As you know, the United States census is now being taken, but the exact figures will not be known until the Census Office at Washington publishes them. The last official census was taken in 1890 and then we had 62,622,250 population, which was an increase of 12,466,467 over the census of 1880. It is estimated that the present census will give us about seventy million population. The Press Publishing Association, of Detroit, Mich., is offering $25,000 in prizes to the nearest guessers; $15,000 will be given to the nearest guess, $5,000 to the next nearest, $1,000 to the next, $500 to the next, and so on. There are, all told, one thousand prizes and $25,000 in cash to be given away. The money to pay these prizes has been put up in the Central Savings Bank of Detroit, and there can be no doubt but that the prizes will be awarded in the fairest manner possible. The Sunny South has made arrangements with the Press Publishing Company by which each person who sends fifty cents for a six months' subscription to the Sunny South can have one guess in this great contest. Two guesses will be allowed for one dollar for a year's subscription. A certificate of your guess will be mailed you as soon as your remittance is received, and you will have to hold this until the official announcement of the census has been made in Washington, D. C.

Remember, this contest closes one month before the official announcement is made, and you must send in your guess at once, or it may be too late. Address SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING COMPANY, Box 467, Atlanta, Ga.

Brother Poe's Mistake.

I notice in the Gospel Advocate of July 19, 1900, a mistake made by Brother Poe in saying my brother, J. E. Dunn, was, not long since, "preacher" at the church of Christ on the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Dallas, Tex. Brother John has not been connected with this church. I am the man, instead of J. E. Dunn. I know Brother John's position on the "modern pastor," and we stand agreed. Neither of us is pastor of any church. I cannot be responsible for the way people use my name. All the members of the church of Christ on the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets know I teach and say I am no pastor. The elders use me as an evangelist. I preach at the church on Sundays and in a tent all during the week, in and out of the city. If any one should visit the church of Christ on the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, he could not say the church has a "modern pastor," but that they use an evangelist in teaching "old-time religion" at all the places they can reach.

West Texas Gleanings.

At this writing (July 24, 1900) I am at Rodgers. I came here eight days ago to begin a meeting at a point near by called "Mud Springs." On reaching the place I found the Baptists in a meeting. One or two brethren who seem to want to serve the Lord thought it best to wait two days before we began our meeting and I agreed to it, and so the announcement was made. The time came and we met with one or two brethren and their families, while the rest of them were at home or somewhere else. I very promptly canceled my obligation with them and left them to their fate. I had had the meeting on my list since last winter and was three hundred and fifty miles from home, but when I saw they were not going to serve God and cared nothing for his cause I at once left them. Life is too short to spend time in such places.

On coming to Rodgers to meet the train to reach some other points to do some work on the Gospel Advocate list I was met by one of the elders here, who insisted that I preach for them a few days, so I have remained with them till now. The church of Christ here is numbered with the society folks; but, nevertheless, they love to hear the truth, and a proper effort would get them on their feet again, serving the Lord. They have given me a very good hearing and seem to greatly appreciate my efforts with them. I hope that some true gospel preacher will come this way and help them. I leave Rodgers for Huckabay, Erath County, for another meeting.

Our meeting with the church of Christ near Oscar was a very good one. Three confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized and one other took membership with the congregation. During this and last year's meeting at that place I got a good list for the Gospel Advocate, which alone would prove that the church is all right. I never knew fully the influence of the Gospel Advocate in a congregation till I began work in Texas.

After my meeting at Huckabay I shall return home to spend two or three days and then begin a meeting at Bluff Creek, ten miles west of Dunn. After this I will return home again to assist Brother J. H. Lawson in a meeting there.

Now a word to the readers of the Gospel Advocate in Texas: Brethren, if you want to do a lasting good for your congregation and the cause of Christ in your community, double the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. If you cannot convince the people of the good the Gospel Advocate will do them, pay yourself for at least one year's subscription and send it to some one. It will have more telling effect for the cause of Christ on your community than the same amount spent in any other way.

The Tendency of the Times.

It must be apparent to all close observers that the age in which we now live is a very fast one. Everything seems to change "with the rapidity of a drama." The only thing we see which does not change is the divine, or God given, and only a few seem to be satisfied with it. "The course of this world" is exceedingly bad, both for time and for eternity. Each mother wants her daughter or daughters to be like the other "daughters of the land." "Going off to school," or college, during "the school term" and returning in the early spring to have "a good time;" calling one on another; attending picnic parties, social gatherings, festivals, fairs, Sunday school conventions, "big meetings," etc.—these are prolific causes of a great deal of trouble and poverty in time and the loss of the soul for eternity. Education is a good thing, but a mere name of it and a great many things now connected with it are not good things by any means. The young men of this age partake of the spirit of the times. Instead of making their money before they spend it, which is the only safe rule, they keep just a little behind all the while and sometimes more than a little. As a rule, they spend their vacations about as do the young women, for one cannot go ahead without the other. Religion, to a great extent, is in conformity to the world, and not after Christ. The ordinances of the church are largely supplanted by some modern Sunday school affair, and the children are thereby brought up under erroneous precept and example.

It seems that wars and rumors of wars are all that can be heard of nowadays. The outlook now in China is certainly fraught with dark forebodings. After all, it may be that the great battle of the world, so long looked for in fulfillment of the prophecy in Revelation, is soon to take place. The whole world is fast imbibing the spirit of war. That is one of the reasons for publishing the tract, entitled "The Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War." All that are open to conviction should read carefully the tract in the light of the Scriptures.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville, Tenn., to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville at 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. A Country Lass, Health in her beaming eyes, health in her glowing cheek, health in her merry laugh. Yet country air and country hours can't save her from the common experience of women—an experience which dulls the eye, pales the cheek, and turns the laugh to a sigh. Womanly ills come to almost all. But for these ills there is help and healing in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the periods, stops unhealthy drains, cures inflammation, ulceration and female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N. C., writes: 'I had suffered three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pain in my back and stomach. I could not stand without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better—had better appetite and slept better. Now I am happy to say I am entirely cured, and all done in two months' time, when all other medicines had failed to do any good at all.'

Biliousness is cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

Letter from Brother Bishop.

I am still in fine health. The school in Kanda Ward has a good and increasing attendance, thirty-four now being in attendance. We have room for only a few more children. I feel sure the brethren will wish to help bear the expenses of this work when they know that Brother McCaleb has borne all expenses here since he left Japan. He is bearing more than his share. I am not receiving enough to bear the expenses myself. I delivered my first sermon on Sunday night, June 24, 1900, having a Japanese interpreter. I had fine attention. The experience was novel to me.

Freed-Clark Debate.

The Freed-Clark debate at Friendship, Tenn., took place at the appointed time. Clark and Freed are both comparatively young men, somewhere between thirty and thirty-five years old; they are both good speakers and quick at repartee; but in other respects they are very different. Mr. Clark was boastful; he said he was called and sent of God to defend Methodism before any people and with anybody. His people claim he was sent to Crockett County, Tenn., to fight the church of God, as it was a stronghold; and he went about challenging Baptists and the church of God. He is a man of some experience in debate, having had four debates with Baptists. Brother Freed is a humble man, but courageous, relying solely on God's truth to sustain his arguments, and is logical and forcible.

The first day Freed affirmed that immersion is Christian baptism; and, to our astonishment, Clark acknowledged that he believed it to be baptism, practiced it himself, that the Methodist discipline taught it, but said something else would do, and that he had never immersed anybody because the Bible taught it and offered five dollars for any passage in the Bible that taught immersion. Freed asked him how he could perform an act in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit that the Bible did not authorize. Freed calling for Clark's authority to baptize, Clark said he got it from "baptizo" and "bapto." Freed showed him those words were in the Greek New Testament, hence the word of God, and claimed the five dollars. There was not much debating on the first day, for Clark admitted all that Freed affirmed.

On the second day Clark affirmed sprinkling and pouring for baptism, making a strong speech of one hour. This was the strongest speech I ever heard on the subject and Clark did better work throughout this day than he did during the entire debate. Of course he made many mistakes; his speech could not stand before the search light of God's eternal truth. Brother Freed asserted that water unmixd was never authorized by the Bible to be sprinkled at any time, at any place, upon anything, or for any purpose. There were nine Methodist preachers present, including the debater and the presiding elder, and all together could not tell where the Bible authorized sprinkling.

Brother Freed led on the third day, affirming that baptism to a believing penitent is a condition of pardon, making the usual arguments on the subject, and presenting them forcibly and logically. Mr. Clark made no direct attack upon a single passage, but said he believed himself that he that "believeth and is baptized" would be saved and the unbeliever would be lost, but the believer would be saved whether baptized or not, quoting many passages where faith was mentioned, assuming that faith alone saved. Brother Freed turned the entire argument against him with telling effect, showing that devils believe and tremble, the chief rulers believed, and faith apart from works is dead, with many other passages, having them all on a chart—possibly twenty arguments. Clark said these passages had reference to justification of Christians. The only thing Freed had to do was to show that these were the same passages he had relied on to prove the justification of the sinner by faith alone.

On the next day Clark affirmed that infants were proper subjects for baptism. He made the usual arguments on the Abrahamic covenant and church identity, devoting one hour to this subject, relying on the promise that God made to Abraham that the covenant should be an everlasting one—the covenant of circumcision. (Gen. 17.) Clark came to the New Testament and changed it. He said God had put baptism in the room of circumcision. He was asked who said it and nobody had said it but Clark. So far as this debate was concerned, no inspired man said it. The Bible nowhere says it. Clark called on Brother Freed to show where God had mentioned anything new in the New Testament. Brother Freed read Eph. 2: 15, 16 and Heb. 10: 19, 20 with telling effect. He showed Abraham's covenant was an everlasting one; that the Jews had always practiced circumcision, and did now, and would continue to do so, for God said so. Brother Freed quoted Gal. 3: 15, showing no man could disannul or add to. The new and living way was made to stand out in full force. By every passage of scripture that referred to baptism, Brother Freed showed there was something said or done that excluded infants.

The congregations were very large and orderly, although the people were very busy, and the very best feeling prevailed throughout the entire debate. Brother Freed did a grand, good work; it was a grand victory for truth. I think great good will come from it. I never saw the Christian brotherhood better satisfied than they were with Brother Freed's work; and should any one now assail the truth in any community, you would make no mistake to get Brother Freed to defend the cause of the Master. He is well prepared, brave, and loyal to God's truth. There were eight preachers of the church of Christ at the debate. Among the number were our beloved Brother R. A. Cooke, Brother J. A. Carter, and Brother John Nash; the others were young men. T. A. SMITH.

READ AND ACT.

At this season of the year our expenses are always far in excess of our receipts. As we have been at the extra expense of putting "Gospel Praise" and other new books on the market, our expenses have been very heavy, so that we are especially in need of the amount due us. The amount that you are owing may be a very small one, but many such amounts aggregate a very large sum. It is best for the publisher and the subscriber that all pay their subscriptions promptly. It enables those looking after the affairs of the paper to devote their time and thought to making a good paper, without being worried over finances. It is hard for the man to write well who is forced to think continuously about money matters.

Many allow their subscriptions to run behind, without realizing that it is so. This notice is to remind all who are in arrears that their renewal would be very greatly appreciated. The wheat crop will put some money in circulation. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper, and pay at the rate of $1.50 per year from that time. A large hand pointing to this is to call your attention to the date. If your paper should be stamped and the date is in advance, you may know that the mistake was made by the one stamping the hand on the paper. We are always anxious to correct all mistakes. Your prompt compliance with this request will help us and will be duly appreciated. Address all checks and money orders to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Nashville, Tenn.

We learn from the Christian Guide that a town in Maine, with a population of two thousand people, has fourteen churches. All of them have regular preaching except one. The Ram's Horn speaks of a town in Nebraska, with less than three thousand inhabitants, with thirteen churches, each having a regular minister. How much more rapidly the truth would grow if all denominationalism were dead and people were satisfied with being simply Christians! When a man is a member of the one body, has been baptized into Christ, it is great folly for him to then join himself to some denomination unknown to the oracles of God. If we were now living in the days of the apostles, there would be no denominations to join. Religiously the conditions should be the same now as then. Denominationalism is a waste of labor, a waste of money, and is a great impediment to the spread of the gospel. Divisions produce carnality and carnality produces death. The Savior prayed that his followers "all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

This is the season of protracted meetings in the South. Many of the churches do comparatively little during the winter and spring months, but so soon as the summer months come on they begin to look the country over in search of a popular and attractive evangelist to hold them a protracted meeting. While their regular attendance has been small and their contributions light since the last protracted meeting, they talk as though the "big preacher" could put new life into them and be a perfect panacea for all their ills. The churches never made a greater mistake. Any good, earnest, gospel preacher can hold a good meeting for the church whose members are thoroughly alive to the importance of the work. The truth is, such churches usually have additions to the one body the year round. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." They are not depending on the preacher to revive them. When the evangelist arrives to hold a meeting, he finds many already in the spirit of obedience. He is not compelled to wear himself out striving to arouse to activity lukewarm Christians, but spends his time earnestly preaching the gospel, while the lives of the members preach far more effectively than he does. Christians should be consecrated and earnest all the time, and not depend so much on spasmodic effort to convert the world.

In many places the church would be very greatly benefited by a number of subtractions. Almost every manner of sin is tolerated in the church, and little or no wholesome discipline is exercised. Drunkenness, lying, adultery, fornication, dancing, and card playing are all practiced by church members. While these are walking disorderly, and shall not inherit the kingdom of God, still we rarely ever hear of the church withdrawing from any one. It is not possible to withdraw from the disorderly. The worldly insist that there is no harm in going to the ballroom, playing cards, etc. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." The church cannot and will not withdraw until those who live ungodly lives are no longer retained in the fellowship. Our offense here is a terrible stench in the nostrils of the Almighty. The command to withdraw is clear and explicit: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) The first object in withdrawing should be the salvation of the brother himself. "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." (1 Cor. 5: 4, 5.) The second object should be the protection of the church. "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." A few immoral and worldly members may soon corrupt the whole church. It is always best to obey God's law. If all the churches had exercised that wholesome discipline and cut off the dead branches as they should, the church to-day would be much freer from worldliness and her power for good would be felt far more than it is.

The true situation in China is still unknown. The latest dispatches give assurance that the Ministers are alive in Peking, but the people generally do not attach much importance to these statements. The Government of the United States has thought best to treat the statements of the Chinese as sincere and genuine. The Chinese Minister at Washington gives as a reason for the request that the United States act as mediator the facts that it is well known that we do not desire Chinese territory, and that our ships did not engage in the bombardment of Taku, and the general belief that the United States can be trusted. Unfortunately, these same reasons were given for first asking France to mediate. France consented to act as mediator on substantially the same conditions as those offered by President McKinley, which are: (1) That assurance be given that the Ministers are alive and protected; (2) that the diplomatic representatives of the powers be put in immediate and free communication with their respective governments; (3) that the imperial authorities of China at once enter into communication with the relief expedition, so that coöperation may be secured for the relief of the legations and the restoration of order." China is wise in appealing to the United States, since we are more likely than any other nation to object to the dismemberment of China. Russia, Germany, and France are the only nations that would profit by the dismemberment of the empire. England, the United States, and Japan will doubtless labor for the preservation of China. The administration at Washington has announced this policy. A very general impression prevails in this country that Russia seeks to be profited by whatever may occur and will use the occasion to complete her control over a large portion of Northern China. The world will be the loser by as much territory as Russia gains. Comparing Russia and China, the Journal and Messenger says: "For there is this difference: Under Chinese rule foreign nations can maintain access to the territory. China was slowly responding to Western influences, and, after the present reactionary party has been put down, will be open to missionary effort as never before, as well as to trade and to Western ideas. China is too weak to resist the world. But Russia holds her territory with an iron hand. The Russian Church is purely formal, and there is less opportunity for Christianity to reach the people under Russian administration than there has been even under the old rule of China. So far as trade is concerned, territory once formally ceded to Russia will be closed against foreign trade, and Russia will claim that her promise to maintain the 'open door' applies only to Chinese territory under her influence, and not to Russian land. Russia practically closes every tract she takes to the influence of true civilization, and her military strength enables her to close it effectively. The United States may be able to change the terms of the final settlement." We think it probable the worst is over in China. We believe God will bring good out of all this confusion.

Presbyterians have been seriously considering the revision of their Confession of Faith and leaving out the doctrine of Calvinism. This has attracted considerable attention from all religious people and also from outsiders. Of this the Presbyterian has this to say: "Presbyterians are alone responsible for their creed. If they want it modified in any way, that is their business; if they wish it to stand as it is, that is their lookout. No outsiders have to subscribe to it, and it is both presumptuous and ungenerous for those of other denominations to tell us why and where it should be revised. There is entirely too much free advice—nay, unwelcome advice—given us by the denominational and nondenominational press. The matter is in our own hands, and our church has no notion of making confessional changes to suit Arminians, or Congregationalists, or outsiders generally. Others may have their standards of doctrine, but Presbyterians think and act for themselves and are alone concerned about what their Confession of Faith teaches or is to stand for. They have a committee of inquiry upon the subject, and the Presbyteries will send in their returns in due season to the authorized party. Meantime discussion is legitimate within our own constituency, but outside guides and directors are neither sought nor wanted." This is correct. The Presbyterian Confession of Faith is only for Presbyterians and means only to bless them, while the Bible is for all people, and contains a blessing for all who will obey it. Any creed that does not do this is too narrow. The love of God is not bounded by party lines. A man may never see a human creed, yet be saved. All who obey the gospel shall enter through the pearly gates into the city of our God.

Consider Christ in Death.

"O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done." (Matt. 26: 42.)

These words constitute the most earnest and agonizing prayer that was ever prayed on earth. This was the second time the Redeemer had prayed it, and it was soon repeated the third time. Having considered Christ in his childhood and as obedient to his own gospel, in this article it is proposed that we consider him in his death.

To the merely casual reader of history it might appear that Christ some way was inferior to others in manly courage at the approach of death. Compare, for example, the death of the protomartyr, Stephen, who in the midst of the horrors of a death by stoning was so animated by the vision of an open heaven and the risen Son of man standing at the right hand of God to welcome his pure spirit that death, even in that awful form, was robbed of all its terrors. The reader of the account thinks if he had been present at the obsequies, when the disciples made great lamentation over him, he would rather have placed upon his tomb a wreath triumphant.

"Why," the soul inquires, "was it that Christ was so appalled at the cup of death when not even as yet under arrest, and Stephen so courageous in the midst of a savage mob?" Was Jesus lacking in courage or manly fortitude? Was Stephen superior to his Master in these respects? Compare with Christ's piteous moans the language of St. Paul in view of his death by martyrdom, being at the time such a one as "Paul the aged," having long been a prisoner for Jesus Christ: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." There is a manifest consciousness of strength from some source in each of these affirmations. Take the words "I have fought." No tame contest was this, no mere child's play in combat, but a battle which had brought into action all the heroic and best powers of the man. It meant persecutions, afflictions, which came unto him at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra. What persecutions he endured! It meant all these which Timothy had fully known and others in number and extent which God only could tell. To have fought a "good fight" means to have fought a victorious one. Combatants sometimes die in each other's death grasp, both conquer and are conquered; not so with this hero of the gospel. "Nay," says he, "in all these things we are more than conquerors." He survives the contest and receives the fruits of victory.

"I have finished my course." These words, though figurative, express the self-satisfaction of a strong racer who has reached the goal and is ready to be crowned. The race is the heavenly one; the crown, unfading.

"I have kept the faith" indicates he had never departed from the gospel of Christ which had been committed to his trust; he had introduced no innovations to wound the faith of the weakest brother for whom Christ died; he had exercised no license of such liberty as would offend one of these little ones. With enlarged knowledge and conscience he could eat meat, for every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused; but if eating meat caused his brother to stumble, he would eat no flesh while the world stands. With him there had been no popularizing of the gospel to gain the favor of the well-to-do; no reliance upon worldly wisdom to take the place of the gospel, which is the power of God and the wisdom of God; no building up of any institution to better the world, but the church of God, which is the pillar and support of the truth. How the heart yearns for the simple church of Christ, with her elders and deacons, duly set apart to their work by fasting, prayer, and imposition of hands, as Paul taught and required of those whom he instructed! His solicitude for these things extended far beyond his life, as he urges Timothy: "The things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." O thou jealous care for the salvation of thy brother! O thou zeal for the purity of the church! Whither art thou fled?

But to conclude the analysis of Paul's dying words: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." These words savor of royalty of a high order, higher than the highest in this world. Prisoner though he was, he could by faith and hope see himself wearing a crown of righteousness. His unselfishness is clearly manifest in the words which follow: "And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Here is an association of royalty. Men in view of earthly crowns and exaltation have endured severe confinement.

What slave unblest who from to-morrow's dawn expects an empire? He forgets his chain And, throned in thought, his absent scepter waxes.

What a crown awaited Paul, and what a scepter! The same is laid up for all who love his appearing. These words of Paul, under the circumstances, are without a parallel. In Paul's outward appearance there was perhaps nothing that would suggest them. An old, worn-out preacher of the gospel, stooped by labor and suffering, the old cloak lately sent from Troas may have been thrown loosely about his shoulders; but no earthly hero ever had more reason to exult than did St. Paul when he was ready to be offered.

But how in striking contrast are the scenes of Gethsemane! Three separate times in the most agonizing spirit and manner the petition goes up before God: "O my Father, . . . let this cup pass from me." More than the bodily pain of Calvary is here, for he said: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death."

O thou Son of God and man, can it be thou lackest heroic courage? Art thou the Christ and lackest Christian fortitude? Can it be possible that thou who thrice repulsed the great enemy of souls in the fierce ordeals of temptation shall now quail at death by the hands of Roman soldiers? Can it be that thou whose power rebuked the storm at sea now falls to quiet the storm rising in thine own soul? Shall Paul and Stephen and the children of this earthly world show more of the true heroic spirit than he who came down from heaven?

O, no; Jesus was not lacking any manly courage or quality of heart which may mark him of an excellent spirit. The reason must be found in that he was a vicarious sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. "The Lord hath laid on him," said the ancient bard, "the iniquity of us all." He suffered the just for the unjust, and by his stripes are we healed.

The soul trembles when aroused to a true sense of the responsibility for sins that memory can recall, yet it must be admitted each of us has forgotten more sins than we can remember. These forgotten sins are just as heinous as those we can remember. Our heart condemns us for those we can remember. God is greater than our hearts and knows all things, including all our sins. The sins of the generation contemporary with Christ were all upon him; the sins of the generations preceding that one back to Adam were in some way placed upon him, as he was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; the sins of every generation succeeding that generation down to the close of time were upon him who is the first and the last.

We can never explain it, but we can never doubt the fact that Jesus Christ was "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." O what a burden was that he bore! Our wonder now changes, and we ask: O thou of Bethlehem, O thou of Gethsemane, O thou of Golgotha, how didst thou bear that enormous load which bowed thy blessed head upon the cruel cross? Old Atlas is fabled as carrying the material world upon his shoulders, but in the sufferings of Christ the universe is confronted with the fact, no fable, which is a thousand times more wonderful—Christ bearing in his own body the sins of the whole world. The sins of the world are greater than the world itself. G. LIPSCOMB.

The Place of the Evangelist. No. 3.

Timothy was left in Ephesus—a church, as we have seen, fully supplied with elders—some time previous to the date of the First Epistle to Timothy, which was written in the year 64; and he remained there until the year 68, the year of Paul's death. He was succeeded by Tychicus, who, by the order of Paul, took the work of Timothy in order for the latter to visit Paul while in Rome. (See 1 Tim. 1: 3; 2 Tim. 4: 9-12.) McGarvey says: "His residence there covered at least four years, nearly an average stay for a preacher in our own day. He was not there as a preacher or an elder, but as an evangelist; for Paul exhorts him in reference to the work in which he is engaged: 'Do the work of an evangelist, fulfill thy ministry.' (2 Tim. 4: 5, R. V.) In the same connection and in reference to the same work he says: 'I charge thee in the sight of God, and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching.' In short, every duty is laid on Timothy that is laid on the elders, with the single exception of that of ruling. With this exception his work is coördinate with that of the elders. This, then, is the New Testament idea of the work of an evangelist when laboring in connection with an eldership within the bounds of a congregation. Timothy is not the only evangelist, as we have reason to believe, who thus labored. Luke was left at Philippi, as we judge from the absence of 'we' in his narrative, from the time of the establishment of the church there, in 51, till Paul started on his last journey to Jerusalem, in 58, a period of nearly seven years. (Acts 16: 16, 19, 40; 20: 6.) And when Paul reached Caesarea on that journey, he found 'Philip the evangelist' residing in that city. We can reasonably infer that the labors of these two evangelists in these two cities were much of the same character as those of Timothy in Ephesus."

I quote once more from Brother McGarvey: "On a moment's reflection it is easy to see that such an arrangement as this is wise at times, if not even a necessity. Any church, with even a good and efficient eldership, is liable to have enemies in its midst too strong for its elders; it is liable in the vicissitudes of its career to have less efficient elders at one time than at another; it is likely to have in reach of its ministrations a large number of the ungodly who can be won to Christ more easily by powerful preaching than by the teaching of its elders; and for any or all of these reasons it may scripturally have in addition to the work of its elders that of an evangelist. Even a young evangelist, with neither the experience nor age required for the eldership, may do an excellent work under such circumstances; but let it be borne in mind that he does not by such services become a pastor, or shepherd, of the flock."

These facts have not been noted by those who are decrying the work of a preacher of the gospel. Whether an evangelist shall spend a part of the time or the entire time of his labor with one congregation depends upon the condition of the congregation, the number of unconverted in the community, the efficiency of the eldership, the finances of both the preacher and the congregation, and many other things to be adjusted by the proper use of good judgment enlightened by the word of God. I would have no fears of displeasing God in case I located with a congregation in some large town for the purpose of devoting my entire time for some years to the work of an evangelist needed to be done in that place; and when in the wisdom of good men it was deemed prudent for some other evangelist to take my place and me to go elsewhere, I would think it the will of God for me to do so. I have many preachers thus engaged to-day; but there is good reason for thinking that many of those who are found in the proper place are not doing the work of an evangelist. Let us try to persuade them to do the work authorized and needed to be done in every church or have them dismissed from the place. Brother A goes to a place to preach or to "do the work of an evangelist." What shall we say of him and his work while thus engaged? Shall we call him ugly names and say hard things about him and the church for which he labors? Let us not call him "pastor" or "hiringling" until we learn whether he is actually assuming the name, place, and the spirit of such characters. A man may do the work of an evangelist, an elder, or a deacon with the spirit of the hiringling. The man that thinks more of the money that he gets than of the good that he can do for man is a hiringling, whether he be evangelist, elder, deacon, or member.

I want to notice one more important point of contact of elder and evangelist before I close this series. It is a question of authority. Some say that the elder has authority over the evangelist. Elders were to watch for false teachers who wore the name "evangelist." The elders of Ephesus "tried them which said they were apostles, and were not, and found them liars." Others say that the evangelist has authority over the elder. "Them that sin rebuke before all," that others may learn how they ought to behave in the house of God. "Against an elder receive not an accusation, except at the mouth of two or three witnesses." It is maintained that this authorizes an evangelist to hear charges against elders, and try them, and, if found guilty of misdemeanor, reprove them; but this is not the teaching of the apostle. I often hear accusations brought against elders by disaffected members in my work as an evangelist. What is more natural than for that class to pour their grievances into the ear of the preacher? But he must not listen to them unless several of the best people say that they are bad men; then some measure to get rid of them, and save the cause of Christ, must be had.

The fact is that the question of authority is never thought of in a normal church. Men who want to impress their authority are absolutely without influence for good, and hence ought to resign their places at once. The pope may say to the member of his church, "You cannot eat meat," and his ipse dixit puts an end to the matter. Paul, a man of authority, would appeal to the sacred rights of conscience: "Let each one be fully assured in his own mind." "But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith." Conscience is sacred, and its rights are to be respected. If a Christian does what his conscience says is wrong, he sins, though the thing itself be right. The elder cannot say to the member whose reason is dominant: "You cannot do this." He must appeal to the conscience and arouse it to action. The fact that the apostle says that elders must be examples to the flock is of itself proof that the elder does his most successful work by influence, not by authority. Neither the elder nor the preacher has any authority aside from what the word of God teaches. The members must follow them as they follow the Christ and obey them as they teach the word of God. When all strive for influence for good in leading men into all the ways of God, there will be no thought of authority of elders and preachers; the spirit of "I am a man of authority, you are under my command; when I say, 'Come,' you must come; when I say, 'Go,' you must obey my marching orders," will never once be thought of in connection with the mutual work of elders and preachers.

I have said, perhaps, more than my lot on the lines in question, but I feel that some things of importance were left out of the discussion. If I am in error in regard to what I have written on the place of the evangelist in the church, I hope some one who sees the matter clearly will set me right, for I have no interest in something that is not true. May the Spirit of God guide us into the truth on this particular line.

Firm Convictions.

Some time ago I rode with a man who was a religious nondescript. Enrolled on a Methodist church book, he nevertheless harmonised with the Roman Catholics in some points of faith, while the whole of his conversation on religious topics was tinged with a decided shade of infidelity. As is the habit of such men, he rehearsed with some pride and self-satisfaction his positions on religion—how he considered things in the light of science, and was not prepared to be run over by dogmas of any sort.

"Yes," he said, "people consider me a crank on these things, and an infidel because I follow my reason; but if there is anything I glory in, it is my power of thought and reasoning. Whatever appears good to me I accept, and nothing else. I tell you, I have my convictions, and nobody can change them."

"You do well to have convictions," I replied; "no man can afford to be without them. I don't blame you for that. A man without convictions is like a reed in the wind. But, at the same time, a great man will be wise. False convictions will carry a man downward at double speed. The firmer you stand on them, the worse it is for you. If a man of convictions is beyond change, as you claim to be, his doom is sealed. He is bound for perdition if his convictions are not correct—that is to say, not in harmony with God's great laws. Wisdom, therefore, would require that a man be very careful in choosing the foundation on which he builds his faith, and consider well before he puts himself beyond the possibility of change."

A great number of people pass through life without convictions; these are the driftwood, the scum of the world. They do nothing by principle; their actions are accidental, or ordered by habits into which they have drifted. Their ways are as incalculable as the winds and the waves, for no certain law determines them; they come by fits and whims—good to-day, bad to-morrow. They are extremely industrious for a while, then lazy; they halt between two opinions; they are neither hot nor cold; they cannot be depended upon for good or bad; they receive the word with joy, but presently they wither away because they have no depth of soil. At a good opportunity they return to their wallowing in the mire. Like the chameleon, they change their color according to their surroundings and circumstances.

Men and God have never respected such people. Jesus said: "I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, . . . I will spew thee out of my mouth." A Saul that persecutes Christians with all might and soul is a nobler figure than a Pilate who wavers between the demands of justice and the desire of the mob.

But, after all that, the man who follows a wrong way is a fool. He may be steadfast, and cling to his principles like a hero; but what boots it in the end? Will God save him for his fidelity to wrong convictions? Then it seems he would have done as much for the Israelites, for they had a seal of God, but not according to knowledge. They were ardent in their religion; they tithed anise and cummin, and compassed about land and sea to make one proselyte. But what of that? Did their will worship make them acceptable? Nay. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10: 3.) They sought, but they found not, because they sought not by faith; they served, but it was not the service God wanted. In vain they worshipped him, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

"Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established," said Solomon (Prov. 4: 26); and, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." (Prov. 14: 12.) It is the curse of the world that people pay no regard to this. To many the word of God is nothing but a vague admonition to be good and behave yourself. As for the directions and laws which God laid down there, they lose their importance because any way will do, just so you are honest and sincere and don't get drunk, etc. Thus God's way becomes unnecessary, since, as they think, any other way that seemeth right will lead to salvation, if faithfully persisted in.

But would it not be injustice to condemn one if he did what he thought right? If you think it right and good to stick your hand in the fire, can you blame God if he suffers it to burn? If you think it salutary to breathe water instead of the God-appointed air, can you blame God if he lets you get strangled? If I should board a wrong train, can I justly blame the conductor if it does not take me where I want to go? "But I was honest in my belief," you say.

Yes; and I was honest in boarding the wrong train. The result in either case is the same: the mark was missed. God is merciful and kind, but his directions must not be disregarded. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able."

A man without convictions is no man. The same may perhaps be said of one that has convictions and does not follow them. But it is not sufficient to have convictions and faithfully live according to them; the convictions must be good and true, they must be tested and tried and amended until they perfectly represent God's will. Now, this does not occur to everybody. The majority of the human race quietly accept the faith of their parents or their community. If one is born in a Mohammedan village, he becomes a good Mussulman; if in the shadow of a Chinese temple, he will be a follower of Confucius. As the old birds sing, so pipe the young; and they may have very firm convictions. Others, again, get their convictions they know not whence. Some little tract they read; a sentence they heard; a smattering of science they learned; a few thoughts of their own; a desire to be clever, and different from others—all these things, perhaps, go to form their belief. And then they proudly speak of their firm convictions. What flimsy foundations! Firm convictions? What though the house is well built and firm if its base rests on a bed of sand? The flood will carry it away, to the destruction of its inmate. They will lend no money without good security, they will buy no land without a good title; but they confidently commit themselves to some belief or board any ship without first making careful investigation whether it will sail to the right port. Then they lay claim to honesty and enjoy a good conscience until, too late, they find themselves mistaken.

It is the peculiarity of that downward way of which Solomon spoke, that it "seemeth right unto a man." It was not a way of humorality, murder, lewdness, lying, theft; for these have never seemed right unto man. It is possible, then, that a man, thinking himself on a right road, will follow the same path into the other world without a pang of conscience, and then be lost at last. "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name?

and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 23, 23.) A crowd of religious people surprised and disappointed when they meet their Lord! Why? They did not obey his words; they obeyed something else. See the moral Jesus drew from it: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." And the foolish man that obeyed not built upon the sand; and his house withstood not the test, but it fell, and great was the fall thereof.

This should wake up every one. On what foundation have we built? Have you followed God or man? Your own wisdom or the Spirit of truth? What do you believe? Why do you believe it? God will respect us for having firm, earnest convictions and following them in sincerity. Only let God convince you; him you must obey; his truth sets free; his commandment is life everlasting. Seek, and you shall find; hunger and thirst after righteousness, and you shall be filled. Truth must be sought. It does not belong to you, neither can you recognise it unless you seek it. By sure means God has shut off the careless and indifferent from his kingdom. The fearful fate of blindness still falls to the lot of those who have not received the love of the truth, that they might be saved. "And . . . God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thes. 2: 11, 12.)

Let us watch and pray, brethren, for we are not infallible, nor have we learned all the truth. But that we have we hold fast, and seek for more with a firm conviction of the truth of the word of God.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

Learning from the People and from the Bible.

The following are extracts from an article by Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, on "The Young Man and the World," in the Saturday Evening Post. The first one is on learning from people:

"It would seem, therefore, that the largest wisdom dictated great conservatism in mere reading. Mingle, also, with the people—I mean the common people; talk with them. Do not talk to them, but talk with them, and get them to talk with you. If any man will make an inventory of the fresh, vital thoughts; of the keen, living, idiomatic expressions which he will gather up from listening to an hour's conversation with workmen who have been building a house or repairing a railroad or harvesting wheat, as they eat their midday meal, and will then make an inventory of the same thing after an equal time of reading, he will be amazed to find the quantity and quality of rich and productive ideas and expressions which he has acquired in the former manner, and the dry and unproductive material he has gathered in the latter way.

"Who, that has had the experience, would exchange the wit and wisdom of the 'hands' at the 'threshings,' during the half hour of rest after eating, for the studied smartness of the salon or even the conversation of the learned? But think not to get this by going out to them and saying: 'Talk up, now.' The farm hand, the railroad laborer, the workman of every kind does not wear his heart on his sleeve. Mingle with the people, therefore. Be one of them. Who are you that you should not be one of them? Who, is any one that he should not be one of the people? Their common thought is necessarily higher and better than the thought of any man, no matter if he is a genius. This is almost a mathematical truth. And the people, too, are young, eternally young. They are the source of all power, not politically speaking now, but ethnically, even commercially, speaking. Spend some time with nature, too. The people and nature—they alone are worth while; they alone contain the elemental forces; they alone are unartificial, unexhausted. You will be surprised at the strength you will get from a day in the woods. I do not mean physical strength alone, but mental vigor and spiritual insight. The old fable of Anteus, I think, is so true that it is almost literally true. Every time he touched the earth when thrown, that common mother of us all gave him new strength; and, rising, he came to the combat as fresh as when it began."

Then he says this on learning from the Bible:

"Of course one must read the great scientific productions. They are an addition to positive knowledge, and are a thing quite apart from ordinary literature. Our scientific books are the only literature worth while that is being produced at present; they are the only creative literature.

"Include in your daily prayers the supplication to be delivered from the analysis, the critical in your mental tendency and habit. Nothing is worth while for the full-grown man but the synthetic, the constructive. Not that we do not need scavengers and scourgers and destroyers; but he is unfortunate to whom nature has appointed such a task of disintegration. 'It is impossible but that offenses will come: but woe unto him, through whom they come!' You see how impossible it is to get away from the shrewd old Hebrews. My recommendation of the Bible, in this paper, is not on account of its spiritual or religious influences at all; I am advising it from the material, and even the business, view point. By far the shrewdest practical wisdom contained in literature is in the Bible, and put in terms so apt and so condensed, too, that their very brevity proves their inspiration—is an inspiration to you. I carry the Bible with me as a matter of literary relaxation. The tellers of the Bible stories tell the stories and stop. 'He bullded him a city.' 'He smote the Philistines.' 'He took her to his mother's tent.' You are not wearied to death by the details. Go into any audience, addressed by a public speaker, and you will perceive that his hearers' interest depends on whether he is getting to the point. 'Well, why doesn't he get to the point?' is the common expression in public assemblages. The Bible 'gets to the point.' And it has something for everybody. If you are a politician, or even a statesman, no matter how shrewd you are, you can read with profit several times a year the career of David, the cleverest politician and one of the greatest statesmen who ever lived. If you are a business man, the proverbs of Solomon will tone you up like mountain air. If you are a woman, read Ruth. A man of practical life, a great man, but purely a man of the world, once said to me: 'If I could enact one statute for all the young women of America, it would be that each of them should read the book of Ruth once a month.' But the limits of this paper do not permit a dissertation on the Bible."

THE REASON OF OUR HOPE.

Christianity involves greater issues than anything else or everything else combined. The greatest worldly successes are comparatively worthless if the soul shall at last sink into despair and darkness. To appreciate the importance and the value of the soul and yet have no satisfaction as to its safety is a very unhappy frame of mind in which to be. So far as this life is concerned, it is better not to think of the soul at all than to be in perplexity and doubt as to its safety. Peter admonishes the Christians: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

The man who is a Christian should be able to tell others how to become Christians, and inability to do this is very strong evidence that one is not a child of God. When one has reached a certain state in life, he should be able to tell others the steps which brought him into that state. He should be ready—not occasionally, not often, not frequently, but always—to give a reason for the fondest hope that any one enjoys in this life. Without the Christian's hope, all would be so dreary and dark—like a world without a sun, a night without a star, a desert without an oasis. When standing by the grave of a beloved companion who had been torn from us by the grim monster, Death, the Christian's hope throws a halo of light over the grave and comforts the heart with the promise of a blissful reunion beyond the stars. It is this same hope that makes us strong in overcoming the trials that daily come upon us and that assures us of triumph by and by. To each cloud it gives a lining of light. Without it the heart would break of its own heaviness; without it the world would be too rough and stormy for us all, and the least burdens that come upon us would soon grow into mountains.

To have no doubt as to the happy destiny of the soul is a most joyous state and fills us with that hope which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast. The apostle wrote with perfect confidence and absolute certainty as to a blissful future: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (2 Cor. 5: 1.) In the very presence of death, Paul wrote: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 6-8.) John, the apostle of love, writes with no less assurance than does Paul: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 John 3: 2.) Hope was ever present with the early Christians and served them for great and valiant deeds. How different from the limping gait with which professed Christians are making the journey to-day! Listen to the doleful strain:

'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought:
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?

God has given us every assurance and has left nothing undone that we may know that we are his children. "His divide power hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and has left nothing undone, so that we might have every assurance that an omnipotent God could give that we had made "our calling and election sure." "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." (1 John 5: 13.)

Christianity is the hope of the world. Without it nations may arise and flourish for a day and then sink into insignificance. When the world is fading from view and we feel ourselves crossing the "lowly tide," the religion of Christ will be the foundation of all our hope. "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 11, 12.) For instance, when the Presbyterian comes to die, he cannot and will not give his Presbyterianism as a reason for his hope. Then it must be the name and religion of Christ. What is true of Presbyterianism is true of every other ism. If men are saved, it will be because they are Christians; if men are pleasing to God during life, it is because they are Christians, and not because they are members of some denomination. How wonderfully strange that all will not be satisfied with being simply Christians! If we suffer, it should be as Christians; if we are reproached, it should be for Christ's sake; if we are saved, it must be as Christians, and not as sectarians. "Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." (1 Pet. 4: 16.)

As all Christians will enjoy a glorious resurrection, if we can be assured we are Christians, the reason for our hope is evident. How does any one know he is a child of God? "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." (Rom. 8: 16, 17.) There are two that bear witness—my spirit and the Spirit of God. God's Spirit tells what it takes to make a child of God; my spirit knows whether I have done these things. God's Spirit bears witness with, and not to, my spirit. Christ has said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) No one knows but myself whether I have believed the gospel or not. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" I know whether I have repented of my sins and been buried with Christ by baptism. The believer who does these things does not doubt God's word. God has pledged his word to remove the sins of the man who believes, repents, and is baptised. To doubt this is to doubt God himself. "If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater." Then by continuing in well-doing until the close of life we will receive a crown of everlasting life. "But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1: 25.) Then to become a Christian, to live simply a Christian, and nothing more, insures for one here a life of joy and peace and eternal life over there. How essential to be a Christian! How vain to strive to be anything more religiously!

J. C. McQUIDDY.

Will the editors of the Gospel Advocate place this in the hands of some brother doing the work of an evangelist who is likely to pass this way?

According to "our pastor," Mamie (my wife) and I are so "narrow, intolerant, sectarian, and contemptible" I fear we are doing more harm than good to persist in assembling with the brethren here longer; and while it is a sad admission, to my mind the facts justify it. We have never taken any part in any of the societies or modes of raising money unknown to the Bible, and for the last few months we have purposely evaded being present, as much as possible, when they met to break bread; but this failed to help matters, as the "pastor's" supply of censure seems inexhaustible for all who believe in the all-sufficiency of God's word without any of man's wisdom. They have an organ and a horn, which they frequently use while breaking bread; they have all sorts of societies—the Ladies' Aid Society, Senior Christian Endeavor, Junior Christian Endeavor, Flower Mission, and almost every conceivable way of raising money, from boat excursions up, or down, whichever way it goes. "Which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body; not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh." (Col. 2: 23.)

I have thought, and studied much as to what we should do, have asked our Heavenly Father to help and guide us into the ways of right and truth as taught in his blessed word, and I hear from heaven such instructions, admonitions, and warnings as these: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2: 8.) "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." (Rom. 16: 17.) "Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them." (Eph. 5: 6, 7.) Then I turn from man and all his counsels unto Jesus, who has the words of life. "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar."

I do not know how many are here that are thus minded; I can only speak for myself and wife, though there must be others from the character of questions asked Brother Clubb, of Chattanooga, Tenn., when he was here holding a meeting. I am no speaker, never tried to speak in public in my life; but I do want to assemble and work and worship with those (though it be only two or three) who love and recognize the all-sufficiency of God's word. "Who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counselor?"

It is certainly refreshing to see so many, through the Gospel Advocate, earnestly contending "for the faith once for all delivered to the saints." We live at 700 Washington street, Selma, Ala. I work at the post office—am a letter carrier. We would be delighted to have some brother come and look over the field and see what can be done. We have three little boys and greatly desire that they be brought up strong in the faith as it is in Christ Jesus, bounded only by the word of God. I thank you in advance for any kindness shown.

Two Ways of Getting Up.

When we tumble out of the right side of the bed,
How brightly the sun shines overhead!
How good our breakfast tastes, and—O!
How happily to school we go!
And o'er the day what peace is shed—
When we tumble out of the right side of the bed.

When we tumble out of the wrong side of the bed,
How dull the sky frowns overhead!
How dull our lessons! how cross our mothers!
How perfectly horrid our sisters and brothers!
(And they all say, too, it's our fault instead!)
When we tumble out of the wrong side of the bed.

PERSONAL.

Brother John E. Dunn, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., has held a series of good meetings in the West. He will return to Tennessee in a few days.

The meeting here (Greenfield, Tenn.) continues. We have had good interest, large audiences, and four additions to date (August 1, 1900).—A. G. Freed.

Brother W. M. Oldfield, of Tennessee City, Tenn., has been quite ill for about five weeks past, but is better now and hopes to soon be able to preach again.

Brother J. M. McCaleb was in the office last Friday. He continues in the field, endeavoring to stir up the churches to greater zeal in sounding out the word of the Lord.

Brother John E. Dunn, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., will begin a meeting at Woodson's Chapel, Ugleby, Tenn., on the second Sunday in August and continue for two weeks. All who desire to attend these meetings are cordially invited to do so by the brethren. Preaching at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

On Saturday, August 16, 1900, the fine farm and beautiful home of Brother Henry Zellner, deceased, will be sold at public auction. The farm contains about three hundred and fifteen acres and is about twelve miles from Nashville, Tenn., and six miles from Franklin, Tenn. There is probably no better farm in this whole section. It is well fenced, well watered, well kept, and conveniently located. For terms and further information, see advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

EDITORIAL.

Stout hearts win where strong hands fall.

The pure heart never harbors impure thoughts.

The chronic growler has no place in the world.

Death is not serious to the man who lives right.

Enthusiasm brings the heart to the aid of the hands.

The truly successful man loves God with the whole heart.

Death is a victory to the man who has fought a good fight.

Intelligence and enthusiasm are partners that can never fail.

The intelligent and zealous Christian is the light of the world.

When our dearest friends steal away from us, we are brought nearer heaven.

We need have no fears of life's close, provided we do our duty in each to-day.

If you wish to remain righteous, it is not wise to make bosom companions of the wicked.

When we feel that our deeds should be hid from men, we may know that our lives are not pleasing to God.

Perseverance makes a way when none appears. Be sure you are right and then never become discouraged.

Zeal, according to knowledge, is most effective. Ignorance is not productive of piety. We should ever be enthusiastic in the right, but our zeal should be founded on the solid rock of intelligence.

Said an Indian to a white man in answer to his objection to enthusiasm: "It is better to have a pot full over than not to boil at all." It is far easier to criticize zeal than to duplicate its results. Christians are falling all over the land because they are not a "peculiar people, zealous of good works." Earnestness is always a power with itself.

The best help is always pleasing to the worthy and distasteful to the unworthy. While Plastratus, the Grecian General, was walking through his fields, several beggars implored his charity. "If you want beasts to plow your land," said he, "I will lend you some; if you want seed to sow your land, I will give you some; but I will encourage none in idleness." His course was the wise one and freed his dominion of beggars. Beggars should always be willing to do what they can. We should study to render others that help which will enable them to help themselves.

The fervor of faith gives power to the word of truth. Often convincing words are spoken in an unconvincing manner. We who preach the Lord Jesus Christ should preach him with the fire of our hearts as well as with the skill of our tongues. The famous actor, Betterton, said to the Lord Bishop of London: "Actors speak of things imaginary as though real; preachers speak of things real as though imaginary." Of course the statement is overdrawn, but there is too much truth in it. The manner of a sermon is very convincing; the value of a soul is so great that a preacher above every other speaker should be consumingly in earnest.

It is always far better to follow the teaching of the Bible than not. When people wrong us it is our natural inclination to return evil for evil instead of overcoming evil with good. The incident given below by Abbe C. Morrow aptly illustrates this: "A brother and sister sat side by side in school. The little boy, vexed with his sister, struck her a blow. She raised her hand to strike back, when the teacher, catching her eye, said: 'Stop, my dear! Better kiss your brother than strike him.' The look and the word touched the little child's heart. Her hand dropped, and, throwing her arms around her brother's neck, she kissed him. The boy was moved, for the kiss was so unexpected. Tears rolled down his face. The child wiped them away with her little handkerchief, but they only flowed the faster. He was completely subdued."

All the great workers in history, the world's masters and leaders, have had a consuming passion for their work. Where would the reformers, the teachers, and the musicians have been without zeal? Without zeal what would Paul have accomplished with his giant intellect? The preacher with the eloquence of Paul or with the precision of Peter can accomplish nothing without zeal worthy of achieving. The zeal of the athlete, of the pugilist, who strive for a little vain glory, should make the lukewarm Christian blush with shame. Their crown of glory will fade in a day, while the Christian's crown will grow brighter throughout a blissful immortality. Nothing can atone for the indifference of Christians. A lifeless religion and a cold formality are robbing the church of its power to-day. Intelligent Christians, filled with zeal, are sure to bear the banner of Prince Immanuel to a most glorious triumph.

An impression prevails that there is a general indifference pervading the entire church. So many church members seem to think they have nothing to do but to find fault with others.

D. L. Moody said of this class: "A friend of mine told me once that when he went to a boarding house he could always tell who the boarders were, for they never alluded to family matters, but sat down to the table and talked of outside affairs; but when the same one he would go into the sitting room to see if there were letters and inquire after the family and show in many ways his interest in the household. It doesn't take five minutes to tell that he is not a boarder and that the others are;" and so it is with the church of God. You see these boarders in church every Sunday morning, but they do not take any interest; they come to criticize, and that is about all that constitutes a Christian nowadays. They are boarders in the house of God, and we have got too many boarders."

Some people never have the patience to look at more than one side of a question. They hear one person's statements and accept that as final and draw their inference and conclusion. The opinion reached may affect some one's character, but it is believed, nevertheless, and no effort is made to see the other side. A moment's thought will show any one the injustice and unfairness of looking at only one side. An act may seem to you unkind and cruel when you see only one side, but if you would have the patience to investigate the subject in all its bearings, you would change your mind and conclude that the act was one of kindness and generosity. Religious newspapers, many of them, are prone to look at only one side and to allow their readers to see but one side. Instead of allowing an opponent to state his own positions in his own way, they give garbled extracts from his writings. Nothing is more hurtful to the cause of Christ, and this course is manifestly unfair and unjust. One is continually hearing things about others. In the drift of conversation things are told, bits of gossip, which are calculated to reflect seriously on the character of others. We do these persons of whom we hear these evil stories, if we accept them as true and permit our opinions of them to be affected by these stories, a very great wrong. We should insist on knowing the other side. The personal gossip of society is about the last news that we should accept as true in all its details. How often is a character marred by simple hints and innuendoes! Friends are scarated by whisperings which cast doubt upon the truth or loyalty of one or the other. An effort to know both sides will repay us well and often save us from many disastrous consequences.

S. P. Pittman says: "I have examined most of the songs in 'Gospel Praise,' and am glad to say that, with but few exceptions, they are fine; and I predict that the collection will be accorded the popularity it deserves."

"Your new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' is the best, in my judgment, you have ever offered to the public. I am more than pleased with it and predict for it a very large sale. All it needs to make it sell is an examination." (Brown Godwin, Columbia, Tenn.)

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

"After a careful examination of 'Gospel Praise,' I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I think it is the best arranged work and finest music extant; in fact, it is an 'all-purpose book,' 'worth its weight in gold.' All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production." (M. H. Northcross, Franklin, Tenn.)

"I have examined the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company's latest book, 'Gospel Praise,' and find it a complete little gem, filled with most excellent music, both ancient and modern; neatly bound, indexed by subjects, well adapted to all sacred occasions. The price is within reach of all, and the book should have a circulation second to none extant. I can certainly recommend it to all." (R. W. Norwood.)

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added."

All subscribers whose subscription is past due are earnestly requested to pay their subscription to one year in advance. This sum does not amount to much with each subscriber, but the aggregate is considerable to us. Besides, subscribers who keep their subscription paid in advance, as a rule, enjoy reading their papers more than those who do not. Promptness on the part of subscribers helps to lighten the burdens of editors, publishers, and bookkeepers. The burdens of those who have the management of a paper are not a few. We have no way of paying our bills, only as we collect from those who are owing us. If our subscribers are prompt, this enables us to be prompt. This is the only satisfactory way to do business. We never have so much cash on hand that we do not need all that is due us. We would not make this request just now if we were not in need of what you are due us to meet our obligations. We feel that this plain statement will be all that is necessary to lead you to pay your subscription at once. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper. The date shows the time to which your subscription is paid. From that time pay at the rate of $1.50 per year. If you should think there is some mistake in the date, please call our attention to it; and if on investigation we find such to be the case, we will take pleasure in correcting accordingly. We wish to appeal to every subscriber to send us at least one new subscriber. If the Gospel Advocate is contending for what you believe is right, why not help extend its circulation and thereby increase its influence for good? A good religious paper should be in every home. People will read something. Will you not help us to place good reading before them?

HUMBLE SUBMISSION TO GOD IS THE ONLY THING THAT WILL PREPARE MEN FOR HEAVEN.

Union and communion with God are impossible without humble and voluntary submission to the will of God. This has always been true, and must of necessity continue to be true to the end. No two beings can dwell together in perfect accord except by perfect agreement. There must be no differences in purpose or action, or it will break up all unity and happiness. God is infinitely just and pure and holy and good, and no one can be happy in his presence that is in any sense out of harmony with his will—that is, in any wise in rebellion against him. It must be admitted that his will always and in everything is infallibly right, and that no one who is opposed to God's will can be right. Every one, therefore, that in any matter refuses God's will or places his will against the will of God is in the wrong; and in the eternal state of bliss nothing wrong can exist. Heaven itself would cease to be heaven if rebellion were there. God and man cannot dwell together while there is rebellion on the part of man. This was shown in the garden of Eden. There were the closest and tenderest union and communion between God and Adam and Eve until Adam and Eve entered into rebellion against God and thus threw themselves out of harmony with him. Peace and joy and happiness are impossible between one perfectly pure and holy and good and one who will not fully submit to the will of the just and holy One; for God could not remain pure and at the same time harmonize with rebellion and sin. Hence, God proposes to lead man out of sin and harmonize him with himself in this life, so that there shall be no rebellion left in him when this life is ended; and those who do not learn to yield willingly and glad submission to God in this life cannot be prepared to enter into the eternal state of purity and happiness, and could not be happy, if there, in a state of rebellion.

An old prophet asks: "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" (Amos 3: 3.) The Revised Version puts it: "Shall two walk together, except they have agreed?" This principle was fully exemplified when God cast Adam and Eve out of the garden of Eden as soon as they entered into rebellion against him. When they rebelled, and put themselves under another ruler, and one that was wholly out of harmony with God, there was no longer agreement between God and man and they could not walk together. Hence, God utterly refused to allow man to continue longer in his presence. Thus Eden was lost to man, nevermore to be restored. When this relationship in Eden was broken up, God in his infinite love and mercy began at once to make new arrangements for man's reclamation and redemption from sin. At first sacrifice and sin offerings were introduced; and later on, the law of Moses, with all its details and ceremonies and sin offerings pointing forward to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." But everything God has ever ordained for man's good has been placed upon the principle of man's obedience to God, and the ultimate end and purpose of all these things is to reconcile man to God and to bring him back into harmony with him. Abel obeyed God and his service and offering were accepted. Cain did not obey, but rebelled against the will of God and did his own way, putting himself out of harmony with God's will, and God rejected him and his offering; and in his rage over this Cain slew his brother and thus completed his alienation from God, and was driven out to the land of Nod, as a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth. He was told that when he cultivated the soil it would not produce any results to him. He had gone so rapidly and so far into sin that there was nothing left for him but rejection and ruin.

After all this—after Adam and Eve were rejected from the garden of Eden and forever shut out from it, and a curse placed upon Cain—the sickly sentiment of this age rebels against punishment of every description. But when we look to the word of God for our information upon this subject, we find punishment has always been the penalty for disobedience. When men had gone so far into sin that there was no hope of improvement, the flood was sent and the whole world destroyed, except one family that alone were obedient; and when again men became so rebellious that it could be suffered no longer, the confusion of tongues was inflicted upon them, and this punishment remains upon the world to this day, and will remain to the end of time. Obedience, therefore, on the part of those who are out of harmony with God is a necessary law of God, as obedience is intended to bring back those alienated from God and to effect a reconciliation on the part of man to God; for so long as disobedience continues, alienation and separation between God and men continue. Reconciliation is impossible while disobedience continues, since obedience is the only thing that can bring the erring back to God. When a Jew sinned he was commanded to make a sin offering, and was told what to offer and how. While he refused obedience and would not make the offering his sins could not be forgiven, for while he refused to do what God said he was persisting in his sin already committed and was adding further rebellion and making his case worse and worse toward the Lord. This was true in reference to all of God's commands to the Jews, and was literally carried out upon them all along the line. Let any one not satisfied of this fact read the history of that people and of God's dealings with them and he will see. While in the wilderness the Jews so far disobeyed God that they were doomed to wander there until all that had rebelled against him should die outside of the promised land. Thus were those sinners punished for their sins and a warning placed before the whole people against sin and its awful consequences; and the penalty was carried out in full. Then after they came into the promised land they sinned again and again and were punished again and again—not merely as a matter of punishment, but to reform them and to deter others from like sins.

In Lev. 26, where God was testifying through Moses what should befall the Jews in case they should depart from him, after naming these punishments that should befall them, he said: "And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according to your sins." (Verse 21.) This shows plainly that the purpose of these plagues, or punishments, sent upon them was not only as a punishment for their sins, but also to reform them and turn them from their sins, and thus make them better and to work for their good. He did not punish them for the sake simply of taking vengeance, but as a reminder of the consequences of sin and to lead them to forsake sin and to love and serve him, and thus bring about their own well-being. "And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me; then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins." (Verses 27, 28.) These verses show that chastisement for sins is inevitable, and yet intended for the good of those receiving it; and in every case where they heeded the warning or the chastisement and turned from their sins God again received and blessed and prospered them as before. This state of things continued among the Jews throughout the Jewish age and until Christianity was established and the Jewish polity destroyed and the Jewish people scattered among the nations, from which calamity they have never yet recovered themselves. Nothing could be a stronger illustration of the necessity and importance of obedience than the history of the Jews and of God's dealings with them. Then also the religion of Christ opens up upon the same principle. In the Sermon on the Mount obedience to God is enforced and impressed from the beginning to the end. In the latter part he says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Thus Jesus, in the early part of his personal ministry, began to enforce the necessity of doing the will of God, of obeying his word in order to be saved; and Jesus himself gave the example of perfect obedience to his Father's will. He says: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 6: 38.) Thus Jesus devoted his entire life to the doing of his Father's will. "And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." (Phil. 2: 8.) "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." (John 8: 29.) In resisting the temptation of the devil he said: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone; but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." No one ever taught obedience and lived it out so thoroughly as Jesus. In regard to his teaching he said: "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." (John 12: 49, 50.) Thus all that Jesus said and did were simply exhibitions of his Father's will. His life, therefore, was the purest and most beautiful life ever lived on this earth. He and his Father were agreed in all things. Their purposes, their aims, and their work were one; they fully walked together. The Father willed, the Son executed, and the result was the wonderful plan of salvation through his death, burial, and resurrection.

Because Jesus thus humbled himself and obeyed, even unto death, it is also said: "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. 2: 9-11.) From the baptism of Jesus to his death on the cross everything he said and everything he did was as directed by his Father. Then came the resurrection, the ascension, and the exaltation at his Father's right hand, and his name exalted above every name. What a wonderful exaltation was this! Now he sits at his Father's right hand, reigning and waiting for his enemies to be made his footstool. At the end of obedience the exaltation and the blessing came; and so it will be with us. In the last chapter of the New Testament this statement is found: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." We must, therefore, follow the example of Jesus; we must do the Heavenly Father's will, and keep on doing that will till death, if we would receive the crown of life. Away, then, with all that sort of sentimentalism that would give sinners without obedience! For even Jesus, the Son of God, was not crowned till he had thoroughly completed his Father's will. It takes this obedience on the part of man to prepare him for the enjoyment of heaven and the society of the pure and holy.

To meet a really good man for only a few moments is to get a blessing of incalculable value.—Gospel Advocate.

A HELPFUL BOY.

When Mr. Lindsay fell into business difficulties, Rex was sixteen, and old enough to understand that a time of comparative hardship was at hand. He sat down to think over it soberly and to plan how he could be the most help. In books that he had read, boys whose fathers had failed went to work and by some marvelous strokes of good fortune retrieved the family disaster. Rex was sensible enough to know that business opportunities are not waiting for inexperienced boys, yet he resolved to go to work.

The next day after school he began a tour of the downtown offices. To his great delight, Mr. Wheeler, one of his father's friends, promised him employment at four dollars a week. Rex rushed home in a tumult of delight. Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay were at the tea table when Rex burst in with rather an incoherent account of how he had found work at four dollars a week, and meant to help lighten the family burdens.

"So, Mr. Wheeler has offered you a place in his shop?" said his father at last.

"Yes, father."

"What will it lead to? What will it fit you for?"

"Why, nothing; only I'll get higher wages after a while."

"Then you will be an unskilled workman, at uncertain wages, all the rest of your life."

"O, I shall find something better some of these days."

"Are you sure you will? Are you fitted for something better?"

Rex was silent.

"If you really wish to help your mother and me, you will go back to school to-morrow morning."

"Why, father!" cried the astonished Rex.

"My boy, I understand and appreciate your motive. I am glad I have a son willing to help; I want you to help, but I am going to show you the right way. Spend one more year at school, and then we will look out for a place where you may work at something that will give you skill and bring you a better position when you merit it."

"Can you afford to send me to school another year?"

"Yes, although it will mean some sacrifices on our part and yours. Are you willing to go on with harder study and fewer pleasures?"

"Yes, I am," said Rex, promptly.

"That's my helpful boy," said his mother, softly.—Zelia M. Brown, in Christian Standard.

A CHINESE SLAVE GIRL.

The other day as I was walking down Chestnut street I was very much interested in watching a little Chinese girl who was also going down the street. Apparently, she was for the first time seeing the wonders of Philadelphia's famous thoroughfare. She craned her neck to look to the tops of the great office building, she peered into the shop windows with their bewildering array of pretty things, and she eyed the passers-by curiously, all the time skipping and dancing in great delight.

The little girl with a queue hanging down her back and with her quaint foreign dress was not very much at home on that busy street, and she kept a firm hold of the hand of the gentleman by her side. Indeed, well she might look to her white friend for protection, for he was a missionary, and had only a few days before rescued her from dreadful slavery.

Yes, in dear old Philadelphia, with all its traditions of liberty and religion, this thirteen-year-old girl had been held a slave, and that in a place not a mile distant from the spot where rests the famous Liberty Bell. She had been bought in China for one hundred and twenty-five dollars and brought to this country by a Chinese merchant to be a slave to his wife.

Poor little Choy had a sad life of it. She worked hard and long, but nevertheless she was kicked and beaten until, sore and bleeding, she fell to the floor unconscious. Whispers of her horrible treatment reached the ears of the Christian missionary in the Chinese colony of Philadelphia, and he sought her out and offered her help. But the little girl was too much frightened to attempt to save herself. Awe of her cruel mistress kept her quiet,

However, after an especial beating, she gained desperate courage enough to run toward the mission. Unfortunately, her owner caught her before she reached it, and brutally dragged her back again. She was hauled by the hair into the presence of her mistress, who gave her another beating so severe as to render her senseless.

This fearful outrage came to the ears of the missionary; he sought out the child again, and the blood and bruises that covered her all too plainly confirmed her sad tale. The aid of the police was promptly sought, and while the little girl was taken in by the missionary and tenderly cared for, the cruel Chu Nan was arrested and made to release Choy, surrendering all claim upon her to the missionary through whom she had been rescued.

Thus it was a free child who so merrily made a sight-seeing tour the other day. That is why her face was bright and happy and why her spirits were so gay. Let us hope that little Choy may one day become the free servant of Jesus Christ.

What do you suppose the pathetic story of this Chinese slave girl has set me to thinking about? Why, about some young white slaves of to-day. Perhaps the eyes that now follow these words are the eyes of a slave. Can it be?

Consider for a moment. You want to be a refined, pleasant, and attractive person, free from all bad habits; yet you scarcely ever speak a dozen sentences without using one or more slang words. You "can't help it," you say. If that is so, are you not one of these white slaves?

Perhaps you serve another master. Whenever your wishes are crossed or whenever the most trifling accident occurs, you flare up in great anger and speak harsh and ill-tempered words. "It's my temper," you declare, as if that were an apology. But you are only showing yourself to be one of Temper's many white slaves.

"Wait a bit" and "After a while" are pet phrases of yours. You never do things promptly. At every turn, in things little and big, you try to put off obedience as long as possible. Is not that so? Then you are one of Procrastination's white slaves.

I cannot here call the roll of the masters of the young slaves of to-day. Your own wits will introduce enough of them to you. Yet I ask you frankly if you think it noble and right to be such mean slaves to masters so low and unworthy. Become free boys and free girls by breaking your slave chains in the strength of Him who came "to set at liberty the captive."—William T. Ellis, in Sabbath School Visitor.

TOM'S IDEA.

"I plowed up the Pike Meadow this morning and I want you to pick out the stones this afternoon, Tom," said Farmer Green to his son at the dinner table one day.

Tom said nothing; but he looked his dismay, and forgot to eat his piece of turnip which he had balanced on the end of his three-tined fork.

"Throw them over to the west side of the lot; then they will be out of the way," continued his father, as he put on his hat to go back to his work.

"Yes, sir," said Tom.

The door shut, and Tom groaned. "I was going over to Sam's to make that boat this afternoon," he explained to his sympathetic mother. "I thought that meadow wasn't going to be plowed till next week."

"If you go right about it, perhaps you can get through in time to go to Sam's," advised his mother.

"'Twill take the whole afternoon to do it all alone, and I shall not get through before dark," said Tom, dismally.

Mrs. Green said nothing more, and began to wash the dishes.

Tom wandered out to the hen yard, with his hands in his pockets. He stood watching the old biddy call her chicks about her, when suddenly a bright idea struck him. "I've got it!" he cried, giving such a war whoop that the hen and her chickens scattered in eleven directions. He turned on his heel, and rushed into the house very differently from the way he had gone out a few moments before. "I'm going over to Sam's," he said to his mother.

She looked at him, and saw a roguish twinkle in his brown eyes. "Well," she said. "Only, Tom, don't fail to have your work done by night."

"No, ma'am," trying to look sober, though he smiled in spite of himself. An hour later he came into the dining room, where his mother was sewing, and tilted himself on her rocker, while he coaxed: "Say, mother, can't I have a few of the fellows to supper? And won't you make some hot biscuits? Father is going to the village and won't get home till seven o'clock. So he won't care."

"I guess so," she answered. "I was going to make biscuits, anyway, and I can make a few extra ones."

She did not ask him why he wanted the boys to supper; but she knew he was working out some bright idea of his own, and, motherlike, was ready to help, while she watched him curiously. Soon after she heard him sawing in the wood shed. Then he came to ask for some red paint.

The boys came at four o'clock, according to Tom's invitation. There were four of them besides Tom.

Mrs. Green looked out of the kitchen window, and saw Tom taking them toward Pike Meadow. Over on the west side of the meadow she could see some bright object standing on the stone wall, but she could not tell what it was. Then she saw the boys stoop and fill their pockets with stones. Then they formed in line and took turns throwing the stones at the object on the other side. They kept their shot flying, little by little moving nearer their target. Meanwhile the farmer's wife baked her delicious biscuits and laughed to herself.

At six o'clock the five young slingers came in to supper, hot and hungry.

"That was a fine target, Tom," said one of his admirers. "Where did you get it?"

"Made it," replied Tom, promptly. "Had some paint left over from the boat, you know."

While they were eating Mr. Green came home, unexpectedly. He spoke kindly to them all. Then, turning to Tom, he said: "Did you pick the stones out of the meadow this afternoon, as I told you, and throw them on the west side, Thomas?"

"Yes, sir, we did," said Tom, demurely; while the other boys, seeing through the joke for the first time, fairly shouted.—Harper's Young People.

WOMEN IN MOROCCO.

Some people talk eloquently about the spirit of the age and about human progress and emancipation from past centuries of darkness, but they forget that this progress is only found where the gospel of Christ bears sway, and an open Bible is a lamp to our feet. Just across the Strait of Gibraltar, almost within gunshot of that frowning fortress, lies Morocco, where Mohammedanism rules, where wheels do not run, where mills do not grind the grain, but where the stagnation of past centuries broods over all. Writing to the Gospel Message, one of the missionaries in Morocco gives the following description of the women there:

"Beneath the grove where we were camped the gleaners would come during the heat of the day to rest and beat out their handfuls of grain, one by one, and winnow it in the wind. I wish you could see them—the aged woman, with haggard face and bowed form, bent beneath the toil and years of sin; the child of tender years, just entering a life of untold misery; the strong young slave girl and those of early womanhood, whose careworn faces betoken the misery of their lives; those of middle life, whose sufferings have early brought them to the threshold of the grave—diseased, dirty, wretched beyond description, all groaning beneath burdens too heavy to bear. Seated beneath a tree, with a gathering like this around her, is Mrs. Hammer, while in simple words she tells them the wonderful story of the cross and how Jesus loved and came to save just such sinful, wretched women as they. Can it be true? Did God love and come to seek and save such as they? It is hard for them to receive. Polygamy, divorce, slavery, and licentiousness have done their worst for them and crushed out almost all the tender, womanly instincts and left but a faint shadow of the one whom God created to be man's helpmeet. How they need the Savior! O, sisters in Christ, pity them, love them, pray for them! In a country like this male missionaries can do very little to reach or help the women directly, but the homes are open to lady missionaries."

The Frenchman said: "The way to civilize a man is to begin by civilizing his grandmother." This is needful in Morocco and in all lands where the Bible is unknown. The gospel which the women bore from Joseph's open sepulcher to the despairing disciples is needed now by womanhood in every land and clime; and women are carrying it. "The Lord giveth the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host." (Ps. 48: 8, R. V.)

WHEN WAS THE KINGDOM SET UP BY THE GOD OF HEAVEN?

Brother Lipscomb: Please help many of your readers by writing a good, strong article soon on Dan. 2: 44, under the three following natural heads:

1. "In the days of these kings." Make "these kings" clear, for Adventists tell us there were no "kings" at the Pentecost period that fill this demand of prophecy.

2. "Shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." Again, Adventists affirm there was nothing "set up" on the day of Pentecost.

3. "Which shall never be destroyed." Again, they tell us if the church is the kingdom in any sense, it was destroyed during the "dark ages."

W. E. DAUGHERTY.

1. The usual interpretation placed on this image that Nebuchadnezzar saw is that of the four kingdoms indicated by the metal forming the body of a man the gold represented the first, or Babylonian, Empire; this attained practically to universal dominion. There probably was never a time when some provinces or minor kingdoms were not in rebellion against the emperor, or king, of Babylon; but practically the Babylonish Empire ruled and hectorated over the known world. Still the language of Daniel was direct and specific: "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold." (Dan. 2: 37, 38.) The application of this head of gold to the king or kingdom of Babylon is settled by the prophet himself. The image bearing the form of man, composed of these different metals, is accepted to mean these kingdoms were of human origin in contrast with the kingdom of God represented by the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, without human providing, wisdom, or skill. Only this one kingdom is clearly identified to Nebuchadnezzar at this time. This was to warn him that his kingdom must end. In connection with this is given here the truth that of these human kingdoms three others in succession, one after another, will rise and fall—come to an end—but the fifth kingdom, represented by the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, that "cometh not with observation" or show of outward earthly power, as says Jesus (Luke 17: 20), or the "stone rejected in the beginning by the builders," became the head of the corner, would stand forever. He tells of the succeeding kingdoms, one after the other, absorbing the strength and possessions of the preceding, so that the riches, power, and strength of all are concentrated in the last. So in its destruction by the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, it is truly said it will break in pieces the gold, silver, brass, and iron, or the strength of all these concentrated in one. Our Adventist friends confound the first coming of the kingdom, when it was without observation, with the second coming of the Son of God, which is to be as the lightning that shineth out of one part under the kingdom of heaven unto the other part under heaven. The point of the prophet here was to indicate to this ruler of the first kingdom the destruction of his kingdom by his own subjects, the absorption of it in these other kingdoms, and the destruction of all by this kingdom to be set up by the God of heaven, which must break in pieces and destroy all these kingdoms; and it should stand forever.

In Dan. 7 these four kingdoms are again set forth under the type of four ravenous beasts. The beasts that typify these three kingdoms are mentioned; that which typified the fourth is not named. In Dan. 8 Gabriel told him what should come to pass at the destruction of the kingdom of Babylon. Two kingdoms are presented—one typified by the ram with two horns, which he says was Media and Persia, followed by the he-goat, which represents Grecia. (Verses 20, 21.) This fixes the three kingdoms represented by the gold, silver, and brass on the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, and the Grecian. If it be asked why the fourth is not mentioned specifically as these, I can only say I do not know; probably because the advent of the fourth kingdom was not at hand, would not be seen by any living, and these details of the working here given were given to test the truth of the prophecies and the claims of Daniel to be a prophet, speaking for God. The duration of the kingdoms of the Medes and Persians was short, that of Greece was longer, and none then living would see the advent of the fourth kingdom. The only question in the interpretation of the figure is: What constituted the fourth kingdom, and what was the kingdom of God?

The fourth kingdom was represented as of iron, stronger and more durable than all other metals. It was to follow, overcome, and absorb the Grecian kingdom. There can be no doubt as to what government or kingdom did this. All the circumstances point to the Roman Empire, or government. That government succeeded to the inheritances and powers of the three preceding ones; embodied the strength, riches, and power of all. There is no doubt of this. The expression, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," is commented on from different standpoints. One is "these kings" refers to all the four kingdoms typified in the metallic body. If this were true, it would not materially alter the truth. The kingdom of heaven was in preparation from the days of Babylon. The Israelites in Babylon, especially the prophets in the household of the ruler, were preparing for the kingdom of heaven. This was continued through the kingdoms of the Medes and Persians, of Greece, to the day of its establishment under the Roman Empire. Each of these empires was broken and destroyed to show them and the world that the mightiest of earthly kingdoms must be destroyed. They were destroyed because of their refusal to conform to the will of God; they were destroyed because they were founded by mortals, and, being mortal, must perish. It may be truthfully said each of these kingdoms was broken in pieces by the kingdom of God, yet in its preparatory and elementary state.

But "these kings" must refer more directly to the kings embraced in the iron empire. Sometimes it is said there was but one king reigning on the day of Pentecost. On that day the kingdom in its completed state was opened to the world. The work of establishing it was then completed; the purpose and preparation of establishing it existed from the days of Babylon. Jesus said: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." The eight years of the Revolutionary War and many years preceding were devoted to the establishment of the government of the States, but it was completed only when their independence was acknowledged and the government was instituted. The work of establishing the kingdom was actual and drawing to completion from the days of John the Baptist. The birth and growth of Jesus were directly parts of the establishing of the kingdom. It was completed only on the day of Pentecost by the descent of the Holy Spirit and the planting of the first and mother church; but from the birth of Christ to the Pentecost on which the church was completed by the Holy Spirit descending and taking up his abode in it three or four kings sat upon the throne of the empire. "Kings" in the plural would necessarily be used in telling of these things.

Again, the term "king" is used to mean ruler. Many rulers of different degrees of power, as the Herods and Pilate, were called "kings." The pretext that there were no kings at the time the kingdom of God was set up is the flimsiest pretext to avoid the force of truth.

2. To "set up" means to fix, place, establish, to cause to appear or exist. The first church of Christ did appear and exist on that day. The Holy Spirit on that day descended from heaven and bore testimony to it as he had descended upon Jesus at his baptism and bore testimony to him. The prophecy, "the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands," shows it originated with small beginnings, without the display of power usual in the establishment of kingdoms. The statement of Jesus, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation" (Luke 17: 20), means the same—not with those outward displays of power usual in the establishment of earthly kingdoms; yet he told them in the next verse: "The kingdom of God is within [or among] you." The kingdom, then, in all its elements, unorganized, was in their midst. These elements were brought together by the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost and put into harmonious and working order. Our Adventist friends fail to see there are two periods, or stages, of the kingdom foretold by Daniel and confirmed by Jesus—(1) when it is represented by a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands; (2) when it became a great mountain, breaking in pieces and destroying all the kingdoms of the world. The Jews made the same mistake about Jesus. He was to manifest two apparently antagonistic characters—(1) a sacrificial lamb, led as a sheep to the slaughter, not opening his mouth; (2) a conquering hero, a King on whose shoulders the government rests. The Jews looked for him as the conquering King, and did not recognize the King in "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Jesus said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation" in its beginning; when he comes the second time: "As the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be in his day." The church is as much the kingdom of God when it does not attract attention as when he comes in his power and glory. It is called "the kingdom of God" when a little stone, when it attracts no attention by outward displays of earthly power; it is called "the kingdom of God" when preached by John, when among the disciples in its elements during the life of Jesus; and all through the days of the apostles it was recognized as an established kingdom received by them and preached as an existing kingdom. (Matt. 12: 28; Luke 10: 9-11; 11: 20; Matt. 21: 31, 43; Mark 9: 1; 15: 43; Luke 6: 20; 7: 28; 9: 27; 12: 32; 16: 16; 17: 21; 1 Thess. 2: 12; Heb. 12: 23; Rev. 1: 9.) All these passages speak of a kingdom existing on earth when they were written.

3. Our Adventist friends are noted as manufacturers of history to suit their demands. The first day of the week was observed by the disciples from the beginning as the day of worship. When Christians had multiplied in the empire and Constantine became favorable to the Christian religion, he set apart the first day of the week as a rest day, because the Christians already observed and honored it. The Adventists now say Constantine first set apart the day. When it suits their purpose, they say the Roman Catholic Church changed the day. The church existed before the dark ages and from the days of the apostles. If it was destroyed during the dark ages, when was it reestablished, and by whom? I never, with any degree of assurance, place interpretations on prophecies not clearly indicated by the Holy Spirit; but it has been usually agreed, and I think justly, that Daniel gives the history of that kingdom after it was set up. It was not a history of unbroken triumphs and victories. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Hitherto is the end of the matter. As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart." (Dan. 7: 21-28.) Now, this seems to declare after the kingdom was set up, opposing powers and influences would prevail against it and bring it to the very verge of destruction, to the gates of death itself; but the judgment shall sit, and the rule and dominion of the whole earth would be given to the saints of the most High, and the opposing powers would be destroyed. The end of all the strifes and conflicts of earth would be that the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High. His kingdom (that was to be prevailed against for a time) is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. "Hitherto [or here] is the end of the matter." The strifes and conflicts of the kingdoms of earth will end in this final triumph of God's kingdom. If this does apply to a period of disaster and evil to the kingdom that it had been foretold God would set up, this prophecy concerning it was fulfilled in the dark ages, when church and State were united and used their power to destroy the true church of God. It was brought to the verge of destruction, yet lived and survived. That kingdom had to undergo that or a similar history, or the prophecy was false. Our Adventist friends make the fulfillment of the prophecy the reason for saying it was not the kingdom set up by God.

If the kingdom had to undergo that history and it is not yet set up, it will have to undergo a similar period of depression and destruction after Christ comes and sets it up, or the prophecy of Daniel will fail. The truth is, the church, or kingdom, set up by the God of heaven was during the dark ages, just when God said she should be, under the power of her enemies, overcome, persecuted, cast down, yet never destroyed. Because she went through the trials God said she should pass through, it is denied it was the kingdom God set up. The truth is, if the church, or kingdom, had not gone through that period, as foretold by the prophet, she would not be the true church, or kingdom, of God. The church was not destroyed during the dark ages. At all ages since the kingdom was set up evidences can be found of people worshiping God according to the requirements of the Scriptures. The disadvantage is all with him who seeks to find these people, because the writings were few and those of the persecuted class were destroyed by their enemies and we are greatly left to the accounts of their enemies for reports of their teaching. We know how little this can be relied on, even when we are at liberty to reply to and retain our writings.

The very fact that the kingdom set up by the God of heaven did in its early history pass through the trials and was brought to the verge of destruction, as foretold in history, yet did not perish, is the strongest assurance that its future history of triumph and glory will be as foretold in the prophecies. But this cannot be until the citizens of his kingdom do his will on earth as it is in heaven. Do what he commands, adding nothing thereto, taking nothing from it. D. L.

CHRISTIAN EDIFICATION.

We would be glad to have a full investigation of the subject of the preacher and his connection with the congregation. I think all will agree that the activity and zeal of the different members should be conspired and put to work. A preacher is not a very definite character. A man may preach and circumstances may hinder his going from home. What is he then to do? What did John and James do when they were old? They never did travel, as did Paul, and when they grew old they remained greatly in one place. What did they do as to preaching? Did they use their ability as teachers, or did they become silent? To get at the trouble a little more directly, Paul remained in Ephesus three years and six months. Did his stay there hinder or help the development and talent of the others? Did he leave because his remaining would have hindered the development of the others, or did his stay of three years and six months help or hinder the development of the talent and encourage the activity of the others? Would a longer stay have hindered their self-development? A number during his stay had developed into worthy and accepted teachers, fitted to take care of the church of God; and if his stay for that length of time had developed this spirit, there is no reason to think a continued stay would have hindered the work. The next thought is: How did the apostles conduct their teaching? We can only determine this in a general way, but it was not in such way as to discourage or hinder others taking part in the service, but in such way as to call out and develop the talent of others. They cultivated the talent of all, just as a good school-teacher gives instruction and encourages and calls out the pupil in using the instruction given. His presence is help and assurance to the pupil. So it ought to be with the presence of a good teacher in the church, whether that teacher be an evangelist or an elder. The presence of a good teacher in the church ought to be a help and encouragement to all others to take part in the services. An elder may hinder this activity by wrong methods as well as a preacher. If the elder or elders occupy all the time and conduct all the services, they hinder the development of the church just as much as the preacher does.

The worst priest-ridden (in the sense that the elder did everything, the members did nothing) church I ever knew was one taught by an elder who labored in word and doctrine. He did everything of the service at all the meetings, except he did not lead in the song service, and through twenty years of his administration no member ever learned to lead in prayer or to take any lead in the service, save in the song service. How the teacher shall develop this activity is a question for which no specific rules are laid down, possibly because this work is not a matter to be brought about by specific rules. The same rules would not bring the same results in different circumstances and with different persons. The end should be kept constantly in view: the development and use of all the abilities of all the members, both in the worship and the work of the congregation in the world.

It seems to me this as the end of religious service is not impressed properly upon the church. The young members are not taught it, and they grow old and indifferent to the service. The ideas of church membership are loose and misleading. The church is properly a school in which each one is to be taught and trained in the Scripture teaching and work. This duty to study and learn the word of God ought to be regarded as obligatory by every member. It is the duty of the teacher to know this is done. He cannot well do this without questioning and examining them in the study. But many members refuse to attend church if they are urged to study and take part in the service of God. They will not study and are ignorant of the teachings of the Bible. It humiliates them to be questioned and they refuse to take part or attend. Such persons never grow into earnest, intelligent Christians, and much of it is brought about by the failure of the teachers or elders to adapt the teaching to the capacity of the pupils. The teacher of a school that places all the children, those advanced and those not advanced, in one class and exposes the ignorance of the beginners would not be considered a wise teacher. The teaching that is done wholly by set speeches is imperfectly done, and does not call out the attention and talent of the learners. The teaching of the preachers or elders is too much sermonizing. The tendency of the age is that way, and it does not promote the development of the members. Christ and the apostles "made speeches," as we call it; but they made the speeches because they had something to say, not because a certain time had come or because they had an appointment.

The Quakers speak in meeting only as the spirit moves them. This means, if properly understood, that they speak only when they have a message they feel is important to be delivered. The common preacher preaches because he has an appointment, regardless of whether he is impressed with a truth needed by his hearers. Then in primitive times freedom in laying before them their difficulties and asking questions that would draw out the truth was encouraged among the hearers. We cannot now further follow this line of thought, but every congregation should have good teachers—first in the evangelist, then in the elders—that are able to instruct the ignorant and to convince the gainsayers. Such were developed at Ephesus, with Paul present. (Read Acts 20: 17-35.) His presence helped this development. The presence of a good and wise teacher will always help this development. If his presence is not aiding it, he is not teaching correctly. He is not leading out the activities and talent of the church. The presence of a wise teacher in a church is no hindrance to the proper education and growth of the church any more than the presence of a wise teacher in a common school is a hindrance to the education and development of his pupils. But he must direct his efforts not to entertaining his hearers, not to merely instructing them in theories of religion, but to prepare them for active service in the duties of life and to fit them for instructors of others. This end kept in view will modify the methods of teaching the churches. Now, the end is to secure permanent attendance and support of the teacher. In school the end is to enable the pupil to become a teacher and to put to practical use the instruction he receives. What is and should be a means to usefulness and service is made in the churches the end. Herein the work of the church is lost sight of and perverted. The teaching should look to the end of making the church and every member of it a practical, earnest worker in the service of the Lord and the salvation of the world. Keep this in view and it will direct the teaching in proper channels. D. L.

F. D. SRYGLEY.

On the morning of August 2 our dear brother, associate, and friend, F. D. Srygley, breathed his last. He was sick for about two months; but as it was his request and desire, no mention was made of his sickness. His affliction was heart disease, which produced dropsy.

We feel very deeply the loss, and know that this announcement will bring sadness to many hearts. He has been one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate since November, 1889. During all these years he has been a vigorous, clear, and forceful writer. He loved his work, wrote with great ease and rapidity, and has often said to me that he expected to spend his life in writing books and in the defense of the gospel of Christ. He was true to this purpose, for he wrote to the very last, and before the paper containing his last editorial work had reached our readers he was dead. But his work is not dead, and will continue to live to bless thousands. While his life was a short one, being hardly forty-four years old, yet he lived much and did much that will live on to ennoble and purify. In the later years of his life he spent much of his time evangelizing in destitute fields. In these years he did far more of this work than any preacher known to me. Often have I heard him say that the wealthy churches could easily secure the best preachers to preach for them, while the poor could not, adding that the Savior went among the poor while he was on earth. The many truths he has taught and impressed so forcibly cannot die. His work in showing that what constitutes one a Christian makes him a member of the one body cannot be in vain. God will raise up others to carry forward this teaching.

Next week or week after next Brother Larimore, whose friendship for Brother Srygley was so beautiful and true, will occupy the first page of the Advocate in memory of the one who has so ably edited it for over ten years.

Fallen on Zion's battlefield,
A soldier of renown,
Armed in the panoply of God,
In conflict cloven down:
His helmet on, his armor bright,
His cheek unblanched with fear:
While round his head there gleamed a light
His dying hour to cheer.

Fallen while cheering with his voice
The sacramental host,
With banners floating in the air;
Death found him at his post.
In life's high prime the warfare closed,
But not ingloriously;
He fell beyond the outer wall,
And shouted: "Victory!"

Fallen, a holy man of God,
An Israelite indeed,
A standard bearer of the cross,
Mighty in word and deed;
A master spirit of the age,
A bright and burning light,
Whose beams across the firmament
Scattered the clouds of night.

Fallen, as sets the sun at eve,
To rise in splendor, where
His kindred luminaries shine,
Their heaven of bliss to share.
Beyond the stormy battlefield
He reigns in triumph now,
Sweeping a harp of wondrous song,
With glory on his brow,

HOWARD.

On June 8, 1900, Sister Mollie Howard passed through the portals of death. She was born on February 22, 1864, and was married to Brother W. G. Howard on November 26, 1884. Sister Howard was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Crawford, of Tate County, Miss. The bereaved husband and children are the recipients of the sympathy of many friends and acquaintances. May the Lord safely guide them over life's sea till they meet the loved ones gone before in the haven of rest.

LOCKE.

Brother M. F. Locke passed away from the scenes of this life on June 9, 1900. He was born on October 5, 1864; obeyed the gospel in 1881; and was married to Miss Annie Williams in 1892. Brother Locke was a faithful member of the church of Christ in Senatobia, Miss. He was a son of Brother R. W. Locke, of Thyatira, Miss., and possessed many of the traits of his father's noble character. We rest in the sweet hope that upon him has fallen the Heavenly Father's precious promise: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." To the bereaved wife and children the tender sympathy of many Christian friends is extended in their time of grief.

MOORE.

Brother Jesse Grant Moore was born on August 15, 1873, and departed this life on July 14, 1900. The writer had not been acquainted with Brother Moore very long, and hence knew but little of his former life; but those who were associated with him in life tell me that he lived an exemplary life to the world. Brother Moore obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother J. D. Tant, of Hamilton, Tex., during the summer of 1899, and lived a consistent Christian until the day of his death. While I would not intimate that Brother Moore had not his faults yet I feel no hesitancy in saying that I believe he is at rest; that he is enjoying that sweet, unbroken rest that remains to the people of God. It was my pleasure to be with Brother Moore during the latter part of his illness, and he seemed to delight in hearing the Scriptures read, in asking God's guidance and blessings, and in singing praises to him who doeth all things well. While the bereaved family and loved ones have my deepest sympathy in their hours of sadness and sorrow, there is nothing that would carry more comfort and consolation than to say that Brother Moore was a loving husband, an affectionate son, and a consistent Christian; and I would say to you: So live and act in this life that the now broken family circle will have a grand reunion in that blissful world above.

seven years. He was the father of sixteen children, fifteen of whom are still living. Brother Jones obeyed Christ about twenty-five years ago, and from that time until his spirit took its flight he tried to live as a Christian. He was stricken with paralysis of the spinal cord on Saturday and died on the next Thursday. While his suffering was intense, he was perfectly rational to the end, being conscious of his fast-approaching departure from this life. He called his loving Christian wife and their children (all being present except two) to his bedside, and, in a loving, fatherly way, gave to them words of counsel and admonition, admonishing them to strive to grow strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, "for to live for Christ," he said, "is all there is in this life worth living for ultimately." He sent for several members of his congregation who had not been as attentive at the Lord's day meeting as we are commanded to be, and when they came he requested of them that they forsake not the assembling of themselves together upon the first day of the week. Brother Jones was a quiet, unassuming man, one who was truthful, reliable, and honest in his dealings with his fellow-men, and very considerate and discreet in all matters. Though he, like all else human, had his faults and made mistakes, it is evident that his influence as a Christian had its effect in his family, for the majority of his children that are of the age of accountability have obeyed Christ. His faithful wife is deeply grieved at the loss of her temporal shield and support. While she cannot call him back to her, she knows she can go to him, and she is laboring to attain to that end. Of a truth, the loss of Brother Jones is a great one both to his family and to our congregation, yet we have great comfort in our belief that his spirit has entered into that rest that remaineth for the people of God.

A BROTHER WHO LOVED HIM.
Clovercroft, Tenn.

CULLUM.

Ellen E. Hulan was born on February 7, 1856. She was first married to a Mr. Neece, to whom were born three children, all of whom survive her. After his death she was married to Brother S. V. Cullum. She was his wife for about twenty-two years, having departed this life on June 29, 1900. By her last marriage she was the mother of twelve children, eleven of whom survive her. Sister Cullum obeyed the gospel soon after her second marriage and was a faithful and devoted Christian to the day of her death. She was noted for her energy, industry, and frugality, and rendered her husband invaluable aid in rearing their large family. While always busy, she found time to train her children in habits of piety and industry. Of her fourteen living children seven are sons and seven are daughters. Four of the daughters (all that are old enough) are Christians. It was her fervent desire, and she labored earnestly to that end, that all her children turn early to the Lord, and she died in the hope that her sons may soon accept the Savior and prepare to meet her in heaven. She would gladly have remained with them here, yet she was prepared to go; and during the last months that she was with them, while her health was growing worse, she exhorted them to a life of piety and religion. She died triumphant, and her bereaved husband and children need not sorrow as those that have no hope. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." She was a blessing to all in her presence, and in her "going before" they, one and all, have a stronger incentive than ever to strive to enter into the glorious city of God.

J. W. GRANT.

BISHOP.

What a sweet and blessed memory is that of Sister Bishop, who recently "crossed over to the other side" from far-away Japan! Sister Bishop's parents and early associates were Methodists and she early took active membership in that church. Her father and mother died, leaving her doubly orphaned, with an only (younger) sister, and no brother, at the age of ten or eleven years. She was carefully educated and when grown held a position for some years as stenographer at Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn.; she also taught stenography for a while. Leaving these pursuits, she married a Mr. Davis, but in three months was left a widow under very sad circumstances. It was when she had been thus bereaved for about nine months that she first came to live in our family, and then we learned to love her for her noble worth and sweet disposition. Though strong in her faith in Methodism, she was unprejudiced and anxious to know the word of God. While studying the Scriptures daily with my wife, she "learned the way of the Lord more perfectly" and obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother Kurpees in March after coming to live with us in October. It was while living with us that she first met Brother Bishop, who was also living with us at that time. But little did either of them then think that they would afterwards be husband and wife. Nearly two years after her coming to make her home with us (but she had not lived with us all the intervening time) I married her to Brother Bishop on June 8, 1899. He had made known to her his purpose to go to Japan to preach the gospel, and she had nobly consented to go with him and "be a helpmeet for him," if God should so will. They went to Japan the following fall, but her health gave way and on March 9, 1900, her spirit took its flight to the home of the blessed. I have never seen a sweeter disposition, a more amiable woman, nor a more devoted Christian. It was a constant pleasure to know and be associated with her, and our brother has lost, for the time being, the greatest earthly treasure he could have had—her companionship in this life; but he knows that "to depart and to be with Christ . . . is far better" for her, and his life's work is sweetened by the thought that he is after a while going to join her in the happy home which she now enjoys. Her sister, too, may feel well assured that while she is left without a sister in the flesh here on earth, the one that loved her so and gave her so much consideration and care is happily waiting for her at the beautiful gate of a heavenly home. We love to think of her as waiting for all of us who loved her so well, and pray God we may all so live as to join her in that happy home.

Two Good Meetings.

I recently left my work in Eastern Texas and ran across into Arkansas. I preached a week at Corinth and baptized six persons. The results were not large, because there is not much outside material at that place and because the meeting had but fairly begun when I was forced to leave. The church of Christ at Corinth is one of the old landmarks. It is composed of solid and reliable and well-instructed members and has maintained its soundness amid all the departures of this modern time. Of recent years it has suffered depletion by removals and from the friction of a faction that seceded from the body and started another congregation. Brother Reese and Brother Watson, the old-time elders, are still with the church.

Corinth is the seat of Brother Wilmeth's college, which went down when he went to Mexico. There is some talk of another college at the same place. This is also the old home of Brother J. R. Jones, "the logician of Arkansas," who took a wild notion in his head and went to New Mexico. Some forty Arkansas preachers have migrated to Texas, and there are not many left among the hills. I met Brother Shofner and Brother Champion, of Howard County; and Brother G. W. Spurlock, of Hope, Hempstead County. Brother Spurlock is a Texas boy, and I called him to preach before he had sprouted a beard. He is now a considerable evangelist and debater. He will remain in Arkansas, for his wife runs a good hotel and raises the salary and he goes out and preaches a free gospel. Was there ever such a happy combination in a preacher's family? I also met Brother Wilson, of Nashville, Ark. He is a moderate progressive and a nice gentleman, and is said to be a good preacher.

I have visited Corinth a good many times and have done a good deal of preaching and debating in Howard county. I have held four or five meetings and three debates for the Corinth brethren. They seem never to get enough. I love them and they love me and we have a good time when I go there. They have basket dinners and suppers on the ground and get all the work they can out of a preacher; they feed well, work well, and pay well; they stuffed me full of pie and chicken and ham, had me to preach two and three times a day, and put forty dollars in my pocket, all of which a preacher likes, if he has no lazy bones in his body and has a good appetite and an empty purse.

I returned from the meeting at Corinth, Ark., and began a meeting at Bethel, near Cookville, Titus County, Tex. This is one of my mission points. There are a few brethren here and they are trying to build up a congregation. They have a new church house, nearly completed, and our meeting was held in it. The meeting commenced on Thursday night and continued one week and one day. It rained nearly every day and every night, but we had good success. There were thirty-two additions to the congregation—twenty-two baptized and ten otherwise. Among the converts were some of the best men of the community. I left the meeting in charge of Brother Eddie Duncan, who intended to continue a night or two longer. During most of the meeting I was very hoarse, but spoke twice a day till the close.

I am now holding a meeting at Rocky Branch, Morris County, Tex., with twenty-eight additions to date, and four nights more to continue. There have been twenty-two confessions—some from the Baptists and some otherwise. I have no help, except what the brethren render. They do the praying and singing, and I do the preaching and baptizing. There is splendid music talent in this community and we have very fine singing. I have held four meetings at this place, first and last, with an average of forty additions to the meeting, but may not reach that number this time. The weather is very warm here, but I do not mean to rest or take a furlough till I have baptized one hundred. T. R. BURNETT. Daingerfield, Tex.

Letter from Brother Denton.

I have been confined to my house, and most of the time to my bed, for nearly five weeks, but am now able to sit up a little while. I need the prayers and fellowship of the brethren. I had a good meeting at Cumby, Hopkins County, Tex., ten being baptized; I also held a meeting at Utica, I. T., at which eleven were baptized and three reclaimed. I took sick the next day after returning home from Utica and have been down ever since. J. W. DENTON. Roxton, Tex.

A letter received at Tien-tsin from the British Minister, Sir Claude MacDonald, dated July 24, 1900, says: "We are surrounded by imperial troops, who are firing on us continuously. The enemy is enterprising, but cowardly. We have provisions for about a fortnight and are eating our ponies. The Chinese Government, if there be one, has done nothing whatever to help us."

The prevailing trouble in China has made it necessary to bring about a curtailment of production in cotton manufacturing, and it has been announced that the mills of the Pepperel Manufacturing Company will shut down from August 18, 1900, until September 4, 1900. That will leave only about five thousand soldiers on the islands, merely enough for garrison duty."

A statement issued from the executive office at Austin shows that within the past year charters have been issued for thirteen cotton mills in Texas, with an aggregate capital of $1,475,000. These mills are now in various stages of completion and one of them is in operation. Three others will be ready for operation by October, 1900, and six more by January 1, 1901. Some trouble has been experienced in getting machinery, which has caused delay.

Reports to the Bureau of the Mint show that the receipts of gold at the Seattle assay office in the month of July from the Klondike amount to $6,084,000; from Alaska, $266,000. At San Francisco the original receipts were $2,159,032 from the Klondike and $121,676 from Alaska. The total receipts of the San Francisco mint in July, from all sources, including the Seattle assay office, amounted to $13,400,000. Total receipts on the Pacific coast from the Klondike so far this season are about $9,500,000, against $7,630,000 at the same time last year.

In reply to a suggestion of Li Hung Chang that the Ministers might be sent under safe escort to Tien-tsin, provided the powers would engage not to march on Peking, the Secretary of State replied on July 30, 1900: "This government will not enter into any arrangement regarding disposition or treatment of legations without first having free communication with Minister Conger. Responsibility for their protection rests upon the Chinese Government. Power to deliver at Tien-tsin presupposes power to protect and to open communication. This is insisted on."

The Governor of Bombay, India, telegraphs that there were 8,607 cholera cases in the famine district during the week ending on July 21, 1900, of which 5,703 resulted fatally. In the native States there were 8,246 cases, 5,710 proving fatal. The total deaths in the relief works of the British district were 6,753, or four and two-fifths per one thousand. There has been a good rainfall in North Gujarat and Kathiawar and agricultural prospects are encouraging in the remainder of the affected tracts. The number on relief work is decreasing and gratuitous relief is increasing.

King Humbert, of Italy, was assassinated at Monza by an anarchist, Gaetano Bressi, an Italian, who has been living in Paterson, N. J., and was employed in the silk mills there. He says he had no accomplices and that he committed the crime because of his hatred of monarchical institutions. The king had been attending a distribution of prizes in connection with a gymnastic competition. He had just entered his carriage, with his aid-de-camp, amid the cheers of the crowd, when he was struck by three balls from a revolver, the shots being fired in quick succession. Bressi, the assassin of King Humbert, left this country in May, 1900. His wife and child are left in destitution in New York.

Dr. George Ernest Morrison, the Peking correspondent of the London Times, has been heard from direct. He declares that as late as July 2, 1900, the Imperial Government urged the Boxers to continue their "loyal and patriotic services in exterminating the Christians." All have become satisfied that the foreigners in Peking are alive. While definite news of the march of the armies sent to rescue them has not been received, it is thought they are on the march. There are rumors of many murders of the missionaries and foreigners in different parts of China; but many of these prove to be unfounded, and it is probable that the massacres are not so numerous as have been supposed. The telegrams from China prove themselves very unreliable. It is certain the nation is in a ferment and the feeling strongly directed against foreigners.

Major Bate, of the Weather Bureau of Tennessee, has issued his crop bulletin for the week ending July 30, 1900. It shows that good rains fell throughout the State during the week and greatly revived vegetation that was beginning, in many places, especially in the Eastern Division, to need moisture. In some sections the rains of July 25 and 26, 1900, were heavy and damaging. Wheat thrashing was much hindered. The bulk of the crop is thrashed, and the yield is generally reported better than was estimated. Much of the crop, however, is yet in the shock and subject to further damage. Corn, where well worked, is developing well; otherwise, prospects are poor. Cotton, generally, is small, but growing well; some shedding of forms is reported in the Western Division. Tobacco is growing finely, but needs sunshine. Most of the crop has been topped. Oats have been harvested in generally good condition. Peas and millet are in fine growth. Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes are doing finely. The second crop of the former is being planted. Peanuts are reported weedy and not doing much good. Gardens are in good condition. The wet weather has been injurious to fruit, causing much rotting. Apples promise only a small return.

ARKANSAS.

Saratoga, July 31.—Our meeting at Saratoga is progressing well. Only four persons have turned to the Lord thus far. The interest is good. I am at the home of our old friend and brother, Dr. W. H. Cannon. I feel very much at home here. I do not know how long the meeting will last.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Grant, July 31.—A meeting was begun at this place on July 13, 1900, by Brother H. C. Kennady, of Connerville. After continuing nine days, the meeting closed, with five confessions and baptisms and two others to be baptized on the second Lord's day in August. I feel confident that the seed has been sown in other good ground that will soon germinate and bring forth fruit. Brother Kennady is a bold defender of the truth as it is in Christ and should be kept in the field. He is poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. The churches should hold his hands up while he labors for the good of immortal souls. If any one has anything to bestow upon a worthy brother, it could not fall on a more deserving man than Brother Kennady. To God be all the praise.

KENTUCKY.

Flanagan, August 1.—The writer, with Brother J. W. Harding, closed a meeting at Taylorsville last Sunday night. The meeting was well attended and the interest was good throughout. Eight persons obeyed the gospel and two others identified themselves with the congregation. Brother Harding's earnest prayers and exhortations were very helpful in the meeting. I will join him in a meeting at Fisherville next Saturday morning, the Lord willing.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Cordell, July 31.—We are in the midst of a good meeting. Large audiences greet us every night and there is a good attendance of the brethren and sisters out every day. Brother Moore and his household (the father and three daughters) were baptized. All heard, understood, believed, and were baptized, and now Brother Moore rejoices, believing in God, with all his house. There have been a number of others baptized. The meeting will close next Sunday at the morning service. I will at once go to my home State (Tennessee), after an absence of more than three months in the West. My next meeting is announced to begin at Oglesby, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in August.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Oklahoma City, August 3.—I closed a ten-days' meeting at Mount Zion, Cleveland County, on the 1st inst. The attendance was large, with splendid interest from the beginning. A good portion of the time the house would not hold all the people. I preached twice a day and had a Bible class each day, which was, to many, the most important part of the work. We studied the letter to the Hebrews. My aim, in part, was to induce the people to form a habit of studying the Bible by books. Seven persons were baptized and twelve restored during the meeting, and the brethren promised to go to work and keep the ordinances as they were delivered by the apostles. I trust they will be true to their promise. On Lord's day I called on the audience to make a contribution for the famine sufferers of India. They contributed seven dollars, which was sent to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company to be forwarded to India. The people are poor, but generous. I am now on my way to Southwest Missouri to spend two or three months preaching the gospel. B. C. YOUNG.

TENNESSEE.

Alto, August 2.—I recently closed a two-weeks' tent meeting near Pelham, Grundy County, which resulted in seven additions and a small congregation established. All those added were heads of families, and four of the number came from the Methodists. Our audiences were large and attentive throughout the entire meeting. This writing finds me in the fifth day of a good meeting at Alto, Franklin County. I am preaching to large audiences and we hope for good results.

JAMES K. HILL.

Wilkerson, August 2.—Our meeting at Bakerville closed on the night July 15, 1900, having continued eight days. Six persons obeyed the gospel during this meeting. These brethren and sisters are at peace among themselves and are doing a good work. This does not mean that every member is a good worker, but that there is a good work going on among them. They frequently have additions to the church when there is no protracted meeting going on or no evangelist about. This speaks well for somebody—the Lord knows whom—at Baker-ville.

