disease had hold of one was, at one time, equivalent to hearing a death warrant read; but to-day, thanks to the discovery of science and the researches of Dr. Kilmer, no case is entirely hopeless. Even those in advanced stages have been rescued and life prolonged by Swamp-Root.

This great remedy is purely vegetable and contains nothing that could harm the most delicate child. It is pleasant to take, and the regular 50-cent and $1 sizes are sold by all druggists.

Send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and a sample bottle and a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures will be sent to you free.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Pearline

SKIPS NO DIRT

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE
TENN.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

WATTS.

At the advanced age of eighty years, three months, and twenty-seven days Mrs. Margaret G. Watts died on January 20, 1900, at her late residence in Murfreesboro, Tenn. In her nineteenth year she became a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, of which she was a faithful member till death. Those who knew her speak often of her charity, humility, sympathy, and lovable disposition. The writer conducted the funeral services. W. L. LOGAN.

SPENCE.

On January 9, 1900, at the residence of his sister, in this city, Albert Spence breathed his last. Albert was liked by his acquaintances and loved by his friends. He treated the members of his family with such kindness that they were almost broken-hearted at giving him up. May the Lord speak peace to the grief-stricken mother and comfort the sorrowing brothers and sisters. The writer conducted prayers at the residence, and Brother John E. Dunn conducted services at the grave. W. L. LOGAN.

Murfreesboro, Tenn.

BLACKLY.

The death angel has visited Brother and Sister Blackly and claimed Walter. He was born on December 6, 1898, and died on February 3, 1899. On the night of his death little Walter appeared to be as well as usual, and his parents, on awakening next morning, were shocked when they found that the little one had passed away during the night. It is sad for the parents to have to give their child up in that way, but they should remember that their little darling is now at rest.

(Mrs.) M. E. PARKS,

Bogota, Tenn.

DAVIS.

Sister Kim, Morton Davis was born on December 28, 1867; became a member of the church of Christ in 1892; married Mr. John Davis in 1899; and died on January 13, 1900. She was an obliging neighbor, a true friend, a devoted wife, a faithful Christian. Her heart was pure, her spirit was humble, and her life was sweetly beautiful. She was wholly unselfish, sacrificing her pleasure for the welfare of those by whom she was surrounded. May God pour oil into the broken hearts and sunshine into the dark lives of her loved ones. The funeral services were conducted by the writer.

W. L. LOGAN.

Murfreesboro, Tenn.

MALLORY.

Norman H. Mallory was born in Meaford, Ontario, December 29, 1876; obeyed the gospel during the winter of 1893; and died at the home of his father, in Bates, Manitoba, September 16, 1899; aged twenty-two years, eight months, and seventeen days. Brother Mallory was a young man with bright prospects, and was a good, Christian boy. He attended the Nashville Bible School part of two years with the expectation of preaching the gospel of Christ, but was called home on account of the failure of his health, where he died but a short while after his return. He leaves many friends in the city of Nashville, as well as dear loved ones at home, to mourn his departure. D. B. MCANLESS.

SMYTHE.

Another good brother has passed away. Brother Robert Smythe was born in 1864, at Worcester, Mass.; obeyed the gospel in 1877; came to Murfreesboro, Tenn., in 1899; and died on the first Sunday in January, 1900. He was superintendent of the Fort Wayne Electric Light Company at this place. In his business transactions he was honest, upright, and truthful. He was regular in his attendance at the Lord's house and took much interest in its services; he was a Christian, and that is enough to say about any one; he was perfectly devoted to his family, his death being brought about, to a great extent, at least, by his attention to his little girl through a severe illness. The writer conducted the funeral services at his late residence in this place. I pray God to be merciful to his wife and little girl. W. L. LOGAN.

Murfreesboro, Tenn.

WILLIAMS.

Andrew Williams was born in Chat-ham County, N. C., December 20, 1815; and departed this life at his home at Elm Tree, Tenn., August 5, 1899; being eighty-three years, seven months, and fifteen days old. He joined the Christian Church in the year 1830, being a consistent member thereof about sixty-nine years; he joined the Masonic fraternity and was a faithful brother of that order for over fifty years. To know him was to love him. While we mourn his death, may we ever try to imitate his character, that we, too, may leave behind us a model life. O how we miss him in the church—his presence, his prayers, and his example! May the greatness of his life prove to be the means of the salvation of many souls. To the bereaved family I would say: Be steadfast unto the end, that we may meet on the other shore. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." J. T. CABE.

Boydsville, Ky.

BLOOD MONEY.

Consider Your Body as a System of Government—Your Blood as Its Bank.

What currency does it use? Gold? No. Silver? No.

The currency of your blood is iron.

The stability of your government depends upon its funds; its strength depends upon its iron.

Too little iron in your blood means bankruptcy.

Are you bankrupt?

If you are weak, thin, pale, nervous, and easily tired, you are at least on the verge of it; if you have no reserve, you had better create one.

Lay in a fresh stock of blood money. Put iron in your blood. Take Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

This will bridge over the crisis.

Nature will do the rest.

Rich blood is red blood. The red color is caused by iron. "As strong as iron" is literally true. It means red blood and red cheeks, pink nails, pink skin, iron, and the strength of iron in every part of your body.

If you have not got it, Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will give it to you.

Weak organs of every sort—stomach, liver, heart, lungs—come from the want of vitalizing blood—blood with plenty of iron in it.

Indigestion, loss of appetite, headache, backache, lack of vitality, depression of spirits, anæmia, female troubles, general weakness, and chills and ague can be cured by Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Read this from a Texas man:

"Dallas, Texas, December 14, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: I think Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic a good medicine: It certainly put my system in splendid shape. J. M. BEEBE.

"No. 217 Main street."

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackelford & Shackelford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy,
Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1870.

WILCOX BUILDING,

COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,

Atlanta, Georgia.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Field Findings.

"There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God." (Ps. 46: 4.)

The psalmist, David, was a most wonderful man, being a prophet, a poet, and an historian. He could look back up the stream of time and sing of creation, of Edenic happiness, of the temptation, of the fall, of the sorrows that came to the world by reason of sin; and then pass down to the flood, to the bow in the cloud, to the offering of Noah; and then to faithful Abraham—his trials, his humility, his trust in God, his hope of a better country; and then finally down to his own time, when he gives us a description of the world, of the people of God, of their conflicts; and then with a prophetic eye he beholds a river, a city, and streams.

The city was doubtless the one to which the Hebrews had come, "the city of the living God," or "church of the firstborn" (Heb. 12: 22, 23); the stream was Christ, for "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." He is the healing fountain, the cleansing river, and can keep us clean. The streams emanate from him and "make glad the city of God." What can cause us to rejoice more than singing, praying, exhorting, preaching, giving, communing? These are a few of the streams that make glad the city of God. Lord, help us all to realize that we are truly thine, have been bought with a price, and should serve thee as taught in thy word.

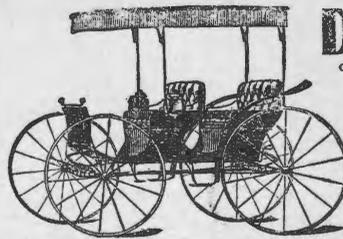

Brother Joe S. Warlick, one of the best debaters in Texas, says of my debate with Thompson: "I have read the discussion between Brother J. H. Lawson and Elder Thompson. I regard it a splendid debate, for the reason that Elder Thompson is above an average debater for the Baptists, which gave Brother Lawson a chance to do himself justice as a debater, in doing which he shows himself more than a match for his opponent; and, having the truth, he had no trouble in doing his part well. I hope the book will have a large circulation, for it will do good wherever read." The debate contains two hundred and five large pages. I will send it and also "Heartfelt Religion" and "Which Church Must I Join?" all for 50 cents. I do this to raise $100 at once, and this offer is good only one week after it appears in the Gospel Advocate. I will refund the money to any one not satisfied with the book. This offer will not appear in the Gospel Advocate any more; so if you want the three for the price of one, send money order to J. H. Lawson, Denton, Texas. Do not send stamps.

The smallpox situation in Denton is now much improved and the disease is confined to two families of the church of Christ. I anticipate no further spread of the loathsome disease.

Brother W. K. Rose has located at Paris, Texas. Brother Rose is an excellent preacher and has been quite successful in the field as an evangelist. He has recently taken a life partner in this great work.

Brother Joe S. Warlick is now confined at home on account of the sickness of Sister Warlick, who has been confined to her bed over ten weeks. I hope that Sister Warlick will soon be restored to health and that Brother Warlick may soon go out in the great field where he is so badly needed.

Brother D. S. Ligon, of Krum, recently made a trip to South Arkansas. I would be glad to receive postal card reports from the preachers of nation and guarantee everything. Send for our large illustrated Catalogue before buying. IT'S FREE.

No. 606—Canopy-Top Surrey, with side curtains, fenders, lamps, storm apron, sun shade and pole or shafts. Price, $63. As good as sells for $55 more.

Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., W. B. PRATT, Secretary, Elkhart, Indiana.

Don't Take Any Chances on an inferior vehicle or harness. Your life and that of your family depends upon their quality and reliability. You can't tell very much about the quality of a vehicle by simply looking at it. The paint and varnish effectually hides the quality of material. Vehicles must be bought largely on faith—faith in the honesty of the manufacturer.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have been selling vehicles and harness direct to consumers for twenty-seven years. In fact we are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. These facts speak volumes for the quality of our goods and our method of doing business. You take no chances; we ship our vehicles and harness anywhere for examination.

No. 75—Single collar and harness, with nickel trimmings. Price, $14. Good as usually sells for $20.

Jos. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.

CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK. 311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

Texas, that I may know what they are doing and use in my "Field Findings." Come, brethren, let me hear from you. J. H. LAWSON.

Denton, Texas.

"If The Cap Fits, Wear It."

If you are suffering from the consequences of impure blood—have boils, pimples, or scrofula sores; if your food does not digest or you suffer from catarrh or rheumatism, you are the one who should take Hood's Sarsaparilla. It will fit your case exactly, make your blood pure, and cure salt rheum, scrofula, rheumatism, dyspepsia, catarrh, and give you perfect health.

HOOD'S PILLS cure all liver ills. Nonirritating.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

CUSTOMERS ASTOUNDED AT OUR BARGAINS IN REMNANTS OF SILK RIBBONS FREE

We have purchased, at recent wholesale auction sales several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length, and many of them are the finest quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades; in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for bonnet strings, neckwear, trimming for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers.

Our stock of Silk Ribbons, from which we put up these 55-cent packages, consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Satin Edge, Silk Brocade, Striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends.

We put up carefully assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, assorted colors. No remnants less than one yard long, and all first-class, useful goods.

We will send 1 package for 35 cents, silver, or 2 cents in 2-cent stamps. Carefully packed in boxes, upon receipt of price. Address PARIS RIBBON CO., Box 3046, New York City, N. Y.

MACBETH'S "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are carefully made of clear tough glass; they fit, and get the utmost light from the lamp, and they last until some accident breaks them. "Pearl top" and "pearl glass" are trade-marks. Look out for them and you needn't be an expert.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Boaz-Thomas Debate.

The Gospel Advocate readers will bear in mind that on April 11, 1899, W. T. Boaz (Christian) and H. K. Thomas (Missionary Baptist) began a religious discussion at Spring Creek Church house, near Boaz, Ky. The propositions were: "(1) The Scriptures teach that to a believing penitent baptism is a condition of the pardon of past sins. (2) The Scriptures teach that the penitent believer has salvation, or remission of sins, before baptism."

The debate was to have continued three days, but Brother Thomas broke down at the close of the first proposition, getting very hoarse, and was not physically able to enter into the discussion of his affirmative proposition, and the debate continued only one day and a half. The conclusion was heard at the same place, beginning on December 6, 1899, Brother Thomas affirming the second proposition.

We expected a little more from Brother Thomas than we received; we expected him to define the terms of his proposition, but that he never did. Brother Boaz asked him, in every speech, of what baptism he was speaking—whether of Christ's or John's. Brother Thomas gave no answer. Brother Boaz asked, over and over again: "Unto what were you baptized?" (Acts 19: 3.) Brother Thomas did not answer at all. Last spring, in the debate, Brother Thomas said that Mark 16: 16 was spurious, or was doubted. Of course this came up again. Brother Boaz asked Brother Thomas if he truly believed Mark 16: 16 to be scriptural. Brother Thomas gave no answer. Brother Thomas was trying all the time to hold up his side of the question by attempting to prove that every believer is saved. He went away back to the patriarchal age and brought up Abraham as a proof that we who are under the new covenant are saved by faith alone. He took the position that Abraham's faith was made perfect when he offered his son, Isaac, upon the altar. (James 2: 20-22.) While Brother Thomas was trying to hold to his "faith-alone salvation" he conceived an idea somehow that there was a wrangle between Christ and John. Where he believed it to occur was in John 8: 30-32. He said: "All believers were saved." Then Brother Boaz turned to John 8: 44 and found some believers were the children of the devil. Then Brother Thomas said that "John said they believed, but Christ did not," and that he was not responsible for the contradiction between Christ and John.

Brother Thomas' whole argument rested on human theories, with a few such scriptural passages as these interwoven: John 3: 14-16, 18, 36; Acts 16: 31; 1 John 5: 1. He spent quite a while on John 5: 24 and John 3: 36, saying: "'He that believeth on the Son hath'—not will have, but hath—'everlasting life.'" He quoted Gal. 3: 26 quite often, always forgetting that verse 27 was next and part of the sentence. Brother Boaz asked Brother Thomas, "What did the Jews do in turning, in Acts 11: 21?" to which he gave no answer. Brother Boaz asked how the sinner believed "into" Christ, and was afterwards baptized "into" Christ, without apostatizing in order to be baptized into Christ. Brother Thomas would not answer.

Brother Boaz had a chart, "Bible against Baptistism." From the chart he quoted: "Baptist—he that believeth is saved and ought to be baptized, if the church votes him in." Brother Thomas denied that being Baptist teaching. Brother Boaz said: "All that I know about it is that when I joined the Baptist Church under Brother Thomas' teaching the church voted me in before Brother Thomas baptized me." Brother Thomas did not deny that; he remained silent on that subject.

Brother Thomas is much farther advanced in years than Brother Boaz. He baptized Brother Boaz into the Missionary Baptist Church, but a few years ago Brother Boaz, seeing his error, came over on the Lord's side. His scriptural arguments prove that he has studied the word of God diligently. His arguments were too much for Brother Thomas. These are only a few of the questions and arguments of the discussion. The debate was well attended. It will do much good for the cause of Christ in that community. A PATIENT HEARER.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is now with us at Belle Plaine. The attendance and preaching are good. I hope and pray for much good to result from the meeting.

Brother I. D. Moffitt is with the brethren at Attica. They have passed through some periods of darkness, so far as flourishing prospects are concerned. They have some faithful soldiers, and with the assistance of Brother Moffitt I trust they will take on new life and that the cause will prosper in their hands.

Brother B. F. Martin is at Burden, lending his assistance in the advancement of the Master's cause. Brother Martin will perform his part well.

Brother C. C. Houston recently closed a week's meeting at Malaby Schoolhouse. Much interest was manifested, but he had to leave them with the interest increasing.

Brother Z. T. Houston preached at Peck on the first Lord's day in January. Brother Houston is ready to do some work in the field. Call him out, brethren.

Brother H. R. Signor is near Medford, O. T. He thinks of locating there.

Brother O. M. Thomason was at

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent permanently cured), and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all sufferers from: Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and nervous diseases, this recipe in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 920 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for Refined Paraffine Wax in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Strong City when I last had a report. He is meeting many new brethren in Kansas. He has had some very successful meetings.

Brother Will. Elmore was at Manchester the last report I had of him.

Brother J. E. Cain was at Little Walnut on a recent Lord's day.

I met with the brethren at Pleasant Hill on a recent Lord's day, the first time I have had that privilege for two or three years.

Brother George Henderson, of Conway Springs, met with us at Pleasant Hill. Brother Henderson is disgusted with the state of affairs at Conway Springs; he cannot indorse the instrumental music in the worship nor the societies that they have inaugurated to assist the Lord's institution. He will soon cast his lot with the brethren at some other point, probably Pleasant Hill. Brother Henderson is a faithful, conscientious man and will add strength to the working force of the congregation wherever he goes.

The writer has promised to assist in the work of reviving the congregation at Antioch, Harper County. They have not met for some time, but there are some there who are not willing to live that way. An effort will be made to get the community interested in the work again.

Brother John F. Stagner is in Oklahomā, preaching the gospel as he goes. There ought to be much accomplished now, as the preachers are well distributed over the field.

Dr. Herrick Johnson says: "You cannot hasten the millennial glory by making the church of Christ a vast soup kitchen or clubhouse or lecture-ship platform, with a gospel attachment. The New Testament is a message. First of all and oftenest of all it must be delivered. 'Go, preach.'" There are some salient points in this extract. It is certain that we cannot advance the cause of Christ by the things mentioned outside of the gospel—no evidence of their being in the Lord's plan, which is the only plan through which the work is to be accomplished. We cannot hope to reach the end that God designs to be accomplished without following the instructions suggested by his wisdom. God's love suggested the proper thing, his wisdom made no mistake in devising it, his power correctly executed it. If success is to be attained through us, we must be perfectly submissive to the divine arrangement. We may be enabled to make some show of human wisdom, but it will not stand the test when brought under the scrutiny of God's searching truth. It would be safer for us to submit it to such a test before we undertake to press it upon others. If the light of God's wisdom is shed upon it, it will reveal its defects. A sham shows up well sometimes until it is punctured; then the inwardness of the thing becomes a stench in the nostrils of the pure. It is not safe to become attached to any system until we have put it in the balance of God's truth and weighed it correctly. We certainly know that there is but one correct standard by which to measure our lives and our work in the vineyard, and that is nothing less than God's book as applied to the circumstances. This followed, and our work will be uniform and harmonious.

D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

When I Die.

When I am dead and my life work is done; when I am about to be laid away to await the trumpet of the archangel, and my loved ones are gathered about my coffin to bid a last farewell to my remains, then I want no flowers from those who did not give me such and wish me good cheer while I lived; I want no hypocritical encomiums or fair speeches of praise from those who cursed, or blamed, or falsely accused me in life; I want no preacher display of funeral oratory from those who could not or would not fellowship me in the service of my Master.

I despise the hypocritical cant which praises when I am dead, but cursed me as a heretic in life. I want no crocodile tears or sprig of evergreen from such. My life is ended; let me go. Turn to the living, the suffering, and give to them the sympathy and praise which may do them good. I have always despised the hypocrisy which railed at a Roman Catholic purgatory and the priestcraft which pretended to pray men through it, and then did the same thing under the name of "a funeral."

If any have cheered or blessed me while living, or if there be any whose lives I have made brighter, any upon whose countenance I have provoked an innocent smile, or whose burdens I may have helped to bear—if these should attend my funeral and shed an honest tear or lay one flower upon my grave from sincere love, so be it; and may God bless them.

I am sure that life is the time to do good to our fellow-men, and that when they are dead our opportunities toward them have forever ceased. No amount of praise can undo the evil we may have done them, nor can it atone for the good we could have done. Life's road is a hard one, at best, and those who have found a spiteful sort of pleasure in throwing stones at me and across my pathway during life should not add insult to injury by professing a sorrow they do not feel or by expressing a hypocritical praise for one they damned through life. Still, nothing men may do or say can change the destiny of the dead. His own life, now done, has worked out for him an eternal weight of glory or sunk him down amidst the wreck of a world, through sin, to unutterable woe. No prayers or tears or words of praise can change the fact that men must reap what they sow. JOHN T. POE.

FITS STOPPED FREE Permanently Cured by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER. No Fits after first day's use. Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE to Fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery. Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. H. H. KLINE, Ltd., 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR the grandest and fastest-selling book ever published, Pulpit Echoes OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART. Containing Mr. MOODY'S best Sermons, with 500 Thrilling Stories, Incidents, Personal Experiences, etc., as told By D. L. Moody. Amself. With a complete history of his life by Rev. CHAS. F. GOSS, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Chicago Church for five years, and an Introduction by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D. Brand new, 600 pp., beautifully illustrated. 71,000 more AGENTS WANTED—Men and Women. 7 Sales immense—a harvest time for Agents. Send for terms to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,

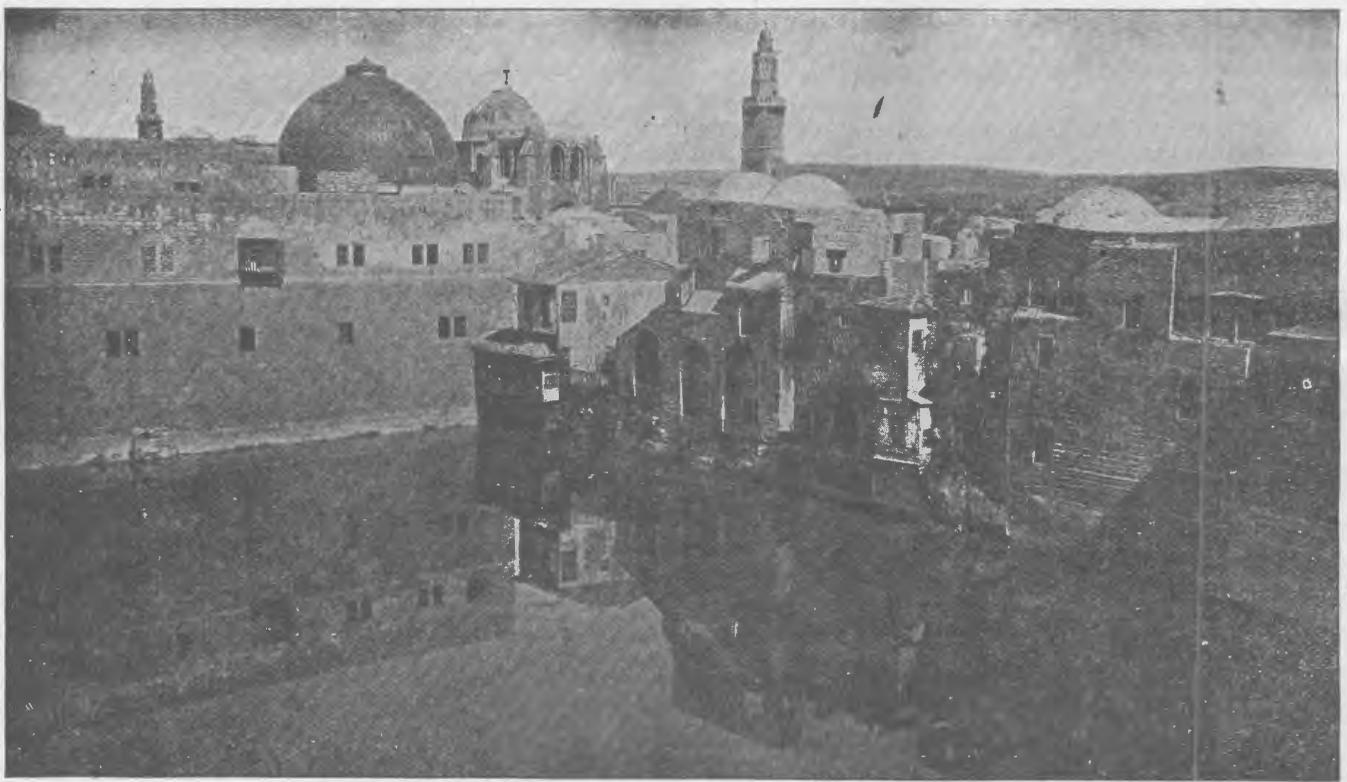

No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF $1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR, WE WILL FORWARD THE BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO-
NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mamilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii. 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii. 30)

(The above is a specimen illustration from the Art Bible, No. 933.)

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE, $2.00 flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium for ONE NEW subscriber. * * * * *

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals, for one year, with the choice of ONE of the following premiums, FOR $1.50
(a) Home and Farm, One Year;
(b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
(c) Our New Calendar for 1900. * * * *

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. * * * ADDRESS

 GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. ***

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 6.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, FEBRUARY 8, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

How to Approach God.....	82
Great Opportunities.....	82
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 27.....	83
The Gospel of Christ—What is It?.....	84
Miscellany.....	85
Queries.....	86
Home Reading.....	87
Predestination and Providence.....	88
Mormonism, Again.....	88
Large Gifts to the Public.....	88
The Narrow Way.....	89
Obituaries.....	90
Into all the World.....	91
General News.....	92
The Shed Blood of Christ.....	93
Southwest Texas—Report for November and December.....	94
A Lesson in Ethics.....	94
What Must Man Believe?.....	95
An Incident, with a Lesson.....	96
A Further Explanation.....	96

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper: We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

A brother in Kentucky sends me the following paragraph from the Pentecostal Herald, and asks me to "tell, on the first page of the Gospel Advocate, in a simple, straightforward manner, the way of salvation, that a 'poor girl,' or anybody else, may understand it:"

"Do we, as preachers and professed followers of Christ, know how to tell sinners the way of salvation? Did the reader ever see a preacher with a penitent on his hands, who did not know what to say or what to do with the seeker? In a conversation with a very excellent Christian woman a few days ago, she told us an incident that shows how sadly some fail at this point. A poor girl was dying of consumption. She was not a Christian, and was very anxious to have the minister come and tell her how to be saved. Our friend went after the preacher—one of the most prominent ministers of the town—and went with him to see the dying girl. Said she: 'The hour spent in that sick chamber was agony to me. Instead of telling the poor girl in a simple, straightforward manner the way of salvation, he sat there and went over one of his old, dry sermons, abounding in theological terms and subtle distinctions, from which neither the ignorant girl nor any one else could get an intelligent idea of how to come to Christ. After he had gone away, the poor child pulled the cover over her face, and said: "Mamma, I don't want to see the preacher any more."' There are learned and eloquent men, men who have large churches and receive big salaries for their preaching, who can no more tell sinners how to be saved than the most illiterate hod carrier can teach astronomy. An altar full of penitent souls would at once put them at their wits' end. A preacher may live without Milton, and die without Shakespeare, and be guiltless; but the man who spends his life in the place of a minister of the gospel of Christ, and yet is ignorant of the practical science of salvation, will fare worse in the judgment than the idolatrous priest who ministers at the altars of Buddha. Whatever else we may know, or not know, we should by all means be skilled in pointing the way to the cross."

It would be easier to understand "the way of salvation" if preachers would quit trying to tell it and simply read it as God has told it in the New Testament. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. . . . Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (Acts 2: 37-41.) "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing." (Acts 8: 30.) "Go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9: 6.) "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) "Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, and brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." (Acts 16: 29-34.) "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) This is the way God tells "the way of salvation." No one knows anything about it except what God has told. What God tells is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, repent, and be baptized "in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Those who do this are "one body in Christ" and their duty is to live as Christ lived. This is "the way of salvation" and those who do this are saved, else the promises of God have failed.

The following communication was written by a practical business man in Nashville:

"Gospel Advocate: In the first number for 1900 of the Independent there is much food for serious thought and reflection. In it are contained reports, covering the past year of 1899, of all the religious denominations in the United States, the reports being made by some one occupying either a very prominent or an authoritative position in the church. These are supplemented with the best obtainable statistics got up by the editor, and obtained in the main from the officers of the different religious bodies, giving the number of churches, preachers, and members for the past two years, and contrasting the two. In these reports and figures, which substantially agree, one or two very striking facts are developed, about which I believe an article by Mr. Srygley would do much good.

"The first of these relates to the Southern Methodist Church. This most powerful religious sect has had a marvelous growth. In fact, it is stated by Dr. Hoss that it has had a growth of two hundred and fifty per cent in a single generation. The statistics for the past year show that this remarkable growth and progress has suddenly ceased, not by the slow process of neglect and decay, but has suddenly ceased; and not only has it abruptly stopped growing, but the past year shows an actual loss of membership. This sudden step backward bears date, or nearly so, with the acceptance of a fund voted the church by Congress. It has been charged by leading Methodists all over the country that its acquisition was besmirched by questionable means. It is idle to argue the question as to whether a real wrong was committed or intended. All, I think, will agree that it had the 'appearance of evil,' which we are told to avoid, and which the church, in its organized capacity, declined to avoid. A large part of Methodism, and unitedly in the other churches, felt the effects in Christianity for a church to do a thing which would seriously compromise a man or body of men of the world who would do the same thing.

"Dr. Hoss, referring to the past year, says that for thirty-three years this is the first setback the church has ever experienced. No cause is assigned—the church, indeed, does not seem to be agreed as to the cause. But looking at it from the outside, does the congressional fund afford an explanation as to why they alone, of all the large Southern churches, should show an actual decrease in membership? What does the Advocate think of this? The question is not asked through curiosity. If it is true, it teaches a profoundly important lesson to all churches in the future.

"Another interesting fact shown by these reports is that while few of the denominations show an actual decline in membership, all, or nearly all, show an arrested development when gauged purely by conversions or church accessions. But, when viewed from the standpoint of finance, every one is hopeful and prosperous to a degree. The change is striking—astonishing. All, without exception, show increased contributions and collections. Even those showing a decreased membership have collected more money than in any other year of their entire history. The Cumberland Presbyterians, with a membership of only 186,000, start out the new year to collect a cool million for education. The Southern Methodists set themselves the task of collecting a million and a half for the same purpose, and Dr. Hoss thinks the collections will exceed the amount asked for. But the Northern Methodists have determined to distance all competition and rivalry. With a membership less than double the Southern branch that undertakes a million and a half, she announces her determination to raise twenty millions of dollars as a "century thank offering!" And in raising these vast amounts, all seem to be succeeding, according to their reports, beyond their most enthusiastic expectations. This magazine contains a report made for the Disciples of Christ. I shall be careful of what I say here, because the question is a delicate one and the movement immensely popular. But in this report, which is signed by B. B. Tyler, D.D., special prominence is given to the enormous amounts collected and disbursed by the different boards, and to their largely increased collections. She would seem to be in the same boat with the others.

"Now, my second question is this: Is it possible or probable that the energies of the church have been engrossed in the collection of money to the detriment of soul saving? Have they been educating their membership into a belief that their chief duty is to give, and that if a member pays promptly and liberally, he has discharged his full duty as a Christian? And may not this mercenary spirit produce, in course of time, coldness, stagnation, and final death? Does this offer an explanation to the sudden halt in the march of progress that has become apparent in most of the churches? If it does, there is but one voice sufficiently strong to stem the current and bring the churches back to primitive methods, and that is the powerful voice of an earnest and united religious press—a press that will not only sound the warning, but that will nail it to their mastheads. What does the Advocate think of this question?

READER."

This is a well-written article, and it ought to receive more than passing notice.

The denominations which contribute most money per capita through regular denominational organizations have for years had the least per cent of increase in membership. The largest per cent of increase in membership has been in denominations which have the greatest per cent of members and churches which either openly oppose or else do not actively support the regular denominational organization. Among those classed as Disciples probably a large majority of members and churches openly oppose all denominational organization and conduct all religious work and worship on the New Testament basis of personal consecration and individual effort. There is strong and increasing opposition in every denomination in Christendom to all forms of ecclesiastical and denominational organization, and in favor of the New Testament idea of personal consecration and individual effort in religious work and worship. This opposition in every denomination in Christendom comes from those who are poor in purse, but active and self-denying in evangelism. The denominations which pay the largest average salaries to preachers have the least preaching and the fewest preachers. This weeding-out process, which has been going on for years, has left all denominational organizations largely in the hands of rich people who pay others liberally to do their religious work, with a ministry that will do other people's work in the Lord for liberal pay. People who pay others to do their work and folks who do other people's work in religion for pay do not make many converts to Christ. They lose interest in Christianity for Christ's sake and drift into "a form of godliness, denying the power thereof." This explains why the contributions are increasing and the conversions decreasing in all denominations. The government claim scandal in the Southern Methodist Church no doubt strengthened the opposition to denominational organizations in general, and to that church in particular, because it illustrates the evils in the whole fabric of organized religion; but the opposition existed before that scandal occurred. The opposition is not based on any specific act of organized religion; it is directed against the principle and system of unscriptural organizations which are wrong in nature and evil in tendency. The lethargy in religion which is so general and so greatly deplored is no doubt due in large measure to widespread opposition to denominational organization and methods. It is exceedingly doubtful whether this opposition can ever be overcome sufficiently to revive religious interest and enthusiasm in denominational organizations and methods of work. The indications seem to be that religion has gone about as far as it can go on the basis of denominational methods and organization. The hope of revival of interest in Christianity is in the dissolution of all unscriptural organization and a return to the New Testament basis of personal consecration and individual effort in religious work and worship. Whether this radical change will occur soon or be delayed many years by the efforts of denominational organizations to maintain themselves, cannot be predicted. The hope that "the powerful voice of an earnest and united religious press" will "stem the current and bring the churches back to primitive methods" is probably not well grounded. The financial interests and business opportunities of the religious press are not in that direction. To the extent religious papers and professional preachers are influenced by financial interests and business opportunities they will steer clear of "primitive methods" as long as possible. The hope of a return to primitive methods is in consecrated men and women who will read the New Testament for themselves and follow its teaching without any regard at all to "the powerful voice of an earnest and united religious press" and professional ministry.

Our Contributors.

How to Approach God.

To those whose minds have not been prejudiced by erroneous teaching, it is very easy to learn from the New Testament the full scriptural answer to the question, What must I do to be saved? Indeed, there are thousands now living who cannot remember the time they were first taught the conditions of salvation as revealed in the New Testament, and can easily give book, chapter, and verse of the scriptures in which they are found.

But it does a person no good to know these things unless he does them. It is a poor boast to claim knowledge of the plan of salvation while refusing to obey the gospel of Christ. Indeed, it but deepens one's condemnation to be refusing to walk in the light he has. It is bad enough to be in ignorance, it is infinitely worse to possess the truth and not obey it.

There is required upon the part of every worshiper of God a certain heart preparation before one can come acceptably before him. 'Tis true the conditions of salvation if rightly understood and appreciated include this heart preparation, yet it is feared it is absent in many instances where a flippant repetition of the conditions of salvation is easily made. It is a fearful error to take a mental knowledge of what is required for that heart preparation necessary to acceptably obey God.

No one can afford to approach God or his institutions in a light and irreverent manner. The soul should draw back in horror at the very possibility of such an error. Even in the shadowy Mosaic dispensation the Israelites must wash their clothes and sanctify themselves in body and spirit to come even to the boundary of the lower part of the mount to hear the voice of Jehovah as it pronounced the decalogue from Sinai's flaming top. 'Tis true we are not come to that mount that might be touched and thereby bring instant death, but we are come unto the same living God, under a better covenant, through a better mediator, more precious blood, and better promises. These points of superiority but increase our responsibility; our faith should be stronger, our hope brighter, our love more intense.

They court a deep damnation who reason from the superiority of the gospel dispensation that a careless indifference to divine appointments will be tolerated by Jehovah. The apostle's comparison of the gospel covenant with those which preceded it was to warn the disobedient of "sorer" or severer punishment. To neglect so great salvation was to incur a greater loss and penalty. (Read Heb. 12: 18-29.)

Too close attention, therefore, cannot be given the proper heart preparation required to approach God.

Isaiah charges the sin of abomination upon the Israelite who offered the ox, not because there was any blemish upon the ox—it was as required in the law; it was also offered at the right place, by the priests, the proper persons, and in all due form as to the outward ceremony; but the whole service was abomination to God because of the spirit of him who made the offering, it was "as if he slew a man." He possessed not the true spirit of worship in his heart.

For similar reason he who sacrificed the lamb without blemish, which in itself was the choicest offering of all the preceding ages because it most fittingly typified the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world, yet even that failed to please God, and it was charged upon him who made the sacrifice that he as well had cut off a dog's neck. The dog was a notoriously unclean animal under the law. The spirit of true worship to God was not in the heart of the man who sacrificed the lamb.

He who offered the oblation for similar reasons as well had brought "swine's blood," which was known to be abomination to God.

The odorous incense whose delightful fragrance arose from the golden censers night and morning failed to please the Lord also because of the lack of the true worshipful spirit in those who burned it. That service was as though they blessed an idol. (See Isa. 66: 1-5.)

The connection points clearly to the cause of God's displeasure. It was the lack of true heart service upon the part of the worshipers. Hence the Lord says: "To this man will I look [that is, with favor], even to him that is poor." What poorness is here meant? Not financial poverty nor lack of worldly wealth. It has no reference to that one way or the other, but it means that great principle which the Son of God laid down in the foundation of his spiritual kingdom. The first great truth he uttered in the Sermon on the Mount was this: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5: 3.) This poverty of spirit is necessary to please God, no matter how much we know of his word. A man might be able to read the Bible in all languages and repeat it from Genesis to Revelation and succeed in impressing others with the idea that he was a perfect prodigy of learning and yet lack this essential quality of heart to please God.

Furthermore, the Lord says he will look with favor to the "contrite in spirit." "Contrition" means sorrow for sin which results in turning from sin in purpose and in deed. In truth it is repentance deep and sincere, just such as the Lord requires under the gospel. Lacking on this point, they failed to please God, who yet requires all men everywhere to repent.

Finally, God says he looks with favor to him that "trembleth" at his word. The very light and irreverent regard in which God's word is often held destroys the benefit of worship which even may be perfect in its outward form. A heart which will change or pervert the word of God is not prepared to worship God acceptably. Such cannot worship God, though with beautiful and imposing service the eyes and ears of men may be charmed. God is a spirit. Those who worship him must worship in spirit and in truth. All worship acceptable to God is spiritual. Christianity is spiritual. It is like the true circumcision, which, as Paul says, "is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." G. LIPSCOMB.

Great Opportunities.

That we may do anything at all for the Lord and in his name is a great blessing and privilege, and should be highly appreciated. This appreciation ought to be shown in a life of joyful, willing service, doing with our might what our hands find to do. "So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, and especially toward them that are of the household of the faith." (Gal. 6: 10, R. V.) Jesus said, "The poor ye have with you always," and in each community there are those to whom we may minister. Every congregation caring for its poor and for all those in the immediate neighborhood would not only prove to the world that the church is God's institution for doing such work, but would be fruit increasing to the account of those who "abound in this grace also." (2 Cor. 8: 7; See also Phil. 4: 17.) This will make us more unselfish and we will be anxious to help the needy in other communities, States, and countries.

Another opportunity that may be enjoyed is to support the gospel at home and in as many places as we possibly can. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." (Gal. 6: 6.) The Philippian congregation "sent once and again unto" Paul's need. (Phil. 4: 10-19.) There are hundreds of congregations doing nothing at all for the support of the gospel away from home, and perhaps not much at home. If all the congregations who are opposed to missionary societies would give as much as those working through the societies, it would amount to nearly three times as much as is contributed through the societies. In other words, something like $1,000,000 would be given by them for the spread of the glorious gospel. Surely the "loyal" churches ought to do as much as the "disloyal" churches! This would give 2,000 missionaries $500 each a year. Where are the laborers? But think of it! Even those who have made sacrifices and have gone into the field are to a great extent neglected, and by many seemingly forgotten. Quite a number of faithful, loyal missionaries are now toiling, and the opportunities to help support them, thus presented, should not be despised. Among this number I would mention Brother Eugene Snodgrass, of Tokyo, Japan. How lonely he must be in a strange land of idolatry and corruption! Such little interest is shown in his work for the Lord in that place that, notwithstanding he has many friends at home and that there are thousands of congregations able to help, he writes: "Sometimes he [Jesus] seems to be the only friend we have."

Brother Bishop also, who has recently gone to Japan, should not be forgotten. Even some of those who promised to support that work are not as diligent as they might be. Too often it seems that the statement, "Out of sight, out of mind," is proved to be true.

Brother R. W. Officer, of Indian Territory, has been watching over the sick bed of his wife for about four months. He has no hope of her recovery. Many sacrifices have been made by these servants of Christ, and yet how many send to them "once and again" to "refresh" them? How many letters of sympathy have been sent to this brother? "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Brother J. L. Davis, of Pulaski County, Ky., preaches much of his time, and would gladly put in all of his time, but has to attend to his crops. With just a little help how much work may be done!

Brother Morton, likewise in East Tennessee, is engaged in a good missionary work, and support should be given him that he may put in all of his time in that part of the vineyard.

John A. Klingman has gone to New York State, and amidst many discouragements is "preaching the word." A good beginning has been made and more congregations ought to be interested in the spread of the gospel in the East.

Then we have Brother J. M. McCaleb and family with us for a short time. Since their stay here in Louisville they have all been sick. Not a word of murmuring; always bright and cheerful, they trust on. While in Japan, Brother McCaleb partly supported himself and family by teaching English. He has no such opportunity in this country, and therefore the brethren ought to be all the more solicitous about their welfare. No one knows what a great strain their labor has been on them and how much a change and rest are necessary. Let us make them comfortable and refresh their spirits. It grieves me no little to see this faithful servant neglected. Will not those especially who know him in person remember him with an offering? Send it to 2601 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky. The mistake often made is to feel that because we cannot send a large amount we need not send "just a little." If each of the loyal congregations in Kentucky and Tennessee, alone, would send only $1, it would amount to over $1,000. Select the field and the laborers you want to help sustain and send regularly, systematically, to those brave soldiers of the cross. Let us meet all the arguments of the "societies" by the silent, humble, yet overwhelming and unanswerable argument of the actual work done.

GEORGE A. KLINGMAN.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 27.

It was delightful to have a few hours on shore, after having been aboard ship so long; but on stepping from the gang plank we were besieged by beggars,—blind beggars, crippled beggars, sick and creeping beggars, beggars young and old. Lazy fellows were lying, full length, on the pavements; the streets were filled with vendors, with here and there Egyptian women veiled with a black veil from just below the eyes to the knees. A greater variety of dresses and appearances would be hard to imagine.

While lying here several hundred tons of coal were taken on board the Oceana. In lifting this coal no machinery was used, it being carried on the back by Arabs and Nubians in baskets holding about two bushels each. A man stood at the head of the gang plank with a box of coins in hand and paid each man for his load of coal as he passed by. This paying for each load caused a tremendous rush, for they fairly ran, and the coal seemed to pour into the bunkers in one constant stream. It is claimed that in no other port in the world can a ship be so quickly coaled as here.

At 9:30 o'clock P.M. on August 16 we sailed out of Port Said into the far-famed Mediterranean Sea, and after sailing two nights and one day over its smooth waters, early on the morning of the 18th, when I awoke, I discovered that we were running near the southern coast of Crete, which is one hundred and fifty-eight miles in length and from eight miles to forty miles in width. It has a population of 300,000 people, most of whom belong to the Greek Church. I could see that the whole coast was rough and jagged. I was particularly interested, because we passed in plain view of Fair Havens, where the apostle Paul touched when he was a prisoner on his way to Rome. The circumstances of his visit came vividly into my mind. When it was determined to send Paul to Rome, they delivered him and certain other prisoners to the centurion, Julius, who placed them on a ship of Adramyttium, on which they sailed to Myra. "And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy," on which he placed the prisoners, and sailed for Cnidus. The distance between these two points is only one hundred and thirty miles, and under favorable circumstances they might have made that distance in twenty-four hours; but the baffling wind still continued with unseasonable steadiness, and to reach even Cnidus occupied many weary and uncomfortable days; and when they were just ready to enter the beautiful and commodious harbor they were destined to a fresh and bitter disappointment, for they could not enter it. Now the only alternative left them was to make for Cape Salmone, at the eastern end of the island, and there sail under its lee. To get to Salmone was comparatively easy; but when they had rounded it they had the utmost difficulty in creeping along the weather shore until they came to Fair Havens, near which was a city called "Lasea," which Luke mentions, not on account of its importance, but probably because during the vessel's stay in the roadstead an intercourse was established between its inhabitants and the storm-bound voyagers. They waited long for a favorable wind; they waited, indeed, until "the fast was now already past," and the equinox at hand, when mariners of antiquity shrank from open sea navigation. The captain hesitated whether he should winter at Fair Havens or endeavor to gain some more convenient harbor. Here Paul, whose remarkable ascendancy had already displayed itself, was allowed to express himself in regard to the matter, and he was most decidedly in favor of remaining where they were. "Sirs," said he, "I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives." Such, however, was not the decision of the owner of the vessel; nor, it would seem, of the majority of those on board; for it was decided to make an effort to reach Phenice, which was only a few hours' sail. If they could only reach that port, they would enjoy the protection of an excellent harbor. They did not wait long till a soft south wind sprang up, and, gladly weighing anchor, they hoisted the mainsail, took their boat in tow, sailed close along the shore to the point of Cape Matala, and then gayly prepared for a delightful run to the beautiful and hospitable harbor for which they were abandoning the dull, dreary Lasea. Now at last a little gleam of prosperity seemed to have shone on their tedious and unfortunate voyage. Perhaps they had a good-natured laugh against Paul, the prisoner, for advice which would have made them throw away a golden opportunity. But—alas!—the gentle breathing of the south wind in the sails and cordage was but a siren song which had lured them to their destruction. They had not passed the cape when "a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon," burst down from Mount Ida and smote with terrible fury the hapless ship. From the first moment that this fatal blast rushed down and seized the ship in its grasp, its condition was practically hopeless. It was utterly impossible for her to "look the wind in the face," and, as expressed by Luke, "we let her drive." She was driven across our track and on for twenty-three miles, when they neared the little island of Claudia and ran in under its lee. But here we must part company with Paul and join him again when we reach Malta, and from his traveling companion learn how he fared after passing out of sight of Claudia. As for ourselves, we must pass on by Crete, past the Ionian isles and classic Greece, and across the Adriatic Sea to Brindisi.

Early on the morning of August 19 we sighted the southern coast of Italy, and at 11:30 o'clock A.M. we anchored in the once-famous harbor of Brindisi. As quickly as possible I went ashore and made a hasty excursion through the city. One thing that attracted and annoyed me was the filth in the streets. They contained all kinds of garbage, and in some places the stench was fearful. My attention was attracted to a woman in a room on a second floor in a house which stood on one of the main streets. She lifted a tub of filthy water and dashed it out of a window into the street below. A man who happened to be passing by received the whole of it on his head and shoulders. After seeing that I walked in the middle of the street.

This is the ancient Brundisium. Here the Romans established a colony B.C. 244. It increased very rapidly in population and prosperity; it was the chief naval station of the Romans in the Adriatic, from which their generals crossed to the Illyrian mainland to Greece and to Asia Minor, to which they so often returned in triumph and laden with the spoils of conquered nations; it was here that Cæsar besieged Pompey till the latter effected his escape to Illyricum; it was here that the young Octavius first assumed the name of Cæsar, and was saluted by the acclamations of the veteran cohorts whom his great predecessor had so often led to victory; here, in B.C. 19, died the poet Virgil, on his return from Greece; it was here that a gloom was cast over our ship's company. One of our passengers had just gone ashore in company with her husband and infant child, in high spirits because she had the privilege of being on shore once more; but, without the least warning, she fell, and when her husband raised her up, life was extinct.

After leaving Brindisi we sailed around the southern coast of Italy and near enough to the island of Sicily to see the light from the celebrated volcano, Mount Ætna, which was then in a violent state of eruption. Mount Ætna lifts her head 10,874 feet above the level of the sea, which enabled us to see the light quite distinctly, notwithstanding the fact that we were ninety miles away.

On Sunday morning, August 21, we anchored in the harbor at Valetta, Malta. On going ashore I found everything strange and calculated to interest. The first place I visited was the church of St. John's, which was crowded. This building was erected in 1508, and was one of the richest ecclesiastical edifices in Europe, until Napoleon's soldiers swept away its treasures. The next place I visited was the principal thoroughfare, Strada Reale. Here, although it was Sunday morning, all was business and stir. It reminded me of the scene I so frequently saw on Saturdays, in "Paddy's Market," in Sydney. Everything almost that one would care to buy was there exhibited, as were hundreds of things that he didn't want to buy; even old iron, old books, second-hand clothes, matches, vegetables, fruits, meats, and so on. This market was well patronized by priests and veiled nuns and other devotees of Rome who were returning from early mass.

A hasty run through several places was very interesting. The architecture of the houses is quaint, having deep porches and projecting galleries. The streets are nicely paved and well kept. I saw a man driving a herd of goats along the street. He had a bell in his hand, which kept up a continuous ringing. Being anxious to learn his object, I followed him for a distance. He stopped in front of a residence, a woman handed him a pitcher, and he caught a goat by the horns, drew her to the curbstone, and milked her, thus giving his customer warm, fresh milk for breakfast. That certainly is economical, as he had no use for a wagon, horse, and milk cans.

Valetta is a solid network of fortifications, and it has been said that, since Great Britain commands the entrance to the Mediterranean, and here the fortifications are so very strong, no power on earth could take Malta.

Malta is seventeen miles long and nine miles broad and contains about ninety-five square miles. On the west and south the cliffs rise sheer from the sea to a height of 300 or 400 feet; on the north the rock in many places shelves to the water's edge, though the harbors of Valetta and rocks where Paul was wrecked are an exception to this.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

Love is the greatest thing that God can give us, for himself is Love.—Jeremy Taylor.

He who would influence men must not live so severed from them that he ceases to know and understand them.—Van Oosterzee.

A child of God should be a visible beatitude for joy and happiness, and a living doxology for gratitude and adoration.—C. H. Spurgeon.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST—WHAT IS IT?

The word "gospel" signifies "good news," "glad tidings." The word "gospel" by itself would not define or determine what sort of good news, but there are connected with it in various places words that define definitely what kind of good news is meant. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." (Mark 1: 14, 15.) The good news in this proclamation was in the expression, "The kingdom of God is at hand." Other passages put it, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." These two expressions mean the same kingdom which Jesus meant when he said: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The expressions, "the kingdom of God," "the kingdom of heaven," "my church," "the church of God," "churches of Christ," and such like expressions, all refer to the same grand institution revealed in the New Testament. This kingdom, this plan of salvation, was foretold all along through the Old Testament, and the Jewish people and others that had some knowledge through the Jews of these prophecies were anxiously looking for this kingdom to appear. But they mistook the nature of this kingdom, supposing it would be an earthly kingdom, like that of David and Solomon; and when the proclamation began to be made, first by John, then by Christ, and then by the twelve under their first commission, that this kingdom was at hand, had come nigh unto them, it was the very thing they wanted to hear, and it took wonderfully among the Jewish people. It was such exceedingly good news to them that in a little while "Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan," went out unto John, "and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." When Christ began preaching regularly it was said of him that he made and baptized more disciples than John, his disciples doing the baptizing. But as time passed on, and the kingdom did not appear as they expected, these disciples began to drop out; so that finally, when the time came for the kingdom to be established, only a few of them are mentioned. This shows the danger of forming theories about the fulfillment of prophecies before the time comes for them to be fulfilled. Their theories regarding the kingdom of heaven were utterly wrong; but they were too impatient to wait and see what was about to come, and gave the matter up, because it did not come as they thought it would. They had no conception of a spiritual kingdom; they understood not how any system of things could pertain to the heart, to the soul of man, and be intended for the purification and elevation of the whole being of man. Although Jesus had said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you" (Luke 17: 20, 21), they understood it not; they did not understand how the reign of heaven was to be built up and carried on in the hearts of men, and, through their hearts, control their whole lives. They had been accustomed to see kingdoms come "with observation," to see them built up by physical force, and to see them ruled by physical might; and because they did not understand how the kingdom of heaven was going to rule men, they in their haste dropped out the whole matter, and thus lost all its benefits. So the good news of the kingdom of heaven was lost to them; and the good news contained in the gospel of Christ in its fully-developed state is lost to thousands, because they do not form proper conceptions of its true nature and designs. It is of great importance that we understand the true meaning of the word "gospel" as applied to the plan of salvation through Jesus our Lord. Paul says: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Rom. 1: 16.) The expression, "the gospel of Christ," means the good news concerning Jesus Christ and the salvation he has provided for a perishing world; but there are so many false theories as to what the gospel of Christ is, and how it is to save men, that thousands are deceived by these false theories, and fail to secure its precious blessings. No theory of the gospel will save any one; it is only the gospel itself that has the power to save.

The expression, "gospel of Christ," in some of its uses in the New Testament, embraces everything necessary to take men to heaven. In this extended sense it takes in everything that we are required to believe and do in order to be saved. The gospel of Christ, therefore, consists in facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promises to be enjoyed. Paul, in 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4, presents the facts to be believed: "How that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." Here are three grand facts that Paul calls the gospel—the facts that Christ died for our sins, that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day—and he says that by these the Corinthians were saved. These are facts, something that Jesus did for man; and yet some men speak of the gospel as an abstract power that enters the hearts of men and saves them. Others speak of the gospel in such a loose, indefinite way as to make the impression that almost anything is gospel to a man that is in earnest to find salvation. But Paul represents the gospel in this passage as purely matters of fact, external facts, that actually occurred at Jerusalem when Jesus died and rose again; and these facts are to be believed in order to believe the gospel. A man may believe all the false theories that have ever been raised regarding the gospel, and yet be lost unless he believes these facts. Jesus said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Preach the gospel." To preach the gospel it is necessary to preach these facts just as Peter through the Holy Spirit preached them on the day of Pentecost. He preached these facts and required the people to believe them. So when Jesus said, "He that believeth," he meant he that believeth the gospel, which includes these facts. People must believe these facts or be lost. "He that believeth not shall be damned." The gospel, then, as the sinner is required to believe it, is a very plain and simple matter, consisting in facts that a child can understand; and to believe these facts is one of the commands of the gospel: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Repentance is also one of the commands of the gospel to be obeyed, and so is baptism. These are conditions upon which the Lord proposes to save people by the gospel. Paul says: "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thess. 1: 7-9.) This passage shows beyond any doubt that people must obey the gospel, must do what the gospel requires them to do, or be lost; it shows that full obedience to the gospel includes all the service to God that people are to render in this life in order to be saved; and it shows that those who do not do these things are certain to be lost in eternity. So, then, in order to be saved in heaven by the gospel, a man must believe the truth of the gospel, must repent, be baptized, and then live the Christian life as the gospel plan of salvation requires, in order to reach heaven. When these are done, the gospel is obeyed. Peter says: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" (1 Pet. 4: 17, 18.) This passage also shows plainly that ruin, inevitable ruin, will be the result to every one that refuses to obey the gospel of Christ, that refuses to do just what the gospel requires to be done. Nothing else will do in its place.

These passages show beyond dispute that salvation to man by the gospel is conditional; and these conditions are palpable realities, that no man can ignore and be saved. Faith is one of these conditions, and Jesus says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." Repentance is another, and Jesus says: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Baptism also is one of the conditions, and Jesus says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." To be born of water, as understood by commentators and Bible students, is to be baptized in water. These passages show the utter impossibility of any sinner being saved that does not do these things. Hence becoming a Christian is conditional to every sinner on earth. The same is true in regard to the Christian life. Paul says to Christians: "Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life: but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile." This passage makes it perfectly certain that eternal life is conditional to the children of God. The condition is that they shall persevere in doing the requirements of the gospel to the end of life, and that if they do not do so the loss of their souls is inevitable. So the gospel requires men to do something in order to save them.

When I was young, the religious people of my community thought that man could do nothing toward his salvation—that the Lord did it all by an abstract operation of the Spirit upon his heart; but the passages we have presented in this not only show that there is something for man to do, but that if he does not do it he will be lost. But nothing man can do has the power to save him; God proposes to save certain characters, and the things that the gospel requires men to do are just the things that give or make up the character that God proposes to save. When men obey all the requirements of the gospel—come into Christ, into his body, the church, and then continue to live as God directs—these things bring them into union and communion with God, and God dwells with them and they with him; and thus they are prepared for the society of heaven, prepared to enjoy heaven, to be happy in heaven when they reach that happy home.

Heaven will be a state of society far above anything we see in this life, and we need special preparation for it, and this preparation cannot be made by man, except by obedience to the gospel of Christ. The man that refuses to obey the gospel is in rebellion against God by choice, and no man in deliberate rebellion against God could be happy in his presence. The child that deliberately disobeys its father cannot be happy in the presence of father in that rebellion; but an obedient, faithful child can always be happy with father. So it is with the Father in heaven. We must be in obedient union and communion with him, in order to be happy. God is holy, and his word says: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Doing God's will makes people holy, makes them love and enjoy that which is good, makes them pure—in a word, makes them everything that is lovely and desirable. Suppose our whole country were filled up with that sort of men, and there were no one in it that would in any wise do wrong or mistreat his fellow-men, no one that would be rash or headstrong, no one that would take any advantage of another, but all live upon the principles of love and mercy; we would then have a state of things on earth that would be the nearest approach to what heaven will be of anything we shall ever find on this earth. This is just what the gospel will make of us all if we yield continually to its divine requisitions, and live as it bids us live; and there can be no doubt of such as these going to heaven, and no doubt about their happiness when they get there. This is the way, and the only way, the gospel proposes to save the lost of this world.

E. G. S.

Pride costs us more than hunger, thirst, and cold.—Jefferson.

There is nothing that needs to be said in an unkind manner.—Hosea Ballou.

Every duty omitted obscures some truth that we should know.—Ruskin.

To cultivate kindness is a valuable part of the business of life.—Johnson.

The tree overthrown by the wind had more branches than roots.—Chinese.

He does not rightly love himself who does not love another more.—C. Patmore.

All men commend patience, though few be willing to practice it.—Thomas à Kempis.

God's visits, if gratefully received, will be graciously repeated.—Matthew Henry.

Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly in the distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.—Caryle.

No true man can live a half life. When he has been truly shown that it is only a half life, the other half, the higher half, must haunt him.—Phillips Brooks.

You can help your fellow-men, you must help them; but the only way you can help them is by being the noblest and the best man that it is possible for you to be.—Phillips Brooks.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother F. B. Srygley and J. H. Whitlock will begin a debate at Mahone, near Alexandria, Tenn., on February 20.

Brother J. M. McCaleb, late of Tokyo, Japan, came to the city last Friday. He has for some time since his arrival in this country resided in Louisville, Ky. He will visit the churches in the city and in this section before returning to Louisville.

If any brother in the fruit-tree business has trees—peach, apple, or plum—to spare, the Fanning Orphan School would gratefully remember him for a gift of them, large or small.—D. Lipscomb, Jr., Fanning Orphan School, Glenciff, Tenn.

I have been using your Sunday school literature for eight years, and by comparison with other literature I could find, I feel satisfied yours is the best published, as it is more elaborate and complete. I want nothing better.—J. M. Adams, Church Hill, Ky.

Any one knowing the present address of Brother P. C. Smith, who once lived in Thornton, Tex., will confer a favor by letting me know. Brother Smith was on his way to the Indian Territory when last heard from. His full name is Paul Clifford Smith.—W. H. Parker, New River, Ala.

Brother Flavil Hall, of Lockett, Ga., writes concerning Brother Granville Lipscomb's articles on the "Life and Death of Paul:" "I never read anything more gratifying. Surely a man from whose pen flows such language as these articles contain drinks deeply into the 'one Spirit.' I shall certainly preserve these articles with care."

We received to-day (February 3) the following notice: "The funeral services of the late Mrs. R. W. Officer will take place from the family residence at 3 o'clock P.M. to-day. Interment at Atoka Cemetery, Atoka, I. T., January 31, 1900." Sister Officer has been sick for a long time and her death was not unexpected. Brother Officer has our heartfelt sympathy in his bereavement.

Our present trip to Middle Tennessee is only preliminary to a longer one next summer. At that time it is hoped our family may be able to accompany us. There are many churches we hope to visit then that it will be impossible to reach on this trip. It is our present purpose to spend all of April in West Tennessee, in company with Brother T. A. Smith. From some time in June we hope to spend a good portion of the summer in Middle Tennessee. All this if the Lord permit.—J. M. McCaleb.

EDITORIAL.

Our duty is God's due.

The impatient man cannot work well.

When we work with cheerfulness, we work toward victory.

We should never be content with anything short of our best.

The selfish are miserable in this life, and will be in the life to come.

It is vain to present arguments to persons who are controlled by prejudice.

Art thou weary and discouraged? Faint not; thy crown of success may be in heaven.

While we are passing through the world, we have no right to make other people unhappy.

The more we think of elevating and ennobling others, the greater will be our own happiness.

This world can never satisfy the longings of the soul. Christ both satisfies and sustains the soul.

The man who is ready to get rich at the expense of goodness, does so also at the expense of happiness.

We have enough faults of our own to occupy our time without magnifying the defects of our neighbor.

All life grows out of death and suffering. Our sweetest joys are sometimes born of our deepest sorrows.

All who would become strong and useful must gain their power largely through victory over temptation. It is thus that the soul "builds itself larger mansions."

He who, in the dark way, under angry clouds, in sickness or in poverty, can preserve a merry heart and a smiling countenance is a benefactor to society and the best of all possible friends to himself.

Men who have been martyrs are those who have stood out firm against temptation. Their unwavering allegiance to God made them extremely unpopular with men. The popular man is in no danger of being a martyr for his convictions.

The whole church, the whole world, is affected by the purity and consecration of one clean life. One individual may be a great factor for good. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself."

No life can be pure in its purpose and strong in its strife. And all life not be purer and stronger thereby.

Men have little power to harm those who are true to God; those who threw the three Hebrew children into the burning furnace were themselves destroyed. It is a bad business to persecute men for their honest convictions. The flames which are kindled to destroy those who fearlessly stand by their convictions are more likely to harm the persecutors than the persecuted.

The nation needs men of honor and integrity. It is the people that make a nation great. It is not fine arts, not extensive manufactures, not great cities, not fertile fields, not inexhaustible mines; but the uprightness and integrity of the people.

Not gold, but only men can make
A people great and strong—
Men who for truth and honor's sake
Stand fast and suffer long.

No one can come near Christ without having both his good and evil revealed. This is true of all who approached him while he was on earth; it is true to-day. It is an encouraging thought to know that no one can come to Christ aright and go away sorrowing. The dazzling light about him is so great as to dispel all gloom, sorrow, and sadness. How strange that all will not come to him and live!

One of Longfellow's poems, "The Beleaguered City," is based on an old legend that the city of Prague was once besieged by an army of evil spirits; but when the cathedral bell sounded the hour of prayer, the prayers of the saints were mightier than the evil spirits, and Down the broad valley, fast and far,

The troubled army fled.

"But still more beautiful is the thought that true prayer is itself fragrance to God, that he delights in it as we delight in the perfume of sweet flowers."

One of the legends of the life of Jesus tells of a day when he was walking beside the sea, when suddenly a sea bird, driven by a storm that had been sweeping on the farther shore, came fluttering toward him, and, panting, fell on the sands at his feet and died. Then he took the bird and laid it in his hand and breathed on it, when—lo!—the bird fluttered a moment and then flew aloft, its life restored. It is only a legend, and yet it was just in this gentle way that Jesus dealt always with human weakness and failure that fled to him out of life's storms.—Forward.

There was wonderful progress made in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem because the people had a mind to work. They were deeply interested in it and in earnest to have it done. Such work always accomplishes great results; it cannot fail. If all God's loyal children will work with a will to lead the people out of darkness into light, great will be the results. Denominationalism is already doomed. The hand is already writing upon the wall. If we will only have a mind to work, if we will only prove our faith by our works, the day is not far distant when many will be led to abandon their fads and fancies and to cling to the worship in its simplicity. The truth is mighty and will prevail, but God will not hold us guiltless unless we do our duty. We are sadly in need of more consecrated workers.

A well-known dentist in one of our large cities said the other day that for two years he had been trying in vain to get some one to assist him in his heavy practice. Are there not dentists enough? It would seem so, certainly; he had had no lack of applications. The trouble was that among all he had tried he had not found one who would do the work to suit him. "I had to do every bit of his work over again," he grumbled of the last assistant. "He would have spoiled my practice in six weeks at that rate." It is the old story that men of every business and every profession echo. There is not only "room enough," there is an eager demand in every class of work for men who are experts; it is the careless, the indifferent, the half-hearted, those who have never learned to do any one thing thoroughly and masterfully, who are pushed aside.—Forward.

Too many of us wish to make people happy by doing the things we like to do ourselves instead of doing the things they would like to have done. We are too much like the little boy who was drawing his still smaller neighbor in his wagon. "I'm tryin' to make Fanny happy, aunt," he said. The aunt exclaimed as she closed the door: "What a beautiful spirit for the child to have!" However, as she watched from the window she soon saw that the effort was not very successful. Little Fanny was afraid to ride, and was much more inclined to climb out of the wagon and draw it herself. The little boy stoutly resisted this. The aunt explained that Fanny did not like riding and that if he desired to make her happy, he must let her be horse. "But I want to draw it myself; I want to make her happy doin' things I like to do," answered the boy in a very ugly temper. So it was selfishness, after all, with the boy. That same "beautiful spirit" lies at the bottom of much that we older people do.

Sin debases and deadens all our nobler faculties; yet, strangely enough, men roll it as a sweet morsel under their tongues. Those under the power of sin become deaf to all that is noble and pure. "There is a form of deafness known to physicians in which the person affected is able to hear everything except words. In such a case the ear, as an apparatus for mere hearing, may be so perfect that the tick of a watch or the song of a bird is readily appreciated; but, owing to a local injury deeper than the ear, for it is in the brain itself, all spoken words of his mother tongue are as unintelligible to the sufferer as those of a foreign language. Give him a book, and he may read as understandingly as ever, but every word addressed to him through his ear reaches his consciousness only as a sound, not as a word. There is a moral deafness which corresponds to this physical infirmity, but which, instead of being rare, is as common as it is harmful and disabling. To all men there is given an inner ear, which has been fashioned to hear wisdom's words, but that ear often seems so dull of hearing that there appears no sign of response to her utterances."

In and out through all life's somber meshes run the threads of gold. We know no unrelieved blackness. Looking back on the darkest years of our life, we see how the sunshine sifted down through the shadows, making little spots of light all along the way. That year of financial disaster, when the future looked so gloomy and our burden of anxiety was so heavy, how manly and unselfish the boys were! What a comfort it was to find them so courageous and ready with plans for helping and saving, and that instead of being a care they were loyally determined to help carry the household burdens! The girls, too, sprang into sudden womanliness. We never really knew what was in the children until then, and we were proud and exultant in the midst of the trouble. It was indeed a sore time of trial when our darling died. We shall always remember that long winter, with its weight of dread growing slowly to hopeless certainty. But how many happy hours of reading and rest there were when her strength rallied, and what blessed foretastes of heaven were those twilight talks in the sick room! Some of memory's dearest treasures lie in the gleams amid the gloom.—Forward.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Read our premium offer on last page.

Subscribe for the Gospel Advocate to-day.

Our pocket price list will be sent to any address on request.

Write to us for hymn books. We are willing for "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," and "Voice of Praise" to be compared with any others.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Do not forget that we make a specialty of job work. In fact, if there is anything in the line of printing that you want, we can do it for you. Write to us for samples and prices.

Send us the names of those whom you think we could interest in becoming subscribers, and we will send the paper to them one month free of charge. We are willing that any man should examine the paper for himself before subscribing. The paper will be promptly discontinued, at the close of the month, to all who do not remit, asking us to put them on our regular list.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, in the columns of the Gospel Advocate, the meaning of 1 Cor. 3: 11-15. W. H. BOOKER.

Verse 10 means that Paul had taught that Jesus is the Christ, is the Son of God, as the only foundation on which persons can be builded into the temple or church of God. He had first preached that truth in Corinth, others came after him to build upon the foundation he had laid, and (verse 11) he warns them to be careful as to how they build on this foundation, for there is no other foundation than this can be laid. He says (verse 12) in building on this foundation it may be done with gold, silver, precious stones, or with wood, hay, stubble as the material; but he says (verse 13) every man's work will be tried with fire, and so its character will be revealed or made known. If tried by fire, the wood, hay, stubble will be burned up, so must represent the false teachings; the gold, silver, and precious stones are purged of their dross by passing through the fire. This must, then, represent the teaching of God's word. If the teaching he does stands the test, he will be rewarded for it (verse 14); if it does not stand the test of fire, but is burned up, then he will suffer loss; but while he suffers loss, he will be saved, "so as by fire." (Verse 15.) This last clause gives the only trouble—that is, his work is destroyed, he suffers loss; yet he is saved, "so as by fire." It seems to me here is a provision that a man teaching a congregation may possibly do some false teaching, yet, doing it thinking he is teaching the truth, may himself be saved, while the teaching is destroyed. When this test by fire is made has been a question of some doubt. Some think it was made by the persecutions in this world; others, that it applies to the final judgment of God. It likely applies to both. This teaching of Paul was clearly intended to warn the church he planted and taught and among whom he had determined to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified, against teachers who would come in and teach the commandments of men, that would corrupt and defile the temple of God. Some think the wood, hay, stubble brought in are the unworthy persons brought into the church; but no teacher is responsible for this if he declares the whole counsel of God. This would free him from the blood of all men. While there is difficulty about the clause mentioned, I can reach no other conclusion from the context.

Brother Lipscomb: I wish to ask your explanation of 1 Cor. 7: 39 and 2 Cor. 6: 14. I have heard the subject ably discussed, one side taking the position that Christians had a right to marry whom they chose in the Lord or in the world, but that widows were permitted to marry in the Lord only. I want to know your position on the subject, for I believe you are invariably on the safe side in scriptural matters. E. S. S.

It is not difficult to find the safe side of a question, as a rule. When one seeks excuses to do what is doubtful, trouble comes up; but when we wish to seek the safe and certain side of a question, the way is easy to understand. The safe side on this question is to marry only in the Lord. Widows are clearly commanded to do this. I have never been able to see a reason why a widow should be so restricted and not a maid. On the other hand, it would seem if either were allowed privileges in this direction it would be a widow. She is older and matured in life, with her principles fixed, and would be likely more able to withstand the influences an unbeliever might bring to bear on her to wean her from Christ than a young woman would. If it is asked why the command was not given specially to maids, I answer: There was the general law: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." I am not able to see how or why this should not apply to marriage. It seems to me they are more closely and firmly yoked together in this relation than any other. Especially is the woman placed at disadvantage in this relation. The husband is the head of the family and the wife is commanded to be obedient to him. If she is yoked to him, under obligation to obey him, she is unequally yoked and placed at great disadvantage in regard to her religious life. This command to the widow, it seems to me, shows that this law does apply to the marriage relation. No specific direction is given concerning the marriage of the maid, else this prohibition would probably have been applied to them. But in speaking of the widow marrying or not marrying, a specific application of this general law is made to her case, which, it seems to me, shows the law, "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers," applies to the marriage relation. The safe side, then, is: Marry only in the Lord. Studying this question as presented in the Old Testament and the New Testament, this conclusion forces itself on my mind: That men and women will marry. Some of them, of both sexes, must marry to live virtuous lives. The Bible so recognizes. Sometimes there are cases where they could not marry in the Lord. The cases of the sons of Elimelech and Naomi, as presented in the book of Ruth, are an example of this. They married out of the family of God, and no sin was charged. From this and other cases I feel sure the safe and general rule given is to "be not unequally yoked with unbelievers" in the marriage relation or any other relation. This is the rule. If they are so situated they must marry and are not able to marry in the Lord, possibly a different marriage would be admissible. But the safe ground is: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers."

Brother Lipscomb: Please give in the Gospel Advocate what you know about Robert Ingersoll's Bible study, liberality, etc. I heard some person make these remarks about him since his death: "When young men, he and Beh Hur agreed to study the Bible six months for themselves, to see what they could make of it, and that study resulted in Ingersoll being made an infidel and Hur a Christian." I am not certain that I give the exact words, but the idea was that the Bible would have different effects on different people, and that it was responsible for Ingersoll's belief. It has been said also that he was a very liberal man; that he made a great deal of money lecturing against the Bible, but gave most of it to the poor. You and he are about the same age; therefore you know something of his life work. Your work and his have been quite different, I know, but you can give some true history of his work. Can you also give the remarks that he made at his brother's grave some years ago? His work, as I understood it, was to set the Bible aside; yours has been to maintain it. I sympathize with you in the work and hope and pray that you may continue more faithful as you grow older. You know it is according to nature for the flesh (the outward man) to grow weaker as we grow older, but the inward man ought to grow stronger. (2 Cor. 4: 16.) With a good many the inward man grows weaker first.

My father published a religious paper, as you do, when a young man, and was an active worker in the Baptist Church. He started the Western Recorder and wrote for a while in his paper very severely against Brother Campbell's teaching, before he heard him. After he heard him he did not write against him any more, for he believed he taught the truth. Here he made a grave mistake. Instead of writing on for the truth, he sold the paper and quit, and afterwards quit the Bible. He ought to have written on, though the big, rich Baptist Church of Shelbyville would have turned against him. In your article, "A Striking Likeness," you encourage your friends to believe you are going to continue to hold on to what you believe to be the truth, if you are left alone; and your New Year's writing about "owning a paper and being owned by one," and about the paper not making money—that you could "make more money some other way"—I believe this to be true. One reason my father quit his paper: he found out it would not likely make money. He did go at something else and made more money and died what might be called rich in this world's goods, but poor in faith. This was distressing to himself and family. I do not write this boastfully, but am very sad—writing with tears in my eyes, hoping it will encourage you to continue faithfully (as Brother Harding wrote in some of the last numbers of the Way) to your convictions to the end. If you quit, as you will be tempted to do more and more as you grow older, it will ruin you spiritually. This will be awful. My father used this word when he was dying. He said it was "awful to die and go into the grave." The awful part was to die without faith in Christ. He had worked for money and had it, but it did him no good when he was dying. Some months ago you wrote in the Gospel Advocate about "money being in the way," and I agree with you. It was in my father's way and has been in mine. I was the oldest boy of six, and had to be qualified and equipped with several positions, in the way of administrator, executor, agent, etc., to help take care of this money. I believed it was my duty to rightly divide it. This has taken much of my time, attention, and labor. My mother and father taught me the Bible and to pray, when I was young (I am now 56). This I think saved me from the love of money and many other evils. I was young when I had most money and was not in so much danger then, and now have not much to love. When we are young we are more in danger of lust or love of women, and when we get old we are more in danger of love of money. Pray for me, that I may live faithful to Christ, for we are all in danger at all times. (1 Pet. 5: 8.)

I have written more than I intended when I started. I have desired for a long time to see you, but have not enjoyed that pleasure. I have been at Nashville several times, but you were away each time. I have met Brothers Sewell, Srygley, and Harding. I agree with you in most of your work, but may not agree with you in regard to patent medicines. Is Dr. Blossers catarrh cure reliable? What kind of preacher is he? L. H. WILSON.

I know nothing of Mr. Ingersoll's liberality or habits of life. His enemies say many ugly things about him; his friends say much in his praise. I am always willing to take a man at the best that can be said of him.

I know nothing of the catarrh remedy asked of or any other. I seldom read advertisements, especially of medicines. I take but little medicine, patented or unpatented. But when people who try it say a medicine helps them, I, who never try it, cannot say it does not. I have not learned to know things I never tried. I do not think that it is possible for any well-seated case of catarrh to be ever cured. I do not doubt many persons receive some relief from inhaling a number of the remedies. I have long since learned that I cannot without experience judge for people who have experience in such things. I think any one is guilty of great folly that gets in the habit of taking much medicine of any kind. A simple and plain diet and frugal manner of living do more to promote health than any medicine.

Papers do make money for their owners sometimes. I think it is difficult to follow the truth and make much money. With fifteen or twenty thousand subscribers and up a paper can make money. This is a greater number than we have ever had; still, for the last ten years we could have got along well but for the dishonesty of so many readers. That is a hard word to use, but no other tells the truth. We carry a lot of names two or three years, write them from four to six as polite letters as we know how, ask them to pay what is due, that we need it; they pay no attention to it, and we press it or drop them off and they get mad and abuse us. Such people are not honest, if they are zealous members of the church. Ten thousand dollars in the last ten years would be a low estimate of our losses in this way, while no owner of the Gospel Advocate has received a living from it or ordinary pay for the time and labor bestowed upon it. There are many pleasures connected with the work of teaching the truth to the world. But publishing a religious paper gives one a low estimate of the honesty of the average professor of religion.

Home Reading.

A LOOSE PAGE FROM THE BIBLE.

Mrs. Underwood was tired out. All day long she had been looking over boxes and bundles, cleaning out chests and bureau drawers preparatory to the inevitable spring cleaning. Her work was nearly completed, save for a huge pile of motley rags heaped up in the middle of the room, giving it a general air of confusion and untidiness. These still remained to be sorted before her day's work would be satisfactorily accomplished, but she was far too weary to apply herself to the task, and it was, therefore, with a sigh of relief she heard the voice of her son Archie returning from school.

"Well, Archie, I am very glad to see you. I had hoped to have this room all to rights before you came, but I found so much else to do, it was quite impossible. Are you willing to do it for me, dear, so I may rest a few moments before getting tea?"

"All right, mother," was Archie's cheery reply.

His mother explained what she wished done—all colors put up nicely in separate piles, to have them ready for the ragman when he should make his customary rounds.

"You shall have all the money they bring, Archie, for your unselfishness in giving up your play to help me," said his mother, and the boy felt more than repaid for his brief disappointment for having to give up a game of baseball. He worked away with a will, and was nearly through his task, when he came across something that caused him to pause in his labors. He glanced up to his mother, who was lying on the lounge, and, seeing she was not asleep, came and placed in her hand a loose page from the Holy Bible.

"I found it among the rags," he said, "and you have told me never to destroy or throw away even a leaf from the Scriptures, and here is a whole chapter. What shall I do with it?"

Mrs. Underwood regarded it thoughtfully for a few moments. It was from that most precious of Christ's teachings, the fifth chapter of Matthew, printed in small but clear type.

"It is far too valuable a portion of God's word to be lightly thrown aside, my son," she said at length. "I will tell you what we will do with it. Fold it carefully, and inclose it in a piece of clean, white paper, and put it in with the colored rags where it will be most likely to attract attention. Then send a little prayer along with it, asking God to take care of it, and bless it to some poor, needy soul."

After a few days the ragman came, and Archie's heart was made glad by the bright, new half dollar he received in exchange for the rags. Now it came to pass, as the wagon on which the peddler had placed those rags jolted down the street and turned a sharp curve at the corner, some of the top rags fell out, and among them the bundle with the Bible leaf, which a slight breeze blew into the gutter, on the side of the road.

There it lay for a couple of days, and had Archie Underwood seen it at the end of that time, perhaps he would have thought God had paid little heed to his whispered prayer.

But as poor, half-drunken Hiram Hurd came staggering along the street one afternoon, his eye fell upon the soiled little parcel, and he eagerly seized it. As he unrolled the outer covering, its contents, dampened and soiled, took on the shape of a bank note to his distorted imagination, while the "V." at the head of the chapter designated its value.

"Ha! I'm in luck, I am, to find a five-dollar bill right on the street. Mollie and the young 'uns haven't had much to eat for a week past. Guess I'll fill up with a drink and then get 'em a good square meal for once—say a turkey and all the fixin's."

He hastened as rapidly as his deplorable condition would permit to the nearest market, and demanded of the dealer in loud, peremptory tones: "What is turkeys fetchin' to-day, Mr. Wells?"

"More than you can afford to pay, Hiram, so be off with you."

"Hey, what's that you say?" exclaimed the drunkard in a threatening tone. "Can't pay for it, hey? I've got money enough to pay for the turkey and all it's fixin's, and I want 'em sent up to my house right off, I do."

"I'd rather see your money first, Hiram," was the dealer's response. "Our terms are cash."

"Look-a-here!" exclaimed Hiram, pulling the dirty piece of paper out of his pocket and flaunting it triumphantly in the face of the storekeeper.

The astonished Mr. Wells, deceived for a moment by its dark, soiled appearance into thinking it a genuine bill, took it in his hand, but, after unfolding it, burst into a loud, harsh laugh.

"That'll hardly pass for a five-er here, Hiram," he said, handing it back, "though it'll be worth as much to you, maybe, if you'll mind what it says. And now please get out of here!"

Dazed and angry, but almost sobered by his great disappointment, Hiram turned to obey; but as Archie Underwood, who had entered the store a little while before, and had just accomplished his errand, attempted to pass him on his way out, Hiram caught him by the arm and exclaimed: "Did he tell me the truth, boy? Isn't this a five-dollar bill? But what is it, then?"

Archie took the proffered paper and gave a start as he recognized the Bible leaf which he himself had so carefully inclosed, and he wondered how it could have fallen into the hands of Hiram.

"It is a leaf from the Bible, Mr. Hurd" (as the village boys always called him), replied Archie, courteously.

Hiram cast it contemptuously on the ground, then, seeming to reconsider the matter, stooped and picked it up again, saying with a grating laugh, "Guess I'll take it home to Mollie and show her how near I came to buying a turkey dinner with a piece of the Bible;" but Archie mustered courage to say, timidly: "Perhaps it will buy the turkey dinner yet, Mr. Hurd, if you will only read it and do what it says."

After coming home he told his mother, who only said: "Wait! Nothing is ever lost that is done for God. Wait his time, my son."

And Archie waited all through his school days and college life, till the swift, busy years drove the incident entirely from his mind.

Thirty years passed by. Mr. Archibald Underwood, now a middle-aged man and a prosperous lawyer in a Western city, came once more back to visit his boyhood home. His parents had long since passed on to their reward, together with so many others whom he had known in his youthful days.

Many of the old landmarks, too, were gone. The market where formerly Mr. Wells had bought and sold had been torn down, giving place to an imposing structure. The entire building was occupied as a provision store, and gave employment to a large number of clerks who were hastily hurrying to and fro, executing the orders of the constantly arriving customers.

A large, portly man, with white hair and beard, who from evident signs seemed to Archibald the proprietor of the establishment, stood in one of the entrances, and Archibald drew nearer and engaged himself in conversation by introducing himself as a former resident of the now flourishing town. As the provision dealer responded courteously to the stranger's interested inquiries, it seemed to Mr. Underwood that he must have met the man before. This feeling grew so strong that on reaching the house of a friend and being told that the proprietor of the big store was Hiram Hurd, Mr. Underwood was surprised at not having recognized him at once.

Astonished, however, at the great change in the former drunkard, he asked for details. To the great astonishment of the village Hiram Hurd had one day suddenly quit drinking, succeeded in finding employment at Mr. Wells', and by industry and intelligence in a short time became the junior partner in the firm, and afterwards Mr. Wells' successor. He had become a devout Christian, the head of a happy family, and a man of influence in the town.

Some people, however, asserted that he was a bit eccentric, as he was in the habit of sometimes drawing from his wallet a folded, soiled bit of paper, claiming it to be the foundation of his prosperity.

There was a story that it was a leaf from the Scriptures, and that Hurd years ago mistook it for a five-dollar bill.—Union Gospel News.

THOUGHTS ON THE PAST.

To-night I stand on the last step of the dying year, listening to the last roll call. Fast roll the years; soon we will be anchored. Unconscious, time has sped along, and I hail the fiftieth milepost. Half a century calls for an account, let it be good or bad. What has been written has been written. There is no undoing or retracing of the years.

Listen! Do I hear some one calling? I imagine I am standing again under the parental roof. What joy! What a sweet dream of home and loved ones! My baby feet were led by Christian parents along paths of sunshine, where I could pluck the flowers that bloom, never to fade. Here I was taught to drink of the everlasting waters, drinking which we can never thirst. Yet how soon, as we rambled along, sin crept into the path! On we wandered, never stopping to think of the way until we had fallen. We stumbled over some of the rough places sin had caused. Not until then did we realize the loss of some of our choicest blessings. Our hearts were then made to bleed. That is not all; if it were, what a relief! But O the precious ones who look to us for love and encouragement! The touch, or even the shadow, of sin is blighting. The weak tremble and faint, and even the strong fall, never to rise. Sin, in its mad rush for fortune, gathers as it goes some of the brightest jewels earth can boast. The God-given fruit that came to bless our home was five sons and one daughter. The fruit, so far, has been cared for as best we could; yet thorns, thistles, and briars would be found in the path, and sometimes were hard to root up.

What are most of our fathers and mothers doing in the home to-day? Do they realize the awful responsibility of a parent? Our homes are little kingdoms—the father and mother, the king and queen. When the precious buds are given, how exceedingly careful we should be to cultivate every part, that the little bud be not a dwarf! The soil, which is the home circle—see that it is well-watered; see that all seeds or germs of disease be purified by prayer, which is the dew of heaven. Precious souls will be the harvest. The sin of indifference is a withering curse in the home and church to-day. Is there no way of getting it out? How many will try? Shall we take this remedy: As the morning dawns, each one go to secret prayer for just five minutes? There is no use asking how the day would be spent in the home and shop; all know. I do know that prayer is sufficient for all needs; its healing power is not limited. O, blessed Jesus, give us always the spirit of prayer. Can we pray always? It is then that we can walk and not stumble. Buds of hope can then grow; the beautiful flowers of truth, love, kindness, and peace may grow, bloom, blossom in the Eden here and will then be wings to carry us to the Eden above. O, if all could but pray the prayer which expresses the beautiful sentiments of Frances R. Havergal:

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee;
Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of thy love.

Take my feet, and let them be
Swift and beautiful for thee;
Take my voice, and let me sing
Always, only, for my King.

Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.

Take my will and make it thine,
It shall be no longer mine;
Take my heart, it is thine own,
It shall be thy royal throne.

Take my love; my Lord, I pour
At thy feet its treasure store;
Take myself, and I will be Ever, only, all for thee. X.

There are no men or women, however poor they may be, but have it in their power, by the grace of God, to leave behind them the grandest thing on earth—character; and their children might rise up after them and thank God that their mother was a pious woman or their father a pious man.—Dr. McLeod.

The world is what we make it. Forward, then! Forward in the power of faith, forward in the power of truth, forward in the power of friendship, forward in the power of freedom, forward in the power of hope, forward in the power of God! —Henry Vincent.

One of the most important, but one of the most difficult, things for a powerful mind is to be its own master. A pond may lay quiet in a plain, but a lake wants mountains to compass and hold it in.—Addison.