J. E. B. RIDLEY.

Clifton, July 30.—Brother A. P. Johnson commenced a meeting for the church of Christ at this place on the second Lord's day of this month and closed on the night of July 17, 1900. We had no additions by baptism or otherwise, though Brother Johnson did some able preaching and greatly endeared himself to the brethren and sisters here. We think much prejudice was removed and the brethren and sisters strengthened and encouraged. We feel very thankful to our Heavenly Father for such men to proclaim the word in its purity and expect Brother Johnson to hold another meeting for us before the close of this year. The time for it has not been named.

J. W. BEASLEY.

Cottage Grove, August 3.—On the first Lord's day in July I began preaching at Cuba, Graves County, Ky. Late in the afternoon on Monday Brother W. T. Boaz arrived; he did the preaching the rest of the time in this meeting, with the exception of two appointments. Brother Boaz is a young man of much promise and does not fail to get up an interest in his meetings. He answered a good many questions for the sects while here. The

A. O. COLLEY.

Tom's Creek, July 31.—On the fourth Lord's day in July I began a meeting for the brethren at Cotham's Chapel, Deatur County, near Denson's Land- ing, on the Tennessee River. This meeting continued, day and night, until Monday morning after the fifth Lord's day in July, at which time we closed at the water. The immediate results of this meeting were thirteen additions to the church. Of this num- ber eleven made the good con- fession and were baptized into Christ, the other two being reclaimed. All, or nearly all, were from the Meth- odists, or had been of the Methodist faith. Although it rained every day of the meeting, we had a good hear- ing and good interest from start to finish. All expressed themselves as being well pleased, and, everything considered, we did have a glorious meet- ing. I labored very earnestly and faithfully and tried to present the gospel with all the force possible. I think much good was done in the way of removing prejudice and stirring the brethren up to renewed zeal and brotherly love. This is my third meeting with these brethren, and we have al- ways had good meetings there. They know how to make a preacher feel good.

Brother John T. Poe's Mistake.

There appears in the Gospel Advo- cate of July 19, 1900, page 458, a short article by Brother Poe in which he re- fers to the wrong man. I am not a pas- tor and have never been one. I cannot be a scriptural pastor and have no desire to be an unscriptural one. I try to do the work of an evangelist. I am the oldest of five brothers. Four of us are preachers—viz.: John E. Dunn and G. A. (Gus.) Dunn, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; T. F. (Tom) Dunn, of Nash- ville, Tenn.; and J. S. (Jim) Dunn, of Dallas, Tex. The one whose name is on the sign as pastor of the church of Christ at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Dallas, Tex., is J. S. Dunn. Brother Jim can explain for himself; I only give the facts. There has been considerable comment on that sign on the church building at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Da- las, Tex. I would be glad to see a clear statement of the facts from Brother Jim's pen. If the church of Christ at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets and my brother have made a mistake, I desire them to correct it; otherwise it is wrong to misrepresent them.

Letter from Brother Askew.

I will leave Marietta, I. T., to-day (July 27, 1900) for Sulphur, I. T., a mission of some worth. Sulphur is a new town of about two thousand inhabitants, without even one established congregation of any of the denominations, much less of our brethren. I go there to sow the seed of the kingdom, without the promise of anything for my service. If some congregation or individual would take fellowship with us in this meeting, hearts would be made glad and the scripture would be fulfilled which says: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." If you have anything to offer, direct it to me, at Marietta, I. T., and acknowledgment will be made of the same.

Marietta, I. T. J. B. ASKEW.

Thoughts on the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

Life in the Father's house is on an ascending scale. The path of the just shineth more and more. Joys increase and the Christian goes from strength to strength. The Father's love becomes more precious with each day of obedience. In the far country the reverse is true. Life there is on a descending scale. It starts out bravely enough, with wealth and merrymaking and flattering companions. Nothing could promise more. But after a little, money begins to slip away. Pleasures pall and friends disappear. One after another the allurements of this fascinating life vanish and the prodigal finds himself naked and desolate. Life in the far country ends in hunger unimagined and shame unspeakable.

No wanderer can get beyond God's welcome home.

Separation from God makes the far country. No matter how pleasant our surroundings, we are in the far country if we are absent from Christ. All who know not him will surely know the heart hunger and loneliness that he alone can appease.

The journey into the far country is all downhill.

Friendship is known in the far country. Flattery and false professions are there in abundance. Every rich prodigal will find in the far country many to praise him and to keep close to him—as long as he is rich. But the essential quality of friendship is constancy, and that is not to be found among the harpies who feed on sin's captives. "A friend loveth at all times," and there are no such friends in the far country. They desert the companion whose substance they have consumed in riotous living and leave him to make friends with the swine.

God keeps no son at home against his will.

Willfulness drives many persons into the far country. Unwillingness to accept advice, to submit to proper restraints, or to be satisfied with a normal life has caused the ruin of many lives. Headstrong young people, who feel big enough to do as they please, find that the "do-as-you-please" road leads to disaster.

We can never travel far enough to be separated from remorse.

The old proverb says: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man." Yes, it seems right. Idleness, good fellowship, plenty of money, and high living are very alluring to shortsighted and undisciplined youth. Satan well knows how to make his paths seem right at the first appearing. He cutely contrasts this lively life with the "slow," matter-of-fact existence at home. Ah—but wait! The proverb continues: "But the end thereof are the ways of death." That is it; fail at first, fatal at last. Ask the prodigal what he thinks about the way that seemeth right. He will point you to his starvation, shame, and sorrow, and they will be answer enough.

God's love braves even the far country.

There is one thing in this world more unaccountable and more unreasonable than the waywardness of a son, and that is the love of a father.

It is better to stay at home than to wander and come home.

The prodigal "went the pace" and lost the race. "Fast" living never arrives at life's goals. Destruction inevitably overtakes the "fast" young man.

God gives the prodigal a home—and a kiss.

Even from the far country there is a straight path home to the Father's house.

No man ever journeys into the far country without losing self-respect, which is more precious than life.—Forward.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO SUFFERERS FROM CANCER.The Disease is Curable.

"Editor of the Gospel Advocate: I had a cancer or an ulcer—the most eminent physicians pronounced it a cancer. My father, a fine physician, did not relieve my sufferings. I had two brothers, both very fine physicians; neither could relieve me. After untold sufferings, with no relief, using eight or nine doctors, some kind friend sent me a bottle of B. B. B. After taking the first bottle I felt entirely easy, and it has been the only remedy that has given me permanent relief, so many times I have been exhausted and collapsed from weakening. I have got a great many people to take B. B. B. A lady living near me had an eating cancer, and the bones in her nose or upper part of her mouth were eaten entirely out. She could eat nothing but strained soup. She was entirely cured by using B. B. B., when she was given up to die by three doctors. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) healed my whole body, gave me energy, cured my low spirits, and, I think, saved me to rear my children; or, at least, B. B. B. was the only earthly remedy, with God's help. B. B. B. is the best blood purifier in the whole world.

Deep-seated cases of blood and skin diseases, like ulcers, cancer, eating sores, painful swellings, and blood poison, are quickly cured by B. B. Give it a trial. It cures when all else fails. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. Sold at drug stores at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. Be sure the bottle reads "Botanic Blood Balm." So sufferers may test it, a trial bottle is given away absolutely free. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. $25,000 TO BE GIVEN AWAY.The Money is Now in Bank—Do You Want Part of It?

As you know, the United States census is now being taken, but the exact figures will not be known until the Census Office at Washington publishes them. The last official census was taken in 1890 and then we had 62,622,250 population, which was an increase of 12,466,467 over the census of 1880. It is estimated that the present census will give us about seventy million population. The Press Publishing Association, of Detroit, Mich., is offering $25,000 in prizes to the nearest guessers; $15,000 will be given to the nearest guess, $5,000 to the next nearest, $1,000 to the next, $500 to the next, and so on. There are, all told, one thousand prizes and $25,000 in cash to be given away. The money to pay these prizes has been put up in the Central Savings Bank of Detroit, and there can be no doubt but that the prizes will be awarded in the fairest manner possible. The Sunny South has made arrangements with the Press Publishing Company by which each person who sends fifty cents for a six months' subscription to the Sunny South can have one guess in this great contest. Two guesses will be allowed for one dollar for a year's subscription. A certificate of your guess will be mailed you as soon as your remittance is received, and you will have to hold this until the official announcement of the census has been made in Washington, D. C.

Remember, this contest closes one month before the official announcement is made, and you must send in your guess at once, or it may be too late. Address SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING COMPANY, Box 467, Atlanta, Ga.

A Possible Danger. No. 2.

The writer called attention, some time ago, to "some possible dangers" confronting the "Disciples," and the subject is continued.

Alexander Campbell says: "With Tertullian, I assert that in faith, religion, and morality whatever is most ancient is most true." ("Popular Lectures and Addresses," page 395.) Paul says: "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." (Gal. 4: 26.) If we will go back to Jerusalem, there will be no trouble about understanding that penitent believers were baptized for (in order to) the remission of sins. The trouble is, that some "leading men" among the "Disciples," like Tyler, Mathews, McGarvey, and others, have arrayed themselves against Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, on this question. "Where has Christ commanded us to elevate the host and exhibit it to the people?" was Carlstadt's question. "Where has he forbidden it?" was Luther's reply. "Show me where it is forbidden" is the watchword still. The true rule is the one of the impulsive, but earnest, Carlstadt. There is no end to errors and innovations in the church of God when Luther's rule is adopted. By it the Baptist can say: "Where is the relation of a Christian experience in order to baptism forbidden in the Scriptures?" "Where is a mourner's bench or the Methodist praying plan and system of getting religion adopted so successfully by us as a people forbidden in the Scriptures?" says the Methodist. "Where is the wearing of robes, the observance of Lent and of days in celebration of Christ's death and burial, or in honor of the memory of the apostles and our martyrs, forbidden in the Scriptures?" says the Episcopalian. "Where do the Scriptures forbid infant baptism, our name, and a human creed?" says the Presbyterian. The Roman Catholic says: "Where do the Scriptures forbid auricular confession to a priest or praying or buying souls out of purgatory." If the reader will turn to Dowling's "History of Romanism," page 222, he will find an account of how the priests' own concubines made confession and received forgiveness of their "holy fathers."

By and by the "Disciples" come, and they say: "Where do the Scriptures forbid us having some up-to-date music, a choir, and pipe organ in our church? Where do the Scriptures forbid 'organized effort' in mission work?" They seem to forget that the burden of proof rests on them in regard to all these innovations. "Our general evangelist" here in South Kentucky once said to the writer: "The South Kentucky Work [Society] may be wrong, but it has done a great deal of good." Let us see how that will fit the mourner's bench: "The mourner's bench may be wrong, but it has done a great deal of good; thousands of Methodists have resulted from it." Let us try Mr. Campbell's rule—viz.: "Whatever is most ancient in religion is most true." The South Kentucky Society is not over twenty-five years old, therefore not very true; besides, it is an unscriptural, human institution, incorporated under the laws of the State. The infidel historian, Lecky, says: "There is 'a spirit of the age' which is for the time supreme; it makes and unmakes men, institutions, and nations." Though the truth of this position is questionable, still there is "a spirit of the age" which, when fully developed, is "the spirit of the age." It is then exceedingly strong, intolerant, and tyrannical. This is true, at least, when "the spirit of the age" is not the spirit of Christ. This spirit has its childhood when it is modest and meek; its youth, when it is reckless and bold; its age, when it is strong and tyrannical. It is the part of wise and good men to watch the uprising and oncoming of this spirit. In the "baby figure" is plainly revealed to the wise interpreter of coming events the "giant mass." If this spirit is evil, no time is to be lost in checking its progress. In the primitive church the spirit of apostasy antedated "the apostasy" itself. It worked slowly at first; it was weak, modest, and secret in its movements; it was easily hindered for a while, and was, in fact, hindered from making any considerable progress for several centuries. Still it was a candidate for the position of "the spirit of the age," or ages. The apostles saw and also foresaw all this. They prepared the church by instruction, exhortation, and threatening to meet and withstand, and, if possible, to subdue, this spirit of innovation or apostasy. But it catered to the carnal world so well and was withal so religious that it finally gave law to nations and empires and placed its foot of power upon the neck of kings. Now we have a perfect standard of truth. By this standard we must try the spirits of truth and error, and know them. This trying of the spirits was anciently a Christian duty. Among apostolic people it is so yet. The spirit of apostasy hated and persecuted the men who were so bold and so true that no bribes nor threatenings nor sufferings nor deaths could turn them from their purpose of watching and exposing the spirit which proposed nothing less than exalting itself above all that is called "God," or that is worshiped. The murderer never has a good opinion of the rope that will hang him. It looks like the "leaders" among the "Disciples" ought to take warning from the experience of their

DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

"I have been thinking of writing to you for some time," writes Mrs. W. D. Benson, of Maxton, Robeson Co., N. C., "to let you know what a wonderful thing Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery did for my little boy. He was taken with indigestion when he was a year and a half old, and he was under the doctor's treatment for five long years. We spent all we made for doctor's bills, and it did no good. He could not eat anything only a little milk and cracker, and sometimes even this would make him sick, and he got very weak; could not sit up all day, and I gave up all hope of his ever getting any better. Looking over one of your books I noticed Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery recommended for indigestion. We bought some and gave to our boy. Two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cured him. He is well as can be, and can eat anything that he wants and it does not hurt him. He has not been sick a day since, and it has been three years since he took your medicine. I pray that God will always bless you and your medicine."

FOR DISEASES OF THE STOMACH, BLOOD, NERVES AND LUNGS.

religious neighbors during the last ten years, so far as "higher criticism" is concerned. With such examples as Dr. Toy and Dr. Bridgman (to say nothing of President Harper) among the Baptists; Dr. Woodrow, Dr. Alexander, Dr. Briggs, and Dr. McGiffert among the Presbyterians; Dr. Cadman among the Methodists; with Heber Newton (Episcopalian) asking Bishop Potter for an ecclesiastical trial "to determine the limits of thought in our church," it looks as if there will have to be a trial some time "to determine the limits of thought among the 'Disciples.'"

When Tom Paine told Ben. Franklin he intended to write the "Age of Reason," attacking the Bible, Franklin replied: "Don't unchain the tiger." The astute philosopher had outgrown the follies of his youth. He knew that if the Bible was destroyed human depravity would be unfettered and no earthly power could restrain its fury. I wish there was a Franklin here now to say to Dr. Garrison, Dr. Willette, and all other "higher critics": "Don't unchain the tiger." If Tom Paine could come to life to-day, he would doubtless admit the rough and somewhat barbarous nature of his methods of attack on the Bible, and commend the more modern and more scientific ones of the "higher critics." They are really successors to Tom Paine and are doing a much abler work in favor of infidelity. Alexander Campbell's idea about the ancient Jerusalem is a good one. Paul says: "She is the mother of us all." It may seem to some that the writer has perverted the meaning of this allegoric passage; but if they will examine the comments of Barnes, MacKnight, and Curry's edition of Dr. Clarke, et al., they will find that he has not. Organs, missionary societies, higher criticism, etc., belong in "Babylon, . . . the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." When you admit one innovation, you open a gate wide enough to admit every device of the Roman Catholic Church. The same aperture that admits the organ and the fiddle cannot be closed against the priest, the altar, and the mass.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Birmingham, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Questions and Answers.

1. Is light necessary to true conversion? Most assuredly. David said: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." (Ps. 119: 105.) "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." (Verse 130.) Paul was sent to the Gentiles "to turn them from darkness to light." (Acts 26: 18.)
2. Are sinful men going wrong, and do they need to be converted? "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." (Ps. 19: 7.)
3. Do sinful men need to be begotten of God? Paul said: "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." (1 Cor. 4: 15.) Again, James (1: 18) said: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth."
4. Do sinful men need to be born again? "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 23.) Again, Jesus Christ said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God;" (John 3: 5.)
5. Do sinful men need faith? "But without faith it is impossible to please him [God]: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.) Again, Paul said: "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) Again, Jesus Christ said: "He that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 16.)
6. Do sinful men need repentance? Jesus Christ said: "I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." (Luke 13: 3.) Again,

Paul said: "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 30.) Peter said: "The Lord is . . . not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Pet. 3: 9.)

7. Do sinful men need to confess Christ before men? Jesus Christ himself said: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 10: 32, 33.)

8. Do sinful men need to call upon the name of the Lord? The apostle Paul said: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Rom. 10: 13.) Ananias said to Saul: "Now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.)

9. Do sinful men need to be baptized? Jesus Christ said: "Go, . . . teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28: 19.) "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.)

Letter from Brother Bishop.

Since my last report Miss L. J. Wirick and Mrs. Yoko, the Japanese teachers, gathered the mothers of these Japanese school children in the school room where the poor children are taught and gave them a Bible lesson. After the meeting, which was well attended, they all tarried, one for another, and talked. These poor heathen mothers exhibit real gratitude for these seasons of rest and instruction. With Miss Wirick's help, I am enabled to look after the work as I could not without her. I cannot speak Japanese and the teacher cannot speak English. I know a little Japanese and she knows a little English. The expenses of the work are being borne by Brother McCaleb. There are few people who put as large a per cent of income into foreign missions as he. The expenses are greater now, as taxes are higher on the church and school property. Brethren who wish to have fellowship with Brother McCaleb in this work may remit to me, indicating that the money is to be used in his work here.

A Good Meeting at West Mountain, Tex.

I have just returned from a grand and good meeting at West Mountain, Tex. Nine souls were obedient to the faith and rejoiced in the hope of eternal life after they were baptized. West Mountain congregation was set in order in 1852 by Brother J. C. Matthews. Such brave soldiers as J. W. Denton and L. M. Owens have been preaching there occasionally for five years, hence I found the people well taught in the Scriptures. These brethren at West Mountain have settled the organ question by cultivating the organs that God gave them. They furnished the best singing I ever had in a meeting.

They gave me kind treatment and a most liberal support financially. They have a good eldership and do things after the apostolic order. Several East Texas preachers attended the meeting, and it was a joyful time indeed with me. I shall long remember West Mountain.

I start to-morrow (July 27, 1900) for Ladonia, Fannin County, Tex., for another meeting. I go from there to Mount Calm, Hill County, Tex., on August 11, 1900, to remain over the second and third Sundays in August. I next go to Greenwood, Wise County, Tex., where I am to stay over the fourth Sunday in August and the first Sunday in September. Then I go to Oran, Palo Pinto County, Tex., to begin a meeting on Thursday night, September 6, 1900. Those wanting me in fall meetings will please write me at Grapevine, Tex.

The Northern Methodist General Conference owns the newspapers of the church. During the last four years only two of these paid expenses—the New York Advocate and the Pittsburg Advocate. The net loss on all the papers was one hundred and eight thousand dollars. The papers that did not pay expenses required assistance from the church funds. In the management of religious papers it requires very rigid economy to keep the expenses from exceeding the receipts, still some who know nothing of the expense connected with running a religious journal are ever ready to complain that the price is too high.

Julian Ralph, in writing of Lord Roberts, speaks of what he has passed through, and adds: "All was suffered in the solitude of undivided responsibility." While Lord Roberts has a great responsibility, he has all England back of him, sharing this responsibility with him. England raised and placed at his disposal three hundred thousand soldiers, the largest army she has ever put in the field. Thus while Lord Roberts has a great responsibility resting on his shoulders, he has all the resources of a mighty government back of him, and sharing this responsibility with him. While very little seems to be thought of it, every soldier of the cross has a greater responsibility than does Lord Roberts in conducting the war in South Africa. "Every man shall bear his own burden." No one can divide the responsibility with the Christian. He has his own place to fill, his own work to do. While fighting in the noblest of all causes, he can rely on the Lord Jesus for succor and support, but no friend can fight his battles for him. His is truly an undivided responsibility.

The Alte Glaube says that a teacher in Thuringia found that of forty pupils only three came from homes in which family worship was maintained. This is only an indication of the wave of religious indifference that is sweeping over the country. The church is the salt of the earth and the family is the salt of the church. If family worship has fallen away, we certainly are in a dangerous way religiously. The Lord, through Moses, required the Jews to teach his words to their children: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." (Deut. 6: 7-9.) Lack of time is sometimes offered as an excuse for a failure to pray; but when a man is in the spirit of prayer, there is no difficulty in finding the time. The hungry man finds time to eat. Prayer is food to the soul that hungers and thirsts after righteousness. Daniel was a busy man, being over the whole kingdom, yet he found time to pray three times a day. The hungry eat, the thirsty drink, and even so the righteous pray.

Perhaps one of the worst sins of the day is that of fault-finding. Some people, so it appears, would rather criticise the efforts of the most consecrated Christians than help them forward in the work of saving souls. The habitual fault-finder is ever wide awake to the little faults of others, but he is perfectly blind to the great defects in his own life. It is true we can find faults in the lives of others, but by even a casual observation of our own lives we may find even greater failings in our own. Life is too short and souls are too precious to spend our time in croaking. The frog can do nothing but croak, but we were made for a nobler work. God means that we shall make the world better from our having lived in it, even though our efforts may be very imperfect. God will help us more and more and make us stronger day by day, provided in a spirit of humility and meekness we are seeking to honor him. We should always correct our own errors and free ourselves from blame before we may expect to successfully lead others out of sin. When we have overcome our own sins, we will be better prepared to sympathize with and help others in overcoming their sins. Our associates will be ready to follow in the steps we do, provided we follow in the steps of Jesus, much quicker than they will listen to our criticisms while we do comparatively little in the service of the Master.

No man can afford to allow his children to read bad books. He should buy freely good books and urge them to read. It is claimed that Spurgeon was very fond of reading when a boy. Some one gave him a bad book, which he read. He afterwards said: "I should like to be able to forget even the half I read in that book, but I cannot; it sticks to me like glue. Bad books are terrible things." It was my good fortune to know a very moral, devout young man. He attended church, read his Bible, and took much interest in religious work generally. After a time he began to lose interest in his work. He was very irregular in his attendance at church. Soon he ceased to go altogether. It was not long till he was found stealing, tried, and sentenced to spend a number of years in the penitentiary. On investigation it was learned that the reading of dime novels worked his ruin. One might as well expect to take poison into the system with freedom from harm as to expect to read such trash without being damaged morally. We should select our reading with the greatest care.

The editors of this paper have long and earnestly contended that all mission work should be done through the church, which is the light of the world, the pillar and support of the truth. Missionary boards and societies have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Christians filled with a consuming zeal should go everywhere preaching the word, without waiting for some board to guarantee them a living. It is gratifying to us to note that the sentiment in favor of the church, as such, doing the work is growing. All the "fads and fancies" of men can never atone for a lack of individual zeal and consecration. The Texas Department of the American Baptist Flag says, editorially: "In looking over our exchanges, it is very perceptible that there is in every part of the country a spirit of investigation going on with regard to our 'organized work' through the board plan. The breakers of convention sovereignty have been discovered, and the voice of warning is being heard from every quarter. 'Back to the churches!' is the cry of many strong men. The boards and secretaries may be slow to hear, but as sure as right against might prevails, they will have to heed this cry, or else they will be left without adequate resources." In the same issue of the American Baptist Flag the editor shows that the Baptist Argus is mistaken in claiming that the expense of carrying on the foreign mission work last year amounted to eight and one-third per cent. The editor says: "Is that so, Brother Argus? Where do you get your figures? According to Dr. Willingham's report, as it is published in the minutes, the expenses last year amounted to eighteen thousand six hundred dollars, while the total collections were a fraction over one hundred and forty thousand dollars, and, according to our way of making calculations, this gives a fraction over thirteen per cent, leaving out the 'annuity' expense. But if you put in the 'annuity,' you have expenses amounting to twenty-two thousand dollars, and the ratio of expense is about fifteen per cent. How is it that you board brethren make such calculations in obtaining the per cent of costs? Besides all this, what is the use of deceiving the people with the idea that such a small 'per cent' of expenses goes to make up the tables, when, in fact, the expenses are about twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars more this year than they were last year? You may reduce the 'per cent' of expenses by increasing the contributions, but that is no sign that the costs of the business have been curtailed. The giving of two hundred thousand dollars to foreign missions this year may reduce the 'per cent' again, but we predict right now that the total expenses will be higher. Come, be frank with the people and tell them that the actual expenses of the board are growing larger with each passing year, and that the 'per cent' is purely incidental, and can only be determined when the totals are fully known. It seems to us that both the per cent and total expense should diminish, but somehow or other they do not do it."

"When the Lord of hosts makes up his jewels, will you be among them?" J. N. Hall quotes the above question from some exchange and comments as follows: "How can any Campbellite answer such a question? How does he know whether he will be one of the jewels of the Lord in the last day, when he teaches that a man may be the Lord's jewel to-day and the devil may have him to-morrow? The doctrine of apostasy, as taught by Campbellites, leaves all the future uncertain, for each one is obliged to depend on his own imperfect faithfulness in rendering a perfect obedience; and if he falls, as every one does, he will be lost. The doctrine of apostasy dishonors God and makes the salvation of every doubtful." (American Baptist Flag.) Neither a sionary Baptist nor a Campbellite can answer a question. We nowhere read in the New Testament of Baptists or Campbellites being followers of Christ. We have never met any Campbellites, but if we should, we sincerely hope they will have regard enough for the truth to call people by their correct names, for we have learned that some Baptists are not Christians enough to call other people what they claim to be themselves. Christians will have no difficulty in answering that question if they will only take as their guide the Book God has given them. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22: 14.) "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 7: 21.) "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 10, 11.) It is a fact that the man who keeps busy in the service of the Lord has neither time nor inclination to apostatize, while the man who feels so secure and has overmuch confidence is in great danger. Peter was sure he would never deny the Lord. All other men might be offended, but he never would. He really felt that he would die rather than deny the Lord. How frail and fallible is man! In a very few hours Peter was cursing and denying his Lord. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." (1 Cor. 10: 12.) "But I keep under my body, and bring into subjection: lest that by any means, when I preached to others, I myself should be a castaway (1 Cor. 9: 27.)"

Singular Facts.

Frank Faithful: "In our last conversation, Henry, while studying the history of Naaman, we discussed the efficacy of water in the plan of salvation. We agreed there was no efficacy in water to take away sins any more than there was in the waters of Jordan to cure the leprosy, that the dippings of Naaman and the baptism of a believing penitent were each a condition of the bestowment of God's blessings. We also agreed that faith and repentance, too, upon which our salvation is made to depend were also conditions and in and of themselves they were no power to save."

Henry Hardshell: "Yes, I remember well that was the way you explained the teaching of the Scriptures on this subject; but I come to you now with a passage of scripture which shows strongly that water does save us in the plan of salvation."

Frank F.: "Why, I fear, Henry, you will become so straight that, like the Indian's tree, you will lean the other way. But to what scripture do you refer?"

Henry H.: "To 1 Pet. 3: 21, where it says, plainly: 'Baptism doth also now save us.'"

Frank F.: "This statement should not be torn from its place and used alone, but should be studied in the light of the context. As Noah and his obedient family were saved from the old world of disobedience and destruction by the waters of the flood, so now are believing penitents saved from sin by the waters of baptism. The uses of water were so generally for outward cleansing purposes that Peter guards the expression so much as to say: 'Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God.' This teaches that baptism to be acceptable obedience to God must pertain to the conscience of the person baptized. While this cuts off the possibility of infant baptism being acceptable to God, it does not at last show that there is any efficacy in baptism to pardon sin, but leaves it where we agreed it should be, as a condition of pardon. Noah's salvation by water was a type; the salvation from sin of the believing penitent now is the antitype."

Henry H.: "It seems to show here in this passage that God in his infinite wisdom prearranged the salvation of Noah and his righteous family to correspond to the salvation of sinners under the gospel—saved by water in both instances."

Frank F.: "Just so, and this is not the only instance in which it has pleased the divine mind to do this."

Henry H.: "What other examples in the Bible can mention?"

Frank F.: "When the children of Israel were being led from the bondage of the Egyptians they must pass the waters of the Red Sea before they were saved. St. Paul calls this a 'baptism.' To the Corinthians he says: 'Brethren, I would not that you should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.' (1 Cor. 10: 2.)"

Henry H.: "I must confess my 'ignorance,' although Paul says he would not that the Corinthian brethren should be ignorant. I should be ashamed to confess it."

Frank F.: "No man should be ashamed to confess his ignorance who is in search of the truth. It is one of the signs of intelligence to know that we are in need of information. It is a singular fact, Henry, that God has used water in every age and dispensation to mark in some way his pleasure or displeasure. Sometimes it was a means of grace; sometimes, a flood of destruction. But as we are following the openings of his favor to men, we will confine our remarks to instances of that kind. Put what construction we may upon it, the fact remains that it was so."

Henry H.: "Are there still other instances than these you have mentioned?"

Frank F.: "O, yes, and rather too numerous to mention in detail. Water in some way was used in dispensing divine favor or illustrating spiritual truths in so many ways that it is difficult to know where to begin the mention. When John the Baptist came as the harbinger of the great Messiah, it was by giving the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Every single individual that John preached was baptized with water as a part of that preparation. Those who disobeyed it are said to have rejected the counsel of God to their own injury. John said the Messiah who came after him was mightier than he and would baptize with the Holy Spirit. When Jesus was manifested to Israel, it was at his baptism. Then it was the heavens were opened above him and the voice of God said: 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.' In this preparatory work Jesus, with his twelve apostles, joined, and was more successful than even John the Baptist, for it is said that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John. After this our Lord sent out seventy others. It was a time of preparation, but it is safe to say no material or person was fitly prepared for the kingdom who had not obeyed God in the institution of baptism. During this period the public mind among the Jews was greatly aroused on this question. One Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, came to Christ for a night interview. He came, relying upon the Jewish advantage of Abrahamic birth. To him Christ said: 'Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.' This startling requisition he soon explained to mean: 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' Without doubt, to 'be born of water' here means to be baptized. In giving the great and final commission to his apostles, he said: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.' Peter, holding the keys of the kingdom of heaven, commanded anxious inquirers to 'repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.' But now I must say that I have unconsciously passed from the types and shadows to the antitype and substance. But these do not exhaust the uses of water as mentioned in the Bible; for there are consecration of the priests, in which the whole body was washed, and the washing of the hands and feet at the doors of the tabernacle and temple in all their priestly services. Under the New Testament 'the doctrine of baptisms' is mentioned as among the first principles, or foundation. Notwithstanding all these facts, men who are very religious nowadays make lengthy and learned disquisitions in religious matters, with no reference to Christian baptism at all. The 'Gospel Hymns,' comprising No. 1 to No. 6, containing 739 hymns and songs, has not the word 'baptism' in it. I wonder if this was an accident, or was there upon the part of the compilers a studious avoidance of the subject of baptism? There are many songs in it which include the duty, but the word 'baptism' was left out, or I have overlooked it. If you find it, let me see it."

Henry H.: "That does seem very strange, but can you not take time yet to refer me to some instances where God chose water as a means of showing those who were approved of him?"

Frank F.: "Well, I happen to remember when Gideon sounded the tocsin of war for volunteers to drive back the Midianites and the Amalekites from the seven years' devastation of their homes there were thirty-two thousand men responded to the call. The Lord told him these were too many. This number was then thinned down to ten thousand, and these were yet too many. The Lord then ordered the ten thousand to the brook where the three hundred were chosen at the water—the three hundred who scooped the water up with their hands as they drank. They were chosen 'by water.'"

Henry H.: "But hold on! Don't go too fast. The whole ten thousand took water, as to that."

Frank F.: "That is true, but they did not take it as the chosen three hundred. Many now take what they claim as the baptism of water by a little pouring or sprinkling, but only those who go under, head and ears, body and soul and spirit, are buried with Christ in baptism. Take water, but take water right."
G. LIPSCOMB.

Breaking Bread. No. I.

Among the things in which the members of the first church continued steadfastly we find breaking bread, mentioned as a third item, in Acts 2: 42. After the Lord added them to the church, "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

Matthew, Mark, and Luke all give an account of the origin of the institution of breaking bread. "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." (Matt. 26: 26-28.) "And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, 'This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.'" (Mark 14: 22-24.) "And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." (Luke 22: 19, 20.) Here we have the testimony of the three witnesses who report the origin of the Lord's Supper. In naming the significance of the bread, Matthew and Mark simply declare: "This is my body." This brief statement is used by Romanists to support transubstantiation. They construe it to mean, "This [bread] is [becomes] my flesh which you eat;" but Luke's testimony at this point precludes such a meaning, even if the perversion so far made could be sustained. He says: "This is my body which is given for you." Now I submit that if the bread became a body that was given for them, Christ himself was not given for them, did not die on the cross; but this new body, a transubstantiation of bread, took his place, in which case he was released from death; and if that cup containing the fruit of the vine was transformed into blood which was "shed for many for the remission of sins," then Jesus Christ never shed his blood at all for the sins of the world. The new blood in the cup took his place.

On design Luke goes even further, saying: "This do in remembrance of me." You may eat one thing in remembrance of another that is removed from you in time or place, but you cannot eat a thing in hand in remembrance of itself. If it were possible for the communion cup to contain real blood, it would be easy to prove by God's word that no man should drink it. The verb "to be" does not express the idea of change of one thing into another. So the statement, "This is my body," does not mean, "This becomes my body;" or, "This is changed into my body." It is much used to express the relation of resemblance, or representation of one thing of another. "The seed is the word of God." (Luke 8: 11.) "For this Agar is Mount Sinal in Arabia." (Gal. 4: 25.) The seed was not transubstantiated into the word, but simply represented it in the parable; nor was Hagar transubstantiated into the literal Sinai, but represented it in the allegory.

The memorial design of the Lord's Supper is repeated by Paul in his discussion of it as delivered to the churches for their observance: "This is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. . . . This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." (1 Cor. 11: 24-26.) Perhaps it is fair to raise here the question: Can a man validly obey a command or keep an ordinance of God without understanding the design expressed in delivering it to him? To this question the scriptures bearing on the subject in hand answer: No; this cannot be validly kept without understanding the design expressed: "This do ye . . . in [eis] remembrance of me." It is to be done for, or in order to, a remembering of him. "For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." (1 Cor. 11: 29.) So eating and drinking without understanding the design expressed in the deliverance of the command is not valid. God may have designs in giving a command which he does not express to those upon whom it is enjoined. These cannot be understood with any degree of certainty, and it matters not. Effects and results and advantages of obedience to God's command may be learned after obedience, as well as much about the nature and benefits of such obedience without affecting the validity of the obedience rendered in ignorance of these things, because these effects and benefits were not expressed in delivering the command, but were explanations made to persons who had obeyed; but the design expressed in connection with the command when delivered to be observed must be understood, or the observance is invalid.

There is a typical significance attached to the passover by our Lord which expresses his design to accomplish and fulfill what was foreshadowed in it. "Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God." (Mark 14: 25.) "Drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." (Matt. 26: 29.) He was about to take the place of the paschal lamb, and found upon the offering up of himself the new reign, which up to this date had only been preached as "at hand," and in this new kingdom establish a new memorial feast. "The fruit of the vine," of which Jesus declared he would drink no more till he drank it new with them in his Father's kingdom, was not that used in the Lord's Supper, as the brief reference of Matthew and Mark might leave careless students to infer; but the wine of the paschal feast is here referred to. Luke's testimony is quite explicit at this point: "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup [passover cup], and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves: for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." (Luke 22: 15-18.) Following this—in verses 19, 20—Luke gives an account of the institution of the Lord's Supper. To drink the passover wine new with them in the kingdom of God was to enjoy with them the victory of their salvation which would be accomplished through his fulfillment of this passover by his offering up of himself for them. "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Cor. 5: 7.)

The passover was to the Jews, in the years following their salvation from Egyptian bondage, a commemorative feast. It carried them and their children back to the night when the Lord destroyed all the firstborn of Egypt, when they through faith applied the blood and were saved. It was a feast of great joy, awakening gratitude in every pious heart. The Lord's Supper is to the Christian a commemoration of the offering through which his salvation is accomplished. It is a joyful feast, a feast of love, designed to keep fresh in the mind of the observer the death of the world's Redeemer.

Anchored.

It is an old figure and apt that compares life to a journey on the sea. There are waves and smooth seas; there are fair winds and contrary; there are calms and squalls; there are soft zephyrs and fearful storms; a blue sky now and a smiling sun, then clouds, black and angry, rent with lightning and thunders. Some people sail skillfully, some sail awkwardly; some make shipwreck, others run rejoicing into the eternal port.

Christ was the skillful sailor. His bark was not deflected, though the fiercest tempests burst over its masts. Through a thousand storms he kept his course, unwavering, and the last black billow that seemed to overwhelm him carried him into perfection and glory. He had come forth to show the children of men how to sail. Long he had watched them—how they bungled and fretted, how they lost their course and struck upon the sands, how they wheeled and tottered and blundered along—and then he came and said: "Watch me, and learn of me, and follow me."

Much of the misery of life and many of its failures are unnecessary. There is an excess of pain and trouble we undergo that might as well have been left off. Knowing how is all. It is said that a man unacquainted with the art of swimming will, in the water, make the very motions that tend to sink him. If he would lie entirely still, he would come nearer floating than he does with his awkward kicking and floundering. So is the natural man. His fleshly impulses make him do the very things that will render him miserable. Wherever you see peace and prosperity and happiness, even to a tolerable degree, you may know that the impulses of the flesh have been curbed there in some measure. There had to be some self-control and self-denial before such a state of affairs could come into existence. Christ came and taught a new doctrine, a new theory for good sailing, and one contrary to all human wisdom: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." He went forward and demonstrated the strength of his principle. He left the highway of the crowd and alone he set his compass to the course of self-denial, in order to happiness; loss, in order to gain; death, in order to life. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. That loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal." (John 12: 24, 25.) Every one that would come after him must deny himself and take up his cross and follow him. By faith we accept Christ's plan and follow it, trusting that it will prove the best of all, and the only one that shall lead to glory and immortality; that by it we shall have peace and comfort while here we go, and in the end reach life eternal.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." "Substance" is the foundation, the assurance; "evidence" there signifies "the proving," or "the test." Upon this basis we build our hope. It requires faith to cause us to leave the way of the world so pleasant, apparently, and so safe, and to make us choose a way so ill looking, rough, and contrary to human wisdom as the way of self-denial and obedience which Christ taught. In it we humble ourselves and bring under the body and keep it in subjection, and make no provisions for the flesh and the lusts thereof; for they that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts. We undergo privations and persecutions; we have changed the object of our labors from earthly things to things heavenly; we have died to the world, and our very life now is of God and for God. (See 2 Cor. 5: 15-18.) With one word we lose our lives. Why should we do so? We have faith that we shall save it, even as Christ spoke, and that a life more abundant shall be given us here and beyond; and faith is the basis of these things hoped for, the proving of things unseen. The worldly sneer at the things unseen, for they have no faith. One bird in the hand is worth ten in the bush to them. They walk by sight. The things which they can see and taste and feel are their lot and their inheritance. Of these they fear to let go, and in them they verily have their reward; but the Christian believes that God is, and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. So he goes in at the narrow, dark-looking way, trusting that at its end there shall be an abundant reward. His cares are on God's shoulders; the light of the promise brightens the path. His hope sustains him—a noble hope, for it is founded on faith, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." What a strange freak to those who know not faith! Likely enough there was no lack of ridicule for that man when he left his house and home and kindred to go to some unknown land, for such things are against all human wisdom, and human eye could not see any reason or good in it. Yet Abraham went by faith. "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." A foolish course, if we judge it after the manner of men. He could have stayed at home and lived with more ease and safety; instead he prefers to be an aimless wanderer. But he was wiser than they all. He had an object in view. "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

No intelligent being can reasonably be expected to follow a certain course of action without an object in view. God requires no such absurdity. He sets an aim before us, and points out the way. "If you will take my way," God says, "you will get there." I believe it. That gives me faith. I follow it in hope, and this hope of the final blessing gives me strength that I may continue steadfastly unto the end. "And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: that ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." (Heb. 6: 11-20.)

little sailboat. A fierce, cold wind was hissing over the waters, cresting the waves with foam. We had been out since noon and had lost our course in a sudden fog that had come upon us. The sun sunk and the shades of night were gathering fast, when, driven on unknown ways, we ran full upon a bank. The shock almost flung us overboard. Quickly we let go the mainsail and took it in. The old coaster that was with us threw out an anchor, with the remark: "We'll have to stay here till the tide comes." That night, about 10 o'clock, the tide lifted us off the reef, but we could not leave. The wind had risen almost to the strength of a hurricane and the night was pitch-dark. Moreover, we knew not where we were. I went below deck, and stretched out on the blank floor.

Rocked in the cradle of the deep,
I lay me down in peace to sleep.

But there was no sleep that hour. Storm and waves were roaring without. Beaten by the violence of wind and waters, our little boat rocked, jumped, danced, spun, creaked, and groaned in every joint and fissure, until it seemed she would break in pieces. What could we have done without an anchor? How long before our boat would have been torn into splinters on some rock? In faith we had dropped it, and it fell into the dark waters and took hold on the unseen bottom. Now the boat was tied, and though storm and waves raged against it, though it leaped and trembled and fluttered, only around a near center it could veer.

So we by hope are saved from shipwreck. In the time of storm it holds us steady, and in vain the winds and waves endeavor to drive us on the rocks. A man without hope is worthless. The mainspring of his life is gone. Convince the drowning man that there is no hope for him, and he will cease to swim. Farmer, merchant, scholar—all follow patiently in their duties until you persuade them that "there is no use." Then effort fails. The Christian has received the exceeding great and precious promises, that by them we might be partakers of the divine nature. I have often thought that sometimes an injudicious sermon has killed souls by robbing them of their hope. Christians who were weak and faltering, like the Hebrew brethren to whom the epistle was written, and who needed, like they, to be warned gently and encouraged, have been crushed to death with a kind of preaching that smacked much of the old law: "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."

But we seek a heavenly country, and by the help of God we hope to reach it. "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." For we have an anchor of the soul. As the real anchor takes hold beneath the dark sheet of waters on the unseen bottom, so our hope reaches and fastens on the unseen things within the veil—the tree of life and the city of God.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

A man's loyalty to his own convictions of truth and duty preserves his moral nature and fits himself for acceptable service to God, when directed by his will. When a man debauches his own moral nature by doing violence to it, then that man is incapable of rendering acceptable service to God, and God will not accept the service of a debauched conscience. "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." (1 Tim. 1: 5.) The conscience must be preserved good; then out of a pure heart the end of the commandment, which is charity, can be reached. It is done by a faith unfeigned. God has never promised in any age to bless a soul for loyalty to its own convictions; yet he plainly teaches without this no acceptable service to God can be rendered. But this alone never satisfies the commands of God. This good conscience keeps the soul fitted for the Master's service. It must then be used to do his will; unless used to do his service, God never rewards it. Paul had the good conscience, but with it he was the chief of sinners because it was wrongly directed. A good conscience, true and loyal to itself, directed and guided by the will of God, is effective in serving God, and God delights to bless such.

CHRISTIAN EDIFICATION.

We have always believed that the order that does not bring out the activity and life of the churches—that is, that one man shall do all the work of the church in looking after the sick and needy, bodily and spiritually, or in leading in the worship of the congregation or in trying to convert others—is not good. Engaging in this work is essential to the growth and spirituality of each member of the church. No member can become truly a spiritual being by supporting some one else to study the Scriptures for him or to do the work or conduct the worship for him; no one man, no matter how learned or zealous he may be, can do the work that others less learned can do by personally laboring to help their associates materially and spiritually. There is not a Christian living but can do more to save some person than any one else can do. Each must do what he can to save the other person and, in doing this, to save himself. Work done to save others reacts to save oneself. All efforts to help others help ourselves. The Christian religion is such that all efforts to benefit and help others help ourselves.

The evils of what I call the "pastor system" are, one person does all the preaching, praying, visiting the sick, looking after the needy, and the members are left to do nothing except to support the preacher. This soon leads the members to think they have nothing to do but to support the preacher and possibly to come and hear him preach and keep up the congregation. He is considered a faithful member who attends church regularly and pays his part. But this is leaving the work, which is the end of the church's existence, undone. Unless the preacher be a man of extraordinary ability, the members soon tire of hearing him twice on Sunday and at prayer meeting; they cease to attend church, and die spiritually. But few men can interest and instruct a congregation so as to hold them twice on Sunday continually. They must be interested in some other way than by hearing sermons, whether by preacher or elder; they can be interested only by having practical work and service to enlist their attention. The teaching and preaching are intended to fit and lead the members to active work in bettering the moral, spiritual, and material condition of the human family. It is a reproach to the Christian religion that in our country an orphaned and neglected child should ever be without provisions for training it in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. This means to train and fit it for usefulness and happiness for both this world and for that which is to come. Provisions under wise and discreet elderships, men of character and business, can interest and give activity to all good and true men and women in Christian work. Men and women must have work to do to interest them. To this end the efforts of the elders should be directed. If they are not interested in good work, they will be in evil.

Congregations should have good teachers, practical rather than theoretic. The elders are expected to be good, practical men and teachers. "A bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision; whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." This requires not learning in literature or philosophy or theological lore, but learning in the word of God. A holding fast that word means a constant study of it, a pondering it in the mind. No one who thinks he has learned or knows it all and so ceases to study the word of God is a competent teacher. Any man who thinks he or a congregation understands the whole will of God shows by this he is very ignorant of it. No man has ever learned all of the truths of the Bible. The higher he ascends, the wider his horizon, and new truths and new phases of truth are continually opening to his expanding vision. Only the man on the lowest ground ever imagines he sees the whole earth. So, as a rule, the most ignorant are the most confident and self-sufficient.

Elders and Christians all ought to be always eager and anxious to learn and constant in study. On the other hand, no man is to be regarded as an incompetent or incapable teacher because he is lacking in learning and scholastic lore. The man who imagines that because he has studied books more than others he is wiser in biblical learning mistakes much both his own advantage and the abilities of men he regards as unlearned. Jesus said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight." (Matt. 11: 25, 26.) The gospel truths are adapted and commend themselves to the minds of the humble, those who recognize their insufficiency, rather than to the learned, the wise, and those who have confidence in their own learning and understanding. Those conscious they are poor in spirit and contrite in heart are in the best condition to learn and understand the will of God. Learning is not to be despised, for it is helpful in understanding the truth and in teaching it to others, if it be used humbly in learning the will of God; but if it makes us feel our superiority and self-sufficiency, it is a hindrance and curse instead of a blessing. The twelve chosen by the Master were all devoid of learning. Paul was a learned and scholarly man, yet he asked: "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For . . . ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." The meaning of this is, when a man feels he is wise and knows it all and has no need to study and constantly seek to learn of God, whether he be learned or unlearned, he makes a bigot of himself and is not competent to teach the will of God. The humblest and most unlearned who will constantly sit at the feet of Jesus as a learner, seeking to learn and do the will of the Master, may become an efficient instructor of others. A feeling of self-sufficiency and superiority is what is hurtful and hinders in the study of God's will. This spirit is hurtful in the learned and unlearned and is fatal to true growth in the knowledge of the Lord in both.

Both elders and preachers often think they know all the truth and cease to study the word of God, and they cease then to interest and instruct others, no matter how much they deal in stale platitudes; their usefulness is at an end. The elder or teacher should teach and so instruct others as to enable them to know and use the truth. Teaching has a double end in view—to impart knowledge to the pupil, or learner, and to enable him to use that knowledge in teaching others or in practicing it in life. More knowledge of the word of God, more zeal and readiness in imparting that knowledge to others and in practicing it in everyday dealings of life, are the great and crying wants of the church and of Christians today. A wise teacher, one truly loyal to God in spirit and work, will direct his teaching not to pleasing the people, but toward making all active and efficient workers in the vineyard of the Lord. D. L.

THE MODERN PASTOR.

In the discussion of the edification and growth of the church some points have been very clearly and forcibly developed: 1. That we should encourage that method of teaching which will best develop the talent of every member of the body, and that, to do this, each member must be brought to realize his individual responsibility. 2. It is agreed that one man as pastor, doing all the teaching, tends to weaken and destroy the vitality of the one body rather than to strengthen and develop the church. It finally leads to spiritual decay and death. 3. It is not understood and contended by any that because a preacher stays at a place a number of years, or even a lifetime, he thereby becomes a pastor in the modern and objectionable sense. A preacher should remain in a field as long as he can do more (or as much) good there than anywhere else. A preacher ought to so live that he can remain in one field for a lifetime and yet do great good through all the years in teaching the word of God, but the preacher who does this will not teach as does the modern pastor to-day. While Paul taught the word of God in Corinth for eighteen months and for three years in Ephesus, the character of his teaching was very unlike that of those who are preaching regularly and all the time for the same church. While teaching, he labored with his own hands, and thus partially supported himself. His teaching was not in the form of sermonizing, but he reasoned with the people. Much of his teaching was doubtless done by questions and answers. He taught from house to house. He disputed with the people, the very thing which would not be tolerated in the modern pastor. While at Ephesus, we learn, "he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." (Acts 19: 8.) The word in the original from which "disputing" comes means to reason with, to argue, to contend, to dispute. We have the same word in Acts 17: 2: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures." He went where he could find the Jews assembled, in order that he might reason and argue with them concerning the kingdom of God. The disciples by the way disputed about who should be the greatest in the kingdom of God. "But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest." (Mark 9: 34.) The same word that represents Paul's teaching and preaching in Ephesus shows that the disciples disputed, argued, among themselves. Again, we learn the manner in which he taught from Acts 17: 17: "Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him." Jesus taught very much in the same way: "When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do. Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?" Thus we have seen that both Jesus and Paul taught not by a studied speech, but by asking and answering questions. Did Paul succeed in teaching the truth at Ephesus? "And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks. . . . So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed."

While in humility and tears he labored with them by the space of three years, teaching both publicly and from house to house and shunning not to declare unto them all the counsel of God, still we learn that as at Corinth, so at Ephesus, he labored with his own hands: "Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me." (Acts 20: 34.)

After he had done so noble and glorious a work in Ephesus, when from Miletus he sent for the Ephesian elders, he said to them: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20: 28.) It is clear that Paul's stay and labor in Ephesus did not supersede the work of the elders, who were to take the oversight of the flock and feed the church of God. His labor developed and strengthened the church. He encouraged the elders to teach and bring out the talents of each individual member.

The work of the modern pastor is so very different! Most of these pastors are ready to call the elders "figureheads" and claim that they are not competent to feed the church of God. They do not encourage the members to work and teach one another, but conduct the prayer meetings, do all the preaching at regularly-appointed hours, besides doing most of the visiting of the sick. The churches that have regular preachers come to depend largely on the preacher. The prayer meeting is very poorly attended without him, and the church begins to think it must have a sermon from some preacher every Lord's day. How much better if all would come together and study the Scriptures as Paul taught the Ephesians! Under the present sermonic system, and one man doing all the public preaching, the church is enervated and its influence greatly crippled. No man can grow to be strong without the use of his talents. The churches that depend on regular preaching do not develop preachers from among their number. Instead of getting so, they can stand alone, they become more dependent and helpless all the time. They get so they can hardly take up a collection without a preacher. If they should lose their preacher, they must import one from abroad. Such churches have not the elements of life within themselves. The Bible does not draw the line as to just how much of this character of preaching shall be done, simply because there was no such preaching done in the days of the apostles. It is hard to draw the line on a thing that is not in the book. The teaching that was done, as recorded in the New Testament, is that which aroused the church to new life and encouraged every member in the body to teach and labor to the full extent of his ability. The New Testament church was self-edifying. Every church has within itself the elements of its own growth, development, and reproduction by the help of the Lord. Whatever God has made is perfect and complete.

It is not contended that the church should not have teaching—nay, verily—but more teaching and better teaching. Give us that character of preaching that will encourage the membership to greater zeal and activity and which will lead the body to edify itself in love.

Brother N. M. Davis, of Ellettsville, Ind., is in a meeting at Belle Union, in the same State.

Brother William Anderson, of Carter's Creek, Maury County, Tenn., was in the office last Saturday.

Brother F. W. Smith preached at Lynnville, Tenn., last Lord's day. He is now in a meeting at Bellbuckle, Tenn.

Brother Casey Shoulders will begin a meeting at Pleasant Shade, Smith County, Tenn., on the first Lord's day in October.

Brother W. H. Carter, of Lafayette, Tenn., is under promise to begin a meeting with the church of Christ at Cub Creek, Jackson County, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in September.

Wanted.—A music teacher who is also able to cut and fit and to teach dressmaking. Such teacher must be a member of the church of Christ. Address Fanning Orphan School, Rural Route No. 1, Nashville, Tenn.

Brother F. B. Srygley had to leave the meeting at Glass, Tenn., before the close on account of his brother's illness. The meeting was continued by Brother Elihu Scott and Brother Brown. There were in all twenty-three persons baptized and three reclaimed.

Brother L. L. Yeagley, of this city, has just closed a good meeting at Ephesus, Wilson County, Tenn. He preached eighteen discourses and baptized eight persons. He will begin a meeting at Leeville, Wilson County, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in this month.

I cannot refrain expressing to you my great grief at the loss of F. D. Srygley. While I had seen him but once and while I differ from him in much that he taught, yet I loved him for his fairness and candor and earnestness in discussion and for his devotion and loyalty to God and his holy word.—James W. Terrill, Decherd, Tenn.

Brother Tom Dunn has recently conducted some good meetings, the first of which was at Whitwell, in Sequatchie Valley, Tenn. He preached at that place one week, the meeting resulting in four baptisms and three reclaimed. The second meeting was held at Shackelford, near Kingston Springs, Tenn. Seven persons were baptized and one reclaimed. Brother Dunn is now in a meeting at Larkins, Tenn.

With a sudden shock and sad surprise I have just read the notice of the death of Brother F. D. Srygley. Truly, a mighty man has fallen. His labors of the past will live, but his vigorous and pungent editorials in the Gospel Advocate will now be sadly missed. This gives us a feeling of loneliness. How rapidly we are passing away! God grant that we may be found at the post of duty when the summons comes.—L. M. Owens, Mincola, Tex.

A note has been received announcing the death of F. D. Srygley, editor of the first page of the Gospel Advocate. He died at his home, near Nashville, Tenn., on August 2, 1900. The funeral service was conducted by T. B. Larimore on the following day. Brother Srygley was a vigorous writer and will be greatly missed in his department of the journal with which he was connected. The family and friends have our sincerest sympathy in their bereavement.—Christian Standard.

Brother F. D. Srygley, first-page editor of the Gospel Advocate, died on August 2, 1900, at his home near Nashville, Tenn. T. B. Larimore conducted the funeral services at Donelson Station, Tenn., after which his remains were laid to rest in Mount Olivet Cemetery. Brother Srygley has been connected with the Gospel Advocate for a number of years and was recognized as a bright writer. The Christian Guide extends sympathy to his family and relatives that mourn his death.—Christian Guide.

I was quite sorry to hear of the death of our beloved brother, F. D. Srygley. I never met him, but loved him much for his work's sake. I think I have read about all he has ever written since his connection with the Gospel Advocate, except his last book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," and I shall soon purchase a copy of that. Brother Srygley was a clear and forceful writer and did much to make the Gospel Advocate what it is to-day. A great man has fallen, and his place will be hard to fill.—J. W. Atkinson, St. Louis, Mo.

We regret very much to learn of the death on Thursday of last week of Elder F. D. Srygley, associate editor of the Gospel Advocate, of this city. We did not always agree with Brother Srygley, and we had a number of discussions with him on theological questions, but our personal relations with him were of the most pleasant character. He was a genial, social companion, an excellent preacher, and a strong writer. We tender to his bereaved family and other friends our sincere sympathy upon his death.—E. E. Folk, in Baptist and Reflector.

Last Saturday's Nashville American contained an account of the marriage of J. N. Hall, of Fulton, Ky., editor of the American Baptist Flag. The report says that he had been holding a meeting at Trezevant, Tenn., and a number of converts had been baptized in the presence of a large crowd at Fiqua Pond. Coming up out of the water with the last candidate, he stepped to the side of a young lady in the crowd and Elder J. B. Moody said the ceremony. This looks like an attempt to be sensational at either a baptizing or his own wedding, or both.

It was my pleasure to officiate in the very happy marriage on Wednesday, August 1, 1900, of Miss Mackie Mai Cummins to Mr. E. T. Showalter, of Snowville, Va. The bride is a daughter of Brother John W. Cummins, of Fogg, Tenn., and a young Christian of many lovely traits of character. Brother Showalter is a son of Brother J. T. Showalter, one of the Gospel Advocate's contributors from Virginia, and is both a teacher and preacher of ability. He will make his home at Carthage, Tenn., where he and Professor Morrison will conduct a school. Our very best wishes go with them.—J. D. Evans.

We have received, from Prof. John V. Armstrong, superintendent of the Tennessee School for the Blind, the annual catalogue of this institution. This school was founded in 1844, and will enter upon its fifty-seventh session on September 1, 1900. Professor Armstrong has been connected with the school forty-seven years. Being blind himself naturally leads him into sympathy with all who are similarly afflicted. "All blind persons residing in the State of Tennessee between the ages of five and twenty-one years, and who are not incapacitated by physical, mental, or moral infirmity for useful instruction, shall be considered eligible for admission as pupils of the school; but no one whose age does not come within the limits prescribed shall be received, except in peculiar cases and by special action of the Board of Trustees."

The Gospel Advocate brought me great sorrow. I am grieved and saddened beyond expression at news of the death of Brother F. D. Srygley. Somehow it never occurred to me that Brother Srygley would die. I had never thought of such a thing; and if any one had asked me, "Who of our leading men will go next?" I never would have said Brother F. D. Srygley. He was too useful, he filled too wide a gap, and at a place where no one else could fill it. There is not a man left behind that can take up the work of F. D. Srygley and carry it on. A great man has fallen, and no one will be able to do the work he so long and earnestly waged against error. Perhaps the work—in the providence of God—was to end just where it did. The truths he advocated and pushed with so much earnestness have been fixed in the minds of his readers and they can never forget them. He has fixed in the minds of his readers the fact that whatever constitutes a man a Christian makes him a member of the church of Christ; and, further, that obedience to God is worth more than all worldly praise, glory, and grandeur. But he is not dead; his work can never die. I remember, when I sat beside him in the woods in Texas some years ago, he told me: "Brother Poe, I am going into the larger cities; I feel I have a work to do I cannot accomplish in Texas." He told me his plans, which I need not repeat here, and he has carried them out, and successfully, too. But I forbear; I am sad; I mourn the loss of one of my best beloved friends. I tender my sympathies to his bereaved family.—J. T. Poe.

In last Friday's mail we received the following sad note from the Gospel Advocate: "Nashville, Tenn., August 2, 1900.—Brother F. D. Srygley, first-page editor of the Gospel Advocate, died to-day at 1 o'clock A.M. at his home, near the city. Funeral services will be conducted by Brother T. B. Larimore to-morrow at Donelson Station; interment at Mount Olivet." Truly, a great man in Israel has fallen. For a number of years he had been connected with the Gospel Advocate as its first-page editor, and through it became known and admired by thousands of people. Before his connection with the Gospel Advocate, he had filled an important place on the editorial staff of other papers. In addition to his labors as first-page editor of the Gospel Advocate, he edited and brought out several good books and did a great deal of preaching. As a preacher he was plain, practical, and logical. His sermons were filled with scripture quotations and presented in a very intelligent, forcible, and edifying way. He believed the Bible to be God's revealed will to man and was opposed to all things in religion for which he could not find a plain "thus saith the Lord." He never engaged in oral debate, but in written discussions he was a great power. He had the gift of saying much in few words, and his writings always contained enough spicing of wit to make them enjoyable. But now he has fallen asleep. No more will his voice be heard proclaiming the good news of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ, no more will he use the pen in defense of the doctrine of Christ and the apostles as revealed in the New Testament; but he joins the redeemed—the blood-washed, happy concourse who have gone on before, where he will receive and enjoy the reward for his faithful labors here. He leaves a wife and three or four children, who have our deepest sympathy in this their sad hour of affliction and bereavement.—Highland Preacher.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

"I have examined 'Gospel Praise' and find it a most excellent book. The songs are full of spirit and sentiment, and I bespeak for it a wide circulation." (Hugh Grigg, Nashville, Tenn.)

Mrs. Ella Bearden, Springfield, Mo., says: "'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore' received and carefully read. The binding is beautiful and the contents are valuable. Language can never express my appreciation of it."

Ira F. Collins, Huntsville, Ala., an intelligent Christian, tried and true, says: "I agree with Brother Srygley when he says of 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore': 'The Bible excepted, I believe it is the best book I have ever seen.' It is sure to have an extensive sale and to do incalculable good."

"We used 'Gospel Praise,' the new song book recently published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, in the meeting at Glass, Tenn., and all considered it a fine book. The music is simple and easy to learn, and much of it is very fine. I take pleasure in commending it to all who are in need of a new song book." (F. B. Srygley.)

"I have received and am reading the precious book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore.' It is a precious treasure. I expect to fill my soul with the sermons and then go among my friends and neighbors to see how many of them I can bless by inducing them to buy the book. The letters are gems that reflect the light of the pure spirit of the incomparable preacher so tenderly loved by all who truly know him." (Mrs. Lou C. Wall, Dallas, Tex.)

There has just been placed on sale at C. M. Southall's drug store in this city a book that will prove of more than ordinary interest to Florentines and to people all over Lauderdale County. The book is entitled "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," and contains a large number of the more important speeches of this well-known teacher and preacher. It is brought out by F. D. Srygley, who, by the way, is well known in Florence, or was well known here until his death, which occurred suddenly only a short while ago. Mr. Srygley conducted a series of meetings in this city some two years ago at the church of Christ. In the church of Christ in the South there is no more prominent or gifted minister than T. B. Larimore, of Mars' Hill, this county, and the wonder is that his sermons have not long ago been brought out in book form, so that all generations might have the benefit of his teachings. Only the extreme modesty of the man could have held off the publication for so many years, and at last it had to be done by friends. The book is illustrated with numerous views of Mars' Hill and of the Larimore family, and besides the sermons and extracts from letters by Mr. Larimore it contains much of an historic nature that will prove of interest to the general public.—Florence (Ala.) Herald.

THE STATE OF THE DEAD—FUTURE RECOGNITION.

A sister requests us to write on the two questions: The state of the dead between death and the judgment; and, Shall we know each other in the future state?

The former of these questions I have never studied much, and have felt but little interest in it, because if the soul is unconscious, it will be but as a moment of time. We take no cognizance of time while in a state of unconsciousness. So if we are unconscious a thousand years, it will be but as a moment of time. When we sleep very soundly, we are not conscious of the time; when we are wakeful, we are conscious of time as it passes. Again, the Lord did not think much of this question, else he would have made a plain and clear revelation to make it known; but there is not a passage of scripture especially intended to reveal the condition of souls in this intermediate state. If it is revealed at all, it is incidentally done in revealing other truths. If God did not think enough of the question to reveal it to us, there is no call for us to give it much attention or care. If we are unconscious, it will be to us as but a moment; if in a state of consciousness, the good must be in a state of blessedness, the evil in a state of unrest. In either condition the period is so much as nothing compared with eternity, it is not worthy of attention.

Two evils grow out of the question. 1. People give attention to it and divert their minds from more important questions, and sometimes divide and engage in strife over it. This produces evil, and no good. It is controversy over an untaught question. Sometimes the idea of the unconscious state is coupled with the idea that the body, and not the soul, is the person. So it reduces man to a material, instead of a spiritual, being. This idea is false and bears evil. God is a spirit, and man is a spiritual being and must worship him in spirit and in truth.

2. I feel sure that we will recognize each other in the future state. If we do not recognize each other, it will be because individuality and identity are destroyed. If I do not recognize others, I do not see how I could be sure it is I. So the consciousness of identity necessitates the idea of recognizing others.

The rich man and Lazarus recognized each other in the future state, even when a great way apart, with an impassable gulf intervening. As they went farther into the eternal world, it is not probable they lost the power of discerning each other. When Jesus and Moses and Elias appeared upon the mount of transfiguration, they were all in their glorified bodies, yet they were recognized. 1 John 3: 2, R. V., says: "We know that, if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him; for we shall see him even as he is." Jesus, then, will be known to us. We shall be like him in nature and being and we shall know even as we are known. Of the angels that appeared to men, each had his distinct being and likeness, and was known by his appearance to men on the earth. Each person that is judged worthy to attain everlasting life will have his own distinct personality and will be known to others. Our bodies will not be flesh and blood and bones, will not be material, but the body will be a spiritual body, each with its distinguishing marks by which it will be identified. The ties that bind us to those in the spirit land will be spiritual rather than fleshly, but they will be the more distinct and permanent because they are spiritual. "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Our fleshly ties and our friendships here are temporal, are short-lived, and soon must be broken; but the spiritual ties and companionships will grow closer and stronger as the fleshly ones fail, and the companionships with the spirits of the just made perfect, and of Jesus Christ and of God, will be forever. "We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 John 3: 2.) A realization of these truths should and must make us bear with cheerful resignation the separation from friends and loved ones, which is but for a moment, that we may enjoy that closer, more perfect, and eternal spiritual union with them in the home of God. D. L.

Every man can help on the world's work more than he knows of. What we want is the single eye, that we may see what our work is; the humility to accept it, however lowly; the faith to do it for God; the perseverance to go on till death.—Norwood McLeod.

Concerning the Church.

One of our Baptist contemporaries has been giving special attention to the use of the word "church" in the New Testament, and has published articles from four prominent members of theological faculties—namely, Newton, President Hovey; Chicago, Professor Wilkinson; Crozer, Professor Stifter; Louisville, Professor Robertson. All are virtually agreed that the word has two meanings—one, a local assembly, organized for the worship of God and the observance of the ordinances of the gospel; the other, "the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven"—written in heaven, though part of the membership is still on earth, made up of those who truly believe and have been regenerated by the Holy Spirit.

And they all agree also that when, in Matt. 16: 18, Jesus says, "Upon this rock [namely, that which Peter had just declared] I will build my church," he was speaking of this same invisible, spiritual, regenerate church, the names of whose members are written in the Lamb's book of life. It is that church against which the gates of hell shall never prevail. In the view taken by the scholars referred to they are in close accord with the Baptists of the seventeenth century, who in what is known as the "Confession of 1689," but which was really put forth in 1677, say: "The catholic, or universal, church, which (with respect to the internal work of the Spirit and truth or grace) may be called 'invisible,' consists of the whole number of the elect that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one, under Christ, the head thereof; and is the spouse, the body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all."

This was the doctrine of the "fathers," such as Hanserd Knollys, William Kiffin, Benjamin Keach, and thirty-four others who signed the Confession "in the name and behalf of the whole assembly." Those men were true reformers. They lived in troublous times, when life was earnest and men were thoughtful. They knew what they believed and why they believed it. Whoever reads that Confession of 1677 must be convinced that no abler or more acute thinkers live to-day than were those of that century which witnessed the development of the doctrines which Baptists have been proud to profess and defend during the centuries since. That Confession came to America and was adopted by the Philadelphia Association in 1742, and is to-day in vogue among a large portion of the Baptist Churches of the United States.

The Westminster Confession had been in use for about thirty years, and had received the criticisms of both churchmen and dissenters. The Presbyterians had adopted it and the Congregationalists had accepted much of it. The Baptists held to many of its statements, but dissented from others, particularly those relating to the ordinances of the gospel and to the visible church, which the Westminster defined as follows: "The visible church, which is also catholic, or universal, under the gospel (not confined to one nation, as before under the law), consists of all those throughout the world that profess the true religion, together with their children; and is the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, the house and family of God, out of which there is no ordinary possibility of salvation."

Of course Baptists could not accept that definition of a visible church. They protested against such a definition; they contended against the idea of its universality, against the inclusion of children in its membership, and against the idea of "no ordinary possibility of salvation" outside of it. The Presbyterians were yet under the influence of Rome and of the Church of England. They had not broken away and could not break away from the traditions under which they had been educated. It remained for the Baptists to take the true position and maintain it consistently, as they have done, even to this day. "All persons throughout the world, professing the faith of the gospel and obedience unto God by Christ, according unto it, not destroying their own profession by any errors everting the foundation, or ungodliness of conversation, are and may be called 'visible saints,' and of such ought all particular congregations to be constituted."

Baptists know only one universal church—namely, the invisible, of which only the regenerate are members. They know of no universal, or catholic, church, consisting of "all those throughout the world that profess the true religion;" and they most earnestly and persistently and effectually protest against the inclusion of infants in a visible church.

They find in the New Testament no authority for such deliverances, but, on the other hand, they find that visible churches, separate congregations, were recognized, each entirely independent of all others. They find no word to intimate the inclusion of infants in any New Testament church. They learn from the same source that salvation is a personal matter, and that so far from there being "no ordinary possibility of salvation" outside of "the visible"—a visible—church, no one ought to be admitted to membership in such church until he gives evidence of having been saved through faith in Christ, which is always responded to in the regeneration of the soul. To-day many Presbyterians dissent from the position of the Westminster Confession. They do not believe that membership in a church is requisite to salvation, and they do not believe that a visible church is nation wide or earth wide. They know better. They hug the delusion about the infants, but they reject the rest and practically stand with the Baptists, who are still finding occasion to teach them and help them to higher and purer views of the teachings of the New Testament.

But it must be said that, of all Christian peoples, the Baptists were the first to properly conceive and properly define a church. Until they put forth their Confession, the others had always accepted the view of the Romanists, and had conceived a universal, visible church; each of the other denominations competing with and striving against the Church of Rome in its realization; and it is painful to notice that a considerable number of Baptists in the South and West are trying to promote the same false theory by talking of "the church," "the church," as an organized body with a visible form, teaching essential Romanism and calling it Baptist doctrine. As we antagonize Romanism, so we feel bound to antagonize the same teaching when it emanates from Baptist sources.—Exchange.

A BROTHER.

We received another check for $100 from a brother in Wilson County, Tenn., as above. Mr. Carnegie says it is a disgrace for a man to die rich. "Riches" is a comparative expression. Not many readers of the Advocate would probably be called "rich" by Mr. Carnegie, yet every one who holds money or property not needed for the support of his family would be called "rich" or "trusting in riches" by the Scriptures. A greater than Mr. Carnegie has said: "Lay not up . . . treasures upon earth, . . . but . . . in heaven." "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they . . . do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.) While none of our readers may be rich as some estimate riches, I do not doubt there are many readers of the Advocate who have riches sufficient to sink them down to ruin unless they use them as God directs. Such should rejoice at the opportunity to so use their means that it may prove a "foundation against the time to come" and enable them to "lay hold on eternal life." Your money will drag you down to ruin if it is not used to bless man and honor God. We know brethren who have property that is a burden to them to care for, yet they cling to it and refuse opportunities to do good with it. The time will come when they will wish they had used it wisely. Some are holding to property purposing to do good with it after they die. Why not put it to work doing good to others and to yourselves while you yet live? D. L.

In the exercise of a full and confiding faith in God man's fullest development or highest good is found; in the refusal to trust God man finds evil, and only evil. All communication between the spirit of man and the spirit of God is through faith. It is not an arbitrary command of God that faith is the great principle of spiritual life; it is a truth that grows out of the constitution of man as given by God and of his relations to God. It is no more an arbitrary appointment that the soul lives through faith than that the body lives through eating. They are so constituted that one is as much the law of spiritual being as the other is of natural being. An attempt to live without faith would bring as great evil to the spirit as the attempt to live without eating would bring to the fleshly body. Believing is the medium through which the soul receives sustenance, as eating is the medium through which the body is sustained.

A BATTLE FOR YOUNG SOLDIERS.

Hold it back, tie it down,
Bind it fast and tight,
Set your lips together close:
Which will win the fight?

Let it go wild and free,
Running reckless riot;
Surely that will quickly be
An end of peace and quiet.

Strongest men of all you know
Find it hard to do.
If you try your very best,
Victory for you.

Try it hard; bring to it
Firm determination.
If you rule it well and good,
You can rule a nation.

To all the heroes who have been Tried and told and sung,
Let us add the sturdy boy
Who can hold his tongue.

A JERUSALEM TIGER HUNT.

There was much rivalry at the opening of every fall term for a place in Dormitory Six; everybody hoped for an assignment there; but as the room could comfortably contain only five, something like ninety-five boys were disappointed yearly.

It was a small room at the top of the house, just at the head of the east stairway. Curious tutors and prowling monitors seldom looked in at Dormitory Six, providing its occupants kept comparatively quiet. At half past nine o'clock every other sleeping room in the house was in darkness and every boy's head on his pillow; but in Six the boys sat around in their nightgowns, after the retiring bell, and "swapped yarns," and laid plans for all manner of fun and mischief of a mild character for the next holiday. It is true their light had to be out, and one of their number had to sit close to the door, so as to warn the others when an approaching footstep sounded along the hall or on the stairs.

Last fall the lot fell to "Jenny" Oakridge, the Bromley boys, and Perk Littlefield. "Jenny" (short for Jennison) had occupied Six the year before, and Perk had spent his first year there. The Bromleys had never before been so fortunate, and Jenny and Perk felt like playing host on a large scale.

"There's room for another fellow, and I told the Doctor so," said Jenny. "I wanted to get Hi Warden up here; but the Doctor said there was a new boy coming in a day or two and that he was booked for here. Wonder what sort of a fellow he'll be."

The Bromley cousins looked at each other knowingly, but the others did not notice.

"Hope he isn't a 'mollycoddle,'" said Perk, with a yawn.

"Or like that Bobbett who's landed in Number Four," said Jenny.

The others again glanced at each other consciously.

"Say, you fellows," said Perk, "what did you do this summer? Jen. and I told you last night what we did."

"Come, what did you fellows do?" demanded Perk.

Fred. gave Harry a warning glance, and said, calmly: "We went to Jerusalem."

"Jerusalem!" cried Jenny, with an exclamatory inflection.

"So did your grandmother," said Perk, disrespectfully.

"No, she didn't have to; she lives there," said Fred, calmly.

"I say, what did you fellows do in Jerusalem?" demanded Jenny, with considerable curiosity.

"We went tiger hunting," responded Fred, promptly.

At this his cousin, who had been doubled up in a paroxysm of silent laughter on the bed, straightened out, recovered his gravity, and exclaimed: "So we did, so we did!"

"You fellows can't make us believe that," Jenny declared. "I know enough to be sure that there are no tigers in Jerusalem, or near there. I didn't have 'Lives of the Missionaries' given me last year for nothing. I had to read it, too. That told all about Palestine, and there aren't any tigers there."

"Who said anything about Palestine?" chuckled Fred.

"That's where Jerusalem is," said Jenny, with confidence.

"Not our Jerusalem."

"Where is it, then?"

"Jerusalem, Maine."

"I never heard of the place," said Jenny, with some vexation. "Anyway, I'm dead sure there are no tigers in Maine."

"There was one last summer," declared Fred. "Wasn't there, Harry?" Fred. continued before his cousin could reply: "Old Hal came pretty near being like the Englishman who went to India to hunt tigers. After he'd been gone a while his friends got a cablegram saying that he'd been killed by a tiger. So they wired for the body to be sent home, and when the box arrived in England all they found in it was the well-preserved body of a tiger. Then they wired back: 'Tiger received, but where is John?' They got this prompt reply: 'John in tiger.'"

"Say, where's the joke?" said Jenny.

"Tell 'em about it, Fred.," urged Harry.

So his cousin began: "Well, fellows, I might as well tell you right away that the tiger was a circus tiger, like your bear; only there wasn't anything tame about him—far from it. He was the ugliest that ever was caged, I verily believe; and when he escaped from the circus that was showing thirty miles away from grandfather's, a printed paper was sent round warning everybody to look out for the beast."

"Up to that time Harry and I had had loads of fun in the fields and woods round Jerusalem; but grandmother would scarcely let us go out of the dooryard after that."

"The circus people offered a reward of fifty dollars for the tiger dead; they didn't make any offer for him alive, for I guess they had no hopes of his being captured while the breath of life was in him. He was a big Bengal—half as big as an ox," they said.

"Hal and I felt pretty badly about being shut up. We didn't believe that tiger would come up our way, and when we heard one night that he'd been shot down Farmington way, we were tickled enough. We told grandmother about it, and she said she was 'devoutly thankful,' and that we might take a trip to the woods next day."

"Well, you see," said Fred, looking a little shamefaced, "before we started the next morning we heard that the rumor of the tiger's being killed was denied. It seems the beast was shot at, but they were still out after him. He'd killed a cow and two horses ten miles below Jerusalem, and that part of the country was up in arms; but we didn't tell grandmother this."

"We wanted Hi Lester to go with us. He lived next door and knew the woods like a book; but he's awfully countrified and gawky—"

"Any worse than that Bobbett in Four?" asked Jenny.

"'Bout as bad," admitted Fred. "But he's a good fellow, just the same. As I said, we wanted him to go with us, but he wouldn't do it unless he took a gun along. Hal and I knew that just as soon as grandmother saw him start with his gun she'd begin to ask questions."

"So, after inviting Hi to go with us, we were mean enough to give him the slip and sneak off without him. We didn't know but he'd come, anyway, and we'd run across him in the woods; but we didn't see him all the forenoon."

"We took a lunch with us, of course, and about noon we found a place to eat it. We spread it out on a high bank, near a path we'd been following, and began to eat. But there wasn't any water, and Hal volunteered to go along the path to the brook after some."

"Well, sirs, he went," said Fred, leaning forward in his earnestness. "He hadn't been gone five minutes when I heard him let out a yell fit to raise the village, three miles away—"

"Huh! you'd a-hollered," interrupted Harry.

"I s'pose I would—only I was too scared to, when I saw what was the matter," said his cousin. "There was Hal tearing down the path from the brook and right behind him was the tiger, coming full tilt."

"In about two bounds the brute would have had him; but Hal tumbled flat on his face, the tiger overleaped him, and I heard a gun go off beside me."

"I guess I came near fainting for a minute," he continued, uneasily. "Anyway, the next thing I really knew old Hal was holding my head, and Hi was ter was stooping over the great yellow and black body in the path.

"'He's deader 'n a door nail,' said he, cool as that. Would you believe it? That fellow'd shot the beast with that old gun of his. The bullet had gone into his eye and reached the brain."

"Whew!" exclaimed Jenny, forgetting the possibility of an approaching monitor in his excitement. "Do you mean to say that's true?"

"So true that Hi Lester is coming to school here this term," said Fred. "He's always wanted a chance to learn, but his folks are poor. He got the fifty dollars for shooting the tiger, and grandmother's put enough with it to pay his fees."

"Then he's the fellow the Doctor's going to put in here with us?" demanded Perk.

"Yes."

"That's great!" cried Perk. "I don't care if he's the awkwardest greenhorn who ever came to school here. A fellow like that's worth knowing, eh, Jenny?"

Oakridge agreed.—W. Bert Foster, in Sabbath School Visitor.

ARE ALL THE CHILDREN IN?

Some one sent me a paper a number of years ago containing an article that was marked. Its title was: "Are All the Children In?" An old wife lay dying. She was nearly one hundred years of age, and the husband who had taken the journey with her sat by her side. She was just breathing faintly, but suddenly she revived, opened her eyes, and said:

"Why, it is dark."

"Yes, Janet, it is dark."

"Is it night?"

"O, yes; it is midnight."

"Are all the children in?"

There was that old mother living life over again. Her youngest child had been in the grave twenty years, but she was traveling back into the old days, and she fell asleep in Christ, asking: "Are all the children in?"

Dear friends, are they all in? Put the question to yourself now. Is John in? Is James in? Or is he immersed in business and pleasure? Is he living a double and dishonest life? Say, where is your boy, mother? Where are your son and your daughter? Is it well with your children? Can you say it is?—Moody's Anecdotes.

I once visited the armory of an officer of the British army. He had a great array of swords, and my friend took one; it did not look very much, there were better looking swords in the lot than it, but he said: "This is the best one here. It is worth the whole lot; it is an Andrea Ferrara." He took it out, and, grasping it by the hilt and tip, he made the two ends kiss; then they flung apart and were untouched. It was the test of the old, keen Damascus forge; none like it. The word of God has done mighty battles. The devil says: "Put it down." No; I choose my weapons. Do you know that the challenged party has that right? Suppose you try to "pick a crow" with me, suppose you get desperately offended at something I said (you would not be the first nor the last man that did that), and suppose you send a second challenge to me; then I have the choice of weapons—pistols or swords or fists. What will you have? The devil says: "O, be charitable." That is the great word to-day. Do not judge harshly; be charitable, be broad-minded. Take argument, take some other weapon, do not be so narrow as to stick to that weapon; take mighty theological cannon and professorial armaments that can make the generation thunder with their hearing; surely you can take these. No; I won't. I will take this; if you don't like to fight me with this, get away. I choose the weapons, that is my right; and Jesus said: "Use the word." Take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.—Dr. John Robertson.

One Jew going to see another who had lost a child, found him in great agony. He tore his hair, and beat his head against the wall, and would not be comforted. Soon after he visited another bereaved home where the inmates were Christians. Calmly they led him to the room where the loved one lay in her coffin. There were no outbursts of grief. Pinned upon her breast were the words: "She sleeps in Jesus." He was so impressed with the love and faith that could look so quietly upon the face of the dead that he embraced Christianity.—Sharpened Arrows.

FLESH AND SPIRIT.

Man is a twofold being, made up of what we call "the outer man" and "the inner man"—the physical and the spiritual, the flesh and blood part, and the mental, the understanding.

Those who are influenced purely by the fleshly man, by the impulses and demands of the flesh, are never refined, or civilized, as is evidenced by all the heathen nations of the earth. Nothing but the word of God, the religion of Jesus, can truly elevate, ennoble, civilize, and purify the hearts and lives of men. The fleshly, the outer, man is sordid and selfish in its demands, impulses, appetites, aspirations, and desires; and these impulses and appetites never rise above the animal nature of man, and hence there is not a refined human being on earth that has never heard of the Bible. Without the teaching of the word of God the inner man will always be dominated by the fleshly man, the outer man, and consequently can never rise above the impulses and desires of the flesh.

Paul says: "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing." The flesh seeks after its own gratification, and never after anything that demands the abasement, or crucifixion, of its own impulses. In order to the crucifixion of the flesh, the inner man must be educated, trained, and brought under the elevating and purifying power of the word of God to such an extent as to control and keep down all the excessive demands of the flesh. This is the only way that the religion of Christ proposes to keep down the extravagances of the flesh. God does not propose to take away or to destroy the desires and appetites of the flesh. He only proposes to so educate and train the inner man as to enable it to mortify, crucify, and control the impulses of the flesh. This is the great work of the Christian's life: to keep down fleshly desires and impulses and to keep them in harmony with the word of the Lord.

"Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." (Rom. 8: 12, 13.) "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." Die how? Physically? Temporally? No; but spiritually. Christians lose spiritual life in proportion as they indulge the appetites and desires of the flesh that are contrary to Christianity, contrary to the teaching of the word of the Lord. If, for example, a Christian man indulges anger or malice or any of these passions that the word of the Lord condemns, he is not only violating the word of God, but is starving, stinting, and undermining the inner man, the spiritual man, and making it weaker day by day and giving the flesh greater and still greater power over the spirit; and soon the flesh will entirely dominate, control the whole man, while the spiritual man languishes and dies—ceases to have any control in the life that such a one lives. It makes no difference what sort of claim a man makes of interest in Christianity, in the church and its work, so long as the flesh rules, the spirit, the inner man, is dead, is lifeless, and the man is living after the flesh, as indicated in the above passage; but the Christian that will study the teaching of the Holy Spirit and bring his whole life under its control, and thus crucify the flesh, with its affections and lusts, and mortify every demand of the flesh that is out of harmony with the teaching of the Spirit of God—that man is alive spiritually, and this will be carrying out literally the above passage that requires that we through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body, the flesh. So the child of God must yield his own spirit, his own heart, his own mind, to the teaching of the Spirit of God through the truth and then control the impulses of his own flesh and blood by the teaching of the Spirit of God. When he does this, he is walking after the Spirit, and not after the flesh.

Then the next verse says: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." This is a very full and significant expression. While it indicates in a general way that all men that would be saved must follow the teaching of the Holy Spirit of God, it here indicates specifically that the Christian, the child of God, must be led and controlled in his entire life by the Spirit—must bring all the propensities of the flesh, all its impulses and passions, under the control of the teaching of the Holy Spirit of God through the word of truth; for the passage teaches plainly that those, and only those, who do this are the sons of God. We need not, therefore, make any claim that we are sons of God unless we are striving by day and by night to subdue all our fleshly demands to the teaching of God's word. Christianity does not propose to take away any of our fleshly impulses or passions, and thus relieve us entirely of their demands, but simply teaches us how to overcome them. The claim of some at the present time that the immediate or direct power of the Holy Spirit will take out or destroy all the impulses in man that lead to sin and thus entirely relieve the Christian of that sort of desire is utterly out of harmony with the teaching of the word of the Lord upon the subject. The plain teaching is that the Christian must, through the teaching of the Spirit, mortify, keep down, and put to death the impulses of the flesh that lead into sin; and no man need look for any relief from this conflict while flesh and blood are the tabernacle of the soul. Our aim through life must be, through the Spirit, to mortify the deeds of the body, if we would live. This is an unending warfare while our souls and our fleshly bodies are joined together.

When Paul had striven to live the Christian life for twenty-five years or more, he said: "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away." (1 Cor. 9: 26, 27.) Thus Paul continued this conflict to the end, and at the close of life he said, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," and was then looking for the crown of righteousness. Such was the life of Paul, and such must be the life of every child of God that would also receive the crown of righteousness; for if any could have been set free from the impulses of the flesh and temptation thereby to sin, why not Paul? On the other hand, as he was not freed from this conflict till his soul was freed from flesh and blood, how can one expect to be so delivered now? No one need look for any such exemption, for the above passage, indicating that only those who are led by the Spirit are sons of God, also indicates that there is no such relief for the Lord's people in this life. To be led by the Spirit is to yield heart and life to the teaching of the Spirit, and thus walk after the Spirit; and only those that do this to the end are led by the Spirit. The Spirit of God gives the light, while the child of God must walk in it; and whenever he ceases, refuses, to walk in the light, he ceases to be a child of God.

John says: "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth." (1 John 1: 6.) So there is no such thing as to remain a child of God, except by walking in the light of God's truth. Since the spirit lusteth against the flesh and the flesh against the spirit, the struggle against sin will go on while life lasts. It is not in the power of man's wisdom to rise above the animal demands of the flesh. Heathen nations have been striving along this line for ages and have made no advance in refinement, civilization, and elevation. The Chinese have been taxing their brains for something better for thousands of years and are no further advanced than they were four thousand years ago. Nothing short of the teaching of the Holy Spirit of God can elevate man. No nation has ever been so elevated without this teaching. Hence, in this sense also it is only those who are led by the Spirit of God that are the sons of God.

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.) Not one human being can be found to-day that is truly refined and purified in heart and life where God's word has never been; and even where God's word is and where the people have embraced the gospel, none are truly refined, elevated, and purified except those that walk after the Spirit day by day and crucify the impulses and emotions of the flesh that lead from God. Even among the sons of God, this matter of walking after the Spirit, following its teaching, and that, too, to the very end of life, is the only thing that can pass people through the pearly gates into the eternal city. The flesh is continually making its demands upon us while we live, and in various ways.

John says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." (1 John 2: 15, 16.) When he says, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him," he certainly means what he says. A man, therefore, might keep down anger, wrath, and malice, and not let them have dominion over him, and yet might so thoroughly love the world that he will cease to be God's child and lose his soul unless he repents of this sin and turns from it. All these, then—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life—have to be guarded against as long as we live. The lust of the flesh embraces every unlawful desire that is prompted by the flesh, while the lust of the eyes embraces every unlawful desire that can reach and influence the soul through the eyes, and the pride of life embraces every impulse of the pride of humanity that would lead the heart away from God in its gratification, no matter what.

Hence, if we would be faithful servants of God in this life and be prepared for the home of the saints, we must read and ponder the word of God and learn what things that the flesh loves are out of harmony with the will of God and struggle with all our souls against them. In the meantime, we need to pray continually for God's help in doing these things; for if we fail in crucifying the flesh, with its affections and lusts, it will be a sad and awful failure to us. We had just as well not start in Christianity at all as to start and then let the world get the upper hand of us and lead us away from Christ and bring us at last to perdition. If we form the habit of overcoming the world, the flesh, and the devil, the task will become easier and easier, as time goes on, so that the final triumph over sin may be easily made and the home of the blessed reached in spite of the great enemy of souls.

PERFECTION.

If one obeys the perfect law of liberty, is he not perfect? If he could perfectly obey that perfect law, he would be perfect; but the obedience of human beings is imperfect—that is, it is not done with an undivided heart and purpose in word, thought, and deed. An imperfect man cannot render a perfect obedience. He cannot obey in thought, word, and deed without feelings of distrust and thoughts of disobedience, in some way, creeping in and marring the service. When the father, pleading for mercy for his child, said, "I believe," he immediately added, "Help thou mine unbelief;" and when Jesus told the apostles they must forgive him who trespassed against them seven times a day, they cried: "Lord, increase our faith." Every human being, with a true and proper sense of his own weakness, infirmity, and sinfulness, like this father and the apostles, realizes the weakness and incompleteness of his own faith and daily prays that his faith may grow stronger and more complete in its character. Jesus told the apostles they could not cast out a demon because of their lack of faith, and that if they had faith as the grain of mustard seed, they could say to the mountain, "Be thou cast into the sea," and it would be done. No man, with his human imperfections and environments, can have a perfect faith; and when the faith is imperfect, the life must be faulty. Claims to perfection are presumptuous, and presumptuous sins are the vilest of sins in the sight of God.

No one reaches a state of perfection in this world, but his constant effort must be to bring his life up to the standard of the perfect law in Christ Jesus. The law of liberty embraced not one single act, but the control of the life, actions, thoughts, and feelings in subjection to the law of God and will of God. Only Jesus, of those who have worn the human form, has obeyed or conformed perfectly to that perfect law of liberty. When a human life perfectly conforms to the perfect law of liberty, then that life is equal to the life of the Son of God. "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed," or the doing. This shows it embraces not only the requirements that bring us into Christ, but the continued obedience to the law and its precepts by which we grow up to the fullness of the stature of men and women in Christ. Paul says: "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh, . . . casting down imaginations, . . . and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Our words and actions spring from our feelings and thoughts. They are more easily controlled than the feelings and thoughts. A man can restrain his actions when he cannot restrain his feelings and thoughts. To give expression to the thoughts and feelings in word and action is to encourage them; to refuse to give expression to them is to restrain and discourage them and tends to gain the mastery over them. By this course we may gradually bring the thoughts of the heart into subjection to the will of God; but it is exceedingly difficult to bring the feelings of the flesh into this complete subjection to God's will. When man reaches this point, if he ever does completely while in the flesh, he no longer feels temptation to do anything forbidden by God; the work of discipline and trial with such a one is over.

Jesus Christ, so long as the impulses of sin raged in his flesh, refused to be called "good." These were purged out by suffering; and, "being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." If Jesus only was freed from the impulses to sin through the suffering he endured, it is not probable human beings are more easily made perfect.

There is a comparative perfection, or a perfection in effort and purpose, a man may attain to, while falling far short of perfection in practice. A man's heart may sincerely desire to do the whole will of God, while his many weaknesses and temptations of the flesh hinder him. "Noah was perfect in his generations," but was not perfect in his life. We ought, like Paul, to continue to reach forward, that we may attain to the fullness of the stature of men and women in Christ Jesus.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Are the children of God adopted children? If so, when and how? If I understand Brother S. I. S. Cawthon, he says that we are adopted before cleansed. Please answer the above question when you have time, and oblige. W. MANKIN.

The same thing that secures forgiveness makes us children of God. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." The same things that cleanse us from sin make us the adopted children of God.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain the following verses through the Gospel Advocate: "She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff." (Prov. 31: 19.) "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will." (Prov. 21: 1.) Winchester, Ky. FANNIE GLOVER.

"The distaff is the staff to which the flax tow, or wool, is fastened, and from which the thread is drawn in spinning with the hand or wheel." It meant the wise woman spun industriously to clothe her family. This was before the invention of modern machinery to make cloth. Solomon would hardly think it wise to spin and make cloth now by hand. It would be a waste of time and labor. But the principle taught is, the wise woman now will diligently labor and look after the comfort and well-being of her family. The second passage means the hearts of rulers are overruled and directed by the Lord. The Lord overrules the affairs of men. If they will serve him, he overrules to bless; if they refuse, he overrules to bring evil upon them. All the wars and strifes of earth are so directed by the hand of God.

Brother Sewell: Having read your article on "Eternal Punishment," I must say I got considerably interested in it. I changed my views on the future of the wicked some time ago and may have changed for the wrong. I want to be right about this matter. The Adventists, Christian Scientists, and Spiritualists all denounce the doctrine of eternal punishment, although I would not give what some of the members of the Gospel Advocate staff would say about it for what all the rest of these I have mentioned would say. When I differed from the popular opinion on this matter, it was through an investigation of my own. So, as I have faith in your honesty and biblical knowledge, I would like to hear you further. What is meant by (1) "The wages of sin is death?" (2) "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death?" J. ALVER.

Fort Worth, Tex.

(1) "The wages of sin is death." This simply means that a sinful life results in death—an eternal separation from God, from heaven, from all that is pure and good—while "the gift of God is eternal life" to all that will serve God faithfully "through Jesus Christ our Lord." As certainly as a life of service and faithfulness to God results in eternal life, so certainly will a life of sin result in just the opposite—eternal ruin. No sadder expression than "The wages of sin is death" can be found, while nothing is more cheering and joyful than "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." A man reaches in the end just what he works for in this life. If he works for the Lord and humanity, he prepares himself for the enjoyment of good and happiness, and will enter upon eternal joys after death; but the man who leads a life of sin, a life of rebellion against God, only fits himself for evil hereafter, and only that will he receive. (2) "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." This last expression is but a beautiful explanation of the first, regarding the wages of sin. A sinful life can bring nothing good, and such a one could not and would not enjoy good if it were possible for him to receive it. Only he who works for good and purity in this life and learns to love and enjoy them in this life can possibly be prepared to enjoy them on the other side.

Brother Lipscomb: Will you please answer the following questions through the Gospel Advocate, and withhold my name? (1) Should the word "born" in the following passages be rendered "begotten:" 1 John 2: 29; 4: 7; 5: 1, 4, 18? (2) What does 1 John 3: 9 mean? (3) What does John mean by saying we are "born" by the will of God? Ought this to be "begotten?" (John 1: 12, 13.) X.

(1) The same word in the Greek is translated both "born" and "begotten" in English. It depends entirely on the context, or connection, as to which it should be translated. When the word is connected with the father, it is translated "begotten," because the father begets; when it is connected with the mother, it is translated "born," because the offspring is born of the mother; when connected with both father and mother, it is translated "born," because "born" in this case embraces the office of both father and mother. We say a child is begotten by its father, is born of its mother, or it is born of father and mother, or parents. When, then, the reception of the seed, or the word of God is meant, it is proper to say "begotten;" when the full act of being brought forth, or delivered into the kingdom, is meant, it is proper to say "born." A man is begotten of the word when he believes; he is born of the water and the Spirit when the begetting, or reception of the word into the heart, results in bringing him forth into the kingdom, or church. All these passages are translated "begotten" in the Revised Version. (2) 1 John 3: 9 is presented for explanation almost continually. We try to give an answer about once in three months, but the answer seems to do no good, as the next week the question is presented again. The reason this is done, we understand, is the answer is not satisfactory. None the less, it is all we know to give. It is: a man will not consciously and willfully sin while he is trying to be a Christian, for he keeps the word of God in his heart; that will guide him right. The passage by itself would indicate it is impossible for a man who once believes to sin, but as that plainly contradicts clear passages of scripture, we are compelled to place on it a construction that harmonizes with them. The one we give is the best we know. (3) This sentence is translated "born" in the Revised Version, but "begotten" is placed in the margin. It would not alter the sense in this sentence, whether it be "born" or "begotten." The believers here referred to are likely those who had believed under John's teaching, and they were permitted to enter the church or become followers of Christ by accepting him as the Christ. This birth was not of the fleshly family of Abraham nor after the will of man, but according to the will of God. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures" (James 1: 18), is of about the same force.

ROGERS.

Brother Dutch Rogers was born on March 10, 1853, and departed this life on July 5, 1900, being forty-seven years, three months, and twenty-five days old. He obeyed the gospel and was baptized by Brother Jesse Sewell about twenty-four years ago and lived a Christian to the best of his knowledge. He bore his illness without murmuring or complaining. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." We miss him so much. Brother G. L. White read the Scriptures at the Bellwood meetinghouse, then the remains were laid to rest in the Bellwood Cemetery. A. C. TABOR.

CANN.

The angel of death has visited our midst and has taken from our community our beloved brother, J. D. Cann, who calmly fell asleep in Jesus at his home, near Avoca, Jefferson County, Ky., on July 27, 1900, in his seventy-first year. Brother Cann was buried with Christ in baptism about thirty years ago, and lived up to that faith. He was a devoted husband and an affectionate father. He leaves a wife, eight children, one brother, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. To the sorrowing ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope. I would point the stricken wife and children to the Father of all mercies and to God, who comforts us in all tribulations. I would say to those that are out of Christ: Give your hearts to Jesus and your obedience to your Heavenly Father, so that when the final summons comes you may all meet as an unbroken family around the throne of God and there sing praises to him forever and forever.

MILTON.

Our lovely and beloved sister, Lillie May Milton, died at Madison, N. C., on February 23, 1900. Before she married James Milton I knew her as Lillie Griffith. She was only twenty-three years old and had been married only two years when the death summons came and cut her down on the threshold of promising womanhood. All who knew her faith have comforting hope in her death. She was clear enough in faith and strong enough in love to leave the bounds of a large and popular denomination for the sake of Christ's word given in the commission to the twelve and illustrated in their practice as recorded in Acts of the Apostles. She confessed her faith in Christ and was baptized for the remission of sins by Brother M. V. Warner, of Nain, Va., in the autumn of 1893, having become dissatisfied with the teaching and practice of the Baptists, with whom she stood previously connected. Though she differed from her parents and other dear relations in her religious practice, they all seemed to have very great comfort in her faith as shown in her heroic obedience. I rejoice in their consolation and hope and pray that the time is not far off when they shall all see clearly the Sister Fox, wife of Thomas J. Fox, passed from her earthly home on the morning of June 22, 1900. From her early childhood Sister Fox was reared "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." At an early age she obeyed the gospel and ever afterwards lived a consecrated Christian life. At the time of her death she was a member of the church of Christ in the Highlands, Louisville, Ky. Blessed with a wonderful voice which she used to an advantage in congregational singing, a sunny disposition, and a willingness always to help in church work, it is no wonder we miss her so much. She had many friends and they watched with her constantly during the last hours of her illness. To one and all she displayed, while on the operating table and even at death's threshold, fortitude and bravery of heart that were truly remarkable. To her the psalmist's words were present: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." She leaves a noble husband, three children, and an aged mother to mourn their loss. To all of them we extend our sympathy and prayers. If they remember the words she spoke, if they treasure up the admonitions she gave, if they be true to the promise they made, in God's own time and place they shall see her face once more, they shall clasp hands together, they shall walk with her.

FOX.

PARRISH.

Cleveland, oldest son of Brother A. P. and Sister Eudora Parrish, was born on November 12, 1884, and died on July 20, 1900, at 11:15 P.M. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the family residence, 156 Green street, Nashville, Tenn., on Sunday afternoon, July 22, 1900, at 3 o'clock, in the presence of several hundred friends, whose presence was expressive both of sympathy for the family and high esteem for Cleveland. Truly, he remembered his Creator in the day of his youth, for in his fifteenth year he was baptized into the church of Christ by Brother J. D. Tant. The interest he manifested at first never waned, but increased continually; and while for six months he suffered a great deal and could not attend services regularly, he never lost interest, but asked his teacher to still count him as a pupil and keep his name on the roll. Among his last words were: "I am going home. Papa and mamma, go with me." Dear brother and sister, we know that it is hard to give up your dear boy, and many earnest prayers were offered to our Heavenly Father to restore him to health; but God, who doeth all things well, called him home, and while he cannot come back, you can go to him. Henceforth heaven will seem nearer and your zeal in God's service will increase until, by and by, you will realize that in taking Cleveland from you God was bestowing a rich blessing upon you. God said of David that he was a man after his own heart. David was chastened of the Lord in the same manner that you are, and while David was a good man before, afterwards his fidelity to God increased one hundredfold. JOHNSTON.

On May 28, 1900, death took from our midst our dear, sweet little Willie Sangster, infant daughter of W. L. and Lula Owen Johnston. She was a great sufferer for one so young, being only two years and one month old. It is hard for us to understand just why little infants should thus suffer; but God knows best. We are told that "afflictions are often in mercy sent." This little darling was the pet of her father from her earliest infancy and it was his delight to take her in his arms and care for her both night and day, for her mother was ill for a long while. When he would come from his work, she would manifest her love for him in the fondest childish manner. When she was about eighteen months old she was paralyzed in one side and was unconscious for several days. We nursed her back to life, praying that she might be spared to comfort them. Afterwards she had an attack of pneumonia and recovered, after several days of serious illness, by the care of loving hands of both parents and friends who anxiously watched over her. When she was, as all thought, well, her parents moved to Mount Pleasant. In a short while she was taken ill and died suddenly. Her remains were brought back and laid to rest in Mount Hope Cemetery, at Franklin, Tenn., sweet words of comfort being spoken by Brother George Gowen. Dear father and mother, remember how he invited you to put your trust in One who will strengthen you in every trouble. Go forward and battle on, but look up. Heaven seems now a brighter home for you to strive for than it has at any other time in your lives. May God comfort you in this bereavement and keep parents, brothers, and sisters in his love until they shall meet her again, in the prayer of one who loves you.

M. A. JOHNSTON,

ANDREWS.

Brother Edwin J. Andrews passed peacefully from his earthly home in Sherman, Tex., to the land of the blessed on July 17, 1900. He was born in Monroe County, Ky., on January 16, 1830; reared in Tennessee, where he became a Christian; and came to Texas in 1858. He nobly discharged his obligations to God and his fellow-men in a life of fidelity to truth and righteousness. He was the oldest of seven children, six of whom survive him—A. R. Andrews and H. M. Andrews, of Sherman, Tex.; J. R. Andrews and Mrs. King, of Whitewright, Tex.; Dr. R. C. Andrews, of Floydada, Tex.; and Mrs. B. F. Arterberry, of Savoy, Tex. His wife and five sons are in Sherman, Tex. His other children are: Frank A. Andrews, of Houston, Tex.; Charles C. Andrews, of Van Alstyne, Tex.; H. W. Andrews, of Bristow, Tex.; Henry Andrews, of Stamford, Tex.; and a daughter, Mrs. Laura Foster, of Arlie, Tex. To have provided for and reared to respectability and honor a family like this is an honor to any man. Though dead, he yet speaks through them and through his own kindness, goodness, and faith, which to his family and to all who knew him is a rich legacy. Brother Andrews was an elder of the Houston Street church of Christ and served his brethren with humility and faithfulness. The large concourse of relatives and friends at the funeral heard most impressive words from Brother Charles Carlton, of Bonham, Tex., who said he had known Brother Andrews for thirty-five years and that he was "an all-round" Christian. That discourse on the basis of our hope will not be forgotten. Beautiful songs of faith and hope from hearts that loved him were sung at his home and at the grave, whither one of the largest processions ever held in Sherman followed on to see the body laid to rest in the hope of the resurrection to immortal honors. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." O. A. CARR.

JUDKINS.

Our hearts are sad because of the loss of a dear little grandson, Ryan Judkins, who was born on March 12, 1899, and died on July 26, 1900, being a little over sixteen months old. Ryan was named after the writer, and was the only grandchild living in the house with us. He was one of the dearest little boys, it seems to us, that was ever given to any household. We anticipated so much comfort from his little life. He loved us as only a child could who was daily associated with grandparents who loved and doted on him. He was the greatest pleasure of our lives. We always looked for him when we came in and his little gleeful, happy smile was such a comfort to us, as was also his little nod of the head for good-by when he was going out. We always longed for him to come home. He has gone and we can never see him again in this life, but thanks be to our dear Lord for the words: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The dear little fellow has certainly gone to heaven, and it may be he was given to us for so short a time and then taken away to draw us all closer to each other and to our dear Lord and the angels that surround him. I feel that we should not wish him back for anything we could do for him, for God will care for him better than mother and father or grandpa and grandma. It is a pleasant thought that the Savior will take such good care of him—no going astray, no sickness, no death. I love to think of him so sweet, so lovely, and so safe. His life here was so sweet; what will it be up there? The greatest comfort to us is the assurance that he is safe with the Lord and we may go some time and see him. I feel a greater desire to go to heaven than ever before. May God help us to be ready when he shall call. Brother Sewell, pray for us, that we may be able to bear this affliction. G. T. RYAN.

BOYD.