"Truth's shafts cannot be shot from cracked bows, nor can good society be made up of bad people."

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEB. 8, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

PREDESTINATION AND PROVIDENCE.

We quoted a paragraph from the Western Recorder last week on the subject of election and predestination, and said both were taught in the Scriptures, and if Calvin, the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith," and the Recorder would teach them as taught in the Bible and by the Gospel Advocate, their teaching never would have created trouble. The Calvinistic theory of predestination is, God elects and predestinates certain persons to salvation regardless of what they may do. This destroys human responsibility, weakens man's sense of obligation, and has a tendency to make man careless and indifferent to his course of life. I know many who hold to the doctrine of election and predestination, as taught by Calvin and the Recorder, are zealous and earnest in their efforts "to make their calling and election sure;" but the doctrine does not help them to this. Other items and phases of their faith inspire their activity and zeal, in spite of this theory they hold. The theory does not prompt them to watchfulness, activity, and zeal in the service of God. So far as it exerts an influence it is palsy to all spiritual effort. Many who really believe this are by it led to do nothing, wait for God to work his own purposes to save them and others without effort or activity on man's part. Orchard, in his "History of English Baptists," page 346, says: "Their attention to the divine decrees, as forming a rule for the Redeemer's servants, narrowed all their spirits and efforts in their public and private discourses. . . . Indifference to the welfare of sinners, whether domestic or foreign, marked all their conduct and devotions. . . . Their views, doctrines, and examples, being kept prominent, operated on the audience as a spiritual laudanum; lulled all into a spiritual slumber; contracted the capacities of the mind; deadened the hands, lips, and heart to the household of faith; froze up the affections; made religious duties a mechanical employment; placed the whole class of man's feelings under a divine quarantine, until relieved by special warrant and auspicious breezes direct from the King of Zion. . . . Persecution in the former centuries had slain its thousands, but ease, prosperity, and this spiritual opium had destroyed many more. . . . The quintessence of the debate may be stated in this proposition: Whether it was the duty of all men to whom the gospel was preached to repent and believe in Christ." Many doubted if it was right to "exhort sinners to repent."

This is the influence of this doctrine of election and predestination, as taught by Calvin and the Western Recorder, when not counteracted by other influences, as stated by Baptist historians. Orchard quotes Irving and others as testifying to these things. They attributed the deliverance of the Baptists from this dead and lifeless state to the preaching of Wesley, Whitefield, and others who rejected this doctrine. The Missionary Baptists now owe their activity and zeal to the acceptance of other and contrary doctrines, which, while they render them inconsistent, counteract the deadening effects of this "spiritual laudanum." The Primitive Baptists are much more consistent advocates of this doctrine than the Missionary Baptists.

Yet election and predestination are clearly taught in the Bible. The Bible teachings on these subjects have no stupefying effects on the human soul; on the contrary, they call out the highest activity and most self-sacrificing devotion of the Christian.

"This much of predestination is taught in the Bible and exists in the dealings of God with his creatures, God foreordains the heart that loves justice and truth and righteousness to salvation; and that his predestination may be effective, he sends the gospel to such hearts, that he may save them. Whenever God predestines man to salvation, he predestines he shall comply with the conditions of salvation. The only evidence any man can have that he is of the elect is that he faithfully and truly walks in the appointments of God. This, then, ought to be the matter of concern to him."

There is no spiritual laudanum in that to dull and blunt the spiritual faculties of any, but there is in it that which will call out the highest activity and most self-sacrificing zeal and devotion of the believer in God. Scriptural predestination calls out the activities and zeal of every one; unscriptural theories palsy these in all who accept them.

The same is true of God's providential care. God's providential care of his children is clearly taught in the Bible. The Bible teaching on this subject demands the greatest care and activity of the man, that he may come within the providential care of God. God's providences are in perfect harmony with God's laws; they are all wrought out in harmony with the laws of God. God working through his laws provides what comes to his children. "Providence" is providing. He provides only when persons by compliance with his will put themselves under his providing care. His will is, men shall be faithful, industrious, careful, simple in their habits, and constantly seeking to do all the good they can. To such his providences reach.

D. L.

MORMONISM, AGAIN.

Our Mormon friend sends us another batch of questions, rather a repetition of the old ones. We answered those questions scripturally and fully in such a way that I am sure all candid persons will see that if the Bible is true, we are right and the Mormons are wrong. Every scripture to which he referred justifies my position and condemns his. Without a word to show we misapplied a scripture or misrepresented them he repeats substantially the same questions. We did not hope to convince him; for a man with any intelligence and a fair degree of common sense to adopt the contradictions, absurdities, and immoralities of Mormonism shows he is hardly open to reason. My object in answering the questions was to put before others the positions. But in this last is a question that brings out one point not emphasized before, that I would now like to discuss: The question is this:

"13. If wrong for a Mormon to have two or three women, and to feed, clothe, and educate his children, how about those ministers of yours and the Methodists, who lead women into adultery and then leave them to practice infanticide, or to live a life of deception or shame?"

To ask that question is to be guilty of slander. That there are Methodists and Christians that have been, and are guilty of adultery and deception, no one doubts, but that they are in any sense justified or sustained in these sins by their churches is a slander. In all ages of the world men have been led into sin by their lusts. Sometimes good men are so led. Unless they repent of the sin, they will be lost. If they repent of it, confess it, and ask forgiveness, while suffering the penalty to a certain extent, they may be forgiven and saved at last. David is an example of this. He was a good man, but was led by his lust into sin. Trying to conceal his adultery, he committed murder. He repented, confessed his sin; and although the results of that sin clung to him and his family, he was forgiven and accepted of God. He was forgiven because he confessed it was a sin and that he sinned in the matter. But suppose David, when he was reproved by the prophet, had justified the sin, insisted that he would take care of the woman and child, and that God approved the sin. Do you think he would have found any forgiveness in so doing? To cloak his sin with the name of God would have been an infinitely more heinous sin than the one he committed. For this there could have been no forgiveness. "The prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die." (Deut. 18: 20.) To insist God teaches a thing he does not teach is as great a sin as to speak in the name of or worship an idol. Death without mercy was the penalty under the law of Moses. If any Christian is guilty of lewdness or adultery, he commits a sin. If he claims God approves his sin and cloaks his sin with the name of God, he so intensifies that sin that there is no forgiveness for it. To claim God justifies or approves the sin is to refuse to repent of it, and encourage others to commit the same sin—thus to make it a deliberate, presumptuous sin, for which there is no forgiveness in this world or in that to come. To cohabit with another woman when you have a wife is adultery. For a Mormon to do this is as vile as for any one else. The Mormon sins, and instead of acknowledging his sin, justifies it, says God approves it, encourages others to commit the same sin. He sets aside the teaching of Jesus which plainly says, "They twain shall be one flesh;" and cohabitation with another breaks, sunders, what God has joined. He then cloaks that sin with the name of religion and claims God approves it. This is a much more heinous sin than the sin of adultery committed and owned as a sin. Jesus Christ came into the world and found the rulers of this earth practicing and upholding polygamy. He condemned them and it. The Mormons came and found the rulers of the earth practicing and insisting on one man having one wife, and they say God commands them to take more than one. Either Jesus or the Mormons is wrong. One is an impostor. Which is it?

A brother calls in question our application of the commission, that the apostles should teach others to do all things whatsoever Christ had taught the apostles to do, and asks if that would not favor the Mormon contention that they should heal the sick and work miracles. If they are able to do these things, most certainly they should do them. I quoted the commission, and said: "This is the general and universal law, restricted as to persons and classes, times and places, by directions given by Jesus and to us through the apostles, through whom he speaks to the world." I do not know of a thing he commanded the apostles to do that is not commanded all Christians, restricted as here mentioned. So long as spiritual gifts were among the disciples it was their duty to use them as here directed. If they existed now, it would be their duty to use them. Paul, after discussing the nature, office, and use of spiritual gifts in 1 Cor. 12, concludes by saying: "Yet show I unto you a more excellent way" than the use of the gifts. That way is love, or charity, which is the fulfilling of the law. In presenting this better way he tells the gifts shall vanish away when the perfect law is come, and only the things to which obedience to the law leads will be eternal. Faith, hope, charity, are the fruits of the law of the Spirit, and they shall abide when the gifts known as partial and temporary shall have passed away. The very call that brings a person into Christ is a call to do all in his power to forward the work of Christ in the world. The commission that calls him into Christ makes him a partaker of the gospel, makes him a preacher of that gospel to the world. The manner in which he preaches is modified only by his abilities and the restrictions the Spirit gives that are to guide him through life. The apostles were to teach others to do all that Jesus had taught them to do, restricted as his teachings restrict. I think we will never rise to a true sense of our responsibilities and privileges as children of God until we realize this truth.

D. L.

LARGE GIFTS TO THE PUBLIC.

The Interior has an editorial, in a recent issue, on "Misplacement of Benevolent Money." The large generosity of the rich men and women of America is noted—eighty millions, this last year, in large sums, not over half of which, it is estimated, is well applied. As an instance of unhelpful generosity in Chicago, not long since, the three-million gift of Mr. Crerar for another library is cited. It was really a problem to find a way to make it useful. What is being done with the eighty millions given last year? It has mostly gone, says the Interior, into spectacular, pretentious enterprises which will support a few savants in dignified leisure, pile up great buildings, or swell endowments which really benefit very few of those who need help and cannot get it.

It is a helpful sign to see the rich disposed to use their money for the good of others. But when things are as they should be, these immense fortunes will not be accumulated. As a rule, they are accumulated by wronging others. The Standard Oil Company is one of the richest corporations in the country. It now has such a monopoly of a universally used article that an advance of one cent per gallon on coal oil adds, it is said, nearly ten millions a year to the income. This monopoly was gained by crushing out numbers of other business throughout the country and throwing men out of employment. Mr. Rockefeller gives by the million to schools and other public utilities. Other millionaires do the same. It seems to be the fad now among the rich to give in large sums. The Interior says much of it does but little good. A question arises with me: Does money gained wrongly and appropriated by him who gives it for self-glorification or as a salve to a wounded conscience, ever do good? When business is conducted upon Christian principles such immense fortunes will not be accumulated. The laborers and the consumers will share in the prosperity as well as the adversity of the business. Money wrongly gained is unclean in the sight of God, and will not bring good until the sins are confessed and the wrongly gained money is restored.

Under the rule of God, immense fortunes and extreme honesty were impossible. Every fifty years there was a release of all debts and a restoration of the lands to the original owners or their families. In God's esteem the immense fortunes and extreme poverty were neither for the rich, nor for the poor, nor for the public. These inequalities of life brought about by wrongs create dissatisfaction, ferment, riots. These will grow, more and more, until a fairer rule in business obtains. When a man by oppression and extortion gains a hundred millions of dollars, it is no satisfaction of the rules of justice that control the universe to give a million of it for some public good, either to gain himself a good name or to ease a hurting conscience; and the gaining and handling of millions of dollars does not add to or mitigate the enormity of the wrongdoing. It is just as wicked in the sight of God to be unjust and unfair in dealings on a small scale, or with men doing a small business, as it is with those doing a large business. True prosperity will come to the people only when they learn to be just and fair in all dealings, small or great.

Money does greatest good when it is spent in helping needy persons to a better life. One or five hundred dollars spent in helping a man or woman to a better and more useful life will make better returns in its results to the public than if invested and the interest from year to year used for good. In other words, a bad man will multiply himself by his example and influence by making others bad, and they go forward spreading evil at a multiplying ratio. So a man rescued from an evil course and started in a good one stops the multiplication of evil and multiplies the good. In saving our money to do good things we permit the evil to go forward multiplying, while we are accumulating a sum to be put at interest to help check that multiplying evil. A soul started in the way of right will be more efficient than millions hoarded to be put at interest. The good person may multiply himself year after year, while the wrong increases at a slow per cent. Not only is it best for us to invest our means in helping persons to a better life, but it is infinitely better for the donor to personally apply his gifts. The personal application and the personal contact with the needy brings to man the greater good. It may not bring as big a name, but it will do greater good to the public and the giver to use his means as he makes it to help those in need. D. L.

Let no man think he is loved by any man when he loves no man.—Epictetus.

A fair test and measure of civilization is the influence of good women.—Emerson.

Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of our friends upon them.—Colton.

It will require more than a few hours of fasting and prayer to cast out such demons as selfishness, worldliness, and unbelief.—T. L. Cuyler.

The most trivial tasks can be accomplished in a noble, gentle, regal spirit which overrides and puts aside all petty, paltry feelings, and which elevates little things.—Dean Stanley.

THE NARROW WAY.

"Then said one unto him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And he said unto them, Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." (Luke 13: 23, 24.) The meaning is that we should agonize to be saved. This must be done during life, for the night of death cometh, when no man can work. When we think of the glories of heaven, and the duration of eternity, we certainly have enough to arouse us to our noblest endeavor. It is wondrous strange that any one can read the Scriptures and for one moment think of being idle in the kingdom of God. While the Lord on this occasion did not say directly that only a few will be saved, yet he does say: "Many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." They do not seek with the whole heart, hence they are not saved. Never did a man seek the Lord with his whole heart and as God directs who did not come to him, for holy writ plainly says: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." (Matt. 7: 7, 8.) The man who fails to come to the Lord when he earnestly seeks him may know that he is not seeking him aright. "Seek, and ye shall find." It must be so. The man who bowed down in grief seeks the Lord through the dreary years may know that he is not seeking him as he directs through his word. The stars would sooner fall from their positions than God's word fail. The word of God liveth and abideth forever.

In the Sermon on the Mount, the Savior plainly teaches that there are few who will be saved: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7: 13, 14.) All heaven is interested in our salvation; it does seem that we should be deeply in earnest to enter at last through the gates into the city. The prize is undoubtedly worth the most earnest endeavor of which we are capable; we should never endeavor to drag our slow lengths into heaven, but should ask, seek, knock, run, and agonize to be crowned an heir of eternal life. Listen to Paul: "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." (1 Cor. 9: 24-27.) Again the great apostle admonishes: "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses." (1 Tim. 6: 12.) A man can as easily be passive in fighting or running as he can in going to heaven.

We would do well to consider the effort that men put forth to obtain a perishable prize or crown. Their effort in comparison with ours should make us blush with shame. Their great exertions are to gain a fading prize, while our effort is to gain one that will never fade, but grow brighter throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

The pugilist trains for weeks and weeks, endures much self-denial, and keeps the closest possible watch on himself, in order that he may be put down as the champion fighter. When he has gained the prize it is worthless, his ambition is wholly unsatisfied. But the zeal displayed is worthy of a nobler cause. Again, think of the enthusiasm and ardor displayed by baseball and football teams; their zeal is certainly worthy of emulation. It does seem that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." The thought, the labor, and the devotion given to their work should lead Christians to reflect very seriously on the earnestness manifested by them in the most glorious of all work. What is the result of a game of football in comparison with the salvation of a soul? As the years come and go, and we see our loved ones, one by one, pass into eternity, it does seem that we would be brought to realize the importance of our work. A soul lost is lost forever; nothing that we can do will change its condition; our sighs, our tears, and our prayers will not change the destiny of one soul. But, thanks be to God, by earnest, consecrated living we can help prepare them for heaven while the days are going by; we can help get heaven in men while they are on earth. It is so blessed and glorious to labor in the Master's service.

The rarer the treasure, the harder it is to gain. The prize of little value costs very little labor to gain. A vast fortune is very greatly prized. The young man who wishes to acquire it must give much time, labor, and thought before his efforts are crowned with success. Through the long, weary days, he labors incessantly, goaded on by the prospect of success.

The boy wishes to gain an education; he realizes that it is far ahead of him. The benefits of an education are beyond calculation. To make sure of its acquisition he must labor often until late in the night. Ofttimes he must deny himself the pleasures of life and practice the most rigid economy. Still he labors on until the goal is reached. His attainments are great and are used in blessing the world. So in all temporal affairs there is no excellence without great labor. In heavenly things it is true in a much higher sense. In the very nature of things, the very greatest exertion and noblest endeavor must be put forth in order to enter heaven. All earthly treasures are nothing in comparison with it.

Heaven is so sweet, so precious, and so glorious that we should be disappointed if we were to reach it without effort. We must agonize along the narrow, difficult way. If the road to heaven were wider and less difficult, heaven would not be so fine and splendid as it is. While the way is narrow, it is as wide as the love of God could make it. God so loved the world that he did the very best he could for man. Infinite love and compassion could do no more. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) When the divine philanthropy had accomplished the plan of salvation, Christ said to his chosen twelve: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) This is as wide as the love of God could make the way into the kingdom of God. The man who seeks to make the way easy and to broaden it by leaving out one of these conditions is seeking to do more than the love of God could do. It is the very essence of bigotry for men to endeavor by their opinions to make the way wider than the love of God has done. Some call such tampering with the word of God liberalism, but it is the most wicked presumption. What presumption! Frail, fallible man presuming to do more by his opinions than the infinite love of God could do! The way is narrow; but God himself could make it no wider.

The same is true of the way after entering the kingdom. The grace of God that brings us salvation requires us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. The same love demands of us to add to our "faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity." The same God in his goodness requires us to day by day present our bodies living sacrifices, to crucify "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." On a subdued animal nature we must rise to the presence of God; with our depraved appetites and passions, we cannot enter heaven. Strait and narrow is the way, but we can journey no wider way and enter at last through the pearly gates into the city of God. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Character is the diamond that scratches every other stone.—Bartol.

A taste for books is the pleasure and glory of my life. I would not exchange it for the riches of the Indies.—Gibbon.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful, ever-living agent.—Newton.

Christianity excludes malignity, subdues selfishness, regulates passions, subordinates the appetites, quickens the intellect, exalts the affections. It would unite men in one great brotherhood.—Mark Hopkins.

The human heart is like a millstone in a mill. When you put wheat under it, it turns and grinds and bruises the wheat into flour. If you put no wheat, it still grinds on and wears itself away.—Luther.

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR,A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.

For indigestion and fowl stomach.

For sick and nervous headaches.

For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.

For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.

For loss of appetite and debility.

For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir.

Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.

1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville Tenn.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame. RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

Begin now to make this the best year of your life.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

HUNDLEY.

Col. D. M. Hundley, brother of Capt. O. M. Hundley, died at his residence, in Limestone County, yesterday. The funeral was held from the residence of Captain Hundley this afternoon at 2 o'clock, the remains having been brought to this city late yesterday afternoon for interment. The services at the funeral were conducted by Elder William Fulgham, and were attended by a large concourse of friends. The deceased was colonel of the Thirty-first Alabama Regiment during the Civil War, where he distinguished himself for fine service. After the war he started a newspaper in Huntsville. It is said that he was the first person to commence such an enterprise here after the conflict between the States. He is the author of several works, and was a man of fine personality, beloved by all who knew him. His death will be generally regretted.—Huntsville (Ala.) Daily Post, December 28, 1899.

ALLEY.

At the residence of Mr. William Cook, three miles east of Franklin, Tenn., Earl Alley, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Alley, died several weeks ago. The thought of these parents' sad bereavement caused me great pain, especially when I remembered how affectionate, cheerful, and intelligent little Earl was, displaying a thoughtfulness beyond his years and holding forth hopes of happiness in after times. It was indeed a heavy blow and I scarcely know how to offer consolation under so bitter an affliction, but I can point the saddened hearts to One who careth for all, and who gave, while upon earth, ample indication of his abiding love for little children. Parents, think of the bright and never-ending future life of that dear child whose spirit has passed away, whose soul only waits in heaven to welcome those from whom he has been parted. I can say no more, and human consolation is weak, anyway. May a higher power do that which I cannot.

LEE WHITFIELD.

LILES.

Mrs. Nannie Sears Liles, wife of Dr. W. I. Liles, died on the morning of January 5, 1900. With a sad heart I record the death of this amiable wife and mother. We mourn not as those who have no hope, for her Christianly young life was faultless. There was a charm accompanying her presence felt by all who knew her. Never an unkind criticism fell from her lips; she had kind words and a smile for every one; indeed, she was a model mother to her four small children—two girls and two boys—who are yet too young to realize the loss of that patient and loving heart. We know the same Lord whom she trusted and to whose care she committed her darlings will watch over and protect them. We shall miss dear Nannie's bright face on earth, but we feel that her sweet spirit ascended to heaven, to bask in the Savior's presence. Grieve not, dear friends; God's providence is always best. Have faith and hope, fond husband, loving parents, brothers, and sisters; for some day we will meet and clasp in our arms the loved one in the eternal city of God.

G. V. H. K.

ROYAL Baking Powder

Made from pure cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

GILMORE.

A white violet bloomed one day in fall; a pretty flower—fragrant, stainless, and freshly sweet from the hand of its God. While here, many enjoyed its beauty and purity; but one day a blight came, and, suddenly, it was gone. The Master needed it, he wanted his own; and although the tiniest flower in his garden, a mission was fulfilled, a work was done; and, when completed, the worker was taken home. Such was the life of Charlie Gilmore, the three-month-old baby of James and Mattie Archer Gilmore.

Little hands to pull the heartstrings
From beneath the grassy sod,
Little hands to pull the heartstrings
Of his father home to God.

Parents here must learn to follow
Little footsteps gone above,
Nestling safe in Jesus' bosom
In the heavenly home of love.

He who gave his own beloved
Son, on earth for us to die,
Teaches us to look up yonder—
Trust to him, our God, on high;

Know that whatso'er he doeth—
It is just as it should be;
Meekly bow, and trust and love him;
And our darling we shall see

Singing in the choir of glory
Songs of Jesus and his love,
Waiting for the dear earth-loved ones
In the mansions up above.

AUNT ELLEN.

MARSHALL.

Sarah E. Marshall, daughter of W. C. and Mary Chamberlin, was born on October 16, 1837, and passed away, in "the peace which the world cannot give," December 22, 1899; aged sixty-two years, two months, and six days. Through long months of suffering, such as few are called upon to endure, she was sustained by the "exceeding great and precious promises" of God. To one of such unfaltering faith "there is but one pang in death; that is leaving the loved." She was married to J. M. Marshall on October 14, 1860, and six of their eight children survive her to mourn with him their irreparable loss. Mrs. Marshall professed religion and joined the Presbyterian Church in early life, but became a member of the church of Christ at Lafayette, Tenn., on November 15, 1874, being baptized by J. M. Kidwill. To the innate refinement and lofty ideals of her cultured mind she added "the graces of the Christian character." The influence of her beautiful life cannot be lost; death will only throw the halo of a tenderer light upon it and leave it safe, in a setting of golden memories, in the hearts of those who loved her. Perhaps could she have expressed her last thought, while her spirit wavered between her dear ones on the vanishing earth and the glories opening before her, those parting words would have been: "Meet me in heaven."

On the happy, golden shore,
Where the faithful part no more,
When the storms of life are o'er,
Meet me there. A. M. Y.

FREED.

When we gaze at the dimples of childhood,
Or the brow where the soft tresses wave,
It is hard to believe that the cradle
Can be only a step from the grave.

Thus when, only a few weeks since, we looked with admiration on the attractive features of "Baby Freed" it seemed scarcely possible that his cradle was only a step from his grave. For more than two weeks his precious infant frame was not free from pain; but since 9 o'clock P.M. on November 13, 1899, the little sufferer has been at rest. For fifteen months, as a welcome and cherished sunbeam, little Arvey Baynham had gladdened the home and hearts of his dotting parents, Prof. and Mrs. A. G. Freed—their only child, the joy and pride of their lives. Every loving attention was given him, and the best medical aid was not spared; but death could not be thwarted in his purpose—the baby must go. While he was embraced in the cold, pitiless arms of death, that home was wrapped in the gloom of night. Though the full moon was hanging over it in quiet splendor, she seemed to present a sad countenance, for she wore a veil of crape; clouds obscured her face, and she shed no light in that sad home. To those bereaved parents home now seems shrouded in gloom impenetrable. No little darling there to raise his dimpled hands and receive their warm caresses; no sparkling eyes to peep cunningly from beneath that tall, full, and noble forehead; no prattling tongue to respond to tokens of parental devotion! The dear little home is now in mourning. "There's crape on the door" of those aching hearts; turn the knob gently, those tender hearts are throbbing and bleeding. Where a month ago stood the beautiful, blooming, and thriving rose of brightest expectation, now droops the faded lily of disappointment and crushed hopes. Dear, weeping parents, time, to some extent, will heal your wounded hearts; and then every little plaything—those tiny shoes, those little dresses, that baby buggy—all will be mementoes almost sacred, and home will seem dearer because it was "Baby's" home. Those pictures of your little darling will present beauties before unseen. Sad, sweet pictures will be hung in the halls of your memory. There you will often see the playful little cherub making sunshine in your home; you will see the anticipated works of the hoped-for boy and man; then, into that snow-white casket you will gaze with tearful eyes on that beautiful, waxlike figure lying on its right side, its left hand across its silent breast, and the right hand just under the side of the face—the exact position and appearance of natural sleep. Beautiful picture, but sad, too sad! Turn from it, and look up higher. The brightest picture of all is the one now in your minds of the happy meeting "up yonder." You are looking above for comfort; you are humbly "leaning on the everlasting arms," which will sustain you; you are "standing on the promises, which cannot fail." "God be with you," and help you to be resigned.

MOLLIE L. MEEKS.

'The Thorn Comes Forth With Point Forward.'

The thorn point of disease is an ache or pain. But the blood is the feeder of the whole body. Purify it with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Kidneys, liver and stomach will at once respond? No thorn in this point.

Blood Poisoning—"The surgeon said when he took out the brass shell received in wound at San Juan Hill two weeks before, that it would have poisoned me if it had not been for my pure blood. I told him it was Hood's Sarsaparilla that made it pure." George P. Cooper, Co. G, 25th U. S. Inf., Washington Barracks, Washington, D. C.

Rheumatism—"Myself and a friend both suffered from severe attacks of rheumatism. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured both. We would not be without it." Wm. H. Lester, 65 Leonard St., Fall River, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Into all the World.

It is reported of Buddha that he once said: "My doctrine shall go eastward." Jesus says: "Go ye into all the world." The nature of man is much the same as that of the turtle: he shuts himself up in his shell and looks out with suspicion, ready to snap at the slightest provocation. The old castles of Europe and the homes of the cave dwellers speak with more eloquence than words of the efforts of man to shut himself up and leave the rest of the world to go to the dogs or anywhere else, so far as he is concerned.

In the memory of those still living such was the condition of society in Japan a few years ago that it was unsafe for the inhabitant of one village to be found in another village. So little did they have to do with each other that villages with only a few miles between spoke different dialects. If, perchance, a man should stray from home and be met in the streets of a neighboring town, only a word was sufficient to betray him as a foreigner to that town, and in an instant the natives were after him, and he was lucky to escape with his life. Fifty years have brought a wonderful change in that country, and people now travel unarmed wherever they wish without molestation. This great change has been wrought through the influence of the gospel. Jesus said: "Go ye into all the world." What for? A Caesar or a Napoleon might say the same; but it would be to conquer, to destroy, and to enslave; to cast a gloom over homes of happiness; to turn joy and gladness into sorrow and sighing; and to leave in despair the broken-hearted. Jesus says, on the other hand: Go, carry glad tidings, heal up the broken-hearted, loose them that are bound, and set the captives free.

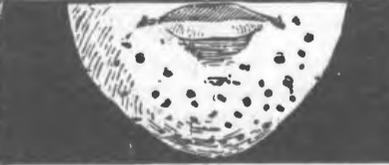

One of the evidences that Jesus was more than man was his unselfishness. It is human nature for a man, when he has a good thing, to want to keep it. People attempt the same with the gospel; they try to appropriate it. A brother once said: "The poor ought to have a church of their own, so as not to be associated with the rich." He held himself with the latter. All do not put it this way exactly, but there is a tendency in selfish human nature to want to hold aloof from its fellows; if men have a good thing, they want it all to themselves. The Christian life that never flows out to others becomes like a standing pool: it never flows off, and every unclean thing dropped into it stays there. I can call to mind certain springs of my boyhood days that you could not make muddy; you might throw in your filth and dirt, but still they would flow on clear and beautiful. Nothing of an unclean kind could stay in these pure waters. Let me tell you the secret of it. The current was too strong that flowed out. It is even so in the Christian life; he that does not keep full of Christian activity, even to overflowing, will become corrupted. The current that flows out to bless must be kept strong, that it may throw off the corruptions of a tempting world that the evil one will try to cast in. The standing pool receives all that is dropped into it, and so the idle heart is corrupted.

Many break down in health and die prematurely from brooding too much over their own ills. Churches sometimes fall into the same misfortune; they are nursing their evils, are trying to keep alive by physic—all taken for their own benefit; but they are like the poor woman that had suffered many things of many physicians—they grow no better, but rather grow worse. Now and then they take an extra dose by some good preacher, and if the day is fair, they creep out and feel better; but it is only momentary, for they are soon back as before. Let us be enlarged in heart and activity and abound more and more. Many are perishing daily. A kind word, a kind deed, or even a look may save a soul from death. Brother, what are you doing to rescue a perishing world?

J. M. M'CALEB.

One day, on the steps of one of the public buildings of Florence, Italy, an old, disabled soldier sat playing a violin. By his side stood a faithful dog; in the mouth of the dog was the old veteran's hat. Now and then a passerby would drop in a coin. A gentleman, passing, stopped and looked at the picture. He stepped up and asked for the violin, tuned it, and began to play. The sight of a well-dressed man playing a violin in such a public place, and with such associations, attracted the passers-by, and they stopped. The music was so charming that they stood enchanted, while the number of contributions largely increased. The hat became so heavy that the dog growled, so it was emptied to be filled again. The company grew, until a congregation was gathered. The performer played one of the national airs, handed the violin back to the owner, and quietly withdrew. One of the company said: "This is Amard Bucher, the world-renowned violinist. He did this for charity; let us follow his example." Mr. Bucher did not give a penny, but he gave something better—his ability. If you cannot give money to God, give all the ability he has given you.—Union Gospel News.

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

Singer Machines Last Longest.

A recent canvass of the United States found 216,000 family sewing-machines of all kinds that had been in use from 15 to 48 years; more than one-half of them were Singers, and 2,000 of these Singers had done good service during 40 years and more.

A SINGER WILL OUTWEAR ANY OTHER KIND.

Sold on instalments. You can try one Free. Old machines taken in exchange.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY

The SINGER MANUFACTURING Co.
OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

The W.V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale
and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough
and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence
Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10

VOICE OF PRAISE.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75

WORDS OF TRUTH.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,

232 N. Market Street, Nashville, Tennessee.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.
CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills deposited for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK.
311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

Constipation

Headache, biliousness, heartburn, indigestion, and all liver ills are cured by

Hood's Pills

Sold by all druggists. 25 cents.

General News.

Dayton, O., suffered a loss of half a million dollars from fire.

Admiral Dewey accepts Memphis' invitation to visit that city.

Prof. Edward J. Phelps, of the Yale Law School, former minister to England, is ill with pneumonia.

The Senate confirmed the nomination of Edwin H. Gunsaulus, of Ohio, to be consul of the United States at Pernambuco, Brazil.

Specials from Crossville, Tenn., state that over one half of the business portion of that thriving little city was destroyed by fire.

Congress has given to the city of Nashville, Tenn., the gun from the Nashville which fired the first shot in the Spanish-American War.

The latest report from Honolulu, by the steamer Australia, gives the number of deaths from the bubonic plague, as forty-one, out of a total of fifty-two cases.

The buildings for the Richmond Spinning Company's new mill for the manufacture of fine cotton yarns, in Chattanooga, Tenn., are completed, and work will begin with a 10,000-spindle capacity.

New South Wales will have a gigantic statue, similar to Bartholdi's colossal figure of "Liberty Enlightening the World," at the entrance of New York Harbor, set up in Sydney Harbor. The statue will be called "Australia Facing the Dawn."

The Senate Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals has amended the Nicaragua Canal bill so that it now provides for a canal of sufficient size to accommodate vessels of the largest tonnage, and increased the appropriation from $130,000,000 to $140,000,000.

Capt. W. C. Neville, United States Marine Corps, recently appointed governor of the Island of Tutuilla, has been ordered to sail for his new station at once. A coaling station will be established at Tutuilla, and a company of marines will sail with Captain Neville to garrison the station.

Not since April, 1883, has spirits of turpentine reached a higher mark on a Southern market than at this time. In connection with the uniform high price for tar and rosin which has prevailed for several weeks, operators in turpentine are reaping a rich harvest, and expect good prices throughout the season.

At Alameda, Cal., Charles Lever, formerly a paymaster in the United States Navy, and probably the last survivor of the government relief expedition, which rescued Dr. Kane, the arctic explorer, in 1855, is dead. After his retirement from the navy he served as postmaster and police judge at Flushing, L. I.

The Secretary of the Interior has rendered a decision to the effect that national banks in the Indian Territory are not subject to the license or privilege tax imposed by the laws of the Territory upon nonresidents doing business within the Territory. There are sixteen national banks in the Indian Territory.

The canning factories have received quotations from the tin-plate trust, which show it will cost them $28.25 a thousand for cans this year. The price last year was $14.50. It will be necessary, declared the convention of the Indiana State Canner's Association, to advance the price 16 cents a dozen to meet this rise in tin.

The United States transport Thomas arrived at San Francisco, bringing the remains of Gen. Henry W. Lawton, Gen. John A. Logan, Jr., Lieut. Bennett, and Dr. J. J. L. Armstrong. In the cabin of the Thomas were about twenty passengers, including Mrs. Lawton and her children. The remains of General Lawton will be interred at Arlington.

Agents of the Russian Quaker sect, the Doukhobers, are inspecting sugar beet lands in South California, and if proper arrangements can be made for leisurely payments, a colony of 21,000 Russians will move to Los Angeles County during next March. The Russians have found the northern part of British Columbia, where they are now quartered, to be too cold and sterile for successful colonization.

Spartanburg, S. C., is called "the Southern Lowell." Its cotton mills operate 410,640 spindles, and 12,454 looms. There are twenty-four mills in the county of Spartanburg, in which is invested $5,110,200. The mills have operated to double the county's cotton product, and to very decidedly improve the quality of lint produced. Farms all over the county have doubled and often, in favored localities, quadrupled in salable value, in a few years.

The climax to the disturbance in Kentucky, over the election contest, came in the assassination of Senator Goebel, the Democratic contestant, on the morning of January 30. Senator Goebel was walking across the capitol grounds on his way to the senate chamber, when he was fired upon from a window of the executive building, which was occupied at the time by armed mountaineers. The murderer has not yet been apprehended.

The War Department made public the following summary statement of the commerce of the Philippines during the month of July, 1899: The total value of merchandise imported at all ports in the archipelago during said month amounted to $1,577,530, of which amount articles to the value of $192,192 were imported free of duty. The total value of merchandise exported during the month amounted to $1,156,469. Products of agriculture amounted to $1,019,881, or 88 per cent of the total.

Mr. Wyndham, in the House of Commons, declared that Great Britain will have in a fortnight 180,000 regulars in South Africa, 7,000 Canadians and Australians, and 26,000 South African volunteers. Of this total of 213,000 troops, with 452 guns, all are now there, with the exception of about 18,000 that are afloat. Beyond comparison this is the largest force Great Britain has ever put into the field. At the end of the Crimean War she had scraped together 80,000 men. Wellington at Waterloo had 25,000 men.

A report of our Asiatic trade, prepared by Frank H. Hitchcock, chief of the foreign market section of the Agricultural Department, shows that there has been a great development of our trade with China and Japan during the past decade. Record figures were easily reached in the fiscal year of 1899 when the value of the merchandise exchanged with these two countries, including the port of Hongkong,

LACE CURTAINS FREE

These beautiful Royal Lace Parlor Curtains are of the newest Savoy design, three yards long, 36 inches wide, are washable and will last a life time. You can get two pairs of these choice curtains, (same design as in cut), and four beautiful Sash Curtains (one yard square each) FREE by selling our GREAT COLD REMEDY and HEADACHE CURE. Cures Cold in One Day! Relieves Headache at Once! We will give the curtains absolutely free to anyone taking advantage of the great offer we send to every person selling six boxes of our Tablets. If you agree to sell six boxes at 25 cents a box, write to-day and we will send the Tablets by mail postpaid. When sold, send us the money and we will send four Sash Curtains, unhemmed, so they may be made to fit any window, together with our offer of two complete pairs of Royal Lace Parlor Curtains, enough to furnish a room, same day money is received. This is a grand opportunity for ladies to beautify their homes with fine Lace Curtains of exquisite design. All who have earned them are delighted. Address: NATIONAL MEDICINE CO., 1010 Chapel St., New Haven, Conn. Box 157 A

Sweeney's Sermons

BY

JOHN S. SWEENEY, and an interesting life sketch of the author written by an intimate friend.

304 Pages, neatly bound in cloth.

Price...$1.00.

THE SUBJECTS OF THE SERMONS ARE:

The Simplicity that is in Christ, The Three Sides of Christianity, The Church of God—Its Foundation, The Word of Truth, Our Aim, Regeneration, Acts of Apostles, The More Excellent Way, Paul's Answer to King Agrippa, Action of Baptism, Baptism for Remission of Sins, What Must I Do to Be Saved? Infant Baptism, A Plea for the Church of God.

"I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ."—J. W. MCGARVEY.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

reached $87,305,688, against only $46,294,167 in 1898. Of the $87,305,688 valuation placed upon our trade with Japan, China, and Hongkong during 1899, $47,815,035 represented the import into the United States, and $39,490,653 the exports from this country. These figures show that in the decade ended with 1899 there was a gain of $28,393,156, or 256 per cent, in exports; while the increase in imports amounted to only $12,618,365, or 36 per cent. During the years 1889-1899 our imports from Japan advanced from $16,687,992 to $26,716,493, and the exports from $4,619,985 to $17,264,688.

The discoverer of prussic acid was instantly killed by inhaling one whiff of his own handiwork. Pure prussic acid is never sold or handled. The smell of it is always fatal. It kills not in three minutes or half an hour, but the instant it enters the lungs as a gas. The mixture ordinarily sold as prussic acid is ninety-eight parts water to two parts of the drug. Even in this form it is very deadly. A twenty per cent mixture of the acid would kill nearly as quickly as if pure. Atropine, though it has no harmful odor, is so deadly that as much of it as would adhere to the end of a moistened forefinger would instantly cause death. Cyanide of potassium has a pleasant smell, which is not injurious; but a small quantity swallowed kills at once. Pure ammonia, if inhaled, would cause death almost as quickly as prussic acid. When a carbonyl of nitric acid is broken, some one has to suffer. It will burn wood, eat through iron plates, and destroy whatever it touches. Such an accident once happened in an acid factory.—Chicago Chronicle.

In 1898 the total production of tin has been estimated at 57,300 tons; in 1890 it was but 55,100 tons. The greater part of the tin comes from the Malay Peninsula, which furnishes 60.6 per cent, not counting the Dutch East Indies, which give 19 per cent. Following this come Australia, with 7.9 per cent; Cornwall, 6.1 per cent; Bolivia, 7.9 per cent. Forty years ago Cornwall furnished 50 per cent of the total.

The most productive region is that part of the Malay Peninsula extending from Burmah and Siam to Sumatra, says the Scientific American. A considerable portion of the tin which is taken from this region is carried into China, and thus escapes the control of statistics. In the Australian region the chief center of production is Tasmania. The principal consumers for 1898 were the United States, 25,000 tons; Great Britain, 13,000; Germany, 14,500; and France, 8,500. The exportation of tin plate from Great Britain has been 251,769 tons, and that country consumes 150,000 tons. The tin plate production of America for the year is estimated at 327,000 tons. The total production is estimated at 750,000 tons, and the tin required for its manufacture reaches from 20,000 to 25,000 tons.

Free Cure for Kidneys and Bladder.

All readers of the Gospel Advocate who suffer from Kidney and Bladder disorders, weak back or Rheumatism should try the New Botanic discovery, Alkavis, made from the Kava-Kava shrub. Convincing proof of the wonderful curative powers of Alkavis is given by Rev. A. C. Darling, Constantia, N. Y.; Hon. R. C. Wood, Lowell, Ind.; Mrs. L. D. Fegeley, Lancaster, Ill.; and others cured of various diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, after many years' suffering. The Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 400 Fourth avenue, New York, to prove its great value, and for introduction, will send you a treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail, free. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and every sufferer should gladly accept this free offer.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

The Shed Blood of Christ.

"For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." (Matt. 26: 28.) The proof is abundant that it is the blood of Christ that cleanses, remits sins. (Read Eph. 1: 7; Rev. 1: 5; Heb. 9: 14; 1 Pet. 1: 18, 19; 1 John 1: 7.) Paul says: "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.) Then it is not only true that the blood of Christ cleanses from sin, but without the shed blood of Christ there is no remission.

It is certainly necessary, then, that one should come in contact with the shed blood of Christ, in order to the remission of his sins. But how and when does the sinner come in contact with the shed blood of Christ? Let us keep in mind that whatever may be done, it is the shed blood of Christ that cleanses from sin. Can we locate the place where, and the time when, the sinner comes in contact with the shed blood of Christ? If so, we at the same time locate the place where, and the time when, the sinner obtains pardon of his sins; in order, then, to locate the place where, and the time when, it is necessary to locate the shed blood of Christ. Where is it, and when does one come in contact with it? Says one: "It is in the body of Christ, and we come into it when we come into Christ." Let us be careful now; it is the shed blood of Christ, and not the blood in the body. It has been shed. Besides, if it is in the body, and one does not come in contact with it until he comes into the body where the blood is, then you have a sinner in the body, which is the church. That will not do. There is no remission without the blood, every one is a sinner until the blood is applied.

Then when does one come in contact with the blood of Christ? Since the blood has been shed, and is not in the body, it is necessary for us to find where it was shed; and when we find where it was shed, we locate the place where, and the time when, the sinner comes into it. "The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was a high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs: but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water." (John 19: 31-34.) Mark you that when they came to Jesus, they saw that he was dead already, his blood was shed in his death. Now we have located his blood; it is in his death, and in order to come into his blood it is necessary to enter his death, as his blood is in his death. When the sinner enters into his death he comes in contact with his blood, which cleanses from sin. How and when does the sinner enter the death of Christ? "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) How does the sinner enter the death of Christ where his shed blood is? Paul says that the Romans were baptized into it. Then it is in the baptismal tomb the sinner enters the death of Christ, as the blood is in his death; it is in the baptismal tomb that he enters the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin; not after he is raised into the body, but in the death. The life is in the blood. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. 17: 11.) The sinner dies to sin, and in the baptismal tomb comes in contact with the life-giving blood of Christ, and is quickened, made alive by the blood of Christ, which he has given for an atonement. Where did Christ receive life to come forth from the grave? He was dead and in the tomb. Was he raised from the tomb and then given life, or did God give him life in the tomb? Paul says he was raised up by the "glory of the Father." He was given life, then, while in the tomb; so the sinner in the baptismal tomb is quickened, given life. "That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life," raised up a new creature in the body of Christ, which is his church. This explains what Ananias meant when he said to Saul, "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord;" and what Peter meant when he said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you . . . for the remission of sins."

In view of the indisputable fact that it is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin, and that without the shedding of blood there is no remission, can you give a reason to every one for the hope that is within you? Have you been into the baptismal tomb? If not, you cannot give the reason the Galatians could give. Paul said they were all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) Paul points back to the baptismal tomb as the time when they became the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. The time when we came in contact with the blood of Christ, we have found to be the time when we are baptized into his death, where and when we reach the atonement.

JESSE D. WALLING.
McMinnville, Tenn.

Every young person who is of any account at all wishes for an education. The wisdom and advantage of a higher intellectual training are beyond dispute. Every brain needs culture. Thousands of young men and women daily regret that they have not an opportunity to study. They mourn the fate which has shut them out from a college course. It is their frequent declaration (and they rather pride themselves on the sentiment) that they would give anything to get an education. But—alas!—they sigh, their parents are poor and they must work; so the doors of learning are shut against them. Now it is very commendable for a young person to want an education, but it is pertinent to ask: How much does he want it? We have in mind a young man who is rebellious because he cannot go to college; yet when it is suggested to him that he spend his spare time in study, he declares: "A fellow must have some fun." He wants an education, but not sufficiently to pay for it in time and work. If somebody would pay his way through preparatory and college courses he would be glad enough to study; yet since he is not sufficiently in earnest to make an honest beginning against obstacles, a friend who would help him does not

The Gospel
Plan of Salvation

T. W. BRENTS

Price...$2.00

CLEARs away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes:

Predestination, Election and Reprobation, Calvinistic Proofs Examined, The Foreknowledge of God, Hereditary Depravity, Establishment of the Church, Identity of the Church, The New Birth, Faith, Repentance, The Confession, Baptism—What Is It? Who Should Be Baptized? The Design of Baptism, The Holy Spirit.

As a book of reference, it is invaluable. Highly recommended by the press and the brotherhood. 667 pages, 8vo., good paper, clear type, well bound. Eight editions have been sold.

Gospel Advocate Pub. Co.
232 N. MARKET ST.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

feel warranted in doing so. There are many such vain wishes and wishers. To such, an education would be of small value, for they lack the character which must underlie learning. The first essential of an education is a bedrock of overcoming purpose, upon which it may rest. If a young man or woman possesses this, nothing can keep him or her from getting an education.—Forward.

While Andrew is called "Simon Peter's brother," we cannot be sure that Simon Peter would have known the Lord without his brother, Andrew. Andrew sought Peter, found him, and brought him to Jesus. While Peter had greater abilities, yet Andrew could use the talent God had given him in blessing the world. God holds us accountable only for that we have. Often an Aquila and Priscilla teach an Apollos the way of the Lord more perfectly. Christians who are not specially gifted often lead to Christ those who prove themselves very talented and gifted workers in the vineyard of the Lord. It is encouraging to know that the Lord will always bless us in the faithful use of what we have. He does not require us to be great, but good. When we do our best, he gives us more strength and ability to use in his service.

THE AUTHENTIC LIFE OF
D. L. MOODY

— BY —
Rev. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

For many years MR. MOODY'S MOST INTIMATE COWORKER, and THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE BIBLE INSTITUTE OF WHICH MR. MOODY WAS PRESIDENT. The book will be replete with personal incident and anecdote, and tells the story of the GREATEST and MOST USEFUL LIFE of the century—how by his eloquence and power vast assemblies in this country and England were held entranced and thousands of souls were blessed. IT IS A MAGNIFICENT OPPORTUNITY FOR AGENTS. Sold only by subscription. Terms liberal. Freight paid. Send 20 cents to pay the cost of mailing on outfit QUICKLY.

JOHN C. WINSTON & CO.
328 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Remember "Allenrock's Book."

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy,
Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

*If You Are Going North,
If You Are Going South,
If You Are Going East,
If You Are Going West;*

PURCHASE TICKETS VIA THE

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R.

AND SO SECURE

*The Maximum of Safety,
The Maximum of Speed,
The Maximum of Comfort,
The Minimum of Rates.*

Rates, Time and all other information will be cheerfully furnished by

C. P. ATMORE, G. P. A.,
LOUISVILLE, KY.

The only house in all of the leading agents because there is more money in the cheaper they sell at

We can sell you the same direct, at prices save agents'

JESSE FRENCH PIANO & ORGAN CO., Manufacturers and Dealers St. Louis, Mo.

Write us, a 2c stamp may save you money. In doing so mention this paper.

sell you Pianos factory and you profits.

Southwest Texas—Report for November and December.

During November and December I received two sacks of corn and one sack of sweet potatoes, and $32.20 in money. I do not know how much of this came from Gospel Advocate readers, so do not give names. It all came from Texas, except a small contribution from a sister in Philadelphia, Pa. Our own first-day contributions amounted to $9.35, and a kind sister (whose name I withhold) sent me a Christmas gift of $5; making a total of $46.55. It has taken most of this to finish paying up the year's expenses, and provide meagerly for the winter. Taxes and interest on our home are unpaid, by which we forfeit our right, of necessity, to a shelter in this mission field. In addition, our only boy has been sick for several days, his symptoms indicating typhoid fever or that dread disease, appendicitis. The indications point to a mild attack; but we are very anxious, because in either disease it is so hard to see the end from the beginning. The man from whom I bought property here gives me a respite, pending the termination of our son's sickness. The amount required to enable me to hold it is $25.84. To meet this and other demands, I have, including our own first-day offerings, $10.23. I am not complaining, nor have I lost confidence in the promises of God. I state the case briefly to Gospel Advocate readers; some good Samaritan among its readers may come or send to our relief. If so, please say you read this in the Gospel Advocate.

G. W. BONHAM.

Berclair, Texas.

A Lesson in Ethics.

Some years ago I was in a meeting at Fosterville, Tenn. One day between services a couple of recently imported Italians came along, having in charge an ungainly cinnamon bear. A small sum was contributed by the loungers about the depot to see the bear dance.

Passing from Sister Edwards' across the railroad, to Brother Elam's, I stopped a moment and was watching the bear. At once one of the men shoved his cap toward me, saying: "Nickee for de bear." On my refusing, he said: "Unless you pay nickee, you ought not to look at de bear perform." My sense of right forced me to concede that this was good ethics, so, tipping my hat, I passed on and never even took a side glance at "de bear."

That was simply putting in a new way the old saying, that "they that dance should pay the fiddler," or the scriptural teaching, that they who minister in spiritual things should receive carnal things, in a new setting.

If this little article is given a place in the Gospel Advocate, some old brother will likely say that it was a waste of time and space to print such a silly incident. Silly or not, I profited by the gentle rebuke. Horace Greeley once said: "The darkest hour in a young man's life was when he wanted a dollar without earning it." We should always be willing to give a just equivalent for what we receive. This principle is violated in many ways. The gamblers do it, and so does the dealer in futures. Many do it unthoughtfully. Among this class are those who enjoy the luxury of a trip of many miles, in a fine upholstered passenger coach, and then, because the conductor overlooks them, keep their tickets for another trip. So are those who week after week and month after month take the newspaper from the office and read it, knowing the subscription is unpaid. To this class belong those who work for wages and when out of sight of their employer "sit on the stool of do-nothing," as well as those who profit by the work of others and then defraud them out of their wages. The man is seeing the "bear perform" without paying his nickel who year after year claims the services of the doctor without paying anything, and yet can get up money for tobacco and whisky; and the man who travels the turnpike, which was built and then kept up by the company's revenues, and then flanks around the toll-gate to keep from paying his pikeage. "In many things we offend all."

J. D. FLOYD.

A Wholesome Tonic, Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. S. L. Williams, Clarence, Iowa, says: "I have used it to grand effect in cases where a general tonic was needed. For a nerve tonic I think it the best I have ever used."

Among the many ills to which flesh is heir there is one to which the doctors give the name "asthenia." This is the condition to which Paul alludes in 1 Cor. 11: 30: "Many are weak [asthenic] and sickly among you." The victim has no organic difficulty. It denotes simply a condition of general debility, a depression of vital power. The malady is a common one, and it prevails not only in the realm of the physical, but also in the moral and spiritual world. There is a vast amount of moral invalidism; all the vital forces, scant at best, are exhausted in the effort barely to keep alive. Service of any kind is a burden; men move to the performance of it with laggard feet. There is no surplus in their doing; no hearty, joyous enthusiasm. They are alive, just alive, but they lack life "more abundantly." —Baptist Union.

To Be Prepared

For war is the surest way for this nation to maintain peace. That is the opinion of the wisest statesmen. It is equally true that to be prepared for spring is the best way to avoid the peculiar dangers of the season. This is a lesson multitudes are learning, and at this time, when the blood is sure to be loaded with impurities and to be weak and sluggish, the millions begin to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies, enriches, and vitalizes the blood; expels all disease germs, creates a good appetite, gives strength and energy, and puts the whole system in a healthy condition, preventing pneumonia, fevers, and other dangerous diseases which are liable to attack a weakened system.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BLOOD WILL TELL.

No Blood, No Life! Poor Blood, Poor Life! Pure Blood, Good Health.

No person can have good health without pure blood, as all diseases are directly traceable to a diseased or impoverished condition of the blood. Impure blood falls short of its duty of nourishing the system. The color and life in the blood is the iron there is in it, and with the lack of iron there is just as certainly a lack of health.

Read this testimony of W. C. Josselyn regarding Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

"State of California, City and County of San Francisco.

"Before me, the undersigned authority, a notary public in and for said city and county, personally appeared W. C. Josselyn, who, being duly sworn, on oath deposes and says:

"I am a merchant tailor, doing business at 9 Geary street, Rooms 1, 2, 3, 4, in the city of San Francisco. I am now nearly 69 years of age; came to this coast on the bark Rocket in the year 1850, and have been here ever since.

"Twenty years ago, at White Pine, Nev., I was attacked with what my doctors termed rheumatism. My case baffled the skill of the physicians at that place and those at Virginia City, who advised me to come to this city for treatment, which I did fourteen years ago, and placed myself under the care, one after another, of the best physicians that money could procure. I kept growing worse all the time, and supposed that I never would get well. For the last eleven years I was unable to put my coat on without some one helping me. During this time I lost the use of my left hand, which had become drawn out of shape and badly swollen from the effects of this disease. About nine years ago ulcers formed on that hand; they grew so large that a walnut could be dropped into them. About a year ago ulcers formed on my right temple, one on my forehead, and one on my left cheek. My physicians decided that a portion of my cheek bone must be removed before I could recover, but I declined to have it done. I was in this ulcerated condition, very much debilitated, confined to my bed, with no appetite, my friends having given up all hopes of my recovery, when, during January last, I received one of Dr. Harter's almanacs, read it and resolved to try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. I quit using all other medicine and commenced taking the Iron Tonic as directed, occasionally taking a dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills.

"After taking one bottle I felt a change; the ulcers commenced to heal, my sufferings grew less, and I regained my appetite. After taking five bottles of the Iron Tonic the ulcers were completely healed. I now feel as free from aches and pains as a six-year-old boy, can dress myself without assistance, attend to my business and walk miles without fatigue. I attribute my cure—not in part, but wholly—to the use of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

(Signed) "W. C. JOSSELYN."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 9th day of May, A.D. 1896.

(Signed) "W. F. SWASEY, Notary Public."

Read this from another Texas man:

"Dallas Tex., December 16, 1897.

"Publisher News, Dallas.—Dear Sir: To those suffering from indigestion, loss of appetite, biliousness, and general running down of the system, I cheerfully recommend Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. It worked wonders for me.

CHAS. E. FIELD.

"Northwest corner Camp & Akard."

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

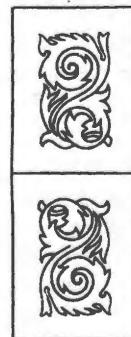

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE Strong and Healthy.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

BY A. P. STOUT

TOUCHES and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places are most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the "Man of sorrows" are almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. Address

Price, $1.00

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. NASHVILLE, TENN.

"Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," by D. Lipscomb, is an interesting book of 120 pages, devoted to a memorial of the life and works of this good man, and 197 pages to his sermons. This book, we think, will well repay any reader, and contains a large fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

Our calendar is the nicest and prettiest we have ever made. See our premium offer on last page.

What Must Man Believe?

With much interest I have read from your worthy paper, the Gospel Advocate, the dialogue between Alexander and Rufus, on "Reimmersion," which shows that the reimmersion idea is not of recent birth, that the question was mooted at least seventy years ago, and that Alexander Campbell was then alive and in the zenith of his mental glory; that he in his profundity analyzed this as he did every new phase of thought that sprang up in the church, and facts show the question was satisfactorily settled among the brotherhood, and remained so until the days of A. McGary. Although so many excellent things have been said and so many arguments have been adduced by Brothers Sewell, Harding, and Lipscomb on the subject, I desire to chronicle a few thoughts myself. In Gospel Advocate of December 22, 1899, an article was published from my pen, under the caption, "The Then and the Now," not thinking that anything from a quarter so humble would elicit attention from a Firm Foundation scribe, yet to my surprise a half dozen of its admirers jumped on me with both feet. I offered one reply, but finding that I could not get justice by them, I just took a back seat and gave the thing over. But from the time I saw the real issue, "Faith in the design of baptism," I faltered, and in disgust turned my back against the rebaptismal affair, because faith in God's designs does not enter into the matter of man's salvation. Faith in Christ covers the entire ground. How do we read? "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. . . . He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." (John 3: 16-36.) "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life." (John 5: 24.) "Every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life. . . . He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." (John 6: 40-47.) "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." (John 1: 12.) "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." (John 14: 1.) He will convict the world "of sin, because they believe not on me." (John 16: 9.) "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20: 31.)

In the foregoing I have collated eight scriptures, the words of Christ, looking to forgiveness of sin; six of them read, "Believe on Christ," and two, "Believe in Christ," neither of which in the remotest intimate that man must believe in the designs of God in order to be pardoned.

From these we pass to notice the conditions of pardon as proclaimed by the apostles, who were guided by the Holy Spirit into all truth. Phillip said: "If thou believest, . . . thou mayest." Said the Ethiopian: "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." "And he baptized him." (Acts 8: 37, 38.) "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." (Acts 10: 43.) Under the guidance of the Spirit of the apostle Peter the case is here fairly made out, he referring to all the prophets who bore witness to the fact that all who believe in him, or on him, should have remission of sins. To this we add the testimony of the apostle Paul: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16: 31.)

This testimony adds great strength to the argument because of the fact that the inquirer after salvation was a man who knew nothing of Christ, his kingdom, or his teaching; the circumstances surrounding him called forth the inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?" and reason would say the answer given should be strictly true; therefore, in harmony with all other scripture, Paul answered: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Another testimony by Paul is of note just here: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." (Rom. 10: 9.) To believe intelligently that God raised Christ from the dead forces a belief that he is God's Son; and if he is God's Son, then it follows that every word spoken by him is true, his every act was right, every command he gave was just, and that all his promises will be fulfilled, and every threat or penalty attached to his law will in due time be meted out. If to believe in the design of baptism before it is received is as necessary as some claim it to be, is it not a little remarkable that in all this array of scripture it is not mentioned? Had it been so important as to invalidate man's obedience to God, it should have been taught clearly in each discourse preached by the apostles. Strange indeed, it was never done. I dare say that each and every preaching brother, Tom Thumb high, intellectually, since the year 1827, has understood and preached baptism for remission of sins; hence, I say unless the issue is on the design of baptism there is no issue among us. Therefore, for the sake of truth and the cause of God, the clamor should cease. Back about as far as memory reaches, I well remember to have heard discourses by our brethren on the design of baptism; then since we all believe and teach it, why should the body of Christ upon earth be torn into shreds, the flock scattered and lost, brethren who once loved each other in deed and in truth alienated in feeling, when, in fact, the difference is "tweedle dee and tweedle dum?" Doubtless there will be a shaking of dry bones in a coming day. V. I. STIRMAN.

An Incident, with a Lesson.

I once attended a literary entertainment given by the pupils at the close of a school term. It was in a magnificent hall, beautifully illuminated by electricity. Everything went on nicely until the exercises were half through, when something got out of order at the power house. The lights began to grow dim and continued to fade until they were wholly extinguished. I thought: How like some church members! They blaze up with dazzling brilliancy for a time, but something goes wrong with them, their light fades, and in course of time is entirely obscured. The teacher at the entertainment, when the electric lights failed, had lamps brought in, remarking, as he did so, that we could do as well as our fathers, who had to depend on the tallow candle. It occurred to me that the dim but constant light of the candle would have been better than the light that was dazzling for a while and then left all in darkness. So, while I dislike to see a church member whose light is comparable to the tallow dip, yet I believe a constant light, though weak, is better than one that is brilliant but soon dies out.

J. D. FLOYD.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

Our Umbrellas.

It was raining hard, and Miss Matilda, looking from her window, saw two schoolgirls hurrying homeward under umbrellas.

"Look at those silly youngsters!" Miss Matilda said. "They fancy they're keeping off the rain, but they're not. They're bent forward, and hold their umbrellas quite over their noses, while the rain pours down on their backs. But they don't know that, bless you! It's dry in front, and they don't see what is going on behind them. They make me think of some people I know, who are so intent on saving the great world out in front that they forget the mischief that is going on right back of them—in their own homes, maybe.

"I read in a paper the other day high praise of a talk given before a mothers' club on the 'Moral Training of Children.' The woman who gave it is a good, earnest soul, and has some fine theories, but she hasn't the least suspicion of what any of the neighbors could tell her about the moral training her two boys are needing. Her moral umbrella is a good one, but she isn't holding it in the right place. I'm not saying anything against outside work," concluded Miss Matilda, "but I've always thought it was sensible advice that Nehemiah gave his men: each to build and watch over against his own house."—Forward.

Those who contend that the Indian is incapable of becoming a good agriculturist take their cue from a few isolated cases. In most cases where failure has been recorded the failure comes more from the inability or incapacity of those who are appointed by the government to lead them. Whoever has had the opportunity of traveling through the country settled by the Cherokees and Choctaws must have seen quite as frequent evidence of agricultural success among those people as could be seen among white people anywhere. It is, however, to be suggested that this is chiefly on account of the country being more favorable to agriculture than localities farther north. The Crow Indians are rapidly advancing in industrial agriculture. Crops have been raised in the Crow region chiefly by irrigation. In less than ten years these Indians have constructed eight large irrigating canals, sufficient to irrigate from two thousand to ten thousand acres each, and are now working on another that is even larger. It is to extend for probably fifty miles. A few white men are employed as skilled artisans by the Indians; but the work itself is done by them. It is said that they are remarkably thrifty, not spending all their money, but saving some, which is invested in truly sensible and business ways.

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.

"The Loss of Gold is Great;

The loss of health is more." Health is lost by neglecting to keep the blood pure, but it is regained by purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood with the great health restorer, Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands who thought health had been permanently lost have been made perfectly well by taking this great medicine. Your experience may be the same.

HOOD'S PILLS are gentle, yet always effective.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1853. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR
the grandest and fastest-selling book ever published,
Pulpit Echoes
OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART.
Containing Mr. MOODY'S best Sermons, with 500 Thrilling Stories, Incidents, Personal Experiences etc., as told
By D. L. Moody
Amself. With a complete history of his life by Rev. CHAS. F. WELLES, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Chicago Church for five years, and an Introduction by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D.
Brand new, (400) p., beautifully illustrated. (7) $1.000 more AGENTS WANTED—Men and Women. (7) Sales immense—a harvest time for Agents. Send for terms to D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,

No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US
TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS
AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF
$1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR,
WE WILL FORWARD THE
BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO- NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE, flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium for ONE NEW subscriber. $2.00

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals, for one year, with the choice of ONE of the following premiums, FOR $1.50
(a) Home and Farm, One Year;
(b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
(c) Our New Calendar for 1900.

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. ADDRESS

* GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. *

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

A Further Explanation.

There are some things in Brother Tant's article which are misleading. Brother Tant did not intend to mislead; but he did not know all the facts. One year ago last December I came to Norman, while Brother Tant was in a meeting at the Advent Church. The audience was large, and the house was cold; so Brother Tant and I went to see Dr. Worley, who was preaching for the church which used the organ. Brother Tant asked for the use of their house to conduct the meeting in, but Dr. Worley refused. Some days after we went again to Dr. Worley, and Brother Tant asked for the loan or hire of the baptistery.

Dr. Worley said Brother Tant could use the baptistery, but next morning Brother Worley and Brother Brock (who was at that time an elder in the church) informed Brother Tant that he could not have the baptistery for love or money. These are the facts before Brother Tant; but these are not all the facts.

Now when the church found what Brother Brock and Brother Worley had done they promptly passed resolutions condemning their action, and offered to any one in good standing the privilege denied Brother Tant. They have done what they could to remedy the evil done.

Again, Brother Tant states that the house was built partly by the money of those turned out. I have just consulted Brother J. T. Scott, who is an elder in the church for which Brother Tant preached. He says if the house was partly built by their money, he knows nothing of it. He thinks this is surely a mistake. Again, he says that the members of the church for which Brother Tant preached were never driven out of the other church, for they were never members of it. One other point: only four members of the congregation here took membership while Brother Haddock was preaching; the other three which Brother Tant mentions were not members here, but were the same in faith. This mistake perhaps occurred from my letter to Brother Tant, in which I did not discriminate. Since the meeting referred to, Brother Worley has been turned out of the church for drunkenness and immorality and Brother Brock has been dismissed from the eldership, and does not even attend church. Brother Scott also informs me that the church now has literature in the Sunday school.

I have read this article to Brother Scott, and he thinks this is a fair statement of the case, so far as the facts are known to us.

If facts are shown to be different from those stated, correction will be gladly given. I write this in the interest of all parties concerned, as all want the truth. J. A. MINTON.
Norman, O. T.

$5 a Day Sure this Winter for Men and Women.

Let Professor Gray start you in the plating business, doing plating and selling his famous outfits. New plan, new business, no experience needed. Demand for plating enormous. Profits immense. Be a money-maker. Don't be hard up. He makes a genuine offer, agrees to teach you free this sure paying business, and wants to appoint a good person in every district. Others are making from $5 to $15 a day, so can you. Write quick, stating age, experience, references, etc., to GRAY & CO., Plating Works, Cincinnati, O.

No man is truly great who does not rule himself.

Mardi Gras Celebration, New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., February 26, 27, 1900.

Reduced Rates via Southern Ry.

On account of Mardi Gras celebration at New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., February 26, 27, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to New Orleans, La., and return, also to Mobile, Ala., and return, at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold from February 20 to 26 inclusive, with final limit to return March 15, 1900.

The Southern Railway offers excellent and convenient schedules en route to New Orleans and Mobile, and passengers should purchase tickets reading via that line.

For further information, call on Southern Railway ticket agent.

"SNAP SHOTS"

A LARGE number of engraved views of varied scenery in the famous zinc fields of Southwestern Missouri, mailed free, along with "Tales of Fortune" telling all about the zinc industry of Missouri and how a small sum can be invested to good advantage. Address

WALTER SAYLER,
171 La Salle St. Chicago, Ill.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 7.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, FEBRUARY 15, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

The Worship of God Spiritual.....	98
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 28.....	98
Work in Armenia Not Lost.....	99
Had Forgotten.....	100
A Tale of Two Brothers.....	100
Miscellany.....	101
Queries.....	102
"Not My Will".....	102
Home Reading.....	103
Divine Warnings.....	104
The Bible.....	104
Honesty.....	105
A plain Way.....	105
Is Christianity Practicable?.....	106
Kansas Notes.....	107
General News.....	108
Obituaries.....	109
Is it Worth While?.....	109
Field Findings.....	110
Evidence is Necessary.....	110
Book Reviews.....	111
The Facts in the Case.....	112

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

As the subject of denominational organization is now under discussion in these columns, I republish from the book "Biographies and Sermons" the following introductory chapter on "Organized Religion vs. Christianity:"

"One of the greatest enemies Christianity now has or has ever had is organized religion. Christ was crucified and thousands of his early disciples were put to death by religious people because the doctrine they preached was disintegrating to religious institutions. Jesus clearly foresaw and plainly foretold the great conflict between Christianity and organized religion: 'They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.' (John 16: 2.) Paul also spoke of people 'having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.' (2 Tim. 3: 5.) He suffered many things at the hands of such men; nearly all the persecutions he endured were from religious people; and he saw no end to the conflict between Christianity and organized religion. 'But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.' (2 Tim. 3: 10-13.) Every great religious awakening since John preached in the wilderness, or since Elijah was fed by the ravens in the woods, has been led by consecrated men and women who were ostracized and persecuted by religious people because the doctrine they preached was disintegrating to religious institutions. All the great religious reformers have walked with God and preached the truth while religious people persecuted them to save the craft of organized religion from disintegration and dissolution. Religious people have committed nearly every crime in the catalogue of iniquity to build up, strengthen, and maintain organizations Christ never authorized. All denominational organizations use the power of organization against men and doctrine whenever the interests of organized religion demand it. They have to do this in self-defense. 'Self-preservation is the first law of nature,' and no organization can maintain itself without opposing men and doctrine that antagonize it. This explains why there is now, has always been, and always will be a conflict between Christianity and every form of ecclesiastical organization. Jesus said: 'Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.' (Matt. 15: 13.) The Heavenly Father never planted any form of denominational organization, and the mission of Christ and Christianity is, therefore, to root them all up. There was no organization in Christianity during the New Testament period but worshiping assemblies or local congregations, and there was but little of what the world now calls organization in a local congregation. There was not an uninspired official dignitary in the whole kingdom of heaven down to the close of the New Testament period greater or more honorable than elders or bishops in local congregations, and it is exceedingly problematical whether they were officers in the full sense which that term now bears. 'The Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel' (1 Cor. 9: 14); but there were no fixed salaries or salaried positions in denominational organizations, great or small, in the kingdom of heaven, to constitute a boodle, breed corruption, and build up an ecclesiastical 'pie brigade' on the hunt for easy jobs with big salaries and high honors. Jesus explained that there were no high places or official honors in the kingdom of heaven. 'Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you.' (Matt. 20: 25, 26.) 'The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.' (Luke 17: 20, 21.) This is but another way of saying the kingdom of God is not a denominational organization, but a holy life and a spiritual fellowship. The church of the New Testament is the body of Christ. 'And gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body.' (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) 'And he is the head of the body, the church.' (Col. 1: 18.) 'For his body's sake, which is the church.' (Col. 1: 24.) There is but one body which is the church, and every Christian is a member of it. 'There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.' (Eph. 4: 4.) 'For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. . . . Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.' (1 Cor. 12: 12-27.) 'For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.' (Rom. 12: 4, 5.) 'For to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby.' (Eph. 2: 15, 16.) The church is a spiritual body, and not a denominational organization. Every Christian is a member of it because he is a Christian and as long as he remains a Christian. No man can belong to Christ and not be a member of the church, because the church is the body of Christ. No one has any scriptural authority to belong to any religious body or organization but the church. 'But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.' (1 Cor. 6: 17.) No one ought to be joined unto anything but the Lord in religion. The church of the New Testament is the family of God. 'That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God.' (1 Tim. 3: 15.) 'Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.' (Eph. 2: 19.) 'Let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.' (Gal. 6: 10.) The house of God, the household of God, the household of faith, the church of the living God. 'Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.' (Gal. 3: 26, 27.)

Every Christian is a child of God and a member of the family of God, which is the church of the living God. No one can become a Christian without becoming a member of the church any more than one can become a child without becoming a member of the family. One becomes a member of the church at the same time and by the same process he becomes a Christian. There is but one way to become a member of the family of God, which is the church of the living God, and that is to be born into it. 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' (John 3: 5.) God, by the Holy Ghost, dwells in and works through men and women. 'All scripture is given by inspiration of God.' (2 Tim. 3: 16.) Inspiration of God is a miraculous measure of the Holy Spirit, and those who had it spoke 'as the Spirit gave them utterance;' so that it was not they that spoke, but the Holy Spirit that spoke in them. (Acts 2: 4; Matt. 10: 20.) Any one in whom God, by the Holy Ghost, dwells and works will be governed in all things by the Holy Scriptures, because the Scriptures are given by the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Ghost is always consistent with himself. 'If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.' (1 Cor. 14: 37.) All efforts to control and direct men and women in whom God, by the Holy Ghost, dwells and works, by organizations formed and directed by men, but unauthorized by the Holy Scriptures, are really efforts to control and direct God by human organizations and human wisdom and authority. In its last analysis, it is an effort of men to govern God and make him subservient to the vanities, caprices, and judgment, not to say the wickedness, of frail humanity. God will not work under the dictation and authority of men, and to the extent people imbibe the spirit of organized religion they lose the power of the Holy Ghost. All forms of ecclesiastical organization are lacking in the power of individual piety and personal consecration, and this lack grows more apparent as the organizations grow older, stronger, more cumbersome, and come more fully under the influence of the spirit of organized religion. The tendency in them all is toward decay in personal consecration and individual piety, and they are liable at any time to fall into the hands of designing and self-seeking men who will manipulate them for their own glory and profit; but the work of the Lord has gone on from the beginning, and probably will go on to the end, in a series of revolutions and reformations led by consecrated men and women who break away from such organizations, as they fall into spiritual decay, and walk with God. There are too many high honors, big salaries, costly edifices, and moneyed institutions and corporations in organized religion to harmonize with the spirit of the Man of sorrows and Friend of sinners, who had not where to lay his head. All this is a demoralizing example of worldly vanity and the love of money. No one that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of such organizations, 'that he may please him who hath chosen him to be soldier.' 'The love of money is the root of all evil,' and in this money-loving age there are few, if any, places where the rush for the almighty dollar is fiercer than in organized religion. The efforts that are made and the methods that are employed to get money 'for the benefit of the church' are often reprehensible, from a standpoint of equity and honesty, and never commendable as wholesome examples of spirituality. To successfully financier complicated and cumbersome religious organizations requires much the same worldly sagacity and disregard of nice points of spirituality as the management of railroad monopolies and campaign boodle in national elections. It is all vanity and vexation of spirit to men who really desire to fear God and keep his commandments. Organized religion would shorten the distance to the kingdom of heaven by a long stride if it would heed the admonition of Jesus: 'Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me.' Men who manage the complicated business affairs and far-reaching financial schemes of denominational organizations have little time to take part in the work of individual evangelism. Moreover, the effort to evangelize the world systematically by such organizations deadens the sense of personal responsibility and discourages the spirit of individual activity. There is too much dependence upon organizations, and not enough emphasis upon personal consecration. The individual is lost in the institution, and the organization falls into decay because it lacks the power of personal effort. Christianity has never prospered under the system of organized religion. The thorns of worldly vanity have always choked the seed and smothered the spirit of Christianity in ecclesiastical organizations. Periods of great revivalistic zeal and evangelistic fervor have always been seasons of individual effort and personal consecration, when men and women were unhampered by ecclesiastical organization, 'and every one's bands were loosed.' It is exceedingly problematical whether any congregation of worshipers in New Testament times so much as owned a house of any kind in which to hold their meetings, and certain it is the house in which they worshiped was never called a church or considered indispensable to the work and worship of the Lord. They met on the first day of the week for public worship (Acts 7: 20; 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2; 11: 18-24; 14: 23-26; Heb. 10: 25), but the places of such meetings were temporary, varied, and uncertain. They met in upper rooms (Acts 20: 7, 8), in private houses (Rom. 16: 3-5; 1 Cor. 16: 19), and sometimes they doubtless met as 'they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth' (Heb. 11: 38). They did not build costly houses and wait for the people to come to fixed places of worship to hear the gospel in periodic sermons and receive the word in capsules of methodical discourses, but 'they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word.' (Acts 8: 4.) They all preached, wherever they went, to everybody they met. They preached 'by a river side' (Acts 16: 13), in jail (Acts 16: 32), in the synagogues (Acts 17: 1-12), in the temple (Acts 5: 25), in the market (Acts 17: 17), in the city court (Acts 17: 22), from house to house (Acts 20: 20), and along the highway (Acts 8: 35, 36). They were neither cranks nor fanatics, but they labored personally to convert men and women to Christ and lead them to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, rather than to build up institutions and make proselytes to ecclesiastical organizations. They put the emphasis upon individual piety and personal worship and service of the Lord, rather than upon strong organizations and centralized institutions and corporations in religion. The spread of the gospel by such individual efforts and personal work, without any method of systematic organization, and against everything human ingenuity could do to prevent it, was the marvel of the age. Denominational organizations are plainly condemned by the New Testament because they produce strife, envying, contentions, and schisms in the body of Christ among the people of God. All ecclesiastical organizations are departures from the simplicity that is in Christ. 'For whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?' (1 Cor. 3: 3.) 'Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?' (1 Cor. 1: 10-13.) 'Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' (John 17: 20, 21.) Those who believe on Christ through the word of those whom he has sent never can be one in any denominational organization, but they can be one in Christ. The only way to harmony among the people of God is in abandonment and abolishment of all ecclesiastical organizations unknown in the New Testament. 'Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.' (Eph. 4: 3, 4.) The unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace is in the one body, and not in a denominational organization. If Christians will abandon and abolish all denominational organizations and walk with God, there will be unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace among them in one body. 'But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the Word of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.' (1 John 1: 7.) The way for Christians to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace in one body is to be nothing but Christians, belong to nothing but the body of Christ, which is the church, and preach and practice nothing but what Christians and churches preached and practiced in New Testament times under the leadership of inspired men."

Our Contributors.

The Worship of God Spiritual.

If a man were under the sentence of the law of the State to suffer punishment for the violation of that law, and every appeal to the higher courts had been made, and the sentence at last affirmed, his only recourse for relief would be through the exercise of executive clemency, a pardon from the Governor.

In seeking this, the necessity of approaching the chief executive in a way and manner which would favorably impress him on the subject would at once be apparent. Those who sought his favor would consider well the rules to which His Honor adhered in the bestowal of such favors. The petition would be in the best form possible; the signers thereto would be of the best citizens; and the petition would be presented by those whose influence was the best obtainable, and at such a time and place as were required. All these things would be diligently attended to, else there would be no ground to expect pardon.

To raise the figure as high as the governments of earth can furnish an illustration, let us suppose a man to have been found guilty of the violation of the laws of the United States—which is the greatest government now upon earth, for President McKinley holds the most honorable earthly position of any living man—and every possible appeal has been taken, and the sentence has been affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest tribunal on earth; the guilty party would then realize the fact that his only hope would be an appeal for pardon to the President of the United States. Would he not with the utmost care and diligence comply with the will of the President in the presentation of the petition? The time, place, and the persons to present the same would be chosen so as best to meet the approval of His Excellency, the President. If he had plainly prescribed rules in these matters, they would be rigidly complied with, otherwise no one could expect the extension of pardon.

This reference to the Chief Executive of the United States is as high a comparison as the nations of this world can furnish, as stated above; yet this is a very feeble one in comparison with the Sovereign of the Universe, the great God and Creator of all, who holds in his hands the destinies of all men and all nations. Has he prescribed any rules for the extension of divine clemency or pardon? He certainly has, and has clearly revealed these conditions in his word. Reference has been made to them in the preceding article. There are certain conditions of pardon; these must be attended to in a certain state of mind or heart to meet the divine approval. This preparation of heart is referred to in Isa. 66: 1-5. There it is shown the applicant must be "poor," or "poor in spirit;" "contrite" in heart; and "tremble" at the word of God. The meaning of these expressions is not difficult. They must be present in every heart that seeks divine pardon. He who requires these conditions of heart is the all-wise Judge of all hearts, and knows when the applicant's heart is right, before him.

Should it be objected that this reference is in the Old Testament, let it be answered that this principle is clearly announced and emphasized in the New Testament. The Savior denounced those who drew near to him with their mouth and honored him with their lips, when their heart was far from him. This scripture of the Old Testament on this subject Christ impressed with increasing force. No one, even of modern times, could say prayers with more sanctimoniousness, more rhetorical flourish of language and expression than these Pharisees of his time, but all was vain; they who prayed were hypocrites at heart. Sometimes now, when those who delight in imposing ceremonies dilate upon the "beautiful service," the thoughtful mind turns unbidden to those whom the Savior denounced in such severe terms. The outward service may be perfectly faultless in form, yet it is still possible for the heart to be far from God. The New Testament abounds with the plainest references to this important principle.

In the very first sermons the apostles and the evangelists preached to those who had never heard the gospel they impressed this great truth. Take, for example, the sermon Philip, the evangelist, preached to the Ethiopian nobleman. The historian says: "He preached unto him Jesus." This was not simply repeating the name "Jesus," "Jesus," "Jesus;" although that might have brought many a precious thought to one who had believed on him. Doddridge from his pious soul sung:

Jesus, I love thy charming name;
'Tis music to my ear;
Fain would I sound it out so loud
That all the earth might hear.

Not in this way did Philip preach Jesus to the nobleman; but to preach Jesus is to preach the gospel of Jesus in its facts, precepts, and promises. This he did, and as they went on their way they came unto a certain water. The nobleman said: "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" This was a wise question. Many things might hinder if one lacked faith or repentance, or, in other words, was not prepared in heart to obey God; these ought to hinder one being baptized. It may be added, by the way, no one could be baptized upon the faith of a parent, nor be baptized simply to become a member of some human institution; any of these should be sufficient hindrance to baptism as ordained by Jesus Christ. Philip's reply to the question fixes our attention upon the important heart preparation to be made. He said: "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." The omission of this verse from some ancient authorities matters not, since the same truth is taught on similar occasions in the New Testament. The narrative is indeed broken and incomplete unless this idea is supplied or implied in some form.

This was the first gospel sermon the nobleman heard; the evangelist, Philip, certainly knew his duty as a minister of Jesus Christ.

"To this man will I look," said the Lord through Isaiah, "even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

"Blessed are the pure in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven," says Christ in the Sermon on the Mount.

To the Samaritan woman at the well of Jacob, Christ said: "The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 28.

Some days ago we parted company with the apostle Paul, whose ship had just run under the lee of the Island of Clauda; and since we have crossed his track again, we are quite anxious to learn how he has fared. From Luke, his traveling companion, we learn that while in the brief and partial lull which the island afforded, they, with much difficulty, hoisted the boat on board; then "they used helps, undergirding the ship," or, to use the term for a practice which is now rarely resorted to, they "frapped" it by passing stout ropes several times under the prow, and tied them as tightly as possible around the middle of the vessel to keep her timbers from parting. They then, fearing lest they should be cast upon the quicksands, lowered the gear, rounded the prow of the vessel as near to the wind as possible, most likely set a storm sail, and let her drift on at the mercy of the winds and the waves. So ended the day which had begun with such soft breezes and presumptuous hopes.

All night long the storm raged with awful fury, and the next day they kept throwing overboard, from time to time, everything that could possibly be spared to lighten the ship; but even this was insufficient. The next night brought no relief. The fate which often befell ancient vessels—that of foundering—was obviously imminent. On the third day, therefore, it became necessary to take some more decisive step, so they cast overboard the huge mainsail, and the vessel was much lightened. Her rolling must have been fearful. The ship was now reduced to the condition of a leaky and dismantled hulk, swept from stem to stern by the dashing spray, and drifting, no one knew whither, under leaden and moonless heavens. A gloomy apathy settled down more and more upon them,

There were no means of cooking; no fire could be lighted; the utensils must have been swept overboard; the provisions had probably been sodden and spoiled by the waves that broke over the ship; indeed, with death staring them in the face, no one cared to eat. They were famishing wretches, in a ship drifting, with hopes that diminished day by day, to what they regarded as an awful and certain death.

But in that desperate crisis Paul retained his calm and courage. In physical health he was probably the weakest and the greatest sufferer of them all; but it is in such moments as these that the courage of the noblest souls shines with the purest luster. As he prayed in all the peacefulness of "a conscience void of offense toward God and men," it was revealed to him that he must be brought before Caesar, and that with the preservation of his own life God would also grant to him the lives of the unhappy sufferers for whom his great heart yearned with pity. While all others were abandoning themselves to despair, Paul stood forth on the deck, and after reminding them that their distress was due to the fact that they did not follow his advice, he bade them cheer up; for though the ship should be lost, and they should be wrecked on some island, not one life should be lost. Who doubts that those calm, undoubting words helped to bring about their own fulfillment? Much had yet to be done, many strong measures had yet to be taken, to avert destruction; and God helps those who take advantage of the appointed means to help themselves. Without doubt, it was Paul's undaunted encouragements that inspired these despairing, starving mariners to the exertions which ultimately secured their safety; for after they had been driven and tossed up and down on the furious sea, suddenly on the fourteenth night the sailors fancied that they heard the roar of breakers through the midnight darkness. Surmising that they drew near to some country, they dropped the lead and found that they were in twenty fathoms of water, "and when they had gone a little farther, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms." Their suspicions and fears were now turned to certainty, and here was the fresh danger of having their leaking hulk driven irresistibly upon some rocky shore. So "they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day." All through the remaining hours of that long, wintry night, they stood face to face with the agony of death. In its present condition it must have constantly been deluged with the spray, and fearing that it might sink or drag the anchors kept them in awful suspense.

Gradually the day began to dawn, and they observed that they were anchored off a low point, over which the sea was curling with a huge and most furious surf. Not recognizing a single landmark on the shore, the only thought of the selfish, heathen sailors was to abandon the hulk and crew to their fate, while they saved themselves in the boat; pretending, therefore, that they could steady the pitching of the ship by casting out anchors the full length of the rope instead of merely casting them from the prow, they began to unlash the boat and to lower her into the sea. Had they succeeded in their plot, all on board would inevitably have perished from inability to handle the sinking vessel. From this calamity the crew and sailors were once more saved by the prompt energy and courage of Paul. Seeing the baseness of their designs, he observed to Julius and the soldiers: "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." Strong in the promise of God, Paul had no doubt whatever respecting his own preservation, but the promise of safety to all the crew was conditioned on their own performance of duty. The soldiers promptly "cut off the ropes of the boat and let her fall off." Daylight had now fully dawned, and the hour was approaching when everything would depend upon the skill and presence of mind of all on board. Once more, therefore, Paul encouraged them and urged them all to take some food, saying: "This day is the fourteenth day that ye wait and continue fasting, having taken nothing. Wherefore I beseech you to take some food: for this is for your safety; for there shall not a hair perish from the head of any of you." Having given them this encouragement, he took bread and "gave thanks to God in the presence of all; and he brake it and began to eat." Then were the two hundred and seventy-six persons all "of good cheer, and themselves also took food." Having done this, knowing it was impossible to save the cargo, they threw the wheat overboard to lighten the ship and make it go as fast toward the shore as possible.

They were anchored off what is now called Kouris Point, seven miles from Valetta, which I saw dis-tingly as we sailed near it. From this point they saw a bay—now called St. Paul's Bay—at one extremity of which the cliffs sank down into a flat beach, and the only thing which they could hope to do was to thrust the ship out of her direct course and strand her at this spot. To do this with a disabled ship was by no means easy, but their condition required the effort. They therefore cut off the anchors, leaving them in the sea, "at the same time loosing the bands of the rudders;" and, hoisting up the foresail to the wind, they made for the beach. Their effort was a failure. The opposite point looked to them like another promontory, but was, in fact, the island of Salmonetta, separated from the main island by a deep, narrow channel; through this channel—about a hundred yards wide—runs a current, and in the stormy race where the waters of this current met the waters of the bay, two seas met, and in this the vessel would not answer to the rudder, and all they could do was to run her ashore. Happily for them, she drove not upon rocks, but into a bank of mud. "The fore part stuck fast, and remained unmoved, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves." Here, even at this extremity, arose a new and unexpected danger for Paul and the other prisoners. It was the duty of Roman soldiers to be responsible with their own lives for prisoners intrusted to them. So long as death seemed imminent, and every one on board must be useful in averting it, the prisoners must have been left unchained; but in such a crisis as now confronts them what was to hinder some of them making good their escape? From this peril the prisoners were again indirectly saved by him whose counsel and encouragement had all along been the direct source of their preservation. If the prisoners were to be killed, they must all meet the same fate; and Julius felt that it would be an awful thing to butcher the man to whom they all, under God, owed their rescued lives. He, therefore, prevented the design of the soldiers, and gave orders "that they which could swim should cast themselves overboard, and get first to the land." And the rest seized hold of planks and other fragments of the ship, which was rapidly breaking up; and so it came to pass that they all escaped safe to the land. So ended Paul's fourth shipwreck. Leaving Malta some three months after, Paul proceeded to Rome.

But we must proceed to Gibraltar; so our ship pulled out at 9:30 o'clock A.M., and passed in full view of the places which I have just described.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

"Surprises meet us on every hand. One of the doctrines against which our disciple friends have with special vehemence inveighed is the doctrine of election; and the views of the disciples have had no stancher advocate than the Gospel Advocate at Nashville, Tenn. Imagine, then, dear reader, our surprise when in the editorial columns of the Gospel Advocate we saw this language:

"Whenever God predestines man to salvation, he predestines he shall comply with the conditions of salvation. The only evidence any man can have that he is of the elect is that he faithfully and truly walks in the appointments of God."

"We do not think even Calvin himself would have objected to that statement. That is exactly what Calvinists have been saying all along. The Gospel Advocate is now in favor of predestination and election. What will the Christian Guide say to this?"—Western Recorder.

Most assuredly, the Gospel Advocate has always been a firm believer in predestination and election. The Bible teaches both, and the Gospel Advocate believes what the Bible teaches on these subjects as on all others. If the Western Recorder will teach these as the Bible teaches them, the Gospel Advocate will never object to it on these points. If Calvin and the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith" had taught predestination and election as the Bible and the Gospel Advocate teach them, they never would have created divisions among the people of God. D. L.

When obliged to speak, be sure that you speak the truth; for equivocation is halfway to lying, and lying is the whole way to hell.—William Penn.

The happiness of love is in action; its test is what one is willing to do for others.—Ben Hur.

Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in anywise to do evil.—David.

WORK IN ARMENIA NOT LOST.

Brother Azariah Paul, an Armenian, came to this country, heard the truth, and educated himself at Lexington, Ky. He was sent back to his country by the churches of Nashville, and sustained a number of years by them and other brethren while preaching in Armenia. He was then killed by an accident, and the country went through the fearful ravages of the Turkish War; and no one else presenting himself for the work, these people have been greatly lost sight of. A brother of Azariah Paul had been converted, and continued in the work after his death. He was helped for a year or two, and after the massacre by the Turks, help was sent to him and the family of Azariah Paul. For the last two years a son of Asadoor Paul has been in the Nashville Bible School; he has recently received statements of the condition of the brethren in Harpoot, from his father, and at my request wrote a statement of their present condition, which we publish below. This shows the work was not lost; indeed, true work for God has never been lost. There is something in little bands of disciples that can hold out through years of disaster and discouragement as these have. Here is the statement:

"As the results of labors of both Azariah Paul and his brother, Asadoor Paul, there are more than one hundred true followers of Jesus Christ in the State of Harpoot; forty-five of this number are inhabitants of a village called Khokh, the remainder are scattered all over the State of Harpoot, save a small band, composed of about five or six persons, who dwell together in another village. This small band comes together every Lord's day and continues 'in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and prayers.' In Khokh we had a church building where brethren would gather together, and where Asadoor Paul would go every Lord's day and preach to them; but that building was destroyed by fire at the hands of the Turks. Other houses were also burned in that village, by the Turks. Now brethren's houses serve as a church house, and there Asadoor Paul goes and preaches; for we have the confidence of St. Paul that he who hath begun good work in Harpoot will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Khokh has been, and is, the place where Asadoor Paul works and labors. Azariah Paul's work was to travel all over the State of Harpoot, evangelizing. These are compressed facts in a nutshell."

Not many American churches would have done so well. These people show the earnestness of their faith by their continuance in the work. They are poor, but that does not unfit them for Christian work. God chose the poor of this world as his chosen friends to carry out his work. All efforts to take it out of the hands of the poor, and to conform it to the ways of the rich and place it under their control, have resulted disastrously to the purity and success of the religion of the Son of God. These brethren, at their homes, are working in an unpretentious way. I would dislike to see them disturbed. I do not think it would be wise to undertake to sustain Asadoor Paul. Preachers in that country, as in this, learn to become dependent upon others. This is ruinous to any man. A mistake has been not to throw the missionaries and converts on their own resources, so develop self-reliance, I have no doubt these brethren in some particulars would appear faulty in their teachings and practices, but they under difficulties are trying to follow the teachings of the Scriptures, and should be encouraged. Who desires to help them? D. L.

Have you ever seen the good in some one and his ability while he was still obscure, and prophesied the high place he would take, and then, when this was realized, and he had risen above you in your own sphere, were you still able to praise him? This is a test of character, and here it was John proved his nobility of character. "Did I not tell you he was greater than I? And is he not great—greater than I thought?" He could wish for him to increase and grow greater each day, and for himself to decrease.—Ian Maclaren.

HAD FORGOTTEN.

"We had forgotten about the Octographic Review, not having seen or even heard of it for years, until we saw a notice of it in the Herald and Presbyter of last week. Our Presbyterian contemporary quoted a paragraph from it which shows that, while for some inscrutable reason Providence still permits it to exist, it is unchanged in its spirit and aim. It is still a stirrer up of strife among brethren. Referring to the number of our preachers that occupied Presbyterian pulpits during the Jubilee Convention, the Octographic Review is quoted as saying: 'Our "Disciple brethren" still teach the old heresy of immersion for the remission of sins and still regard the "undipped Presbyterians" as out of Christ and strangers to the covenants of promise. Even the Christian Standard does not admit that they are pardoned and accepted of God.' It is further quoted by the Herald and Presbyter as saying that the convention at Cincinnati was the 'jubilee of a society that aims to proselyte all Presbyterians, Methodists, and other sectarians, disorganize their churches, and render their creeds obsolete.' The object of this screed is too obvious to need mention.

"The Herald and Presbyter takes the Octographic Review seriously, as if it were a representative of the religious body which recently held its convention in Cincinnati, and says: 'We should be glad to know from the Christian Standard whether it expresses the sentiments of the Disciple denomination. [Why not say the Disciples of Christ?] Is the statement that it, the Standard, does not admit that Christians of other denominations "are pardoned and accepted of God" true? Does it believe that immersion is necessary to salvation or not?' The Herald and Presbyter further says: 'We have supposed that the party represented by the Christian Standard was in control of the recent jubilee, and that both it and the ministers who preached in Presbyterian pulpits recognized Presbyterians as Christians. The Octographic Review, however, boldly declares that the Christian Standard will not admit this. It seems to us that after the recent exchange of pulpit courtesies this challenge should be answered.' While we do not think the Octographic Review needs to be taken seriously, the request of the Herald and Presbyter is not unreasonable, under the circumstances, and we think the Christian Standard will give it prompt attention. The question is, whether our position commits us to the attitude toward our religious neighbors indicated in these quotations. The Christian-Evangelist has no hesitancy in repudiating these sentiments, both on its own behalf and on behalf of those whom it represents. Long ago we announced our conception of the relation of these great evangelical religious bodies to our own religious movement as that of 'allies, not foes.' This does not prevent us from pointing out what we believe to be defects in their teachings and practices, as we often take occasion to do. But those who love Christ and honor him as their Lord are our brothers and sisters, not aliens."

Judging from both the teaching and spirit of the above, one versed in the teaching of the word of God would naturally enough conclude that the editor of the Christian-Evangelist had forgotten the New Testament and that he had not "seen or even heard of it for years."

After displaying in a very large degree the "holier-than-thou" spirit, and casting all the odium possible upon the Octographic Review, he proceeds to charge on that paper:

1. "It is still a stirrer up of strife among brethren." Before giving attention to this, I wish to state that the Octographic Review is fully prepared to fight its own battles and has done so in an able article on this subject. The truth should be emphasized that it is not always a sin to stir up strife among brethren. The man who has the courage to contend for the truth, though that contention may lead to strife among brethren, is to be commended. The disciple is unworthy the name who is willing to compromise with evil in order to have peace. This may be pernicious peace, the peace of the world, but not that peace which Jesus came to bring. Christ says of his peace: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Again, he said to his disciples: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." (Matt. 10: 34-36.) Truth and error cannot harmonize. There must be an everlasting conflict. Christ was in constant antagonism with error. We have the teaching of Christ very forcibly illustrated in the lives of the apostles. Paul was busy stirring up strife. He withstood Peter to the face because he was to be blamed. For preaching the truth, the Jews sought to kill Paul. He was finally beheaded because he would not compromise the truth by yielding to error. The editor of the Christian-Evangelist to be consistent must call the Lord Jesus Christ and Paul stirrers up of strife. All who love the truth and contend earnestly for it in the spirit of truth can rejoice that they are placed among such company.

2. The Christian-Evangelist teaches the denominational idea clearly by alluding to "our preachers that occupied Presbyterian pulpits during the Jubilee Convention." The Herald and Presbyter teaches clearly and unmistakably that a change of pulpits is a recognition that they are Christians in full fellowship and good standing. The exchange of pulpits makes this impression on their minds. The preacher who teaches God's order of conversion cannot consistently unite with these people in their errors without seeking to correct them. Passing over differences and emphasizing the points of agreement serves to make the impression that sectarianism is as good as pure and unadulterated Christianity. Yet this is usually the course pursued by those who exchange pulpits. It is not intimated that it is wrong to preach the truth in such places, but there are some places where a man is not allowed to preach the truth in its purity. To attempt it would be to stir up strife and bring down a torrent of abuse on the head of the preacher. Whenever I agree to exchange pulpits with denominational preachers it must be with the understanding that I do not thereby indorse any of their errors and that I am to be perfectly free to preach faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. I am sure that those who work with the sects do not preach plainly the law of pardon in these "union meetings." One effort in this direction will usually prove that gospel preaching is not wanted. The Savior could not work in harmony with error; neither can we as long as we boldly, firmly, yet kindly, preach the truth. Brethren, it does not appear to me to be manly and sincere to work with those in error, and then when we are not with them and behind their backs criticize their doctrine.

3. It seems evident that the "Disciples of Christ" in the field where the editor of the Herald and Presbyter works have not been earnestly declaring all the counsel of God; or if they have done so, the editor has not availed himself of the opportunity afforded him of knowing the whole truth. If he and the editor of the Christian-Evangelist will form themselves into an audience of two, since the editor of the Christian-Evangelist repudiates the doctrine "of immersion for the remission of sins," we will let them know what Christ and the apostles teach on this subject. They appear to be concerned to know what the "Disciples of Christ" teach on "baptism for the remission of sins," but we prefer to know what the New Testament teaches as the plan of salvation. For the information of these "representative" editors we will quote a few passages for their edification. The Savior said to the twelve apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) "Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 3: 20, 21.) If these gentlemen are pupils of ordinary aptitude, we feel sure they may now know what Christ and the apostles taught in regard to the design of baptism. If they will obey Christ in all his commandments, they will at last be saved, if they should be ignorant of whether Presbyterians, Methodists, and other sectarians be saved or lost. All who are saved will be saved as Christians, and not as sectarians. "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 11, 12.) It is folly to talk of loving Christ and not keeping his commandments. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14.) "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.)

4. The ignorance of these distinguished editors concerning the plan of salvation should impress upon us all the importance of teaching men and women the way of life every time we preach. Men who preach doctrine do far more good than those who do not. Great preachers have always been doctrinal preachers.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

A Tale of Two Brothers.

Reuben and Lucien Bradley were born and reared on a Michigan farm. This farm had been cut from the woods by the father, and endless toil had been expended in bringing it to a state of fair productiveness; but even when the boys became of age it produced only a scant living for the family.

The problem of a livelihood and a vocation forced itself upon Reuben and Lucien. They were strong, steady, and industrious, and had been graduated from the village school. The father was not able to set them up in business. They knew it and did not complain. He had done the best he could. Reuben was tired of the country. He went to town and apprenticed himself to a harness maker. Against the advice of his young friends, Lucien bought sixty acres of land and ran in debt for it.

In a year Reuben was earning $1 a day. After the day's work he wore a white shirt because other people did, not because it was more comfortable. He had no debts. Lucien had fair crops, but they yielded little more than enough to pay interest on the mortgage. He wore a ragged shirt, patched breeches, and cowhide boots. People said that Reuben was making a gentleman of himself and learning a trade in the bargain.

In two years Reuben had completed his apprenticeship. He was now earning $10 a week. He boarded in a house that had a fancy veranda and green blinds. His clothes improved. Lucien was still ragged, but he had paid his interest and $300 on his principal. People said that Reuben was bound to come to the front.

Reuben became foreman of the shop at $50 a month. He bought a house and lot on the installment plan and paid for it within five years. The country people called upon him and ate dinner when they went to town. Lucien paid off the mortgage and owned the farm. People said that Reuben and Lucien were good citizens.

In ten years more Reuben was still foreman of the shop. He received the same wages. He lived in the same house. He wore the same cut of shirt and the same kind of pointed shoes. He smoked Havana cigars. Lucien built a new house and barn. He had a good carriage and a driving horse. He smoked a pipe. The neighbors saw that every year he made some improvement on the farm. The barn was full of tools. He wore a white shirt when he went to town, and he had a pair of button shoes. People said that Lucien was becoming a prominent man; and his word was good at the bank.

Reuben began to complain that harness making was too confining, that his health was breaking down. The proprietor of the shop was selfish and would not die and leave the business to him. Harness making was not what it used to be. He went fishing when he wanted to. Reuben came out now and then to spend a Sunday with Lucien. The birds seemed to sing more sweetly than ever before, and the grass was greener. Lucien indorsed Reuben's note.

Lucien has pigs and cows and sheep and chickens and turkeys and horses. He raises potatoes and beans and corn and wheat and garden stuff and fruits. He buys his groceries, tobacco, and clothes; Reuben buys everything. At the close of the year Lucien puts from $100 to $300 in the bank or he takes a trip to Boston; Reuben does well if he comes out even. Lucien does not fret; Reuben grumbles.—Prof. L. H. Bailey, of Cornell University, in the Review of Reviews.

Try to lift the burdens of others, and you will be surprised how much lighter your own will become.—Herbert Spencer.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

R. Lin Cave has resigned as president of Kentucky University, and has taken work with the church at Independence, Mo.

Brother J. B. Nelson, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., was in the office on the 5th inst., on his way to Oxford, Miss., for work in that section.

Brother W. M. Oakley, of Lebanon, Tenn., is duly authorized to act as agent for us. We will appreciate any courtesies or favors shown him.

The death of Brother O. A. Jones, Little Lot, Tenn., was announced in the papers last week. Brother Jones was a good man, and the church and neighborhood have sustained a great loss.

Mrs. N. J. Robinett, Flag Pond, Va., says she can exchange for medicine, which she needs and is unable to buy, old canceled stamps used from about 1850 to 1875, and Confederate stamps and bills.

Brother J. H. Harden, formerly of this office, now district manager of the Southern Car and Foundry Company, Memphis, Tenn., writes us that he has collected a little band of disciples together, and that they are meeting regularly every Lord's day for worship and study. He says he would be glad for preachers passing through to come to see him. His address is Station C, Memphis.

My call for help for the Longview Mission is bearing fruit. Several responded before the paper which published my call for help was three days old. The church of God is not dead yet, nor is the cause to be allowed to die in Longview, Tex. I cannot bear the expense of mailing receipts to all who contribute small amounts to this work, for I need every cent in the work here. If any desire receipt and will inclose stamp or postal card, I will cheerfully send it. Who else will take fellowship in the Longview Mission? See Gospel Advocate of February 1.—John T. Poe.

Contributions from abroad to the work in Southwest Texas for January amounted to $11.75. The contributors were: J. D. Trumbo, —, W. Va.; P. E. Stuart, Weimer, Tex.; F. S. Taylor, Payne, Tex.; R. L. Whitesides, Saralvo, Tex.; a brother, Creedmore, Tex.; Brother Allen (address unknown); and Sister L. Douglas, Ferris, Tex. Sickness and pressure of other matters have prevented me answering the kind letters received. I hope to be more favorably situated in the future. Our spirits have been refreshed, and we take courage anew for the conflict as the Lord gives strength and opportunity.—G. W. Bonham, Berclair, Tex.

Brother W. H. Dunn, State Live Stock Commissioner, has our deepest sympathy in the death of his most estimable wife, who died at her home, near Gallatin, on January 27. Brother Dunn has all the consolations of the gospel in this dark hour, and should not forget that his great loss is her eternal gain. Rest is so sweet and precious after life's conflicts are over. We pray that God may give our dear brother strength and wisdom to train his two motherless children for heaven. The loss to his children is an irreparable one, but may the memory of a devout Christian mother ever refresh them to bless and help them on the pathway of life.

M. McCaleb has made arrangements for us to print for him two thousand tracts, entitled: "Going and Sending." The tract is for free distribution. Brother McCaleb would be glad of any fellowship extended to him in the distribution of the tract. We announce the following appointments for Brother McCaleb: Wednesday and Thursday nights, February 14 and 15, Lynnville, Tenn.; Friday night, February 16, Beach Grove, near Carter's Creek, Maury County, Tenn.; Saturday night, February 17, Owen's Chapel; third Lord's day, morning and night, February 18, Franklin, Tenn.; Monday night, February 19, North Spruce street, Nashville, Tenn.; Tuesday night, February 20, Gallatin, Tenn.; Wednesday night, February 21, Bowling Green, Ky.

During January I received the following amounts: Utica Ind., $5.65; a sister, $1; gifts to the children, 80 cents; Youth and Age for article, $3.12; Brother and Sister Hoskins, $1.50; Sister De Ford, $1; Sister Watson, $1; Sister Severus, $1; church at La Grange, Ky., $3; total for the month, $18.07. The brethren everywhere have received us cordially and have given us much encouragement. We are glad to see there is growth in missionary work. We must not view it from a distance and at a distance, but make it a part of our own being. Christian life and growth can only exist by being given freely to others. "Freely ye have received, freely give." "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." The very first gift that God calls for is for oneself; this also includes all he possesses. Complete consecration has no reserve fund.—J. M. McCaleb.

EDITORIAL.

The man who does not trust God does not know him.

There is no one poorer than he who is rich, yet never gives.

If you would influence people for good, ever be sincere.

The man who is forever explaining his convictions has none.

Purpose and industry will help a man when accident will fail.

The devil smiles every time the professed Christian takes a dram.

Both distrust and presumption are to be dreaded and feared by the Christian.

The gift that does not have a grateful heart behind it is not precious in God's sight.

The life fashioned after the Christ life grows sweeter and more sunny as the years come and go.

The devil is pleased whenever he succeeds in getting the Christian to have overmuch confidence in his own strength.

Our best friends should always be friends of Jesus. Christ says: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

So many disciples make the mistake of endeavoring to follow the Lord from afar. Peter tried this and got into trouble. Whoever tries it to-day is sure to fall by the wayside. John remained close in the presence of the Lord and was not tempted; Peter, far away, got into the wrong company, was tempted, and fell.

The glories of heaven are so fine that we should know that they are to be gained by persistent effort. "Strait and narrow" is the way that leads to all good. A fortune is acquired only after the most persevering toil. We must deny ourselves many pleasures, must study long and hard before we can acquire an education. The man who is not willing to practice much self-denial will never enter through the gates into the city of our God.

The widow's mite has often been abused. So many people claim to cast into the treasury of the Lord the widow's mite, when they throw in a mere pittance of their living. The widow cast in all her living. Men who cast in a penny out of their thousands will not be accepted of the Lord. The person who loves God with all his heart and who has much of this world's goods will be ashamed to offer such niggardly gifts to the Lord. The consecrated heart finds pleasure in giving liberally to the honor and glory of God.

The common people heard Jesus gladly, because he made himself one of them and proved to them that his great, loving heart was full of compassion for them. He was ever ready to bless the man who was seeking the truth. He never turned any man away who sought a nobler life. His disciples should do likewise. It is a mistake to seek the money and influence of the wealthy. All alike are beggars and need salvation. Money has ever been a barrier in the way of the reception of the truth. Men are prone to imagine that money gives them respectability, so that it is not necessary for them to turn away from all their sins. They will not receive Jesus by bowing in humble obedience to all his demands.

Service bestowed on those we love is a pleasure, and not a burden. Love does not stop to count the cost of the service. The heart filled with love for Jesus is never niggardly about service rendered to him. "And while he was in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster cruse of ointment of spikenard very costly; and she brake the cruse, and poured it over his head. But there were some that had indignation among themselves, saying, To what purpose hath this waste of the ointment been made? For this ointment might have been sold for above three hundred pence, and given to the poor. And they murmured against her. But Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. For ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good; but me ye have not always. She hath done what she could; she hath anointed my body aforehand for the burying. And verily I say unto you, Wheresoever the gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, that also which this woman hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." As it was then, so it is now: when some Mary is present to make love's offering to the Lord there is a Judas Iscariot to raise objection and fill some disciples with indignation. Even bad men can mislead and deceive the pure and good. We should be very careful not to allow the influence of covetous men to hinder us in our good works.

The meeting with the South College Street church of Christ has continued over seven Sundays. Brother Larimore has spoken three times on each Sunday and twice on other days. The congregations have been interested and good from the beginning. At night, especially when the weather was fair, they have been large, and on some occasions the house has been full, and a number have been turned away. The congregations have been, course, deeply interested in the preaching, to have thus continued for so long a time. The interest is still good. There have been twenty-one baptisms to date, with about fifteen by letter, restoration, and from other churches. While this number is not so large as desired, still there have been but few additions to any of the churches in Nashville for a year or two. An indisposition to religion has been the tendency for some years. While the condition of my health has been such that I have not been out at night, and sometimes in the day, I have heard much more of Brother Larimore's teaching than I had heard before, and have been better pleased with it. Brother Larimore has an attractive appearance and voice that secures the sympathy and good favor of his hearers at once. His speech is deliberate, clear, and slow, and in the simplest words, so that every one hears and understands all he says. He seems to know the New Testament by heart, and quotes freely and exactly much scripture, giving always the chapter and verse; and his rule is to teach his hearers all there is possible to be known about the scripture he presents. He looks at it from all sides and in all of its connections. The entire drift of his teaching has been good. He has dwelt especially upon the necessity of walking by faith, and has been careful to explain that to walk by faith is to take God at his word, do just what he says do, in the order he says do it, adding nothing thereto and taking nothing therefrom, then trusting his promise for the blessing. We have not heard, or heard of, an objectionable thought uttered by him during the meeting. No one ever made less effort to move by exciting the emotions than Brother Larimore.—D. L.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Letter heads, note heads, billheads, statements, envelopes, etc., printed in best styles on short notice. Write to us for prices and samples.

"Sweeney's Sermons," by J. W. Sweeney, should have a wide circulation. Brother J. W. McGarvey says that they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ. The book contains, in addition to the sermons, a life sketch of the author, written by an intimate friend.

"Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell," by D. Lipscomb, is an interesting book of 120 pages, devoted to a memorial of the life and works of this good man, and 197 pages to his sermons. This book, we think, will well repay any reader, and contains a large fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, is a book of 424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. There is a photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp-meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc., are the subjects of the illustrations. The book is intensely interesting, and the price is only $1.50.

Queries.

Please explain or harmonize Acts 9: 7; 22: 9 in Gospel Advocate.
D. F. HOWARD.

The first of these verses says of the men that stood with Saul, that they "stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." The second verse says: "They heard not the voice." The apparent contradiction is in the fact one says they heard, and the other, says they heard not the voice. There need be no trouble on that score. Both passages are true. One shows they heard the voice, while the second one means they did not understand what was said. The voice spoke in the Hebrew language, which those that journeyed with Paul did not understand. This certainly is the explanation.
E. G. S.

Brother Johnson Perry requests that something be written regarding the day on which Jesus arose from the dead, as some have been contending that he rose on the Sabbath day. There is no foundation for any one to claim that Jesus rose on the Sabbath. The word of God says distinctly that he rose on "the third day;" and that means the third day after the feast of the passover, at which feast he was crucified. This was on Friday, and Jesus died and was buried on Friday, and lay in the grave all day Saturday, and rose on the first day of the week, as is plainly indicated in first of last chapters of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and in John 20. In those days, the day ended in the evening, generally, about the time the first stars appeared. Jesus was dead and buried when Friday ended. Saturday, the Sabbath, ended at the same time the next evening, which was the second day; hence for him to rise on the third day compels the conclusion that he rose on the first day of the week, which was the third day, counting the day on which he was crucified.
E. G. S.

Brother Lipscomb: I see in the Gospel Advocate of January 11, a piece from M. N. Moore, under the heading, "Should a Child of God Swear?" Do you think when a man takes an oath as a witness or jurymen in court, he is violating God's law as recorded in Matt. 5: 34-37? Please answer in Gospel Advocate.
F. A. STANFORD.

"Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: nor by the earth; for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." (Matt. 5: 33-37.) To forswear himself was to vow or swear, and then fail to perform. Vows were made to the Lord, for the performance of which he bound himself with an oath—that is, he called the curse of God upon him if he failed to perform it. Jephthah's vow was of this character; but an ordinary oath is understood to mean the same thing, only it refers to the telling of the truth concerning things that are past instead of a promise for the future. The meaning of an oath is: A man calls on God to curse him if he does not tell the truth. This seems to me to involve the same principle of action as the vow for the future, save what he tells now is more in his power than what he promises to do in the future. Jesus tells them: "Swear not at all." This seems to me to mean: Do not call the wrath of God's throne upon you, nor of his footstool, nor of his city on earth, nor of your own head, but simply tell a thing is true without imprecating ill of any kind, for this all comes of evil. The courts of the country usually inflict the punishment for the false swearing; but out of deference to the conscientious regard of God's children for this teaching of the Master, the rulers have made provisions that a statement can be made in court without calling on God's name in any way. It seems to me every Christian would do this; every Christian where there is the least doubt or uncertainty will take the safe side; and to say the least there is some doubt as to the ordinary oath falling under the condemnation of this prohibition: "Swear not at all."

Brother Lipscomb: We are divided on the time to break bread. One of our elders takes the position that it is wrong for us to break bread when we come together for preaching. We meet on each Lord's day in the evening, except on our day for preaching, and on that day we break bread just after preaching. But our elder will not partake, but generally gets up and leaves the house. He says we ought to come together for the sole purpose of breaking bread, and if we come together for preaching and break bread, our work is vain. So there is a division among us. We want you to give us an article in your paper setting forth the scriptural time for coming together and as whether it is right for us to go ahead and break bread after preaching at the 11 o'clock service. This is liable to work a very bad division in our congregation, if we do not get it stopped; so you will give us all the light on the subject you can.
FRANK BAKER.

I think your elder, if he is properly understood, has become wise above what is written; at least I have never found where the Scriptures say that breaking of bread was the sole object of the meeting when bread was broken. All the scriptures I know bearing on this subject show plainly that breaking bread was not the only purpose of coming together when bread was broken. Matthew (26: 30) says after partaking of the Supper, "when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives." Singing, then, was attended after breaking bread. John (13 to 17) shows that the teaching contained in these chapters was given by the Savior after attending to the Supper, before they went out to the mount of Olives. Then, in Acts 2: 42, it is said: "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." This is universally regarded as telling what was done at the worship on Lord's day. They had the apostolic teaching, they engaged in the fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayers. These were all attended to at the meeting and should still be. The apostolic teaching is as much a part of the service as the breaking of bread; and if your preacher does not give apostolic teaching, he ought not to preach at that meeting or at any other; if his teaching is apostolic, then it is one of the objects of that meeting when bread is broken. So the objection to it is contrary to scripture. In Acts 20: 7 we have this: "Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow." In 1 Cor. 11: 17-34 is an account of their meeting to attend to the Lord's Supper. Evils that have crept in are corrected; and then the subject is continued in chapters 12, 13, and 14, in which Paul defines the relative importance of the different gifts and how they were to be used in these meetings, showing that at these meetings all these gifts were used in teaching the congregation. So the preaching and teaching were done at this same meeting in which bread was broken in commemoration of the Lord's body. Every allusion to the Supper shows teaching was connected with the service. The teaching then was not so formal sermonizing as we have now, but it was done at this meeting. They prophesied, spoke with tongues, interpreted, and engaged in all kinds of teaching that was proper at any other time. I think when a man comes to meeting only when there is preaching, and never comes to partake of the Supper, but does it when he comes to preaching, that man's partaking of the Supper is hardly acceptable. But the teaching then is apostolic.

"Not My Will."

Why did the "first Adam" surrender to the tempter? How did the "second Adam" overcome him?

Adam fell because he assumed the right and the ability to judge for himself. It was "when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes and a tree to be desired to make one wise" that she took of the fruit and did eat, and gave also to her husband—repeating to him, no doubt, the arguments by which she herself had been misled—"and he did eat."

Jesus conquered, because he—though so much wiser than Adam, or rather, because he was so much wiser—did not assume the right to judge for himself. He set the will of God before him as the one and only thought and purpose and business of his life.

The woman listened to the doubt, "Yea hath God said?" then adopted the unbelief "Ye shall not surely die," and even allowed the tempter to malign God without rebuke: "God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil."

Jesus met the tempter at the very point at which he had assailed Eve. "Hath God said?" he had asked. God hath said, was our Lord's crushing reply, "It is written," and that is the end of the matter, so far as I am concerned. I am not going to think or question at all, or to attempt to judge for myself, when I know what God requires of me; for "I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

It was not the mere use of scripture words that silenced the tempter, but the unconditional acceptance by Jesus himself of the scriptural rule as the law of his life.

Here is the keynote to Christ's character, and therefore to his triumph over all the forces which combined to defeat the object of his mission to the world. "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God," was the motto by which his whole life was governed. And by a persistent adherence to that motto he closed his heart and mind, and even his imagination, against all forms of temptation.

This is the way of life for us also. We cannot hope to conquer temptation, even by the help of God, if we allow our minds to dwell on it; if we allow our deceitful hearts to long for it, and to invent arguments and excuses in favor of it. But if we consecrate ourselves honestly to God's service and then turn our backs determinedly to everything that an enlightened conscience warns us will interfere with that service, then we can claim the support of God's omnipotence in every conflict with evil, and can run with patience the race set before us in full confidence that he will keep us from falling, and will present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. In other words, life's crowning victory is not to be won by spasmodic efforts, however strenuous, but by determinedly and persistently choosing God's will in preference to our own, moment by moment.—New York Witness.

"In the Christian Standard of December 23, Mr. J. S. Hughes has a long article in which he says: 'The Disciples have come to be, and are, a sect among sects,' etc. This is a surprising utterance, since, as a rule, there is nothing they deny more vehemently than that they are a sect. We respectfully call the attention of the Christian Guide and Gospel Advocate to this utterance of Mr. Hughes."—Western Recorder.

The Gospel Advocate has repeatedly noted that the Disciples are running or have run into a denomination. They are following in the footsteps of the Baptists in this, and we insist to them that to denominationalize churches of Christ is no less a sin before God when done by them than it was and is when done by Baptists, or Methodists, or Presbyterians, or Roman Catholics. Denominations in religion are sinful; to denominationalize is to place a human organization over the divine government. That was the man of sin in Paul's day, and all such organizations since are phases of the man of sin. D. L.

A wedding party is society in miniature. F body is there—the rich and the poor, the envied, the philosophers and the grouped like plants in a basket around the bride.—Balzac.

Home Reading.

THE WORD OF A BOY.

"What do you know about him, anyway?" asked Alfred Grierson, sharply.

"Not much, only he thinks a lot of his word," answered Charley, timidly.

"What do you mean?"

"Why, if he says he'll do a thing, he'll stick to it; his word is enough."

The questioner turned aside with a prolonged whistle.

The boy who had won the approval of Charley Grierson was a newcomer in the school they attended, and more than a year older than Alfred. George Sanborn soon became popular, and Alfred was secretly jealous of his influence. The old Romans were not the only ones who admired great physical strength; and George Sanborn was tall for his age, well built, and with muscles finely developed. His widowed mother was too poor and too prudent to pamper him; but plenty of open-air exercise on hillside and river, frequent plunges, and good, wholesome food were combining to build up an early, vigorous manhood, which was good to behold. Almost immediately on entering the school Charley Grierson's somewhat diminutive figure and delicate appearance had appealed to him, as weakness always should appeal to strength.

"Halloo!" he said one day during play hour, passing a corner where he had seen Charley a short time before pouring over a volume profusely illustrated. The little fellow was now sitting with hands idly folded and a drooping lip, but no book. "Have you finished reading?"

"I had to give up my book," was the spiritless answer.

"Were you reading it?"

"Of course I was, and just in the finest part, where the bear—"

"Who's got it?"

"Murray."

"Never mind, old chap," said Sanborn, heartily; "another bear has got into the school; he must be tamed a bit. You shall have your book."

Charley never inquired by what means this desirable end was attained. He only knew that in ten minutes the book lay in his lap, and he was pursuing the bear through its pages. It was this incident which made the new boy a hero in Charley Grierson's eyes. There are heroes in humdrum, everyday life, in humble homes, performing common tasks faithfully and unselfishly. They are in training, and perhaps some day hearts will be stirred by the account of some brave deed which brings one after another to the world's notice.

"What would I do without him?" said Mrs. Sanborn, stopping one moment in the porch to watch the active figure of her lad as he sped to the village on an errand. "He promised his father he'd be a help to me, and he has never broken his word."

The next morning as the gate to the school yard was about to open, a group of boys were seen talking excitedly.

"My father says I may bring three of you fellows along!" exclaimed one, in a high tone. "You, Grierson, and Murray, and Sanborn. We have a two-seat sleigh and a pair of horses."

Sanborn caught his cap and tossed it into the air with a wild "Hurrah!" but as it descended his face clouded. "It is too bad," he said. "I hate myself for saying that, but it is too bad. I must go home directly after school this afternoon."

"Who said so?" asked the others.

"I did."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Alfred Grierson.

A flush rose to young Sanborn's face, but he answered steadily: "I promised mother before I came away. I gave my word and I'll stick to it. It is something that can't be put off, or you know I would try all I could; I'm up to fun as well as any of you. Now, don't let it be harder, but do something for me, to make up. Will you take young Charley Grierson in my place? I can't tell how obliged I am to you and your father for asking me," he concluded, turning to the lad who had invited him. "It was real good of you."

There was a straightforward manliness in this that was catching, and the boy he addressed cried out, "Charley shall go!" and Murray echoed, "Charley shall go!" and even Alfred struck in.

So Charley went, and rubbed his little hands in glee, and laughed and shouted; while George Sanborn was ten times more his hero than ever.

But previous to this, just as the gate swung open, George Sanborn almost knocked against a gentleman who had come up unperceived, and overheard the conversation. With a friendly nod, he said in passing: "That's right, my boy. Stick to your mother! You never had, and never will have, a better friend."

Mrs. Sanborn had business in a town about five miles distant that afternoon, and her son was to drive her in a sleigh, a very shabby affair, borrowed from a neighboring farmer. At first the idea was agreeable and George thought little of the turn-out. Now, however, as he contrasted it in his mind with a certain double sleigh he had seen, with a furrugrowth over the back and another drawn up in front to keep the feet warm, while a pair of dashing horses proudly tossed their necks and set the bells a-jingling, he was conscious of a glow of shame. He hated himself for the poor pride, but it had been there, and left a sore spot, as if scorched by fire. But this was only the beginning of the humiliation. Returning home, some hours later, a sleigh swept past, going in the same direction, the bells and glad young voices mingling in merry music. Sanborn's schoolmates shouted their recognition; only one failed in a fraternal greeting. As the gentleman in charge of the party turned to look at the object of their salutation, his eyes roamed over the homely figure of the mother, the poor, shabby vehicle and the heavy horse, with a sort of contemptuous pity. Alfred Grierson, catching that look, was ashamed to shout.

"Never mind, there will come a time when they won't be ashamed to know me," George muttered to himself. "Money means influence, and influence and money mean labor. The road doesn't lie before me as clear as this I'm driving on now, but I'll learn all I can, and it will come to me or I shall come to it."

And it did, sooner than he thought. Mr. Grierson kept his eye on the lad, and at the close of the school term offered young Sanborn a place in his office.

"I want him there," he explained to the mother, "because I can depend on his word, and if he is what I think, he will get on. He shall have leisure and advantages for evening study; and now my wife is coming to see you. If there is anything you would like to have done, let her know."

Mrs. Grierson was a kind-hearted, Christian woman, with tact and judgment. She avoided wounding the widow's feelings and her son's boyish pride, but their home had more refining influences and Mrs. Sanborn added comforts from that time. And in after years, when people commented on the prosperity of a certain man of business, he was wont to say: "It all came of my keeping my word to my mother."—New York Observer.

NERVELESS DRINKERS.

"I take a drink when I feel like it," said a Canal street business man, "and can't see that it has ever done me any harm; but I witnessed a little episode this morning that has haunted me ever since and has forced me to do a whole lot of thinking."

"I had stepped into a bar very early to get a cocktail, and while it was being compounded a middle-aged gentleman came in and asked one of the attendants to pour him out a little plain whisky. He was carefully dressed, and had all the marks of refinement and breeding, and his request was so unusual that I turned involuntarily to look at him. The bartender exhibited no surprise, and placed half of a small glass of whisky at his elbow; but the instant he stretched out his hand I saw the man was on the verge of nervous collapse. He shook like an aspen, and when he finally managed to seize the tumbler, its contents flew in every direction. 'Let me assist you, Colonel,' said the bartender, quietly; and, pouring out another drink, he leaned over and held it to his lips. The man said nothing, but gave him a haggard look that went into my heart like a knife. My God! what a look! Shame, humiliation, and abject animal terror. It started the sweat on me like water. Well, he drank his whisky, stood still for a minute as if gathering himself together, and sauntered out as cool as ever. I asked the bartender if he had many such customers, and he laughed. 'Lot's of 'em,' he said. 'There isn't a first-class bar in town,' he went on, 'that doesn't patch up a few old boys like that every morning. They are not drunkards, but they've been at it so many years that their nerves are gone; and, although they don't know it, they are working on absolutely nothing but whisky. As soon as they get a little fresh fuel in the morning they are all right; but they come in scared and out of their wits and thinking they're going to drop dead every minute. I'll bet that gentleman you saw can sign his name now without a quiver.' I walked out reflecting."—Exchange.

The tin pail as an article of kitchen and pantry furniture is quite unknown in England. It is seen only at oil shops and paint shops, and never with a cover. "Coal" with the English is always "coals." What we term the "gaiter" they call "boot;" what we call "boots" they call "Wellingtons." A barber shop is one thing in London, a hair-cutting saloon is another and separate establishment. The average English shave is a brutal performance as compared with the average American. The patient must arise from the straight-backed chair, wash his own face, and comb his own hair. London newsboys do not cry their papers. A printed placard placed on the walk notifies the public, and the boy stands by his stock in trade and seems to ponder over it. Their "livery stable" signs read: "Cars on Hire." Buggies are unknown. So is a general assortment of dry goods and groceries in one shop. The "haberdasher" keeps pins, needles, stays, takes, and all the other minutiae necessary for the lady's outfit; the woollen draper, cloths. The green grocer never goes beyond vegetables, save to deal occasionally in coals. The exceptions to this rule are with the cooperative stores, which deal in everything. In the sale of cooked food there are shops confining themselves to hams, corned beef, and a few vegetables, served hot at noon, and to be bought from two-pennyworth upward. There are small shops making a specialty of eel and kidney pies, some of pea and beef soups, and others cook nothing but fried fish. "Crash," our name for coarse toweling, is an unknown term at least in London; programmes must be bought of theater ushers; molasses is called "treacle," and sold by the pound; a pie is either a "tart" or a "turnover." The English street car is a "tram," and the road a "tramway;" a pitcher is a "jug," and glasses "tumblers;" and when you call at the bar for beer, they understand that you want porter. Breakfast in many families is not a set meal, but a morning lunch, to be eaten whenever you are ready. Business, election, and military notices are posted on church doors, and in some places the amount of last Sunday's collection, in pounds, shillings, pence, and farthings.—Prentice Mulford, in San Francisco Chronicle.

A bit of biography, as told by another, is suggestive here: "Early Carlyle wooed and won one of the most brilliant girls of his day, whose signal talent shone in the crowded drawing-rooms of London like a sapphire blazing among pebbles. Yet her husband lacked gentleness; slowly harshness crept into Carlyle's voice. Soon the wife gave up her favorite authors to read her husband's notes; then she gave up all reading to relieve him of details; at last her very being was placed on the altar of sacrifice—fuel to feed the flame of his fame and genius. Long before the end came she was submerged and almost forgotten. One day two distinguished foreign authors called on Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle. For an hour the philosopher poured forth a vehement tirade against the commercial spirit, while the good wife never once opened her lips; at last the author ceased talking, and there was silence for a time. Suddenly Carlyle thundered: 'Jane, stop breathing so loud!' Long years before Jane had stopped doing everything else except breathing; and so, obedient to the injunction, a few days afterwards she ceased breathing so loud. When a few weeks had gone by Carlyle discovered, through reading her journal, that his wife had, for want of affection, frozen and starved to death within his own home like some poor traveler who had fallen in the snows beyond the door. For years, without his realizing it, she had kept all the wheels oiled, kept his body in health, and his mind in happiness. Only when it was too late did the husband realize that his fame was largely his wife's. Then did the old man begin his pathetic pilgrimage to his wife's grave, where Froide often found him murmuring. 'If I had only known! If I had only known!'"

Doth thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.—Franklin.

Death will come in. Better open the door to him, lovingly and trustfully, than to send him to the window and the shutter.—James Buckham.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEB. 15, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

DIVINE WARNINGS.

"Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain. Therefore let no man glory in men: for all things are yours." (1 Cor. 3: 18-21.) These admonitions are most needful to men. They often deceive themselves. Men oftener deceive themselves than they do their fellow-men, and they much oftener deceive their fellow-men than they deceive God. God is never deceived as to man's character or as to his ability or as to the motives that actuate him in anything he does. Self-deception is the most common phase of deception among men. Our neighbors as a rule understand us better than we understand ourselves. They see us more clearly than we see ourselves. Paul, in Gal. 6: 7, 8, cautions: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." This warning grows out of man's tendency to deceive himself. Many of us while gratifying the flesh imagine we are following the Spirit. Many preachers preach for money and ease and imagine they are preaching to save souls. Often we build costly houses to gratify our pride and persuade ourselves we are doing it to serve God. Most of life's failures come from self-deception. We deceive ourselves as to our abilities, and undertake to do things we have no capacity to do. A man frequently goes to trading that all his acquaintances know has no capacity for it. The man most ready to advise others and to attend to the business of others is generally the one least qualified to do it. The men most ready to handle other people's money are those not able to handle their own prudently. After years of close observation I feel sure nine-tenths of the business failures of life come from overweening confidence in themselves. One so self-confident never stops to investigate or properly consider the difficulties in the way of his carrying out a work. Solomon in his counsels of wisdom cautions, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. . . . Be not wise in thine own eyes;" and Paul, in Rom. 12: 16, tells Christians: "Be not wise in your own conceits." Self-conceit leads men to ruin financially and spiritually. It is self-conceit that leads men to depend upon their own wisdom instead of upon the wisdom and strength of God.

The apostle adds: "If any man among you seemeth to be wise [in his own conceit], let him become a fool [in his own conceit], that he may be wise."

That is, he is to learn to distrust his own wisdom as folly, that he may learn the wisdom of God; for what the world esteems wise is foolishness with God, and the things those who consider themselves wise approve will be the means of their discomfiture or overthrow. All the thoughts of those who consider themselves wise, God knows they are vain. They bring evil instead of good. All the provisions of human wisdom for the advancement of the church of God result in evil, and not in good. The works that human wisdom devises for good bring evil to themselves and to the world. We clip the following from the Youth's Companion:

"The object of the census is to make a list of all the people in the city who attend church or Sunday school. A similar undertaking was carried to a successful issue in Pittsburg, with most satisfactory results. It was learned that twenty-five thousand people in that city who had formerly been church attendants had ceased to go. As they dropped out of the religious life of the churches, so, too, they gradually lost touch with the social life of which they had formerly been a part. To many of them the visit of the census taker seemed like a personal appeal, calling up all those sacred associations which cluster about the memory of 'a church home.'"

In the city of Pittsburg were found upon a census taken by the churches and Sunday schools twenty-five thousand persons who formerly attended church, but had ceased. This is in harmony with what is patent to every one who observes—that is, there is great dropping off from church attendance. Yet there never has been an age when there were so many and such costly attractions to draw people to church. Fine and luxuriously equipped houses, fine organs, furnishing the best of music, well-paid and eloquent preachers, preaching on topics abreast of the times, with all the societies and helps to attract and entertain the young and the old, yet the people cease to attend.

There never was a time, an age, or a country when there were so many human helps and so much money expended at home and abroad to hold and convert the people, and yet the churches are growing relatively weaker and are losing ground.

The meaning is, the Lord has taken the wise men of the churches in their own craftiness. They have thought they could improve, by their wisdom and craft, on the ways of God, and God has shown them they bring weakness to the churches and drive men from God and the church. The church of God, which is his temple or body, is defiled, and it is growing weaker day by day under the addition of these human organizations and helps. They are parasites and lichens, that sap the life from the church, while for a time seeming to add to its verdure and life.

Yet with all these warnings of God in the Scriptures confirmed by the examples of the destructive effects of the human inventions, churches and men claiming to be sensible and to believe in the Bible follow the same path of ruin. This is not an evil omen for the truth. There has drifted into the churches an amount of unbelief in the Scriptures. All disposition to bring human organizations into the work and worship of the church comes from a feeling of worldly wisdom which is foolishness with God. It is a manifestation of unbelief, and this must be got out of the churches before they can be blessed of God.

It is not often that a church organization that starts wrong turns. They all usually run the path of folly and ruin. All the churches planted by the apostles ran this course. Not one of them has existed for a thousand years. Yet the truth has never died from the earth. The light goes out in one place because the people lose faith in God, but it breaks forth in another. Years of prosperity are followed by years of adversity. A sloughing off always follows great additions.

The greatest troubles in these matters is, those who remain in the church frequently have as little faith as those who cease to attend. Lack of confidence in the appointments of God is lack of faith in God. The introduction of every new society is a new declaration of distrust of God. Be not deceived as to these; God is not mocked. When a man turns from God's appointed ways to man's, he turns from God to man. But this falling away is no new experience in the church.

The day of Christ never comes except there first be a falling away, and the man of sin be developed. This falling away was in progress in Paul's day. It has often come since.

Orchard, in his "History of the English Baptists," pages 318, 319, says: "The churches never perhaps increased so fast as in the days of the commonwealth. The Baptists then filled the land, yet no learning was required in her ministers, but every one used his talents for the church edifying. As the ministry became confined to one person, and that person became qualified with classical learning, so our churches, like the national order, subsided into formality. Though the Baptists were still numerous, as stated, yet they had sadly diminished in numbers, and this became more apparent in the learned age of Dr. Gill and others. It is not learning or property that is necessary for a church of Christ, but piety and persevering labor, which realize the smiles of the Lord." Orchard calls these people Baptists because they baptized people; but they called themselves Christians. But history repeats itself. True learning is no hindrance to any one. Letting one man do all the teaching produces formality and brings spiritual death. If one man does all the work, the more ignorant he is, the worse it is. D. L.

THE BIBLE.

Our word "Bible" is from the Greek "Biblos" which means "book." The Greek "ho Biblos" means "the book" in English. The word "biblos" is used several times in the New Testament, applied to different parts of the Bible, as the book of Psalms, the book of Moses, the book of the prophets. The word at first meant the inner bark of the Papyrus, on which books were once written; but when the whole of God's revealed will to man was completed and put together into one great volume, the whole collection was called "the Bible," "the Book." As a whole, the Bible is made up of many small books, of which the Old Testament contains thirty-nine, and the New Testament contains twenty-seven, making in all sixty-six books. These books, combined, make the most wonderful volume the world ever saw. It is the most extensive history in the world, as it takes in all time, from the beginning of time to the end. It gives us the only history we have of the beginning of time, the creation of the world, of man, and everything that exists. It then gives us a concise history of the nations of the earth till within about four hundred years of the birth of Christ. The New Testament then comes in, and by its recorded facts and prophetic records carries on the history to the end, and is the only book that gives the beginning and end of time and that assures us there will be an end.

The Old Testament, after giving the account of the creation of the world and of all it contains, gives accounts of the creation of Adam and Eve, of the garden of Eden, of the origin of sin, and the rejection of Adam and Eve from the garden; gives a very brief account of Cain and Abel, of their offerings, and of the murder of Abel by Cain. It then gives a few verses on the family and posterity of Cain, and then takes up the family of Adam, giving ten generations from Adam to Noah, and then ten more from Noah to Abraham. This gives a complete link in the genealogy of the human race for a little over two thousand years, and is the only history we have of these generations. Then it takes up Abraham, and is chiefly concerned about him and his posterity to the end of the Old Testament. The history of the Jewish people, the ancestry of Christ, is the main burden of the Old Testament. What it says of other families and nations of the earth is only incidental, as they come in contact with the Jews, the descendants of Abraham. This history of the Jews, as given in the Bible, is the most thrilling and the most thoroughly interesting history ever written of those ages and countries. The personal histories of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and of the family and fortunes of Jacob are simply wonderful. I cannot see why everybody does not love to read the Old Testament, for the sake of its strange and wonderful history, if for nothing else. The history of Jacob—his fraudulent treatment of Esau, his sad experiences on account of it, and at the same time his apparent earnest devotion to God—is enough to interest any one that loves history. The mistaken partiality of Jacob toward Joseph, the pride and youthful vanity of Joseph on account of it, and the indiscretion he displayed in telling his dreams, which so stirred up the jealousy and hatred of his brothers that they conspired to kill him, but instead sold him as a slave to be carried to Egypt, and how God was with Joseph, and how he preserved him and overruled all this wickedness for the final good of the family, and indirectly of the world, is one of the most interesting threads of history ever written, until the inimitable history of the Nazarene, the Son of Mary, the Son of God, was written. I pity any man that does not read this history for the great loss he sustains. Then comes the famine, as foretold by Joseph, the removal of the family of Jacob into Egypt, and the interesting part that Joseph played in the whole matter. The long sojourn in Egypt, the deliverance by Moses, the overthrow in the wilderness on account of sin, and the final entrance of their children into the promised land differs in all its bearings from any history ever written by uninspired men since time began.

The history of the Jewish people goes right on to the end of the Old Testament. The many sins of the Jewish people and their great chastisements and sufferings, and how at the same time they multiplied, and the dense population that swarmed the little country of Palestine are deeply interesting in every point of view. The many cities and nations of those times are taken notice of only as they come in connection and conflict with the Jews and thus become a part and parcel of the history of those people and of their country. Brief notices of Egypt, Syria, and Assyria, the cities of Nineveh, Babylon, and other cities and countries, and how from time to time these fought against and plundered the Jews, are given; but the general history of these Gentile nations is only given incidentally, while that of the Jews is given consecutively, and their generations marked for all time to come, so that there was never any trouble for Jews to trace their history back through all those ages. But while the Jewish people kept up their nationality as a distinct people through all those ages, the other nations that from time to time so terribly harassed and punished them came upon the stage for a time, did their work, and passed away, as nations, and disappeared, to be known as such no more. There are none to stand now in the shoes of the Pharaohs, the Ninevites, the Babylonians, or of the Philistines, Amalekites, Ammonites, or Moabites, that can say with any sort of certainty that they are of the blood and posterity of those people. They have been lost in the general wreck of time, to come upon the stage no more; but there are millions of Jews whose claim to be of the blood and posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob no man can successfully controvert. There is no civilized nation on earth where they are not found.

When you come down to the New Testament dispensation you will find that the same order of things prevails. The Cæsars and the people of the Roman Empire were the predominant people of the New Testament age that were especially conspicuous as having dominion over the Jews and as spoiling and plundering them and oppressing them in many ways. Indeed, they seemed at one time to almost blot out the whole Jewish nation. But where are the successors of those proud and haughty Roman emperors to-day? The tide of time and wreck of nations has buried them so thoroughly that no vestige of them can be found and identified now. At the time the Romans so thoroughly demolished the Jews, burned and destroyed their great metropolis, Jerusalem, and carried them away and sold and made slaves of many of them, it would then have seemed absurd to suppose that such a broken and downtrodden people should outlive such a mighty nation of people as the Romans. Yet for many centuries this has been the case; and it seems strange that of the nations, kingdoms, and empires that so mightily oppressed and robbed the Jews in Bible times, not one of them as such survives to-day. Yet here are the Jews. They are everywhere, in every country, and were likely never more numerous than they are to-day. They are a broken, scattered, oppressed, and wandering people; yet here they are. Their city, their temple, their altar, their ordinances, their ancient order of worship, all gone; and still here they are as a people, a world full of them. They trade, they make money, they grow rich, and live on the fat of the land. Yet their ancient religion is gone, and they almost to a man reject Jesus and his religion and his blood; but still here they are, and no man can tell what may yet come of these strangely wonderful people. It seems so strange that God nursed, nurtured, chastened, and cared for those people so long, even as a father cares for his own children, and yet they rejected and murdered his own Son, and persecuted his followers, and still reject him; and as to what their future will be, the world will have to wait and see. There is one thing that is very evident, and that is, they will all be lost in eternity unless they accept and obey the Savior; for they were included when he said: "He that believeth not shall be damned." Although they were broken off, they may be grafted in again if they remain not in unbelief; but what they will do, we know not, and we shall have to let the dark curtain remain over their future.

The great book called "the Bible" has in all the ages, even from the beginning of time, required that the Lord's people shall be a godly people, that they should be an honest, truthful, pure, and upright people; that they should love, and serve, and honor him, and love and respect and tenderly regard one another.

The Old Testament taught the people to worship and serve no other god, but to cleave unto the Lord all their days. The New Testament teaches people to love God, to love Jesus, and through the gospel to elevate, ennoble, and purify their hearts and lives here, and promises all such as will do this a home of everlasting bliss beyond the grave. The highest and purest rules of life ever produced on this earth are given in the New Testament; and the improvements that have been made thereby, both by individuals and nations, are such as never have been even approximated otherwise. The most enlightened and civilized people of antiquity were the Jewish people, through the Scriptures of the Old Testament. The only enlightened and civilized nations of modern times are those nations that enjoy the benefits and light of the New Testament; and no man can tell what the Bible lands of modern times may yet become if they will continue to read and follow the New Testament. No limit can be placed to the improvement, morally and intellectually, by continuing to follow the pure and holy instructions of the religion of Christ; and it would be sad to contemplate the darkness that would again cover the earth if the Bible were taken away from among men. Then the final abode, the final home of the righteous as described in the New Testament is inexpressibly grand; and this grand volume carries us down the stream of time until time shall cease to be; until the earth and heavens shall be no more; until a new heaven and a new earth shall be made, wherein dwelleth righteousness; and until the righteous shall all be safely housed in the eternal mansions prepared for them, and the wicked doomed to eternal darkness and woe. What a wonderful book is the Bible! Who would not love to read and study and ponder and practice the teaching of such a book? When earth, seas, and time are no more, those who faithfully treasure and follow the divine guidance of this wonderful volume will but have begun to live and to enjoy the good things revealed in the Bible.

E. G. S.

HONESTY.

Last week, we tried to say, "Under the rule of God immense fortunes and extreme poverty were impossible." The printers made us say extreme honesty was impossible. This was too bad. God demands honesty—honesty in little things. He says a man that is not honest in little things is not honest in great things. Dishonesty is the crying sin of this age. All deceiving, cheating, taking advantage of the ignorance or necessities of others to get more than is just is dishonesty. But few people pass through the world that have not under some circumstances acted dishonestly. The Bible warns against dishonesty the more frequently and earnestly because it is common, but a great sin before God. Under the Mosaic law, if a man failed to pay his debts, his wife and children as well as himself could be sold to pay the debt. This shows God abhorred going in debt and not paying. But God required the creditor should be merciful; and according to the law of Moses, all debts were canceled every seventh year, all lands or slaves bought returned to the original owners or their families in every fiftieth or jubilee year. Under this arrangement none could amass very great fortunes, none could become very poor—at least for successive generations. The world lacks confidence greatly in the church in this age, because the members do not pay their debts and are not honest.

D. L.

A PLAIN WAY.

"And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?" (Deut. 10: 12, 13.) This is a simple statement of God's requirements of man—simple to be understood, and not difficult of performance, if our hearts are once set upon it. God requires that man should fear him; he is worthy by virtue of his majesty and love for man to be feared; and we should walk in all his commandments. This is simple and plain. The business of man is to study all that God has commanded, to walk in or obey all these commandments, and to love God and serve him as our Ruler with all our hearts. No divided service is to be given him, but with full purpose and determination of heart we are to serve him alone. Our affections and our service are not to be divided with another master. Our love for God is to be manifested by keeping the commandments of the Lord and his statutes. Then he tells us all these commandments and statutes of God are for the good of those to whom they are given. God requires nothing to be done that he has commanded, for his own good or because he needs it, but he requires it of us because it is for our good. It does seem that no one should misunderstand the condition on which we can please God and that there should be no difference as to how his servants should walk. Solomon said: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." There is no room in this for misunderstanding. Man has nothing to do save to hear God attentively, that he may know all his commandments and do them. The reason he gives why we should do this is: "For God shall bring every work into judgment, . . . whether it be good, or whether it be evil." If we keep his commandments, our work is good and will be so rewarded; if God has not commanded what we do, it will be adjudged evil, and all will be punished for doing evil. Again, Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." The way of salvation is not hard to understand, if we would be content to hear God.

D. L.

Brother Lipscomb: In the midst of shadows, never pierced by mortal eyes, the deep, thick dampness of which had frozen this world to death, that grand old sunny soul, the apostle Paul, stood under the power and influence of the spirit of the world's Redeemer and said: "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." We believe it and are comforted, but I am so lonesome. Lota, dear, patient, suffering one, has gone to the home of the soul. It has been good for me to sit by her bedside, day and night, for twenty-two weeks. The silent eloquence of the tears of a noble son lifts me up. The tender, patient nursing of a faithful, loving daughter helped us all so much; and dear little Lota, if permitted, will, on her journey home, gather imperishable roses amid the eternal silence of the stars to hang up in our prepared mansions. We all feel overwhelmed in debt to the saints. God bless them! They have been so good.

R. W. OFFICER.

Brother Officer has the sincerest sympathy of all his brethren and friends in his bereavement, and we pray the Father to bless his trials to his good.

In Doll Land.

In Germany there are whole communities of people who make dolls; whole families that work all day at doll making, each one having his own part to do. Not only do these families make dolls, but the fathers and mothers of these fathers and mothers made dolls, and so did the grandfathers and grandmothers. A man making a doll out of a piece of wood, using a knife to do it, will draw himself up proudly and tell you that his grandfather made the same kind of a doll.

The mothers in the families cut out the bodies, the children make and stuff them, the fathers paint and treat the faces. In some families, where there is a great deal of talent, the whole family makes heads.

Some of these doll makers have come to New York, and they live near together, making a little German village of doll makers. These people make only the rag dolls which we see in the stores dressed in gingham, and wearing sunbonnets on their heads. Some of the women and girls make the clothing and bonnets; the boys stuff the bodies; and, as in Germany, the men make the faces.—Exchange.

There has nearly always been a good wife behind every great man, and there is a good deal of truth in the saying that a man can be no greater than his wife will let him.—Edward Eggleston.

Temptations resisted are stepping-stones to heaven.—Ram's Horn.

Is Christianity Practicable?

Since writing some articles on the above subject, I have received some commendations and some criticisms of the position taken by the writer. The indorsement comes, of course, from those who are not engaged in business on a large scale; the criticism, from those who are. This is natural, as we speak of nature. Below I quote in full a letter received from a brother in Kansas.

"W. J. Brown, Coal City, Ind.—Dear Sir and Brother: I have read with some interest your articles on practicable Christianity. Now if I understand you correctly, 'a merchant should not charge a greater profit than that necessary to maintain his business and support his family.' If this statement represents you correctly, it evolves some questions. But before asking them, I wish to state that a merchant cannot tell just the amount of profit necessary to do this, because he does not know what amount of business he will have; and since he does not, he cannot tell what amount of profit he must ask in order to do this, and no more. Shall he find his business some seasons of the year such as to give him a gain other than the amount necessary to meet the requirements, it may prove—and often does—that these same demands will consume the excess gains at a season of the year when his business is not so great. All this you can readily see. Now for the questions: (1) How can a merchant have means to do business with, if he has not had a gain somewhere? (2) How can a preacher have the means to 'go at his own expense' who has not had a gain some time? (3) How can the brethren (merchants or any other businessmen) have the means to support those who preach, if they don't sell goods, or do any kind of business for gain? (4) If I give all of my time to any business, and only seek to get out of that business that which is necessary to support my family, how can I have 'to give to them that need?' You can readily see that any man who has a well-established legitimate business must at some time have had a gain, and he must continue to get gain, if he maintains his business, supports his family, and has to give to others.

"P. R. SLATER.

"Baxter Springs, Kan."

The foregoing letter breathes the spirit of honest inquiry; and comes, as I take it, from a brother who is anxious to know his duty as a Christian business man. I think he misapprehends the gist of my contention in regard to this matter. I maintain that the spirit of Christianity does not allow one man to live at his brother's expense. All legitimate business does not exist solely for gain. It has a two-fold purpose: to supply the temporal wants of man and to subserve the interests of Christian work in the world. No Christian has a right to engage in any calling solely for gain. If everything that he does be done in the name of Christ, then Christ is his master, and all that he does in word and in deed springs from the same motive. He has as much right to preach Christ solely for gain as he has to sell goods or plow corn for that reason. I would as soon take the risk of preaching the gospel for money as selling goods for money. What I indignantly raise my voice in earnest protest against is the pernicious distinction, almost universal, between preaching the gospel for nothing and using all the other God-given means at our command for honoring God and saving man for our own selfish purposes. The idea of "dedi-

ROYAL

Baking Powder

Made from pure
cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

cating" a meetinghouse to the Lord, together with all of its concomitants, still perpetuated by the distinction between things secular and sacred, originated with the Greeks who came into the church unconverted—what did not come from Judaism. When Christianity shall have been triumphantly restored, business will not be made to subserve the interest of the devil by making it a matter of gain, but by serving one another on the principle of exchange of equivalents. Christianity teaches us to recognize the value of man, and that others are as valuable in the sight of God as we, and that they have interests as well as we. Of course, this is the ideal—just what we need, however, right here in this world, with its competition and elbowing one another out of the way, for gain and place. Call it what you please, but that will not change it; it is Christianity, pure and undefiled. Why is it that young men so often quit prosperous business and go into the ministry? Hypocrisy and the love of money aside, is it not for the reason that our habit of life has made the impression that other callings are secular and have no bearing on the work of saving souls? The "ministry" alone is thought to be "sacred," and the only work in which men of talent can serve the Lord and save souls. As a rule, as soon as a young man begins to show signs of preaching ability, the people begin to say: "You ought to go to preaching the gospel." If he be an honest man, and knows how to glorify God in "secular" callings, and to save souls in the use of the things that God has committed to him, I would say no; we have quite enough men in the field doing that kind of work; he ought to go into business and teach the church how to honor God and help men in that department of human activity. This is the lesson that the church as well as the world is sorely needing at present.

Not long since, an editor asked me for my advice in regard to publishing a religious paper for one of "the denominations;" he was engaged at the time in publishing a good, sound, religious paper. He thought of supplementing his meager income by publishing another for money. I answered by asking him whether he would go into the pulpit and preach the doctrine of the other for the money they might pay him. What is the difference (in the sight of God, of course; there may be no difference in the sight of men) in preaching the truth and publishing the truth for money? Can we publish the truth for money and preach the truth for nothing? If we preach the one, must we not also do the other for the same reason? Can an editor oppose the horse race from the pulpit and print the advertisements for the money he may get out of it? Here are some of the glaring inconsistencies that obstruct the wheels of the gospel wagon. A man may write the truth, sell the truth, or he may give it gratis. But where is the scripture that authorizes the same man to sell or give away the errors that other men have written?

But I must give some direct attention to the questions of the brother.

First, no Christian should make gain the object of his calling or business, any more than the preaching of the gospel should be made a matter of gain. See Brother Lipscomb's article four or five weeks back; he treats this matter in the proper way. I said: "Give as much of the bread of life as you can for as little profit as your circumstances demand; and if you are dealing in the bread of natural life, make as big loaves as possible for the money." This is the gain that a Christian ought to have.

The matter of anticipated gain and loss may be approximately determined by asking: "What would Jesus do?" Or the Golden Rule will do if you do not consider Jesus an exemplar in business. (1) He cannot do business without he "has had gain some time." Men can accumulate some "gain" by honest labor, not by speculating as a rule. There are many honest ways of making money. Christ does not require a man to give all away; he means for us to learn how to spend it for the best interests of all parties. (2) Preachers are of a piece with other men. They are as free to make money the object of their endeavor as any other man. (3) I am not condemning the Christian selling goods or pursuing any legitimate calling, only that he take Christ into his business as proprietor. I am contending that men who carry Christ into business will suffer. Why not? Did Christ say that his people in business would not suffer persecution? I have known of a few who have tried to take Christ into their business; they did not make big money, and they were opposed by others. "Be diligent in business, serving the Lord." W. J. BROWN.
Coal City, Ind.

If You Feel Irritable, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage, and is an invigorating tonic, soothing to the nerves.

"Sweeney's Sermons," by John S. Sweeney, and an interesting life sketch of the author written by an intimate friend. The subjects of the sermons are: "The Simplicity that is in Christ," "The Three Sides of Christianity," "The Church of God—Its Foundation," "The Word of Truth," "Our Aim," "Regeneration," "Acts of Apostles," "The More Excellent Way," "Paul's Answer to King Agrippa," "Action of Baptism," "Baptism for Remission of Sins," "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" "Infant Baptism," "A Plea for the Church of God." Of the sermons, J. W. McGarvey says: "I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ." The book contains 304 pages, and is neatly bound in cloth. Price, $1.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR,

"A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.
For indigestion and foul stomach.
For sick and nervous headaches.
For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.
For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.
For loss of appetite and debility.
For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir. Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.
Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.

1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, is a book that will be read with interest by all true Christians. The price is $1.50 by mail, post paid.

"Great Haste is Not Always Good Speed."

Many people trust to luck to pull them through, and are often disappointed. Do not dilly-dally in matters of health. With it you can accomplish miracles. Without it you are "no good."

Keep the liver, kidneys, bowels and blood healthy by the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the faultless blood purifier.

Dyspepsia—"I know a positive relief for dyspepsia and that is Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cured me. My neuralgia also stopped." W. B. BALDWIN, 164 Oak Street, Binghamton, New York.

Tired Feeling—"My appetite was capricious, my liver disordered and I was tired. Hood's Sarsaparilla relieved it all. It cured a friend of mine of female weakness." MRS. JESSIE A. MEARNS, Clayton, Del.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Kansas Notes.

Our meeting at Belle Plaine closed rather abruptly on account of a small-pox scare. The attendance and interest were good, and the brethren regretted very much that it had to close. Brother Rhodes did good preaching, and we were well pleased with his work. He is not only a good preacher in one sense, but in the full sense. He is an exemplary man, and we can welcome him in our midst at any time. We have felt hopeful of increase in interest in our work for some time, and that hopefulness is not diminishing. Like many, or all, other congregations, they have had much with which to contend; but in faithfulness they have moved on and are determined to press on. Many congregations imagine that they have crossed the deepest water. While that may have been true here, the brethren have been determined, and the work has been kept moving.

Brother Rhodes' next meeting will be near Lawrence, and from there he will go to Stafford County. He is a busy man—not busy in the wrong direction, but in the Lord's vineyard.

Brother W. F. Parmiter was with us several days during our meeting at Belle Plaine. He preached one sermon, and we appreciated it very much; it was strong and practical, hewed to the line, and that is the kind we want.

Brother C. C. Houston spent a day or two with us.

Brother Don Carlos Janes, of Ohio, dropped in on us one night. He is a young man of good ability.

Brother A. C. Crenshaw called one night while on his way home from Brannon, O. T.

Brother B. F. Martin has recently closed a good meeting at Burden. He is now at Iantha, Mo. Brother Martin has been very successful in his meetings this winter.

Brother O. M. Thomason was at Cedarvale when last heard from. He talks of locating in Kansas.

Brother I. D. Moffit closed at Attica last week. He stopped off and preached at Milan last Friday night.

I left home last Tuesday, in company with Brother Rhodes; our first point was Conway Springs. I visited with Brother George Henderson until Friday afternoon, when he conveyed me to Mahoney Schoolhouse, six miles away, where we held services that night.

Brother Rhodes and I stopped with Brother Shobe Friday night. Saturday morning we separated, he remaining to preach a day or two, and I came to Anthony. I am now comfortably located at the home of Brother A. C. Rutherford, and preaching each night near his home. Misfortunes of a sad nature overtook the congregation here, and it ceased to be; I was called here to try to teach some lessons on practical Christianity. We trust that in the future the work may be revived and much good accomplished. Many have moved away; only one or two families left that claim to be loyal Christians, and it will require time, faith, patience, and perseverance to get the work started again.

Brother George Henderson, of Conway Springs, is unfortunately located. He often drives ten, and sometimes twelve, miles to worship with brethren who are willing to worship without any machinery. He has had some connection with the congregation where he lives, but he has frequently said to me: "The more I see of it, the more disgusted I become." He only went there because he had no other place to go; but he has now determined to go somewhere if he has to go twelve miles. Such faith in Christ and devotion to truth is certainly commendable, and will be recognized by the Lord.

A preacher near here recently said that the society work was retarded by the "hellish opposition," the opposition to which he referred being the people who cannot indorse such work without any divine authority. He ought not to be so severe on them, but try to teach them better; show them where the Bible authorizes it. I am perfectly satisfied that if he would kindly show them this they would cooperate in the work. Such bitter denunciation will never win them; the truth is what they want. He ought not to cultivate ill feeling toward them, anyway. Peter says: "Lay aside all malice, guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings." We ought to cultivate more love, not for error, but for our fellow-creatures—so much love that we will not misrepresent anybody or try to leave wrong impressions concerning them. This ought to be a general principle with all of us.

I have frequently said to my friends who differ from me: "If I am wrong, I want to be right; and if you will show me the authority that Christ or the apostles gave for what you practice, I will engage heartily with you in the work." I love them and they ought to love me; and if I am wrong, they ought in love to teach me the error of my way.

Where does the Bible teach us that strife, bitterness, and backbiting are to be cherished and practiced? I am not in favor of shunning to declare the whole truth as revealed in the Book. Do it lovingly and boldly for the truth's sake, and not because we have a personal fight. "Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 20, 21.) Anthony, Kan. D. T. BROADUS.

LIFE AND WORK OF MOODY
DWIGHT L. MOODY

Official and only authentic edition. Written by his son, WM. R. MOODY, and IRA D. SANKEY, his lifelong associate and friend.
100,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE. Liberal terms. Freight paid. Credit given. A golden opportunity for you. Outfit free. Write to-day.
P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., 215 Locust St., Phila., or 324 Dearborn St., Chicago.

PLYMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREECATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

144 PIECE FREE DINNER SET

Full size for family use, beautifully decorated & most artistic design. A rare chance. You can get this handsome dinner set and one dozen fine plated tea spoons for selling our pills. We mean what we say & will give this beautiful dinner set absolutely free if you comply with the extraordinary offer we send to every person taking advantage of this advertisement. To quickly introduce our Vegetable Pills, a sure cure for constipation, indigestion & torpid liver, if you agree to sell only six boxes of Pills at 25 cts. a box write to-day and we send Pills by mail, when sold send us the money & we send you one dozen plated tea spoons together with our offer of a 144 piece dinner set same day money is received. This is a liberal inducement to every lady in the land & all who received the spoons & dinner set for selling our Pills are delighted.
AMERICAN MEDICINE COMPANY, DEPT. M 32 WEST 13th STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.

The W.V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.		VOICE OF PRAISE.		WORDS OF TRUTH.
MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.	MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.	MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75
MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.		MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.		MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
232 N. Market Street,
Nashville, Tennessee.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.
CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Will be receipted for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK.
311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

Easy to Take Easy to Operate

Because purely vegetable—yet thorough, prompt, healthful, satisfactory—

Hood's Pills

General News.

Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, is reported seriously ill at Akron, O.

Out of the 50,269,468 passengers carried by the Connecticut railroads last year not one, it is asserted, was killed.

For the first time in the history of Alabama the balance in the State Treasury passed the million dollar mark.

It is reported that the Boer General, Joubert, was seriously wounded by the explosion of a shell in the fight at Willow Grange.

Mrs. Gladstone attained her eighty-eighth birthday recently, and the bells of Hawarden Church were rung in honor of the occasion.

Adelbert S. Hay, the new United States Consul to the Transvaal Government, arrived at Pretoria and presented his credentials.

In Bombay, the unprecedented number of four hundred and eight deaths occurred in one day of last week. The situation is aggravated by the arrival of a large number of famine refugees.

The War Department has made the statement that the total collections for the port of Havana for the three hundred and one working days of the year 1899 were $11,097,154, making an average daily collection of $36,867.

The debate on the Philippine question continues to consume much of the time in the Senate. Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota, is one of the most prominent leaders of the opposition to the administration policy.

Secretary Root has sent to Congress an abstract of the military force of the United States. It shows the total number of men available for military duty, but unorganized, as 10,343,150, and an aggregate organized strength of 106,339.

The remains of Governor William Goebel, of Kentucky, were interred in Frankfort, in the cemetery overlooking the Kentucky River, where lie the remains of Daniel Boone, Vice President Richard Johnson, and several Kentucky Governors, eminent jurists, and soldiers.

The Senate committee has adopted a new set of rules in regard to pensions. One of these is to the effect that no widow shall receive a pension over what the law allows her by an especial Act of Congress except in case of destitution or extreme physical disability proved by affidavits.

Gold mining is being carried on successfully in Georgia. There are thirty mines now in operation in this State, some of which are very profitable. Their number will increase, because a large part of Georgia is very rich in gold deposits, which are waiting to reward enterprise, skill, and capital.

Mrs. Conger, wife of the Minister to China, has many pleasant words to say for her life in the Oriental kingdom, to which she will return from her visit to this country this month. She says the Chinese are a gentle, sympathetic race, and that the world at large could well learn a lesson from their treatment of animals.

Private advices from Durango State, Mexico, report that an important discovery of nickel and ferro-manganese has been made at the Durango Iron Mountain Mine. Prospectors have been quietly working on the claim to establish its charter before making it public, but the news leaked out, and now the whole mountain side is staked out for claims by citizens of Durango.

The cheering report is made that in the large cities of the United States the number of cases of blindness occurring in young children is steadily diminishing. This is due partly to increasing knowledge on the part of the medical profession, partly to the advance of sanitation in home and school, and partly to increased and more humane knowledge among the people generally.

An Indian not long ago came to Rapid City, S. D., from the reservation, accompanied by his squaw and daughter, and carrying two hand satchels. He proceeded to one of the banks and, after some hesitation, produced $2,000 from the gripsacks and opened an account. He is entered as the only Indian bank depositor in South Dakota, and is one of the largest holders of ready cash among his race.

A Washington special to the Nashville American says: "It is very likely that the funds in the United States Treasury derived from property seized during the Civil War in the South will be made available. The whole sum amounts to $11,000,000 in round numbers, the larger portion of which is for Southern cotton. The bills of Cooper, of Texas, and Senator Davis are to secure this and have been reported favorably."

The lowest point of land between the two oceans on the American continent is the Grand Divide in Nicaragua, where the elevation is only one hundred and forty-six feet. The lowest point of land on the Isthmus of Panama, according to the report of the canal commission, is Culebra, which is three hundred and thirty-three feet above tide water, and is now the scene of active work by the Panama Canal Company.

The sale of stamps at the Nashville post office during the month of January amounted to $21,362.81, an increase of $4,644.13 over the corresponding month of last year. There were 2,528 money orders issued, amounting to $17,762.75, and 12,821 orders paid, amounting to $65,113.82. The increase in orders issued over January, 1899, was $1,015.72 and in orders paid $4,924.27. The increase in deposits, drafts, and transfers was $7,869.30.

The President has appointed Judge Taft, of Cincinnati, chairman of the Philippine Commission. He is at present Judge of the United States Circuit Court. Judge Taft will leave for the Philippines some time after March 15. Upon the president of the commission falls the duty of actually providing a stable government for the islands, and the organization of a judicial system; and the position is, therefore, of the highest importance.

Military observers of the war in South Africa say that the use of smokeless powder in modern magazine rifles has strengthened the defense more than was previously estimated; that the defense is now as ten to one compared with the attack, whereas the former rule was three to one. The advancing column is almost always in view, whereas the defense can be concealed behind the trenches, and their position is not revealed by the smokeless powder.

IT'S WORTH YOUR WHILE....

to investigate the difference between our prices and those of agents and dealers for the same grade of work.

...WE DO NOT SELL...

No. 473—Single Strap Harness. First with nickel trimmings, $9.50. As good as sells for $6.00 more.

through agents or dealers, therefore we do not have them to protect, and in making our prices are enabled to figure them as low as the grade of work we manufacture can be sold. We save you the profits that are added between the manufacturer and the consumer, by selling direct to you from our factory. This has been our method of selling for the past twenty-seven years, and we are today the largest manufacturer of vehicles and harness in the world selling direct to the user exclusively. We make 178 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness and ship anywhere for examination, guaranteeing safe arrival. Send for free catalogue showing all of our different styles.

No. 191—Buggy, with leather quarter top. Price with shafts, $35.00. Guaranteed as good as others, and 11 for for $25 more than our price.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MANUFACTURING CO., W. B. PRATT, Secretary, Elkhart, Indiana.

The President, after consultation with the Cabinet, refused the application of Governor Taylor, of Kentucky, for Federal troops, on the ground that the Constitution does not justify such interference unless the call is made by the Legislature, or by the Governor when the Legislature is not in session. The President holds that the Legislature is in session, or, at most, has taken a recess, since it would be in session but for the fact that the Governor has prorogued it.

The revelations at Professor Milne's observatory on the Isle of Wight of the manner in which earthquakes send their impulses thousands of miles through the frame of the globe are a source of ceaseless wonder. In September last Professor Milne's instruments detected remarkable tremblings of the earth on the third, tenth, seventeenth, twentieth, and twenty-third. Since then he has traced the origin of the shakings on the first three days named to Alaska; on the twentieth, to Asia Minor; and on the twenty-third, to Japan.

J. C. W. Beckham, who was sworn in as Democratic Governor of Kentucky, is a young man, having been born on August 5, 1869, at Bardstown, Ky. He was nominated for the General Assembly the day he became of age, and Nelson County sent him to the Statehouse with manifest pride. Declining to stand for reelection at the expiration of his first term, he was succeeded by the late Isaac Wilson, who died during the memorable Blackburn-Hunter senatorial fight. Beckham filled out the unexpired term and stood by Blackburn's side throughout the heated contest. Again, in 1898, he was sent to the Legislature, and he was unanimously made its presiding officer, chosen by the Democratic caucus without opposition.

The Chattanooga Times says of Judge D. M. Key, who died in that city: "He was a thorough Chattanoogan and always took a lively interest in what went to the promotion of the best interests of the city and its people. He was one of its best citizens, and was held in the highest regard by all classes of people. Judge Key was in 1870 elected Chancery Judge of the Third District of this State, and held that position until 1875, when he was appointed United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Andrew Johnson. He was in 1877 appointed Postmaster General of the United States by President Hayes. In 1880 he was appointed United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee by President Hayes, which position he filled until he retired on full pay at the age of seventy."

There has been, and is, a sad state of affairs in Kentucky over the election of Governor. Taylor, the Republican candidate, received upon the face of the returns a majority of over two thousand. On the face of the returns he received the certificate of election and was inaugurated. Goebel, the Democratic candidate, contested Taylor's election before the Legislature, insisting that many of the votes were illegal. A board to try the case was chosen according to the law. Governor Taylor had brought to Frankfort several hundred armed men from the mountains, who were posted in the Executive Mansion. As Goebel was walking across the street, going to the Statehouse, he was shot down by a rifle fired from the Executive Mansion. After he was shot he was declared elected by the trial board and sworn in before his death. After Goebel's death, Beckham, the Lieutenant Governor, was sworn in as Governor; but Taylor has refused to surrender. He prevented the Legislature meeting in Frankfort by his militia, on the ground that Frankfort was in a state of insurrection. The only disorder seems to have been by his soldiers. He called the Legislature to meet on February 6, at London, a small town in one of the mountain counties, where his friends are in the majority. The Republican members have met there and adjourned from day to day, lacking a quorum. The Democratic members left the State to avoid arrest and compulsory attendance at London, but have met in Louisville. A conference was held between the friends of the two Governors and terms of settlement agreed on, but Taylor has as yet refused to sign the agreement. Goebel's friends have appealed to the State courts. Taylor has refused to recognize the summons of the courts, but has appealed to Judge Taft, of the United States Court at Cincinnati, who has set the case for hearing for Monday, February 12. Taylor is at Frankfort with his soldiers; Beckham is at Louisville. It is to be hoped the matter will be settled without further bloodshed.

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

This need never be asked if you plant Peter Henderson & Co.'s seeds, as they are the acknowledged standard of excellence in both hemispheres. Our 1900 Catalogue of Everything for the Garden is a 190-page book, 9x11 inches, containing over 700 engravings and 6 superb colored plates of Seeds and Plants—a perfect mine of information on garden topics.

To trace advertising, and give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following unusually liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 10 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent "Harvest" Collection of seeds, containing one packet each of New Large-flowering Sweet Peas, New Giant Pansy, New Giant Comet Asters, White Plume Celery, French Breakfast Radish and New Freedom Tomato, in a red envelope, which when emptied and returned will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST NEW YORK

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Iron in the Stomach.

You May Perhaps Think it Strange that there is Iron in Your Stomach.

or should be. Do you?
At any rate, it is true.

If there is no iron, you are sick. If you are sick, it is probably because you need iron.

Indigestion, with all its discomforts, is caused by the want of iron. Your gastric juice contains iron; when it doesn't, it lacks virtue.

Headaches, dizziness, yellow complexion, stomach ache, offensive breath, bad taste, eructations, fever, ague, nausea, heartburn, flatulence, constipation, prostration, exhaustion, general weakness, tiredness, loss of ambition, nervousness, irritability.

All these troubles come from indigestion, caused by lack of iron in the stomach and blood.

Have you any of them?
You can drive them away with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. It puts just the right proportion of iron into your stomach—the form of iron that is needed, the sort that doesn't disorder your digestion or discolor your teeth.

It is not a theory, it is a scientific fact, that iron is found in nearly every part of the healthy body.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic supplies the iron that is needed to make you well, tones up your stomach, enriches your blood, puts strength and vitality into your system.

Indigestion can be cured with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. The bad results of indigestion may be righted. Your health will be restored if you take it steadily and perseveringly until your system has all the iron that it needs.

You can tell when you are well.
E. W. Eriesson, No. 305 Main Street, Dallas, Tex., says one bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic has had marked effect toward the cleansing of his blood, and he considers it a good medicine.

Sold everywhere.
Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.
Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE Strong and Healthy.

In the early days of the coking industry in Pennsylvania, the workers were nearly all Irish. They disappeared, and Germans succeeded them. The Germans gave way before an irruption of Swedes, and now the ovens are in charge of Magyars and Slavs and Czechs. Forty per cent of the coke workers are Slavs, twelve per cent Poles, the rest Magyars, Greeks, Italians, Negroes, and more English and Welsh than you would expect to find.

In Buenos Ayres the extremely hot weather has caused great suffering. The mortality, which ordinarily never exceeds forty daily, reached one hundred and fifty during the twenty-four hours ending at 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon. There were two hundred and nineteen cases of sunstroke on Sunday, and one hundred and thirty-four cases resulted fatally up to 6 o'clock in the evening.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

BAKER.

My grandfather, G. W. Baker, died on January 6; aged eighty-four years, nine months, and twenty-one days. He was eager to go, and often sang: "Let me go, my soul is weary." He requested that no sermon be preached at his funeral. He leaves three sons, four daughters, fourteen grandchildren, and a number of great-grandchildren. He has always been active in religious and philanthropic works; he helped to organize the first congregation of disciples in this part of Missouri. He took another paper, but liked the Gospel Advocate better than any paper he knew, and I think he knew nearly all of them. He thought the Gospel Advocate exhibited the proper spirit; he had taken it for years, and always looked forward to the day for it to come, with pleasant anticipations. HATTIE L. DICKINSON.
Arrow Rock, Mo.