Sister Mary Boyd was born on October 20, 1825, and departed this life on April 11, 1900. The immediate cause of her death was heart trouble. She was sick only eleven days. She was a useful member of the Christian Church and lived a faithful child of God in all of her long and useful life in her Master's cause and service. That dreaded monster we call "Death" came at last and took her away from us to her eternal home to meet loved ones gone on before. Sister Boyd was beloved and esteemed by all who knew her and she was a mother and friend indeed to all who knew her. She will be greatly missed by her children and friends, and we are loath to give her up; but we rejoice in the fact that our loss is her eternal gain. She leaves behind her seven children and a host of friends to mourn her departure. Sister Boyd was left a widow during the civil conflict of 1861 to 1865, and she had to work hard to rear and educate the seven fatherless children given her as a trust; but she never forgot to teach them the words of eternal truth by acts and precepts, and her patient, zealous efforts were rewarded on earth by seeing all of her seven children brought into the church of Christ. So much for a devoted mother. She bore her suffering with great patience and was only awaiting the summons to come up higher. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." It was her desire to have all her children around her when the summons came, but only three of them were present. The others were coming as fast as the cars could carry them, but the angel of death reached her first and closed that darling mother's eyes in that long and peaceful sleep, "from which none ever wake to weep." She did not lack for anything human hands could do. Now, to the bereaved ones I would say: Mother is not dead, but sleepeth, and may you all strive to emulate her example and precepts, and you, too, like mother, will be called to that happy home to see and know even also as you are known. A destructive forest fire in Montana swept over the timbered lands between the upper Geyser Basin and the lake in the Yellowstone National Park. The line of fire was ten miles in length.

Among the indications of change in China is the increase of native newspapers. In 1895 there were only nineteen newspapers; at the present time the number has increased to seventy.

Yellow fever is increasing in Havana and Pinar Del Rio. This is said to be largely due to the advent of non-immune Spanish immigrants, now amounting to some twenty thousand.

Advices from Washington say the President and the Secretary of the Navy have decided to locate at the Pensacola Navy Yard the immense floating dry dock bought at Havana from the Spanish Government.

It is still believed that a number of missionaries were killed at Paoting, China. Fifty missionaries are reported killed in the Shensi Province. Five French priests and twelve thousand converts are reported killed not far from Peking.

Some fifty-five hundred Germans, Poles, and Swiss left their own countries last month to settle in England. To offset this about seventeen thousand British subjects immigrated to this country. More than half of these came from Ireland.

Shag Rock, which has long been a menace to vessels entering the San Francisco Bay, has been destroyed by a dynamite blast. The explosion raised about thirty-eight hundred feet of sandstone and the column shot one thousand feet in the air.

The census returns give Buffalo, N. Y., 352,219 people, a gain of 96,655, or 37.77 per cent, over the population of 1890. Of the cities given out so far, Milwaukee, Wis., leads in the per cent of increase, her gain being almost forty per cent over the census of 1890.

Chicago packers have been asked by the United States Government to furnish two million pounds of meats within thirty days for the American soldiers in the Orient. This is said to be the largest requisition ever issued by the Government of the United States.

According to the Kansas City Journal, one recent day's rainfall was worth thirty-five million dollars to the Sunflower State. Says the newspaper referred to: "The rainfall was general over the corn belt, and was sufficient to break the price over four cents a bushel on the Chicago market."

The worst famines of modern times were the famine in Ireland in 1846, 1847, in which 1,000,000 people perished; the Indian famine of 1866, which claimed 1,450,000 victims; the Indian famine of 1877, in which 500,000 people perished; and the great famine in China in 1878, in which 9,500,000 people died.

In the West the most effectual way of keeping the railway tracks clear of weeds has been found to burn them, and on several of the roads specially constructed weed-burning devices are in general use. As the car is moved over the roadbed a hot blast is directed down and all vegetation is at once destroyed.

A concentrated army ration, consisting of fruit and meat prepared together and crackers made largely of egg, is being experimented with in Germany, where a regiment has been sent on an eight-day march, during which time the men will subsist entirely on this fare, and the results will be carefully observed.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad has issued an order prohibiting cigarette smoking by any employee of the company. The anti-cigarette rule affects thousands of men. It has been found necessary by the railroad because cigarette users in its employ become "dopey" and worthless.

The hot wave which has sent the mercury up to ninety-seven degrees in Nashville is felt throughout the country. In New York nearly a hundred prostrations were reported on August 6, 1900. Philadelphia suffered severely, the temperature reaching ninety-seven degrees. Dubuque, Chicago, and other cities report much distress and a number of deaths.

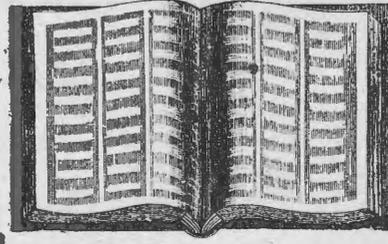

Windmills are getting to be as thick in Nebraska as in Holland. There is at least one at every farmhouse to pump water, often another at the barnyard, and sometimes several others at different corrals, or feeding places for cattle. In the towns clusters of windmills rise above the roofs and give a quaint and picturesque appearance to the landscape.

One of the most important pieces of work now being done by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, as appears from its last published report, is the reconnaissance and triangulation of that part of the ninety-eighth meridian which lies within the limits of the United States. It will be joined later by the work on the north by the British and on the south by the Mexicans.

The advance of the allied forces from Tien-tsin has resulted, so far, in two engagements with the Chinese. At Pei Tsang, after a stiffly contested battle, the Chinese retreated, and the victorious army crossed the Pei Ho River and advanced on Yang Tsun, a more important military position, which was taken after four hours of heavy fighting. The loss to the army of the allies is reported at two hundred. Yang Tsun is at the junction of the Pei Ho River and the railroad leading to Peking. Its capture will insure to the international troops, it is hoped, two routes of transportation to Peking. It is 17.8 miles from Tien-tsin.

Government in the case of the sinking of the British dispatch boat Kow Shing during the Chinese-Japanese War. The Kow Shing, Captain Galsworthy, while conveying Chinese troops, was attacked by Japanese warships and sunk off Asan on July 25, 1894. Captain Galsworthy escaped to the Japanese, but many were killed.

A special from Washington says: "American fruit growers obtain an important concession in the new commercial agreement between the United States and Germany. The latter annuls the regulations providing that the dried and evaporated fruits imported from the United States be inspected on account of the San José scale, and agrees that such fruits shall be admitted without other charges than the regular customs duty."

The Seaboard Air Line Railway Company has awarded to the South Baltimore Car Works a contract for two thousand freight cars. This is the largest single order ever booked by one concern, and is the second largest contract for freight cars ever awarded by a railroad at one time. The total cost of the cars will be about one million five hundred thousand dollars, ranging from six hundred dollars to one thousand dollars each. The specifications provide for one thousand flat cars, seven hundred box cars, and three hundred refrigerator, or ventilated, fruit cars.

The artesian wells of Eastern Algeria have reconciled tribes whom military terrorism failed to pacify. The first appearance of the rock drill machinery merely provoked their banter; but when unending fountains of cold water burst forth and filled tanks and refrigerator canals, their gibes were turned to silence and finally to grunts of approval. Now they are besieging the tents of the government engineers, begging them to try their luck here and there and promising their political support in case an aquatic treasure-trove should restore the productivity of their parched-out fields.

The President has sent a demand to the Chinese Government, saying: "We are already advised by the United States Minister, in a brief dispatch received on August 7, 1900, that imperial troops are firing daily upon the Ministers in Peking. We demand the immediate cessation of hostile attacks by imperial troops upon the legations, and urge the exercise of every power and energy of the Imperial Government for the protection of the lega-tions and all foreigners therein. We urge upon the Imperial Government that it shall adopt the course suggested in the third clause of the letter of the President to His Majesty, the Emperor of China, of July 23, 1900, and enter into communication with the relief expedition, so that coöperation may be secured between them for the liberation of the legation, the protection of foreigners, and the restoration of order."

The cost of a railroad is usually reckoned by the mile, but London has just completed an underground road, six miles long, which cost forty dollars an inch. It is worth noting that the locomotives and passenger coaches are all of the American type and the locomotives are of American construction. The rolling stock is fitted with American air brakes and is driven by an American electric plant, the power for which is furnished by a steam engine designed by one American firm and constructed by another. It is none the less worth noting that these contracts were awarded to Americans largely because British mechanics were then on a strike, and therefore the British manufacturer could not undertake to deliver the goods on time.

ALABAMA.

Montgomery, August 6.—We are having a splendid meeting at West End. This is the section of the city in which the cotton factories are located and it is a fine field for work. The meeting was begun by two young brethren—Brother Ernest Garrett and Brother Amos Harris. I have been overlooking their work. They worked up the best interest that has ever been in this part of the city, but just as it was fully ripened they left it, and I was barely able to take charge of the meeting, as I had just been down with fever. It took nearly a week to work up the interest, but the meeting has done well. About thirty persons have been added to the church and one person is to be baptized at sunset this evening. It is a strange meeting. We use the schoolhouse; it is about two hundred yards from the Baptist Church. The Methodist Church is nearly a quarter of a mile away, but they use the Baptist Church, so we are holding meetings neighborly. Sister Tucker says she can sit in her house and hear and understand the preachers at both places. While the Methodists are lighting up the house in the evening, we are fixing to baptize in the same house. It is just wonderful. I heard last night that the Methodists are going back to their house. But I have not told it all yet. The Methodist Protestants have stretched a tent and will, I suppose, soon begin work. They are not more than two hundred or three hundred yards away. If Paul were here, would he not say: "I perceive you are too religious?" We have a church here of about seventy-five members now. There are some fine workers developing among the number. I have not said all I wish to say about Brother Garrett and Brother Harris. They are the best workers I know; they go together, have their Testaments, distribute them, and have readings at every meeting; they also have a query box and they go from house to house, preaching, and do not lie up and sleep all the time or crack jokes; they inspire confidence wherever they go. A man claiming to be a Christian who leaves a doubtful odor behind him is an injury to the cause. Well, I am enjoying reading the Gospel Advocate very much. I am glad to see the interest in the question of eldership. Get the elders right and away goes a multitude of errors. I am insisting that the unity of God's people is of first importance and stands ahead of preaching the gospel.

J. M. BARNES.

ARKANSAS.

Saratoga, August 10.—Our meeting at this place has closed. Four thoughtful men (three of whom were heads of families; the other, a young man) confessed their faith in the Christ and were baptized. I go from here to Nashville to take a few days' rest by invitation of Brother and Sister Swicegood at their home. I will then go to Center Point for a few weeks to be engaged in a meeting, and from there home—that is, where home used to be. The only real home we have is in heaven. How important that we all think and work and live in that direction! "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Nothing is difficult to a willing mind, and the will is under the power and control of the affections. Therefore, "If ye love me, keep my commandments," is as effect follows cause. Water afar off does not quench thirst. The nearer we live to the fountain, God, Christ, and the truth, the better. In the congregations of to-day it is common to find friction; to bury the hatchet is good, and to throw the helve after the lost hatchet is not out of place. He who crawls through a stovepipe will come out with smut upon him. It is not well to look within oneself for the answer to a scriptural question. "What saith the Scriptures?" will draw from the great heart of the eternal settling and safe answer to all questions worthy of note in connection with godliness, for "his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness," and this is according to his all-comprehending knowledge. (2 Pet. 1: 3.) It is unhealthy to spiritual growth and opposed to peace in Zion for any man to look within himself for the answer to any question that is settled by the Lord. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," saith the Lord. The words which he spoke were confirmed with signs following. He said, "I am the bread of life;" then he showed them that it was so. He fed many thousands with a few loaves. He said: "I am the resurrection." He commanded Lazarus to come from the dead, and he did so and stood up, living. He is "the Son of God with power;" "hear ye him." I have spent three weeks with Dr. W. H. Cannon and family. The Doctor is my old true and tried friend—a man after God's own heart. I would remain, but duty calls. The disposition on the part of the brethren in Indian Territory is to make one grand effort and focus all minds and hearts upon the word and settle the brethren in the faith. At the request of the elders and brethren, we ask for the cooperation of the saints. Let us feel your fellowship, brethren, in this good work. What we do must be done quickly; the time is short.

R. W. OFFICER.

KENTUCKY.

Epley Station, August 6.—Our meeting at this place began on the first Lord's day in July and closed on Friday night, July 13, 1900, Brother McPherson, of Nashville, Tenn., doing the preaching. Brother Wylie Cullum, of West Nashville, was also with us and helped greatly in the singing and prayers. The cause of Christ was successful. Ten persons were baptized into the one body, and another one also made the good confession who has not yet been baptized. The interest was good from the start and continued to increase to the end. Large crowds assembled each night to hear the word of God. Brother McPherson is a faithful, earnest, pointed preacher, and will do much good wherever he may go. We bid him Godspeed and pray that he may live long to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ. J. H. MEAD.

MISSISSIPPI.

Teasdale, August 2.—Brother W. M. Gammill, of Sardis, has just closed an eleven-days' meeting at Jackson Grove. The results were: Six persons were baptized, two of whom came from the Baptists, and one was reclaimed. Brother Gammill came among us from Tennessee last April and is a sound gospel preacher. He knows the gospel and does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. E. H. BONNER.

TENNESSEE.

Law, August 5.—I closed a meeting at the Moss Schoolhouse. I preached ten discourses; one person was baptized. I never had better attention. The attendance was good from beginning to end. I am earnestly requested to return as early as possible. I hear others want to be baptized and are waiting for my return. There is a wonderful opening in Henderson County and Madison County. The few brethren in Henderson County want a man to evangelize the county.

W. F. THOMPSON.

Summertown, August 4.—Brother G. A. Dunn began a meeting at this place on July 22, 1900, in the Methodist church house, and continued preaching, day and night, for eight days. He had great opposition, in several forms, on every side; but he began his work with that great earnestness and zeal that knows no such word as "failure." On the first Lord's day the audience was reasonably good. The next day the people generally went to their different occupations, leaving Brother Dunn to his meeting, with about twelve or fifteen persons. That night, of course, a few more came in, and he took for his subject: "Am I a Child of God?" The discourse was delivered with great eloquence, power, and magnetism. Each day after this the audience steadily increased. On the second Lord's day of our meeting the house was full and at night was packed to overflowing. Extra seats were brought in, and still all could not be seated. The next morning the Methodists held a council and later in the day they informed Brother Dunn that he could not use the house any longer, that their part of the meeting had come to a close; and of course that ended our meeting, as we had not made any arrangements for a tent or seats and did not have anywhere to go nor time to make other arrangements then, as Brother Dunn had made previous engagements at other places. Much good seed has been sown. If the soil is productive, the blades will shoot forth, and hence the grain will follow. I have lived at this place thirteen months, and this is the first one of our brethren that has preached here during that time, and we do not meet here at all. I have been informed that the church of Christ was once in a flourishing condition at this place, but from some cause it has dwindled away. There are now about thirty or thirty-five souls here who claim to be members of Christ's body, but they are very lukewarm and indifferent about religion.

E. E. M.

Mount Pleasant, August 6.—The congregation worshipping at Beech Hill, Maury County, have just closed a protracted meeting, resulting in four additions to the church of Christ at that place. Brother Will Spivy did the preaching, beginning on Thursday evening before the fifth Sunday in July and continuing until the following Thursday night. Brother Spivy is an able minister of the word and believes it a sufficient rule for our faith and practice and the church of God all the organization needed for the work and worship of Christians. This is the third year he has been with this congregation in their protracted meetings, and arrangements were made for him to be with them next year. The church has been established only five or six years. Their first meeting was held in a beech grove, near where they have since built a meetinghouse. They were few in number and poor in the wealth of this world. Surrounded with sectarianism, with all the wealthy of the country around them in strong opposition, yet they have succeeded in building a meetinghouse (with but little help from any source) and permanently planting the cause in a destitute place. I think they are a splendid object lesson as to what can be accomplished by a few poor brethren that have zeal and love enough for the cause of Christ to make sacrifices for him. If others would be benefited by the lesson, I believe there would be fewer calls for help through the Gospel Advocate and other religious papers, and perhaps more done for the cause of the Master. Let us work "while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9: 4.) Before closing, I desire to qualify my invitation to preachers to visit Mount Pleasant, published in a former number of the Gospel Advocate. It was intended for such as have faith enough in the Lord to be satisfied with his order of work and worship, without the aid of any human organization. There is a protracted meeting now in progress at Mount Pleasant, which began on Sunday, August 5, 1900. A full report will be given hereafter. Brother McKissick and Brother Simmons, of Texas, are doing the preaching.

TEXAS.

Alma, August 7.—I am in a meeting at this place. The meeting began yesterday and we look for good results here. The church of Christ at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Dallas, has held two missionary meetings since July 1, 1900—one in Dallas and the other near Lancaster. Fourteen persons were added to the church at Dallas and twelve persons were added to the church near Lancaster. It does the church good to have their evangelist return and report the successful meetings held by their efforts. Will churches do missionary work in the future? Brethren, "sound out the word."

J. S. DUNN.

Murphy, August 6.—I am now in a meeting at Murphy, which began on Lord's day, August 5, 1900, and will continue until August 15, 1900. I have preached only two sermons so far, and one young brother who had been walking disorderly confessed his sins and was restored to fellowship. Everything looks favorable to have a good meeting. I will begin a meeting, the Lord willing, at Union College on August 15, 1900, to continue ten days. Union College is four miles south of Rockwall. We have some good brethren at that place. I will then go to Chatfield, Navarro County, to visit my brother in the flesh and also to preach some while there; after which I will return to Atkins, Ark., my home, and will be engaged in protracted meeting work until October 1, 1900. I will then be engaged with a dry goods store. I would like so much to devote my whole time to the work and service of the Lord as an evangelist. I am still standing upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, and I pray God that I may be true and faithful to my Savior until God says: "It is enough." May the Lord bless all the faithful.

Brother McCaleb Receives a Letter from India.

Brother McCaleb: Your letter was quite a pleasant surprise to me indeed. I had known that you had gone to Japan, and I supposed you were still there. I had not heard of you lately, but I had not forgotten you. I have sometimes dreamed of raking up old acquaintances and writing to the "boys;" but life for me has proved too busy and serious for that, so I suppose it has for them. I hope, for the benefit of others, that they have not found quite so tough a job as I have had. By this I am not complaining, and I am not discouraged. Rather the reverse. My work, in charge of a Boys' Orphanage and Industrial School—we now have one hundred and seventy-one boys to care for and teach—has developed beyond what I had hoped, and the work is too much for one to do. I hope we shall have another missionary to help soon and that I shall have a personal assistant in the agricultural work.

You said very little about your own work. I hope you have found great pleasure and profit in the same and that God has blessed you and will continue his blessings. It is a habit of the Heavenly Father to do so, so we may confidently expect his blessings, if we adhere to his will.

This letter may be a receipt for the $25.71, which I herewith acknowledge to have received. It came about the same time another amount arrived for the same purpose. We had some money on hand already for this work, and so I put the three together and spent it for seed grain for those farmers who had lost their all during the year and were at the point of starvation, and who could not sow their fields this rainy season unless they had help. We considered several ways of spending it—giving blankets to the poor, feeding children and women and broken-down men at the Famine Relief Works, helping the weavers to keep above water, etc.; but this, at the present, seemed the most urgent need here, and would save more lives in the long run, while it would meet a pressing demand for the present. Your money came to seventy-eight rupees and thirteen annas; we count three rupees and six annas to the dollar. This is very good indeed. The drafts we get on the bank in Bombay have not given us more than from three rupees and four annas to three rupees and five annas to the dollar of late. I spent nine hundred and forty-one rupees and gave to one hundred and ninety-six persons out of that amount. The average was something over four rupees, so that you may say that your money helped sixteen persons. I had all my time taken up with the giving out of the money; but I had one of our native brethren with us and he explained to the people, before they received the money, that it had been sent by Christian people, and that it was given to them in the name of Christ alone. We feel sure that this is a very effectual way to preach the gospel. Those who received will no doubt understand very little of the true meaning of the gospel so far; but the fact that they were helped through the name of Jesus ought to provoke many an inquiry in their minds and make them keenly susceptible to the truth when the evangelist comes along to teach them the way more perfectly. Let us hope and pray for this end.

One thing seems sad to me. It is the greediness of heathenism; it robbed the distribution of help of half its pleasure to have rich and poor alike come rushing for aid. One agent of a landlord came pleading for certain men of his master's villages who, he said, were very poor. I had the men called and examined them, and every one of them proved to be in good circumstances. Landowners and others who were well off came with the same plea as the poorest serf. This is Hindooism and Mohammedanism as they exist among the people. No wonder the people are poor and starving. I preached to them that they were in such stress because they had forgotten God. The thought that a thing is right or wrong does not enter their brains at all. They only think: "Here is money being given away, and we will try to get a share of it." The very men who, like vultures, consume the flesh of the poor are the ones ready to rob them, if possible, of the contributions sent from Christian lands to help them out of a tight place. Sometimes I can hardly keep myself under constraint. I did not allow one of these vultures to pass unscathed; but they do not care. They own the land and have the poor in their grasp; so what should they care for the rebuke of one whose efforts end with his words? But we are trying to lay a foundation deep and broad; we are doing it in silence. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." But I confidently predict that the coming time will see these fellows fallen low and their places occupied by Christian men of integrity and conscience. If this be not reasonable, then I do not understand the spirit of the gospel of Christ. But enough of this kind. We are hopeful and find only one difficulty—viz.: To know what of the hundred things we would like to do we can leave undone with least damage to the work. Talk of open doors. We sometimes almost feel like praying that some of them might be closed for a season till we can be ready to enter them. We need more workers.

The famine itself is a terrible thing. I am not good at figures, but it extends over the greater part of the Bombay Presidency and most of the central provinces. We had a shower here just at the time wheat and pulse were filling, which saved us somewhat; but the condition of the people even here, where we are not supposed to have much famine, is very bad. Many will not pull through without help, which we are giving as far as we can. The worst of it is that the people have no seed to sow their fields, so that a great deal of the land will lie uncultivated. That, of course, means want another season. I believe there are now on relief of some sort about forty million people in all India. Many of the native States, or kingdoms, are suffering besides this. I must close now for want of time. I thank you very much, and, through you, the churches for the gift. It will bless the givers also. Let me hear from you as you have opportunity. W. E. RAMBO.

Women Wonder Why

They are doomed to so much suffering. But are they doomed? Is not the suffering the result of conditions which under skillful treatment might be entirely cured? Thousands of women who had been great sufferers, have learned that suffering was unnecessary after using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It heals diseases of the delicate womanly organs and banishes the headache, backache and other aches which are the consequence of these diseases.

"Favorite Prescription" is absolutely a temperance medicine in the strictest meaning of the term. It contains no alcohol and is free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"I wrote you for advice February 4th, 1896," writes Mrs. Loma Halstead, of Claremore, Cherokee Nat., Ind. Ty. "I was racking with pain from the back of my head down to my heels. Had hemorrhage for weeks at a time, and was unable to sit up for ten minutes at a time. You answered my letter, advised me to use your valuable medicines, viz., Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' also gave advice about injections, baths and diet. To my surprise, in four months from the time I began your treatment I was a well woman and have not had the backache since, and now I put in sixteen hours a day at hard work."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Children Rust in Summer.

"That children do rust out during the long summer vacation is unquestionably a fact," writes Edward B. Rawson, in the July Ladies' Home Journal. "That several weeks of the already too short school year must be spent in rubbing off the rust before the advance can be resumed, all teachers know. But that is not the worst of it: when the rust is removed the former luster is not restored. The child's brain is not in a receptive condition; it has been allowed to rust. Children prefer regular employment, provided it be interesting. However glad they are when the last day of school comes, they are quite as glad to resume their work in the fall, even if its interest is not great. A boy—or more frequently a girl—will sometimes overwork, not because he is pushed, but because he is permitted. Very seldom will either a boy or a girl choose to do nothing. One may choose to do things other than those we require, and so be called 'idle' or 'lazy;' but to be doing something is the natural condition and the condition that is preferred. So strong is the instinct to be active in both mind and body that when left to themselves our children will find something to do in spite of us, and too frequently it is something that might better not be done."

MAGAZINES.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews stands in the front ranks of high-toned journalism. It has no rival. Current events are dealt with in a fair and impartial way, and other topics of importance are presented so as to give the busy reader the information he desires in a concise way. I most heartily commend it to our readers. It is only $2.50 a year and can be obtained from any news dealer or direct from the publishers at 13 Astor Place, N. Y.

Self-Culture Magazine has been bought by Messrs. Alvah D. and William H. Hudson, of Cleveland, O., and in the future will be published from that city. These gentlemen will no doubt maintain the high character of the magazine and keep it in touch with the best thought of the day. The subscription price, $1 a year, will remain as heretofore.

Two of the freshest and most important of recent articles on China—namely, Mr. Gundry's account of "The Last Palace Intrigue at Peking" and Mr. Douglas' hopeful view of "The Intellectual Awakening of China"—will be found in the Living Age. Mr. Gundry's article is in the number for July 7, 1900, and Mr. Douglas' in the number for July 21, 1900.

The Sunday School Times continues to give very interesting articles from the pen of Dr. Hilprecht on the explorations that are being made in Babylonia. "Ur of the Chaldees," from which Abraham was called, is near the site of some of the most interesting and important excavations. It is altogether probable that the results of these scientific researches may contribute interesting data regarding the contemporary history of the early Israelitish patriarchs. Among the most important discoveries recently made in these excavations is the discovery of the temple library of ancient Nippur, supposed to have been founded about the time Abraham was born in Ur, thirty miles from this noted library. In a short time twenty thousand cuneiform tablets have been found, and the finds continue daily. The readers of the Sunday School Times are fortunate in getting the benefit of these excavations.

A Love that Fails.

And away 'way back in the sweet long ago,
When she was a sweetheart and he was a beau,
I wonder if then he combed not his hair,
And if she never primped to try to look fair.
And then her sweet mouth, with rosy-tint lips,
Is changed—O so changed!—since snuff now she dips;
The teeth that were pearls are an unsightly tan,
All around is like drift between the water and the land;
While the corner of the mouth is all swaggered down
By a stick so detestable she keeps lolling round.
If beauty and character attract men to love,
Then what is the pity for such as the above!

In Memory of a Departed Brother.

Whereas our beloved brother, N. B. Dudley, was called to his reward on May 31, 1900, which sad event caused the deepest sorrow to the members of Berea Church and Sunday school; therefore be it Resolved, 1. That in the death of our brother we realize that a great and good man has left us—one who will be sadly missed in the community, one whose place in the church cannot easily be filled, and one whose loss is especially deplorable since his words of comfort and cheer will nevermore be heard to encourage the young and brighten their pathway here below. For many years he had been a stay and support of the church, teaching and guiding the weak, helping and encouraging the strong. We shall greatly miss his wise counsels and safe teachings.

2. That it gives us the deepest sorrow to think that we shall meet him no more in the walks of men or sit with him in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

3. That our deepest sympathies are extended to all those that mourn his loss.

Why was Christ Baptized?

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." (John 1: 6.) What was John sent for? Answer: "The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light [Christ], that all men through him might believe." (Verse 7.) How did John bear witness? "And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." (Verses 32, 33.) But how did John make Christ known to Israel? By pointing him out to his own disciples; and John baptized him to make him manifest to Israel. (See verse 31.) Christ fulfilled the righteousness of God by submitting to what God sent John the Baptist here to do.

Before the "New Woman" Came.

Before the birth of the new woman the country was not an intellectual desert, as she is apt to suppose. There were teachers of the highest grade, and libraries, and countless circles in our towns and villages of scholarly, leisured folk who loved books and music and nature and lived much apart with them. The mad craze for money which clutches at our souls to-day was hardly known then. The American had time for other pursuits and passions. Then, too, he had not then begun to cooperate—to fuse himself into guilds, unions, and leagues. The individual developed slowly and fully. He followed his own chosen path. Now, the essential duty set before him is to keep step with some body of men, to be one of a majority—to sink himself in the mass. There was space in that calm, leisurely life for the full growth of personality. Hence, if a girl had a call to any kind of mental work, she followed it quietly and steadily. She studied Greek or mathematics or literature, because nature had fitted her for that especial study, while now the brains of all girls whose parents decide to give them a college education are packed with the same quantities of the same knowledge.—July Ladies' Home Journal.

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

Tant-Oakley Debate.

For some time I have been watching Brother Lipscomb's spat with the Baptists over my debate; and, having received several letters about the same, I now make a few statements for the benefit of all.

1. Lipscomb did not treat me unkindly, as some think, about not reporting the debate. He was not there. No one sent up the report of the debate; and then it is no honor to the Gospel Advocate to have any debate published in it with John T. Oakley.

2. Lipscomb did me no wrong in publishing his regret of personalities in the debate. I deplored such and pleaded with Oakley and his moderator for two days not to use them; but to no avail. So I went down after him, and as no one can kill a polecat without smelling bad, neither can one meet Oakley without stooping to his low order to expose the same.

3. Lipscomb is not my enemy, neither did he make a thrust at me on my position on rebaptism.

John T. Oakley claimed: (1) That he had converted two people at some town; (2) they both confessed, and God for Christ's sake had forgiven their sins; (3) they were both baptized because of remission of their sins. Then Oakley said that Elder Elam went to that town and took them in, and asked me if they would be saved. I told him plainly persons having such conversions, experience, and baptism would go to hell, and Elam did wrong in accepting such in the church.

Brother Grant and others, I hear, became offended by my taking such positions; but I still feel sure I was right. While Lipscomb, Harding, and I differ on those things, I love them both. I do not think I have better friends in Nashville, and I feel sad to think some believe we cannot differ and still be brethren. So much on Lipscomb.

As to John T. Oakley, he is below the ordinary as a debater. He does not regard his word like J. N. Hall, W. A. Jarrel, and other Baptist debaters do. He misrepresented Campbell, Anderson, Wilson, Brother Sheffer, and others, which was proven on him in the debate. Even the Baptist Church in West Nashville refused to endorse him to represent them in the debate. His strong power is in appealing to Methodists and Presbyterians for sympathy.

As to editor Folk's statements:

1. "Tant claimed only those baptized by himself or brethren can be saved." Untrue.

2. "Tant claimed that all Methodists and Presbyterians are children of the devil and will go to hell." Untrue. This was one of the questions I asked Oakley that was never answered.

3. "Tant claimed that boards and conventions among his brethren were matters of liberty." Untrue.

4. "Elder Tant claimed God was a material being." Untrue.

5. "Elder Tant claimed he was perfect." Untrue. Had Folk qualified this as I did, his statement would be true. Oakley asked me: "Do you claim to be perfect?" I said: "Yes, just like Noah and David were perfect. God said Noah was perfect, yet he got drunk; God said David was perfect, yet he committed murder and adultery. I, in the scriptural sense, am perfect, as they were, but sometimes sin, as they did." No one knew better than Folk that I placed these qualifying terms in my answer; yet he states it to create a false impression.

Excepting the above five untrue charges, the most of Editor Folk's article was correct. I, like him, deplore personalities in debate, and he knows how hard we begged Oakley to keep out of them; and, as Folk remembers, Logan had to force him to rule on such. As Folk claims the debate did a world of good in Nashville, and as I am coming back to Nashville next spring to do good and as I am sure Folk and Lofton can hold a debate without personalities, I, therefore, challenge either or both of them to meet me, with their home congregation, for an investigation on the differences between us. If Folk thinks the Baptists won in the Tant-Oakley debate, this will be accepted; if he does not, this debate will never come.

J. D. TANT.

The Lord's Day.

I mean by the above caption the first day of the week, on which day the ancient disciples came together to break bread. My purpose is to notice why so much importance is attached to this day in the New Testament. There are other notable days, given by human authority, to which we attach great importance. Why are the American people so willing to turn out and celebrate the Fourth of July? Because of the significance of that day. It signifies national liberty. Why should we not be more willing to turn out on the Lord's day and celebrate our spiritual and eternal liberty in Christ?

There are four conspicuous characteristics of each memorable day. In order to illustrate, let us apply them to the Fourth of July:

1. Who is the author of this day? The fathers of our country.

2. For what was this day given? To celebrate our independence from England.

3. To whom was this day given? To all the American people.

4. How often shall this day be observed? Just as often as it occurs.

Are we who are the children of God willing to make the application of these principles to the Lord's day and abide by the inevitable conclusion? Before we do this let us apply them to another day that was given by divine authority. The day of which I speak is the Sabbath:

1. Who was its Author? Jehovah was its Author. The oracle was: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy."

2. What was it given to commemorate? The liberty and independence of Israel from the Egyptians. "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." (Deut. 5: 15.) Some people are yet disposed to remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy. But in view of the object it commemorates, why should we keep it? We Gentiles were never redeemed from Egyptian bondage. Why should we commemorate a privilege we never enjoyed? There is no reason why we should. I consider this a legitimate argument against Adventism.

3. To whom was this day given? It was given to the Israelites; it was never given to the Gentile nation, we were never commanded to keep the Sabbath. This is another legitimate argument against Adventism.

4. How often was this day observed? Just as often as it occurred. I think we have sufficiently illustrated these principles to make their application to the Lord's day. We quite frequently hear people say the Sabbath was changed from the seventh day to the first day of the week, and they thus speak of it as if it were a day of rest. God's word nowhere recognizes this idea. Paul spoke relative to the abrogation of the law given through Moses, and said: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." (Col. 2: 14.) This law was completely abolished and a new one was given by Christ. Christ gave the first day of the week, on which day a special service shall be rendered to him. It is not a Sabbath. "Sabbath" indicates rest; the Lord's day indicates work. There are too many people who treat the Lord's day as a Sabbath, and thus they are not seen in the assembly of disciples, hymning praises to God, teaching and building each other up in the most holy faith, contributing to the necessity of the saints, communing with Jesus in his body and blood, and invoking the good blessings of a Heavenly Father upon them for another week. Such people do not appreciate the liberty they are offered in Christ.

Now for the application of these principles to the Lord's day:

1. Who is its Author? No one will dispute that Jesus is the Author of this day. He is King of the spiritual monarchy and has authorized this day in his government.

2. For what was this day given? It celebrates not our national independence from the bondage of England nor our independence from the bondage of Egypt, but our independence from the bondage of Satan, and liberty in the kingdom of God. The American people generally appreciate the national liberty they enjoy. There is a disposition and willingness almost universally manifest upon their part to celebrate this great liberty on each Fourth of July. Shall we consider our emancipation from the kingdom of Satan and freedom in Christ of less value to us? In order to give us this great liberty, Jesus shed his blood. He said it was for the remission of our sins. This is the means of our great salvation. He has given to us the loaf and the fruit of the vine, that we may remember the means employed to secure our independence and freedom. These bring all things fresh to our minds and make us strong in the Lord and the power of his might. The Savior expresses our duty respecting this in very bold terms: "I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." (John 6: 53.) This makes the duty positive. We must remember the Savior's suffering and our liberty in his own appointed way, and he has clearly revealed the way.

3. To whom was this day given? This day was given to all the subjects of Christ's kingdom. The Lord never intended that this day should be observed by only a few of the most active members in a congregation. The privileges afforded us of developing our spiritual strength on the Lord's day are important and should be participated in by all the members of Christ's body.

4. How often shall we observe this day? As often as it occurs. I have known people to contend that it is not absolutely necessary to assemble each Lord's day. I am aware of the fact that the New Testament does not say the first day of "each" or "every" week, but notice the Lord's manner of giving commands: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." The Lord never said "each" Sabbath or "every" Sabbath, but who will deny that this language means every Sabbath? "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 2.) Does this not mean the first day of each week? The conclusion is certain. In view of the exceedingly great and precious promises of God, let us strive to make our calling and election sure. The famine still remains in India, despite the falling of the rain. Immediate help is still needed. Efforts are increasing, rather than decreasing, in all parts of the country for the relief of the starving millions. The Christian Herald, of New York, is receiving some three thousand dollars a day and is forwarding the cash as fast as it is received. At the Bible House, the office of the paper, a large force is employed to open and sort the huge mail that comes addressed to the Indian Famine Relief Work. T. De Witt Talmage, the editor, is in Europe, addressing great audiences in behalf of the relief fund. It is thought that, from all sources, one million dollars has already been collected and forwarded to the committees who distribute the money in India. Millions more are needed to save the breadless ones from an awful death and to take care of the many helpless orphans left by parents who have already died of starvation. Brother McCaleb has been forwarding the funds received by us for the relief of these sufferers. Following we give a letter to Brother McCaleb acknowledging the receipt of funds: "Brother McCaleb: I beg to acknowledge, with many thanks, the receipt of your second famine remittance, the amount of which was forty-two dollars and twenty-five cents. The money is now being expended for the relief of the distressed. On behalf of the sufferers, kindly express our gratitude to the donors and tell them that their help could not be more opportune. The famine has not yet reached its worst. No relief can come from this year's harvest until November, next. The crop is yet to be sown and the sowing is now awaiting the coming of the monsoon, which is now overdue twenty days. The whole country is filled with the gravest apprehension because the monsoon has again failed, but we trust and pray that God may yet send abundant rain and the country be saved from the awful scourge of famine upon famine.—Morton D. Adams, Bilaspur, C. P., India."

As our readers all doubtless know, there is a law against the sale of cigarettes. The enforcement of this law would do much good. We do not believe that we can better use our space this week than to devote some of it in giving the views of others on the evils attending the use of cigarettes: "The editor of the Hot Blast encountered a young friend on the streets a few days ago who was evidently suffering agonies. Expressing sympathy, we asked the cause of his affliction, and were met by the unexpected, but candid, confession: 'I am killing myself smoking cigarettes.' 'Why do you not give them up?' was the inquiry. 'The habit has such a hold upon me that I cannot,' and he heaved a sigh of mingled pain and regret. The Hot Blast urges the boys and young men of to-day to desist from such a pernicious habit. It not only destroys your health and saps your vitality, but is gradually shutting you off from positions of trust and usefulness. All along this division of the Louisville and Nashville system at present there is a discussion relative to the probability of the road's prohibiting the smoking of cigarettes by its employees. It is understood that Milton H. Smith is diametrically opposed to his men smoking 'coffin nails,' and that he has been talking the matter over with the heads of the various departments, with a view to stopping the practice on his road. The fact that the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific line recently issued a ukase against the cigarette may have something to do with President Smith's position in the matter. President Purdy, of that road, says that the use of cigarettes tends to befog the mind and make one listless and careless in the discharge of his duties. Experience has shown that the confirmed cigarette smoker is sleepy and of no account; he becomes irresponsible and lazy. In the railroad business, and especially among the train men, it requires a clear brain to discharge the responsibilities. 'On the road in question freedom from the cigarette habit is essential to the favorable consideration of applicants for work, and the fact that one of its employees is seen smoking the little article is sufficient for his dismissal,' comments the New York Sun. The road's officials aver that in making the new rule they have acted in accord with the careful observation of their subordinate officers and also with the opinion of eminent physicians to the effect that cigarette smoking dulls the intellect and consequently renders the smoker unfit to perform his duties properly. In the service of the road there are about twelve thousand men, and as none of them have resigned since the new rule was inaugurated, it is presumed that many of them have chosen to forego the pleasure of this form of smoking rather than oppose the company's orders." (An-niston Hot Blast.) The New York Medical Journal gives convincing proof that the use of tobacco is very injurious to one's health: "In an experimental observation of thirty-eight boys of all classes of society and of average health, who had been using tobacco for periods ranging from two months to two years, twenty-seven showed severe injury to the constitution and insufficient growth; thirty-two showed the existence of irregularity of the heart's action, disordered stomachs, coughs, and a craving for alcohol; thirteen had intermittency of the pulse; and one had consumption. After they had abandoned the use of tobacco, within six months one-half of them were free from all their former symptoms, and the remainder had recovered by the end of the year." Cigarette smoking unfits for business and is being forbidden by those who have a right to know as to its effects. On this subject the New York World thus declares itself: "Chairman Harriman, of the Union Pacific Railroad, has issued an order forbidding cigarette smoking by the employees of the road, and has emphasized the meaning of the rule by extending it to the directors while attending the meetings. Speaking with a full sense of his responsibility and in the light of his experience, Mr. Harriman says that cigarette smoking makes men 'dopey,' and he adds that the company might as well go to the insane asylum for its employees as to retain 'cigarette fiends' in its service. Mr. Harriman's views and his action will find many sympathizers. Such an order might well be enforced, at least in the operating departments of all railroads and other transportation lines intrusted with the lives and safety of passengers."

Much has been said and written on the subject of evangelizing the towns and cities. The question as to how to reach the masses has often been discussed. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, thinks that the larger towns and cities can be evangelized most effectively by the establishment of mission halls, in which laymen may minister to the people. Bishop Thoburn suggests that the Methodist Church set an evangelistic army of one hundred thousand Christian laymen at work throughout the country. This problem will never be solved till Christians are ready to obey the command to preach the gospel to every creature. When the early Christians were scattered abroad by persecution, they went everywhere preaching the word. Filled with an undying love and zeal, every child of God should tell his neighbor and friends the way of life. Christians should preach Jesus from house to house; they should expound the Scriptures to inquirers on the streets. Such teaching and earnestness cannot fail to enlist others. Before the world is converted to Christ there must be more individual zeal and consecration. Every disciple must realize that he has a work to do and that it is his duty to lead others to Christ.

The Western Recorder tells of a church in Evanston, Ill., which has adopted the following as its creed: "You promise to treat the members of this church as your Christian friends, to observe faithfully the worship and ordinances of this church and to submit to its government, to join in its Christian work, to contribute conscientiously of your means to its support and its benevolences, to maintain secret and family prayer and the reading of God's word, and in all things, so far as it shall be made known to you, to do as Jesus would have you do." Whenever a man becomes a Christian, he pledges himself to do all these. It is a very sad fact that very few are true to the noble resolutions that they make on becoming Christians.

Humility Required.

Frank Faithful: "In our last interview, Henry, we noted some singular facts concerning the uses of water as mentioned in the Bible. This was called to mind by noting the seven dippings in Jordan required of Naaman, the Syrian, as recorded in 2 Kings 5. Would you like to follow up this history and see how the healing was bestowed?"

Henry Hardshell: "I would indeed, and hope it is your pleasure to do so on this occasion. I am hungry for more Scripture lessons, and where we have learned so much I hope there are yet good things to be found."

Frank F.: "Do you remember who it was that persuaded Naaman to go to the Jordan and there wash and be clean, when his heart was, as it were, boiling over with rage at the plain command of the prophet of God?"

Henry H.: "Yes; I readily recall that these were Naaman's servants, who reasoned with him until he decided to go to the river Jordan, which was some twenty miles or more distant from Samaria, where he received this command."

Frank F.: "From the insight these servants of Naaman had we ought to be reminded of the fact that persons in the humbler walks of life oftentimes see persons in a truer and more just light than those who are in high places in the world."

Henry H.: "Do you mean to say that the poor have naturally more sense than the rich?"

Frank F.: "O no; that is not it; but there is the glamour of office to those who are in high position. This often prevents them from seeing or considering matters just as they are. Riches, or the possession of wealth, sometimes have just as baleful effect. Our Savior speaks of the deceitfulness of riches choking the word of God so that it is unfruitful."

Henry H.: "I class myself with the poor and lowly. From your view, just expressed, I should congratulate myself."

Frank F.: "If you strive with a pure heart to know the truth, you will be less incumbered than if you were rich or in high position. But this rule is not without many exceptions. The poor can be very much puffed up, and nothing is more disgusting to the public eye than to see very poor folks putting on the airs of the rich and famous. The poor may become puffed up with egotism and self-importance as easily as any, and it seems they are much more sensitive in some respects than others. We are all the creatures of circumstances to a great extent, yet we must in all good things try to rise above them."

Henry H.: "So your idea is that the servants of Naaman were wiser than their master on that occasion, as they persuaded him to go and wash in Jordan."

Frank F.: "Just so, and from the care and affection which they manifested in approaching him to correct his error we ought to derive a valuable lesson. With the very greatest respect they said: 'My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?' St. Paul teaches Christians to restore those who have been overtaken in a fault 'in the spirit of meekness.' In our efforts to reform people we make them worse sometimes by failing to approach them in a Christlike spirit. These servants of General Naaman saw very clearly the fault of their master, yet they affirmed nothing dogmatically, but in a kind way asked him a few questions. They lovingly called him 'father' not because he was their father in the flesh, but this is a term of the greatest respect and tenderness. 'If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it?' You know, Henry, that many now reject the gospel because its commands are not imposing; they seem too simple. That is one reason religious charlatans are always proclaiming some great things to be done: they catch the popular view. O yes, Naaman would have done a great thing that would have been more in keeping with the great Naaman and the great kingdom of Syria; but Naaman must humble himself to do the small, plain thing of dipping in the river Jordan, as God commanded, or die a leper. His servants pleaded: 'How much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?' The plain reasoning of these Syrian servants had a good effect upon the mind of the great Syrian General. He whirled his chariot, and, we will suppose, with spirited horses soon covered the distance to the Jordan. This proud man must be humbled. These strong, stalwart soldiers of Syria may stand around on the bank and look on, but this is one time the old General must wait on himself. Why? Because the man of God told him to dip himself. Two of these soldiers might have been pleased to have taken up Naaman in their arms and dipped him in the water with as much ease as a loving mother carries her darling babe to his bath; but no; the man of God says he must dip himself."

Henry H.: "I am glad it reads that way. I like to see these old grandees humbled every once in a while. It does them good to know how other people have to struggle to get on in the world."

Frank F.: "Yes, I rather like it myself; but remember, Henry, it is comely in every man to humble himself before the Lord."

Henry H.: "Naaman despised the waters of Israel as compared with the clear rivers of Damascus, but at the last bound beneath the waves of the Jordan—what about the Jordan, anyway, Friend Faithful?"

Frank F.: "The Jordan is an historic river. Its waters are never very clear, owing to the high mountains topped with snow, which keep them murky. That question makes me think of the objection some very fastidious people make to baptism in rivers, creeks, or lakes where the waters abound in turtles, snakes, leeches, and such like. The climate of Palestine, being about the same as Southern Georgia, produces about as many such things as any, yet thousands were baptized by John in its waters. At length the Son of God came from his lowly home in Nazareth, many miles; to John, and was baptized in its waters. Are we better than they? Is the servant greater than his master? No; we must humble ourselves to obey the command of God, even if it require us to be baptized when we can find water no better than the murky Jordan. If we look for pardoning power in the water, we look in vain, though we use the purest mountain stream on earth; for the virtue is not in the water, but in the blood of him who said: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.'"

Henry H.: "You seem to think there are some people too fastidious to be saved."

Frank F.: "I fear there are. We have talked long enough for this time. There is more to be said which must wait till we meet again." G. LIPSCOMB.

A More Excellent Way.

The old saying, "Where there is a will, there is a way," is but the expression of the truth that no obstacle can forever bar the way of a man whose whole heart and soul is set on the accomplishing of some purpose. He has strength and endurance far beyond his apparent ability. No difficulty is too imposing, no burden too heavy, no danger too great. He suffers hardships without feeling their weight; overcomes hindrances, and does not realize he is doing much. The man whose heart presses onward to fulfill a work is able to tear chains like the Gadarene demoniac. He, too, is possessed of a spirit that gives him superhuman power.

Of all the forces that can drive man, the strongest is love. Let him come fully under the influence of it and nothing is unattainable. Pain, toil, loss of life or limb are no consideration. A widow's son was buried, by accident, in the mines. Strong, stalwart men flew to the rescue, with pick and shovel, and saved some of the miners; but the widow's son was not among them. "O, my son! Where is my son?" cried the mother. "Can't you save him?" The men explained they had done all they could. "There is no hope for him," they said. They had miscalculated. "Love . . . hopeth all things." The mother began to work herself. Her trembling hands cleared away stone after stone; her fingers tore and bled, but she knew it not. Her work looked small and useless beside that of the men who had dug deep with iron tools; but she had no room in her heart for despair. On she toiled until her strength failed and she sunk down in utter exhaustion. "My son, O, my son!" she cried out. Out of the depth of the mountain came a sound or an echo like an answer. So the mother works again, faster than before, with new strength, for her ear has caught the voice. Her heart pierces in advance through the rocks; the stones move before her. What muscles and iron could not do, love did; the mother found her boy.

How much love can suffer has never been measured; how much she can bear can be told only in the most comprehensive terms: "Love beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth." To have one's love is to have possession of his heart. This is what God wants. It is the climax, the most perfect service he ever desired from men. Once they served him according to laws written and engraven in stone; now, in the better covenant, he says: "I will put my laws into their mind, and on their heart also will I write them: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his fellow-citizen, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest of them. For I will be merciful to their iniquities, and their sins will I remember no more." (Heb. 8: 10-12, R. V.) This sounds far different from the old covenant: "Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them." (Deut. 27: 26.)

Here lies the fundamental difference between the Old Testament and the New Testament. Moral laws and principles have been repeated under Christ's covenant. It is still wrong to lie, to steal, to murder; it is still right to honor father and mother. Then was given a cold law, rigid and fearful, with a curse impending upon its slightest violation; now Christ takes possession of our hearts by faith and love and leads us in hope of immortal glory. Then men stood like dead blocks on the track, and were pushed along by fierce command and threat of punishment; now, like engines, they have the motive power in themselves—driven by their own hearts, they gladly serve him. They are no longer slaves, yet they serve him all the more, because they are children; they are not under the yoke of bondage, yet of their own choice they bear the cross and deem its burden light; they are not in chains, but they use their liberty to do the will of him that loved them and gave himself for them. That was the ministration of death; this is of life. That was of justice; this is of justice and mercy and love. It was begun in love: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." It is carried on by love: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith working through love."

"Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty," said Paul to the Galatian Christians; and if we read the apostle's letters, we cannot but be impressed with the kindness and consideration with which he deals with the brethren, although they may have erred. He is the ambassador of Christ, and the words of life and death are in his mouth; yet he does not order them around as slaves, but reasons and pleads with them, as with free men. Instead of saying, "Submit yourselves to Christ or be damned," he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." I fear that much of the preaching of the present day conveys a false impression of the religion of Christ. There are many sermons of the "blood and fire" sort which would fit better under the old covenant and if preached to a congregation of slaves. But we have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry: "Abba, Father." God wants the loving service of children. Let us be careful, therefore, brethren, to avoid the preaching of the ministration of condemnation, lest we misrepresent the gospel of Christ and lord it over God's heritage. "For ye are not come unto a mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, and unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that no word more should be spoken unto them: for they could not endure that which was enjoined, if even a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned; and so fearful was the appearance, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake: but ye are come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to innumerable hosts of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of a new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better than that of Abel." (Heb. 12: 18-24, R. V.)

Let us see to it, further, that our service be a service of love, from the heart. Sometimes I meet Christians whose Christianity is a burden to them, and they groan under its weight. Poor fellows! They are under the law and in bondage, when they need but raise their heads to breathe the air of liberty. Did Christ wish that? Would he have them to stagger under an unbearable load of commandments? God forbid. Not that they should not be bound to keep them, but instead of packing them on their backs, he writes them in their hearts and lets them go. With a heart full of the love of God and of knowledge they will walk the right way. Suppose you were sick and some man should visit you and explain with solemn voice that he felt it his duty and an obligation resting on him to come around and see how you are getting on and that he felt bound to do for you if you need his service, would you not feel tempted to say to him: "Go home; I release you from your solemn duties, and I do not want your services?" But if another should come and grasp your hands and say, "Brother, I heard you were sick, and my heart yearned for you, and I came quickly to see how I can help you, for I love you," your heart would swell with gratitude and love toward him. What do you judge God thinks of a lot of brethren that come together on the Lord's day with long faces and talk of those solemn duties and obligations—how they have to assemble on that day, how they have to attend to the Lord's Supper, how they have to give something into the treasury? It seems as if even the Lord would say to them: "Go home and learn that I love obedience, but it is the obedience from the heart I seek; and I desire faith, but without love it profiteth nothing; I delight in sacrifice, but let each man learn to give freely, as he purposeth in his own heart, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. I did not say, Do these things or you shall be cursed, but I said, Love me, for I have loved you." But when God's children come with desire and enthusiasm to serve him and long for his word and his church and with joy partake of his table, remembering him who bought their redemption with his own blood and how now nothing can separate them from the love of God; when they gladly give of their substance, love one another out of a pure heart fervently, pray and make melody in their hearts unto God, he looks on them with pleasure, and there is joy in heaven.

Of course there is such a thing as education in this spirit, for we should hardly suppose that at the first acceptance of Christianity any man would comprehend all the love and liberty of the gospel; but the best and only education is the word of God. There we learn what is the breadth and length and height and depth and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled unto all the fullness of God. So from the spark that is kindled in us by his word of love, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." We grow and increase through his Spirit unto that perfect love which casteth out all fear. ROBERT H. BOLL.

Debate with Mormons.

The discussion between M. C. Kurfees and the Mormons at King, N. C., awakened considerable interest and afforded much information to all those who were present. The debate continued two days—July 12, 13, 1900.

Proposition: "Resolved, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the Scriptures teach that through the power of God the elders of the Mormon Church can work miracles." Langly A. Moose and Melvin Henderson, of Idaho, affirmed; M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky., denied.

The first affirmative speech offered no argument on the Joseph Smith part of the proposition, and the first scripture introduced to show the existence of miracles was Matt. 6: 33, the effort being made to show that "all these things shall be added unto you" is a promise that miraculous gifts shall continue. The first negative reply showed the absurdity of this by pointing out the "things" promised to "be added unto you" as being food, raiment, etc. Much time was then spent by the affirmative in showing how ministers of the gospel are called and who such ministers are, with much else that was irrelevant to the point at issue; in fact, the gentlemen affirming the proposition seemed not to appreciate the necessity of being confined to the issue involved in the proposition, but discussed a variety of other points. When pressed on the point of being able to work miracles, they would quote such New Testament passages as tell how persons in that age worked miracles, which the negative readily conceded, but persistently pressed for proof that the same can be done to-day; and, being utterly without acceptable or competent testimony, they finally resorted to such arguments as, "Is not our testimony worth anything?" and "Is not Rev. 14 worth anything?" claiming that this passage referred to Joseph Smith, and when asked for the proof of it, replied: "If it was not Joseph Smith, who was it?" But here, of course, the negative handed back the burden of proof as resting on the affirmative.

Finally, when desperately pressed for proof, one of the elders said: "I have the evidence in my bosom that Joseph Smith was what he claimed to be." The negative conceded that it might be there, but insisted that the gentleman let it out where people could see it.

In the way of disproof, the negative introduced, first and last, twelve leading arguments to show that Joseph Smith could not have been a prophet of God. The arguments were as follows:

Argument 1. Based on Joseph Smith's own account of the origin of Mormonism given in a work written by himself and entitled, "The Pearl of Great Price," in which account he squarely and flatly contradicts himself.

Quotations were here introduced showing that Smith said he had often asked himself the question whether or not "all the sects were wrong," and again where he said it "had never entered into his heart that all were wrong."

Argument 2. Joseph Smith contradicts the facts of etymology in his efforts to define the word "Mormon" and the word "Bible."

It was shown that he defined the word "Bible" to mean "good" and "Mormon" to mean "more good," and that he was here mistaken and contradicted the facts of etymology, which show that "Mormon" means "monster" and "Bible" means "book."

Argument 3. Based on the fact that the Mormon teaching concerning God contradicts the Bible.

It was shown that they teach that "God was once as we now are and is an exalted man," also that he was a polygamist.

Argument 4. Based on the fact that Joseph Smith was guilty of fraudulent dealing in his famous Kirtland banking scheme.

Documentary evidence from such sources as standard encyclopedias was here introduced to establish the charge.

Argument 5. Based on the stupendous claim of divine aid, and consequent infallibility, on the part of Joseph Smith in translating the golden plates, and yet the Mormons have made about two thousand changes in the "Book of Mormon."

The present-day "Book of Mormon" was here placed on the table and side by side was also placed a reprint of the original Palmyra edition, and the Mormons were challenged to say that they are alike; the negative promising, if they accepted the challenge, to appoint two persons in the audience to read from the two books and prove that the changes had been made.

Argument 6. Based on the literary character of the "Book of Mormon."

Mistakes were here pointed out which were shown to be inconsistent with the claim of being infallibly guided in writing it.

Argument 7. Based on the identity of the "Book of Mormon" with the work of Solomon Spaulding, which identity is confirmed by some of the founders and friends of Mormonism.

The affirmative attempted to offset this with a letter from President Fairchild, of Oberlin College; but the negative was armed with the facts about the Fairchild letter and claim, and showed that Fairchild's failure to see identity between the two works was not because it does not exist, but because Solomon Spaulding had rewritten the work, changing it at some points, and that Fairchild had compared the "Book of Mormon" with the work as originally written, which is not the one from which the "Book of Mormon" took its plan or was based on.

Argument 8. Based on the failure of Smith's so-called "prophecy" of 1832 and the one of 1833.

Argument 9. Based on the immoral and infamous doctrine of polygamy, which is an essential part of Mormonism, but which its propagators sometimes attempt to deny.

Argument 10. Based on other indecencies and immoralities of the Mormon system and on the sworn testimony of men who were contemporaries of Joseph Smith.

Testimony was introduced here, showing that the system had not always been the same and the immoral practices indulged at one time might not be at another.

Argument 11. Based on the incredibility of the witness on whose testimony the whole Mormon system is founded.

American and British encyclopedias of world-wide fame and authority were here introduced in proof of the fact that Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, the three witnesses to the "Book of Mormon," all fell out with Smith, renounced Mormonism, and declared that the testimony they had borne to the existence of the golden plates was false.

Argument 12. Based on the fact that the character and career of Joseph Smith, as revealed in history, answer precisely to the predictions made in the New Testament concerning false prophets. (Matt. 24: 11; 1 Tim. 4: 1; 2 Pet. 2: 1-3.)

Throughout the debate the affirmative relied on 1 Cor. 12: 4-11 to show that miracles exist to-day, but the negative cited 1 Cor. 13: 8 to show that the miracles referred to in all such passages were to be done away and showed further that there is nothing in the passages cited that locates the miracles in the present age. They were then called on to meet such facts as Ex. 4: 1, 8, 9; Mark 2: 7-11; Acts 4: 14-16, where even the Lord conceded that the people would demand an exhibition of miraculous power by those claiming it and where miracles were performed in open daylight before the world, so that "all who dwelt in Jerusalem" knew it, and it "could not be denied." The affirmative attempted to meet this by quoting Matt. 12: 39 and claiming that faith must exist before they can work a miracle. The negative very candidly confessed that he was a decided unbeliever in their power to work miracles and then showed them from 1 Cor. 14: 22 that he belonged to the very class for which, according to Paul, they should perform the miracle of speaking in tongues. This they could never meet. When the negative pressed on them to perform a miracle, one of the gentlemen said: "If God sees fit for us to work miracles, we can." To this the negative readily replied: "So can I or any one else, if God sees fit for us to do so."

When pressed to the wall for proof of Smith's prophetic claim—and it was evident to all that none could be produced—they suddenly turned on the negative and wanted to know how he could prove that Christ arose, but were promptly told that he would attend to that proposition whenever it was proper to affirm it, and were reminded that they were now affirming that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

Before the debate began, they tried to get the negative to promise not to introduce anything outside of the Bible, but they were distinctly told that on Bible subjects the negative would remain in the Bible, but that in showing up the character of Joseph Smith he would go outside of the Bible where the facts are. When this point was pressed to a close issue in the debate and the facts were piling up against the absurd claim of the Mormon prophet, showing clearly his immoral character and opening the eyes of the people to the real character of Mormonism, one of the elders became so desperate in his ravings as to turn upon his opponent with the bitter language: "We could choke the wind out of you if you would confine yourself to the Bible." This did not in the least ruffle their opponent, who insisted that they would better spend the time in bringing proof, if they had any they were willing to rely on.

The negative, in closing his last speech, said he did not have time to sum up or rehearse all the arguments he had introduced in disproof of the proposition, but called especial attention to the one based on Smith's contradiction of the facts of etymology when he defined the word "Bible" to mean "good" and "Mormon" to mean "more good." He insisted that the affirmative answer this one argument in the next and last speech, but instead of doing so the gentleman making the last speech evaded the argument and only referred to it by saying that the negative had admitted that they had met all of his arguments but this one. This was a "square-out" misrepresentation of the negative's statement, and very unjust to him, seeing that he had made his last speech; but in the eyes of the people he stood exonerated from the charge.

The above embraces the principal features and facts brought out in this interesting discussion; and I trust that all who may chance to read this report will take their Bibles and compare the references and arguments herein set forth, that they may see the true character of Mormonism.

In justice to Mr. Moore and Mr. Henderson, I must say that they are sharp, shrewd, and good debaters; but the proposition they affirmed in this debate offered them no ground on which to stand, and their opponent proved himself more than a match for them both. They were as pygmies before his overwhelming arguments and pointed logic.

To be ambitious of true honor, of the true glory and perfection of our natures, is the very principle and incentive of virtue.—Sir Philip Sidney.

TEMPERANCE.

Among the virtues which are to be added to the Christian's faith is "temperance," which means "self-control." The religion of Christ is founded on self-control and self-denial. No man can be useful and happy until he has learned to be king over himself. This is the hardest battle any man has to fight. The man who gains the mastery over self is a greater hero than Dewey or Schley. Of the mastery over ourselves Epictetus says: "You are not Hercules, and you are not able to purge away the wickedness of others; nor yet are you Theseus, able to purge away the evil things of Attica. Clear away your own. From yourself, from your thoughts, cast away, instead of Procrustes and Sciron, sadness, fear, desire, envy, malevolence, avarice, effeminacy, intemperance; but it is not possible to eject these things otherwise than by looking to God only, by fixing your affections on him only, by being consecrated by his commands." There is no greater triumph than to rule oneself. A still greater than Epictetus has said: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

The road that leads to happiness is one of self-denial and temperance. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Paul says of himself: "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away."

But self-control, the truest and greatest monarchy, scarcely ever comes by inheritance. By growth, by cultivation, every one of us must conquer himself. As Rome was not built in a day, neither is this mastery over self acquired in a few moments. Daily we must deny ourselves, take up the cross, and follow Christ. We must agonize to enter that state of self-control which will be pleasing to him. The conflict sometimes becomes so terrible that, with Paul, one cries out: "O wretched man that I am!" How often does the cross seem heavier than we can bear! But before yielding and giving up the conflict in despair we are encouraged by the thought, "No cross, no crown," and, with renewed energy, press onward and upward, finding solace in the thought that peace cometh in the morning.

Heaven will be so grand and glorious that we should not expect to reach it at one bound. The conflict between virtue and vice, truth and error, righteousness and sin, is a ceaseless one. Each day we should grow nobler and better. Our daily prayer should be:

Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

Epictetus gives these helpful words in learning the art of self-control: "If, then, you wish not to be of an angry temper, do not feed the habit. Throw nothing on it which will increase it. At first keep quiet, and count the days on which you have not been angry. I used to be in passion every day; now every second day; then every third day; then every fourth day. But if you have intermitted thirty days, make a sacrifice to God; for the habit at first begins to be weakened, and then is completely destroyed. When you can say, 'I have not been vexed to-day, nor the day before, nor yet on any succeeding day during two or three months, but I took care when some exciting things happened,' be assured that you are in a good way." Some people, by a failure to control their tempers, make every one miserable around them and desire to plead in palliation that by nature they are "high-strung." This is no justification, and God will not hold them guiltless. Because a man permits his high temper to run away with him, and he kills a man, the law of the land does not hold him innocent. He must be punished. It is a shame to so lose control of ourselves that we really make our friends and associates dislike to be in our presence. "But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. . . . Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

Men must first control themselves before they can be leaders among the people. No man is worthy to be trusted until he has been tried and found faithful. The man who keeps his thoughts so pure that they make him the best companions is a noble man. Emerson says: "The great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the serenity of solitude." Marcus Aurelius gives us a true likeness of the perfect man in the following: "Men seek retreats, houses in the country, seashores, and mountains; and thou, too, art wont to desire such things very much. But this is altogether a mark of the most common sort of men, for it is in thy power whenever thou shalt choose to retire into thyself; for nowhere either with more quiet or more freedom from trouble does a man retire than into his own soul, particularly when he has within him such thoughts that by looking into them he is immediately in perfect tranquillity." Blessed indeed is the man who has such a sanctuary in his own soul. His life has been a pure and noble one. He has not harbored evil thoughts, has conquered the passions of life, and has risen to a plane of living that makes almost a paradise out of this earth. We cannot expect to lead pure and useful lives without controlling ourselves. The man who is ruled by his appetites and passions is never happy. To be good company for ourselves, we must store our minds well, fill them with happy and pure thoughts, with pleasant memories of the past; and, as Paul commands: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." The man who thinks evil, meditates evil, will certainly be found talking and doing evil. The man who is forever dwelling on the low, the sensual, and the vulgar must indeed think meanly of himself. The person who finds pleasure in searching the most hidden recesses of his soul is not a bad man. We may largely influence our thoughts by seeing the right things, by hearing and reading such things as we should. Thus bringing ourselves to think of the pure and the noble, our lives will be holy and blameless in the sight of God. Of the beings who thus live and control themselves it cannot be truly said:

We are the voices of the wand'ring wind,
Which moan for rest, and rest can never find.
Lo! as the wind is, so is mortal life—
A moan, a sigh, a sob, a storm, a strife.

With the passions subdued and used for the glory of God; with our emotions, feelings, and deeds purified and cleansed, our lives will be glorious and happy here and a treasure sublime "over there."
J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Odds and Ends.

Atonement.—Sometimes it happens that a piece of iron is broken, and in order to continue its usefulness it must be united. Three ways are suggested: I may cement the broken parts together, but the result is merely the strength of the cement, which causes separation rather than union; I may, in the next place, rivet the pieces together and obtain contact, but have gained the strength of the rivet as the result; but when I weld the ends together, I obtain union and the combined strength of both the parts, as at first. Which will you do—cement, rivet, or weld them? Sin has separated us from God, and three plans for reunion with him are in vogue: Satan suggests emotion, which is superficial, separating, transient, for the cement of emotion soon cools and the rough usage of the world shatters it and undoes its work; man's expedient is the rivet of morality, which, while it brings contact, can only boast of the strength of self-righteousness, and the strain of worldly cares and trials soon loosens its hold, and the separation is repeated; God's way is the only right way—the way of the atonement by Jesus Christ, his Son. Contact by faith, union through the new birth, oneness proved by the indwelling of the Spirit and the assurance of his love—this is the one true way. By faith "ye may become partakers of the divine nature." (2 Pet. 1: 4, R. V.) Sinful human nature is again made one with the holy, divine nature; all the strain and turmoil of life cannot separate them; the divine strength is ours through our oneness in Christ, and our strength is God's through our Christ-like endeavor. (John 17: 21-23.) "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4: 13.)

Giving and Surviving.—Professor Ridpath tells us that in the struggle for life, according to the law of the survival of the fittest, that particular blossom, or particular species of blossoms, which, under given conditions, secretes the largest quantity of most delicious sweets, will draw the greatest number of insects, and that the pollen thereof will be most widely distributed. If any particular plant, or variety of plants, through weakness or semi-sterility should have little to give, that plant would be neglected by the pollen-bearing insects. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." In God's arithmetic we multiply by dividing. By giving, we get; by withholding, we decrease; by losing, we save. God "gave," and Christ gave self and saved self and thus saved a world. God is love and Christ is love and the essence of love is self-giving. Without self-giving you do not love, nor will you be loved.

We spend our lives in searching for a key
To unlock the mystic door of happiness;
Weary at length, unsatisfied, confess
That we are blind, but hoping yet to see.

Amid the rubbish and the wealth of life,
Persistently we seek, and toil in vain
For what we could so easily obtain
With less of weariness and anxious strife.

Forgetting self, if we would turn aside,
Extend to those who need a kindly hand,
Obeying cheerfully the Lord's command,
The door to happiness would open wide.

Search as we will, love is the only key
That will unlock that door for you and me.

Preparation for Death.—To prepare for death does not make a convent necessary. We do not need to go into a cell and mortify the flesh and conjure up ghostly sights and drown all the voices by which our senses speak to us. To prepare for death is to do one's ordinary work faithfully and one's whole duty nobly; to prepare for death is to trade honestly, to give cheerfully, to study faithfully, to speak kindly, and to smile cheerily; to prepare for death is not to chase one bright thing from life's pathway, it is not to ignore one strong affection, it is not to give up one true pleasure, it is not to make one sweet thing sour or to make believe that a bitter thing is pleasant to take. The Christian watchfulness which our Lord commands is not a timid, cringing apprehensiveness or fear; it does not mean that we shall constantly be asking in awe-struck whispers: "Is he coming? Is he coming?" "Watchfulness" simply means that we are faithfully doing our everyday duty every day.

Men Wanted.—To be courageous, like Joshua; to be self-reliant, like Nehemiah; to be obedient, like Abraham; to be persevering, like Jacob; to be decisive, like Moses; to be administrative, like Solomon; to be above reproach, like Daniel; to be long-suffering, like Paul; to be prayerful, like Elijah; to be self-disciplined, like David; to be master of passions, like Joseph; to be bold, like Peter; to be self-surrendered, like Noah; to be Godlike, like Enoch; to be faithful acting, like Abel.

The boys of Harrow School must not be out at night after a certain hour. When, therefore, Head Master Longley, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, while enjoying a midnight stroll, saw two of the school-boys in the distance, he felt it necessary to arrest the law breakers.

After a stern chase, he just managed to catch hold of one of the lads by the coat tail; but this—alas!—came off in his hands, so vigorous had been his tug.

"No matter, I'll detect him in the morning, for his coat will be minus a tail," was Longley's reflection; but he forgot how Harrow boys stand by one another, for they are as clannish as canny Scots are.

In the morning when school met every boy had but one tail to his coat.

Thus Dr. Longley, cheated of his prey,
Felt all his anger slowly ooze away.

PERSONAL.

Brother Larimore is at Lynnville, Tenn., in a meeting.

Brother M. H. Northcross, of Franklin, Tenn., has begun a meeting at Roberson Fork, Tenn.

Brother R. P. Meeks will begin a meeting at Plant, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in August.

The address of Brother L. C. Chisholm has been changed from Spring Hill, Tenn., to Anniston, Ala.

Brother James A. Harding has returned from his Texas trip and is now in a meeting at Gainesboro, Tenn.

Brother J. N. Armstrong has been holding a meeting at Verona, in Marshall County, Tenn. We have not heard as yet concerning the success of the meeting.

Brother Paul Slayden was in the office last Saturday. He had been at home on a few weeks' vacation. While there he went to Dickson, Tenn., two Sundays and had one addition.

Brother E. A. Ekam preached at Fosterville, Tenn., ten days, beginning on the fourth Lord's day in July, the meeting resulting in eighteen or twenty additions. His meeting at Bethlehem, in Wilson County, Tenn., resulted in no additions.

Brother T. F. Dunn returned from Dickson County, Tenn., last Saturday morning. He had just closed a six-days' meeting with Rock Church, resulting in two additions—one by baptism and one from the Methodists—and four reclaimed. He went to Bridgeport, Ala., Saturday night to begin a meeting there.

Page 516 of the Gospel Advocate of August 16, 1900, contains two of the most timely articles I have ever read—one, on "Christian Edification," by Brother Lipscomb; the other, on "The Modern Pastor," by Brother McQuiddy. I wish every Christian in the United States had those articles and would read and study them closely.—John E. Dunn.

Brother A. Elmore, of Covington, Ind., passed through this city last week, going north, and gave the Gospel Advocate office a call. He had just come from Minor Hill, Giles County, Tenn., where he preached eight days and baptized nine persons. He preached twice at Appleton, Tenn., having two additions, both of them leading Baptists. He was at Schochoh, Ky., on the 19th inst., and will be at Allensville, Ky., on September 2, 1900.

"Cary Louis, the fifteen-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. W. Dorris, died Monday at noon at their home in the Tenth District. The remains were interred on the following day in the family burying ground. She was an only child, and Mr. and Mrs. Dorris are the recipients of much sympathy at the little one's untimely death." (Williamson County, Tenn., News, August 16, 1900.) We tender Brother and Sister Dorris our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement.

While I am quite sure that he is better off, I am also sure that in the death of F. D. Srygley the cause of truth has sustained a great loss. God may raise up a man to fill his place; let us hope and pray that he will. Truly, an intellectual giant and a loyal, godly man has suddenly left us, and left a void—the work no living man can fill. As to power with the pen, he was a Garfield; in gentleness and meekness, he possessed the spirit of a Moses; in loyalty, that of a David; and in spirit, that of the Master. May God bless his weeping wife and children abundantly in time and with never-ending joys in eternity.—M. H. Northcross, Franklin, Tenn.

"Elder J. H. Whitlock, whom we report in our local columns as being very sick, died at his home, in Alexandria, Tenn., on Monday night at 10 o'clock and was buried at Salem Cemetery yesterday afternoon in the presence of a large crowd. His wife is reported very ill. Elder Whitlock was a young minister of the Baptist Church. He was born in Warren County, Tenn., and was nearly thirty years old. He was pastor of the Baptist Church at Dowelltown, Tenn., and one of the best-known young ministers in this country." (Liberty Herald, August 15, 1900.) Elder Whitlock's little son also died, after an illness of several days, and Mrs. Whitlock is also seriously ill.

EDITORIAL.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

No one should be unhappy, for God made man to be happy.

Greatness always begins in the present, and not in the future.

The wealthy man is not contented, but the man who has few wants.

If you are wholly miserable, you have no one to blame but yourself.

"Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

Most of us, as we choose, can make a paradise or a desert out of this world.

A cheerful friend is like a sunny day which sheds its brightness on all around.

Men who are continually yielding to temptation are striving to follow Jesus from afar.

The Bible outsold any other book last year. The American Bible Society alone put out 1,406,801 copies.

Life is a great gift, and the man who lives to no purpose despises that which his Creator has done for him.

It is the duty of every man to be happy, for the happy man does far more good in the world than the sad one.

A prayerless soul is a Christless soul. Praying is the lisping of the believing infant, the shout of the fighting believer, the requiem of a dying saint.—Spurgeon.

If misfortunes come to us, we do but make them worse by grieving over them. God wants us to go forward, seeking to brighten the world and bravely meeting the new responsibilities that come upon us.

God provides most abundantly the main requisites of human happiness. Ruskin says: "To watch the corn grow or the blossoms set, to draw hard breath over the plowshare or spade, to read, to think, to love, to pray, are the things that make men happy."

The little boy paid his father a great compliment who being asked on one occasion where his father was, replied: "I don't know, sir, exactly where he is; but if you know of any one sick or suffering, I think you will find him there. He is always at such places."

How many people distress themselves in the apprehension of misfortunes which, after all, never happen at all! It is not so much sorrow, death, or disease, but rather the little daily anxieties which obscure the sunshine of life. So many of the troubles of life are only imaginary and might easily be avoided.

Nothing makes a prison to a human life but a defeated, broken spirit. The bird in its cage that sings all the while is not a captive. God puts his children in no conditions in which he does not mean them to live sweetly and victoriously. So in any circumstances we may be "more than conquerors through him that loved us."—J. R. Miller.

This is the protracted meeting season. The preachers are nearly all in the field, actively engaged in preaching the gospel. The columns of the Gospel Advocate are open for reports of their meetings. The work reported in a spirit of humility is calculated to do good. We would be glad of reports from those in the field. They are encouraging to others.

Many things are told of Napoleon. Among the things related of him is this: "When on one occasion he was exposed to great danger, a company of his soldiers rushed around him and received into their own bodies the bullets intended for their leader." They loved him so that they were willing to die for him. Christ not only died for his friends, but also for his enemies. What are we willing to do for him? How many of his followers are ready to lay down their lives, if necessary, for him?

We are too prone to murmur and complain when evils come upon us. These evils are really blessings in disguise, and we should not "quarrel rashly with adversities not yet understood nor overlook the mercies often bound up in them." Pain, for instance, is a warning of danger, and is necessary to our existence. But for it, though it be unpleasant, but for the warnings which our feelings give us, the very blessings by which we are surrounded would soon and inevitably prove fatal. God has been so gracious and good to us that we should never feel rebellious toward him.

There are a number of excellent preachers in different parts of the country who are doing a great work in the Master's vineyard. They are not sounding a trumpet before them, they are not claiming to do so much; still, they are fine gospel preachers and are doing a work that is far-reaching in its influence. They do not wait for any one to guarantee them a support, but they go, proclaiming the gospel of Christ whenever and wherever an opportunity is afforded. They make tents during the week for a living. The churches should delight to contribute to the support of such preachers. They have proved themselves to be worthy, godly, and self-sacrificing men; they have and are still doing much in planting the cause of Christ in destitute fields. May we not ask our readers to cooperate with these preachers in their work of sowing the seed of the kingdom?

Happy is the man who can look upon every failure and misfortune that comes to him as a blessing in disguise. It is hard to be sunny in the dark way, but it can be done. Sometimes God brings to us the greatest good out of the very blow that crushes our heart. Castelar says: "Under different circumstances, Savonarola would undoubtedly have been a good husband, a tender father, a man unknown to history, utterly powerless to print upon the sands of time and upon the human soul the deep trace which he has left; but misfortune came to visit him, to crush his heart, and to impart that marked melancholy which characterizes a soul in grief, and the grief that circled his brow with a crown of thorns was also that which wreathed it with the splendor of immortality. His hopes were centered in the woman he loved, his life was set upon the possession of her, and when her family finally rejected him, partly on account of his profession and partly on account of his person, he believed that it was death that had come upon him, when, in truth, it was immortality."

An aged man—one of the happy, sunshiny spirits that never really grow old—met with an accident which resulted in his death. He mistook one doorway opening upon a flight of stairs for another, and, in the semi-darkness, fell. A few hours later, when consciousness had fully returned, he explained to one who watched beside his bed how the mistake had occurred. "You took the wrong door?" she said. "Yes," he answered. Then his eyes flashed wide open, and, with the old cheery note in his voice, he corrected his statement: "No; it was the right door. God let it happen." From that happy faith he never wavered, and for him it was indeed the door that opened homeward. Into all our lives there come happenings that seem like dreadful mistakes. Things do not turn out as we expected, and instead of the bright and joyous path which we fancied was stretching before us, a sudden grief shuts us in. We find ourselves where we never meant to be; the pleasantness of our days is all swept away by some unwelcome change, and it seems as if occurrences so unexpected and bewildering must be blunders. But if we have used our best judgment and consciously chosen no wrong course, we need not be dismayed. However it seems, God will open for those who trust him no door but the right one.—Forward.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is having a fine sale. All who have seen the book pronounce it a splendid book and calculated to do much good. If you have not already read the book, you should send in $1.50 for a copy of it at once.

"Gospel Praise" is giving very general satisfaction. Not only is the music the very best, but the sentiment of the songs is scriptural and fine. Competent judges of music commend the ease with which the new music is learned, and yet the songs are very beautiful and elevating.

"The new book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' is well worthy a place in every home. Any one of the sermons is richly worth the price of the book. There are plenty of books written on what are termed 'controverted points,' but this book fills a place in religious literature long needed. I have never read a book written by man that inculcated holiness, purity, and righteousness so much and so earnestly as this. It is a rich legacy to bequeath to your children. Every home in the land should possess one." (F. W. Smith, Franklin, Tenn.)

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: The Bible says that every one will be judged according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad. Does it refer to our body or the church? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate, and oblige. RYAN BENNETT.

It means in his own fleshly body. While he is dwelling in the body he is being tried and proved. If the flesh overcomes the spirit and rules it, he will sink down and be lost; if the spirit overcomes the fleshly appetites and lusts and holds them in subjection, he will be lifted up and live. According as we do well and obey God, or evil and disobey him, will we be judged.

Brother Lipscomb: I want to ask a few questions through the Gospel Advocate. How far does an elder's jurisdiction extend? In other words, suppose we have a congregation here and meet every Lord's day and a member moves into our midst and meets with us occasionally; do the elders here have jurisdiction over him, even if he refuses to let his name be put on the book commonly called the "church book"? What does it take to make a man a member of a local congregation? J. F. SMITH.

Graford, Tex.

If a man is a member of the church of Christ, he is such wherever he is or goes. The Bible says not a thing of joining local congregations. Wherever Paul went he was a member of the church of God there, whether at Ephesus, Troas, Corinth, Jerusalem, or Rome. If a Christian comes into a community where there is a church of God, he is a member of that church. He became so when he became a Christian; and wherever he goes he is a member of the church of Christ, and if he fails to do his duty, he ought to be admonished, exhorted, and disciplined.

Brother Lipscomb: What does Christ mean, in Matt. 18: 8, 9, when he speaks of cutting off the hand and plucking out the eye if either of them should cause one to offend? Please answer in the Gospel Advocate. Our Sunday school lesson for a recent Sunday contained this scripture, and one member of the class said it means just what it says—that the hand and eye must be removed if they cause one to offend; that it could not mean anything else, as the language that follows shows. H. R. SHORT.

Rumsey, Ky.

I think it literally means what it says. "Offend" means to lead into sin. If the hand or the foot leads into sin, cut it off rather than let it lead into sin, is implied. The members of the body are supposed to be the seats of passions and lusts. If a man has any member in which dwell passions and lusts that he cannot control, let him cut it off rather than be led by the lusts into hell. The connection shows that it had special reference to the several lusts. It carries the idea that salvation is so important that a man ought to give up everything, cut off everything, or cut himself off from everything that draws him into sin that he cannot resist.

Brother Lipscomb: For the information of some good brethren, please give all the light from the Scriptures you can on the following question: If a member of some religious body who has never been baptized were to stand up with the disciples to take the Lord's Supper, should the deacon refuse to give it to him? W. H. CANNON.

Saratoga, Ark.

The Scriptures throw no light on the subject, for three reasons: (1) They had no religious bodies, save the body of Christ, that desired to partake of the Lord's Supper; (2) we have no account of anybody standing up to take it; (3) we have no account of deacons giving it to the disciples. Deacons supplied the tables of the poor and needy widows. The loaf and the cup were given to the disciples, and they gave to one another. They partook while sitting at table. I do not say that these orders were to be followed, but when orders of doing things are established we had better follow those given in the Scriptures. Again, I have never found where the deacons are authorized to say who shall or shall not partake of the Lord's Supper. It is the duty of the elders and teachers to teach that the disciples of Christ are to partake of it, and then if others do it, nobody is injured, save the one who wrongfully partakes of it. I would teach the truth as it is in the Scriptures and leave the rest with men and God. To him all will stand or fall.

Brother Lipscomb: I know of a congregation that has secured what is known as an "individual communion set," containing about forty small glasses. I want to know if it is any violation of any precept or example of the New Testament to use this set when partaking of the wine. A. O. COLLEY.

They did not have individual cups in the days of Jesus and the apostles. Microbes were as plentiful then as now. "He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it." (Matt. 26: 27.) "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?" (1 Cor. 10: 16.) "After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." (1 Cor. 11: 25.) "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." (Verse 28.) The significance and symbolism of it was, the many partook of the one body and one cup. This is destroyed by each having his own cup. The spirit that prompts it is contrary to the Spirit of Christ. They cannot act in common and all partake of one body and one cup. It would be no more a violation of the order for each to have his own private loaf of bread. It destroys the significance and tends to separate and destroy communion and brotherhood rather than promote it; it is a kind of pretentious pharisaism, and not a communion of brothers and sisters in Christ.

Brother Lipscomb: A. I. Myhr has sent me his leaflet, and I want your comment on it. The elders of Fairview church of Christ are opposed to the societies, but the secretary keeps trying to get their preachers in on us. Please give us all the information necessary through the Gospel Advocate, as we do not want to do anything contrary to the word of God. Pace, Tenn. M. A. BROWN.

I do not see any special good to come of a comment on the leaflet of Myhr. We have repeatedly given our reasons why we believe the societies organized by men to do work God committed to his churches and his servants sinful. Whenever these are requested, we can readily give them; but to comment upon the statements of their secretary, some of which are false and misleading, I do not see profit in. If every statement in the article concerning the working of the societies were true, it would still be sinful to build them up. If men can add societies of their own make to the churches of God, I do not see why they cannot change or add to any of his appointments. While I believe they, like the great monopolies in the business world, destroy all individual effort and weaken the sense of responsibility to God, and so lower the standard of morality and right, their success in raising money and making converts weighs nothing in commending them to me—no more than the success of Methodism commends it. If they are not advocating the truth, their success is the measure of evil, not of good. Myhr ought not to be specially blamed for trying to propagate his society if he thinks it right. I never could blame a Mormon for zeal in spreading Mormonism. I would like to arouse those who stand for the truth to be as zealous in spreading it. In the beginning those who embraced the truth were zealous for it, but as a rule they are not so zealous now as those who propagate error. It is right, too, for Christians to be tried and tempted to do wrong, but woe both to him who tempts and those who do wrong. "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." (Luke 16: 8.) They seem to be more zealous, too.

Brother Lipscomb: In the Gospel Advocate of July 26, 1900, I noticed Brother A. W. Runnion's query and your reply. I studied your answer closely, and could not imagine why you introduced the Christian life; with its trials and temptations, as an answer. As to my way of seeing and thinking, the query had nothing whatever to do with whether a man sinned after he became a Christian or not, but as to whether a man who believed upon Christ, repented of his sins, confessed Christ, and was baptized was a sinner; if so, was a sinner baptized into Christ? My first thought along this line was aroused when I read Brother S. I. S. Cawthon's comments on Brother Walling's position, and I must confess that Brother Cawthon's position was both new and novel to me; but, after studying and thinking upon several scriptures bearing on the subject, I was forced to the conclusion that Brother Cawthon's exegesis was true and scriptural. You, with all Bible readers, know that the Savior said that to believe upon him was the work or will of God. Now, if this be true, then when a man believes with all his heart—that is, without a single doubt—that Christ is the Son of God, and determines (repents) to turn away from sin, and turn to God, and means it, that man is certainly not a sinner; but surely that uninspired blind man was correct in saying he is doing the will of God and entitled to pray, with the promise of being answered. Then faith, repentance, and confession are all the works of God; and, Brother Lipscomb, I am not at all inclined to think that the believing penitent who demands baptism will think, talk, or do wrong before baptism, if the baptism is attended to at the proper time; but, instead, his mind will be at the right hand of God, where Christ sitteth. So a servant of God is baptized into Christ, and not a sinner. After baptism, trials and temptations arise and he sins; yet if he is true and faithful and corrects these sins at once by repentance, confession, and prayer, he is still not a sinner, though he sins by thought, word, and deed. Only the man who continues in sin is the sinner; that, I am sure, is Brother Cawthon's position. I hope that he will find time to give us his position, with the scriptures, in the Gospel Advocate. Please give this a place in the Gospel Advocate, with your comments, and you will greatly oblige many. I surely love the Gospel Advocate more and more and would certainly rejoice to know that it was read by every family on this continent. Every loyal child of God should take it and try to extend its circulation in the world. I pray God's richest blessings upon the Gospel Advocate and its Christian corps. JOSEPH R. HAND.

Enola, Ala.

I am not able to see the nice, hairsplitting points and reasoning of many brethren on such questions. I cannot tell when the fetus becomes a child. When it is born I know it is a child and person. I find nothing of these nice points in the teaching of Christ or the apostles and I do not think there is any profit in them. If they had thought it was good to tell the people they were without sin before they were baptized, they would have so told them. Instead of drawing these nice distinctions, they said to the common people: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38, R. V.) "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name." (Acts 22: 16, R. V.) "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5, R. V.) These place the forgiveness of sins and the becoming a child of God in baptism. Baptism is the act of faith in which God has said he would forgive sins and accept a person as a child of God, a citizen in the kingdom of God. All can understand these plain, practical statements, and drawing distinctions not made by Christ or the Holy Spirit leads to confusion. It is like discussing when the fetus in the womb becomes a child.

God is as actually and actively present in human life to-day as he was when he conversed with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, or revealed his will to the Hebrew prophets.—Exchange.

THE ORCHARD LANDS OF LONG AGO.

The orchard lands of long ago!
O, drowsy winds, awake and blow
The snowy blossoms back to me,
And all the buds that used to be;
Blow back along the grassy ways
Of truant feet, and lift the haze
Of happy summer from the trees
That trail their tresses in the seas
Of grain that float and overflow
The orchard lands of long ago.

Blow back the melody that slips
In lazy laughter from the lips
That marvel much if any kiss
Is sweeter than the apple's is.
Blow back the twitter of the birds—
The lisp, the titter, and the words
Of merriment that found the shine
Of summer time a glorious wine
That drenched the leaves that loved it so,
In orchard lands of long ago.

O, memory, alight and sing
Where rosy-bellied pippins cling,
And golden russets glint and gleam
As in the old Arabian dream
The fruits of that enchanted tree
The glad Aladdin robbed for me!
And, drowsy winds, awake and fan
My blood as when it overran
A heart ripe as the apples grow
In orchard lands of long ago.

DOING THINGS.

One day the philosopher and poet, Emerson, with his brother, was trying in vain to lead or drag a big calf into the barn; whereupon an Irish girl came out of the kitchen, and, putting her fingers into the calf's mouth, led it quietly through the barn door.

The philosopher-poet went to his desk and wrote with resignation: "I like people who can do things."

Thoreau was a thinker, but he could "do things" also. When Emerson was planting trees one day, Thoreau told him that some of the acorns were bad, and began to pick out the poor ones. This requiring too long, he said: "Put them all in water and the good ones will sink." And so they did.

Some persons have the knack of doing things; yet it is suspected that besides the knack, or the native gift, there is something of education in it.

Begin early to make yourself as capable and as powerful as you can. Nature gives us much, but nurture will give us more.

Learn the use of the hands. The handiest tools one has are the hands that God gave him. They are our natural implements of power. The more training we give them, the more power we shall have to touch the outside world. This is real "manual training."

Form the habit of observing things closely. Look at things, as the Germans say, "deep in the eyes." See what is in a thing. Find out causes. Study effects.

The most important results have come from observation. Newton observed the fall of an apple and began to think about it; a man looked at a church steeple through curved glass and saw that it seemed near, hence spectacles and telescopes; a boy observed the steam of the kettle lifting the lid, and, because he was thoughtful about it, he opened the door to the wonderful age of steam.

Many persons go through life without seeing things. They see, yet they do not see. God has laid about us vast and inexhaustible materials for being and doing. It is ours to discover and to lay hold upon the means.

Observation has behind it thought or reflection. Form the habit of thinking about things. One learns by asking questions of other persons; but one should be constantly asking questions in his own mind. There is a power called "reason" within us which can be wonderfully developed. Bring things to the bar of reason. Reflect about things; read and think; see and think; hear and think; feel and think. Many persons live largely by their senses, and very little by reflection. In reading books it is well to read a book that will give something to think about. It may be a novel. A good novel is to be judged by this question: Has it given me anything to think about?

Learn to be thorough. Most of the incapables in the world belong to the class of people who do nothing thoroughly. Thoreau was thorough, indeed. He made his living by pencilmaking; he resolved to make as good a pencil as could be made, so that no one should think it necessary to send to England for pencils. Take William Morris, the English poet and artist, as an example of thoroughness. He was master of six distinct trades. Though he was a writer; he gloried in doing things with his hands and in teaching others to work with their hands. He made things as good as he could. His motto was: "Not how cheap, but how good." A bit of art or a book made by William Morris was sure to be the best possible. People came to know this, and it made his reputation. Be thorough. Do your task well. If you are sharpening a pencil, do it the best you can. Thoroughness is faithfulness or truth. John Ruskin says that truth is one of the "seven lamps of architecture" and that a true architect will be as faithful in workmanship behind the eaves or beneath the cornices as in the open places. A true workman anywhere in life—a boy in the store, a girl at her sewing, a student at his books—will try to be thorough. Thoroughness is truth.

Be a master of something. There is a power within us called "will." We are made to gain mastery over things and to make things obey us, come at our call, yield to our uses. Be a master. Train yourself early and late—your sense powers and your mental powers—so as to gain mastery over things. Many persons are the servants of things. Some of them know it and feel it and they speak of themselves as "mere drudgers." It is true. They are that exactly, because things have mastered them, not they things. But others have learned the secret of mastery in their work. One can nearly always tell such a person. He has a joy of his own. There is about him an unmistakable air of lightness and freedom. He has mastered things and has become a king, not a drudge, in his work. Work is a splendid privilege to us all, but to get the full benefit of that privilege we must learn the secret of becoming its master.—Edgar Whitaker Work, in Wellspring.

PRINCE AND SWEEP.

There is a street sweep in Pall Mall, London, who thinks he knows by sight the finest and truest gentleman in England. This artist with a broom has a wide crossing not far from the entrance to Marlborough House, and in rain or shine he keeps it clear for the throng of well-dressed men from the fashionable clubs. He tips his hat to thousands of passers and thinks himself lucky when he has a penny for the service of sweeping the crossing.

Only one gentleman ever returns the salutation which the sweep is never weary of making. This is a stout, broad-shouldered figure, with grayish beard and pleasant face, whose appearance at the entrance of Marlborough House is always a signal for cheering. The Prince of Wales is fond of taking a short stroll in the afternoon, and frequently passes the crossing where the ragged sweep is stationed.

In an instant the sweep's hat is off, and he is bowing low. Other men never see him, but the prince never fails to acknowledge the salute by bowing gravely in return. When royalty has passed by, the sweep wields his broom with renewed energy, muttering to himself: "He's the only real gentleman in London."

A courtesy, even from the humblest, is always worthy of recognition. It may be only a smile or a motion of the hand, but the memory of it is treasured by the sweep, whose tribute of respect has not passed unnoticed.—Youth's Companion.

HOW A PORTER ROSE IN LIFE.

A young man once wrote to me from the country that he would like to have me get him a clerkship in a store. I wrote him to come down; that I would get a place for him. He replied that he did not like to come down until the place had been secured. I told him not to wait for that; so he came. The morning after his arrival in New York I took him to a large jobbing house, and told the principal man there that I had brought from the country a boy who wanted a place. "What position do you want for him?" I was asked. I replied that I would like him made assistant to the chief porter. The principal said that he could give him that kind of a position;

but the young man called me aside and told me he could do better for himself than to take such a place, as he had been a clerk in a country store a year. "Never mind that," said I. "Your being in a country store won't help you. Take the place I have got for you and do the work better than it has ever been done before."

He was not pleased, but took my advice, and started at wages of about five dollars a week; and I have no doubt he did the very best he could, for he was advanced several times in the course of the year. When he had been there something less than a year, he came to me and told me that he had received a proposition for three years at a thousand dollars for the first year, twelve hundred and fifty dollars for the second year, and fifteen hundred dollars for the third year. I told him that 'was very good, but not to commit himself for so long a time, as I believed there was something better and higher for him to do, and that he would soon be able to do it; but meanwhile to keep right along as he was, doing the work they gave him to do.

Before two years had elapsed he found a better position for himself elsewhere, and he achieved it by learning the lesson of beginning at the bottom and working up. He took up the new work in the same spirit with which he began the old—with the determination to master the work and do it better than anybody else had done it. He has been steadily going forward, year by year, until to-day he is worth about two million dollars.—C. P. Huntington, in Success.

A TENDER-HEARTED SOLDIER.

The following story, which General Lawton was fond of telling, seems to us another illustration of the truth that the bravest are the tenderest. All honor to the tired soldier who could still sympathize with a tired dog!

"The night of the El Caney affair," said the General, "when my division was marching back to El Poso to take up a new position the next morning, I was sitting at the side of the road with Maj. G. Creighton Webb, inspector general of my staff, and one of the pluckiest men I know. My men were filing past, and we watched them. They were tired out, but full of ginger. The day was just beginning to dawn when we heard some one coming down the road, talking at the top of his lungs. He talked and laughed and laughed and talked, and the men with him were chattering and joking.

"Here come the colored troops," said Webb; and, sure enough, the Twenty-Fifth Infantry came along. The man who was doing the talking was a six-foot corporal. He carried two guns and two cartridge belts loaded full, and the man to whom the extra gun and belt belonged was limping alongside him. The tall corporal was weighted down with his blanket and haversack, but in his arms he carried a dog, the mascot of his company.

"Here, corporal," said Webb, "didn't you march all night before last?"

"Yes, sir," said the corporal, trying to salute.

"And didn't you fight all day?"

"Sure, sir."

"And haven't you been marching ever since ten o'clock last night?"

"Yes, sir," said the corporal.

"Well, then," shouted Webb, "what are you carrying that dog for?"

"Why, boss, the dog's tired," was the reply.—Young People's Weekly.

No one who buries his talents can live a happy life. The most unhappy people one meets are those who have abundance, but refuse to use it in the way God intended. They are living for themselves and know it is wrong and are unspeakably miserable on that account, but cannot bring themselves to live otherwise. This is an infallible recipe for happiness. Let any unhappy man begin at once to do all the good he can, in every way he can, to as many of his fellow-men as he can, and his heart will begin at once to sing for joy.—Selected.

A bright lamp never need advertise that it is burning; the sun never need send a herald to tell men that he is shining. It is the unlit lamp that requires advertisement. The true life of a Christian will be sure to manifest itself. It is like a fire; it cannot burn and give off no heat. If we take care of the root, God will take care there shall be fruit. We need more of what the world does not see or hear.—Exchange.

PREACHING AND TEACHING.

(By David L. Sparks, in Gospel Advocate, Aug 23, 1900)

I have heard scholarly men who have taken a Bible school course say they could get more real information from some elder who had never spent a session at any school, but who was a man of good sense and who faithfully and continuously studied the word of God to learn its truths, than they could get from their college professors. The trouble is, the elders, as a rule, do not study the word of God as they should, and, like many preachers, they are not able to teach as they should. No amount of learning can be a substitute for the constant study and continual drinking into the spirit of the word of God. This study must be kept up constantly. There is no completing the Bible course nor finishing the study of the Book. If a man ceases to study the Bible, he loses his fitness at once to teach. No man is fit to get up and instruct an audience on a subject that he has not well studied before getting up—that is, he cannot interest people to-day with his study of a matter years ago. He must study it afresh for the occasion. Many elders—and preachers, too—make no preparation for teaching the people until they get to the meeting, then they turn, accidentally, to some chapter and read it and comment about it. Of course such comments are not interesting or profitable to others.

A preacher learned a sermon years ago, and, without refreshing his thoughts or increasing his knowledge of it or arousing anew his interest in the subject of it by a restudy, he repeats from memory of his former study, and thinks he has preached to the people. Such teaching and preaching will soon become dull and tiresome to his hearers. A man must refresh his own interest in a subject, study it anew, and get his feelings and heart on it before he can interest others. I once heard an old preacher, a graduate of Bethany in its palmy days, preach. After preaching, he remarked that he never studied his sermons before preaching. I could not resist the temptation to tell him that we learned that while he was preaching. By way of apology, he said he did not think, with his familiarity with the Bible and his general reading, it was necessary. I did not pursue the question farther with him, but when a man gets up to speak on the subject of religion, his mind and heart should be full of his subject; he ought to study it, refresh and enlighten his mind, and fill his heart with its truths. The trouble with elders—and preachers, too—is not that they lack learning, but they fail to study their subjects, to put their minds and hearts into them, are not interested in what they undertake to teach, and do not interest or profit their hearers. Deep, prayerful study and preparation ought to be made by every teacher who undertakes to teach others on every occasion he makes the effort. But a good teacher in a congregation, if he understands his work, is no hindrance to the development of the activity and life of the congregation or any member of it. But how shall he do this work? For this there are no specific directions. Each is to work with the ability God gives. No two teachers have the same ability or capability. Each one must work according to his own gifts or talents. But each one should remember the work before him is to arouse and lead every member to an earnest activity in the service of the Lord, that he may save his own soul. Keep before the teacher that getting every member to active work in perfecting his own character and in helping to save others is his work. Active work is needed to keep our own spiritual natures alive and growing. Engaging in the work himself inspires and fits him to help others. A man who evangelizes will feel the necessity of helping the evangelists; a man who goes among the poor and sick and needy will be inspired to help them and to help others who help them.

Lifelessness and indifference in churches grow out of one or a few doing all the work of preaching, teaching, visiting the sick, and relieving the needy. Enlist all in the work, enlarge the borders, and extend the boundaries of the labors of every church until the Christian religion, as a leaven, spreads throughout the length and breadth of the land. The idea of a preacher, teacher, or church of Christians confining their labor to one community and building itself up alone is contrary to all the precepts and examples of the Bible. As an active, working leaven, the kingdom of God should be continually spreading itself abroad. Every member should be a worker in his contact with men, whether in private or public, both by precept and example. The members, by their pure and godly lives, should constrain their neighbors by their good works to glorify God. If the members were taught and required to live honest and pure lives and withal to help the poor, the widow, the fatherless, and their lives were relied on to commend the religion of Christ to the world, it would greatly improve the condition of the church and the world and would obviate the necessity of so much preaching and coaxing of people to become Christians. Regular set speaking was not the order of the primitive church, but instruction as the work demanded. Lectures on machinery, with no practical work by the hearers to make or run machinery, would not be a profitable way of teaching mechanics. Practical lessons in carrying out Christianity are the instructions needed by the church and Christians.

There ought to be good, practical teachers of the Christian religion in every church who will teach the Christian religion by example as well as by precept.

On the subject of evangelists and preachers to go out to devote themselves to teaching the gospel to the world, I often doubt if there is such a class distinct from other Christians. In apostolic times the evangelists mentioned were gifted persons. Gifts were bestowed until that which is perfect was come. But all the church at Jerusalem was scattered abroad, both men and women, and they went everywhere evangelizing, the original says. While evangelizing they were evangelists; they were made so by the work they did. Every one has the divine right and is under obligation to preach the gospel, as he is able. So no one should be regarded as a preacher or evangelist, save as he does the work of an evangelist, and that work can be done more effectually by private appeal than by public oration.

When the work to be done is properly understood, there can be no doubt but that a good teacher or preacher, or more than one, is desirable in every church and town and neighborhood. The more qualified teachers, the better. We come up to the perfect model when every Christian, man and woman, would become qualified to teach others the religion of Christ. Every Christian then would be an evangelist.

While it is desirable that all should teach and preach the gospel, it is a mistake for those who do preach to all collect in one place and leave other places destitute. A number of brethren have moved to Nashville as a center, whence they could get out in different directions to evangelize, or preach, and the counties and towns around are left with no active teachers. I am sure this is a mistake, and always advise against it when consulted. When a preacher moves to a city to preach in the country around, he buries his personal and direct influence; and this is, or should be, the best and most effective influence. A man ought to be in the center of his labor, and so live that he will exert a continually growing and extending influence of a personal nature for good. If he is not in the field of his labor, he loses this best influence. A preacher ought not to seek places already permeated by Christian truth and Christian influences as his field of labor. The degree of destitution should measure the strength of the appeal. A country and a people destitute of the gospel is the divine call to a preacher to go to that community and live among them; and all Christians are preachers. When a Christian finds himself or herself in a community ignorant of the gospel, this should be interpreted as a divine call to him or her to go to work to teach them the way of life and save them. It is not right to move out of a wicked neighborhood to give your children Christian training. The best Christian training children can have is the training given by Christian parents in trying to save from sin those lost and condemned. Preachers ought not to advertise for churches needing meetings, but for places where there are no Christians in which the people are willing to hear the gospel. This was the primitive spirit and work of the gospel, and it must be restored before we can restore primitive Christianity. Every Christian is to feel he is his brother's keeper in teaching him the gospel of Christ and he is responsible for his condemnation in so far as he fails to teach him the truth of the Bible. If this true spirit of the gospel is cherished, and preachers will be found seeking places where they can save sinners, and every Christian will realize he is a preacher and is responsible before God for the death of those he neglects to teach, all these questions of order as to the elders and preachers will adjust themselves. Without this spirit permeating and leading the body of Christ, no order or forms can save the church itself from apostasy and ruin. While this is true, it is not meant to say the divine order is to be neglected; but the divine order cannot be maintained without the divine spirit in that body. D. L.

WHO IS THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH?

Everybody knows that the New Testament makes Christ the Head of the church, and of course that means that he is the Head of the church he came to establish, the one revealed in the New Testament, called the "church of God," and, when more congregations than one are spoken of, called "churches of Christ," both expressions referring to the same persons. The word "church" never means an organized body, in the modern or denominational sense of the word. When Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church," the word used means his "called out" ones, which simply means the people that would obey the gospel and thus become the body of Christ. If a preacher goes where there are no Christians and presents the gospel as revealed in the word of the Lord and a number of persons obey it, they are the church, the "called out" ones, at that place. They have come into Christ, and are his body at that place, and nothing more has to be done to make them the church of God at that place. They are now the Lord's people by birth, born into his kingdom. They need now to go on in the work and worship that the Lord requires his people to do; and, in doing this, different kinds of workers will be developed, according to capacity. No matter how much they grow, they are still the church all the time if they continue faithful. Some will develop into overseers; some, into teachers; and some, into different kinds of service; but all the while that this service and growth are going on they are the church at that place. They do not have to wait till they have full-grown overseers, commonly called "elders" and "deacons," in order to be a church. They are a church, a congregation of disciples of Christ, from the time they obey the gospel. Elders and deacons are a result of the growth of the church. Elders and deacons are not made by election and ordination, but by growth; and growth comes by learning and doing the work the Lord ordains or requires to be done. All congregations of Christians need elders, overseers, and servants in different capacities; but they are to be developed by doing the work. They are to "grow up into him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ."