TOWNS.

Mrs. Sarah Towns died on February 2, at her home on the Murfreesboro pike, some ten miles out from Nashville, in the seventy-second year of her age. She was a woman of more than ordinary mental and physical powers, and by reading and study was of more than ordinary intelligence. She especially studied the Bible and was familiar with its teachings. Some years ago she wrote frequently for the papers. Her articles always showed thought and familiarity with the Bible. She obeyed the gospel about 1858. My recollection is she made the confession and was baptized the first gospel discourse she ever heard preached. She had passed through a long spell of sickness, and was attended by Dr. James Charlton, who, while treating her bodily ailments, talked to her of the Bible and the way of salvation; I mention this as creditable alike to her and to him. An earnest, Christian physician could find many opportunities of speaking a word for Christ and his truth that would bear good fruit. My mind is not fully clear that Sister Towns was the woman with whom this occurred, but it did occur with some one in that community, and I tell it as a hint as to how Christian doctors might do good. D. L.

Is it Worth While?

Sometimes good men will say, "No;" that it is time and money thrown away; that there are plenty of heathen at home, without going to distant lands. Such objections satisfy some that there is no obligation to carry the gospel to the heathen; they persuade themselves that if they support their preacher, help pay for the protracted meeting, and attend the regular meetings of the church, their responsibility is at an end. I have observed that the above objections generally come from those who do not seem to be very deeply concerned for the salvation of others, either at home or abroad. I do not say that the objections are not honestly made; but they come from a mistaken view of the spirit and nature of the gospel, and also the nature of man. Many claiming to be Christians would have us believe that the gospel is only for the Americans, just as they say: "Amer-

NOW READY

Facts, Faith, and Fire

A NEW BOOK BY
B. F. HAYNES, Editor of Zion's Outlook

ORDER AT ONCE OF
Zion's Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth

Sent, Postpaid, to Any Address

$1.00

* Agents Wanted Everywhere

Liberal Commissions Allowed

ica for the Americans." To them it is a national religion. Others are either unworthy of the gospel or incapable of receiving it. The same spirit says of the colored man that he is not only not fit, to receive the gospel, but he ought not even to be educated, and ought to be "kept down." The written code has, but the spirit of slavery has never, been abolished.

If the gospel is not for all, of whatever color or nationality, then Christ made a mistake in dying for all and in commanding the apostles to preach to all.

The results of preaching the gospel to those in foreign countries compare favorably with the same in this country. Comparing their opportunities with ours, they do fully as well as we. The boasted inherent superiority of the Caucasian race, and especially the American part of it is largely a myth. When it comes to moral purity, honesty, and truth, I believe I can truthfully say that in my dealings with the Japanese people they have proven as polite, as reliable, and as accommodating as the people of America, among the non-Christian class. If there is any difference on the point of politeness, I believe I would give it to the Japanese; but let us admit that there are many nations far down in the scale, does not Jesus say: "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick?" If we follow the line of the inherent goodness of human nature with our message of the gospel, we are certainly confined to a very limited field, and would hardly reach our next-door neighbor; but if we go believing the gospel has the power to lift up those that are deep down in sin we will never stop so long as there is another man beyond us. What has been done among some of the lowest specimens of humanity will be seen from the following clippings:

"It is only a few years since the islands of Southern seas were peopled with cannibals 'who made water bags of human skulls, decorated their houses with human skulls, and used human blood to mix their war paint; and now all is changed, and from myriads of homes there rise songs of praise to Him who washed us from our sins in his own blood."

"This inscription is to be seen on a tablet in a church in Erromango, and shows something of what it cost to bring to that island the gospel of Christ:

"Sacred to the memory of Christian missionaries who died on this island:

John Williams,
James Harris,
Killed at Dillon's Bay by the natives, 30th November, 1839;
George N. Gordan,
Ellen C. Gordan,
Killed on 20th May, 1861;
James C. McNair,
Who died at Dillon's Bay, 16th July, 1870; and James D. Gordan,
Killed at Portinia Bay, 7th March, 1872.
They hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus."

"Erromango is an island of the West Pacific, thirty miles long by twenty-two miles wide, and thus nearly one-half as large as Rhode Island. Missionaries landed on the island for permanent work, June 28, 1872, and the people were found to be cannibals of the most bloodthirsty sort. In all the South Sea islands there was no race lower in absolute savagery than they. To-day, no people on earth are more gentle and kind-hearted than the Erromangos. Within less than ten years, Norowo, a powerful and cruel warrior chief, accepted the gospel, and on one day he and two hundred of his people came forward and laid down all their heathen relics at the feet of Missionary Robertson, and declared themselves Christian in faith. In 1882, two hundred of the people sat down to the Lord's table before the little church, now too small to hold the congregations that assemble. At that communion were two sons and a nephew of Kowiowi, the savage who murdered John Williams, the missionary, November 30, 1899."—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"It is well known that Charles Darwin, after expressing his conviction of the utter impossibility of benefiting or civilizing the Terra del Fuegian barbarians, was so surprised and delighted at the work wrought there by missionaries that he became a regular contributor for the support of Christian missions. In replying to some who criticised foreign missions he said: 'They forget, or will not remember, that human sacrifice and the power of an idolatrous priesthood; a system of profligacy unparalleled in any other part of the world; infanticide, a consequence of that system; bloody wars, where the conquerors spared neither women nor children—that all these things have been abolished, and that dishonesty, intemperance, and licentiousness have been greatly reduced by the introduction of Christianity. In a voyager to forget these things is base ingratitude; for should he chance to be at the point of shipwreck on some unknown coast, he will most devoutly pray that the lesson of the missionary may have extended thus far.'—H. L. H., in The Common People.

Prof. C. E. Bessey announces, in a letter to Science, that he has obtained evidence that trees, including such species as oak, hickory, willow, cottonwood, elm, and box elder, are rapidly advancing in Eastern Nebraska. The areas covered by them are gradually creeping up the courses of the streams and spreading out laterally. In some cases the "tree belt" along rivers has, within twenty-five years, increased in width from one hundred feet to half a mile, and even a mile.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands, by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and lung affections; also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all nervous complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Field Findings.

There is but little protracted meeting work among the disciples of Christ now going on in Texas. Almost all the protracted efforts are put forth in July or August in the Lone Star State. Why is this? Successful meetings can be held in winter as well as at other seasons of the year if the churches will only put forth an effort. It may take longer to get up an interest, and more time may be required to make it a success; but I am sure that it will be time well spent. A cold "norther" might severely try the faith of some of the faithful (?), but the "elect" are willing to face a "norther" occasionally to show their faith by their works. Almost everybody attends church on beautiful Lord's days, especially if some noted speaker is to be present; but only the "faithful few" attend on bad, rainy days. We should not fail to attend the Lord's house simply because it rains or snows, when in such weather we would go to our places of business; for in so doing we say: "Business first, and religion second." Any man who will absent himself from the Lord's day meeting on account of bad weather, but under the same circumstances will go to his place of business, loves his business more than the service of God, and fails of a promise to the paradise of God. When Peter and other apostles "went a-fishing," the Lord appeared to them, and, after placing fish before them, and doubtless pointing to the fish, said: "Peter, lovest thou me more than these?" Peter said: "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." The Lord then said to him: "Feed my sheep." We might, with the same propriety, say to the merchant, "Lovest thou the Lord more than thy goods?" or the farmer, "Lovest thou the Lord more than thy cattle, horses, corn, and cotton?" If the answer is, "Yes," then we say: Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together "as the manner of some is." "Show thy faith by thy works." Dear brother, ponder well these things in your mind; and if you have been negligent, begin at once to obey God. You may shout, "Loyalty!" until you are hoarse; but as long as you repeatedly absent yourself from the house of God, you are a "digressive" of a very bad type. This "hot-weather" religion may lead you into a hotter clime than this.

A card from Brother T. W. Phillips says that he is now devoting one-half of his time to the cause at Grapevine, and would like to hold meetings the other half. Brother Phillips is a successful preacher, and churches desiring meetings would do well to write to him. His address is Grapevine, Tex.

Brother W. G. Tucker, of Buena Vista, Ark., informs me that he is busy all the time preaching the word. Brother Tucker is a sacrificing preacher and shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God.

Brother McCarron, of Dalton, Ga., among other things says that Dalton is overrun with sectarianism and that he has to go several miles in the country to meet with faithful Christians. He also says: "I am glad to know that we have fearless soldiers in all parts of our beautiful country. . . . I am clinging to the true faith and will until I pass over the river, and then all will be well."

I recently received a letter from Brother John W. Harris, and among other things, he says: "I am now talking of moving and locating near Aubrey, Tex.; but I have recently been staggered when speaking to a man about you. I am not acquainted with this man, but he says he knows you well; he told me that the church in Denton has an organ; that your wife plays the organ, and that you favor it. This I denied." Of course this is rather laughable to those who know me and know the church here, but as there are those who do not know these things I will say that there is a congregation here that uses the organ and many other unscriptural things, but that I am not preaching there. My wife cannot play an organ. Brother Harris has been sick for many months, not able to do anything, and badly needs the help of the brotherhood. Brethren, send him an offering at once, for he is in need. Do not delay this matter. Address John W. Harris, Russet, I. T.

Brother J. S. Brown, of Missouri, expects to visit Texas some time in the near future, to preach the gospel of Christ. There is plenty of room here, Brother Brown, for good, faithful preachers.

I would be glad to receive reports from the preachers in Texas for my "Field Findings."

May the Lord bless all the faithful in Christ. J. H. LAWSON.
Denton, Tex.

Evidence is Necessary.

Man is free to believe, then why cannot I believe in Mormonism? Because I have no evidence that it is true, that's why. Isn't that plain? A man doesn't believe a thing to make it true, but because it is true; hence when the evidence is given that Jesus is Christ, our Savior, we believe it upon the evidence, not upon a direct operation of the Spirit. Men are actuated by evidence. The Holy Spirit has given us a Bible brimful of evidence concerning Jesus and salvation through his name, and any man can believe it if he will. He can also shut his eyes against the evidence, put it from him, and judge himself unworthy of everlasting life. (Acts 13: 46.)

J. W. ATKISON.

"Grasp All and Lose All."

Many people are so intent on "grasping all" that they lose strength of nerves, appetite, digestion, health. Fortunately, however, these may be restored by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has put many a business man on the road to success by giving him good digestion, strong nerves, and a clear brain. It does the same thing for weak and tired women.

HOOD'S PILLS cure sick headache, indigestion.

THE SINGER CABINET TABLE.

Copyright, 1899.

MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.
SALESROOMS IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

DOES THIS

CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

Mardi Gras Celebration, New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala.,
February 26, 27, 1900.

Reduced Rates via Southern Ry.

On account of Mardi Gras celebration at New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., February 26, 27, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to New Orleans, La., and return, also to Mobile, Ala., and return, at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold from February 20 to 26 inclusive, with final limit to return March 15, 1900.

The Southern Railway offers excellent and convenient schedules en route to New Orleans and Mobile, and passengers should purchase tickets reading via that line.

For further information, call on Southern Railway ticket agent.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

Write to us for any good book or tract published, and, if we haven't it in stock, we will endeavor to get it for you.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford,
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy,
Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT
NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatment and
$2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE
to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. H. H. KLINE, L.D.
931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR
the grandest and fastest-selling book ever published,
Pulpit Echoes
OR LIVING TRUTHS FOR HEAD AND HEART.
Containing Mr. MOODY'S best Sermons, with 100 Thrilling Stories, Incidents, Personal Experiences etc., as told
By D. L. Moody
Amself: With a complete history of his life by Rev. CHAS. F. GOSSE, Pastor of Mr. Moody's Chicago Church for five years, and an Introduction by Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D. Brand new, 604 pp., beautifully illustrated. 75¢. 1,000 more AGENTS WANTED - Men and Women. Sales immense - a large time for Agents. Send for terms to
C. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

If you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; Macbeth's don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear pop, clash on the least provocation.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Book Reviews.

All books, etc., intended for notice should be sent to J. W. Shepherd, 1019 South Spruce street, Nashville, Tenn. Publishers will please note this. Any good book, not sold by regular subscription, can be purchased from the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, 232 North Market street, Nashville, Tenn.

"What a Young Husband Ought to Know." By Sylvanus Stall. Pages, 300; price, $1. The Vir Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

Inasmuch as marriage is a divine institution, and the most sacred relations of life cluster about the family and the home, no words of praise can be too strong with which to commend this book. In these pages the author lifts the sacred relations of married life out of the impure and vile thinking which has degraded manhood, debased and debauched womanhood, and robbed marriage and home of the blessings and happiness which God intended. It treats of matters of vital importance, is free from technical terms, and scientifically accurate. These pages are crowded with that information which saves from the sad consequences of blind blundering; the book imparts that information which enables its possessor to escape the ills which ignorance brings. It ought to be read by every adult, whether married or unmarried. The author has treated the most delicate subjects with that same ennobling force which characterizes the preceding volumes of this series which have been noticed and so heartily commended in these columns.

"Royal Manhood." By James I. Vance. Pages, 251; price, 1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, New York, and Toronto.

This is a good book and makes a strong call to true manliness. The elements of true manhood are stated and emphasized by illustrations and practical suggestions. The author claims, and emphasizes, that Jesus is the only perfect man, and to be like him is to have royal manhood.

"Some Latter-day Religions." By George Hamilton Combs. Pages, 261; price, $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, New York, and Toronto.

The subjects treated in this interesting and useful volume are "Aestheticism," "Theosophy," "Otherism," "Faith Cure," "Pessimism," "Agnosticism," "Materialism," "Spiritualism," "Liberalism," "Mormonism," "Christian Science," and "Socialism." While the author does not go into a thorough discussion of these isms, he certainly presents that which will be interesting and valuable to the ordinary reader. There is no doubt about them all being of a pernicious character, which require severe treatment; and certainly the author discusses them in a straightforward, clear, and satisfying style. He makes no sort of compromise with error; truth and falsehood are contrasted in a most convincing manner. I commend the book, believing that those who peruse its pages will be much benefited.

"Matthew: The Genesis of the New Testament." By Henry G. Weston. Pages, 147; price, 75 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, New York, and Toronto.

The author of this volume is president of Crozier Theological Seminary, and has just completed his eightieth year. It was at the earnest request of his friends that he has given in permanent form the valuable results of his lifelong studies. He does not give a verse-by-verse commentary, but a running exposition; his design being to interpret the statements of Matthew, and in so doing to give some light on the proper method of studying the New Testament.

"The Land of Israel." By Robert Laird Stewart. Pages, 352; price, $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, New York, and Toronto.

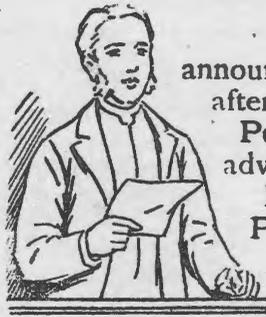

This is an up-to-date text-book on the physical and historical geography of the Holy Land, embodying the results of recent research, admirably written, disclosing enthusiasm and vividness of description begotten by travel and close observation of the Holy Land. The maps are a special feature, showing all places of historic interest, and also indicating the routes of railways in Palestine, and the old roads worn into the rocks by the tread of generations. The many subjects are presented in an attractive style, with a fullness, clearness, and force which make it delightful to peruse its instructive pages. Besides the seventeen maps and numerous illustrations the book contains a complete index.

"Bible Stories Without Names." By Harry Smith. Pages, 167; price, 75 cents. Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, New York, and Toronto.

In this book Bible stories are given without names, these being intentionally omitted to stimulate memory. If put into the hands of children with some older person to guide their study and prevent discouragement in hard places, it will stimulate an interest in Bible study.

MAGAZINES.

The topics editorially treated in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for February are the Nicaragua Canal proposition now before Congress, the Canadian and Erie Canal projects, underground transit in New York and elsewhere, the currency and business situation, the Treasury and the banks, the popular election of Senators, Mr. Beveridge's speech in the Senate on the Philippine question, our tariff policy in Puerto Rico and Cuba, the mean-announcing, from the pulpit, a committee to look after the cleaning of the building, called it "The Pearl Line Committee." That is the kind of advertising that has swelled the sales of Pearl Line. It's from people who know Pearl Line, and are using it, and who think and speak of it as the one thing necessary in any matter of cleanliness. Talk with some of these people, if you have doubts about Pearl Line. Cleanliness is next akin to Godliness.

A Pastor

ing of "neutrality" in the Boer War, and the strength and weakness of the Boer position. Mr. W. T. Stead writes on "The Perilous Position of England," pointing out the dangers which threaten from across the Channel.

A series of "South African Reminiscences," by Sir John Robinson, formerly Governor of Natal, is begun in the Living Age for January 27. Natal from a woman's point of view will be presented in a paper called "Natal Memories," by Lady Broome, in the Living Age for February 10.

Self-Culture now ranks among the foremost magazines of the day. Its field is "self-education and the promotion of culture," and it deals interestingly with various questions, and provides a vehicle for American thought and opinion. Besides the valuable contributed papers, it contains departments on "Religious Thought and Opinion," "Art and Music," "Sociology," "Civics and Economics," and "Science and Discovery."

The Reason Why.

We are informed that one million Singer sewing machines were made and sold during the year 1899. This probably equals the production of all other manufacturers combined, and the question arises as to why the Singer should be so greatly preferred all over the world.

There is a valid reason for everything, whether we are able to find it or not; and the reason for the tremendous and constantly increasing distribution of Singer sewing machines is easily explained.

From the very beginning there has been a constant evolution in the construction of these machines, a ceaseless attempt to enlarge their usefulness by adapting them to the performance of every stitching operation, a continuous improvement in the processes of manufacture.

Singer machines are so simple that a child can understand them; they are so strong that a bungler can hardly get them out of order. Every part is made with such scrupulous care from the best materials, fitted in its place with the utmost exactness, and tested and retested so many times before leaving the factory, that they never get the "fits" which try a woman's patience, destroy the fruits of her labor, and consume her time in vexing attempts to coax the machine to a proper performance of duty.

Such a high degree of mechanical perfection can only be obtained through long experience in the operation of immense factories containing tools that are peculiar to these works and are unequalled for their purposes. The system of testing, inspecting, and assembling at the Singer factories is such that it seems well-nigh impossible for a Singer machine or any of its parts to leave the works in an imperfect condition.

Of course, this elaborate system of inspection and testing materially increases the cost of manufacture; but it is only by the use of such means that really first-class sewing machines can be made. Imitation is the sincerest flattery, and imitations of old forms of sewing machines long since discarded by the Singer Company are made by unscrupulous persons, and put upon the market to deceive the unwary. The difference between the cost of a high-class sewing machine, embodying the best of materials and workmanship, and its spurious imitation, made of cheap materials in the cheapest way, is soon eaten up by the added cost of the latter for repairs and lost time in the workroom.

The Singer Manufacturing Company aims to maintain its well-earned reputation for fair dealing during all time. It is permanent, its offices are in every city in the world, and parts and supplies for its machines can always be easily obtained. Thus it may be seen why Singer sewing machines have the preference whenever their merits are fairly investigated.

THE SINGER MFG. CO.

CUSTOMERS ASTOUNDED AT OUR BARGAINS IN REMNANTS OF SILK RIBBONS FREE

We have purchased, at recent wholesale auction sales several large lots of Remnants of Silk Ribbons, at prices which will enable our lady customers to secure splendid bargains. These remnants are all from one to two and three yards in length, and many of them are the finest quality of Ribbons in the market, of different widths, in a variety of fashionable shades; in fact, nearly all colors are represented; also different kinds of Ribbons adapted for bonnet strings, neckwear, trimming for hats and dresses, bows, scarfs, etc., etc. No lady can purchase such fine Ribbons as these at any store in the land for many times our price, so that the bargains offered by us should be taken advantage of by our customers. Our stock of Silk Ribbons, from which we put up these 50-cent packages, consists of Crown Edge, Gros Grain, Moire, Picot Edge, Satin Edge, Silk Brocade, Striped Ottoman, and various other styles of Plain and Fancy Silk Ribbons suited to the wants of our lady friends. We put up carefully assorted packages of Silk Ribbons, assorted colors. No remnants less than one yard long, and all first-class, useful goods. We will send 1 package for 35 cents, silver, or 30 cents in 2-cent stamps. Carefully packed in boxes, postpaid, upon receipt of price. Address PARIS RIBBON CO., Box 3045, New York City, N. Y.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Her Face His Face

Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.

Heiskell's Ointment

Heiskell's Soap

Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.

Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for.

Refined Paraffine Wax is in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

The Facts in the Case.

But few rich men, I presume, really know how to "lay up treasure in heaven." In the first place, let them see to it that riches are acquired honestly; secondly, that they are spent; and, thirdly, how they are spent. This, if faithfully attended to, will furnish them something to do that will pay compound interest in the currency of heaven; but not many of them will ever do it.

In view of the thought required in order to spend money, all rich men especially ought to be continually studying how to spend their money for the good of others and the honor of Christ. They ought to be constantly engaged in studying ways of leading people to Christ on large scales. The great industries—the manufactories, the railroad, the telegraph, the professions, and all the trades of Christians—ought to be turned over to God and his Christ, and thus become saviors of men. (Neh. 9: 27; Ob. 21.) Thus the occupations and employments of men might become the instruments in the hands of consecrated men and the good providence of God of untold good to men and glory to the Highest. In that case, they would become the nucleus around which all classes would gather for the purpose of helping them to spend their means in doing good to man and honoring the Maker of all mankind. What a wonderful aspect riches would thus present to the world, and what blessings they would bring to men! This principle, I can very easily imagine, is the way the work of the redeemed is carried on in heaven. How does the doctrine "one world at a time" look to the inhabitants of all worlds where God's will is always done?

But—I am sorry to have to use this word, which always sends one off on a sidetrack—as you all know, this is not the case, and is not likely to be the rule very soon. Let us view the matter of riches as it actually presents itself to our ken to-day; this way of looking at rich men will afford some relief to all who prefer the real to the ideal.

The average rich man presents the ridiculous aspect of a real god made of pure gold and ornamented with diamonds; he stands before the famished multitudes who hunger and thirst for his money, as stiff as a wooden statue, with his teeth closed on the eagle and his fists firmly clenched on his gold, determined not to let any of it go without double assurance that it will return to him with compound usury. Around this image of the devil gather the multitudes for the purpose of helping him to spend his money. Many are the devices and ingenious contrivances for the purpose of getting him to part with that which "sticketh closer than a brother." As he is deaf to the nobler appeals of helping humanity for its own sake, the resort is made to the baser instincts of the animal man. They are put to their wits' end in trying to persuade him apparently for his own good. Instead of the rich Christian being wiser in the use of the things of this world than the children of the world of darkness, knowing the world's needs and how to apply the means at his command, he is at the mercy of the world's devices. One class of men try to persuade him that he wants candy, and that he can be supplied with the best at his store; another tells him that pleasure is what he needs, and that he can furnish him excursions at the lowest rates; a third tries to persuade him that he wants a land monopoly, that by owning the land he will be able to own and control men who labor, and in addition to these advantages he will enjoy the reputation of benevolence under the specious pretext of giving employment to the laboring classes. The lodge wants its share of the finance, so it tells him he wants to belong to some lodge, especially the Odd Fellows. By this time the apostate church puts in its appearance for its share of the "filthy lucre." He is told in no ambiguous terms that "he lacks the one thing needful," that his embarrassment may find relief in "attaching himself to some church;" but he is not left in doubt as to which one that is. It is "our particular branch of the church"—the apostate church, of course. There will be the place to invest his money; by giving liberally to all the benevolent societies and to defray the expenses of conventions, his reputation for liberality and charity will go over all the world, and his name will be written on the yearbook of the denomination to which he belongs.

Thus every contrivance and want invented by the ingenuity of man, to force the covetous man of wealth to loose his grip on money and let it go through the medium of human society, is thought by the majority to be a benefactor of the human race. His very attitude toward men excites all within the circle of his influence to the production of covetous things, instead of what is good, and pure, and useful and lovely. O what fools are rich men who do not know how to spend their money; and what mean, miserable, contemptible specimens of Almighty workmanship are all such as those who contrive ways of robbing the rich! Ye rich, weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon you." "How hardly shall a rich man enter the kingdom of God!"

Coal City, Ind. W. J. BROWN.

Free Treatment.

The L. C. McLain Medical and Surgical Institute, of St. Louis, Mo., offers to treat, free of charge, any case of congenital clubfeet which we may select, on the following conditions:

1. The patient, in your judgment, to be unable to pay, and one that would not otherwise receive treatment.
2. The patient to be between the ages of four months and ten years and of good general health, and not injured by former cutting.
3. The patient to report to the institute for treatment as often as necessary.
4. We promise to straighten the feet and to make them so nearly perfect that when encased in ordinary shoes they will attract no attention.
5. We ask that, when the work shall have been completed, you give through your columns the same publicity to the result, whatever that result may be, that you may have given to our offer in publishing it.

Large
Type

8vo
Cloth

486
Pages

Price
$1.50

HANDBOOK ON BAPTISM

BY J. W. SHEPHERD
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof.

The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities.

A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student.

It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY
232 N. MARKET ST.
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

They have further to say that "the time necessary to effect the cure depends largely upon the physical condition of the patient, but from three to six months will, in most cases, suffice. Of course, within this time, full strength will not have come to the parts, as this must come by degrees.

"Board can be had near the institute at a cost proportionate to accommodations; and if the patient is between the ages of five and ten years, board can be had at the institute, under the constant care of competent attendants, at $5 per week.

"It would not be necessary for the patient to remain all the while in St. Louis, if care should be taken in observing directions. If the expense to and from the institute should not be too great, the patient might return home after each brace shall have been applied. There are three separate braces necessary in the treatment of each foot; for these braces in this case we make no charge whatever. The usual charges for treatment are from $100 to $200 for each foot, but in this offer to you we include both feet, if both are deformed."

The treatment only is free. A boarding place may be selected near the institute, or board can be had at the institute at $5 per week.

Any one having a child so afflicted who can arrange for transportation and board, but who is unable to pay the further charges connected with the treatment, and who is willing to comply with the rules of the institute in regard to same, should write to this institute at once. They have only one free treatment to offer, and the first case presenting itself will receive its benefits.

In South Africa General Buller is making another effort to relieve Ladysmith. Having driven the Boers from their intrenchments on Krantz Kloof, the English hold the position against all effort to retake it.

A great fire destroyed the larger part of four blocks of buildings and their contents, in St. Louis, valued at $1,500,000. One fireman was killed, and nine others injured.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the
ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R.
in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row
Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

*If You Are Going North,
If You Are Going South,
If You Are Going East,
If You Are Going West;*

PURCHASE TICKETS VIA THE

AND SO SECURE

*The Maximum of Safety,
The Maximum of Speed,
The Maximum of Comfort,
The Minimum of Rates.*

Rates, Time and all other information will be cheerfully furnished by

C. P. ATMORE, G. P. A.,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 8.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, FEBRUARY 22, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Saved Through Obedience.....	114
"The Everlasting Kingdom," Reviewed by J. W. Chism.....	114
Walking by Faith.....	115
Things that Hinder.....	115
Longview Mission.....	115
Faith, Feeling, and Wisdom.....	116
Know the Lord.....	116
Miscellany.....	117
Queries.....	118
An Appeal.....	118
Home Reading.....	119
Taking the Name of the Lord in Vain.....	120
The New Birth.....	120
The Book of Revelation.....	120
The Brethren in Armenia.....	121
What Church Do You Belong To?.....	122
Man Has Sought Out Many Inventions.....	122
Brown-Boaz Debate.....	123
Enthusiasm in God's Work.....	123
A Golden Opportunity.....	124
Sounding Out the Word.....	124
Young-Williams Debate.....	124
General News.....	125
Z. T. Beachboard.....	126
A Sermon on Denominationalism.....	127
Obituaries.....	128

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The Christian Publishing Company was reorganized a few months ago because a majority of former stockholders declined to work longer with Brother J. H. Garrison, on the ground that he was conducting the Christian-Evangelist in the interest of "higher criticism," which they pronounced "heresy." In the reorganization he was left in control, and the presumption is that the company and the paper are now owned by men who are willing to conduct them in the interest of "higher criticism," but who probably will take no chances in such a venture until they "feel the public pulse," so to speak, sufficiently to form a conclusion as to whether such an experiment will be likely to succeed. The following extract from a private letter written by J. S. Lamar to J. H. Garrison calls a halt and advises that the thing be headed in another direction:

"I am not, however, entirely ignorant of the fact that there is another class of men, some of them learned and brilliant, who are masquerading in the character of higher critics, when in fact they are simply special pleaders. They settle the case before they investigate it, and then, like a paid attorney, bring it before the jury in the most fascinating, powerful, one-sided, and delusive way, with every favoring fact unduly emphasized and most prominent, while every opposing fact is either kept out of sight altogether or else belittled and ridiculed into insignificance and contempt. These are the flaring comets of the critical universe, astonishing heaven and earth with their singular heads, which are thought to be very light, and their shining tails, which are known to be very thin; and some people think as they see them splurging through the tenuous ether that the whole solar system and the stars of heaven are about to be knocked into everlasting smashes. But you and I can testify that they never have been yet. Instead, the garish comets themselves soon pass away, as Carlyle would say, 'into the depths of infinite space' and eternal night. What I hate is to see some little two-by-three fellows, who have read a little, and dreamed a little, and swelled a little, attaching themselves to one of these tails, and assuming to look down with arrogance and contempt upon Aroturus, Orion, and Pleiades—despising the serene old stars that rained their sweet influence upon Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that gladdened the hearts of the very Christ and the twelve apostles. But I am happy to say that so far they have not hurt either the stars or the planets, much! The sun is still the center of the solar system—the Lord be praised; and if we can only manage to keep him there, the orbital movements of the heavens and the light and life of the world are not likely to be soon changed. We all know, of course, that the Bible is safe, and the church is safe, and the Lord is safe; but what are we to do with those amiable, well-meaning, but indiscreet young men, fascinated by these catchy fancies, and as full of them as they can hold—nay, fuller than they can hold, for they are slopping over everywhere, in season and out of season? Any remedy will do if it only brings them to realize that the exercise of unlimited freedom calls for the possession of at least a little sober common sense. It is better for them to know now than to discover later that our great brotherhood are not going to follow the ignis fatuus lead of any man, great or small, who would conduct us away from Moses and the prophets and from Christ and the apostles. As for you and me, my dearly beloved brother, we can have neither thanks nor honor for those who are artfully and perpetually insinuating doubts as to the supernatural elements in our holy religion—the supernatural, whose pervading presence is the very life and power of it all. Take away that and we have a religion without God, faith without a basis, prayers without meaning, life without motive, and, at last, death without hope. As for myself—and I would not be writing this horrid letter to you if I did not feel sure of our perfect and heartfelt sympathy—I am old and ready to die. All the interest I have in this world—all that I have in any world—is invested in that old Book. In this bank are treasured all my drafts upon eternity. May God save it from the drills and the dynamite of the burglars who are seeking to destroy it!

J. S. LAMAR.

"Grovetown, Ga."

A few such letters from such sources as this would no doubt restrain the Christian-Evangelist from any open, aggressive advocacy of the objectionable theories; but it is an open question whether men who are held to a position from outside pressure rather than from sincere convictions are any the better themselves or of any strength to the position they accept under such pressure.

Briney's Monthly, a new publication from Paris, Mo., discusses "the Church," as follows:

"THE CHURCH.

"For a long time there has been a tendency to undervalue the church of Jesus Christ, and even sometimes it is treated with contempt. That it occupies no very important place in the scheme of redemption is a notion which prevails to a great extent. People think that they can be saved about as well without the church as through it, and hence it is neglected and even despised. A careful study of this divine institution at this time is a matter of unusual importance. Of course such a study should be conducted in the light of divine teaching, and the conclusions to which such a study intelligently conducted may lead should be accepted without discount. In matters of this kind the word of God is the court of final appeal.

"One would scarcely expect to be saved without vital connection with what the Scriptures call the 'body of Christ,' nor is one likely to be found who looks for salvation outside of the kingdom of heaven. At this point it is quite necessary to inquire whether the church of Christ, the body of Christ, and the kingdom of heaven are three distinct institutions, or simply three names for one and the same institution. Is there by divine appointment one institution called the 'church;' another, the 'body;' and a third, the 'kingdom?' If yes, wherein do they differ? Can a person be in one and out of the other two? What blessings are attached to one that do not belong to the other two? These are questions that are well worthy of earnest consideration and careful thought.

"We do not understand that there are three different institutions, but that the same institution is called by three different names according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. If it is regarded as a building, Christ is its foundation; if it is contemplated as a body, Christ is its head; if it is viewed as a kingdom, Christ is its King. Paul makes the church and the body one when he says that Christ 'is the head of the body, the church;' and the Master makes the church and the kingdom one when he says: 'Upon this rock I will build my church, . . . and I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.' Thus the church and the body and the kingdom are made one on the principle that two things that are equal to the same third are equal to each other. From this it follows that whoever is in the church is in the body and the kingdom, and whoever is out of the church is out of the body and the kingdom. Thus it is seen that the church is of great importance in the economy of grace, and that the children of men cannot afford to slight it. The promises of salvation are all within the church. We do not say that there is no salvation outside of the church; but we do say that we know of no promise of salvation to people who are not in the church. We are dealing with revealed things and must keep within the record. Within the circle of things revealed we should be governed by the law and the testimony, and not get wise above what is written.

"The value of the church again becomes manifest from the following language: 'Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.' (Eph. 5: 25-27, R.V.) This expresses the divine estimate of the church; and should guard us against an undervaluation of this heavenly institution. The foregoing language seems to imply that Christ gave himself up for the church and for that only, and it appears to logically follow that the redemption which he purchased by giving himself up is exclusively for the church. With this thought corresponds the idea that 'we have our redemption, the forgiveness of our sins,' in Christ. Whoever is in Christ is in his church, in his body, in his kingdom. God does not intend that men may despise and reject with impunity the church which Christ loves and for which he died. He who rejects the church rejects Christ, and he who rejects him rejects the redemption that is in him. The consequences of despising and rejecting the church of the living God are fearful, and people should be aroused to a realization of the situation.

"The following passage is also helpful in an effort to arrive at the proper conception of the church: 'Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord.' (Eph. 3: 8-11.) This scripture seems to teach that God appointed the church as the channel through which to make known to intelligent beings in the heavens the wisdom that devised the scheme of human redemption, and that the church had a place in the eternal purpose of God. The church, then, was not an afterthought in the divine plan, and does not occupy an unimportant place in the purpose of his grace. 'And he put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all.' 'Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, . . . unto him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus unto all generations forever and ever. Amen.'"

This is a clear and vigorous statement of New Testament teaching on the question in hand. The longer and more carefully people study this question, the plainer they will see the truth on the subject, and the more apparent it will become to them that the only ground of unity among the people of God is to be Christians, and nothing else; belong to the church, which is the body of Christ, and nothing else; preach and practice all the New Testament teaches, and nothing else.

Our Contributors.

Saved Through Obedience.

Having considered some of those clear proofs in the Scriptures to show that man in approaching the sovereign God must come in poverty of spirit, contrition of soul, and trembling at the word of God, attention is hereby called to the meritorious sacrifice of Christ and the shedding of his own precious blood as the procuring cause of man's redemption.

Those things which a sinner is required to do to be saved, under the gospel, have not in them intrinsic value to pardon sin. This is easily noted by considering separately those conditions. Take faith. If God were to suspend our salvation upon the merit of faith to pardon sin, one might believe as strongly as Abraham and then not be pardoned. Yet without faith it is impossible to please God, and he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. There is not a particle of efficacy in faith to wash away sin. The devils believe and tremble.

Take repentance. There is no inherent efficacy in repentance to wash away sin, and were it so that God suspended our pardon upon its power to wash away sin, no one could be forgiven.

Could my tears forever flow,
Could my zeal no languor know,
These for sin could not atone;
Thou must save, and thou alone.

Yet our divine Lord has said, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;" and God hath commanded all men everywhere to repent. There is no salvation without it; yet in repentance there is no power or efficacy to pardon sin.

The same is true of the confession; while it is noble to confess the sonship of Christ before the world, and Christ has offered us the highest inducement to confess him, assuring us that he will confess us before his Father and the angels of God, he has never taught that there is any power in the confession to wash away sin.

Although Saul of Tarsus was commanded by Ananias, whom the Savior sent to instruct him, to "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord," yet no power was in the waters of baptism to wash away or pardon sin. This was the only step he, as a believing penitent, was required to take to bring him to the promise of pardon. It was noble and right in him to take this step, it was the remaining condition of his pardon through the grace of Jesus Christ. Yet it had no virtue to pardon.

They who object to baptism as a condition of pardon because there is no virtue in water to pardon sin seem to forget that there is no virtue in faith to pardon sin, no virtue in repentance to pardon sin, no virtue in the confession to pardon sin, and no virtue in anything we do to merit pardon of sin. But the Christ who said, "Believe," said also, "Repent," and he who commanded these says also to every believing penitent: "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." Do all the Lord has required and trust him for salvation. Do not expect what he has not promised, but in faith rely upon his promise.

Salvation is not on account of works of human merit, but through grace. Grace means favor. The grace of God is the favor of God. God in his mercy and compassion has offered a free pardon to all who obey the gospel of his Son. He commanded his apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." This is as plain as one could wish it. It offers salvation to the baptized believer; it threatens condemnation to the unbeliever, whether baptized or unbaptized.

Salvation by grace is the most attractive feature of the gospel of the Son of God. Any view of salvation which leaves this out or relies upon any scheme which ignores this great truth cannot be of God. To make our salvation depend upon obeying the gospel of Christ does not ignore it, but secures it. The grace of God is extended through the gospel. Of it, Paul says to the Colossians: "We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints, for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth." (Col. 1: 3-6.)

Here we see that since the day they had heard the word of the truth of the gospel they had known the grace of God in truth.

Those who refuse to hear and obey the gospel reject the grace of Christ and may seek all other sources in vain. No matter how enthusiastic the religious interest, how ecstatic the joy, how blissful the feeling, the soul that can deliberately reject the plain commands of Jesus Christ in offering salvation to the world is deceived.

On the other hand, the meek and quiet spirit, who, trusting in Christ, obeys him in his own appointed ways, is following the Spirit of God and is a Christian in deed and in truth.

G. LIPSCOMB.

"The Everlasting Kingdom," Reviewed by J. W. Chism.

I see in the Gospel Advocate an article on the establishment of the everlasting kingdom, by Brother John T. Poe, which I think needs some attention. In the last paragraph of the article Brother Poe plainly says: "I conclude that the God of heaven has not yet set up the everlasting kingdom spoken of by Daniel (2: 44), but that he will do so at the second coming of Christ." This defines his position very clearly, so that there can be no mistake in the true issue.

But he gives us four reasons why it could not be the establishment of the church in the days of Cæsar—viz.:

1. "These kings (the four mentioned by Daniel) were not contemporaneous, and Daniel says, 'In the days of these kings,' meaning, doubtless, in the days of the reign of a plurality of kings referred to in the interpretation of the dream." This objection is not good, for the reason, first, that he mistakes the kings referred to. The reference in verse 44 is not to the four universal empires of the vision, but to certain kings over one of these empires—i. e., over the last. Now, read carefully the statement of Daniel: "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise." Here we have the iron only mentioned, and Gibbon tells us that nearly all of the greatest conquests of Rome were under the republican form of government. He further tells us that while Rome was a republic she scarcely sustained a defeat. (Gibbon's "Rome," Volume I.) But Rome was not always to be so solid; so in verse 41, Daniel says: "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay." Now note in this that the divided state of this fourth kingdom is designated by the iron and clay. We have learned from Gibbon that the republic was the iron; then there was to be something else mixed with the republic which would by being so mixed weaken the kingdom, and yet the iron was to remain, and the strength, too, to a comparative degree. But hear Daniel further: "And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken." (Verse 42.) Here it is very plain that the division is marked by the iron and clay. But we will hear Daniel once again: "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they [these kings] shall mingle themselves with the seed of men [the Senate]: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." In the days of what kings? It could be in the days of no others than those designated by iron and clay. Now, when Augustus Cæsar ascended the throne of Rome, we have the beginning of the clay. The Senate—the seed of men, the iron—was not rejected, but was retained in the government. The kings mingled in power with them, but they would not cleave one to the other. The Senate would conspire against the king and slay him. Here we have the perfect fulfillment of the language. So this everlasting kingdom was to be set up some time in the reign of this form of Roman government. This form was maintained from B.C. 64 or thereabout to the final fall of Rome. The good brother makes another mistake. He says: "Now these kings, or their successors, still reign, and are not yet scattered to the four winds and destroyed." Well, I must grant that this is news to me; and I kindly but earnestly ask the brother for the historical proof that even one of the divided kingdoms of Rome, or one split of it, or the successor to such a kingdom, or even the successor to the successor of one, still remains. I have been a tolerably close student at this period of the world's history, and I must confess that I cannot find it. It is much easier to assert a thing than it is to give the historical proof of it. I have heard the above assertion several times, but have so far been unable to substantiate the claim as a fact, and I will be compelled to reject it until I am furnished the proof. But I here challenge the world to find one of these kingdoms yet standing, or even its successor. These kingdoms as they first split off were as follows: The Huns, A.D., 356; the Ostrogoths, A.D., 377; the Visigoths, A.D., 378; the Franks, A.D., 407; the Vandals, A.D., 407; the Suevi, A.D., 407; the Burgundians, A.D., 407; the Heruli, A.D., 470; the Anglo-Saxons, A.D., 476; and the Lombards, A.D., 483. Now these kingdoms are occupied in whole or in part by the following kingdoms—i. e., were in 1870—and the territory of none of them is now occupied by any one kingdom: Roumania, Serbia, Austria, and Turkey each have a part of the kingdom of the Huns; Italy and Austria have that of the Ostrogoths; Spain and France have that of the Visigoths; France, Belgium, Holland, and Germany have that of the Franks; Algeria, Morocco, Tunis, and Tripoli have that of the Vandals; Portugal and Spain have that of the Suevi; France, Italy, and Switzerland have that of the Burgundians; France, Germany, and Switzerland have that of the Heruli; England and France have that of the Anglo-Saxons; Germany and Austria have that of the Lombards. There is no trace of the governments in these, and we conclude that the historian told the truth when he said: "But after a variety of struggles, in which many of them perished in the field and many were carried into slavery, a miserable remnant submitted to the Romans; while others fled to their mountains for freedom or took refuge in the inaccessible corners of the north. There, defended by lakes and rivers, the indignant Barbarians lived until time had ripened the seeds of destruction. Then, rushing forth like an impetuous flood and sweeping everything before them, they overturned the vast fabric of the Roman Empire, the work and wonder of ages, taking vengeance on the murderers of mankind; established on its ruins new governments and new manners; and accomplished the most signal revolution in the history of nations." ("Modern Europe," by Russell and Jones; Vol. I., chapter 1, pages 33, 34.) Now where can you find a succession of government in this? Just as well call the United States "England" as to call any kingdom now extant a part of Rome, or "these kings." Now since Rome—the iron—the iron and clay are all gone (to the four winds, of course), if that kingdom of Dan. 2: 44 has not been set up, then the prophecy is a failure. But Pentecost was the proper time for this work, and Pentecost in Acts 2 is the time when it was done. I am ready to verify every utterance of this if called upon to do so. Brother Poe's trouble seems to be that he on the one hand would make the church and kingdom synonymous. But they are not; yet both were established on Pentecost, the same day. His second objection is:

2. "The kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up was to break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms." This was done. The Stone struck the image on the feet. It struck Constantine, and caused the decay of the empire. The whole thing crumbled down. We must not conclude from the word "consume" that they were to become Christians, for in verse 35 it is said: "And became like the chaff of the summer thrashing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them." So these governments crumbled and passed away. His third objection is:

3. "The kingdom which the God of heaven was to set up was to fill the whole earth and assume universal rule over the whole world." His fourth objection is:

4. "This kingdom was to have no end, but it was to stand forever."

Brother Poe's mistake here is in supposing that the kingdom was to crush these kingdoms as soon as it was set up. But not so; it was but a stone at the first, crushed the image, then became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. Now Jesus is ruling all kingdoms; they may not submit to his rule, it true, but they are under his dominion now. If Brother Poe so desires, I will continue this thought and show plainly in all of its bearings just when and where the kingdom of Dan. 2: 44 was set up, and give many reasons why it could not be otherwise.

Thorp Spring, Tex.

J. W. CHISM.

Walking by Faith.

"For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Cor. 5: 7.) The question naturally arises, how can we walk by faith? In this we want to avoid all mistakes, because God has said, "Be not deceived;" and again he says through Paul: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." (1 Thess. 5: 21.) Besides he says: "Whatsoever is not of faith [the law of faith] is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth? . . . This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law [law of Moses], or by the hearing of faith? . . . As many as are of the works of the law [law of Moses] are under the curse. . . . For, The just shall live by faith." (Gal. 3: 1-11.) The faith of Jesus justifies—yes, the faith we must walk by; to fail to walk by this faith is sin. The only way to walk by this faith is to humbly do its biddings. This faith is a glorious light. (2 Co. 4: 4.) Now, then, read 1 John 1: 7: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Blessed light, blessed thought, justified by it and have fellowship with my brethren, who are also God's children!

Suppose, however, that as a Christian, I begin walking by opinion, doing things not authorized in "the word of faith" (Rom. 10: 8)—say, for instance, it is to put an organ in the assembly to aid in the worship, or meet in conventions, lectureship, etc., to devise ways and raise means to spread the gospel, and go around over the country organizing aid societies, Endeavor societies, with many other modern, up-to-date inventions—what is the result? Peace in Zion, with a prosperous future? No, a thousand times no; but a divided brotherhood, a dark future, with an ocean of sin at my door for having not walked by faith. The faith of Jesus Christ does not authorize any of these, and "whatsoever is not of faith [the faith of Jesus Christ] is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) Any attempt whatever on man's part to improve upon the revealed will of the Lord is an insult to God. To walk by faith is safe; to refuse is sin. Every step (act) of man should be approved in the word of faith. "Prove all things." (1 Thess. 5: 21.) It is right to walk by faith. (2 Cor. 5: 7.) It is sin to walk otherwise, for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) "Abstain from all appearance of evil." (1 Thess. 5: 22.) It is evil to walk otherwise than by faith, since everything not of faith is sin. Therefore, abstain from every step you might make if the word of faith does not provide for it. If the word of faith does not give precept or example for the use of instrumental music in the worship, then it is safe to leave it alone. If it is safe to leave it alone—and all agree that it is—then it is unsafe to have it in the worship. Again, to walk by faith is to walk by the "thing" delivered to the saints. (Jude 3.) This "thing" is evidently the "faith of God" (Rom 3: 3), the "faith of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 2: 16), the "law of faith" (Rom. 3: 27), the "law of the Spirit" (Rom. 8: 2), the faith that justifies (Rom. 5: 1). All we do should be done in the name, by the authority, of Christ, whether by word or deed (Col. 3: 17), because there is but one Lord, Lawgiver, Ruler, Dictator (Eph. 4: 5), who is Christ, the head of the body, the church (Eph. 1: 22, 23). The law of faith thoroughly furnishes the man of God unto all good works. It is the divine power of God which gives unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness. (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17; 2 Pet. 1: 3.) It is the law of liberty, a perfect law. (James 1: 25.) We are commanded to "continue in the faith, . . . and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel." (Col. 1: 23.) "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." (James 2: 12.) "Obedience is better than sacrifice, and stubbornness is as the sin of witchcraft." With all these truths before us, who claim to be Christians, how can we afford to do anything not commanded in the law of faith, the law of liberty? There was a law given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. See diagram below:

Now, read John 1: 17; Eph. 2: 15, 16, and remember the law of Moses was in force until the death of Jesus, and after his death, this side of the cross, grace and truth began to be preached in his name. Now, read Matt. 28: 19; Mark 16: 15, 16; Luke 24: 35-53; and Acts 1 and 2, and see the new order of things. Never before were such utterances made. The book of Acts, then, reveals clearly the law of pardon to all alien sinners, and from Romans to Revelation we find how we as Christians should walk and worship God. Therein the will of our Lord and Savior is fully made known. Hence to go beyond or fall short of doing just as the will (law of faith) prescribes is sin. The wages of sin is death. (Rom. 6.) All unrighteousness is sin. (1 John.) O, God, help us to walk by faith, and be zealous in the work of the Lord, knowing that our labors are not in vain in the Lord. (1 Cor. 15: 58.)

May the Lord's richest blessings rest upon the editors of the Gospel Advocate for their work's sake; and as we enter the work for 1900 let us enter it with renewed love one for another, and for Him who first loved us, ever walking by faith.

Grapevine, Tex.

T. W. PHILLIPS.

Things that Hinder.

"Hinder" means to prevent from moving forward, to check or retard in progress, etc. "Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" (Gal. 5: 7.) Evidently the Galatians were prevented from moving forward in the Christian life. In chapter 3 of this same letter Paul gives additional testimony: "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?" "Bewitch" means to charm, to fascinate, to please to such a degree as to take away the power of resistance. Let us notice some of the things that are bewitching a great many who claim to be Christians.

1. Lack of Bible reading. In this age of the world many are charmed or fascinated into the delusion that they can live the Christian life and never read the Bible. Without faith it is impossible to live a Christian; this no one will deny. But how does faith come? Faith comes "by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." The person who does not read does not hear what God says, and the person who does not hear what God says cannot have faith, and the person without faith cannot please God. It is very evident that no one can live a Christian and not please God. How very many homes claiming to be Christian do we enter and find no Bible, but, instead, novels and illustrated magazines filled with sickening and detestable love stories; the Bible and good religious papers set aside for such trashy, worthless, and ruinous literature! Certainly such homes are bewitched—prevented by such worthless trash from moving forward in the divine life.

2. Many are charmed or fascinated into a false system of worship because it seems to be fashionable. The New Testament speaks of at least three kinds of worship. (1) A vain worship: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15: 8, 9.) (2) Will worship: "Which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body; not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh." (Col. 2: 23.) (3) True worship: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." (John 4: 23, 24.) The characteristics of the true worshippers are "in spirit and in truth." A true worship, then, must be in the spirit of obedience to the things revealed by the truth—word of God.

Surrounded then, as we are, by the bewitching charms and fascinating influences of a vain and will worship, how very careful we should be to, at all times, maintain the true worship and not be hindered from running the divine race by these things!

In many congregations claiming to be Christians, organs and societies, which are only the "doctrines and commandments of men," have more charms or fascinating influence than the entire word of God. What is the matter? They are bewitched. The spell is so strong that it seems to be irresistible. If not irresistible, one thing is true: they will resist those who are worshiping according to God's word, rather than to resist organs, societies, etc., which are and can be nothing but the "doctrines and commandments of men." Brethren, let us run well; let us obey the truth; let us worship in spirit and in truth; for this is the only way that we can successfully resist the beguiling charms and fascinating influences of a vain or will worship.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Hornbeak, Tenn.

Longview Mission.

The Lord's people are responding to my call in aid of this mission. To the present, February 10, Kentucky is in the lead in this good work; my own State (Texas) is next; and Tennessee is third in the list. To the present the list stands: Kentucky, $9.20; Texas, $8.25; Tennessee, $7.40; with small contributions, one each, from Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas. I have the promise of more from Texas brethren, which will put my own State in the lead, which I hope will prove true. Texas ought to respond more liberally for her own work.

One brother from Nashville, Tenn., sends $1, with these remarks:

"Inclosed find $1 to help seat some hall or buy hymn books, while we are working some good missions without either. We carry our home congregation books and meet near a lumber pile, and the owner has consented for us to use plank for seats. We have done much good in this way. I have concluded we do not need furnished pews to worship God, but hoping my contribution may draw some one under the sound of the gospel of Christ, I send on my dollar. Use as you think best."

I give no name, but publish this to correct a wrong impression which may prevail. We have no "home congregation" from which to draw books, singers, and workers for such a mission. If I had the prestige of fifteen or twenty good congregations of true Christian people at my back in this town—as the brother has in Nashville—I would go under the shade of some tree, to a lumber pile, or anywhere else, and expect somebody to hear me. But there is no one here to help—with the town wholly given to sectarianism and terribly prejudiced against God's ways, on account of so many having turned traitor and gone over to the enemy—and it is a hard battle to go into, under the very best circumstances we can arrange. I feel that the hardest battle of my life is now upon me. I had, a thousand times, rather begin in a place where no church of Christ had ever been set in order. I ask the earnest prayers of God's people; and, dear brethren and sisters, if you are not able to donate a nickel or a dime to this work, write me a letter of encouragement, and say: "God bless you and be with you." This will help me some; and then, when you pray, do not forget to ask the Lord to bless me here: I have not asked much, and do not think it would be good for the brethren to send very much—it might spoil us—but I do hope to get enough to fix up some place, in a humble way, where we can get some, at least, to come and hear.

I shall get books at once. I have enough for that, and enough over to secure a few seats. I will go just as far as I can, step by step, and if God desires the mission to succeed, I think he will put it into the hearts of the brethren to send all that is necessary. But, as soon as we can get started, the mission should not only be self-sustaining, but should establish and help others.

Brethren, the matter is before you, do what you think is right in the matter; and with God's blessing I will try to plant the true cause of Christ here once more. May God graciously bless all those who have so nobly and promptly aided me, and those who may yet do so.

JOHN T. POE.

Now.

I leave with God to-morrow's where and how,
And do concern myself but with the now;
That little word, though half the future's length,
Well used, holds twice its meaning and its strength.

Like one blindfolded, groping out his way,
I will not try to touch beyond to-day;
Since all the future is concealed from sight,
I need but strive to make the next step right.

That done, the next; and so on, till I find,
Perchance, some day I am no longer blind,
And, looking up, behold a radiant Friend,
Who says: "Rest now, for you have reached the end."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

After crosses and losses men grow humbler and wiser.—Franklin.

FAITH, FEELING, AND WISDOM.

All these enter into the religious life of persons—that is, a person's faith, his feelings, and his wisdom or judgment must all be brought into exercise in religion. No one can be truly devoted to God or accepted by him, unless his faith, his feelings, and his wisdom be brought into exercise in his service to God. He must first believe in God, "and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." He must believe that God rewards all men "according to the deeds done in the flesh." He must believe that God is the "Creator, Ruler, Preserver of the universe; that he must rule; that he is just, upright, full of mercy and compassion, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin, and that he can by no means clear the guilty." If one so believes in God with a full heart, he will come to put his confidence in him, trust him, love him, and walk in obedience to his will. God does not recognize this belief in him as acceptable faith until it so gains control of the entire being as to show itself in the actions of the body. It is believed that there is no example in the Bible of faith being recognized as accepted until it has so gained control of the believer as to manifest itself in a bodily act. To do this it must more and more control the purposes and feelings of the heart.

Man is a twofold being, composed of flesh and spirit, or heart. His feelings are twofold. The feelings and impulses are twofold—one class, of the flesh; the other, of the spirit. These are by nature contrary the one to the other. The feelings or emotions of the flesh oppose those of the spirit or the heart. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit lusteth against the flesh." These are contrary the one to the other. If this be true, to gratify the emotions or feelings of the flesh is to run counter to the feelings and impulses of the spirit. This is manifest when the conscience hurts. A man gratifies the flesh in a way that his spiritual feelings condemn. This condemnation is manifest in the wounding or hurting of his conscience. When the flesh has the mastery the fleshly feelings control, until by frequent overrunning of the spiritual feelings they become seared and cease to complain. The conscience, then, is seared, ceases to protest against the wrong, and the person is given over to work out the desires of the flesh.

On the other hand, if the spirit asserts its ascendancy over the flesh and holds the flesh in subjugation, the fleshly feelings and emotions more and more cease to assert themselves, and the emotions and desires of the spirit become the ruling power in man. The desires of the inner man are for truth and right. The flesh gets the start and the ascendancy in the growth of man, and the soul would never gain the ascendancy had not Jesus Christ come in "the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh."

What gratifies the desires of the heart frequently is distasteful to the emotions of the flesh. When Abraham offered Isaac the spirit approved, the flesh rebelled. Often in the performance of duties in life this will occur, until by continued obedience the flesh ceases to rebel. Then the flesh is subjugated to the spirit. The discipline of life is to school the flesh into obedience to the spirit. The satisfaction of the soul is felt often when the feelings of the flesh rebel. This was true when Abraham offered Isaac. The spirit with all its feelings was satisfied, despite the rebellion of the fleshly emotions. No one can be a true and accepted servant of God until the spiritual feelings and emotions are satisfied in doing the will of God and the feelings of the flesh have been schooled into subjection. The great error of the past age in religion has been in making the emotions of the flesh the test of religious faith. If the fleshly emotions were aroused on the subject of religion, that was accepted as spiritual approval. This led to a merely emotional religion that ebbed and flowed with the exciting causes. This tended to superstition, and decried intelligent faith in God. This is the outgrowth and helper of the idea of direct spiritual influence, both within and without the church.

The religious world, the more intelligent portion of it at least, is getting away from this substitution of the fleshly feelings in religion, and is running to the extreme that wisdom, human judgment and reason, must control in religion. Human judgment, or reason, or wisdom, as we may call it, has an essential office to perform in religion. To this reason or wisdom the thing to be believed and the testimony on which it rests must be presented, and it must determine upon and accept or reject that proposition. True wisdom accepts the gospel, a false wisdom rejects it. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. Yet in the wisdom of God, man by wisdom cannot know God, cannot by it know the character of God or what would please him. The human faculties decide upon the proposition and testimony presented and believe or disbelieve. God has so given this proposition and testimony that every heart willing to know and do truth will be compelled to accept them. If the heart loves not truth nor God, it will reject them. As wisdom investigates the word and works of God, it strengthens faith. The test of true wisdom is, it accepts the will of God as the perfection of the highest end of all wisdom. It devotes itself to the study of that will, that from it the fullness of wisdom may be enjoyed. God's appointments and revelations are simple, are adapted to persons of simple minds and pure hearts, but they must study them and learn skill in the use of them. God required David should use the simple sling and stones from the brook in the battle, but he must be skilled in their use. We must accept the Scriptures and provisions of God in their simplicity, but we must learn to use them with skill.

Wisdom and feeling both have their place in the service of God. They must not usurp the place of faith; they must not seek to control faith. Rightly used they both will strengthen and invigorate faith, and faith will use them effectually in accomplishing its work.

When feeling becomes a substitute for faith or controls it, it leads to fanaticism and superstition. When wisdom usurps the place of faith or seeks to control it, it leads to presumption and infidelity. As servants of faith they are both helpful, as masters they are hurtful and ruinous. "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," and "we walk by faith, not by sight." The gospel is the wisdom of God for the elevation and salvation of the world. We must walk by faith in the gospel.

D. L.

KNOW THE LORD.

"Many brethren are gratified over the reports in the papers of large numbers of intelligent and conscientious believers leaving the denominations and becoming simply Christians; but their joy would be moderated if they realized that through the dispersion of disciples of Christ there is a movement toward denominationalism which largely neutralizes the one away from it. Here, in a single community, sixty-two brethren have been found, fifty of whom have united with religious organizations which foster and apologize for divisions and are hostile to the plea for union and gospel restoration. While this case may be exceptional, still there is no doubt that a full census of the facts would reveal heavy losses to the cause through this scattering abroad of disciples of Christ. Current reports of gospel success raise expectations of great gain; but when results are summed up, it is found that the rate of gain in the churches of Christ is little in excess of that among the denominations, and not at all commensurate with what the most successful evangelization of the times would lead us to expect." (Christian Standard.)

A departure from the word of the Lord always proves disastrous. The root of this trouble is ignorance. I have never known an intelligent, well-informed disciple to leave the church of Christ to enter some one of the denominations. It is always some one who is ignorant of the law of the Lord. Such persons failing to understand the way of life do not appreciate the superiority of Christianity over denominationalism. The remedy is in adhering strictly to the law of the Lord. The preachers, and especially the evangelists, should declare all the counsel of God. The plan of salvation should be made so plain that none could mistake it. Sensationalism should be abandoned. It is vain to bring simply flesh and blood into the kingdom of God. We are no longer under Judaism, but under Christ. In the days of Abraham simply flesh and blood were brought into covenant relationship with God. "He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant." (Gen. 17: 13.) Hence, in the days of Abraham it was necessary to teach people already in covenant relation with God to "know the Lord." Through the fleshly birthright they enjoyed covenant relation with God. Without knowledge, volition, faith, repentance, or obedience, they enjoyed this blessed state. But Jeremiah, the prophet, teaches us that under Christ it should be so no more. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." (Jer. 31: 31-34.) In perfect harmony with this teaching, we find that when Nicodemus came to Jesus by night, expecting a birthright in his kingdom because he was of the seed of Abraham, Jesus impressed on his mind the truth that he must be born again. Flesh and blood could no longer admit into special favor with God. Kindred ties to Abraham would avail nothing. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.)

In order that people might be born of water and of the Spirit, and that they might know the Lord when the plan of salvation was completed, Jesus said to his chosen twelve: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.) Before men can enter the kingdom of God, they must know the will of the Lord; hence the apostles were commanded to disciple the nations. Through the apostles the same command comes to us. Those who are ignorant of God's law cannot obey it. The commission requires that men be taught before they are baptized. Only believers are to be baptized. Let all preachers preach Jesus as did the apostles, let them preach a full gospel without any compromise, then results will be far different from what they are now. Evangelists are needed who are not afraid to preach boldly faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. Further, those are needed who will teach the people that when they do these things the Lord will add them to the one body, the church, and that they become members of something else in addition to the church of Christ when they unite with some institution unauthorized by the word of God. It is not enough to teach the law of pardon correctly, but we must continue according to "it is written" throughout the Christian life. "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1: 25.) Strict adherence to the word of God is as essential after becoming Christians as it is before. But those who depart from this principle and organize the people into societies unknown to the oracles of God are not fully out of denominationalism themselves. It is no matter of surprise that their converts swap denominations.

In the early days of the Campbells, Stone, Scott, Creath, and a host of others, we do not find those whom they taught at that time the way of life leaving the church of God for some denomination; neither do we find them organizing the people into Endeavor Societies, nor asking them to join some institution for which they could not give a "thus saith the Lord." They were content with the church of God. Their highest ambition was to preach Christ, and him crucified. Strong in Heaven's truth, panoplied in the armor of God, they waged an unceasing warfare on denominationalism, the hired clergy, and whatever they found opposed by the truth. Disciples made by them did not join the denominations. They did not nullify their own teaching by belonging to a denomination themselves. They built on the one foundation—Christ, and him crucified. They built very little wood, hay, and stubble, because they heeded Paul's injunction: "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." Those who obeyed the gospel under their teaching knew when the church was established, how to enter the church, how to live the Christian life, and were satisfied to do all their good works in the church. They would accept nothing as worship for which they could find no authority in the word of God. Hence we find that those who were made disciples through their teaching were very much like the early disciples, who, when they "were scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the word." The same missionary methods would reap glorious results now. Consecrated, intelligent Christians are good missionaries in any field. There is something radically wrong with the scattered disciples who do not teach others the way of life.

J. C. McQUIDDY.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. A. Harding had a good meeting at Paragould, Ark.

Dr. J. S. Ward preached at Foster Street church of Christ on last Lord's day.

Brother Garrett W. McQuiddy's address is changed from Louisville, Ky., to Tracy City, Tenn.

Brother M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky., is in a meeting at Plum Street church of Christ, Detroit, Mich.

Brother W. L. Butler, of Shelbyville, Tenn., was in the office on Saturday. He preached at Thompson's Station on Sunday morning and night.

On February 14, 1900, at the residence of the bride's father, at Donelson Station, Tenn., Mr. Horace H. Timmons and Miss D. Mack Stephenson were married, Brother F. D. Srygley officiating. May peace and happiness attend them all along life's journey.

Sister O. K. Harry, residing at 2303 Park avenue, St. Louis, Mo., wants to know if there are any Christians in St. Louis working and worshipping as Christians worked and worshiped in New Testament times. There should be, and we hope those of this number reading this will call to see her or address her by letter.

EDITORIAL.

Sincerity has a charm that always wins.

Error has many forms, while truth has but one.

Truth, honor, and integrity are jewels worth more than the gold of Klondike.

If all people had more reverence for the word of God and attached less weight to their own opinions, the world would be in a far better spiritual condition.

The successful man is not the one who gains the applause and admiration of the world, not the one who accumulates gold by the millions, but the man who masters himself.

He lives long that lives well, and time misspent is not lived, but lost. Besides, God is better than his promises if he takes from him a long lease and gives him a freehold of a better value.—Fuller.

As soon as we lay ourselves entirely at His feet, we have enough light given us to guide our own steps—as the foot soldier who hears nothing of the councils that determine the course of the great battle he is in hears plainly enough the word of command which he must himself obey.—George Eliot.

"Prejudice" is a word that carries its own condemnation. The word when analyzed means prejudgment, judgment before. Perhaps nothing is so cruel and causes so many heartaches as prejudice. We are so prejudiced against the man that we will not accept the truth he preaches. We have prejudged the man without knowledge or reason, and for some cause—we know not what—we just know that no good can come out of Nazareth. While the man may do much that is noble and good, we are not in any way prepared to give honor to whom honor is due. The first time we met a person, the impression was unfavorable. Ever afterwards we hold the same impression, contending that our first impressions are always correct. While the life may be beautiful, we are in no way prepared to do it justice. How base and mean is prejudice!

The Savior is never displeased with our importunity. "He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." Our loving Heavenly Father delights to bestow blessings upon us. He is grieved that we ask so feebly that he must strain his ears to hear our feeble cries. If the unjust judge would avenge the widow for whom he cared nothing, how much more will a merciful, loving Heavenly Father bless his children whom he loves so tenderly! He is far readier to grant our petitions than we are to petition him. Often he cannot bless us because we are not ready to receive the blessings. The sick child cannot receive nourishment because the stomach is not prepared for it. It would prove a curse. The children of Israel, when they came to Kadesh-barnea, could not go up and inherit the promised land because they were not ready to inherit it. God is always ready to give us heaven, but we are so sinful and wicked that it would not be heaven to us. We must get heaven in us during life. It is a prepared place for a prepared people. God is often displeased with us that we care so little about going home to heaven.

Mr. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," on March 13 proximo will be given absolute control of the Topeka Capital, a leading daily newspaper, for the space of one week. His avowed object is to edit the paper as would the Lord Jesus Christ if he were here running a paper. We are free to say that we are not in sympathy with his object. The Lord Jesus Christ never made any mistakes; Mr. Sheldon will find himself making many, as we all do. Mr. Sheldon is assuming entirely too much superiority for himself. With his aim to give more importance to religious journalism we are pleased. Christians, at least, should give more attention to a religious daily than a secular daily filled with the crimes and sensational trash of the day. Yet thousands of professed Christians read the secular daily who do not read any religious journal at all; and some get the smallest religious paper possible. The press is a great power which should be utilized for good. We give the following sensible utterance from the Christian Standard: "The moment that the Christians of America make up their minds that they will control their own journalism first, and will support secular journalism as a secondary matter, they will have placed themselves in an impregnable position. As it is, while their journalism is made secondary, or even hardly that, and the secular journalism, that betrays them at every critical point, receives unbounded support, so long they will be at the mercy of the baser elements, and will have to see their own principles strike the flag to immorality, corruption, and dishonesty, both social and political."

Below may be read the position of Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, on John 3: 5: "The agent by whose active interference the regeneration of men is accomplished is the Holy Spirit. 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' 'Born of water' is water baptism, and 'born of the Spirit' is regeneration. The former is the outward symbol of the latter. By the one men are initiated into the visible kingdom of God; by the other, into the invisible kingdom. Either may take place without the other. But those who would enter the kingdom, both in its visible and invisible forms, must be 'born of water and of the Spirit.'" We are glad the Doctor frankly admits that "born of water" is water baptism. He then makes a birth of water put us into the visible kingdom and a birth of the Spirit enter us into the invisible kingdom. A man may be in either and not in the other. It is remarkable that a man of so much clearness of thought as Dr. Hoss did not see that he thus made two births and two kingdoms, while Jesus is talking of only one birth and one kingdom. There are two elements that enter into the one birth—water and Spirit. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The difference between Dr. Hoss and the Savior thus appears to be: The Savior makes a birth of water and the Spirit place a man in the kingdom of God, while the learned editor makes a birth of water put him into a kingdom of God and the birth of the Spirit initiate him into a kingdom of God. The Bible knows no such distinction as the visible and invisible kingdom of God. "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.)

When Jesus was on earth he did not force men to receive the truth. While his great, loving heart heaved with infinite compassion for man, yet when he would not receive the truth he turned to those who would. He has always been far readier to bestow blessings than we to receive. His life was one of ceaseless activity that he might redeem us. As he journeyed from Judea to Galilee, growing weary about the sixth hour, he sat down on the curbstone of Jacob's well to rest. His body was subject to weariness as well as ours, but his spirit knew no weariness in doing the will of Him who sent him. His highest ambition and one lofty purpose was to get all to drink of that living water that he came to give them, that they might thirst no more. We may drink the waters that this world gives, and die of thirst; we may feast on the rarest delicacies this world affords, and then die of starvation; the sweetest joys of this world may be ours, and yet we may die of grief; but never a soul has drunk from the fountain of living waters that ever thirsted more, but it was in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

Come unto me, whoever is thirsty; Drink from the fountain flowing for thee—

Fountain of gladness, life everlasting; Forth from the throne 'tis flowing so free.

Come, all ye thirsty; drink ye and live, Jesus the water freely will give. Life everlasting, drink to your soul; Drink of the water, drink and be whole.

Hark to the invitation God gives you; Drink, and ye shall be thirsty no more.

Come, lest ye perish; why are ye waiting?

Come, O ye weary, thirsty, and poor.

Come, whosoever will, to the fountain, Come without money, come ye and drink.

Jesus invites you, why do you tarry? 'Tis but a step from you to the brink.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS

Do not forget our premium offers. Take advantage of them now.

Give us your order for an American Revised Version Reference Bible. We have the following numbers: No. 3750, cloth, round corners, red edges, $1.50; No. 3752, French Morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, $2.75; No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $4; also beautifully printed on "Oxford India Paper," No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $6.25. All of the above have 12 maps each, are printed from bourgeois type (large), and are 8x5 1/2 inches.

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added. It is a beautiful book, the pages clear, and the type everything that could be asked for."

Examine this list of tracts and send us an order:

- Acts of the Apostles, by E. G. Sewell 10c
- Woman's Work in the Church, by G. G. Taylor..... 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by E. A. Elam..... 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by O. A. Carr..... 10c
- Prayer, by H. Pharris..... 10c
- Methods of Work, by James E. Scobey 10c
- Truth Seeking, by D. Lipscomb... 10c
- Christian Unity, by D. Lipscomb.. 10c
- Proper Division of the Word of God, by E. G. Sewell..... 10c
- Walking by Faith, by M. C. Kurfees 5c
- Dalton-Burnett Debate..... 25c
- Hall's Questions Answered, by T. R. Burnett..... 5c
- Hezekiah Jones..... 10c
- Sincerity Seeking the Way to Heaven, by Benjamin Franklin.. 5c
- The Sabbath—Which Day Shall We Observe? by D. Lipscomb... 2c
- Church Organization, by E. G. Sewell 10c
- The New Birth, by J. A. Harding.. 1c
- Pump Reset, by J. M. Kidwill.... 10c
- Grub Ax Upset, by J. M. Kidwill.. 10c
- New Name, by J. M. Kidwill..... 10c
- Justification, by T. W. Brents.... 10c
- The Who and the What of the Disciples, by J. W. Lowber..... 10c
- Review of L. W. Bates, D.D., on Water Baptism, by R. H. Bonham 10c
- Heartfelt Religion, by J. H. Lawson 10c
- Instrumental Music in Public Worship, by E. W. Herndon.... 5c
- Grub Ax Turned, by W. L. Butler.. 10c
- Valid Baptism—A Discussion: A. McGary and T. R. Burnett..... 10c
- Valid Baptism—A debate; Wilmeth-Burnett 10c
- Bible Geology, by I. N. Jones..... 10c
- How to Study the Bible, by J. D. Tant 10c
- Woman's Work in the Church, Taylor's Review of Kerley..... 10c
- Ray-Burnett Debate: a Discussion of the Doctrines and Practices of the Missionary Baptist Church 25c

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
232 North Market street,
Nashville, Tenn.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please tell us the difference between the "ungodly" and the "sinner" that we read of in 1 Pet. 4: 18.

M. P. BAILEY.

Berry, Ala.

It is generally interpreted that the ungodly man is he who claims to be a Christian, but does not live as he should; the sinner, one who makes no pretension to obey God. I know of nothing better. It may be a repetition sometimes used to give emphasis when there is no difference.

A sister asks: "Does Acts 2: 17—'I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy'—teach that women should preach?" The women were expected to preach privately, and they should now. To teach their children and their neighbors the word of God is to preach the gospel. These inspired women did this in primitive times. Notwithstanding they were inspired, we have not a single example of one preaching publicly. This is strong proof they did not so preach. There were but few Christians, laborers were much needed in the vineyard, there were inspired women, but we never heard that one preached publicly. If not then, why should they ever do it?

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain what Paul meant in Col. 2: 1 when he used the word "conflict." When defined by Webster it seems to have several definitions.

T. A. KEELEY.

The marginal reading in some of the Bibles is "fear," or "care." The Revision reads: "I would have you know how greatly I strive for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh." There seems to have been an anxiety in the mind of Paul for those whom he had not seen in the flesh, lest they be not fully taught in the truths revealed to him. He probably wished to visit them and instruct them. There was a conflict in his mind as to what course he had best pursue in the matter.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain through the Gospel Advocate: "Lo, the heavens were opened unto him." (Matt. 3: 16.)

X.

Earlington, Ky.

It is difficult to make that plainer than it is. I do not see the point of difficulty. Mark (1: 10, R. V.) says he saw the heavens "rent asunder." The vault of heaven appears to us as a concave body, and it appeared to open so the Spirit in the form of a dove could pass through it and come to the earth. When it alighted on Jesus and abode with him, I take it, the bodily appearance dissolved and the Spirit entered the body of Jesus and ever remained with him. Through the opened heavens the voice also came, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Brother Lipscomb: In our Bible reading some time ago there was some disagreement on 2 Cor. 9: 15. What is the "unspeakable gift?" Also: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." (Isa. 65: 20.) Please give us a scriptural solution.

H. H. TURNER.

The "unspeakable gift" is Christ, which includes all minor gifts of which he has been telling. (See Rom. 8: 32.) I do not understand the specific meaning of the prophecy referred to. It is a part of prophecies showing a better time would come when they obeyed the Lord, and these promises constitute a part of this better time. What they specifically mean I cannot tell. I am not up in the interpretation of prophecy, and seldom venture to give an interpretation where the scriptures themselves give none. One commentary I have says: "An 'infant of days' means an infant who completes only a few days, short-lived. None shall die without attaining a full old age." He that dieth a hundred years old will be a mere child; the sinner that dieth a hundred years old shall be deemed accursed—that is, he dies so early his death will be regarded a curse. But I do not know when or whether we are to look for a literal fulfillment. It possibly was a figure of the promised blessings under the Messiah's reign. But I do not know or have any definite ideas about it.

Brother Sewell: By request I give two passages which I wish you to harmonize, Matt. 8: 5-13; Luke 7: 1-10; and give me some light in regard to public prayer when the church comes together to have preaching. We have a brother who doesn't practice it, and says he doesn't find where the apostles ever did. Please give all the light you can and you will oblige an honest inquirer.

A. E. HUNT.

San Marcos, Tex.

I have never regarded these two passages as being in conflict. If we regard both passages as speaking of the same individual, which is the general understanding, then still there is no trouble. In Matthew the centurion is represented as though he went and talked to the Savior in person, while Luke represents that he sent the elders of the Jews and told them what he wanted, and they went and saw Jesus and recommended the centurion as worthy; and Jesus went on with them until near the house, when the centurion sent him word that he was not worthy that he should come under his roof, and that he did not feel worthy to go to him, but said: "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." What a man does through others, he does himself, though not present in person. One of the writers tells what the centurion said, without mentioning the elders, by or through whom he approached the Savior; the other explains that feature of it, thus leaving no conflict whatever. Second, as to public prayers, Jesus prayed in public and in private. Paul prayed publicly with the crowd of brethren that went with him to the seashore, and commanded Christian men to "pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting." This command takes in all public assemblies and private occasions; in closets, and every other place where Christians may be. The New Testament is not a liturgy, to tell every particular place where men should pray, but covers all the ground by telling us to pray everywhere and always; and if we obey these commands, we do not need specifications. If we do what we are commanded, it will lead us to pray at preaching and everywhere else.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." (2 Cor. 6: 14.) (1) Is this applicable to the churches of to-day, or is it a special command? If a member of the church marry a person who does not profess Christ and the church withdraw from him, can he come for readmission and retain his unbelieving wife? (2) Is it wrong for a church member to unite with secret societies? The above questions are very aggravating to the church in this State, but all concerned will be subject to your answer. Please answer them for us.

A. H. WILLIAMS.

High Ridge, Ala.

(1) I know of no special commands for one age differing from another. It is applicable in its teachings to all ages. I think the spirit and trend of the scriptures favor the marriage of Christians with Christians. But I know of no law to separate man and wife after marriage, save fornication. The Bible expressly teaches that a believer shall not put away the unbeliever if he will live with the believer. (Read 1 Cor. 7: 1-20.) It may be wrong to marry an unbeliever; but after they are married it is a sin for them to separate, and the church sins greatly that urges them to do so. If the brother marries an unbeliever, then separates from her while she is faithful to him, the church ought to withdraw from him. Dav-sinned in his marriage with Bathsheba, but he was not required to put her away after the marriage was an accomplished fact. If a Christian marries an unbeliever, he has an unbelieving wife and he must treat her as the Scriptures direct such should be treated. (2) I know no reason for objecting to secret societies more than to those not secret. I know of no principle that condemns uniting with a secret society and justifies uniting with one not secret. I have never found a word in the Bible that makes a difference between the two. I think the church of God demands all the time, means, and affections of its members, and that if we will do our duty to and in the church, we will have no time, taste, or means for any other society, secret or otherwise. The best way to manage this is not to try to force them, but to so interest them in the church that they will lose all desire to serve the societies. Show by practice how much better it is than any of the human societies of earth. Reason with them, but show by practice the church is better. When the church is doing nothing to help humanity, then the plea for its superiority is nullified by the facts. Then do not get exasperated, but "be patient toward all men" and "forbear one with another in love."

An Appeal.

Brother McQuiddy: We, a few disciples, five in number, in and around Gainesville, Ark., are trying to build or buy a house to worship in. We have in mind a two-story frame building 16x40 feet, which we think would answer the purpose; this can be bought, we think, for $75 or $80. The Woodmen of the World propose to pay half of this amount for the upper story; still it will require at least $60 to buy and seat the lower floor; of this amount we have $35 promised. I send this to you, hoping that you will publish it, that the brethren may know our wants, especially those in Arkansas. If any want to contribute to the cause at this place, they can send their contributions to Brother A. Beliew or Brother Hardin Buchanan, Gainesville, Ark., who will acknowledge or give receipt for same in the Gospel Advocate.

Gainesville, Ark.

JAMES H. TURK.

At this distance it occurs to us that the five disciples should be able to raise the $60 needed. This would be an average of $12 apiece. If they are not financially able to do this, the disciples contiguous to Gainesville should help them and labor with them to establish the cause of Christ in that place. The disciples near the town should feel it their especial duty to look after the necessities of these brethren. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." We suggest that the brethren near help according to the necessities of the place.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Watch the Little Things.

Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character.

Let the sweet hope that Thou art mine
My life and death attend;
Thy presence through my journey shine,
And crown my journey's end.

—Anne Steele.

Let us dignify the lowest duties by a noble nature. It takes a greater man to do a common thing greatly than to do a great thing greatly.—E. B. Myer.

The best portion of a good man's life is his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love.—Wordsworth.

Do not wait for extraordinary opportunities for good actions, but make use of common situations.—Goethe.

The sweetest type of heaven is home.—J. G. Holland.

Home Reading.

A WORKER IN THE VINEYARD.

Gertie Lee came slowly into the room where her mother was seated reading in her well-worn Bible, with a thoughtful expression on her face.

"Mamma, our Sunday school teacher told us to-day that to be workers in our Master's vineyard we must try each day to make one happy by a kind word or action, or relieve some one in distress. But how can I? You know we live away down in the edge of the city and I have my dear mamma and a pleasant home with my flowers and my books and dear little Dick, my pet canary, and it seems to me as if I could not be happier myself. I have seen no one in these parts that seems to need any one to perform any of the services that my teacher made mention of."

"Well, dear, perhaps you have never had occasion to find out whether there are any unhappy people living around us. As you are so happy yourself, you have never given the subject much serious thought. But we will see before the week is over. Perhaps you will have a chance to be a worker in the vineyard, and not an 'idler in the field,'" remarked Gertie's mamma, a sweet-voiced, refined little woman. And so Gertie did.

One evening, a few days after the above conversation, she was pruning and watering her beautiful flowers that she loved so well, when a richly dressed lady knocked at the door of the little cottage where Gertie lived. Gertie's mamma opened the door.

"I am Mrs. Adams, of Fifth avenue, and have come to see your daughter's flowers."

Mrs. Lee asked the lady to be seated, but she haughtily answered, "No, I wanted to buy some smilax," as she glanced toward the window, where a pot of beautiful smilax trailed almost to the floor. "I wished to buy some smilax," she repeated. "I have hunted the city over for some. I don't see the use of conservatories and nurseries if one cannot have what one wants; but the gardener told me to come here, that your daughter had good success in flower culture, especially smilax." And she reached toward the beautiful, luxuriant vines as if they already belonged to her. "I will give two dollars a vine, and will take it all, if you please."

Gertie did not wait for her mamma to answer.

"No; I cannot. I love my flowers very much. They help to interest me when I am tired and lonesome, and, poor as I am, I will not sell my treasures."

Mrs. Adams' face crimsoned with anger, and she haughtily left the room, trailing her silk skirts over the plain ingrain carpet of the cheery little sitting room, and muttering: "I consider you a very ill-bred child."

Gertie's lips curled and she glanced over at her mamma's kind but thoughtful face.

"I fear you made a mistake in not selling Mrs. Adams your smilax, my dear," said Mrs. Lee.

"A mistake! Mamma, how could it be? She should not think because she is rich that she should have everything she takes a fancy to, even if it be a poor girl's sweet flowers!"

"But, Gertie, the mistake I have reference to lies in a different direction. I refer to Mrs. Adams' crippled child, dear little Eleanor, who has never walked a step in her life. It was she who wanted the smilax."

A sudden shower of tears brightened Gertie's eyes.

"O, mamma! I did not know that. She shall have the flowers, poor child. May I carry them to her now?"

"Do what your conscience dictates, my child."

Gertie lost no time. Away she went with the luxuriant vines, entering the room where the pale, weary girl lay among white pillows. Poor little lame Eleanor! At her couch bloomed the rarest plants, where costly presents were placed about her, where everything that money could buy or pitying love suggest was offered; but what did these all amount to when there was no health or activity? She had taken a fancy that in all the world there was nothing she wanted so much as some long, trailing vines of smilax, with their tiny glossy leaves of dainty freshness, so cool and caressing in their touch. Such was Gertie's offering.

"I have brought the smilax for Eleanor, madam, but not for money, only as a sweet offering of love. She is more than welcome to the vines and any other flower that I have that she may wish."

Mrs. Adams gave Gertie a cool reception. She would have thanked her, but Gertie listened to no thanks, but from Eleanor, who caught her cool hands and clasped them warily. Then, drawing her from down to hers, she pressed her feverish lips against Gertie's red cheek. Gertie promised to come again to see the invalid girl if Mrs. Adams would permit, and the cold-hearted woman of the world consented for her to come if it was Eleanor's wish.

"Mamma, I am so glad to have her come, for she is such a dear good girl; one that our minister has told me about. I want her to come and read and talk to me about that place where I am going soon."

"Well, as you wish, my daughter," said Mrs. Adams as she wiped something akin to tears from her steel gray eyes.

Gertie came the next day, and brought some pure white roses and rosebuds in a little basket she had made of ferns, very dainty and very sweet, just the thing to gladden the eyes of a weary, sick one.

"You are so kind, Gertie," Eleanor said, "and my mamma was cross to you; but she did not mean to be. Poor mamma has no little girl to be a comfort to her; only poor little me, a weak cripple, who is nothing but a care to her!"

"Shall I read to you now?" asked Gertie, opening the Bible.

"O, if you will only read about the mansions of the skies and about laying up treasures where they will be preserved, I will be so happy!"

So Gertie read to her new friend about the beautiful mansions and about the dear Friend of the rich and the poor that said: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me." "All ye that are heavy laden come unto me, and I will give you rest."

Eleanor repeated, and the tears glistened in her eyes: "Gertie, dear Gertie, you have made me so happy, and when I go to those mansions I shall no longer be a cripple, and, Gertie, you will receive a reward for comforting a poor crippled girl in her lonesome moments."

"I have my reward now, dear Eleanor, if I have made you any happier."

And Gertie, leaving a farewell kiss on the pale face, went home to her mamma; and, indeed, she felt her Sunday school teacher's words to be true. She felt as if she could say for once that she had been a "worker in the vineyard, and not an idler in the field."—Amy Alice Hooper, in Exchange.

BEAUTY FOR DISFIGUREMENT.

In Florence one of the treasures of art admired by thousands of visitors is Michael Angelo's representation in marble of the young David. The shepherd boy stands with firm foothold, the stone grasped tightly in his right hand, ready to be sped on its holy errand. When the statue was unveiled, three hundred and fifty years ago, it caused an unparalleled sensation among all lovers of art. The work is, indeed, a marvelous piece of sculpture.