No matter how often people may elect, or select, a man to be a blacksmith, that will never make him one; he has to become one by doing the work. So a man has to grow up into the work of the church. The apostles were made preachers by direct inspiration, and were just as good preachers at first as they ever were; they did not have to learn it; but now a man that becomes a preacher has it all to learn, little by little, and thus grows up into the work. So soon as people obey the gospel they are the church at that place, without waiting to grow; and they continue to be the church while they grow and on after they are developed into workers. Hence people do not have to be organized after obeying the gospel to make them a church; they are the Lord's "called out" ones already, and must go to work in order to grow "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." These are the sort of people over whom Christ is Head and over whom he reigns; these are the soft of people that obey the Head, the people that regard his word and go by his directions.

When churches are organized by ordaining officers, as is the usual custom, they then think they have authority and want to exercise control and begin to legislate. It is a great misfortune for people to think they are officers—men of authority—in the church. This idea is what made the pope and all the ecclesiasticism the world holds to-day. There are no churches on earth to-day that think they have official authority to command and control the Lord's people that are truly loyal to Christ, the Head. They think they can ordain men and thereby give them authority in the church—official authority—and that by virtue of their office they have the right to control. This is treason against the Head. All such really reject the Head, just as the Jews rejected God in asking a king, an earthly head. As long as people take the New Testament and go by that in all the work and worship of the church, they are loyal to the Head, and over all such as these Jesus reigns as Head; but every time the ecclesia, the "called out" ones, get up any sort of society or organization not known to the New Testament they set Christ, the Head, aside and set up for themselves, and thus place themselves against the Head, instead of being with him. Jesus says: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." (Matt. 12: 30.) No man is with Christ when he sets up anything as religious service not found in the word of the Lord, and when not gathering with him he is scattering abroad. Hence every human device ever introduced into the work or worship of the church produces division and discord and scatters the members of the body from the Head, thus bringing about strife, contention, and all sorts of trouble among brethren. Terrible woes are standing against those that do such things. There cannot possibly be unity in the body except by all the members being subject to the Head, and so long as they are all satisfied to work by the authority of the Head and do only the things the Head directs to be done and as the Head directs there can but be harmony in such a body; but when the hands want to do one way and the feet want to do another way, it is an utter impossibility to maintain peace and harmony in the body.

There is no authority in the church of God but that of Christ, for after he had died and risen again we have this language from him in the Revised Version: "And Jesus came to them and spake unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth." (Matt. 28: 18.) So all authority is lodged in him, not only in heaven, but on earth. Every time, therefore, the church presumes to ordain and do something as service to God not ordained by the Head it enters upon high treason, ignoring and setting aside the authority of the Head and setting up for itself. All such is lawlessness, and is the very principle that Paul calls the "man of sin." When God raised Christ from the dead, he set him at his own right hand, "and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) There is, therefore, not one feature connected with the church of God over which Christ is not Head. There is no place left for the exercise of the authority of men in the church. When the record says God "made him [Christ] to be head over all things to the church," it leaves no room for the introduction of anything not found in the divine record, and requires humble, earnest, and willing submission to all that is required by the Head. Creeds, confessions of faith, councils, synods, conferences, conventions, as well as every sort of assembly to legislate in any sense for the church, are rebellion against the Head. Every organ or instrument of music introduced into the worship of the church is rebellion, because it is not in the record. Every aid society, Endeavor Society, or missionary society ever introduced into the work of the church is rebellion against the Head, because not found in the record, and always causes trouble among the members, if there are any loyal ones among them. The wisdom that comes from above is pure, gentle, and easy to be entreated. All that God has ordained in the church is harmonious; there is no clashing, there are no two things inconsistent with each other. Men can have no occasion to divide over what the Lord has ordained and which stands on record in the New Testament, and really do not divide over these things. Division only comes when some are dissatisfied with the plain and simple word of the Lord and switch off on to side tracks; then the loyal ones cannot go with them, and thus divisions arise over the inventions of men, and not over the word of the Lord.

When I came into the church, a little over fifty years ago, the disciples everywhere came together on the first day of the week to break bread. The elders generally led in the worship, as preachers were but seldom present in the regular Lord's day meetings. They read the Scriptures, exhorted to obedience, sung, prayed, attended to the Lord's Supper, contributed; greeted, encouraged, and admonished one another; and heartily enjoyed the service, and loved each other as brethren. There was no trouble over organs, societies, or plans. All were satisfied with what they read in the word of the Lord, and all worked in harmony; while brotherly love, peace, and harmony generally ruled among them. Moreover, in those days, if you went among strange brethren, you were never afraid of being confronted by anything, either in the work or worship of the church, not authorized in the word of the Lord. Congregations were poor and weak, few in numbers, and they loved and enjoyed each other as brethren should. Preachers were few and far between in those days, and brethren would go almost any distance to meet and hear one. Now just so long as they were satisfied to walk in the old paths, this sort of unity, peace, and harmony prevailed among them; but as they became more numerous and stronger, and wealth began to increase, worldly pride grew and a desire to be like others began to develop, and things unknown to the word of the Lord began to be introduced, little at a time at first. Thus, step by step, the desire for such things grew and increased, until organs in the worship of the church, and societies in its work, and such like, were put in; and as these increased, respect for the word of God decreased and the Head of the church was less and less regarded as to his kingly authority. At the same time, also, divisions, strife, worldly-mindedness, and every evil that strife and contention could bring have grown up among those that should have been loyal to Christ and at peace with each other; and these troubles will go on and increase as long as brethren disregard the word and authority of the Head and follow human wisdom instead. I am never afraid of division among the Lord's people so long as they are all willing to follow the Head and regard his word; but unity, brotherly love, peace, and harmony cannot exist without this. Just as long as confusion, division, and strife exist, there is somebody disobeying the Head of the church and following the devices of the great enemy of souls; and as sure as the word of God is true, ruin lies in the pathway of all who lead in these things. What a wonderful blessing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! But it is horrible to dwell together with strife and discord. Where there are jealousies and strifes, there are confusion and every evil work. Why all are not willing to submit to the Head is very strange, when they know they are dependent upon him for salvation. It is also certain that those who truly love Christ will do his will and be content with his government. Only the heady and perverse will continue to disobey him.

Traveling Stones.

Many of our readers have doubtless heard of the famous traveling stones of Australia. Similar curiosities are in Nevada, which are described as almost perfectly round, the majority of them as large as a walnut and of an iron nature. When distributed about upon the floor, table, or other level surface, within two or three feet of each other, they immediately begin traveling toward a common center, and there huddling up in a bunch like a lot of eggs in a nest. A single stone, removed to a distance of three and one-half feet, upon being released, at once started off to join its fellows; taken away four or five feet, it remained motionless. They are found in a region that is comparatively level, and is nothing but bare rock. Scattered over this barren region are little basins, from a few feet to a rod in diameter; in the bottom of these the rolling stones are found. They are from the size of a pea to five or six inches in diameter. The cause of these stones rolling together is the material of which they are composed; it appears to be lodestone or magnetic iron ore.—Young Disciple.

A distinguished writer relates how in a conversation with George Eliot, not long before her death, a vase toppled over on the mantel. The great writer quickly and unconsciously put out her hand to stop its fall. "I hope," she said, replacing it, "that the time will come when we shall instinctively hold up the man or woman who begins to fall as naturally and unconsciously as we arrest a falling piece of furniture or ornament."

GREEN.

Mary C. Green, a precious gift from God, came to our home on the morning of May 2, 1900, and was taken from us by the same loving Father on May 10, 1900. Her separation from us means deep sorrow, the prostration of fond earthly hopes, an emptiness of bereavement instead of a fullness of joy in her continued possession; but the confident hope that we shall see her glorified "over there" consoles her mother and me.

PHELPS.

Thomas T. Phelps was born on February 24, 1859, and departed this life on May 6, 1900, aged forty-one years, two months, and twelve days. In 1882 he professed his faith in Christ and was baptized by Elder L. H. Stine, since which time he has lived a consistent member of the church of Christ. He leaves a wife and seven children, an aged father, and a host of friends to mourn his death. His remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground. BESSIE PHELPS.

GREEN.

Della Green, wife of Joseph B. Green, died at her home, at Pope, Allen County, Ky., on May 13, 1900. For several years before her death her health had been poor. She was born on January 1, 1870. At the age of nineteen years she confessed her Savior and was baptized into him. She and her husband were united in marriage on January 1, 1890. Her departure leaves a childless husband desolate in his solitary home, but he knows the comfort of the promises of the gospel.

MAFEE.

Sister R. A. McAfee, of Walnut Ridge, Ark., who was visiting her sister, Mrs. G. L. Ellis, wife of G. L. Ellis, Baptist minister at Martin, Tenn., died on July 21, 1900, of catarrh of the stomach, aged sixty-three years. The deceased had in early life united with the Methodist Church, but had long since learned the true and better way and for many years had stood identified with the church of Christ. Several children survive her. In conversation with her friends, while on her deathbed, she expressed her willingness to die, saying she was only waiting her Master's call. The silver cord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken, the pitcher is broken at the fountain, and the wheel is broken at the cistern. The dust has returned to the earth as it was and the spirit has returned unto God, who gave it. A SISTER.

WILLIAMS.

Brother Benjamin Franklin Williams died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. W. A. Cathey, near Isom, Tenn., on Sunday, August 5, 1900, aged sixty-five years. His remains were brought to Shady Grove, Tenn., for interment. The funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church by the writer. Brother Williams was one of the pioneers among the disciples in this country and was strong in the faith. He lived to see his children all Christians and happily married. He leaves them and a good, Christian wife in sorrow. Brother Williams had many estimable traits of character. He was especially kind to his wife and children. As a neighbor, he was obliging. At church his seat was rarely ever vacant. In this dark hour we point the bereaved to the great Physician, in whose wings alone is found healing.

HENDRICKS.

R. W. Hendricks was born on January 6, 1824; was married in 1851; and died on August 7, 1900, having been a member of the church of God for more than fifty years and for some time an elder of the congregation of which he was a member. He died at his home, in Bowling Green, Ky., in which town he had lived for several years. His neighbors testify of him that he was a remarkably smooth-tempered man, kind-hearted, and pleasant to all. He leaves a wife and seven children, besides relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. His family was tenderly devoted to him and felt their loss very deeply. The community turned out largely to his funeral and showed a very tender regard for him. He will be greatly missed. A great vacancy is left in the home, in the community, and in the congregation. Men so kind and so useful as was Brother Hendricks leave a vacancy that is hard to fill. All testify to his earnestness and faithfulness in all the relations he sustained. So he leaves to his family, his brethren, and his friends the fullness and richness of the hope of the gospel of Christ. This wonderfully modifies their sorrow in their great loss. He lived to a good old age and dropped out of life as the well-ripened fruit from the tree, and they will now think of him as safe and forever free from all the pains and sorrows of earth. If his family and friends will follow his example and serve the Lord faithfully and earnestly as he did, they may meet him where disappointments, sorrow, and sad farewells will be felt and feared no more. Forty Thicket.

Our meeting at the above place began, according to announcement, on July 11, 1900, and lasted eleven days. There were two persons gathered in for the Lord. One was an old schoolmate with whom I had stood up in class many a time in the sweet long ago just at the corner there in the old log house, only the bare walls of which are now standing. After about thirty years Katie and I met in the new house in a new relation, that spiritual relation in Christ; and if we are both faithful, after a while longer we will meet again in that other new house, where we shall be perfected. The very best of feeling prevailed and everybody seemed to enjoy the meeting. I shall long remember the good old friends of my childhood around Forty Thicket, all of whom wanted me to go home with them, and my only regret is that I could not go with all. With my family, I spent about three weeks with the boys about the old home, during which time I met many of the friends of the good old times. I am sorry I could not visit around more, but it was on account of the illness of our little one. During my stay I spoke at both Dunlap and Bethel on two successive Lord's days. J. M. M'CALEB.

"The Fashionable Summer Resorts of the Century" is a feature of the July Ladies' Home Journal, especially interesting from the glimpse it gives of the social life of these places at times when they were considered accessible only to the rich. "The Girl Who Fought in the Revolution" is the story of a young woman who battled for the cause of liberty on the field and made innumerable conquests of female hearts. She enlisted as a man and wore the uniform of a soldier. A contribution to the July Ladies' Home Journal that will find a universal welcome is Ernest Seton-Thompson's dramatization of "Wild Animals I Have Known," in which the author's friends of forest and plain are impersonated by children. Edward Bok writes of "The American Man and the Country," "An American Mother" writes on "Is a College Education the Best for Our Girls?" and Edward B. Rawson writes on "Letting Children Rust in Summer." "A Missionary in the Great West," "The Autobiography of a Girl," "The Voice in the Choir," and "The Story the Doctor Told" are all interesting features. Howard Chandler Christy's page drawing shows "The American Girl at Her Sports." There are numerous other pictorial features. The practical, helpful articles of the July Ladies' Home Journal are timely. It is published by the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, at one dollar a year, ten cents a copy.

Kansas Notes.

Brother W. F. Parmiter was near Topeka on the fourth Lord's day in July.

Brother Cain closed a meeting at Chalk about August 1. They had a good meeting.

I met Brother Rhodes on his return from the grove meeting, in Stafford County. He reports an interesting meeting, with seven preachers present.

Brother C. C. Houston preached his farewell sermon at Peck on the first Lord's day in August and is preparing to enter the Nashville Bible School. Brother A. J. Rhodes will go, too. Success to you, brethren. I believe you will receive good instruction.

I met Brother Graham a few days ago on the train. He was returning from Woods County, O. T., where he is doing some good work. His health is not very good and he has to exercise much care. He is a faithful, earnest preacher and is accomplishing much.

Brother A. C. Crenshaw is in Harper County in a tent meeting.

Brother B. F. Rhodes and Brother J. H. Irvin were at Howe Valley on the first Lord's day in this month. Brother Irvin has done much work there in days gone by. That's right, Brother Irvin; get into the field again. Your stirring appeals will be of much benefit to the people.

Brother George Henderson is doing some work in Harper County, but we will soon lose him from this part of the country. He expects to start to Arizona on October 1. He is going on account of his wife's health.

Brother O. M. Thomson will soon return from Colorado Springs, Col.

The writer was with the brethren at Rago on the fifth Lord's day in July and found them moving along nicely.

Brother B. F. Martin is busy in the field.

Brother I. D. Moffit is yet an unceasing worker.

The report comes to me that Brother G. F. Menard is preparing to leave Winfield and take up his abode in Colorado. The Winfield brethren will miss his careful and efficient Bible instruction. I trust that he may be able to awaken an interest in some new field. He is one of our best instructors in the Bible, being a graduate from two Bible schools. Many men are in the field preaching that would be glad to have Brother Martin's Bible knowledge. Success to him in his new field.

"There are a great many helps in numbers and display—the music of marching feet, the brilliancy of uniform and flag, and, above all, the military band, with its martial tunes which make the air vibrate with martial feeling. A woman in an American town hurried to the window not long ago, at the sound of the band, to see the soldiers marching. 'If I were a man,' she exclaimed, 'I should be a soldier myself; I know I could shoot if they kept the band playing all the time.' How many there are who can fight the battle of life while the band plays who faint by the wayside when they must go out in cold blood and sternly struggle with the hard duties of quiet days! But the noblest heroes among men and women are those who in silence and in quiet, unreported battles do their duty for Christ's sake and for the love of their fellow-men. The newspapers may not herald their bravery, but God recognizes it, and they shall have something better than the legion of honor in God's good time." (Homiletic Review.) How true that the greatest hero is never known by the world as a hero! He quietly goes to his work and fights the battles. Many of them are unknown, except by a few; but they will be on the right side when the great day comes. Do not become discouraged because the world does not recognize you as great. Christianity should be our chief concern every day. We ought to be willing and anxious to defend it everywhere. Our lives should be wholly absorbed in it. Man should do nothing at any time that he would not be willing to testify against himself concerning such action in the future. God will see it, anyway. Hypocrisy cannot be hidden from him who seeth all things. It is best to be sincere in all we do. D. T. BROADUS.

Where Thousands of Papers are Read.

There is, perhaps, but a single place in this country where almost all the newspapers of the United States are read. To the Exchange Bureau of the Ladies' Home Journal practically every paper in this country comes—an aggregate of nearly nine thousand. It is the rule to read each one within a day after it is received, so a large staff of trained readers is kept employed constantly. By this plan it is possible for the editors to keep in close touch with the reading public, and accurately informed as to the topics that are uppermost in the public mind in every section of the country. In this reading, such selections are made as may be of special immediate interest, as well as matter for future reference and notes that may serve as memoranda or suggest articles. Moreover, everything relating to the Ladies' Home Journal is clipped and filed. Thousands of dollars a year are spent in this work alone, but Editor Bok regards it as a very profitable investment, as invaluable information is thus supplied that could be obtained in no other way.

One can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. Send to the School for catalogue.

Cured By Swamp-Root.

To Prove What This Great Kidney Remedy Will Do For YOU, Every Reader of the Gospel Advocate May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root the one published this week for the benefit of Gospel Advocate readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy: "Kansas City, Mo., November 30, 1899.

"Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.—Dear Sirs: During three years I was frequently attacked with severe spells of sickness; many of these sick spells kept me in bed, dangerously ill, from three weeks to three months, under the constant care of the best physicians in Kansas City. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt sure they were the cause of my trouble.

"Some doctors pronounced my case gall stones, and said I could not live without a surgical operation, to which I would never consent. In May, 1898, I had the most severe attack, then the doctors said I could not live. It was during this illness that a friend suggested I try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I began to take Swamp-Root regularly, and when I had used only three fifty-cent bottles I felt fine, and was able to do more work than I had done in four years. It has made a new woman of me. I have only had one slight attack since I began to take Swamp-Root, and that was caused by being drenched with rain and catching cold. This stomach trouble had bothered me for about twenty years and had become chronic. I am now forty-four years of age, and feel much younger than I did ten years ago. My friends say I am looking younger every day. Five years ago I only weighed one hundred and four pounds; I now weigh one hundred and eighty-five pounds.

I freely give this testimonial for the benefit of those who have suffered as I have. (Mrs.) M. E. DALLAM, "Proprietress of Criswell House, 211 West Fifteenth street, Kansas City, Mo."

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorders of these most important organs. The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty. If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one; you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womankind.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, catarrh of the bladder, weakness or bearing-down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation, sediment in it after standing in a bottle or glass for twenty-four hours—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness; sallow, unhealthy complexion; plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, also a pamphlet of valuable information pertaining to kidney and bladder troubles, by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health—in fact, their very lives—to the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that all readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the Gospel Advocate.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores.

Among the deaths of notable persons during the week are Baron Russell, of Killowen, Lord Chief Justice of England; Collis P. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad; and former United States Senator John J. Ingalls, of Kansas.

The city of Washington has suffered from an almost unparalleled hot wave. For ten days the official thermometer has registered ninety degrees and over. The suffering of government clerks is great, and especially among the thousands of women in the departments.

The North German Lloyd steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, Capt. William Engelhart, which sailed from New York on August 7, 1900, for Bremen, covered 3,184 knots in five days, nineteen hours, and forty-four minutes. Her average speed was 22.79 knots per hour.

The first bale of new cotton was received in Montgomery, Ala., and brought ten and one-half cents per pound. The first bale last year brought six and one-half cents, and the first bale the year before brought five and one-half cents. The bale was sold at auction.

General McArthur has cabled the War Department a brief statement concerning the health of the troops in the Philippines. The number of sick in hospitals is set down at 3,863; in quarters, 1,261; making a total of 5,129 sick soldiers, or 8.47 per cent of the entire army in the archipelago.

The final meeting of the Superior Jury of Awards shows 42,790 to be the total number of awards made to exhibitors from all countries at the Paris Exposition. They are divided into 2,327 grand prizes, 8,166 gold medals, 12,244 silver medals, 11,615 bronze medals, and 7,938 honorable mentions.

Mrs. Henrietta W. Brand, who knew personally eight generations of her own family, died in Brooklyn, N. Y. She was born on December 31, 1808, in New Haven, Conn., and was the daughter of Rev. Dr. Horace Holley. She remembered well her great-grandmother. She had thirteen children, nine of whom are alive; thirty-eight grandchildren; fifty great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild.

The Tennessee Central Railroad will run its first train from Nashville to Knoxville on October 1, 1900. The train will run from Nashville to Lebanon over the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, from Lebanon to Monterey over the Nashville and Knoxville Railroad, from Monterey to Harriman over the Tennessee Central Railroad, and from Harriman to Knoxville over the Southern Railway.

The cheapest railway rate, next to the pass, is the emigrant fare from Russia to Siberia. To induce peasants to settle in the eastern districts of Siberia, the Russian railways have issued tickets, good for a family of any size, from any part of European Russia to Tobolsk at two rubles; from Tobolsk to any part east as far as Vladivostok or Port Arthur the price is four and one-half rubles. Hence for not quite seven rubles, or about $3.50, a whole settler's family can travel about four thousand miles.

The latest report from the advance of the allied forces in China is a cablegram to Vienna from Hongkong, announcing the capture of Peking; but the Austrian Government, like other European powers, is still without confirmation of this report. An official telegram, dated Taku, August 14, 1900, has been received at Rome, which asserts that the attack on Peking began on Monday, August 13, 1900; that Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Minister, has opened communication with the relieving force; and that the allies have established their headquarters at Tung Chau.

The July statement of the imports and exports of the United States, issued by the Bureau of Statistics, shows the imports of merchandise to have been $63,536,253, of which $21,884,068 was free of duty. The total amount is over three million dollars in excess of July, 1899. The exports of merchandise during the month aggregate $100,413,501, an increase over the corresponding month last year of more than $5,500,000. The gold imports for the month were $4,944,764, an increase of about two million dollars. The exports of gold amounted to $3,269,159, an increase of about six hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars. The silver imports aggregated $3,311,033, an increase of about five hundred and eighty thousand dollars; and the exports aggregated $4,913,658, an increase of nine hundred and ten thousand dollars. During the last seven months the exports of merchandise exceeded the imports by $70,093,792.

The State Board of Pension Examiners, which has been in session in Nashville for the past three days, has added forty-six third-class pensioners to the rolls. Tennessee now has seventeen first-class pensioners at $180 per year each, twenty-five second-class pensioners at $120 per year each, and nine hundred and twenty-six third-class pensioners at $100 per year each, making a total of nine hundred and sixty-eight pensioners, drawing a total of $98,560 per year. In the report to the comptroller, the board says: "The board has had filed with it 2,953 applications for pensions. There are 968 pensioners on the roll, seven have been sent to the Confederate Home, and 173 pensioners have died, leaving 1,805 applications now pending before the board. However, a very large amount thereof are worthless; but at least two hundred applications before the board are pensionable, and would be added to the roll if the appropriation justified it."

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Caulksville, August 14.—I have now been in this State one month. I first held a meeting at Mountainburg, Crawford County, and set the church in order there, with thirty additions, and baptized twelve persons while there. From Mountainburg I went to Jethro, in Franklin County. While I was at Jethro there were fifteen additions to the one body, or church. I left there, with the promise that I would return and hold them another meeting. I am now in a meeting at this place. There have been six confessions. I go from here to my debate, which begins on August 22, 1900, at Leader, I. T. I am to meet G. W. Derryberry (Adventist). The debate will last four days. May God bless the faithful. J. W. TOWRY.

COLORADO.

Pueblo, August 14.—I am now on my way east. I have been from home, on this trip, three hundred and eighty-one days. I have been in Southern Kentucky, Tennessee, North Alabama, North Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, and Colorado. I will stop and visit several congregations in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, and Indiana on my way to Burgin, Ky. This has been one of the longest trips I have made in my native land. It will ever be fraught with many pleasant memories of the friends and loved ones in the Lord Jesus Christ whom I have visited and the congregations who have helped in a financial way. As to the contributions you have made, may they ever "abound to fruit to your account." Remember that when another trip is made to our mission in West Africa it means help from many of the brethren. My intention is to be in that field again, if possible, by December 25, 1900. Send funds to Brother Frank P. James, Mercer National Bank, Harrodsburg, Ky.

STROTHER M. COOK.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Allen, August 13.—I was with the brethren in a meeting here which began on the fourth Sunday in July and closed on the fifth Sunday in July. The audiences were good, the attention close, and the interest increased until the last. One restoration was the only visible result. I enjoyed my visit and labor very much, and may, at some future time, give an article on some of my observations while here. J. D. FLOYD.

Marietta, August 11.—At this writing I am in a protracted meeting at Love's Valley. Everything is looking quite prosperous for a good, successful meeting. The meeting is two days old and there has been one confession. Brother Tom Davenport, of Coesfield, Tex., is leading the song service for us, to the satisfaction of all present. Brother J. H. Kelley, of Texas, and Brother J. A. Rose, of Eros, Ark., both able and sound gospel preachers, are with me and are nobly assisting in song and prayer. I will leave here on Friday before the third Lord's day in this month for Sulphur Springs, Tex., for a protracted meeting. Brother Rose will continue the meeting here as long as interest demands. My meeting at Sulphur, which closed last week, was in many ways a success. I desire to report it as soon as time will permit. J. B. ASKEW.

KENTUCKY.

Chestnut Grove, August 16.—I closed a meeting last Lord's day at Fisher-ville. On account of other engagements, I could stay but one week. The audiences increased in numbers from the beginning. One young lady obeyed the gospel. Brother J. W. Harding was with me in the meeting, and he is a true yokefellow. Although considerably past threescore years and ten, he is still vigorous and gives promise of much usefulness in the Master's vineyard, in which he delights to toil. On last Monday night I began a meeting at this place, with good prospects. T. Q. MARTIN.

Van Buren, August 15.—Brother J. K. P. South and the writer closed a meeting of eleven days with the church of Christ at this place, which resulted in thirty-one confessions of faith, and ten brethren confessed their faults, with the promise to live better lives in the future. The audiences were very large all the time, with good forenoon services. It was a glorious meeting and the word was magnified. Brother South is a true gospel preacher. May God bless him in this work of faith and labor of love. This was the seventh meeting in which the writer has assisted these good brethren in the last seven consecutive years, the result of these seven meetings being one hundred and sixty confessions. It is a pleasure to labor for and with the church of Christ here. We are asking for the old paths and trying to walk therein. God grant that these brethren may be kept in the faith as it was once delivered to the saints. Brother South and I will try to be together again in the near future to preach the old gospel. S. H. JONES.

TENNESSEE.

Unionville, August 14.—Brother J. R. Bradley, of Gurley, Ala., held us an eight-days' meeting which began on the first Lord's day in this month and closed on the second Lord's day night, resulting in six confessions and baptisms. We had good attendance at night and everybody seemed to enjoy Brother Bradley's preaching. He delivered many instructive lessons, and he shuns not to declare the whole truth written in God's revealed word. May he live long upon this earth to declare God's holy and righteous will, is my prayer. To God be all the praise. PRICIE MOORE.

Seven, August 10.—Our meeting at Greenwood began on the fourth Lord's day in July and closed on Tuesday night, July 31, 1900. The attendance was large from the beginning, with a few times excepted when it rained. The attention was unusually good, as was also the preaching. Brother W. T. Boaz did the preaching and answering questions (which he did by reading the answers from the Bible), except one discourse by Brother A. J. Compton. The visible result was three additions to the church. Brother Boaz and Brother Compton presented nothing but what they found in the Bible. We pray that they may live long and never grow weary of Christianity as they now see and teach it. A. H. BROWN.

Rives, August 15.—Brother John R. Williams began a series of meetings at this place on the fifth Lord's day in July and closed on Thursday night after the first Lord's day in August. The attendance was good throughout the meeting. This is about the fifth meeting he has held for the brethren here, besides monthly preaching during different years, in about three years. Instead of his preaching growing old and noneffective with our people, as is often the case with some preachers, it is more and more appreciated, especially by those who delight to hear the proclamation of apostolic teaching. He relies wholly on the gospel as God's power to save; he is indeed an earnest, forcible, and logical speaker. During the meeting thirty-three persons were added to the congregation—eleven by commendation and twenty-two by confession and baptism. Out of this number two came from the Cumberland Presbyterians. To the Lord we give the praise. B.

Scott's Hill, August 15.—I am glad to report a good meeting at this place. The meeting was conducted by Brother T. A. Smith, of Chestnut Bluff. It began on the fifth Lord's day in July and closed on August 8, 1900. When the meeting began, the congregation was at a low ebb spiritually. Some of the members were at war with each other, and many were careless and indifferent to the work of the Master; but by the earnest, faithful efforts of two or three young men of the congregation, assisted by Brother Smith, the offending parties came face to face, confessing their wrongs to one another and to the Heavenly Father and asking forgiveness. Thus enemies became friends, and all rejoiced in the Lord. This was considered the best service of the entire meeting. Brother Smith preached twice each day (morning and night) and taught from house to house. He stands by the Book, respecting the silence of the same. On the last day of the meeting he attacked innovations (there being an organ in the meetinghouse, some of us opposed to it, others for it), and in a spirit of love and tenderness, mixed with firmness and earnestness, he showed some of us, at least, that organs are wrong and cannot be used in the name of Christ. Brother Smith made a good impression upon those that heard him. Five young persons confessed their sins and obeyed the Savior and two erring brothers were restored to fellowship. The Lord be praised. W. A. AUSTIN.

Mount Pelia, August 13.—On the fifth Lord's day in July I began a meeting at Sharon, in Weakley County, which continued for ten days. We have no congregation or church house at Sharon, but, through the influence of some sisters who are greatly interested in the Master's work, we secured the Cumberland Presbyterian house of worship. Good interest was manifested throughout the meeting; both on the part of brethren and sisters and the world. Three souls became obedient to the faith. One Baptist who said he was not baptized in order to get into the Baptist Church, but because the Bible taught him that it is essential to salvation, laid aside the man-given name and took the God-given name—Christian—taking for his creed the Bible only. The meeting closed sooner than we intended, owing to circumstances which were unavoidable. We feel sure that others would have accepted the truth had the meeting continued. On the evening we closed (though we had no services on account of the circumstances alluded to above) two young ladies—a Methodist and a Baptist—came, with Bible in hand, that we might reason together. Others manifested an interest by asking many questions concerning things that we teach. Good must result from such interest as this. I hope to go back to Sharon next summer and hold another meeting. Some of the most consecrated lives I have ever seen are found in the persons of the sisters at Sharon. It never got too hot or too dusty for them; they were always found at their post of duty. May the Lord bless them in their zeal and devotion to his cause.

G. D. SMITH.

TEXAS.

Greenwood, August 11.—The meeting at Dicey closed, with only one baptism. We were hindered much by rain and wheat thrashing, but more by prejudice. I have promised to assist the brethren at Dicey in a meeting next year. W. P. SKAGGS.

Delia, August 11.—Our meeting, which began on Saturday night before the third Lord's day in July, was conducted by Brother J. B. Nelson, of Oak Ridge, Miss. We usually have a two-weeks' meeting at Delia, but the Methodists claimed one week, so we gave way and let them have it. We had one addition. We carried Brother Nelson over to Concord. I do not think the gospel had ever been preached at that place before. There were no additions at Concord, but the seed was sown. Brother Nelson promised to go back in the fall and hold them a meeting. When the Methodists got through, we raised the blood-stained banner and started again on August 2, 1900, and continued until August 9, 1900, with nine additions. Brother Nelson is plain and forcible; he hews to the line and lets the chips fall where they will. We had the Methodists, Baptists, rain, and black mud to contend with, but none of those things stopped us. The house was full every night. To God be all the praise. W. L. D'VORE.

Grapevine, August 12.—I began a meeting at Arcada, four miles north of Ladonia, on Saturday before the fifth Lord's day in July, and continued fourteen days and nights. The immediate results were: Ninety-eight were added to the church, eighty-one of whom confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized for the remission of sins. I never met a people that I was more impressed with than these. They have been at work for the Master, and this meeting was the result of an earnest work done by the church, with her earnest elders and deacons and Sunday school teachers, before my coming. There are a few "Sister Phebes" there that have done their part, so when I arrived all the members put their shoulders to the wheel and old Zion moved with great force, knocking at the door of the understanding of all the honest people in that community, and they listened eagerly to the message we carried; hence, night after night, they would come, a dozen at a time and often more, to confess Jesus. It was the grandest meeting of my life. While at Allen, I. T., some months ago, there were one hundred and ten additions, yet, taking all things into consideration, this was the best meeting. I go next to Mount Calm, Hill County, for a meeting. I will then go to Greenwood, Wise County. After this I will be open for engagements in or out of Texas. Write me at Grapevine, Tex. Pray for me, that I may be faithful to God and his word. T. W. PHILLIPS.

Catechism on Creation.

Who made heaven and earth? "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." (Gen. 1: 1.)

Was he alone? "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." (John 1: 1, 2.) "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." (Gen. 1: 2.) "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." (Gen. 1: 26.)

What means did God use? "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." (Ps. 33: 6.)

Out of what did God create them? "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." (Heb. 11: 3.)

How long was God in making them? "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth." (Ex. 20: 11; 31: 17.)

How long were those days? "And the evening and the morning were the first day. . . . And the evening and the morning were the sixth day." (Gen. 1: 5-31.) "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." (Ex. 20: 9-11.)

What did God then do? "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." (Gen. 2: 2.)

How long was this Sabbath day? "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." (Gen. 2: 3.) "Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." (Ex. 31: 15-17.)

Did God then continue to work? "But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." (John 5: 17.)

For what did God create heaven and earth? "All things were created by him, and for him." (Col. 1: 16.) "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." (Rev. 4: 11.)

Do they have an end? "The end of all things is at hand." (1 Pet. 4: 7.)

What is their end? "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." (2 Pet. 3: 7.)

Do they have any further existence? "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Pet. 3: 10.) "And

I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." (Rev. 20: 11.)

Then what shall be? "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." (Isa. 65: 17.) "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Pet. 3: 13.)

Who shall dwell upon the new earth?

Where is reserved the inheritance of God's elect? "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." (1 Pet. 1: 3-5.)

Till then what should we do? "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ; as obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance: but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy. And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear." (1 Pet. 1: 13-17.) "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." (Heb. 4: 1.) "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2: 8.) "But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes." (2 Tim. 2: 23.) "Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and forever. Amen." (2 Pet. 3: 17, 18.)

Ice-cold water is not so good as iced water—that is, water cooled by ice without coming in contact with it. The less of either, the better. The Changed Cross.

It was a time of sadness, and my heart,
Although it knew and loved the better part,
Felt wearied with the conflict and the strife
And all the needful discipline of life.

And while I thought on these, as given to me—
My trial tests of faith and love to be—
It seemed as if I never could be sure That faithful to the end I should endure.

And thus, no longer trusting to His might
Who says, "We walk by faith, and not by sight," Doubting, and almost yielding to despair,
The thought arose: My cross I cannot bear.

Far heavier its weight must surely be
Than those of others which I daily see.
O, if I might another burden choose,
Methinks I should not fear my crown to lose!

A solemn silence reigned on all around,
E'en Nature's voices uttered not a sound;
The ev'ning shadows seemed of peace
to tell,
And sleep upon my weary spirit fell.

A moment's pause, and then a heav'nly light
Beamed full upon my wond'ring, rap-tured sight.
Angels on silv'ry wings seemed ev'rywhere,
And angels' music thrilled the balmy air.

Then One, more fair than all the rest to see—
One to whom all the others bowed the knee—
Came gently to me as I trembling lay,
And, "Follow me," he said; "I am the way."

Then, speaking thus, he led me far above,
And there, beneath a canopy of love,
Crosses of divers shape and size were seen,
Larger and smaller than my own had been.

And one there was, most beauteous to behold—
A little one, with jewels set in gold.
Ah, this, methought, I can with comfort wear,
For it will be an easy one to bear.

And so the little cross I quickly took;
But, all at once, my frame beneath it shook.
The sparkling jewels—fair were they
to see,
But far too heavy was their weight for me.

"This may not be!" I cried, and looked again
To see if there was any here could ease
my pain:
But, one by one, I passed them slowly
by,
Till on a lovely one I cast my eye.

Fair flow'rs around its sculptured form entwined,
And grace and beauty seemed in it combined.
Wond'ring, I gazed; and still I wondered more
To think so many should have passed it o'er.

But O, that form so beautiful to see
Soon made its hidden sorrows known
to me;
Thorns lay beneath those flow'rs and colors fair.
Sorrowing, I said: "This cross I may not bear."

And so it was with each and all around:
Not one to suit my need could there be found;
Weeping, I laid each heavy burden down,
As my Guide gently said: "No cross,
no crown."

At length to him I raised my saddened heart:
He knew its sorrows, bid its doubts depart.
"Be not afraid," he said, "but trust
in me;
My perfect love shall now be shown to thee."

And then, with lightened eyes and willing feet,
Again I turned, my early cross to meet,
With forward footsteps, turning not aside,
For fear some hidden evil might betide.

And there—in the prepared, appointed
way,
Listening to hear, and ready to obey—
A cross I quickly found of plainest form,
With only words of love inscribed thereon.

With thankfulness I raised it from the rest,
And joyfully acknowledged it the best—
The only one of all the many there
That I could feel was good for me to bear.

And while I thus my chosen one confessed,
I saw a heav'nly brightness on it rest;
And as I bent, my burden to sustain,
I recognized my own old cross again.

But O how diff'rent did it seem to be!
Now I had learned its preciousness
to see.
No longer could I, unbelieving, say:
Perhaps another is a better way.
Ah, no; henceforth my own desire shall be,
That He who knows me best should choose for me;
And so, whate'er His love sees good to send I'll trust it's best, because He knows the end. —Selected.

He Can't Believe It.

He's blowing with all his might and can barely stir the recording hand from zero. There's many a big, healthy looking man who is weak in the lungs. Probably half or two-thirds of his lung surface barely knows the contact of oxygen. He's the kind of man, who, when a cough attacks him, goes galloping down the road toward consumption. Many such a man has found strength and healing for weak lungs and tissues lacerated by coughing and drained by hemorrhages, in the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The healing power of this medicine in pulmonary diseases seems little short of marvelous at times, so extreme are the conditions which it cures. The "Discovery" contains no alcohol, and no narcotics.

"When I started to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mr. A. F. Novotny, of New York, N. Y., Box 1437. "I had a regular consumptive cough, of which I was afraid, and everybody cautioned me and warned me concerning it. I was losing weight rapidly, was very pale and had no appetite, whatever. Now my condition is changed entirely. I do not cough at all, have gained eight pounds in weight, have recovered my healthy color, and my appetite is enormous. I can recommend your medicine to everybody who may be in need of the same, as it is a sure cure."

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore."

This is decidedly the handsomest volume that I have seen from the press of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The paper, the print, and the binding are all above criticism. Such a setting would make almost any book readable, and in this instance no stimulus of this kind is needed. I have read a large portion of the contents, and I rise from every reading with edification.

The arrangement of the matter is unique. Instead of placing the letters in one part of the book and the sermons in another, the letters are thrown in between the sermons. Only a few of the letters are published entire. As a rule, the editor has selected choice passages from them, such as are supposed to reflect most favorably the character and sentiments of the writer. The letters from which extracts are made were nearly all addressed originally to the editor, and they show the existence for many years of a close intimacy and frequent correspondence between the editor and the preacher.

F. D. Srygley was a writer of superior ability and in many respects the antipodes of T. B. Larimore. While the latter persistently refused to take part in controversies among the brethren, Srygley was engaged in them constantly; and while Larimore is diffuse in his style, diffuse at times to the extreme of redundancy, Srygley was terse, aggressive, and often very humorous. Yet these two men, so different, were excessive admirers one of the other, and Larimore shows by many things in his letters that he is ready to trust Srygley with all his interests. This is complimentary to both men. The two friends have been separated by the recent untimely death of the latter, and when the other is gone the brotherhood in the South will have lost their most admired preacher and their most accomplished writer. So pass from us, after short stay, the men who lead the people, giving place to others who will lead in turn, some in the same direction and some in the opposite. Let us trust that the combined result will be a movement of the people along the good and the right way.

J. W. M'GARVEY.

Being a Man.

Every young man has his ambition. There is no young man who does not intend to make his position next year higher than it is this year; they are all looking forward to something better. They desire to be manly. What is it to be manly, to be brave, to be noble? There is a class of young men who think that to be manly is to swear, swagger, and trample on the decencies of human life. They consider it manly to toss off their glass "like a man" and swear "like a man." Are these manly young men? We call them "fast young men." Now, there is not in this world a more contemptible set of men than "fast young men." It requires neither genius, education, nor intellect to drink and swear. Give the materials to the biggest lunatic in an insane asylum and he will do all these things as well as the best "fast young man" we have. We are brave—when? When we overcome that which threatens to overwhelm us. We are heroes when we are able to chain some cherished desire and to say to some powerful passion: "Be still! I am your master." To be bold against an enemy is common to the brute. Man's prerogative is to be bold against himself.

The excuses young men give for entering into dissipation are various, but they are usually summed up in this: they "must see a little of life." Why, has not God spread out before us, in his boundlessness of wealth, everything that can satisfy our noblest nature?

We want young men to be manly. There is nothing that dissipates manliness like drink. We want them to be noble men, to be free from every debasing habit, to be gentlemen. What is a gentleman? A true gentleman is noble, truthful, chivalrous, pure in speech and in life; a true gentleman inspires the fear of all bad men. In the presence of a true gentleman none dare say a low, ribald, or contemptible thing. Brave men love a true gentleman, feeling themselves nerved to do their duty better; cowards slip away from his presence like bats and owls before the sunlight.—John B. Gough.

The Intense Worker.

There is no true work done without enthusiasm. The artist whose heart is cold is a mere artisan; the student of science who works with no great humane enthusiasm for knowledge is only a mechanism more delicately organized than his microscope or his magnetic battery; the statesman who is simply a calculating player, with human pawns on the chessboard of a nation or a political party, is less a man than the humblest citizen whom the impulse of patriotism urges to the daily discharge of civic duty or pushes on to the battle's front in the hour of his country's peril.

The deepest secret of life, as well as the mightiest force of life, is love. Without love there is no enthusiasm, and without ideals there is no enthusiasm. We freeze our hearts by selfishness and stifle them by sordidness; we fix our eyes upon the little field circumscribed by our day's activities and ends. With no wide-reaching affection and no uplifting ideal, we make of our life a treadmill and of our duty an unwelcome drudgery. We disclaim the highest endowment of the soul and deny our sonship to God. Narrow faiths and narrow hopes put fetters on the spirit, and small affections keep small the heart.—Philip S. Moxom.

Getting Ready.

"The notebook is a very good thing in its way," said the professor, "but a pencil, jotting theories and information on a tablet, cannot take the place of a brain working them out into life. There are people who never get beyond the notebook stage."

We find them everywhere. They visit picture galleries and industriously admire, by rule, the pictures which some critic has told them are the proper ones to be admired; they haunt lecture halls and make copious extracts from the addresses of eminent speakers; they carefully read all magazine articles on "Just How to Succeed," by persons who have done it, and they harass busy workers with pleas for letters of advice; they have become perfect sponges in the way of absorbing advice.

Thorough preparation for work is well, but it must be for work or it amounts to nothing. Even in St. Paul's day there were those who were "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth;" always getting ready, but never really doing anything; and so as useless as an engine that is always getting up steam, but never starting.

The boy's advice on the subject of swimming is pertinent: "You can't learn how by standing on the shore, reading how to flop your arms; you've got to jump in and paddle for all you're worth."—Forward.

Being Worth Knowing.

A girl who was eager, ambitious, and restless for many things once heard two sentences that changed much of her life. They were these: "Would you be known? Then be worth knowing."

In a flash she saw how cheap an ambition hers had been and how selfish. Who was she to long for the friendship of high souls? What had she to give them in return for the treasure of their lives? Would she, as she was, even understand their language?

In humility and sorrow she prayed again—no longer that she might be known, but that, in God's good time, her own life might grow strong and beautiful, that she might prove worthy of all the blessings that were given her. Then, since God in his wisdom teaches us to answer many of our own prayers, she began to study, to read, to think, and to try to love greatly. So years passed.

Did she become known? Never as in her girlish dreams; but she found something far, far better. For she learned that to be known is nothing and to try to be worth knowing that one may be known is less than nothing; but to lift one's soul to highest living, because one will not be satisfied with lesser things, is a task whose joy deepens with every passing year and reaches on into God's eternity.—Selected.

F. D. SRYGLEY.

[Discourse delivered by T. B. Larimore at the burial of his lifelong friend, benefactor, and biographer, F. D. Srygley, on August 3, 1900, and reported by Miss Emma Page, of Nashville, Tenn.]

The opening song was, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," followed by prayer by Brother Larimore, and the song, "Friends Who Have Loved Us Are Slipping Away;" after the sermon the congregation sung, "Some Sweet Day." After reading—from Brother Srygley's own well-worn copy of the Bible, his constant companion for years—Job. 14: 1, 2; Ps. 23; and Rev. 22: 14, Brother Larimore said:

When Stonewall Jackson fell, Lee, immortal hero of the "lost cause," said: "I have lost my right arm." Some of us—I am one—lost infinitely more than that when F. D. Srygley fell; and the cause that can never be lost, lost much more when our dear brother ceased to write, to talk, to breathe, than the "lost cause" lost when Stonewall Jackson said, "Let us pass over the river and rest in the shade of the trees," and silently passed to the eternal shore. His life was brief, but eventful and important; his life and labors were such that all the ravages and revolutions of time can never erase the impressions he made. The present generation may never properly appreciate him, but generations yet unborn shall know his worth and speak his praises. Such is the history of men who have towered above their fellows. A costly monument marks the place where Burns, the peerless bard of Scotland, died in poverty and want, neglected and despised. America's own Washington, known the wide world over and almost worshiped now, was shamefully slandered, bitterly reviled, and relentlessly persecuted, while living as sublimely patriotic and unselfish a life as sage or statesman hath ever lived; and some poetic scribe hath said,

Seven cities strive for Homer dead,
Where living Homer begged his daily bread, history teaching that each of those "seven cities" claimed the honor of being the birthplace of the blind, old beggar-poet. The heartrending history of the human race is replete with such lessons as these. Few are the flowers, filled with the fragrance of love, we give to the living; many, bedewed with the tears of regret, we give to the dead. Yea, the hand that crushes the living sometimes crowns the dead.

Our beloved friend and brother, Fletcher Douglas Srygley, was born in the hill country of North Alabama on December 22, 1856. In August, 1874, he was born into the church, the family of God, "the household of faith," the fold of Christ.

*

Believing the Bible with all his heart; perfectly satisfied with the word, the will, and the way of the Lord; hence deeming it his duty, as it was his desire, to be a Christian—only this, and nothing more—he never "joined" anything, never belonged to any denomination. He was simply a Christian. It was joy to him to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints"—pure, unadulterated, undenominational Christianity.

*

His not becoming a Christian when he was a little boy, instead of when he was almost a man, was a natural result of a marvelous cause—a cause that should have never existed. The impression prevailed in that community then that children should not be encouraged to enlist in the army of the Lord. Possibly that same pernicious opinion prevails in some communities now. Why, no mortal may ever be able to explain. Satan may strive and smile to have and see it so, but Heaven hath never willed it. The will of Heaven should be done.

Some of the sublimest of the sublime servants of the Lord were lambs in the fold of the divine Shepherd of souls in childhood's happy days. If my information on the subject be correct, Jesse Sewell obeyed the gospel when he was only nine years old; Isaac Errett, when he was only ten years old; and David Lipscomb—known and loved, respected and revered, as a veteran of the cross who would die for his convictions any day—when he was only eleven years old. Neither reason, revelation, history, observation, nor experience justifies the thought that children should not be encouraged to obey the Lord.

At Mars' Hill, Ala., on December 22, 1878—his twenty-second birthday—our beloved brother was married to Miss Ella Parkhill, a sweet, Christian girl, scarcely sixteen years old, who made him a good, faithful, helpful, happy wife.

At Hopkinsville, Ky., on December 26, 1888, he was married to Miss Jennie Scobey, who did her duty as a faithful, Christian wife, so lovingly, so tenderly, so wisely, and so well that his brother, Filo, was constrained to say to me, a few moments ago: "He was an invalid and had been for years when she married him, and I verily believe she added ten years to his life." He never enjoyed perfect health.

More than thirty years ago I went from Nashville, Tenn.—my native State—to Alabama, to Rock Creek, to the new historic Rock Creek Meetinghouse. My mission was to "preach the word." The church there then numbered seven souls. As, the first time, I approached the door of that old log cabin "meetinghouse"—a penniless stranger in a strange land—I saw, standing about thirty feet away, to the right and in front of me, twenty feet from the path I was traveling and thirty feet from the door I was approaching, a bright, little, black-eyed, bareheaded, barefooted boy; a picture of health, happiness, peace, and contentment; perfectly beautiful—to me—then as, on memory's page, now. His cheeks were rosy; his eyes were black. Faultless in form and feature, he stood silent, motionless, and erect.

He was standing there to see "the preacher" as he passed, probably not caring to ever be nearer him than then. Instinctively I turned toward him, went to him, took his little right hand into mine, put my left arm around him, said something I deemed appropriate to him, and led him into the house. From that day to the day when, in the delirium of death, he, suddenly recognizing me, enthusiastically grasped me by both hands and thrilled my soul with an expression I can never forget, he was my devoted friend.

The body of that faithful friend, than whom no human friend was ever truer, lies, in the silence and stillness of death, before us.

Notwithstanding he was my bosom friend, having and holding my confidence, love, and esteem nearly a third of a century; my constant correspondent a quarter of a century; and, with jealous care, kept watch and ward over me, even as a brave, true husband shields and shelters the wife that he loves, as a fond and faithful mother cares for the babe that she bears, four and twenty years at least, if not, indeed, thirty; he lacked four months and twenty days of being forty-four years old when he went away, closing his eventful career on earth about fifty minutes after midnight, on August 1, 1900—morning of August 2, 1900—a date long to be remembered in sorrow and sadness by those who knew him, and therefore loved him.

As a child, he was always submissive, obedient, cheerful, hopeful, helpful, happy, and kind. His loving, unselfish devotion to his mother was simply sublime. Where she went, he was glad to go; where she was, he was glad to be; what she did, he was glad to do. He, though never very vigorous, deemed it not a burden, but a blessing, to make a full hand in the field, cultivating crops, and, while others rested, help his mother card and spin, wash dishes and cook—work with her, from parlor to pantry, anywhere and everywhere she went and worked. He simply bore, gladly and lovingly, as much of his mother's burden as it was possible for him to bear. Blessed be the boy who bravely bears his mother's burdens, and so fulfills the law of love.

As a husband, he was what every husband ought to try to be. O. S. Fowler, prince of phrenologists, says, in a chart furnished him long, long ago: "You will make as good a husband as any man." Those who knew our brother best and loved him most believe the peerless phrenologist tells the truth.

It is probable that no man on earth—even his own father not excepted—knew him more thoroughly or intimately than I, and I believe he always treated his wife and children with all due kindness, courtesy, consideration, and respect. To this, I believe, there was never an exception. Blessed be the memory of all such men.

*

His trust and confidence in Ella, the child wife of his youth, and his trust and confidence in Jennie, who blessed him so much longer than Ella did, were simply what a good husband's trust and confidence in a pure, faithful, Christian wife should be. He told me himself, as others have told me, that in his literary work he rarely permitted anything he wrote to appear in print till he had read it carefully to Ella, when Ella was his wife; to Jennie, when Jennie was his wife; that she might suggest any changes she might deem it important or proper to suggest.

*

Without an exception, he cheerfully adopted all such suggestions, and he assured me he had never had cause to regret it, while he had often realized that it was a marvelous blessing. He thus, because he believed it would be pleasant, gratifying, and helpful to her, as well as because he needed her help, consulted Ella on the day of her death—the darkest day of his life—and he told me her mind was as clear and her suggestions were as good that day as they had ever been.

*

Jennie tells me there was one exception to his reading everything to her before permitting it to go to press. He did not, because he could not, read all of his last book to her before it passed from his pen to the press.

*

I believe this is one reason why he was so anxious to review his last book, in the light and shadow of all that might be said about it. He realized it was his last and he wanted her helpful companionship and counsel in perfecting his last book.

I had hoped we might call "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" his "latest" book; but we have to call it his "last."

He trusted in, confided in, and relied upon his pure, Christian wife to such an extent that while she, in her sadness, misses him much, it is not impossible that he had missed her more, had she been taken and he left.

The magnitude of his literary labors was simply marvelous. Few have any conception of the amount of work that he did. Through both secular and religious press he reached the heads and hearts of hosts of the sons and daughters of men. He pressed and impressed, through pulpit and press, upon the mind and memory of many—of tens of thousands—intelligent, appreciative people some points of vital importance as no other uninspired man is known to have ever pressed and impressed them. He gave thousands of his hearers and readers clear conceptions of the grandeur, glory, and divinity of the church as a divine, not a human, institution, which, though old as the Bible, were practically new.

His literary labors began about twenty-seven years ago—when he was my schoolboy—and were a signal success from the beginning, eliciting complimentary comment from both secular and religious press, and continued till the sweetly solemn summons came to call him to his God.

His books—"Larimore and His Boys," "Seventy Years in Dixie," "Biographies and Sermons," and "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," written in the order here mentioned—have held a good sale, are still selling well, have all been and are an entirely satisfactory success in every sense.

The preparation of his last book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," for the press was purely a labor of love. He had long contemplated preparing and publishing a series of such volumes, and many had urged him to do so. In answer to an appeal urging him to bring out a book about me and my work, containing some of my sermons, he wrote, ten years ago: "I dislike to do anything he disapproves; but when he is gone, if I outlive him, that shall be the work of my life." Realizing that the day of his departure was at hand, he resolved to prepare "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" for the press, which he did in three months, being inexpressibly sad all the time.

A few hours before he left us he called for a copy of the book. I found it in the hall, near him, and handed it to him. He opened it, looked at it a few moments, mentioned a correction that, he said, "must be made," closed it, handed it to me, and said: "I would like to live to read it and all that may be said about it by the press, revise it, and perfect it; then I suppose my work would be about done. I now think of nothing else that I want to do."

It was joy for him to say, in the Gospel Advocate dated the day of his death: "The new book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' has now been on the market only a few days, but it has already won its way to the hearts of its readers. I have not heard a single adverse criticism on it, but it has been spoken of in terms of high praise wherever it has been read. I am not financially interested in it, but I am anxious that it have an extensive circulation for the good it will do." To do good was his constant, unselfish, controlling desire. Whatsoever he did, he did that good might be the result of it.

The story of his home life should be told, remembered, and appreciated wherever there are homes. Marvelous as were his literary labors, he did not exclude himself from family or fireside to study, read, or write.

Instead of shutting himself up where friend nor wife nor child could bless or kiss or caress him, he did his home reading, writing, and studying in the family room, with loved ones working, talking, singing, laughing, and playing all around him.

He had to deviate from this delightful rule in getting out his last book, however. In preparing "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" for the press, he had to examine an immense amount of matter that had accumulated as a result of a continuous, uninterrupted correspondence embracing a period of about thirty years.

This made it necessary for him to go from the family room—which he reluctantly and regretfully did for the comfort and convenience of his wife and children more than for his own—into the room just across the hall, where he arranged around himself—on the floor—the contents of trunks and boxes and drawers of letters and sermons and selections he had to examine.

He felt lonely, sad, and far away from wife and little ones there then; but that separation was necessary, and he made the best of the situation. There, feeling, as he said, that he was writing my obituary and realizing that he was prematurely finishing his life work, which was scarcely begun, always busy and always sad, he prepared for the press his last book.

His home has always been an abiding place of peace, purity, and love; absolutely free from the baleful, blighting influence of unhallowed strife, selfishness, affectation, and pride.

Scolding stands close to the head of the list of home curses. Though I have been as intimately acquainted with him and his as a twin brother longer than he has been the recognized head of a home, I have never seen the slightest semblance of sinful strife or heard even one sentence of scolding there. So far as I know, his home has always been free from all such blighting curses. His loved ones at home always received from him, as he received from them, sympathy and succor, instead of censure and scolding.

Once, a few months ago, when he and I were sitting on his front porch, about sunset, we heard one of his little boys crying. He asked to be excused, left the porch; returned, after a few moments, with the little fellow in his arms; resumed his seat, and said to the child: "Long ago, in the country called 'Egypt,' lived and reigned a wicked king, called 'Pharaoh,' who commanded his soldiers and servants to kill all the little Hebrew baby boys born in his kingdom. The Hebrews were his slaves. One Hebrew mother, who loved her baby, as your mother loves you; put him into a little basket," etc. Thus he told the story of Moses, while the listening child forgot his troubles and his tears.

His wife tells me that he, when at home, always prepared the boys for bed, immediately after supper, while she prepared the girls. Then, every member of the family being present, he related some humorous, pathetic, or otherwise interesting story in such a manner as to make it entertaining and instructive to the little ones, as well as to his wife; then they read two or three times as many verses of scripture as there were souls in their little circle—each one who could read, reading; and father or mother reading for each one who could not read, it being thus understood that even baby read as many verses as papa read.

The reading over and comments finished, the entire circle knelt, the baby in its mother's arms excepted, while a fervent prayer went up from that happy home to God; then the children were put to bed, and father and mother talked and worked till nearly "noon of night." If you think such a life is not above reproach and adverse criticism, please ask yourself the question: "How much better is the life that I am living?"

He was never haughty, proud, or boastful. I never heard him boast of anything. The nearest approach to boasting I ever knew him to make was when speaking of his last book, and he was too sad for anything he said to ever savor of boasting then.

When his work on that book was nearly completed, he said: "It will be the best book in the world." After the publishers had sent him a neatly bound copy, only a few days before his death, he said: "I may be mistaken, of course, but I honestly believe, the Bible excepted, it is the best book I have ever seen."

While this may seem to sound a little like boasting, those who knew him, heard him, and saw him when, almost in the shadow of death, which he knew was at hand, he said these things, know—absolutely know—the spirit of boasting was not there. Fletcher Srygley never boasted.

Long ago he said to me: "I am going to write me a book some time." Many a time did I mention that book to him, reminding him of the importance of writing it without delay; and in January, 1900, when he was wanting my permission to publish the last book he ever prepared for the press, I insisted that he should write his book first. His heart was set on the other, however; but, while preparing it for the press and keeping up his other literary labors, he wrote three chapters of his book—a work that no mortal can ever complete. I believe his book, had he completed it, would have astonished, delighted, and blessed the world and the church.

The warp of that book was to be a beautiful, pathetic, thrilling love story; the woof, the teaching of the Bible relative to the origin, unity, grandeur, glory, perpetuity, divinity, design, and destiny of the church, the church of Christ, the church of God, the church of which we read in the word of God.

As is well known, he believed and taught the church to be a divine, not a human, institution, of which every child of God on earth is a member by virtue of the new birth; and, therefore, claimed every other Christian on earth as his brother or his sister "in the Lord."

The more he read, the more he wrote, the more he thought and prayed, the more he believed these things.

He believed the name, the nature, the nativity; the doctrine, the discipline, and the destiny, of the church are all clearly revealed in the love light of God's eternal truth; that all God's children should be one, should be Christians—"only this, and nothing more"—and that all Christians should "love one another with a pure heart fervently."

All these things—the law of induction into the kingdom of Christ, the law of the Christian life—and many other things of thrilling importance—creation, redemption, and salvation—were to be woven into that book, his book, the wonderful book that he never wrote, the book that can never be written.

Thinking of that thrilling love story, that none can ever tell or read or write or know, reminds me of what those who knew him and loved him know: a pure river of truest, tenderest, sweetest, sincerest love flowed through his sympathetic heart.

This love and sympathy sometimes led him to do things that cold-blooded, stony-hearted men might consider even cranky; but he was never a crank.

To him and Ella were born two sweet little girls—Mamie and Jeffie. Before Jeffie was born, Mamie was taken from the cradle to the grave; was buried at Mars' Hill, Ala., where the little family then lived.

Ella, the bereaved child mother, was inconsolable. Sighing and sobbing as if her aching heart would break, she said: "O, if I had only kept one sweet little curl—one of the curls I loved so well and have so often kissed—how precious it would be to me now! But my baby is gone—all gone—and how can I live without her?"

The sun was sinking in the west, the day on which little Mamie was buried was nearly gone, when the thoughts of that "sweet curl" gave birth to that heartrending wail of woe. The Mars' Hill school and community were a family filled with sympathy, confidence, and love then—all glad to bear one another's burdens, "and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Brother Srygley, his own heart bleeding and almost breaking, in strictest confidence submitted a strange suggestion to some of us. The mere suggestion was all sufficient. The sun set, the moon rose, the stars appeared, midnight came. The bereaved, childless mother slept. The stillness of death reigned supreme over the community. Little Mamie's grave was emptied; her little white coffin was opened. The sweetest curl that kissed her marble brow was clipped—a precious, tiny treasure for which the mother sighed. The coffin was closed and gently lowered into the grave; the grave was filled. At the proper time and in the proper way the curl was given to the mourning, moaning mother; but she never knew the story I have just revealed.

Early in this year—a few weeks before his death—he went to Coal Hill, Ark., the home of his father and mother after their removal from their dear old Rock Creek, Ala., home. There, in the room to which he took his beautiful bride immediately after his second marriage, which was their home during the first year of their married life, and in which he kissed his mother good-by the last time he ever saw her, he wrote his wife the sweetest, and me the saddest, letter he ever wrote. To me he wrote: "I cannot stay here long; it is too sad."

*

That was his last missionary tour. He tried to preach at Marianna, Ark., but Dr. Robinson and others, knowing he was in a dying condition, sent him home.

*

At home, immediately after his return, he wrote me: "The doctors sent me home from Arkansas—sick. They say I must not try to preach. I cannot meet you in Murfreesboro on June 30, as I had hoped. We will be glad to have you in our home whenever you can come."

*

He preached from the pulpit as long as he could—longer than physicians deemed proper, longer than prudence would permit. Through the press he preached as long as he lived. In our hearts and in heaven he shall continue to live. Through the press he continues to preach. His influence may preach forever.

* * *

Solomon (Prov. 17: 17) says, "A friend loveth at all times;" and (Prov. 27: 6), "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." Neither Damon nor Pythias, David nor Jonathan, was ever a truer friend than F. D. Srygley. I know whereof I speak when I speak of his fidelity, friendship, and love. He was my friend, faithful and true, almost as long as "the Man of sorrows"—the Man divine, the Friend of sinners, the Savior of souls—lived, loved, and labored; suffered, sorrowed, and sighed, in this vain world of sickness, sorrow, pain, and death. In prosperity, in adversity; at home and abroad; in sickness, in health; anywhere, everywhere, at all times and under all circumstances his friendship was truly sublime.

*

He was too wise and he knew me too well to deem me perfect, of course; but he was not willing for man to mention my imperfections. He frequently said to confidential friends: "I'll criticize him when he needs it, if I want to; but no other man shall do it."

*

Not that he loved life less, but that he loved me more, he would have died any day to shield and save me.

*

Shall I revere his memory and try to shield and save and bless loved ones he has left in loneliness to lament their loss? If I am a man.

*

May the Lord love and lead, succor and shield, abundantly bless, and eternally save them all—give them at last an eternity of bliss with their loved one, "not lost, but gone before."

* * *

He was sublimely unselfish. When he was preparing his last book for the press, he called me to the telephone to tell me of a trouble that constantly interfered with his work. The baby of his family was seriously sick. Recognizing his voice, I asked: "How is the baby?" He replied: "The baby is worse." I asked: "Much worse?" He said, with an audible quiver in his voice: "She cannot be 'much worse.'"

Then he said: "I called you up to talk to you about a little matter of business that is troubling me all the time. They have promised to pay me for my work on this book. I feel all the time like I am robbing you or writing your obituary for pay. You agree to let me give you that money. Then I can work. As it is, I can scarcely work at all."

*

Not till I had earnestly argued the question with him and positively assured him that I would never accept a penny of it, did he yield the point; and when he did yield, he did it reluctantly and regretfully, I am sure. This is simply a sample of some of the proofs of his sublime unselfishness.

*

The last conversation we ever had together concerning financial affairs was an earnest effort on his part to induce me to accept from him money which he claimed was justly mine.

*

Those who knew him know there was no affectation, duplicity, or deception in these things. He was honest, generous, and frank; he said what he meant and meant what he said; he was sincere.

* * *

He believed and preached that "owe no man anything, but to love one another" (Rom. 13: 8) applies to money matters, as well as to other things. He practiced what he believed and preached. M. H. Meeks, his lifelong friend, confidant, and legal, as well as business, advisor, says there are no complications in his business affairs. It is not known or believed by those who knew him best and loved him most that he left one penny unpaid. If he did, it was unintentionally done; but it is scarcely possible that he did. Moreover, if he did, that penny will be promptly paid.

* * *

His name will occupy its accustomed place on the first page of the Gospel Advocate; friends who have loved him and who love him still will keep up his page, as well as they can, though knowing they can never fill his place; those who wish to tell of his merits, his worth, and his works can do so in the columns of that page; unpublished paragraphs written by him will appear there; and his loved ones now left without husband and father will, if they will—and I hope they will—continue to draw his salary till the remnant of this century passes away, at least. Such is the expressed purpose and will of the proprietors and publishers of the paper he helped to edit so long.

* * *

His writings were strictly—and, to me, sometimes seemed severely—scriptural, as well as intensely logical; and, while they were sweet and precious to those who knew and loved him, some who felt the force of his logic, the facts he related, and the scripture he quoted sometimes thought him unkind. Though I knew him long, intimately, and well, I never heard an unkind expression fall from his lips—never. A brother once said to me: "In this week's Advocate, Srygley says Brother ——— has lied." I was sure the brother was mistaken, but I examined the paper to see. Without one word of comment, Brother Srygley had simply quoted two brief paragraphs from the pen of Brother ———, either of which positively contradicted the other. That was all. This is a sample of Brother Srygley's hard sayings. To his writings I appeal for proof. Read what he wrote, that you may know what he said. Please permit him, our brother and friend, to speak for himself.

*

Christianity, pure and simple, is the religion he practiced, preached, and professed. The Bible is the only book he regarded as authority in religion. How often he read the Bible through, from beginning to end, no mortal knows; but it is known that he read it through consecutively ten times in the last ten years of his life—once each year.

He labored as an evangelist, principally among the poor, with whom he always sincerely sympathized. He said: "The Savior preached to the poor. It was one of the proofs that he was the looked-for Messiah that the poor had the gospel preached to them. The rich are able to pay for preaching, and many of them have more preaching than they are willing to hear. I want to preach the gospel to the poor; they need it and appreciate it, and in preaching to them I do as my Savior did."

I thank my God that his providence permitted me to spend the last week of our dear brother's painful pilgrimage through this world with him and his sorrowing family. I started home once. He did not protest. Had he done so, I would not have started. A few moments before I started, he said to me: "We have parted many a time, parted to meet again; but when we part this time, I think we part to meet no more." I started, but returned. I could not go. I am sorry I started. I knew not what to do. I thought I had to go. It was so sad to see him suffer, so hard to see him die. I thought we could not give him up. We all did for him all we could; we tried to do the right.

A few hours before his death—after he had been unconscious several hours—Brother Scobey said to him: "Brother Srygley, Brother Larimore has come; here is Brother Larimore." He opened his eyes wide. At first he looked startled. The next moment he looked surprised—astonished. The look that immediately supplanted that—his last conscious look—was a radiant expression of rapturous delight that swept me back to the joyous days of his innocent childhood. He was in a gently reclining position; he could not lie prostrate. Grasping me enthusiastically by both hands, he looked steadily into my eyes with an expression of tenderness that almost talked. I said: "Do you know me, Brother Srygley?" He said: "Yes." I said: "How do you feel?" He said: "I feel good." Then he closed his eyes and relapsed into an unconscious state that lasted till, without a struggle, he simply ceased to breathe.

* * *

Our brother left, to lament their loss, while in loneliness living without him, a wife, who tenderly loves him; Jeffie, Ella's only living child, about eighteen years old; James S., nine; Fletcher D., six; Sarah Alice, five; Augusta, three; Jean, the baby, only eight months.

* * *

Ella sleeps in the cemetery at Savannah, Tenn.; Little Mamie lies in the family graveyard at Mars' Hill—my home—four miles from Florence, Ala.; the body of the mother our beloved brother so tenderly loved rests at Coal Hill, Ark.—no two in the same State and all sleeping among strangers, far away from home and loved ones.

* * *

His body is to await the resurrection morn in Mount Olivet—Nashville's beautiful cemetery—the only city of the dead I have ever seen that looks, not lonely and gloomy, but bright and attractive to me. There would I bury all my dead and there would I be buried, if I could.

* * *

Though always armed with sparkling wit, charming humor, and ready repartee, our beloved brother was no exception to the rule: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." He was no exception to the rule: "Man was made to mourn." He has ceased to suffer; we are left to mourn. Let us all so live that, "some sweet day," we may meet him and know him and love him in that love-lit land of pure delight, where sorrow is unknown.

Expressions from Sorrowing Friends.

F. D. SRYGLEY AS A WRITER.

The announcement of the death of F. D. Srygley will carry sadness to the hearts of thousands who love the truth. I knew nothing whatever of his illness until a few days preceding the message announcing his death, which I received on the 7th inst., while yet in North Carolina. Notwithstanding the previous message informing me of what was thought to be his critical illness, the news of his death came as a shock, indeed, and it filled my heart with the deepest sorrow.

Many sentiments crowd upon me for utterance in connection with his seemingly untimely death, but I do not take up my pen to give expression to all of these indiscriminately. It is my purpose rather, in this brief communication, to write of him in his capacity as a writer, in which, during the past ten years, he put forth the finest efforts of his life; and they were noble efforts indeed. This was the particular field in which his rare talents and splendid capabilities showed forth to the greatest advantage; and how much—O how much—he will be missed! The very popular front page of the Gospel Advocate will miss his brilliant paragraphs, his wise and timely criticisms of current events, his rich and racy overhauling of cotemporaneous journalism, his ever-ready and wise application of the word of God as the first and final appeal in the settlement of all religious questions, and his pungent and powerful presentation of the simple teaching of the New Testament, with its one-church idea, as against the bewildering and misleading tenets and practices of all denominationalism. Along these lines, and especially along the line of the last-named item, it will be difficult to fill his place. I hesitate not to say, with deliberation, that along the special line of New Testament teaching concerning the one body in Christ, as against the idea of having different churches or religious bodies as upheld by the denominational world, he was the clearest and strongest writer whom I have ever read after. Eternity alone, perhaps, will reveal the vast good he has done to men in this special field. No difference what might be the question nor however much confused might be the querist, the front page of the Gospel Advocate, under his wise and skillful management, always conducted the reader intelligently and safely to the conclusion that there is one body in Christ; and he never failed to show, with faultless clearness and child-like simplicity, precisely how all men may become members of that one body.

Another marked characteristic of the work of F. D. Srygley as a writer was an impartial application of the word of God to any and every departure therefrom, regardless of what or whom it might affect. His wise and pithy utterances concerning institutional religion, as against the New Testament doctrine of individual piety and personal activity, supported by numerous passages and facts from the word of God, were a veritable mine of wealth to the thousands of Gospel Advocate readers. In his criticisms of human devices in the realm of religious work and worship, he spared no sort of compromise of the preaching and practices of Christians under the leadership of inspired men, but insisted that all religious work of every kind whatever could be done now in precisely the same way and with the same means with which it was done in New Testament times; and he consistently held himself ready and willing to accept all the consequences of this position, whatever they might involve. Every species of departure from New Testament teaching and practice in every department of religious thought and activity seemed doomed to fall before the pointed and powerful logic of his trenchant pen. Simple and unaffected in style and thoroughly conversant with the word of God, he was a giant among giants in his special department of work in the journalistic world. In its final analysis, his strength as a writer on religious themes consisted in his unswerving devotion to the principle of preaching and practicing in all things precisely as Christians preached and practiced under the leadership of inspired men and in utterly refusing to be led off into any sort of compromise of this position. This leads me to remark that, occupying this position, he was a regular stalwart in religious controversy, and it seemed an easy task on his hands to cope with and fully meet the ablest men who dared to join issue with him in debate.

In the books of which he was either the author or the editor the same fidelity to the word of God, whenever he touched upon religious themes, characterized him as a writer. Moreover, his steadfast devotion to and careful and conscientious study and defense of the position of preaching and practicing in all things precisely as New Testament Christians did illustrate how persons, by so doing, come to have less and less faith in human wisdom and ways and more and more faith in the wisdom and ways of God. When our beloved brother began his editorial career on the Gospel Advocate staff, he believed it not wrong to work and worship in the popular manner of modern denominationalism; but, knowing it was infallibly right, and could not be wrong, to follow inspired precept and example in all religious work and worship, he committed himself unreservedly to this principle, and it resulted, under the leadership of divine providence, in his thorough conviction that this is the only infallibly safe course that is open to man; and hence, that all men should pursue it. The Lord will thus lead all others to see the truth who honestly and truly desire it.

In having to bid our brother farewell for this world, we should say, of course, as we are taught in the word of God, "The will of the Lord be done;" and yet it is sad to part with him. He had done so much good, and seemed so well prepared to do much more. But we must bow in meek submission and murmur not. Personally, I have been drawn closely to him in recent years. I shall miss him—sadly miss him—as will many others in the effort to contend for New Testament teaching and simplicity in work and worship. May his noble work multiply itself many times in influencing others to a similar advocacy and defense of a "Thus saith the Lord" in all matters of religious faith and practice.

Louisville, Ky.

M. C. KURFEES.

Miss Eddie Williams, Dickson, Tenn., a truly devoted disciple of Christ, writing Brother Larimore on August 3, 1900, says:

"My Beloved Friend and Brother: Notice of Brother Srygley's sad death has reached us. I can only 'weep with those who weep,' but my tears, that seem to have been waiting for the sorrowful summons, are tears of real sorrow. I loved him for his own sake; I loved him for his work's sake; I loved him for your sake, loved him because I knew he tenderly and truly and constantly loved you. I know something of what he was to you; I know something of what you were to him. From the day I was born into the family of God to the day of Brother Srygley's death he was my teacher, and through pages and paragraphs written by his tireless hand he shall be my teacher still—teach me till I, too, shall be summoned home. Much of the little I know I have learned from him. I feel and realize that I have lost a friend. I know it was joy to him to complete the book he finished just before he dropped his pen to wield it nevermore. I am so glad. I believe it was providential. He is gone—gone 'where the sad heart knows no sorrow, and the weary are at rest.' It seems that we need him now more than ever before, and I do not see how we can do without him; but 'the Lord will provide' while our loved one rests. Once you called 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore' 'Brother Srygley's latest love offering to me.' Well, you were correct. His last book, as well as all else he ever wrote about you, breathes the tenderest devotion. Once, and only once, so far as I have ever heard or seen or suspected, when writing of you, he mentioned a possible weakness; and then, not satisfied to leave it thus, he added, 'But, after all,' etc.—language that went straight to my heart, for it removed every semblance of the critic and left only your loving friend. I love 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' his last book (how sad the sound, how sad the sense!) as I love no other production of an uninspired pen. I can never speak of it as I speak of other books. To me it is more than a book—a living, breathing spirit, almost divine, full of purity, devotion, and love. There is something within it from beginning to end that I can neither describe nor understand; that thrills my heart, brings tears to my eyes, fills my soul—a swelling tide that almost bears me on its bosom up to the bosom of my God. To me it is too sacred to be treated as I treat other books. I thank my God, and the world should thank him, that our beloved brother lived to leave so rich a legacy to the human race, 'the brotherhood of man.' Still, when I think of this, I sigh, remembering that, had our friend and brother lived, the book that we must call 'his last' had been the first of a series of volumes of letters and sermons drawn from the same source that had been worth more to the world than all the gold and gems and pearls the sons of men have ever seen. Well, we must submit to the inevitable, and should try to make the best of the situation. Joy may spring from every sigh; bliss, from every tear. 'All things work together for good to them that love God.'"

Beeville, Texas.—Dear Brother Larimore: Your letter of August 7 was read upon my return home. I have made one or two efforts to write before today, but each time I have felt too sad to write. Brother Srygley's death was indeed a great shock to me. Poor, dear Fletcher—just in the prime of strong manhood to be cut down by the cruel enemy of life! It is sad to know I shall see his face no more. His busy hands are folded, and his tireless mind is resting at the close of his earthly day. From the humble walks of life he climbed without much effort to a wide reputation, and up still higher to the glorious sunlight of God's redeeming love. When Saladin looked at the sword of Richard Cœur de Lion, he wondered that it should have wrought such mighty deeds. The English king bared his arm and said: "It was not the sword that did those deeds; it was the arm of Richard." Brother Srygley possessed that happy and beautiful faculty of placing himself wholly in the hands of our Heavenly Father for the accomplishment of great deeds, and his beautiful simplicity and humility suggested the thought of giving to God all the praise. I knew him nearly twenty-three years, and I used to think before the currents of life's ocean drifted us apart that I knew him better than any one else. We told each other our plans, and loved one another "without dissimulation." Little, evil, jealous, envious minds have been tireless in their efforts to pull him down and stop his marvelous upward way; but all such efforts seemed to strengthen him for continued and successful, onward and upward struggles. He lived not for time, not for the fleeting baubles that glitter in the sunlight of the passing day, but for the unending years of joyful, happy praise in "the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—David Hardison.

[Brother Larimore permits the publication of this letter from David R. Hardison, one of the purest, bravest, and best of his "boys," because "Brother Davy" is so widely, favorably, and well known in Tennessee, his native State, as well as in Texas and elsewhere, and because he knows how tenderly and devotedly David and Fletcher long loved one another, and how grateful David is for what Fletcher did for him in the long, long ago.]

Kentuckytown, Texas.—Dear Brother Larimore: Your letter containing the sad news of Brother Srygley's departure was received on Friday, August 10. Realizing that the loss not only to his family and yourself, but also to the church, is irreparable, we are overwhelmed with grief. We had hoped our dear brother would live many years to fight the battles of the Lord, to defend the gospel of Christ, which he did so wisely and well, and to write many other books to bless the world; but we are very thankful that God spared him long enough to bring out "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," his last and best work. Our dear brother wanted to make it his masterpiece, and he did. It will live on and continue to bless the world when you, too, my beloved brother, shall have gone to your reward. Understanding and appreciating the friendship existing between you and F. D. Srygley, your friends who love you tenderly, truly, and devotedly are praying earnestly and constantly that God may bless and sustain you in this, the severest affliction of your life; and the dear, loving Lord, who wept with the grief-stricken sisters at the grave of their brother, loves and sympathizes with you infinitely more than any earthly being can. Beloved, ever remember that your loss is our brother's infinite gain; that we need you more than ever since he went away; that you will be separated only a little while, and try to bear the separation bravely and live for the sake of those who need you so much and love you so perfectly. Then, methinks, when God shall call you home to that bright world, where there will be no sad partings, neither sorrow nor tears, that much-loved friend and brother, with thousands of others whom you have blessed, will be at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for you.

There, in the regions of the blest,
Without a foe that can molest,
You'll e'er enjoy the promised rest.

May the dear Lord abundantly bless you and all of your loved ones.—Ella Parrish.

Fayetteville, Tenn.—My Dear Friend and Brother: I have just heard of the death of Brother Srygley, and I write a line to say how very much I am distressed because of it. He is a man who will be very much missed, and one whom, it seems to me, we can ill spare. As a minister, as a writer, there is no one that can fill his place; and a man of so many lovable qualities must have been very dear to his family and friends in private life. I know that you and he loved each other like David and Jonathan, and that your heart is almost broken over the loss, even though I know that you are in this, as in all other things, submissive to the divine will. Dear Brother Larimore, I pray that the Lord will comfort and sustain all his friends and dear ones in this hour of their great bereavement and help all—every one—who loved him to so live that they may meet him in a better world to spend the ages of a blissful eternity together.—Silena M. Holman.

Most sincerely do we regret to learn of the death of Elder F. D. Srygley, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, and the man with whom we had a written discussion on the question of the "universal church." Mr. Srygley was a clever gentleman, a bold writer, far above the average in intellect, a hard worker, and a man that dared to speak out his convictions. We did not accept his conclusions or believe his doctrines, but we admired the boldness and fidelity with which he stood by his faith. The "Campbellite" people have certainly lost one of their very best pleaders and one of their raciest and most capable editors.—American Baptist Flag.

We were surprised and shocked last Saturday (August 11) to hear of the death of F. D. Srygley, one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate. Brother Srygley was a good man and a plain, honest writer. He tried to obey as far as possible the mandate: "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." Consequently we never found him advocating any methods to which the apostles give no sanction or trying to bind upon the Christian conscience things that the Lord has not commanded.—Octographic Review.

Where is the Promise of His Coming?

"I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance," said the apostle Peter, "that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Savior: knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." They become soaked in iniquity, and in their security and the exuberance of their wickedness they defy God openly. Not content with disobeying him, they scoff at him, they mockingly call his curse upon themselves, they dare him to bring forth his terrors. Such are these scoffers. In Isaiah's day there were men of that kind. Speaking of them, the prophet said: "Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were, with a cart rope: that say, Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it: and let the counsel [prophecy of wrath] of the holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!" Jeremiah complains of them: "Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now." In every case such talk from the lips of men showed that their hearts had gone far from God and that the measure of their wickedness was nearly full. Soon afterwards the rebellious Jews were smitten by the armies of Nebuchadnezzar, and a multitude fell by the sword. Those that survived were carried as captives into Babylon. There they mourned and wept; there they had opportunity to contemplate their folly and to view the fidelity of God—how he carried out every threat of his counsel with power.

Near the end of the world, in the "last days," says the apostle of Christ, scoffers of that type shall again figure in the world. With incredulous smile they listen to the words of God—his promises and his threats. They hear that the Christ, in whom they believe not, shall come again with power, with the hosts of his holy angels, to judge the world and to take vengeance "on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." They hear it and turn away with a laugh, and say: "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

Peter, your "last days" are here; and how much longer till the day of the Lord? The world is rife with infidelity. Some believe in no God; some believe that he is, but cannot go beyond the laws of the physical universe. Their "science," falsely so-called, denies the possibility of a catastrophe; and as for miracles, who has ever seen a miracle? Miracles are myths. Since the days of the fathers all things continue, even until now, as they were from the creation. Then, in regard to the hereafter, "no traveler ever returned from that bourne." Death is death, and resurrection is a fable. "Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." The heavens declare the glory of God, but not to them. They cannot see the wonderful works of God. The sun rises and sets; the moon courses through the night in its changing garb; the stars move on unerring tracks. What of that? That is natural. The laws of nature account for it. They see a man go into a field with a bushel of grain; in a few months he comes out with a wagon load. Whence did it come? It grew. Who made it grow? "Nature," they answer. It goes by law; it has always been that way. The rain falls and waters the thirsty earth. That, too, is not to be wondered at; the laws of nature account for it. The world runs by law; it always has done so and always will. Where is your miracle? If God should show them another miracle, straightway a scientific hypothesis to account for it would be proposed, then a theory, and finally, perhaps, a new law laid down to cover the case; then they would get accustomed to it and clamor for a new miracle. "We have never seen a miracle yet," they would say.

In the wonders of the physical world they see not the almighty wisdom and power; they perceive not the finger of God in the events of the ages. Since time immemorial things have been running so-so, smoothly enough, they argue, and why should we expect anything else for the future? Day by day, year in and year out, they live on in the same track, and, without knowing it, they themselves fulfill the prophecies of God's word; for he sits on his throne guiding and overruling the affairs of nations and individuals to the accomplishment of his own ends, and neither can any man escape from being an instrument in his hand of righteousness or unrighteousness, a vessel unto honor or dishonor. God is not foiled in his plans and purposes. If men serve him willingly, they have a reward; but if they are rebellious, God uses them, nevertheless, to help in the carrying out of his aims, and punishes them in the end. Silently the plans of the holy One unfold themselves; silently they grow and ripen. Every hour brings them nearer their fulfillment. The progress may be slow, imperceptible to us, but some time we shall open our eyes in wonder and behold in their completion the works of God. The plant of to-day looks no larger than that of yesterday; but ere we realize it, the fruit is ripe, the end has come, the harvesters thrust in their sickles. Blessed and happy is the man that sees the working of God, and watches for the end, lest it take him unawares.

But to return to the scoffers. In their ignorance they deem themselves the masters of the world. "Where is the day of the Lord? let it come." Poor fools! At the first sounding of the trumpet they will wish it had not come. "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! wherefore would ye have the day of the Lord? it is darkness, and not light." The truth is, they do not believe it ever will or can come.

A number of learned men had assembled to see the trial test of Stephenson's first locomotive. There stood the engine on the track; the fire was burning and the steam was hissing. Expectation stood written on every face. Only one man looked incredulous. "Take my word on it, gentlemen," he said, "this thing will never start." But it did start, and flew along its piece of track with incredible speed. The spectators were amazed. "Mark what I say, gentlemen," shouted the same man that spoke before—"mark what I say: That thing will never stop! Had the unbeliever seen the universe when it was without form and void, he would have said: "Gentlemen it will never start." But God set it in motion. Days and years roll by; rain, sunshine, winter, and summer; season after season, until men in their folly think it can never stop. Then they ask the famous question: "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Then the apostle continues: "For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

This we, God's children, believe. The same word that called the worlds out of the chaos of infinity keeps the earth and the heavens as they are and will at the proper time deliver them to destruction. "But when, when?" we ask anxiously. Ah, that day and that hour knoweth no man. Yet even eighteen hundred years ago were the followers of Christ taught to look for that day and to watch. Paul and the brethren at Corinth and Thessalonica looked for his coming in their day, and partly hoped that he would come ere they died, that they might not be unclothed of their earthly bodies, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life; but they fell asleep in Jesus, and many years have rolled over their graves, and Christ has not come yet. No doubt many a sinner's heart was fully set in him to do evil, because sentence against his evil work is not speedily executed; but we believe in God and look for the revelation of his Son from heaven. Be it far or near, we know that the day is approaching. The last days are here. The "falling away" is now a point of history; the "man of sin" has been revealed; the great systems of lawlessness have flourished; the scoffers are come. But why has God delayed thus far? Is he indifferent in regard to his word and promise? Not so, my brethren. "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Not because God has failed to perform what he spoke nor because he forgot what he promised and threatened, but for our sakes—for the sake, too, of every one that will yet obey the gospel—that day has been delayed. "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation." (2 Pet. 3: 10-15.)

Let us not cease, brethren, to look for the coming of the Lord daily, that we may be found watching, our lamps trimmed and burning, for we know not the day nor the hour. Hereunto we were called, and so did the grace of God teach us. (Tit. 2: 11-13.) Are we serving him with a whole heart in purity and earnestness? How would he find us if to-day he should appear? Let us labor, that we may be approved of him; that no terror can dismay our hearts when the sign of the Son of man shall appear in the clouds of heaven; that, when his coming is heralded throughout the sin-cursed earth, we may not tremble, but, with John, say, gladly, peacefully: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." ROBERT H. BOLL.

Coming Closer Together.

Churches are no longer content to be bound by their own precedents or to be defended by their traditions. Leaders still hold up their hands in holy horror against innovations, but denominations are coming to judge politics by results rather than by origins. Our Methodist friends are closely approaching Presbyterian polity, having lately adopted (in public) lay representation and the permanent pastorate, and (in secret) congregational "calls" under cover of "episcopal appointments;" many Presbyterians have grown a little weary of the extreme forms of certain doctrinal statements against which Methodists have always protested; our congregational brethren are practicing sessional government under the guise of an "executive committee," and are coming to recognize the ministry as a distinct order, especially upon missionary ground; we meanwhile are slowly according to the congregation the "initiative and referendum" that belongs theoretically to Congregationalism alone. There is no use trying to deny the fact that all denominations are drifting away from their theories of divine right and drifting toward the common results of practical experience; and as a necessary corollary they are coming closer together, and will finally stand upon the same ground—not because of the deductions of their critical exegesis, but because they have followed the apostolic precept of proving all things and holding fast that which is good.—Interior.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE AND EXPANSION.

The business relations of the United States with the rest of the world are expanding so rapidly that the government is constantly tasked to do its part in exercising necessary supervision over them. The foreign commerce of this country has increased during the last six years from a billion and a half of dollars to two and a quarter billions. The exports last year amounted to $1,394,479,214, and the balance in our favor over imports was $544,764,885. The gain in exports for 1899 over the previous year was nearly half a million dollars per day. A significant feature of the business was the large increase in imports of manufacturers' materials not produced in this country and the large gain in exports of manufactured articles. These, as well as the farm products sent abroad, represent largely the results of American labor, and a great part of the money received has been distributed in payment of that labor. The total foreign commerce of this country last year was more than sixteen per cent greater than that of any other year.—Christian Advocate.

MONEY IN RAIN.

One day's rain over the Kansas corn belt raised the prospects from "half a crop" in that State to eighty per cent. This rain meant an addition of one hundred million more bushels than had been estimated in the yield, or a probable cash value of thirty-five million dollars. One week ago, in Nebraska, it was believed that the corn production of that State would not only not come up to early predictions for it, but that it would fall to nearly half what it was last year, when it had a value of $51,505,852 for its 224,373,268 bushels. Similar conditions prevailed in Iowa.

It is a fair estimate that in these three States alone, basing the calculation on the yield of last year and that expected this year, the recent rains have saved eighty-three million dollars in the item of corn alone. As a result of the broken drought, the corn crop, instead of falling below expectations, now has prospect of being the second largest ever gathered in these States.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE LEADERSHIP AMONG THE ALLIES.

There is no idle boasting in claiming for the United States the distinction of leadership in the operations now being conducted in China. It is true that at times this country has stood entirely apart from all the rest and in disagreement with them—as, for example, in the attack upon the Taku forts.

The United States Government has also been the target for much ridicule, if not denunciation, as in the case of its belief in the safety of the legations. Nevertheless, the policy of this government has throughout exerted a marked influence over the policies and the acts of others. The progress and disclosure of events have in a noteworthy manner vindicated the correctness of the American policy. The powers have come, more and more, to look to the United States for direction and for the initiative; and so, by natural and logical processes, this country has become the leader of the concert.

How long that leadership will last we may not say. The time will come when the legitimate and beneficent purposes of the United States in China will have been accomplished. Then this country will withdraw from the campaign. It will be for the others to determine whether they will do the same or will go on under other leadership to other ends.—New York Tribune.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY SCARE.

There does not seem to be any occasion for frothing at the mouth over the tracing of a provisional boundary line in Alaska, which is claimed to have thrown a lot of American miners and their claims into Canada. Political capital cannot be made out of it by Democratic campaigners, and Republican jingoes who are threatening war with Great Britain unless the line is placed where these interested miners want it may as well subside.

The line now being traced by United States and Canadian surveyors is the one agreed upon as a modus vivendi by the two governments, after the failure of the high joint commission to come to an agreement on the permanent boundary. It is the one proposed by the United States Government and reluctantly agreed to by the British Government in behalf of Canada. It was carefully drawn to keep the Canadians away from the tideway, which they are anxious to reach, that they may have a sea outlet for their Yukon territory, and which it has been the main purpose of our government to protect, for obvious reasons.

While the temporary line is necessarily a compromise one, and therefore apparently surrenders something to the extreme claim of the United States case, no practical change is made in the position of the miners on the ground. Everything will remain as before until the final delimitation of the permanent boundary, whenever that may take place, except that there will be no more quarreling between the customs officials of the two governments.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Possible Danger. No. 3.

The writer has watched, with some degree of interest, the ripples on the great sea of religious thought among the "Disciples" for several years. At times he has been reminded of an old Grecian story which tells of us an island where lived the sirens, of beautiful form, who tried to lure sailors to destruction on the rocks by their entrancing music. But a great hero sailed fearlessly and safely past them, because he had Orpheus, the great master of music, on board, who so filled the ears of the sailors with his entrancing music that the song of the sirens had no attraction for them. Several years ago there was "a leading man" among the "Disciples," Dr. R. C. Cave, by name, who had that "look of heaven" on his face which Limners gave to his beloved disciples. This man Cave was sailing the sea and the sirens were singing the song: "Jesus is a good man, but not divine." He was entranced, dashed against the rocks, stranded, lost. He heard the "billows roar—a sunken ship." The "heroes" among the "Disciples" then decided to get "Orpheus" and put him in a "divinity house" in Chicago, alongside another great master whose name was Harper. The purpose of this was to let the young sailors have a chance to learn the "songs of the sirens." Ancient legend says that Mephistopheles, in the council of demons, favored the sirens singing a different song; but this one entranced Dr. Cave, and he was stranded. A "leading man" among the "Disciples" who lived in St. Louis freely admitted, when Orpheus was secured, that he thought there was danger in singing these "songs of the sirens." But he says: "There is infinitely more danger in closing our ears to all this singing or in blindly resisting it." "We shall train our young sailors, who shall be able to sing as well as any of the 'sirens.'"

It is a fact that the poison that ended the life of Alexander VI., of Italy, was no less destructive because it was concealed in a glass of wine; the virus that sent Sir Thomas Overbury to the grave was none the less fatal because it was hidden in a jelly handed to him by a fascinating lady; the bite of the asp that closed Cleopatra's career was no less deadly because the reptile rested on roses. So doctrinal poison is no less mortal because the pen of a prince in erudition inscribes on it the word "scholarship" or the words "higher criticism." The denial of the divinity of Christ has met with a general failure in its mission from the days of Cerinthus and Marcion up to this time. Christianity is in no way antagonistic to learning. It flourishes best in the midst of the highest culture. "Culture," said Matthew Arnold, "is to know the best that has been thought and said in the world." Who founded such institutions as Yale, Amherst, Dartmouth, Bowdoin, Princeton, Oberlin, Brown, Cornell, Baldwin, Madison, and Columbia? No infidel founded any of them. The same is true in other countries. The German Empire has many universities—such as Bonn, Halle, Berlin, Jena, Leipzig, Munich, Strassburg, Munster, Göttingen, Heidelberg, and others. Dr. Schaff says: "The motives which prompted these great establishments were without exception pure and elevated, and generally pious and Christian." It is true that some of them have had professors who were "higher critics" and virtually infidels. The same is true in France. When the atheistic party obtained control of the city in the riot of 1793, they suppressed the University of Paris. In one single instance an institution was established on an infidel basis, but it proved a failure, and is now under the control of Christian people.

President Harper defines "higher criticism" in one word—"inquiry." Thomas Paine made an "inquiry" into the Scriptures, and what was the result? Go back to 1879, when Bob Ingersoll delivered an oration at his brother's grave in Washington. There you will get an idea of Paine's "inquiry." James A. Garfield (who was present) said it was the saddest of all the sad scenes he had ever witnessed in his life. Paine wrote the "Age of Reason" in a prison in France, in 1794, and said "he had destroyed the Bible, and in the course of fifty years whoever desired to see a copy of it would have to go to a museum and pay twenty-five cents for the privilege of beholding an exploded relic of a past superstition." In 1809 Paine died, in great agony of mind; but the Bible still lives, and is now translated into three hundred different languages. During the last seventy-five years one hundred and sixty million copies have been published and circulated among the people like "leaves of the tree of life, for the healing of the nations." The question sometimes comes: Who appointed this supreme court of "higher critics," like Baur, Strauss, Driver, Briggs, Harper, et al., to sit in judgment on the Bible? The greatest minds of the world have already decided in favor of the Bible—among lawyers in Europe, such names as Lyttleton, Campbell, Hale, Nottingham, and many others; in America, such men as Webster, Greenleaf, Story, Judge Black, Jeremiah Mason, and many others; among statesmen, Washington, Patrick Henry, the Adamsons, Clay, Gladstone, and Bismarck; among scientists, Dana, Hitchcock, Dawson, and Herschel; among philosophers, Newton, Locke, and Ruskin; among novelists, Scott, Dickens, and Victor Hugo; among poets, Milton, Pollok, Moore, Whittier, Tennyson, and Longfellow. Were all these men wrong in believing the Bible bore the stamp of a special revelation and the seal of the eternal God?

Jesus Christ is still the kingliest teacher of all the ages. Confucius, the renowned sage of China; Zoroaster, the builder of Parseeism; Socrates, the martyred teacher of Plato; Luther, Calvin, and all teachers sink into insignificance when compared to "didaskelos apo theon" (the teacher from God). The "higher critics" have boldly affirmed that "Jehovah was originally a tribal deity, a local divinity, one of many gods." But Riehm's "Dictionary of Biblical Antiquities," the standard authority in Germany, declares in the article on "Moses" that Jehovah was to Moses the Lord of heaven and earth, who rules absolutely over all mankind and directs its history according to his purposes. Another issue of the "critics" has been "the priority of the prophets to the law," but on page 1374 in Riehm we are told "that the prophets presuppose the presence of the law." The new dictionary (1895 edition) traces the priesthood back to Aaron. George Adam Smith, in his "Historical Geography of Palestine," refutes the "critics" who have denied that the Israelites crossed the Jordan under Joshua. Renan scouts the notion that the early chapters of Genesis belong to the products of the decadent literature of the exile. Take the theory of Baur (the founder of Tübingen rationalism) on the New Testament, for instance. He accepted only five of the New Testament books—viz.: Revelation, Romans, 1 Corinthians, 2 Corinthians, and Galatians. Men like Westcott and Lightfoot, the greatest New Testament exegists of this century, believed it their duty to oppose and kill this theory. Where is it to-day? Few scholars, even in Germany, avow it, while for all practical purposes it is dead and buried.

Paul says: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." (1 Cor. 11: 1.) If Dr. Garrison and Dr. Willette are determined to follow men, why not select such men as Neander Schaff; the late John Hall, of New York; and the late William H. Green, of Princeton, N. J.? Professor Green (the finest Hebrew scholar on this continent while living) said: "In my opinion, ninety per cent of the new learning exploited by the 'higher critics' has already been demonstrated false and worthless, five per cent of the remainder has gone far on in the process of being so demonstrated, and the remaining five per cent is still largely open to question." Dr. John Hall says: "I am forced to the conviction that the 'higher criticism' does not help, but hinders, the understanding of the Scriptures." If Dr. Garrison and Dr. Willette were to travel in foreign lands and find a thousand pictures of Judas Iscariot, they would likely differ among themselves in appearance, but probably all of them would favor these "higher critics." This is merely a suggestion to them. "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.)

THE BOY AND THE SPARROW.

Once a sweet boy sat and swung on a limb;
On the ground stood a sparrow bird looking at him.
Now the boy—he was good, but the sparrow was bad;
So he shied a big stone at the head of the lad,
And it killed the poor boy, and the sparrow was glad.

Then the little boy's mother flew over the trees;
Said she: "Where is my little boy, sparrow bird, please?"

"He is safe in my pocket," the sparrow bird said,
And another stone shied at the fond mother's head,
And she fell at the feet of the wicked bird, dead.

You imagine, no doubt, that the tale I have mixed,
But it wasn't by me that the story was fixed;
'Twas a dream a boy had after killing a bird,
And he dreamed it so loud that I heard ev'ry word,
And I jotted it down as it really occurred.

—Good Words.

WHEN THE DAY IS DONE.

How quiet the house is at midnight! The people who talk and laugh and sing in it every day are asleep. I am not tired, but my pen is weary. It falls from my fingers, and I raise my head. I start to leave, and my eyes fall upon a little book lying on the floor. It is a little First Reader. He left it there this afternoon. I remember just how impatient I was because he could not read the simple little lesson—so easy a lesson—and I told him it was a waste of my time to teach him, and pushed him away from me. I remember now. I see the flush come into the little tired face; the brave, cheerful look in his eyes; his mother's brave, patient cheeriness struggling with his disappointment and pain. I see him lie down on the floor, and the little face bend over the troublesome lesson—a lesson so simple, so easy, any baby might read it. Then after a short struggle alone, it has to be given up, and the baffled little soldier, with one more appealing look toward me, sighs and goes away from the lesson he cannot read to the play that comforts him; and there lies the little book just as he left it. Ah, me! I could kneel down and kiss it now, as if it were alive and loving.

Why, what was my time worth to me to-day? What was there in the book I wanted to read half so precious to me as one cooing word from the prattling lips that quivered when I turned away? I hate the book I read; I will never look at it again. Were it the last book in the world, I think I should burn it. All its gracious words are lies. I say to you, though all men praise the book and though an hour ago I thought it excellent—I say to you there is poison in its hateful pages. Why, what can I learn from books that baby lips cannot teach me? If between my books and my boy I choose my books, why should not God leave me with my books—my hateful books?

But I was not harsh. I was only a little impatient. Because, you see, his lesson was so easy, so simple. Ah, me! There were two of us trying to read this afternoon. There were two easy, simple lessons. Mine was a very simple, easy, pleasant, loving one to learn—just a line, just a little throb of patience, of gentleness, of love, that would have made my own heart glow and laugh and sing. The letters were so large and plain, the words so easy, and the sentences so short. And I? O, pity me! I missed every word. I did not read one line aright. See, here is my copy now—all blurred and blistered with tears and heart-ache; all marred, misspelled, and blotted. I am ashamed to show it to the Master; and yet I know that he will be patient with me, I know how loving and gentle he will be. How patiently and lovingly all these years he has been teaching me this simple lesson I failed upon to-day! Is my time, then, so much more precious than the Master's, that I cannot teach the little lesson more than once?

Ah, friend, we waste time when we plait scourges for ourselves. These hurrying days—these busy, anxious, shrewd, ambitious times of ours—are wasted when they take our hearts away from patient gentleness and give us fame for love and gold for kisses. Some day, then, when our hungry souls seek for bread, our selfish god will give us a stone. Life is not a deep, profound, perplexing problem. It is a simple, easy lesson, such as any child may read. You cannot find its solution in the ponderous tomes of the old fathers, the philosophers, the investigators, the theorists; it is not on your bookshelves; but in the warmest corner of the most unlettered heart it glows in letters that the blindest may read—a sweet, plain, simple, easy, loving lesson. When you have learned it, brother mine, the world will be better and happier.—R. J. Burdette, in Religious Herald.

GETTING READY BEFOREHAND.

"Have you learned your part of the dialogue for next week, 'sonny?'" Gilbert's mother asked him when he came in from school one Monday afternoon.

"I know some of it already, mamma," Gilbert answered, readily; "and, anyway, I don't need to begin to learn it so soon. Why, it's 'most two weeks before I'll have to speak it."

"It is less than two weeks, my dear."

"But, mamma, it's so easy! It won't take me more than a day to learn it."

"But even if that is so, Gilbert, it would be better to take the time now, when you are sure of having it. If we expect to do anything well, we must get ready for it in time, even though it does seem to us very easy."

"You needn't worry, mamma," Gilbert said, in his most grown-up manner; "I'll learn it in time."

But, somehow, the days slipped away faster than Gilbert realized, and when, on Wednesday of the next week, his teacher asked him to stay after school to practice the dialogue, he was not at all sure that he knew his part.

"I'm disappointed, Gilbert," Miss Marston said, closing the book at last. "I was sure you would know your part, and here I've had to prompt you at almost every line. We will practice it again tomorrow, but I'm afraid it is too late to learn it thoroughly. You remember, I told you that we could not have more than two rehearsals, and you promised me that you would learn it at home."

Then Gilbert really began to study his part; but, as his teacher had said, it was too late to learn it thoroughly, and the shortness of the time made him nervous; and so, when he stood in his place on Friday afternoon, the words would jumble themselves in his mind and on his tongue, till Fred. Lathrop, who had the other part in the dialogue, stumbled in his lines and almost failed.

It was several weeks after this day, which Gilbert never liked to remember, that his father sat one evening looking over a bright-colored seed catalogue, from which he was making a list of the plants that he wanted for the garden.

Little Rob., when he saw what was going on, began to laugh gleefully. "Just think, Gilbert," he said, with a funny little chuckle, "papa's getting ready for his garden now, when there's some snow on the ground. Isn't that funny?"

Gilbert looked up from the example he was working to say, wisely: "That's what people ought to do, Rob. If you're going to do anything well, you must begin in time."

Just then Gilbert happened to catch a twinkle in his mother's eyes, and he stopped suddenly in his little sermon, and grew very red. Then he went on bravely, with a half-smile on his flushed face: "That's the truth I've told you, Rob.; and I ought to know, because I've tried the other way."—Young People's Weekly.

THE EVIL OF ENVY.

Envy has its root in selfishness. It is Satanic in nature and origin. The Bible catalogues it among "the works of the flesh" in distinction from and as utterly antagonistic to "the fruit of the Spirit." Lord Bacon says: "It is the vilest affection, and the most depraved, . . . the proper attribute of the devil, who is called 'the envious man, that soweth tares among the wheat by night.'" He also says that love and envy are the only affections noted for power to fascinate or bewitch, and that envy is a disease so infectious that it taints all that is sound, and "traduceth the best actions and turneth them into an ill odor."

No vice is more malignant, more ruinous to character, more condemned by God's holy word. It is both mean and wicked.