But the strangely winning thing in the story of that statue is that it was the stone's second chance. A sculptor began work on a noble piece of marble, but, lacking skill, he only hacked and marred the block. It was then abandoned as spoiled and worthless and cast aside. For years it lay in a back yard, soiled and blackened, half hidden among the rubbish. At last Angelo saw it and at once perceived its possibilities. Under his skillful hand the stone was cut into the fair and marvelous beauty which appears in the statue of David. In a like manner, when a life has been spoiled by unscrupulous hands, so that it seems as if all were lost, there is One, the great Sculptor, who can take the marred, disfigured block, now lying soiled amid the world's rubbish, and from it carve yet a marvel of beauty.—Selected.

SOUTH AFRICA'S PLAGUES.

South Africa imports hides, wool, and mohair, and the ranchman would revel in riches were it not for the various pests that decimate his flocks and herds. The most deadly one is the rinderpest, a cattle plague, which in the last ten years has been slowly creeping from Central Africa southward, leaving a wake of whitened bones. In traveling through Natal I saw fifty oxen lying dead about a spring, where they had tumbled one over the other, so suddenly had the disease attacked them. It was almost impossible then to get an untinged piece of steak at a restaurant, though the proprietor resented any such charge; and a plethoric German traveler, who called in a loud tone for "roast rinderpest" in the railroad café at De Aar Junction, Cape Colony, had to be picked up in fragments. Dr. Koch and other eminent specialists tried to stop this plague. The country is now reeling from it slowly.

Another pest is the tsetse fly, an insect resembling our common house fly, but three times as large. Its bite will kill a horse, cow, or any other domestic animal in about ten days, but, strange to say, does not affect a wild animal or a human being. A less dangerous, but more troublesome, pest is the white ant, which is about one-quarter of an inch long and ubiquitous in many parts of the country. They live under the ground, and can only be routed by killing the queen, which sometimes reaches the size of one inch in length. This insect is particularly harassing in Rhodesia. At Buluwayo my traveling companion inadvertently left his boots on the floor after turning in at night, and he arose next morning to find the uppers carefully separated from the soles. "Lucky you didn't leave your clothes on the floor," was the hotel keeper's only consolation. These ants will eat through anything but metal, and for that reason much of the building is done with corrugated iron. The anthill is one of the conspicuous landmarks in traveling over South Africa.—Ainslee's Magazine.

THANKSGIVING.

"The eyes the preachers could not school,
By wayside graves are raised,
And lips cry, 'God be pitiful!'
That ne'er said, 'God be praised,'" writes Mrs. Browning. Alas, that the lips so often forget to say, "God be praised," even when their anguished cry of "God be pitiful" has been graciously answered!

Did you ever count up your life's answered prayers? Look back at the times of trouble, when you cried out for help. Some dread fear pressed upon you, some calamity threatened to overwhelm you, and the burden on your heart was too heavy to bear alone. But deliverance did not come in the way you expected—it seldom does. Perhaps the cloud only faded very slowly—so slowly that in your gradually returning cheerfulness you failed to note the time when it wholly disappeared, and so forgot both your prayer and thanksgiving.

Maybe the dread fear vanished in such a natural way that you only wonder you had ever entertained it, were half ashamed of your frightened cry, and concluded that it could have needed no answer. God's angels of deliverance are many, and too often we fail to recognize them. Yet it is true of all of us that "the Lord hath done great things for us," whereof we should be glad.—Forward.

SWEEETNESS OF RELIGIOUS WORK.

Blessed is the man to whom work for Christ is sweetness and delight. His soul is in proper frame; his heart is attuned to divine music. He sees time and eternity in their due relative proportions. He is conscious that life on earth is not forever, and that his Master will reward him according to his works. He is not a timeserver, but a contributor to eternity. He lays hold on eternal life. The good he does sweetens his cup of peace and preserves his soul in life. In helping others he helps himself. He gets something out of life by putting something into life. If you wish to make the water in a cup bubble over the edges, drop in pearls; if you wish your soul to overflow with blessing, drop in good works. You have what you live for, plan for. God satisfies any hungry soul that will partake of his food. To do his will is meat and drink to any devout heart. If you would learn this style of life, set about your studies at once. Become a disciple of Jesus, a learner in his school. He has a crown for every graduate, and rich reward even here for every child of wisdom.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

A boy was leaving home for his first term at college. "There are just two things I want you to remember," said his father, at parting. "First of all, do not be afraid to be yourself, your best self, and to stand up for your sacred convictions, no matter what the standard of your fellows may be. Be a digit, and not a cipher. Then do not hold yourself too cheap. Be chary about following every man that beckons to you. Do not give yourself to the first company that bids for your society. Reserve your friendship for those who are really worthy of it. You are in the serious business of making a life; so do not lightly undertake too many experiments."

Let no man think he is loved by any man when he loves no man.—Epictetus.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEB. 22, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

TAKING THE NAME OF THE LORD IN VAIN.

What is it to take the name of the Lord in vain? "In vain" means to fail of the results or ends sought. To take the name of the Lord in vain is to take that name, and then so act as to fail of the end promised to or sought by those who take it. "Ye shall sow your seed in vain" (Lev. 26: 16) means "ye shall reap no fruit," or fail of the end sought in sowing seed. "Your strength shall be spent in vain" (Lev. 26: 20) means the strength is spent, but the end for which it is spent is not gained. "Remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain." (Prov. 30: 8, 9.) This means he had taken the name of God upon him, claimed to be a servant of God, to act in his name. One acting in the name of God acts for God, as he would act. God would not steal, but hates lying and stealing. So, were he so pinched with poverty as to steal, he would fail to do what God's name bound him to do, and so would take the name of his God in vain. "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15: 9.) The object of worship is to secure the blessing of God. If men teach as doctrine the things commanded by man, they will fail of the blessing from God. That our worship be not in vain, that it may secure the blessing promised by God, all the things taught and practiced must be the commandments of God. When a man takes an oath to tell the truth and forswears himself, he takes the name of the Lord in vain. It means much more than the common vulgar profanity. "Profanity" is the proper name for the common, vulgar use of the name of God. To profane is to use a sacred thing in a common, vulgar manner, or to put a sacred thing to a common use. When the name of God is used in an irreverent and vulgar manner, it is profaned. "Holy and reverend is his name" (Ps. 111: 9), and he who vulgarly uses that name in a light and irreverent manner is guilty of sinful irreverence. But this is different from taking his name in vain. When one swears by the name of God, he gives that name as a pledge that what he tells shall be as true as God would speak truth; he speaks in the name of God. For him to forswear himself, tell things not true, is to fail of the end sought in taking his name. This is to take his name in vain.

When one claims to be a servant of God, he takes his name upon him, and in this obligates and pledges himself to act and live for God, as God would act; he pledges himself to live according to the commandments of God. When he turns aside from this life and fails to live the life he pledged himself to in taking the name of God, he takes that name in vain. When God said, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," he meant that we should not clothe ourselves with his name, or claim to be his servants, and then do things contrary to his will, and do things as his service that he never commanded.

When God appeared before Moses on Sinai and declared his name to Moses, he did not mean that he announced simply the name by which he was known, but he announced his position, character, work—all that he proposed to do or be. What follows shows what it was to declare his name to him: "And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation." All this was embraced in the name of God that was declared to Moses. When one became a servant of God, he pledged himself to conform to and harmonize himself with these characters and purposes of God. To do this would be to honor and glorify his name, would be to act in his name. To refuse to live in accordance with this character and to conform to this will of God, when claiming to be his servant, was to take his name in vain. The end of becoming his servant was to become like him by conforming to his will. To fail to become like him in character through doing these things was to take his name in vain. D. L.

THE NEW BIRTH.

"There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: the same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Jesus in this illustration likens the change that takes place in one becoming a Christian to a birth. He says he "must be born again;" he was once born of his fleshly parents, but he must now be born of the Spirit in order to see or become a citizen of the kingdom of heaven. Nicodemus did not understand, and asks: How can a man, when he is old, enter his mother's womb and be born again? Jesus replies: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." What was born of your fleshly mother is your flesh; it is your spirit that must be born of the Spirit. So this is to be a spiritual birth, as the former one was a fleshly birth. Verse 8, which has been made the ground of much controversy, is but a continuance of the illustration that the new birth affects the unseen spiritual part of man. That which is affected by the Spirit in the birth is the spirit of man, unseen, like the wind that blows.

The essential elements of a birth are a begetting and deliverance. These necessitate a father and a mother. The father begets, imparts to the mother the seed, the life germs, that under favorable conditions are quickened and grow into a new being. The mother's womb furnishes these conditions that nurse the seed into life. The life comes from the father through the seed. The birth of the Spirit involves similar agents and conditions.

There must be a begetting and a bringing forth, or a deliverance, to constitute a birth. God himself, through the Holy Spirit, begets or imparts the spiritual seed. A new life through this seed must be imparted to the heart or soul of the person to be born into the kingdom of God. "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom." It is the seed in which the germinal principle of spiritual life dwells. It must enter into proper conditions to cause it to be quickened into life. A good and honest heart furnishes these conditions. So when the word of God is received into a good and honest heart, it is quickened into life and produces fruit. The word of God is given by the Spirit of God, and in it the Spirit dwells to impart life to the heart into which it is received. "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life. But there are some of you that believe not." (John 6: 63, 64.) The father imparts the seed to the womb of the mother. The seed is impregnated with the life of the father. This life is dormant until it comes into favorable conditions in the mother's womb, when it is quickened and begins to grow into a new being. Now, the word of God is the seed, given by the Holy Spirit and impregnated by the Spirit, that is dormant in the word until it comes into favorable conditions in the heart, when it germinates and produces a new life. The life is in the seed. "The spirit giveth life." (2 Cor. 3: 6.) Paul says: "For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." (1 Cor. 4: 15.) The Holy Spirit in Paul preached the word to the Corinthians; they received it into the heart as the incorruptible seed, and by it they were begotten or made alive. James (1: 18) says: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." Peter says: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 23.) Connect this with what Jesus said to Nicodemus, and it is clear that the Holy Spirit begets by imparting the word of God, the incorruptible seed, to the heart of man, and it germinates and becomes a new spiritual being.

Sometimes it is asked: "What represents the mother in the new birth?" The seed is imparted by the father to the mother. The seed is implanted in the heart of man by the Spirit of God. Then the heart of man that receives the word of God fills the place of the mother in receiving and nourishing the seed into favorable conditions for its germination and growth into a new being. Then, in order that this new spiritual life may be manifested to the world in its character as a new spiritual being, God commanded it should be brought forth of the water in baptism. So the birth is completed, or the deliverance made, in baptism.

Life is not imparted to the child by the deliverance. The life is imparted by the father, quickened by the favorable conditions of the mother. The birth, or deliverance, only passes the preëxistent life into a new and favorable state for its growth and development. So baptism imparts no life; it only delivers the life that has already been developed in a new state and relations suited for its growth.

This representation of the new birth is figurative, but the explanations correspond to the literal facts in conversion as taught elsewhere in the Scriptures.

To receive the word of God into the good and understanding heart is to believe with the heart. The influence of that word in the heart leads to repentance, and then the requirement is: "Be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

The man who complies with these conditions is born of God, is born of water and of the Spirit. He is a child of God, and he is to grow to be a man in Christ Jesus—that is, the principle of life imparted to him through the reception of the word of God into his heart is really a part of the life of God, imparted to him, and it is his duty to cherish that principle of the divine life, to feed it on the sincere milk of the word, that it may grow thereby and transform the whole character of the man into the likeness of God. The child thus grows into the likeness of his Father, and when he attains to the growth that he is able to attain in the flesh he is transferred to a higher state of being in which the transformation begun on earth will be completed and perfected into the perfect likeness of Jesus Christ, our elder brother and the first begotten of our Father, "who is the image of the invisible God." "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," and God will share his blessings and glories with us forever, because we are the sons and daughters of the living God. D. L.

THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

We wish to take a very brief survey of this wonderful book—not, however, for the purpose of attempting a solution of its strange and astonishing figures, but to consider some of the practical lessons that every child of God can gather that will carefully read and study this book.

The first three chapters of the book are taken up in the vision John saw of the Son of God and his exceedingly magnificent appearance, and with the seven letters addressed to those seven churches, opening up to them their exact state and standing before God at the time, and how most of them were to amend their ways, or they would no longer be recognized as churches of God. The heavenly and beautiful description given of the Son of God should inspire every child of God with renewed energy and courage to live faithfully the Christian life, for John in his first letter says: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 2, 3.) If Christians are to be in any wise like this glowing description of the Son of God in their future home prepared for them, it will be grand beyond expression; and yet that is just what is indicated in the above passage by John, and surely such a hope ought to inspire every child of God on earth with renewed determination to run with patience the race that is set before him. When the seven letters are finished, about which we have recently written, another remarkable vision appears to John. In this vision a door was opened in heaven, and then he says: "And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald." (Rev. 4: 2, 3.) Then follows a description of what he saw in that wonderful vision, and those he saw when the door was opened worshiped, praised, and adored him that liveth forever and ever.

John next tells of the "book:" "I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof." (Rev. 5: 1-5.) It is understood, and I presume correctly so, that this book with its seven seals contained or represented, in highly figurative language, the leading events that should occur on this earth from then until the end of time. Then the Lion of the tribe of Judah proceeds to open the book, opening one by one the seven seals. When the first seal was opened he says: "And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer." (Rev. 6: 2.) Commentators pretty generally are agreed that the white horse and its rider represent Christ and his religion, which went forth conquering men and bringing them under the mild and heavenly control of the glorious gospel of Christ, and which will ultimately conquer death and the grave and take all the Lord's people home to live with the Lord for evermore. But in this I am only presenting what is generally conceded, but feel no inclination to present any argument in defense of it. It is, however, as likely to mean that as anything I can think of, and more so; but I do not propose to have any controversy on it.

On the opening of the second seal, a red horse went forth, and to its rider was given the power to take peace from the earth, and that they should slay one another, and a great sword was given him. This certainly has reference to earthly powers and bloody conflicts in which the people of this world would engage who are not in harmony with the great Prince of Peace; but as to whether the figure takes in all peoples and nations of the earth and through all time, or to some particular nation or people and their prince, I do not pretend to say. But one thing is very evident, and that is, that it represents peoples and nations who are not under the divine guidance of the religion of Jesus; for those who are thoroughly under the control of the religion of Jesus, the Prince of Peace, will not engage in any such work. But the wicked, who refuse Christ and will not submit to his teaching, will do these things until time shall end.

At the opening of the third seal one went forth upon a black horse, with a pair of balances in his hand; and John heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts saying: "A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measure of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine." What these represent, I know not, except that some feature of the workings and powers of the kingdoms and nations of this earth and their doings is likely what is intended.

When the fourth seal was opened, he says: "And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth." (Rev. 6: 8.) This rider and horse represent another feature in connection with the conflicts of this world and the end to which they all tend, which is death and ruin, here and hereafter; and such will be the final end of all those that refuse to follow Jesus, the Lord of glory.

At the opening of the next seal a new feature is introduced: "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were; should be fulfilled." (Rev. 6: 9-11.) Whatever else may be connected with this passage, it shows beyond all controversy that those who love the Lord well enough to serve him faithfully and to die for him rather than forsake him are always and infallibly safe, and will wear white robes in the home beyond. This is the one point we want to impress all the time, that those who are in the Lord and faithfully serve him are safe here and hereafter; and this much any one that will read the book of Revelation may understand.

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. 6: 12-17.) This is a very thrilling prophecy, whatever it may be understood to signify or foretell. Some think it a description of the end of the world and the awful consternation it will bring to the wicked; others think it has reference to the terrible crashings and downfall of kingdoms, empires, and nations, and their terrible effect upon the people involved in them. We do not propose to try to tell what it means or when it will be fulfilled or whether already fulfilled. Possibly some of the things have already been fulfilled, and some are yet to be. But one thing is evident, and that is, that whatever events these verses may signify or whensoever fulfilled, the terrible trouble and consternation they bring will be upon the wicked, upon those who disregard the will of God in this life. It may be that the opening of these seals may all have reference to events of different character that will be in a state of fulfillment all along through time and at the same time. If it be true that the white horse and his rider have reference, as is supposed, to Christ and his religion, that will be on hand through all time, and so may the others. But it need not in any wise trouble the faithful child of God as to the fearful things indicated and foretold at the opening of these seals. The children of God will not be involved in them, unless in the matter of the fifth seal, which speaks of martyrdom for the sake of the truth; and even these need not be terrified, as all such are perfectly safe in the hands of God, and will be arrayed in white after death.

The next chapter, the seventh, comes in before the opening of the seventh seal, and presents the sealing of the servants of God. In regard to this sealing I have no theory to present. The chapter, however, as it stands is grand beyond expression to the Lord's people. The four angels that were represented as standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds that they should not blow on the earth, were commanded by another angel having the seal, the living God, not to hurt the earth, nor the sea, nor any tree, until he had sealed the servants of God in their foreheads; and he says there were sealed a hundred and forty-four thousand of all the tribes of Israel, twelve thousand to the tribe. I do not pretend to try to give any explanation of this beyond what the language used expresses. One hundred and forty-four thousand of them were sealed, and that is all I know about it. If I were to express an opinion about it, as many have done, what would that be worth? It would only be an opinion and worth nothing to any one.

John next says: "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." (Rev. 7: 9, 10.) When John was permitted to look upon this great sight, one of the elders said to him: "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." (Rev. 7: 13-17.) This is truly grand, and indicates what is in store for the righteous. The opening of these six seals and the visions connected with them show clearly that no matter what may befall the nations of the earth, and no matter what of upheavals and destructions may come upon the wicked, the Lord will never forget his servants; and whatever is best for them and the cause of truth will be certain to be done. No man ever lost anything that was not for his good, while faithfully serving the Lord.

Now, these are the lessons which I learn from these wonderfully strong and figurative prophetic symbols in the opening of these seals. I have no theory as to the time, place, or people involved; but one thing is certain, all the calamities and ruin involved are upon the wicked. It will be the wicked that will be in such awful straits as to cry for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the face of him that sits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. Another principle is plainly manifested in all these things, and that is that the Lord always has something to do in the great convulsions of nations and of humanity that transpire on earth, and that there cannot be any personal safety for humanity, except in the service of the Lord; but that in his service there is always just the sort of safety that is for the good, the well-being, of their souls.

This ought to be a special encouragement to the people of God to be more earnest and faithful in the Lord's service, as the days go by, and to grow continually stronger in the Lord and in the power of his might. I can see how this view of these prophecies may benefit the righteous, but I do not see how understanding where and when these things will be fulfilled will benefit any one. More anon. E. G. S.

THE BRETHREN IN ARMENIA.

Last week we published the statement of the condition of the disciples in Armenia that were baptized by Brother Asadoor Paul several years ago. It indicates strength of faith and fidelity of purpose to have continued through the terrible war waged upon them by the Turks. Their house was burned, yet through seven years they have continued to meet. Brother Asadoor Paul has been their teacher and helper through this time. He will continue to do what he can. They are poor and not able to help him much; but, as I said last week, I do not think it best to undertake to support him, as I think as important a lesson as they can learn is that of self-help, and not to depend on others.

Still, a little help from this country, with the assurance of our prayers in their behalf, would be encouraging and helpful to him. I would like if the brethren will help in the matter to send him about fifty dollars and the assurance of our prayers for God's blessing to rest upon them. Are there not brethren and sisters enough who would like to help in this matter to furnish this amount at once? It might be repeated again next year. Work of this kind done in a spirit of Christian self-sacrifice will be fruit that will redound to account in the day of the Lord Jesus. D. L.

What Church Do You Belong To?

I am often asked the above question. A Baptist preacher asked me this question not long since. I asked him what church I ought to belong to. Well, he said that the good Lord had so wisely arranged these things that we were at liberty to join the church of our choice, and he was very glad, too, that he had thus arranged those things. I asked him where he had learned that, if he could give me any scriptural authority for joining any one of the various churches we had in our country, and which one he would advise me to join. Well, he said he thought he could prove to me by the Scriptures that the Baptist Church was the church of the New Testament. I told him I would listen attentively, and if he could do that, I would join the Baptist Church at once.

He said: "I will proceed to do it, and I will not only prove it to be the Baptist Church, but I will at the same time prove it is the Missionary Baptist Church."

"All right," said I, "that is still better, for I would of course like to know which one of the Baptist Churches is scriptural and right; for I do not want to make any mistake along this line."

He said that there was a man sent of God whose name was John; that the word "sent" means "missionary" (keep that in your mind); that this same John preached in the wilderness of Judea, saying, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" that all Judea, Jerusalem, and the regions round about Jordan were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins; that by his work he prepared a people for the Lord; that the Lord took these same people whom John, this Missionary Baptist preacher, had prepared, and organized them into a body on the night of the last Supper, and the institution of the Supper was the consummating act in finishing the church; for the Lord said himself that it was finished, and it was finished complete as the Lord said on that night, and of course there could be nothing more added; for when a thing is finished it is complete.

I asked him if he was through.

"Let me sum up a little," said he. "Now what have we?" he asked. "First, John was sent of God; therefore he was a missionary. He preached and baptized; therefore he was a Baptist preacher. Being a missionary, he was, of course, a Missionary Baptist preacher; and all who were baptized of him were of course Missionary Baptists; and the Lord calling those Missionary Baptists together and instituting the Supper, forming them into an organized worshipping capacity, we have the Missionary Baptist Church in the New Testament finished and complete. Now you should be convinced; and I am ready to receive you."

"Well," said I, "that looks pretty and I must congratulate you on the splendid effort you have made, and I do not think any one could have done better, and it is a pity to spoil what you have said; but just please let me investigate that a little and see if we cannot find some flaws in the thing you have set up. In the first place, Moses was sent of God; therefore Moses was a missionary. Abraham was sent of God; therefore Abraham was a missionary. Elisha was sent of God; therefore Elisha was a missionary. Besides, many others were sent of God; therefore we have many missionaries before John, also many since John's day. Besides, Paul and many others baptized many peoples, but

What is Cream of Tartar?

When the juice which is pressed from grapes for wine-making ferments, the acid of the fruit is crystallized and precipitated. This is collected, refined to absolute purity, and ground to a powder. This is cream of tartar.

Fruit acids are among the most wholesome and important constituents of the food of man. They are absolutely requisite to maintain health. In grape cream of tartar there are combined the most useful of leavening agencies and a most healthful food article.

This highly refined acid of the grape, or cream of tartar, is the material from which Royal Baking Powder is made. It is many times more expensive than ingredients used in many baking powders, but being healthful in itself, it adds healthfulness to the food instead of degrading it.

In imitation baking powders poisonous alum is used instead of healthful cream of tartar. Alum powders seriously affect the health.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

were never once called Baptists, neither were the people they baptized ever called Baptists. Again, you said that the Supper was the consummating act of the organization of the church. That puts the church in all its fullness before the death of Christ, and, of course, before his resurrection; therefore, according to Paul, you have a sinful church, for Paul said, 'If Christ be not raised, ye are yet in your sins, and your faith is vain;' you also have a body without the spirit, therefore a dead church; for the 'body without the spirit is dead;' also one without any corner stone, for the chief corner stone was not yet laid. So you see you put your shingles on your house before you lay the foundation—a strange building indeed. Now you let me sum up a little and see the condition of the Missionary Baptist Church which you have set up. (1) It is a sinful church because not cleansed by the blood of Christ. (2) You have a dead church because not quickened by the Spirit. (3) You have a church without a foundation; therefore liable to fall. (4) You have a church in which none but Jews can take membership, because the middle wall of partition was not yet broken down between the Jew and the Gentile; therefore violating Isa. 2: 2. (5) You have a church without the great commission to preach the gospel to every creature; for which Christ did not have at this time all authority in heaven and earth. You see, Christ was not at this time clothed with all authority. (6) You have a church without a tried corner stone. Now, what do we find in your church? Only a few Jews, with no authority to preach to anybody, save Jews; a few whom John has prepared, out of whom Jesus will, when he shall have been clothed with all authority, crowned King of kings, and Lord of lords, set first in the church, after the chief corner stone has been laid, after the blood has been shed, after the resurrection has taken place, and, when the Holy Spirit has come to abide, will quicken and guide them into all truth. W. J. RONX. Stevenson, Ala.

Man Has Sought Out Many Inventions.

Solomon tells us: "That God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." (Eccles. 7: 29.) The truth of this saying of the wise king is being demonstrated at the present day. No stronger proof can be produced than the following "invention" to raise money to pay off a church debt. The following letter, received by a brother, an elder in Bazette congregation, fully explains the "invention." It is published with the hope that many brethren, who are now halting between two opinions, may see how far the Christian Church has departed from the word of God, and cause them to boldly take their stand on the rock of God's eternal truth. Following is the letter, names of persons omitted:

"Corsicana, Texas, February 2, 1900. —Dear sir: The ladies of the First Christian Church intend giving, the latter part of this month, an 'Old-time Fiddler's Contest' here in Corsicana. This contest is given to pay off a church debt, but it will not cost the fiddlers anything to enter the contest. We will be very glad to have you play for us. Each fiddler is to play three tunes of his own selection. We would like such old-time tunes as 'Cotton-eyed Joe,' 'Black-eyed Susan,' 'Buffalo Gals,' and 'Arkansas Traveler;' just anything of this kind. Several prizes will be given—one for the best fiddler, one for the oldest fiddler, and one for the youngest fiddler; one for the tallest fiddler, and one for the shortest fiddler; one for the fiddler who plays 'Black Jack Grove' best; and one for the best left-handed fiddler. There will be five judges to decide who are the winners. Please write as soon as you possibly can and tell us that you will play for us."

Brethren, this letter speaks for itself, and in view of these methods adopted by those who have thus departed from and made "shipwreck of the faith," I ask in the language of Elijah: "How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." (1 Kings 18: 21.) In justice to the brother to whom the foregoing letter was sent I will say that he has neither part nor lot in such methods as those suggested in the letter. He, together with the whole congregation over which he is one of the overseers, is satisfied with what is written in God's word. I will also say in justice to the cause of Christ in Corsicana that there is a noble band of brethren there who "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." They have a neat, comfortable house of worship, situated at the corner of Twelfth street and Confederate avenue, and meet every Lord's day to worship God "in spirit and in truth." All true soldiers of the cross of Christ will find a hearty welcome awaiting them from these brethren.

WILLIAM M. JORDAN.

Bazette, Tex.

For Dyspepsia,

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. H. Andrews, late of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "A wonderful remedy which gave me most gratifying results in the worst forms of dyspepsia."

"Experience is the Best Teacher."

We must be willing to learn from the experience of other people. Every testimonial in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla is the voice of experience to you, and it is your duty, if your blood is impure and your health failing, to take this medicine. You have every reason to expect that it will do for you what it has done for others. It is the best medicine money can buy.

HOOD'S PILLS are nonirritating, mild, effective.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue The BELL CO., Philadelphia O.

Write to us for any good book or tract published, and, if we haven't it in stock, we will endeavor to get it for you.

"Example is Better Than Precept."

It is not what we say, but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story. Thousands of testimonials are examples of what Hood's has done for others, and what it will do for you.

Scrofula—"Running scrofula sores made me shunned by neighbors. Medical treatment failed. A relative urged me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Did so and in few months the sores completely healed." Mrs. J. M. HATCH, Etna, N. H.

Inflammatory Rheumatism—"Two attacks of the grip left me with inflammatory rheumatism. Am 89 years old, but Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me and I can climb stairs and walk anywhere." J. LOVELAND, 373 Fargo Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Brown-Boaz Debate.

On Tuesday after third Lord's day in November, W. T. Boaz (Christian) met L. Y. Brown (Baptist) in debate, at Pilot Oak, Ky.

Two propositions were discussed. Brown affirmed for the first two days: "The believer has salvation (or remission of sins) before baptism." On the third day Boaz took the lead, and for two days affirmed: "Baptism to a believing penitent is one of the conditions of pardon from past sins."

The debate was well attended throughout the entire discussion and everything passed off pleasantly to all concerned. I can add, without reserve, that I have never seen debaters conduct themselves more gentlemanly than these did. Elder T. F. Moore moderated for Brown, while the writer acted in a like capacity for Boaz.

I cannot give more than a brief notice of what was said by each. Brother Brown started off affirming that the believer has salvation, and based a number of arguments on such scriptures as contain faith coupled with salvation. One very amusing thing was an argument he made on Mark 16: 16. When Brother Boaz turned the argument against him he turned infidel on his own witness, saying he was not sure Mark 16: 16 was genuine. Brother Boaz asked him if prayer was essential to salvation; to which he answered, "Yes." Then Brother Boaz asked: "On which side of faith does it come?" This he would not answer, for it was clearly pointed out to him by his opponent that if it comes before faith he need not expect it to be answered (James 1: 7), and if it comes after faith, then the sinner was not pardoned at faith, but when he prayed. Brother Brown saw how utterly impossible it was to answer this, hence he remained discreetly silent. Brother Brown, like nearly all Baptist preachers I have heard in debate, could not be induced to define his proposition, and would never tell whether he had received John's baptism or Christ's. On the third day of the debate, Brother Boaz began his affirmation by clearly defining each term, so no one could be mistaken as to the point at issue. Space would forbid making mention of all the excellent arguments produced by him in support of his position, and which stand yet unanswered and will ever do so; for they were nothing less than the truth of God wielded in force. He showed that the church was founded on the Rock, and since it was the fullness of Christ, it covered all the Rock, and no man could build on the Rock unless he was in the church. (Eph. 1: 23.) But no man could be in the church without baptism, hence could not be on Christ without it. He also showed the church to be the purchased possession, and that we are saved by being in it, and that we get into it by being baptized. Brother Boaz is a young man, but he is a power for the truth against error. There were eight or nine Baptist preachers present, while we had three beardless boys—viz., Boaz, Colley, and the writer.

It is our sincere prayer that many were turned to the one consecrated altar, where the pure, enlightened adoration of hearts may shine forth with heavenly brightness; and that men will no longer seek to encompass life's greatest problem from the unholy practices of sectarians, which cluster like barnacles around these man-made shrines.

Cades, Tenn. A. P. JOHNSON.

Enthusiasm in God's Work.

Many people seem to think that enthusiasm and religion should not go together. As soon as you speak about enthusiasm about God's work they call it fanaticism. Why? There is more excitement in the saloons of New York in one night than in all the churches of the city in twelve years. Let stocks go down five points. What excitement there is down town! Or let one newspaper beat another on some important news from Cuba. There is plenty of excitement in the office of the paper that got left. The only thing we are told we must not get excited or enthusiastic about is religion. Why, often a single man is worth ten thousand men because he has enthusiasm. "Phil." Sheridan was worth ten thousand men any day. Some names alone can inspire thousands. I didn't like everything about Garibaldi, but I did like his enthusiasm. Some years ago in this city there was a fire, and they thought that every one was saved until a little girl was seen at a window. A fireman started up the ladder, but when he had got halfway up, the heat was so intense that his courage failed him, and he wavered. Then some one in the crowd called out, "Cheer him!" and they cheered him till they were hoarse. It gave him fresh courage, and the child was saved. That shows what enthusiasm can do. Even if you cannot do the work yourself, you can cheer the others.—D. L. Moody.

PIMPLES on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,

Atlanta, Georgia.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Quality vs. Price.

A cheaply made sewing-machine is dear at any price, because faulty in action, liable to break and difficult to operate. A labor-saving machine for woman's use should be the best.

IT IS TRUEST ECONOMY TO GET THE BEST.

Sold on Instalments. You can try one Free. Old machines taken in exchange.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

The W. V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,

Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale
and Retail...

LUMBER

Rough
and Dressed.

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence
Solicited.

Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10

VOICE OF PRAISE.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75

WORDS OF TRUTH.

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,

232 N. Market Street,

Nashville, Tennessee.

JOS. H. THOMPSON, Pres. W. W. BERRY, Vice Pres. HENRY C. HENSLEY, Gen. Mgr. S. H. ORR, Sec.

NASHVILLE TRUST CO.

CAPITAL, $350,000.

Acts as Administrator, Executor, Trustee, Assignee, Receiver, Agent, and in any fiduciary capacity. Wills received for and kept safely without charge. Boxes for rent in our giant fire and burglar proof vaults.

"SAVINGS DEPARTMENT."

As a proper and legitimate function of our business, deposits will be received and interest allowed thereon, subject to the rules, regulations, and conditions governing this department. When desired, TIME DEPOSIT CERTIFICATES may be issued, maturing at a fixed date, at such rate of interest, and in such sums, as may be agreed upon. NO DEPOSITS RECEIVED SUBJECT TO CHECK.

311 N. CHERRY ST., VANDERBILT BUILDING.

Headache

Biliousness, sour stomach, constipation and all liver ills are cured by

Hood's Pills

The non-irritating cathartic. Price 25 cents of all druggists or by mail of C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

A Golden Opportunity.

"Four hundred American farmers and merchants sailed a few days since for Cuba, on the steamer Yarmouth. This is said to be the largest number of colonists which has yet sailed for the island with the intention of making a permanent American settlement there. The colony is to be located near the port of Nuevitas, in the province of Puerto Principe. The tract consists of fifty-one thousand acres of virgin forest. Most of the emigrants go from New York and the New England States, but States as far distant as Florida and the Dakotas are represented." (Illustrated Youth and Age.)

Here is a door wide open. Who will enter? Will not one or two young brethren prepare to go at once to work among these colonists? I have no doubt there are some Christians among them. They will be subject to great temptations and will probably fall away. You are needed there to gather the Lord's people together. You will find souls in that colony to rise up and call you blessed and to thank God for your coming. They have gone there to stay. They will come in contact with the Cubans, will learn their language, learn their ways, and of necessity will have an influence over them. They should be missionaries to this people. You can make them so.

Without being told, I feel certain that these four hundred colonists alone, to say nothing of others that are going, will be the occasion of a number of saloons springing up in that country. The very ship that carried them probably carried the whisky to start them. They will be among the first buildings that go up. Already, civilized America has planted four hundred and thirty in the midst of the Philippines for the two that existed there before the war with Spain. For the love of greed and worldly gain man is on the alert. Much more, from the love of God should we be ready and watching to step in when an opportunity affords.

"But—but I—I don't know so well about it. I have just finished my education and am now called to serve a church that is one of the best in all the country. I am filling the pulpit where some of our greatest men have preached; and, secretly, down in my own heart, though I do not wish to say so right out, they pay me $1,000 a year. Am I to disregard my ability that demands such pay and put aside all my schooling to go and work among the pioneers? And, then, everybody or just anybody cannot fill the place here where I am, anyway; while there are plenty of the common sort—the mountain preachers, for example—that can go to these outposts. My conscience hurts me a little, it is true, but I will ease it off a little by preaching a rousing sermon on missions once or twice a year, and we will take up an offering and send to somebody."

Now, brother, I have struck you just about right. I know it. I have been there myself. All young men in like circumstances are tempted about alike. The devil would persuade you to stay at home and "stir up the churches" or somebody; but the Lord says we must go ourselves, and if you really wish to stir up the churches to more zeal and good works, your going is the best way to do it. Cuba stands open, ready and waiting for you. It is your duty. You will find a joy in it with hardships. Your example will prompt others. When you are in your grave your works will follow you. If money is what you are considering, you might as well give yourself up to it at once and start a saloon; there is money in that. But let us consider our calling, brother. It is one in which we must suffer for the glory that is set before us. We must expect poverty and the bearing of hardships. Jesus has not deceived us, but has plainly told us as much. You may be so poor that men will rebuff you; you may not have clothes at all times to keep you warm; you may be embarrassed often for money; but these things only become stepping-stones to a higher life, and open doors to those who are in like circumstances. Men for only temporal ends suffer cold, hunger, and separation from friends; they eat stale bread, sleep in wet clothes and upon the ground, and sometimes do not see home for years. Much more should we, for that eternal weight of glory, be willing to cheerfully bear what the Lord may see fit to lay upon us.

J. M. M'CALEB.

Sounding Out the Word.

Last year in my work I tried to stir up an interest among the brethren to sound out the word in new fields. I think I did good in this work. As a result at least six have undertaken to plant the cause of Christ in new fields. One brother whom I met in Oklahoma last July now writes me to come to Western Arkansas for one meeting, and maybe three meetings, at new points. I will be in Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas from May 1 to July 15. Brother J. S. Dunn (my brother in the flesh also) is to be with me. We intend holding about twelve meetings, six each. If we are wanted in Texas, Arkansas, or Oklahoma in meetings, parties can write me at Murfreesboro and I will arrange accordingly. Usually when I go to a new place in summer or autumn for a meeting I am wanted to hold others, then I have engagements ahead and cannot. If parties will write me in advance, I can map out my programme so as to hold meetings I otherwise fail to hold.

During Christmas week I was with the church at Boston, Williamson, County, Tenn., and tried to stir up the church to sound out the word. As a result the church has arranged to use a preacher one month and do mission work at some point where the gospel has not been preached. Any church can hold at least one meeting a year in addition to the home meeting. Let us all endeavor to do more for Christ this year than ever before. Let us demonstrate the Lord's way by doing the work for Christ. Practice is better than theory without practice.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Murfreesboro, Tenn.

A New Paper.

The Stumbling Block of the New Century will be devoted to the religion of Christ as taught in the first century by Christ and his apostles. Fifty cents per year.—J. R. Biggs, editor, Ocala, Fla.

BLMYER BELL'S BELL
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE,
LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

Young-Williams Debate.

This debate was held at Crafton, Wise County, Tex., between Brother A. W. Young, editor of the Christian Preacher, and J. K. P. Williams, field editor of the Baptist Flag, who resides at Sherman, Tex. It began on January 22, and lasted five days.

The general church question was discussed, each affirming that the church with which he stood identified was scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice.

Brother Young led out in the affirmative for the first two days and a half, presenting arguments that were unanswerable by any man. He showed that the church of God originated in Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after the resurrection, and the church had salvation in it, and those who obeyed the gospel on that day were added to the church. He introduced many passages of scripture to show that it was scriptural in doctrine and practice. Brother Young asked Elder Williams if there was any grace in the Baptist Church, and, since he claimed that he was saved by the grace of God, if he was saved before he got to the Baptist Church. To which Elder Williams replied, "Yes." Brother Young then said: "Since you were saved by the grace of God before you entered into the Baptist Church we conclude therefore that there is no grace of God in the Baptist Church." With this position Elder Williams told him that he was right in saying that a man doesn't fall from grace when he falls from the Baptist Church, that he falls back into the grace he left when he went into the Baptist Church.

Elder Williams is an able debater of Baptist doctrine, and well known in Texas as a champion debater. The only trouble is that he had to fight the truth with error. The Christian preachers that attended the debate were W. P. Skaggs, J. T. Hunsaker, and the writer. May the Lord spare Brother Young many years to battle for the truth. R. F. WHITAKER.

To Cotton Ginners.

The past ginning season again demonstrated the incomparable superiority of the American Cotton Company's Roundlap bale. Not only were farmers benefited who had their cotton put up in Roundlap bales, but even the patrons of old-style gins profited by the presence of Roundlap competition.

Although last year the American Cotton Company largely increased the number of its presses in the South—installing all that it was able to build—the demand in New England and abroad for cotton baled by this process greatly exceeded the supply. The company is preparing this year to add largely to the number of its presses. The company's works are running day and night building presses, which will be leased to responsible ginners, who own or are prepared to build modern ginhouses in good cotton districts, on a rental which is ultimately repaid by the cotton buyer in the premium for cotton in Roundlap bales.

Information concerning leases will be supplied by Mr. T. F. Hutchinson, No. 32 Porter Building, Memphis, Tenn. THE AMERICAN COTTON COMPANY.

Letter heads, note heads, billheads, statements, envelopes, etc., printed in best styles on short notice. Write to us for prices and samples.

The man who carries the burdens of life gracefully grows to be strong with both God and man.

$100 a Month and Expenses This Winter.

We want a good man or woman in every district who is honest, sober, and industrious, to engage with us for 1900. We give $100 a month and expenses for right party selling our Quaker Bath Cabinet and appointing agents in unoccupied territory. No experience is necessary. No trade to learn. We furnish everything.

This wonderful Cabinet is needed for bathing purposes in every home. It opens the pores, sweats out the poisons that cause disease, and provides at home all the cleansing, purifying, and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish and Medicated Vapor Baths. A regular Hot Springs at home. Cures a bad cold in one night. A good position to those who mention this paper and write us at once, giving age and references. The World Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O.

Young people, look into those eyes, listen to that dear voice, and notice the feeling of even a touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand. Make much of it while yet you have the most precious of all good gifts—a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes, the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life you may have friends—fond, dear friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and tenderness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world for the deep, sweet security I felt when of an evening, resting in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender, untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep, never her kiss of peace at night. Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the cold churchyard, yet her voice still whispers from the grave, and her eye watches over me as I visit spots long since hallowed by her memory.—Lord Macaulay.

Write to us for any good book or tract published, and, if we haven't it in stock, we will endeavor to get it for you.

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

This need never be asked if you plant Peter Henderson & Co.'s seeds, as they are the acknowledged standard of excellence in both hemispheres. Our 1900 Catalogue of Everything for the Garden is a 190-page book, 9x11 inches, containing over 700 engravings and 6 superb colored plates of Seeds and Plants—a perfect mine of information on garden topics.

To trace advertising, and give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following unusually liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 10 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent "Harvest" Collection of seeds, containing one packet each of New Large-flowering Sweet Peas, New Giant Pansy, New Giant Comet Asters, White Plume Celery, French Breakfast Radish and New Freedom Tomato, in a red envelope, which when emptied and returned will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. N. Y.

General News.

The House Committee on Military Affairs has completed the army appropriation bill. It carries $111,700,364.

In Russia the Czar has consented to the importation of coal, exclusively for the use of the Russian railways, free of duty until September 1, 1900.

The total British casualty returns up to February 14 were: Officers killed, 152; wounded, 380; missing, 112. Men killed, 1,477; wounded, 5,050; missing, 2,781. Other fatalities reported, 563. Grand total, 10,505.

The Tennessee, Holston, French Broad, Little Tennessee, and Pigeon Rivers are out of the banks. The water is twelve feet above low water and rising. Thousands of logs are coming out of the mountains in rafts.

Our weather bureau service is to be extended by the establishment of observatories in all Mexican gulf ports between Tampico and Progreso. They will be under the charge of the weather officials at Galveston, Tex.

General Ludlow, recently arrived in Washington from Cuba, says: "Havana is one of the best regulated cities in the world to-day. I will not draw any invidious comparisons, but there is no city in the United States that can beat it."

In the exportation of cereals, the Gulf ports have made great gains of late years. In wheat exportation New York is still first, but the shipments are declining, while Galveston, Tex., is second, with shipments rapidly increasing.

The war in Africa progresses without decisive action. The latest reports say that the British troops have reached Kimberley, and indications seem to point toward their following up this achievement with further material progress.

The Superintendent of the White Pass and Yukon Railroad took the snowfall at various points along the line of the railroad for December, with the following results: Glacier, 90 1/2 inches; White Pass, 55 inches; Fraser, 42 1/2 inches; Log Cabin, 74 1/2 inches.

In Germany la grippe is prevalent. The physicians assert that at present there are more than eighty thousand persons in Berlin suffering from the malady, although relatively few cases prove fatal or very serious. The American Ambassador is among the victims.

The Secretary of the Interior has transmitted to the House of Representatives a report of the disbursements for agricultural colleges for the year ending June 30, 1900. For the following States $25,000 each is disbursed: Tennessee, Kentucky, and Alabama.

It is said that fully ten thousand mules have been shipped to South Africa from Texas since the war commenced. The British Government has paid nearly $500,000 for these animals. Buying is still going on under the direction of Captain Smith, an expert veterinarian of the British army.

The War Department has just acquired land at Cape Henry, upon which a great fort will be built, to command the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, and thus protect the cities of Washington, Baltimore, and others. This is part of the system of coast defenses upon which the War Department is engaged.

A Boston cemetery company has decided to exclude automobiles from its burying ground lest the horseless vehicles should cause runaways, which might create havoc among tombstones and monuments. There are many costly monuments in the cemetery, and as these are insured by the company a runaway accident might result in serious loss.

The Mobile cotton market has kept pace with the general upward movement of cotton values. A lot of high-grade cotton, good middling, changed hands on February 13 at 9 cents to English buyers, the highest price obtained this season in the South. Liverpool is 2 cents above local spot prices, which fact probably enables the English buyers to get even at 9 cents.

An addition to the known mineral treasures of the frosty north is made by the recent discovery of gold deposits in Siberia, on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Okhotsk. The Russian Government has taken charge of the new gold fields, and is preparing to lease them to parties who wish to try their fortune in developing the deposits. A fresh impulse is thus given to the opening up of Siberia.

The Secretary of the Navy has sent to the Senate a statement of the number of vessels under construction and of naval officers available. The statement was made in response to a resolution of inquiry. It shows that there are sixty-one vessels of all classes now building and that with these vessels in commission they, together with those now in use, would require 3,000 officers, whereas there are now only 1,084 officers. There are 14,000 men in the navy.

Hon. Joseph Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works in Canada, is strongly opposed to the sending of any more Canadians to South Africa. Referring to the proposal to send out 10,000 men, his paper, La Patrie, says: "The country has already spent nearly $2,000,000 to send two contingents to Africa. These figures show what war is and what will be our responsibility. If we are to take part in all the conflicts of Europe, instead of developing our resources and improving our country, we will spend our money in armaments for wars in which Canada has no direct interest."

A statement was made by the War Department that the total export of coffee from the island of Puerto Rico from the date of American occupation to November 30, 1899, was 53,243,025 pounds, valued at $6,139,955. Of the amount exported during the period mentioned France received 21,501,479 pounds, valued at $2,583,683; Spain, 8,102,695 pounds, valued at $960,729; Italy, 5,727,557 pounds, valued at $662,781; the United States received 2,608,642 pounds, valued at $269,339. The annual average export of coffee during the years 1887-1891 was 40,349,000 pounds, valued at $4,945,000.

Oscar S. Straus, United States Minister to Turkey, has just arrived in New York on leave of absence. When Mr. Straus reached his post a year and a half ago the United States and the Sublime Porte had differences of opinion on a number of weighty questions. Mr. Straus has, it is said, solved these problems satisfactorily. The most important matter placed in the hands of Minister Straus was the adjustment of the indemnity claims against Turkey incurred in 1895, when a large amount of American missionary property was destroyed by Turkish religious fanatics during the terrible disorders in Armenia.

Severe cold weather accompanied by high gales prevailed in England.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

COPYRIGHT 1898, DR. KILMER, BOSTON.

Do You Realize the Danger You are In?

Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

The mild and the extraordinary effect of the world-famous kidney remedy, Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. A trial will convince any one, and you may have a sample bottle for the asking.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root, are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, smarting or irritation in passing, brick dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, or sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with marked success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghams-ton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Do not make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root.

Trains were snowed up in all directions, street car lines blocked up, telegraph and telephone wires down, delaying communication in all parts. There have been a great many accidents, due to falling chimneys and roof slates, and from similar causes. Mail vans and people traveling by foot in country districts are reported missing, and several persons have been found frozen to death in exposed places. The streets of London are in a fearful condition from the snow and sleet, and many pedestrians have sustained fractured limbs from falling on the icy pavements.

The weighing of mail in the territory of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway and the Louisville and Nashville Railroad began on February 20, and will continue for thirty-five days. The United States mail handled by the various railway systems is weighed every four years to strike an average, that the pay of the roads may be governed according to the average number of pounds of mail matter they carry. Orders for weighing the mail were received some time ago, as announced in the Nashville American, but the official date was only received last week. The roads have had a special form printed showing just where each pouch is taken on the different trains, and at the point it is put off. The weighing is carried on by representatives of both the United States Government and the different roads.

$18 to $35 WEEKLY | MEN and WOMEN and EXPENSES | At Home or Travelling.

Mr. Smith, of Ind., made $927.50 first 6 months. Albert Hill, of N. J., $238 first month. Mr. Muncy, of Texas, $12.50 first 2 hours. Carrie Williams, clerk, $144 in 6 weeks. Mrs. Hitchcock, $222, besides housekeeping. Lida Kennedy, $84 while teaching. LET US START YOU!—No experience needed. Our Agents made over $47,000.00 last month supplying the enormous demand for our famous Quaker Bath Cabinet, and appointing agents. Wonderful seller. Everybody buys—business men, families and physicians. No scheme, fraud or fake methods. Write today for our Proposition, New Plan, etc. Free. World Mfg. Co., 47 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O. [We recommend above firm as reliable.—Editor.]

MOZLEYS' LEMON ELIXIR,"A Pleasant Lemon Tonic,

prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, cathartics, aromatic stimulants. Sold by druggist; 50-cent and $1 bottles.

For biliousness and constipation.

For indigestion and foul stomach.

For sick and nervous headaches.

For palpitation and heart failure take Lemon Elixir.

For sleeplessness and nervous prostration.

For loss of appetite and debility.

For fevers, malaria, and chills, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir. Lemon Elixir will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases, all of which arise from a torpid or diseased liver, stomach, or kidneys.

50-cent and $1 bottles at druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I have just taken the last of two bottles of Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for nervous headache, indigestion, with diseased liver and kidneys. The Elixir cured me. I found it the greatest medicine I ever used.

J. H. MENNICH, Attorney.

1225 F street, Washington, D. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

W. A. James, Bell Station, Ala., writes: I have suffered greatly from indigestion or dyspepsia. One bottle of Lemon Elixir did me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken.

Mozley's Lemon Hot Drops.

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25 cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville Tenn.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame. RAPHAEL CO.

Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, is a book that will be read with interest by all true Christians. The price is $1.50 by mail, postpaid.

Z. T. Beachboard.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

Brother Z. T. Beachboard was born at Fairfield, Tenn., December 22, 1847; obeyed the gospel at seventeen years of age; married Miss Ellza Lynch, January 1, 1874; and died at Bellbuckle, Tenn., November 23, 1899.

More than twenty years ago Brother and Sister Beachboard associated themselves with the Cross Roads Church, which is two and a half miles west of Bellbuckle, while they lived three miles east of that place. For three or four years he brought his wife and little children over this long, rough road, to meet with the disciples of Jesus and worship the God he loved. They were among the most regular attendants on the Lord's day meetings. Brother Beachboard's Christian worth and Bible study gave him a prominent place in the Bible class and the worship. He was a meek man in the true sense of that word: "Not easily provoked; submissive to the divine will." A quiet dignity pervaded his life.

These elements of character were in nowise assumed, but were prominent in his home, in his business, and in his public work and worship in the church. Since his death reference has been made to the meetings over which he presided as being among the most pleasant and profitable the congregation ever had.

The thought of establishing the work and worship of those claiming to be only Christians, at Bellbuckle, Tenn., originated with Brother and Sister Beachboard. A more inviting place for such work could not have been found. Only one member lived immediately in the town. His life and influence were discouraging to the work. Only a few members lived within less than about three miles of the place. Three families, aggregating seven members of the church, formed the nucleus of the congregation, under Brother Beachboard's leadership.

A small upper room was rented and occupied a year. Often only three or four were present at the Lord's day meetings. Brother L. R. Sewell held a meeting in this little room, with one addition. A larger hall, the second floor of one of the stores, was secured for the next year. The regular attendance continued small. Brother and Sister Beachboard and their little children were the only ones present on one Lord's day. The songs, Bible reading, prayers, and the Lord's Supper were engaged in with their usual zeal and devotion. In referring to this afterwards, Brother Beachboard said: "We intend to worship God somewhere every Lord's day and we determined to continue it here." They were never alone in the public worship again. Renewed efforts were put forth by them and others, resulting in success.

These meetings were held just between large, flourishing Methodist and Baptist churches, and were thoughtlessly ridiculed by some. This, with some of our own members being ashamed of so small a beginning, discouraged the work. But the faithful few persisted. A lot was bought on which stood a small dwelling. This house was used for the meetings more than a year, being often crowded with worshipers. Then a house costing about fifteen hundred dollars was built. Two hundred and eighteen names are on the subscription list as contributors to this building. Brother and Sister Beachboard gave one hundred dollars besides much help others

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.NOW READY

Handsomely Bound in Cloth
Sent, Postpaid, to Any Address
$1.00

Facts, Faith, and Fire

A NEW BOOK BY

B. F. HAYNES, Editor of Zion's Outlook

ORDER AT ONCE OF

Zion's Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.

Agents
Wanted
Everywhere
Liberal
Commissions Allowed

wise, though they had a large family dependent on their labors.

Brothers J. M. Kidwill, E. A. Elam, and J. A. Harding were among the first to hold meetings. A zealous, working church was built up. Peace, devotion, and brotherly love reigned supreme in the congregation until some, inexperienced in church work, having more zeal than knowledge and faith, broke the spell of harmony and good will, and finally resulted in Brother Beachboard and almost all the original members withdrawing from the congregation. This was brought about by efforts of a few men at organization, that resulted, as he thought, in an unscriptural "board of church officers," elected in an unfair and unjust way, taking arbitrary control of the church. Brother Beachboard's Christian character was exhibited in his quiet but firm protest against such work until it went beyond the control of God's word.

It is worthy of consideration that after this, though the "board of church officers" were men of some wealth and worldly influence, though they employed a "pastor" who devoted his whole time to the work, publicly and privately, with zeal and earnestness for about two years, the interest waned to such an extent that when the "pastor" left the work had declined until the Lord's day meetings were "sometimes forsaken."

Brother Beachboard said, a few days before he died, that he had prayed more constantly and fervently over this than anything that had ever come up in his life. He could well realize the force of the word of the Lord to Samuel, saying: "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." He had no word of censure or reproach even for those who he thought had treated him with the greatest discourtesy.

For a number of years Brother Beachboard received and paid out the contribution, making yearly, itemized reports to the church. One Lord's day a brother, who seemed to desire this work, "stepped forward, took the money, put it in his pocket, and, without a word, walked off." During the week Brother Beachboard kindly asked him for the money and entered it on his book. He related this two days before he died, and it was perhaps the first time he had ever mentioned it, though it took place years ago.

His was a home where family worship was regularly conducted. The beauty of his Christian character shone when, having gathered his children together, he read to them the Scriptures and led them in prayer to a throne of grace and mercy. He formerly had family worship at night, but the little children were sometimes sleepy and hard to interest in the lesson. He changed the time to morning, devoting the freshest and best hour of the day to God's word and worship.

The writer was perhaps more closely associated with Brother Beachboard in his religious work than any one else. He took much interest in my work in destitute places, went with me to the meetings, and never failed to make earnest inquiries of my success when I went alone. He counseled with me as to the direction of my labors, being a great help and encouragement to me. One would have to look more closely than I have ever seen to find serious defects in his Christian character.

In a meeting of the "board of church officers," when the qualifications of elders were under discussion, one member of the "board" said, "There is not a man in the world who has these qualifications," and asked that one such be named. Brother Beachboard was unhesitatingly named, and they were asked to mention the item he did not fill, while the qualifications required were read from the New Testament. He was hesitatingly challenged on but one.

Brother E. L. Cambron began some work with the Bellbuckle church a few months before Brother Beachboard died. He attended some of the meetings and was encouraged at the prospect of good results. His "heart's desire and prayer to God" was that the church which he had labored and sacrificed so long to establish and build up might be restored to a Bible basis and God's favor.

While he was unable to attend church, he regularly laid by in store on the first day of the week a contribution, which Sister Beachboard has distributed since his death. A part of it is to be sent to a poor and much afflicted brother living fifteen miles away, whom Brother Beachboard had visited.

The godly influence of this man's life shows in his own loving, obedient, godly family, and, like leaven, has worked for good in the hearts and lives of many others. His was eminently a life of faith and purity.

R. A. HOOVER.

"SNAP SHOTS"

A LARGE number of engraved views of varied scenery in the famous zinc fields of Southwestern Missouri, mailed free, along with "Tales of Fortune" telling all about the zinc industry of Missouri and how a small sum can be invested to good advantage. Address

WALTER SAYLER,
171 La Salle St. Chicago, Ill.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

WHAT IS AN ACHE?

It is a Weakness - Somewhere. It is a Part of the Body that Your Blood Cannot Nourish.

A place that lacks a certain food to build up its strength.

What does it lack?

Iron.

The strength of iron can literally be made out of iron. All doctors prescribe iron for weak constitutions, or would like to.

But most iron preparations blacken the teeth and have a disagreeable taste.

Dr. Harter was the first physician to discover a pleasant-tasting preparation of iron which does not blacken the teeth. It is prepared from the pyrophosphate of iron, recognized by scientists as the best of all the salts of iron.

It is called Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

Back ache, side ache, muscle ache, headache, and all other aching pains can be driven out with Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. It cures chill and ague.

The iron goes into your blood, and from there to all parts of your body that need it.

Geologists know when they see red earth that there is iron in it; doctors, that red blood has iron in it.

Pale people need iron to color their blood. White blood is unhealthy.

Red, strong, robust people, with bright, ruddy cheeks, have plenty of iron in their blood, and all the iron strength that goes with it.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will give this strength to you, if you want it.

To be well, to be strong, to be free from pain, to have bright eyes and a clear, fresh complexion—who would not want it?

"Dallas, Tex., December 16, 1897.

"Dr. Harter Medicine Company, Dayton, O.

"Gentlemen: I have suffered from kidney trouble for years. I saw your announcements of free distribution of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, in our local papers, and secured a sample bottle, which relieved me. I bought two large size bottles, and must say I was surprised to find myself so much better by its use. I have no doubt but what five bottles will perfect an absolute cure. I hear many nice things said about Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in Dallas. DAVID CUMMINS.

"Betterton Circle, Pecan Street, Oak Cliff."

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

"Sweeney's Sermons," by J. W. Sweeney, should have a wide circulation. Brother J. W. McGarvey says that they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ. The book contains, in addition to the sermons, a life sketch of the author, written by an intimate friend.

Remember "Ailenrock's Book."

A Sermon on Denominationalism.

It is the purpose of the writer to show in this sermon that denominationalism, as it exists in the religious world, is contrary to the teachings of the New Testament, and cannot meet the approval of God. The teachings of Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, as set forth in the New Testament, shall be our only authority in determining this question.

The reader well knows that there are in existence a large number of denominations, and that the amount of them are just so many divisions in the religious world, which is called "Christendom." The New Testament clearly teaches that there were no denominations in the days of the apostles, and nothing is more clearly condemned therein than divisions among the people of God.

The apostle Paul says: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." (Eph. 4: 4-6.) He who is capable of understanding a sentence when he reads it can see that the connection in which we have the phrase, "one body," here as clearly shows that there is but one body as does the phrase, "one God," show that there is but one God. Again, the apostle says: "As we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ." (Rom. 12: 4, 5.) Once more: "But now are they many members, yet but one body." (1 Cor. 12: 20.) If language can establish anything, these scriptures prove that there was but one body of Christians on the earth in the days of the apostles, and hence there were no denominations.

In Col. 1: 18-24, Paul declares that this "one body" is the church. In Eph. 1: 22, 23, he reverses the order and says: "The church, which is his body." Then, as there was but one body of Christians in the days of the apostles, and that being the church, it follows with absolute certainty that there was but one church. This "one body," or church, held but one system of faith. (Eph. 4: 5.) How, then, does it come to pass that there are a great many denominations in existence calling themselves "churches," each holding a system of faith contradictory to all the rest? There must be something wrong in this.

A great many of those belonging to the denominations tell us that all of the denominations together make up the one body or church, of which Paul speaks; but this is a sad mistake. It is well known that these denominations are most terribly divided in faith and practice; but Paul says that the "one body," or church, is "fitly joined together and compacted." (Eph. 4: 16.) In Col. 2: 19, he teaches us that it is united by "joints and bands" and "knit together." He says to those constituting it: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." (1 Cor. 1: 10.) In Eph. 4: 3, he commands them to endeavor "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Therefore the idea that all the denominations together make up, or constitute, the one body, or church, is a delusion.

Suppose all these denominations were to meet in a convention, and the apostle Paul were to rise from the dead and appear in the convention, and

DOES THIS

CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

were to inform them that God had sent him back to the world to serve him here a while again; that he had instructed him to come back and take his position in the same body, or church, to which he belonged when on earth before, and he were to ask them this question, "Where is the one body, or church, to which I belonged when I was in the world before?" and he were to be answered as follows: "All the denominations represented in this convention combined constitute, or make up, the one body, or church, to which you belonged and for which you labored when on the earth before."

Reader, can you not, in your fancy, see him bow his head in sadness, soliloquizing about as follows: "O deluded set! Here are a host of different bodies, differing almost as widely from each other in teaching and practice as heaven is from the earth, yet claiming to constitute the one body, or church, for which I labored when I was on the earth before. Are they so ignorant of the teachings of the word of God that they do not know that I declared that the one body, or church, is united 'by joints and bands' and 'knit together'; that it is 'fitly joined together and compacted'; that I earnestly besought those composing it to 'speak the same thing' and to 'have no divisions among themselves,' but to 'be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment,' and to 'keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?' And, above all, do they not know that my Savior, just before his sweat was as great drops of blood falling down to the earth, earnestly prayed that all his people might be one, as he and his Father were one? (John 17: 20, 21.)"

Would you not give much to hear the sermon of reproof and rebuke, from "our beloved Brother Paul," which would be sure to follow, if he were permitted to speak? But it is to be feared that the convention would put him to silence.

The old assumption that all cannot see the part of the word of God, expressed in literal language, which pertains to the way of salvation, alike is extremely false. This part of the word of God is as plain and easily understood as McGuffey's First Reader to him who is willing to receive it, without perverting it to make it fit unscriptural theories.

When all professed Christians become willing to turn away from all things human and believe all the word of God teaches, nothing more or less, respecting the way of salvation; to obey its commands and precepts, adding nothing to and taking nothing from; to become and be what it requires, nothing more and nothing less, they will become united in the one body, or church, speaking "the same thing," having "no divisions" among themselves, but will be "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment;" and that earnest prayer of the blessed Savior will be answered: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

FLAVIL HALL.

(To be continued.)

Mardi Gras Celebration, New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., February 26, 27, 1900.

Reduced Rates via Southern Ry.

On account of Mardi Gras celebration at New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., February 26, 27, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to New Orleans, La., and return, also to Mobile, Ala., and return, at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold from February 20 to 26 inclusive, with final limit to return March 15, 1900.

The Southern Railway offers excellent and convenient schedules en route to New Orleans and Mobile, and passengers should purchase tickets reading via that line.

For further information, call on Southern Railway ticket agent.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy,
Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

The only house in all of the leading America handling artistic instruments. Agents because there is more money in the cheaper they sell at a good price.

STEINWAY
KNABE
PIANOS
CHICKERING
sell you Pianos factory and you profits.

Write us, a 2-cent stamp may save you money. In doing so mention this paper.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

PACKWOOD.

On December 28 the death angel visited the home of Y. C. and Malinda Packwood and took from them little Bennie, a twin brother to little Jessie. O how sad it was to have them separated! They were so much alike. Little Bennie was a sweet and loving little boy. He was three years, one month, and nineteen days old. He now rests with his grandmother, who passed on three weeks before. Let it be a happy thought to us that Bennie is in the hands of Him who doeth all things well, and let it be our daily prayer that we may have the courage and knowledge to bring the remainder of our little ones up in a way that they will be prepared to meet little Bennie and grandma and all the loved ones gone before. Remember that Jesus said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Elam, Tex. JOSIE PACKWOOD.

DUGGER.

Josiah A. Dugger was born on May 6, 1819; married Harriet H. Blankenship in February, 1846; obeyed the gospel in 1850; was baptized by Brother Wade Barrett; and died at his home, Stiverville, Maury County, Tenn., on November 16, 1899. Though feeble, the immediate cause of his death was from a fall causing a severe cut on his forehead. Uncle Joe and Aunt Harriet reared a family of six sons and five daughters. All are members of the church and survive their parents, save the second daughter, who died eight years ago. He leaves about fifty grandchildren, quite a number of whom are members of the church. Uncle Joe was a good citizen, an upright Christian, a loving husband, and a kind father. He will be missed by us all as a citizen, friend, and member of the church; but most of all by his children, as a father and counselor. W. N. MURPHY.

Glendale, Tenn.

PHILLIPS.

Another lamb has been gathered into the fold; a radiant spirit lately given to human form has returned to the Lord. Little Thelma, daughter of Pickens and Lizzie Phillips, was born on November 10, 1899, and died on January 20, 1900. Her short life was a source of love, joy, and hope to her young parents and many relatives, and was spent in perfect health until she was attacked by the dread disease which caused three days' intense suffering, when the merciful Father released her sweet spirit. Another joy has been added unto heaven, and through her we are nearer drawn to the Father's throne.

'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities,
Whereon, our firm feet planting, nearer God
The spirit climbs, and hath its eyes unsealed.

BELLE C PHILLIPS.

SHANNON.

Samuel D. Shannon was born on November 2, 1876, and died on January 16, 1900. He obeyed the gospel in his seventeenth year, during a meeting held by Brother Granville Lipscomb, at Cathey's Creek. Brother Shannon had the confidence of the people in the community in which he lived. He realized he was, like other people, imperfect, but with a brave heart he confessed his faults before men, knowing that if he would do this he had an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous one, who would forgive sins. From the large number of sympathizing friends at the funeral and burial he must have been a very valuable young man to the neighborhood. When such a young man is taken by death he is missed. He was a son of whom the whole family were proud. No wonder it was a great sacrifice to give him up. I trust we all may meet him in the happy home with the angels of heaven.

F. C. SOWELL.

GRIGBY.

Our dear little sister, Ruth E. Grigby, has left us for the beautiful home above. She was born on March 2, 1887, at Lynnville, Tenn., and death claimed her on January 5, 1900. She became a child of God last year, under the preaching of Brother Hooten, and she lived a model Christian life, always in her Sunday school class, and dearly loved to be with the saints to commemorate the death of Christ. She gave liberally of what money came into her hands. She indeed had a meek, quiet spirit; lovingly obeyed her father and mother, thereby setting a grand and good example for the other children. We cannot call her back to us, but we may go where she has gone; and O how sweet it will be to meet our loved ones when life's troubles are all over! Brother and sister, you have now an angel daughter; she awaits you and her sister and brother on the other shore. Let us all strive to gain that home. A. T. ODENEAL.

Paris, Tex.

HENDERSON.

George W. Henderson was born in Newport, England, on May 11, 1827, and died at Mt. Pleasant, Tenn., on November 18, 1899; aged seventy-two years, six months, and seven days. He obeyed the gospel on August 15, 1892, at Pinewood, Hickman County, Tenn., under services conducted by E. J. Meachum. To know Brother Henderson was to love and admire him. He was ever ready to help those in distress and want. He never accumulated much of this world's goods, but laid up treasures where "neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." He was a loving husband, a kind father, and a good neighbor. He has gone to receive a crown of glory. If his children want to meet him in the sweet by and by, they should be faithful to the end; and it will not be long until they will meet him again, at the great reunion in our Father's house. L. C. BEARD.

HANDBOOK ON BAPTISM

BY J. W. SHEPHERD
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof.

The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities.

A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student.

It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

Large Type

8vo Cloth

486 Pages

Price $1.50

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY

232 N. MARKET ST.
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

DEMENT.

David Lafayette Dement was born on January 26, 1897, and died on September 9, 1899. Thus ended the career of little David Lafayette Dement, son of Brother Thomas and Sister Jennie Dement, and grandson of Brother J. L. and Sister Bryant. He was a bright and intelligent little boy, and was the joy and comfort of the home circle; but God through his infinite wisdom, and who doeth all things for the best, saw fit to take him above, leaving sadness and disappointment behind; but we would admonish the parents and grandmother not to grieve over heaven's gain, but with a firm hope and trust in Jesus, say, like the poet:

Fold the little hands so waxen
O'er the pulseless baby breast,
For our little one is sleeping
In death's long and dreamless rest;
Press the gold-fringed eyelids gently
O'er the sunny, trusting eyes—
Eyes that, closed on earth forever,
Open up in paradise.

Yet who would wish to call him
From his home of light above?
Who would ask that God had left him
Here to cheer us with his love?
Even with our love to guide him
In the paths of good and right,
Would he still have entered heaven,
With a soul so pure and white?
W. S. M'H.

EDWARDS.

Daniel Edwards was born in Casey County, Ky., on June 18, 1815; was married to Miss Thersa Tucker on October 12, 1837. To them were born fourteen children, twelve of whom are still living; all lived to be grown. Brother Edwards obeyed the gospel in August, 1844, under the preaching of Brother Carroll Kendrick; moved to Texas in 1876; departed this life on November 23, 1899; aged eighty-four years, five months, and five days. He was a faithful member of the church of Christ for fifty-five years. He and his wife lived happily together for over sixty years. She is still living. He was a constant reader of the Bible, which he loved and in which he was well versed. His house was always the home for preachers. He leaves behind him his aged companion and twelve children to mourn their loss, which we hope is his eternal gain. That he was loved by his neighbors was proven by the large concourse of people that attended his funeral. May his children so live as to be prepared to meet him in a better world. W. A. SEWELL.

STONE.

Our dear brother, John L. Stone, of Sequatchie County, Tenn., was born on February 2, 1825, and died on December 26, 1899, at his home, surrounded by all his family, consisting of wife and eight children, all of whom are members of the church of Christ. These are left to mourn the loss of one so good and kind as a husband and father, for he loved his family and his family were devoted to him. He obeyed the gospel about forty years ago, under the preaching of Brother Lovè, when it was by no means popular to be simply a Christian; but for all these years he stood nobly by the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints. For more than a year of his last days he was afflicted and suffered much, but was conscious until the last. When the end drew near, he called his family around him and told them how to manage his affairs, and the details of his funeral, just as if he were going on a journey. By request, the writer conducted the funeral in the new church house at Daus, near his home, on which house Brother Stone had arranged for his family to place a bell at his expense. A large audience of his friends and relatives were present to show the high esteem in which he was held and to sympathize with the bereaved family. Thus our dear brother passed away, leaving many assurances that our loss is his eternal gain. Among these assurances was the request that they sing at his funeral: There is a place where my hopes are stayed; My heart and its treasures are there.

E. H. BOYD.

New England
CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1833. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

NASHVILLE, TENN., MARCH 1, 1900

VOLUME XLII. NO. 9

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

Sweeney's Sermons

By JOHN S. SWEENEY

and an interesting life
sketch of the author written by an intimate friend

The subjects of the sermons are: The Simplicity that is in Christ, The Three Sides of Christianity, The Church of God—Its Foundation, The Word of Truth, Our Aim, Regeneration, Acts of Apostles, The More Excellent Way, Paul's Answer to King Agrippa, Action of Baptism, Baptism for Remission of Sins, What Must I Do to Be Saved? Infant Baptism, A Plea for the Church of God. Of the sermons, J. W. McGarvey says: "I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ."

304 Pages, Neatly
Bound in Cloth

Price ❁ $1.00

Biographies and Sermons

By F. D. SRYGLEY

424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. Illustrated. Photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc.

Intensely
Interesting

Price ❁ $1.50

The Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell

By D. LIPSCOMB

This is an interesting book. One hundred and twenty-one pages are devoted to a memorial of his life, work, and character, by David Lipscomb; one hundred and ninety-seven pages to sermons, by Jesse Sewell. Sixteen of his best sermons are here given, covering all the phases of conversion, and especially on points upon which disciples and denominations differ. It contains sermons on such themes as: The Conversion of Cornelius, Atonement and Reconciliation, Witness of the Spirit, Form of Doctrine, The Grace of God, The Name of Christ, In Christ, The Son of God, The One Foundation, etc. This book will well repay any reader, and gives a larger fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

12MO, 318 PAGES, CLOTH

Price ❁ $1.00

Seventy Years in Dixie

By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

400 LARGE OCTAVO PAGES
LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

Price ❁ $1.50

Handbook on Baptism

By J. W. SHEPHERD

With an Introduction by
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof. The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities. A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student. It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

Large Type
8vo Cloth
486 Pages

Price ❁ $1.50

The Gospel Plan of Salvation..

By T. W. BRENTS

Clears away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes: Predestination, Election and Reprobation, Calvinistic Proofs Examined, The Foreknowledge of God, Hereditary Depravity, Establishment of the Church, Identity of the Church, The New Birth, Faith, Repentance, The Confession, Baptism—What is It? Who Should Be Baptized? The Design of Baptism, The Holy Spirit. As a book of reference, it is invaluable. Highly recommended by the press and the brotherhood. 667 pages, 8vo., good paper, clear type, well bound.

Eight Editions
Have Been Sold

Price ❁ $2.00

Civil Government:

Its Origin, Mission, and Destiny, and the Chris- tian's Relation to It

By D. LIPSCOMB

158 PAGES.

This book is the outgrowth of the author's most matured thoughts on this subject. "I think the book is worth its weight in gold."—A. Wilkinson. "It will be better appreciated, in my opinion, by future generations, as the light of Bible knowledge becomes more general."—J. E. Thompson.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $0.75

Ailenroc's Book

205 PAGES

By SARAH CORNELIA
ALEXANDER

Piedmont, Ala.

Poems and Stories. Choice reading and handsome binding. Our readers are familiar with the life of Mrs. Alexander and the story of her book. This is not our book, nor will we realize a cent of profit from the manufacture and sale. Mrs. Alexander did not live to enjoy any of the proceeds of its sale. She left several little children and her hope was that its sale would aid them.

Price * $1.00

Sunshine:

By V. M. METCALFE
(Uncle Minor.)

Uncle Minor's Stories

A book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. Uncle Minor's life was devoted to the young, and everywhere he went the children became attached to him. He thought there was too much reality in life to spend his time in writing fiction, so in this book he confines himself to real incidents and true stories which point the mind to "some virtue to practice or vice to shun." It is an exceedingly appropriate gift for the young. Sent post-paid. 256 pages, 6½ x 9½; bound in cloth.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.00

Larimore and His Boys

By F. D. SRYGLEY

Intensely interesting. Dedicated "to all boys who love their mothers, serve the Lord, and strive to be educated, useful, and good." A biographical sketch of T. B. Larimore, and short sketches of more than fifty "boys" who attended his school at Mars' Hill, Ala. It describes the rough mountain country of North Alabama, and gives many funny incidents of country life in the "backwoods;" it tells the story of "Hard times in Dixie during the War." Your boy will appreciate it, and it will do him good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price, $1.00

TESTAMENTS

• • • •

No. 801. Flexible cloth, colors, ruby, 24mo. Price, per dozen, $0.80.

No. 2316 P. French Morocco, linen lined, limp, gold side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, $0.90.

No. 2326. French Morocco, leather lined, limp, round corners, gold edges, emerald type. Price, $1.05.

No. 2326 P. Same description as No. 2326, with Psalms added. Price, $1.20.

No. 201. Grained cloth, embossed bands, back and side titles, brevier type, red edges. Price, $0.40.

No. 500 P. Large type, cloth, embossed bands, back and side titles, red edges. Price, $0.90.

No. 693 P. French Morocco, flexible backs, round corners, gold titles on back and sides, large type, gold edges. Price, $2.

No. 255. Same description as No. 500 P, without Psalms. Price, $0.80.

No. 2600 P. French Morocco, flexible backs, gold titles on back and sides, long primer type; edges, red under gold. Price, $1.10.

No. 2416. Grained cloth, embossed bands, gold title on back, red edges, large type. Price, $1.25.

No. 2443½ P. Large-print family Testament, Morocco gold titles on back and sides, round corners; edges, gold over red. Price, $2.15.

Self-pronouncing Testaments

No. 2300. Grained cloth, cut flush, red edges. Price, per single copy, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.50.

No. 2303. Russia cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, $0.50.

No. 2313. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, embossed bands, top and bottom, round corners, gold edges. Price, $0.60.

No. 2902. Morocco, grained cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red burnished edges. This is large, clear pica type. Price, $0.85.

No. 2914. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red under gold edges, gold roll. The type the same as 2901. A very handsome book. Price, $1.50.

No. 2303 P. (P means that the book has the Psalms.) Russia cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, gold edges. Price, $0.55.

No. 2313 P. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, embossed bands top and bottom, round corners, gold edges. Price, $0.65.

No. 2902 P. Morocco, grained cloth, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red burnished edges. Price, $1.

No. 2014 P. French Morocco, limp, gold back and side titles, round corners, red under gold edges, gold roll. Price, $1.65.

• • • •

Gospel Advocate Pub. Co. 232 N. Market Street
Nashville, Tennessee.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 9.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, MARCH 1, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Salvation by Grace Illustrated	130
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 29	130
The Fellowship	131
Sadly Scattered Disciples	132
Miscellany	133
Fire in the Colony	134
Home Reading	135
Opening the Seventh Seal	136
Are there too Many Ministers?	137
Obituaries	138
A Note from Brother Officer	139
From Japan—Report for 1899	139
General News	140
Why Send for Peter?	141
Brother Boaz' Last Year's Work	141
Unsympathetic	141
Christmas and New Year Observances in the Far East	142
A Sermon on Denominationalism	143
Kansas Notes	144
Brother Officer's Gratitude for Fellowship and Sympathy	144

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

I know a man who is in great trouble because he is confronted by obstacles in life which he sees no way to overcome. In fact, he says mountains of difficulties lie right before him and he does not see how he can go any farther. The fellow is trying to go the wrong way. He has the lines of his life all mapped out on a dead level. It has never occurred to him to go upward. Nothing but sin can get between man and God on the upward journey, and the way to remove sin by forgiveness is easy, plain, and practicable at all times and to every soul. That clears the route to heaven and immortal glory, and the mountains of difficulties in front are of no consequence. If you cannot go forward any farther, try it upward. The way to heaven leads straight up from every point man can possibly be while in the flesh. It is a way any soul can go alone with God's help, no matter how much opposition other people may interpose. Try the upward route.

I am not sure but that many a man has lost his own soul trying to save other people. This sounds like a very strange saying the first time one hears it, but it will appear more plausible and scriptural the longer and more carefully it is studied. If no one had any duty to perform except to try to get others to obey God and be saved, the saying would be clearly unscriptural; but God requires every man to be something of a practical Christian himself, as well as to try to get others to be Christians. Even if a man succeeds in getting others to be Christians, he himself will not be saved for that reason alone. The fact that a man gets somebody else to be a Christian will not save him unless he is a Christian himself. If a man is really a Christian himself, he will be saved whether he gets anybody else to be a Christian or not. Of course no man can be a Christian himself without trying to get others to be Christians; but a man can try to get others to be Christians, and can even succeed in that effort, and still not be a Christian himself. The thing for every Christian to do is to make an earnest effort to keep exactly right himself so that his soul may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. The exhortation of Peter was: "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." There is an element of intense individuality in Christianity "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed." The effort to get others to be Christians is often a flat failure, and then those who are making a specialty of that work without trying particularly to be Christians themselves are liable to be discouraged; but the effort to be a Christian yourself will never fail if pushed according to the teaching of the New Testament, relying upon God for assistance and final success. Any man can be a Christian and be saved by God's help, no matter what may be his condition and environments in life. If a man does no more than this, the result of his efforts will be quite satisfactory in the great day of final accounts.

Humility and purity are twin virtues and essential elements in Christian character and true greatness. Solomon said: "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." (Prov. 16: 18.) Paul said: "To every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think." (Rom. 12: 3.) A greater than Solomon or Paul said: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 3, 4.) He applied this principle of humility to the ordinary affairs of life as well as to matters of religious work and worship when he said: "When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him; and he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher; then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 14: 8-11.) The admonition of Paul to all Christians is: "In honor preferring one another." The meaning of all this is that Christians should not strive with each other for high places and distinguished honors. The example of two Christians racing against each other for a high office in political government is no better illustration of this doctrine than the spectacle of two preachers striving each for the mastery over the other in maneuvering for a good place "in the ministry." The truth of the matter is that the lives of professed Christians constitute a very poor comment on the doctrine of the New Testament at this point. As to and purity, there will be no further complaint of easier to teach and to understand than to practice: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12: 14.) The special injunction of Paul to Timothy was: "Keep thyself pure." (1 Tim. 5: 22.) If every Christian will seriously undertake to keep himself right by the teaching of the New Testament in humility and purity there will be no further complaint of religious indifference and spiritual lethargy. There is enough to keep everybody busy for some years to come in these two things.

My attention has been called to the following paragraph which appeared some time ago in a Texas paper concerning a woman evangelist:

"She was born and reared in Wayne County, O., where she was educated and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her husband and an only child are dead. For twenty years she has been preaching, and has been a traveling evangelist for seven years, during which time she has visited all parts of the world. She believes that she has been divinely called for her work and goes as she thinks she is directed by God. She neither receives a salary nor takes up collections to defray her expenses. The railroads furnish her free transportation, and the people among whom she works board her. She has railroad passes all over the country and letters of recommendation from many among whom she has worked. She has been working alone until recently, but now is assisted by H. M. Pride, for whom, through President Harrison, she obtained an honorable release from the United States Army in order that he might engage in the work. They are at present the guests of William Grove, of Oak Cliff, Tex. 'I depend on God to give me everything, and he always does it,' said Mrs. Wheaton, cheerily. 'I never ask any one for a cent, though it has always happened that when I need any money some one comes along in time and gives it to me without asking. I pray for it and I receive it.' Mrs. Wheaton had quite a number of newspaper notices of herself and says that the press has always been very kind and of great assistance to her."

Two questions are propounded: (1) Do I believe her statement that when she needs "any money some one comes along in time and gives it to" her? (2) If this statement is true, does it necessarily follow that the money is from God in answer to her prayers? I have some doubt about the truthfulness of the first statement, though it may be true. If she prays for money when she needs it and somebody gives it to her when she prays, it does not follow that God sends it in answer to her prayers. The article from which the foregoing paragraph is clipped fills two columns of a daily paper and gives a description of her meetings and a synopsis of one of her sermons. Unless God has made radical changes in the doctrine inspired men preached in New Testament times, he is not supporting this woman or anybody else to preach such sermons as she is reported as preaching. The whole idea that God directs people, or supports people, to do anything or preach anything in religion except that which inspired men have taught in the Holy Scriptures, is erroneous.

A brother sends me an article from a Baptist paper published several years ago in defense of religious creeds in general and the Baptist creed in particular. The gist of the matter is stated in the following paragraph:

"But you require every one to subscribe to your creed? Yes, if you agree with me. If you do not like the creed of my church, there is plenty of room outside for you to float around in. If there were laws disfranchising you unless you subscribed to my creed, you might complain; but there is no civil law requiring you to belong to any organization. But we ought to agree if we walk together. It is said: 'Away with creeds, and to the Bible!' Well, take the commission. What does it teach? My creed is that it teaches: 'He that believeth and is immersed shall be saved.' What is your creed? Speaking of Jesus, his disciples said: 'Of a truth thou art the Son of God.' What does that mean? Is he merely man, or is he God? You say it is a debatable question. It is not with me. My creed is that he is God. I have not come to this conclusion in order to establish a creed to debar you from the organization of which I am a member, but it results from my examination of the Bible. I cannot read it without forming opinions and I become fixed in them. The very nature of things requires it. It cannot be otherwise and man be man."

Of course, if men have a right to establish a church which they very properly call "my church," they have a right to define the creed of that church. The question is: Has any man or any set of men the right to establish or constitute any church except God's church, which includes and consists of all of God's people? Perhaps Methodists do not agree among themselves as to what the creed of the Methodist Church teaches on all questions; certainly Baptists do not agree among themselves as to what the Baptist creed teaches on all questions. Why should a squad of Methodists who do agree as to what the Methodist creed teaches write out their creed as to what the Methodist creed teaches, and sign it, and require everybody else to sign it, unless it is their purpose to establish another church? God's church is God's people and the creed of that church is the Holy Scriptures. Any man who is a Christian is a member of that church because he is a Christian, and no man or set of men has any scriptural authority to belong to or constitute any other church. They cannot make any other creed without constituting another church. For this reason they have no divine authority to make any other creed. No matter whether creeds are the cause of parties, or parties are the cause of creeds, the parties and the creeds are all wrong and ought to be abolished. The plain duty of every Christian is to abandon them.

Oax Contributors.

Salvation by Grace Illustrated.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." (Eph. 2: 8.) "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." (Titus 2: 11, 12.)

The word "grace" in a religious sense has been used to mean so many things that salvation by grace has been so greatly mystified that many despair of ever understanding the subject.

The word "grace" means favor, and the general idea attaching to the word in the Scriptures is that of favor or gift from God in any form it suited divine wisdom to confer it. To be saved by the gospel is to be saved by the grace of God, for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. The grace or favor of salvation from God is through the conditions of the gospel. Many have fallen into the error of supposing that salvation to be by grace must be without conditions. Many err, too, in supposing the conditions or commandments of the gospel are only human works, when really they are the works ordained of God, and therefore the works of God.

A plain illustration of salvation by grace as taught in the gospel may somewhat assist the reader in understanding the subject. Let us suppose an industrious, good man, with a large family dependent upon him, to be a renter. We will name him John Workhard. He lives in the same neighborhood as James Kindheart, who owns one thousand fertile acres in his own name and right. They are intimate neighbors and highly esteem each other. One bright morning they meet, and the following dialogue occurs:

Kindheart (a well-to-do man): "Good morning, neighbor Workhard. I hope you are at leisure a few moments. I have it in my heart to make you a certain proposition, which may interest you, as it concerns your welfare and that of your family. Would you like to have a nice farm for a home for your wife and children, and own it in your own name and right, unencumbered?"

Workhard: "Nothing on earth would please me better, friend Kindheart, but I dare not hope for that now. When I and my wife were first married we thought we would economize and save all we could and lay by a fund with which we hoped to be able to buy us a home some time, but these dear responsibilities, as I call our children, God bless them, have increased so rapidly in my family we have quite given up the hope of ever being able to own a home; and now we are striving with might and main to give them a common-school education, teach them lessons of industry and self-reliance, and turn them out to help themselves as best they can."