Envy committed the first crime in history, and also the worst crime. It slew Abel, and delivered Christ to be crucified; it sold Joseph into slavery; it persecuted Paul. Solomon says that "wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous," but that envy is worse than both. In Rom. 1 it is classed with murder and malignity as one of the deadly sins of the pagan world. Like a cancer, it eats out the life of the soul. For this reason it is termed in Proverbs "the rottenness of the bones." Job says: "Envy slayeth the silly one."

Envy is outrageously mean, because it seeks to deny or destroy the good it sees in others. A man without virtue envies virtue in others. "Men's minds will either feed upon their own good, or upon others' evil," and envy turns others' good to evil in order to feed upon it. Christians are told (1 Pet. 2: 1) to lay aside envy. "Love envieth not." (1 Cor. 13: 4, R. V.)

A man of inferior aim and thought spent his life in envying his next-door neighbor for his nobler ideals, his larger influence, his greater success. It narrowed, belittled, shriveled his soul, and filled it with such bitterness and hatred that it made life on earth a species of hell. Satan has begun his surest, deadliest work in a life where envy reigns. To rejoice in another's good and to seek his welfare is Godlike; to envy is to cherish the murderous hatred of Cain, who slew his brother.—New York Observer.

CARRYING BURDENS GRACEFULLY.

"Now watch her," said a tourist friend, pointing to a peasant woman who had lifted a heavy basket up to her head and was walking off with free, sure step. "See how steadily she carries it and how well her head is poised. If that were one of our countrywomen, she would try to carry that basket on her arm, where it would be in her own way and in that of every one who passed. She would shift it from side to side, bending awkwardly under its weight, and reach her destination tired out. But that woman has learned how to carry a load; and what a fine, erect carriage she has! It's a pity our girls cannot have a little training along that line."

While our enthusiast talked, we thought of another kind of burden and of how much it means to "learn how to carry a load." Bear them we must, of one sort or another—the burdens of grief, care, and disappointment which belong to our human lot—but we all know how differently. Some bend under them, and stagger on complainingly, obtruding them upon every one who comes near; some lift them quietly out of others' way, and, since they must needs be borne, learn to bear them steadily and serenely. There is a gracious poise and beauty of spirit which can be acquired only by the proper bearing of burdens.—Young Woman.

We are all conscious that other people carry with them and radiate a certain atmosphere. We always find it difficult, perhaps impossible, to say in what it consists. Probably it is the subtle, ethereal effluence of personality and character; the aroma of desires and achievements and purposes. Often it is unnecessary for a person to say a word to you to bring others under the spell of this influence. While it is often associated with beauty or an impressive physical presence, that is by no means invariably so. A glance of the eye or an expression of the countenance reveals a spirit that repels us or to which we are drawn. More largely than we often think the influence that radiates from us is under control of our wills. Kindly thoughts and honest purposes manifest themselves in these intangible ways. You do not need to tell me whether you are well disposed; I feel it. A very large part of our power to confer happiness on others depends on the quality of our personal radiation. It may inspire or depress, may make the difficult thing look feasible or weaken the resolution to resist temptation. Often we do not know when we are doing good or harm; but these unconscious influences are the net product of what we are.—Watchman.

The Kin Pan, of Peking, China, is the oldest newspaper in the world. It has been published continuously for more than a thousand years. It began as a monthly and then, in A.D. 1361, became a weekly, and about one hundred years ago it became a daily. It now issues three editions a day and for the protection of patrons uses paper of different colors, the first edition being yellow; the second, white; and the third, gray.

OUR MEMORIAL NUMBER.

This week we give much of our space to Brother Larimore's sermon delivered at Donelson, Tenn., over the remains of F. D. Srygley, our true yokefellow in the gospel of Christ. We have also given considerable space to what other warm and devoted friends have written concerning the writings and life work of our departed brother who now rests from his labors. We have no apologies to make for this, but the rather feel that in so using our space we are acting wisely. The life of such a man is worthy of more than a passing notice.

Brother Srygley's life is a repetition of the lives of all truly great and noble men. By unremitting toil and doing faithfully whatsoever his hands found to do, he rapidly rose from comparative obscurity until he was recognized by many who are competent judges as the most accomplished writer in the South. It is the men who pass through hardships in early life, who are taught to toil and rely on themselves for success, that usually rise to preëminence and distinction. History is replete with such examples.

I have known him intimately and well for a long time. When we first met at Mars' Hill College in the "sweet long ago," I was not out of my teens, while he had just reached his majority. From that time till his pulse ceased to beat and he calmly and serenely passed over the "billowy tide" each one was informed as to the labors and aspirations of the other. It was through his influence that I undertook work on the Old Path Guide as Tennessee contributor, conducting a Tennessee department, and looking especially after the interests of the paper in this State. It was this work that opened the way for me to do a more extended work on the Gospel Advocate. After I had worked for a number of years as manager and office editor of the Gospel Advocate, it was through our former association and our friendship for one another that he became associated with this paper.

For over ten years he was one of the editors of the Gospel Advocate, besides doing much other literary work. During all these years the Gospel Advocate always had many of his pointed, forcible, and entertaining paragraphs. Often his articles were filled with the sublimest thoughts—thoughts that would stir the deepest recesses of the soul and flood the eyes with tears. He was not only logical, but at times humorous and pathetic in the highest degree. Remembering that he was not quite forty-four years old at the time of his death, yet was the author and editor of four books, and was also editor of the Youth's Advocate a number of years, it will not be considered strange that some people thought him an unsocial man. It is almost a marvel that he had any time left for the social features of life. We so often judge harshly when we do not know. Those who know the tremendous burden that the editor carries, those who know what it is to write books that will fill thousands with lofty aspirations and incite them to noble endeavor in the far distant future, will not regard F. D. Srygley as distant, cold, and unsocial: A man cannot write and entertain, think and enter into the gossip of the day, at the same time; it is not possible. The man who is a close and untiring student as was he often appears moody, abrupt, and distant to strangers. His mind is preoccupied. Like the blessed Master, he is about his Father's business, his thoughts being for the elevation and betterment of mankind. He often finds pleasure in solitude. Emerson says: "The great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the serenity of solitude." But to those who knew Brother Srygley well he was a very companionable man. In his home he was the very soul of hospitality. Few men had warmer friends and admirers than did he. He was as careful to keep friends as to make them; hence no man was readier to apologize for his mistakes than was he. He appreciated his friends while living, and did not wait till they were dead to scatter roses along their pathway. Covering the graves of loved ones with flowers after they are dead cannot atone for the cold neglect of life. Just here the words of Ruskin occur to me as appropriate: "But he who has once stood beside the grave to look back on the companionship which has been forever closed, feeling how impotent then are the wild love and the keen sorrow to give one instant's pleasure to the pulseless heart or atone in the lowest measure to the departed spirit for the hour of unkindness, will scarcely for the future incur that debt to the heart which can only be discharged to the dust."

The grave cannot sever friendship. Abel, though dead, still lives. Our friend and brother, though dead, is still alive. God could use the dead Elisha as well as the living. The worth, the virtue, and the goodness of our brother we may love forever; they can never die. Through the providence of God his influence for good will live on. His exaltation of the church of God to its proper position, his loyalty to God and his holy word, can never cease to influence others.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

God overrules all. How often do our prearranged plans fail us and we find ourselves doing the very things we thought not to do! This is so often true if we are honest with ourselves. This was true of F. D. Srygley. When he began work on the Gospel Advocate, he felt that organized mission work was best and expedient. He would not agree to work and write against it, but did agree to be true to his convictions and to follow wherever the Bible led. As an honest man, he could not do more. With this understanding, he began work. He verily believed that he would teach those who opposed societies "the way of the Lord more perfectly;" but, like Paul, he soon found himself laboring to establish that which he had sought to destroy. The more he studied the question, the more firmly fixed did he become in the faith that the church of God is sufficient, without any human society, for the conversion of the world. He grew to believe that these additions were sinful. This is a very striking case of what the word of God will do for a man if he will only commit himself to it. "Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established." (Prov. 16: 3.) "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass." (Ps. 37: 5.) But, having committed himself to this principle, his love for and loyalty to the truth increased with the passing years. I am sure that his last days were his best days, and that, as his love for the truth grew stronger, the more pleasing did his life become to our Heavenly Father. As he thus followed the guidance of our God, he would decide everything by, "It is written;" and, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." Such a life cannot and will not be in vain. The truths he has taught can never die.

In the past my weary soul has often recurred with comfort to the thought that

A few more years shall roll,
A few more sorrows come,
And we shall be, with those that rest,
Asleep within the tomb.

A few more struggles here,
A few more partings o'er,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more.

We all should find encouragement in the thought that the interests and pleasures of this world are as nothing compared to those of the life that awaits us in our Father's house of many mansions, whither many of our loved ones have gone, and so peacefully and calmly rest after the struggles of life,

Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest.

WHEN IS MAN FREE FROM SIN?

Brother Lipscomb: Will you do me the kindness to allow me to notice your answer to Brother Runnion's question, as I suppose that my criticism of Brother Walling interested Brother Runnion and was the cause of his question, and I think that you failed to give the information sought? I know that you are burdened with questions, and lack of time prevents your giving them the thought due.

Brother Runnion did not inquire as to whether a Christian leads a sinless life or not. He put his question thus: "I would like to have your views as to whether or not a person is a sinner after ceasing from sin. If a person is a sinner after believing and repenting, do we baptize a sinner into Christ? If a person in this condition is not a sinner—that is, after turning away from sin and doing God's will—will such a one's prayer be heard and answered?" The information that Brother Runnion is seeking is: Is a person who believes upon the Christ and repents a sinner or a servant of God? If such a person is a sinner and he is baptized, is a sinner not baptized into Christ? If such a man as described by Brother Runnion is a sinner and is baptized, a sinner certainly is baptized into Christ, which, I think, is contrary to Bible teaching. Isaiah (35: 8), in speaking of the kingdom of Christ, says: "The unclean shall not pass over it." (See also Isa. 52: 1.) Joel (3: 17) says: "There shall no strangers pass through her any more." Then those who pass must be sons. (Gal. 4: 6; Rev. 21: 27.) So I am persuaded, by a careful study of the subject, that a man who believes upon Christ with all his heart, repents, and confesses Christ, is not a sinner, but is a servant of God, and has the right to call upon God, with the promise of being heard. I think the Bible abundantly proves this. See the three thousand (Acts 2), Paul (Acts 9), jailer (Acts 16). They prayed, and God answered. Why? Because they did his will. (John 9: 31; 6: 29.) The blind man says such as do his will are heard, and it is his will that men believe upon the Christ. (1 John 3: 23; John 3: 16.) "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." (Prov. 28: 9.) Whose prayer is abomination? The man that refuses to hear (obey) the law. So it is clearly implied that God will hear those that obey the law. In Prov. 15: 29 we learn that God is far from the wicked, but near to the righteous.

We all admit that it is right to believe upon Christ, repent, confess him, and obey him in baptism; hence we admit that the man described by Brother Runnion is a righteous man, entitled to pray, and has the promise of being heard, because he is obeying the law of God. (John 3: 16; Acts 17: 30; Matt. 10: 32; Mark 16: 16.) This man, though a servant of God, is not relieved of the penalty of the sins committed previous to his turning to God; and as there is no remission short of the blood of Christ, then he must reach a state where God can be just in relieving him of the penalty due. In Rom. 3: 23-26 Paul says justification is in Christ, and not out of Christ. So if the believing penitent is a sinner, in order to be justified or relieved from his past sins, he must get into Christ to be justified, or pardoned. So you baptize a sinner into Christ, and there is no evading the fact. God pardons as a Father; consequently he could not exercise parental authority in the family of Satan, because all spiritual blessings are in Christ (Eph. 1: 3), and justification is in Christ (Rom. 3: 24). So, with all the facts as set forth in the Bible, the believing penitent is not a sinner, but has ceased to sin and is doing God's will, hence is a servant of God (Rom. 6: 16); and when baptized, a servant of God is baptized, and not a sinner. After baptism he becomes a justified servant of God in Christ. (Acts 4: 12; Heb. 7: 25; Gal. 3: 26, 27.) The man who turns to God by faith, repentance, confession, and baptism is dead in trespasses and sin until God removes the cause of his death, which is his past sins (Eph. 2: 1, 5); and this is done in Christ, and not out of Christ (Acts 2: 38; 22: 16). The book clearly teaches that the act of baptism must be completed before the promise of justification, or remission. A man who believes, repents, confesses, and is baptized is born of God; hence he is a son of God. (John 1: 12, 13.) They are sons before receiving the Spirit. (Gal. 4: 6.) So when they become the sons of God, God removes the cause of their death in trespasses and sin, and gives them the Spirit, which imparts spiritual life. (Acts 5: 32; Gal. 4: 6; 2 Cor. 3: 6; 1 Pet. 3: 18.) In Rom. 8: 10 Paul says: "If Christ [by the Spirit] be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit [that was dead] is life because of righteousness." Thus we see that a man must be made alive in Christ before he can die to sin. Paul settles the question as to whether the believing penitent is a servant of God or not. (Rom. 6: 16.) Then when a man yields himself to God in obedience, he is a servant of God.

I differ with you in reference to a Christian being a sinner when he has evil thoughts or says wicked words or does a sinful act. If he repents of his wickedness, confesses it, and prays to the Heavenly Father, he is cleansed (Acts 8: 22; 1 John 1: 9), and is not a sinner. It is a child of God sinning, but his quick and faithful turning to his Father, confessing, and praying for pardon keep him in the "narrow way." To be a sinner, one must continue in sin (Rom. 6: 1, 2, 15, 16), or serve sin. He who falls through weakness and temptation and immediately turns to God is not a servant of sin, hence is not a sinner.

S. I. S. CAWTHON.
Andalusia, Ala.

Both Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit must have failed to see any practical or helpful truth in the theory of Brother Cawthon, or they would have taught it. The theory is that when a man begins to obey he ceases to be a sinner. A man believes before he repents; when he believes, he obeys; and when he obeys, he is not a sinner. To tell a believer to repent of his sins is to tell one not a sinner to repent. On the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit said: "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." They believed this, and, in believing it, obeyed God. When they obeyed God, they were not sinners; therefore the Holy Spirit directed those without sin to repent of their sins. This is the logic of the theory. We might go back of this. God tells men to hear; faith comes by hearing the word of God. When they hear, they obey God; when they obey God, they are not sinners. Therefore the Holy Spirit commanded persons without sin to believe in Christ. I cannot see why this is not true according to the reasoning; yet Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit told the people: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." If he is not a sinner, he is saved. "For he shall save his people from their sins." (Matt. 1: 21.) "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you . . . unto the remission of your sins." (Acts 2: 38, R. V.) The Holy Spirit thought it required baptism to bring people to remission; and then "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." It never occurred to the Holy Spirit that they could get clear of their sins until they were baptized. Then, again, the Spirit said: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." Save us from what, if not from sin? Evidently it had not occurred to Jesus or the Holy Spirit that they were without sin when they came to baptism. They had not discovered this new truth.

It is the Holy Spirit our brother disagrees with when he says he does not believe a Christian that commits sin is a sinner. The Spirit says: "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law." (1 John 3: 4.) Then it was the publican that prayed, "God be merciful to me a sinner," that was justified; and when a man sins, he is to pray that his sin may be forgiven. There are, of course, different degrees and characters of sin that are treated differently. I do not believe there is a wall built on one side of which God hears prayer, while he cannot hear on the other side. When a man willfully turns his ear from the law of God, refuses to hear or obey him, God will not hear his prayer, whether he be in the church or out of it, before or after baptism. If he sincerely and earnestly desires and is striving to do his will, God will hear him, whether in the church or out of it. That is the way he did in primitive times, at any rate.

Our brother, through false reasoning or assumption, creates a difficulty, then sets aside Bible teaching to remove it. He assumes that if a man is not free from sin when baptized he will be brought into Christ in sin. The Holy Spirit says we put "off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God." In other words, we put off the body of sins in baptism. Baptism is the act of faith in which God forgives, remits, blots out, washes away sins, and by which we enter Christ. So the act that brings us to the remission of sins brings us into Christ. A sinner is not brought into Christ, nor is a sinless person out of Christ. Ceasing to sin does not free one from sins already committed. He is a sinner until he is purged or forgiven of sins. To cease to love and practice sin or faith and repentance are preparatory steps fitting the soul for the forgiveness or freeing from sin. To be freed from sin, we must come to the place where God promised to forgive sins, and he is cleansed from sin by the blood of Christ. He is not without sin until he is cleansed by the blood of Christ.

These efforts to draw distinctions where God has drawn none divert the mind to unprofitable speculations that create needless controversy and strife.

The influence of the position is to satisfy men they can be freed from sin and so be saved without obeying God. Men do not need encouragement or excuses in this line. God taught all that is needed for our salvation. Let us study that and be satisfied with it.

CHURCHES AND THEIR WORK.

We would like to keep it before Christians that the object God had in view in establishing churches was to perfect the character and develop the abilities and capabilities of Christians and to direct them to the service of God as the first and highest business of life. All Christians are equally under obligation to do this. God does not hold one under stronger obligation to serve him and to do good to the world than another. Men's abilities and surroundings determine how each shall work, but God demands all shall work. I mean by their abilities their fitness for a work—that is, a man who can exhort must exhort; one who can teach must teach according to the word of God; one who has capacity to make money must use his money for good. Giving money does not relieve him from obligation to teach and visit the sick. Unless he does this personal service, he will lose the desire to serve God and help man, and will refuse to use his money in that service. Personal service is needful to keep alive and warm the feelings of love to God and man. Then all are not alike endowed with faculties for public teaching. By his surroundings is meant that if he has a wife and children or his health is feeble, he is not under the same obligation to go abroad that one with no home calls has. Paul and, probably, Barnabas had no wives, and they went on journeys that occupied years; indeed, they seem to have had no local homes; but others of the apostles that had families did not travel so far from their families. A man does wrong to so neglect his wife and children that they would be led to ruin. Men can find places for work near home as well as abroad. There is not a county in the State or in any State that does not furnish an ample field for the labors of two or three or more, devoting their entire time to teaching the will of God. A preacher doing a work in these counties can work much more effectively if he is located in the midst of those with whom he labors. He economizes in time, money, and opportunities for doing his work. There are counties in our State with from twenty to thirty churches in each, but not one of these has been half evangelized. There is not a county in the State in which half the people in it have had the gospel brought to them personally. A small congregation is collected in a neighborhood and meets to worship. A preacher goes once a month and preaches a sermon to the few who meet or an elder talks on Sunday; neither the preacher nor the members try to interest others, and the masses three miles distant in every direction are as ignorant of the gospel as if there was no church there. A church that does not try to save others will die, because it ought to die. A Christian can save himself only by trying to save others. The reason Christians and churches are so cold and lifeless is, they make no effort to save others. Without this work, churches and Christians will grow lukewarm, and God will spew them out. The work to which God has called them is to save themselves by saving others. He who saves his life shall lose it. All religious experience proves that men can be interested in religion while saving others, or thinking they are doing so, as they can be in no other way. Churches and Christians, then, that settle down to providing for their own entertainment and instruction, and are not working to save others, grow cold and lifeless, and fail to find interest in the home service.

There is a widespread and almost universal coldness and lukewarmness in the churches. One chief reason of this is that people have ceased to make personal effort to serve God and save men. What they do is done by proxy. They pay others to do the worship or the work, while they give themselves to money-making and the enjoyment of life. Preachers, teachers, evangelists, all pursue wrong courses and foster this spirit. They seek to serve the churches where the best pay can be obtained. This is true of both those who labor as stationed preachers and of those who evangelize. The evangelist seeks to hold meetings for wealthy and strong churches. There is none of the spirit of Paul in this course. He sought the destitute places. He preferred to preach where Christ had not been named, not to build upon a foundation laid by another man. He left one country and went to another—not because he lacked support, but because, "having no more any place in these regions," he sought fields where the gospel had not been preached. (Rom. 15: 20-23, R. V.) Some traveling preachers seek appointments to strong congregations, without being asked by the elders or the congregation. These think he is looking for the pay rather than the good he can do. They are apt to pay but little when they so think, and the preacher thinks they are money lovers and covetous. They both may be wrong, but the spirit is wrong that leads the preacher to seek to labor where the church is large and strong or the truth is well known. The Christian spirit is essentially a missionary spirit: to save the lost at home and abroad. Every Christian is a missionary, as much so at home as Snodgrass, McCaleb, or Bishop is in Japan. If he is not a missionary both in spirit and work, he is not a Christian. A Christian must spend and be spent to save souls. I have said that does not mean he must go abroad or be a public speaker. His business must be first to serve God and save men.

I do not believe the preachers ought to congregate in one center because there are numbers and activity there. They ought to go to the destitute places and excite activity. They ought to let their personal and family influence be exerted among the sinners. Much better have a good preacher or two or three in Gallatin and Lebanon and Smithville and McMinnville and Franklin and Columbia and Murfreesboro, and in every county town and church in the State, than to have thirty or forty, using their personal, family, and social influence in a city and cut themselves off from the many opportunities which personal contact affords while living among the people.

Every church ought to have good teachers, and continue to make as many more as possible. These churches ought to seek out the destitute neighborhoods near them willing to hear the truth and go among them. The preachers, instead of advertising for churches that wish meetings, ought to advertise for neighborhoods without churches or preaching that would be willing to hear the gospel, and see how many such places can be supplied with gospel teaching. Call out the members to go and teach Bible classes and to teach the Bible to all who will hear at home, by the wayside, or at the meeting place. Let the preachers and elders in Lewisburg and Fayetteville and Franklin and Murfreesboro, and in all the live churches, seek out the destitute neighborhoods, report them to the churches, and consult with all the members how these different places can be taught the gospel. Discuss it before all—old and young, men and women; interest every member in providing some one to preach the gospel to these places; let them feel the responsibility rests on them; and if souls are lost because they refuse to carry the truth to them, they will be held accountable. It will give new life to the churches, cure the evils of the pastor system, and kindle the fires of zeal and devotion in the cause of religion throughout the land as they have not been for years past. Will all study their duty along these lines? D. L.

When God Is Silent.

However greatly we may rejoice to hear the voice of God, there are times when the soul welcomes the silence which God keeps. When remembered sin urgently presses upon our thought, when remorse is keen and despair is almost master for the moment, God may mercifully allow the grief to pass with never a word from him. His comfort would shame us sorely and his censure would only deepen the shadow. As a loving father waits in silence while the tempest of contrition sweeps over his dear son and then lets his love shine in through the scattered clouds, so our Heavenly Father gently keeps us close to himself until the passion is overpast, and then what earnest of his love he gives us in conscious nearness to him, in peace and quiet, and in his promise of forgetfulness! "He will not always chide." Nor will he always speak words of comfort. He will do at the moment what is most needful for us, and the silence of God may well be the comfort we most need at such a time.—Sunday School Times.

It is an awful thing when a man cannot coolly and deliberately survey his own character without experiencing a feeling of contempt for himself.—Ex.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Elsewhere in this paper will be seen an announcement reducing the price of a number of the very best of our books. These prices place these books in easy access of all. Books are our real friends, and good ones can hardly be valued too highly. Our readers should not allow this opportunity to pass without securing one or all of these books. Isaac Barrow says of books: "He that loveth a book will never want a faithful friend, a wholesome counselor, a cheerful companion, an effectual comforter. By study, by reading, and by thinking one may innocently divert and pleasantly entertain himself, as in all weathers, so in all fortunes." In reading good books we are holding converse with the greatest, wisest, and best of men. What an inestimable privilege it is to read good books! In books we have the choicest thoughts of the ablest men in their best dress. Says Jeremy Collier: "Books are a guide in youth and an entertainment for age. They support us under solitude and keep us from being a burden to ourselves; they help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and our passions, and lay our disappointments asleep. When we are weary of the living, we may repair to the dead, who have nothing of peevishness, pride, or design in their conversation." No house is well furnished without books. It is like a body without a soul. The parent who refuses to buy good books practices false economy. Better economize in your dress than in your reading. Any book that stirs within you a desire to be good is helpful.

O for a booke and a shadie nooke,
Eyther in-a-doore or out;
With the greene leaves whispering overhede,
Or the streete cryes all about,
Where I maie reade all at my ease,
Both of the newe and olde!
For a jollie goode booke wherein to looke
Is better to me than gold.

This paper opposes, and has always opposed, the modern pastor, because there is no authority in the Bible for such pastor. Any system of worship that it not backed by the authority of Christ has many evils connected with it. The Woodland Street Christian Church, of this city, have lost or will soon lose their pastor, W. H. Sheffer. The members of the Woodland Street Christian Church heard that the church at Linden street, Memphis, Tenn., were wanting Brother Sheffer and were perhaps offering him a larger salary than they could afford to pay. It was thought that he was doing a good work at the Woodland Street Christian Church, so the members urged Brother Sheffer to reconsider and stay with them. This we understand he decided to do, but the Linden Street Church, at Memphis, claimed he had contracted with them and would not release him from the contract. Thus it will be seen that he could not remain where he decided to stay, because he was under contract to go. It does seem that preachers should preach where they think they can do the most good. They may not always live in the highest style while doing this, for, like Paul, it may be necessary for them to labor at times with their own hands in order to support themselves. Preachers who do this cannot fail to do much good. They will doubtless attract very little attention from the worldly, but their influence for good will not soon die. The members of all the churches need to learn to work more, and not to depend so much on the preachers to do their work for them. When the members depend on the preachers, the members grow weaker day by day. Each should learn to do his own work, relying on the Lord to help him as he goes forward in the noblest of all callings. The church will never accomplish what it should until every member in the body of Christ realizes his individual responsibility. No man will ever grow weak while serving the Lord for himself. God only requires each to do the best he can.

God worked six days and he rested on the seventh day from all the work which he had made. He commanded the Jews to rest on the seventh day. Man needs one day to rest out of the seven. His very constitution requires it. It is not best to keep a man's nerves strung up to the highest tension every day in the week. By resting one day out of the seven, he will do more work than by trying to work all the week without any intermission. I have read somewhere that two colonies started out from the same place in their wagons, going to the same country. One colony traveled every day in the week, giving its stock no time to rest, while the other rested one day out of the seven. The one that rested one day out of each week reached its journey's end some time in advance of the one that did not stop to rest. Man needs at least one day for rest from his daily labors. While this day should be spent in the service of the Lord, the change is restful and beneficial. Railroads and large corporations are making a great mistake in failing to give their employees one day out of the seven for rest and recuperation. People could make their arrangements to do their traveling during six days in each week. There is very little freight that would suffer by waiting over one day; besides, most of it could be started on its journey so as to reach its destination within six days. The American people are living too fast and are rushing, so that they soon race through life. A man is as old at thirty as he should be at fifty. If all would seek to worship the Lord on the first day of the week and make their arrangements to let secular employments alone, the country would be infinitely better off. As it is now, many people are almost wholly deprived of the privilege of going to church. They would like to go, but feel that they must work in order to support their families. For this state of affairs a fearful responsibility is resting upon somebody. Christian people who take Sunday for traveling rather than any other day in the week will not be held guiltless. People who insist on traveling on Sunday and carrying on nearly every kind of business should remember that this means that many people must work every day in the week, besides being deprived of the privilege of attending the worship on that day.

"For some days a sect, with no known title, composed principally of ignorant country people, has been holding revivals in Royston's big camp meeting ground. After they have prayed ten minutes, all present, young and old of both sexes, rise from their knees and dance most violently. There is no concerted movement, each individual gyrating as the spirit impels. Some of the women whirl around in a continual circle until too dizzy to continue. Men cut all sorts of capers, keeping up the most unholy din, until finally all become completely exhausted. Then, with the perspiration streaming from their faces, they proceed to exhort all within hearing to join the sect and become sanctified. All claim that they are constrained to this peculiar conduct by the fact that they have lyddite, dynamite, and other explosives in their souls. The ceremonies yesterday were especially violent." (Royston, Ga., special to Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.) This is but another manifestation of the doctrine that the Spirit of God takes possession of men in some immediate way and forces them to become Christians. We cannot conceive how the holy Spirit of God would make people perpetrate such outrageous and unbecoming deeds. God's Spirit is not responsible for such conduct. Such scenes as described above remind one of the time when people would have the jerks and swoon away in a trance. The modern doctrine of sanctification is but a revival of that order of things. Jesus does not propose to turn burglar and force his way into any heart. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." (Rev. 3: 20.) God is not the author of confusion, neither should the religion of Christ be held responsible for such absurdities.

People are not yet ready to abandon the religion of Christ for the doubts of skepticism. While Andover (Mass.) Theological Seminary has an endowment of two million dollars, yet it has only twenty-three students. In commenting on this fact, the Religious Herald says: "However the world may decry orthodoxy and dogma, it will make no sacrifices to support an institution whose influence is exerted to create and foster doubt and uncertainty concerning the vital and fundamental facts and doctrines of religion."

President Eliot, of Harvard University, says in his annual report: "In the opinion of the president, it is time that this distinction [a lower fee from theological students than from others] should be abolished. The Protestant ministry will never be put on a thoroughly respectable footing in modern society until the friar or mendicant element is completely eliminated from it. There are no good reasons why Protestant students of theology should be taught, fed, and lodged gratuitously." The editor of this page most heartily agrees with President Eliot. Students who attend theological seminaries usually do so with the idea of entering the ministry as a profession. The churches that employ these students expect them to be entertaining, attractive speakers. As these churches demand much, they should be willing to pay for it. The student who has no higher conception of the work of a preacher than to study with the view of entering the ministry as any other profession should be willing to pay for the privileges he enjoys at college. Moreover, it is not best for the students themselves to be carried through school on a silver waiter. They expect the same all through life; they do not learn to depend on themselves, and usually amount to very little in life. On the other hand, if a student is filled with an earnest desire to save souls, he will work his way through college and come out a stronger man from having to make his way. When such men undertake to preach the gospel, they will do so, even if they find it necessary to labor with their own hands to support themselves. The churches should delight to have fellowship with this class of preachers, and should not be willing to place them before the world in the attitude of beggars. "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 14.)

"One of these higher life (or whatever may be the latest name for the heresy) men said to Dr. J. J. Porter that he was filled with the Spirit just as the apostles were on the day of Pentecost, and had the same power they had. Dr. Porter took down his Hebrew Bible and asked the man to prove his claim by reading a chapter. It was a good answer to his boasting. It is needless to say the man could not read the unknown tongue." (Western Recorder.) While the request of Dr. Porter is very convincing and to the point, yet the higher critic could have consistently turned his reasoning on him and asked him to heal some physical infirmity, as Baptists teach, and pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Those who were baptized in the Holy Spirit were not only able to speak all the known languages, but were able to heal the sick and to perform many other wonders.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes will go to Missouri for several weeks' work. Kansas' loss for this time is Missouri's gain. Brother Rhodes is now in Oklahoma Territory, and, while there, will perform a marriage ceremony at Milan.

Brother Joseph E. Cain was invited to Clements to a basket meeting on the fourth Lord's day in this month. He is receiving many calls for work.

Brother O. M. Thomason was at the Clements meeting. He has returned from Colorado, and is now on a preaching tour through Kansas. Do not slight Belle Plaine, Brother Thomason, when you come this way.

On account of the poor health of his mother, Brother C. C. Houston will not attend the Nashville Bible School this year. Brother Charlie is now an acceptable preacher, but is ambitious to be prepared to do the very best work he can in the vineyard of the Lord. He will continue his work at Peck.

Brother Claude M. Johnson, of Indiana, is now in this community. He preached at Belle Plaine last Lord's day. Brother Johnson is a graduate of Brother Krutinger's school, at Ellettsville, Ind., and comes here well recommended. Do not let him be idle, brethren.

Brother D. Stewart, of Holton, is visiting his cousin, J. A. Stewart, at Minco, I. T. He preached there on the third Lord's day in this month.

Brother Tom Coats was at the Harveyville grove meeting on the third Lord's day in August.

Brother H. R. Signor, of Oklahoma Territory, recently made a visit to Rome. Brother Signor is doing good work in Oklahoma Territory.

The majority of the preachers are now entering the autumn campaign of protracted meeting work. It will require much faith and courage to do the work during the political campaign that is now upon us. The excitement will continue to develop until the ballots are cast, counted, and reported; then somebody may wish he had not been in it.

Several days ago a letter from Brother J. C. Frazee, of Van Buren, Ark., conveyed the sad intelligence of the death of his wife. Many warm friends in Kansas deeply sympathize with him in this great sorrow. Brother Frazee's many friends here love him for his work's sake, and will certainly now remember him in an especial manner. We must remember the sunshine is coming, and the clouds will soon break away.

The death of Brother Srygley was a sad surprise to many. Hundreds have enjoyed his logical, pungent, and spicy editorials, and he will be much missed from the work in the Gospel Advocate. Many are wondering who will take his place. We might say: Nobody. There was but one F. D. Srygley, and he is gone from the earth in person; but he will live in his writings and in the hearts of the people. Let us not fear; the grand old Gospel Advocate will still live and prosper and go forth to bless and instruct the people. One by one the heroes fall, but the work goes on. They leave the impress of their nobility upon those left behind and stir them up to greater diligence in the work to be accomplished. We feel the need of being more diligent when a fellow-soldier who marches beside us falls out of the ranks. Realizing that fact, we oftentimes redouble our diligence to try to supply the loss in the one who has fallen. If we could only realize all the time that we are coworkers in the vineyard and assist each other in the work, understanding that the work is the Lord's and we are his servants to perform it; knowing, too, that there should be communion of interests; if such were always true, there would be less of the disposition upon the part of some to pull others down and endeavor to drive them from certain fields that others would like to occupy. When we act thus, we forget the purpose for which we were created, forget our mission on earth. What does it matter, so the work is done? Some imagine they can do it so much better than others, and you will hear them say: "If I had that work, it would move differently. I would make it go; I could teach those brethren in six months to do thus and so." May the Lord keep us humble and help us to go earnestly, but quietly, about the Master's work. What I mean by "quietly" is not trying to interfere with the work that others are doing. The Lord has given each of us plenty to do. Let us do it with all our might. D. T. BROADUS. Silver Chimes.

We cannot expect to be mowers, and gather the ripe golden ears, until we first have been sowers and watered the seed with our tears. Some students think by shirking they cheat the teacher, but in after life they find they have cheated only themselves. So with some Christians. They seem to think if they can shirk duty and keep along in the church, all will be well; but, likely, we will ascertain, when we get over on the other side, that they themselves are the losers. I have been in Tennessee seven weeks, have preached at nine points, and have met many good brethren. Among them are several preachers—Mr. Curry, "Weeping" Joe Harding, Spivey, Lipscomb, J. A. Harding, E. G. Sewell, L. R. Sewell, Elam, McQuiddy, McLaurine, Williams, White, and others, I think, whose names I cannot recall. I am well pleased with the Christian life manifested in those I have met. The people of the South are better Christians than those in the North. Many in the North would be more zealous in the cause of the Master if they had time, but they are busy looking after the piece of ground, the oxen, etc.

My last effort was at Minor Hill, Tenn., where I labored eight days, delivered twenty-two discourses, got up a rousing interest, and immersed nine persons; then the Baptists came and started a meeting, which was two weeks after their regular time of holding their annual meeting, and some of our brethren thought we had better close. Did you ever? Think of a preacher being called five hundred miles to assist in a meeting, of working up a powerful interest in eight days, and then giving it up to a Christian (?) denomination! This has not been my course. For thirty-five years I have been toiling, day and night, to build up the kingdom of God.

Men do not fear punishment beyond the grave as they once did. Why? Because the clergy have well-nigh blotted out that part of the divine revelation.

In order to be called "great" among men, a man should be a general, and be able to report that he has been instrumental in killing a great many people; but if he would be called "good," he should have been instrumental in saving many. Let me stand identified with the latter class.

As a rule, people who complain most of the bad state of the church do the least to better its condition.

I have about decided, if I ever make another tour in the South in warm weather—well, I will wait till the mercury cools a bit. A. ELMORE.

"Singing Birds Build Low."

One who had been listening while a bright girl announced most ambitious aspirations and purposes for her own life, answered gently: "You may be right, dear child, but do not forget that 'the singing birds build low.'"

Taking this as its text, the Philadelphia Public Ledger speaks these words of comfort to girls:

"If your flight is above the roof-trees, if your haunts are to be high up among the wind-rocked boughs, the home nest cannot fail to suffer loss. Apart from the loss to those who remain, the daughter who goes out often finds too late that the low nest was safest and best. There are colder winds or the mountain crags, and it is the birds of prey that build their nests on high.

"After all one's thinking and talking of progress of man or woman, it is true that nothing ever comes to us that is so sweet as the life of home. Let women seek the largest culture, the broadest freedom, the highest service. All goes well while they keep the home love warm. When the love wavers, it is time to pause. We are building our nests in the wrong place. Singing birds are to make melody, first, for our nearest and dearest, and when our best is too good for the home, we are placing our nests too high.

"For some of the sweetest of our daughters and sisters there is a creeping danger here—not danger that they shall be too brave, too strong, too learned, or that their weapons shall be too heavy or too sharp, but danger that, in the joy of wielding them, they forget that all their gifts and powers must ultimately be used for homes—if not for their own, for the homes of others. The true woman may build high, but she cannot for very long dwell above the home. In her hands is its regeneration and its exaltation into the noblest institution of God. She may not herself hold therein the place of wife, mother, or daughter, but so long as in her heart she holds home most sacred and devotes her highest powers to the objects that uplift all homes, her nest is low and her voice shall be to the world as sweet as the songs of the birds."

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville, Tenn., to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville at 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. ALABAMA.

Oneonto, August 20.—Brother John Hays, of Mooresville, commenced a meeting here on the night of the second Lord's day in this month and closed on the Saturday night following. Good interest was had from first to last, and I believe much and lasting good has been done for the Master's cause. This is a destitute field, and the sects have such a strong hold on the people that it will take thorough teaching to get them to accept God's plan of saving people. Brother Hays is a strong, logical preacher, and should be kept in the work of evangelizing all the time. He has a horse and buggy and can travel cheaply, thus making the matter of expenses light; and I am sure that he is willing to "do the work of an evangelist." Brethren, let us keep him in the work all the time. JOHN F. KELTON.

Florence, August 15.—Brother John J. Castleberry, of Savannah, Tenn., has just closed a month's meeting at this place, with the East Florence congregation, which resulted in two hundred and nine additions. Of this number one hundred and fifteen were baptized. Most of the others were from the denominations, while some were restored or took membership. There were ten additions on the last day of the meeting. The audiences were very large. Almost every night from six hundred to one thousand persons attended. The interest was unusually good. The people searched the Scriptures daily to see whether or not those things which they heard were so. It was nothing uncommon to see them sitting in their homes with Bibles in their hands, or congregating on the streets, talking scripture. We hope that great good may result from this glorious meeting. We are all happy and praying the Father in heaven to richly bless us. D. S. PHILLIPS.

ARKANSAS.

Center Point, August 20.—We had a good beginning at the meeting at this place. On the first day of our meeting three persons, one of whom was a man seventy-two years old, made the good confession. This speaks well for the congregatoin here. The crop of the seed sown by Brother Harding, Brother Poe, and Brother Zachary, with others, is being gathered. R. W. OFFICER.

Peel, August 13.—Brother S. C. Garner, of Baxter County, has been holding a series of meetings at three different schoolhouses in this country, as follows: He commenced at Sugar Loaf on the night of July 14, 1900, and continued until July 24, 1900. As a result, eight persons were added to the one body, two restored, and the church set in order and greatly strengthened. He then came to Peel and commenced preaching on the night of July 25, 1900, preaching at night only until Sunday, July 29, 1900, when he preached two sermons and one at night; then he preached day and night until the close of the meeting on Friday night, August 3, 1900. As a result of this meeting, fifteen were added to the one body by confession and baptism and the brethren were strengthened and agreed to go to keeping house for the Lord, which they have already done. On August 4, 1900, he went to Locust Grove and preached, day and night, six days. As a result, eleven persons made the good confession and were buried with Christ in baptism. The church was greatly strengthened, and the brethren have gone to work apparently in good earnest. Brother Garner is a young man of twenty-five years and a sound gospel preacher. He has gone to Lead Hill to hold a meeting. W. T. BLALOCK.

GEORGIA.

Lockett, August 20.—The Pleasant Grove church of Christ, near Trion, has just closed an eight-days' glorious and interesting meeting. The preaching was done by Brother Alexander B. Lipscomb, of Louisville, Ky. The congregations were large and attentive. So eloquent and powerful were his discourses that he held the audiences almost spellbound during his preaching. Better attention was never given. As a visible result of this short meeting, seventeen persons confessed their faith in Christ and were buried with him in baptism and the brethren and sisters were much strengthened. This was the best meeting ever held at this place for the length of time that it was in progress. Brother Lipscomb has won a lasting place in our affections and confidence. To those who know him, it is needless for me to say that he is a bold and fearless proclaimer of the truth and an earnest, humble, and faithful Christian. He greatly endeared himself to the church during his short stay with us; in fact, everybody seemed to be closely drawn to him and to love him tenderly. May he be blessed with all the temporal blessings that are needful for him in this life and in the end be permitted to enter the portals of endless glory. From the Pleasant Grove church of Christ many prayers will go up to God in behalf of this faithful preacher of the gospel. C. M. CLEMENTS.

MISSISSIPPI.

Oak Ridge, August 21.—Brother G. A. Dunn, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., is in a meeting at this place. The meeting is only six days old, yet there have been seventeen confessions. Brother Dunn is arousing a great deal of interest. Sectarian prejudice is raging, but the sects cannot stand before Brother Dunn. He is one of the strongest young men I know of. I am leading the song service and attending to the baptizing. Brother Dunn will go from here to Tennessee for some meetings and I will go to Texas in September. If any congregations want a strong man to hold meetings for them, I refer them to Brother G. A. Dunn. Success to the Gospel Advocate. J. B. NELSON.

TENNESSEE.

Leftwich, August 20.—The protracted meeting at Antioch, Maury County, began on the first Lord's day in August and continued eight days. Brother J. E. B. Ridley did the preaching in a very plain, impressive way. The visible results were fourteen confessions and baptisms and friendship restored between two of the brethren. We believe that much more good was done in teaching Christians their duty, and we trust that the good seed sown may bring forth an abundant harvest. VIRGIE SOWELL.

Doziers, August 24.—Our meeting at New Hope church of Christ began on Sunday, August 5, 1900, and continued

Wednesday night, August 15, 1900. Brother L. M. Jackson, of Nashville, did the preaching, and he proved himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed;" for he is an earnest, faithful, gospel preacher—one who shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. As a result of the meeting, nine persons were baptized into the one body, and two others who were prodigals came back to the fold. E. G. CULLUM.

Verona, August 20.—Brother J. N. Armstrong began a meeting at Berea on August 12, 1900, and continued until Sunday night, August 19, 1900. Brother Armstrong did some faithful and earnest preaching while among us; and, while there were no additions, we feel that much good has been done. His admonition to the disciples was such as will make us more worthy of the name by which we like to be called if we but heed it. The audiences were large and attentive throughout the entire meeting. Brother Armstrong is a zealous worker and we pray that he may continue so till death. JOHNNIE JORDAN.

Clarksburg, August 20.—On the first Lord's day in this month Brother A. O. Colley, of Cottage Grove, began a protracted meeting at Poplar Springs, near this place, and continued until the following Friday. As a result, five persons were buried with the Lord in baptism and arose to walk in newness of life, while many others were deeply interested. Brother Colley is an able young minister of the gospel. He came among us as a stranger—not with anything new, but with the same old Jerusalem gospel, presenting it in such an able and interesting manner and conducting himself in such a way as to make a great impression upon his audiences. The attendance was large and attention good throughout the meeting, and we think a great deal of good was accomplished in the name of the Lord and Master. While Brother Colley was with us but a few days, yet we learned to love him and trust that in the near future he may preach for us again. J. A. JOYNER.

Gassaway, August 15.—Our meeting commenced on July 22, 1900, and closed on August 1, 1900, at the water. There were twenty-two persons added to the one body—nineteen by confession and baptism and three reclaimed. I think the brethren were much strengthened. Brother Hooten, who conducted the meeting, shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. He preached the word of God—the gospel—in its purity, and removed a great deal of prejudice and did much good. Three came from the Methodists and one from the Baptists. At the first of the meeting the rain hindered to some extent. Brother Hooten missed preaching one day and two nights on account of the rain and one day on account of the death of William Rich. The crowds were small on account of the rain. All things taken into consideration, we had a good meeting, good crowds, good attention, and good preaching. Brother Hooten has held four meetings for us and we like him better every meeting. We would have been glad if the meeting could have continued longer. L. L. MELTON.

Hornbeak, August 23.—I began a meeting at Bethel on the second Lord's day in this month and continued ten days. The congregation at Three Large Ulcers, Also Cancer of the Mouth, Cured by B. B. B.

"Fredonia, Ala., October 15, 1898.
"About twenty years ago I was cured of a bad eating ulcer by taking B. B. B. Three large ulcers broke out on my collar bone. I cured these with B. B. B. Lately a cancer broke out in my head and ears and ate all the small bones out of my mouth, and I could scarcely eat and talk. I could eat a little strained soup; that was all. I tried nine doctors, but none could cure me, my case was pronounced hopeless; so I tried B. B. B. again, and was cured once more. I am now sixty-three years old and am able to walk a mile any time, am strong and healthy. I use a bottle of B. B. B. sometimes, not often—don't need it. The disease made me almost deaf. B. B. B. helped my hearing. Respectfully,

"My six-year-old son has had a terrible sloughing scrofula ulcer of the neck for three years, attended with blindness, loss of hair, great emaciation, and general prostration. Physicians and various blood remedies were resorted to, without benefit. I was urged to try the efficacy of Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. The ulcers of the neck were entirely healed, the eyesight was restored, and the hair commenced growing on his head again. FRANK JOSEPH.

this place was once strong and active in the work of the Lord, but from some cause a spirit of lethargy has been permitted to come over it, and it is, therefore, not doing what it should. The brethren and sisters seemed to be greatly strengthened by the meeting, and I am confident they will do more in the future than they have done for some time past. As a visible result of the meeting, six persons were baptized and two persons who had drifted away confessed their sins and asked forgiveness both of the Heavenly Father and of the congregation, promising to do better in the future. How much prejudice was created or removed by the meeting I have no way of knowing, though we hope some good was done outside of the visible results. The one thing needful is to "preach the word," and God will take care of the results. I will begin a meeting, the Lord willing, at Miller's Chapel, Dyer County, on next Lord's day.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Fayetteville, August 17.—It was my privilege to be with the Gum Springs church of Christ, in Lincoln County, and to do the preaching in a meeting which began on the first Sunday in this month and continued eleven days. We had good audiences throughout and the attention was all we could ask. There were twenty-one baptisms and two came from the Baptists. This is the first meeting in which I have done the preaching for a number of years, on account of my throat; but, after eleven days' preaching and baptizing, I feel all right. I am thankful and hope to do much of this work in the future. Gum Springs is an old meetinghouse of the disciples and the congregation there have had many good meetings and done much good, but for some years they have suffered from adversity. They were delighted with the meeting. My home, while there, was with Brother James Halbert and family, and it will be a pleasure always to remember their many kindnesses to me. The church took much interest in the meeting, and I am encouraged to think they will put on new life. To our Heavenly Father and the power of his word be all the praise.

T. C. LITTLE.

Palestine, August 18.—On Thursday night before the first Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Green Hill and continued, in all, seven and one-half days. Fourteen noble souls were buried with Christ in baptism, and rose, I trust, to a faithful walk till death. The church seemed to be greatly strengthened. Most of those baptized were young people, though one is passing her sixty-sixth milestone. The members were not keeping house for the Lord, but they promised to go to work. Good feelings, kindness, and love reign in many hearts where prejudice and enmity existed when the meeting began. If they will do the Lord's will, they will soon be strong. The worst obstacle now is, some of the brethren are carrying insurance policies. I consider such extremely dangerous. They will pay the premiums, even if they have to neglect their obligations to God. But few people actually believe that "the gospel is the power of God." It is the duty of all—from the least to the greatest, the poor, the rich, all of God's children—to preach. It is not only the duty of the preachers to make sacrifices to go and preach, but it is the duty of every member of the church. May the day speed on when we will fully realize our duty and be found doing it "while it is day." The night is coming, dear brethren. Let us be at work, be ready, have on the "wedding garment." R. T. SISCO.

Pavatt, August 17.—On Saturday night before the fourth Lord's day in July Brother R. T. Sisco, of Palestine, began a meeting at our place which continued eight days. The visible results were thirty-four additions to the church—twenty-five by confession and baptism, one from the Methodists, two from the Adventists, and seven reclaimed. On account of the heavy rainfall, swollen streams, mud, and sickness, the prospects at first would have been indeed discouraging to less determined spirits, but with such a preacher at the helm, with the cooperation of the congregation, it was the greatest and grandest meeting ever held at our place. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, we had good congregations, who seemed intensely interested throughout the entire meeting. By his plain and fearless defense of the truth and his Christian influence, Brother Sisco not only won the love of the entire congregation here, but also of all the sectarians and worldly people. We feel quite sure that our meeting closed too early, as quite a number were "almost persuaded;" but while they procrastinated, the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," came, and our dear brother left us to help others in the good work. Our congregation was greatly edified and encouraged to press forward in the work, having realized that our work has not been in vain. May the good brother be spared to return to our place and finish reaping the harvest from the good seed he has sown. To God be all the praise. METTA DREADEN.

Mount Vernon, August 21.—Brother W. B. Cornes, of Denison, has just closed a very interesting meeting at this place, with sixteen additions to the church. We were well pleased with Brother Cornes, both as a preacher and as a man. He is a strong gospel preacher and a modest, Christian gentleman. R. W. HOLBROOK.

Greenville, August 22.—I have just closed some good meetings. I held a week's meeting at Alliance and baptized five persons. I went from there to Ola, Kaufman County, where Brother E. G. Sewell held two meetings a good while ago. At this place there were forty-seven additions, nearly all of whom were baptized. The brethren supported the meeting well and are going to build a meetinghouse. God bless the faithful. W. N. CARTER.

Hamilton, August 22.—I have just closed a good meeting at Theo, Falls County, with twenty additions. From there I went to Elmore, I. T., where we had forty-four additions—thirty baptized and fourteen reclaimed. Elmore is where the Methodists claimed to have ruined Joe Warlick in debate last year with Elder Pickens; and, the Baptists desiring to do likewise, I debated there last October with D. B. Ray. I baptized some Baptists and some Methodists who attended these debates. J. D. TANT.

Campbell, August 22.—I am just home from Indian Territory, where I held two meetings—one at Sterrett, with four persons baptized; the other, on Blue River, with twelve persons baptized and eighteen added to the one body. The brethren used "Gospel Praise" in the meeting. On my return home I found the brethren at Campbell had just sent an order for one dozen copies of "Christian Hymns." I fell much in love with "Gospel Praise." May the good old Gospel Advocate live long to hold up the word of life to a dying world.

GEORGE W. GANN.

Texarkana, August 16.—Our meeting at Mars' Hill, near El Paso, Ark., continued ten days. Though only five persons confessed Christ and were baptized and one good brother who had not been as zealous as he should have been confessed his shortcomings and promised to do better, in some respects I believe it was the best meeting that I have ever engaged in there. I think the attendance was larger than ever before. More Methodists and Baptists came out regularly. The five whom I baptized were reared under Baptist and Methodist influences, one of whom was a devout member of the Methodist Church. As it has ever been at Mars' Hill since my visit there in 1892, Christians, Methodists, Baptists, and sinners said: "Come back and hold another meeting." I always love to go there. The people generally seem anxious to learn "the way of the Lord more perfectly" and to worship as it is written. They sing good, old, soul-arriving songs which I heard during boyhood. That makes me shed tears. Then I preach the same old gospel that I heard during boyhood, and that makes Methodists, Baptists, Christians, and sinners shed tears, and we all learn to love each other. At every meeting some Methodists and Baptists, and usually many from the world, want to become members of the church of Christ. T. E. TATUM.

Cookville, August 21.—The meeting at Rocky Branch, Morris County, continued a week and a half, with twenty-nine additions. There were twenty-three confessions—several from the Baptists, and the rest by restoration. I have held five protracted meetings at this place, with an average of nearly forty additions to the meeting. The first meeting was held nineteen years ago, when the church was started. I baptized some young men and women at that meeting who were not then married; at the recent meeting I baptized quite a number of their children, now grown to manhood and womanhood. I went from Rocky Branch to Center Grove, in Titus County, and commenced a protracted meeting at the old Yancey Graveyard. This was the best meeting I ever held, for the length of time it continued. During the ten days it lasted there were eighty-one additions to the congregation. Of these some sixty-five were baptized, eight came from the Baptists, and the rest were restored. Nearly all the converts were men and women of mature years—a good many heads of families and some old people. A Methodist gentleman seventy years old was baptized. The writer did all the preaching and all the baptizing. The brethren are this week removing their church house from its old location to the place where the meeting was held. I am now at Cookville, with ten additions to date. In six weeks I have had about one hundred and sixty additions. Success to all the workers.

MEETING AT LEIPER'S FORK, TENN.

This meeting began on the second Lord's day in August and closed on Monday night after the third Lord's day in August. There was preaching, morning and night, each day through the meeting. The attendance was good throughout and three persons were baptized during the meeting. The meeting was a very pleasant one, and the brethren seemed in earnest in the cause of truth. I have known this congregation for more than forty years, and all of this time their number has kept up well and they have a good congregation now. They have done something toward sounding out the word in regions beyond, and I hope they will do still more in the future. It does seem to me that all our congregations should strive to sound out the word in neighborhoods and communities round about them. This meeting was especially interesting to me. The members that were the leading members when I first knew the place are nearly all gone, and their children and grandchildren are now carrying on the work they started and seem determined to keep the good work moving on. In the earlier days of my work with this congregation in holding meetings many persons embraced the gospel, and it was exceedingly pleasant to meet and associate with them and revive old and pleasant memories. It was so pleasant to see so many of them still determined to go faithfully on with the work of the Lord. We trust they will still be able to do great good in that section of the country. E. G. S.

Landor, the poet, says in one of his sweet little sonnets, "We are what suns, and winds, and waters make us;" but, unfortunately, suns will scorch, winds will roughen, and waters will not remove the injurious effects of the other two upon the lovely complexion of the fairer sex. For ages chemists have tried to distill from herbs and minerals an elixir of beauty, but they have failed, and it was left to modern times to find a cosmetic which should remove every speck and blemish and leave a soft and pearly loveliness upon the roughest skin. Gouraud's Oriental Cream does this, and while so perfectly harmless that spring water is not more so, it has a magic influence upon the complexion which cannot be overestimated or believed until realized. To our lady readers we simply say: Would you be as lovely as kindly Nature intended? Then use the Oriental Cream.

"An Imaginary Congregation."

Usually a congregation is started by a few disciples meeting on the first day of the week at a certain place; and, although it is very small in numbers, sometimes it grows very fast and accomplishes much work. Sometimes it meets at first in a private house or a rented hall. This is exactly what disciples ought to do when they are away from any congregation; and if all that are thus situated would do this, the truth would be carried into new places and great good would result from it. Do not wait for a preacher to start you, but go to work yourselves, and when the Lord sees that you are in earnest about it, he will send you help. God helps only those who are trying to help themselves. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) Not that they were all public preachers, but they most likely did whatever they saw needed to be done for the spreading of the gospel and the building up of the members.

In this little band every one is a preacher, for every one has to study hard to defend his position in the midst of such opposition. The whole community is so stirred up that some carry the New Testament in their pockets and at leisure times they are preparing themselves to refute the arguments that are waged against the Lord and his anointed. With such workers, outsiders are taught the way of salvation; and when a preacher comes to hold a meeting, his work is comparatively easy, for a great many are nearly ripe for the kingdom before he comes, and a great harvest of souls is the result. When the members of a congregation secure the very best talent for a meeting, yet have no additions, they wonder what is wrong. The trouble too often is that they have not been working among outsiders as they should; they are depending too much on the preacher to do all of this work. If you want a good meeting, work for it from the close of the last one, and you will be sure to have it. In congregations at first every one feels as though success depends on his own individual efforts. Even some of the enemies of the truth take up the story of the cross, and, although they never enlist themselves, they do some good work in defense of the truth. "What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretense, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." (Phil. 1: 18.)

Such faithful workers are always greatly persecuted for righteousness' sake, which is an incentive to lead them on to greater service. In the early period of the church, when there was so much persecution, probably it prospered as it never has since. Where there are great work and great persecution, there is sure to be prosperity. Work and persecution seem to go together, and either one seems to lead to the other after they are started; but at the beginning persecution is a result of work. Then if we want the church to prosper, we must work hard, as the early Christians did. In times of so much persecution hypocrites in the church are scarce. No doubt but that we have the truth that the apostles taught, but we need more of their zeal. Plenty of people think they are living in the service of Christ who have never been awakened to a sense of their duty, but I am afraid they are in a deep delusion. "And one of the answered, saying unto me.

Millions use Pearline The Modern Soap

What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." (Rev. 7: 13, 14.)

We see the hearts of these people are knit together with the bonds of love, and peace and happiness and harmony prevail among them. Each feels a deep interest in the other and in all social gatherings they are found in little groups together. They do not know anything about church troubles, for they are too busy and too much interested in Christianity to have any time or place for such things. Formality is scarcely recognized in their midst and indifference is almost entirely a stranger. While the people in general look upon them as being very narrow-minded and selfish, yet they freely acknowledge that they are conscientious, devout, and deeply interested in one another. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 35.)

All of the former things can be said of this congregation because of the work it does, which ought to stir us up to do more for the Master. If there ever was a time when it was necessary to make an extra effort for the spread of the truth, surely it is now, since there is so much done in the wrong way. People will not only be condemned for what they do, but also for what they do not do. There is a work that we ought to do, that no one can do for us, and that we must do before God can save us—not some great work, but the little things of life that are within our reach every day which must be done before we are prepared for greater things. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" (Matt. 25: 30.) "And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Matt. 25: 30.)

When we next look at this congregation, it is no longer meeting in a private house or a hall, but it has a fine meetinghouse which is mostly paid for, if not entirely; it has a large membership and is becoming more popular with the world. While they were building up it took all of their time, means, and talent; but now it seems as though they were satisfied, for, to a great extent, their work ceases. The less work they do, the less they are persecuted; hence they have nothing to stimulate them, and, as a consequence, they gradually die. They have time now to think about their condition, and trouble begins. It always makes people feel miserable, discontented, and dissatisfied to think about themselves, their troubles, what others think of them, and how badly they are treated. The secret of true happiness and contentment is to be busily engaged in doing good and in making sacrifices for others. People that do not work nearly always get into mischief. In an idle congregation there is fruitful soil for the work of the great archenemy. People will be doing something. If they are not doing good, they are sure to be doing evil; and in like manner, if they are not thinking about something good, they are sure to be thinking about something bad. A great many congregations did splendid work at first, but now they are doing comparatively nothing, and others are drifting in that way as fast as they can. Christians should be doing more all the time, instead of less. "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." (Rom. 13: 11, 12.) "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." (Rev. 2: 4, 5.)

No doubt you will agree with me that a great many congregations—old ones especially—are in just such a condition and that it is a bad state of affairs; but the question is: What can be done to better things? If the congregation was in a prosperous condition at first, it seems to me what we need is to restore a similar condition of things as far as possible; but some one says that we have reached all the people we can, and it is not possible to interest outsiders any longer. That may be true in your immediate community, but there are other places near you where people could be reached. Then why not try them? When it takes such persistent work to build up a congregation, why should we let it die? Let us push out into new places and build up the cause there. Individual work and strength make strong congregations. Then if we work hard in a new place to establish the truth, we will become strong at home. By doing the same work we retain the same persecution, both of which keep a warm, brotherly feeling among the members. Members that do the least work are the least interested and cause nearly all the trouble; this is certainly true of churches. A great many try to build up, but it appears to me that they go at it in the wrong way, for they do nearly all of their work at home.

One of the best ways for us to be saved is to do all we can to save others, and in like manner one of the best ways for us to build up at home is to do all we can to build up abroad. I am sure it would be a good thing sometimes if some of the best members of congregations would move and settle in destitute places, meet on the first day of the week, and invite their neighbors in to study the Bible together. I believe it would be one of the best ways for the spread of the gospel and to do missionary work. When congregations are opposed to members leaving on such conditions, they are working against the spread of the truth. Do not be afraid if it does leave your congregation small, for small congregations do the best work. We are too often afraid it will leave us weak, but we should remember that there is strength in weakness sometimes. When some of our best members leave us, it opens up the way for others to work who have not formerly been interested. Members are interested just to the extent they work.

Brethren, let us think about these things, and not stop with thinking, either, but let us do some acting as well. Some churches are already awakened to a sense of their duty along this line. May God bless and strengthen them to do what they know to be right and speed the day when others will take up the same cry.

MEETING IN SUMNER COUNTY, TENN.

This meeting was at a new meeting-house on the Scottsville Pike, about eight miles from Gallatin, Tenn. They had not definitely named the meeting-house, but they have built a very comfortable and neat house; have it nearly done, except the seats and some painting; and have it paid for as far as they have gone. The house is in a nice section of country and in a community of nice people, and I hope they will be able to do much good in planting the truth in the hearts and lives of the people of that section of country. There are several earnest members in that community already, and the prospects are for much good to be done there as time goes on. The brethren attended and cooperated exceedingly well in the meeting and the people turned out well to hear the word, and upon the whole a good interest was manifested. We hope much and lasting good was done through the plain truth of the Lord's word. The brethren there will have to work earnestly in sowing the seed and patiently wait for results. But good will result, as surely as they continue to work and worship as the word of God directs. They have worked well so far, and deserve much encouragement, and have strong hope for the future. The meeting began on the fifth Lord's day in July and continued eight days and nights. There were no additions.

Many a woman has periodic crying spells. She meets her husband with eyes red and swollen and he cries out: "What has happened?" "Nothing," his wife replies. "I don't know what is the matter with me, but I just had to have a good cry." Men don't have crying spells. It would seem therefore that an affection confined to women must have its cause in the womanly nature. There is no doubt that a diseased condition of the delicate womanly organs, is in general responsible for feminine nervousness and hysteria.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes women happy by making them healthy. There are no more crying spells. "Favorite Prescription" cures inflammation, ulceration and female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

Brother J. R. Bradley and I are having a good meeting here (Molino, Tenn.). We have given out meetings until August 26, 1900.—W. H. Dixon.

Brother L. S. White, of Gallatin, Tenn., was in the office last Friday. He has not been well enough for some time past to do much work, but will now engage in a few meetings. His next work is in two short meetings near Lebanon, Tenn.

Brother Larimore is spending this week with his aged mother, at Henderson, Tenn. This is like the man. In the midst of his very urgent duties he finds time to spend with his mother, seeking to lighten her burdens and to cheer her declining days.

Writing from Elmore, I. T., under date of August 9, 1900, Brother J. D. Tant says: "I am in a good meeting here, where Ray and I debated last October. Eleven persons have been added thus far. I have just closed a good meeting at Theo, Falls County, with twenty additions."

Brother F. W. Smith, of Franklin, Tenn., has been laid up for repairs. He was advised by physicians to close his meeting at Bellbuckle, Tenn., and to rest from evangelizing for a season. He will be greatly missed in the field, as he is one of the best and most earnest evangelists known to us. He will soon move to McMinnville, Tenn.

F. D. Srygley is dead. For many years, through the columns of the Gospel Advocate, he has poured a copious stream of knowledge throughout the churches; but now he has gone to the home of the soul. I never saw him, but I loved him for his works' sake, and I mourn his loss. It can be truly said of him: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." To the editors of the Gospel Advocate and to Brother Srygley's sorrowing family I extend my sympathies.—Thomas H. Popplewell, Independence, Mo.

Brother McQuiddy: Never has a death, outside of my near relatives, caused me so much sorrow as that of F. D. Srygley. He was my friend, and I loved him dearly. I sought his advice and counsel often, which were always given in a way indicating that he felt more than a common interest in my welfare. From my first acquaintance with him I felt drawn toward him as one upon whom I could lean. Words cannot express the gratitude I feel for the great benefit derived from his writings, which were always clear and pointed. No matter upon what subject he wrote, no one could fail to understand him. I never read an unkind, bitter, or harsh sentence from his pen. He was one of the kindest and most courteous men in dealing with an opponent I ever read after. The cause of truth has lost one of its strongest advocates. May God bless the wife and little ones.—F. W. Smith.

EDITORIAL.

Heaven will be sweet after life's conflicts are over.

Killing time is a slow method of committing suicide.

No man will ever be good without the help of the Lord.

The best way to save time is to salt it down with noble deeds.

The man never grows rich in faith who speculates in doubts.

Duties are never disposed of rightly until they are performed.

If your way in life is difficult to understand, get up closer to the Lord.

No Christian is called to walk in as rough way as the Lord has walked for him.

Life would be a terrible failure if a man did not grow wiser as he grows older.

The man who gains something by doing wrong pays too high a price for it.

It is much easier to preach what you practice than to practice what you preach.

If we love souls better than shekels, we will find some way to lead the lost to Christ.

The man who has a wicked heart would rather tell bad news than preach the gospel.

The man who is honest simply because it is the best policy would be a thief if it paid best.

The man who fails to do what he believes to be his duty will soon feel that he has no duty.

When all earthly hopes fall, then the "good hope" of eternal life takes deep root in the soul.

Many a man has gone to perdition because he spent his time in shouting over other people's meanness instead of mourning over his own sins.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

J. L. German, Whitewright, Tex., says: "Brother Srygley's last book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' is everything that any one could ask. The Bible excepted, it is, with me and mine, the best book."

I have never read any book, save the Bible, that gave me so much pleasure and profit as "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." The morning after it came I took it up, thinking I would read a short time before going about my business. When noon came, I was still reading, and I read until the book was finished. My eyes were red with weeping, but I thanked God for such a book and for such men as its author and the peerless hero of it.—J. C. Lindley, Bonn, Mo.

John Hayes, Mooresville, Ala., says: "A copy of Brother Srygley's last book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' received and read with profit and delight. I am much more than pleased—I am delighted—with the book; but how sad it makes us all to know it is Brother Srygley's last book! How we shall miss him! He did not lay up treasures on earth. How gladly would I, if I could, send his wife and little ones at least one hundred dollars! Friends who can will gladly do so, of course."

Ira F. Collins, Huntsville, Ala., says: "The new book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' is a great success. The first sermon in it is worth the price of the book." This is a sample of the expressions of approval coming to this office from all over the land. In the meantime the book is selling "like hot cakes." It sells at sight, and gives perfect satisfaction. The second edition is now on the press. The first edition will be exhausted, at the rate the book is now selling, by the time this reaches our readers.

Brother J. D. Floyd, of Flat Creek, Tenn., in writing to Brother Larimore, says: "I am reading, with much care, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' and I am so well pleased with two of the sermons, 'The Whole Duty of Man' and 'Sin and Righteousness,' that I feel inclined to write you, expressing my hearty indorsement. The first is the clearest exposition of a book (Ecclesiastes), regarded by many as a puzzle, I have ever seen, while the second unfolds truths that every parent ought to know." "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is meeting with universal favor, for, up to date, we have not heard a single adverse criticism.

Misses Ella and Lena Parrish say, in a letter to Brother Larimore: "We have read 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' and we are delighted with it, of course. Unquestionably, it is the best book and the most interesting book we have ever had the pleasure of reading. There are several copies of the book in our family. Each member of the family wanted one, and some of us wanted two. Little Fay's mother thought one would suffice for her little family, but that did not satisfy the child. She said: 'Mamma, I want one for my very own. I will pay my own money for it, will take more interest in it, and will read it every day. Please let me get one.' The mother consented. The child got the book. Now she is happy. She is a precious little lamb; she will be nine years old on November 27, 1900. You remember you baptized her on the first day of her ninth year—November 28, 1899. She is a model little Christian; she understands and appreciates her Christian privileges and duties."

Brother McQuiddy: I am greatly pleased with your new song book, "Gospel Praise." Competent musicians here have passed upon its music and are delighted with it. Mechanically it is excellent, and its arrangement is all that can be desired. The words are all between the music, and this is a great help to the average singer. Besides this, the hymns are arranged topically. If you want a hymn on prayer, you will find all of them on that subject grouped together; so, also, with all subjects. This is a wonderful saving of time and patience. I am more than pleased with the full collection of good, old hymns and tunes. Practically all of them are in this collection, but the best of the new ones are also here. With none but the ninety or one hundred old ones, the worship can be always enriched with song. The devout soul loves them, and they never grow old. If we can dispose of our comparatively new song books here, we will get this one. I am sure it would greatly improve our song service.—George Gowen, Franklin, Tenn.

"The Relations of God to the World" is the title of a neat little book of one hundred and ninety-two pages, just from our press. The author is Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., author of "The Remedial System; or, Man and His Redeemer." The author says: "It is the object in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases of different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed. In the accomplishment of intermediate objects, the impressment of matter by force was an indispensable necessity, since matter is inert. By such impressment of matter, the latter was put under the dominion and constant control of the former, whereby force became immanent in matter. This fact implies that matter and force are distinct entities; and since the former is inert, and hence passive, and the latter essentially active, it follows that force dominates matter and preceded it in point of time. Out of this relation of force and matter phenomena arise. The highest and strangest of these, when traced to the producing cause, point to the fact that force, as an entity, is the exerted power of the Creator of all things." This book will be appreciated by the thoughtful reader. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of seventy-five cents.

Mrs. Silena Moore Holman, of Fayetteville, Tenn., who has done her part, as a faithful Christian wife and mother, in bringing up seven sons and one daughter (not one of whom is known to have one habit of even doubtful propriety); a recognized authority on good books, on "pure literature"—which she has long made a special study and almost a hobby, having a habit of always carefully and critically reading a book before permitting her children to read it, and not permitting them to read it at all if she fears its influence may be pernicious—says of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore: " "I have read the book with pleasure and profit. Having read it with care, I am inclined to say it is the best book I have ever read, the Book of books excepted. It is an attractive book. A glance at its pages makes one anxious to read it immediately. It is a readable book; it is intensely interesting, from the beginning of the first paragraph to the bottom of the last page; it will do much good. I hope it may pass through many editions, and have an enormous sale. I hope many more sermons I have heard that good may preach may be published, and thus preserved. The world needs them. The sermons are well selected; but, where all are good, it is difficult to decide which are best. I have heard Brother Larimore preach so much that I could readily recognize these sermons as his, even if no reference were made to him in the book. While the sermons are good, intensely interesting, instructive, and helpful to both saint and sinner—to all—the letters are not less so; indeed, they touch a chord that readily responds to the touch that nothing else I have ever read has ever touched. Such, at least, is my experience. Without the slightest apparent effort, the writer reaches the innermost recesses of the soul. These letters, written to a bosom friend, without the slightest thought of their ever being preserved or made public, tell, in simplest style, the simple story of incidents pathetic, humorous, important, sad and glad, in a good man's life. They convey to the reader lessons of patience, humility, purity, goodness, and love; of kindness and helpfulness to all needing sympathy and help; and tell of a busy, happy, peaceful life, spent in the service of humanity and God. Good and only good and much good can and must result from the publication of this book. May many more of the same sort be brought forth from the same prolific source. Some one should see that this is done; but who can do it?"

Many Christian people feel sad that the church is losing its power. The question of how to reach the masses is attracting much attention. Many have been disposed to rely on the "fads and fancies" of men for carrying forward the work of the church. Nothing can atone for a lack of zeal and individual consecration in spreading the gospel of Christ. The reasons given by Dr. D. H. Martin, in the Christian Intelligencer, why the church is losing power with men, are so good that we give them here for the benefit of our readers. The best way to reach the masses is to go to them, and not wait for them to come to us. The disciples that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. The early Christians preached the gospel in the market place and from house to house. Here is Dr. Martin's article: "The apostles never called conventions to discuss the problem of reaching non-churchgoers. To their mind there was no problem about a straight line. They reached the masses by reaching the units, which make up the lump. Neither Jesus nor the apostles ever tried to save men in regiments. A good many Christian workers seem to feel that their efforts are a failure if they cannot get a crowd to hear the truth. But the mightiest truths Jesus ever announced were spoken, on each occasion, to an audience of one—the marvelous doctrine of the new birth, to Nicodemus; the all-important declaration of the resurrection, to Martha; the glorious truth of his Messiahship, to the woman of Samaria. The disciples acted on the same plan. Andrew went straight after Peter; Peter talked directly to Cornelius; Philip turned the Ethiopian's chariot into an inquiry room; Aquila and Priscilla made up a Bible class of one scholar, Apollos; and Dorcas was content to be a whole sewing society in herself. To-day there is spiritual stagnation in many churches, due simply to the fact that these churches have abandoned the apostolic method. They are trying to do by proxy what the apostles did by proximity, trying to make the purse do the work of person. . . . The minister invents sermon series and prints his topics in the daily newspapers; he has devised pleasant Sunday afternoons and happy Sunday evenings, and hilarious Monday nights; he has clouded the air with circulars and rained postal cards into every home, telling of stereopticon lectures, cantatas, and various Midway Plaisance devices; and the recording angel alone knows how much lobster salad and ice cream have been constructed to create sympathy for the church in the breasts of nonchurchgoers. And yet how few the results have been for all this expenditure of effort!"

Just at this time the Chinese Boxer, who is opposed to all foreigners dwelling in China, is attracting much attention in this country; but it appears from the St. Louis Christian Advocate that China has not a monopoly of bad Chinamen and that in this country is the American Boxer, who is opposed to all purity and virtue. It is a shame that such a state of affairs as described in the paragraph below can exist in our own beloved country. We need to do much work at home, as well as in the Chinese Empire. Verily, the love of money is the root of all evil and leads to all manner of crimes. "The Chinese population of San Francisco is estimated at about twenty thousand. About twenty-five hundred of these are females. Of this number about one thousand are legitimate wives, the remaining fifteen hundred being slaves in the flesh, and most revolting sense—girls kidnapped at their homes in the Orient, brought to America by fraud and imposture, passed through the customhouse under false oaths, sold to professional slave merchants, and, in their ignorance and helplessness, in a strange land where an unknown language is spoken, terrified by threats of death or other dire consequences, and condemned, in the majority of instances, to a life under duress in the Chinese brothels of an American city. Here is one of the best-organized slave marts of modern times, instituted and carried on by Chinese highbinders and American criminals. A young Chinese girl from nine to twelve years of age, in San Francisco, has a market value of from one hundred and fifty dollars to five hundred dollars; a girl from twelve to sixteen years ranges in value from five hundred dollars to fifteen hundred dollars; for attractive girls over these ages prices range up to thirty-five hundred dollars; and these investments are said to pay a profit of from twenty to thirty per cent. In a majority of cases these poor victims are decoyed into this miserable trap, supposing they are coming to America to meet betrothed lovers, who are expected to meet and wed them upon their arrival. One of these wretched marts has been discovered and closed by the police, but the vile practice is clandestinely carried on, as occasional chance information coming to the missions proves."

Sir Thomas Lipton has set the world a good example by investing his money, while living, so as to be helpful to the poor. It is a mistake to hoard up money during life, thinking it will bless some one when we are gone. It usually proves a curse, and not a blessing. The wise and sensible course is to use our money, while living, to the honor and glory of God. Record of Christian Work has this to say of Sir Thomas Lipton's investment: "What Ogden Mills has done in the line of cheap lodging houses in this country, Sir Thomas Lipton seems to have done in England in another direction. When young and poor he determined he would do his best, if he ever became rich, to give the poor good food at low prices. 'He has kept this vow, recently building in London a half-million-dollar restaurant, where from ten to twelve thousand people are daily fed wholesome food at a half-penny a head,' says a contemporary. 'Hot-water carts' . . . at out from the restaurant to exand hot meals at a half-penny each are served to school children and workmen anywhere within a radius of three miles of the dining hall. All money realized on the capital, and it is expected that it will be about three per cent, will be expended in extending the buildings and cart service. The restaurant was named after the Princess of Wales, who, with Sir Thomas Lipton, partook of a half-penny meal on the day the great dining rooms were opened."

"A writer, in speaking of the decline in conversions, asks two important questions: 'May not our negligence in instructing our children in the catechism have something to do with it? May we not have neglected to duly develop the denominational spirit among our people? It is only too well known that the great majority of our pastors neglect to instruct the children of their congregations in the catechism of our church. They leave this work to the teachers in the Sunday school.' The duty of teaching the catechism devolves upon the parents of the children, and it is an evil day in the world when they shirk this responsibility, attempt to place it on either pastor or Sunday school teacher. It is the duty of the pastor to urge the parents to do their duty in this thing. How many pastors do not even know if the parents are having their children learn the catechism, much less urging this duty upon them! Yet there is no safeguard for the young, as they go out into life, to compare to a knowledge of the catechism and the proof texts, which are the most important part of it." (Western Recorder.) The sooner all professed Christians abandon the denominational spirit and accept the gospel in its purity, the better will it be for humanity. The Savior did not pray for the growth of the denominational spirit, but "that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." The denominational spirit separates and divides people. Divisions produce carnality, and carnality produces death. The cultivation of the denominational spirit leads people to speak different things. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Parents are commanded to bring their children "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The Jews were commanded to teach the word of God to their children: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." The word of God does not instruct us to teach the catechism. A failure to teach the word of God will always produce a falling away.

We clip from the daily American, of this city, a brief report of a sermon delivered at Monteagle, Tenn., by E. E. Hoss, editor of the Christian Advocate. The thoughts advanced are scriptural and worthy of very careful consideration: "The worst delusion, he said, into which any man can fall is to suppose he has a better type of religion in his heart than he exhibits in his daily life. What a man is in his deportment, that is he also in the innermost fiber of his life. 'A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.' Mere profession counts for nothing. A pious whine is a poor substitute for practical righteousness. Our Lord gives commanding emphasis to this idea of practical obedience. No man is good or bad by spots. If he is good, he is good; if he is bad, he is bad. A moderately good man is no better than a moderately good egg. While common sense teaches us that some sins are worse than others, God's law is one law, and has an absolutely unbroken continuity from end to end. God's law is a ring of fire around our lives, inside of which are obedience and life, and outside of which are disobedience and death. Make a single gap in a fence and you destroy the value of the fence. No man has ever perfectly kept God's law, yet there are many who try to do it and diligently endeavor to adjust their lives to it. There is hope for a man as long as he holds fast to a high ideal. The highest way is the only way for the Christian man. Obedience, to be genuine, must be in the spirit as well as in the letter. When a man desires to do the will of God, it will not be difficult for him to determine what that will is. The conditions of religious knowledge are different from those of secular knowledge. Use religious knowledge as fast as you get it. There is more grace given for that used. God trusts even the lowest and weakest. He deals with us as a Father, and not as a tyrant. We are God's free children, the heirs of a King."

"Denominationalism is a waste of labor, a waste of money, and is a great impediment to the spread of the gospel.' (Gospel Advocate.) If all that is true, then the Gospel Advocate people should disband the Campbellite denomination, so as to rid the world of at least one nuisance." (American Baptist Flag.) The Gospel Advocate has used and is using its influence to disband all denominationalism, but it finds some people are more wedded to denominationalism than they are to the church of God. Some people would rather be Baptists than simply Christians. With us it is enough to be simply a Christian, and nothing more. "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." "But if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 16, R. V.) Will the editor of the American Baptist Flag tell us if the man who is simply a Christian will go to heaven when he dies? Is it necessary to be a Baptist in order to be saved? Is it necessary to be a Christian to be saved?

Henry Hardshell Obeys the Gospel.

Henry Hardshell: "You have had much to say, friend Faithful, of the importance of obedience to God and often warned me of the dangers of disobedience. I have felt the force of these things more than I was willing to show, but now I have fully made up my mind to obey the gospel, and I wish to tell you that I feel very happy in that decision."

Frank Faithful: "I congratulate you, Henry, with all my heart; for, though I have been discouraged about you sometimes, I have never ceased to pray that you would yet see plainly the plan of salvation and become obedient to the truth as it is in Jesus. I hope you will not take this happy feeling that you now have as evidence of your pardon, for there is no greater delusion a man can fall into than to think he is better in his heart than he is willing to show in his life. The heart is deceitful above all things."

Henry H.: "No; but, like some we read of, I have gladly received the word, although, I am sorry to say, I have been slow about it; but this, I suppose, has been somewhat in consequence of false notions I have had about what it takes to make a Christian. I have been anxious to see you, because I thought you would rejoice with me. I do believe on the Lord Jesus—that he is the Christ, the Son of God—and I desire to obey him in all his appointed ways. I have prayerfully studied the word of God, and, though yet a mere beginner, I can give scriptural reasons for my decision to take this step."

Frank F.: "I would be glad to hear you state them, though you need not call this your 'Christian experience,' which will be later, as a matter of fact."

Henry H.: "Well, in general terms, I find that God required man to obey him from the very creation of man. He gave man dominion over all the under creation, but reserved to himself the right to control man. So it is said: 'The Lord God commanded the man.' (Gen. 2: 16.) He gave him much liberty in the garden of Eden, telling him he might 'freely eat' of every tree of the garden, including the tree of life, but drew the line at the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. We all know the unhappy sequel: Adam disobeyed God and brought death into the world, with all our woe. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, 'walked with God; and he was not; for God took him.' (Gen. 5: 24.) I understand to 'walk with God' is to obey him. Noah, too, is said to have walked with God. This was characteristic, I find, of every saint in the patriarchal age of the world. In the Jewish dispensation I find the conspicuous names of Joshua and Caleb, who were more than others in the sight of God simply because they obeyed God. This thing of obeying God was everything, so to speak, and often expressed in a few pointed, plain words: 'Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him, so did he.' (Gen. 6: 22.) 'Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee.' (Gen. 12: 1.) Abraham obeyed, not knowing whither he went."

Frank F.: "Why, you have made good progress in your study of the Bible, and have struck the main idea for the good of all men. 'Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.' You remember that passage, do you?"

Henry H.: "O, yes, that is the saying of Samuel, the prophet, to the disobedient king, Saul. As I was going to say, this thing of obedience to God is the main thing in the Bible for us to learn. Christ, in that great Sermon on the Mount, lays it down as one of the bed-rock principles when he says: 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.' In about the last thing he said on earth he commanded the same great truth to be presented to the world in his name: 'Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.' (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Here obedience is required of all the world. This is all so plain to me now; but there is one thing, friend Faithful, I was as much surprised at as any other."

Frank F.: "What is that, Henry?"

Henry H.: "Why, after a careful and prayerful study of all the cases of conversion mentioned in the New Testament—and they are mentioned by the thousand—I could not find a single case where any anxious inquirers ever left the inspired teachers or others in that day and said they wanted to be saved, but could not understand the way. Somehow, they always made them see the way clearly."

Frank F.: "That is true, Henry, and it shows a marked difference in the way or ways that are now taught. I dare say you did not find any examples of infant baptism, either."

Henry H.: "No; I did not expect to, either. When it came to baptism, it was the baptism of believers only. I am a believer, I am truly penitent, and I desire to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Frank F.: "By what mode, Henry?"

Henry H.: "As I understand the teaching of the New Testament, there is but one mode of baptism and that is to be 'buried' in baptism. St. Paul says, in Rom. 6: 'So many of us as were baptized . . . were . . . buried.' None were baptized who were not buried, according to this."

Frank F.: "Do you desire to be baptized to get into the Baptist Church?"

Henry H.: "No; if I did, I would have to apply to a Baptist minister. I desire to be baptized into Christ, where he has promised the forgiveness of sins and adoption into his spiritual family; I just desire to obey him as commanded; I do not wish to be a partisan of any kind, but just to be a Christian—nothing more, nothing less."

Frank F.: "You do not think you are now in Christ?"

Henry H.: "No; for, according to Gal. 3: 27, believers must be 'baptized into Christ.' Such 'have put on Christ,'

Frank F.: "What state or relation do you think is meant by the expression 'in Christ?'"

Henry H.: "As I tell you, I am but a beginner; but, according to Col. 1: 13, it means to be in the kingdom of God's dear Son. I shall never be content until I do obey the Lord in baptism. To my mind this expression 'baptized into Christ' carries with it very clearly two ideas. One is that to be baptized into Christ one must be out of him just before baptism and in him after baptism—that is, if words have any meaning. If a person were 'in Christ' before baptism, here is one command he never could obey. It is impossible for those who are already in Christ to be baptized into him. Will you assist me in this, as you have in my faith, by teaching me the word?"

Frank F.: "I will, very gladly. Let us now go unto the water, then go 'down into the water, where, in the name of Christ, you shall be buried in baptism and raised up to walk, I trust, in newness of life."

Henry H.: "I am rejoiced to be able to take this step. Christ himself set the example. He said: We 'must be born of water and of the Spirit.' No one was said to be in Christ in the New Testament unless baptized. I gladly obey. All must obey him or disregard his authority. By this act I pledge myself to walk in his ways, to keep his ordinances, and to be humble, true, and faithful to the end. May the Lord help me."

The above closes this dialogue series. As it includes answers to many objections to the truth, illustrations or easy applications of Old Testament history, reminiscences of good men and women who loved the gospel, corrections of course, half profane expressions often heard in conversation, and other useful hints, some have asked for publication in tract form, but the amount so far subscribed ($15) is insufficient for revision and publication.

The writer is grateful to the publishers and appreciative of the words of approval spoken to him by many friends who have read his writings. He would be glad to receive any expression of approval of what he has written, or even fraternal criticism of the same will be favorably received by him.

Breaking Bread. No. 2.

The original passover, kept in Egypt, was a plan of salvation by which believers were saved from the death decreed against the firstborn. It was a type of Christ offering himself for the sins of the world, that through faith in him all might be saved from death. The commemorative passover, kept annually in remembrance of salvation from Egypt, is a type of the Lord's Supper, the feast appointed to be kept in Christ's kingdom in remembrance of his broken body and shed blood. The relation of the Lord's Supper to the passover makes it necessary to quote sundry passages in order to give a proper view of that feast. "Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for a house; and if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb. Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep, or from the goats." (Ex. 12: 3-5.) "The whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening" (verse 6) of the fourteenth day of the same month. "Eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread." (Verse 8.) "There shall no stranger eat thereof." (Verse 43.) "A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof." (Verse 45.) Only the circumcised could eat. "If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord. The fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it." (Num. 9: 10, 11.) "Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee: but at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt." (Deut. 16: 5, 6.)

The interest in its first observance in Egypt was intense as life. "It is the Lord's passover. For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the firstborn in the land of Egypt,

Many Christian people feel sad that the church is losing its power. The question of how to reach the masses is attracting much attention. Many have been disposed to rely on the "fads and fancies" of men for carrying forward the work of the church. Nothing can atone for a lack of zeal and individual responsibility surrounding the gospel of Christ. The intelligence, why the church is losing power with men, are no good that we give them here for the benefit of our readers. The best way to reach the masses is to go to them, and not wait for them to come to us. The disciples that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. The early Christians preached the gospel in the market place and from house to house. Here is Dr. Martin's article: "The apostles never called conventions to discuss the problem of reaching non-churchgoers. To their mind there was no problem about a straight line. They reached the masses by reaching the units, which make up the lump. Neither Jesus nor the apostles ever tried to save men in regiments. A good many Christian workers seem to feel that their efforts are a failure if they cannot get a crowd to hear the truth. But the mightiest truths Jesus ever announced were spoken, on each occasion, to an audience of one—the marvelous doctrine of the new birth, to Nicodemus; the all-important declaration of the resurrection, to Martha; the glorious truth of his Messiahship, to the woman of Samaria. The disciples acted on the same plan. Andrew went straight after Peter; Peter talked directly to Cornelius; Philip turned the Ethiopian's chariot into an inquiry room; Aquila and Priscilla made up a Bible class of one scholar, Apollos; and Dorcas was content to be a whole sewing society in herself. To-day there is spiritual stagnation in many churches, due simply to the fact that these churches have abandoned the apostolic method. They are trying to do by proxy what the apostles did by proximity, trying to make the purse do the work of person. . . . The minister invents sermon series and prints his topics in the daily newspapers; he has devised pleasant Sunday afternoons and happy Sunday evenings, and hilarious Monday nights; he has clouded the air with circulars and rained postal cards into every home, telling of stereopticon lectures, cantatas, and various Midway pleasance devices; and the recording angel alone knows how much lobster salad and sea cream have been constructed to create sympathy for the church in the breasts of nonchurchgoers. And yet how few the results have been for all this expenditure of effort!"

Just at this time the Chinese Boxer, who is opposed to all foreigners dwelling in China, is attracting much attention in this country; but it appears from the St. Louis Christian Advocate that China has not a monopoly of bad Chisamen and that in this country is the American Boxer, who is opposed to all purity and virtue. It is a shame that such a state of affairs as described in the paragraph below can exist in our own beloved country. We need to do much work at home, as well as in the Chinese Empire. Verily, the love of money is the root of all evil and leads to all manner of crimes. "The Chinese population of San Francisco is estimated at about twenty thousand. About twenty-five hundred of these are females. Of this number about one thousand are legitimate wives, the remaining fifteen hundred being slaves in the fullest and most revolting sense—girls kidnapped at their homes in the Orient, brought to America by fraud and imposture, passed through the customhouse under false oaths, sold to professional slave merchants, and, in their ignorance and helplessness, in a strange land where an unknown language is spoken, terrified by threats of death or other dire consequences, and condemned, in the majority of instances, to a life of prostitution in the Chinese districts of an American city. Here is one of the best-organized slave markets of modern times, instituted and carried on by Chinese high-binders and American criminals. A young Chinese girl from nine to twelve years of age, in San Francisco, has a market value of from one hundred and fifty dollars to five hundred dollars; a girl from twelve to sixteen years ranges in value from five hundred dollars to fifteen hundred dollars; for attractive girls over these ages prices range up to thirty-five hundred dollars; and these investments are said to pay a profit of from twenty to thirty per cent. In a majority of cases these poor victims are decoyed into this miserable trap, supposing they are coming to America to meet betrothed lovers, who are expected to meet and wed them upon their arrival. One of these wretched markets has been discovered and closed by the police, but the vile practice is clandestinely carried on, as occasional chance information coming to the missions proves."

Sir Thomas Lipton has set the world a good example by investing his money, while living, so as to be helpful to the poor. It is a mistake to hoard up money during life, thinking it will bless some one when we are gone. It usually proves a curse, and not a blessing. The wise and sensible course is to use our money, while living, to the honor and glory of God. Record of Christian Work has this to say of Sir Thomas Lipton's investment: "What Ogden Mills has done in the line of cheap lodging houses in this country, Sir Thomas Lipton seems to have done in England in another direction. When young and poor he determined he would do his best, if he ever became rich, to give the poor good food at low prices. 'He has kept this vow, recently building in London a half-million-dollar restaurant, where from ten to twelve thousand people are daily fed wholesome food at a half-penny a head,' says a contemporary. 'Hot-water carts are sent out from the restaurant to carry meals to the sick and bedridden, and hot meals at a half-penny each are served to school children and workmen anywhere within a radius of three miles of the dining hall. All money realized on the capital, and it is expected that it will be about three per cent, will be expended in extending the buildings and cart service. The restaurant was named after the Princess of Wales, who, with Sir Thomas Lipton, partook of a half-penny meal on the day the great dining rooms were opened."

"A writer, in speaking of the decline in conversions, asks two important questions: 'May not our negligence in instructing our children in the catechism have something to do with it? May we not have neglected to daily develop the denominational spirit among our people? It is only too well known that the great majority of our pastors neglect to instruct the children of their congregations in the catechism of our church. They leave this work to the teachers in the Sunday school.' The duty of teaching the catechism devolves upon the parents of the children, and it is an evil day in the world when they shirk this responsibility, attempt to place it on either pastor or Sunday school teacher. It is the duty of the pastor to urge the parents to do their duty in this thing. How many pastors do not even know if the parents are having their children learn the catechism, much less arguing this duty upon them! Yet there is no safeguard for the young, as they go out into the world, unprepared to a knowledge of the catechism of their texts, which are the most important of the Bible (Western Standard). The church of the world has neglected the duty of instructing the children of the church in the catechism of the Bible. The Savior did not come to save the world of the denominational spirit, but to save the world; he may be one; as thou, Father, art in heaven, so thou art on earth, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." The denominational spirit separates and divides people. Divisions produce carnality, and carnality produces death. The cultivation of the denominational spirit leads people to speak different things. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Parents are commanded to bring their children "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The Jews were commanded to teach the word of God to their children: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." The word of God does not instruct us to teach the catechism. A failure to teach the word of God will always produce a falling away.

We clip from the daily American, of this city, a brief report of a sermon delivered at Monteagle, Tenn., by E. E. Hoos, editor of the Christian Advocate. The thoughts advanced are scriptural and worthy of very careful consideration: "The worst delusion, he said, into which any man can fall is to suppose he has a better type of religion in his heart than he exhibits in his daily life. What a man is in his deportment, that is he also in the innermost fiber of his life. 'A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Mere profession counts for nothing. A pious whim is a poor substitute for practical righteousness. Our Lord gives commanding emphasis to this idea of practical obedience. 'No man is good or bad by spots. If he is good, he is good; if he is bad, he is bad. A moderately good man is no better than a moderately good egg. While common sense teaches us that some sins are worse than others, God's law is one law, and has an absolutely unbroken continuity from end to end. God's law is a ring of fire around our lives, inside of which are obedience and life, and outside of which are disobedience and death. Make a single gap in a fence and you destroy the value of the fence. No man has ever perfectly kept God's law, yet there are many who try to do it and diligently endeavor to adjust their lives to it. There is hope for a man as long as he holds fast to a high ideal. The highest way is the only way for the Christian man. Obedience, to be genuine, must be in the spirit as well as in the letter. When a man desires to do the will of God, it will not be difficult for him to determine what that will is. The conditions of religious knowledge are different from those of secular knowledge. Use religious knowledge as fast as you get it. There is more grace given for that used. God trusts even the lowest and weakest. He deals with us as a Father, and not as a tyrant. We are God's free children, the heirs of a King."

"Denominationalism is a waste of labor, a waste of money, and is a great impediment to the spread of the gospel." (Gospel Advocate.) If all that is true, the Gospel Advocate people should disband the little denomination, so as to rid the world of the nuisance." (American Baptist Flag.) The Gospel Advocate has used and is using its influence to break up all denominationalism, but it finds itself more wedded to denominationalism than to the church of God. Some people were more Baptists than simply Christians. While enough to be simply a Christian, and nothing more. "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." "But if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." (1 Pet. 4: 16, R. V.) Will the editor of the American Baptist Flag tell us if the man who is simply a Christian will go to heaven when he dies? Is it necessary to be a Baptist in order to be saved? Is it necessary to be a Christian to be saved?

Henry Hardshell Obeys the Gospel.

Henry Hardshell: "You have had much to say, friend Faithful, of the importance of obedience to God and often warned me of the dangers of disobedience. I have felt the force of these things more than I was willing to show, but now I have fully made up my mind to obey the gospel, and I wish to tell you that I feel very happy in that decision."
 Frank Faithful: "I congratulate you, Henry, with all my heart; for, though I have been discouraged about you sometimes, I have never ceased to pray that you would yet see plainly the plan of salvation and become obedient to the truth as it is in Jesus. I hope you will not take this happy feeling that you now have as evidence of your pardon, for there is no greater delusion a man can fall into than to think he is better in his heart than he is willing to show in his life. The heart is deceitful above all things."
 Henry H.: "No; but, like some we read of, I have gladly received the word, although, I am sorry to say, I have been slow about it; but this, I suppose, has been somewhat in consequence of false notions I have had about what it takes to make a Christian. I have been anxious to see you, because I thought you would rejoice with me. I do believe on the Lord Jesus—that he is the Christ, the Son of God—and I desire to obey him in all his appointed ways. I have prayerfully studied the word of God, and, though yet a mere beginner, I can give scriptural reasons for my decision to take this step."

Frank F.: "I would be glad to hear you state them, though you need not call this your 'Christian experience,' which will be later, as a matter of fact."

Henry H.: "Well, in general terms, I find that God required man to obey him from the very creation of man. He gave man dominion over all the under creation, but reserved to himself the right to control man. So it is said: 'The Lord God commanded the man.' (Gen. 2: 16.) He gave him much liberty in the garden of Eden, telling him he might 'freely eat' of every tree of the garden, including the tree of life, but drew the line at the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. We all know the unhappy sequel: Adam disobeyed God and brought death into the world, with all our woe. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, 'walked with God; and he was not; for God took him.' (Gen. 5: 24.) I understand to 'walk with God' is to obey him. Noah, too, is said to have walked with God. This was characteristic, I find, of every saint in the patriarchal age of the world. In the Jewish dispensation I find the conspicuous names of Joshua and Caleb, who were more than others in the sight of God simply because they obeyed God. This thing of obeying God was everything, so to speak, and often expressed in a few pointed, plain words: 'Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him, so did he.' (Gen. 6: 22.) 'Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee.' (Gen. 12: 1.) Abraham obeyed, not knowing whither he went."

Frank F.: "Why, you have made good progress in your study of the Bible, and have struck the main idea for the good of all men. Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.' You remember that passage, do you?"

Henry H.: "O, yes, that is the saying of Samuel, the prophet, to the disobedient king, Saul. As I was going to say, this thing of obedience to God is the main thing in the Bible for us to learn. Christ, in that great Sermon on the Mount, lays it down as one of the bed-rock principles when he says: 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.' In about the last thing he said on earth he commanded the same great truth to be presented to the world in his name: 'Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.' (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Here obedience is required of all the world. This is all so plain to me now; but there is one thing, friend Faithful, I was as much surprised at as any other."

Frank F.: "What is that, Henry?"

Henry H.: "Why, after a careful and prayerful study of all the cases of conversion mentioned in the New Testament—and they are mentioned by the thousand—I could not find a single case where any anxious inquirers ever left the inspired teachers or others in that day and said they wanted to be saved, but could not understand the way. Somehow, they always made them see the way clearly."

Frank F.: "That is true, Henry, and it shows a marked difference in the way or ways that are now taught. I dare say you did not find any examples of infant baptism, either."

Henry H.: "No; I did not expect to, either. When it came to baptism, it was the baptism of believers only. I am a believer, I am truly penitent, and I desire to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Frank F.: "By what mode, Henry?"

Henry H.: "As I understand the teaching of the New Testament, there is but one mode of baptism and that is to be 'buried' in baptism. St. Paul says, in Rom. 6: 'So many of us as were baptized . . . were . . . buried.' None were baptized who were not buried, according to this."

Frank F.: "Do you desire to be baptized to get into the Baptist Church?"

Henry H.: "No; if I did, I would have to apply to a Baptist minister. I desire to be baptized into Christ, where he has promised the forgiveness of sins and adoption into his spiritual family; I just desire to obey him as commanded; I do not wish to be a partisan of any kind, but just to be a Christian—nothing more, nothing less."

Frank F.: "You do not think you are now in Christ?"

Henry H.: "No; for, according to Gal. 3: 27, believers must be 'baptized into Christ.' Such 'have put on Christ,' as the same verse shows."

Frank F.: "What state or relation do you think is meant by the expression 'in Christ?'"

Henry H.: "As I tell you, I am but a beginner; but, according to Col. 1: 13, it means to be in the kingdom of God's dear Son. I shall never be content until I do obey the Lord in baptism. To my mind this expression 'baptized into Christ' carries with it very clearly two ideas. One is that to be baptized into Christ one must be out of him just before baptism and in him after baptism—that is, if words have any meaning. If a person were 'in Christ' before baptism, here is one command he never could obey. It is impossible for those who are already in Christ to be baptized into him. Will you assist me in this, as you have in my faith, by teaching me the word?"

Frank F.: "I will, very gladly. Let us now go unto the water, then go 'down into the water, where, in the name of Christ, you shall be buried in baptism and raised up to walk, I trust, in newness of life."

Henry H.: "I am rejoiced to be able to take this step. Christ himself set the example. He said: We 'must be born of water and of the Spirit.' No one was said to be in Christ in the New Testament unless baptized. I gladly obey. All must obey him or disregard his authority. By this act I pledge myself to walk in his ways, to keep his ordinances, and to be humble, true, and faithful to the end. May the Lord help me."

The above closes this dialogue series. As it includes answers to many objections to the truth, illustrations or easy applications of Old Testament history, reminiscences of good men and women who loved the gospel, corrections of course, half profane expressions often heard in conversation, and other useful hints, some have asked for publication in tract form, but the amount so far subscribed ($15) is insufficient for revision and publication.

The writer is grateful to the publishers and appreciative of the words of approval spoken to him by many friends who have read his writings. He would be glad to receive any expression of approval of what he has written, or even fraternal criticism of the same will be favorably received by him.

Breaking Bread. No. 2.

The original passover, kept in Egypt, was a plan of salvation by which believers were saved from the death decreed against the firstborn. It was a type of Christ offering himself for the sins of the world, that through faith in him all might be saved from death. The commemorative passover, kept annually in remembrance of salvation from Egypt, is a type of the Lord's Supper, the feast appointed to be kept in Christ's kingdom in remembrance of his broken body and shed blood. The relation of the Lord's Supper to the passover makes it necessary to quote sundry passages in order to give a proper view of that feast. "Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for a house: and if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb. Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep; or from the goats." (Ex. 12: 3-5.) "The whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening" (verse 6) of the fourteenth day of the same month. "Eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread." (Verse 8.) "There shall no stranger eat thereof." (Verse 43.) "A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof." (Verse 45.) Only the circumcised could eat. "If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord. The fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it." (Num. 9: 10, 11.) "Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee: but at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt." (Deut. 16: 5, 6.)

The interest in its first observance in Egypt was intense as life. "It is the Lord's passover. For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, and the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt." (Ex. 12: 11-13.) Here it was God's plan of salvation by which the houses of Israel were saved from death through faith. It was never this to them again, but was annually kept afterwards as a memorial. "And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance forever." (Ex. 12: 14.)

The description of the institution is minute and clear in details. The place appointed for observing it and the character of assembly in which it was kept are worthy of special note. It was never observed in temple or synagogue nor by large crowds at one table. Brethren living far apart and strange to each other never gathered around the same table at this feast, nor did unbelievers, outsiders, ever dare sit with the faithful around this memorial feast table; in fact, the feast was kept wholly in bounds of a single family where that family was large enough to consume the appointed lamb. Where the lamb was too much for one family, others were brought in from the immediate neighborhood, so as to make the eating correspond with the lamb. The ordinance as a memorial was required to be kept in the city of Jerusalem, where was the glorious temple and where synagogues were thicker than family groceries in a modern city; but always in the observance of the feast the great assembly was divided into many small assemblies in the homes of families. It was never kept in a temple or a synagogue. The unclean must be purified in order to keep it. (Num. 9: 10, 11.) The stranger dare not approach it. All leaven must be put from their houses. They were to prepare to approach this table. Zeal which prompted any of them to do what they had not prepared to do simply led to sin, which required the forgiveness of God. (2 Chron. 30: 18-20.) The time was the fourteenth day of Abib every year; it was an annual feast. The modern Easter, an annual feast kept in some denominations, is the perverted passover of the Old Testament, set up in this age under a different name. In the Authorized Version "Easter" occurs once. (Acts 12: 4.) The Revised Version substitutes "the Passover," the proper name for the feast the Jews were then keeping.

The first paschal lamb seems clearly to have been typical of Christ's body. It was offered to save from death; its blood was sprinkled to keep back the destroying angel. He was offered up for the sins of the world. "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Cor. 5: 7.) Of the lamb it was said: "In one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house; neither shall ye break a bone thereof." (Ex. 12: 10.) The soldiers that were sent to hurry on the death of the three crucified persons by breaking their legs found Jesus already dead and "broke not his legs," that the scripture should be fulfilled: "A bone of him shall not be broken." (John 19: 36.) The scripture written of the lamb was fulfilled in Christ's body. So we see the first paschal lamb was a type of Christ's body. As evidence that the memorial passover is typical of the Lord's Supper, I ask you to consider carefully the following: "Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. . . . But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat." (1 Cor. 5: 6-11.) There is no feast to be kept in Christ's kingdom but the Lord's Supper, and this feast is a memorial of Christ. The old leaven is wicked professors whom they are exhorted to purge from their assemblies, put away from among them, not to company with them nor eat with them.

God's ordinances are perfected before delivered; they are not baby concerns which grow into manhood through the development and additions of wise men. The passover was best kept where men had faith to do the very thing appointed, with the preparation required, at the time ordained, in the place God appoints, and for the purpose God sets forth. The Lord's Supper, the antitype of the passover, should be observed according to what is written about it. It should be kept by the persons to whom it was delivered, in the form ordained, at the time appointed, in such places and assemblies as we find authorized by the example of those who kept it under the direction of the Spirit, with the preparation required and for the purpose expressed by its author. Shelbyville, Tenn. W. L. BUTLER.

"Not Forsaking the Assembling of Ourselves Together."

I am glad to see some timely articles upon the importance of the brethren assembling "to break bread." Many have grown lukewarm under the entertainment of "the pastor." The question, "Why do we have so few churchgoing people?" is often asked. The "pastor," in his vain effort to entertain, has cut down his talks to "sermonettes." The natural order seems to be "preacherette," "sermonette," "religionette," and "Christianette."

The "fads and fancies" of men are failing. The opportunities are great "to break the bread of life" to many who have halted, and convince many a weary brother that he can both entertain and be entertained in the appointments of the Lord.

The apostle discourses beautifully on this theme in Heb. 10. He encourages by saying we have the privilege "to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way;" that we have "a high priest over the house of God." He admonishes us to "draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith." He exhorts us to "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering." Many mistakes will be made; many will fall by the wayside; many will run the race for a while; many who start gloriously will fall to reach heaven. All these failures and mistakes will be made by man. God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit will make none. "For he is faithful that promised."

In view of all these failures, disappointments, and everlasting punishment, God says: "Hold fast," "stand fast." "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." "Looking diligently lest any man fall of [margin, "fall from"] the grace of God." Amid all these admonitions to the Christian we have some preachers who say a child of God cannot do the very thing that God, on almost every page of the sacred volume, tells him not to do. Yet the apostle speaks of some who have "slandered the Lord that bought them." God says of these characters: "Cursed children: which have forsaken the right way." (2 Pet. 2: 14, 15.) "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.)

After this exhortation to "hold fast the profession of our faith," the divine writer says: "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works." How much is included in this "good works?" There is one thing I know is. God expressly mentions "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." This "good work" is to be done on a particular day. Listen: "But exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." In all the catalogues of "good works" what is to be done on a particular day? Visiting the sick and distressed? No. Ministering to the necessity of the poor? No. Visiting the widow and orphan in their affliction? No. All these are to be done whenever opportunity presents—upon every day. But does God speak of anything to be done on a certain day? "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread." We are certain we have found one of the "good works" of which the apostle speaks. We are to exhort "one another, as" we "see the day approaching."

Brethren, how many do this? How many, as we pass and re-pass each other during the week, say: "Brother, the glorious first day is approaching. Do not fail to assemble, as the manner of some is?" Yes, "as the manner of some is" gets a great many. How many do not exhort and encourage even their own wives and children to be present "upon the first day of the week" for this "good work! Do not wait for "the day" to come and then scold and grumble at those who are there because many are absent; but exhort "one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." If the faithful in Christ were to practice earnestly this sacred admonition to exhort and encourage as we see the day coming, soon preaching on the first day of the week would be a secondary thing. The "pastor" question would be settled and the divine order restored.

We now come to the great reason for this given by the apostle: "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." (Heb. 10: 26.) This verse has often been quoted to show that if a man "sins willfully," he cannot get forgiveness. This is a perversion of the scripture. What is "the knowledge of the truth" concerning this "good work" to be done on this particular day? "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." (1 Cor. 11: 26.) "If we sin willfully"—yes, stay at home, neglect to assemble, and laze about "upon the first day of the week," and let this institution (the Lord's Supper) go down, by which we show the Lord's death, the only sacrifice for the sins of the world—"there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." In vain can we search heaven and earth for another sacrifice than that pictured by faith in this sacred appointment of the Lord. He said, "This is my body," and, "This is my blood."

Question 1: What will become of the world if the church lets this institution go down?

Heb. 10: 27 answers: "But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." "Taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thes. 1: 8, 9.)

Question 2: What will become of the church if it fails to do its duty, and lets this institution, the Lord's Supper, go down?

Answer: "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy, under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God?" (Heb. 10: 28, 29.) Jesus said of the loaf, "This is my body," and that by observing this appointment we would "show his death till he come." But we have forsaken the assembling of ourselves, meeting for the purpose of breaking bread is unknown by many, the institution has gone down, we have trodden under our unhallowed feet "the Son of God," and have "counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith we were sanctified, an unholy thing." Yes, Christ said of the cup, "This is my blood," and we are admonished to "show his death till he come" by partaking of it on "the first day of the week." But we have been "indolent and negligent and set apart this day to visit friends and relatives. The appointment of the Lord is almost forgotten. We have "counted the blood of the covenant . . . an unholy thing." Let us work, brethren, while it is day.

In my next article I shall write about the who, the when, the what, the why, the how, and the result of the Lord's Supper. A. G. FREED.

A Look Ahead.

There will be a reconstructed China. All her material conditions will be changed for the better. She will rise in the scale of nationhood; her foreign relations, her financial system, and her judicial administration will be lifted immensely above the level where they now are. New soil is always wonderfully rich. Old people once emancipated from old ideas will grow new ideas with an exuberance unthought. The Japanese are an illustration of this. The Chinese once started in the same way will move at a slower gait, but will surpass the Japanese in the scale of magnitude.

"It would be an achievement of doubtful value to humanity to have only a new material China. There will be also a regenerated China. A purely materialistic China, well-equipped ironclads and Mauser rifles, and no ascendancy of moral force, would be a curse to herself and a menace to mankind. God has something better in store for humanity. By a regenerated China is not meant that all China will be converted—far from it as yet—but it is meant that Christianity will soon move with gigantic strides.

"Drawbacks and checks there will be; but allowing for them all, after taking into account the nature of the Chinese people once emancipated from their slavish allegiance to their literary class, considering that they have no Indian caste to keep them back, counting, as we do, on the mighty power of God to be provident in the last days, now just ahead of us, we are safe in assuming that there will be such ingatherings as the world has never seen."—Dr. William Ashmore, in Missionary Review.

EDITOR FOLK AND HIS CHALLENGE.

As I anticipated, Editor Folk has not had the fairness to publish the article he challenged me to write showing he misrepresented the teachings of the disciples and refused to make correction. The challenge through his paper certainly implied a pledge of honor that he would publish it. He excuses himself on account of its length. My article was about two and one-half columns, and could have been put in two columns solid. He cuts out such scraps of it as suit him, and devotes seven columns to this. If Oakley, after challenging Tant to discussion, had insisted Tant should tell him in a private room or whisper to him what he had to say and let Oakley tell to the public only what he saw fit, every one would have said: "How unjust, unfair this would have been!" That is practically just what Folk did to me, so far as his readers are concerned and so far as was in his power. He has ample space for Dr. Lofton to display his vituperative ability, then to reply to what I said, but not room for a word from me. If the Doctor was a fair, magnanimous man, he would spare the use of Folk's columns for opposing those not permitted to reply. The old Roman heathen law would not permit one to be condemned without giving him an opportunity to be heard; but narrow, religious partisanship will abuse and denounce and condemn people falsely and give them no opportunity to be heard. Religious partisanship is the smallest and meanest of all partisanship.

I am now nearing the close of my thirty-fifth year as editor. I never cut up into disjointed fragments or mutilated an article I was opposing, nor did I ever refuse to one who thought he was wrong an opportunity to correct it. No one could get a correct idea of my article from Folk's mutilation. Sometimes the quotations are so disconnected that the point aimed at is hidden.

This article of Folk's contains additional gross misrepresentations, but it is useless for me to point them out, as his readers will never see what I write. He fails to correct the statement that the disciples differ from the Mormons in only one point—the laying on of hands—in the plan of salvation. How am I and every honest man compelled to regard him while persisting in such a statement?

Folk gives the letter I wrote him some years ago asking to be permitted to correct his misrepresentations and his reply. It is much worse than I had recollected it. As I now recall it, he had written a series of articles in which he had, as usual, misrepresented the teachings of the disciples. Summing up these misrepresentations in the questions he asked, he put these directly to me. Usually when a question is publicly put to a man it is understood to convey a pledge of honor that the answer shall be given as publicly and fairly treated. I had learned that Folk did not observe this rule, so paid no attention to the questions until as explained in this letter:

"April 3, 1895.—Elder E. E. Folk—Dear Sir: Some days ago an esteemed Baptist brother of Gallatin called my attention to three questions that you had asked me through the Baptist and Reflector, and asked me if I would answer them. I replied that I had paid no attention to them, because you would not let your readers see my replies; that you asked as though you would publish the answers, but did not do it. He felt sure you would do it. I told him I would give a fair and candid answer to any question you would ask involving any real and practical point of Christian faith or practice if you would publish my answers. He expressed himself as sure you would do it. Now this is to inquire if you will publish in your paper my answers to your queries if I give them. Please answer at once.
"Truly and kindly,
DAVID LIPSCOMB."

To this he replied:

"April 3, 1895.—Dr. David Lipscomb, City—Dr. Lipscomb: Your note of April 3 just received. It is customary for the editors of different papers to do their own writing in their own papers. As you are the editor of a paper yourself, I presumed that you would answer my questions in your own columns, and I expected either to publish your answers in full, if brief, or the substance of them, if lengthy, in the Baptist and Reflector, and reply to them if I deemed it necessary to do so. Of course if I should publish your articles, it would be only fair that you should publish mine. I do not know how the columns of the Gospel Advocate are, but I know that the columns of the Baptist and Reflector are so crowded that I should not have room for a controversy which would be liable to spin out to almost endless lengths. For these reasons I do not think it would be best to publish your articles in the columns of the Baptist and Reflector and have mine published in the Gospel Advocate, and I presume that, from the standpoint of an editor, you will agree with me. However, if you will write brief and direct and unequivocal answers to my questions, I will publish them in the Baptist and Reflector on the condition that you will publish my answers in the Gospel Advocate. Very respectfully, EDGAR E. FOLK."

The questions propounded were:
"1. What about the pious unimpaired? Will they be saved?"

"2. Whom do you baptize, the children of God or the children of the devil?"

"3. What is the use for Christ under your system? If a man has to save himself, anyhow, by his own obedience, what need is there for Christ?"

The questions involve the conclusions he had reached through a series of articles. His answer to my inquiry showed he had no thought of publishing my response, save such disjointed scraps as suited his purpose. In his letter he justifies himself in one-sided representations of his own and the teachings of others, and only promises to publish what I say if it suits him in length and character and if I do not lie in the answer. "Equivocate" means to use words of doubtful meaning with a view to mislead, and that is to lie. No one with any self-respect could answer questions under these restrictions and implications unless he wished to show contempt for him who asked them. If he did not regard me as having sufficient discretion and candor to make such answers as he could publish, he ought not to have put them to me. In asking them before his readers, he pledged to publish them as I gave them. If the editor of the American or Banner were to ask a direct question of each other or of any gentleman, he would feel in honor bound to give the answer as publicly as the question was. Editor Folk, in asking me these questions, either desired me to answer them or he did not. If he did not, he was acting under false pretenses in asking them. He was doing it for effect before his readers and to make a false impression concerning me and the teachings of the disciples. If he desired me to answer them, it was a favor to him to do it. It was as if a man asked another to do him a favor that required the other to go into his house to perform it. The request implied the privilege to go into his house and to have such privileges in the house as compliance with the request demanded; but before he enters, the owner cautions him: "You can go in if you will not stay a moment longer than I think it will take to do it, or step outside of a line I prescribe, and if you will steal nothing while you are in the house." I submit a man with self-respect could not enter that house to do the owner the favor asked, with such restrictions. Folk may understand why he heard nothing more from me on the subject.

I write these things not because I am hurt or mad; I have quit cherishing these; but I would like to see professed Christians, as fair and just toward each other as men of the world. They ought to be more so. I write thus plainly that we may understand each other. Folk proposes a discussion of some questions wherein each thinks the other wrong. I gladly accept the proposition if he really means he will publish my articles as I write them, without mutilating them to suit himself, and each shall be entitled to the same space. If we so discuss, I will treat him courteously. I will not seek to widen a breach or to oppose a position further than I think the truth of God demands, but I shall rigidly examine all positions I regard as contrary to Bible teaching. I expect the same from him. Such discussion ought to bring about a better understanding of the Bible and draw men seeking to know the truth closer together. I am sure if Folk or the Baptists hold a truth I do not, I would like to hold it, and in such discussion shall weigh candidly all he presents; and if in any point I find I am wrong, I will not be slow to own it. I agree to the discussion, and suggest some points growing out of the questions he propounded to me years ago. But I say nothing more until I hear further from him.

CHRISTIANS MUST BE FRUIT BEARERS.

Christ is the true vine, and all Christians are branches in him, while God, the Father, is the husbandman. Thus, while Christ is the vine, the Father is the vinedresser; and Jesus himself says: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." (John 15: 2.) This is a beautiful and very forcible figure, and it is so plain that everybody can understand it. All know that a good vinedresser will prune unfruitful branches, and thus give those that do bear the strength that would go to the branches that bear no fruit if allowed to remain in the vine. As each individual disciple is a branch in Christ, each one also is expected to bear fruit. To bear fruit is for each disciple of Christ to do the will of God, to live as the word of the Lord directs. The will of the Lord is plainly given in the New Testament, and all can learn what the Lord would have them do if they will. The trouble is, too many Christians just float along and do not try to learn what the Lord would have them do. They become so engrossed in the affairs of this life that they have no time left to think of God and his word; and as the carnal, the fleshly, mind is enmity against God, the lives of such members are against the will of God, while at the same time they seem to be very zealous and earnest. But God knows what men are and what they are doing. He knows whether they bear any genuine Christian fruit or not; and when they will not bear fruit, he takes them away. He also requires the church, the people of the Lord, to withdraw from every brother that walks disorderly. The church of God is not allowed to fellowship members that will not walk in harmony with the will of God. When a man departs from his Christian duty and will not do what the Lord requires him to do and the church withdraws fellowship from him and refuses to recognize him as a child of God, he is then out of the body, is out of Christ; but whether this is the full meaning of the declaration that the Father, the vinedresser, will take away the unfruitful branch may be a question. Anyway, it is evident that when men turn away from the service of God and refuse to do his will, a separation from Christ, the true vine, then takes place, whether the church takes any action in the case or not. When the members of a congregation continue to recognize a man that plainly shows himself unworthy of such recognition, the first thing they know the whole flock will be overboard and all will be cast off as unfruitful. It is utterly contrary to the will of God for those who are themselves in harmony with God to recognize and encourage sin by continuing to recognize and encourage a man that lives in sin and refuses to reform his life. So whether or not the declaration that God will take away the unfruitful branches from the vine is fulfilled when a church withdraws fellowship from a wicked and rebellious member, it is their duty to do that, anyway. But the decree has gone forth that God will take away the unfruitful branches, and the whole church combined cannot prevent it; for, in reality, a man that thus enters into rebellion against Christ, takes himself away from him and out of him by his own conduct; and if the church cannot reform him, cannot induce him to turn from his evil ways, he is hopelessly gone. The church that would uphold such a one in such a course takes itself out of Christ also by upholding the sinner.

There is not a church on earth that is strong enough to stand in purity and remain in Christ that recognizes and upholds sin. In upholding a sinner, the church becomes a party to his sin, and will of necessity cease to dwell in Christ, because sin and sinners cannot continue to dwell in Christ. So Christians that will not bear fruit need not concern themselves much about how the Father takes away the unfruitful branches, but they may be well assured he will do it. The only preventive is not to live in sin. Refusal to do God's will is sin, no matter in what form it comes up. Besides, rebellion cannot long remain in Christ. God and Christ are holy, and will not dwell with unholiness. An apostle says to Christians: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." To follow holiness is to lead a holy life, to live upon the principles of holiness. "Holiness" means consecration to the service of God, to the doing of God's will. It means a life of purity and separation from evil, a life devoted to the sanctity of the will of God. This sort of people can remain in Christ while they live, and when they die, they can die in him and can sleep in him till the resurrection morning; but unholy people can neither live nor die in Christ. He says: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." (John 14: 21.) God and Christ will manifest themselves to, and will dwell with, holy people, with those that have his commandments and obey them. Again, he says of such: "And we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (Verse 23.) To think of God and Christ dwelling with us is indeed precious; but, on

Brother Paul Slayden is in a meeting at McBurg, Tenn.

Brother Larimore began a meeting at Leiper's Fork, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at Foster Street church of Christ last Sunday.

Brother W. M. Oldfield is still sick and unable to preach. He is now at Warner, Tenn.

Brother F. B. Srygley will begin a meeting at Lewisburg, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in this month.

Brother Foy E. Wallace will begin a meeting with us on the third Lord's day in October.—J. T. Poe, Longview, Tex.

Brother James K. Hill has recently held tent meetings at Alto, in Franklin County, Tenb., and at Cumberland Springs, near Tullahoma, Tenn.

In July and August Brother C. M. Pullias held meetings at Josephine, Tenn., at a point near Major, Tenn., at Simmons Bluff, Tenn., and at Commerce, Tenn.

Brother A. C. Jackson recently held two good meetings in Indiana—one at Trinity Springs, resulting in eleven baptisms; the other, at Lyons, resulting in nine additions.

Brother L. M. Jackson was in the office last Friday. He had just closed a meeting at Ashland City, Tenn., resulting in ten additions. There were six additions during his meeting at Marvel, Tenn. He is now in a meeting at Sycamore, Tenn.

I appreciate the fight the Gospel Advocate has made and is making against error and innovations and the splendid contribution it has made to the advancement of the cause of truth and righteousness. No paper with which I am acquainted meets so fully the wants of the brotherhood as does the Gospel Advocate. I regret so much the loss of Brother F. D. Srygley. His place cannot be filled. We were all shocked and grieved over his death. I have just held my first meeting since getting up from my recent spell of sickness and hope to be able to fill my appointments for the balance of the year. The brethren took care of me so promptly and liberally while I was sick that my wants were all supplied, for which I feel very, very grateful.—W. H. Sutton, Sparta, Tenn.

EDITORIAL.

Christ does not drive, but leads.

The devil is a regular attendant at church.

Ask God for what you want, and use what you get.

The Red Sea was not divided till Israel reached its shores.

God has never promised to help the man who does not try to help himself.

God is pleased with the man who does his duty to-day and makes no promises for to-morrow.

The very moment a man turns from the law of the Lord he hears the seductive voice of temptation.

Few men can look back over their past lives without seeing something they would rather had not been.

The sinner is not truly penitent until he can confess his sins without blaming other people with them.

Men who do not read the Bible daily with an earnest desire to know the truth are not fit to lead the people.

A truly courageous man will follow his convictions, even if they should bring upon him the frowns of the people.

No man should expect to be happy if he does not lead a pure and useful life: "He who is virtuous is wise, and he who is wise is good, and he who is good is happy."

We reach the masses by going to them. The apostles reached the masses by reaching the units which make up the lump. "Go, preach the gospel," is the command of Jesus.

The reason so many professed Christians do not enjoy the worship of God's house is, they are spiritually sick and are not hungering and thirsting after righteousness. They have wandered so far away from duty during the week they are really too sick to know their condition. The hungry man will eat.

This is the season of the year that most protracted meetings are held in the South. We want the evangelists and churches to know that we would like to have them report their meetings through the columns of this paper. Such reports not only make interesting reading, but are encouraging and helpful to others. Send us reports, giving all items of interest.

The appearances are now that the cigarette must go. The Rock Island Railroad Company has followed the example of the Union Pacific Company by serving notice on the employees of the company in the Armourdale yards that those who are addicted to the use of cigarettes must give them up or lose their positions. It is to be hoped that others will follow the example of the Union Pacific until the use of the cigarette is entirely discontinued.

More preaching from house to house, on the streets, in the shops, and in the stores would be very beneficial. It is very probable that women could do this private preaching in a more effective manner than men—at least as well. The New York Observer gives the following story illustrative of the power of the medical mission: "A Hindoo was asked by an English missionary: 'Which of all our methods do you fear the most?' The native replied: 'We do not greatly fear your schools, for we need not send our children; we do not fear your books, for we need not read them; we do not fear your preaching, for we need not hear it; but we dread your women and your doctors, for your doctors are winning our hearts and your women are winning our homes; and when our hearts and homes are won, what is there left us?'"

Again we wish to urge upon our friends the importance of getting people to read good religious papers. A religious journal that adheres strictly to the truth is a power for good in any community. Brother L. S. White, of Gallatin, Tenn., promises to do all he can in the way of extending the circulation of the Gospel Advocate. He says: "I am a strong friend of the Gospel Advocate and have been all the while." Many others are promising to work to extend the influence of the paper. We are expecting a great increase in our subscription list in a very short time. We should receive several thousand new names on our special trial offer to send the paper from the time the name is received to the end of this century for twenty-five cents. You should help us by calling the attention of your friends to this offer at once.

The idea of religion by a converted cowboy, which we give below, is a very sensible and good one. Considerable practice along the line here suggested would be very helpful: "Lots of folks, that would really like to do right, think that servin' the Lord means shoutin' themselves hoarse praisin' his name. Now, I'll tell you how I look at that. I'm workin' here for Jim. Now, if I'd sit around the house here, tellin' what a good fellow Jim is, and singin' songs to him, and gettin' up in the night to serenade him, I'd be doin' just like what lots of Christians do; but I wouldn't suit Jim, and I'd get 'fired' mighty quick. But when I buckle on my straps and hustle among the hills and see that Jim's herd is all right, and not sufferin' for water and feed, or bein' off the range and branded by cattle thieves, then I'm servin' Jim as he wants to be served."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

All who have seen "Gospel Praise" pronounce it a very excellent music book. The music is simple, the melodies are sweet, and the sentiment of the songs is fine. The book contains 322 hymns and sells at the exceedingly low price of $4.80 per dozen, by express, not prepaid. We only ask for this book a fair trial. Send us your orders.

I have lately read with much interest Brother Lipscomb's book, "Civil Government," and think it the grandest book I ever read, and I heartily commend it to the brethren. I think it will do much in promoting pure Christianity, unmixed with all worldly institutions, both governmental and social.—George L. White, Wier, Tenn.

The new book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," received, and I am perfectly delighted with it. The whole family want it at once, and, while one reads it, the rest linger around and listen. I can think of but one improvement, and that is to put the portrait of our dear departed brother, F. D. Srygley, into the next edition, side by side with that of T. B. Larimore.—James S. Wood, Glen Allen, Ala.

We have decided to send the Gospel Advocate to new subscribers from the time the subscription is received to the close of this century for twenty-five cents. We do not propose to make any cut in the price of the paper, for this we cannot afford to do. We make this trial offer simply to bring the merits of the paper before the people. We believe that if any one will read the Gospel Advocate carefully for a time he will soon desire to read it all the time. We sincerely hope that all our readers will call the attention of their friends to this liberal offer and seek to induce them to give us a trial subscription. Our friends and readers can help us very much and can be of great service to their acquaintances by getting them to read the Gospel Advocate. We hope to add several thousand new names to our list in the next thirty days. Who will help us?

Elsewhere in this paper is an advertisement of a number of our very best books which we have reduced in price. These books are cheap at the price we have always sold them, but we make this sacrifice in order to get the books off of our shelves and among the people where they will be read and do good. We are offering only first-class books and such as will have an uplifting influence. All should be exceedingly grateful that the best of books can be bought at a nominal sum. We are receiving a number of large orders on these books, but as books are our real friends, we are expecting many more to take advantage of the reduced prices. Richard de Bury says of books: "These are the masters who instruct us without rods and ferules, without hard words and anger, without clothes or money. If you approach them, they are not asleep; if investigating you interrogate them, they conceal nothing; if you mistake them, they never grumble; if you are ignorant, they cannot laugh at you." If you want any of these books, it would be well to send in your order at once.

"The Relations of God to the World" is the title of a neat little book of one hundred and ninety-two pages, just from our press. The author is Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., author of "The Remedial System; or, Man and His Redeemer." The author says: "It is the object in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases of different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed. In the accomplishment of intermediate objects, the impressment of matter by force was an indispensable necessity, since matter is inert. By such impressment of matter, the latter was put under the dominion and constant control of the former, whereby force became immanent in matter. This fact implies that matter and force are distinct entities; and since the former is inert, and hence passive, and the latter essentially active, it follows that force dominates matter and preceded it in point of time. Out of this relation of force and matter phenomena arise. The highest and strangest of these, when traced to the producing cause, point to the fact that force, as an entity, is the exerted power of the Creator of all things." This book will be appreciated by the thoughtful reader. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of seventy-five cents.

AMERICAN ATHLETES AND SUNDAY.

To the credit of the American athletes who took part in the international contests in Paris it should be said that the greater part of them absolutely refused to take part in any contests on Sunday, though the events were scheduled for Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. According to a letter received by us from Paris, men representing only one American college took part in the games, to the disgust of the other American athletes, who stayed out. The president of Syracuse University had forbidden students of that institution from entering Sunday games, and they obeyed. These athletes set an example to many professing Christians who consider that their religious obligations are only binding at home.—Union Gospel News.

THE MISSIONARY WORLD.

Dr. James S. Dennis prepared for the Ecumenical Conference, recently held in New York, the following statistics representing societies directly or indirectly engaged in missionary work, including educational institutions, medical institutions, hospitals, etc.:

Ordained missionaries, 5,063; physicians (men), 484; physicians (women), 218; laymen, not physicians, 1,470; married women, 3,567; unmarried women, 3,403; total foreign missionaries, 15,460; ordained natives, 4,053; unordained native laborers, 72,999; total native laborers, 77,338; principal stations, 5,571; all other stations, 26,247; organized churches, 11,039; communicants, 1,317,684; added during the last year, 84,186; number of Sunday schools, 15,032; Sunday school membership, 771,628; contributions from native sources, $1,841,757; native Christian community, 4,414,236.

A CHURCH IN POLITICS.

A few weeks ago mention was made in these columns of the movement in the Catholic Church for the banding of all Catholics for political purposes. The openly avowed object is to give Romanism a greater political influence. The Interior, commenting on the movement, says:

"Catholic priests throughout the country are falling into line, and the project meets with general approval in Catholic circles. This shows that the Catholic hierarchy, like the Bourbon dynasty, learns nothing and forgets nothing. It is by precisely this method the Catholic church has committed hara-kiri in many lands, and nothing is surer to move the great Protestant body to its depths than to see this foreign-born, priest-led element openly organized to control governmental action."—Union Gospel News.

LEND A HAND.

There are poor people about you that you may help to feed and clothe; then do it. There are strangers to whom you can be kind; invite them to church and make them feel at home. There are sick people that would be glad to have you bring them flowers; especially will this be true of the poor in the wards of city hospitals. Not only would they be delighted to get the flowers, but would rejoice to have you read God's word to them and sing and pray with them. There are men and women in prison that would be glad to get good books and papers and to have a kind word from you and to hear you sing and to have you tell them about Jesus. In all of these ways of helping the needy you should lend a hand, and by and by the Savior will say to you: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Exchange.

A TRIBUTE TO WORKINGMEN.

"I have preached," says Rev. J. S. Reajer, "the gospel in two States, in the largest cities and smaller towns. Since I began my active life, at the age of thirteen years, until the present, I have never known an honest, industrious Christian workingman to be among the disgruntled ones, nor in all these years have I seen a workingman's home void of comforts and blessings for himself and family, unless the man was a patron of the saloon. Several of my charges have been composed entirely of workingmen, and nowhere have I found more nobleness of character, contentment, prosperity, and happiness, and in no other charges were the church finances so cheerfully and earnestly met as in these congregations composed of workingmen and their families." No higher or more richly merited encomium can be pronounced upon any class of men. Only the homes of those toilers who have fallen victims to the saloon are destitute of comforts of life in this country. Industry, sobriety, frugality, and Christianity make the homes of workingmen thresholds to paradise.—Religious Telescope.

INTEMPERANCE AMONG SOCIETY WOMEN.

It is a sad, but well-known, fact that drinking is increasing among society women. Drink among men has cursed the land enough; Heaven help us if the women take to it! Therefore, let us welcome this resolution passed by the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America on the last day's session, in Philadelphia: "The virtue of a nation is never higher than the virtue of its women. The mothers of the nation form the habits of the youth. It is a lamentable fact that the drinking customs of society to-day foster the use of intoxicants among women—women of the higher grade of society; women of culture, wealth, and influence, who should be eminent in respectability and virtue, as the example is apt to be followed. We urgently advocate . . . the forming of public opinion against this growing abuse. We recommend open meetings, lectures, and the distribution of temperance literature in places in which total abstinence is flagging."—Christian Century.

GREAT PREACHERS AND THE GREAT PREACHERS.

The Interior says it was an intellectual and emotional treat to hear Dr. Storrs or Dr. Behrends preach, but that hearing them was such a high luxury that only a comparatively few wealthy people could afford it. Entering their congregations, you would have seen "refined and dignified people," but no poor. In apostolic days the poor had the gospel preached to them. "The greatest Preacher of all times preached to the poor by preference. The great preachers of this time preach to the well-to-do," says the Interior, and asks the pertinent question: "Does this solve the problem of the present delay of God's chariots? If the drivers are not going God's way, that would explain." These are strong words, and their force is not easy to escape. We surely appreciate to the highest degree such men as Dr. Storrs and Dr. Behrends, but neither must it be forgotten that one of the proofs of the divine mission of Christianity is that "the poor have the gospel preached to them."—Christian Century.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

There has been much disappointment in France over the attendance at the great Exposition, a combination of circumstances having worked against the fair. The war in South Africa and the trouble in China have been such absorbing questions as to divert general attention from the Paris enterprise. Then there is no doubt that the attitude of the French press and people toward the United States in its war with Spain, and the bitter attacks upon the British, and especially the indecent caricatures of Queen Victoria, have operated to seriously cut down the attendance of English-speaking people. As an indication of the small attendance, the half-yearly meeting of the Chatham and Dover Railway directors shows that whereas the last Exposition, in 1889, caused an increase in their receipts of four hundred thousand dollars above the normal, the present half year shows a decline in the continental traffic of eighty thousand dollars. Other English railroads handling continental traffic have had a similar experience. There is little doubt but that there has been a silent, unorganized boycott of the Exposition by many Americans and by a still larger number of Englishmen. When the French people come to face and to pay their already certain heavy deficiency, the result will inevitably be an increase of French hostility toward the English-speaking people, but in this they should blame themselves; they have only reaped what they have sown. Business sagacity, to say nothing of common decency, should have taught them to have pursued a different course toward America and England in the immediate past.—Christian Standard.

IN HASTE TO CONDEMN.

Now that the first shock of the Chinese outrages has, in a measure, passed, there is a commendable tendency on the part of many to put aside the extravagant utterances of those who would enforce the old doctrine of an eye for an eye, and to consider the situation with some degree of calmness. When in the midst of the bad news and worse fears of the past few weeks the Sultan of Turkey expressed himself as horrified at the atrocities in Peking, there was a very general smile. The absurdity of horror being felt by the murderer of the Armenians was too apparent to allow of his sympathy being received as sincere.

Yet it is pointed out that the history of Christendom is not without its own records of cruelty, even under less excusable circumstances than those of the present-day Chinese outbreak. The days of the Spanish Inquisition, for example, are too well known to need more than mention, and in that time the perpetrators were led by a spirit of intolerance, while the motives of the Chinese revolutionists are very different. The Chinese have seen more and more the aggressions of the so-called "Christian" peoples until their existence as a nation was threatened, and, in their ignorance, they have looked upon the missionary, the merchant, the consul, the soldier, and the sailor from Christendom as all parts of one gigantic movement to break up their ancient government. It is not strange, then, that there should be a widespread uprising against the "foreign devils," and, moved by fear and hatred and guided largely by superstition, it is not surprising that hideous outrages should follow.

The nations must of necessity take steps to restore order and demand indemnity for the attacks upon the persons of their official representatives in order to insure hereafter more orderly conduct on the part of China; but history shows that cruelty is not confined to heathendom, and this makes the more inconsistent the clamors for vengeance.—Union Gospel News.

THE HOPE OF IMMORTALITY.

The trend of the age is in the direction of a larger, a wider, and a firmer belief in immortality. The more we know of this world, the more we feel the need of another. We have not done with God when we have done with our earthly life. A quiet conviction has stolen into the universal consciousness that there are other rooms in the Father's mansion which we shall some time occupy, and that they who have gone are simply a day's march ahead of us in the soul's journey.

This thought is so prevalent that we can feel its presence everywhere. It has changed our mental attitude toward sorrow and bereavement. The desolate churchyard of other days, with its moss-covered stones and its atmosphere of loneliness and hopelessness, has no place in the spiritual economy of these days. A brighter outlook has forced us to change all that. Our cemeteries are no longer neglected, but their broad acres are covered with flowers, as with a sad kind of good cheer.

This change in the outward is proof of a change in the inward. The heart of man is not as the heart of our fathers, and the faith of man is deeper. The other world is no longer a dream, but a mist-covered reality. In time to come the mists will roll away, because the sun will grow brighter, and the future will be as clear to us as the present. Possibility has given way to probability, and probability is slowly surrendering to demonstration.

A light fills the eyes, a joy fills the heart, and separation is no longer the equivalent of despair. God has spoken often, but we are just now learning to hear what he has been saying ever since death first brought its shadows into the household. Religion has a larger element of rejoicing in it. We have heretofore stood at the door of the tomb and tearfully wondered who had taken the body of Christ away, but now we have heard angel voices say, "He is risen, as he said," and our graves have become resting places, a mere bivouac on the road to heaven.—George H. Hepworth, in New York Herald.

WHAT IS LOVE?

For others' sake to longer wear
The garments old, that they more bare
May feel the warmth of robe you give,
And have a braver heart to live;
Nor show that you yourself deny
By any half-regretful sigh—
Herein, I think, is love.

For others' sake to seek to bear
The heaviest part of all life's care;
For others' sake to dry your tears,
And keep unspoken all your fears;
For others' sake to be heart strong
When sore beset by foe and wrong—
Herein, I think, is love.

For others' sake to make life sweet,
Though thorns may pierce your weary feet;
For others' sake to walk each day
As if joy helped you all the way,
While in the heart may be a grave
That makes it hard to be so brave—
Herein, I think, is love.

"For others' sake"—this brought to earth
The benediction of Christ's birth;
For others' sake to suffer all
That into human life can fall,
For others flowed the crimson tide,
For others He was crucified.
Herein, I think, is love. —Selected.

A CAMPING EXPERIENCE.

When Harry, Ben., and Fred. decided to go camping, they fixed on the shore of the State Reservoir as combining all the features of an ideal camp ground. The spot selected was a point of land extending into the water—a grassy hillock sloping down to a sandy beach—the best of bathing places. A few large trees on the point gave the needful shade without making the place damp and dark. The fishing was excellent, and all the necessary supplies would be obtained from the white farmhouse across the water. So the boys packed up in great glee and moved to "Point Goshang," as they named their camp.

The State Reservoir in Northern Ohio is an artificial body of water introduced from several of the lakes with which the region abounds into a long, deep, winding valley. It is fed by channels from the lakes, and is probably four or five miles long, winding almost around a large extent of farm lands and woods on the higher levels. It follows the natural shape of the valley, and in some places is almost a mile across, while quite narrow in others. The water was turned in so long ago that it now has all the features of a natural lake. It abounds with fish and, in their season, wild fowl. Great stretches of our beautiful white water lilies dot its surface; in other spots the action of the water has formed smooth, gravelly beaches. The reservoir is State property, maintained by public funds. At the lower end it is shut in with dams, and the overflow runs into Turkeyfoot Lake, a large, secluded body of water and a favorite hunting and fishing place for such sportsmen as come under the ban of the law. The game warden had his hands full attending to the lakes nearer the city, and lonely Turkeyfoot seemed quite a secure place.

The boys settled down in camp, and went through the usual delights and tribulations of campers' life. Of course they had forgotten some of the most necessary things. Indeed, on the second day Ben. had to ride to the city on his bicycle to buy candles, for they had forgotten to bring a lamp. The cooking took on new and wonderful features in spite of the fact that every boy had tried to master the make-up of his favorite dish before he left home. Harry's pancakes were perhaps the most startling innovation. His mother had taught him how to mix them, but after they were poured on the griddle he executed a war dance and an Indian song before turning them. He declared that this was a charm to make them "flop" properly. Fred. accepted this statement, practiced the war dance and chant, and was soon able to rival Harry in cooking the favorite breakfast dainty. Ben. was skeptical about the incantation, and for this reason, or some other, always made dismal wrecks of his pancakes. Sometimes parties of friends from the city visited them, making themselves doubly welcome by means of well-stocked picnic baskets. Besides this, all sorts of supplies were to be bought of the good-natured farmer's wife, so the boys lived like princes. The fishing was good. Ben. bore the sportsman's reputation, for he captured a four-pound bass. Fred. and Harry haunted that part of the reservoir during the remainder of their stay, but never caught anything better than fine blue gills.

One afternoon, when the boys were lazily swinging in hammocks, Pete Segar sauntered into the camp. He was the son of a country tavern keeper. The entire Segar family was suspected of being in league with the gill netters and other sportsmen who took their fish and game in defiance of the State game laws.

"I say," said Pete, after the usual preliminary "Halloo!" "you fellers orter be fishin' to-day."

"O, we have enough fish to last till to-morrow, and this is such a good, lazy day," said Ben., easily.

"Well, you won't ketch any fish to-morrow," said Pete, screwing up his mouth and nodding energetically.

"Why not?" cried the boys.

"'Cause they won't be anywhere to ketch 'em," said Pete, still more mysteriously.

The boys were struck dumb, and simply stared.

"What on earth do you mean?" demanded Fred., at last.

"They won't be no reservoir here by to-morrow," repeated Pete. He was enjoying the sensation he had made.

"Likely you've had private warning of an earthquake, or the end of the world, or something," said Harry, scornfully.

"Honest, true, it won't be here to-morrow," said Pete.

The boys gazed incredulously at the broad sheet of water. Pete read incredulity in their faces, and struggled with a desire to establish his truth.

"The gill netters—they're right mad, they are," he said.

"What's that got to do with the reservoir?" demanded Fred.

"The game warden—he's been showin' off smart, arrestin' fellers, but they'll get even," Pete went on.

"If they're going to do any mischief, why don't you send word to the warden?" asked Ben.

"Humph! Jest watch me a-go'n'," said Pete, in infinite scorn; "besides, no one round here would dare go, or they'd have the gill netters on their backs. Haystacks and barns might burn down, you know."

"What are they going to do to the reservoir?" asked Harry, curiously.

But Pete evidently thought he had told too much already, and nothing more was to be got out of him, save such vague speeches as "You'll see," and "Jest wait till mornin'."

After he was gone, and they had puzzled over it for some time, it dawned upon the boys that the vengeful gill netters might be planning to cut the dams that held the water at the lower end of the reservoir. This would drain the water off into Turkeyfoot Lake and leave the valley a stagnant, marshy place.

Harry arose and began looking over his bicycle. "What are you going to do?" the others questioned.

"I'm going to the city to find the warden, so he can get some officers out here to look after this affair."

The two boys watched anxiously as he rode away. To their excited imaginations the gill netters had become a set of hardened desperadoes who would think nothing of waylaying and murdering an informer; and, in truth, some grave crimes were laid to their charge, for they were a set of idle, drinking men who made a precarious livelihood by catching fish illegally and selling them to hotels or taverns.

The boys calculated that Harry ought to be back at camp by 3 o'clock, but that hour came and passed without him. Night at last fell on two anxious, unsettled boys. Some accident might have befallen Harry, or he would have returned. Could they do anything, or must they sit inactive and allow the reservoir to be drained in mere spite?

"I'll tell you what we might do," said Ben., at last. "We can row down to the dam and tell them that the officers are on their way here, and warn them off. It will be a big risk, though."

"Come on," said Fred., starting to the boat. "Anything is better than sitting here; and if any one wants to catch us on the water, they'll have some work to do."

This was true, for the boys had a light canoe, while the fishermen's boats were large and heavy.

When they approached the dam, they saw three lights indicating the whereabouts of as many boats. The night was very dark, and, as the boys carried no light, they were able to draw near without being observed. Then Fred. was so unlucky as to splash with his oar.

"Is that you, Negal?" cried a man from one of the boats.

The boys were near enough to see their faces plainly, but they kept silent.

"Who is there?" cried the man again, evidently alarmed. "You'd better answer, or take the consequences."

Then Ben., with his heart beating rather faster than usual, spoke: "It doesn't matter who is here, but you fellows had better scatter. The officers are sent for to spoil your little scheme, and we can identify every one of you if there is any mischief done to-night."

Fred. bent to the oars, and they were speeding away when the last words were spoken. Some one fired a random shot in their direction, and a storm of oaths assailed their ears. When at a safe distance, they paused for a while and had the satisfaction of seeing the boats move away. Shortly after the lights were extinguished, and, as there was nothing more to do, the boys rowed back to camp.

The reservoir was still spread out before them in the morning, and they were jubilant over the success of their venture. Harry arrived about noon that day. He had had a breakdown when about halfway to the city, and was obliged to walk the remainder of the distance. When he finally found the warden, he had much difficulty in persuading him of the truth of the story, but in the morning they had set out together. Some cautious inquiries revealed the fact that such a design had been entertained, and, in fact, that the attempt had been made.

The reservoir remained in its place during the boys' month of camping, but two weeks after their return home the dams were cut one night, and the beautiful sheet of water was drained into the lake.—Zelia M. Walters, in Christian Standard.

AN EGYPTIAN PROBLEM.

"I wish I'd been born in the days when they didn't know anything about arithmetic," sighed Bessie, who was so certain that she could learn nothing of figures that she would not even try to understand them.

"Then you would have lived a long time ago," replied Uncle Joe, looking up from his paper, as the petulant child threw her schoolbook upon the table. "In fact," he continued, "you would have been dead before Moses was born; for arithmetic is nothing new, dear child, but very, very old. They have lately discovered in Egypt a very old copy book for arithmetic, which was probably written over three thousand years ago. Of course it was not made of paper, for they knew nothing of it in those days; but it was made of papyrus plant. This was a plant that grew in Egypt, and was used by its inhabitants for writing. The stem of the plant was about an inch thick, and was cut into slices lengthwise. These slices were then gummed together and pressed, when they could be written upon. It is from this we get our wood 'paper.'"

"O, yes, I know!" cried Bessie, eagerly. "We had that in our geography the other day."

"Very well, then," said Uncle Joe, "I will tell you more about this old arithmetic. These Egyptians knew how to add and multiply both whole numbers and fractions. They did not subtract and divide just as we do; but they reached results, nevertheless. Let me see, do you read in the second reader yet?"

"Of course, Uncle Joe," said Bessie, reproachfully. "I am eight years old; I am in the third reader; and Miss Julia says she could put me farther if it was not for arithmetic." A long-drawn sigh followed the last words.

"Well," said Uncle Joe, drawing a newspaper slip from his pocket, "I am going to see if an American girl, eight years old, can solve a problem given to some Egyptian one hundred years before Moses was probably born. Here it is: 'There are seven men; each one has seven cats, each cat has eaten seven mice, each mouse has eaten seven grains of barley. Each grain of barley would, if cultivated, have yielded seven measures of barley. How much barley has been lost in that way?'"

Then the little American girl, who had no head for figures, worked it without the slightest mistake.—Exchange.

HAS THE KINGDOM OF GOD BEEN SET UP ON EARTH?

Brother Lipscomb: In an editorial in the Gospel Advocate of August 9 you give your answers to three questions pertaining to prophecies recorded in Dan. 2 and 7. I wish to protest, as a Christian and brother, against the general accuracy of your answers. I state, to begin with, that I am not defending any sect or school of interpretation, but only insisting that the word of God shall be interpreted fairly, and that a Christian should not be intimidated into a denial of true and logical interpretations for fear of being called by denominational names. Now, my brother, I wish to say that I believe that the reason for your misapplication of these prophecies may be found in the fact that you fail to note the difference between the present, or militant, and the final, or triumphant, condition of the kingdom. You ignore that statement of the apostle Peter addressed to the church: "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1: 10, 11.) You also ignore that other statement of the same apostle when he says: "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." (2 Pet. 3: 13.) Many other passages could be quoted on this line, but these ought to suffice, for I cannot understand how a Christian familiar with the Bible can doubt this distinction.

In regard to the present condition, it ought to be clear to every Bible student and observer that it is not everlasting, but transient. It is entirely premature to boast of nineteen hundred years proving its eternity, for this exceeds by only about five centuries the space allotted to the antediluvian world. It is also entirely unscriptural to claim that the world will be converted to true Christianity, for the Bible says: "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." (2 Tim. 3: 13.) Again: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4.)

At the threshold of man's first united, world-wide dominion over the earth, at a time when the first great and proud monarch of this dominion was filled with solicitude as to its stability and duration, God condescends to reveal to him, at this opportune moment and for the benefit of mankind, the whole cycle of human ambition and greatness. An image of the human form was fitly chosen for this purpose—not only for the simplicity of its interpretation, but as an object lesson; and I submit that it does not in any way, directly or indirectly, refer to the church, and most properly so, because the purpose for which and the monarch to whom the revelations were made were unsuited to such a purpose.

No candid or well-informed Christian can doubt that you give a correct interpretation when you say that the empires of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome are represented in succession; but great confusion and difficulty immediately arise when you seek to thrust in the everlasting kingdom of God at a point not designated by him. It is distinctly said of this image (Dan. 2: 33) that its legs were of iron, but that its feet were part of iron and part of clay; and in the interpretation (verse 40) it is also quite as distinctly stated that the legs of iron represent the fourth kingdom, or, as you correctly state, Rome; but verse 41 says quite as clearly that the feet and toes of iron and clay together signify that this fourth kingdom shall be divided, and verse 42 adds that this also means the weakening of the empire, while verse 43 gives the third signification: that the divided fragments shall not cleave or adhere one to the other—that is, to make one united empire again—but shall be mingled or scattered among the seeds of men or many nationalities. Now, what is the testimony of history in regard to these matters? Has not the Roman Empire been parceled out among the nations of Europe? Have not these European nations sought to perpetuate the imperial power of the old empire? Have not many of their kings and emperors gone to Rome to be crowned as emperors of the holy Roman Empire? Have they not perpetuated the language, as well as the laws, of the old empire? Volumes of history have been written proving that every jot and tittle of these verses have thus been fulfilled. Is this making history to suit the interpretation? I assert, in the name of every candid historian, that no other interpretation is in accord with either reason or the facts, and that he who would assert otherwise is himself guilty of manufacturing history to supply his own demands.

Now as to the contact of the stone with the image, verse 34 distinctly states that the stone smote the image on its feet of iron and clay. I call your especial attention to the fact that it did not smite it upon the legs of iron, but later—that is, upon the feet and toes. This means after the Roman Empire should be divided. Now the division of the empire produced logically, even necessarily, a plurality of kings, or kingdoms, as we all can bear witness to this day; but what transpires at some time during the existence of these kings? Verse 44 explains: "In the days of these kings [marginal rendering, "their days"] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." I call your especial attention to the fact that when this great event shall transpire it will leave no place whatever for human empires to exist as they have existed and will continue to exist as long as the gospel dispensation shall last. This is indicated more plainly, if possible, in verse 35, which records the vision itself. When the image was smitten upon its feet, "then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer thrashing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." This is in perfect accord with the declaration of our Master: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations [both ancient and modern]; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Matt. 25: 31-34.) Again, in the parable of the tares, he says the wicked shall be punished at the end of the world, and "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." (Matt. 13: 43.) Have you ears to hear? Do you believe that, according to the prophecy revealed to Nebuchadnezzar in Dan. 2, the world is now not far distant from that great and consummating event, the appearing of our Lord, who shall come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not his gospel? But if your faith falls short of this ("nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"), do not seek to cover a paucity of faith with a cloak woven of distorted history and prophecy.

To prove to you that this is not a novel interpretation and that you slur others besides our "Advent friends." I quote the language of Dr. Guinness, an English student of prophecy, a man of high reputation among Bible students, and also D. L. Moody, whom we all knew.

Says Dr. Guinness: "By the universal consent of the church of all ages and of all sections, the first four are allowed to be the Babylonian, the Persian, the Grecian, the Roman empires; and the last, the still future kingdom of the Son of man. The internal scriptural and historical evidence in favor of this interpretation is so overwhelming and the agreement of all students and commentators of the early church, of the Greek and Roman Catholic churches, and of all the Protestant churches, so complete, that the few who have of late years ventured to call it in question must be regarded as rash, unsafe, presumptuous guides, who would destroy the very basis of all sound and solid interpretation of scripture prophecy. . . . Beginning with Nebuchadnezzar, the golden head, all the other parts were, consecutively, the Medo-Persian dominion, the Greco-Macedonian dominion, and the Roman dominion, the latter dividing out into numerous fragments and varying kingdoms, extending down to the present time. In the present form, modified with the element of the sovereignty of the people—the miry clay of government—this Roman dominion still continues. . . . The kingdom is divided and intermingled with the clay and clamor of the popular will, but the metal which stays all existing governments, the solid material of their laws and administrations, is the iron of old Rome, which thus perpetuates itself in spite of the uprisings, changes, revolutions, marches, and countermarches in the political affairs of mankind. What next? 'In the days of these kings [these democratic-monarchic divisions of the Roman Empire] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed.'"

Says D. L. Moody: "At the present day we have got down to the toes, and even to the extremities of these. Soon, very soon, the collision may occur, and then will come the end. The stone cut out without hands is surely coming, and it may be very soon."

You say that the expression, "The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands," shows it originated with small beginnings, without the display of power usual in the establishment of kingdoms. I say that the very opposite of this is meant, and that it is not by human hands or instrumentality that the everlasting kingdom of God shall be built up, but by the miraculous power and manifestation of the Son of God. Surely the words "without hands" (marginal rendering, "not in hands") cannot mean with or in hands. Human instrumentality is used to build up the church, or kingdom, militant during the gospel dispensation, but not so in the everlasting kingdom yet to come.

As to the passage you quote from Luke 17: 20, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation," I will only say that if you apply this to the gospel dispensation, then it can have no connection with the passage from Daniel, which certainly cannot refer to the gospel age.

Dan. 7 is, I submit, a manifest corroboration of the correct interpretation of chapter 2. We readily agree that the four beasts represent the four great empires symbolized in chapter 2. We will agree, then, that the fourth beast—"dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth"—was Rome. This fourth beast had ten horns, and later another horn arose and overthrew three of the ten. (Verses 7, 8.) In the interpretation (verses 23, 24) it is said: "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth. . . . And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings [or kingdoms] that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall . . . subdue three kings [or kingdoms]." I use "kings" and "kingdoms" as synonymous, because the angel interpreter does, for in verse 17 he says, "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth;" and in verse 23 he says: "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth." I call your especial attention to the fact that this plurality of kingdoms is to arise out of the fourth great empire—that is, Rome—and that this is in agreement with the second chapter, which says that this empire should be divided. It ought to be unnecessary for me to state that the division of the Roman Empire into a plurality of kingdoms occurred many centuries after the beginning of the Christian era, and that the nations carved out of the great provinces of Britannia, Gallia, Hispania, Germania, Italia, Dacia, etc., are with us to this day, and that the church, or kingdom, militant was subjected to grievous persecution for centuries by the eleventh, or papal, kingdom, which possessed a mouth that spoke great and blasphemous words.

From verses 9 to 14, inclusive, we are told that the thrones of these worldly kingdoms were cast down; that the judgment sat; that to the Son of man were given "dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him;" that this should be "an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." In the angelic interpretation (verses 23-26) we are told that out of the fourth, or Roman, empire eleven kingdoms should arise; that one of them should overthrow three of the others, and then persecute the church for 1,260 years, after which its power should be utterly destroyed at the judgment, and then (please notice that it is not until then) "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

In closing, I earnestly desire to call your attention again to the fact that there are two states, or conditions, of the kingdom of heaven—the present, which is transient; and the future, which is eternal. If we do the will of God here, we shall have, according to the statement of the apostle, an abundant entrance administered unto us into the everlasting kingdom; and, heeding his example, "we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," which new heavens and new earth evidently refer to the everlasting kingdom. Dan. 2 teaches that after the fourth, or Roman, empire, her dominion over the earth should be divided among the nations carved out of that empire, as we witness in the modern nations of Europe to-day, and that at some time during their existence the stone, Jesus Christ, shall smite the nations of the earth together in judgment and grind them to dust, for "on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder" (Matt. 21: 44), after which he, augmented by the hosts of the redeemed, shall fill the whole earth, constituting what is there called "a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed," a kingdom that "shall stand forever." Dan. 7 also teaches that the fourth, or Roman, empire should be divided into a plurality of kingdoms, represented by the different nationalities of Europe to-day; that their struggles among themselves would lessen their number; but that some time during the existence of the remainder God would sit in judgment, overturn their thrones, judge the earth, after which he would establish what in this chapter is called "an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed," a kingdom "given to the people of the saints of the most High, . . . an everlasting kingdom."

Thus have I given you what I believe to be the teaching of the word of God on this very important subject, and I beg to admonish you as a brother that you join not with vandal hands in defacing the sacred monuments. It is my prayer that we may all heed the admonition of the apostle, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts" (2 Pet. 1: 19); for I am sure that the day-star of that hope which heralds the light of the "perfect day" cannot animate our lives, hearts, and intelligences unless we give heed to the prophecies.

J. D. AMBROSE.

Corsicana, Tex.

Our brother is mistaken when he says we lost sight of the future and higher state of the kingdom of God. It is exactly what we did not lose sight of, but which our brother ignores, whether he loses sight of it or not. I said: "There are two periods, or stages, of the kingdom foretold by Daniel and confirmed by Jesus—(1) when it is represented by a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands; (2) when it became a great mountain, breaking in pieces and destroying all the kingdoms of the world." I showed that Daniel told of the setting up of the church, and then of the disasters and apparent destruction that would come upon that kingdom before its days of triumph and prosperity. The opposing power would think to change the laws and seasons, and it would be given into his hands for a time. Jesus tells the same: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This implies that all other kingdoms shall be engulfed in the vortex of eternal ruin, and this kingdom will be brought to the verge of ruin, but will finally prevail over the opposition. The Holy Spirit says before the final, complete, triumph of this kingdom the falling away will first come "and the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, he that opposeth and exalteth himself against all that is called God or that is worshiped; so that he sitteth in the temple of God. . . . Then shall be revealed the lawless one, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming." (2 Thess. 2: 3-9, R. V.) This power was to arise in the kingdom of God, and these disasters were to befall the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, or the kingdom of God that cometh without observation. This prepares for the coming of the Son of God and the second stage of the kingdom, when Jesus will destroy this, his enemy, with "the breath of his mouth" and "the manifestation of his coming." If this kingdom begins with the second coming of Christ, all these disasters must then befall it, and it must then pass again through the stage of corruption it is now passing through, for these prophecies concerning the kingdom cannot fail. The kingdom has been, and is, in the condition God said it should be. If our brother should live then, he would have the same reason to deny it was the kingdom as he does now. He despises the day of small things, fails to recognize that God disciplines and tries and proves his spiritual body as he did Israel and Jesus himself by leading them through trials and sorrows and sufferings before he bestowed on them the rewards and honors that pertain to the days of triumph.

That God calls the institution set up on Pentecost his "kingdom" is proven by Matt. 16: 18, 19: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." The same institution is here called "my church" that is called "the kingdom of heaven." The church was to be built on the truth confessed by Peter and proved by the resurrection that Jesus is the Son of God. Peter was to bear and use the keys to this kingdom of heaven. This settles beyond the possibility of a doubt that the kingdom was set up in the lifetime of Peter. To use the keys was to open the door or give the terms of entrance into the kingdom of God. Did he give the keys of the kingdom to Peter thousands of years before it was set up? When did Peter open the door of the kingdom of heaven and direct men into it? Persons who followed the direction of Peter when he told them what to do to be saved were introduced into the kingdom of heaven, or Jesus was mistaken. Does our brother think that after the second coming of the Savior Peter will return to use these keys of the kingdom of heaven and direct men into it? There is nothing surer than that he did this on Pentecost under the direction of the Spirit of God, and whoever follows that direction is led by the Spirit of God into "the kingdom of heaven," as called by Jesus, or "the kingdom which the God of heaven shall set up," as foretold in the little stone by Daniel. I would not give a fig for the interpretation of prophecy made by men where inspired men have not interpreted it, but they have settled this question beyond doubt that the kingdom was set up in the days of Peter and he directed men into it. I again refer to Matt. 12: 28; 21: 31, 43; Mark 9: 1; 15: 43; Luke 6: 20; 7: 28; 9: 27; 10: 9-11; 12: 32; 16: 16; 17: 21; 1 Thess. 2: 12; Heb. 12: 23; Rev. 1: 9; and many others that could not be true unless the church opened on Pentecost is the kingdom of heaven or of God.

Many of the scriptures quoted by our brother he has misapplied. I say this because he directly contradicts many plain declarations of the Bible. I only mention the last one he quotes. If he will read the Revision, he will see, in speaking of the voice that came from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," 1 Pet. 1: 18, 19 says: "And this voice we ourselves heard come out of heaven, when we were with him in the holy mount. And we have the word of prophecy made more sure. [that is, the voice that spoke from heaven made the prophecies that had gone before concerning him as the Christ more sure]; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed." The church, or kingdom, built or set up on Pentecost is the same one that will survive all the opposition and persecution that will come upon it, and will, as a bride adorned for her husband, receive Jesus when he shall come again. Jesus is waiting until she shall purge herself of the stains of adultery and clothe herself in the pure and white linen of righteousness. When he comes, he will receive her as his own chosen bride and will destroy her enemies. The recognition of the two stages of the one kingdom is all that is needed to harmonize all the scriptures quoted with all the statements of the Bible.

The position of our brother perverts the teachings of the Bible, destroys respect and reverence for the church of God as the kingdom set up by the God of heaven, which inherits immortality from its immortal founder. The evil result on men is, it destroys their sense of responsibility to God by holding out the idea that God does not through them work out his ends, but that they can do nothing; so they are encouraged to sit still and wait the coming of the Son of God, who, by miraculous power, will bring about desired results. This is a wrong conception of what is required of his servants here and of how Jesus will work when he comes. He will destroy the enemies with "the breath of his mouth," the word of God. It will be done through his church, which then will be pure and holy, and he will in and through it work effectually "to will and to do of his good pleasure." Now his will is imperfectly obeyed; then it will be done on earth as it is in heaven, and that will make a heaven upon earth. God's church and kingdom and power are all here on earth awaiting man's exhausting his own wisdom and proving the futility of his own inventions, when, with a sense of his own poverty of spirit, he will meekly receive and obey the will of God. CHRISTIANS MUST BE FRUIT BEARERS.

the other hand, it is awful to think of being in Christ as a branch for a while and dwelling with and in him, and then be pruned off as an unfruitful branch and wither and perish.

The church of God furnishes a grand relationship for man, if he will only make himself worthy of it. Paul says to some of these branches, these sanctified ones: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." (1 Cor. 3: 16, 17.) The church of God is truly a grand temple, since in it the Holy Spirit dwells; and this same Holy Spirit is the medium through which God dwells with the saints. No wonder, then, that after a member and branch in the vine (Christ) defiles this holy temple he should be taken away and should wither and die and be gathered and burned, destroyed. The apostle says: "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" (Heb. 10: 28, 29.) This is just the condition in which a man places himself when he deliberately disregards the word of God and refuses to obey it. All such as these defile the temple of God, and to all such there is but one end, and that is destruction. All that sin thus or in any way fail to bear fruit after entering Christ, the vine, will be taken away. No one can remain so unholy and still enjoy such a holy relationship as to dwell in Christ. He will endure no such unholiness as that, and any man will deceive himself that supposes Christ will allow him to lead an unholy life and yet continue to dwell with and in one so pure and holy as Jesus.

Surely the people of this age who are so worldly-minded and so indifferent to the work of the Lord do not realize the sanctity and holiness of the relationship of being in Christ or the awful danger of bearing no fruit and of defiling the temple of God. If all the disciples of Christ realized these things, they certainly would be more deeply in earnest and more attentive to the Lord's will. No thought can be sadder than the thought of being taken away from Christ and left in this dark world of sin without any chance of nourishment from the living vine.

"If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." (John 15: 6.) From this statement there is no appeal. Let all beware and see to it that they bear fruit, and let it be noted especially that all the support and strength of the branch comes from the vine; and as we are branches in Christ, the true vine, all our growth must come through him, through his teaching. Therefore we cannot grow as Christians except by the nourishment we draw from the living vine. A branch in a literal vine cannot draw nourishment from an oak tree, and no more can disciples of Christ derive spiritual nourishment from human wisdom and human institutions. If a branch in the true vine derives nourishment from human wisdom and grows and bears fruit on that, the fruit will be human, and not divine; and no matter how many nice things a man may do in the sight of men when guided by human wisdom, he will get no credit from the Lord, because it will be human works, and not the Lord's work. The Lord's work is by divine wisdom, while human work is only by human wisdom. God's wisdom is pure, gentle, and easy to be entreated. Human wisdom is of the earth, partakes of worldly wisdom, and cannot possibly promote spiritual growth or make any one spiritually-minded. All the conventions ever held to devise ways and means for doing the Lord's work were actuated by the spirit of worldly wisdom, and not by the Spirit of God. Every humanly-devised society that was ever formed to do the work of the church was formed and carried on by human wisdom. The church of God, built by Christ, was built by divine wisdom and by the Spirit of the living God; and so long as the work and worship of the church are carried on by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, then all is spiritual growth and spiritual development, and God is honored thereby and genuine spiritual growth is promoted and spiritual fruit is borne. So long as the branches of the living vine live and act upon the teaching of the Holy Spirit, and not by the impulses of the flesh, they are living to the honor and glory of God; but when Christians live and act upon the impulses of the flesh, are fleshly-minded, walk after the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, they derive no nourishment from Christ, are not spiritually-minded, but earthly, sensual, fleshly, and are soon separated from the vine. Neither human wisdom nor human impulses can guide men along the narrow way. Anger, wrath, malice, and such like, only drag men downward, and cannot possibly benefit them. If, therefore, Christians would be ennobled, would be pure and holy, they must feast upon the word of God and derive their growth from it. This is indeed the only way that any branch in Christ can derive strength from him.

When men undertake to serve God by their own inventions, they cut loose from Christ and he cuts loose from them, and their whole life is by human wisdom. God never compromises with men. They must accept all of God's will, without change, or none. When men begin to make changes on the word of God, drop out certain parts and substitute something of their own, it all becomes human, and God will not recognize them as serving him at all, although they may do some things as God commanded. Nadab and Abihu did all God commanded in burning their incense except as to one item, and yet God slew them as presumptive rebels in his sight for making that one change. In making that one change, they manifested a disposition that would have changed every item in the command if the temptation had been present to do so. Moses and King Saul, in the cases that brought their rejection, did some of the things God required, just as he commanded; but Moses changed one item, and Saul changed more than one, and Moses was shut out of the promised land and Saul was abandoned of God and rejected from being king. There can, therefore, be no compromise with the word of God. We must take it all, or just as well take none. The figure of the vine and the branches signifies we must get our nourishment from the vine, from Christ, through his word, or we will be rejected also.

Women in the Public Worship.

"Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." (1 Cor. 14: 34, 35.)

Brother I. O. Alexander requests that I give an explanation of the above scripture, which I will do and make it as plain as I can. Had it not been for the late custom of women taking the stage, the rostrum, and the pulpit, there would have been no trouble in understanding this teaching; and while women continue to push themselves upon the public and claim divine authority for so doing, this very emphatic restriction of an inspired man will need to be explained and enforced.

Let us go back to the circumstances under which this scripture was given. At that time there was nothing of the New Testament written, and the church had to depend upon the living voice for instruction, and the teachers were inspired. The apostles, who had been immersed in the Holy Spirit, received their inspiration direct, and by this power they went and preached the gospel; and when churches were formed, as the apostles could not long remain with these infant bodies, but must push on into new fields, and since there was yet no instruction written, the apostles by the laying on of their hands gave to certain brethren miraculous gifts which enabled the churches to defend themselves against heathen philosophy and infidelity, and also enabled the members to conduct the worship. To one man was given the gift of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues; to another, the gifts of healing, etc. These might speak one at a time in the public worship, but there must be perfect order in the assembly.

Now, women were not chosen public ministers, and were therefore not intrusted with those gifts; and they were not only forbidden to teach in the public assembly, but they must not interrupt others by asking questions. In case they failed to understand the interpreter, they must ask their husbands at home the meaning of this inspired lesson.

Some have found a difficulty here wherein the woman might have a husband who was an unbeliever and would know nothing of the lesson. But this supposed case need not be in the way. The woman must be in subjection to her own husband. This is the law. Ask him at home. There would not likely be any one else there to ask. But if an inspired man came to their home, or any other man of understanding, she might ask him.

Let us notice the strong terms used here in this prohibition. Paul does not say, "It would be better for women to keep silent in the church," nor, "Women ought not to teach in the public worship;" nor yet, "Women must not teach;" but he declares in the clearest and most emphatic terms: "I suffer not a woman to teach." (1 Tim. 2: 12.) So that, whatever may be allowed the woman in other duties, she is positively forbidden to teach in the public assembly.

Some have said this prohibition was restricted to the Corinthian church, but the privilege to teach publicly was granted the women in other churches; but the language is: "Let your women keep silence in the churches."

But we know that women are often better qualified to teach than some men, and this privilege is granted the women in the private circle. Priscilla, with her husband, taught Apollos the way of the Lord more perfectly. (Acts 18: 26.) "The aged women . . . teachers of good things: that they may teach the young women." (Tit. 2: 4.) Often mothers are better teachers in the home circle than fathers.

But is there nothing that a woman may do in the public worship? Yes; she may sing. How do we know she is permitted to sing? The church is commanded to sing, and women are a part of the church, and women are nowhere forbidden to sing. Women, for the same reason, may contribute of their means and may commune. The church is commanded to do these things, women are a part of the church, and there is no law forbidding them to observe these things.

But may a woman pray in public? Here we are treading upon a narrow path. We read, in 1 Cor. 11: 5: "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head"—her husband. Well, this is equivalent to saying: If she will cover her head, she may pray. Now, as there were many private meetings held—sometimes in the home, sometimes on the river bank, sometimes in the sick room, and once a private prayer meeting was held at night for the liberation of Peter (Acts 12), and there were women in that prayer meeting—I think it safe to say that godly women, whose lives commend them at home, may pray, with heads veiled, in the private prayer meeting. She is told to veil herself in prayer; and this could mean nothing if she were shut up in the closet where no eye could see her. I would like to hear our very best counsel upon this point, as to whether a woman may pray in a private circle. Will Brother Krutinger and Brother O. A. Carr give us their mature thoughts here?

In justification of women preaching, I have heard persons quote Rom. 16: 1, 2: "I commend unto you Phebe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea: that ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succorer of many, and of myself also." But this is far-fetched. There is nothing in the passage about preaching, but it was some kind of business. She had assisted many, and among the rest, Paul; and women can assist a preacher in many ways, and not preach. They can cook his bread: wash, make, and mend his clothes; they may furnish him conveyance and give him of their means to help him on his way. I have heard many women try to preach, but I never heard one for whom I did not feel ashamed. Evil reports and bad results follow where people transgress divine law.—A. E., in Gospel Echo.

Brother Elmore was in the office last week, and called our attention to the foregoing article and asked our judgment of the positions taken. We heartily indorse the article, save in one point—that is, in reference to the woman praying with her head covered. He seems to think this covering with long hair or a veil is necessary only when others are present, and the rule is only to regulate public prayer and prophesying; hence when she is veiled, she is at liberty to pray in a private prayer meeting. This makes the "praying" mean leading in prayer, hence the conclusion that she may lead in prayer in the private prayer meeting.

The apostle said: "The head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God." "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head." Therefore, God cannot permit man to approach him in prayer or otherwise unless he comes as the servant of Christ; and the uncovered head is the token of his subjection to Christ, his head. This is regulating man's approach to God and his appearance before God. The presence of others has nothing to do with this order. It is as much a sin for man to approach God without the token of his subjection to Christ in private as it is for him to do it in public. We must come in the name of Christ—that is, by his authority—and we must acknowledge it in our approach to God, whether in private or public. The uncovered head is the token of man's subjection to Christ.

"The head of the woman is the man," and she must approach God with the token of her submission to her head, man, as the man must approach God with the token of submission to his head, Christ. That token of subjection to man is the long hair; in its absence, the veil. This applies to all conditions of woman's approach to God, whether in public or private. She can no more approach God acceptably without the token of submission to her head than man can approach him without the token of submission to his head. There is no indication that it is a greater sin to approach God in public than in private prayer. He tells the woman should have the token of her being under authority because of the angels. (1 Cor. 11: 10.) This seems to show it was private prayer, where angels only would behold, and God would not in the presence of angels accept service not according to his law.

Women did prophesy and pray, but they did it not as leaders in the assembly, but in private, helping as well as the leader, but not to himself. Women in public assemblies pray, but they do it privately, or to themselves. They must not lead in it and so take the place of men. I think where only women are gathered together women may lead in prayer, since there were only women gathered at the place where prayer was accustomed to be made at Philippi. (Acts 16: 13.) In this condition, women must lead in prayer, if prayer be made. Then this speaking or teaching in public was condemned, because it was equivalent to assuming authority as teachers and leaders of men. When no men are present, for woman to lead in prayer or even teach is not assuming authority over man. The sin is in assuming the position of leaders of men, not in teaching the Scriptures. The point is, God would accept service from neither man nor woman unless each recognized the head God appointed for them.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2. Does it teach that we should lay by at home or at church? Some say that we have no scripture for giving on the first day of the week. Who are the ones the Lord will raise up? (James 5: 14-16.) I teach that if a person sins and brings on sickness through sin, if he will confess his sins and be prayed for, God will raise him up. If not, why not?

D. E. PHILLIPS.

The first of these questions is presented in the Gospel Advocate of June 28, 1900, page 409, which see. The other has also been frequently presented in the Gospel Advocate, but not of so late date. There are some things that seem to me clear. First, the rule was not given as a universal one—that is, it did not mean this would save every one who sickened. Had this been so, none would have died; all would have been immortalized on whom the hands of elders were laid, as here directed. Why should anybody die, if disease could have been so readily cured or if life could have been perpetuated so certainly and easily? I think it only means that those who could be cured would, by this treatment, be cured. This much seems to me clear. If so, there was no miracle in it. Anointing with oil in that time and country was a general curative agent. Whether the Holy Spirit intended to teach that the agent thus used would cure all that could be cured or whether he meant we should connect the prayer of the elders with whatever curative agent used has been a matter of doubt with me.

Brother Lipscomb: Is it not wrong for one who is trying to be nothing but a Christian to help the denominations build churches and give his money to aid in their mission work? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate, and oblige. A BROTHER. Laguardo, Tenn.

A Christian ought to do everything with a good conscience toward God. He ought to do all he does in the name of Jesus Christ. If he thinks denominations and denominationalism right before God, he ought to help them. If he can help them in one thing, he can help them in another and another; if they are right, he ought to help them in all things, and to do this he ought to unite with them and be one of them. If I could help build up a denomination, I could join it and work with them. To do all that we do in the name of the Lord Jesus is to do it for his cause, to build up his kingdom. I do not think a greater curse affects Christendom than sects and denominations. If this be so, to build them up and strengthen them is to commit the greatest sin against God and man that is possible.

Thoughtlessness of the rights of others is the direct result of selfish eagerness in the pursuit of our own aims.—Selected.

The Preacher and His Connection with the Congregation.

Brother Lipscomb says: "We would be glad to have a full investigation of the subject. I think all will agree that the activity and zeal of the different members should be conspired and put to work." If the people could get rid of the idea that the church is divided into classes, it would help to remedy the evil. As it is nowadays, there is one class called "preachers;" another, "elders;" another, "deacons;" and another, the "laity." No such division into classes is known in the New Testament. The church is a body composed of members and a member's work is regulated by his talent and opportunities. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering: or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation." (Rom. 12: 4-8.) "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." (1 Cor. 12: 12, 13.)

A preacher is one who preaches the word. Paul was a preacher (Acts 20: 7); Philip, the evangelist, was a preacher (Acts 8: 35); and all the members of the Jerusalem church were preachers (Acts 8: 4). It is clearly the duty of all Christians to live right and to teach the word of God for the purpose of converting the world to Christ and edifying the body. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." (Rom. 14: 19.) "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." (Rom. 15: 2.) "Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church." (1 Cor. 14: 12.) "Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do." (1 Thess. 5: 11.) "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat." (Heb. 5: 12.) Acting upon the principle, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might," both Stephen and Philip developed into efficient church workers. They began as table servers and were soon doing the work of an evangelist—preaching the word.

Churches of Christ should be brought up to the point that when "the whole church comes together into one place" the members can go forward with the work and worship, preacher or no preacher, unto the edifying of the body in love. "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. . . . For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted." (1 Cor. 14: 26-31.) These scriptures teach that all the members should take an active part in the work and worship of the church. Let first one and then another read, pray, teach, admonish, and exhort, and the entire body will be a working body of Christians.

A WRONG USE MADE OF THE PREACHER.

Brother Harding says: "I am just as much persuaded as I ever was that the pastor system—that is, the employment of one person to devote his time to one church, to 'take charge of it,' to do the teaching and preaching, and to take the general superintendence of all the work—is one of the most radical departures from the apostolic order and one of the greatest hindrances to the success of the gospel." He says, further, that "about a year ago three brethren were selected for elders [in the South Spruce Street church of Christ]. They determined to do away with the Sunday morning sermon and to have instead several shorter speeches, with the meeting under the direction of the eldership. This rule has been followed, except that Brother Lipscomb preaches once a month on Lord's day morning, seeing that his age prevents him from coming in at night." On the same line of thought Brother Lipscomb says: "The teaching that is done wholly by set speeches is imperfectly done, and does not call out the attention and talent of the learners. The teaching of preachers or elders is too much sermonizing. The tendency of the age is that way, and it does not promote the development of the members. Christ and his apostles 'made speeches,' as we call it; but they made speeches because they had something to say, not because a certain time had come or because they had an appointment." Here is a line of work clearly outlined by these brethren that is not scriptural. There are many city and town churches, and some country churches, in this country that have adopted the custom of employing preachers to do the work here outlined. To many preachers such positions are inviting because the work is easy and pleasant. It pays well and offers one a good opportunity to become popular. It does not help the situation to call a preacher occupying such a position an "evangelist." To call him an "evangelist" is to do so against the facts. No preacher, evangelist, apostle, or any one else in the age when the New Testament was written held any such position with the churches. Preachers to-day occupying such positions are called "pastors" (not scriptural pastors); they are called "pastor" by the members where they "pastorate;" they are called "pastor" by the denominations, by the world, by the secular press; and, so far as I hear, no objection is urged by the preacher himself. But suppose he did object, his objection could not be sustained by the facts. The sin consists in calling a man by a name the facts will not warrant. Why do we call a man a "Mason," a "Methodist," a "Christian," a "lawyer," or a "doctor?" Simply because he becomes such and accepts the name. We have the word "pastor" in general use. The name is almost universally given to preachers who take charge of churches. It is neither "decrying" the work of the true gospel preacher nor using an "ugly" name to call the above-named class "pastors." The churches and members generally call such "pastor." The Standard, the Evangelist—in fact, all the society papers and the press generally—call such preachers "pastors." The preachers doing the work rarely object, and I have not yet learned that such use of the word "pastor" is offensive. Let us not impugn one another's motives. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" "Love thinketh no evil." We should all teach the truth in the spirit of our Master. "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." None of us should apologize for an evil practice of our brethren. If we love them, we should seek to point out to them the danger. A good man will not become offended when you call his attention to his wrong.

"How much teaching shall the preacher do?" "Where shall we draw the line?" Let me ask: What course did the apostles and evangelists of the New Testament pursue? What was the result of their teaching in the churches? These questions can be answered by studying the scriptures that record the work of New Testament preachers and the effect of their work. "Then departed Barnabus to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people." (Acts 11: 25, 26.) What was the result? The poor were cared for (Acts 11: 29, 30), teachers were developed (Acts 13: 1), missionaries were sent out (verses 2-4), and "the word of God grew and multiplied" (Acts 12: 24). At Ephesus Paul "went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." He was "disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." (Acts 19: 9, 10.) Again, Paul says: "That by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." While doing this work he supported himself. "Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me." (Acts 20: 34.) This tells us how the church was established at Ephesus and the course Paul pursued. What was the result? All who dwelt in Asia heard the word, both Jews and Greeks. Elders were developed who were to oversee and feed the flock; the church was shown how to teach publicly and from house to house; he showed them all things—how to labor to support the weak, that it was more blessed to give than to receive—and when he left them, he commended them to God and to the word of his grace, which is able to build up and to give an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. Four years afterwards Paul wrote these brethren and made mention of having heard of their "faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints." (Eph. 1: 15.)

Churches established by the preachers of the New Testament as they carried out the teaching were self-edifying bodies. They met on the first day of the week to break bread, the Scriptures were read in the churches. They sung spiritual songs; taught, admonished, and exhorted one another; and the poor were cared for. They sounded out the word of the Lord; they supported those who labored in word and doctrine, preachers were developed, and the word of the Lord grew and multiplied. In New Testament times preachers were workers in the churches along with the other members of the body. As they carried out the will of God, each member did what he could to convert the world and edify the body. Let us go on and do likewise.

ALABAMA.

Erwin, August 21.—Our meeting closed, with seven additions to the one body—six by confession and baptism and one prodigal returned. We are a small, infant band, but we are trying to serve the Lord after the apostolic order. We are hindered some now in our Lord's day school on account of sickness in our community, but hope to do better when the sickness subsides. J. S. KELLY.

Cane, August 21.—I closed a splendid meeting at this place, with three baptisms, at 9 o'clock this morning. The visible results were twelve persons baptized and one restored. Of those baptized there were three Missionary Baptists, two Freewill Baptists, two Primitive Baptists, one Methodist, and four sinners. This is the home of Brother J. B. Barnes, who has stood the storm of persecution for a number of years; also Brother J. D. Dobbs, Brother Dock Hydes, Brother J. H. Barnes, and several others. Brother V. E. Randolph, Brother J. S. Woods, and others have labored in this field, sowing seed for the harvest. May the Lord bless them and multiply their usefulness. P.

East Florence, August 27.—Brother J. J. Castleberry began a series of meetings at this place on the third Lord's day in July and closed on Monday night after the second Lord's day in August, preaching at night only, except three Lord's days. He attended the Mars' Hill meeting on two Lord's days during this time. I do not think I ever saw more interest manifested than was in this meeting. Up to the very last discourse, the attendance was very large, and, from the very polite attention and the two hundred and nine additions during the meeting, I would say that the people were very much interested, so much so that the general talk on the streets and street corners was about the meeting and the different subjects under consideration. Searching the Scriptures daily to see if these things be so, quite a number of questions were handed in and politely answered during the meeting, the preacher always giving a "thus saith the Lord." Brother Castleberry is a young man, but did his work well, contending earnestly for the old apostolic doctrine, without addition or subtraction. He is indeed an earnest, forcible, and logical speaker, and gives promise of much usefulness in the Master's cause, in which he delights to labor. One hundred and fifteen of the additions were by confession and baptism and ninety-four from other sources—some restored, some taking membership, while quite a number of them decided to be Christians only, nothing more, nothing less. The meeting closed in the midst of a good interest, as eight persons came forward when the invitation was given at the close of the last discourse; but Brother Castleberry had already stayed two weeks over the time he had allotted to this place, disappointing the Waterloo congregation entirely at present, with the promise of being with them some time in the near future. May he live long for the good he may do. J. A. HILL.

ARKANSAS.

Hope, August 28.—I have held meetings at the following places since July 1, 1900: Green Plains, Nathan, Blue Bayou, and Bills. At Bills five persons were added to the one body; at Blue Bayou, seven; at Nathan, seven; and at Green Plains, eighteen—in all, thirty-seven. Brother J. P. Shofner and Brother T. W. Champion assisted me in the meeting at Blue Bayou. They are good men and are sound gospel preachers. Brother R. W. Officer held a two-weeks' meeting at Saratoga, with four additions to the church. Brother Officer is in a good meeting at Center Point. Brother T. R. Burnett, of Dallas, Tex., held a meeting at Corinth, with six additions. The congregation at Corinth is one of the oldest and best-known congregations in the State. The best talent of this nation has filled the pulpit at old Corinth, and the brethren have missed only a few first-day meetings in forty years. Brother W. H. George, of Barren Fork, has held meetings at various points in Pike County. I am booked for three more meetings this fall. G. W. SPURLOCK.

KENTUCKY.

Ebenezer, August 27.—Brother John A. Klingman and the writer conducted a meeting at this place, beginning on the third Monday night in August and continuing one week. The results were six confessions. Brother W. T. May and the writer conducted a meeting at Hopewell, Mercer County, continuing ten days. There were six confessions and very large audiences attended toward the latter part of the meeting. S. H. JONES.

State Line, July 30.—"A splendid meeting!" "The best meeting ever held at Mount Hermon!" were the exclamations of all the members at the close of our two-weeks' meeting, which was held by Brother Hardeman, of Henderson, Tenn. The meeting closed on July 27, 1900. Eleven persons were added to the one body. Our congregation has had trouble for several years over those untaught questions that have divided our churches all over the country. We now have eighty-five true, devoted members who speak the same things and are satisfied with "what is written." Elder Hardeman is certainly one of the ablest teachers to whom we ever listened, and is as firm as the everlasting hills in his opposition to the seductive and destructive teaching of men, which our Savior said was "vain worship," and Paul told us to "taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using." TENNESSEE.

Lanton, August 28.—Brother J. E. B. Ridley held an eight-days' meeting for us at this place, embracing the second and third Sundays in July, preaching the pure and undefiled word of the Lord in a clear and forcible manner to large and appreciative audiences. As an immediate result of the meeting, one young man and two young ladies just entering into manhood and womanhood nobly confessed their Savior, and were buried with him in baptism. Brother Ridley will hold a meeting for us again next year, all things being favorable. W. L. GREEN.

Glass, August 26.—Our meeting at Refuge, three miles southwest of Glass, began on Saturday night before the third Lord's day in August. In daytime the audiences were small, but larger at night. The attention was good, as was also the preaching. Brother W. T. Boaz did the preaching and answering questions, using the Bible only as his authority. The visible results were nine additions to the one body—eight by baptism and one restored. Brother Boaz is a good preacher, presenting to the world only the word of God and showing to people, by the Bible, that they must obey God in order to be saved. Brother Boaz appears to be a good Christian. His sermons in daytime were largely to the brethren and sisters, pointing out their duties to them and telling them that they should live as the Bible directs in order to be a New Testament church. S. C. WALL.

Tom's Creek, August 22.—On the first Lord's day in August I began a meeting at the Crooked Creek Meetinghouse, in Perry County. This was my fourth meeting at that place. I have always had good meetings there, and no doubt would have had a fine meeting this time, as the crowds and interest were growing all the time; but on Wednesday night of the meeting, just as we were getting under headway, news came that my wife was very ill. I dismissed the audience, even before prayer, and hurried home. I found her very ill, but she is now improving and, I hope, will soon be all right again. On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Tom's Creek, my home, and continued, day and night, until the night of the third Lord's day in August, making in all eight days and eight nights. This was also my fourth meeting here; and, while they have all been good ones, the last is always the best. This meeting was not only the best one in the history of our place and congregation, but was also the best, in many respects, that I have ever held. The interest and excitement grew from the first, and I am sure I have never yet seen interest grow so fast or excitement run so high; neither have I ever seen the brethren and sisters rejoice so much over the result of a meeting. I labored very hard and did all in my power to preach the gospel and then induce people to obey it. The immediate result of this meeting was twenty-five additions to the church, twenty-four of whom made the good confession and were baptized into Christ and one was reclaimed. While I labored with some disadvantages, as my companion was sick all the time, yet this was one of the most pleasant meetings to me I have ever held, and the brethren and friends all pronounce it the grandest and best meeting they have ever had. I hope the good seed sown may fall into good and honest

TEXAS.

Greenwood, August 27.—Our meeting at Bolivar closed to-day. Six persons became obedient to the faith. Brother A. Alsup did most of the preaching. I go next to Claremore, I. T. To God be all the praise. May God bless you. W. P. SKAGGS.

Sulphur Springs, August 21.—I am in a good meeting at this place. Large crowds listen to the truth and much interest is being manifested in the search of the truth. The meeting is two days old, with two persons reclaimed. We hope and pray the Lord of hosts for a multitude of souls. I will remain in Texas a few days after this meeting closes before returning to Indian Territory. My meeting I was forced to leave in Indian Territory is being carried on by Brother J. Rose, of Eros, Ark. He baptized several on Sunday, the 20th inst. The meeting was still in progress at that time. Pray for me. J. B. ASKEW.

Texarkana, August 23.—After our meeting at Mars' Hill I preached six sermons at Austin, Ark. We have no congregation "set in order" at Austin, but there are two congregations a few miles out. The brethren prepared a splendid room for the meetings, and our attendance was large. The subjects which I preached on were: "The Importance of Studying the Bible," "Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth," "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" and then I preached three times on "Pure Religion." (James 1: 27.) There were no additions. A good interest was aroused, and a prominent Methodist said: "I wish the meetings could continue longer; I want to learn more; we Methodists may be wrong." The work that I have undertaken at Texarkana demanded that I close the meeting and come home. Our East Texas Orphans' Home and Industrial School promises well. Several persons near El Paso and Austin promised support to the institution. A nurseryman near Austin promised a very liberal donation of fruit trees and berry vines for the orphans' farm. T. E. TATUM.

Greenwood, August 28.—On June 16, 1900, I went to Shawnee, O. T., to hold a meeting for the loyal brethren at that place. The digressives refused me the use of their house. The brethren secured the college building for me to preach in; but, after using it two days, objection was raised to using the college building as a church house, so the brethren rented an empty storehouse, and we continued in that the rest of the week. There were no visible results. I then preached three days near Sacred Heart, O. T. Four persons were baptized at this place. This is the home of Brother O. K. Posey. He is a true gospel preacher and able to defend the gospel against its enemies. I next went to Cook, O. T. This is a new place. The gospel had never been preached there. This meeting continued twelve days. Six persons were baptized and between forty and fifty members were gathered together to keep house for the Lord. From there I went home, and, after spending two days with my wife and loved ones, I went to Wilson, Prairie to hold a meeting. I preached there thirteen days. Eleven persons were baptized and one restored. I am now at Dicey. I will go from here to Bolivar, then to Claremore, I. T., and then back to Sacred Heart, O. T. W. P. SKAGGS.

CARTWRIGHT.

The news of the illness, followed in a few days by the message of the death, of Mrs. Theodosia Cartwright, came as a severe shock to all who knew her. She, with her husband, Mr. George E. Cartwright, and son, James, united with the Central congregation, of this city, several months ago. They had been steadfast members in Tennessee, having seen a church built up near their home largely through their own personal efforts. Mrs. Cartwright was sick for only ten days, dying at St. Anthony's Hospital at 12:30 A.M., on Thursday, July 19, 1900. The services were conducted at the family residence on Friday at 3:30 P.M. A large concourse of friends was present and the floral tributes were very beautiful. In her death there passes from our midst a transparently beautiful Christian character. She was loved in the home and in the church, the two circles of her greatest influence. To the bereaved husband and two sons we extend our heartfelt sympathy.—Christian Messenger, Denver, Col.

SHORES.

Rufus B. son of Luther and Lennie Shores, was born on May 28, 1895, and died on July 28, 1900, aged five years and two months. Rufus was a child of an exceptionally strong mind; his actions and conversation were such that one was led to believe him much older than he was. He was the joy and light of his home, was the constant companion of his grandfather (Brother P. J. Shores, who lost his wife some time ago), and was always cheerful and happy. But the little fellow has gone from us. The love of father, mother, grandfather, and dear relatives could not hold him here; death claimed him as a victim, and he had to go. He belongs to Him who said: "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Loving parents and relatives, dry your tears; little Rufus cannot come to you, but you can go to him. Then there will be no more death. Blessed thought!

ROUNTREE.

Lillie Olivia, daughter of Brother Charles W. and Sister Lou Rountree, was born on August 28, 1872, and died on July 29, 1900, being nearly twenty-eight years of age. In 1887 she obeyed the Lord's call during a series of meetings conducted by Brother J. A. Harding, at Beech Grove, Tenn. Sister Lillie's death was quite sudden; it came as a shock to the whole community. She was as well as usual until late Saturday evening, when she became ill and died early on Sunday morning. The verdict of all who knew her was: She was a good girl, self-sacrificing, consecrated to her duty as she knew it. She was always at her post of duty and was the light and comfort of her family. She leaves a heartbroken mother, father, half-sister, relatives, and the entire church to mourn her taking away. The family take the bereavement as Christians should, sorrowing not as those who have no hope. This is another reminder that life is uncertain and that all should give diligence to make their calling and election sure. That the bereaved ones may be soothed and sustained by the exceeding great and precious promises and finally be ready to meet the righteous on the shores of deliverance is my prayer.

GALLOWAY.

Sister Susan Galloway was born on November 14, 1817, and died at the home of her son, near Carter's Creek, Tenn., on May 28, 1900; aged eighty-two years, six months, and fourteen days. In 1837 she was married to Matthew J. Galloway, with whom she lived happily for fifty-two years. Brother and Sister Galloway reared a family of six children—five boys and one girl. Two of the boys died several years ago. Early in life Sister Galloway united with the Presbyterian Church. After her marriage she severed her connection with the Presbyterian Church and connected herself with the Baptist Church, going with her husband. Later in life she and her husband became convinced that God's people were neither Presbyterians nor Baptists, but simply Christians. So, discarding every name and practice of human origin, they both took their stand with the church of God. They both remained consistent and useful members of that body until called away, Brother Galloway preceding her several years. Aunt Susan was one of the good old mothers in Israel. Full of years, ready for the summons, she was called home to rest. May her children who remain and all of us follow her good example and be ready to depart in peace when called to go. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

MACKKEY.

These lines are written in loving remembrance of Oliver P. Mackey, who departed this life on June 23, 1900, at Cartagena, South America, at the age of twenty-six years, seven months, and twenty-three days. He was the youngest son of James H. and Nancy J. Mackey. On May 17, 1900, he left his Kentucky home to assume the responsibility of a government position in South America. Only four days previous to his illness he wrote his brother in regard to his good health, but death had claimed him many days before his last message was received. He had served three years in the United States Army and was known as the model soldier at Fort Morgan. Although deprived of an opportunity to attend church regularly, he never forgot to search for the divine truth. Immediately after reaching his new home, he wrote for his books, the first mentioned being his Bible. He united with the Christian Church at Beech Grove, Ky., on May 5, 1889, and was baptized by W. T. Dillehay. Oliver was loved and esteemed by all. His kind and generous disposition had won him a host of friends, who mourn their loss. How sad to know he was called away while in a strange land, so far from home and loved ones—no familiar voice to cheer him, no gentle hand to soothe his aching brow! But we have the blessed assurance that Christ was with him and saw fit to pluck one of earth's choicest flowers to be transplanted in God's garden above. By his death a father has lost an obedient son; a brother and two sisters, a kind and affectionate brother; and Kentucky, one of her noblest young men.

May God bless the bereaved family and sorrowing friends. By their loss heaven has gained a precious jewel.

SISCO.

I am so sad and lonely this morning. Memory, fond memory, paints the scenes of the past. Dark is the picture. Just six years ago I left my wife, whom I had just wedded, to go and plead with sinners to repent. I went away happy and light-hearted. But little did I think on that beautiful morn, as I bade her "good-by," that ere we lived together six years I would have to say: "Farewell forever." But I had it to do. On May 16, 1900, at 1 P.M., she bade earth adieu, while in my arms. What changes those few years have brought! This morning, instead of starting to proclaim the "sweet message, salvation," with a heart overflowing with joy, I went to the sacred spot where dear Ella's body lies, and there mourned my loss, not hers. I carried the Book she loved so well—the Bible. While standing by her grave and gazing on the little mound, I was impressed, as never before, with the sweetness of this: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Isn't that soothing to a poor, broken heart? Isn't it grand to have such a blessed assurance of our loved ones? How could I live any longer were it not for the precious promises of Jesus? But when I can roll back this "tear-dimmed vision" that hangs so heavily around my heart and think of the sweetness, the joys that Ella is in possession of this morning, then there is "sunshine in my soul," instead of sadness. Then I thank the Lord and take courage, for I am sure that "he doeth all things well." While I will never know in this world why she was taken from me and our three little children, yet when I pass through the "curtain of death," then I believe I will know. May the dear Lord spare and help me to rear the children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," so that we may all meet at home, "sweet home"—heaven—where we shall have to say no more, "Good-by, farewell;" where sickness, pain, and death are no more; where peace, joy, happiness, and love will reign uninterruptedly for evermore.

Length of Creative Days.

Moses uses different language in regard to the flood to what he does when speaking of creation. Of the flood he says: "And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights." (Gen. 7: 12.) This makes it plain enough as to what is meant. It is the common way of expressing the natural day of twenty-four hours. But the days of creation are not thus spoken of. If the expression, "And there was evening and there was morning, one day," was the common way of expressing a period of twenty-four hours at that time, why does Moses change the phraseology when he comes to speak of the flood? Why did he not say: "And the rain was upon the earth forty evenings and mornings?" For, in the language of my beloved brother, "the two statements are by the same writer, in the same book, to the same people, in the same age." If the language of creative days in Genesis is the common way of expressing a period of twenty-four hours, we may expect also to find it not only in speaking of the days of the flood, but of frequent occurrences throughout the Scriptures. Is this the case? Similar language is not found again in all the Scriptures, with one exception (Dan. 8: 14, 26), and here it is explained to mean a long period of time. So if Moses means periods of twenty-four hours in Genesis, it is the one case in all the Scriptures where such language is used to express our natural day. This meaning also appears the more unlikely by its being explained to mean "many days to come," by Daniel.

Does the seventh day of creation continue? "Because that in it he rested from all his work which God had created and made." (Gen. 2: 3, R. V.) It says here God "rested," not "had rested"—the past tense simply, and not the past perfect tense. On this point Paul, in Hebrews, comments as follows: "They shall not enter into my [God's] rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world." God's rest, then, was continuing at the time Paul wrote. How would it be possible for people to enter into God's rest now, "for we which have believed do enter into that rest," if it ended in twenty-four hours from creation? "For he that is entered into his rest hath himself also rested from his works, as God did from his. Let us therefore give diligence to enter into that rest, that no man fall after the same example of disobedience." The language here shows

(1) the Sabbath began at creation; (2) it remains till now.

"Suppose I were to tell you in the first part of this letter that I did so and so on the first day of my arrival in California, and add that that day was composed of light, called 'day,' and darkness, called 'night.' How long would that be if I have seen trouble in my day?" Evidently it would mean a period of twenty-four hours; but, unfortunately for our beloved brother's argument, no such language as he here uses can be found to describe any one of the six "days" of creation.

"In the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven" (Gen. 2: 4, R. V.) does not mean a succession of days, but a period of time including the entire six "days" of creation, showing that in the account of creation itself the word "day" may mean more than twenty-four hours.

If a day of twenty-four hours can be completed before the following day begins, the same is true of a day of any one length. The seventh "day," in which God rested, did not begin till the other six had been completed, each in the order indicated. Here the six days are no more "getting longer all the time" because the seventh is not yet completed than yesterday is because to-day is unfinished.

But "how did the grass grow six thousand years without the sun?" I do not know that it grew just that long without the sun; but is it not as difficult to see how the grass could grow twenty-four hours preceding the sun as six thousand years? According to our brother's own view of it, the earth put forth grass and fruit trees at least twenty-four hours before there was ever a sun. Since vegetation seems to be entirely dependent on the sun now, how can this be? For then it must have been independent of the sun and either by some other natural cause or miracle, which, in either case, could have been as easily performed by the Creator for six thousand years as twenty-four hours. Light existed before the sun, so could have made the grass to grow independently of it.

I quite agree with Professor Stuart that "the Hebrew word 'yom' does not signify an indefinite period." But a "day" of a thousand years may be just as definite as one of twenty-four hours. Davidson's Hebrew and Chaldean Lexicon defines the word thus: "A day;" "by day, in the daytime;" "day by day, every day, daily;" "this day, to-day;" "on the day that or when;" "in the daytime;" "on this day, immediately;" "about this day, this time, now;" "at that time, then;" "from the time that, since;" "days, some days or time;" "after many days, some time after;" "time, duration generally;" "at all times, always;" "as long as thou livest;" "advanced in age;" "a definite time, as a year;" "day, time, period."

The word itself points to one period of time as much as another. We must determine what is meant by the context. The context in the account of creation shows at least five distinct meanings for the word. Why, then, the necessity to feel that "one day" must mean just twenty-four hours?

A literal rendering of "there was evening and there was morning" would not mean twenty-four hours, but only about two hours. "Evening" means the close of the day; "morning," the beginning; and no one can get twenty-four hours out of the expressions except by lengthening their meaning beyond what they ordinarily signify. START right. In painting, the first or priming coat is important. It is the foundation. It is a mistake to think anything is good enough for it. If a mixture of Zinc, Barytes, etc., is used the paint will surely crack and peel. The only safe paint for priming is Pure White Lead. to make twenty-four hours, the same rule permits for any other period just as well.

There is a difference between "a day with the Lord" and a day with man; and these are days with the Lord, marking his work of creation. The context indicates that they are periods of more than twenty-four hours: (1) They are "days" independent of the sun, existing before it did; (2) the work done in them indicates a longer period. For example, on the third "day" God gathered the waters together and the dry land appeared. When this was done a second time at the flood it required more than twenty-four hours. (See Gen. 8; compare also 2 Pet. 3: 7.) And, further, on this same third "day" the earth "put forth" grass and trees. The indications are that all these grew naturally as they do now, the creative act being the formation of the life germ, and not the full growth. But trees do not grow in twenty-four hours. The language shows that the earth was clothed with vegetation by natural forces. It is just such language as has always been used when speaking of the growth of plants and trees. It is not a question as to whether the Creator could have brought forth the earth from the womb of waters and clotted it with trees and plants all in twenty-four hours; but, according to the language used, did he? We know also that it is characteristic of the Creator to take long periods of time to accomplish his purposes.

Jesus, by whom the first world was created, told his disciples he was going away to prepare a new world for them. (John 14.) It seems he has been preparing that new world already, nearly two thousand years, and it is not yet completed. This points to long periods of time in the creation of the first world, since by him both are made. It is hardly reasonable to suppose he built worlds faster than than now.

J. M. M'CALEB.

Virginia Jottings.

On Saturday evening before the fifth Lord's day in July the writer took the train at East Radford for Ripplemead, a station on the Norfolk and Western Railway, and preached Saturday night, Sunday at 11 o'clock, and also in the afternoon. One young woman confessed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ at the 11 o'clock meeting and was baptized in New River at the afternoon service.

On the afternoon of the second Lord's day in August, at an appointment on Clapboard Branch, I heard the good confession of faith made by a recently married young woman, and that same afternoon, in the waters of New River, I baptized her into Christ, as I trust, and into the one body. A Methodist circuit rider was at the baptizing. In conversation with him, he told me that he had baptized some in New River, lower down the stream. I said to him: "You baptize, then, as well as 'rantize.'" He answered that he did. Then I asked him if he thought the apostles sometimes sprinkled and at other times immersed. He said he did not, and added: "I do not wish to discuss the subject; but you see I do not regard the mode as essential." What a predicament in which to be placed as a preacher! Doing what he admits, or rather claims, the apostles never did, and then justifying the course by saying that he does not regard it as essential. What a state of affairs in which so-called "religion" is found!

Death visited the home of Brother Henry Linkous about 4 o'clock on Saturday morning, July 28, 1900, and took away the father and husband, leaving a wife and twelve children. The children are, for the most part, small. I had an appointment away, so my son, E. T. Showalter, made a talk at the burial. Death is always attended with sadness, but it seems that this is more than an ordinary case.

At near 5 P.M., on August 16, 1900, Mr. Jefferson G. Ridpath and Miss Caldora F. Buckner were united in holy matrimony by the writer.

HEART-SICK.

There are a great many people who have heart sickness, who have no chronic derangement of the heart. When the stomach is diseased it may affect many other organs, and produce all the evidences of diseased heart, diseased liver or kidneys, or disease in some other organ. The inexperienced practitioner treats the wrong disease, and hence the constant statement of Dr. Pierce's correspondents: "Doctors could not help me."

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. It increases the assimilative powers, and purifies and enriches the blood. When diseases of organs remote from the stomach are caused by the stomach, the cure of the stomach results in the cure of the other diseases, in heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, etc.

"Six years ago my stomach and heart troubled me so much I had to do something, as the doctors could not help me," writes Mrs. S. A. Knapp, of San Jose, California, Box 392. "I went to San Francisco and had treatment for catarrh of the stomach, and was better for some time, then it came back. I then used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' These medicines cured my stomach. I do not have the pain and indigestion as I did. It is very hard for me to tell you what I suffered before I commenced taking your valuable medicine. I recommend it to all the sufferers whom I meet."

To cure constipation use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

The bubonic plague has appeared in Glasgow, Scotland. One person has died, and at the latest report eleven others were ill.

The British troops now occupy Machadodorp, President Kruger's most recent capital. The Boers evacuated the place with great precipitation.

According to official statements, the Philippine Islands have, up to the present date, cost the United States 2,394 American lives and $186,678,000 in money.

The Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, telegraphs that good rains continue to fall, but that cholera still prevails in many districts of that country.

There are three hundred and seventy thousand teachers in America and nineteen million youth of school age. Of these thirteen million are actually under instruction.

The American Nail and Rod Mills, at Anderson, Ind., have shut down. Nine hundred and eighty men are thrown out of work. The mills belong to the nail trust, and it is stated that the closure will be permanent.

Before starting on his vacation recently, Judge Oliver H. Horton, of Chicago, sent to the Bureau of Charities twelve thousand street car tickets and one thousand steamboat tickets to be used in giving poor children of the city a day's pleasure.

Dr. Hidezo Ikeda, of Tokyo, Japan, who has been sent to America by his government to study the agriculture of this country, is looking into the cultivation of tobacco in Virginia. Later he will familiarize himself with the growth of cotton.

An agent of the Department of Agriculture has just returned from the Desert of Sahara, where he went to secure varieties of date palms for use in Arizona. It is believed that the date industry of this country will some time become important.

The Department of State has been notified by Minister Buck, at Tokyo, that the Japanese Government has given permission to the United States Government to establish a United States hospital on Japanese territory wherever the United States Government may select a site.

The population of Boston, Mass., just announced by the Census Bureau, is 560,893, against 448,478 in 1890. This is an increase of 112,415, or 25.07 per cent. The population of San Francisco, as just announced in a bulletin by the Census Bureau, is 342,782, against 298,997 in 1890. This is an increase of 43,785, or 14.64 per cent.

The steamship Ohio has arrived from Nome with 332 passengers and treasure estimated at two million dollars. About one-third of the gold came from Nome; the Klondike contributed the balance. The steamer South Portland also arrived from Nome with forty thousand dollars in gold and 113 steerage passengers.

The census upon the Osage and Kaw reservations, just completed, shows the following: Total Osages in "The present epidemic of cholera," says the Simla correspondent of the Daily Mail, "is one of the worst on record. The bubonic plague is child's play compared with it. The natives are dying like flies, at the rate of three thousand a week. The epidemic is undoubtedly due to the pollution of the scanty water supply during the famine."

So far as census reports have been made, the lake cities lead the list in growth. Chicago, Buffalo, Milwaukee, Toledo, and Cleveland all show heavy gains as compared with the rest of the country. There is none of these which does not show larger proportionate growth than even New York, Buffalo being a fraction ahead of the metropolis.

The Director of the Mint now estimates the gold in the United States at a trifle over a thousand million dollars. Of this six hundred and twenty-two million dollars is in the government treasuries and the vaults of national banks, where it can be readily counted. The remainder is the estimated amount in the vaults of private banks and in the hands of the people.

Direct telegraphic communication between the United States and Germany was opened recently through the new German cable, and the German Emperor and President McKinley exchanged congratulatory messages. This is the first cable to be laid between the United States and Germany, and is in connection with the Mackay-Bennett Commercial Cable Company and the Postal Telegraph Company.

The cottonwood of the South, long condemned as a worthless tree, has at length found a market in Germany, where its cheapness recommends it to lumber merchants. A firm at Druesburg has contracted, it is said, for millions of sawed cottonwood to be delivered during the next year or two. It is to be used in making crates and light packing cases. Rotterdam has already taken two million feet. Cottonwood is light, soft, and close-grained, difficult to season and liable to warp. Some varieties have been used in making wood pulp, as well as for barrels, wooden ware, packing cases, etc. Cross sections of the common Eastern species are used as polishing wheels in glass grinding.

Dr. William R. Capehart, of the North Carolina State Board of Agriculture, who has arrived from Bertie County, says the enormous fire in Hyde County continues and is destroying the trees and soil. The soil is peaty and burns like tinder. One farm valued at ten thousand dollars is so badly burned away that its owner says it is not now worth one hundred dollars. The fire is burning far underneath the surface in many places. Dr. Capehart was informed that as a farmer was driving along a highway the fire-undermined soil gave way under him, and he and his horse, falling into the fiery pit, were burned to death. The smoke extends many miles at sea, and by obscuring the light at Oregon Inlet has caused two wrecks in a fortnight.

Matters seem to be quieting in China. The allied forces hold possession of the city of Peking. The trouble is in finding a government with which to negotiate. The emperor and the empress dowager fled from Peking at the approach of the armies, and their whereabouts are not certainly known. Fears are entertained that disagreements will arise between the allied forces as to the course to be pursued toward China in the settlement of the trouble. Some of them will likely wish to hold possession of portions of it as indemnity for the past and security for the future. Others desire only the peace and integrity of the empire, security to the lives and property of their citizens in China, and an open door for trade in the future. In this settlement the peace of the world is involved.