Kindheart: "That is a goodly heritage in itself." Workhard: "That is true, no doubt. I have often been told by those who are liberal in advice—yet will not turn over their hand to give your son or daughter a place to earn a living—that that is exactly the way to rear them. 'Work your children hard,' say they, 'and be content to live in a constant strain to make expenses yourself, it will keep you humble,' is their idea. But this I have observed, that these very advisers are as ambitious for their children as any one. If this be a parental weakness, I must admit I share that weakness. You know every parent would like to provide a home for his children if he can. St. Paul teaches the natural order is for the parents to lay up for their children; but it now seems so far out of my power it annoys me to think of it. We had better discuss some other subject."

Kindheart: "I know your situation and your struggles to get along in the world. I am in full sympathy with you. We are neighbors who know and appreciate each other. I like you and like your family, and I have this to say to you: I will arrange to put in your possession a tract of one hundred acres of land. You shall have it, a home of your own, with good right and title to the same."

Workhard: "I could never pay for it, I fear. I have a perfect horror of being in debt. I am a poor man, but I am glad to know I owe no man anything but love. It takes all I can make now to pay current expenses and we need more than I can buy. I cannot go in debt for land."

Kindheart: "As I said before, I know your situation. I will make the terms such as you can easily comply with and your title shall be clear and unencumbered."

Workhard: "Are you really in earnest, or are you sporting with my helpless poverty? If you are, I prefer to talk about something else. I have built too many air castles and had too many blasted hopes already."

Kindheart: "Believe me, neighbor, I am really in earnest. I mean exactly what I say, and will reassure you I have a very tender regard for you and your people. I believe you are a good citizen and an honest and true man in every way. Will you accept?"

Workhard: "I do not feel worthy of your kindness."

Kindheart: "I do not ask you to feel worthy, but ask, will you accept?"

Workhard: "I must know your conditions first." Kindheart: "You have a wagon and team. You know how to use them. You know I am a great believer in manual labor. It is godlike and honorable. It is helpful to man. In some degree it counteracts the evil tendencies in his nature. It is the hope of our—"

Workhard (interrupting): "If this be a criterion of worth, I am the richest man in the neighborhood. These large, horny hands and stiff joints are witnesses."

Kindheart: "You must hear me through."

Workhard: "Excuse me, but what are the terms?"

Kindheart: "I did not mention the worth and dignity of labor to intimate you needed any encouragement in that line, but simply to approve your course in life and show you how easily you might become the owner of one hundred acres of as good land as there is in the State, with a good cottage home upon it. You come in the morning to my house, with your wagon and team. Do not send one of your boys or a little dinky; but you, yourself, come and help me haul rails one-half a day and I will at noon, when we go to dinner, write you a clear deed to the one hundred acres."

Workhard: "I would not charge you a cent, friend Kindheart, for that service; why, you know we are neighbors, and I would help you all day for nothing, as to that matter."

Kindheart: "I know your heart toward me, and I want you to know mine toward you. To give you a clear deed I will have it read about this way: 'For, and in consideration of one-half day's hauling of rails by John Workhard, I have this day (October 1, 1900) bargained and sold, and do by these presents bargain, sell, and convey, to the said John Workhard a certain tract or parcel of land in District No. —, County —, State —. Beginning at a certain corner, said land runs thus and so, back to the beginning, and contains one hundred acres, more or less. I do furthermore covenant with the said John Workhard that the same is unencumbered and that I will warrant and defend this right and title to the said land and all the appurtenances thereof against the lawful claims of any persons whomsoever. (Signed) James Kindheart.

Witnesses: Timothy Truth, Solomon Steady.' How would that suit you, neighbor Workhard?"

Workhard: "My friend Kindheart, you are really giving me this land. This is your grace to me."

Kindheart: "Well, accept it and have it duly recorded. The title is good."

Workhard: "But you are not paid for it."

Kindheart: "I will feel paid when to-morrow I see your happy wife and joyful children move into that cottage which is ready to your hand upon the land, your own sweet home."

All can easily make the application. The service rendered would not be worthy to be compared with the value of the estate. It would be a matter of grace or favor.

An objector may say this is only a supposed case. True, it must be a rare thing for the like of this to happen among men and still harder to suppose where a man had waxed rich among his neighbors to be that benevolent. But that which it is designed to illustrate is no supposition at all. It is a grand and glorious truth that the grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men. It appears through "teaching." Salvation is not of human origin, but "it is the gift of God" through faith. In the teaching of the gospel we learn that faith, repentance, confession, and baptism in the name of Christ are the conditions of salvation. It is our duty to obey these commands and be saved by the grace of God. These conditions can be complied with in less time than half a day. The jailer and his entire family obeyed these conditions within one hour, and that the unseemly hour of midnight.

This is indeed a feeble illustration as to the values compared. The whole world, yea, ten thousand material worlds like this are not to be compared to the unsearchable riches of Christ. No angel or archangel can compute their full value. Yet they belong to the humblest obedient child of God. The universe is God's. His children shall inherit all things and be joint heirs with the adorable Son of God in the vast possessions of the Lord Almighty.

Will Christ be repaid for the sacrifice he made? It is said: "It became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." What enabled him to endure those sufferings? It was for the joy that was set before him that he endured the cross and despised the shame.

But look not now at Christ upon the bloody tree of the cross nor regard him in the midst of that fiendish, surging mob swayed by the prince of darkness. Behold him, as John in apocalyptic vision saw him, surrounded with the emblems of his purity, his grandeur, and his glory. One divine glance of Christ at that great multitude which no man can number, washed in his own blood, of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues, will repay him for the agony of Gethsemane and the pains of Golgotha. He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

G. LIPSCOMB.

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 29.

Looking out the porthole at 5:30 o'clock on the morning of August 24, I saw what seemed to be a detached rock, rising abruptly out of the sea, which I soon learned was Gibraltar; and by six o'clock we had rounded the point and cast anchor in the bay. Only a short time elapsed until I was on shore, and visited a number of interesting places.

The old Moorish Castle was especially interesting, since it is the oldest castle in Europe, having been built in the early part of the eighth century. It is now used for a prison. From this point I could see that the whole place is a network of fortifications. As I climbed the steep side of "the rock," at every turn were revealed tiers of forts constructed on the most approved principles. Both nature and art have done much to make Gibraltar the most impregnable citadel in the world. The great rock is a promontory three miles in length, from north to south, three quarters in average breadth, and about seven miles in circumference. It is connected with the mainland of Spain by a flat, sandy isthmus. Across this strip of land two rows of sentry boxes mark the Spanish and English lines, the "neutral ground" being the space between them.

The material of the rock is gray limestone and marble. Its highest point is one thousand four hundred and thirty-nine feet above the sea level. On the eastern side the rock needs no defense beyond its own precipitous cliffs, and in all other directi-has been made practically impregnable. Besides a sea wall extending at intervals around the western base of the rock, and strengthened by curtains and bastions and three formidable forts, there are batteries in all available positions from the sea wall up to a height of one thousand three hundred and fifty feet; and a remarkable series of galleries have been hewn out of the solid face of the rock toward the north and northwest. These galleries have an aggregate length of about three miles, and their width is sufficient to let two carriages drive in abreast. Port-holes are cut at intervals of thirty-six feet, so contrived that the gunners are safe from the shot of any possible assailants. Alterations, extensions, and improvements are continually taking place in the defensive system, and new guns of the most formidable type have displaced the old-fashioned ordnance. Immense stores of provision, water, and munitions of war are constantly maintained; and the whole is garrisoned by a thoroughly efficient force of about five thousand infantry, with one thousand artillery, and an efficient corps of engineers.

In the year 711, a Moor, whose name was Tarik, raised the first outlines of these fortifications, which, in the hands of England, have resisted the art and powers of combined forces. In the successive revolutions which characterized the period of Moorish supremacy in Spain, Gibraltar played its part, alternately passing from the hands of the native Spanish-Moorish monarchs into those of the princes from Arabia, and back again. In 1309, after a desperate resistance, it surrendered to Alonzo Perez, for the king of Spain, who, in order to attract inhabitants to the spot, offered an asylum to swindlers, thieves, and murderers, and promised to levy no taxes on the import or export of goods. In 1315, the Moors made an unsuccessful attempt to recover it, but in 1333 it was taken by them. The Spaniards, in 1436, endeavored to recapture it, but in vain. In 1462, they again besieged it; and this time the treachery of a renegade Moor brought them that success which their arms had failed to bring. After this a number of unsuccessful attempts were made to take it, but the besiegers were repulsed. The Spaniards, during the reign of each succeeding sovereign, so accumulated defensive works around it that by the whole of Europe it was pronounced impregnable.

The Spaniards, relying upon its character for impregnability, and never dreaming that any enemy would attempt to attack it, kept up a garrison of only one hundred and fifty men. Of this fact, Admiral Sir George Rooke, then in command of the combined English and Dutch fleet, was probably aware when he resolved on attempting its conquest. On July 21, 1705, he landed about one thousand eight hundred soldiers and mariners, under the command of Prince George, of Hesse; and on the following day he commenced a terrific bombardment, firing not less than one thousand five hundred times in six hours. On July 23 the sea defenses were carried by a rush, by a small body of seamen under Captain Whittaker. On the following day the enfeebled and discouraged garrison surrendered. Thus in three days, with little loss, the "impregnable fortress" was wrested from the hand of Spain.

Keenly feeling its loss, the Spanish Court made an immediate effort to regain it, and dispatched for this purpose a powerful French and Spanish fleet, consisting of fifty line of battle ships, besides frigates and other vessels, mounted with four thousand guns, and carrying twenty-six thousand men. Sir George Rooke's fleet numbered forty-five line of battle ships, mounted three thousand seven hundred guns, and carried twenty-three thousand two hundred men. A desperate action ensued; but English skill and steadfastness prevailed, and the French retired to Toulon beaten and discomfited, and with a loss of three thousand men.

The most memorable siege of Gibraltar was that which it sustained from the combined land and sea forces of France and Spain during the years 1779-1783. At this time England was engaged in her struggle with the American colonies, and also at war with France. Spain gladly joined the coalition which seemed to threaten the destruction of her power, and seized the opportunity to hurl her whole strength against the isolated garrison of the famous Rock.

The communications with Spain were closed on June 21, 1779; and a strict blockade established by the Spanish fleet; the strength of the besieged force being at this period five thousand three hundred and eighty-two men, under General Elliott, the Governor. Famine speedily set in; the enemy pushed forward his works with all haste for the future bombardment. Several shots were fired into the town on June 12, 1780. Five days later Admiral Rodney overcame the Spanish admiral, placed a good supply of provisions in the fortress, added one thousand men to the garrison, removing all useless mouths, and left it dependent on its own strength. During the remainder of 1778 little else of importance happened; scurvy disabled many of the defenders; the besiegers advanced their works, continually increased their force, and, by obtaining possession of the opposite African ports, cut off the last chance of provisions being obtained. In April, 1781, starvation stared the British in the face, when Admiral Darby convoyed one hundred merchant vessels into the bay. The Spaniards instantly opened fire, hoping to reduce the garrison before effectual aid could be received. One hundred and fourteen pieces of artillery, including fifty thirteen-inch mortars, poured their deadly missiles into the place. This bombardment continued incessantly until November 26, when, in a desperate midnight sally, the British succeeded in destroying the more advanced of the enemy's lines, in setting fire to many of his batteries, and in blowing up his principal depot of ammunition.

After this repulse the Spaniards ceased severe hostilities for several days, but the siege continued, however, throughout the winter and spring of 1782. In July Duke de Crillon took command of the assailants, and preparations were made for a grand assault. Additional batteries were constructed on the land side, and floating batteries built for this especial siege to batter the fortress from the sea. The latter consisted of ten large vessels, whose sides were composed of wood and other material seven feet thick; they were covered by slanting shot-proof roofs, and were intended to be moored by massive chains within half range of the rock. Covered boats to disembark forty thousand men were prepared at the same time.

The great attack was begun on September 8 by a bombardment simultaneously on all sides. Nine line of battle ships poured in their broadsides, fifteen gun and mortar boats approached the town, while from the Spanish lines one hundred and seventy pieces of ordnance of large caliber opened in one awful discharge. This terrific fire continued until September 12, when the combined French and Spanish fleets, numbering forty-seven sail of the line, the ten battering boats already mentioned, which were regarded by them as being indestructible, with many frigates and smaller vessels, anchored in the bay of Algeciras. On September 13 every gun of the besieged and besiegers was in full play. The battering vessels, as expected, proved invulnerable to shot and shell. At noon the besiegers were doing much damage, and the English then resorted to the expedient of red-hot balls. These were turned on the battering ships with unceasing fury. Success was doubtful for some hours, but late in the afternoon the gigantic efforts of the British began to show good results. The ship of the Spanish Admiral was in flames, the second in command was soon in the same condition, and by eight o'clock the attacking squadron was completely silenced; but the firing of red-hot balls continued without intermission during the whole night. By four o'clock on the morning of September 14, eight of the battering ships were on fire. In fact, every one of the "invincible" batteries was destroyed. The loss on the Spanish side was two thousand killed. The English loss was only sixteen killed, and sixty-eight wounded. To the credit of the Anglo-saxon race be it said, that notwithstanding the fury to which the English soldiers had been wrought, Brigadier Curtis, with a devoted band, made gallant and successful efforts to save the wretched soldiers who had been left by their affrighted comrades to perish in the flames of the burning hulks. So confident were the besiegers of success that Charles X. hastened from Paris to witness the capture of the place; but he arrived in time to see the destruction of the floating batteries and the greater portion of the combined fleet by the English fire. Thus ended the last and most memorable siege of Gibraltar—indeed, one of the most memorable of all sieges; and from that day to this England has held this rock "a post of power, a post of superiority, of connection, of commerce; one which makes her invulnerable to her friends, dreadful to her enemies."

Gibraltar was known to the ancients by the name of Calpe, and it, with Abyla on the African coast, formed the "Pillars of Hercules," which were supposed to mark the extreme western limit of the discoveries and conquests of the mythic heroes, beyond which no mortal could advance, whether he were wise or foolish. But at 9:30 A.M., the same day of our arrival, we weighed anchor and sailed out into the great Atlantic Ocean.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

The Fellowship.

"And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship." (Acts 2: 42.)

"Fellowship!" What is it? It is the equalization of blessings, privileges, and honors in the kingdom of God; it is the use of one's talents and means for the common good; it is the giving and receiving, the distribution, the communication, or the making common with the whole fraternity; it is the circulation of spiritual lifeblood in the one body; it is the co-partnership, the union of the energies of heart and hand and resource in one great firm whose sole object is to enlighten, save, and comfort each partner, and prepare him for eternal life as a final dividend; it pertains to blessings both temporal and spiritual.

No greater interest ever called together a greater firm on earth, and no firm was ever supplied with ampler means for the accomplishment of its high objects. Its members are God, the Eternal Father and Creator; Jesus, the Son of God, the Anointed Savior, the Holy Spirit, who searches and reveals the things of God and guides us into all truth, and all the people of God who are called with a holy calling to be "laborers together with God." (1 Cor. 3: 9.)

"That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. . . . If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 3-7.) "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." (1 Cor. 1: 9.) "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all." (2 Cor. 13: 14.)

This fellowship unites all the blood-washed saints with the chosen apostles, with the Holy Spirit, with the Son of God, and with God himself in a pure and happy coöperation. It is a fellowship in light. People who do not walk in the light revealed in the gospel cannot be united in this fellowship, neither can they enjoy the cleansing of Christ's blood. The wisdom of man is excluded; everything is illumined by the light of God. This fellowship cannot be supported through human organizations. That people who attempt to serve God through human organizations do not have fellowship one with another is a fact too evident for dispute. But it is affirmed in God's word that those who walk in the light, as he is in the light, do have fellowship one with another. It is impossible to separate into two different churches two persons who, in the same village, both alike walk in the light, as he is in the light; and where two persons are thus separated, it is evident that they are not both walking in the light. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." (1 John 1: 7.)

All the members of this firm are active. In it are no silent, secret partners; no nominal or honorary members. All contribute and work together to advance the lofty interests that moved God to institute such a coöperation. All give and receive. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) The Son gave up his riches and glory in the heavenly home, and gave his life. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." (2 Cor. 8: 9.) "He said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost." (Luke 23: 46.) The Holy Spirit revealed the truth, and took up his abode in the saints, and is the ever-present Comforter and Helper. "He will guide you into all truth." (John 16: 13.) "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." (John 14: 16.) "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities." (Rom. 8: 26.) "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3: 16.) The whole company of Christians are a "purchased possession," a race of bond servants, whose office is to serve under the will of God. They cannot do their own will or the will of their leading men. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.) "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

(Rom. 6: 22.) "For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints. And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and [gave their contributions] unto us by the will of God." (2 Cor. 8: 3-5.) "Ye are laborers together with God." (1 Cor. 3: 9.) So it appears God, Christ, the Spirit, the apostles, and all the Christians are in this fellowship; giving, receiving, communicating, ministering, distributing, and working, according to power and means, for the purity and happiness of men in this life, and the eternal salvation of all in the world to come. This is no carnal association, no pleasure-making and pleasure-seeking society, no entertainment club. It is a working association for the fulfillment of the will of God in man. All members are workers. There is an "effectual working in the measure of every part" of the body. Where this ceases death ensues.

People who "join the church," "attend the church," and "pay to keep up the services of the church," are in danger of a delusion fatal to fellowship. True religion is not attendance upon services run by others; it is service itself. Nor can we maintain true fellowship by hiring men to do our service. The pastoral system so much relied on in our time is founded on error, and is a rock of ruin to thousands. The desire to be entertained by religious performances may support the ordinary services of a church under this system, but the fellowship of the New Testament requires actual service in each partner. The only way to be in fellowship and lay up treasures in heaven is to do the will of God. Every Christian must do this for himself. This he cannot do by attending services run by others.

Shelbyville, Tenn.

W. L. BUTLER.

SADLY SCATTERED DISCIPLES.

The Christian Standard of February 3, 1900, says some very sensible things on the above subject:

"A fruitful source of loss in membership is the adoption, by many preachers and learners, of unscriptural views on the functions of the church, and of the relations of the ministry to the rest of the membership. The whole 'pastor and flock' business is entirely overdone in many quarters. Such expressions as 'the pastoral relation,' 'my pastorate,' 'the pastor,' 'our pastor,' 'my pulpit,' 'my church,' 'my charge,' etc., are heard, to the immeasurable weariness of those who understand that, in the main, the church is to be made up of intelligent, self-reliant, aggressive, independent, and fraternal disciples of Christ. . . . The common idea of a strong church is a numerous membership, living in peace, watched over and cared for and fed by a devoted and much-loved 'pastor.' But appearances are deceptive, and these so-called strong churches may be the most helpless spiritual organisms imaginable outside their own congregational routine. The members may be as sheep, docile in the hands of their pastor, the shepherd, but at the same time just as helpless as a flock of their four-legged prototypes without him. When the individual members of this spiritual 'flock' are scattered abroad, they have no initiative, and seem unable to promote, in any way, the cause they represent. They are disturbed and unhappy, like stray sheep, until they have found some shepherd who will provide them pasture and protection. Even more than failure to indoctrinate young converts is this false ecclesiastical training responsible for scattered disciples going into denominational churches. With those trained in this dependent idea of church membership, to find a pastor is more urgent than planting a church after apostolic order. Brethren sometimes imagine that a more perfect and comprehensive missionary organization would solve this problem of scattered disciples; but the difficulty is deeper than mere methods of missionary administration, and is to be removed only by a more faithful adherence to the great commission, which requires that men shall be taught before they are baptized, and in a more faithful reproduction of the church of the New Testament. Let a full and uncompromising gospel be preached. Let men be taught that the church is incomparably more than a well-cared-for flock; that it represents the priesthood of believers; that it is to be the most thoroughly individualized fraternity in the world; then, when its intelligent, free-spirited members become brethren of the dispersion, they will not 'join some church' or demand the guidance of some congenial pastor, but, like the ancient disciples, when scattered abroad, will go everywhere preaching the Word."

It is gratifying to read such editorials in the Christian Standard, and it is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when the Christian Standard will boldly and fearlessly inform its readers that the one-man pastor system was never ordained by God and that this unauthorized system is responsible for the evils of which it complains. Do away with the "pastor system," and such unscriptural expressions as "the pastoral relation," "my pastorate," "the pastor," "our pastor," "our church," "my pulpit," "my charge," etc., will be heard no more. The best way to get rid of the fruit is to cut down the tree that bears it. While it is freely admitted that Paul left Titus in Crete to ordain elders in every city, still these are very different from the "pastors" of to-day.

Years ago Isaac Errett and others argued that these "pastors" should be used as crutches for a time, and, when the churches were able to stand alone without them, abandoned; but the longer they have been used, the more helpless have the churches grown, until now the most of the churches imagine they cannot walk at all without the crutches. They are such helpless babes that they will not try to walk without them; and their walking with them is as a lame man indeed!

Not long since a Frenchman was trying to account for the fact that the Anglo-Saxon young man succeeded better than did the young Frenchman. He argued that the French as a nation did not teach their young men to rely upon themselves. The father would deny himself the comforts of life in order to provide a home for his son. On the other hand, the Englishman taught his son some trade and self-reliance. Early in life the son learned to depend on his own exertions. Without affirming or denying the correctness of the statement as applied to the two races, we must concede that every one should be taught to depend on his own exertions.

The mother can never teach her babe to walk by walking for it. She must encourage the little fellow to stand alone and then endeavor to induce the child to walk a few steps. The babe is not expected to be an expert at first. How wonderfully a little encouragement helps the baby! The mother bird pushes out her nestlings that they may learn to fly. They cannot learn to fly while they remain in the nest.

Water becomes stagnant and poisonous while inactive, but in activity it becomes clear and refreshing. In idleness, metals rust, while by constant use they become bright.

As it is in nature, so it is in the spiritual realm. By constant use of our talents we grow strong in the Lord and in the power of his might; in the nonuse of our talents we lose the power that we have for doing good. In inactivity we lose all our spiritual vigor and strength. The one talent was taken from the man who failed to add to it.

Even some professed Christians are inquiring: "What is the matter? I do not enjoy the service of God as I once did."

We believe that all such will find on careful examination that the trouble is with themselves. Many have felt that the preacher was paid to run the church, to do the visiting, praying, etc. Feeling thus, they make very little or no effort to advance the kingdom of God. In idleness, they die spiritually. Until I put something into the church of God I need not expect to get anything out of it. Such as we have we must give to her. We should give money, time, labor, and sympathy.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toils and cares shall end.

We have interest in that institution in which we have invested our capital. I have no more than a passing interest in the bank in which I have no stock; but if I should be fortunate enough to have five thousand dollars in some bank, I should be very anxious to see it succeed and would labor diligently to that end.

So many have absolutely nothing invested in the church of God, it is no matter of surprise that they display so much indifference. They cannot say, like Peter: "Such as I have give I thee."

It is folly, it is unscriptural, and it is wrong to depend on the "pastor" to do the work of the church of God. Let us come back to Heaven's order and then we will not have so many spiritual dwarfs. Every member, every joint, every fiber, and every band has a place to supply in the temple of God. In love the body should edify itself.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Eph 4: 11-16.)

As the members of our natural bodies each has a place to fill, so in the spiritual body. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." (1 Cor. 12: 27.) Individual consecration, individual effort, and individual responsibility will carry the gospel to every kindred, tongue, and tribe, will float the blood-stained banner of Jesus over the habitable globe and fill the nations of earth with a joy and peace which passeth understanding.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

We call attention to the advertisement of the Elkhart Carriage and Harness Manufacturing Company, which has been in the Gospel Advocate for some time. We have done some trading with the company and believe it is in all respects reliable, and that their representations and promises may be relied upon.

D. L.

A lady asked Dr. Lyman Beecher how long it took him to prepare his sermon on the "Divine Government." He answered: "About forty years." Constant and faithful study through a lifetime is essential to the completed and well-rounded thoughts of the true teacher of God's word. Young preachers are more popular than old ones for one of two reasons: the old ones cease to study, or the people prefer fervor and magnetism to true thought and well-studied truth. Man's best thoughts do not come in a set hour of study, they are the growth of years of study and devotion to the word of God.

Every day is a vessel into which a great deal may be poured, if we will actually fill it up—that is, with thoughts and feelings, and their expression in deeds as elevated and amiable as we can reach to.—Goethe.

To neglect the salvation is to neglect opportunities and the means of salvation, is to neglect forming the characters that God will save.

Three things come not back, says an Arab proverb: the spoken word, the discharged arrow, and the lost opportunity.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother P. H. Hooten was at Guthrie, Ky., last Lord's day.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Carthage, Tenn., last Sunday.

Brother S. P. Pitman was in the office on Monday morning. He preached at Carter's Creek, Tenn., last Sunday.

I have entered the evangelistic work this year on the gospel plan and will be glad to hear from churches desiring meetings.—A. P. Johnson, Cades, Tenn.

J. D. Tant (Christian) will meet R. H. Pigue (Methodist) in a six-days' debate, at Waterloo, Ky., on March 26, 1900. All friends near these places are cordially invited to come.—J. D. Tant.

C. W. Stewart (infidel) and Brother J. D. Tant (Christian) will meet in debate at Rogers, Ark., March 17, 1900. The debate will last five days. The divine and human origin of the Bible will be the subject. C. W. Stewart is among the ablest infidel debaters, so Brother Clark Braden says that an interesting time is anticipated.

There will be a four-days' debate at Cottage Grove, Henry County, Tenn., beginning on March 6, 1900, between Elder T. F. Moore (Baptist) and A. P. Johnson (Christian). Two propositions will be debated: (1) The Scriptures teach that baptism to a penitent believer is one of the conditions of pardon from past sins. (2) The Scriptures teach that the kingdom of God was established (set up) during the personal ministry of Christ. Brother A. P. Johnson affirms the first, and Elder T. F. Moore affirms the second. Persons coming on the train will stop at Whitlock.

The revival conducted by Brother T. B. Larimore at the church of Christ on South College street, this city, which has been in progress since December 31, 1899, continues with increasing interest. Services are held at 3 P.M. and 7:40 P.M. on week days, and at 11 A.M., 3 P.M., and 7:40 P.M. on Lord's days. These services are never tiresome, long, or tedious, the audiences being always dismissed before 9 o'clock P.M. The meeting will continue as long as the interest will justify it. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" A cordial invitation is extended to all to come.

EDITORIAL.

A kind word is never out of season.

Each time we conquer sin we grow stronger.

The world admires the man who is not afraid of it.

The man who lives in idleness cannot save his soul.

Gospel preaching is a good remedy for a weak church.

Secret prayer is fine recreation for those who are overworked.

Compromising with error is not the way to destroy its influence.

The Lord never raises a man's wages to induce him to serve him.

A man in prosperity cannot pray very earnestly for daily bread.

A preacher must learn to pray earnestly before he can preach well.

The man who is afraid of abuse and persecution has not the Spirit of Christ.

There are more tollgates on the road to torment than on the narrow way to heaven.

The world always listens to the preacher who is ready to die for his convictions.

Some people have a way of making themselves disagreeable to everybody around them.

Noble deeds and kind words through life are worth far more than flowers on the coffin.

You are on dangerous ground when you cannot think kindly of those who do not agree with you.

The man who is afraid to do right is the meanest, basest, and most contemptible coward on earth.

Men who reject parts of the Bible that they do not understand should refuse to eat for the same reason.

No one can strike effective blows for God until he is ready to receive hard blows from the enemies of righteousness.

Christ, the great Physician, never refuses to cure disease because the patient is unable to pay for the prescription.

It is not wise to spend your time hunting for mistakes in others that should be devoted to correcting errors in yourself.

The world would be greatly improved if people would sow more seed for the living and plant less flowers for the dead.

If we will hold close communion with the Lord and talk less to the world of our sorrows and trials, we will get along better.

If we would all fight sin as vigorously as the British are fighting the Boers, the world would be far better and happier than it is now.

The man who is engaged in reading the Bible has his time profitably employed. The parts of the Bible that we cannot take upon reason, we should accept by faith. Where reason ends, faith begins.

The time, labor, and money spent to acquire a practical education will surely prove a safe investment. Benjamin Franklin once said: "If a man empties his purse in his head, no one can take it from him."

Men who enter the church intelligently expect to put in their best energies in the service of God. They do not find it necessary to go outside the church to do their work, for there is no good work that they cannot do in the name of Christ.

Self-control is far more important as an education than learning in books. The triumph over temptations is a very great victory. What we do is of small importance compared with what we become in the doing of it. No one is safe in the midst of temptation unless he is led by the Spirit of God. In the midst of an evil world God will keep all those from evil who put their trust in him.

I remember hearing of a blind man who sat by the wayside with a lantern near him. When he was asked what he had a lantern for, as he could not see the light, he said it was that people should not stumble over him. I believe more people stumble over the inconsistencies of professed Christians than from any other cause. What is doing more harm to the cause of Christ than all the skepticism in the world is this cold, dead formalism, this conformity to the world, this professing what we do not possess. The eyes of the world are upon us. I think it was George Fox who said that every Quaker ought to light up the country for ten miles around him. If we were all brightly shining for the Master, those about us would soon be reached, and there would be a shout of praise going up to heaven.—D. P. Moody.

It has been truly said that a holy life is a continual sermon. Though it be silent in its speech, yet it speaks with a force that cannot be unheeded, even by the most careless—a force that pulpit oratory never can attain, however eloquent it may be. We may extol the name of Jesus from the pulpit in words of eloquence and elegance, and be listened to with indifference; but let the humblest disciple of Christ manifest holiness in his daily walk and conversation; let him be meek and lowly as our Savior was, patient under difficulties, bold and fearless in danger, trusting and confident even in the darkest hour; and he wields an influence for Christ which all the wisdom and eloquence of this world cannot equal. Best of all sermons is the silent sermon of a holy life; and, indeed, without it all other preaching is useless and vain.—J. S. Thorp.

The greatness of a man's nature comes out more beautifully, perhaps, in sympathy than anywhere else. A new and beautiful story has recently been published concerning Abraham Lincoln. It was while he was a member of Congress, and was at home in Springfield, Ill., during the congressional recess. He was going down the street one morning, when he saw a little girl standing at the gate with her hat and gloves on, as if ready for a journey, sobbing as if her heart would break. "Why, what is the matter?" inquired the great, tall Congressman. And then she poured her broken little heart out to him, telling how she had arranged to take her first trip on the cars that day, and the expressman had failed to come for her trunk, and she was going to miss the train. "How large is the trunk? There is still time, if it isn't too large;" and he pushed through the gate and up to the door. She took him up to her room, where her little, old-fashioned trunk stood, locked and tied. "O," he cried; "wipe your eyes and come on, quick!" And before she knew what he was going to do, he had shouldered the trunk, was down stairs and striding out of the yard. Down the street he went, as fast as his long legs could carry him. The little girl trotted behind, drying her tears as she went. They reached the station on time, and Abraham Lincoln sent his little friend away happy. I doubt if any other scene in the splendid life of that noble man reveals more beautifully the simplicity and grandeur of his noble heart. It is of the same grade and quality of action that afterwards, when applied to national affairs, made men love him all over the world.—L. A. Banks.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Give us your order for an American Revised Version Reference Bible. We have the following numbers: No. 3750, cloth, round corners, red edges, \$1.50; No. 3752, French Morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, \$2.75; No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, \$4; also, beautifully printed on "Oxford India Paper," No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, \$6.25. All of the above have 12 maps each, are printed from bourgeois type (large), and are 8x5 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches.

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added. It is a beautiful book, the pages clear, and the type everything that could be asked for."

We desire to call special attention this week to our new premium offer. For further description, see last page of this issue. We propose to make into a medallion a photograph of yourself, father or mother, sister or brother, friend or relative, and to finish same in good style, and, if you so desire, to frame it in the same manner. This is not common work, but it is first-class in every particular. A perfect likeness from the photograph submitted is guaranteed. These pictures will beautify your homes, and you will be justly proud of them. All of these medallions are made six inches in diameter and have easel attachment. It is not necessary that they should be framed, but of course the frame adds much to the appearance and finish of the picture. This is our offer on medallions: We will send a medallion not framed, made from a photograph sent us, to any one sending us twenty-five cents and one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for one year, at the regular price, $1.50 per year; or we will send the medallion not framed made from a photograph sent us to any new subscriber, or any old one who pays up his back dues, if he owes any, and the Gospel Advocate one year for $2.25. Pictures sent us from which to make these medallions must be cabinet, bust photographs on cardboard, with the name of the one sending same written plainly across the back. The better the picture, the better the medallion will be. We cannot accept any cut, faded, blurred, mutilated, or kodak pictures. These medallions are in two styles. Style 1 is a "steel finish," having the beautiful, soft tone and deep effect of a steel engraving, reproducing all the high lights and shadows shown in the photograph. Style 2 is the "Sepia," an artistic brown, having the clearness and fine tone of an etching. "Sepia" may be had in either "dull" or "gloss" finish. In ordering these be sure to state what style and finish are wanted, whether style 1 or style 2, and, if style 2, whether "dull" or "gloss" finish is wanted. The frames offered in connection with these medallions are of latest design, dainty, and give the picture an elegant finish. For further description of these frames, see last page of this issue. Any one securing medallions under either of the above offers can have frames, of any style, at the price advertised, or as follows: We will send style 2 for one new subscriber and twenty-five cents; styles 4 or 7 for two new subscribers and twenty-five cents. These medallions must be seen to be appreciated. You can soon earn a medallion and frame under this offer.

Fire in the Colony.

While we were waiting for a money order, as notified by letter, the chastising, but at the same time blessed, hand of our God and Father in heaven was laid upon us. It seems to me the older and feebler I get, the more the quality of my poor nerves is going to be tested by some events and accidents of a somewhat alarming and severe character. However, I am thankful to God that the test of our faith so far has not put us to shame. We may tremble, but do not sink down into despair.

We had a fire and one of our colony homes was laid in ashes. About sixty steps from our house stood a plain construction of wood, bamboo, and straw on three earthen walls, with no windows, and only a wide front door—the home of our good Brother Minuske, a young widower, and father of a deaf-and-dumb half-idiotic boy, nine years old. The step-mother of Brother Minuske is our tea house lady, who lives in her own house, which thieves broke into the night before the typhoon.

One day our colony brethren and some hired hands were engaged in cutting down trees, about a mile from our place. Oto, I, and our women were at home. Mr. Taketa was teaching school. It was about between ten and eleven o'clock A.M. Our Oto came in my room when I saw a cloud of smoke passing my window. I turned Oto's attention to it and he cried out: "Brother Minuske's house is burning." Like an arrow flying from the bow, he rushed out of my room. I followed as fast as I could, trembling from heel to head. What I saw almost paralyzed me. Brother Minuske's little hut was wrapped up in a black, rolling cloud of smoke, the red flames bursting forth like giant's arms to grasp anything and everything fit for destruction. The manure sited, fifteen steps from it, was saved only on account of a favorable wind. "Where is the boy?" cried Oto, and in he rushed in the black and blazing fury of uncontrollable elements, disappearing out of sight. I felt like fainting. I could not even pray. In the agony of my tortured heart I only whispered: "O God! O God!" And I fell on my knees, praising our merciful Father, when I saw my noble, my brave Oto come out of that raging hell with the poor boy under his arm as if he were a mere bundle of rags. The child's hair was singed and one ear badly burned. Oto found him clinging to a burning post, crying piteously; but the roaring of the fire drowned the feeble voice of an almost suffocating child. The frantic yelling of some women, who now saw the fire, reached the ears of our workmen in the woods, and, noticing the black cloud of smoke, they came running like mad. Brother Minuske, not seeing his boy, who was standing in a safe place near our house, thought the child was in the fire; and it was a saddening sight to see the pain of a father's tortured heart. Like one who had lost his mind, he went at the burning house to tear it down and get into it, but when our Oto told him the boy was safe, he changed entirely. He did not care for the utter impossibility of saving earthly goods; his child, his poor, idiotic, deaf-and-dumb boy was saved.

The expression of almost adoration in our brother's face when looking at our Oto was overwhelmingly touching. Dear friends, God knows how often I have thanked him for granting me the undeserved privilege of calling our Oto "my son in the faith." Will you pardon me when now I look up to my brave son with a "sanctified" pride for his courageous determination of running into a veritable hell of smoke and fire to save a poor child's life? I never thought of Oto becoming still dearer to me, but now, indeed, he has. To destroy the whole house with all that was in it was a work which took only ten to fifteen minutes. All that our Brother Minuske called his earthly goods was turned into ashes; but in a scorched box we found his New Testament, a hymn book, and several tracts intact.

When all was over and a light smoke curled up into the air from a heap of ashes, where once a humble home stood, our brethren constructed a "bedroom" in our barn for Brother Minuske to sleep in. Of course, he became our guest as long as he will be homeless. At night we experienced the working of Christ's spirit in the hearts of our brethren. They are poor in the full sense of the word; nevertheless, they have made up a purse among themselves and given it to Brother Minuske to help in buying what he needs. And, thank God, the spirit of sympathy was even manifest in the hearts of several of our poor, heathenish neighbors. They gave, in spite of their poverty, humble tokens of willingness to help one who had become poorer than they were themselves.

Next day, Lord's day, when we were preparing to attend the worship, Oto came into my room, his face shining with the glow of joy. "Mr. Taketa wishes to obey the Lord and become a Christian," he said, with a trembling voice. Since this young man has been with us he has been diligently reading the New Testament, and is always present at our religious meetings. He often has long conversations with our Oto on Bible subjects, and the teacher of Christ's religion has become dearer to him than the teacher of English. I never even dreamed of Mr. Taketa becoming earnestly interested in Christianity. He is the oldest son of a wealthy gentleman living in Sawova (our nearest railroad station), who fills a place of distinction among the prefecture officials, caring for nothing but political honor and influence. Oto asked the young convert, "What will your father think of you?" and he said: "I am willing to let my birthright as the oldest son go to my younger brother; I wish to become a Christian. Christianity is the only true religion in the world." This brave word decided the matter. In joyful procession the congregation went to the water and there our Oto baptized Brother Taketa, a blue sky and a smiling sun witnessing the touching scene of faithful obedience.

On our way home we met several persons with troubled faces, hastening to our colony. Evil news runs fast, and so it happened that some relations of Brother Minuske had heard of his house having been destroyed by fire. They came to hunt for the charred bones of the poor child in the ashes; and they were surprised to hear that our Oto had saved the child, but wondered how it ever could be possible that a "sensible" person would run into a burning house to save a deaf-and-dumb child, an idiot, who is "a burden to himself and others." Many people living around us have said the same; and I think the Japanese are very practical in their worldly wisdom at the expense of humane principles. It is Christianity teaching the heathen in Japan the virtue of philanthropic sympathy.

At the evening service we had a very impressive worship around our Lord's table. The church turned over her treasury into the hands of Brother Minuske, and tears of gratitude rolled over his cheeks when he experienced the power of God's love ruling the hearts of those who, like himself, once bowed down before stocks and stones.

After this impressive service was over the bad news came: "Tomi, our orphan, has left us." It touched our hearts like an icy wave. Our cook had caught him stealing peanuts, as he had done several times before and had been punished for it. This poor boy did not let one day pass without either telling a lie or stealing something, even part of the money to buy some things in Aburada. Every time he was discovered when walking in the footprints of Satan, our Oto exhorted him, punished him, and he promised to do better in the future; but the very promises were lies. In school he behaved badly. In fact, his miserable conduct was the reason that our Oto hesitated to receive other orphans for fear that Tomi's bad example would injure the character of some one whose natural disposition was not as depraved as this poor tramp child's was. Tomi secretly exchanged his Sunday clothes for his old suit and slipped away, telling the jinrikisha man he would go where the policeman could not catch him. He had been told if he ever did steal again he would be handed over to the policeman. In the twilight of the evening he ran away. Dear friends, imagine our feelings! What a terrible power "the love of darkness" must be! Tomi had a good home, good food, good clothing, school training, and religious teaching, and he knew very well our Oto was trying to make a "good" boy of him. But all in vain! A few days later we heard he had passed through some villages near by, the people being astonished to see him again on the tramp road. But he boldly said, with the cynical indifference of an old tramp expert: "I told lies, I have stolen, I ran away; but the policemen cannot take me, because I am going to be a beggar; I shall be a story-teller." In Japan there are so-called professional story-tellers, going from place to place, reciting some "hero story" to get what some listeners on the street are inclined to give. We tried to find out where he is now, but his track is lost among the villages and hamlets, scattered in the backwoods of Shimousa. Poor Tomi! Will not one grain of blessed truth find some corner in that child's heart to spring up in years to come, when he will comprehend the difference between good and evil more effectively? May it please God to bring back the erring wanderer from the road of vice and ruin to our home, our hearts!

Brother Oto will soon go to Tokyo and see if he can find some children who have no parents, no home, none to love them, whom we wish to bring out of darkness into light. Tokyo is full of forsaken and neglected children for whom neither the government nor the priests have a home and a heart.

As soon as we are able to build a new house Brother Minuske shall have a "home" again. The little church of Christ in Shimousa knows her duty of brotherly love, and she rejoices in being able to do it. Our church treasury, comparatively speaking, is a gold mine of charity because every member is giving faithfully to the Lord the tribute of love and gratitude "in his name."

Should I distribute all my store
To feed the hungry, clothe the poor,
Or give my body to the flame,
To gain a martyr's glorious name?

If love to God and love to man
Be absent, all my hopes are vain;
Nor tongues, nor gifts, nor fiery zeal,
The work of love can e'er fulfill.

Shimousa, Japan.

F. A. WAGNER.

Brother Sewell: Please explain Ex. 33: 20; 24: 10. I have studied much on them myself, and I once heard a discussion between a brother and a Mormon elder, in which that scripture was used, but not explained, as there were only two discourses and the Mormon had the last. I know that the Bible is not at fault, that it is only my own weakness, and it is only for information that I ask this. Outside of the Bible the Gospel Advocate is the greatest source of instruction on the Scriptures, and in this country we seldom see any one that seems to know any more about the Bible than we do ourselves, and we could not get along without the Gospel Advocate. If you will explain the above passages, you will confer a great favor. As we are surrounded by all kinds of isms and infidelity, we need to be pretty well posted on the different religious doctrines of the day.

(Mrs.) KATE POLLARD.

The first passage says: "And he said, Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me, and live." By reading a little farther on you find that Moses was permitted to see God's back parts, but not his face. The other passage says of several persons: "And they saw the God of Israel." This does not say they saw his face. They saw some sort of manifestation of God, like Moses seeing his back parts, but not his face. So there is no contradiction. It was his face only that he meant when he said to Moses: "There shall no man see me, and live."

We are convinced that in many communities the plain preaching of God's moral demands upon men, of the beauty of holiness and the ugliness of sin, is the best preaching to turn men's thoughts to the Lamb of God. For so soon as men begin to realize their own vast distance from the type of character required by the word of God and illustrated in Jesus, they long to know the way back to the Father's house. First, let them feel the bitterness and folly of the prodigal's lot, and they will begin to seek for themselves the prodigal's forgiveness at the hands of a merciful God. If there were more such preaching—preaching about men's sins not for the sake of showing that the preacher is not afraid to speak his mind, but rather for the sake of showing the better way—we should have fewer half-hearted converts, fewer lapsed members, fewer idle Christians in the church. But in all that is done to make ready the King's highway for his coming into the hearts of men, the herald who cries aloud and the toilers who smooth the road over valley and hill should sink themselves in their task. Prepare ye the way, not for an enlarged church membership, not for more prosperous times, not for personal aggrandizement or reputation, not for a revival merely because it is a revival; but, "prepare ye the way of the Lord," who walks always in the way of the righteous and rejoices to guide erring men by his side.—Baptist Standard.

A man is filled with the fullness of God just in proportion as he is emptied of the fullness of earth. No two substances can occupy the same space at the same time. The more of this world we have in us, the less of God we have in us.—Sam Jones.

Home Reading.

THE LITTLE BARE FEET.

Little bare feet, sunburned and brown,
Patterin', patterin', up and down,
Dancin' over the kitchen floor,
Light as the foam flakes on the shore,
Right on the go from morn till late,
From the garden path ter the old front gate;
There hain't no music ter me so sweet
As the patterin' sound of them little bare feet.

When I mend my nets by the foamin' sea,
Them little bare feet trod there with me,
And a shrill little voice I love'll say:
"Dran'pa, sp'n me a yarn ter-day."
And I know when my dory comes ter land,
There's a spry little form somewheres on hand;
And the very fust sound my ears'll meet
Is the welcomin' run of them little bare feet.

O little bare feet, how deep you've pressed
Yer prints of love in my worn old breast!
And I sometimes think, when I come ter die,
'Twill be lonesomelike in the by and by;
That up in heaven I'll long ter hear
That little child's voice so sweet and clear;
That even there, on the golden street,
I'll miss the pat of them little bare feet.
—Joe Lincoln, in Evening Post.

BIRD PROTECTION—A PLEA.

Nature is a unit. The mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms blend in one harmonious and glorious whole. The animal kingdom, composed of the beasts of the field, the fish of the sea, and the fowls of the air, is one of the mightiest and most beautiful provinces of the world of matter and life. Moreover, life exists in an ascending scale, reaching on from the protozoans, through all the intermediate orders, families, genera, and species, to man himself. Ornithology constitutes a large and wondrous province of being, and is an essential factor in the long and magnificent series of life. Therefore the wholesale and wanton slaughter of the feathered tribes is nothing better than the striking of an entire, radiant link from the golden chain of creation. It is to man the symmetry and beauty of the universe. It is the dissolution of one of the finest arches in the temple of life. It is a profanation of God's handiwork.

The Creator has thrown an inviolable sacredness about all life. When he first permitted animal food to man he did it under certain restrictions, thus more than hinting at the necessity for protection to the lower orders of existence. The animals denominated "clean" were reserved for culinary and sacrificial purposes, while those denominated "unclean" were allowed to roam unmolested through their native haunts, and fulfill their original design. Man could eat certain carefully specified animals, but could not unrestrainedly butcher and waste. He could appropriate the flesh dedicated to the sustentation of the race, but not under any circumstances suggestive of bestiality, such as seething a kid in its mother's milk. He could not feast upon blood because it was the seat and symbol of life.

Kindness to animals is strongly inculcated throughout the Old and New Testaments. In the law of Moses we read: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." In the Gospel of Luke a dog is introduced licking the sores of a beggar, and thus by his sympathy and helpfulness recommending himself to the clemency of man. The ever-open ear of the universal Father "hears the young ravens when they cry," and the ever-watchful eye of God "marks the sparrows when they fall." The idea of protection is forcibly and beautifully suggested by the following from Deuteronomy: "If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, . . . and the dam sitting upon the young or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young." Otherwise annihilation of the species results.

A wholesale and bloodthirsty crusade against the game and song birds which enrich and charm the world we live in is positively forbidden by the letter and spirit of the word of God. The cruelty involved in the unnecessary killing of the feathered tribes exercises a powerful reflex influence upon human character. A gratuitous and unfeeling trifling with the life and happiness of the lower orders of being tends to freeze the genial currents of the soul. Our attitude toward the helpless creatures about us is the touchstone of a true and noble manhood. Such tyranny is the quintessence of meanness. Some one has finely said that "he who would wantonly crush the smallest worm would wade through slaughter to a throne and shut the gates of mercy on mankind." Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" is a charming and potent plea in the interest of universal kindness. The dire results of the cruel shooting of the albatross constitute an emblematic representation of the evils of indiscriminate and thoughtless destruction of feathered life. The traditional gentleness of St. Francis of Assisi is nowhere more clearly seen than in his preaching to the birds and calling them his little brothers and sisters of the air. He felt the mystic bond which unites, and the divinely ordained sacredness which overshadows all life.

Students of ornithology, and casual observers as well, know that birds perform an indispensable function in the economy of the world. Birds destroy the eggs and larvæ of the noxious insects which prey upon garden, orchard, and grove. Forming a copartnership with the wind, they assist in the distribution of various seeds. Their eggs and flesh constitute a wholesome and delicious food. Their feathers and plumage minister directly to the comfort and pleasure of the race; for there is nothing softer than the down of the eider duck, and nothing more highly prized than the spoils of the ostrich. Birds such as the common buzzard and carrion crow, together with their congeners, render an invaluable service as scavengers. Our common poultry are only wild birds in a state of domestication, the pigeon descending from the rock dove, ducks from the mallard, and the infinite variety of barnyard fowls from the Hindoo jungle bird, the Gallus Bankiva. Incidentally the feathered tribes perform the office of guardians of the domestic peace, the martin driving off the bloodthirsty hawk, the mocking bird detecting the prowling dog and vagrant cat and vermin still more noxious and offensive. The cackling of a flock of geese saved the imperial city of Rome, and changed the destiny of the world. It would be difficult to find any man so completely dominated by utilitarian ideas and interests as to be absolutely indifferent to the bird life about him. Their presence heightens the loveliness of every landscape, and brightens the lonely hours which come to all. Their absence would create an unendurable void.

Moreover, nothing in all the range of nature is more beautiful and fascinating than the form, plumage, and motions of birds. In the shapes of the feathered tribes we see the lines of beauty in inexhaustible profusion. That matter should be molded in such variety is a perpetual wonder and charm. Their plumage is the canvas on which nature has done much of her best painting. The ruby-throated humming bird is the very poetry of color, and the little nonpariel is a dream in scarlet, blue, and bronze. The soaring of the eagle, the plunge of the falcon, the skimming of the swallow, and the thousand and one motions of other species are a perpetual challenge to the inquiring intellect and feast to the artistic eye. Our enumeration of the contributions of ornithology to the gratification of the æsthetic faculty would be notoriously incomplete if we did not mention the music of the feathered minstrels of forest and grove. We can recall nothing sweeter than the songs of birds. The birdlike quality of tone is the ambition and despair of the vocalist. Nature is a concert of music, and in that vast blending of pleasing and majestic strains nothing is more ravishing than the melody of those precious songsters for whose life and interests we plead. The voice of the mocking bird would be sadly missed. The absence of the coo of the dove and the whistle of the quail would be an irreparable loss. That atmosphere which does not vibrate with the love call of joyous bird life was not made for man. To break up the orchestra of nature is to rob the race of a part of its patrimony. The best poetry is full of sweet and tender allusions to bird life, for the reason that no record of nature and life could be even approximately perfect after such an elimination. Shakespeare's reference to "the temple-haunting martlet" building his nest where "heaven's breath smells wooing'y" is immortal.

Our essay would be woefully incomplete if we did not recount even briefly the pleasures of field sport. Health and happiness are attendants here. That which makes a man forget for a while at least his business and cares, and substitutes for the languor and fetid breath of city life the buoyancy and fragrance of forest and field, may well be counted among the innocent benedictions of the race. Moreover, the love and pursuit of nature, together with the gratification of matching human intelligence and skill against the instincts and habits of the denizens of field and stream, constitute a safeguard and a pleasure. Whatever lessens the temptations to the fashions and dissipations of life, and opens new avenues to innocent enjoyments, ought to be reckoned a benefaction. Calling up and shooting wild turkeys in the spring, bringing down wild ducks as they come in to roost in the evening, and killing quail over well-trained setter dogs have very justly been deemed recreation of the most exquisite kind. Falconry was once the sport of kings and queens. Great nature is so prolific that even when all legitimate and honorable sports shall have been gratified our game birds would still exist in sufficient profusion. It is this insane butchery by the wholesale which renders protection necessary. If the unpardonable vanity of women and the overmastering greed of men could be restrained, such pleas as these would be unnecessary.

We plead, too, in the interest of science. The classification of birds has long been a fascinating pursuit. Many of its problems, such as the principle of soaring and the annual migrations of birds, have challenged the utmost powers of the mind. Instinct is still an unfathomable secret. New questions are constantly pressing to the front. Science has no broader and richer field than this.—T. R. Pierce, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

TWILIGHT TALKS WITH BOYS.

Our use of spare time tests us. What we become when released from duty is what we really are. A boy's measure may best be taken in his idle moments. If he naturally sinks into low thoughts and words, or seeks diversion in bad companions, be sure that his true nature is not noble; but if a boy employs his leisure in healthful fun and harmless recreation, if his thoughts are such as can without shame be taken into the sunlight, and if his inclination is toward helpful books and worthy associates, then he may be marked as a boy who is pretty sure to become a man worth while.

In our division at Chickamauga last summer we had a soldier who used his odd moments aright. Rood was a private in the Thirty-first Michigan Regiment, who was gifted with rare talent for entertaining. What a boon to the weary soldiers were his tricks and jokes and funny stories! Night after night he went about the regiments entertaining "the boys" with his side-splitting tales of "McClure," the Irish recruit. Rood told me one day how he created "McClure" and his exploits. When on guard, he said, pacing his lonely post, he would occupy himself with devising new experiences for his favorite character, and in making up jokes to use in his entertainments. Thus the hours that were so tedious and tiresome to most soldiers were to him welcome times of pleasure and profit.

Rood had learned the secret of making right use of his idle moments. He busied himself during his otherwise unoccupied time in planning for the good of others. He made cheery, wholesome thoughts his guests. We can all see the wisdom of this, and understand how it made Rood one of the best-known and best-liked men in camp. But do we see the advantage of a similar course for ourselves?

Is it not true with most of us that our spare time is wasted, if not ill used? The easy and natural way is to fall into idle dreaming or small thoughts and small talk. We often brood over little things that should be forgotten, or else speculate about other trifles that may happen. Most of our musings and dreamings at these times, too, are about ourselves. Now, in all these things, boys, there is a grave danger to our life.

Spare moments may either make or unmake us. The boy who forms the habit of spending his free time in thinking about great things, in planning to be helpful, in cultivating his own powers, and in reading noble books, has adopted one of the wisest methods of self-improvement. The odd bits of time that come to all of us are really opportunities. Blessed is he who uses them aright.

"Killing time" is a common phrase. Yet we never "kill time" without killing opportunity. No sensible boy, who is eager to be somebody and do something in this big world, ever tries to "kill time," for he knows how precious are the hours that never return. Instead, he seeks to get something out of every moment, so that each may count in his life. He has no time for sheer idleness, though he has plenty of time for honest play and faithful work.

Boys cannot attach too much importance to that great portion of life commonly called "spare time."—Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., MARCH 1, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

OPENING THE SEVENTH SEAL.

Our last article on "The Book of Revelation" closed with the seventh chapter, under the sixth seal, and the events therein given. The eighth chapter begins with the opening of the seventh seal, and its events run to the close of the eleventh chapter.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets." (Rev. 8: 1, 2.) This was a wonderful vision, but I do not know what it means, and therefore pretend no explanation upon it, beyond its own expression. Very many men claim to understand it, and give very confident statements of it; but I do not believe they really know any more about it than I do. I do not know where to locate the heaven spoken of, nor any explanation of the half hour, nor what the silence was for; and it is no use for any man to try to tell what he does not know. To me this does not belong, but is one of the secret things that belong unto the Lord. When the whole matter has been fulfilled, it will likely be understood. But that John saw this vision just as detailed, I have not a doubt; and that it will be understood by those for whom it was intended and that it will benefit them, I have no doubt. Therefore we lose nothing that could benefit us by not understanding these things, and we need not overtax our brains in trying to understand them. There will be a time when these matters will probably be as plain as the prophecies concerning Christ are to us now; but until that time comes, people need not be overanxious about it. The seven angels that John saw, received seven trumpets, which they were to sound, and of these we will presently have something to say.

"And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." (Rev. 8: 3, 4.) One thing about this is very encouraging to the children of God, and that is the assurance that the prayers of the saints are held in tender regard before God. This is another one of the things connected with these intricate prophecies that every child of God may receive encouragement from; and that is certainly very consoling. Then, in the next place, "the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." (Rev. 8: 5.) This certainly signifies some sort of fearful events and upheavals that will take place among men on this earth; but we do not know when, nor among what nations.

Then next in this vision, when the Lamb had opened the seventh seal, "the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up." (Rev. 8: 6, 7.) The sounding of this trumpet indicate fearful things to take place on this earth. The figures are strong, and the reality is sure to be quite as strong as the figures indicate. The idea of blood, and hail and fire, and the burning up of trees, and of green grass, is something that may well be dreaded. We cannot undertake to tell the when, where, or the how of these things; nor need we be anxious about them. The saints, the Lord's people, will be cared for. The Lord's ears will never be closed against their prayers, and all things will continue to work for their good so long as they are faithful.

"And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood; and the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed." (Rev. 8: 8, 9.) No man can tell just what will be the events following the sounding of this trumpet; but whatever they may be, and whenever and wherever fulfilled, they will be awful to experience and behold, especially to the wicked, for there will be no escape for them.

"And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter." (Rev. 8: 10, 11.) These figures are remarkably strong, and indicate things that ought to open the eyes of the wicked.

"And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise." (Rev. 8: 12.) I will give no man's opinion as to the meaning of this, or who will be involved in its fulfillment; but somebody certainly will, and the only way to fortify against it is to be a faithful servant of God and be entitled to his protecting care.

But as the vision proceeds, its shadows grow darker and spread more widely upon the earth and its inhabitants. "And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!" (Rev. 8: 13.) This part of the vision indicates that terrible ordeals are in store for the inhabitants of this world. The Lord foretold fearful things that were to come upon Nineveh, Babylon, Egypt, and Jerusalem, long before they were fulfilled; but they came with all the severity of the figures that foretold them. So will these things come, and that with all the severity indicated, unless the people of this world repent and turn from their wicked ways. Nineveh was spared in the time of Jonah, because they repented; and the world would be spared these awful calamities, so far as they pertain to the future, if they would repent. But there is very little sign as yet of any general repentance on the part of the world at large; and this is truly sad. But it is wonderfully cheering that "the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." No man who faithfully serves God need fear these awful woes that overhang the inhabitants of this earth. They are for the wicked, and the wicked will be the sufferers in them.

"And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads." (Rev. 9: 1-4.) This vision portends nothing but darkness and woe for this world. As to the particulars of the time, or of the nations to be involved, the Lord's people have no need to trouble themselves. But there is an exceedingly bright side to the righteous. I do not offer any interpretations on the seal of God, as to what it is; but it is certain God will put his seal upon none but the righteous, and no matter how dark the clouds of distress that may lower upon the wicked, the Lord will see and know his own seal upon his own people, and will care for them. The locusts that were to come out of the smoke that was to darken the sun and the air were not to hurt the trees or the grass, but only those men who have not the seal of God in their foreheads. It ought to give the souls of the righteous great courage and strength to read such consoling words in their behalf; and it ought to stir up sinners, and lead them to embrace the gospel and become sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Perhaps some few will be thus warned; but the masses of this world seem to go through life with eyes closed to such things, and get no warning from them. But the righteous should cry aloud, and spare not, and try to arouse the people of this world to a sense of the dangers that surround them. The plain passages that involve the ruin of the wicked should be sounded in their ears until all who can be reached by the gospel, the precious love of heaven, shall avail themselves of its benefits while they have time and opportunity.

But darker and darker the picture grows for the wicked. These locusts were not to kill men outright, but they should be tormented five months, and the torment should be like "the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them." (Rev. 9: 5, 6.) This indicates something truly awful. It indicates men suffering so terribly that they would rather die from it than to suffer on; but death flees from them, and they suffer on. They agonize and suffer until they really desire to die, but death comes not to deliver them from their tortures. It is something truly awful, something to make men shudder at the very thought. I will not try to tell when these five months of suffering will begin, nor how long they will last. I have no time to spend that way. I had rather spend my time and strength in assuring the people that they will come, as foretold, and try to lead the world to turn to God and serve him, that they may have the seal of God in their foreheads, and be in his protecting hand and loving care; for these things are coming, and the wicked cannot escape. They will come as a thief in the night upon the wicked. "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." The Lord gives full warnings, but the people will not heed them. The righteous should stand as heralds all over the world to repeat these warnings, and to impress upon men their danger; not by trying to tell them when these things will come, but that they are surely coming. If I had the power to assure the whole world that these things are at the very door, and will break upon the world at once, that fact would not save them. Nothing but the gospel of Christ can save, and men can embrace that as well without knowing when these terrible calamities and sufferings will come as with it. In fact, the excitement of knowing that these things were right upon them would be in their way in loving and obeying the Savior. Men need to be calm and deliberate in this matter, and obey Jesus because they love him, and to come into harmony with him, and not simply because they are afraid of immediate ruin. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" A man that would not serve God until he thought his death was at the door, or the end of time immediately at hand, would not be in any condition to be saved, anyway. In that case he would be moved by the fear of eternal ruin, and not from the love of truth and a desire to become holy and good; and this may be the very reason why the Lord has left the time of the end in the dark; so that no man can have a knowledge of it beforehand to move him to do what he ought to be doing every day of his life, from love to God and a pure desire of doing his will. But if any one needs dark pictures to move him, these pictures are found in these visions and prophecies of Revelation. This picture of these locusts, that came out of the smoke, the sting of which is so awful as to make men want to die, and yet cannot, is surely dark enough; and no one need delude himself with the idea that it will not come. Just as well deny or discredit any other part of the Bible as this. It is enough to make one's heart ache to contemplate these things.

"And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon. One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter." (Rev. 9: 8-12.) Men may study these descriptions as much as they please and build as many theories as they please about what nations or armies, or what men, or in what attitude they will be to fulfill the descriptions as given; but they can never know whether they are correct or not, unless they chance to be living when they are fulfilled. Building theories beforehand for the fulfillment of such visions and strong figures as these is worse than a waste of time. But they are sure to come, and people need not be uneasy about that; and it is a fact that locusts, whatever they may represent, are bad, and were under the guidance of a very bad king, and have a very bad origin every way. The names given this king, both in the Hebrew and the Greek, mean ruin and destruction. "As a proper name it is given to the angel prince of the infernal regions, the minister of death and author of havoc on the earth." (Thayer's New Testament Lexicon.) Thus the whole matter involves the wicked, and they are the ones especially in danger in these things. What an awfully dangerous thing it is to persistently live in wickedness, and that, too, with the light of Heaven's truth before us! If these locusts represent armed men, engaged in warfare and destruction, they will be very wicked, because their king, their leader, is so wicked. Some say this is what it means; and it may be so, for aught I know. But suppose it is so, then who knows what men, and of what nation or country, and at what times they begin and end their work? It is useless for any finite mind to try to solve such questions. As Christians, it is better for us to be studying and doing our present duties than to be wasting time in trying to tell whether the events indicated by these visions are past or future, or whether belonging to the old or new world, or to heathen or civilized nations. Be a faithful Christian, and leave all events over which you have no control to Him that doeth all things well; and so long as you continue faithful, you will have nothing to fear. There are two woes yet to come under this seventh seal, which we will notice in our next article. E. G. S.

ARE THERE TOO MANY MINISTERS?

"This question is raised again by the Interior. It argues that our supply of ministers is too large, because in the North 'we have twice as many ministers as self-supporting churches.' We do not care to analyze its calculations, because they do not in the least affect the question. Back in the seventeenth century, the question might have been raised: 'Are there not too many emigrants going to the United States? There are already ten times as many families on their way thither as the number of cleared farms.' The emigrants would have laughed in the face of objectors, and would have replied: 'Yes, but not too many to clear the farms; and the more that go together, the stronger are we against our enemies.' So at the present, while the number of ministers may or may not be in excess of the number of self-supporting fields, it is not in excess of the openings and opportunities for planting the gospel. In the days of Christ, he bade his disciples to lift up their eyes and behold the fields already white to the harvest. How many self-supporting Christian churches were there at that day open to the ministrations of the disciples? Not one. There was, therefore, according to the argument of the Interior, an oversupply of at least seventy ministers. And yet Christ bade his disciples at that time: 'Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.' (Matt. 9: 38.) Christ thought that under these circumstances there was not an oversupply, but an undersupply. The reason which Christ gave for bidding them pray for more ministers was not that there were self-supporting churches awaiting them, but that there were souls who might be saved. 'The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.' (Matt. 9: 37.) He did not say that the comfortable pastorates were plenteous, nor the promises of support abundant, but that the souls to be saved were abundant. What the preachers did in that day was to create fields. By going and preaching they led men to the Savior; then a church was organized, and then the preacher found a support. Much of the same can be done at the present day. If our younger ministers will seek for localities where there are unsaved people and go in among them, rarely will they fail to find some family to feed them, and the Lord will promise clothing of some kind; and they will build up a field which will grow up to the ability of supporting a pastor. The souls are here, unsaved. Let us seek them out."

We publish the above from the Christian Observer, of Louisville, Ky. We commend the spirit of what it says. The position of the Interior shows how the work of the preacher has been perverted. It seems to think the work of the preacher is to enter into places made ready to support him. It leads to the idea that churches are planted to furnish places for preachers.

As the Christian Observer says, in the beginning there were no churches to support preachers. It was that lack of churches that caused Jesus to send out preachers. Because the world was without churches of God, Jesus told his preachers: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "Go, . . . teach all nations." They were sent to convert people and so build churches. The harvest that was white for the reapers was a world in sin, without churches of God in which they could be saved. A world without churches was the ground of the prayer for more laborers in the vineyard. The true preacher's mission is to the lost, the sinful, those without religious instruction and influence. The fewer the churches, the more preachers needed. The true church will be able to edify and build itself up. All of its members will study the word of God, and each do what he can to edify the church and convert the world. He will do this by personal service, not by paying some one else to do it for him. Personal service is more acceptable to God than money gifts. It is much more helpful to the man who renders it. The work develops his own spirituality. Contact with the needy and the lost, with sinners, excites more and more the interest in their welfare and salvation. A preacher that looks around for a place to support him cannot be a true preacher of Christ; he would benefit the cause of true religion were he to go at some honest calling. Preaching is not an honest calling to those who seek it as a support. Paul preferred an entirely destitute field, lest he should build upon another man's foundation; and while he labored among these, he preferred to work with his hands for his own support. Persons that cannot and will not preach without a support guaranteed them are not the preachers Christ sent out or asked the disciples to pray the Lord to send into the harvest field of lost sinners. We have heard of young men among disciples, while they were in idleness, waiting for a call, quoting the language of the apostles, "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables," as an excuse for not doing other work, when they were doing nothing. These apostles were giving all their time and strength to teaching the word of God, not waiting for a call or a place made ready for their support.

There is another passage of scripture that is often in its teachings perverted. Paul said: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 13, 14.) The facts concerning the priests in the temple are, they ate of the offerings of the temple only while they were serving in the temple. The same priests did not serve continuously in the temple. They did it by courses. The priests did not carry the offerings of the temple to their homes to live in while there. They had their cities, and their suburbs for their fields and their cattle, and lived off of these when not in the service of the temple. That figure would teach that while the preacher is engaged in preaching he should live of the offerings to the Lord; but when not engaged in the work, he should make tents or do some honest work.

The whole idea of professional preachers is a perversion of the scripture teaching. A man who hunts a place for the support is pretty near a professional preacher. A man who educates himself for a preacher as a means of a living is a professional preacher.

No man ought to be called a preacher, save as he preaches. The work alone makes him a preacher. When he ceases to preach, he ceases to be a scriptural preacher, and if a man does not devote his whole time to preaching or in preparing for it, he ought to devote his spare time to making tents or some useful calling. The world can never be converted by men who make their preaching depend upon the money they receive. Such men are not enough in earnest; they have not imbibed a sufficiency of the Spirit of Christ to impart that Spirit to others.

The Episcopalians and the Presbyterians have paid their preachers more than any of the religious denominations. They have been better educated. They have less of the aggressive spirit and make fewer converts than any of the religious bodies. The work of turning the world upside down has been done by men without support. Luther, Wesley, Campbell, and their compeers have done the work of reforming the world. When they have organized churches to support preachers and educated preachers that looked for churches to support them, then the zeal grows cold and the work wanes.

The churches are on the ebb tide now. Those with most money and overstocked with preachers waiting for charges show the greatest decrease and failure. We ought to learn from this that the world can never be converted by this kind of religion. The preachers make the impression on the world that preaching the gospel is a matter of barter, that preaching is a profession out of which to make a living. A popular preacher of one of the wealthy denominations in Nashville, some years ago, resigned. A couple of men who admired his preaching spoke of his popularity and of his leaving. Then one said: "But he will not preach another discourse until he can get three thousand dollars a year for it." That preacher could make popular discourses, but he could not affect the spiritual condition of persons who thought this of him.

Preaching has become too much a profession for a living. The spirit of religion is destroyed. Unless the salvation of souls and the glory of God be the leading motive in the preacher, he will not benefit the world. The ambition of a true preacher ought to be to go into a destitute field and build up a Bible constituency around him. This especially should be the holy ambition of a young man. Drink into the Spirit of Christ, who left heaven to come to earth to save the lost. Go to the most destitute field and labor there. When you have built up a flock you may drink of the milk of that flock. This spirit even falls short of that which animated Paul. When no more places that had not heard the gospel were found in the country he was in, he hunted new fields, to go to them. He sought places without the gospel and without churches and Christians, and to these he went, even to old age. The preacher is intended for destitute and needy fields, and the true preacher will seek these instead of places to support him; and the true church will help the preacher in the destitute field, and will not call him away to support him to entertain them. To follow God is life; to turn from him is death. The issue cannot be avoided. D. L.

Brother Sewell: Please explain in Gospel Advocate Matt. 16: 28. Who was it to be "standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom?" X.

The Savior evidently referred to some of the people that were at that time standing around him. When he used this language he was far along in his personal ministry, and the time of death drawing on, and consequently the time was approaching when his kingdom, the church of God, was to be established. The expression that he should appear in his kingdom does not necessarily mean that he would appear in person, but that his kingdom would be set up in his name and by his authority, and his power and authority would be in it. And it was no great while after Jesus said this until his kingdom was set up, on the day of Pentecost, and about three thousand souls entered into it that very day; and doubtless the majority of those standing around him when he uttered those words were living, and some of them probably present at Jerusalem when the kingdom was set up.

No good deed, no genuine sacrifice, is ever wasted. If there be good in it, God will use it for his own holy purposes; and whatever of ignorance or weakness or mistake was mingled with it will drop away, as the withered petals drop away when the full flower has blown.—Frederic W. Farrar.

There is no work so humble that faithfulness in it will not be noticed and rewarded.—Anon.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

HURST.

Sister Mary E. Hurst was born in Mercer County, Mo., on September 27, 1858, and died at Zyba, Kan., on January 23, 1900; aged forty-one years, three months, and twenty-six days. She was married to Brother Garrett Hurst on January 30, 1873, in Bell County, Ky. To this union there were born ten children. Seven of them are now living, two sons and five daughters; three died in infancy. She came to Kansas with her husband in 1874. She obeyed the gospel on February 26, 1885, and lived a faithful Christian life until the grim monster, Death, removed her from this sphere; and she has been transplanted to the abiding place of the saints in rest. Sister Hurst was a loving mother, devoted wife, and kind neighbor. She was faithful as a Christian, and dearly loved the service of the Lord in all its appointments. It was my happy lot to be associated, to some extent, with her in the service of the Master. Those who knew her best loved her most. May Heaven's rich blessings abide with the sorrowing companion and children.

Beyond this land of parting, losing,
and leaving,

Far beyond the losses darkening
this;

And far beyond the taking and the bereaving,

Lies the summer land of bliss.
D. T. BROADUS.

Belle, Plaine, Kan.

RAWLSTON.

Sister Nora Killebrew was born near St. Bethlehem, Tenn., twenty years ago next April. She obeyed the gospel at about fourteen years of age, and was married to Mr. Rawlston during the Christmas holidays of 1898. She was assassinated in her bedroom on the morning of February 10, 1900, by a negro man who was cooking for them at the time. Her husband was at the barn attending to his stock and on his return to the house he heard a scream from his wife's bedroom, and on entering the negro was leaving the bed, where his wife lay with her throat cut. He shot the negro in the yard. A large crowd attended the burial, which took place near her father's residence, on February 11. It was one of the saddest funerals I ever attended. Our sympathy goes out for the heart-broken father and mother and the young husband and brothers and sisters. Sister Nora was a modest, sweet girl, a beautiful bride, a faithful Christian. God, who can care for us and our loved ones in life, can take care of the dead. We trust she has gone on to meet her brother, who passed over the river a few years ago. May the Lord comfort the hearts of this sad family. May this sad bereavement bring them closer to each other and close to God. It will be but a short time until we will meet our loved ones gone before.

F. B. SRYGLEY.

HASKINS.

A small package comes in my mail. I quickly open it. What does it contain? A cabinet-sized photograph and a lock of soft, glossy, dark brown hair. What is the message it brings? It only repeats sad tidings we have heard before—that a young man who made

Does Your Baking Powder Contain Alum?

Prof. Geo. F. Barker, M.D., University of Penn.: "All the constituents of alum remain (from alum baking powders) in the bread, and the alum itself is reproduced to all intents and purposes when the bread is dissolved by the gastric juice in the process of digestion. I regard the use of alum as highly injurious."

Dr. Alonzo Clark: "A substance (alum) which can derange the stomach should not be tolerated in baking powder."

Prof. W. G. Tucker, New York State Chemist: "I believe it (alum) to be decidedly injurious when used as a constituent of food articles."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, Yale College: "I regard their (alum and soluble alumina salts) introduction into baking powders as most dangerous to health."

In view of such testimony as this, every care must be exercised by the housewife to exclude the over and over condemned cheap, alum baking powders from the food.

Baking powders made from cream of tartar, which is highly refined grape acid, are promotive of health, and more efficient. No other kind should be used in leavening food. Royal Baking Powder is the highest example of a pure cream of tartar powder.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

his home with us a year since, a student of the Georgie Robertson Christian College, is dead. The unfriendly reaper spares not even the young. J. Everett Haskins lacked but a few weeks of being twenty-one, when on August 10, 1895, he yielded to the rigid grasp of typhoid fever and crossed the turbid river. He left the request that one of his pictures be sent to us. He knew we were his friends and cherished for us a fond remembrance even in death. He was a young man of many noble characteristics; had a large, warm heart; was easily approached, courteous, and obliging. He was, however, easily influenced by his associates, and would sometimes be led slightly out of the path of duty; but he would readily confess his failings and make amends. I know of no one seemingly more appreciative of advice. While here at school he yielded obedience to the Lord, and during his last months seemed to approach nearer and nearer the cross, and died in the gospel faith. His death spread a halo of gloom over the family. At the home fireside there is a vacant seat, and there a dark cloud still hovers over parental hearts, to be chased away only by the sunshine of God's love. Little did he or we think when he left us last March that his earth life was so near its close. Truly,

Death rides on every passing breeze,
It lurks in every flower.

"Any word may be our last; any farewell, even amid glee and merriment, may be forever." What a warning to the young! How many are thus unexpectedly called away just as they reach manhood and womanhood! Let us all be ready, for we "know not the day nor the hour."

(Mrs.) R. P. MEEKS.

WALLER.

Mrs. Sallie E. Waller, wife of S. H. Waller, entered into her eternal rest, at 10 o'clock, on Friday night, January 19, 1900, at her home, near Glasgow, Ky. She was the daughter of James and Elvira Boyer, and was born in Saline County, Mo., on July 20, 1860. She was left fatherless at the early age of three years, and soon after, with the family, moved to Logan County, Ky., where she was educated at Browder's Institute, under the teaching of Prof. J. H. Burnett and Prof. J. H. Fuqua. Her musical education was obtained at the same institute under the instruction of Miss Jennie Blackburn. In September, 1877, at seventeen years of age, she was united in marriage to S. H. Waller, in Logan County, where they remained until 1883, when they moved to Glasgow. When only fourteen years of age she gave her young heart to the Savior and became a member of the Methodist Church. After coming to Glasgow she identified herself with the disciples of Christ, being baptized by Brother T. A. Reynolds, and rejoiced in the precious promises of the gospel, and died in the blessed assurance of that hope which is the anchor of the soul. She leaves behind to mourn their loss a devoted husband, seven children, one sister, and two brothers, besides a host of friends and acquaintances to whom her memory is precious. Her greatest desire was to live long enough to rear her children to be good Christians and useful citizens; but, realizing that it was God's will for her to "go up higher," she summoned her children to her bedside and with that Christ-like resignation that had characterized her life, she submitted her will to that of her Lord's and bestowed the sweetest benediction a mother can bestow on the precious jewels God has given her by saying: "Children, be good." She was a faithful member of the First Christian Church at this place, and we shall sadly miss her; but we know that our loss is her eternal gain. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the church on Sunday afternoon, January 21, 1900, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends, after which her body was laid to rest in Odd Fellows' Cemetery, our beautiful "city of the dead," to await a reunion with earth's loved ones in God's own good time. The "home call" to the better land has taken from us a true sister, a devoted and faithful wife and mother. The earth tie is broken and a link has been added to the golden chain of God's love to draw us heavenward. W. M. BAKER.

Glasgow, Ky.

Capt. W. L. Kneedler, of the United States hospital ship Missouri, says that he made a tour of Southern Luzon, in company with General Young, just before leaving Manilla. The conditions there show a complete cessation of war. "I found the people perfectly contented and engaged in their agricultural pursuits," said the Captain, "and they are very prosperous. Splendid crops are being raised and many cattle, and there were no signs that the Filipinos were not satisfied with the new order of affairs. As far as this whole district is concerned, the trouble seems to be at an end. Manilla itself is quiet and prosperous. There is absolutely no sign of disturbance there. I was amazed at the amount of work that had been done toward making the place sanitary. The town is in a remarkably clean condition."

For Debilitated Men, Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. B. Alexander, Charlotte, N. C., says: "It ranks among the best of nerve tonics for debilitated men. Renews the vitality."

"A Fair Outside Is a Poor Substitute
For Inward Worth."

Good health, inwardly, of the kidneys, liver and bowels, is sure to come if Hood's Sarsaparilla is promptly used.

This secures a fair outside, and a consequent vigor in the frame, with the glow of health on the cheek, good appetite, perfect digestion, pure blood.

Catarrh—"I have had no return of the catarrh which troubled me for years, since Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me." Mrs. JOE MARTIN, Washington St., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Dyspepsia—"Complicated with liver and kidney trouble, I suffered for years with dyspepsia, with severe pains. Hood's Sarsaparilla made me strong and hearty." J. B. EMBERTON, Main Street, Auburn, Me.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A Note from Brother Officer.

On January 30, 1900, my patient, suffering wife left me for the home of the soul. I was sad, and my heart hurt much more than I can express in words. I have received many letters full of soul sympathy and tenderness. I cannot answer all. Time alone and faith in the eternal Father can give me comfort. One of the most comforting letters was from a true and tried disciple of Dallas, Tex., a Mary, whose son was called away; but the dear boy gathers imperishable flowers from amid the eternal silence of the stars. He is with Lota and the rest of the faithful redeemed; they are at rest. I can say no more. Nine days after my Lota left me for the rest at the end of life's work, one of our orphan Indian girls sent for me. I left at 6 o'clock and rode all night in a wagon, but was too late; Mrs. Phebe Anderson, the wife of one of nature's noblemen, was at rest. We have reared thirty-six orphan children. We love them all. Phebe Cummings, who is at rest, was always kind and good to us. She was a Christian. She is now with the world's Redeemer. R. W. OFFICER.
Atoka, I. T.

From Japan—Report for 1899.

The past year has been the most difficult one we have spent in Japan; and we can only report that our work here has held its own, with a very small margin of gain. We attribute this state of the work to several causes—viz., the intense antiforeign feeling prevailing among the people, the revival of Buddhism, the wide-spreading influence of skepticism, the divided condition of Christian workers, etc.

The small church in Koishikawa have met regularly to observe the Lord's Supper, and for teaching and exhortation. The children's meetings have been very well attended, the number being about thirty. The day school for children of poor families has enrolled about forty, with half that number in daily attendance.

The house I built for a printing office is being occupied by Brother Bishop, to whom I sold my machinery I am trying to open up a Christian bookstore—on a very small scale, of course—where Christian books and tracts will be sold. Below I make a financial report for 1899, including two months of 1898:

Balance on hand at last report was $139.40. The following amounts have been received since that time: From Sister Nettie Craynon, $15; G. B. Hoover, Senatobia, Miss., $10; J. R. Wier, Wier, Tenn., $1.25; N. M. Roberts, China Springs, Tex., $1.50; R. J. Clark, Thorp Spring, Tex., $1; W. M. Crow, Plattsburg, Mo., $1; A. Ayres, Nehoma, Neb., $1; E. L. Lindsey, Santa Anna, Tex., $5; Church at Claysville, Ky., $4.45; Knob Creek Church, Ky., $1.37; J. W. Zachary, Lexington, Ky., 50 cents; Christian Leader, $2; J. H. Teel, Lexington, Ky., $3; Miss Belle Brown, Okolona, Ky., $1; S. F. Morrow, Nashville, Tenn., $2. Total amount received during the year, $50.07; grand total, $189.47. During the year I have paid to school-teacher and for rent of lot, $123.51; to Industrial Printing House, $186; for publication of Voice, $30.83. Total, $340.34; which left a deficit for the year of $150.86.

The deficit mentioned we paid by keeping boarders and selling books. While we have rejoiced to be able to put $150 into our Christian work out of the labors of our own hands during the past year, yet we have had to deny ourselves in many directions, and have had to postpone the payment of some debts due others. We have thought it best during the new year to close up some of the work or turn it over to others in order to pay off some obligations which should have been settled before this. We are very thankful for the help brethren have sent to this work, all of which help has gone directly to the work, and none of it to our personal support. It would enable the work to grow more rapidly if we were able to help a native brother to give his whole time to the ministry of the word. We should like to ask some brother or church to come forward with eight dollars a month for the support of a native evangelist here.

Sisters Craynon and Penrod have a flourishing children's meeting once a week, in the Kanda Chapel, where Brother J. M. McCaleb worked. The day school there also continues, with about twenty-five children in attendance. We ask the brethren to pray for the Lord's work here, which is now so weak.
E. SNODGRASS.
Tokyo, Japan.

"HONESTY is the best policy." Nobody contradicts it.

Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Which does he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough. They are accurate, uniform.

Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.
Address Macbeths, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame.
RAPHAEL CO.
Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

Do not forget our premium offers. Take advantage of them now.

Protection

FOR PLANTERS

Seed is the planter's ammunition, and good seed is just as important to the man behind the plow as good ammunition is to the "man behind the gun."

Out 1900 Catalogue of EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN is a 190-page book, 9x11 inches, containing over 700 engravings and 6 superb colored plates of Seeds and Plants—a perfect mine of information on garden topics. To give our Catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following liberal offer:

EVERY EMPTY ENVELOPE Counts as Cash.

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen, and who encloses us 10 cents (in stamps), we will mail the Catalogue, and also send, free of charge, our famous 50-cent "Harvest" Collection of seeds, containing one packet each of New Large-flowering Sweet Peas, New Giant Pansy, New Giant Comet Asters, White Plume Celery, French Breakfast Radish and New Freedom Tomato, in a red envelope, which when emptied and returned will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from Catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.,
35 AND 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

The W.V. Davidson Lumber Co.

FIFTH STREET AND CUMBERLAND RIVER,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Wholesale and Retail...	LUMBER	Rough and Dressed.
-------------------------	---------------	--------------------

ESTIMATES PROMPTLY MADE.

Correspondence Solicited. Sash, Doors, and Blinds.

American National Bank,

OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.
MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 40
MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.	WORD EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 10
VOICE OF PRAISE.
MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $ 65
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 75
WORDS OF TRUTH.
MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $3 60	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $1 50
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 4 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 1 75
MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.	WORD EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid..... $2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid..... 2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
232 N. Market Street, Nashville, Tennessee.

"Biographies and Sermons," by F. D. Srygley, is a book that will be read with interest by all true Christians. The price is $1.50 by mail, postpaid.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Hood's Pills

Do not gripe nor irritate the alimentary canal. They act gently yet promptly, cleanse effectually and

Give Comfort

Sold by all druggists. 25 cents.

General News.

Argentine and Portuguese ports have been declared free of the bubonic plague.

Washington's birthday was observed generally throughout the island of Puerto Rico.

Dr. W. W. Eddy, for forty-nine years a missionary to Syria, died at Beirut on January 29.

The National Convention of the Democratic party will meet in Kansas City, Kan., July 4.

Onyx and manganese ore have been found in large quantities in the vicinity of Wartrace, Tenn.

Wireless telegraphic communication will be established between five of the Hawaiian Islands by an American company.

Gen. Luke E. Wright, of Memphis, Tenn., has been appointed by the President a member of the Philippine Commission.

Terrific snowstorms have raged throughout Germany. They have been very fierce along the Baltic coast and in the eastern districts of the empire.

Shelbyville, Tenn., is soon to have a new pencil factory, and also a wagon and carriage factory. These industries will employ a large number of men.

For the past forty-two years, save one, Dr. Alexander Maclaren has preached an annual sermon to the young people of his congregation in Manchester, England.

A general strike is on at all the mines between Sand Lake, Pa., and Jackson Center, the men going out on refusal of an advance of five cents a ton for run of the mine.

At Chicago, Ill., Leander J. McCormick, member of the famous harvester machinery firm and founder of the Leander McCormick Observatory of the University of Virginia, is dead, of pneumonia.

Secretary Root will continue the policy begun by Gen. Leonard Wood, of reducing the force of the United States troops in Cuba, and during the spring there will be a heavy reduction of troops in the island.

Secretary of War Root has requested Dr. J. H. Hollander, Professor of Finance of Johns Hopkins University, to go to Puerto Rico as a special commissioner, to revise the laws relating to taxation in that island.

The Virginia Iron, Coal, and Coke Company is completing the erection of two hundred and fifty coke ovens at Tom's Creek, East Tennessee, which will make a total of five hundred ovens there, employing at present two thousand five hundred men.

It is said that the fishing industry in North Carolina yields an annual product of the value of over $1,000,000 at no cost to the State, as the Fish Commission pays its own expenses and turns from $8,000 to $10,000 into the State Treasury every year.

The Pittsburg Plate Glass Company has announced a general advance of 5 per cent on glass prices, effective at once. This is due to the fact that foreign makers advanced prices 15 per cent about ten days ago, the foreign market being very strong.

Governor General Wood has granted permission to the Spanish War Museum Company to examine the wreck of the Alfonso XII., in the harbor of Mareil, to determine the practicability of raising her with the object of utilizing her steel hull as a merchant vessel.

The Senate in executive session has ratified the treaty between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, affecting claims growing out of the joint control of the Samoan Islands. This treaty was a separate document from the political agreement dividing the authority over the islands.

Roentgen rays are proving their value in field surgery in South Africa. A fresh equipment of apparatus has been ordered and skilled operators are being sent to the front. The Marconi system of wireless telegraphy is being placed on three British vessels, which are intended for active service.

Reports of the discovery of gold in Brewster County, Tex., have caused much excitement. Over three hundred claims have been located, and a number of eminent mining engineers are on the ground. The district is said to rival in richness and extent the New Almaden finds of California.

Assurances have reached the State Department from the German Government that the Samoan treaty, which was ratified by the United States Senate about a week ago, will receive the ratification of the Bundesrath and the Reichstag within a week. There is practically no opposition to the treaty in either branch.

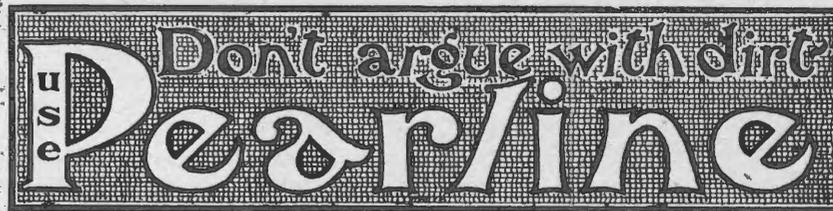

Out of a total of forty-two cases of bubonic plague, in Manila, thirty-two deaths resulted, half of them being Chinamen. Thirty of the inspectors are Chinamen, who have been furnished by the Chinese merchants. The health department census shows the population of Manila is about 190,000, including 31,900 Chinese.

Exsenator Matthew W. Ransom, now seventy-three years old, made on his estate near Weldon, N. C., more than one thousand bales of cotton this season. He has not sold any of it. The recent advance in price has netted him over $5,000. After George Vanderbilt, General Ransom is the largest landowner in North Carolina.

The United States, one of the greatest growers and exporters of cotton, found use for 48,000,000 pounds of raw cotton, grown in other countries, valued at $5,000,000, in 1899. Two-thirds of this amount came from Egypt. America exported in the same period 2,600,000,000 pounds, or 5,000,000 bales, of cotton, valued at $165,000,000.

The American post office at the Paris Exposition will serve the double purpose of accommodating tourists and of exhibiting the postal devices in which Yankee ingenuity leads the world. American mail cars, beside which those of other nations seem primitive, will be there, and also the fur-clad Alaskan carrier, with his dogs and sleds.

In the recent snowstorm in New York seven inches of snow fell. It proved to be a blessing to the unemployed of the city, giving work to thousands of men in clearing the streets and sidewalks. The storm caused little inconvenience in the city, and, being unaccompanied by severe cold, did not add greatly to the sufferings of the poor.

Once armies were guarded at night by sentries, pacing their rounds. Now, in South Africa, the Boers stretch electric wires around their camps, which, when touched, set bells a-ringing at headquarters. In brief, it is a giant system of burglar alarms to guard an army from surprise. There are few more striking appliances of science to warfare than this.

The past week in Congress has been devoted largely to the consideration of the relations of the United States to its insular possessions. The most important of these is the question as to whether the commercial intercourse between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be under a tariff or under the free trade system allowed between the States of the Union.

Railroads throughout the country are still making heavy contracts for new cars for both their freight and passenger services, and there is no present prospect of a decrease in the business of the car and foundry plant. Last week alone orders were placed with companies in this country for seventeen thousand cars, probably the largest number which was ever ordered during a week in February. They were ordered by only twenty railroad companies.

An indication of some of the important industrial effects which may be expected to follow the opening up of China is given in recent reports concerning the Chinese tree called the "tu chung." Both French and English botanists assert that this tree contains a valuable substance resembling rubber or gutta-percha. Mr. Weiss, of Owens' College, believes that the substance is a true caoutchouc, and that the tree will become of great economic importance.

The recent trials at Indian Head, on the Potomac, of the armor made for the Russian battle ship Retvizan, building in this country, seemed to show that armor plate of the Krupp form made in America has the advantage in the endless contest between guns and armor. Five-inch projectiles with a striking velocity of more than two thousand feet per second failed to penetrate more than two inches in a five-inch plate, and the projectiles were broken in pieces, while the plate was not cracked.

The miners of the Proctor Coal Company, of Jellico, Tenn., about four hundred in number, have been ordered to strike by the president of the Miners' Union, but none of the men have walked out. About fifty miners who joined the union were dismissed by the company, and it is on this account that the strike is ordered. It is believed that the miners will not walk out, because they say from 8 to 12 per cent more is being paid the employees than union men in other mines are getting.

In South Africa the British forces under Lord Roberts have relieved Kimberley after sharp fighting. General Cronje's forces in retreat continued the fight with great stubbornness.

There were many killed and wounded on both sides. At the latest report, Cronje's position is reported as hopeless. His army occupies the bed of the Modder River, and is completely surrounded by the British forces. General Buller's army is steadily advancing to the relief of Ladysmith, having driven the Boers from every position held by them south of the Tugela River. It is expected that Ladysmith will be reached within a few days.

President Eliot, of Harvard University, has offered to receive, for the summer school for teachers, one thousand Cuban teachers, free of charge. General Wood believes that the advantages to be gained by this opportunity will be enormous and will have great effect on the Cuban children now attending the schools. The teachers will be surrounded for a time by academic influences and will be elbow to elbow with American teachers, which cannot but have an influence on the methods of teaching in the island. It is believed that arrangements can be made to send the teachers to the United States on board of transports.

A. S. Lascelles & Co., of New York, dealers in Puerto Rican products, have commenced action in the United States Circuit Court to enjoin Collector of Customs Bidwell from collecting duty on goods brought from Puerto Rico, on the ground that Puerto Rico is not now a foreign country and there is no authority to collect any duties. In the papers it is argued that Puerto Rico is a part of the territory of the United States, and the action is brought not only to enjoin the collector, but to compel him to repay the amounts which the Puerto Rican merchants have been obliged to pay in this instance, amounting to about half a million dollars.

It is announced that an American syndicate, with a capital of $10,000,000, will immediately begin the construction of a great steel plant in the city of Mexico. The plans for the mammoth concern have been completed and the ground purchased for locating the several buildings. An abundance of high-grade iron ore are within easy shipping distance. The plant will make a specialty of manufacturing steel rails and will be the first industry of its kind to be established in Mexico. It will give employment to about four thousand men in the different departments when they are in operation. Several American capitalists in Monterey are heavy stockholders in the enterprise.

The rival claimants for Governor of Kentucky have consolidated the injunction suits filed and have agreed on a statement of facts to be submitted to the courts. Both Legislatures have been meeting in the Capitol at Frankfort, each with its own presiding officer. The Democratic Legislature ratified its former election of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. It has done no other business. All the soldiers have left Frankfort, save about one hundred, who remain as bodyguard to Governor Taylor. Both Governors issue orders. The prison authorities recognize the Democratic Governor, but refuse to recognize the orders of Governor Taylor. The apprehension of violence seems to have subsided.

The calico printing interest uses over forty million dozen eggs annually, while the coffee roasters, photographic trade, the cracker combines, and the chemical trades consume twice as many. In fact, the grocers are compelled to compete in the general market against buyers from a dozen manufacturing interests. America last year exported over $20,000,000 worth of eggs, but the American egg had hardly any chance. French, German, and Canadian eggs reached the foreign consuming markets to the exclusion of the American article. This is due, say the leading dealers, to the fact that under the present tariff Canada, being unable to ship eggs to this country, ships them to Europe. The extent of the egg business in this country, though it is not generally known, is larger than many of the supposed great industries. The profits are much smaller and the transactions much quicker.—Southern Fruit and Truck Grower.

The Senate substitute for the House currency bill was passed by the Senate by the decisive majority of forty-six to twenty-nine. The bill, as passed, consists of ten sections. It provides that the dollar of twenty-five and eight-tenths of gold, nine-tenths fine, shall be the standard unit of value, and that all forms of United States money shall be maintained at a parity with it, and that Treasury notes and greenbacks shall be redeemable in gold. The Secretary of the Treasury is to set apart a fund of $150,000,000 in gold for the redemption of these notes and to maintain this fund at a figure not below $100,000,000; he is empowered to sell bonds of the United States bearing interest at not exceeding three per cent. It shall also be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as fast as silver dollars are coined, to retire an equal amount of the Treasury notes and to issue silver certificates against the silver so coined. Under certain provisions, too, gold certificates shall be issued against the gold held in the Treasury. No United States notes or Treasury notes shall be issued in denominations of less than $10, and no silver certificates in denominations of more than $10.

Why Send for Peter?

In the first place, who was Peter? "A servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 1.) To him, with the other apostles, were given the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt. 16: 19); also the power, or conditions, to remit or retain sins. (John 20: 23.) From the foregoing we learn that Peter was a proper person to send for, if the sender wanted to know something of the Lord Jesus Christ and learn how sins are forgiven.

1. Did some one send for Peter?
2. If so, who was the person to send for Peter?
3. If Peter was sent for by some one, by whose authority or instructions did he send?
4. For what purpose, or why, did he send for Peter?

A correct answer to the above questions will be of great importance to each one of us.

1. Yes. (Acts 10: 5-29.)
2. Cornelius sent for Peter. (Acts 10: 31, 32.)
3. An angel of the Lord. (Acts 10: 3-6.)
4. To hear of his words whereby he and all his house should be saved. (Acts 11: 14.)

Let us notice the character of Cornelius. He was a "devout," God-fearing, almsgiving, and praying man. (Acts 10: 2.) Was Cornelius a saved man, a Christian, when he sent for Peter? If so, the angel did not know it; and, besides, if Cornelius was a saved man at that time, the message of the angel was incorrect.

There is a well-settled principle, by both divine and human law, that when one person confers a favor on another, the one conferring the favor has a perfect right to specify the conditions by which the favor is conferred. This no one can deny.

No one can be saved without faith. (Heb. 11: 6.) Evidently Peter's giving had something to do in the conversion of Cornelius. God made choice among the apostles, that the Gentiles, by the mouth of Peter, should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. (Acts 15: 7.) Cornelius had to hear the "word of the gospel" before he could believe, hence the necessity of sending for Peter. The faith of Cornelius was produced by hearing the "word of the gospel" from Peter's mouth. What was the effect of this faith? "And put no difference between us and them [Gentiles], purifying their [Gentiles'] hearts by faith." (Acts 15: 9.) Was there any repentance connected with the conversion of Cornelius? "When they heard these things [spoken by Peter], they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." (Acts 11: 18.) Was there anything else for Cornelius to do? "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 48.)

Peter's mission was one of salvation to the Gentiles, hence the importance of sending for him. In the conversion of Cornelius we find that the "word of the gospel" spoken by Peter was necessary. It was necessary for Cornelius to believe the "word of the gospel" spoken by Peter; it was necessary for Cornelius to repent, as a requirement of the "word of the gospel;" it was necessary for Cornelius "to be baptized in the name of the Lord," as a requirement of the "word of the gospel;" all of which he did, and was therefore a saved man as the result of sending for Peter.

If Cornelius was a saved man before sending for Peter, he was saved without the "word of the gospel," saved without hearing the "word of the gospel," saved without faith, saved without repentance, saved without being "baptized in the name of the Lord," and saved without Christ.

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Brother Boaz' Last Year's Work.

During 1899 I preached three hundred sermons, held seven protracted meetings, had seventy-six additions under my labors, and held four debates—all with Baptists. My work was very pleasant. While there were some bitter incidents connected with it, yet after all the difficulties with which I had to battle, I did enjoy last year's work above all others. I hope that this will be a more prosperous year than last, and that the churches everywhere will put forth every effort to grow spiritually and morally. I believe that if the faithful preaching brethren through this section of the country will work with a determination, and continue to stand by the word, the sectarianism that now troubles the church will soon be no more. Last year I found many of the brethren determined to stand by the church as it is revealed in the Bible, and I hope to find more this year. I was located last year at Milan, Tenn., and preached mostly in that community; but I have now moved to Fulton, Ky., and am working here.

The men I met in debate were all gentlemen, and acted as such in debate. I met H. K. Thomas last April; L. Y. Brown, of Clinton, last November, at Pilot Oak, Tenn.; and T. F. Moore, of Mar. in, Tenn., in December, at Austin Springs, Tenn. Elder H. K. Thomas baptized me into the Baptist Church in 1891. I called on him in every speech for his authority in baptizing me on the confession I made before him and the church, but no answer came. All I have met pursue the same line in defending their false doctrine, by quoting all the passages in the Bible on faith that say nothing about anything else: Never do you hear them quote Gal. 5: 6, "Faith which worketh by love," or James 2. I suppose they do not need those passages.

I hope that in the communities in which I labor during this year other debates will be held. I close with best wishes to the Gospel Advocate, and its readers, hoping all will work with a greater determination to advance the cause of our blessed Lord than ever before.

W. T. BOAZ.

Unsympathetic.

Some of the experiences of a young "pastor," brought up in the city, with some of his country charge, are rather shocking to the nerves.

Such a "pastor" with his wife visited a well-to-do sister of "his church," a widow. After exchanging a few generalities the "pastor," whom we will call Brother A., entered upon business as follows:

"Sister B., I have not seen you at church as often as I could wish. As you know, I am now pastor of your church, and the board of church officers desire me to stir up the members, and especially to insist on all bearing their part in the expense of the church. You know the Jews gave one-tenth to the Lord, and I am sure you ought not to give less. The Lord has prospered you, and, though you are a widow, responsibilities rest upon you to help in this noble work of the Lord."

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.

Sister B. listened attentively, and then, desiring to be social with the pastor's wife, asked her if she intended keeping house and if she thought she would like housekeeping.

"O, no; Mr. A. would die of dyspepsia in three weeks if I were to undertake the housekeeping. I have never done anything of the kind."

After a short visit, Brother A. desired an expression from Sister B. as to what he might expect. She replied:

"My girls and I keep house, cook, wash, iron, work our garden, and then have a hard time to make ends meet; and I am not going to give any of my money to support preachers and their wives who cannot do a hand's turn of work to help themselves. And you need not expect me to attend your church so long as you associate with and keep as a deacon this neighbor of mine, Brother C.; who invites my brothers and my hired help into the saloons to drink."

"Ah, Sister B., you wrong Brother C., I am sure, in making such a charge against him. I have been with him much in his pleasant home and have found him all I could wish in encouraging me in my work."

Two men happened to be at work in the back yard. Sister B. called one of them in and asked: "Did not Brother C. ask you into a saloon to take a drink?" "Yes, m'am, and I took it." She then called the other man in and asked the same question. He answered: "Yes; he invited me, but I would not accept such an invitation, and did not drink."

The deacon, being quite wealthy and willing to liberally help support the pastor, continued in close association with him and his church; but the sister, who was so particular about church matters, was not troubled again. This was an actual occurrence and I have given it as nearly as I can, word for word, as it was related to me. If others of the congregation had been as frank with the "pastor" as this sister was, perhaps it would have saved him two years of fruitless labor, resulting in a signal failure except the drawing of the salary. It is to be hoped those who paid it are wiser and better men.

R. A. HOOVER.

Bellbuckle, Tenn.

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure Catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 920 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

We have a first-class piano, taken in exchange for work, that we will sell at a great bargain. We can furnish you the Smith & Barnes, the Willard, the Crown, or the Behr Brothers. The instrument is new, has never been taken from the music store.

10 LOVELY TEA ROSES
THE GIANT ROSE COLLECTION. 50c.

These Roses will bloom freely this Summer, either in pots or planted in yard. They are hardy ever-bloomers. We guarantee them to reach you in good condition anywhere in the U.S.
Yellow Tea, rich Golden Yellow; Precious, deepest Crimson; Mrs. Robt. Garrett, brightest Pink; Maid of Honor, a lovely Blush; L'Innocence, superb White; Empress Eugenie, the sweetest of all roses; Princess Alice de Monaco, Creamy White and Rosy Blush; Jewel, a rose of many colors; Sweet Little Queen, Daffodil Yellow, with Orange Shadings; Lottie Baumgardner, Carmine Shading to Silvery Peach. The above 10 lovely roses for 50 cents.

WHAT YOU CAN BUY FOR 50 CENTS.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 10 Fragrant Carnation Pinks, 10 kinds, 50c. | 12 Sweet Scented Double Tube Roses, 50c. |
| 10 Choice Prize Chrysanthemums, 50c. | 16 Large Flowered Pansy Plants, 50c. |
| 20 Choicest Gladiolus, 50c. | 10 Colours will make a bright bed, 50c. |
| 10 Lovely Fuchias, all different, 50c. | Our Catalog free. Order To-Day. Address, |

THE GREAT WESTERN PLANT CO., Box 39 SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

MOZLEY'S LEMON ELIXIR.

A Pleasant Lemon Tonic.

For biliousness, constipation, and appendicitis.

For indigestion, sick headache, and nervous headache.

For sleeplessness, nervousness, and heart failure.

For fever, chills, debility, and kidney diseases, take Lemon Elixir.

Ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir.

Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir is prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, and will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases. Fifty-cent and $1 bottles at all druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation, and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases; and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite, and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

L. J. ALLDRED,
Doorkeeper Georgia State Senate, State Capitol, Atlanta, Ga.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

is the very best medicine I ever used for the diseases you recommend it for, and I have used many kinds for woman's troubles.

MRS. S. A. GRESHAM.

Salem, N. C.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS

Cures all coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, bronchitis, hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

Twenty-five cents at druggists'. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Christmas and New Year Observances in the Far East.

While giving to the Japanese the gospel of Christ, it is the purpose and aim of the missionaries to, in a measure, acquaint them also with the customs of the Christian home and the Christian's simple and sacred form of observing holidays.

It was my privilege to attend and in a degree participate in two celebrations during the Christmas week just passed, which were conducted in a manner that must reflect great credit upon the faithful servants of the Lord now laboring among these people.

These two churches, Koishikawa and Kanda, are located in different parts of the city, some two miles apart; in connection with each a charity school is conducted, which school is in charge of a Christian Japanese woman. The day school teachers, assisted by Brother Snodgrass and Sister Penrod, trained the children until, in their own language, they could recite in a creditable manner long scripture quotations and sing songs of praise. The little girls rendered their parts with a grace and modesty characteristic of the little Japanese maid; but when the poet wrote, "Boys will be boys," he meant it to apply to boys the world over. However, out of consideration for the Japanese boy's environments, I can in a great measure excuse his shortcomings and look hopefully to his future.

Prior to Christmas a collection was taken among the congregation, sufficient to provide for the children a Christmas treat. The usual Christmas tree was dispensed with. The chapel was tastefully decorated with ferns, evergreens, and small, ripe oranges. A string running diagonally from either side of the pulpit to a center decoration of evergreens in front of the pulpit was hung with gayly decorated kites, which is to the Japanese child an unlimited source of wholesome amusement. On a small table were arranged the other simple and useful gifts, such as school tablets and pencils; while a large tray contained dainty white bags filled with sweets sufficient for all present. As each name was called the child came forward to receive its gift, bowing low in grateful acknowledgment. Following the distribution of presents, cups of steaming Japanese tea were served to the grown-up folks. The Japanese are inveterate tea drinkers, and consider no form of entertainment complete without this beverage. I am thoroughly convinced that it is indulged, by them, to a harmful degree. By them it is regarded as a fine art, and the very unmusical sound they make when sipping it is an expression of their appreciation.

As a matter of course, these holiday festivities are attended only by the Christianized Japanese. The heathen has no conception of what that gladdest of all holidays means to the Christian. On the Lord's day succeeding Christmas, while walking home from morning worship at Koishikawa, I had an opportunity to form some idea of what the advent of the New Year means to the Japanese. Looking in every direction the streets gave one the impression of a forest avenue, so elaborate were the decorations of pine and bamboo and other greens brought from the distant hills, while shops and dwellings were gayly festooned with Japanese lanterns and the flag of their own country mingled with those of other nations. The main streets were closely lined with booths, in which to sell various wares peculiar to the trade. It was also the occasion on which the leading bazaars had their "opening," and the clash of the brass band to attract a crowd was quite American. New Year's eve is to the Japanese a time of all times for sociability and merry-making, and a general good time according to their ideas. On New Year's Day shops and all places of business are closed, and the male portion of the household proceeds to call upon all his friends and to drink to their health; and that "sake" flows freely is evidenced by the number of bleary-eyed, staggering men one meets on every hand. The ladies receive, but do not make calls. It is also a time for adorning the body, and each Japanese, old and young, takes special pride in procuring for the festive season a new and picturesque kimona.

That I am at last here and into the work will come as a bit of good news to those of my friends who more than four years ago manifested so kind an interest in my desire to carry light to the heathen. Whereas I was once hindered by ill health, I have been greatly blessed in coming, for I have grown stronger every day and my health has improved far beyond anything I could ever have hoped for. On my arrival I was received into the home of Brother and Sister Snodgrass, where I am one of them. Profiting by the long years of experience of our faithful brother, I am endeavoring to help him all I possibly can in the good work which he has so faithfully carried on. We are a little band in this far-away land, but we are not alone, and we find far more work than we can possibly do.

NETTIE CRAYNON.

14 Tsukiji, Tokyo, Japan.

"Protection for Planters" is the headline of an advertisement appearing in our columns of the old-established seedsmen and florists, Peter Henderson and Company, 35 and 37 Cortlandt Street, New York. This announcement is to the effect that this firm no longer supply their seeds to dealers to sell again, so that to procure the famous Henderson seeds, the same must be purchased from them direct.

Their advertisement also offers their annual superb catalogue entitled "Everything for the Garden," which is in reality a book of 190 pages, containing over seven hundred engravings and six superb colored plates. This catalogue is sent to all who send ten cents in stamps to cover the cost of postage and mailing. In addition to the catalogue, this firm, wishing to trace the result of their advertising in different papers, will send to all who state where they saw the advertisement a trial collection of six packets of choice vegetable and flower seeds, contained in a red envelope, which when empty and returned with an order from catalogue will be accepted as twenty-five cents in part payment.

"He Mistakes the Effect for the Cause."

That is what the person does who tries to cure rheumatism or any other disease by relieving the symptoms. Hood's Sarsaparilla attacks the cause of these diseases. It neutralizes the acid in the blood and thus permanently cures rheumatism. It tones and strengthens the stomach, restores its natural digesting fluids, and permanently cures dyspepsia.

HOOD'S PILLS cure constipation. Price, 25 cents.

Temples That Throb.

Headache Like Needles in Your Brain, whether a Sick or Nervous Attack.

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC

effects a perfect cure. Many sufferers patiently submit to attacks of headache with the idea there is no cure on earth for them. There is a cure. Headaches, whether attended by sickness of stomach or otherwise, are caused by a disordered nervous system.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, by its purifying, regulating action on the blood, tones up the nervous system, gives easy and natural digestion, puts the whole system in a vigorous state of health. Here are strong words from one who knows:

"Chotard, Miss, December 6, 1897.

"I had suffered from violent periodical headaches for many years, with no hope of relief, when I was advised by Hon. W. P. Lee, of Hamsburg, Ala., to try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic. I did so, and the result was a wonderful improvement in general health and the headaches ceased. I am never without a bottle in the house.

"REV. N. R. WILLIAMS."

Read what Professor Edgerton says:

"Oak Cliff, Dallas, Tex.,

December 16, 1897.

"Dallas News—Gentlemen: I beg to state that I received a sample bottle of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, which I was very glad to get. I think it a great remedy, and believe it will do all claimed for it. I am highly pleased with my experience with it, and take great pleasure in recommending it to those who suffer from indigestion and constipation. Respectfully,

"M. THOMAS EDGERTON,

"President, Oak Cliff College for Young Ladies."

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC

has been on the market for forty-two years, and has grown in name and favor until it is now generally admitted to be the one truly healthful preparation of iron for the blood. It cures ague and chills.

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE Strong and Healthy.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackelford & Shackelford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

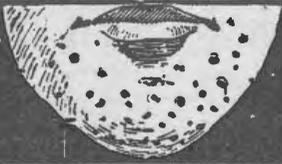

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories. For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

A Sermon on Denominationalism.

Some might say that the denomination they belong to alone is the one body, or church; but this cannot be true, for no one of the denominations claims that all the saved, or all Christians, belong to it; but the word of God clearly teaches that all the saved, or every Christian in the world, belong to the one body, or church of God, and the same process which makes one a Christian makes him a member of the church.

In Acts 16: 34, we read of the jailer and his house, which means the jailer and his family. We also read of Noah and his house, which means Noah and his family. If we read of the house of God, it, of course, means the family of God. Paul speaks thus of the house of God: "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Tim. 3: 15.) Thus we see that the church of God is the house or family of God; and, of course, the family of God includes all the children of God. In Eph. 5: 23, the apostle declares that Christ is the Savior of the one body, or church. A savior is one who saves. Then, to be saved, we must enter into and become members of the one body, or church. In verses 24 and 25 of this same chapter, the apostle declares that Christ gave himself for the church—that is, he shed his blood for the one body, or church. Therefore, to get the benefits of the blood of Christ, we must enter into the one body, or church, and thus become members of it; and it is by the blood of Christ that we are saved or become Christians, and without it we cannot be saved, for without the benefits of the blood of Christ there is "no remission." (See Heb. 9: 22; see also 1 John 1: 7.) It is in Christ (not out of him), says Paul, that all Christians have redemption and forgiveness of sins through his blood. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." (Col. 1: 14; see also Eph. 1: 7.) To be in Christ is to be in his church, for Paul says the church is the body of Christ. "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." (Col. 1: 24.) "The church, which is his body." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) Since all Christians have redemption and forgiveness of sins in Christ, and to be in Christ is to be in his church, it follows that all Christians are in the church. Therefore no denomination can be the one body, or church, as no one of them claims that all Christians belong to them.

If denominationalism, as it now exists in the religious world, is in harmony with the teachings of the word of God, the teachings of his word are not harmonious, but clash and are at war with each other; for this is true of the teachings of the denominations. But we know that this is not true of the teachings of the word of God, that it is harmonious in all its teachings, and surely he cannot approve of that which is so antagonistic to his word.

God had given all things that pertain unto life and godliness before the apostle Peter wrote his Second Epistle, for the apostle, in that Epistle, says: "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." Any denomination that undertakes it will fall far short of tracing its existence back to the time the apostle wrote this language, and none of the prominent denominations of this country can possibly get farther back than the sixteenth century; therefore they cannot pertain unto life and godliness. They are plants which God has not planted, and will therefore be rooted up; for Jesus says: "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." (Matt. 15: 13.)

The Lord established his church, or kingdom, upon the earth, and requires that men and women shall come into it in order to be saved, or to become Christians, and he has not taught any one to found a denomination; therefore those who have founded the denominations abode not in the teaching of Christ. Christ has not taught any one to join a denomination; therefore those who join a denomination go onward and abide not in the teaching of Christ; and this is a most awfully dangerous thing, for the Holy Spirit, by the pen of the apostle John, says: "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." (2 John 9. R. V.)

But it may be asked: "With whom shall we worship?" I answer: With Christian congregations, who worship God exactly in accordance with the teachings and examples of Jesus Christ and the apostles, even if you can find no such congregation consisting of more than two or three. Jesus says: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." (Matt. 18: 20.) There were no organizations formed, except local congregations of the church of God, in the days of the apostles, in which to work for the Lord and worship him. These local congregations are called, in the New Testament, "churches of Christ" (Rom. 16: 16); and wherever the Scriptures speak of churches, they have reference to local congregations, in the one body, or church, and not to denominational organizations. FLAVIL HALL.

(To be continued.)

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for

Refined Paraffine Wax

In every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

LIFE AND WORK OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

Official and only authentic edition. Written by his son, WM. R. MOODY, and IRA D. SANKEY, his lifelong associate and friend. 100,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE. Liberal terms. Freight paid. Credit given. A golden opportunity for you. Outfit free. Write today. P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., 215 Locust St., Phila., or 324 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

The Singer No. 27.

DOUBLE LOCK-STITCH. VIBRATING SHUTTLE.

This sewing-machine is specially adapted for Family Sewing, and more generally used throughout the world than all other machines combined. The self-threading vibrating shuttle is the perfection of simplicity; its movement being shorter than in any other similar machine, less effort is required for its operation.

Every genuine machine carries the trade-mark.

Sold on Instalments. You can try one Free. Old machines taken in exchange.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

NOW READY

Facts, Faith, and Fire

A NEW BOOK BY
B. F. HAYNES, Editor of Zion's Outlook
ORDER AT ONCE OF
Zion's Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth
Sent, Postpaid, to Any Address $1.00

Agents Wanted Everywhere
Liberal Commissions Allowed

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

THE JERUSALEM TRAGEDY

BY
A. P. STOUT

TOUCHES and treats on all the points in the trial and crucifixion of our Savior. The minute details of the times, persons, and places are most interestingly brought out. The awful scenes and sufferings of the "Man of sorrows" are almost as pathetic, graphic, and impressive as if you were an eyewitness. Free from sectarian bias or denominational interest. A boon to all hearts. A heart-touching, life-molding messenger in every home. Forty-five illustrations from the masterpieces. Address

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Price, $1.00

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is in a meeting at Stull. There is no congregation in order there, but Brother Rhodes is there to establish the cause among them. There are many places where such work might be done, and some of it is being done. We can find plenty of missionary work to do in almost every county of many States, and there is no excuse for not doing missionary work. We can find heathen at our door, and they should be looked after. We need not always expect to see them turn to the Lord at once.

I have just closed up two weeks' work at Antioch, Harper County, where there was once a working congregation, but circumstances have been such that there is but little left. Brother Rutherford and family and two or three others are all that will now take any interest. Brother Rutherford was not satisfied without making another effort. He paid the expenses of the meeting and gave his time to the work. We cannot see much of the result, but we must not try to walk by sight, for Paul says we must "walk by faith." One lady obeyed the gospel. We had hearers that did not know anything about the gospel or Christian duty. We tried to teach them Christian duty, first, because there are many professed Christians in the community that do not realize what practical Christianity is. We need much of that kind of work done all over the country. While we did not fail to teach them what to do to be saved, we did not fail to teach them something else. We trust that the seed sown may in the future bring forth more fruit. We can do our duty and the result is to be left in other hands. Withal, we think it was a profitable meeting. May Heaven's blessing rest upon the feeble effort.

Brother Moffitt will soon begin a meeting at Byron, O. T. Oklahoma is becoming a great field for labor. There are many busy preachers there; and, in addition to that, many preachers are being called from Kansas to assist them in their work.

Brother Will. Ellmore, who is located at Harper, has been doing much work in that county. I would have been glad to have met him while so near his home.

Dr. W. H. Boles, of Illinois, is billed for a meeting at Anthony. An extensive advertisement has appeared in the county papers, that informs me that he will preach through the week and lecture every Sunday night, and an admission fee of ten cents will be charged. His daughter accompanies him. She is advertised to give choice readings before his lectures. She also will lead "soul-stirring social meetings and song services before each sermon." The press notices say that she is a "charming young lady and takes her audience by storm;" that she "is an elocutionist of rare ability and adds greatly to the evening's entertainment." This advertisement, with many other press notices, ought to bring the people of Anthony out and arouse them to an appreciation of a unique entertainment. These entertainments will be held under the auspices of the Christian Church of Anthony. Now, readers, please do not say that this is to slur the affair or that it is misrepresented, for I have taken this from their own advertisement, and they certainly are not ashamed of it—would to God they were—or they would not thus advertise. I do not deem comment necessary. It speaks for itself. Its merits will speak for it without any comment. I will leave the county, and therefore will not have the privilege of attending the services thus advertised. "We shall see what we shall see." The Lord will adjust everything "by and by."

Prof. James A. Quarles, after an exhaustive treatment of the ordination question from a scriptural standpoint, concludes in this way: "It is clear, therefore, that there is no scripture warrant for requiring men to be ordained by the imposition of the hands of a presbytery, composed of ministers and elders from a group of churches. There is no instance given in the Bible of such a presbytery. So far as the New Testament teaches, there is not a case in which any preacher received authority to preach from any court of the church, or from any human being, or by any rite or ceremony. Their authority came from the divine command to the church, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature,' impressed upon them by the Holy Spirit." Now mark this firm stand, and then listen to him again: "Shall we, therefore, not have a regular ministry, authorized to preach and to represent the church, and set apart for the work by a rite of ordination? Yes, by all means; but purely on the grounds of expediency, and not at all because the Scriptures command it." This is another case of men being honest in their scholarship, but not willing to abide by it when they come to make the application to their practices; they must hold to their practices notwithstanding the decision of scholarship. It also shows, further, that men will decide that there is no scriptural authority for a thing and yet practice a thing because it suits them and they think it expedient. Their being wedded to traditions and former practices shows that men will not regard scholarship nor divine authority when they want to practice something else.

Anthony, Kan. D. T. BROADUS.

Blood and Skin Humors Cured.

An offer proving faith to Sufferers. Is your blood pure? Are you sure of it? Do cuts or scratches heal slowly? Does your skin itch or burn? Have you pimples? Eruptions? Aching bones or back? Eczema? Old sores? Boils? Scrofula? Rheumatism? Foul breath? Catarrh? Are you pale? If so, purify your blood at once with B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm). It makes the blood pure and rich, heals every sore, and gives a clear, smooth, healthy skin. Deep-seated cases like ulcers, cancer, eating sores, painful swellings, and blood poison are quickly cured by B. B. B., made especially for all obstinate blood and skin troubles. B. B. B. is different from other remedies because B. B. B. drains the poison and humors out of the blood and entire system so the symptoms cannot return. It cures when all else fails. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. Gospel Advocate readers are advised to try B. B. B. Sold at drug stores at $1 per large bottle, six large bottles (full treatment) $5. So sufferers may test it, a trial bottle is given away absolutely free. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, No. 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Write today. Describe trouble and free medical advice will be given.

BLMYER BELL'S CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR PATENT ALLOY BELLS WEIGH. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

HOW MUCH CAN I SAVE?
 This is a question that every man should ask himself when it comes to a business proposition. For instance, we manufacture vehicles and harness and sell them to you direct from our factory at wholesale prices. On this plan the saving to you is about 35 per cent; that is, you would have to pay local dealer or agent about that much more than you pay us for the same quality of goods. Is not this item worth saving? We make 178 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness and are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. We make every article we sell and ship our goods anywhere for examination and guarantee safe arrival. You have the advantage of large selection, newest designs, latest styles, etc. Above all you have a guarantee of quality at a reasonable price. 144-page illustrated catalogue FREE. Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., W. B. Pratt, Secy., Elkhart, Indiana. No. 144—Three-spring Extension-Top Carriage. Price complete with lamps, fenders, curtains, storm apron and pole, $72; usual retail price about $90 higher. No. 180—Double Buggy harness with nickel trimmings. Complete with collars. $32. As good as sells for $30.

Brother Officer's Gratitude for Fellowship and Sympathy.

I have received Brother McQuiddy's letter of February 7, containing check for $88.20. I return the statement, containing names and addresses of contributors:

- Church at Lebanon, Tenn., $17.80;
 - Lizzie Beal, Glasgow, Ky., $1;
 - Belle Brown, Okalona, Ky., $1;
 - Cash, $2;
 - J. W. Pruett, Jennings, Ala., $2.50;
 - Tappie Hunt, Huntingdon, Tenn., $2;
 - W. T. Warren, Paris, Tenn., $1;
 - M. M. Cavanaugh, Sinking Fork, Ky., $1;
 - "A Brother, City," $2;
 - church at Compton's Chapel, $5;
 - O. F. Young, Sparta, Tenn., $1.50;
 - H. W. Smith, $0.90;
 - "A Brother, Laverne, Tenn.," $1.50;
 - Mrs. Jennie Goodpasture, Nashville, Tenn., $5;
 - A. H. Nicks, Newbern, Tenn., $0.50;
 - E. L. Lindsey, Santa Anna, Tex., $5;
 - "A Brother, City," $2;
 - W. E. Fogg, Forest City, Ark., $2.50;
 - Mrs. L. Richardson, Nashville, Tenn., $0.50;
 - Mrs. Jane Dillard, Woodbury, Tenn., $2;
 - Mrs. Gardner Jones, Chapel, Tenn., $1;
 - J. R. Wier, Wier, Tenn., $2.50;
 - Owen's Chapel, Wier, Tenn., $10;
 - J. P. Vorun, Savannah, Cal., $5;
 - Mrs. A. S. Hawkes, Double Springs, Tenn., $1;
 - M. H. Fussell, Dickson, Tenn., $1;
 - W. A. Simmons, Henderson, Tenn., $1;
 - C. E. Page, Stephens' Chapel, Tenn., $1;
 - "A Sister," $1.50;
 - Mrs. Jennie Goodpasture, $6;
 - Cash, $1;
 - Mrs. M. M. Dickerson, $0.50.
- Total, $88.20.

I wish to thank all concerned. This amount is a great help. Others whose names are not on the list you sent me have contributed. So that, except my doctor bill and drug bill, my expenses have been met during the twenty-two weeks I have been watching over patient, suffering little Lota.

Brother McQuiddy's letter was short, but it was so full of soul. Suffering together is good for us in the end. The world's Redeemer said: "My grace is sufficient for thee, my strength is made perfect in weakness." That is true. We are stronger in the Lord when we stand before tottering human weakness. Twenty years of suffering to your friend and sister, my wife, was like the sun to fruit: it ripened her soul for the mansion prepared. She breathed her last in my arms, and left us without a struggle for the home of the soul. She did not ask Leon, our son, to make her any promise. She said she was not afraid of him doing wrong. Then she said to Malmee, our adopted daughter, "Help me to breathe easy;" and she did; and all was over, and she began to live with God. I cannot answer the many kind, good letters. We are grateful to all.

Atoka, I. T. R. W. OFFICER.

Fanning Orphan School was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Terms very low. For further information, address Fanning Orphan School, GLENCLIFF, TENN.

Read the following price list and then send us an order: "Christian Hymns"—Music editions, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 50 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $4.80; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $5.60. Music edition, cloth: Single copy, postage prepaid, 60 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $6; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $6.80. Word edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 20 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $2; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $2.40. Word edition, cloth: Single copy, postage prepaid, 25 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $2.75; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $3.10. "Voice of Praise"—Music edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 30 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $2.75; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $3.35; per hundred, by express, not prepaid, $20. Word edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 10 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, 65 cents; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, 75 cents; per hundred, by express, not prepaid, $5. "Words of Truth"—Music edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 40 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $3.60; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $4.40. Music edition, cloth: Single copy, postage prepaid, 50 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $4.80; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $5.60. Word edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 15 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $1.50; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $1.75. Word edition, cloth: Single copy, postage prepaid, 20 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $2; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $2.25. "Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth," combined—Music edition, boards: Single copy, postage prepaid, 60 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $6; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $7.20; per hundred, by express, not prepaid, $45. Music edition, cloth: Single copy, postage prepaid, 75 cents; per dozen, by express, not prepaid, $7.50; per dozen, by mail, prepaid, $9; per hundred, by express, not prepaid, $60. "Christian Hymns" and "Voice of Praise," combined, at the same price as "Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth," combined. Be sure to state style of binding, whether character or round notes, and always send money with the order.

FITS STOPPED FREE Permanently Cured by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER. No Fits after first day's use. $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE. Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and to fit patients who pay express only on delivery. Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. H. H. KLINE, L.D., 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

A $12 Bath Cabinet FOR ONLY $5.00 Our new 1902 style Square Quaker guaranteed best of all cabinets at any price. Has real door on hinges, steel frame, best materials, rubber lined, folds flat, lasts 20 years. Turkish and Vapor baths at home $6 each. Open the millions of pores, sweats poisons out of the blood, keeps you clean and healthy, beautifies complexion. Physicians recommend it for Colds, La-Grippe, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Obesity, Female Ills, all Blood, Skin, Nerve or Kidney troubles. Money refunded after 30 days use, if not as represented. Price with heater, directions, formulas, $5.00. Face steamer $1.00 extra. Order today. Write us. Valuable Book FREE. Big Wages. Splendid Seller. AGENTS WANTED. World Mfg. Co., 27 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,
No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US
TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS
AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF
$1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR,
WE WILL FORWARD THE
BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO-
NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mamilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii. 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii. 30)

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a

NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE, $2.00
flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium
for ONE NEW subscriber. ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁ ❁

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals, for one year, with the choice of ONE of the following premiums, FOR $1.50

- (a) Home and Farm, One Year;
- (b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
- (c) Our New Calendar for 1900. ❁ ❁ ❁

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES
BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. ❁ ❁ ❁ ADDRESS

❁ GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. ❁

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

STYLE No. 2

is a Britannia, hard-metal frame, plated with 24-carat gold, hand burnished and polished, guaranteed not to tarnish; is very neat and popular. Price $1.00 is a Britannia, hard-metal frame, florentine pattern, heavily plated with 24-carat gold, center rim burnished and polished by hand; is elegant and substantial; warranted not to tarnish. Price $1.75 is a hardwood frame, same pattern as No. 6, finished in ebony, raised ornamentation, finished in gold, hand burnished, giving a beautiful effect. Price $1.75

STYLE No. 4

STYLE No. 7

A NEW PREMIUM ..OFFER..

Your Picture

MADE ON METAL

A photograph of yourself, father or mother, brother or sister, friend or relative, enlarged into a Medallion, finished in first-class style, and framed in the same manner.

A PERFECT LIKENESS FROM THE PHOTOGRAPH

Pictures of your loved ones which will beautify your homes, and of which you will be justly proud. These Medallions are all made six inches in diameter, and with easel attachment. They are real works of art and must be seen to be appreciated.

This is Our Offer on Medallions:

We will send a Medallion (not framed), made from a photograph sent us, to any one sending us 25 CENTS and ONE new subscriber for one year at the regular price, $1.50. We will send a Medallion (not framed), made from a photograph sent us, to any new subscriber, or to any old subscriber who pays up his back dues, if he owes any, and the Gospel Advocate one year for $2.25. Those who secure Medallions under either of the above offers can have any style frame at the price advertised, or as follows:

Style No. 2 for 25 cents and one new subscriber ❦ ❦ ❦

Styles Nos. 4 or 7 for 25 cents and two new subscribers

These frames are late designs; are dainty, elegant, and give the required finish to the picture. Pictures sent us from which to make Medallions must be cabinet, bust photographs, on cardboard, with name and address of one sending same written plainly across the back. The better the picture, the better the Medallion. No cut, faded, blurred, mutilated, or kodak pictures accepted. We offer these Medallions in two styles. Style 1 is the "Steel Finish," having the beautiful, soft tone and deep effect of a steel engraving, reproducing the high lights and shadows shown in the photograph. Style 2 is the "Sepia"—an artistic brown—having the clearness and fine tone of an etching. The "Sepia" may be had in either "dull" or "gloss" finish. In ordering be sure to state the style and finish wanted.

— ADDRESS —

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market St.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

GOSPEL ADVOCATE

NASHVILLE, TENN., MARCH 8, 1900

VOLUME XLII. NO. 10

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

Sweeney's Sermons

By JOHN S. SWEENEY

and an interesting life
sketch of the author written by an intimate friend

The subjects of the sermons are: The Simplicity that is in Christ, The Three Sides of Christianity, The Church of God—Its Foundation, The Word of Truth, Our Aim, Regeneration, Acts of Apostles, The More Excellent Way, Paul's Answer to King Agrippa, Action of Baptism, Baptism for Remission of Sins, What Must I Do to Be Saved? Infant Baptism, A Plea for the Church of God. Of the sermons, J. W. McGarvey says: "I hope they will have a wide circulation, for they are calculated to do great good in the way of enlightening the people on the first principles of the gospel of Christ."

304 Pages, Neatly
Bound in Cloth

Price ❀ $1.00

Biographies and Sermons

By F. D. SRYGLEY

424 pages; contains twenty sermons by twenty men, with two introductory chapters, and a biographical sketch of each man by the author. Illustrated. Photograph of each preacher. The preachers whose pictures, biographies, and sermons are given are: T. B. Larimore, J. H. Halbrook, F. B. Srygley, J. A. Clark, W. L. Butler, John R. Williams, Alfred Elmore, D. Lipscomb, James S. Bell, W. H. Carter, James E. Scobey, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, G. G. Taylor, J. M. McCaleb, R. W. Officer, E. A. Elam, A. McGary, M. C. Kurfees, J. M. Barnes. Camp meeting and baptizing scenes, life among the Indians, etc.

Intensely
Interesting

Price ❀ $1.50

The Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell

By D. LIPSCOMB

This is an interesting book. One hundred and twenty-one pages are devoted to a memorial of his life, work, and character, by David Lipscomb; one hundred and ninety-seven pages to sermons, by Jesse Sewell. Sixteen of his best sermons are here given, covering all the phases of conversion, and especially on points upon which disciples and denominations differ. It contains sermons on such themes as: The Conversion of Cornelius, Atonement and Reconciliation, Witness of the Spirit, Form of Doctrine, The Grace of God, The Name of Christ, In Christ, The Son of God, The One Foundation, etc. This book will well repay any reader, and gives a larger fund of information to those who may not understand Bible teaching on the matter of becoming a Christian.

12MO, 318 PAGES, CLOTH

Price ❀ $1.00

Seventy Years in Dixie

By F. D. SRYGLEY

An intensely interesting book, consisting mainly of the recollections, sayings, and doings of the inimitable T. W. Caskey. Compiled, arranged, and written by F. D. Srygley. It gives interesting descriptions of the manners and customs of the country when Indians were here, when people lived in log huts and hunted deer, bear, and other wild animals for a living. It tells how the country was cleared and how houses were furnished. It describes marriages, funerals, revival meetings, political gatherings, logrollings, corn shuckings, singing schools, dances, frolics, quiltings, making soap, carding, spinning, weaving cloth, etc., in the olden times. It tells about slavery, secession, and the war. It is humorous, pathetic, religious, biographical, and full of deeply interesting information. Illustrated.

400 LARGE OCTAVO PAGES
LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

Price ❀ $1.50

Handbook on Baptism

By J. W. SHEPHERD

With an Introduction by
J. A. HARDING

Testimonies of Learned Pedobaptists on the Action and Subjects of Baptism, and of both Baptists and Pedobaptists on the Design thereof. The author enjoyed exceptional facilities for making his collection of authorities. A great book of reference, and invaluable to every Bible student. It has been pronounced to be the best compilation of authorities on the question of baptism ever published.

Large Type
8vo Cloth
486 Pages

Price ❀ $1.50

The Gospel Plan of Salvation.

By T. W. BRENTS

Clears away the mists of sectarianism, and in a clear and logical way presents the gospel plan of salvation. It treats in a clear and exhaustive way the following all-important themes: Predestination, Election and Reprobation, Calvinistic Proofs Examined, The Foreknowledge of God, Hereditary Depravity, Establishment of the Church, Identity of the Church, The New Birth, Faith, Repentance, The Confession, Baptism—What is It? Who Should Be Baptized? The Design of Baptism, The Holy Spirit. As a book of reference, it is invaluable. Highly recommended by the press and the brotherhood. 667 pages, 8vo., good paper, clear type, well bound.

Eight Editions
Have Been Sold

Price ❀ $2.00

ARE YOU A SUBSCRIBER?

READ OUR LIBERAL OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE ONE YEAR

AND . . .

OUR ART BIBLE,

No. 933, FOR

$3

OR IF YOU WILL SEND US
TWO NEW SUBSCRIBERS
AT THE REGULAR PRICE OF
$1.50, EACH, FOR ONE YEAR,
WE WILL FORWARD THE
BIBLE TO YOU AS A PREMIUM.

THIS IS A LARGE TYPE EDITION, SELF-PRO-
NOUNCING TEACHER'S COMBINATION BIBLE.

POOL OF HEZEKIAH, JERUSALEM.— The Patriarch's Pond, or Pool of Hezekiah, is north of the street that runs from the Jaffa gate. It is an artificial reservoir, 240 feet long, 144 wide, and 10 deep. The bottom is rocky, and covered with small stones. It receives its supply through a conduit leading from the Mamilla Pool, which is supposed to be the upper pool mentioned in Isa. vii. 3, 2 Kings xviii 17. In summer the pool is either empty or nearly so, and its water is chiefly used for filling the bath of the Greek Patriarch. "This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of the Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David" (2 Chron. xxxii 30)

It has the usual Helps: Subject Index, Maps, Concordance, etc. The covers are flexible, and edges are gold over red, making quite a handsome book. The text is the King James, with footnotes showing the changes made in the Revised Version, thus practically making both versions in one.

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE one year to either NEW subscribers or RENEWALS, and a

NELSON'S 32MO TEXT BIBLE, flexible covers, gold edges over red, FOR or we will send the Bible as a premium for ONE NEW subscriber.

$2.00

We will send the GOSPEL ADVOCATE to new subscribers and renewals, for one year, with the choice of ONE of the following premiums, FOR

$1.50

- (a) Home and Farm, One Year;
- (b) Gold-edge Morocco Pocket Testament;
- (c) Our New Calendar for 1900.

SUBSCRIBE TO-DAY. EARN ONE OR BOTH OF THE BIBLES
BY SENDING US THE NEW SUBSCRIBERS. ADDRESS

* GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. *

232 N. MARKET ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

ARREARAGES, IF ANY, MUST BE PAID UP IN ORDER TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF ANY OF THESE OFFERS.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 10.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, MARCH 8, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

D. Lipscomb's Sermon at the State Prison.....	146
On Being Unequally Yoked.....	146
We Are Sons.....	147
Some Anecdotes of Pioneers.....	147
Living Epistles.....	147
Know the Lord.....	148
Preaching to the Sick.....	148
Miscellany.....	149
Queries.....	150
Home Reading.....	151
Some Christian Calls.....	152
More on the Seventh Seal.....	152
Obituaries.....	154
General News.....	156
The Church Supplanted.....	157
Texas Notes.....	157
Among the Churches.....	158
Nannie Dunn.....	159
The Gates of Hell.....	160
From China.....	160

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The Christian Standard speaks editorially against denominationalism as follows:

"While all believers remained simply Christians, a sect institution was utterly impossible. Either through ignorance of the gospel truth or through the undue influence of their mistaken leaders, some have been prevailed upon to accept a party name and to submit to the authority of party management. Yet Christianity is no more responsible for their party affiliations than the constitutional rights of the American freeman are responsible for his submission to the direction of political bosses and party managers. Christianity does not make denominations or sects. The spirit and letter of apostolic teaching is that Christians shall be of the same mind and of the same judgment, and that there shall be no divisions among them. So it is very evident, then, that Christianity is not responsible for denominationalism. But, further still, what we call 'Protestantism' is hostile to the denominational disorder of Christendom. None of the great reformers planned to organize a sect. Their purpose was to set the people free from ecclesiastical bondage, and bring them into the liberty of sons of God. Usually smaller souls coming after, or else contemporaries injudiciously affecting the reformer's judgment, are responsible for the sect organization. Protestantism means loyalty to the word of God and liberty in Christ Jesus. The lives of millions within the denominations, in a large degree, represent Protestantism, which, in its essence, is a plea for a return to primitive Christianity. But such is not the meaning of the denominational organization itself; for the moment that a human order is adopted and a human creed different from the divine creed of the church, then the Protestant principle is abandoned, and, in a measure, men go back to the weak and beggarly elements of Roman Catholicism, from which they were once set free. So far as the ecclesiastical polity and the human articles of faith are concerned, there is just as much warrant for a Roman Catholic as for a Protestant denominational organization; and, in fact, the Romanist has an element of consistency which his brother of the orthodox denominational persuasion cannot claim. His argument that the church is the source of spiritual authority on the earth, and has a right to make such changes in the form of services and the symbols of faith as she may elect. The Protestant, on the other hand, appeals to the word of God as his standard of authority, and contends that what may not be supported thereby is not to be practiced. Happy is the man who condemns not himself in that which he alloweth. Every believer who supports a party organization is lending his influence to neutralize the Protestant and Christian principle. Denominationalism is a sin, because, among other things, first, it fails to give full honor to Christ; second, it puts human authority in the place of the divine; third, it is in conflict with the plain teachings of the Scripture on Christian unity; fourth, it postpones the fulfillment of the Savior's prayer that all his disciples might be one, and that the world might believe that God had sent him. While Romanism, by its despotic formalism and blasphemous assumption of divine functions, is hindering the progress of the gospel, current denominationalism, which has checked the Protestant movement toward Christ and neutralized the splendid force of the evangelical faith by its divisions and rivalries, has injuriously coöperated with Rome in putting obstacles in the way of the conversion of the world."

So far, so good. The Christian Standard is satisfactorily and refreshingly clear and vigorous against "denominational organization" and "party organization," but decidedly blank as to what it takes to constitute "party organization" and "denominational organization." The proposition is still open for discussion in these columns that what is commonly called "organized effort" among the disciples is "party organization" or "denominational organization." What does the Christian Standard say to that? The church of the New Testament is a spiritual body; Christ is head over it; every Christian is a member of it; and there is no organization in it but local congregations. There is no organization in religion but local congregations and denominational organization.

The following card, inclosed in a private letter and evidently intended for general distribution, seems to me to represent a very commendable zeal and industry in the study and teaching of the word of the Lord:

"You are cordially invited to worship with us at Twenty-fifth street and Portland avenue (meeting-house about fifty yards from street on south side). We solicit you to work simply as a member of the body of Christ, engaging joyfully and heartily in all the charitable and missionary labors of the church at home and abroad. 'Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts,' let us live for Christ, patiently toiling to the glory of God for the greatest good and eternal salvation of the human family. Announcements: Sunday, 10 A.M., weekly Bible lesson; Sunday, 11 A.M., Lord's Supper and preaching; Sunday, 7:45 P.M., gospel meeting; from October 1, 1899, to June 1, 1900, special instruction in the Bible; Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, 10-11 A.M., Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, 11-12 A.M., English; Tuesday, 7:45 P.M., the life of Christ; Friday, 7:45 P.M., Bible topics; Saturday, 3 P.M., children's Bible class. Everybody welcome. Come to any or all of the classes. Free to all. George A. Klingman, No. 2512 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky." On margin of card: "'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.' (Mark 16: 15.) Home and foreign missions, first Sunday in each month. 'They rehearsed all that God had done with them.' (Acts 14: 27.) Reports of work, first Thursday in each month. 'That they all may be one; . . . that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' (John 17: 21.) 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.' (Mark 16: 16.) 'God loveth a cheerful giver.' (2 Cor. 9: 7.) 'Follow after peace will all men, and the sanctification without which no man shall see the Lord.' (Heb. 12: 14, R. V.)"

When Christians as individuals and as congregations begin to study and teach the word of the Lord everywhere, and to worship and serve God in the beauty of holiness, as these Christians seem to be doing, there will be less complaint about spiritual lethargy and religious indifference than we now hear.

The following question has been answered many times in the Gospel Advocate, but it may be necessary to answer it again for the benefit of new subscribers or other readers who may have overlooked previous answers:

"Brother Srygley: Here is a question for your first page: If it is wrong to worship God in a meeting-house or anywhere else as a congregation with the organ, by what means are we allowed to use musical instruments in our homes? Dear brother, please give some light on this question, and oblige.

"JAMES H. TURK."

Those who oppose instrumental music in worship do not put their objection on the ground that instrumental music is wrong or sinful in itself or that God prohibits it "in our homes." The point they make is that worship is a matter of faith, and "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) So that nothing can be done as worship except that which is taught in the word of God, no matter how innocent or even profitable and proper it may be in other places. God has not taught Christians to use instrumental music in worship and for that reason it cannot be used in worship by faith. God clearly approves many things "in our homes" which he has not taught us to use as worship. The fact that God approves a thing "in our homes" is no evidence that he approves it in worship. Those who approve instrumental music "in our homes," but object to it in worship, understand that God has approved it "in our homes," but has not taught us to use it in worship.

I have received the following circular:
"$100 REWARD!"

"One hundred dollars ($100) reward offered to any preacher showing chapter and verse—under Christ's commission—showing conclusively the answer to the following questions: (1) Where was any person ever sprinkled for baptism? (2) Where and when was an inquiring alien sinner told to pray for the remission of sins, or to 'cry mightily to God' for salvation? (3) Where and when was there just one infant baptized? Yours in search of the truth,

"W. M. OLDFIELD,

"Minister of the church of Christ, Clifton, Tenn."

I am advised that, "some time back I sent G. L. Hensley, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, Waynesboro, Tenn., one of the 'reward' papers, and the following is his reply:"

"Waynesboro, Tenn., February 8, 1900.—Rev. W. M. Oldfield, Clifton, Tenn.—Dear Sir: Your circular to hand, and in reply would kindly ask you to please give chapter and verse in God's word where you are or any one else is authorized to gamble on the word of God in any way. Will you kindly do this? I would further state that I do not care to drive my wedge into the open air nor shoot buckshot at mice. If you are 'in search of truth' and want to know the truth, study the Bible closely and do not jump into the water until you get to it. GILBERT L. HENSLEY."

Offering rewards is not gambling; but I do not approve the offering of a reward for chapter and verse or for anything else in religion. There is no necessity for it and I do not like the sound of it. A preacher or any one else who claims to be a Christian ought always to be willing to give chapter and verse for anything he believes or practices without a reward. One who would give information on any religious subject for a reward, great or small, which he would not give without a reward, is a very poor specimen of a Christian, not to say preacher. Brother Hensley's remark about jumping into the water sounds like a sneer at an ordinance which all denominations regard as sacred and of divine origin. Such a remark comes with poor grace from any one who professes to be a Christian or even to believe the Bible or to respect religion; but a preacher who believes in and practices infant baptism is especially not the man to fling a flout at anybody else for jumping into the water too quick. Who jumps into the water any quicker than the man who baptizes infants? There is an assumption of superiority in Brother Hensley's remark about driving his wedge into the open air and shooting buckshot at mice which sounds ugly in any Christian, and especially in a preacher. It will be time enough for Brother Hensley and other Methodist preachers to drive a wedge in Oldfield open air and shoot buckshot at Oldfield mice on the subject of infant baptism when they convince all the Methodists themselves that infant baptism is scriptural. Probably a majority of Methodists themselves do not believe in infant baptism, and certainly a large minority, if not a majority, of infants born of Methodist parents are not baptized.

Our Contributors.

D. Lipscomb's Sermon at the State Prison.

Elder David Lipscomb preached by request at the Tennessee State Prison on Sunday, February 18, 1900, at 11 A.M. He read: "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?" (Deut. 10: 12, 13.)

The speaker said, in part, that God through Moses spoke this to the Israelites, but that the principles upon which God deals with man are always the same. He is spoken of in this connection as the Lord God who is the God of gods and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty and terrible God, who regardeth not persons nor taketh reward.

He spoke of how difficult it was for men to treat impartially their fellow-men without regard to place or position, and not solely in respect to their characters. But this was characteristic of God, who regards not the persons of men, whether they be in high or low stations, but as they are in their characters before him whose judgment is righteous and impartial.

He said the object of the Christian religion, as designed by its divine author, was to lift mankind from sin and shame to the attainment and cultivation of the Christian character.

The speaker said, being once interrogated as to what is religion, he was puzzled at the time to give a satisfactory answer to the querist, and also to himself. The word "religion" means to rebind. As applied to Christianity it means to rebind man, who had been separated by disobedience, to his Maker. Man could only be rebound to God by returning in obedience to God through Christ, whom God had sent into the world for this purpose. He only could restore man to union and harmony with God. We were taught in this text to "fear God," but this fear meant not to dread God in terror and alarm, but to reverently regard his holy name, his word, and his ordinances.

The speaker alluded to a common popular error which taught that every man should walk in his own ways, but that God had specially forbidden it. God commanded man to walk in God's ways, and in all of them; not to add to them nor diminish aught from them. He said to select such ways of God as pleased us and reject those which did not suit us was not to obey God at all. To do only what pleased us and reject other commandments of God was to walk in our own ways, and not God's. It was a fatal error. God often gave tests of our faith by requiring us to do things not agreeable to us. This was well illustrated in the case of Abraham, who was commanded to offer up Isaac, his only child of promise. God might have foreknown that Isaac would be spared, but Abraham did not. His faith was increased by this test. So every test of our faith should result in our good, to give us stronger faith.

This text also teaches us to love God. God said to the Jews that he loved even the strangers. He would do them good. Love was intensely practical. God's love is manifested in what God does. So our love for God must be manifested in obeying the commandments of God in what we do.

The speaker said all our love, fear, and service of God was not to benefit God, but, as taught in this connection, was "for thy good." God was omnipotent, and needed not the help of man, as many vainly supposed.

He said to shirk or dodge a duty to God did not cheat God, but him who avoided the duty, and it would soon be manifest by an incompetency that would put one to shame. The boy who dodged his lessons at school did not cheat the teacher, but himself. Some chose the Lord's day to visit the sick instead of going to the assembly as God required. They could visit the sick at other times. They, too, cheated themselves, and not God.

It was the design of all our worship and service of God to make us more and more like God in spirit and in character. In proof of this the speaker read and explained 2 Cor. 3: 18: "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." This image was spiritual. It was of gradual formation. It was to result from a constant adoration and worship of God as seen in the life and character of the Son of God. This growth of the inner or spiritual man to the image of Christ was certain and sure, though we were unconscious of it at any particular time. This was illustrated by the youth who, however anxious to grow to manhood, was never able to see the growth of one day. Measurements at longer intervals would clearly indicate it. It was so in the Christian life.

This image was never perfected while in the flesh. Although the flesh would become weaker day by day and the inward man stronger, it was yet impossible for the weak eyes of mortality to behold Christ in his glorious perfection. We now could only see him as it were in a glass, in mere outline. A perfect vision of Christ to the eyes of flesh would be too blinding, as the disciples experienced on the mount of transfiguration, or Saul saw on the road near Damascus. But we shall be strengthened to behold him in his glory. We are now the sons of God. The afflictions of life are the chastisements of a kind Father, who feels more than his children the strokes of correction. These afflictions are brief and light, however severe in themselves, in comparison with the glory which shall be revealed in us. He will change this vile body and fashion it like unto his glorious body.

The gospel of the Son of God by its transforming grace can make the lowest and most degraded of earth to be the peer of the brightest angel around the throne of God.

All were urged to make an earnest effort for a higher and nobler life.

The impression made upon the prisoners seemed to be excellent, and many sought to shake hands with the speaker.

The above is an imperfect synopsis of the sermon.
G. LIPSCOMB.

On Being Unequally Yoked.

I have just read, in the Gospel Advocate, Brother D. Lipscomb's answer to a question on marrying out of the church, and desire to commend it to one who recently asked me to write an article on the same subject. Brother Lipscomb's article fully covers the ground and clearly points out the safe side of the question.

The Christian's whole desire is to do God's will. To purpose fully and resolutely to do his will is necessary in order to serve him acceptably, if not to a clear understanding of his will. Certainly he who does not purpose to do God's will does not strive to understand it. We cannot knowingly and willfully displease God and be Christians. God must be obeyed at any cost and at all hazards. Everybody and everything must be forsaken, if necessary, in order to obey God. Therefore every child of God who contemplates marrying desires first of all to marry in harmony with God's will. This being true, the safe course to pursue is quite plain. We all know it is safe to marry "only in the Lord."

A good woman whom I love very much says a woman with a Christian husband has trouble enough, to say nothing of the additional trouble of having a husband not in the church. I would not write a line or utter a word that would influence any one to displease God in the least for any consideration. While the absolutely safe side to this very important matter is quite manifest, yet it does not appear to me that God's will leads to extremes on this question. We must take matters just as God left them. To understand and to do his will is the one great and important thing.

Paul says widows should marry "only in the Lord." (1 Cor. 7: 39.) I do not know why this does not apply alike to maidens and to all Christians, yet in his instruction to maidens on the same subject and in the same chapter he did not apply this rule to them. (1 Cor. 7: 35-38.) Again, it has never seemed clear to me that "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," etc., in 2 Cor. 6: 14-18 applies to marriage, because in verse 17 Paul says: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate," etc. According to this, believers must be separated from unbelievers, the righteous from the unrighteous, light from darkness, Christians from idolaters, and the temple of God from the temple of idols. This unequal yoke must be broken. Christians must not remain in the situation here described, whatever that is. They must not only not enter into it, but if they be in it they must come out of it and be separate. If this applies to marriage, then the believing husband or wife must separate from the unbelieving wife or husband; but Paul forbids this in 1 Cor. 7: 12-16, and in verse 16 suggests that the believing companion may save the unbelieving one.

Peter, in 1 Pet. 3: 1-6, instructs Christian wives how to save unchristian husbands. This, of course, is where they were married before either became a Christian, but it shows that the believing wife was not to "come out and be separate" from the unbelieving husband, which is required in 2 Cor. 6: 14-18, and which stands in the way of my seeing that it applies to the marriage relationship. It shows, too, that a woman can obey God, live the Christian life, and be saved with an unchristian husband. That is not a relationship which must be broken up in order to become a Christian. If a man is selling whisky and repents of his sins and desires to become a Christian, he must give up his wicked business in order to serve God and be saved; but a man with an unbelieving wife is not required to forsake her, but rather to remain with her in order to become a Christian. Or if a church member with an honest occupation forsakes that occupation and enters into a dishonest one, he turns away from the church and enters into sin in order to do so, and must repent of his sin, give up his dishonest occupation, and return to the Lord, if he would be saved; but if a Christian marries an unbeliever, he is not required to forsake his unbelieving wife in order to serve God and be saved.

In Neh. 9 and 10, those who had violated God's law in marrying strange wives were required, according to the law of God, to put away these wives and the children born of them. No such separation is required in the New Testament, or is necessary in order to the Christian life. If the unbelieving wife or husband "departs," the believer must obey God at all hazards, and suffer the separation. A Christian wife is not required to obey an unchristian husband, only in so far as his will does not lead her to disobey God. All this has some bearing, at least indirectly, upon marrying out of the church; and if there is anything lame or illogical about it, I am open to conviction and desire above all things to know and to teach the truth. Getting married is a very serious thing, anyway, and in view of all before us, it is unwise, unsafe, and frequently leads to much trouble and sin, and sometimes to abandonment of the church, for Christians to marry those who are not Christians; while it is safe and wise to marry Christians. This we know is right.

We have seen earnest, intelligent, zealous Christians married to those who are cold, selfish, worldly, and even dead religiously, although their names were on the church roll; and some apparently have gone through the wicked farce of coming into the church in order to marry those who would not consent to marry out of it. This does not affect the right or wrong of marrying out of the church, but it shows that those who wish to please God in marrying as well as in all things should not be deceived in themselves and in others, but should conscientiously study God's will and strive to understand it and to do it.

E. A. ELAM.

Character and wit have their own magnetism.

WE ARE SONS.

To be born of water and the Spirit is to be born of God. The child partakes of the nature of the father. He receives his life and nature from the father. The seed is quickened into life and nursed into growth by the mother. But the new principle brought into the heart is imparted in the seed, the word of God, and it is life from the Father. This imparts to the new being the nature of the Father. The tastes, desires, and aims of the child partake of the same qualities of the Father. Peter admonishes the young Christians: "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." (1 Pet. 2: 2.) "The word" expresses the laws and truths in which the Lord delights. The "milk of the word" is that spiritual sustenance given by the word that promotes the growth and life of the young Christian. So the child is to partake of this to cause him to grow into the strength and likeness of the Father. It shows the life and nature of the child correspond to those of the Father. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." (John 1: 12, 13.) The new principle of life imparted to the soul is from God, and it comes through the word of God received into the heart. That word is the will of God. "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." (1 John 2: 29.) The qualities of the Father are transmitted to and to be cultivated by the son.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." (1 John 3: 9.) Whatever else this may or may not mean, it does mean that the being born of God leads one to be like God in keeping free from sin. He is like him, again, because: "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." (1 John 4: 7, 8.) Here the family trait comes from God, the Father, and is inherited and cherished by the children. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him. . . . This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments. . . . Whosoever is born of God overcometh the world. . . . We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." (1 John 5: 1-18.) All these are traits of character and dispositions of heart received from the Father through the word of God. The man is begotten of God, and he as a child of God grows up into the likeness of his Father by cultivating the divine qualities received through the word of God received into the heart.

Because we are begotten of God and live as his obedient children and grow into his more complete likeness, he owns us as his children, bestows upon us the tenderest marks of his love and sympathy, gives us rich blessings in this world, and promises us an inheritance rich and unfading around his throne, where we will enjoy his riches, honors, and glories forever.

"Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." (Gal. 4: 6, 7.) Through obedience to and fellowship with Christ, we become heirs with him of all the riches and glory of the universe. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." (Matt. 13: 43.) In the Old Testament and is seldom represented or claimed as a Father, prophetically of the reign of Messiah. They were servants; he was Lord and Master. But when the seed of the kingdom was received into the heart, the law was written in their hearts. God was willing to become "a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (2 Cor. 6: 18.) "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 1-3.) D. L.

Some Anecdotes of the Pioneers.

All persons do not have the same cast of mind. Reading that will interest one person is irksome reading to another. I am so organized that personal incidents, experiences in the life of others, have a charm for me. The first book I ever read through was Weem's "Life of Francis Marion." I was captivated by it, and from that day to this biographical works have been of interest to me. A number of years ago, I read, for a time, the Christian Monitor. One department was devoted to anecdotes of preachers. Some were amusing, others pathetic; but it mattered not which, that was the most interesting part of the paper. I have recently been dipping into a volume of sketches of the pioneers in the plea for New Testament Christianity, and, thinking that other readers of the Gospel Advocate may have the same taste as myself, I here rehearse some of the incidents I ran upon there.

John T. Johnson was a tower of strength in his day. While he stuck close to the word in his preaching, yet he was not always systematic in his discourses. When asked about Johnson's style of preaching, a companion in labor said: "Imagine the largest cannon you can think of, loaded to the muzzle and fired at creation, and you have an idea of how he preaches." At the age of thirty-five his health failed and he was forced to call in his family physician. After a careful diagnosis the doctor told him that tobacco was certainly undermining his constitution and unless he quit it wholly it would soon carry him to the grave. He at this time had a plug of tobacco in his pocket. Going into the parlor alone and holding the plug in his hand, he thus talked to himself: "John T. Johnson is sick—unfitted for business—is, in fact, dying. What is killing him? The use of this poisonous weed I hold in my hand." He laid it upon the mantel, and, fixing his eyes upon it, continued: "You have been and are now my mortal enemy; to-day we part forever. Remain where you are, I adjure you. I will never touch you again—never, God being my helper." By the help of God he kept his word to the day of his death. His health improved; he became day by day stronger, and soon could do more work than ever before.

At that early day it was not considered wrong, by the generality of the people, to make whisky. Some one asked that brilliant but sometimes eccentric Scotchman, Walter Scott, what he thought about it. "I think," he replied, "we ought to let the devil boil his own teakettle." It was a good reply, most assuredly, and, if church members would let him drink his own tea, long strides would be made toward the solution of the liquor problem.

Ayelett Rains was no ordinary man. He, in his early days, preached universalism, or rather restorationism. On one occasion he was preaching to a large audience in a grove. Among his hearers was a young man addicted to drink, and who, on this occasion, was "more than half seas over." The young preacher felt himself flattered by so large a crowd and rose to grand heights of eloquence as he portrayed the great love of God for man. The drunken young man soon became an interested listener, and gradually pushed himself forward, close to the stand. When the preacher was reaching his conclusion, that this great love must lead God to save all, the young man, clinging to a sapling with one hand and pointing with the other to the preacher, in drunken speech exclaimed, perhaps unconsciously: "Make it out, young man, make it out, or I am a goner!" This clipped the wings of the preacher, and it was some minutes before he regained his equanimity. This put Rains to thinking, and in the end was one of the factors that led him to abandon his restoration views.

J. D. FLOYD.

Living Epistles.

"Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men: forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." (2 Cor. 3: 2, 3.) Such is the language of Paul to the Corinthians and to "all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." All Christians are epistles of Christ. The reason for applying this term to them is obvious when we consider the things necessary to the writing of an epistle.

First, there must be a writer; and the expression, "epistles of Christ," shows that Jesus is the writer. As I would speak of this article as my article because I am the author of it, so we are Christ's epistles because he is the "author and finisher of our faith," and he is the "author of eternal salvation" to all who obey him. As we belong to Christ, we must be subject to him. (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20; Col. 3: 17.)

The second thing we observe as necessary to an epistle is that, in order to be reliable, it must have the signature or seal of the writer. In the commercial world epistles are often forged that the forger may reap financial gain. Likewise in the church we sometimes find forged epistles, those who show by their actions that they had some impure motive in submitting to the outward form of obedience. Again, we sometimes receive letters which are almost illegible; we can hardly decipher their contents. So there are many who profess to be "epistles of Christ," but through whom we can hardly read the life and character of Jesus. Such epistles as these are almost, if not altogether, worthless, so far as communicating to others the character of Jesus through their daily walk is concerned. On the other hand, there are many who bear the signature or seal of Jesus, the Writer. Paul speaks of some as being "sealed with that holy Spirit of promise." (Eph. 1: 13.) He also tells who are thus sealed: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." (Rom. 8: 14.) To be led by the Spirit is to obey the teaching of the Spirit. Hence only those who obey the Spirit have the seal of approval. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14; see also 1 John 5: 2, 3.)

The third thing we observe in connection with the writing of an epistle is a pen, or something which answers the purpose of a pen. In the lesson under consideration, the expression, "ye are our epistle," shows the apostle represents the pen as the instrument through which the writing was done. (1 Cor. 4: 15.)

The fourth thing we observe is, there must be ink or something which leaves the impression made through the pen. "Written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God." This teaches that the words of the Holy Spirit represent the ink.

The fifth item is paper or something on which the impression is made. "Not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart," shows the heart of man to be that upon which the writing is done.

The sixth item to be considered is the purpose of the epistle. When we write letters to our friends it is to give them such information as will benefit them in some way. So when we become "epistles of Christ," while we are benefited ourselves, yet God intends that the greater object shall be that we may benefit others. That this is true is plainly shown when we consider the seventh item.

The seventh item is: To whom are we, as epistles, addressed? "Known and read of all men" plainly shows that God expects the world to read the life of Jesus through us and thereby be led to obey his word. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 16.) The most effective way of preaching the gospel of the Son of God is by living up to the principles which we profess to believe. We may declare to the world that we are Christians until our voices are stilled in death, but unless we conform our practice to our theory we shall only succeed in bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ. One of the greatest hindrances to the successful advancement of the cause of Christ is too much theoretical Christianity. Too many brethren rest "in the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," and depend upon this to the exclusion of a godly life. What is needed is not less theory, but more practice. Brethren, this "ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Finally, brethren, I ask you, as "epistles of Christ," how are you being read? The world is reading you every day. What is the lesson it is learning through you? Are you, by your daily walk, teaching the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," or are you showing that you are forged or illegible epistles? An adage says: "By your actions you are judged, be your speech what it may." Then may God help us all to "show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

Bazette, Tex.

WILLIAM M. JORDAN.

KNOW THE LORD.

In the last paper on this topic the manner of entering the Abrahamic covenant was contrasted with the way of entering the kingdom of Christ. Flesh and blood, without any knowledge, understanding, faith, or volition, brought a man into covenant relationship with God in the days of Abraham.

Under Christ it is not so. All who enter Christ must know the Lord. Without faith no man can please God, and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." In order that the world might be led to believe, Christ chose the apostles, filled them with the Holy Spirit, and sent them into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature. The apostles did not devote their energies and talents to the discussion of theories, but were faithful in teaching all nations. "Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." (Rom. 10: 18.) The gospel was preached to every creature under heaven. (Col. 1: 23.) "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness [simplicity] of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.)

Any system, therefore, that endeavors to bring simply flesh and blood into the kingdom of Christ is subversive of the system ordained by Christ, and seeks to resurrect the way which the prophet says shall be no more. "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." (Jer. 31: 34.) In the days of Abraham it was necessary to teach them to know the Lord, for they came into covenant relation without any knowledge; but in the gospel covenant and "after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people." We know this refers to the gospel covenant, because Paul quotes the prophet's language in Hebrews and applies it to this covenant.

The apostles were not allowed to preach Jesus the Christ until they were endued with power from on high. When they were filled with the Holy Spirit they preached Jesus; they taught the people of the death, burial, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, thus writing the law of God on their hearts. God, through them, gave a message of love to a lost and ruined race. With God as the writer, the apostles corresponding to the pen, the Spirit to the ink, and the hearts of the people representing the paper, the law of God was written indelibly on their hearts, and thus they were constituted the living epistles of the Lord Jesus Christ. To believers Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Thus they made disciples acting under the great commission.

The man who seeks to make disciples without first teaching the people is not acting as did the apostles. Those who claim to bring the infant into covenant relationship with God by sprinkling or pouring a little water on its head must afterwards teach it to know the Lord, in the face of the language of the prophet: "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord." If anything is brought into the kingdom of God, it must be simply flesh and blood. They do not give the child any understanding, faith, repentance, confession, or obedience. All they give it is a little water, and precious little at that. It is not a question of simply pouring or sprinkling a little water upon the head of the infant, but whether this act can make one a child of God without any knowledge, volition, faith, repentance, confession, or obedience. Is it possible to go back to a birthright of flesh and blood? Was the Savior mistaken when he taught that man must be born again, born of water and of the Spirit, in order to enter the kingdom of God? If those who practice infant baptism could succeed in carrying out their purpose, they would baptize every infant in the land, so that there would be no adults to baptize. There would be no believers to baptize, for they would baptize all before they were old enough to believe. Thus this system makes void the command of Jesus: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.) "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.)

Obedience to God is an individual matter. As father and mother cannot breathe for their infant, so they cannot obey the Lord for it. As each must eat, sleep, and breathe for himself, so every one is individually responsible to the Lord for his own actions. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." (Rom. 6: 16, 17.) Christianity is an individual matter; each must obey from the heart for himself, each is required to believe and confess for himself. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 9, 10.)

Preachers should be satisfied with preaching these truths as they are in Christ Jesus. It is evident that if we faithfully declare all the counsel of God, though the understanding of some may not be perfect on certain points, the Master will not hold us responsible for their failure. God does not require us to furnish brains to our hearers. He does demand fidelity at our hands in preaching the word. We should boldly and fearlessly preach faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins. When we have done this, we should leave the results in the hands of the Lord. No man can do better building than this on the one foundation. After we have faithfully preached the truth, we are not responsible for the failure of some one to understand the design of obedience. But I must add, as the way of salvation is plain, a faithful and clear presentation of the word does not leave any room for failure to understand the commandments of God.

With more earnest, practical work, and less theorizing, many of our difficulties will vanish.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

If young men could realize what great results could be obtained in life by steady, courageous, and persevering work in almost any direction, with only moderate abilities, their hearts would be stirred within them to industry and energy in some good work. The lack of courage and perseverance is the great hindrance to success in all departments of life.

D. L.

When a church concludes that it has nothing in particular to do but to nurse itself, it has reached the point at which it is of no further use to God or man.

Preaching to the Sick.

The extract from the Pentecostal Herald on the first page of the Gospel Advocate of February 8, with the editor's comments, reminds me of some experiences I have had in instructing the hopelessly sick. Several years ago, on my return home after a few days' absence, I found a message from an old war comrade requesting me to come to see him. He lived in another neighborhood, and I had not seen him for several years, but had learned that he was in the last stages of consumption. I found him very low and deeply distressed about his spiritual condition. His surroundings through life had not been favorable from a religious standpoint, and, therefore, he had lived a wicked life. He told me all about his wickedness and his disregard of religion, but said that he had for the last few months realized the folly of neglecting to prepare for eternity, and that he had been seeking to know how he might be saved. He told me of the different denominational preachers he had sent for, and how they had all left him in the dark as much as before they came. At last he, remembering our former association, had sent for me, hoping I could in some way help him. He knew nothing about any "peculiar views" I might have; he simply sent for me because others had given him no relief and he knew me. Taking my seat by his side and opening my Bible, I said: "All I know about how people are to be saved or converted I have learned from this book. I have but one gospel to preach. What I would preach to you in the vigor of health I must preach in sickness." I then read several passages about Jesus and his mission to the world to save sinners. Following this I read the commission as recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and, beginning with Acts 2, read the leading cases of conversion in that book. After a short prayer with him and family, I bade him good-by.

Two weeks from that time, on my return home from an appointment, I found a message calling me to his house again. On reaching there, I found quite a gathering, and all the necessary arrangements for a baptism in the house. I talked with him for some time, and found that he fully understood the matter; had remembered the scriptures I read; and, in fact, as understandingly obeyed the gospel as any person I ever assisted.

How did this come about? I never told him to do a single thing, only as I read to him; I never told him anything about faith, repentance, or baptism, only as I read them out of the book. Hence it was the word of God that led him to take the steps he did. He lived a few weeks after this; and while he had formerly manifested the greatest distress of mind, he had perfect peace, and died in the joyous hope of everlasting life. While I have, as a rule, little confidence in what is called "deathbed repentance," yet if I reach the place I have had my heart set upon these many years, I shall expect to meet this brother, for he accepted the gospel as soon as he heard it.

I had another experience which was an exact parallel to this, and to rehearse it would be to repeat what is here given.

J. D. FLOYD.

"The word of God is the seed of the kingdom." Out of it all that is true and godly in the character grows. If a man would have a noble, true, and god-like character, he must receive into the heart the word of God, cherish and cultivate it, that it may bear fruit in his life. Godly fruit cannot grow in the life without the seeds of godliness in the heart. The seeds must not only be in the heart, but the evil desires and noxious thoughts must be rooted out. Seed must be planted and cultivated to bear a good crop.

D. L.

God within us! Not only ever with us unseen, not only watching us in our secret moments and reading the very thoughts of our hearts, not only covering us with the shadow of his wings and lighting us with the light of his countenance, but within us; our bodies, his temples; our hearts, his home. O if we could but grasp the thought, we should live lives nobler and more beautiful!—F. W. Farrar.

O, the rest and peace that the chambers of God's high house will yield to its inhabitants in another world! Here they will rest from their labors, upon their beds, rest with God, rest from sin, temptation, and all sorrow.—John Bunyan.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy will preach at Hendersonville, Tenn., next Lord's day.

Brother J. P. Lytton's address is changed from Dickson Station, Tenn., to Lyles, Tenn.

Brother M. C. Kurfees' meeting with the church worshiping on Plum street, Detroit, Mich., is still in progress.

On the night of February 22, 1900, at Smyrna, Tenn., Mr. George J. Lemings and Miss Tommie Woodruff were married, the writer officiating. While Mrs. Lemings is a devout member of the church of Christ, her husband is an earnest Methodist. We trust they may live in such a way as that they may share the Father's blessings in this life and his greater blessing in the world to come.—W. L. Logan, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

The meeting on College street, near Ash street, this city, which is being conducted by Brother T. B. Larimore, is now in the third month, and is announced to continue indefinitely. Preaching through the week at 3 P.M. and 7:40 P.M.; Sunday at 11 A.M., 3 P.M., and 7:40 P.M. There have been fifty additions to date, March 3. Brother Larimore is faithfully preaching the gospel, and we bespeak for him the attendance and encouragement due the work so long as he continues with us.

I am preparing to spend the month of April in West Tennessee if the Lord permit. Any churches in that section or between here and there that would like a talk from me on the "Duty of Missionary Work" would do me a favor to drop me a card to that effect, so that I may make out a programme in time to have the announcements made. If more convenient, write Brother T. A. Smith, Chestnut Bluff, West Tennessee, as we will travel together some.—J. M. McCaleb, 2601 Montgomery street, Louisville, Ky.

By request, I write. Brother Lawson's mention of my condition caused some aid to be sent to me. Brother Dunagan, Horse Cave, Ky., sent $3; two others, no name or post office, $1 each. I here express my thanks. I have been confined, in a helpless condition, the past three weeks, and I am so now. This is over two years I have been confined to the room. Pneumonia has become epidemic here—very malignant, and but one recovery. Dr. C. D. Lipscomb waited on me all the time. He took it and lived but four days. He was a kinsman of D. Lipscomb. I have a pronounced case of nervous prostration. God bless the Gospel Advocate and its readers.—John W. Harris, Russet, I. T.

The church and community at Carthage, Tenn., have sustained a great loss in the death of Brother T. B. Read, Sr. The present prosperity of the church there is largely due to the firm and unwavering stand of our dear, departed brother. He never shrank from duty because only a few stood with him for the truth and right. Being a man of few words, he was decidedly a man of action. He loved his home, the church, and God. His influence for good will live after him. I have felt for some time that the end was near. I shall greatly miss him, for I loved him and appreciated the work he had done and was still doing for the Master. The bereaved wife and entire family have my deepest sympathy. Suffering together makes us wondrous kind and sympathetic. We pray that God's strengthening grace may overshadow the family in this dark hour. They all know well the source from which to obtain comfort. Only the sunshine that God gives can dispel the dark cloud. Our brother has gone to his reward. It will not be long until all the faithful will pass from the weariness of earth to the rest of heaven.

EDITORIAL.

The way to heaven is too slow for a fast girl.

The evil one never drives a man who leads well.

The complaining heart is not filled with gratitude.

Christians ought to fast when the devil gives a dining.