Seeking a Location.

Having sold out my business in Franklin, Tenn., and wishing to get to a drier climate, I take this method of seeking information. I desire to locate somewhere in the mountains of East Tennessee or Western North Carolina, where there is plenty of free stone and sulphur water. A small town of a few hundred inhabitants, with a small congregation of Christians or a few scattered disciples, who are satisfied with the Book and are willing to walk in its teaching, without addition or subtraction, is the kind of place sought. I wish to teach and be taught the word of the Lord and make my own living either by selling family groceries or by conducting a poultry yard or the two combined. Will the brethren in the sections named please correspond with me, either through the Gospel Advocate or privately, at Franklin, Tenn.?

As our citizenship is on high, it is correctly argued by some that the missionaries should depend less upon human governments for protection. The Union Gospel News says: "The speech of Lord Salisbury continues to furnish the text for discussing missionary movements and governments. A writer in the Guardian, speaking more especially of British missionaries, suggests that they renounce their British citizenship, giving up all claim to protection by the military when they settle in heathen lands, relying only upon divine care. The Christian World says that such has practically been the attitude of all pioneer missionaries, and that the success of Livingstone and others has been due largely to this independence of all home protection." The source of our help is from above. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variability, neither shadow of turning." (James 1: 17.) Paul admonishes: "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." (Heb. 13: 5.) "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you." (1 Pet. 5: 6, 7.) "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled." (1 Pet. 3: 13, 14.) "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12: 18-21.) It is a fact that the man who is relying on the Lord for sole protection is not nearly so liable to stir up strife as one who depends on his government for protection. Even in our own country the man who carries a pistol is much more likely to lose his life than one who does not. A strong trust in and reliance on the Lord place a man in that frame of mind that he is not likely to stir up strife and contention. However, as there is a ceaseless conflict between right and wrong, truth and falsehood, virtue and vice, so a man will sometimes suffer for right doing. This was true in the case of Stephen, the first Christian martyr. "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5: 10.)

A letter from a missionary in India, who is not in the famine district, says: "The tales that come from the central provinces and Rajputana are harrowing: Four missionaries have died of cholera in the past six weeks in adjoining missions, all at the same work for the starving people gathered in camps and fed from mission kitchens. The cholera has been bad in many of these camps. A missionary from there writes that no pictures and no descriptions can exaggerate the horrors which they have to witness. The failure of the wells has been the last straw." The rains that have been looked for so far have not been very abundant, so that the end of the terrible suffering is not yet. The church needs to contribute liberally for the support of the missionaries and that the horrors of the famine may cease. "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" (James 2: 14-16.)

From different sources the cry is heard that there is not that sympathy existing between the pastor and the members of the flock that should characterize their union. A brother said to me of his pastor: "We were pained and grieved to learn he cared nothing for us; that he was ready to leave us whenever he could get more money." After all, the pastor is no more to be blamed than the churches. They look the country over to find the very best preacher they can secure for the salary they can afford to pay. When a church employs a preacher as a clerk is employed, it need not be surprised to find the preacher looking upon his employment very much in the same light. Instead of entering into any such relations, the church should encourage the preacher to labor where he can do the most good, and should hold up his hands while engaged in the blessed work of saving souls. When churches lower the standard of the gospel and the value of a soul by employing a preacher in the same manner that a lawyer is engaged, it will not be long till they find that shekels constitute the only tie that holds them together. Will you hear an exchange testify along the same line? "Writing to a religious publication, a German layman expresses his doubt as to the present need of more church buildings in Berlin, it being proposed to increase the churches at the German capital. The need, he declares, is ministers with sympathy and who will visit the people. He speaks of a pastor who, upon being asked by a mother to conduct the funeral of her daughter, refused, saying he was off duty that week. How much love for a pastorate can the people have if its representatives conduct themselves in such a way? On the other hand, it is the testimony of many of our most successful ministers that they learned the needs, the joys and sorrows of their people by their visiting among them, and were thus better prepared to preach the word to suit special conditions. Every tactful pastor recognizes the difference between social calls and prayerful, sympathetic visits that tell for good, and there can hardly be too many of these. It is natural for the members of the church to turn for sympathy and help to the pastor—moreover, to look to him for advice—and a timely visit may tide a family over some spiritual crisis." It is the duty of all the members of the body to visit the sick and afflicted as well as other Christians. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.) It is made obligatory upon every child of God to visit the sick, to feed the hungry, and to clothe the naked. This duty is enjoined upon all alike. "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was ahungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee ahungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25: 34-40.)

The following special dispatch from Hopkinsville, Ky., clipped from the American, of this city, will be read with interest by our readers. We do not conclude, because the elements seem to be against the churches of Fairview, Ky., that, therefore, the displeasure of the Lord is upon her people; "for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." "During a violent thunderstorm that passed over this section late yesterday afternoon the Bethel Baptist Church, at Fairview, ten miles east of Hopkinsville, was struck by lightning, and despite the heroic efforts made to save it, it was burned to the ground. It was three hours in burning, and several times it was thought the flames were extinguished, but they broke out in fresh places. The church was a handsome brick structure and stood on the spot where Jefferson Davis was born. It was bought by Mr Davis' comrades and presented to him; he in turn presented to the Baptist Church the lot on which Bethel Church was erected in 1886. The church cost ten thousand dollars, and Mr. Davis himself was present at its dedication. C. H. Strickland, of Nashville, preached the dedicatory sermon. This is the third church burned in Fairview in less than three years. The Methodist Church was struck by lightning and burned to the ground in November, 1897, and the colored Baptist Church burned last year. The organ and memorial windows were saved yesterday. There is five thousand dollars insurance, and steps will at once be taken to rebuild the Bethel Church. J. A. Bennett is pastor of the church."

Riots are sweeping like a fierce tornado over the country. Following on the heels of the New Orleans outbreak was the awful riot in New York City. A policeman, in the discharge of his duty, was murdered by a negro. An excitable woman, coming out of the chamber in which the dead man lay, cried out for vengeance. Almost quicker than one can tell it, a great mob collected. In an astonishingly short time thousands of people were assailing every negro in sight. It appears that the police were powerless to quell the riot. And now comes the rioting in Akron, O., caused by the assault of a negro upon a little girl. These two riots go to show that the race prejudice is just as strong in the North as in the South. The frenzy of the people in the North seems even greater than that of the Southern people, for they are usually satisfied with wreaking vengeance upon the criminal, but in Akron and New York the rabble seemed to be moved by a spirit of utter recklessness. Mob law is to be deplored in any part of the country, but it is not fair for Northern journals to labor to make it appear that the South is any more culpable than the North. It is needless to censure any part of the country for wreaking vengeance on such criminals, for the whole country is alike indignant at such conduct. All law-abiding citizens would be glad to see these criminals dealt with as they deserve by law, but still every man is filled with indignation at such a deed.

Since the entrance of the allied forces into China, the situation remains unchanged. As the foreign legations in Peking have been relieved, Russia has proposed the withdrawal of all troops from Peking, stating that she has no intention of acquiring new territory. The United States has also signified a willingness to withdraw. While the other powers have not signified as yet their willingness, it is generally thought that they will do so, all the powers reserving to themselves the right to see that order is restored and that full satisfaction is given for the damage already done by China. It is hoped that the whole affair will now be amicably settled and that God will overrule this disturbance to his own glory. It would be too bad for the Christian nations to allow their greed to get the better of their judgment and to permit themselves to fight over the division of China.

"Guarding the Cross with Krupp Guns."

The reason assigned by Jesus for commanding Peter to put up his sword (Matt. 26: 52) unquestionably shows that he meant to prohibit his followers from attempting to enforce the right by the slaughter of human beings. That reason is expressed in the following words: "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." He does not say that "some that take the sword," nor yet that "many that take the sword," but that "all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." The language is universal, and it contains a prohibition of his followers from engaging in the slaughter of their fellow-beings with the sword and a prediction of what will be the consequences to those who engage in such slaughter. The history of all nations is a verification of this fact; for, while it is true that some nations are still standing that were established by the sword, yet the history of all their predecessors may be accepted as an infallible guarantee of the inevitable destiny that awaits even the greatest and most powerful of them. They are all doomed to disintegration, and will ultimately perish from the face of the earth. All history proclaims this truth. From the mighty empire that grew up in the pathway of the ambitious and bloodthirsty Tiglath-pileser to the proud dominion over which the Roman eagle spread its wings, there is a long and bloody chapter that tells how nation after nation which came into existence by the wholesale slaughter of human beings went down before the devouring sword of another. Where are the governments of Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, and the Roman Caesars? Gone, utterly gone, "like the chaff of the summer thrashing floors," while other nations that feed and fatten on the blood of men have come to take their places. But, as surely as the night follows the day or history repeats itself, they, too, sooner or later, will perish with the sword.

If it be contended that, under some circumstances, the military power is the only arm the State has with which to suppress evil, I reply, I know it is, but I am not speaking from the point of view of the State. I am speaking from the point of view occupied by Jesus, which is certainly the one which should be occupied by his followers. If not, why not? But some one observes: "As long as the State exists as it now is, it will be compelled to wield the sword or suffer itself to be destroyed." This, too, is granted. But who knows, in the first place, that the State ought to exist "as it now is," and, in the second place, that it would be wrong to suffer even death, if need be, rather than inflict it upon others? Did not the Master so teach? See Matt. 26: 25; Luke 17: 33; John 12: 25; and then note the fact that he suffered himself put to death rather than resist his enemies with the sword, and that an inspired apostle (1 Pet. 2: 20, 21) has placed on record the admonition that we should follow his steps.

But, without continuing the argument myself at this time, I here introduce an extract from an article quoted from Charles H. Parkhurst in the Literary Digest of July 21, 1900, in which he speaks with no uncertain sound on the same subject, and I trust the reader will give it a careful perusal. It is from a pamphlet with the title placed at the head of this article, and is as follows:

"The point that I want to press, and upon which I venture to hope I shall have your cordial sympathy, is this: that the idea of carrying the gospel to the Philippines with the aid of shot and shell is not only no quotation from the gospel, but it distinctly antagonizes the divine utterances which the gospel records and the divine spirit with which, from beginning to end, that gospel is inspired; and that bringing to them the story of the cross under the cover of our gunboats—redemption in one hand and shot in the other—is an infidel method of accomplishing evangelical results.

"Now, there are a great many questions clustering about this into which, as Christian ministers, we have no business to enter. For example, in our capacity as Christ's ambassadors we have, as it seems to me, nothing whatever to do with the possible commercial advantages that may accrue to our country by the reduction of the Philippines. Whether there will be money in it for us is not our concern; whether we shall ever be reimbursed for the tremendous charges to which our government is now putting itself is an unanswered question; but even granting that the most ambitious anticipations are going to be more than fulfilled, that does not touch the particular nerve of the matter that is our ministerial responsibility. The one solitary question that we have to consider before our congregations is this: Is it in keeping with the expressed mind of Jesus Christ that his adherents should seek to extend his kingdom by the use of swords and guns? Can we conceive of his enlisting in the Philippine war or encouraging or even allowing his disciples to do so? How would Jesus and John and Paul have looked pleading the love of God one moment and alternating by puncturing the impenitent pagans with a bayonet thrust the next?

"Of course it can be claimed that the gospel, like Washington's farewell address, is a back number, but it is not to that class of mind that this appeal is addressed. I am speaking only to one whom I believe to be standing unwaveringly upon the gospel as being still true to the mind and heart of God, and therefore absolutely binding upon the affections, consciences, and utterances of every one who presumes to stand before the world in Christ's stead as a divine ambassador. With that understanding, how, in the name of all that is sincere and unswervingly loyal, can you or I look with anything but grief and shame upon any blood-shedding scheme of gathering heathen Filipinos into the ranks of the redeemed? Is there any recorded word of Jesus Christ that can be construed into accord with such policy or any example left us by any of his apostles that can by any honest style of hermeneutics be interpreted as indorsement of such policy?

"Another question into which we need not inquire too curiously is whether heathen cannot be shelled into the kingdom of heaven more rapidly than they can be preached in. That is a feature of the case that has no fascination for me and probably would not have for you. Perhaps, if in the wilderness Jesus had yielded to the devil, and had made a 'deal' with him by which all the kingdoms of the earth should have become subject to Jesus if Jesus would engage to become subject to Satan, it would have expedited matters, without very materially helping them. To trade with the devil for the sake of glorifying the Lord is a policy repugnant to sense and still more so to piety.

Another point that has frequently been made is that even if it is not quite Christian to try to save men's souls by driving them up into a corner with a shotgun, yet that that is the way in which a great deal of Christian civilization has been effected, notably by the English, and that God has uniformly overruled to his own glory the questionable methods by which it has been attempted to promote his glory. There is nothing, doubtless, that God cannot overrule to his own glory and to the spread of the gospel, even the denials of Peter and the betrayal of Judas Iscariot. But to allow our pulpits to encourage 'the wrath of man' because 'God can make the wrath of man to praise him' is a detestable way of going about the Lord's business, and to apologize (as I have recently seen done) for the Mohammedan way in which we are jamming Christian civilization upon the poor pagans of the Pacific by saying that, although it is bad business, yet the Almighty will have no difficulty in making it the means of hastening the millennium, is both hypocrisy and sacrilege."

It is delightful to contemplate the day when the rising sun of civilization and Christianity shall shed its bright beams over all the dark places of the heathen world and to think of the scattered and lost sheep of every nation flocking to the fold of the one Shepherd; but he who has all authority in heaven and on earth and who is himself the good Shepherd of all the sheep, whose gentle voice would woo and win them with words of everlasting love, has made no provision for gathering them in with shot and shell. Under the gracious and benign influences of his mild scepter, all enmity between man and man is to be banished, and "the wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Isa. 11: 6-9.)

Breaking Bread. No. 3.

Who came together to break bread? The word of God answers this question clearly: "The disciples came together to break bread." (Acts 20: 7.) This is the answer of the New Testament to the question. It would be vain to search for any other answer in God's word, for only disciples could come together to break bread. Others might come together, but not to break bread. Where people have no part in the work, or service, to be performed in a meeting, they have no business in that meeting, and for that very reason stay out of it. A meeting to do a certain thing excludes all those who can have no part or interest in the thing to be done, but all those who are interested in doing the thing will attend.

So the design of the meeting to break bread shuts out all who cannot break bread; and as to whether people not disciples ever attended the meetings in which bread was broken must depend in part on whether those meetings had other designs than the breaking of bread to accomplish, designs that would interest unbelievers and outsiders, something in which they might have part. If at the same meeting they set forth some brother to discourse on the plan of salvation with a view to converting and baptizing sinners, then all who had any interest in that, whether disciples or not, would have reason to attend; if at the same meeting they engaged in singing songs, playing instruments for the entertainment and edification of all, then anybody and everybody who had any interest in such exercises would have reason to attend; if at the same meeting they ran a Sunday school, dividing men, women, and children into classes under many teachers, then all who wanted the instruction of the Sunday school would have reason to attend. In this way the meeting would be for many things, and some would be present for one thing; some, another.

There is nothing in the typical passover that points to this. Nobody gathered in the room where the passover was eaten but keepers of the feast; nor was this memorial feast cumbered with a variety of exercises designed to draw and entertain persons who had no right to the table. Neither do I find anything in the example of Christ and his apostles in confirmation of a catch-all meeting where bread was broken. "The disciples came together to break bread" is all there is of it. When they met together for other things; they did other things, and did not break bread.

In Matthew, Mark, and Luke we have account of the institution of the Supper. Was it set up in the presence of the multitude? Nay, verily. It was set up in the last passover, where were only the twelve with our Lord. None but disciples were present. The next account we have of it is in Acts 2, where "they that gladly received his word were baptized. . . . And they continued steadfastly in . . . breaking of bread." (Verses 41, 42.) Four verses below Luke says, "They, continuing daily with one accord in the temple;" and, lest we should take for granted the bread breaking and eating were carried on in the presence of the great throng of people in the temple court, he adds in the same verse: "And breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart." They taught constantly in the temple, but they broke bread at home. Some think the breaking bread and eating of this verse refer solely to the common meal. It would be remarkable indeed that they would have to be informed that common meals were eaten at home. Where else had they ever been eaten? But we must not lose sight of the fact that they had "all things common" under the new fellowship. They were one body, and support went to all members alike. No one suffered the need of anything possessed by others. They ministered to each other and supplied each other's wants. To have described them as "continuing daily with one accord in the temple," without any reference to what was done elsewhere, might have left us to believe that the breaking of bread in the Lord's Supper and the eating of meals where rich and poor had all things common were in the presence of the multitude in the temple court; but there was no such display of charity nor such profanation of the Lord's Supper as a temple court observance would have involved. The words, "Breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart," refer to all their eating. It was all at home, none of it in the public throngs of believers and unbelievers in the temple. It was baptized believers—disciples, only disciples—that from house to house broke bread. They ate the Lord's Supper in such loving little bands as had been wont to eat the passover in private homes.

Only one other reference is made to the Lord's Supper in the book of Acts, and that in chapter 20, which I have already quoted and explained. So a few passages from First Corinthians must complete the testimony on whether any but believers ever formed part of the assemblies where bread was broken. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread." (1 Cor. 10: 16, 17.) "Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another." (1 Cor. 11: 33.) The brethren came together to eat the Lord's Supper. If others came into the same meeting with them, it must have been for something else.

I find no evidence in the New Testament that unbelievers made up part of the assembly where the Lord's Supper was kept. Much less do I find that such a meeting was made the occasion of preaching to sinners for their conversion, and the evidence that its exercises were such as to draw and please people whose tastes called for fine music of some sort is totally wanting on the pages of the New Testament. The modern church meeting where bread is broken has little resemblance to a New Testament meeting to break bread. It is more like a crowd of friends and strangers at an inn, thrown together haphazard under the influence of many interests, than like the members of one family keeping a feast in remembrance of an absent brother. A variety of interests now lead people to the assembly where bread is broken rather than the single design to break bread in remembrance of Christ. Some meet to hear preaching; some, to attend Sunday school; some, to collect money; some, to be in a crowd at a public place and catch anything that may come; some for one thing and some another; and "the more part know not wherefore they are come together." Few meet now with the singleness of design that characterized the meeting to eat the passover or that was prominent in the observance of the Lord's Supper in the apostolic age. This catch-all character of meeting greatly clouds the beauty of the divine institution.

The hour of the day of a modern church meeting is itself sufficient evidence that breaking bread is not the controlling design in the meeting; for if the design of the meeting was to break bread, who would ever have thought of 11 A.M. as the time for taking the Lord's Supper? That might do for the Lord's dinner, but supper is the last meal of the day. Not only the title given, but the time indicated by New Testament example, is supper time. But how came 11 A.M. to be the time for eating the Lord's Supper? It is all plain enough when we remember that the controlling object in meeting is to have preaching, and 11 A.M. is the preaching hour of the first day of the week, and all denominations meet at that hour for services, of which breaking of bread is generally no part. So, instead of meeting to eat the Lord's Supper, the fashion is to meet to have preaching and other religious services common among modern denominations, and the Supper is sometimes by some people wedged in among the other services of the hour to be hurried through with about dinner time.

Missionary Notes.

Just now most of the missionaries have gone to the mountain or seaside resorts for rest and recreation. It is quite hot in the city, and only a few of us remain in Tokyo.

The Kanda Ward school closed with a good attendance. A small number of children and young men still attend Sunday school.

On August 7, 1900, I baptized one of the little Sunday school girls. She is twelve years of age and has a fair knowledge of the Bible. Her mother and father are members of the Kanda church of Christ. She lived for a while in the home of Brother F. A. Wagner, who has established a Christian colony in Shimousa, Japan. Miss Wirick took the little girl into her home for a few days to specially instruct and question her previous to her baptism. What is most needed in Japan is families whose children will become Christians. Now, most of the Christians are odd members of different families, and many of these are persecuted by their own blood relations. But it seems that prejudice is gradually and surely breaking down. Some day we will have Christian families in every community, whose members, as they come to years of accountability, will take up the cross, and whose influence will be much felt by heathen neighbors.

I expect my printing press in this month, when I will begin to issue leaflets, tracts, etc. I now have a teacher who is giving me lessons in Japanese writing—it is too hot to study much—and he is translating various leaflets for me. We will translate my first tract, "How to Study the Bible," in which I give a proper division of the word of God. This is to be followed by eleven others, one each month, fully developing God's plan for saving sinners. The second series of twelve numbers will particularly instruct young Christians in their various duties, older Christians as well.

Brethren, I ask for your constant prayers. You have sent to me once and again of your money. I appreciate your liberality and try to wisely use all I receive. But remember this scripture: "Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf." (2 Cor. 1: 11.)

My health continues good. Ushigome, the ward in which I live, seems to be a healthful one. In other wards much sickness is reported.

Many missionaries have had to come to Japan for refuge, because of the present troubles in China. Japan has taken a stand for modern civilization. May she next stand for Christianity against heathenism. A hundred years ago she killed Christians, now she sends her soldiers to protect them in China and gives them a welcome on her shores.

PICAYUNISHNESS.

It is not uncommon for a minister in this section of the country, when he goes any distance to fill a pulpit, to be asked what are his expenses. As a general thing, nobody dreams of compensating him for his services. It seems to be a fixed rule that the laborer in religious fields is not worthy of his hire. But we have never, till very recently, known a case in which he was required to furnish a written memorandum of his expenses before receiving back the amount of his railroad fare, and we did not believe that picayunishness could go that far. The next step, we suppose, will be to demand an affidavit, with the seal of a notary public attached.—Christian Advocate.

THE VICTORIOUS LIFE.

We have no sort of hesitation in declaring with positiveness a deep and deepening conviction that the first need of this our day is a personal, pure, vital, and victorious life. Altruism is all right in its place; personalism comes first in its place. The kingdom of God that we seek is to be within ourselves. They who have a true, real life at home do not need to run about telling of it, exaggerating it, professing what it is not because it ought to be that; they have only to be rightly and grandly alive within themselves, and the light will shine abroad. Set a candle in your window, and you need not go abroad to lead the rays; they make their own glory paths through the dark. It is the tendency to profess much and to have little, to take much from other lives and have little of one's own, that is weakening character, diluting sentiment, hollowing out principle, and shattering the whole fabric of manhood in its religious values.—New York Evangelist.

SPURGEON'S ESTIMATE OF THE BIBLE.

The Bible is the writing of the living God. Each letter was penned with an Almighty finger; each word in it dropped from the everlasting lips; each sentence was dictated by the Holy Spirit. Albeit that Moses was employed to write the histories with his fiery pen, God guided that pen. It may be that David touched his harp and let sweet psalms of melody drop from his fingers, but God moved his hands over the living strings of his golden harp. Solomon sung canticles of love and gave forth words of consummate wisdom, but God directed his lips and made the preacher eloquent. If I follow the thundering Nahum, when the horses plow the water, or Habakkuk, when he sees the tents of Cushan in affliction; if I read Malachi, when the earth is burning like an oven; if I turn to the smooth page of John, who tells of love, or the rugged chapters of Peter, who speaks of fire devouring God's enemies; if I turn to Jude, who launches forth anathemas upon the foes of God—everywhere I find God speaking. It is God's voice, not man's; the words are God's—the words of the Eternal, the Invisible, the Almighty, the Jehovah of ages. This Bible is God's Bible; and when I see it, I seem to hear a voice springing up from it, saying: "I am the book of God: man, read me: I am God's writing: study my page, for I was penned by God; love me, for he is my Author, and you will see him visible and manifest everywhere."

WHAT WILL YOU DO WITH JESUS?

"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." What shall we do with him? This was the dilemma of the hesitating Pilate. Jesus is before every one of us at this moment. He is within calling and hearing distance. What answer will you make? Who can tell the momentous character of the decisions that will be made to-day? Will you accept him? Will you call aloud as he is passing by? The poor blind man by the wayside did not wait. So soon as he knew it was Jesus, he cried mightily; and when he was told by the careless populace to hold his peace, he cried yet the more.

It is your privilege to-day to accept Christ to your everlasting salvation. O, to be able to say, with St. Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." This is worth years of struggle, lingering periods of misfortune.

But to reject Christ, to spurn the offers of salvation, to trample under foot every sacred privilege, to see Christ pass by to no lasting benefit to ourselves, and to go into the unseen world with no lively hope of a participation in the employments and enjoyments of heaven, is sad indeed, and a condition most deplorable.

I suppose that the first thought that shall flash across the mind of an unrepented man upon arriving at the bar of God will be the conviction, "All is lost." Time, probation, infinite mercy, neglected and despised. Too late! Christ has passed. Lost opportunities return no more.

I apprehend that the ultimatum of Christ drawn from the average answer of this world to the pleadings of his love will be, at his judgment seat, to those who finally reject him: "Depart from me; I never knew you."

Nothing is more clearly taught in the Scriptures than that there are two classes who will appear at the general judgment. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Will you make the wiser choice to-day? Jesus of Nazareth passeth by to-day.—The Preachers' Magazine.

GLOSSARY OF CHINESE TERMS.

In these days when so much space in the daily papers is taken up with matters relating to the Chinese, and so many Chinese words are met whose meaning is not always clear, the following glossary of Chinese terms, published by the London Daily News, may be found useful to those who are interested in the development of events in that venerable and now disturbed country:

LANTERN SERMONS NOT BEST.

Dr. Maclaren, of England, is quoted as telling young ministers not to preach "from the newspapers;" not to deal with commonplace, everyday topics, to catch the popular ear. Few will dare to dispute the great preacher, but not a few who read his words will go right on doing what he counsels against. A brother is justifying his own use of pictures in illustration of his sermon. He says: "A gentleman entered my study early one Sunday night, and said: 'I have traveled well-nigh around the world, and have always attended church; but for the first time in my life I was persuaded to live a better life when I attended the lantern sermon in your church.'" And he wrote the words in a little book which the pastor cherishes. But go back and analyze that sentence, and see what it involves. The man does not say that he was led to Christ by that lantern sermon. He was simply "persuaded to live a better life." There is the fatal mistake. If the man was not a Christian, his living a better life, rather than at once accepting Christ, is of no consequence. If he was a Christian, can what he said be true, that for the first time in his life he "was persuaded to live a better life?" Evidently there is something wrong there. We cannot accept the statement of the man himself. The probability is that there was a great moral defect in his life, and that it was not corrected by the "lantern sermon." But if we are to accept the testimony of the pastor referred to as to the value of the lantern sermon, what shall we say of the methods of instruction pursued in our theological schools? If it is true that the picture sermon is the most effective in the winning of souls to Christ, then we must change our methods. Then every theological school ought to have a professorship of lanterns and pictures. The young men ought to be taught how to manipulate lanterns and slides. Each one should be compelled to provide himself with a great assortment of photographs, and a laboratory should be provided for their copying and their preparation for the exhibition. Then every church should be provided with a lantern and a screen, and the picture sermon should become a regular part of the minister's equipment. One of the questions asked with regard to a candidate for a pastorate should be as to his ability to handle the lantern. Has he a large supply of pictures, and can he make more when his present supply has run out? Has he associated with him a good manipulator of the slides, so that they will always come in the right order and just at the right time; that they may remain on the screen just long enough, and follow each other so fittingly that the line of thought may not be broken and the impression may not be marred? If we are going into the picture business, let us do it thoroughly well. If pictures are so much more effective than are discussions of the great truths of the gospel—an oral setting forth of Christ, and him crucified—then let us have the best possible facilities for that kind of work, and let our young ministers be prepared to make and exhibit pictures rather than to write or otherwise prepare sermons.—Journal and Messenger.

Owing to the increased losses by fire, the insurance companies in New York have ordered an advance in rates ranging from 50 to 100 per cent. The losses by fire in this country from the first of this year up to July 19 are $106,142,200, as compared to $79,196,657 for the same period last year, and as compared to $150,537,865 for the whole of the year 1899. There have already been nine fires this year aggregating a total loss of $21,000,000. Last year during the same period there were but seven fires where the loss was over $1,000,000.—Exchange.

F. D. Srygley.

F. D. Srygley is dead. Since this sad, sad intelligence was received, not a single day has passed that I have not thought of this great, good man and of the great and lasting work he has accomplished. As a writer in his particular line, there were but few that could equal him, and there were no superiors. He had no theory of his own, but was satisfied with God's theory; he had no doctrine of his own, but was satisfied with God's doctrine; he had no plan of salvation of his own, but was satisfied with God's plan. He loved God and the Son of God, and, with great zeal and love, he presented only them, and them only, to a dying world; he answered all inquiries in God's own words. These things constituted the secret of the man's power.

Although I never met him, I owe much to him for assisting me out of Babylon, where I had been for thirty years.

Of him and his all has been so well said by his and our own beloved Brother Larimore that I shall attempt no eulogy. I do regret, however, that the Gospel Advocate saw fit to reproduce what was said of him by one who, without a single expression of sympathy for his loved ones and without a single intimation that he believed him to be a Christian, treads upon his grave, like a ghoul, and calls him a "Campbellite."

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
This soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade we'll meet
This soldier, brave and true.
On fame's eternal camping ground
His silent tent is spread,
And glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the love ye gave;
No impious footstep here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your glory be forgot,
While fame her record keeps
Or honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

You marble minstrel's voiceless stone
In deathless song shall tell,
When many a vanished year hath flown,
The story how ye fell.
Nor wreck, nor change, nor winter's blight,
Nor time's remorseless doom,
Can dim one ray of holy light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

WILLIAM B. NOE.

A Celestial Prospect.

When I shall cross the mystic river,
And feel its strange, mysterious breath,
With faith in Him who can deliver
And save my soul from power of death,
Whom should I first desire to see,
If such selection come to me?

The first should be the gentle Savior,
Who led me o'er life's thorny road,
And, blotting out my ill behavior,
Took on himself my weary load—
Who rescued me from sin's despair
And gave my soul the wings of prayer.

And next would come my faithful mother,
Who ever loved truth's holy flame,
And then my father, sisters, brother,
Who all on earth confessed his name—
Sustained by hope that could not fail,
Faith anchored firm within the veil.

And then that man of rare devotion,
That matchless champion of the Lord,
Who braved the wrath of earth and ocean
And to the nations preached the word—
Whose voice, which Satan could not drown,
Shook all the pagan temples down.

And next that ardent son of thunder,
Who leaned upon the Savior's breast,
And never made but that one blunder—
When he preferred his rash request;
Who lived in contemplation sweet
And learned the truth at Jesus' feet;

Who talked with Jesus' special angel
In Patmos Isle and heaven above,
And wrote that wondrous sweet evangel
Which tells of Christ's eternal love,
Of living branches in the Vine
Receiving light and life divine;

Who rode on wings of inspiration
Through all the starry depths of space,
And drank the waters of salvation
That flowed from living wells of grace;
Who pictured on the walls of time
Such shadows dark and lights sublime.

Then all earth's ransomed souls made glorious,
God's jewels rare from ev'ry land,
Who fought the fight and proved victorious,
Obedient to the Lord's command;
Who came through flame and fire and flood,
With robes made white in Jesus' blood.

Then view the mansions bright, ethereal,
And see that great seraphic throng,
Who bow before the Prince imperial
And sing, with saints, redemption's song,
And hear the harpist sweep the strings,
Praise ye the Lord, the King of kings.

All treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hidden in Him. It must grieve Him to see us filling our minds with passing things, worthless things, dying after the fashion of the world, while Christ is crowded away into some bare and paltry place in our lives.—Robert E. Spear.

All decline in the vigor of religious life is likely to be gradual. A man does not fall at once from the heights of holiness into the depths of sin. In the eyes of the world he may appear to do so, but the fact is otherwise. Always there is an inner decay of conviction and principle before there is an outward lapse from righteousness. Overt wrongdoing is the legitimate product of a lowered spiritual tone. When fellowship with God begins to be spasmodic and uncertain, then it is time to look out for wide departures from the requirements of the moral law.—Christian Advocate.

One thing in being happy is to train oneself to see the good things in life. There are some people who can see nothing but disagreeable things. To them no cloud ever has a lining of light. Instead of finding any of the smooth places in their pathway, they find only the hard, rough places. They magnify every little cloud into a thunderstorm. They forget all the joyful experiences of life in remembering the sad ones. Written indelibly on Memory's tablet are all of the heartaches of life, all the vanished joys and faded hopes. In living in the dead past they lose all the sunshine of the present.

We cannot learn the lesson of happiness without having Jesus in our hearts. When he is in our hearts, he will be in our lives. The world cannot give us peace. O how bitter are the joys of this world! Christ promises his followers peace, a peace and joy that the world can never give. This perfect peace we can never enjoy until we rest in him. It does not come to us by compromising with error or by seeking to please the world. His joy comes to his followers whenever they submit themselves completely to his will, confidently placing their hands in the Lord's, saying: "Lead me all the way." This is the happiness that the followers of Christ should have.

God made us to be happy, and fitted up this world for our enjoyment. There are far more sightly than unsightly objects. The fact is, there are in an ordinary life a thousand pleasant things—favors, joys, and comforts—to one unpleasant thing, one bit of unhappiness. Why should one great sorrow blight all the remainder of life that should be spent in happiness and in doing good? If we do not find happiness in life, it is because we turn the blessings of God into curses. Shall we nurse the few griefs of life, refusing to look up and let the beautiful sunshine in? God would not have it so. We should learn the lesson of finding the comfort and happiness of life, and not the misery and unrest.

It is not customary to think of happiness as a duty, yet it is the duty of every one to be happy. We ought to be happy not only in the bright days, but also in the dark days, if they come. The Bible abounds in exhortations to gladness. We are to live bright, cheerful lives. One of the fruits of the Spirit is joy. We are always to have a sunshiny nature. Our lives should be full of song, yet not all professed Christians are always happy. Happiness is one thing that has to be learned; it does not come naturally to any one. Happiness is more than natural cheerfulness. Christian joy is not set into our lives as we might hang a picture on the wall; it is something into which we must be trained, which comes to us through experience. The blessed Master invites us to come unto him and to learn of him. All the noble, good things in the Christian life must be learned. The highest culture and Christian refinement do not come to us without cultivation. We are told that even the blessed Master was made perfect through suffering. That grand man of God, the apostle Paul, informs us when old that he had learned in whatsoever state he was, therein to be content. Contentment had not come to him as a gift, but as a lesson. Even so every one must learn the lesson of beautiful living. We must learn to be happy, just as we learn to be patient, to be courteous and thoughtful.

Two people living in the same house, enjoying the same blessings, looking out at the same window on the same things, will see these things in such different ways that one is made unhappy, while the other is made to rejoice and praise God. A story has been told of two boys who each received an apple. Each apple was one-half rotten. One could not enjoy the good on account of the bad half, while the other scarcely thought of the bad, being so thankful for the good. Another story goes that a Christian woman moved into a new flat. It was not conspicuous for its cheerful surroundings. The average person would have found there a very commonplace shelter from the snows of winter and the rains of summer, but she was very happy in her home. One day a friend called and was asked to note the cheerful outlook from her window. "Yes," said the visitor, rather sarcastically, "I see a remarkably fine lot of chimneys." "Chimneys!" exclaimed the hostess. "Why, I never saw them before. I looked over the chimneys and saw those fine trees yonder, which form such a picturesque line on the horizon, and I thought only of the trees and the glorious sunsets." The hostess had learned one of the secrets of happiness. She had trained herself when looking out of her window to look beyond the dingy roofs, the black chimney tops, and the unsightly back buildings to the beautiful skies and golden sunsets. This habit made the whole world beautiful to her.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

We want new subscribers on our trial offer.

The Gospel Advocate from the time the subscription is received to the end of 1900 for 25 cents.

"Gospel Praise" is giving almost universal satisfaction. The more people examine it, the better they like it. If you want a good music book, you should by all means give this book a trial. It will please you.

The Gospel Advocate Publishing Company will accept my thanks for the sample copy of "Gospel Praise." It is the best new book I have seen for several years. The words are sound in thought and full of feeling; the tunes are well fitted to the words and easy to learn.—G. A. Kuykendall, Spencer, Tenn.

I have examined your new song book, "Gospel Praise," and regard it an excellent book. It has the best selection of songs, old and new, I have ever yet seen. The arrangement, or grouping, of hymns bearing upon the same subject is an admirable feature of the book. The mechanical execution is very good, and the price moderate. All in all, it is the book we need.—S. R. Logue.

Dear Brother Sewell: Accept thanks for a copy of "Gospel Praise." Acting upon the assumption that the sentiment of the songs is in harmony with the teachings of the word of God, and knowing you, one of the editors, as I do, I have gone through the entire book, giving special reference to the music, and will say that I am not only well pleased, but delighted, with the music. There are a good many grand old hymns that had been dropped from the "Christian Hymns," besides many excellent pieces new to me, in the book. I shall take pleasure in recommending its adoption by our congregation the next time we have to place an order for books.—W. J. Moss, Leiper's Fork, Tenn.

Some are wondering how we can afford to sell a number of our books at such a low price. While these are all first-class books and are in good condition, yet they have been on our shelves for a long time. These books are all printed from the plates, so that the second edition cost us less than the first edition. However, we are offering these books at a great sacrifice, much less than we could have sold the first edition without a great loss. As it is, we are just about getting cost of producing the books after the plates have been made. Plate making is the expensive part of book manufacturing. Still, we think it best to have them read by the people. We would also rather have cost on the books than to permit them to stay on our shelves. We need the money and room for other books. Quite a number have already taken advantage of this liberal offer. Order at once.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: You will no doubt be surprised to hear from me, but I write to ask you to please explain a few passages through the Gospel Advocate. These were given to me to explain by the Conner brethren, but I could not do it to my satisfaction. I was down to preach for them last Lord's day, and I find them to be good Christians, endeavoring to walk in the steps of Jesus Christ. The passages are these: 1 Cor. 5: 3-5; James 5: 14, 15; Isa. 53: 8.

Ocala, Fla.

EDWIN P. PITTMAN.

The first passage, 1 Cor. 5: 3-5, is the instruction Paul gives to the church at Corinth as to how they should deal with the man who had taken his father's wife. He told them that, though absent in body, his spirit was with them; and he judged the matter as though he was present, and commanded them "to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh [the fleshly rule], that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." This last clause is the one that gives trouble, I suppose. This is put in the place of withdrawing from him and refusing to acknowledge and associate with him as a brother until he realized the sinfulness of his course and repented. It is understood that the instruction given in 2 Cor. 2: 6, 7 refers to the restoration of the same person after he repented. You will find James 5: 14, 15 commented on elsewhere. "He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken." (Isa. 53: 8.) The prophet was telling how he would be condemned by his enemies and forsaken of his friends, and he asked, "Who shall declare his generation," or maintain his cause when thus forsaken? This question was asked to impress how forsaken he was and how seemingly hopeless the condition of his cause, yet God would be with him; and in verses 10, 11 he answers the question: "He [the Lord] shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities."

A brother asks for an explanation of 2 Pet. 2: 4: "For if God spared not angels when they sinned, but cast them down to hell, and committed them to pits of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment," (Revision.) Three words are translated "hell" in the Bible—"Hades," "Gehenna," and "Tartarus." "Hades" refers to the unseen state generally. This unseen state was supposed to contain two apartments, or conditions—the good and the bad. Paradise was supposed to represent the good state; Tartarus, the evil. The good spirits were supposed to go into paradise; the evil, into Tartarus to await the final sentence; then the good went to heaven; the evil, to hell—the final abode of the two classes. The word "Tartarus" is used in this passage in 2 Pet. This would indicate the fallen angels occupy the condition of the evil spirits until the final separation. Bloomfield says: "Tartarus being a part of Hades, in which criminals were supposed to be confined till the day of judgment. Now they are not represented as being in actual torments, but only adjudged to them, and in the meantime committed to the security of chains of darkness—i. e., to places where utter darkness holds them, as it were, enchained." The idea seems to be that some angels in heaven sinned. They were cast down from heaven to earth. (See Rev. 12.) They are as disembodied spirits in this world, which is the state of the dead. Many think these angels cast down from heaven constitute the demons of the time of Jesus. While adjudged unworthy of heaven and cast out into the outer darkness, they have not yet been assigned to the last final punishment of the wicked. At the judgment they will enter into the final state of woe. This accords with the language of the demons to Jesus: "Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" (Matt. 8: 29.) They knew the day of torment would be in the day of judgment; and when Jesus cast them out, they seemed to think he would torment them before that time. Jude (verse 6) states the same truth: "And angels which kept not their own principality, but left their proper habitation, he hath kept in everlasting bonds under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." (Revision.) Heaven was their own principality. They sinned, and did not keep it; so they are kept in bonds under darkness, the darkness of the unseen world, unto the last, final judgment, when they, with the spirits of the finally impenitent, will enter the final state of the lost. There was rebellion in heaven, as there now is on earth. The rebellion was suppressed. The devil and his angels were cast out. They came to earth, and will be cast out from it and find their home in the place prepared for the devil and his angels.

Brother Lipscomb: Please give us all the light you possibly can on Heb. 12, beginning with verse 22; also Ps. 87. We had that scripture read in our hearing on Sunday morning and commented on in support of instrumental music in the church. The preacher put great stress on the last verse of Ps. 87. He also made the statement that he had as much authority for instrumental music in the church as he had for baptism. Does "Zion" in the scripture referred to have reference to the church of Christ? We have a few sisters in the congregation that have the organ craze to such extent as to put one in the church without the voice of the congregation. Two-thirds or more of the financial support of the church is opposed to the organ. One elder says he is neutral; the balance of the officers are opposed to the organ. What course should we pursue to get the organ out of the church? If we cannot remove the organ, should we unite with another congregation?

Richardson, Tex.

G. W. ASHBY.

Your elder is mistaken. He is not neutral. "He that is not for me is against me." No man is neutral where a truth is involved. If he is not for the truth, he is against it. Every man that does not stand firmly for the truth is against that truth, and all these cowardly, noncommittal men end on the wrong side of every question involving truth. A man that is noncommittal on questions that involve any truth of God or the peace and harmony of the church is no scriptural elder. The preacher that could say there is as much authority for instrumental music in the church as for baptism shows he is both ignorant and lacking in principle. If there is as much authority for the one as the other, it is as great sin to worship without the one as it is to refuse to obey the command to do the other, and he sins every time he neglects it. He is ignorant of the order of God to make such a claim; for if he knows anything of the truth, he knows Christ and the apostles did not use instruments and they were not introduced into the church for nearly a thousand years after Christ, then first into the Catholic Churches against the protest of the more godly portion. It has been introduced into one after another of the denominations as they lost their fidelity and zeal for their principles. It was opposed by Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley, Clarke, Campbell, and all the leading and earnest reformers of the church. The talk is foolish and sinful. In Heb. 12 the church is called "Zion" because fleshly Israel, with its worship in Zion, was a type of spiritual Israel. Ps. 87 is a rhapsody of praise to Jerusalem as the head of the kingdom of Israel. The temple was set upon the mountain, and the Lord met them there and loved the gates of the entrance to his temple more than all the dwellings of Jacob elsewhere. This was spoken directly of literal Mount Zion and Jerusalem. These were earthly types of spiritual Israel, but this does not imply that all things that existed in fleshly Israel must exist in spiritual Israel. Many things in that service would be sinful now. Incense, the daily sacrifice of the lamb, polygamy, infant church membership, and circumcision were all recognized by God more fully than instrumental music was. If you will examine the accounts of the use of instrumental music in the Old Testament, you will find it is always referred to as commended and ordained by David in contrast with the things commanded by God through Moses. (See 1 Chron. 23: 5; 25: 1-6; 2 Chron. 23: 28; 29: 25-27; 35: 10; Neh. 12: 36; then Amos 6: 5.) David is condemned for introducing them. While God tolerated them, they are attributed to David in contrast with what God appointed. This much of the matter as it stands in the Common Version, but the Revision gives to Ps. 87: 7 an entirely different meaning. The Revision translates it: "They that sing as well as they that dance shall say, All my fountains are in thee." This doubtless is correct, and says nothing about instrumental music, but that the singers and dancers shall say: All the fountains whence flow blessings are in Zion. The Septuagint, the copy from which Jesus quoted, says nothing of instruments there. These far-fetched and strained constructions, as a rule, may be held as misleading. There is not a shadow of ground for the use of instrumental music in the churches of God. How shall they get rid of it? It is a betrayal of the sacred trust committed to the elders and the brethren to permit a number of the women to usurp the rule of the church and put it in. It is just as much a betrayal of the order of God for the women to rule the congregation and direct the church as it is to set aside baptism. The idea that this order of God can be neglected is ruinous to the church. The elders betrayed the trust committed to them in surrendering the rule to the women. The way to get right is to get up and confess your sin in surrendering this trust, and say the organ must not be used, and direct the worship as God directs the elders should do. If those who wish to use it desire to go elsewhere, they have the right to do so, with none to hinder or molest them; but they place themselves in rebellion against God in so doing.

A Lot of Weaklings.

If we are to believe the Universalist Leader, "the evangelical ministry," so-called, of the Pacific coast is made up of a lot of weaklings, timeservers, insincere in their profession, weak in their utterances, weak-kneed, and weak in faith. Seeking to account for the small number of Universalist churches in that section, it attributes it to the want of faithfulness on the part of the evangelical ministry, which preaches so much Universalism that the people do not feel the need of anything else more positive and aggressive. "It is the literal truth," says the Universalist Leader, "that if the Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist Churches in California would be perfectly frank and candid in proclaiming their doctrines, there would be a stampede from their pews, and many who are now endeavoring to live on half a loaf would establish altars from which the true bread of life would be dispensed." That is something for our California brethren to think about. If it is true that they have been and are remiss, it becomes a question whether they have been preaching Christ as a Savior from sin and death, or have been preaching the value of churches and social settlements for the protection of temporal interests. We hear loud complaints of the lack of cohesiveness and genuine Christian life among the churches of "the coast," and may not the lack be the result of an effort to increase church membership and pastoral support rather than the honor of Christ and the eternal salvation of the lost?—Journal and Messenger.

HOW NED BARRED OUT ALCOHOL.

In his own words this is how Ned kept out alcohol: "If you won't invite it in as a guest, I've heard Uncle Tom say, alcohol will try to sneak into your blood like a thief, so I've gone around and barred all the doors.

"First, I've ordered tobacco to keep out, because tobacco slips the door open for alcohol before you know it.

"Then I locked the cider door tight. It didn't look very dangerous, but a taste for alcohol will creep in through a cat-hole.

"I put a strong padlock on the pudding-sauce door, and when Aunt Marie told me that my plum pudding would taste flat without wine sauce, I told her I'd rather it should taste flat than that I should some day lie flat like a drunkard.

"I slammed the wine-drop candy door shut the first time the boy offered me some. I won't even let a drop in.

"I've got the treating door double locked and bolted already, if any one offers me beer or cordial, or even soda water or lemonade that has been 'doctored.'

"I've propped my pledge against all these doors, I've bolted them with prayers, and I believe Jesus will help me to keep alcohol forever out of my body."

HOW HE ROSE FROM THE RANKS.

"Ah, Mr. Chauncey M. Depew!" exclaimed Professor Morris, head of the Mechanical Department of Cornell University, as an unexpected visitor entered. "I'm very glad to see you, for I claim you as an old acquaintance."

"How's that?" asked Mr. Depew.

"I used to work for the New York Central Railroad," was the Professor's answer.

"Indeed! In what department?"

"O, just in the ranks."

"How did you get on there?" asked Depew.

"I was first a fireman on an engine. That was a tough job, but it led up to the position of engineer. I made up my mind to get an education. I studied at night and fitted myself for Union College, running all the time with my locomotive; I procured books and attended, as far as possible, the lectures and recitations; I kept up with my class; and on the day of graduation I left my locomotive, washed up, put on the gown and cap, delivered my thesis, and received my diploma; then I put the gown and cap in the closet, put on my working shirt, got on my engine, and made my usual run that day."

"Then," said Depew, "I knew how he became Professor Morris. It was simply by doing each duty faithfully as he came to it, and preparing for the next."—Selected.

AT THE TELEPHONE.

"Halloo! Central?"
 "What number, please?"
 "One thousand two hundred and sixty-four."
 "I don't catch that."
 "One thousand two hundred and sixty-four."
 "Try it once more, please."
 "Twelve hundred and sixty-four."
 "Seven hundred and sixty-four?"
 "No; twelve hundred and sixty-four—one thousand two hundred and sixty-four."
 "I can't give you two numbers at once. Which do you want first?"
 "I was giving you the same number two different ways."
 "A little louder, please. I can't quite make you out."
 "I said I was giving you the same number two different ways."
 "O, yes; well, what number do you want?"
 "Twelve hundred and sixty-four."
 "Suppose you give me each figure separately—as one, two, three, for instance."
 "All right. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve. Got that?"
 "Yes."
 "One, two, three, four, five, six. Got that?"
 "Yes."
 "One, two, three, four. Got that?"
 "Yes. You want twelve, six, four, do you?"

"Yes, twelve hundred and sixty-four. Do you understand now?"

"Yes, I understand. Twelve sixty-four is busy now. Ring off, please."—Epworth Herald.

HOW SELF WAS BLOWN AWAY.

"I'm tired of everything, mamma. Do tell me what to do," said Beth Lincoln, coming into the room where her mother was sitting.

"Why not play basket ball with me?"

"With you, mamma? I didn't know you could play basket ball."

"Why not? I have balls in the basket, and I am going to weave the yarn in and out over this ball," said Mrs. Lincoln, smiling, and holding up a wooden ball, over which she stretched the heel of Madge's little stocking.

"O, that kind? I don't call that play," said Beth.

"You and your friend, Nellie, had a nice time yesterday playing you were a sewing society; and why may I not play that my real work is play—basket ball, for instance? I will toss a ball to you."

Beth caught the ball and said, as she came close to her mother: "But, mamma, without joking, what can I do? I am tired of everything and everybody. Please tell me what I can do."

"Is my daughter really tired of herself?" asked Mrs. Lincoln, with a slight emphasis on "herself."

"Why, yes. Didn't I say so, mamma?"

"How would it do to stop trying to please self, of which you are so tired?"

"Mamma, what do you mean?"

Just then dear little Madge came toddling into the room, and said, wistfully: "I haven't any one to play with."

Mrs. Lincoln gave Beth a meaning look, and said: "How would it do for my big girl to get away from self and amuse my little girl?"

Mrs. Lincoln was called from the room, and she found two happy children when she returned half an hour later. What were they doing? Beth was blowing soap bubbles, and Madge was trying to catch them. Mrs. Lincoln stood a moment in silence, thinking: "What a beautiful picture!"

Beth looked up and saw her mother, and said: "Aren't the bubbles beautiful, mamma, and isn't Madge a dear?"

"I have two dears now; but what has become of that tired self?"

"Blown away, mamma, with the bubbles," laughed Beth.—Selected.

THE ART OF PLEASING.

Once upon a time a certain continental town was in an uproar as to the watering of the streets, one-half the town insisting that the streets should be watered every day, and the other half being just as determined that they should not be watered. The mayor graciously settled the difficulty by ordering the water carts to parade the streets, but to carry no water with them; thus did he try to please both sides.

There are few men so wonderfully gifted as that mayor; few can please everybody. You meet with one here and there who has everybody's good word; and very likely, when you do meet them, you do not envy them; for one gets sick of good words when there are so many of them, and really appreciates a good, hearty kick now and then. Every man needs kicks as well as half-pence; they give "tone" to the system; but of course the man who "gets more kicks than half-pence" is to be pitied indeed.

Then there are those who go in for pleasing the majority. And, by the way, majorities are terrible things—always the more terrible the bigger they are; and the most to be feared, as far as you are concerned, when you are one of them. "There is nothing more odious than the majority; it consists of a few powerful men to lead the way, of accommodating rascals and submissive weaklings, and of a mass of men who trot after them without in the least knowing their own mind." Always dread a majority, if you are on its side; shun it as you would the plague, for you will be in peril of losing your independence, your manhood. Majorities are generally tyrannical and often wrong.

But now here is the chief thing, "the greatest happiness of the greatest number;" and there can be no doubt that the greatest number is Number One. If, therefore, I can only please myself, I shall do well. Why should not every one take that good old advice:

"Never retract, never explain; get it done, and let them howl?" It is a grand thing, when once a man is persuaded that he is right, to go straight ahead, heedless of the world's applause or blame. There is no more exhilarating spectacle than to see a man stalking forward on his own feet, regardless of everything, when he knows he is right. That is the man to whom the world belongs. Whether or not he has a roof over his head or a coat to his back, that is of little moment; he owns the planet, and with good claim, too.

How passing strange it is that, from the beginning of our human story, the real man has been crowned with thorns, spit upon, and crucified! There is such a thing as the everlasting crucifixion of the Christ. The Christ in man, all that is worthiest and greatest in humanity, has from the first been despised and rejected. Indeed, "it does not seem within the reach of human possibility that any man who gives himself to the work of regenerating his country or his class should come to any but a tragic ending." This is what makes the study of the evolution of humanity so unutterably saddening. The world has ever "made a point of killing or otherwise persecuting all those who first try to get it to move on; and then when it has moved a step farther, it foolishly confers post-mortem deification on its victims." One out of the thousand rejected was Rembrandt, who at the age of fifty-eight was declared bankrupt, and had to begin life anew. He died at sixty-two, leaving, as the fruits of his life work, his clothes and the tools of his trade. "He was not a timeserver, and his generation could not forgive him. The greater his art became, the less the people liked it. Their own stupid faces, and not the loveliness of the painter's harmonies, they wanted to see on the canvas for which they paid."

Such is the sad tale, repeated with sickening iteration—Mozart, Savonarola, Dante, Paul, Christ—rejection without end. Heaven's anointed is earth's rejected in faith, music, art, and morals. So much for popularity, of which in these times we are in mortal peril. It may be well to remember that success at its greatest is generally unpopularity.

The world is well lost when the world is wrong,
 No matter how men deride you;
 For if you are patient and firm and strong,
 You will find in time, though the time be long,
 That the world wheels round beside you.

If you dare to sail o'er a new-thought track,
 For a while it will scourge and score you;
 Then, coming abreast with a skillful tack,
 It will clasp your hand and slap your back,
 And vow it was there before you.

That is the world all over—the coward, selfish, blind-headed world. But never you mind the world; "get it done, and let them howl," for perhaps their howling is of more value than their hurrahs. Please yourself, and you will make sure that somebody is pleased—aye, and the chief body, too.

The most detestable thing on the face of the earth is the disagreeable man, who pleases neither himself nor anybody else, and who simply glories in being disagreeable, eaten up with irredeemable sourness, the pockmark on the face of life. The man who is hard to please and the man who does not care to please are two most pitiful fellows indeed.

Let each man be ready and willing to put himself out of his way to please others—that is to say, let him be prepared to forego his little dainties of ease and selfish luxuries for the sake of others; let him be willing to go out of his way to do a good turn to any living thing. But there is one way no man must ever go out of to please anybody, and that is the way of honor, self-respect, righteousness. No one is ever called to forsake that way to help or please a single living soul. If you cannot please your neighbor and retain your self-respect at the same time, then never hesitate about it; let your neighbor go, and keep your self-respect, because that is of more value to you and to the world than many neighbors. You can afford to lose a neighbor or two, for there are plenty more waiting to be your neighbor if you are a true man; but you cannot afford to lose your self-respect, your soul of honor, for it is all you have that is of any account.

This above all, to thine own self be true,
 And it must follow, as the night the day,
 Thou canst not then be false to any man.

EXTREMES IN RELIGION.

The human race seems prone to extremes, and to extremes they will go. On all subjects extremes are found. On the matter of the Holy Spirit there are many extremes. On the one hand, the claim is made that nothing but an abstract, immediate operation of the Spirit can convict and convert the soul. Hence some are always praying for this direct power of the Spirit of God to be poured out upon sinners to convert them; and although Jesus said of the Spirit, "Whom the world cannot receive," yet men are continually praying for God to do what Jesus said could not be done. Wherever this is relied upon, the gospel as preached by the apostles, and which is said to be "the power of God unto salvation," is utterly ignored as the means of converting sinners. The preaching of the gospel as recorded in the New Testament is derisively spoken of as "the mere word of God," as "a dead letter," and such like expressions, not realizing that the preaching of the apostles was in the very words of the Holy Spirit. In the last address of Jesus to the apostles he bade them tarry at Jerusalem till they should be endued with power from on high; and when this endowment came, which was the Holy Spirit, as recorded in Acts 2, it is said: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Thus the Spirit of God gave utterance to, and was the author of, the words spoken by the apostles; and it is the next thing to blasphemy to call the words of the Holy Spirit "the mere word of God," "a dead letter." It would be hard to tell which of these extremes is the worst. Both of them will bring ruin to those that rely upon them.

The words of the Holy Spirit, as spoken through the apostles and recorded in the New Testament, is God's power to convert and save souls. Hence Jesus said, "Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"—that is, he that believeth the gospel as preached by the apostles. No other gospel will do. If even an angel from heaven should preach any other gospel than that preached by the apostles, he is to be "accursed," as the inspired apostle Paul says. No other gospel comes from God than that preached by the Holy Spirit through the apostles of Christ. Any perversion of that gospel, therefore, will be ruinous to all that have anything to do with it. To preach the abstract work of the Holy Spirit is another gospel, is an awful perversion of the gospel of Christ, and turns the people away from that which is God's only power to save; and to say that the New Testament is "the mere word" or that it is "a dead letter" robs the word of all its power among those that accept it. All who accept the gospel as preached by the Holy Spirit through the apostles as recorded in the New Testament are certain of salvation. Every man that believes and obeys the gospel as thus recorded is converted and led by the Holy Spirit; none others are. Let none, therefore, become alarmed at one of these extremes and run to another. Both are ruinous.

There are also many extremes on the ordinance of baptism—as to its design, its action, and its subject. One extreme on the design of baptism is that it really has no design; that it is simply a nonessential; that souls can be saved as well without it as with it. This idea is ruinous, in that it dishonors one of God's positive commands. Every one that knows anything of the New Testament knows that God commands people to be baptized; therefore to make this a nonessential is to set aside God's authority and set up in its stead the authority, the wisdom, the opinions of uninspired men. Then others have become alarmed at this extreme, and have run to other extremes about as bad. One of these extremes is in regard to infant baptism, the idea that baptism will bring remission of sins without faith, without repentance, without any knowledge of salvation in any sense. Both these extremes are also ruinous, since in both of them the word and authority of God are set at naught, while the doctrines and commandments of men take their places. Then another extreme comes in when men take the position, as many do, that unless the sinner realizes that baptism is for the remission of sins and is baptized with that intent he is not baptized at all; and the wonder to me is that these men do not also claim that faith is vain unless a man realizes when he believes that faith is for the remission of sins and believes with that purpose that his faith is for that special end, and that repentance is vain unless done in special view of the fact that repentance is for remission of sins. Both faith and repentance are as much for remission of sins as baptism. Why should they single baptism out as being for remission and say nothing about faith and repentance, when both the others are as necessary for salvation as baptism? The truth of the matter is that, in regard to both repentance and baptism, the expression, "for the remission of sins," is only a promise of what the Lord will do in the case of those who obey these commands. God, and he only, can forgive sins, and he promises the believer to do this when he repents and is baptized. What God promises to do is no part of man's duty. It is something he cannot obey, however much he may try. The promise, "for the remission of sins," simply tells believers what God will do for them when they obey the preceding commands, and in it they have the fullest assurance that God will do his part when they do theirs. They should do these things for the sake of obeying God and for the sake of entering into a relationship in which pardon is promised.

By baptism, preceded by faith and repentance, we enter into Christ. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Making this promise a part of the command to the sinner makes him associate pardon so thoroughly with his own act and as a part of his own act that he scarcely thinks of God and of his pardoning love. It is to exalt what man does above what God does, and makes man feel as if he had purchased his own salvation by what he does. Man can obey, but God only can pardon, and he pardons only those who do obey. Obedience to the commands of God is the thing to urge upon the sinner; especially should we emphasize what God promises to do when man obeys. To say that the sinner must realize in his baptism that it is for the remission of sins and must have that view of it when baptized is a creed, and a very dangerous one. Let us urge the sinner's duty upon him, reiterate God's promise to the obedient, and let each one fill its own place. Then sinners will be saved, and God will be honored in their salvation.

There are also many extremes in the matter of teaching the word of the Lord. On the one hand, the people have formed the habit of organizing Sunday schools, often calling them "Sabbath schools." These are separate organizations from the church, having an unscriptural name as well as an unscriptural organization; and it has been the case in many instances that these unscriptural organizations have side tracked the churches where they existed, and have done a world of mischief. The purpose they had in view at the outset was a good one—that of teaching the word of God to the young; but they went into rebellion when they organized a Sabbath school, or Sunday school. Then some became alarmed at this departure, and have gone to such an extreme the other way as to condemn all sorts of efforts on the part of Christians to get the young together, classify them according to capacity, and then teach them the word of God. They also repudiate all sorts of helps to the study of the Scriptures prepared for the purpose. Now if God had laid down any particular method of teaching his word, then it would be binding upon all to conform to that method; but the truth of the matter is that God has given his word to his people and required them to teach it to others, and has not said whether it shall be done in classes, to individuals, or to all who are assembled at once. The Lord's people are required to be instant in season and out of season in teaching and impressing the word of the Lord, and this involves the first day of the week and any other time that we can have access to the people and have the opportunity to teach them the way of salvation and lead them to the Lamb of God.

If Christians, therefore, will avoid all these extremes and teach and impress the word of the Lord as the disciples of Christ and as opportunity affords, the people will learn the way of salvation, and immense good will be the result; but if we run to extremes and devise rules where the Lord has made no rules, confusion and hindrance to the work will be the result. Christians do not need any more organizations of Sunday schools, or anything else, to enable them to teach God's word to the people. Let them as Christians utilize such opportunities as they have to teach the people, and God will be honored, people saved, and the church edified. It is quite as dangerous for men to enact laws where God has enacted none as it is for them to disobey those laws he has enacted. When the Pharisees enacted the washing of hands and cups and such like into a law and made a new law in regard to children obeying, honoring their parents, Jesus told them that their worship was vain, and that they were making void the word of God by their traditions.

The way of right is never extreme, but any departure from the right is an extreme that ought to be avoided by all who wish to honor the Lord. The plain truth of God's word is so hindered by extremes of one sort and another that it does not have half the power and influence it ought to have upon the hearts and lives of men. The truth is so often blighted and hindered by extremes that all should be constantly looking out for them and studiously and prayerfully avoid them and adhere only to the plain truth of the Lord's word as it stands on record. E. G. S.

Discipleship to Christ is not a long labor, or a long pathway, at the end of which we secure a reward in payment for what we have done. It is a life which has its inheritance, as its birthright, at the outset, and moves forward in the conscious possession of it. —Timothy Dwight.

AN EXCELLENT BOOK.

The little volume, "The Relations of God to the World," we especially commend to our studious and thoughtful readers. It is an effort to show there is nothing in the workings or phenomena of nature to preclude or antagonize the idea of revelation or the great facts presented in the Bible. It discusses these questions under three heads: (1) "Immanency;" or, the evidence of the presence of God in all works of the material world, or that spirit precedes and regulates matter. (2) "Intervention;" or, miracle; for the ruling power to intervene in the established order of the material world is miracle. Hence, whenever there is the introduction of a new species or any interference with the established order, there is miracle. If science is at all reliable, this has occurred frequently, and on extensive scales, in reaching the present condition of the material world. Hence, science proclaims the working of miracle as fully as the Bible does. (3) "Incarnation;" or, God in the flesh or the person of Jesus the Christ. The author says: "The person of Jesus presents the most difficult problem in all the range of human thought in the fact that he was, in some way, both human and divine in his being." After discussing the question as it relates to the lives of the material universe, he says: "There are no more nor greater difficulties environing the incarnation of the divine Logos than there are that beset the creation of matter and all that has grown out of it."

The Bible and science have hitherto been arrayed against each other. This is because the Bible statements have been misunderstood and the science of the material universe has been imperfect and faulty. The statements of the Bible on the subject of creation have been interpreted in the light of theories of creation prevailing, and have been misconstrued.

Whatever is true in the one must harmonize with what of truth there is in the other. The Bible is the foster mother of science and of all truth. True science is the child and handmaid of the Bible, and does at once elucidate and confirm all the statements of the Bible. It elucidates the statements of the Bible in practically demonstrating what the Bible says and in correcting prevailing misconceptions of these statements of the Bible. When both the Bible and science are properly understood, it will be seen that the Bible so anticipated the discoveries of science that only infinite wisdom could have dictated them.

This work is to show there is nothing in nature to contradict, but rather to confirm, the statements of the Bible in its fundamental and leading facts. These questions ought to be studied in the interests both of science and the Bible. While it will require some thought and study to take in the reasoning of this book and to understand some technical words and phrases, those who give the time and thought will be amply repaid for both. We hope the book will be read and studied by many. D. L.

BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.

"The Gospel Advocate says: 'Baptists pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit.' We cannot say what some Baptists do, for some of them act strangely, but we respectfully inform the Advocate that many Baptists do nothing of the kind. We believe the baptism of the Holy Spirit ended with the apostles. Christians to-day have the Spirit to renew, guide, and sanctify them, but that is a very different thing from the baptism of the Spirit, which was always accompanied by miracle-working power." (Western Recorder.)

We gladly give the Western Recorder credit for stating the truth on this subject. Because many disciples maintained this truth they were charged by many Baptists and others with denying the work of the Spirit. The Baptist and Reflector now charges them with denying the witness of the Spirit because they deny there is a miraculous manifestation of the Spirit to testify a person is accepted by God as his child. It also misrepresents them in saying there is an utter absence of emotion in their religion. He never knew or heard of a disciple in his life that ignored or believed that acceptable faith or hope or a Christian life could be lived without deep emotion. A man that could so believe is ignorant of both human nature and the teaching of the Bible. Many disciples do deny that mere emotion of the feelings that do not spring from an understanding of, and obedience to, the will of God is or can be an evidence of forgiveness of sins or of the presence of the Spirit of God; but they do not believe a man can be a Christian without having his whole emotional nature stirred and regulated by the will of God. I am not sure the Recorder sees the full truth as to the manner of the Spirit's guidance, but it has taken a step in the right direction that we commend to Dr. Lofton and Editor Folk. I doubt if either of them will indorse the Recorder on the above. D. L.

MEETING AT FLYNN'S LICK, TENN.

The meeting at Flynn's Lick began on the last Lord's day in August and closed on the first Lord's day night in September, continuing eight days and eight nights. Three persons were baptized during the meeting and two reclaimed. The congregation has not been established there very long; but they seem to be very deeply in earnest. They use a house that was built for a meetinghouse and schoolhouse combined, and is used by different religious people; but the brethren expect to build a house before a great while. We had large attendance and splendid attention throughout the meeting, and apparently much good was done beyond the immediate results. The brethren meet every Lord's day, and turnout well. This is the way to strengthen their own lives and to win their neighbors and friends, and thus enlarge the number of the saved. It takes earnestness and faithfulness on the part of Christians to increase the number of the called out ones. I do not remember to have seen more earnest attention to the word of the Lord than was given in that meeting, and I hope the brethren will be instrumental in saving many souls in the regions round about them. E. G. S.

Did You Tell the Devil?

In all wars of all nations there have been great leaders on both sides, and one of the strongest points of all great generals has been to keep all operations secret from the enemy until the advantage was gained. If the enemy knows where the weakest point is when he lays siege to a town, he will assail that point. Again, all enemies are very careful to draw out from the unsuspecting one all the knowledge they can of the power of the other side. When a soldier under one command spends much of his time in informing the enemy of the weakness of his own commander, it not only gives the enemy advantage in knowing these things, but it also makes him suspicious of the informer, knowing he is not true to his own side, else he would never give the enemy information of the weak place among his own comrades.

Such being true, how many of us prove traitors to the Master's cause by giving out to the world our own mistakes and the mistakes of our brethren to inform the enemy so he can attack him there! I have known some grand meetings ruined just because we revealed our plans of operation to some enemy, and he erected his battery and occupied the ground when we laid siege to the city. I have known many men, and preachers in particular, when making mistakes, to be talked about publicly before the enemy by their own brethren; and these mistakes, when repainted by the enemy in glowing colors, would look much worse than even the informer intended them to be understood. Again, I find many jealous preachers who preach much on "preacher-anity," often publicly condemning the method or way their brethren preach. This is always gladly taken by the enemy to hurt the influence of the other brother. Preachers, like all other men, make mistakes and often do wrong; and many members, when they hear of said wrong, notwithstanding said preacher may have done all in his power to correct the wrong, instead of keeping silent and praying for said preacher, at once feel called upon to run to the enemy with their information and set the devils to working far and near to do him all the harm they can. So, brother, when you start to talk about a brother or some poor sister, do you ever think what you are about to say is for their good, or is it to inform the devil of their weak point to give him the advantage in the day of battle? I readily confess I have made many sad mistakes along that line in giving the devil information about my brothers and sisters that not only had a tendency to weaken them in the conflict, but also to arouse the devil in them; and they could readily tell of all the mistakes and failures I had ever made, and in so doing our influence for good has been weakened.

We frequently strengthen the devil's ranks and weaken our influence for good in giving out information that does not elevate, or build up the informer, neither the one concerning whom the information is given. I know I have done much harm and many wrongs along that line; and as I grow older, I am continually struggling harder to be careful what I say and not inform the devil of my brother's weak points for fear he may do him harm in the day of battle.

All men have an influence; and if it is for good, notwithstanding we may think the man is not good, we should not try to injure his influence for good, as said influence may lead some man to the city of our God. Let us learn to speak kindly of all, exercise patience for our brother's weakness, pray for his success, and not try to inform the devil of all his weak points, but keep our hearts with all diligence and be careful when we are talking to the devil's friends. J. D. TANT.

Joint Heirs with Christ.

The declaration in Rom. 8: 17 that we are heirs of God is most wonderful; but when the apostle adds, "joint heirs with Christ," we stop and ask: What does he mean? What can he mean? Christ is God's eternal Son, "the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," "whom he hath appointed heir of all things." (Heb. 1: 2, 3.) Our Savior himself said: "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." (John 3: 35.) Again he said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." (Matt. 28: 18.) In the parable recorded in Matt. 21: 33-41 he represents himself as "the heir"—not one of many, but the only one; and now, after all these statements of the necessary relation of Christ to the Father, we are asked to believe that we, sinners redeemed by the sufferings and death of this heir of all things, are exalted to an equality with him, and that we are united with him in his inheritance of power and glory. The statement of Paul is indorsed by what John heard on Patmos: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3: 21.) Yes, Christ is enthroned with the Father, and we, if faithful unto death, will reign with them in glory.

Estates on the earth are divided among the heirs. The more numerous they are, the less is the portion of each, and hence they are tempted to mutual envy and to try to minify each other's claims; but in the inheritance that Paul refers to there is union, and not division. The power and glory of the eternal Son cannot be limited or minified. They must be as vast as the universe and as enduring as the eternity of his being. How amazing the thought of being joined with him in such an inheritance! There is only one earthly illustration that can help us to understand it. When a prince royal marries, his bride becomes his joint heir to the kingdom; when he is crowned as king, she is crowned as queen. The kingdom is not divided between. They enjoy together, as two in one, the royal palaces. She sits down with him on his throne. The bride may not be an heiress in her own right. She may be of lowly birth, like the bride in Canticles (see chapter 1: 6), but the choice of the prince exalts her to the throne.

This illustration the Holy Spirit uses in Rev. 19: 7, 8. We will be welcomed to our heavenly inheritance because of our union with Christ. We give him our hearts, and he makes us sit down with him on his throne. Yes, it is love that solves this mystery. From those whom we truly love we can withhold nothing. We must share with them all that we have. The bridegroom, in the Episcopal service, says: "With all my worldly goods I thee endow." The glorified Lamb, in the midst of the throne, says: "All my power and glory I must share with you, because you are mine. I have chosen you. I have died for you."

How the study of this inspired statement ought to quicken our love for Christ and our faith in Christ! If all things are ours because we are his (see 1 Cor. 3: 21-23), then it should be the great object of our thoughts, of our efforts, and of our prayers, to perfect our union with Christ; and we should rejoice in suffering for him, "that we may be also glorified together." GOD'S PROVIDENCE.

"Another evidence of divine favor resting upon our Baptist missions is found in the fact that, thus far, no one of our missionaries has been killed, and none has been in imminent peril of life, though others have suffered many things, some even death. It is reported, and accepted as true, that several Presbyterian missionaries, besides at least three of the American Board (Congregational), have suffered death at Pao-tung-fu, a station about a hundred miles from Peking. Others have been obliged to flee for their lives, leaving everything behind them, and escaping only amid the greatest dangers."

This is from the Journal and Messenger, the Baptist paper published in Cincinnati. God's dealing with his people and the nations of the earth is an interesting question for study. The assumption in the extract is that the escape of a missionary in China is a work of divine favor. This means, then, the death of one is a mark of his displeasure, and hence the persecution that comes upon the missionaries is a mark of God's displeasure upon them all. This must be true if the principle laid down in the extract be true. But do the dealings of God with his people as set forth in the Scriptures of both the Old and New Testaments justify this conclusion? Did the death of Stephen as the first martyr indicate God's displeasure toward him? Did the death of the apostle James and the escape of the other apostles show the favor of God toward them above James and Stephen, or did the persecutions that came upon the apostles show God's displeasure toward them? I heartily maintain that all the sufferings, afflictions, and trials that come upon the people of God, if received in the right spirit, will bring good to them, will lead them through a discipline that will fit them for richer blessings from God, and that he will bless according to the fitness to receive and use the blessings. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." (Heb. 12: 6.) "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come." (Isa. 57: 1.) In the light of the teaching of the Bible, we cannot say because a man is slain or suffers he is under the displeasure of the Lord or because one escapes he enjoys the favor of the Lord. What comes upon a true servant of God is best for him in his circumstances; and if he receives it as a child should receive the discipline of a loving Father, it will bring the greatest good he is capable of receiving.

Another question comes up in these times of trouble: Is it right for a missionary to escape punishment or save his life by flight? Going to the Scriptures for instruction, we find Paul was let down in a basket from the walls of Damascus and escaped the fury of his persecutors. Again, Jesus told his apostles: "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." (Matt. 10: 23.) Yet Paul, when warned by the Holy Spirit that bonds and afflictions awaited him at Jerusalem, said: "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 21: 13.) Exactly what rule prompted Jesus, Paul, and the apostles sometimes to avoid the persecution of their enemies and at others to face and bear it unto death it is difficult to determine. The Holy Spirit directly guided them, but the rule on which he acted is not sufficiently clear to enable us to lay down a rule to guide us at all times. It seems not according to the spirit of Christ for missionaries to leave their native converts to suffer persecution and death without the exhortation and companionship of their teachers.

In China and such places I think these heathen refuse to hear the truth, and God stirs them up, as he did Pharaoh and other wicked people, to wickedness that will bring on war; and though the missionaries now suffer, and even die, the result will be that China will be opened to civilizing influences and to the preaching of the gospel as it never has been before. Whether that gospel will lift them up or result in their deeper degradation and enslavement and final destruction depends entirely on whether they receive or reject that gospel. "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish." (Isa. 60: 12.) Their opposition now leads them into a war that will bring the gospel more directly and fully before them. If they then reject that gospel, they will perish. This is sure as to the effect on them; but this does not mean that the nations who make the war that results in opening China to the gospel are approved of God. God frequently uses the wicked to open the way for his children to enter in and do his work. The wicked are the sword of the Lord, and he uses one wicked nation to overthrow another or open it to gospel influences, and he frequently overrules the lust of conquest and the greed of gain to open the way for the entrance of the child of God with the gospel that saves.

Then, again, the influence of this persecution will bear good to every child of God who accepts the persecution as discipline from the Lord and in the true spirit of a child of God. The missionary that asks his home government to avenge the wrongs he suffers has not learned the most prominent truth taught by Christ. The spirit of Christ was to return good for evil; and while enduring the sufferings of the cross, he prayed: "Forgive them; for they know not what they do."

It is said the missionaries sometimes used the authority of their government to wrong the heathen; sometimes they used their position to stir up dissatisfaction against the government and rulers. This was all contrary to the spirit of Christ and the apostles as manifested both in their precepts and examples. These sufferings ought to teach the lesson of nonreliance upon, noninterference with, the political authorities. The Christian religion will change and mollify these governments as it permeates the masses; but it should come as the indirect influence of the religion of Christ on the people, not as the result of the servants of God teaching politics.

To those who accept these evils in a proper spirit it will teach a firmer reliance upon God. It will drive all influenced by the gospel into a closer union with God and with one another and purge out the evil and purify the religion of Christ. The same affliction that punishes the enemies purifies and blesses the children of God. Sometimes the martyrdom of the child of God is needed to properly impress the religion of Christ. When this is true, God brings about that martyrdom as he did the death of his Son. As he chose his best beloved then to shed his blood at once to open the way for man and to lead him to turn and come to him, so now he may choose the best beloved to martyrdom, that as the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church, the best seed may be sown in these heathen lands. The man that endures martyrdom for the sake of Christ will, with him, wear the brighter crown in the home of God. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

It is well to study all these questions in the light of Bible teaching and learn the true lessons of God's dealings with both his own children and those of the world. God's infinite wisdom and unerring hand guide the affairs of the universe so that the greatest good is brought to his faithful servants and destruction to his obdurate enemies. "All things work together for good to them that love God." D. L.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

This is the season of the year that preachers in the South usually have more calls to hold meetings than they can fill. Throughout the winter and spring the evangelist usually has no meetings to hold. If he has any meetings to conduct, they are in the cities. Those who devote their time to evangelizing should be able to labor in meetings the year round. There is no good reason why they should work about one-third of the year and starve the remaining two-thirds. The man engaged in the glorious work of preaching the gospel has no time to spend in idleness. Souls are too precious, life is too uncertain, and death is too sure. People are dying out of Christ during all seasons of the year. During the winter months they have no guarantee that their lives will be spared until the summer rolls round.

In view of these facts, the sinner should be encouraged to obey the gospel at all times and wherever he may be. A Christian should be ready to preach the gospel to sinners on the streets, in the stores, in the shops, or wherever they may be. He should be able to tell the sinner what to do to be saved, to warn him to flee the wrath to come. In the days of the early Christians they did not wait for a crowd to gather in a meetinghouse or anywhere else, but they taught the word of God to all who would receive it, wherever they found them. So soon as Andrew found the Lord, he straightway went for Simon Peter, his brother, and led him to Jesus. Also "Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." Jesus appeared to Saul as he journeyed to Damascus, and said to him: "But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." (Acts 26: 16-18.) "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." (Acts 8: 4, 5.) "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." (Acts 8: 35.) Paul and Silas preached Jesus to the Philippian jailer and his household. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." (Acts 16: 32.) Aquila and Priscilla expounded unto Apollos the way of God more perfectly. Thus it will be seen that the apostles preached the gospel to single individuals wherever they found them. While they also preached to crowds in the synagogue, in the market place, and in the cities, still whenever and wherever they found an individual whom they could influence to come to Christ, they did so gladly and without waiting to get a large crowd together. We must reach the aggregate by reaching the individuals. It is not in harmony with the spirit and genius of the Christian religion to wait to collect a crowd before we preach the gospel. Since the Holy Spirit has come and guided the apostles into all truth, there is no command to wait, but to go—go to "every creature," go to "all the world." In the parable of the great supper we have the same thought: "And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." (Luke 14: 23.)

The church will never accomplish its work so long as its members wait to collect large crowds together. At all times, and under unfavorable as well as favorable conditions, every Christian should be ready to go out into the highways and the hedges and make known to single individuals the plan of salvation. Jesus taught some of the greatest truths he ever announced to the world to single individuals. Individual effort and consecration are needed far more than money in the conversion of the world.

If each member of the body of Christ would thus keep actively engaged, there would be a continual increase to the church the whole year round. Additions would be made steadily and constantly. The evangelist could labor with the church almost as advantageously in one season of the year as another. On reaching the church, he would not find it necessary to wear himself out trying to arouse the church to that spiritual condition in which God's people should be all the time. Every member would be ready to help him. All would be helps, and not weights, in carrying forward the work of the Lord.

The effort of the church should be constant, and not spasmodic. Too many churches do nothing, comparatively, throughout the year, and then expect to be revived during the protracted meeting. They grow very cold, but seem to imagine that the big evangelist will be a perfect cure for all their ills. None but the most talented preacher can hold them a meeting. The preacher comes; the church is so cold that it is impossible to keep warm spiritually in such a temperature; the meeting is a failure; the church grows from bad to worse; the members grow more indifferent, and seem to become more lifeless as the years pass by. Spasmodic effort and growth are never best. It is "the continual dropping that wears the stone." The light to be relied on is the one that burns steadily all the time.

We raise no objection to protracted effort, for Paul remained at Ephesus three years and at Corinth eighteen months; but we do insist that nearly all, if not all, the churches depend too much on protracted meetings. Our object is to rather encourage protracted effort by each individual Christian the whole year round from year to year as long as life lasts. Such effort is needed, and badly needed, among all the churches. J. C. McQUIDDY.

"What is your name?" "Billious Simpson, I suppose," said the boy. And the new teacher had to rap for order.—Selected.

The Modern Pastor System.

Much has already been said and much remains to be said if this subject is ever properly developed. As a slight digression, I will say that Brother David Lipscomb has some of the most timely and solid information on this subject in the Gospel Advocate of August 23, 1900, under the head, "Preaching and Teaching." But what does it matter what head it is under? It is the practical thought we want rather than the name. We will never get rid of the evils of the pastor system by refusing the word "pastor" and accepting the word "evangelist" or any other. It is the method of teaching that must be sought after, and the method of teaching can be accepted only when it gives satisfactory results.

The essence of the "modern pastor system" is that one man does all the teaching and public work, unless it be to lead the music. This evidently fails to give the result contemplated in the "apostolic pastor system"—that is, the edifying or building up of the body of Christ.

What would be thought of a teacher in a common school who would spend all his time with a reading class in reading for them and detailing to them the proper inflections and modulations of voice? What would be thought of a father on the farm who would spend all his time hoeing and showing his boys how to handle the hoe and never put them to trying to handle the hoe? Evidently he can hoe much better than the boys can, and so can the teacher read better than his pupils, but his aim should be to teach them to read. Nor will his teaching be considered a success, it matters not how fluently it may be executed, till they have learned to read. Just so with the churches. "When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again." (Heb. 5: 12.)

Most, if not all, of the writers who are assailing the "modern pastor system" are giving all their attention to the pastor, or preacher. When troubles are found to exist, it is very rare that the evil is all found with one party, or on one side. I have no defense to make for the pastor. He is evidently a failure in God's work. But suppose he be exchanged for two or three good elders who take his place and do all he is doing, how much better will matters be? The particular plan, or method, of teaching is not the aim or end in view, but the development of the body. So if we ever get good elders in most of our churches, it will have to be in the same way we get our pastors, by importing them. There is nothing at home to make them of, because there has been little or no development. It is a lamentable truth that one great reason the churches are no better developed is because they do not want to be. I have known some of these "pastors" to make efforts to build up the congregations they were preaching for; I have known them to try to talk brethren into leading in prayer, who would say it was the preacher's place to do the praying; I have known brethren to want the preacher to do all the public work till they could get started up a little better, and then insist there was no occasion for their reading or praying in public while there was some one there who could do it better. The great trouble is, they do not want to be trained to public work. No doubt pupils in a reading class would all rather hear the teacher read than to read any themselves. He can certainly read better. The "pastor system" now has such deep root in the minds of people generally that they do not want to be built up into self-sustaining bodies. They have been accustomed to hiring all the public work done till it seems to them that this is the full extent of their duty; they still prefer to pay a man to do the work rather than do any of it themselves. The thought rarely occurs that it is in order for any one to read in public or pray in public, unless he expects to become a preacher. This is the condition we have to face.

Our first work, then, in getting rid of the modern pastor system is to get the churches willing to be developed. Depend upon it, we will never have local elders who can teach and edify the members till there is a more healthful growth, unless we import them like we do the pastors. Of course there are exceptions, but I speak of churches in general. It is rash to talk about dispensing with all the preachers laboring with churches and depend on men who have never taught in public and are unwilling to do so. If we could get the membership to see to what extent they are depending on the preacher to study the Bible and tell it to them, the extent to which their faith is necessarily in the preacher instead of in the word of God, they could probably be aroused. When they can be made to take an interest in asking questions and studying the Bible to get the correct answers, they will be getting in a condition to do some work without a preacher. Our first work is to get the churches willing to work. Who can suggest the solution to the problem?

It is painful to see the lethargy in which so many churches are dragging along, while the few interested members are looking anxiously to the protracted meeting season to get the church stirred up.

Brethren, how can we induce these cold, indifferent, and worldly-minded Christians to go to work? It is a stupendous undertaking; but if it can be done, the pastor system will cease to trouble us. Let us work to that end.
Mineola, Tex. L. M. OWEN.

Fraternal Societies.

When we acquaint ourselves with the principles of Pythianism, Masonry, etc., through their external workings, and observe the friendly practices which engage these and similar societies, we can scarcely do otherwise than pronounce them "very good," as far as they go; yet because these do not extend beyond their membership, in view of the world's crying need for loyal brotherhood, the benevolent side of our nature must be touched with the sincere wish that not only these limited bodies of men might meet one another in considerate sympathy, but every single unit of the whole human race might similarly give and receive. All fraternal associations within their limits, then, can scarcely fall under condemnation; but the fact that they do erect limits to their benevolence is the important point.

To rightly discover the place of such societies it is scarcely out of order to consider for a moment the evolution of man as he struggles to free himself from the shackles of selfishness with which Nature, true to her first law of self-preservation, at birth encircles him. Enlarging his horizon by degrees, it is not long before he discovers the intimate connection between his own well-being and that of the members of his own house, parents, and closest relatives, whose cause he finds and makes his own. Every child of ordinary intelligence may arrive at this position coeval with the earliest germination of thought.

Now, what but a single step beyond this puerility is the association of a few choice spirits whose social and business interests may be identified with evident pleasure and profit? Surely man, as he wrestles toward the fight of perfect freedom and the land of Altruria, must realize his relation to or dependence upon every other man—past, present, and future.

Christianity alone implies, sustains, and establishes perfect human relationship—the law of love, both active and passive, in that it worketh no ill to its neighbor, but, even more, by the Golden Rule worketh kindness. It favors, accepts, or rejects the person of no one; it is for all, as Christ is all in all. Therefore, it is sufficient; nothing less is.

On the other hand, such organizations as simply promote the best interests of their own membership must perforce be exclusive, and, by their devotion to the interests of a few, tend to establish arbitrary metes and bounds to philanthropy and ignore the responsibility of all Christians to the whole world around them—each for each.

As with mercy, "the quality of" genuine charity "is not strained;" and, since the Father distributes his benefits impartially to the just and unjust, so we, endeavoring to follow in his footsteps, must likewise bestow all our gifts and abilities, as opportunity offers, without prejudice or policy.

There are organizations noticeably less popular than the class mentioned whose aims are to promote universal good along distinctive lines, whose existence may be defended on the ground that they utilize the best public sentiment for the blessing of mankind, since they enlist non-Christians to unite in practical benevolence. This seems perfectly legitimate, because we should not withhold our influence from any cause whose motive is no other than the uplifting of all humanity, nor scorn to avail ourselves of the assistance volunteered by any of God's creation in any good work, provided—of course—we may engage in it without alienation from what seems to be our chief God-given mission, or without dissipation of forces which are essential to its vitality.

In fine, whatever narrows benevolence or tends to fix limits to our social duties by emphasizing their activity toward only a favored, definite portion of mankind is certainly antagonistic to the cause of Christ, whose justice and love are equally boundless and free and who measures our treatment of him by our attitude toward the very least of these our brethren; hence, to be Godlike, a Christian cannot afford to stand upon any platform less broad than that of universal good will, and, in part, interpret the exhortation: Keep thyself "unspotted from the world" by holding aloof from all tendencies toward partyism,

ALABAMA.

Berry, September 3.—I closed a meeting, eight miles from this place, last night, with three baptisms at the water the same hour of the night. The total immediate results of the meeting were nineteen baptisms—four Methodists, four Missionary Baptists, and eleven sinners—and one reclaimed. P.

Mooreville, September 5.—After closing my meeting at Oneonto, Blount County, I went to Tillery, Cullman County, and began a meeting on the fourth Lord's day in August, preaching twice every week day and three times on Lord's day. The visible results were five persons added to the one body by obedience, the saints strengthened, and much prejudice removed. The brethren expressed their willingness to aid me in the work of an evangelist, and as soon as I move my family to Athens—on October 1, 1900—I will then be prepared to remain at work all the time in the Master's cause. There is much work needed in North Alabama, and there are so few who are willing to fellowship one in the work. My purpose is to preach the word, and when my brethren fail to fellowship me in the work, I am willing to do other work to support my family, and preach as I am able. I had much rather, though, remain at work preaching the word all the time. My next meeting will be in Lawrence County. JOHN HAYES.

ARKANSAS.

Center Point, August 29.—Our meeting at this place is like the old man's prayer: we cannot quit. Still they come. One dear old man, seventy-two years old, is now overanxious to redeem, or make up, lost time. I cannot tell when the meeting here will close. Storm and rain cannot stop it. Then let it go on. Pray for us, brethren. I have spent some weeks in South Arkansas, among the rocks and hills, with the common people, who are possessed with common sense—the best people and the best sense. I am sorry I have not kept the number baptized, but all seem to be satisfied with the results of this meeting. This leaves me at the home of Brother Floyd. I hope to meet Brother Spurlock here this evening. He will begin a meeting near here to-night. I will spend Lord's day with the brethren at Nashville, this county, and leave on Monday for Indian Territory. Remember that field, brethren, in your prayers and fellowship. R. W. OFFICER.

INDIANA.

Ellettsville, September 3.—At my last appointment at Belle Union I stayed with the church of Christ one week, preaching each night. We had one confession and baptism. W. M. DAVIS.

MISSISSIPPI.

Oakland, September 2.—Brother E. C. Fuqua spent about eight days in this (Yalobusha) county, beginning about August 1, and preached four days at Lawson Schoolhouse, near Oakland, a place where a few Methodists met occasionally to worship. All the Methodists were baptized by Brother Fuqua, except one, and it is said the one left is about convinced that there is nothing in Methodism that is pleasing to God. Brother Fuqua also held a few-days' meeting at Cypress Schoolhouse, near Coffeeville. One fine old gentleman, nearly seventy years of age, who had never belonged to any religious institution, was baptized. This old gentleman is the father of ten living children, several of them being members of the church of Christ. Some belong to the different sectarian bodies. What a consolation it would be to the Christian members of this family if all the members would be Christians, and Christians only! The mother of this family is a devoted and a most excellent old Christian lady. I hope and pray that the erring members of this good family may yet learn the way of the Lord more perfectly. On account of other engagements, but more especially on account of the illness of Sister Fuqua, Brother Fuqua had to leave us rather hurriedly. Sister Fuqua is now in Nashville, and we are glad to hear she is much improved in health. I pray God that this young and useful couple may always remain true to the Master's cause, and that they may be spared for many years of usefulness. A. T. PRITCHARD.

TENNESSEE.

Rucker, August 31.—Brother F. W. Smith held a meeting for us at Bellbuckle, beginning on the second Lord's day in August. Brother Smith was sick while with us, but preached day and night. He is a bold and correct proclaimer of the gospel. While there were no additions to the congregation during this meeting, I think it the most successful meeting I have attended in years. Brother Smith did as fine teaching as I ever heard. There is no organ, neither are there any societies, in our congregation, and I think our future is bright for good, ~~and~~ Christian work in a scriptural way. E. L. CAMBRON.

Jasper, August 30.—I began a meeting with the Berea congregation, in Warren County, on the first Lord's day in August and continued until Saturday night before the second Lord's day. The results were four additions to the one body. I then went to Salem congregation, same county, on the second Lord's day in August and continued preaching over the third Lord's day in August, with nine additions by primary obedience and one by letter. These were both good meetings, largely attended, and much good was done in sowing the good seed, removing prejudice, and encouraging the churches. E. H. BOYD.

Cottage Grove, August 28.—We have just closed our annual meeting with the church of God worshipping at Knob Creek. This congregation is an old one, located on the State line road, just two miles above Dukedom. This meeting lasted only eight days and eight nights. Brother Joseph Ratcliffe, of Bardwell, Ky., did most of the preaching. Brother Ratcliffe is a good, sound, gospel preacher and is satisfied with what is written, and does not desire to turn aside from the one body, but earnestly contends "for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." We baptized fifteen persons, ten others taking membership who had been scripturally baptized. The brethren were well pleased with this meeting, and the church in general seemed to be very much strengthened. A. O. COLLEY.

Oglesby, August 31.—Brother John E. Dunn, of Murfreesboro, began a meeting at Woodson's Chapel on the second Lord's day in August, closing on the night of August 22, 1900. While there was only one person who took a stand on the Lord's side, we think that much and lasting good was accomplished during the meeting. We have long since learned that it is not always the visible results that make a good meeting, but it is the soul-inspiring words of the Lord that cause a weak brother to do his duty more faithfully in the vineyard. As to Brother Dunn, we found him to be a bold and fearless defender of the truth, ever relying upon the word for the foundation of his arguments, seeking to become popular only with his Lord by declaring his "whole counsel." Our hearts' desire and prayer to God is that Brother Dunn may spend a long and useful life laboring for his Master. JAMES G. RAINS.

Bellbuckle, August 31.—On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday nights before the third Lord's day in August I preached at Morton's Gap, Ky., with no visible results, so far as confessions were concerned. I went from there to White Plains, Ky., seven miles distant, near which place I preached under an arbor for eight days and eight nights. There were four confessions, all of whom were baptized. This is a good field for a preacher who wants to do missionary work. Great numbers of the people have never heard the old gospel, but he who carries it must do so at other expense than theirs, for which cause many are sickly among us, and many sleep. I will begin a meeting near home on the first Lord's day in September in a schoolhouse, which I will report when closed. On the second Lord's day in September I will begin a meeting at Dilton, Rutherford County. F. F. DEARING.

TEXAS.

Berclair, September 2.—The meeting at Colony, Fayette County, began on Friday before the third Lord's day in August and continued over the fourth Lord's day in August. This made my fourth protracted meeting at Colony during the past four years. With the first of these meetings, in September, 1897, the little band began meeting regularly on the first day of the week. Soon after my second meeting, in 1898, the congregation built a neat house of worship. Again, within a few months of the third meeting, in 1899, the brethren and sisters, including two preachers, got very cross at each other, and this last effort was more to restore peace than to convert sinners. Brother W. T. Copeland, a young preacher of promise, assisted in the meeting throughout. We preached the word, reproved, rebuked, and exhorted, both privately and publicly, in an effort to help the church through her troubles. I think good was done and trust that the congregation may yet live and accomplish much good in the Master's name. G. W. BONHAM.

Argo, September 2.—I closed the meeting at Center Grove, Titus County (where we had eighty-one additions), and commenced a meeting on the next night at Cookville, on the Cotton Belt Railroad. The church of Christ at this place has a very good house of worship, but, on account of the excessively hot weather, it was thought best to build an arbor, which was located in the center of the town. This was a wise move, and gave satisfaction to everybody. The arbor was well seated and well lighted, and was a pleasant place to both preacher and audience, and there was room for the large night audiences. It is said we had the best attendance that has been given a Christian meeting in five years. Much good was done that was not directly visible. There were twenty-three additions to the church—thirteen persons baptized, six Baptists and immersed Methodists, and four restored. I am now at the little town of Argo, with good interest and one confession to date. I have had over one hundred and seventy additions in seven weeks, and have several more meetings to hold. When I reach the two hundred mark, I aim to take a furlough and go home to Dallas to see the folks. T. R. BURNETT.

Charleston, September 1.—On July 8 I started for Bowie County, and, after driving one hundred and thirty miles, arrived at the home of Brother J. W. Lollar, where I was to begin a meeting on the following night. The meeting continued eight days and eight nights, with four additions to the one body as the visible result. Brother Norman E. Hearn was with me and preached some fine sermons. I next started to Haganport, Franklin County, and, after a drive of about fifty miles, arrived safely at the above-named place, finding there two brethren and two sisters. I began by asking God to bless my efforts to teach those people the plain, simple gospel. This meeting lasted sixteen days. Forty-two persons were added to the body of Christ, and the brethren near Eureka were stirred up to a sense of their duty and are now keeping house for the Lord. From there I went to (or near) New Boston, Bowie County, for a few-days' meeting. There I found the brethren going off after the doctrines of men. I preached for them seven times and persuaded them to quit all their ungodliness and worship God in his own appointed way. One noble soul confessed Christ and was baptized. To God be all the praise. From this place I started home, with my wife and babe in the buggy with me, and, after a drive of one hundred and thirty miles, we are again at home. I found my cotton eaten up by bollworms; will make only about three bales on twenty-five acres of fine black land. I will begin a meeting at home to-night. This is a destitute place, where the sects have full control, I hope God will bless our labors here also. I am going to give my entire time next year to the ministry. If you are not satisfied with what is written in the Bible, do not send for me. G. CALHOUN ISABELL.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Arizona.

This is a mining country and great effort is made in places to get gold. Very large machinery is used, both steam and electric. I saw one smoke-stack to what the miners call a "smelter" that looked to be not less than ten feet in diameter, and another was said to be over one hundred and fifty feet high. At times one and a half million dollars' worth of metal is shipped from some of these large mines in a year. Gold and copper are the principal metals mined. Silver is here, too, but they say it is of so little value it is let alone now, as if they expect to work it in the future. These rich mines are owned and worked by rich men. The poor—even Indians; I heard of a squaw owning a mine—sometimes get something out of them at first, but not often. The trouble is, it costs so much to find the vein and then get it. I heard of mountains being washed down by machinery and rivers turned. A squaw would not and could not do much of this.

The farmer complains of having a hard time in getting his money out of the earth through his crop, but to look at the mines and the men working them we see and hear somebody else complaining. This mining business is very dangerous to health, life, and wealth. I saw one man hopping around and he told me how near he came to death and what saved his life—that he cut his fuse a little longer that time, and that saved his life. Another poor man told me how his employers, the rich mine owners, broke and how much money he lost. Mining seems to be very dangerous in another particular: the soul is in danger of being lost.

The mining is mostly in the mountains. There is some farming and stock raising on the plains and in the valleys. This, like the mining, is expensive. There are no fences or rain to depend on. The main trouble is the water supply. Water is hauled, pumped, and conducted through ditches from rivers; that is depended on, but some comes from springs and wells. A great deal of fine land is useless for the want of water. To conduct the water from the rivers in ditches is very costly, so is pumping by steam.

People coming from Eastern and Northern States are very often disappointed in making money here. The climate is very fine in most parts, though not suitable to every one. It is a land of sunshine, and the air is dry.

Brother Dr. E. B. Ketcherside, who has been living here some years, expects to be in Tennessee and some adjoining States in September; he can give reliable information about this country. Years ago the United States built houses and had a standing army in one of these valleys to keep the Indians in check; but when they ceased to be troublesome, the army was moved and the land and houses sold to white people to live in and use as they pleased. Dr. Ketcherside bought some of these houses and fixed one to live in, one for a barn, and another to have the gospel preached in and to worship in. This was commenced at his own expense, and as yet he has had but little outside help. He has put on a good, new roof; put in new benches; and made other repairs that were needed to convert the house from an army house to a church house. Brother Ketcherside, his family, and a few other brethren are doing a good work here and ought to be encouraged. This is not an effort of these few to get gold, like many that come to this country, but an effort to save themselves and others. If brethren or churches wish to help in this far West mission work, they can do so by seeing Brother Ketcherside when he is traveling or can come or send to him at his home, Camp Verde, Ariz. The people seem now willing to hear the gospel at this place. I noticed many young people and children willing to hear. Some Indians and Mexicans are benefited, though they do not speak or understand English much.

The brethren here express astonishment and sorrow at hearing of Brother Srygley's death. L. H. WILSON.

The Child's Resolve.

How a Woman Holds a Man's Affections.

A wise and observing person stated the other day that many a wife complains that her husband does not take her out, that she sees him only at meals, or that he makes friendships in which she has no part; further, that she blames him for neglecting her, and thinks herself ill used. Yet he is only following the natural instinct of humanity; the fault is really hers. The easiest way a wife can hold her husband's affection and sympathy is by beauty, which is possessed by using the great Dr. T. Felix Gouraud's Oriental Cream, or Magical Beautifier; it will render your skin a soft, pearly whiteness; free from tan, pimples, freckles, moth patches, and all blemishes of the skin; at the same time defies detection. The Oriental Cream has stood the test of public approval for fifty years, and is still gaining more. Gouraud's Poudre Subtile, or Depilatory Powder, will remove superfluous hair without pain or injury to the skin. Try it. A Call for a Meeting.

We are ready for our meeting;
But we will not selfish be,
For perhaps there're many others
Need one even more than we.

We are waiting for our teacher,
How we long to see his face!
In this world there is no other
That could ever take his place.

Yes, we love our gentle teacher;
Love him more than words can tell;
And our hearts are full of sadness
When to him we say farewell.

When he's with us in a meeting,
We are loath to let him go;
We are sure there is no other
The good seed so well can sow.

Many of us, too, have loved ones—
O, to us they are so dear!—
Who are not safe in Christ's kingdom,
And we want them him to hear—

Hear him preach the precious gospel,
Which is God's power to save;
Hear him tell, with wondrous pathos,
God so loved us that he gave—

Gave his only Son a ransom
For poor, fallen, sinful man;
Furnished him with free salvation,
Freed him from the merited ban.

He makes the plan of salvation
Appear so very clear and plain
That the honest, earnest seeker
In doubt no longer may remain.

He takes the precious Bible
As an all-sufficient rule;
It is the only text-book
That we use in our school.

We make it our daily study,
And each time we read it o'er
On its pages we find beauties
We have never seen before.

He daily proves, beyond a doubt,
As every child of God should do,
By his perfect, Christlike life,
The Christian religion is true.

When with us in our last meeting,
Just before he went away,
He promised, "the Lord willing,"
He would return "some sweet day."

We, with joy, are looking forward
To the time when him we'll greet,
From our dear old gray-haired elder
To the little children sweet.

When our lessons all are ended,
When our work on earth is done,
When our pilgrimage is over,
When eternal life we've won,

We will meet our gentle teacher
On the bright eternal shore;
We will dwell with Christ forever;
We will say farewell no more.

Eating Unworthily.

Brother Atkisson: Your criticism is thankfully received. There can be no doubt as to the part of speech to which "unworthily" belongs. It is an adverb and describes the manner of eating and drinking. But I fail to see why that should lead us to think it has no reference "to the understanding of the design nor to the condition of the participant." The condition of being worthy is everything to eating worthily. A man unworthy to eat must eat unworthily, if he eats at all; a man worthy to eat cannot eat unworthily. People who are out of Christ are not worthy to eat; those called "brethren" who are idolaters, fornicators, covetous, etc., are not worthy to eat; and if they eat, they eat unworthily. Christians who eat without showing the Lord's death, without discerning the Lord's body, eat unworthily, because one who does not accept the design expressed to him is not worthy to do what is commanded. So "unworthily" as an adverb points to the condition of the participants. Those who eat gluttonously are gluttons; those who eat riotously are guilty of riot; those who eat rowdily are rowdies; and so on. Those who eat unworthily are, for the same reason, unworthy to eat; those who do not discern the Lord's body in the Lord's Supper are not worthy to eat it, and, eating, eat unworthily. "For he that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself, if he discern not the body." (1 Cor. 11: 29, R. V.)

WARREN.

Clifford Vernon Warren was born in Huntingdon, Tenn., on June 15, 1879, and died in Paris, Tenn., on July 16, 1900; aged twenty-one years, one month, and one day. He obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother H. L. Calhoun on June 3, 1894. He was tall and stately, like King Saul, as handsome as Absalom, and as noble as Jonathan. He was an affectionate and obedient son. His parents were never uneasy about his conduct; he gave them no trouble. His employer said of him: "I am looking for just such young men to work in my employ." One of his young men friends said: "He was better prepared to die than any of us." A few months ago he took membership with the church of Christ at Paris, Tenn., and since then he had shown his interest in religious matters by attending the meetings of the church as regularly as he could, sat well to the front, and took part in the singing. He was taken ill on Friday night, and died on the following Monday at 5 P.M. of paralysis of the brain. He was high up toward a model young man in business and in social and religious life. We deeply deplore our loss. May the memory of his life be an incentive to all who knew him and loved him to strive earnestly to meet him in "the sweet by and by" is the prayer of the writer. The deceased was the eldest son of W. T. and Nannie Warren. We laid his remains to rest in the Maplewood Cemetery, at Paris, Tenn.

JOHNSTON.