If you would save your time, salt it down with good deeds.

Humility and self-denial are always admired, but seldom practiced.

The best way to learn to love your enemies is to treat them kindly.

If you would be great in the kingdom of Christ, get close to God.

It is very difficult to train up a boy in the way his father does not go.

The man who speaks without thinking always says the wrong thing.

It is much easier to preach what you practice than to practice what you preach.

There is something wrong with the man who thinks God's way will not succeed.

God never goes into partnership with men until he is allowed to manage the business.

It is bad policy for a girl to spoil her manners by seeking to show off her new dress.

The man who tries to do good and be good without the help of the Lord is sure to fail.

Men who are busy saving their souls do not usually have a great reputation with the world.

The church would get along better if we had more consecrated workers and fewer critics.

We should be slow to try to correct other people's faults until we can control our own temper.

The man who asks the world for permission to serve the Lord is not fit for the kingdom of God.

Some people have not enough faith in God to lay up treasures in heaven without good collaterals on earth.

The man who begins to do wrong for profit will soon find himself doing wrong for nothing, and at a heavy loss.

Time cannot change men; death cannot change men. Christ can; wherefore, put on Christ.—Drummond.

The man who looks at other people's sins through a microscope is always blindfolded when he looks at his own.

The heart of the man who would rather preach his own opinions than the gospel is not right in the sight of God.

The devotion and self-denial of the Wesleys are admired and praised by the Methodist clergy, but are not practiced by them.

The way to estimate the worth of the preacher is by the truth he preaches, and not by the size of the audience he draws.

Whenever it is hard for you to understand your duty in life get nearer the Lord, where there is more light and the atmosphere is purer.

Many a person has gone to perdition because he spent his time in shouting over the meanness of other people, rather than in mourning over his own sins.

Our repentance is not genuine and our confession is not acceptable to the Lord until we can confess our sins without placing part of the blame on some one else.

There are some professed believers who claim to accept the miracles of the New Testament, and reject the miracles of the Old Testament. This is very inconsistent. The man who can accept one miracle can accept all, for they all come from the same power and come to us equally attested. The man who cannot believe the story of Jonah and the "great fish" cannot believe that Peter went down to the lake, at the command of Jesus, and caught a fish which had a stater in its mouth with which he could pay the tribute money. The man who does not believe that the three Hebrew children were cast into the burning, fiery furnace, and came out unscathed, ought not to believe in the miraculous conception of Christ. And so with all miracles.

Any reader of religious journals soon realizes that much importance is attached to the conversion of sinners. The conversion of a soul is of great value, but a continuation in well-doing is equally important. It is the man who perseveres to the end that shall be saved. The denominations are deploring their loss in numbers while failing to give much attention to the degeneracy of Christian living. The Lord, while on earth, was far more interested in the character of life his subjects led than in the acquisition of numbers. With devout, godly men and women filling our churches, the number will take care of itself. It is a mistake to pass by, unproved, all manner of sins in the church. God's people are the light of the world, the salt of the earth. An unclean life destroys the effectiveness of the Christian's work.

There is a sort of wisdom, or that which claims to be wisdom, which plumes itself on foreseeing evil, and condemns as childish folly all efforts to "hope for the best." "I never flatter myself with false hopes," is a favorite remark of these dreary wise-aces; and all hopes are suspected of being false until they have passed into certainty. In all cases of illness these pessimists see only the worst symptoms; in all projects that call for courage they marshal the objections; in all difficult undertakings they expect failure. "Mrs. G— is a good woman and a dear friend," said a lady recently; "but I confess that I am cowardly enough to avoid her now that Charles is so ill. She sees all the worst aspects and most dangerous possibilities—there are enough of them, I know—and she takes all the heart out of me. I must keep up my courage until the battle is fought out, but she does not leave me any hope to work on." Of what use is that sort of foresight? Every bright day is a positive gain to life's stores of treasures. If to-morrow must bring disappointment and grief, let them wait until to-morrow. Will they be any more easily borne because they have blighted to-day also? Notice the rift in the clouds, accept each bit of brightness as God sends it, and never needlessly strike at hope or courage anywhere.—Forward.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added. It is a beautiful book, the pages clear, and the type everything that could be asked for."

We desire to call special attention this week to our new premium offer. For further description, see last page of this issue. We propose to make into a medallion a photograph of yourself, father or mother, sister or brother, friend or relative, and to finish same in good style, and, if you so desire, to frame it in the same manner. This is not common work, but it is first-class in every particular. A perfect likeness from the photograph submitted is guaranteed. These pictures will beautify your homes, and you will be justly proud of them. All of these medallions are made six inches in diameter and have easel attachment. It is not necessary that they should be framed, but of course the frame adds much to the appearance and finish of the picture. This is our offer on medallions: We will send a medallion not framed, made from a photograph sent us, to any one sending us twenty-five cents and one new subscriber to the Gospel Advocate for one year, at the regular price, $1.50 per year; or we will send the medallion not framed made from a photograph sent us to any new subscriber, or any old one who pays up his back dues, if he owes any, and the Gospel Advocate one year for $2.25. Pictures sent us from which to make these medallions must be cabinet, bust photographs on cardboard, with the name of the one sending same written plainly across the back. The better the picture, the better the medallion will be. We cannot accept any cut, faded, blurred, mutilated, or kodak pictures. These medallions are in two styles. Style 1 is a "steel finish," having the beautiful, soft tone and deep effect of a steel engraving, reproducing all the high lights and shadows shown in the photograph. Style 2 is the "Sepia," an artistic brown, having the clearness and fine tone of an etching. "Sepia" may be had in either "dull" or "gloss" finish. In ordering these be sure to state what style and finish are wanted, whether style 1 or style 2, and, if style 2, whether "dull" or "gloss" finish is wanted. The frames offered in connection with these medallions are of latest design, dainty, and give the picture an elegant finish. For further description of these frames, see last page of this issue. Any one securing medallions under either of the above offers can have frames, of any style, at the price advertised, or as follows: We will send style 2 for one new subscriber and twenty-five cents; styles 4 or 7 for two new subscribers and twenty-five cents. These medallions must be seen to be appreciated. You can soon earn a medallion and frame under this offer.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please tell me through the Gospel Advocate if it is necessary for a man to have a written license to preach the gospel. If so, who has the authority to give it to him?
B. P.

Mynot, Ala.

I have never found in the Bible a word about a license to preach, written or unwritten. Every Christian is required to use his talent in teaching others the scriptures. He should be advised by his brethren as to his fitness in a work. They ought not to discourage his working, but ought to advise him how and where he can best do it.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer, through the Gospel Advocate, this question: Have we scriptural authority to demand that all who unite with us from other churches, and who have been immersed, shall be rebaptized? It is being preached here by an apostle of McGary, and is causing some confusion.

Alto, Ark.

R. L. WILSON.

These questions have been discussed time and again in the Gospel Advocate. We gave recently three articles from the pen of A. Campbell on the subject, and one a week or two since from Brother Stirman. With these, I do not see how my giving a short answer to a query can help. Two or three discussions are in pamphlet form, and can be had for a dime. It is better to read these than for me to say it is right or wrong to do it. The Bible says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," and the examples in the Bible show they were baptized because God commanded it.

Brother Lipscomb: Some of the church members think it is right to use their meetinghouse for any purpose that is not wrong in its tendency. Some believe that temperance lectures and literary meetings should not be held in it. Others believe that none of the denominations should use it. What rule shall we adopt, that will bring harmony? What does Paul mean by "church of God," in 1 Cor. 11: 22? Is a meetinghouse looked upon by well-informed Christians as more sacred than any other house?

Lawrence, Tex.

G. F. MARTIN.

The meetinghouse is not the church. The members of the body of Christ constitute the church. They would be just as much the church without the house as they are with it. It is just as scriptural to meet in a private house as it is in a meetinghouse, and the meetinghouse is no more sacred than the private house would be if the church met in it. Anything might be done in it that could be rightly done in a private house that Christians meet in. The house is for the convenience of the people. The service would be as acceptable to God offered out of doors as it is offered in the house. I know of no reason why it should be regarded as more sacred than any house a Christian lives in. Still, if persons have this feeling, I would try to respect it as far as possible while trying to get them out of the error. That is the way to secure harmony.

Brother Sewell: In the Gospel Advocate of February 15, in your article on "The Bible," you state that while the Jews still exist as a people, their ancient religion is gone. Have they no religion to-day? If so, what is its nature? I think an article on "The Jews" would be appreciated by Gospel Advocate readers.

Hornbeak, Tenn.

G. D. SMITH.

The Jews have a formality that I suppose they call "worship," but their religion as given by Moses has passed away. They have no priest, no altar, no sacrifices, no place to meet to attend to their annual feasts, nor anything of that sort. They have their meetinghouses, or synagogues, in towns or cities where there are enough of them together to do so. They have rabbis that read and lecture to them on the moral principles of the Old Testament, or on any subject they may choose, and they observe holiday on some of their annual feast days; but the original meaning of those feasts is in large measure lost sight of, in spite of all they can do, and if they pray, they have no assurance that their prayers will be heard, because they deny Christ, in whose name all prayers are to be presented. As they refuse Christ and their own religion is set aside, so that it would not be acceptable even if they could restore it, they have no showing for salvation so long as they refuse to believe on and accept Christ as the Son of God. What may yet turn up with them as a nation, I do not know; but the only hope for their redemption is that they shall yet believe on Christ and become his followers. When they do this they will be grafted into Christ, the living Vine. Otherwise I know of no hope for the Jews.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer the following questions in the next issue of the Gospel Advocate: Were the one hundred and twenty mentioned in Acts 1: 15 included in the baptism in Acts 2: 4, or were they baptized into Jesus Christ, or did Christ give them power to become the sons of God, as in John 1: 12? What is meant by "the gift of the Holy Ghost" in Acts 2: 38? We have a little difficulty on this. Some think it is eternal life and some think it the way to attain eternal life and as a help in Christian duties. What particular day was meant in Acts 2: 20, "that great and notable day?" C. M. DAGGETT.
Newport, Pa.

A strict construction of the context would confine the baptism to the twelve. I think only twelve were baptized with the Holy Ghost. Some contend the one hundred and twenty were baptized. The one hundred and twenty, like the apostles, had been baptized by John or by the disciples sent forth by Jesus Christ. We have no means of telling by which they were baptized. All of these were accepted in Christ who believed on him. "The gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2: 38), I think, was the Holy Spirit himself. The reason I think so is, these twelve had received the gift of the Holy Spirit. We learn this from Acts 10: 45: "On the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost." In verse 47 he said of them, "which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we." "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. . . . Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us." (Acts 11: 15-17.) This shows the gift of Acts 2 and 10 was the Holy Spirit; but this is not to be confounded with miraculous gifts bestowed on Christians by the Holy Spirit as given in 1 Cor. 12: 14. The "great and notable day of the Lord," from the reading of both Joel and Acts 2: 20, seems to be the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit came to direct men and women into the kingdom of heaven.

Brother Sewell: Will you please help me to harmonize John 9: 31 and Acts 10: 4? Cornelius, though a good man, seems to be unbaptized, and as I understand, a sinner; and John 9: 31 teaches that God heareth not sinners. Explain also why Cornelius and "them which heard the word" received the Holy Ghost before baptism (Acts 10: 44-48) and the Samaritans did not receive him until after baptism, until Peter and John prayed and laid their hands on them. (Acts 8: 12-18.) Peter, in Acts 2: 38, teaches that we receive the gift of the Holy Ghost after baptism, but does not say through laying on of hands. I do not see any difference between Holy Ghost and gift of Holy Ghost, so I am anxious to have you explain. You of course will think me exceedingly dull, but I have studied much over the questions and beg of you or any other to solve the questions, and I shall be very grateful for the information.

Lynchburg, Tenn.

(Mrs.) SALLIE E. BOBO.

When the man that was born blind said, "God heareth not sinners," he meant those actually living in sin, in rebellion against God, those refusing to do God's will. Such as these will never be heard while pursuing that course, no matter who they are or where they are. Cornelius was not that sort of a man. He was a Gentile convert to the Jewish religion, and was living it to the very best of his ability, not knowing that the Jewish religion had been set aside and the religion of Jesus established. But when he heard of Christianity he was anxious to know about it; and the answer given shows that he was praying for light on the subject, and, that too, with a readiness to accept it if he could learn it. He was an alien, but not a sinner in the sense the blind man spoke of; and as a man seeking for light and ready to obey the truth, the Lord heard his prayer to the extent of informing him where he could get the light—that is, by sending for Peter. This was the full extent of it. If Cornelius had refused to obey the truth when he heard it, that would have been the end of it; but he obeyed it at once. The eunuch and Lydia are examples of the same kind. They were doubtless desirous of light and praying for it as Cornelius was. God never refuses light to such people, that we have any knowledge of; but if these had refused the truth when it reached them, they would at once have gone into rebellion and condemnation, and not another prayer of theirs could have been heard. Aliens to-day are not like Cornelius. They have the word of God already, but instead of obeying it they pray God to pardon them direct, and that without obedience. There is not a shadow of promise that such prayers as these can be heard and answered. Such people are about in the condition that Cornelius would have been in if he had refused to obey the gospel when Peter went and preached it to him. When Cornelius prayed and was heard there was no New Testament extant, it was in the days of miracles, and his prayer was answered by an angel; but it was only to lead him to obtain a preacher, and when the preacher came he had to hear and obey, like others. When Peter promised the inquirers on the day of Pentecost that upon their repentance and baptism they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, it was the Holy Spirit as a gift; and I do not understand that it meant the miraculous gift of the Spirit. It was a promise to all that would repent and be baptized, and so far as I can tell was just as extensive as the promise of remission of sins. But I do not understand that all, even in the miraculous age, received miraculous powers. There is no account that any at Jerusalem received miraculous gifts until the apostles laid hands upon the seven. But all were entitled to this promise that would repent and be baptized. In Rom. 8 and 1 Cor. 3 the Spirit is represented as dwelling in Christians as the temple of God, and there is nothing miraculous about this. The evidence that the Spirit dwells with Christians is the word of God, just as is the evidence of pardon. As to the fact that Cornelius and his house received the miraculous power of the Holy Spirit before their baptism, that was no part of their conversion, any more than if they had not received it. The miraculous power of the Spirit was never given to any one for his personal benefit that received it, but for the accomplishment of some other end. There was a purpose in it in this case to show both to the Jews and the Gentiles that the Gentiles as well as the Jews were to partake of the gospel and its blessings, but not to convert any one. The Samaritans received miraculous gifts after they had obeyed the gospel to aid them in their edification, but they became Christians when baptized into Christ by Philip. Many of the Christians in the apostolic age received these miraculous gifts, but only to aid them in doing a work for the development of the churches, and then to cease, and it did cease when that end was accomplished. But the Spirit of God still dwells with loyal, faithful Christians.

Suffer, if you must; do not quarrel with the dear Lord's appointments for you. Only try, if you are do it splendidly. That's the only way to take pleasure or a pain.—Phillips Brooks.

Home Reading.

THROUGH PEACE TO LIGHT.

I do not ask, O Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load.

I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet.

For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead:
Lead me aright—
Though strength should falter, and though heart should bleed—
Through Peace to Light.

I do not ask, O Lord, that thou shouldst shed
Full radiance here;
Give but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear.

I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see;
Better in darkness just to feel thy hand
And follow thee.

Joy is like restless day, but peace divine
Like quiet night;
Lead me, O Lord, till perfect day shall shine
Through Peace to Light.

—Adelaide Anne Procter.

HOW MOLLY HELPED.

The little hamlet of V— had suffered terribly by the flood. Somewhat removed from the main lines of travel, and consisting only of a dozen or more scattered cottages, it had been reached by no relief boats or other aid. All this, however, made it none the less hard for the farmers, whose resources were now at the lowest ebb.

On this particular Saturday evening some of the neighbors had collected at the post office, and were gloomily discussing the prospects. One after another told his sad story of want and destitution. There were children at home crying for bread; sick people there were—shivering, starving people. What should be done? Everybody for miles in either direction was nearly or quite as badly off as themselves. They separated and went to their several homes without a word of cheer.

The next day, Sunday, a few men and women met for prayers. "O God," they cried, brokenly, "thou who makest thy angels spirits and thy ministers a flaming fire, send us help, send us help!"

Now it often turns out that God begins to answer our prayers before we offer them. So it was in this case. While that little knot of sufferers had been hopelessly discussing and dismissing one plan after another, the night before, Molly Bean had crept in, unseen by the rest, and, crouching behind a barrel, had listened intently to all that was said. Molly was not a prepossessing child. She had sandy hair, many freckles, and no eyebrows to speak of. She was barefoot, and her thin wrists came out far beyond the ragged sleeves of her dress. Her one beauty was in her eyes, which were of a soft reddish brown, like the deer's and which shone like stars when a tear glistened in them, which happened this very night; for one of the helpless, wailing little babies referred to was in Molly's wretched home—Molly's wee, wee brother.

As she listened she made up her mind. Without a word she crept out of the building, looked nervously over her shoulder with those wild eyes of hers, then shot off into the darkness like a startled roe.

Sunday evening was a quiet one in the great city terminus of the Ohio and X. Y. Railroad. The president of the corporation sat in his comfortable office, his feet on the fender of a glowing grate. It had been a good year for the road, and a handsome dividend was assured for the stockholders. The president felt so very contented over this reflection that he was dropping into an easy nap, when a sharp knock at the door started his eyes wide open.

"Come in!" he called.

All, brown-bearded man entered, leading what some difficulty could be made out to be a little girl. The president glanced at her bare feet, which were covered with mud high above the ankles, and frowned. Then he met the appealing look in the little creature's brown eyes and relented.

"Well, Mr. Everton, what now? Who've you picked up?"

"Tell your story, my dear," said the tall man, kindly, to his small companion, drawing up a chair for her.

"Please, sir, I'm Molly Bean, and I've come from V— ter get some milk for Jinks and somethin' fer dad— an'— an'— " Molly swallowed hard and went on: "The water's drowned everything, please, sir, and the cow's gone— an'— an'— nobody's come." Here she broke down in good earnest and sobbed in her poor little thin hands.

"How did she get here?" inquired the president, uneasily.

The tall man (who was the city missionary) pointed silently to her muddy feet, cut and bruised as well, with her journey by night and day.

"You do not mean she walked all the way—forty-one miles!"

The other nodded. "I've given her something to eat and let her rest half an hour at the rooms. She would not stay longer."

The president half turned and touched an ivory knob. A man in brass buttons appeared at the office door and waited respectfully.

"Has No. 5 freight got in yet?"

"Due in five minutes, sir; telegraphed just outside the yard."

"Tell Andy not to draw his fire, but report to me at once as soon as he's in."

The man withdrew. A few minutes later he reappeared with the engineer, covered with soot and oil. The result of the conference was that within an hour a locomotive was puffing slowly out of the freight yard, with no car attached, but having in its tender, besides a fresh supply of fuel and water, several large packages, evidently containing flour, milk, canned meat, and such other provisions as could be got together in so short a time. In the cab were four people—the engineer, the fireman, Mr. Everton, and a small, freckle-faced girl with no eyebrows to speak of.

Once out upon the clear line, how that old engine did leap to her work! Flashing out great floods of light as the fireman piled her fire box with shovelful after shovelful of coal, panting with huge gasps from her iron lungs, throbbing and quivering in every nerve, she roared on through the night, bearing her precious load to the weary and starving, who thought their Father in heaven had forgotten them. On and on, scattering storms of sparks on every side, calling out shrilly as she dashed past the small way stations, until with two sharp, exultant cries, "I've—come!" she slowed up at the depot nearest V—.

Before morning there was rejoicing in the little town by the river. The kind missionary stopped long enough to leave many a word of comfort and good cheer, and Molly looked at it all with her soft brown eyes and wondered why everybody was so kind to her. "She was some tired," she admitted, "but what could she do? Thar' was dad an' thar' was Jinks an'—"

"There was God," said the missionary, smiling.—Our Dumb Animals.

NEW STORIES OF CECIL RHODES.

This is an instance of how Cecil Rhodes makes enemies. A young Englishman named Pierce until recently held a good position with the British South African Chartered Company, and was being rapidly advanced by Rhodes, who held him in high favor. Coming out from England, where he had taken a brief vacation, Pierce fell in love with the daughter of a major in the Scots Guards, and, before he reached Bullwayo again, had married the young woman. With funds exhausted, but spirits exuberant, Pierce rushed to the expremier to be congratulated. Rhodes received him coldly, refused to employ him or even advance him enough money to get out of town. Whether or not the arbiter of South Africa has had an unpleasant love romance no one seems to know, but he certainly does not care for women, and dislikes to employ married men.

Persons either like Rhodes immensely or detest him. At Kimberley he is most popular. He became so by refunding to several hundred miners the money which Barney Barnato persuaded them to invest in the Pleiades mine on the Rand. The Kimberley men sunk every sixpence they had saved in this investment, and when it proved a failure they were so wild with rage that Barnato would have had a hard time but for Rhodes, who paid the men $100,000 of his own money, completely reimbursing them and winning their esteem forever.

Among the native tribes in South Africa, Rhodes is called "Lamula M'Kunzi," which might be interpreted approximately into "kind white father." With them he is thoroughly popular. He seems to enjoy sitting in a native kraal and conversing in the various dialects. He addresses them as "my children."

Rhodes' apparent ignorance of the value of money is greatly appreciated in South Africa, where gold sovereigns are about as plentiful as quarter dollars in the ordinary American town. He will sign a check for £40,000 to the order of some friend, and reach in his pocket only to find he has not a single coin to buy the stamp. His valet always makes it a point to carry about some money, for his master is frequently without it.

For those whom he likes, Rhodes will do anything, and the rougher and harder you are, the better chance you stand of winning his favor. He advanced almost unlimited sums to Roland Creech, an American cowboy, who had the contract for building part of the telegraph line from Umtali of Tete, because Creech could thrash any other single white or black man in Portuguese territory.—The Boys' Lantern.

THE PALACE BEAUTIFUL.

A legend was told me the other day which may interest you. A young man, discontented with his lot, dreamed a wonderful dream. He was carried into a beautiful country and was driven in state through leafy bowers and under arching trees, through groves redolent with orange blossoms. Rare exotics bloomed on every side. The place seemed a perfect fairyland of beauty.

After driving for miles and miles, he stopped before a magnificent palace. It was built of marble and the carving was of the finest workmanship. Its minarets and domes were ornamented with rare jewels, which flashed in the sunlight. The doors were of pearls; the floors, of gold; and the ceilings, instead of being frescoed, were studded with rubies and diamonds. The building was of enormous size, covering, with its wings, fully a square mile, and everything was on a scale of rare splendor.

Stepping to one side of the palace, his eyes rested on a dark-brown niche, small, but in such a striking contrast to the palace that he asked the guide what it meant, and why that was not marble also and set around with precious stones.

Imagine the young man's surprise when he said: "The fault is yours. This is the 'Palace Beautiful,' and this is your niche. You have been unhappy because of your lowly station in life, and since you could not have a position of prominence you have spent your time in discontent, while others have been improving their time. It rests upon you alone to make this palace perfect." The young man awoke, saw the lesson taught by his dream, and set to work to marbleize his brown niche.—New York Evangelist.

FORCE.

Some one had said of the quiet little woman that she had "not much force."

When the remark reached her—as such remarks have a fashion of reaching the one for whom they were not intended—she only smiled and said nothing. Others of us smiled also, for we knew her and her life—knew something of how many that quiet voice had influenced, and what a transforming power that gentle presence had been in circumstances which called for strength and courage.

It is not the strongest will that is forever asserting itself; the one that can silently resolve and watchfully wait is the one that finally conquers. Bluster is not bravery, noise is not power, and a curt and domineering manner is no sign of resoluteness or force of character. Young persons often make a mistake just here. They are so afraid they may be considered weak and easy to be imposed upon that they adopt a brusque, on-the-defensive air, which is far from pleasant.

Look about you and see what people really have power over other minds—whose opinion really carries in home, church, and community—and you will learn that gentleness is no bar to forcefulness.—Forward.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., MARCH 8, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

SOME CHRISTIAN CALLS.

We asked last week for fifty dollars to send Brother Asadoor Paul, in Armenia. The responses have begun to come in quite promptly. At this writing we have received ten dollars—three from one sister, the others in dollar contributions. We think the amount will be given. We ask for this for Brother Paul because I think he deserves an expression of kindness and sympathy for his labors and help to continue them. Two small bands of disciples were collected during the life of Brother Azariah Paul. He died. They were poor, their house was burned during the Turkish persecutions, yet they have been steadfast in their worship and continue to meet on the first day of the week. The churches in Nashville, with help from abroad, paid fifteen hundred dollars for a house that was burned. During the life of Azariah Paul they contributed about six hundred dollars a year to support him. Out of this he gave Asadoor Paul one hundred and fifty dollars to support him in preaching. For a year or two after the death of Azariah Paul this amount was continued by contributions to Asadoor; then it ceased, save he was helped some after the close of the Turkish War. My proposition is to send him now a freewill offering of fifty dollars to encourage and help him. He will continue to preach, and I do not think it wise to do more than send occasionally to his help, without any promise of support. There, as here, people need to be taught self-help. We trust the brethren and sisters will send in promptly; and if more comes than is needed for this proposition, we will find other good work to do with it, and report it.

Brother McCaleb is home for a year from Japan, after seven years of labor there. Some have criticized him a little for coming at so great cost, but it has become something of a custom among the missionaries to come home after five years of labor in a foreign field. He remained seven. Those of us who have never tried it do not know what a self-denial and pressure upon all the feelings of the heart it is to be separated from all who speak our language or who can sympathize with us in our feelings and aspirations for improvement and elevation. To be thrown with those unable to converse with us or in any way enter into our feelings and sympathies is next to being alone for that length of time. The spirit no doubt grows hungry for association with kindred spirits. After a year's sojourn and rest, he will return probably for a life work for himself and family. While here he will use his time in visiting churches and stirring up interest in them—not in his work, but in the work of saving all the lost of earth.

The time is on us, as never before in the world's history, for carrying the gospel to all people. The heathen nations are thrown open to the preaching of the gospel as never before. They are brought into contact with the nations that have been made strong and powerful by the presence of the Bible; and if they are not helped, they must be ground out by the stronger arms. The only thing that can help them is the Bible; the only thing that ever made any people strong is the Bible and the influences it has brought to bear upon them. These people must be helped quickly if helped at all. The work of helping and uplifting them must be slow and gradual; but if they will receive and retain it, it will be sure and lasting. The Bible helps them temporarily where it fails to save them spiritually. No people without the Bible ever had a hospital, a school, an asylum to help the needy, the afflicted, the orphan. Contact with Bible influences and civilization often excites them to activity in this line before they accept the Bible as the truth of God. In Japan, since the Bible has been carried there, with its institutions, the heathens have in some places established homes for orphans. This is borrowing from the Bible, and the influences thus exerted will lift them up to a higher plain where they will be brought to accept it. People who will copy after the Bible will be benefited by it, will finally accept it. The hopeless cases are the people who hold themselves aloof from all the influences of the Bible and remain in their ignorance and degradation.

But, without philosophizing more upon this subject, the door is opened for preaching Christ to these nations in darkness. The opening of the door is a call from God to Christians to do this work. The work cannot fail. No work of God, no effort to save people, ever failed. If it did not save the lost, it saved those who made the effort. We ought, brethren, to bestir ourselves to this work. A number of churches, when Brother McCaleb went out, agreed to help him regularly; but few were faithful to their promises. We all need to learn steadfastness and perseverance in what we undertake. As individuals, we need to learn this. Churches fail because individuals fail. Every Christian and every family should rigidly live within its means and set apart a portion for the Lord. Our habits should be regular and fixed and our contributions to the Lord regular, so they can be relied on.

Brother McCaleb, while he is here, wishes to visit the churches and interest them in this work. They should take interest in his work, invite him to visit them, and help and encourage him in his work. He does not come among you as a beggar, but his family must live while in this country as well as when in Japan, and this ought to be considered.

A man that works at farming or merchandise in a haphazard, uncertain way always fails; so will he who goes at religious work in this way fail. So let all adopt regular order in doing the Master's work, and persist in it. "And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the Lord be my God: and this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." That is the way Jacob served the Lord, and was blessed of him. If we will earnestly and faithfully serve him as Jacob did, he will bless as truly and as well as he did Jacob.

D. L.

It is much more important that a man study to know and perform his duties than it is for him to understand and demand his rights. In truth, the nearest way to obtain rights is to perform duties. The performance of duties qualifies for the reception and enjoyment of rights. Rights are the fruit of duties.

D. L.

MORE ON THE SEVENTH SEAL.

In my last article I gave the first of the three woes, pronounced by the angel, to befall men on the earth. I now enter upon the second and third woes.

"And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men. And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them." (Rev. 9: 13-16.) This is an exceedingly strong vision, and indicates a very general upheaval of some sort. The number of men, as indicated in the above figures, is simply immense. It is almost beyond the power of the human mind to conceive of an army so large; and, besides, the whole army is composed of horsemen. If we make these signify a literal army of men, as is usually done, then who are they, or who were they, if we, as some do, consider this part of the vision already fulfilled? I will not venture an effort to solve these questions, and I doubt if the man has been born yet that can do it. But they were to do fearful work.

"And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone. By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths. For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt." (Rev. 9: 17-19.) By this terrible army, whatever it was, or is to be, the third part of men were to be killed. There was a strange combination of power—fire, smoke, and brimstone—while those that sat on the horses had breastplates of fire, jacinth, and brimstone. These are strange figures. Their power was in their mouths and in their tails. These things are too wonderful for me to try to explain. Some see in these figures firearms, cannon, of all sorts and sizes, and small arms of every description, doing their deadly work; and this may be true, so far as I know anything about it. I do not pretend to say. But the destruction was to be great, and no mistake about that. The third part of men were to be destroyed. If that means the third part of the men of the whole world, it indicates something so immense that it is hardly conceivable, the destruction will be so great. If it has reference only to some one nation, or continent, it is still wonderfully great. The third part of the men of even one nation, or country, would be a terrible destruction. Any man may well desire to be spared such ruin. But just such a destruction either has already, or most certainly will, come upon the inhabitants of this world, and it is understood by some that this is yet to be fulfilled; and if so, there is an awful cloud of ruin hanging over somebody. It is also evident that those to be destroyed are wicked people, and that the destruction is a chastisement to turn them from their wicked ways; but the punishment failed to accomplish its desired end.

"And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts." (Rev. 9: 20, 21.) These verses show that the calamities were sent upon the wicked of this world to warn them, and to turn them from their evil ways; but they would not be warned. They saw the ruin, but would not turn from their evil ways. The whole history of this world shows that, as a rule, people are slow to take warning from scourges and great calamities. The Jews are wonderful examples of this principle. When they began to depart from God scourges of various kinds were sent upon them. Wars, pestilences, famines, and such like calamities were sent upon them, from time to time, until large numbers of them were swept from the face of the earth; but with no general or permanent effect. Sometimes they would reform for a time, only to lapse into something still worse; and then greater calamities would be sent, and still only partial or temporary improvements were made. At last the ten tribes were scattered into foreign, heathen lands, nevermore to return to their native lands as a people. Then next the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin were carried to Babylon, where they remained for seventy years, only a part of them ever returning to their own land and city; but they were never again able to form a regular kingdom, or to rear their heads over the nations. During these reverses their sufferings were sometimes so terrible as to be almost indescribable; and yet no lasting and decided improvements were made, and they were notified time and again that these calamities were sent upon them by the Lord for their sins and their stubborn and continued disregard of God's authority. And when Jesus came, the climax of their wickedness was reached in rejecting him, putting him to death; and rejecting the gospel and putting apostles to death. On these accounts they were scattered from their native land, and have never yet been able to return and reestablish themselves as a nation, and to reestablish their kingdom, or religion.

Also in modern times we have wars and rumors of wars, foreign and civil, carrying awful ruin and suffering in their trains; and yet the masses of the people in every land are still in rebellion against God. Theft, robbery, murder, fornication, idolatry, and every species of wickedness that humanity can invent are still abounding in the land, while only a few even recognize the hand of God in these things at all. Hence very few people take warning by them, and turn from their evil ways. It seems to me that no man can look at these visions and prophecies in the book of Revelation and doubt that God has a hand in these awful calamities foretold. He still uses wicked men, and even demons, in the accomplishment of ends, as he has ever done. But all the same, the hand of God is in these things, and if men would only recognize this fact, they surely would be made better. Wars always arise on account of wickedness. Since the establishment of Christianity, which is emphatically a religion of peace, the Lord's people as such do not get up wars or engage in wars. The wicked are the sword of the Lord; and when a nation of people, either in whole or in part, is ripe for destruction, some other wicked nation is ready to do the work. But their success in such cases does not prove them righteous, or that God is on their side, any further than to use them as a sword to punish or destroy those that are ripe for destruction; and their turn of ruin will certainly come, if they do not turn from their evil ways. Who can say that these modern wars are not fulfilling some of these strange and wonderful prophecies of the book of Revelation? There are terrible calamities yet in store for this world, which are certain to come if men do not turn from their wicked ways. I do not know when or how, but they are coming without a doubt; and some of these awful woes, as foretold in the opening of these seven seals, may now be in a state of fulfillment, for aught I know. Anyway, Christians ought to increase their earnestness and zeal in doing the Lord's work and service on earth, while the wicked everywhere ought to be warned of the awful danger and ruin that await them unless they flee to the great city of refuge, the church of living God. These are some of the lessons all learn from these visions and prophecies, without trying to tell when, where, how, and by whom.

they are to be accomplished. It is a sad comment upon the people of this world, that when such awful calamities come upon them that a third part are destroyed, those that are left will not repent, will not turn away from their wickedness into the service of God. But such has been the history of man through all time. These visions and prophecies are given for a wise purpose, and all men, in all ages, can learn important lessons from them, if they will.

Chapter 10, still in the seventh seal, opens thus: "And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire: and he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth, and cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices." (Rev. 10: 1-3.) And John says that when he was about to write, he was told to seal up what the seven thunders uttered, and not write them. So no man can tell what the seven thunders signified, as they were not written.

"And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, and swore by him that liveth forever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer." (Rev. 10: 5, 6.) This is another very strange vision, that we can understand but little about. It has been generally understood that when this angel said there should be time no longer it meant the final end of time. Others think it had no reference to the final end of the world. I will not say, for I do not know. Most of us, I suppose, have been accustomed to apply it to the end of time, and it may be so, but the more I study the passage, with its connections; the less I am inclined to take any definite position about it. But one thing is certain, and that is, if all will serve the Lord faithfully while they live, it will all be well with them, whether they can understand these wonderful visions or not.

The next verse says: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." These things, as signified, will be brought to an end, but who can tell when? Then John was directed to go and take the little book out of the hand of the angel. He did so, and the angel told him to eat it up, which he did. Then the angel said to him: "Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings." Thus ends chapter 10.

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." (Rev. 11: 1, 2.) Forty-two months, at thirty days to the month, make twelve hundred and sixty days; then, counting a day for a year, it represents twelve hundred and sixty years; and this is the way most interpreters of prophecy give it. But when all this is conceded, I still do not know anything more about the passage than before. What temple is meant, and what does the outer court represent, and who are the Gentiles, and what is the holy city to be trodden under foot by them for forty-two months? And if these forty-two months represent twelve hundred and sixty years, when did the count of these years begin, when will they end, and what events do these years include? These questions are too much for me.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall stand upon the two hundred and three two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." (Rev. 11: 3-8.) The writer then goes on to represent how the nations and tongues of earth shall see their dead bodies for three days and a half, not suffering them to be buried, and that there would be great rejoicing by the dwellers of the earth because these two prophets tormented them. Then at the end of the three and a half days the spirit came into them again, and they were called up to heaven. Now, who or what were these two witnesses? Some men try to tell, but I do not, simply because I do not know; and I will not burden the reader with the guesswork of men. At the time these two witnesses went up, there was a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and many were slain, while the remnant were affrighted and gave glory to God. Reader, I would explain this also, but I really cannot.

"The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 11: 14, 15.) This seems to bring us to the end, when the nations should be angry, and the time of God's wrath upon them, and the time for the dead to be judged, and all the servants of God should be rewarded. Thus end the visions and prophetic wonders John saw during the opening of the seven seals by the Lion of the tribe of Judah. These prophetic visions seem to cover all time, from the time they were given until time shall be no longer.

And now if we will bear in mind the facts that the wicked will all perish, and that God will always care for and bless the righteous, and not puzzle our brains over things that are beyond our comprehension in these visions, they may be very beneficial to us; otherwise, they will not. E. G. S.

We have just examined a written discussion between J. M. Thompson, of Indianapolis, Ind., and J. H. Lawson, of Denton, Tex. Thompson is a Primitive Baptist, and Lawson is a disciple of Christ. The first half of the discussion Thompson was affirmant on the proposition: "The church to which I, J. M. Thompson, belong as a member, is scriptural in origin, doctrine, and practice." They wrote ten articles each in this order, and then Lawson took the affirmative for ten more articles each. Thompson is a wordy man, and could always fill his sheet, but failed to try to locate the origin of his church, at any specified time or place, by the word of God. He spent much time on the general history of the church, to prove there were Baptists, or people, all along, that taught and practiced as the Primitive Baptists do. Lawson pressed him to specify the time and place, but never succeeded in getting him to do so. Most of his time was spent in trying to establish his doctrine of election, including much needless repetition. When Lawson took the lead, he showed the time and place when and where the church of God was established, by the New Testament, and how people entered into it. This was briefly, but plainly done. Both debaters are men of talent, and both very ready in language; and those that want to read anything on that line would be interested in reading this discussion. The speeches, or rather articles, are short, and the book is well worth the money asked for it to any that feel an interest on the subject. Neatly bound in paper covers, at fifty cents each. Address J. H. Lawson, Denton, Tex., for the book. E. G. S.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries will hereafter be limited to forty lines and signature. This is about two hundred and fifty words, and makes nearly a half column. Avoid the use of poetry as much as possible, especially of that which is original.—Editors.]

LYONS.

After a few days' illness, Brother Andy Lyons departed this life on the morning of January 21, 1900. It is said by those who knew him that he lived a consistent Christian life, and died in the full triumph of the faith. He was a member of the Henderson Chapel congregation, in Rutherford County, Tenn. He leaves a wife and three little children to mourn their loss; but this is a notice for them to make ready for the same.

S. W. WOMACK.

CARMACK.

One more of God's true followers has finished his course in this world. Brother J. R. Carmack, of Mars' Hill Church, El Paso, Ark., died on January 20, 1900. The church will miss the good brother very much, as he was one of the leaders. Brother Carmack was a true Christian and loved by all. May his death be a warning to the church and cause the people to think more about their eternal happiness. May God bless his wife and two children, who are left to grieve after their dear husband and father. May they live true Christians and go home to God.

ARTHUR WILSON.

El Paso, Ark.

BARFIELD.

Mrs. Jennie Barfield was born on August 17, 1866. She was married to Jesse L. Barfield, on July 18, 1897, being at that time a widow, with four children. She died on December 5, 1899, leaving six children and a husband to mourn the loss of wife and mother. She was first a disciple of Christ, and afterwards joined the Baptist Church. She is said to have been an earnest, good woman. Thus one by one our friends are passing over. If the living will faithfully serve the Lord, they may meet all the faithful ones who have gone on before, where partings will be known and felt no more.

E. G. S.

MARTIN.

S. Annie, the beloved wife of Brother George F. Martin, closed her earth life at the family home, near Terrell, Tex., on February 21, 1900, and was buried at Lawrence, Tex., the following day in the presence of a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends. She was born near Granville, Jackson County, Tenn., on October 9, 1846. She was married on April 6, 1870, and in July, 1871, was baptized by Brother J. H. Harding, at Antioch Church, Trousdale County, Tenn. She came to Texas in 1881. She became the mother of five boys and two girls. Faithful, loyal, and loving in all life's relationships, she has passed from earth to receive the Christian's reward.

R.

DUNCANS.

Sister Emily Duncans, who lived on Addison avenue, Nashville, Tenn., met with an awful fate about 6:30 o'clock on Friday evening, January 26, 1900. While standing in front of the fire her dress caught on fire, and before any assistance reached her, almost every vestige of clothing was burned from her. She was carried to the City Hospital, where she lingered a few hours, when death relieved her of her suffer-

True Economy

The difference of cost between a good and a poor baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year. The poor powder would cost many times this in doctors' bills.

Royal Baking Powder may cost a little more per can, but it insures perfect, wholesome food. In fact, it is more economical in the end, because it goes further in leavening and never spoils the food.

Royal Baking Powder used always in making the biscuit and cake saves both health and money.

You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is poisonous.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

ing. She told those who came to her assistance that they could not do anything to relieve her; but she was ready, willing, and prepared to meet death. She was baptized by the writer some years ago, and, as far as I know, lived a faithful, Christian life.

S. W. WOMACK.

MELEAR.

P. V. Melear died on February 9, 1900, leaving a wife and two stepchildren, one boy and one girl, to mourn their loss. He was sixty-eight years of age, and a devoted member of the church of God. He was the only member in the congregation at El Bethel that would pray in public. He was slow of speech, like Moses of old, but he contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. He suffered a great deal in his illness; but, thank God, his troubles are all over, and there is no doubt but that he is now among the spirits that are sanctified in Christ Jesus. May God bless his wife and his stepchildren, and may we all live so we may meet him in the paradise of God, where parting will be no more, is my prayer.

THOMAS J. GOLSON.

BILLINGSLEY.

W. T. Billingsley breathed his last at the home of his son-in-law, four miles east of Gainesville, Tex., on January 16, 1900; aged seventy-one years, six months, and ten days. He was born on July 5, 1827; joined the church of Christ about the year 1845; married Malinda Miller, in Bradley County, Tenn., on January 24, 1849. He was a reader of the Gospel Advocate about fifty-four years. He was liked by his acquaintances, and loved by his friends. He leaves an aged companion, two children, and three grandchildren to mourn their loss. While we mourn his death, we shall try to imitate his character, that we may leave behind us the example of a model life. How we miss him in the church—his presence, his prayers, and his example! "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

DAUGHTER.

BUFORD.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) Sister Buford's maiden name was Mary V. Barnett, daughter of J. W. and N. A. Barnett. She was born in Lauderdale County, Ala., on June 10, 1877; moved to Texas with her parents in December, 1882; obeyed the gospel in August, 1893; and was married to W. J. Buford on October 10, 1897. She was a true and obedient child to her parents, a loving and faithful companion to her husband, and a true and tried disciple of the meek and lowly Jesus. She was loved by all who knew her. After willing minds, faithful hearts, and ready hands had done all they could, and the doctors' skill had failed, she fell asleep in Jesus, on February 13, 1900. The funeral service was held by the writer at her old place of worship, Blueridge, Tex., where a large number of her kindred and friends had met to pay their last respects to one loved by all. May the Lord in mercy smile upon Brother Buford, and keep him and his dear little baby boy, until they meet their loved one gone before.

THOMAS E. MIEHOLLAND.

HACKNEY.

Ida Hackney was born on March 7, 1859; married to A. S. Johnson on January 3, 1878; obeyed the gospel on July 3, 1887; and died on February 5, 1900. She was nearly forty-one year old. She was the mother of five children, four girls and one boy. For many years she had been confined at home on account of failing health and could not attend church much, though her faith in the promises of God was firm and increased to the end. She expressed a willingness, in fact, an anxiety, to depart and to be with Christ. She complained so often of late of being tired, and of the pleasure there would be in rest. She has been of late a great sufferer from disease and has had other great sorrows and burdens to bear, and there is comfort to her friends in the thought that she is sweetly resting from pain and sorrow. May her children, her husband, her brother, and her sister be comforted by the promises of God in this sad bereavement. There is hope of a reunion of all true Christians in the city of our God. As she drew near the end of the journey she spoke more frequently of her father and mother, long since departed, and on one occasion, after having slept some, she awoke talking about her father and asked if he had not been in the room.

F. B. SRYGLEY.

RUTHERFORD.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.) How strange it seems that we so feebly grasp the truth thus joyously uttered by the psalmist! Surely, if we could catch but a tithe of the fullness of this statement, we would not feel the sadness and sorrow we do at the departure of our loved ones, when with waiting, watching, suffering with pain and affliction, they softly steal away from us and cross over to the other side to be with God and the Lamb that was slain for us, that we through him might not perish, but have everlasting life. It looks all darkness and gloom over here, but it is all sweet joy and gladness over there. The death angel visited our congregation on the night of December 17, 1899, and took from our midst Brother S. D. Rutherford. Brother Rutherford was baptized by Brother Shepherd on August 2, 1895, and lived in the one faith to the last. He was a merchant, and while a great sufferer from consumption, he was attentive to his business until a short time before his death. He was a devoted and affectionate husband. He leaves a wife and one child and a host of friends to mourn what we feel is our loss, but it is his eternal gain. We sympathize with Sister Rutherford, and pray the God of love and mercy to watch over and protect her and her baby, and that she may continue in the faith to the end. It is sweet to fall asleep in Jesus, leaning on his everlasting arms.

L. L. BELL.

MULLINS.

Brother Frank Mullins was born and reared in Rutherford County, Tenn. He was born on February 12, 1832, and died near Silo, I. T., on January 2, 1900. He passed away in the peace which the world cannot give. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Perry in 1850, and they lived together almost fifty years. He leaves one son and daughter in the Indian Territory and daughter in Texas, and one

From Washington

How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C.—“When our boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to lance the sore, but I would not let him and continued giving him medicine for about four months when the bunch broke in two places and became a running sore. Three doctors said it was scrofula and each ordered a blood medicine. A neighbor told me of a case somewhat like our baby's which was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I decided to give it to my boy and in a short while his health improved and his neck healed so nicely that I stopped giving him the medicine. The sore broke out again, however, whereupon I again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and its persistent use has accomplished a complete cure. I do not think there will be even a scar left. I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it everywhere I get a chance.” Mrs. NETTIE CHASE, 47 K St., N. E.

Like Magic.

“A complication of troubles, dyspepsia, chronic catarrh and inflammation of the stomach, rheumatism, etc., made me miserable. Had no appetite until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acted like magic. I am thoroughly cured.” N. B. SEELEY, 1874 West 14th Ave., Denver, Col.

If you have failed to get relief from other remedies try Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cures when all others fail, because it is Peculiar to Itself.

at Sharon, Tenn., to mourn his death. Mrs. Elizabeth Mullins is now a widow, but she has many relatives and friends to care for her. Uncle Frank departed from this world leaving many with sad, aching hearts, though we have a sweet hope for him in a brighter and purer world. He gained many friends in and around Silo and other points in this Territory. He visited me the latter part of October, and was unusually cheerful. He was always ready to take a part in every good work. He was a faithful Christian, loved our Redeemer, and always made every one happy around him. We all miss our beloved uncle. It is hard to give up our loved ones, but it is sweet to think that they are waiting for us. Over the sea the influence of his beautiful life cannot be lost; death will only throw the halo of a tenderer light upon it, and leave it safe in a setting of golden memories in the hearts of those who love him. Perhaps could he have expressed his last thought while his spirit wavered between his dear ones on the vanishing earth and the glories opening before him, those parting words would have been: “Meet me in heaven.”

LLOYD PERRY.

CHRISMAN.

Joe Brown, aged ten months, son of Jimmie Joe and Bettie B. Chrisman, died of cholera infantum, on February 18, 1900. He was buried on February 20, 1900, at the home of Mr. Daniel Chrisman, near Rock Spring, Tenn., services by Brother Sam. Harris. God sent his angel and plucked this lovely little rosebud from the home garden. Such a fair flower! Our Father had need of it to “adorn immortal bowers.” While the hearts of its devoted father, mother, grandparents, and others are left desolate, they have the comforting of the Master that “of such is the kingdom of heaven.” Little Joe is only gone on before; while there is one less to love on earth, there is one more to meet in heaven. Knowing that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord, look up through your tears and say: “We are thankful, Father, that you did lend us this sweet, bright spirit for a short season.” In its angelic loveliness it will be “watching and waiting” for you.

Not now, but in the coming years—
It may be in the better land—
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And then—ah, then—we'll understand.

The sympathy of their many friends is extended to the bereaved parents and family. M. C. G.

PHILLIPS.

Brother Robert H. Phillips calmly fell asleep on the evening of January 11, 1900, at his home in Bradyville, Tenn. He was one of our oldest citizens, being in his eighty-eighth year, having been born on September 3, 1812. He was married to Nancy Melton, who survives him. He was buried with Christ in baptism in July, 1845, by Elder J. J. Trott, one of our pioneer preachers of the gospel, becoming a member of Woodbury congregation, where he was then residing. He removed to Bradyville some years ago, and for some time has been a regular attendant, worshiping with Bradyville congregation. He was buried at Thyatira churchyard, after a service held by the writer. He leaves a wife, a number of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, also a host of friends, to mourn their loss. He will be missed, but we would not call him back if we could; for we sorrow not as those who have no hope. John wrote: “I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.” Blessed assurance! I would counsel the bereaved ones that each strive so to live that when the call to come up higher is given, they may be ready to come unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, there to meet with Uncle Bobbie and receive with him an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you. Of Uncle Bobbie we can say:

He has finished his work; shall we mourn our below'd one,
Or weep that his face we no longer behold?
O, sweet is our hope in this moment of anguish,
We'll meet him again in the city of gold!

J. P. CURLEE.

Her Face
Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with Heiskell's Ointment
the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.
Heiskell's Soap
Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.
Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

- ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
- BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
- DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
- FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
- ANCHOR Cincinnati.
- ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
- ATLANTIC New York.
- BRADLEY New York.
- BROOKLYN New York.
- JEWETT New York.
- ULSTER New York.
- UNION Chicago.
- SOUTHERN Chicago.
- SHIPMAN Chicago.
- COLLIER St. Louis.
- MISSOURI St. Louis.
- RED SEAL St. Louis.
- SOUTHERN St. Louis.
- JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
- MORLEY Cleveland.
- SALEM Salem, Mass.
- CORNELL Buffalo.
- KENTUCKY Louisville.

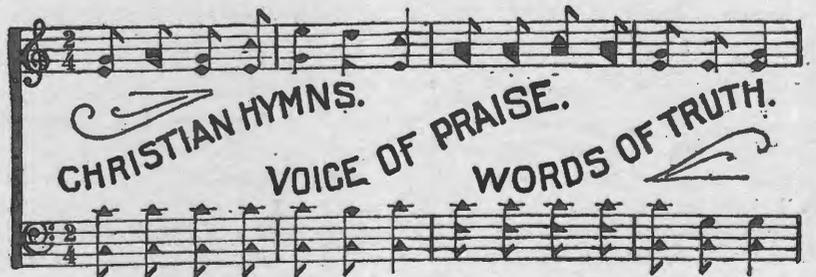

START right. In painting, the first or priming coat is important. It is the foundation. It is a mistake to think anything is good enough for it. If a mixture of Zinc, Barytes, etc., is used the paint will surely crack and peel. The only safe paint for priming is Pure White Lead. It combines with the oil, forming a tough, elastic coat that penetrates and will adhere to the surface. The brands in the margin are genuine.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

"Christian Hymns" and "Words of Truth" may each be had in Morocco binding and gold edges for $1.50.

HYMN BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN HYMNS.		VOICE OF PRAISE.		WORDS OF TRUTH.
MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.	MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.	MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.	WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$4 80	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$3 60
Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	5 60	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	3 35	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	4 40
MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.		WORD EDITION—CLOTH.		MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.
Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$6 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$2 75	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$4 80
Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	6 80	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	75	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	5 60
Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$2 00	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$1 50	Per dozen by express, not prepaid.....	$2 00
Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	2 40	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	1 75	Per dozen by mail, prepaid.....	2 25

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
232 N. Market Street, Nashville, Tennessee.

DOES THIS

... CONCERN

YOU,
YOUR NEIGHBOR,
YOUR FRIEND,
YOUR RELATIVE,
YOUR ACQUAINTANCE?

If so, write us direct, and at once. We want the address of every sufferer from

RHEUMATISM...

We believe we can cure all such cases. If we fail, there will be no charge for our services and medicine. We will leave it entirely to you to say whether you are benefited or not. We take all the chances. You have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

RHEUMATIC TABLET CO.,
ATLANTA, GA.

After Dinner

To assist digestion, relieve distress after eating or drinking too heartily, to prevent constipation, take

Hood's Pills

Sold everywhere. 25 cents.

General News.

Large sales of cotton were made in the South at 9 cents.

Secretary Root will make a flying trip to Cuba. He wishes to personally examine present conditions in the island.

Hon. Richard Thompson, of Indiana, who was Secretary of the Navy under President Hayes, died on February 9 in his ninety-first year.

There are fifty-three thousand acres of most beautiful forests within the confines of the Yosemite, General Grant, and Sequoia National Parks of California.

The postal service of the United States is the greatest business concern in the world. In the course of the year it handles from four to five billion pieces of matter.

The Japanese Minister to the United States, Kutaro Komura, has been notified by cable from Japan of his appointment as Minister to Russia. He will leave for St. Petersburg about April 15.

During its recent survey for the Transpacific cable the steamer Nero made a sounding near Guam Island to the depth of five thousand two hundred and sixty-nine fathoms, or nearly six miles.

The laws of Hawaii have forbidden the importation and sale of intoxicating liquors and opium. A touching petition has been sent to Washington City signed by influential citizens begging that these regulations will be continued.

More than twenty-five thousand persons were killed by wild animals and snakes in India last year. Nearly one thousand deaths are ascribed to tigers and a large number of man-eating wolves. Lord Curzon has directed that special measures be taken to exterminate these particular pests.

The United States Court of Claims rendered a decision on the claim of Admiral Dewey for prize money on account of the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila harbor. The court decided against the Admiral's contention that the enemy's force was superior to his, and awarded him $9,570.

Our Secretary of the Interior has decided that the models in the United States Patent Office cannot be removed for the purpose of displaying them at the Paris Exposition. Commissioner Peck was desirous that an exhibit should be made, but it was decided that the models were records of the office and could not be removed under the law.

The Senate took up the Quay case on February 23 by a vote of thirty-four to twenty-eight, eighteen Senators being paired on the question. About two-thirds of those who voted in the affirmative are Republicans. The debate was begun by Mr. Daniel. It seems to be admitted that a majority of the Senate will vote for Quay, who will thus retain his seat.

The new Philippines Commission has been completed, and now includes Judge William H. Taft, of Cincinnati; Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of the University of Michigan; Judge Henry E. Ide, of Vermont; Gen. Luke E. Wright, of Tennessee; and Prof. Bernard Moses, of the University of California. Messrs. Taft, Worcester, and Moses are Republicans; Ide and Wright are Democrats.

A Lehigh Valley Railroad engine recently accomplished the feat of hauling a train consisting of thirty-three steel cars of one hundred thousand pounds capacity and thirty-seven wooden cars of eighty thousand pounds capacity, each fully loaded with anthracite coal. The total weight of the seventy cars was four thousand five hundred and sixty-seven tons.

Abraham E. Elmer, of Utica, N. Y., has celebrated his one hundred and eighteenth birthday. He was born in Warren, Herkimer County, in 1782. He was a cobbler until he was one hundred and four years old, when cataracts grew on both his eyes. Elmer says he saw Washington once "to some doin's at New York." His father lived to be ninety-nine and his mother ninety-seven.

B. E. Cook, who was a captain of New York militia which did escort duty to General Lafayette on his trip up the Hudson River in 1824, is dead, aged ninety-seven years. He was the father of Capt. Frank A. Cook, commander of the cruiser Brooklyn during the late war. His grandson, Frank E. Cook, is a surgeon on the gunboat Wilmington, and another grandson is at Annapolis.

The census bureau is now busily engaged in the shipment of supplies to the various supervisors in different sections of the country. The preliminary work for taking this census is several months ahead of previous work of this nature. All the supervisors have now been thoroughly instructed in regard to their work, and by June 1 the full corps will be ready to glean the required statistics.

Secretary Root has sent to the House claims for damages alleged to have been caused by United States troops during the Spanish-American War, principally while encamped or traveling. The claims aggregate $132,006. Among them are: Claims from Alabama, $13,345; Florida, $3,169; Georgia, $11,140; Kentucky, $195; South Carolina, $24,082; Tennessee, $3,900; Texas, $1,091; and Virginia, $14,555.

Miss Sarah Porter, who died at her home in Farmington, Conn., on February 18, 1900, was for nearly seventy of her eighty-seven years in active service as a teacher. Her famous school in Farmington was opened in 1844, and within ten years took substantially the position it never afterwards lost. For fifty years there have been no vacancies. Miss Porter was able for the last fifty years to select her pupils from a long list of waiting applicants.

Under the name of "magnalium," Dr. L. Mach has produced alloys of aluminum and magnesium which, while considerably lighter than pure aluminum, are harder than that metal and better suited, it is asserted, for working. With 15 per cent of magnesium the alloy is said to resemble brass in the readiness with which it submits to the operations of turning, boring, and cutting. By increasing the magnesium to 25 per cent, an alloy resembling bronze is produced, but the color is silvery white.

The Independent says of the present dissatisfaction among the people with

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE
TENN.

NOW READY

Facts, Faith, and Fire

A NEW BOOK BY

B. F. HAYNES, Editor of Zion's Outlook

ORDER AT ONCE OF

Zion's Outlook, Nashville, Tenn.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth Sent, Postpaid, to Any Address $1.00

Agents Wanted Everywhere Liberal Commissions Allowed

the course of the leaders of the Republican party in Congress: "The inquiry concerning the deposits of Treasury funds in the banks, the provisions of the ship subsidy bill, the repudiation of the treaties of reciprocity, the denial of free trade to Puerto Rico, and certain other indications of party policy, have caused in many minds an impression that some leaders of the party are closely allied with organized and aggressive wealth, and are given over to a selfish commercialism."

R. A. Shifflett, Commissioner of Labor, has collected some interesting statistics in regard to the pearl industry in this State, which, though in its infancy, is quite large and profitable. This industry is confined principally to the Clinch River, though quite a number of rare gems have been found in the Cumberland, Duck, and Tennessee Rivers. The estimated value of pearls taken from the Clinch alone this year is $25,000, and from other streams mentioned about $10,000, making a total value of pearls taken from these streams for the year $35,000.

In 1800 there were nine hundred and three post offices in the United States, twenty thousand eight hundred and seventeen miles of mail routes, and revenues of $280,804. To-day the post offices number over seventy thousand; there are nearly half a million miles of mail routes; and, to use the words of the President's message, "the expenditures and the revenues will much exceed one hundred millions during the current year." The last Congress was obliged to increase the postal appropriations sixteen millions of dollars, and it is more than likely that the present Congress will have to add millions more to these extraordinary figures.

General Cronje, of the Boer Army, with all the forces under him, surrendered unconditionally to General Lord Roberts. The British, who have been acting on the defensive, are now invading the Orange Free State, Colesbury is now occupied by the English. The long siege of Ladysmith was ended after severe fighting by General Buller's troops. The Boers have retired from all the country around that place. For one hundred and eighteen days General White held Ladysmith against the entire army of General Joubert. During these days of siege constant bombardment was kept up by the Boers and several determined efforts to take the strongest positions of the British were made.

Secretary Thomas Richardson has issued the official call for the tenth annual session of the Transmississippi Commercial Congress, to be held at Houston, Tex., on April 17-21. The territory to be represented embraces all of the States and Territories lying west of the Mississippi River. The subjects for discussion are set forth as follows: Irrigation, rivers and harbors, Nicaragua Canal, Pacific cable, merchant marine, St. Louis World's Fair, trade with the Orient, consular service, statehood, railroad transportation, preservation of forests, beet sugar, trade with Mexico, advantages of American travel, exports and imports through Gulf and Pacific ports, need of home factories, and drainage.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Pension Department is now a fully equipped department of the service, and during the month of January the board of officers at their several meetings acted upon the cases of nine hundred and ninety-eight employees who were relieved from the service on the first of the present year and fixed the monthly pension allowances to be paid to each of such retired employees, the aggregate of which amounts to over $200,000 per annum. The employees relieved represented all grades of the service, there being 8 officers, chief clerks, and special agents; 183 laborers; 92 foremen, assistant foremen, and other maintenance of way men; 93 blacksmiths and machinists; 91 engine men and roundhouse men; and 73 trainmasters, conductors, and train, yard, and boat men.

James Eads How, of St. Louis, Mo., who has determined to give his inherited wealth to the poor, is a recent graduate of Harvard University, the grandson of James B. Eads, who made the Mississippi jetties, and the son of the late general manager of the Wabash Railroad. He inherited from his father the use of $75,000, and will probably receive nearly $1,000,000 upon the death of his mother. He holds that he is not entitled to any part of these sums, and that they should be "restored" to the public. Therefore he has given to the poor thus far all the earnings of his father's bequest. He lives with the poor, and has founded a mission for them. He is clothed like the lowliest. He is a vegetarian, and he supplies his own wants by labor of various kinds, waiting for the time when he shall be able to use large sums upon his projects for the assistance and the education of those who have little or nothing.

For Loss of Appetite,
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. H. Holcombé, New Orleans, La., says: "It is particularly serviceable in treatment of women and children, for debility and loss of appetite."

Remember "Ailenroc's B"

The only house in all of the leading states. Agents because there in the cheaper they sell at America handling artistic instruments do not sell them is more money makes which a good price.

We can sell you the same direct, at prices save agents' profits.

MADE IN FRANCE
PIANO & ORGAN CO.
Manufacturers and Dealers
St. Louis, Mo.

Write us, a 5¢ stamp will save you money. In doing so mention this paper.

The Church Supplanted.

Under the above caption I see an article in the Gospel Advocate of November 16, 1899, page 726, taken from the Congregationalist, and also notice of same, on page 729, by Brother Lipscomb. The subject treated, to my mind, deserves more than a passing notice.

More than a year ago I became thoroughly convinced as to the cause or causes of this universal lukewarmness—this coldness, lethargy, and indifference—so manifest upon the part of the church, and the world, too, concerning churchgoing or attendance upon the worship so justly due the God of all the earth, especially on the part of the young people. I agree with the writer of said article when she says: "Their absence from church gatherings does not imply an increase of dissipation and disorderly habits." No; not that. Brother Lipscomb touched the taproot of this great and growing evil when he said: "The multiplication of services and societies tends to diminish interest in the church services." This I regard as the keynote of the whole affair.

Never in our day has there been such a manifest craze among our people for entertainment as there is now, and with regret I must say, the lighter and more trashy the character of the entertainment, the greater the drawing influence. Anything on earth, from a regular theatrical performance down to a crossroads singing class, will take the populace away from the place where God is preached or worshipped. Those gatherings have few restrictions around them; the attendants are at full liberty, as a rule, to talk, to laugh, carry on courships, to go in and go out—a kind of go-as-you-please arrangement, which suits the animal, the sensual, in man's nature. I shall therefore claim, as I have done in public preaching, that societyism is chargeable, largely, for the present state of the minds of our people.

Let us here look at some of the oldest and most honored of the societies (Institutions) of the world—while, indeed, all of them, save the church, are of the world. Take Freemasonry first. Does she propose anything for man beyond this life? Of course not; but she does propose good for man. Yes; surely she does. Is it a good work that the church of Jesus Christ was not designed by its author to do? Do you say, "Yes?" Then, what is it? O, you say it provides for a man's family after he is dead! Alas! but does not the church do the same? The law of God in both the Old Testament and the New Testament does this. "The fatherless and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied." (Deut. 14: 29.) "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," etc. (James 1: 27.) Thus it is seen that the church of God was designed to do the same work that Freemasonry proposes. Freemasonry is not blamable for its work, but the professed church of God is to blame because of a failure to do its duty, thereby making an opening for the work of the Masonic fraternity (society). I have been a Mason since the year 1866, but hold an honorable demit from the lodge at Kaufman, Tex., more than twenty years old, and can truly say that Masonry in its purity is a good thing, but no better than the church of God, which the death and sufferings of Christ attest.

What may be said of Freemasonry may as truly be said of every other benevolent society, order, or institution of ancient or modern origin. Notwithstanding the claims of Freemasonry to antiquity, I verily believe that had the church of Christ in duty filled the measure as contemplated by its Founder, there never would have existed a single benevolent institution—Freemasonry, Odd Fellowship, or what not—having as its major object the good of mankind. Seeing things in this light about twenty-three years ago led me to ask a demit from Bloomfield Lodge No. 112, at Kaufman, Tex.

I was then impressed by this thought: If the church of Christ was designed to do and accomplish all good to man in this life and also in the life beyond, am I not sinning in placing laurels upon the brow of a man-made institution, that properly belong to my Savior and the church he died for? But I am straying. Christ said: "My kingdom is not of [like] this world." (John 18: 36.) But in utter disregard of this declaration, the church has aped the world until it is difficult to distinguish them. Today it seems that by many the church is regarded as a society only—a society among the many societies—and I reason thus:

Man's mental powers and his religious sentiments as well have their just limits, like the land possessing a given share of productive powers. From a lot a farmer desires to reap a rich harvest of grain. He prepares the soil well and plants the seed; but an enemy, knowing his purposes, seeds it with Johnson grass; another, with crop grass seed. Now the land has not power enough to divide between the grasses and give also a good yield of grain; and just to the extent that vegetating power is given to the grasses it is correspondingly taken from the grain, therefore the grain crop is a failure. Then, as man's moral and religious sentiments have their limits, when the Christian mind becomes imbued with a love for the world and the things of the world, correspondingly his love for God and his institutions is lessened or weakened.

Then, again, time and money cut a figure in the case. The Lord requires that we devote one-seventh of our time to him, one day of each week. This day belongs to the Lord, but here are the Epworth League (society), Christian Endeavor Society, Ladies' Aid Society, together with a host of other societies too numerous to mention, and each must have its share of time, which leaves little or no time to give to the church; and last, though not least, each of these must share of my means, my money, which leaves little or none for the church, and she, having grown old, is therefore a little stale, anyway, suited best for old fogies and women subject to hysterics, so we will give her the go-by and feed our souls upon things more entertaining and better adapted to our progressive age. Yes, it is not to be questioned that the many societies of our day have through man's wantonness, his morbid desire for entertainment, to gratify his sensual appetite, eaten out and taken the place of a true fondness for the worship of God. The present tendency of things is truly alarming.

The following is clipped from the January number, 1900, of the Knights of Honor, published at Boston, Mass.:

"At the beginning of the century life insurance, and especially fraternal beneficial insurance, was practically unknown. The new century dawned with a beneficial membership of about two and a half million."

Then add to this the many societies, especially church societies and others not designed as "beneficial," and the number becomes astounding; and to these may be added the Congregationalist's modern Sunday school, which surely comes in for its share of the church spoils. It is said that, when Sunday school is dismissed, from one-third to one-half of a congregation take their leave. This shows where the interest of the Sunday school pupils lies. The cause may be traced, as previously stated, to the lack of moral restraint in the Sunday school. Conversing is allowable, courting is admissible, and a private game at the rear of the house is not an infringement upon the taste or feelings of the grave principal, who may or may not be a religionist at all.

I do hope that the Congregationalist and our beloved Brother Lipscomb will write more along this line. I am sure the keynote has been sounded. Yes; sound the alarm loud and long, brethren.

V. I. STIRMAN.

Texas Notes.

Brother E. H. Rogers, preached at Justin on the second Lord's day in February.

The writer preached at Era on the first Lord's day in February. There is a large congregation there. They are able to be sounding out the word, but, like most congregations, just sound it about two or three times a year.

I preached at Valley View, on my way from Era, to an attentive audience. We have some good brethren at Valley View.

Brother Don Carlos Jones, of Malta, O., preached in Denton on the second Lord's day in February. Brother Jones is a young man of good talent. He is now coworker with Brother John T. Hinds on the Gospel Preacher. The Gospel Preacher is a good paper, and is contending for the good old way.

Brother J. W. Ohiam, of Thorp Spring, debated with J. C. Weaver, in February, at Lannius. I attended the first part of the debate, and I can say it was interesting and instructive.

We were sorry indeed to learn of the death of Sister R. W. Officer. Brother Officer has our deepest sympathies. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." One day we all must cross over. May we be ready.

I spent the month of January in Southwest Arkansas. The first Lord's day I was in Texarkana, and could not get a train for other parts until in the evening. As there is no faithful congregation there; Brother T. E. Tatum and I went out to the Christian Church. They seem to think more about conforming to the ways of the sects than about the unity of the brethren. One young lady played the organ during the entire communion service. I could not but think if the whole earth was shocked by the death of our Savior, the sun hiding his face and refusing to look upon the sad scene, and everything in stillness, that at least that was no time for an organ. I did not commune with the new sect. Did I do right?

I was engaged in a good meeting at Lockesburg, the county seat of Sevier County, Ark., but was called home on account of the illness of my little babe. There are only three or four brethren who live there, and they have only been there a short time. Lockesburg is an excellent mission point. I visited Corinth and other points while in Arkansas. Corinth was the home of Brother C. M. Wilmeth before he moved to Old Mexico, and was also my home before coming to the "Love Star State." I was made to rejoice by meeting many of my old friends while at Corinth.

D. S. LIGON.

Krum, Tex.

MARCH AND THE LION.

Something Better than the Old Saw.

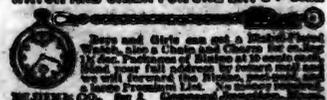

The saying about the lion and the lamb in March often proves false, but there is another and a better one which is literally true. When March comes in and finds you taking Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify, enrich, and vitalize your blood, you may expect, when it goes out, that it will leave you free from that tired feeling and with none of the boils, pimples, and eruptions which manifest themselves because of impure blood in the spring. If you have not already begun taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for your spring medicine, we advise you to begin today. We assure you it will make you feel better all through the coming summer.

A Good Opportunity.

In the month of November, 1896, the college at Smithville, Tenn., was destroyed by fire. Since that time the people of Smithville have been without a college. Realizing the need of one, the disciples of Christ make the following proposition to any loyal disciple of Christ, competent to teach and conduct a school on a high order, who has $2,000 to invest: If he will furnish the above amount, the disciples of Christ at Smithville will give the land—ten acres—a beautiful site for a college; the brick left intact by the fire, about 100,000; and balance of money necessary to build a number one, good college. Any one desiring to take advantage of this opportunity must be well recommended, both as a Christian and teacher. Address all communications to R. B. West or W. B. Foster, Smithville, Tenn.

Give us your order for an American Revised Version Reference Bible. We have the following numbers: No. 3756, cloth, round corners, red edges, $1.50; No. 3753, French Morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, $2.75; No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $4; also, beautifully printed on "Oxford India Paper," No. 3768, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $4.25.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

There are three ways to get a pocket watch, also a Chain and Clasp for one day's work. First, you can buy a watch and chain for $1.00. Second, you can buy a watch and chain for $1.50. Third, you can buy a watch and chain for $2.00. The watch and chain are made of the finest materials and are guaranteed to last for years. The watch is a beautiful timepiece and the chain is a work of art. The watch and chain are a perfect gift for yourself or for a friend. The watch and chain are available in three different styles: the classic, the modern, and the antique. The watch and chain are a must-have for every man. The watch and chain are a symbol of success and achievement. The watch and chain are a reminder of the time we spend on earth. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The watch and chain are a gift from God. The watch and chain are a blessing. The watch and chain are a sign of God's love. The watch and chain are a promise of God's faithfulness. The watch and chain are a reminder of God's grace. The watch and chain are a sign of God's mercy. The

MOZLEY'S LEMON ELIXIR.

A Pleasant Lemon Tonic.

For biliousness, constipation, and appendicitis.

For indigestion; sick headache, and nervous headache.

For sleeplessness, nervousness, and heart failure.

For fever, chills, debility, and kidney diseases, take Lemon Elixir.

For ladies, for natural and thorough organic regulation, take Lemon Elixir.

Dr. Mosley's Lemon Elixir is prepared from the fresh juice of lemons, combined with other vegetable liver tonics, and will not fail you in any of the above-named diseases. Fifty-cent and $1 bottles at all druggists.

Prepared only by Dr. H. Mosley, Atlanta, Ga.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation, and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease, assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mosley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite, and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

L. J. ALLDRED,

Doorkeeper Georgia State Senate, State Capitol, Atlanta, Ga.

Mosley's Lemon Elixir

Is the very best medicine I ever used for the diseases you recommend it for, and I have used many kinds for woman's troubles.

MRS. S. A. GRESHAM,

Salem, N. C.

MOZLEY'S LEMON-HOT DROPS

Cure all coughs, colds, hoarseness, sore throat, bronchitis, hemorrhage, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

Twenty-five cents at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mosley, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:30 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the likeliest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Among the Churches.

On January 31 I left my little family in Louisville, Ky.; for a visit to some of the churches in Middle Tennessee. I stopped first at Woodbourne, Ky. The train was an hour late, and it was half past seven before I reached the chapel. A singing school was going on, so the people were still waiting, being entertained by the singing. A good audience greeted me. Eight years ago I had left this people. Only a few of the old faces were present.

My next stopping point was Horse Cave, Ky. The brethren were glad to see me, and I was glad to see them. All seemed interested in what I had to say.

Arriving in Tennessee, I stopped first at Nashville, where I visited a number of the churches. The brethren received me gladly. Having spent five days here, I proceeded to Columbia, and spoke one night. The next day, Saturday, I rode in a buggy with Brother J. D. Evans, a lifelong old friend and neighbor boy, down to Shady Grove. This is the community where I was brought up. Many were the familiar faces that I had not seen for years. It has been about sixteen years since I left that neighborhood. Since then I returned only occasionally. For eight years I had not been back at all. Many have turned white, others have fallen asleep, and those that were then children have grown to maturity—all of which made me feel like one out of time.

Saturday night and Sunday morning I met with the old home church at Dunlap. It was here that I was born again, some twenty-four years ago, at the age of fourteen. For eleven years I met to break bread with the brethren. From that time until eight years ago I only went back occasionally. I then gave them the parting hand for Japan. We parted in the old house that had stood there for many years, which was said to be one of the oldest meetinghouses in all the country round about; but the time came to tear it down and build a new one. Eight years ago we parted in the old house in sadness and tears; when I returned we met in the new house in joy and gladness. A few years hence and we shall all part from the old house of this tabernacle in sadness, but to meet in the new house prepared up there, with rejoicing.

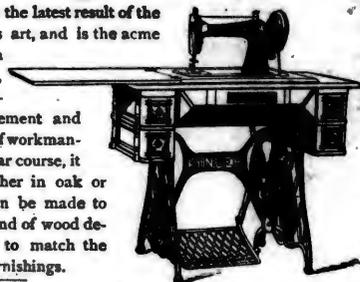

Shall we know each other there? Friends that I had not seen for ten and fifteen years, and whose names I could not have called when absent, came back with a flash at first sight of them. May not this be the way it will be up there?

Out on the "ridge" live an old couple. I always called them "Cousin Myat" and "Aunt Susan." Just why I called them "cousin" and "aunt" I have never known; but I did it and it didn't seem right to do otherwise. They have lived there for a long time, far back before I ever saw the light. In company with one of my brothers I walked up the hollow and out on the "ridge" to see them once more before they cross the dark river. We went through the lot and through the barn just as we did, years ago. There was the same old gate and the same old fork upon which it swung thirty years ago. Between the barn and the house is still the lane, the same as it used to be. "There is the old cedar tree out there; Sarah Ellen and I used to play under that old tree when I was a very little boy."

Aunt Susan was sitting hard by the fire propped up in bed. On the other

The Singer Cabinet-Table

This table is the latest result of the cabinetmaker's art, and is the acme of perfection in convenience, simple ingenuity of arrangement and thoroughness of workmanship. In regular course, it is supplied either in oak or walnut, but can be made to order in any kind of wood desired, finished to match the most ornate furnishings.

The machine is hinged, so that it can be folded down below the table against a bent-wood shield that fully protects the dress of the operator and the floor from all drippings of oil, lint, etc.

By this device the machine is thoroughly protected from dust, and the stand forms an ornamental and useful table that is fitting and appropriate to any home. The hinged extension leaf covering the machine when down is folded back when it is raised, thus making a table-top measuring 50 inches in length by 18 inches in width, affording ample room for the work.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.,

OPERATING THE LARGEST AND BEST ORGANIZED FACTORIES IN THE WORLD FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF SEWING-MACHINES.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LISUEUR, CASHIER.

LACE CURTAINS FREE

These beautiful Royal Lace Parlor Curtains are of the newest design, three yards long, 51 inches wide, are washable and will last a life time. You can get two pairs of these choice curtains, (same design as in cut), and four beautiful Bank Curtains (one yard square each) FREE by sending our GREAT offer to every person selling six boxes of our Tablets. If you agree to sell only six boxes of 10-cent-a-box write to-day and we will send the Tablets by mail postpaid. When sold, send us the money and we will send four Bush Curtains, unbleached, so they may be made to fit any window. Together we will send four beautiful pairs of Royal Lace Parlor Curtains, enough to furnish a room, with our offer of two complete pairs of Royal Lace Parlor Curtains, enough to furnish a room, same day money is received. This is a grand opportunity for ladies to beautify their homes with the best lace curtains. All who have ordered them are delighted. Address: NATIONAL MEDICINE CO., 1010 Chapel St., New Haven, Conn. Box 157 B side sat Cousin Myat in the chair. In the broad old fireplace still burned the backlog. "I am ninety years old to-day," he said. "I was born on February 13, 1810." Aunt Susan is eighty-four. They have been married over sixty years. During the conversation "Cousin Becky," the only child that remains with them, turned and said: "Your mother taught you your letters from the Bible when you were two years old. You wanted to know what were the big letters at the beginning of the chapters and she began and taught you."

Much about the old home has been changed from what it used to be. The old front porch has been torn away and a new room attached, which gives it the appearance of a new building. The old rooms look natural inside. I am out by the "graves" in the corner of the garden. At the foot still stands the cedar with its wide-spreading branches that my brother Alt planted more than thirty years ago. At the head is the towering young pine that my own hands plucked from the hills and planted there when but a mere switch a little more than a foot high. It is now a noble tree that lifts its branches far above the nipping sheep and the cow that would break its twigs on a cold winter's day.

It was arranged for me to speak on Tuesday night at the schoolhouse just completed, at Forty Thicket. Some one was unflinching enough to want to substitute "Emerald Grove" for this venerable old name. "Emerald Grove! Just think of it! Everybody knows that there is not one in all the country round about that could ever get his tongue in shape to pronounce such a combination. Emerald Grove is a stranger to me and is like trying to give to airy nothing a habitation and a name. But behind such good old names as "Blue Buck," "Buck Branch," "Dog Creek," "Kinder Hook," "Ugly Creek," and "Forty Thicket" there is an historic backing reaching far back into the depths of the past, so far back that none would dare pretend to know anything about it, which makes them sparkle and glow like studs on a shirt front. Do not tell me there is nothing in a name. Louisville, Ky. J. M. M'CALEB.

In the Spring,

when the need is greatest, the blood and whole system are especially susceptible to the benefits which will come from taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, and through it reaches every nerve, tissue, muscle, bone, and sinew in the bodily organism. Thus it lays a rational foundation for building perfect health. If you have not taken a spring medicine yet, it is your duty to do so, and from the experience of thousands of people who know that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best, we urge you to take it this season.

The Angelus.

This beautiful picture, mounted on red or gray cardboard, ready for hanging, for 25 cents. When ordering, state whether you desire gray or red background. This picture requires no frame. RAPHAELE CO., Box 484, Atlanta, Ga.

Do not forget our premium offer. Take advantage of them now.

Miseries of Dyspepsia,

That Most Common of Ills. Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic—a Ready, Rational Cure.

"One-half the people in the world suffer from weak stomachs," is a common saying and a true one. Are you one of the suffering half? Have you a variable appetite, nausea, "gnawing at the pit of the stomach," belching, heartburn, loss of flesh, sleeplessness, etc.? The list of symptoms is a long one.

Do you want a cure—not a temporary respite to be followed by a renewed and reënforced attack, but a cure for once and all? Then go straight to the seat of the sickness—the blood.

Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic purifies the blood, gives it the power to nourish the vital organs, gives zest and appetite, and puts the stomach into a healthful condition. It cures chills and ague.

Read one of the thousands of testimonials we have received during the last forty-two years.

Read this from one grateful lady:

"Dallas, Tex., December 14, 1897.

"News, Dallas—Gentlemen: I have used Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic and find it is the best medicine that I ever used for indigestion and biliousness, loss of appetite, and general debility. I freely recommend it to those suffering from such complaints.

"MRS. M. ALEXANDER,
"244 Griffin street."

Try Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic and see what inspiration it gives to the blood, brain, and body.

Sold everywhere.

Sample dose of Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills and Book of Dreams mailed free.

Address HARTER, Dayton, O.

Dr. Harter's Little Liver Pills do the business.

Dr. Harter's
IRON TONIC
MAKES PALE, WEAK PEOPLE
Strong and Healthy.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the
ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.
in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R.
in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row
Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

MAKE MONEY!

By Writing Stories.
For particulars, address

THE SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING CO.,
Atlanta, Georgia.

Nannie Dunn.

Thus she was familiarly called by her many friends and most of the older members of the congregation where she worshiped. It is with a sad heart and in deep sympathy for the bereaved ones that I record her death. Sister Dunn was a personal friend to myself and family, and in her death we realize our loss. But this sorrow is sweetened with the precious hope of her salvation.

I have preached more or less every year for more than twelve years for Union congregation in Sumner County, Tenn., and during that time many of the faithful ones have entered into that rest which remains for the people of God. Many who have died were old people, or those who had passed the meridian of life, but lately we have been seriously impressed with the fact that the young and middle-aged die also.

Sister Mattie Dunn in the fall, then Sister Hall in December, and now Sister Nannie Dunn, all of whom were about forty years of age, left us, as we joyfully hope, to join the general assembly above. Sister Hall and Sister Nannie Dunn were sisters in the flesh, and Sister Mattie Dunn was a sister-in-law to each of them; so that from the same family, we may say, have been taken by death these three comparatively young women, leaving three sets of motherless children. Looking at it from our point of view, it is sad indeed to see so many seats at Union Church emptied by death, yet it is joyous to believe that these with many others will fill places among the spirits of just men made perfect in that home which death cannot enter, and from which Satan and sin will be banished forever. In the blessed fellowship of the gospel we weep with those who weep and share with them their sorrow, for their sorrow is our sorrow.

Sister Nannie Dunn was the second daughter of James A. and Susan A. Mentlo, and was born on the Mentlo farm, near Gallatin, Tenn., on November 2, 1859. She was "born again," and thus became a member of the church of Christ at the early age of thirteen, in the summer of 1873, at Union, under the preaching of Brother B. W. Lauderdale. Thus early she remembered her Creator in obedience to his truth. On October 3, 1876, she was married to Brother W. H. Dunn, Brother Sam. Kelly performing the marriage ceremony. She died of some heart affection on January 27, 1900. Two children, a boy and a girl, with their father, survive her. Sister Dunn was a frank, honest-hearted, sincere, conscientious, and true Christian woman. She loved the church and its work in sincerity and truth. She loved the gospel, and loved to hear it preached. She approached the worship of God with reverence and awe, and looked seriously upon all religious duties. She was regular in her attendance at service, missing only when providentially hindered. She was hospitable and generous, the poor never going unfed and unclothed from her door. She possessed a prayerful spirit, and several times a day she resorted to the secret closet for closer communion with God. She loved her home, and industriously and religiously kept it neat and in order as a place of comfort and rest for her husband and children. She was indeed, as Paul says, "a keeper at home." I have heard her husband speak frequently of the delight and rest he experienced at home with his wife and children, when weary and worn with the business of the day. She was economical and studied her husband's interest, while she never lost sight of his spiritual welfare. She possessed and cultivated those womanly virtues which made her a helpmeet indeed. The heart of her husband did safely trust in her. She was a fond mother and wished the greatest good for her children. Conscious that death was rapidly approaching, she gave particular directions as to the spiritual instruction of her children; she wanted them taught the word of the Lord and not allowed to miss the recitation of their lessons on Sunday, saying that so long as all attend church regularly every Lord's day they would be most apt to go right through the week.

May the Lord bless these children, and may they, like their mother, come into the church early in life. Brother Dunn, the children, and all relatives have the precious consolation of the gospel. They can cherish the hope that Sister Dunn rests in peace, while God, who never forsakes those who trust him, will comfort and strengthen them. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Ps. 116: 15.)

E. A. ELAM.

"There are some people so afraid of fresh air," laughed the old sea captain, "that they seem to think they can ventilate their rooms by opening their cupboard doors." And there are people who imagine that they can keep their lives fresh and healthful in very much the same way. They shut off all currents from the outside world. They shudder at its wickedness, they shrink from its clamor, they do not want to be disquieted by its demands, and so they selfishly shut themselves in to their own interests and pursuits, and begin, all unconsciously, to grow pinched and narrow. Daily employments grow monotonous, familiar enjoyments lose their zest, and the spirit becomes peevish, carping, and selfish. The breath of the outdoor world may sting, but it is invigorating; rubbing against other people's angularities may be rasping, but it smooths down our own, and all the rush and hurry about us, however weary we grow, is better than withdrawal and morbidness. Any outdoor atmosphere is better than breathing over and over that of our own cupboards.—Forward.

Free to Everybody.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist, of Crawfordsville, Ind., will send free by mail to all who send him their address, a package of Pansy Compound, which is two weeks' treatment, with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous headache, sick headache, la grippe, and blood poison.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
GLENCLIFF, TENN.

PERHAPS YOUR TROUBLE IS CHRONIC KIDNEY DISEASE,

Often Difficult to Determine and Likely to Deceive the Best Physicians.

It is always best to be on the safe side.

There are many different ways in which kidney trouble will show itself. Some of its most common symptoms are often mistaken for other diseases.