Little Mamie Johnston, daughter of Sister Willie and the late Dr. J. B. Johnston, of Shop Spring, Tenn., was born on December 9, 1891, and died of typhoid fever on August 17, 1900, being several months past eight years of age. She survived her father only a few months and was buried beside him in the family burying ground of her grandfather, Brother B. C. Forbis, near Greenwood, Tenn. It was an agreement between Mamie and another little one of the family that whoever died first should be buried by their father. Sister Johnston, in her widowhood and in the loss of this beloved child, has the deep sympathy of her many friends and her brothers and sisters in the Lord. We weep with those who weep; so we sympathize with the remaining children, and especially with Miss Callie, Dr. Johnston's sister, and therefore the children's aunt, who loved so dearly little Mamie and who cares so tenderly for all the children. It is sad to see the beautiful rosebud of life droop and die ere it blooms into womanhood, but it is joyous to know the flower has been transplanted only to grow and to bloom in the garden of God on high. "And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted ["turn," Revised Version], and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 2, 3.) Again, he says: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 19: 14.) So far as possible, we should not grieve over the death of children, because such are safe with God. When David's child died, he "arose from the earth, and washed, and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into the house of the Lord, and worshiped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat." As an explanation of this conduct, he said: "While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live? But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." (2 Sam. 12: 20-23.) So may the dear ones left behind and friends all go to Mamie in the realms of the blessed, if they fear and obey God. May the Lord bless these sad ones and help them and help us all to reach this blessed and happy home.

Kansas Notes.

Brother C. M. Johnson preached at Palestine on the first Lord's day in this month; he was at Peck on the second Lord's day.

Brother Rhodes is now in a meeting at Shelby, Mo.

Brother C. C. Houston was at Peck on the first Lord's day in this month.

Brother W. F. Parmiter was with the brethren at Hoyle, O. T., on the second Lord's day in this month.

Brother J. E. Cain will go to Oklahoma the latter part of this month to spend a week or two at different points.

The brethren at Palestine are now in a protracted meeting. May the Lord bless the effort put forth for the strengthening of saints and conversion of sinners.

The Lancaster (Ky.) Record recently contained a clipping from the Memphis (Tenn.) Scimitar, a part of which I here copy: "The congregation of the Christian Church on Mississippi avenue is about to lose its esteemed pastor, Allen R. Moore, who has sent in his resignation, to take effect on September 15, 1900. Mr. Moore goes to Lancaster, Ky., where he has been called to a pulpit. . . . Mr. Moore, since his residence in Memphis, has accomplished what few pastors undertake: he has held successful revivals in his own church. As a general proposition, ministers import talent to conduct prolonged meetings, but Mr. Moore has, on several occasions, unaided, preached daily, week in and week out, with splendid results. On one occasion there were twenty-two additions to the church, and a great many professed religion who united with other churches." I do not copy this to criticize the sectarian idea of "pastor," "called to pulpit," etc. The man who wrote it did it honestly. I do not copy it to make any special criticism on Brother Moore. I presume that Brother Moore is a good and eloquent preacher; but the circumstances existing in Memphis are so peculiar that I desire to contrast them with some other places. The writer thinks a rare thing for a preacher to conduct protracted meetings in the congregation where he is located, and thinks it an extraordinary work for him to have as many as twenty-two additions. Allow me to modestly suggest that in many places here such work is done, and nobody regards it as an extraordinary work. I know places where men have preached for eight or ten years and conducted almost all the protracted meetings—have them once a year—and have as many as fifty additions to the church. I do not doubt Brother Moore's ability as a preacher; I speak only of the difference in places and the estimate the writer places upon it. Another thing impressed me, and it is out of the usual order, I will admit. Besides the twenty-two added to the church, "a great many professed religion who united with other churches." I read of a preacher who once preached a great sermon, and about three thousand persons were converted to Christ; but nothing was said about many others professing religion and uniting with other churches. I read where the same preacher, on another occasion, was the instrument in the hands of the Lord in bringing hundreds to Christ, and nothing was said about others professing religion who united with other churches. Another preacher I read of preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and his Son, Jesus Christ, and many were obedient to the gospel, but not a word was said about others professing religion who united with other churches. So this Memphis case is not like any of these that I have mentioned. Brother Moore may have preached the same thing that Peter and Philip did, but he found the people under different circumstances, and it had a different effect upon them. I simply call attention to these matters as impressing me on account of their peculiarity. I feel an especial interest in the work where Brother Moore is going, and hope that he may accomplish much. My father in the flesh lives in Lancaster, as does also a sister, whose husband is one of the deacons of the congregation. I pray that much may be accomplished—that the gospel may be preached in its purity and simplicity, as preached by Peter and Paul, and that the people may be led to the Savior.

J. M. T. White, of Thick, Tenn., in writing to Brother J. H. Hooper, of Linton, Tenn., says of Brother Srygley's death: "I have been so sad since his death. I feel that not only I have lost a brother, but the cause of Christ in Tennessee has had to give up one than whom there is not a greater. Many of the brethren are saying there is no one that can fill his place. That is so. No one has to fill it. He filled his own place and filled it full. Just so every man has to fill his own place." Brother White states a truth well which should be emphasized. Every man must do his own work. "For every man shall bear his own burden." Each must breathe for himself, eat for himself, sleep for himself, trust for himself, pray for himself, and glorify God for himself. A man could as easily live for Brother Srygley as take his place. He filled his place while living and now has none in this world to fill. Hence, it is very important that each fill his own place and fill it now. If we do not do our duty to-day, to-morrow will be too late. We must fill our own place now, or it never can be filled—never. We need have no fears of the world going wrong as long as every man does his own work. God does not ask us to take care of the world, but to take care of our duty. The God who created all and controls all will take care of us all as long as we are faithful and true to him. We need have no fears as long as we fill our own places in this life.

Suppressing names, place, and date, we take the liberty of publishing the following private letter furnished us by a brother, because we think it will do good in showing the needs of the field:

"My Dear Brother: When I read of the good work you are doing, I love you more and more, and how I wish you could come into our midst and preach for us! How I long to have the gospel preached in its purity here! We are shut out from all houses, and, as we are few in number, we are almost powerless to do anything. We live in a small village where there is only one church building, and that belongs to the Baptists. Of course they will not allow us to use it; neither will they allow us to use the district schoolhouse. We have lived here almost six years, and, during that time, we have had one week's meeting, and that was held in a blacksmith shop. Prejudice runs so high the people would not come out to hear us. However, we had five additions—two young men, two young girls, and one married man.

The two young men have moved away, also one of the girls, leaving in our village myself, my husband and two daughters, one other member, one young lady, and one other member in the country—in all seven members. We have only two male members in our band. We are not able nor strong enough to build a house. You may wonder why I am telling you all this; it is because I feel your great heart will sympathize with us, and, if you can, you will come and help us. It seems like asking a great deal of one whose time is always in such demand, but I beg of you to come to our village, a place where the pure gospel needs to be preached as much as any place on earth. There are two old men in our midst, standing on the verge of the grave, out of Christ because they are disgusted with denominationalism, and I have a sweet little girl, just budding into womanhood, who I know is ready to be grafted into His dear body, but we have no shepherd to bring the little ones in. It does seem that these three souls ought to cause some soul-loving preacher to come and help us. Now for my request: Can you come in September and preach for us a few weeks, if we can get a tent for you to preach in? Now, I cannot offer you any money, but will say this: We will pay your expenses to ———, which is ten miles from here. We will meet you there and bring you to our home, where we will treat you as well as we can. I have been begging for some of our brethren to come for over a year. If some of the wealthy congregations want to do some mission work, there is surely an opening here. If you can come, do so; if you cannot come, try to get Brother ——— or some one of our strong brethren. But I am so anxious to have you come. Let me hear from you immediately as to what you can do. May God bless you always, and I pray you can come."

The brother to whom the letter was written says of it: "The inclosed is certainly a strong appeal. I shall try to go. Some one should certainly go. It will be joy to me to preach in that sister's house, yard, or barn, if I can. She deserves to be encouraged." This is but one example, out of many, emphasizing the truth of the Savior's teaching: "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." It is marvelously strange that, with the wide, wide world as our field, any earnest gospel preacher would be seeking places to preach. The truth is, no gospel preacher, filled with a consuming love for the salvation of souls, ever finds it necessary to advertise for a place at which to preach. Such advertisements are for shekels more than for souls. It should be now as it was during Christ's personal ministry. The poor had the gospel preached to them. Christ bowed the heavens in love and came down on the wings of mercy that the hungry might be fed, the naked clothed, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. He was cradled in a manger, reared in the midst of infantile privations, and learned early in life to be about his Father's business. His whole life was one of toil and self-denial, spent in blessing and elevating a sinful race. His days were not spent in a palace, "faring sumptuously every day," but he was a homeless wanderer. The preacher of the gospel who goes out in the highways and hedges, who goes to the poor as well as to the rich, declaring the gospel of Christ, cannot claim that he fares worse than did the blessed Master. If there be a poor, discouraged, and complaining disciple, he should look up, finding encouragement in the thought: "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord." The man who is not willing to endure hardness, as a good soldier, is not fit to preach the gospel of Christ. The earnest, approved preacher will labor, if necessary, with his own hands for support and then preach the gospel of Christ whenever he can. The preacher who loves God with all his heart is ready to make any sacrifice within his power for the salvation of souls. This is not only true of the preacher, but of every member of the body of Christ. The churches should go with the faithful preacher and hold up his hands while he preaches Jesus. The Philippians sent aid once and again to Paul while in the field leading sinners to Christ. It pleased the brethren of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem. The churches need fruit to abound to their account. A stingy, penurious church, with all its fountains of liberality dried up, will never be worth much in the salvation of souls. It is already spiritually dead; if not, it will not be long in dying. The churches should have fellowship with earnest, self-sacrificing gospel preachers as they go into these destitute fields. For the encouragement of our dear sister, it should be said that no opposition can hold out long before an earnest, godly life as hers seems to be. "The continual dropping wears the stone." While the progress the truth is making may be imperceptible, yet it is mighty and will prevail. Persistent, untiring, and unyielding love will melt stones out of the way. Furthermore, it is not necessary to wait for a preacher to baptize those who are ready to be baptized. The husband of the sister should be able to do this. It is not necessary to wait. Why should it be? Now is the time; to-morrow never comes.

The command is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This means the negro as well as the white man. A negro preacher came into our office a few days ago and asked me to preach for his people, stating, at the same time, that the white people had looked after the education of the negroes, but that they had neglected their moral condition. This is a true statement. We have the negroes here among us and know better what to do for them than anybody else, but we make a great blunder when we do not seek to purify their morals. We have done much for them, but cannot claim that we have done our full duty. The best way to stop the terrible crimes that so shock the enlightened sensibilities of refined, Christian people is to look after the spiritual welfare of the negroes. What are the white preachers doing to lead them into the full light of truth? They should visit their churches, preach to them, and seek in every scriptural way to lift them up. This duty devolves upon us. We can do this work far better than others, and if we fail to do our duty, God will not hold us guiltless.

Some people who are opposed to the church doing any foreign mission work are disposed to hold the missionaries responsible for the present disturbance in China. We are sure the accusation does the missionaries great injustice, and, for the enlightenment of those who oppose the missionaries going to foreign lands, publish a good and true word from the Sun, in vindication of their manner of living. It is absurd to intimate that the missionaries are responsible for the Boxer uprising. The ignorance and the superstition of the people of China, along with the greed, immorality, and vices of the civilized nations, doubtless had much to do with bringing about the present trouble, but we will allow another to speak: "We have received from Shanghai a copy of a letter addressed to an English newspaper of that town, in which the writer, speaking from 'a purely commercial point of view,' combats sensibly and very successfully the notion that the Chinese hostility to foreigners is due to the labors of Christian missionaries

He makes the strong point that it is those missionaries more particularly who exemplify in their lives the high morality and the true dignity of Western civilization. In the treaty ports the lives of 'a certain minority among the foreign residents . . . are an outrage on the best ideas of the natives and a libel on Western civilization,' and they 'do more to prepare the way for corrupt officials, bent on stirring up the ignorant people of China, than all the mistakes of all the missionaries put together.' Throughout the country, however, 'where the foreigner is otherwise unknown, he is first introduced in the person of a missionary who lives quietly a moral life, so that all his immediate neighbors on close acquaintance acquire a favorable knowledge of an individual foreigner, and from that particular knowledge argue favorably in general of the foreigners.' Unquestionably this is a deserved tribute to the missionaries. It is the missionary rather than the soldier or the man of commerce who represents the moral elevation of Western civilization. Where missionaries live in the interior, away from all foreign civilians or officials, there are no houses of ill fame kept for or by foreigners; in such places there are no lotteries licensed and supported by foreigners; there no natives are cuffed and kicked, for there are no rowdy young foreign 'drunks' to drag their nation's character in the mire. The vices of our civilization go with the trader rather than the missionary. The evil reputation foreigners have in Chinese eyes is not made by the missionaries, but by 'the man or woman of foreign birth who lives an immoral life; the foreigner who illtreats a cooly, as he would not dare for an instant to treat a London cabman; the Westerner, be he an ordinary private individual or a city father, who encourages, establishes, or patronizes lotteries—in fact, any among the foreign communities of China who in any way lower the standard of life they have in the home lands been taught to respect and aim at.' Moreover, the valuable assistance to trade rendered by the missionaries is recognized by this commercial writer; for 'such centers of enlightenment as to what foreigners are, and have to give the Chinese, open up the country ready for trade, and again and again can the demand for foreign goods, be traced directly to the influence of missionaries in the interior. If trade follows the flag,' he continues, 'it is because the flag is usually made known by a good introduction on the part of missionaries. Withdraw your missionaries, and send into the interior your young, rowdy, riotous liver, with his drunkenness and bullying conduct, and see how much worse your trade and reputation will be.' This is a view of the Chinese situation at which everybody must look in fairness, whether he is favorable or unfavorable to Christian proselytism in China. Nor, on the side of the Chinese, must we forget that in degraded examples of Western civilization they have reason for prejudice against it. We regret to hear, privately, that in the drunkenness among the Western troops now in China a shameful exhibition is made to the Chinese. The conduct of the Japanese troops, however, with respect to sobriety and good discipline generally, is described as provoking and deserving the admiration of natives and foreigners alike. 'The behavior of the Japanese,' a correspondent at Tien-tsin writes to us, 'is a continual astonishment. No other force here has the beginning of such discipline, except the Germans.'

"The Standard," a regular contributor to the Western Recorder, says:

"Let me say again, as I have said often before, the Recorder is not responsible for my utterances, my contract being that I am free to say what I please, so that I do not contradict the Philadelphia Confession of Faith and Boyce's Theology."

So in the Recorder office the Bible may be contradicted, but the Philadelphia Confession of Faith and Boyce's Theology are infallible. D. L.

An Indorsement.

Brother Lipscomb's articles on teaching and edifying the church are quite timely and very instructive. They show a comprehensive view of what the Bible teaches on the subject. An honest heart and sincere purpose to do the whole will of God and to preach the whole counsel of God are necessary in order to build up New Testament churches. "Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth." (1 Sam. 3: 10.) This is the principle which made Samuel the grand, pure man of God that he was. This is the first thing necessary now in order to become a Christian and to serve God acceptably. "What shall I do, Lord?" is the one question and prayer which made Saul of Tarsus a faithful and loyal apostle to the Gentiles. All who would please God desire to know and to do his entire will. "Narrow is the gate, and straitened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few be they that find it;" but a man of God and friend of sinners does not desire to make it narrower and more difficult than the mercy of God has made it. "What does God teach?" is the great question. To please God is the one thing needful. If we please him, all is well. Jesus did always the things which pleased God. (John 8: 29.) "For even Christ pleased not himself." (Rom. 15: 3.) We should be sure that we desire the will of God, and not our will, to prevail; we should pray for this and work for this.

The church of the New Testament can never be restored until New Testament practices are restored. The theory may be correct, but the practice must be maintained before we have a New Testament church. Brother J. M. Kidwill told of a man given to strong drink who said he was strong in the faith, but weak in the practice; he accepted the faith as the correct theory, but not as a life. Many churches fail right here. They do not fully practice the principles of the New Testament; they are inactive, and not zealous and aggressive, in doing the will of the Lord. Some churches get their growth too soon—that is, they soon stop growing. This is a fruitful field for admonition and instruction, and Brother Lipscomb, ripe in years, in wisdom, in experience, and, above all, in the knowledge of the word, is competent to give them. To work and to live as God directs is the most potent and the only successful argument against error and sin. The Laodiceans were condemned because they were "neither cold nor hot," but lukewarm and self-satisfied. They were pleased with themselves and thought they had need of nothing; but they were "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." (Rev. 3: 14-18.) How sad is such a state! Are there any churches now like the Laodiceans?

Some churches do not have much preaching done at home or elsewhere, and they have no edifying teaching done, not because they think such is unscriptural, but because they seem not to have sufficient life to realize their need. Others never have any preaching, except eight or ten days' protracted meeting during the most leisure time of summer. During this meeting the preacher usually discusses "the first principles of the oracles of God," and the church is not stimulated much to earnestness, piety, and zeal. Such churches have but little or no preaching done elsewhere. It must be understood that by "preaching" is meant preaching the gospel, preaching "the word." Such churches, too, have but little intelligent, scriptural edification and teaching during the year. It is proper to have meetings and to have them when most people can attend, but during the whole year the church should be actively engaged in the service of God and busy doing good, and the elders should be live men, earnest and zealous, qualified to teach and edify the church and to lead it on in aggressive work for the Master. God desires that elders should "rule well" and intends that some should "labor in the word and in teaching." This laboring in the word and in teaching was not all done away from home. God here provides, then, that in every church there should be some who "labor in the word and in teaching," and that the church shall support them, or look after their wants and the needs of their family. (See 1 Tim. 5: 17, 18.) Then is a church modeled after the New Testament until it has such laborers? I trust Brother Lipscomb will give this some attention, too. There are elders, but they should labor and should be supported as God directs before the church will be what God intends it to be. So Peter says an elder must not serve for the consideration of "filthy lucre"—that is, the support offered him must not be the inducement to serve. He must serve for Christ's sake, must prove himself worthy of the support, must "labor in the word and in teaching," must work, and continue to work, for the greatest good and edification of the church. How far short do many elders and many churches fall of this! For a yearly meeting of one or two weeks most churches will contribute from twenty-five cents to fifty dollars, and this is about all the money they use for the Lord during the year. Some will raise small amounts for some other purposes, but not many support an elder who labors in the word and in the teaching; yet nearly all could, if they would. While this subject is up, I join Brother Lipscomb in saying that it should have a most thorough investigation.

E. A. ELAM.

Sowing and Reaping.

"He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." (Ps. 126: 6.)

We here have presented two very impressive pictures—one, a man going forth to sow seed; the other, the same man, after the harvest, surrounded by the fruits of his labors. Let us examine each of the pictures and see what instruction and encouragement we may derive from them.

First, the sower is clad in the plain garb of a laborer, because he is a laborer in his Master's field. He has every appearance of a servant, because he is a servant of the Most High God. No costly diamonds sparkle upon his white shirt front; no gold rings, broad belts, or tan-colored slippers are to be seen. In fact, it is not the picture of one who is trying to attract attention to himself, but of one whose great object is to attract people to his Master. His course often—yea, usually—leads through rough places; but he does not seem to care for that, but presses onward, scattering seeds as he goes "by the wayside," "upon the rock," "among thorns," and "on good ground" alike, for he knows that the Master has given the soil the capacity to cause the seed to grow. So onward he goes, leaving the result to his Master. He has been very careful in the selection of his seed, and further than this he is careful of nothing, only lest he should "stumble and fall." He may not be very skillful in sowing, but what is the difference? The virtue is not in the sower, but in the seed. He is weeping. Perhaps he is weeping because the seed-time is so near spent and the laborers are so few, or it may be he is weeping because there is so little good ground and the fruit is so long in coming to perfection. His countenance certainly shows an intense interest in the work he is doing and in its result. It is the picture of a humble servant of God proclaiming the news and the terms of salvation to a dying world.

Before passing to the other picture, let us examine the seed this man is sowing. He had many and various kinds of seed from which to select, but only one "precious seed," and that the Master recommended him to sow. Knowing that his reward should be the fruit of his labors and that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," he is very careful lest some foreign seed might become mixed with the good seed and to some extent mar the harvest. This is a peculiar seed. Other seed grow old and lose the power to germinate, but this "liveth and abideth forever." It is a "precious seed"—more precious than the gold of Ophir—and yet the poorest may have it freely and abundantly. The fruit of this seed is a peculiar fruit. The fruit produced by other seed is only temporary, soon passes away, but this springs up into everlasting life. This "seed is the word of God," and, as fruit, it bears children of God.

Let us take a glance at the other picture. What an encouraging sight it presents! The seedtime is over, the harvest is past, and the laborer has returned to his Master. What a change! The form once bent with the weight of care and labor is now straight; the soiled garb has been put aside, and he is now clothed in robes of spotless white in his hand is a harp and upon his head is a crown; he is no longer poor, for he now has an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away;" he is not weeping now, for his countenance shines "as the brightness of the firmament;" all tears have been wiped from his eyes, and thenceforth there is "no more sorrow nor crying." But he is not alone; he is surrounded by his "sheaves." These he gathered here, there, yonder—from nearly every part of the field where he sowed the seed. Some of the brightest and richest of them were gathered from the very places where he expected little or no fruit. How glad he now is that he did not stop while sowing to try to find out which was the good soil and which the thorny ground! This is truly an encouraging picture.

Breaking Bread. No. 4.

Not only is the evidence of a mixed assembly of believers and unbelievers convened to break bread wanting in the history of New Testament practice, but Christians in New Testament times were instructed to purge the assemblies in which they kept the feast of wicked brethren. "It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you. For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators: yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person." (1 Cor. 5.)

The association of devout believers around the Lord's table is most intimate. As the Jews of old were required to put away leaven from their homes before eating the passover, so Christians are required to purge their assemblies where they keep their feast of "old leaven," wicked persons. Every brother who is a fornicator, a covetous man, an idolater, a railer, a drunkard, or an extortioner must be put from among them, kept out of the assembly where they eat the Lord's memorial feast. The faithful must neither keep company nor eat with him. Such union at such sacred feast would profane the whole gathering. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

If it be urged that "the feast" of this text is not the Lord's Supper, I must say that I know of no other feast that Christians are required to assemble as an "unleavened mass" to keep; nor can I think of any other feast that is within something that wicked brethren should be kept out of. If "the feast" here referred to is a common meal and the accompanying and eating nothing more than gathering around the table of a common repast, then I cannot see how "the leaven of malice and wickedness" can be a bar to eating it, or "sincerity and truth" a condition of eating it.

But if the prohibition contemplates eating a common meal with these wicked brethren, how much less should we think of eating the Lord's Supper with them! But I confess I do not see how a common meal can here be referred to.

This feast is clearly the antitype of the memorial passover. Christ is our passover lamb. The Lord's Supper is kept in remembrance of Christ. The charge to "purge out the old leaven" is fulfilled in "putting away from among you that wicked person." So the scriptures referring to the manner of keeping the feast of the Lord's table give no encouragement to mixed assemblies to break bread. Those early gatherings were lovely groups, made up purely of devout, faithful disciples, from which unworthy and disorderly brethren were excluded, as was leaven by the Jews at the passover.

In the apostolic age Christians did not turn brethren out of the church for anything—they were not told to do that—but they kept impenitent, proud-hearted, money-loving oppressors out of the assembly, where was their feast of love. Idolaters, drunkards, revilers, and fornicators were by no means admitted where Christ's word was respected.

But it is urged that the failure to admit in the meeting any who might decide to come would make it necessary to judge people in order to decide who is worthy to eat, and that would violate the injunction: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." (Matt. 7: 1.) But there is a duty to judge laid down in 1 Cor. 5: "Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person." (Verses 12, 13.) "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." (1 Cor. 11: 31, 32.) The judgment here required cannot be in violation of the judgment forbidden in Matt. 7: 1, and to construe that language so as to cause brethren to make no effort to keep out of their festal assembly wicked brethren would clearly be a misconstruction. The Jews could not keep leaven out without knowing leaven, nor could they know without judging; neither can Christians keep out the old leaven of wicked brethren from their assemblies when the feast is to be spread without exercising some judgment. In Matt. 7, where we have certain judgment prohibited in verse 1, the Master says, in verses 15, 16: "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" If a man may know a false teacher by his fruits, and take warning by the judgment thus formed, surely he cannot violate Matt. 7: 1 when he "judges them that are within," called "brethren," when, by their fruits, he sees they are fornicators, covetous, idolaters, revilers, drunkards, or extortioners, and refuses to associate and eat with them at the feast of the Lord. He has done what his Lord told him to do when he told him not to eat or keep company with such persons. To obey Christ here cannot be in conflict with what he has said elsewhere.

Let us look at the prohibitory words: "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." (Matt. 7: 1-5.) The language teaches Christians not to leave undiscerned and uncorrected their own faults and engage in correcting others; for in so doing they expose themselves to heavy judgment. It is all right to see the mote in our brother's eye and pull it out, but not till the beam is cast out of our own eye. We should judge ourselves patiently and faithfully first; then, with clearer discernment and deeper love, we can judge our brother by his fruits. This is in perfect accord with the duty to "judge them that are within." (1 Cor. 5: 12.) It is also the same thing which we find in 1 Cor. 11: 28, 31, 32. In verse 28 the charge is, "Let a man examine himself;" and in verse 31 he says: "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." Proper self-examination and conviction would save us from the judgment of good brethren who refuse to keep company with us and keep the feast with us. But this is a kindly judgment made for the good of erring brethren; it is for their correction, to keep them from a much greater condemnation—condemnation with the world.

Or trace the journey of these little feet?

A HAPPY FEATURE.

There are now nine presidential candidates appealing for the suffrages of American citizens this fall, and they represent well-nigh all the political creeds of any importance. Whatever the value of their ideas, or, to put it more strongly, however much the safety of their various platforms may be questioned, there is one thing that we are to be congratulated upon. According to a responsible writer's statement, every candidate is morally clean. If the American home is the foundation of the American State, it is a hopeful sign when the political parties select pure men as their representatives.—Union Gospel News.

THE GOSPEL DEALS WITH THE INDIVIDUAL.

Certain modern social theories make bold claims. They profess to be able to elevate the masses and reform social evils by dealing with people in the mass. Hence, they propose educational, economic, and literary schemes with this end in view. These theories are very excellent in their place, but they overlook, in large measure, the fact that much of the evil which needs to be cured is moral in its nature and at its deepest root. This being the case, it must be treated in the individual, and not in the mass; and from within, and not merely from without. It is here that the gospel of Christ meets the case and cures the evils. It deals with the individual and it reaches the heart. When the individual is made right, the remedy of all social wrongs is at hand.—Christian Observer.

A CERTIFICATE OF CHARACTER FROM MARK TWAIN.

During the campaign of 1880, Mark Twain, for the first and only time in his life, took an active part in politics. While visiting in Elmira, N. Y., in the fall of that year, he made a short speech one Saturday night, introducing to a Republican meeting General Hawley, of Connecticut. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Clemens said:

"General Hawley is a member of my church, at Hartford, and the author of 'Beautiful Snow.' Maybe he will deny that; but I am only here to give him a character from his last place.

"As a pure citizen, I respect him; as a personal friend of years, I have the warmest regard for him; as a neighbor, whose vegetable garden adjoins mine, why—why, I watch him; as the author of 'Beautiful Snow,' he has added a new pang to winter.

"He is a square, true man in honest politics, and I must say he occupies a mighty lonely position. So broad, so bountiful is his character that he never turned a tramp empty-handed from his door, but always gave him a letter of introduction to me. Pure, honest, incorruptible—that is Joe Hawley. Such a man in politics is like a bottle of perfumery in a glue factory: it may moderate the stench, but it doesn't destroy it. I haven't said any more of him than I would say of myself. Ladies and gentlemen, this is General Hawley."—Chicago Chronicle.

WHISKY AGAIN.

When we visited the ancient prison at Newcastle, Del., the other day, we noticed a young fellow whose appearance was in striking contrast to the rough men about him.

"That is a sad case," said a friend at our elbow. "Young ——— came from a Methodist home in Canada to attend a medical college at Philadelphia. He fell in with young men who had formed the drinking habit, and soon learned to tipple himself. He soon became dissipated. In one of his debauches, he came to Wilmington in company with a young man. A quarrel arose over an abandoned woman, and the young Canadian clubbed his friend to death. He was arrested while still too stupefied with drink to realize what he had done, and is now waiting trial for murder. He says he has no recollection whatever of the crime, and most persons believe that this is true. His friends at home are said to be nearly distracted with grief over the young man's downfall; and well they may be."

Whisky again—yes, the same old and terrible story! Every prison in every State contains the br talized victims of rum. Every little while a poor fellow is swung into eternity at the end of a rope—the penalty of some horrible crime committed after he had been transformed by drink into a fiend incarnate.

How long will this Christian nation go on making legal and respectable this diabolical traffic in the bodies and souls of men?—Epworth Herald.

AN UNWARRANTED TEST.

During the present perilous state of affairs in China, the godless outside of the church and the faithless inside are wagging their heads at the missionaries, and saying: "Where is now thy God?" Some even make the insolent and wicked charge that if the Lord had sent them to China, he would preserve them from all bodily harm and mischief. When our Lord was hanging upon the cross, the chief priests, and scribes uttered the same diabolical sort of railing against him, saying: "If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him."

To assume that God will in every instance deliver his true servants from physical danger and death is utterly contrary to experience and holy writ. While God causes "all things to work together for good to them that love him," and while he holds his servants, as it were, in the hollow of his hand, nowhere has he promised that any of them shall be entirely exempt from peril and persecution. The Master taught his disciples to look for persecution, saying unto them: "Remember the word that I said unto you. The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you."

That our Heavenly Father does often wondrously deliver his children out of danger now, as in days of old, is true beyond all question; but to assert that if evil or death overtakes the righteous, they are not in the path of duty, is to make a monstrous charge, and, in short, subjects his followers to a test nowhere warranted in God's word.

If the justice of such a test be admitted, then inevitably follows that Christ was an impostor, that the apostle Paul was either fearfully deceived or an infamous deceiver, and that every disciple who has ever suffered martyrdom for the sake of the truth was God forsaken and cruelly—yea, devilishly—dehuded.

It is not physical pain and death that we are to dread most. Says the Master: "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

GOD'S CARE.

Brother J. A. Harding copies the following item from us in the Gospel Advocate into the August number of The Way: "The child of God that is faithfully honest and industrious in seeking food and raiment, and trusts in God's promises and prays earnestly to him for the blessings, will find them. A wicked man may strive and yet not find them; but God's children are promised all these things, if they diligently seek for them."

He then comments, in part, as follows: "The foregoing quotation is from an article by Brother E. G. Sewell in a recent number of the Gospel Advocate. A most delightful article, too, it is, as one may expect every one from Brother Sewell's pen to be; but, it seems to me, in this quotation we find the one spot where Homer nodded. Brother Sewell teaches that the child of God must be 'faithfully honest and industrious in seeking food and raiment; that God's children are promised all these things, if they diligently seek for them; that the child of God who thus seeks and works, prays and trusts for food and raiment will get them, though the man of the world may not, no matter how diligently he may strive. Now, if I understand the matter correctly, the child of God does not have to seek and work for food and raiment; this is the very thing Christ tells him not to do. Hear the Lord on this point: 'Seek not ye what ye shall eat, and what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: but your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Howbeit seek ye his kingdom, and these things shall be added to you.' Then he adds: 'Sell that ye have and give alms; make for yourselves purses which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief draweth near, neither moth destroyeth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.' (Luke 12: 29-34; read Luke 12: 13-48 and Matt. 6: 19-34.)"

The word of God is a unit, and no plain passage in the word of God in any dispensation contradicts or contravenes another in that dispensation. From the garden of Eden, the decree of God to man was that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground," and this decree has never been repealed; in every age and dispensation it has held good. In the Jewish dispensation God promised the Jewish people that if they would do his will, he would prosper the work of their hands; he would send the rains in their season, that their fields and fruit trees might produce bountifully, and thus afford them an abundant support. But he let them know at the same time that if they would not do his will, they should sow their seed in vain; that their enemies should eat it; that the heaven should not give its rain upon the land, and their bread should fail; that their fruit would be blighted; that wars, famines, and pestilences should prevail; and that if they did not repent from these chastisements, they should be destroyed.

All this shows that their food and raiment came through certain channels and laws and that they had to comply with these conditions then to secure their daily bread; and if they had failed to prepare their soil, sow or plant their seed, cultivate, and gather, they would not have had their daily bread, no matter how earnest they were about other matters of service. Cultivating the soil or some sort of earnest, faithful labor is God's law for food and raiment, and nothing else can take its place. This principle is as true under Christianity as it was under the Jews' religion. Christians are to be diligent, not slothful, in business and such like; they must labor, working with their hands, that they may have to give to him that needeth; and if any will not work, neither shall he eat, and such like.

While the Lord has ordained that they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel, yet Paul made tents, when necessary, to bear his own expenses and the expenses of those dependent upon him. Paul never understood that food and raiment would come to Christians otherwise than through the channel God ordained for them to come. So when he ran out of these things, he did not stop and trust to prayer alone to bring them, but went to making tents, and no doubt at the same time prayed for his daily bread, prayed the Lord to prosper the work of his hands that he might secure it. He taught all Christians to do likewise, and his teaching on these matters was by the Holy Spirit, and, therefore, from God.

When Jesus said, "Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, . . . Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" he did not mean that his followers should cease to labor for these things at all, or that these things should come without such labor, but that they were not to seek these things to the exclusion of the matter of salvation. They were not to make the affairs of this life first in importance, but salvation first, and not secondary—that they should make food and raiment and everything else secondary to salvation. But that does not mean that they were to cease to labor, and expect God to feed and clothe them through some other channel. Even Jesus himself was subject to his parents till he was thirty years of age, and that included labor and everything else that they required of him. All the indications are that he worked with his father at the carpenter's trade till he began his public ministry. When Jesus says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you," he does not mean that they shall be added outside of God's laws and appointments, through which these things come, but that through these appointments they will come, if they will be faithful to the Lord in the matters of his kingdom. Those who thus industriously labor in some laudable pursuit in life are serving God as surely as others who are competent to preach the gospel and are at that work. Only a few out of the masses can proclaim the gospel of Christ publicly with success, but all can labor at something by which they can make an honest living. God has provided that his people may till the soil, and that they may buy and sell and get gain, and thus make an honest living. All these callings, if faithfully followed, are in full harmony with the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and are not in the way of seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness, if all make these things secondary and the kingdom first in importance. A Christian might just as reasonably pray God to forgive sinners without their obeying the requirements of the gospel as to pray God to give him food and raiment without complying with the laws, the appointments through which these things come. If a man can preach the gospel or follow any other laudable work for the advancement of the kingdom, and that work will yield him a living, then he ought to do it; but if he cannot, and can plow or work in the shop or can buy and sell and get gain, he ought to do that; but he should do it honestly and faithfully, and pray God to prosper the work of his hands.

Brother Harding certainly lays down a very wide gap when he says: "Now, if I understand the matter correctly, the child of God does not have to seek and work for food and raiment; this is the very thing Christ tells him not to do." Paul does not contradict Christ, and yet he admonishes Christians not to be slothful in business; to labor, working with their hands, that they may have to give to him that needs; and that he that does not provide for his own house has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel, and such like things. The only way to reconcile these matters is to so apply what Paul and Christ said as to reconcile them, which we have endeavored to do in this article. A man that is diligent in his business that yields a living for himself and family, and deals truly and honestly with his fellow-men in his business, and has no other means of supporting his family, is doing God's will, is actually serving God in so doing. Every man should do all he can for the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom at the same time, and never put these things in front of the kingdom of God and his righteousness; for all efforts to lay up earthly treasures simply for the sake of having them are condemned.

Disrespect to Parents.

Who has not heard children speak of their father as "the old man," and of their mother as "the old woman?" Is there any manifestation of reverence in such language? Some speak of their father as "the governor." We do not doubt that some use such terms who do not wish to be irreverent or disrespectful toward their parents; they have simply fallen into an ugly habit of following the example of others. Those of whom what we have just said is true are not beyond the reach of wholesome admonition. They will put forth efforts to rid themselves of the unseemly habit when their attention is called to it in the proper way. Next to God, we are to honor no one more than our father and our mother. This honoring will show itself in our words as well as in our deeds. We should, therefore, scrupulously avoid everything that savors of levity when we speak of our parents. "Honor thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth."—Lutheran Standard.

The Arabs have a saying about the palm tree, that it stands with its feet in salt water and its head in the sun. They often cannot drink of the brackish water found in the oasis where the palm grows, but they tap the tree and drink the sweet palm wine. The palm tree, by the magic of its inner life, can so change the elements found in the unkindly soil around it that they minister to its growth and strength and fruit bearing. So you and I, in our earthly life, must often have our feet in the mire and bitterness of sin around us, and upon our heads will often beat the fierce heat of temptation; but in spite of these things, we shall be able to grow, and grow strong, rejecting the evil and assimilating the good, if within us there is the laboratory of a new life through Jesus Christ our Lord.—J. Bell Johnston.

Like a true hero of the cross, Brother J. M. Dennis passed through our town some days ago, with his grip in his hand, going afoot to his appointment: While it is sad in this prosperous age to see a preacher have to walk to his appointment, we thank God for the energy and zeal that cause him to go. It is no disgrace to walk. Our Savior walked and the apostles walked; we should thank God that we can walk.—Highland Preacher.

I have from now till next March that I wish to spend among the churches of Christ in America. In October, the Lord willing, I will start on an extended trip North, reaching as far as Canada, going up through Ohio and returning through Indiana. This will take about till the end of November. I would like to have other trips laid out East and South. Any brother who will help me to make out a programme among the churches of his acquaintance will do me a favor and help forward the missionary cause considerably. I would also be glad if brethren will go around with me to fill the appointments.—J. M. McCaleb.

Professor Herkimer's aged father, who lives with him in his splendid home at Bushney, used to model clay in his early life. He has recently taken it again, but his fear is that soon his hands will lose their skill, and his work will show the marks of imperfection. It is his one sorrow. At night he goes to his early rest, and when he has gone his talented son goes into his studio, takes up his father's feeble attempts, and makes the work as beautiful as art can make it. When the old man comes down in the morning, he takes up the work, looks at it, rubs his hands, and says: "He, I can do as well as I ever did!" May we not believe that the hands of divine love will thus make over our feeble work for God till it shall bear the light of day and be perfect to all eternity?—Selected.

A certain elderly gentleman suffered much from absent-mindedness, and was frequently compelled to seek the assistance of his servant. "Thomas," he would constantly say, "I have just been looking for something, and now I cannot remember what it is," whereupon the obliging Thomas invariably made suggestions—"Was it your purse, or spectacles, or check book, sir?" and so on—till he hit on the right object. One night, after the old gentleman had retired, the bell rang for Thomas, and, on reaching the bedroom, he found his master rambling restlessly about his room. "Thomas, Thomas," he said, "I came up here for something, and now I've forgotten what." "Was it to go to bed, sir?" suggested the faithful retainer. "Ah, the very thing, the very thing! Thank you, Thomas. Good night."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

It is only doubtful things that need to be labeled. We carefully mark the packet of seeds we put away, but when they have been put in the ground, and have blossomed into sweet peas and morning-glories, we do not need to tie a name to them; they show what they are. The same is true of the moral garden plot; it is only the virtues which have not blossomed into action that are constantly needing to be labeled. If we find it necessary to assure and reassure our friends that we can be depended upon to keep an appointment, that we will not forget a promise, that we will do as we have said, we may be sure that our reliability has attained but very doubtful growth. The honesty that requires expatiating upon has not reached the point where it can be known by its deeds, and the goodness that is always asserting itself to be "as good as anybody else" has failed to make itself recognizable by its life. Honesty, reliability, and goodness, that have blossomed into daily living, into habit, need no labeling; everybody knows them.—For ward.

We are exceedingly anxious that our readers and friends avail themselves of the opportunity to buy good books at the low prices we are now disposing of some of our best books. After the plates on which these books have been printed are paid for we are just about realizing the cost of manufacture at the present prices; but we desire that the people read these books, even if we must dispose of them at a great sacrifice. Books unread do no good. The Christian who is so disposed now has a fine opportunity to buy a number of these books at cost and distribute where they will do good. Many people are very greatly benefited by the reading of good books. We are offering only first-class books. Of books Petrarch says: "I have friends whose society is extremely agreeable to me; they are of all ages and of every country; they have distinguished themselves both in the cabinet and in the field and obtained high honors for their knowledge of the sciences. It is easy to gain access to them, for they are always at my service, and I admit them to my company and dismiss them from it whenever I please. They are never troublesome, but immediately answer every question I ask them. Some relate to me the events of past ages, while others reveal to me the secrets of nature; some teach me how to live, and others teach me how to die; some, by their vivacity, drive away my cares and exhilarate my spirits, while others give fortitude to my mind and teach me the important lesson how to restrain my desires and to depend wholly on myself. They open to me, in short, the various avenues of all the arts and sciences, and upon their information I may safely rely in all emergencies. In return for all their services, they only ask me to accommodate them with a convenient chamber in some corner of my humble habitation, where they may repose in peace; for these friends are more delighted by the tranquillity of retirement than with the tumults of society." Carlyle has very wisely said that a collection of books is a real university. Read our advertisement elsewhere in this paper and send at once your order for a number of choice books.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Read the list of good books elsewhere in this paper that we are offering at reduced prices. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity of placing these books in your library.

We are receiving a number of long lists of new subscribers to the Gospel Advocate. One list received this week contained twenty-two new names; another, twelve new names. Who will be the next to send in a large list of new subscribers? At this rate, we can soon add ten thousand new names.

Our orders are increasing for "Gospel Praise." We hear only cheering words in regard to the merits of the book. The music is the best, the sentiment is scriptural, and the songs are such as stir the soul. If you are contemplating buying new music books, you should by all means examine this book.

We wish again to call the attention of our friends and readers to the offer to send the Gospel Advocate from now to the close of 1909 for twenty-five cents. Our friends should add several thousand new names to our list. We are counting on them to call the attention of their friends and neighbors to this liberal offer. We believe that the Gospel Advocate will do any one good who will read it. We would be glad to add ten thousand new readers in the next few months. Many of our friends and contributors have promised to labor to increase the list of the Gospel Advocate. The churches are getting tired of innovations. Those who were not satisfied to worship according as "it is written" promised great things when they began work in this State. Their work has been a failure, and the churches where they have had full sway are discouraged and dying. Even the church that took to itself the credit of starting the work is having hard work to hold its own. We earnestly insist that all who love the Bible way help us to circulate the Gospel Advocate. Help now will be doubly appreciated.

Queries.

Brother Sewell: We have a young brother, unmarried, in our congregation who is somewhat troubled on the subject of marriage. He wants to know if a person in Christ may marry one out of Christ without violating the Scriptures. He asked me in regard to the matter, and I answered: "He cannot." However, he wants your understanding of it. Make it as strong as possible in the next issue of the Gospel Advocate.

X.
This is a subject upon which we do not propose to dogmatize. Yet we regard it out of harmony with the will of God, and often detrimental to happiness. God did not allow the Jews to marry Gentiles, lest they should thereby be turned into idolatry or other sins; and the figurative bearing of the old covenant upon the new would indicate that Christians should not marry those not Christians. As unholy alliances are liable to lead to wrong then, similar alliances are required to abstain from all appearance of evil. The principle of improper alliances has never changed. Paul says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." While I am not at all certain that expression, there is a principle in it that would include the entire matter of marrying out of the Lord. When a Christian marries out of the Lord, he is unequally yoked, and thus violates the principle expressed by Paul, whether he was speaking of such marriages or not. The expression of Paul regarding a widow, when he says, "She is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord," certainly presents a principle that is applicable to all Christians regarding marriage, and no Christian has the right to disregard it. In choosing a companion for life, every child of God should seek one that will in nowise be a hindrance to him in living the Christian life; but, on the other hand, one that will help on in the work, so that the two may throw their efforts together in living the Christian. The Christian is to lay aside every weight and besetting sin. To marry out of the Lord is liable to add a temptation or tendency to sin which would be wrong. Besides, when a child of God marries out of the Lord, he is liable to take on a hindrance to his religious happiness the rest of his life. Very often those who marry thus take a thorn into their sides that they never get rid of. For all these considerations, and others that might be mentioned, it is certainly an improper thing for a Christian to marry out of the Lord.

Brother Sewell: Will you please explain, through the Gospel Advocate, 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 and 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12?
M. P. CARTER.

The passage from 1 Cor. is: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." The one from 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12 is: "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." These passages are just as plain as the matter can be made, and I do not know of any other passages that modify their application. Any one can understand them; but the trouble is, many are not satisfied with what they teach, and do not want to submit to it. There are many women that are not satisfied with the word of the Lord in the silent, modest position that it assigns them, and plenty of rash men to encourage them to step over the line. This is where the trouble comes in. These people to-day are just like Balaam was when Balak sent for him to curse Israel for him. When he went to the Lord as to what he should do, the Lord said: "Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed." This language was plain, and at first Balaam was willing to go by it, and sent the messengers back, telling them the Lord refused to let him go with them. But Balak sent other messengers, more honorable than the first, and proposed to promote him to great honors and to do anything for him that he might say do. This proposal was a great temptation to Balaam, and so he said to these messengers: "Tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the Lord will say unto me more." (You will find these sayings in Num. 22.) Thus Balaam, knowing exactly what the Lord said, and not satisfied with it, sought for something more that would justify him to go. So the Lord let him go, as he always lets people go their own way when they are not willing to go his way. But he forced Balaam to speak his word. Yet Balaam still tried to curse Israel; but the Lord forced him to bless them every time, and so Balaam was not permitted to earn the reward from Balak. But Balaam still tried to help Balak against Israel, and lost his life in his wicked effort. So the Lord to-day will let women and men go their own way when they are not willing to go his way, but he will hold them to a strict account for it in the end. The women that preach and speak in public, in the church, are guilty of the same sort of sin that cost Balaam his life, while the men that encourage them in it are equally guilty. Let all, therefore, that reverence the word of God fear and tremble at the thought of such flagrant disregard of God's word. The language of Paul is plain enough for all that tremble at his word, and we need not try to make it plainer. The question simply is: Will we obey it?

Brother Lipscomb: I am now located at Plant City, Fla. This is a nice little place, with two railroads, but the disciples have no place in the town to meet and break bread and be protected from bad weather. Besides all of this, the gospel, unmixed with human error, needs to be preached at Plant City. Now, I know that the disciples are able to buy a lot and build a neat little house on it. Brother Lipscomb, this is your business as much as mine and it will be your house as much as mine, and I have determined, God being my helper, to do what I can in getting a lot and a good little house on it in a good location in Plant City. Now, if our brotherhood will send me—all that are able to do so—ten cents apiece, I will buy the lot and get the lumber and see that the house is built. Now, Brother Lipscomb, you can, I know, write an article to the brotherhood at large and soon get up this little bit of money. Lumber is very cheap here. I will take care of all preaching brethren passing this way as best I can and do what I can to get people to worship God according to the teaching of the New Testament. May God help you and me in his work. You may answer through the Gospel Advocate or by letter. I refer you to L. L. Sutton, Christian preacher, Bushnell, Fla., and W. E. Daugherty, Hampton, Fla.
H. M. MOBLEY,
Plant City, Fla.

Brother Lipscomb: Our brother in Christ, R. S. Lyons, of Russellville, Ky., who has just left us after preaching for this community for eight or ten days, requested me to write you and tell you of the need of this community of a building in which to serve God. Brother Lyons is the first Christian preacher who ever came in our midst, and he astonished the people. I myself, individually, had hoped and intended building a church house without asking any assistance, but circumstances decreed otherwise. My son, W. P. Hahn, proposes to give fifty dollars and the ground; he will also supervise the construction of the house. Now, cannot you lay the matter before your readers and see if they will not assist us? The Baptists and Methodists both have church houses here; surely we ought to be as zealous as they are. The Baptists refused to let Brother Lyons preach in their church house, hence he preached in my son's tobacco barn. The Baptist church house cost six hundred dollars. I am satisfied we can build one just as good for five hundred dollars. Now, we want to build our house this fall or winter, and I want it fully paid for before we dedicate it to God's service. As to reliability and integrity, I refer you to the First National Bank of Greenville, Ky.; as to my son's character, just ask regarding W. P. Hahn; besides, I can refer you to the best of people in Owensboro and Louisville, Ky. Situated as I am, I cannot commune, as the Baptists adhere to close communion. Brother Lyons said he would write to you and you can write him and make all necessary inquiries. MATILDA C. HAHN, McNary, Ky.

We publish these two letters and would like for these congregations to have houses in which to meet to worship, but there are some things in both letters to which we call attention. The house in which a church meets is not the house of God in a sense in which any house that a Christian uses is not a house of God. The house of God is a spiritual temple, built of lively and living stones, of which Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone. In the fleshly, temporal kingdom this spiritual house was typified by the material temple in Jerusalem; but under the spiritual dispensation the only house God has instructed to be built for him is a spiritual temple, the church of the true and living God. The house Christians meet in is for their convenience, built of their own will and volition; for God has nowhere required it, and it is as much their own as the houses in which they live, only they make a more public use of it. It is built for their convenience and comfort and frequently to gratify their pride as much as the houses in which they live are. I think it is just as legitimate to build houses in which to meet and worship as it is to buy clothes to wear to church. These are questions God has left to the judgment and surroundings of Christians. Worship to him would be just as acceptable out of doors or in private houses as in meetinghouses. It is right to make provisions for a place where worship can be rendered in comfort and without distraction from discomfort or danger to health, but too much importance is given to the meetinghouse and often too much money is spent on it; at other times it is too much neglected and too filthy and uncomfortable. God loves things neat and orderly wherever we are. It is a mistake, then, that the house would belong as much to those at a distance as to those who use it. If others contribute to build it, it is for those who use it, and it is theirs. This does not mean that others should not help build it. I wish to say that after nearly fifty years' experience in the work, I believe a tobacco barn or a blacksmith shop or a tent or an arbor in the woods or a shady street corner is a better place for preaching the gospel to sinners than church houses. Sinners have become shy of church houses and have become disgusted with church members and their doings in many places, and an independent work in seeking them in other places will be much more effective and will be more in accordance with the examples set by the Master and his apostles. We must quit relying on church houses and formal services of professional preachers. We must go to the people in their own homes or in places where the common people will congregate; we must, as individuals, appeal personally and earnestly to individuals, or our work will be a failure. We are not opposed to meetinghouses, but we wish to see a zeal and earnestness and devotion that will not wait for nor depend upon meetinghouses or any other external appurtenances and comforts to spread the religion of Christ. A shade of a tree or a bush arbor is an excellent place for preaching in the summer and autumn. Do not let us wait for meetinghouses to preach to the people, when they can be reached without them better than with the houses.

All that thou hast and all thou art;
Renounce all strength but strength divine,
And peace shall be forever thine;
Behold the paths the saints have trod,
The paths which led them home to God.

ON DUTY.

Uncle Alex. came out on the piazza, with his newspaper, and was just going to seat himself in one of the armchairs, when a very large spider, weaving its web among the vines, attracted his attention.

He went closer to look at it, and presently called to Neddie, who was playing in the yard: "Neddie, come and see this huge spider."

"I cannot come now, Uncle Alex.," replied Neddie, "I'm on duty."

Uncle Alex. stopped looking at the spider, and looked at Neddie. He had a paper soldier cap on, and, carrying his toy gun, was gravely pacing up and down before his tent, which was pitched on the grass under a big cherry tree. Will. Ramsey and two or three other boys were in the adjoining meadow, galloping along on sticks and flourishing wooden swords. There was probably a battle going on, though the cows, chewing their cuds under the trees, did not seem to be frightened.

"What are you doing?" asked Uncle Alex.

"I'm a sentinel on guard," said Neddie.

"Can't you come over here just a minute, if I watch the tent?"

"No, indeed!" answered Neddie, decidedly. "Soldiers must not go away a second when they are on duty."

"Well, well," said Uncle Alex., seeming quite amused, as he sat down to his paper.

Toward the close of the afternoon, when the tent was deserted and the boys were playing something else at the other side of the house, Neddie's mother came out on the porch from the kitchen, carrying a small basket.

She looked hastily around, and then called: "Neddie, Neddie, where are you?"

"Here, mamma!" he shouted, bounding around the side of the house and up the steps.

"I want you to go over to the store and get me two pounds of sugar and half a pound of raisins," said his mother, adding, as she gave him the basket and some money: "Now, don't be gone long. I am making something good for supper, and I want those things as soon as possible."

About ten minutes after Neddie had gone, Uncle Alex. started to the post office. When he reached the little brook which had to be crossed to get to the village, he saw Neddie standing on the bridge throwing pebbles into the water.

"Halloo, Neddie," he said. "I thought you were on duty."

"No, sir," replied the boy, looking in surprise. "We're not playing soldier now. Mamma sent me on an errand."

"Did she send you here to throw pebbles in the brook?"

"No, sir; she sent me to the store."

"I thought I heard her giving you a commission which was to be executed with promptness and dispatch; and, knowing you to be such a soldierly fellow, who could not be tempted away from duty a moment, I wonder, rather, to see you standing here."

Then Uncle Alex. stroked his whiskers meditatively and knit his brow, as though he were trying to study the matter out.

Neddie, with a puzzled expression, looked stendly into his uncle's face for a moment or two, and then, turning his steps toward the village, was off like a flash.

Uncle Alex. was standing on the post office steps, reading a letter, when he happened to see Neddie come out of the grocery store with his basket and walk rapidly homeward. Some little boys on the other side of the street also spied him, and, running over, surrounded him, evidently wanting him to stop with them a little while. But he, though in a very good-natured way, declined their invitation and kept on his way; he realized he was on duty.—Sunday School Evangelist.

NOT FOR PRACTICAL RESULTS.

I regret one tendency in our country, admirable as her institutions are. It is almost heresy to say it, but I do not mind taking the responsibility, for that is one of the things I am used to. I refer to the increase of higher education for the masses. The Anglo-Saxon has easily outstripped all his competitors in those things which make for the commercial growth and success of nations, because he has been, above all others, practical. While the preparation for professional life requires advanced knowledge, it seems to me that the vast majority of our young people spend too many of their vigorous years, inside the schoolroom, and not enough in the practical work of life. The years from fifteen to twenty-one are especially valuable, for they are years of keen observation, individuality, and confidence. In many cases—quite too many—they are spent in cramming the mind with knowledge that is not likely to help a young man in the work he is best fitted to do. How many young men with college educations are standing about waiting for something that will never come, because the work that lies nearest at hand is not to their liking? Somehow or other, our schools which teach young people how to talk do not teach them how to live. People need little, but want much. Since I first went to California, one-third of my mail has been made up of appeals for help, and these calls are equally divided between requests for contributions to help to pay off debts and mortgages which should not have been contracted; applications of young men out of work, who always have my sympathy; and cries for succor from the sick and suffering poor, who must be cared for, whatever may be the cause of their sickness or their poverty—and the poor we have always with us. The sons of farmers are forsaking the fields because the cities are more attractive to them. It seems to me that slowly, but surely, there is growing up a stronger and stronger wall of caste, with good, honest labor on one side and frivolous gentility on the other. We seem to be fast outgrowing those things which, when our fathers lived, were called "sterling qualities," but now are called "follies," or "work that a gentleman should not do," as if all honest work were not honorable work.

It would be one of the most unfortunate things in the world if the present generation of young people should widen that wall or build it higher, for so to do would be to render a return to old-fashioned principles more difficult. Americans have become what they are by sticking to the right side of that line of demarcation.—Collis P. Huntington, in September Success.

BABY FOXES AT PLAY.

One of the most fascinating bits of animal study is to begin at the very beginning of fox education—i. e., to find a fox den, and go there some afternoon in early June and hide at a distance where you can watch the entrance through your field glass. Every afternoon the young foxes come out to play in the sunshine, like so many kittens. Bright little bundles of yellow fur they seem, full of tricks and whims, with pointed faces that change only from exclamation to interrogation points, and back again. For hours at a stretch, they roll about and chase tails, and pounce upon the quiet old mother with fierce little barks.

One climbs laboriously up the rock behind the den, and sits on his tail, gravely surveying the great landscape, with a comical little air of importance, as if he owned it all. When called to come down, he is afraid, and makes a great to-do about it. Another has been crouching for five minutes behind a tuft of grass, watching, like a cat at a rat hole, for some one to come by and be pounced upon. Another is worrying something on the ground—a cricket, perhaps, or a "doodle bug"—and the fourth never ceases to worry the patient old mother till she moves away and lies down by herself in the shadow of a ground cedar.

As the afternoon wears away and long shadows come creeping up the hillside, the mother rises suddenly, and goes back to the den. The little ones stop their play, and gather about her. You strain your ears for the slightest sound, but hear nothing. Yet there she is, plainly talking to them; and they are listening. She turns her head, and the cubs scamper into the den's mouth.

A moment she stands listening, looking; while, just within the dark entrance, you get glimpses of four pointed black noses and a cluster of bright little eyes, wide open for a last look. Then she trots away, planning her hunt, till she disappears down by the brook. When she is gone, eyes and noses draw back. Only a dark, silent hole in the bank is left. You will not see them again—not unless you stay to watch by moonlight till mother fox comes back, with a fringe of field mice hanging from her lips or a young turkey thrown across her shoulders.—William J. Long.

THE WALL OF PEKING.

Writing on the city of Peking, the London Engineer says that the walls of the Tartar city are of an average height of fifty feet, but portions of the north wall reach the height of sixty-one feet. Their average width is about forty feet, but they have been built so irregularly that in places a width of fifty-seven feet is found; in others, a width of only twenty-two feet. The outer face of the wall is perpendicular, while its inner face slopes, in some places very considerably. Parapets are erected on both inner and outer faces of the wall, that on the latter being loop-holed and crenelated. At intervals of about fifty or sixty yards are large buttresses, every six being of much larger size than the others; the smaller ones are from fifteen feet to twenty feet square. Part of the inner brick lining having fallen away from the north wall, an opportunity was afforded of observing its construction. Near the gates the walls are occasionally faced with stone, but in other parts by immense bricks which bear a strong resemblance to stone. The space between the facings is filled up, first, by a solid foundation of concrete of some ten feet in depth, then by a layer of well-rammed earth; another layer of concrete and another of earth succeed, the latter being paved with large blocks of granite, which form the terreplein. The earth to fill in the wall was taken from the ditch which surrounds the city. The concrete resisted all the efforts of our sappers to form a trench on the terreplein during the last war. Each of the gates has a buttress on either side, connected with a semicircular wall, which thus forms an enceinte. That of the central south gate is larger than any of the others, and is the only one with three entrances, the central gate being for the use of the emperor or his family alone. The arches of the gateways are well built.

KEEP ONE IRON HOT.

I have in mind two girls, writes Marguerite Brooks, in Success for September, who, although not college-trained, had unusual opportunities for culture and home study. One of them had learned, or rather acquired, a superficial knowledge of shorthand, typewriting, bookkeeping, drawing, and painting on China, but had not really possessed herself, so to speak, of any one of those things. She is intelligent and widely read, and yet for nearly a year she has been trying in vain to get a position, even at six dollars a week, while she has the mortification of seeing others younger and less intelligent accepted in offices where she has been refused employment. They could say, with some measure of confidence, that they could do at least one thing well, while she, when questioned, gave timid, hesitating replies, and was obliged to confess that she was not master of any one of her crafts.

The other girl had studied telegraphy, penmanship, two or three foreign languages; had attended current literature classes and debating societies; and was broadly intelligent along general lines. But her penmanship was not good enough to recommend her as a copyist; her knowledge of telegraphy was not sufficiently thorough to get her work in an office; she could neither speak nor write any one of the three languages she had studied, nor could she conduct a debate or instruct a class in current literature.

You do not wonder, do you, that this young woman found no place among the world's busy, practical workers?

What I wish to impress upon you, girls, is not to go out in life with the idea that you have so many irons in the fire that one or more will surely succeed. You must be certain that at least one of your irons is at white heat, or your high hope and ambition will end in disappointment and failure.

There are numbers of men that are not willing to do anything for Christ, because they cannot do some great thing. Now, you will find that the men that have accomplished a great work in this world have always begun by doing some little thing; they have been willing to bring forth some little fruit.—D. L. Moody.

Editorial.

COVETOUSNESS.

When Christ was in this world, he did not entangle himself with worldly affairs, but devoted himself wholly to doing the will of his Father who sent him. His kingdom was not of this world. He says: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." He has left us an example that we should walk in his steps. Even so the Christian should be dead to the world, and should never be in love with money, which is a root of all evil. Paul says of the Christian: "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." (Col. 3: 3, 4.) Again to Timothy he states this important truth: "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (1 Tim. 6: 7-10.) The beloved John shows us why we should not be covetous: "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (1 John 2: 16, 17.)

"Covetousness" may be defined as overbearing avarice, a strong and eager desire of possessing something without giving a fair and just equivalent. It is a fearful sin and one to be shunned as a deadly viper. Achan is a striking example of covetousness. He describes as follows his own wrongdoing: "Indeed I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done: when I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them; and behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it." (Josh. 7: 20, 21.) Another noted example of covetousness is that of Ahab coveting Naboth's vineyard: "And it came to pass after these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria. And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house; and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money. And Naboth said to Ahab, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee." (1 Kings 21: 1-3.) All Bible readers are aware that Ahab was displeased with the answer of Naboth and that he lay upon his bed and would eat nothing. Jezebel, the cruel and heartless queen, hired two wicked men to slay Naboth, so that Ahab could secure the vineyard.

Covetousness is classed with the vilest of sins. Many people, and even professed Christians, are guilty of this heinous sin who would be insulted if it should be intimated to them that they were not respectable. This sin is as black as any other. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 6: 9, 10.) Covetousness is as black before God as theft, adultery, and drunkenness.

The danger to those who have great riches is that they grow to trust in their riches instead of in the true and living God. They learn to love them, lay up treasure on earth, instead of laying up treasure in heaven. How hard to get rich men to realize that treasures placed in the bank of heaven can never fail! They forget that God is able to give them more and more if they will use their means to his glory. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.) Jesus commanded the rich young ruler, who came to him asking what to do to inherit eternal life, to keep the commandments. When he learned he had kept these from his youth, Jesus said unto him: "Yet lackest thou one thing; sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me. And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich." He was sorrowful, not willing to part with his riches in order to inherit eternal life. How vain, how deceptive are riches! When God blesses us abundantly, we go to pulling down our barns to build greater. We lose sight of everybody but self. Self crowds even Christ out of the heart. We say: "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." It is so easy to imagine that wealth is all that it is a panacea for all our ills. We never made a greater mistake, "for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Life is character, and not possession, for the millionaire is often a pauper before God. The man is wise who builds a character that will outlive the wreck of ages. Building character is a slow process; it is the work of a life. The passions are not all subdued in a day. The desire to use riches to advance our own selfish ends is not overcome without a severe conflict. God will help us if we put our trust in him. To gain the whole world and lose our own soul would be eternal bankruptcy. How fearful for God to say to us at life's close: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?" The danger is in not using our riches as God directs. Beware of covetousness. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

THE HOLY SPIRIT—HIS OFFICE.

Brother Lipscomb: I want to ask you a question through the Gospel Advocate, and I want it answered as plainly as possible. Are the Holy Ghost and the Holy Spirit the same, and what part does he take in the conversion of a sinner? I want this answered for the benefit of some of the sects in this neighborhood. A SISTER.

Mansfield, Tex.

The Holy Ghost and the Holy Spirit are one and the same. "Holy Spirit" is the better expression, as a ghost is the disembodied spirit of a dead person, so understood generally. But the Holy Spirit is not the ghost of a dead or departed being; he is a living spirit, a Person of the Godhead. Hence, it is not well to call him a "ghost," even a "Holy Ghost." In the revision of the Scriptures, many revisers were in favor of always translating the word "Spirit," save those of the Church of England. The "Holy Ghost" was so used in their book of prayer, and they were unwilling to drop it out. Out of deference to that feeling, "Ghost" was transferred to the Revised Version, which seems to me to show more respect to their habits and prejudices than to the Spirit of God.

The Spirit performed the same office in the material world that he performs in the spiritual world.

In the material world God the Father provided all things; Jesus, the Word, created all things. (John 1: 1-3; Heb. 1: 2; Col. 1: 16.) Then when all things had been created, the Spirit moved upon the face of the waters and organized and put in working order that which had been created by the Word. (Gen. 1: 2.) So all the six days' work recorded in Gen. 1 was performed by the Spirit, who organized and gave laws to this matter, and in and through these laws guides matter forward in the work it was created to accomplish. "By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens." (Job 26: 13.) "Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created: and thou renewest the face of the earth." (Ps. 104: 30.) This refers to the putting forth of vegetation in the spring season of the year. Again, Isa. 40: 7 says: "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it." These seem to teach that the Spirit of God organized matter, gave it laws to govern its operations, and he dwells in and through these laws and directs matter forward to the end for which it was created.

So in the spiritual world. God the Father provided, Jesus the Son came and created, the matter and beginning of the spiritual world, and the Holy Spirit, on the day of Pentecost, came to that new creation, organized it, gave it laws, and took up his abode in these laws and is guiding it forward to the accomplishment of the work it was created to accomplish.

On the day of Pentecost (Acts 2) the Holy Spirit came down from heaven; he took up his abode in the new creation, and, through the apostles, the Holy Spirit taught the sinners they must believe that Jesus the Christ is the Lord, must repent of their sins and be baptized unto the remission of their sins. This was the miraculous beginning; but the work of the Holy Spirit is clearly manifested. He, through the disciples, preached Christ to the sinners; told them to believe, repent, and be baptized, that their sins might be forgiven, and they should then receive the Holy Spirit as the abiding guest to dwell with them. But as Adam and Eve were miraculously created and after them no life has been imparted directly and no child has come into existence, save through the laws given by the Spirit for procreation, so no one since the first age of the church has received the Spirit miraculously or directly from God, but through the laws the Spirit gave to impart and develop spiritual life.

When the Holy Spirit came on Pentecost, he, through the apostles, told the people what to do; they did it. In doing what the Spirit commanded them, they were led by the Spirit unto the remission of their sins and into the church of God. The Spirit led them through the words he spoke. Every one who received those words into the heart and obeyed them was led by the Spirit into the church of God. These words were not only spoken, but they were written down and perpetuated for all people for all time. The Holy Spirit does not come down directly from heaven as he did then and put words into the minds of disciples to teach others. The words spoken then and written down and perpetuated are as much the direction of the Spirit now as they were then. If one hears those words, believes them, and obeys them, he as much follows the directions of the Spirit as did those people on Pentecost.

Again, the Spirit preached the gospel to the world through the disciples. He still does this. When the disciples hear the words spoken by the Holy Spirit on Pentecost, receive them into their hearts, mold their lives according to these words, and teach these same things to sinners, the Spirit of God is teaching sinners through the disciples as much as he did on Pentecost, because the words written are as much the words of the Spirit as the same words spoken are. So spiritual life is transmitted and perpetuated through the laws the Spirit gave in the spiritual world just as it is in the material world. The Spirit takes up his abode in the laws of the spiritual world just as he did in the laws of the material world. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." (John 6: 63.) A clearer and more connected statement would be: "The Spirit gives life, the flesh assists nothing. The words that I speak unto you are spirit and living." The Spirit gives life, and the words are spiritual and life-giving, are the points that correspond and are explanatory of each other. To receive spiritual life, the words that are spirit and living must be received into the heart. To this agrees the parable of the sower: "The word of God is the seed of the kingdom." In the seed dwells the principle that is to be quickened into life. Many other passages teach the same thing. The Spirit, when he came direct from heaven, took up his abode in the hearts of Christians and through them spoke to, pierced the hearts, and taught sinners the way of life. The Spirit of God dwells in that word and through that word received into the heart molds the feelings of the heart, directs the lives, and makes their characters like to the character of the Son of God.

Every word of the Scriptures was written by the Holy Spirit. The things taught in the Scriptures are the teaching of the Holy Spirit. The Bible is the teaching of the Holy Spirit to the world. There is not a spiritual truth or thought among men that is not revealed and does not come through the Bible. The Bible is the teaching of the Spirit to the world; it is the only teaching the Spirit has ever given the world. The office of the Spirit was to give the Bible to the world, then in and through that Bible to guide the world and to fit all who will receive that word into the heart for heaven. Without the word of God, no one would know there is a Holy Spirit or a Christ, the Savior of the world; nor would any one know God as he is.

WHEN A MAN IS FREE FROM SIN, AGAIN.

Brother Lipscomb: I thank you for the courtesy shown in giving my article a place, with your comments, etc. Let me ask that you give me this one more hearing through the Gospel Advocate, with your sober, serious comments. I am sure you have never grasped the thought in the query in your comment on my question. You say that you cannot see the point in these hairsplitting arguments, as it would require to know when the fetus became a child to answer the question, and the Lord has given no information along this line. This, I think, is misleading and fails to touch the question, as the information sought is not when the fetus becomes a child, etc., but if a man who believes with all his heart that Christ is the Son of God, repents, and confesses Christ, is a sinner while doing the above. If he is a sinner when he is baptized, is not a sinner baptized into Christ, seeing that remission is promised upon his being baptized? In order for any one to be baptized he must be buried and raised up from the burial. (Rom. 6: 4, 5.) If this is true, then the one baptized is not born of water till he is raised up. A child is not born so long as its mother's womb retains it. The child must be taken from the womb before there is a birth. So when one is buried in water and raised up from the water he is born of God if he has believed upon the Christ, repented of his past sins, confessed the Christ, and submitted to baptism in order to obey God. Is he not? (John 1: 12, 13; Gal. 4: 6; Tit. 3: 5.) Paul says: "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." We note the fact that remission of sins comes between the birth and sending of the Spirit into their hearts. (Acts 2: 38.) So it is plain that God remits the sins of his child which were committed before he was a child.

Now to the question: Is a man who believes, repents, and confesses Christ a sinner or a servant of God while he is yielding the above-mentioned obedience to God? If he is a sinner when he yields himself to obey baptism, is not a sinner baptized into Christ? I think Paul settles the question forever: "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" etc. (Rom. 6: 16.) The man who believes, repents, and confesses Christ is obeying God. So is a servant of God. Hence when he obeys baptism, a servant of God is baptized into Christ, and not a sinner, as in this service, or obedience, he becomes a child of God; and to a child parental mercy is extended in remitting all past sins.

So it appears that Brother Cawthon is altogether correct, and has solved the problem over which Brother Burnett and others have been contending. So, Brother Lipscomb, I think good—yea, much good—will come of the solution, as when those who have been fighting each other over the issue as to whether God will or will not hear sinners study the solution of Brother Cawthon they will see their mistake in classing the believing penitent with sinners and understand the blind man that God would hear those doing his will.

I think that our dear brother, F. D. Srygley, accepted the exegesis of Brother Cawthon as true when he submitted it to the Gospel Advocate without comment. Our hearts go out to his loved ones in sympathy, and I pray that the strong arm of his God will bear them safely over all the billows of life's tempestuous sea and at last land them safely on the shore of sweet deliverance, where they will meet him and clasp hands in an eternal greeting.

Eunola, Ala.

J. R. HAND.

I think all was said on this subject that need to be said by Brother Cawthon and in my response of August 30. If a child is not a child until it is born in the natural world, one is not a child of God until it is brought forth, or been baptized. If it is not a child of God before that time, it is because it was not freed from sin. So one is not freed from sin until the sins have been forgiven and he has been born of the water and of the Spirit in baptism. That agrees exactly with the teaching of the Bible. Our brother complained that I referred to the sins of Christians after they have been baptized; but when he quotes the blind man's language, "We know that God heareth not sinners," he goes to the same class, because this passage refers to those who claim to be his servants, yet who sin against him, as do all the passages bearing on the same subject in Proverbs. The passage, "Because ye are sons, God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father. So that thou art no longer a bondservant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir through God" (Gal. 4: 6, 7, R. V.), has not the most remote reference to when or how the Spirit was received or when he became a son. He was presenting the difference between the Jews who under Moses were regarded as servants. Under Christ they are sons; and when they became sons, God bestowed on them the Spirit of his Son, not the spirit of a servant. Read the connection, embracing chapter 3.

It is sometimes argued that faith changes the heart; repentance, the life; and baptism, the state. This is true in a modified sense, but it is a distinction not needful for the understanding and obedience of the gospel, for it is not made in the Scriptures. Peter says: "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth." Distinctions not made by the Holy Spirit are not necessary, and are almost certain to lead to confusion and strife.

All this theory is to meet an imaginary difficulty, and does not then meet it. The truth alone meets the difficulties. The truth is, a man who has been a sinner has had the germ of life implanted in his heart through receiving the word of God into his heart, or through belief of the truth, and desires to be freed from sin. He, with the "old man," is buried, and in the act the sins are forgiven, and he arises a forgiven and purified soul. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." A grain with the germinal principle of life within it is planted, the old grain perishes, and a new plant comes forth. To accept these things as the Bible is the part of faith and wisdom. To introduce other theories and speculations is to introduce confusion and do harm.

I repeat again: Ceasing to sin does not purge or purify the soul from sin. It is a necessary step to it, but until past sins are forgiven, blotted out, purged away, washed away by God, the person is a sinner. The same act that puts him into Christ frees him from sin, and this removes all the imaginary difficulty. Some of the old writers that the Baptists quote as their ancestors put it this way: "We go down into the water full of sin and pollutions, but come up again bringing forth fruit." This is attributed to Barnabas, Paul's companion, and is quoted by all Baptist historians in tracing their descent from the apostles. It is not the writing, I think, of Barnabas, but it is a strong expression of an early writer. Professor Stifler, in getting out the Baptist Sunday school papers, gave expression to a similar thought that created quite a commotion. But the idea aimed at is a scriptural one: that God forgives sins in baptism; hence Ananias told Saul: "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Hackett, the eminent Baptist commentator, presents the true idea: "And wash away thy sins." This clause states a result of the baptism in language derived from the nature of the ordinance. It answers, too, for the remission of sins in Acts 2: 38—i. e., submit to the rite in order to be forgiven."

The truth is, God forgives sins when the persons express or show their faith by being baptized; and there is no promise of freedom from sin until this is done. All efforts to evade this truth involve in greater difficulties. Let it stand just as God presents it.

THAT DISCUSSION.

Editor Folk, in the Baptist and Reflector of September 13, 1900, complains that I did not publish any of his last article. Yes, and we did not reply to his article. We commented on his style of discussion, and declined discussions in which one makes scraps of his opponent's article and presents to his readers only what he wishes them to see. I made the general statement that while failing to correct former misrepresentations, he made additional ones in this. He proposes now to discuss the question: "The plan of salvation includes only repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." It is a new position for Baptists that anything more than faith is required. I presume that he intends to deny that the obedience of faith is requisite to salvation. If so, I of course deny his position; but I think the question can be stated to bring out the points of difference more clearly, for there is a sense in which I believe his proposition true. But there must be agreement as to the space occupied, when to begin, and when to end. That, I would suggest, could be better settled by private correspondence or conference.

A Tired Woman's Refuge.

"By all means use sometimes to be alone." If George Herbert meant his wise sayings for both men and women, he could not have known how difficult a thing it is for a woman ever to be alone. A man who had many cares and much anxious thought for an invalid at home said: "When I get to my office, I sit down in the big chair and put my feet up and take my paper and draw a long breath and feel how good it is to be quiet." True, he may be interrupted, but the chances are that a quiet hour may be his at the beginning of the day.

In the home it is different. The mother goes to her room and closes the door. Some one knocks. "The man is here with the eggs." The doorbell rings; there is another tap at the door. "Mrs. M. is down stairs and would like to see you a minute." The minute proves to be more than an hour and for nothing, except that the good lady who came wanted to talk to somebody. That was well enough, but sometimes one needs to be alone with the restfulness of being sure that no one can disturb the next five minutes, or fifteen, or more. It would mean more than nerve tonics and sage advice from the doctor, but how is one to get it? It cannot be found in the home, for the "man with the eggs" will come; it cannot be found in a long, free walk over the mountain or through the woods, for there one must not go alone.

"My corner" has solved the problem for me. Its greatest charm is that it is mine, and when I am there I am not to be found any more than if I had gone out of town for the day. It is not in the house, but near enough to be quickly reached. It is shut in by three high walls of a building of stone, with red, sloping roofs. Just a bit of blue sky can be seen overhead and the clouds appear and disappear. It is for the time a little world by itself. The birds come and sit on the ridgepole and talk to each other. A tiny tree grows close by my seat, which is only a narrow step by an unused door—a seat of stone, hard and very narrow, but I would not have it different. It is high, too, so that I can reach it only by the help of an old box.

Every leaf and twig and blade of grass in my corner has something to say to me. It was my refuge in the scarlet fever time, when duty to others took the father away to some uninfected home, and in the hours for rest I found friends in the birds and the sky and my tree in the corner. Sometimes on the way home from market, when the amount of money to be spent and the number of household needs have not been in accord, my corner has been a refuge, and in the light of the blue sky above, the perplexing questions have vanished and the right proportion of things has been found. Better than any rest cure has been my restful corner. Would it were possible for every busy and tired woman to find one!—Mrs. A. H. Bradford, in Congregationalist.

The science of the Bible, like other sciences, is useless unless used. It will do the farmer no good to know how plowing should be done, unless he plows; it will not benefit the architect to understand architecture, unless he builds. So the world's Light will not aid us, unless we walk in it.—Exchange.

Needs of the Hour.

Last month (August) marks one year since my return from Japan. Much of this time has been spent among the churches. As a rule, I have been given a welcome and have been listened to with interest. For this I thank God and take courage. There are some things, however, that seem to me to be lacking.

There is, in the first place, a lack of harmony in the churches. David says: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" There are not many churches, however, thus dwelling together; and, as an opposite thought to that of David's, we must say: "Behold, how bad and how unpleasant it is for brethren to dwell separately in discord!"

Much of the responsibility for this divided condition lies with those who most lament it. It is a chastisement from God for inactivity and lack of duty. The truth is not to be sought simply to have it; it is not to be argued simply to gain a point. "Unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." If a man puts to good use that which he has obtained, the Lord will allow him to keep it, and will add more to it; if he fails, there will be taken from him that which he has. The Lord wants workers, not talkers; he wants those who will act, not argue. In passing the road one day, a brother came out to the front gate and stopped me. He had a question: "Where is it found that if a man says he has no sin, he is a liar and the truth is not in him? The sanctified folks have been around in the neighborhood, and I want to down 'em next time they come around." Now, if this dear brother had been living up to the law of sanctification, which the Bible clearly teaches, he would have been more familiar with the Book; he would not have been seeking a passage nowhere to be found; and, instead of arguing a man down, he would have been seeking to lift him up by the purity of his own life. This thing of downing folks is not the Bible idea, anyway.

Many people seem to have the idea that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is a knock-down gospel; they feel that their special mission is to knock folks down and leave them there. This does not seem to me to be the right view of it. It seems to be the conviction of many that the tares must be rooted up, even if the wheat is destroyed. A certain good brother, for example, was visiting a church monthly. That church had decided that it would keep a man in the field for a year preaching in destitute places. They conferred among themselves and sounded the brethren as to how much they thought they could do. When the brother came to his next appointment, they asked him to help them forward in the matter. In his remarks, he criticised the way they had raised the money; that it ought not to be by subscription, but by the weekly contribution. The brethren thought he had rather thrown a damper on their efforts, and asked him, on his next round, to explain to the church. His explanation at the next meeting was that if what he said killed the effort, it ought to have been killed. Here he left it, and here the church dropped the undertaking and has been at a dead standstill ever since. Now, it is wrong to lead a church out in the wrong

Is most economical, because it is the purest and greatest in leavening strength. In the easy, expeditious preparation of the finer cakes and pastries, Royal is indispensable.

Care must be taken to avoid baking powders made from alum. Such powders are sold cheap, because they cost but a few cents per pound. Not only will they spoil the cake, but alum is a corrosive acid, which taken in food means injury to health.

to do the right thing, but I believe it equally bad to give a church a death-blow and say: "Lie there till you can get up and come to my idea of it." There is more hope for people that are acting even in the wrong way than for those who are not acting at all. I would rather see a man pleading for sanctification, even to the extreme, and be doing all he can to live up to his profession, than one who wants to down him, while at the same time tobacco is oozing out at both corners of his mouth, with spatters of spittle clear down his shirt front; and there is far more hope for a church that is alive to activity in doing good, even by some methods that are questionable, than for the church that is balked and has become a kind of negative interrogation point.

J. M. M'CALEB.

Dallas (Tex.) Notes.

Our sixth missionary meeting was held at Alma, Tex. It began on August 6, 1900, and lasted two weeks. Many churches hold a meeting at their home church each year, and when they have done this they act as if they have done their duty in spreading the gospel.

I know some churches now that hold about one meeting each year, at their home church, and they are strong financially. Churches should be taught not to do this way. Sometimes I think the preachers are to be blamed for the lukewarmness and covetousness of the churches.

The gospel should be preached where there are no churches. I have not been able, so far in life, to find where Peter, John, or Paul had a "circuit among the churches." Go around among the churches each year and hold meetings for them.

Some of our brethren teach against and condemn preachers for locating with a church. Now, what is the difference between locating with one church and locating with several churches? Preachers should teach the churches not to be so covetous and selfish. Think of it—just hold one meeting at home and then feel at ease!

Elders should do as the elders of the church of Christ at Dallas do. They have selected and told me to select destitute places where we may preach the gospel. How many churches are doing this to-day? This church tries to send the gospel to people who know it not. They want to do missionary work, because the Book teaches it, and they want God to bless and save them.

Not long since I went to Alma (a destitute place) for a meeting. I found Dr. Lacy (my old school-teacher) and Brother George Miller (my old Tennessee neighbor) living there. These brethren had not been living there long. Just as soon as these two good men, with their families, moved into this neighborhood and found no church of Christ, they began at once to plant the cause at their new home. So many members of the church of Christ are scattered all over Texas, not meeting at any place and not worshipping God on the first day of the week. I hope those who may read this will do as these brethren (Dr. Lacy and Brother Miller) did at Alma. Go to work yourself to plant the cause. In the judgment, when we meet Christ, will we say: "Why, Jesus, we had no place to go, no place to meet?" Brother, wherever you live, have a place to worship God, and there do it with all your heart. Many brethren try to justify self by saying: "We have no house." Listen! Last November I went to a place near Lancaster, in the country, preached a few days and had several additions. These young Christians met in the schoolhouse until they were refused the use of the house. When they could meet no longer in the schoolhouse, they then met in their homes, from house to house, to break bread and do God's will. When the cause was planted by Peter, James, and Paul, in the happy long ago, the Christians met from house to house, and did their duty. It was the greatest "doing-good age" I have ever read of. So you, brethren, who live where there is no congregation, begin at once, to plant one, and, if you have no church house, meet from house to house, as the first Christians did, on the first day of the week.

In our meeting at Alma we had sixteen baptisms and got the old members around there to go to work in the way of teaching and living the gospel.

I am in a nice tent meeting here in the city now. J. S. DUNN.

Brother Srygley's Death Caused Sorrow in Louisiana.

Writing Brother Larimore from New Orleans, La., Misses Lovie and Dovie Freeman say:

"We sincerely sympathize with you in the loss of Brother Srygley, your dear friend—we were about to say your dearest friend, but we do know he did not, for he could not, love you more devotedly than we do. You have lost a faithful friend, but you still have tens of thousands of as devoted friends as ever loved a child of God wearing his very life away in the service of humanity and the Lord. Your wealth of love and friendship is more than all the gold and gems of earth. Not only you, but the church and the world, have sustained a loss the human race can never estimate. Yes, the untimely death of Brother Srygley is a loss to the race that Jesus died to save that can never be estimated. We thank and praise the Lord that Brother Srygley lived to prepare a volume of your letters and sermons for the press; but it fills our hearts with sorrow, our souls with sadness, and our eyes with tears to know this precious volume would have been but a sample of many volumes of your letters and sermons that would have blessed the world forever, if our beloved brother had lived. All the material—letters, pictures, selections, etc.—collected and preserved by him during his thirty years' correspondence with you should be turned over to some competent brother or sister who loved him, who loves you, who loves the Lord, his people and his cause; you should preach for some congregation or evangelize in some city where all your surroundings would be most favorable; you should begin at the beginning and preach to the end of all you have ever preached; an expert stenographer, in fullest accord and sympathy with you, should be employed by publishers to 'take down' all you might say—having nothing else to think of, to care for, or to do—and volume after volume of 'Letters and Sermons' should be published till all have been given to the world. With sorrow and sadness, with joy and gladness, we are feasting on 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore.' If we could, we would send a copy to every home on earth. We do not wonder that no one has criticised it adversely. No one who loves purity, truth, and righteousness can fail to love this wonderful, helpful, beautiful book. We hope and pray a million copies may be sold, to purify, encourage, and save."

Influences—Their Extent.

I have never had the time that others had to study books, hence have been forced to depend upon observation for my knowledge of many things. This has led me to look into the working of influences in their earlier operations and to forecast the ultimate result, while others would think I was unduly alarmed. Years ago, in a certain community, evil tendencies began to show themselves, and on my raising a note of warning I was ridiculed for my fears. One good brother applied this familiar anecdote to me: A person who was passing along a road came upon a man holding a calf by the tail and hallooing, "Help, help!" "What is the trouble?" asked the traveler. "Trouble enough," the man replied, all out of breath. "Don't you see that hill away across yonder?" "Yes." "Well, about a half mile beyond that there is a sink hole, and I am afraid this calf will fall into it." The danger was a long way off. So it was said of the danger I was warning against. No adequate efforts were made to counteract these influences and every one now sees my predictions were true.

It is a fault with the people to-day, as it was in ancient times, that they do not consider. "My people doth not consider." It is easier to prevent the breaking of the levee than to stop the flood of water after it is broken. In this connection I wish to call the reader's attention to "Sin and Righteousness," a sermon by Larimore in "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." While I have noted the far-reaching extent of evil influences, I have noted also that the same is true of good work and good influences. Lately this truth has been brought forcibly to my attention. Fifty years or more ago there were a stand and seats in sight of my father's house, where Calvin Curlee, and other pioneer preachers like himself, at great personal sacrifice, preached the simple gospel of Christ. That work had no effect on my life then, for neither myself nor my people attended. While this is true, influences were then put in operation that recently carried me a distance of over seven hundred miles, to the Indian Territory, and gave me one of the most enjoyable trips of my life. At that stand in the woods my cousin, Anthony Floyd, and his wife learned the truth, and, notwithstanding family opposition was great, had the moral courage to obey it. Accepting Christ sincerely, his religion became the controlling principle of their lives. They "ordered their house before them." The three sons—all the children—in early life became Christians. One of these and a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren now have membership in the church of Christ at Allen, I. T., and through their influence I recently had a very enjoyable meeting at that place.

How strangely and mysteriously the silent forces work that control our steps in this life! Much of my labor in the gospel has been pioneer work, and I have often felt discouraged at the sparseness of present fruits; but, as I grow older, I try more and more to heed the advice of Solomon: "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that." J. D. FLOYD.

Southwest Texas.

For some time I have said but little in the Gospel Advocate concerning our plans, prospects, and necessities in this field of labor. Up to the present, so far, the cause has not prospered this year, as the world would count prosperity. In this immediate field, known as Southwest Texas in my correspondence, there have been nine protracted meetings held, averaging something like ten days each, the number of additions being fifteen, all told—that is, if the information I have be correct. The preachers were Caleb and Rice Sewell, T. F. Young, G. W. Harvey, John Strode, and the writer. Those who know the Sewells, Young, Harvey, and Strode will know it was no fault of the preaching that results in the way of additions were so meager. So far as this immediate field is concerned, my attention has been given almost exclusively to the work right at my own door, my own active work in the field being, so to speak, rather in the "regions beyond." But all this goes to prove what I have been asserting in my correspondence—namely, that this is a mission field, and that the preachers must either do the work largely at their own expense or be supported in part by contributions from other sources. Experience teaches us to exercise patience in such work as this, teaches us to plant and water and trust God to give the increase by and by.

Later on I purpose writing more concerning matters here. For the present I wish merely to say I shall remain and continue to exercise myself as opportunity offers for the advancement of the Master's kingdom. I will do what I can toward our own support, but will need help. For some months I have received nothing from abroad, and hence have no report to make. In April "A Sister," Nashville, Tenn., contributed $1 for my benefit through the Advocate office. My life and efforts here are an open book, and the reader is at liberty to make inquiry of any one who knows the facts. I commend the matter afresh to the many readers of the Advocate, especially to those who have already sent once to our necessity. There are both a money order office and an express office in our village.

Garth, September 11.—Brother E. H. Boyd, of Jasper, Tenn., closed a meeting at this place last night which resulted in seventeen additions. All made the good confession and were baptized and the meeting closed with good interest. Success to all who are preaching the gospel of Christ.

LUTHER B. JONES.

ARKANSAS.

Chickalah, September 10.—During the past summer I have held a number of protracted meetings. One of these was at old Mount George, where there is an old, established congregation. There were seven additions to the one body. This is a place where a great many of the disciples have preached, and although it is not in the best condition, yet since my labors began there, on January 1, 1900, I note considerable improvement in general interest and fidelity. Thirteen persons have been added to the one body. At Hobart, which is a destitute place, I labored very hard to establish primitive Christianity for ten days; but there were no visible results, except the removal of a good deal of prejudice. Riley's Creek, (Manning post office) is also a destitute place, the only members being Brother C. M. Smith and family, who lately came to Arkansas from Missouri. Here I put forth the greatest effort of my life to teach the truth to the people, who came to hear me more and more all the time, notwithstanding the dust and dry weather. I think a great deal of good was done in sowing the seed which I calculate to go back and reap in the future. There were no additions at that place. From there I went to Red Hill Schoolhouse, near Gravelly, where I spent one week with the disciples, contending for the ancient order of things, but most of the people there were sick and unable to attend the meeting. Although there were no additions, there is not a more loyal, God-fearing little band of true followers of Christ in Arkansas. Promising them to come again and hold another meeting for them when their health is better, I went to Rover, where I am now in a meeting, having good audiences and one baptism to date. I will continue another week, having already preached ten days. Brother P. S. Taylor, in whose home I have been enjoying the hospitalities of a most excellent family during my stay at this place, is the preacher and elder here. Brother Taylor is a good gospel preacher, and was the office editor for Brother R. H. Howard when the Gospel Echo was published at Dardanelle. He was with me at Riley's Creek and at Red Hill. He went away, a short distance from home, one Saturday to preach the word and came back on the following Monday and reported one confession and baptism. Brother Taylor is an old Tennessean, but has been in Arkansas a number of years, and is one of the best men to be found anywhere. I will go from here to Centerville, where I will, for two weeks, endeavor to plant the truth. Centerville is also a destitute place. All of the above-named places are in Yell County. I was so sorry to learn of Brother F. D. Srygley's death, which I did through his father, at Coal Hill. I am trying to make arrangements to enter the Nashville Bible School by the first of next January. My tract which has recently been published is a treatise on the kingdom question, a pamphlet of some thirty-five pages, entitled, "Dan. 2: 44," which gives the subject careful investigation and which is an entire refutation of Adventism and Christadelphianism and brings out the facts in this all-important subject with all possible plainness. This tract costs ten cents a copy or three copies for twenty-five cents. My home office is Chickalah, to which you may send, or order from Brother W. J. Rice, of Covington, Ind. JAMES ARNOLD.

KENTUCKY.

Mackville, September 8.—Our meeting at this place is one week old. There have been nine additions by confession and baptism and two by statement. I will go from here to Willisburg. W. Y. ALLEN.

Flanagan, September 11.—I have held two meetings since my last report—one at Chestnut Grove; the other, at Smithfield. There were sixteen additions in the first meeting and six additions in the other meeting. I am at the home of my father-in-law, Philip Rutledge, for a few days' rest. I expect to be in Nashville, Tenn., God willing, by October 2, 1900. T. Q. MARTIN.

LOUISIANA.

Amite City, September 8.—I began a series of meetings at Sumac, in Giles County, Tenn., on Saturday night before the fourth Lord's day in July, speaking to very attentive audiences, day and night, for ten days. Twelve persons were baptized into the one body and one prodigal renewed her vows to the Lord. After baptizing two persons, after the night meeting, I drove about eight miles in order to catch the early train next morning for Lovettville, Maury County, Tenn., where I began a meeting on the same day and continued eight days, with one baptism. From thence I went to Belk, DeKalb County, Tenn., where I had a very interesting meeting. Six persons were buried with their Lord in baptism, and, I trust, arose with him to walk in newness of life. I have now been laboring in Louisiana, near Amite City, for two weeks, but have not been able as yet to persuade any alien sinners to obey God; but I have persuaded the church to promise to meet to worship God on the first day of the week—a work which they had neglected for perhaps two years. The churches of Christ at Sumac and Belk, Tenn., were also persuaded to do the same. May the Lord bless all and help them to be faithful to the end; and may all preachers of the truth impress more and more upon the minds of Christians everywhere that we must serve the Lord, if we would enjoy his promises hereafter. It will do sinners no good to come into the vineyard and then live in continued rejection of God's law to them as Christians. J. A. CRAIG.

TENNESSEE.

Clarksburg, September 9.—On last Lord's day Brother W. T. Boaz, of Fulton, Ky., who has been assisting the church of Christ at Roans Creek and the church of Christ at Poplar Springs in teaching and proclaiming the Scriptures, preached his "farewell sermons" at these two places. During his two years' labor some forty or fifty persons have proposed to forsake sin and be simply Christians. Brother Boaz proved himself a bold and able advocate of the truth, and, upon his departure, the brethren and sisters extended to him a hearty right hand of fellowship. W. N. ABERNATHY.

Bethel, September 1.—Elder William Spivy, of Maury County, who fails not to declare the whole counsel of God to the church and the world, pleading the authority and completeness of God's will as the only safe path amid the multiplied humanisms and schisms through which God is being robbed to-day of time, talent, and honor, was with us at this place, which is in Hickman County, from August 19, 1900, to August 26, 1900. He faithfully admonished the church and taught the world the will and wisdom of God. The church was strengthened, four persons were baptized, two returned, one came from the Baptists, and much good seed was sown to bring forth fruit at other seasons. S. T. ANDERSON.

Milan, August 12.—Brother J. H. O'Guinne, of Edmondson, recently closed a very interesting and successful meeting with the Fairview congregation, near Milan. Brother O'Guinne is an old soldier of the cross and delivers to the people the message which Christ left to this dying world nineteen hundred years ago in the plain and simple teaching in which it is written, so that even a child may understand. The meeting continued nine days and the results were: Eight souls obeyed the Lord by confession and baptism, and fourteen who had previously obeyed the Lord through gospel preaching united with the brethren at this place. Everything seemed in readiness for the meeting. The weather was fine, the attendance was good, and the behavior was excellent until the close. A SISTER.

Ethridge, September 10.—We lately enjoyed a very successful meeting of eight days' duration, held by our beloved brother, James H. Morton, of Berlin. The immediate results were: Seventeen persons were baptized, three were restored, and six Christians took membership with the congregation, making twenty-six in all; much prejudice was removed; and the church was edified, encouraged, and strengthened by the earnest and logical presentation of the truth by Brother Morton. His favorite title for the Bible is, "Our Father's Book, the Book of Time and the Book of Eternity." There was a good attendance throughout the meeting, and there were three confessions at the close of his last discourse. He will doubtless visit us again in a few weeks. LUCAS NORTH.

Malesus, September 11.—On the fourth Lord's day in August Brother A. B. Barret began a meeting at this place, continuing till the night of the second Lord's day in September. On account of extreme prejudice in the community, the congregations were small, only the brethren attending regularly. But some of the brethren have withstood the storms of persecution for many years, and I trust all will stand fast, remembering the promise: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The visible results were two additions to the one body by confession and baptism. The brethren were made stronger in the faith and more zealous workers for the cause of Christ. Brother Barret has shown himself to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." He is a faithful, earnest minister of the gospel—one who shuns not to "declare the whole counsel of God." We believe much good has been done and trust that the good seed sown will bring forth an abundant harvest. CLAUDIA GILLIKIN.

Manchester, September 10.—I have just closed a good meeting of thirteen days' duration with the church of Christ at Prairie Plains, in Coffee County. As a result of the meeting, twelve persons were baptized. Large audiences attended both morning and evening services, and the order and attention were simply perfect. Several of those added came from the Baptists, but, being dissatisfied with their former baptism, were, upon a confession of faith, baptized "for the remission of sins." Last fall I preached three weeks at that point, under a tent, when twenty-three persons were added to the one body and a congregation established. Since that time the brethren have built and seated a neat, comfortable meetinghouse, in which they have been meeting regularly each Lord's day during this year. They now have a membership of fifty or more and are working nicely. I have rarely met such an earnest little band, and I sincerely trust they may ever remain loyal to the will of the Master and stand firm in the old paths. I will begin a tent meeting at Noah, a point nine miles from this place, on Saturday night, next, to continue indefinitely. JAMES K. HILL.

Tom's Creek, September 11.—On the fourth Lord's day in August I began a meeting at the old Primitive Baptist church house on Coon Creek, in Perry County, and continued, day and night, until the following Thursday night. This was purely a Baptist place and community and this was the first meeting I have ever held there. I labored very hard to preach the gospel and then induce the people to obey it. There was considerable interest and excitement shown during the meeting. The people were discussing and talking about the Scriptures on all sides, and one day we had a regular discussion brought about by a sermon that I was requested to preach on feet washing. While there were no additions, I am sure that much good was done by removing prejudice and sowing the seed in good and honest hearts. On the first Lord's day in September I began a meeting at the schoolhouse on Crooked Creek and continued until the following Sunday, closing early in the morning at the water. During this meeting twelve persons made the good confession and were baptized into the Lord. This meeting should have continued longer, but I had to close in order to reach another appointment. I trust and hope, however, that the seed sown may yet bring forth other fruit. Let us preach the gospel, God's power to save.

J. H. HILL.

Thick, September 11.—Our meeting at Cedar Dell, conducted by Brother F. C. Sowell, began on the first Sunday in this month and closed on the following Sunday night. On the second day of the meeting a little afflicted girl made the good confession and was baptized on the next day. Then a lady in the prime of life, an aged lady, and a man in the prime of life made the good confession and were baptized, and so "the Lord added daily to the church such as should be saved." On the day before the meeting closed another little girl made the good confession and obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine delivered. Being then made free from sin, she became the servant of righteousness and was transplanted in the vineyard of the Lord to walk in newness of life. One brother who had wandered from the path of duty also came back and confessed his faults, requesting the prayers of the church and promising to be more faithful in the future. While I think this the substance of visible results to the church, I think a good impression was made generally, and I do not hesitate to commend Brother Sowell as a faithful gospel preacher, perfectly satisfied to preach and practice what is written. We all love and appreciate him not only for his works' sake, but because he is a dutiful son, a loving brother, a true husband, an affectionate father, a good neighbor, and a true friend.
J. M. T. WHITE.

Delphia, September 9.—Brother G. W. McQuiddy began a protracted meeting at this place on August 28, 1900, and continued, day and night, for six days. Brother McQuiddy is a most excellent speaker, a splendid reasoner, and employs choicest language in presenting the truth. With the prejudice he had to meet, no one could have drawn a larger or more attentive hearing. In a mild, gentle, and effective way he preached Christ, and him crucified, and exhorted the people to accept the conditions of salvation while they had time and opportunity; that the present alone was ours. Brother McQuiddy has sown good seed, which we pray will eventually yield a rich reward for his labors. One honest, deep thinker from the Methodist Church yielded obedience, and desired to be just a Christian—only this, and nothing more. Brother McQuiddy cannot fail to do good wherever he goes; for, although a young man, he is a tower of strength to the church and one of its most promising defenders. There was once a flourishing church of Christ at this place, but our house became too much impaired to worship in, and the leading members have, most of them, died or scattered abroad, and for the past twenty years the church has been dead spiritually, until about two years ago, when the few who remained made an effort to unite in the one cause to build a house in which to meet, and, by great exertion and much sacrifice, we have, as the fruits of our labor, a neat little house, and we meet each Lord's day. Our membership numbers forty-three. I feel sure the church has been greatly strengthened by Brother McQuiddy's labors, and much prejudice has been removed. We ask an interest in the prayers of all Christians.
A SISTER.

Gainesboro, September 9.—I began a meeting at Hall Schoolhouse, in Jackson County, on the first Lord's day in August and continued till the following Thursday. Two persons were baptized—one from the world and one from the Presbyterians—and two renewed their covenant. On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Philomath, Jackson County, and continued until the following Thursday. Thirteen persons were baptized, all of whom came from the world. Brother Marion Harris and the writer began a meeting at Hardy's Chapel, in Overton County, on the third Lord's day in August and continued until the following Wednesday, large crowds attending the meeting. We had no additions, and there are very few members there. On the fourth Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Hilham, in Overton County, and continued till the next Lord's day. One person was baptized from the world, one renewed her covenant, and one came from the Methodists who claimed to have been baptized to be saved and denied an experimental abstract Spirit operation in conversion, in the sense of being saved before baptism. I go to-day to Whitleyville, in Jackson County, to engage in a meeting. A debate will be held at Gainesboro on November 12-15, 1900, between the writer and Fount. Smith. Two propositions will be discussed: "(1) That the Scriptures teach that upon whom water baptism is enjoined it is for (in order to) the remission of his or her past sins;" the writer affirms and Fount. Smith denies. "(2) That penitents are justified by faith without water baptism, upon whom, when justified, water baptism is enjoined;" Fount. Smith affirms and the writer denies. Two days will be devoted to each proposition and speeches will be limited to sixty minutes; rejoinders, thirty minutes.
H. PHARRIS.

Bellwood, September 10.—Beginning on the fifth Lord's day in July, I spent five days preaching the gospel at Pleasant Union Schoolhouse, in Williamson County, a destitute field. After Lord's day I preached only at night. The attendance, most of the time, was good and some interest was manifested. On Thursday night before the first Lord's day in August I began preaching the gospel at Theta Meetinghouse, in Maury County, and continued until the following Thursday night, preaching at night only after Lord's day, with an increasing interest and having better attention at the close of the meeting than at any time before. Thanks to the Beach Grove congregation for their fellowship in these two meetings. On the second Lord's day in August I began a meeting at Lebanon, Wilson County, and continued, preaching at night only after the second Lord's day, until Wednesday night after the third Lord's day in August, with growing interest and attendance encouraging. One person was added to the one body by baptism, two reclaimed, and, I think, much good done. Thanks to the Lebanon congregation for their fellowship in this meeting. On Thursday night before the fourth Lord's day in August I began preaching the gospel in a blacksmith shop in the Glade, in Wilson County, and continued until the following Thursday night, and I think some good impressions were made. These are the people to whom Sister Chambers and Brother B. M. Mace and wife, with the little congregation at Maple Hill, are interested in having the gospel preached. This house belongs to a Methodist sister, but Brother Mace and Brother Jones had it fixed up, and we use it. Brother Mace is a man that shows his faith by his works. I took my meals at his table and had free access to his office while I was there, and he made me feel that I was perfectly welcome. Brother Mace is doing much good work teaching the gospel to his farm hands. Brother Harris, of Couchville, was with me and did some good preaching. On the first Lord's day in September I began preaching at Rockhill Schoolhouse, in Putnam County, and continued until the following Friday night, preaching day and night, with a splendid attendance. Two persons were reclaimed and we had a good meeting. Many thanks to all who are aiding me in this work. All of these meetings were held in destitute fields, except the last one, where we have a membership of about twenty-five. May the Lord help and bless them in their efforts to do work for him. S. W. WOMACK.

TEXAS.

Littig, September 6.—I have been laboring hard for two months, with a small measure of success, in destitute places in Travis, Caldwell, and Hays Counties. We have had congregations in the cities of these counties for years, but outside, in the country, there has been very little of the true gospel preached, and the people know very little of the true gospel. On this trip there were four additions to the one body.

H. H. TURNER.

Baptist Associations.

"The New Testament knows nothing of what are known among Baptists to-day as 'associations.' We get no intimation that the church in Jerusalem was in the same association with the church at Samaria, at Caesarea, at Damascus, or any other churches; and the polity of the New Testament churches did not admit of anything further than fraternity between the churches in the several cities, or the several churches of any one city (provided there were more than one in a single city). We do not hear that the churches of Asia Minor were associated together in the modern method. When the Alpha and Omega would send messages to the churches, he did not send them through the association, but sent each directly to the church for which it was intended. So it may be said he is doing to-day. At the same time, there is nothing in the New Testament and nothing in the nature of the case to forbid mutual recognition on the part of the churches, and the such intercommunion as is effected by what we now call an 'association.' True, when 'the brethren' at Antioch were troubled about the matter of circumcision, they (the brethren, not the church) sent Paul and Barnabas and certain other brethren to Jerusalem for counsel, and 'it pleased the apostles and elders and brethren' of Jerusalem to send letters to 'the brethren which are of the Gentiles.' Only they of one church asked for the opinion of the Jerusalem saints, and the latter sent their message not simply to the Antioch brethren, but to 'the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia.' In any case, the church was only a convenience; it afforded a medium through which the saints could be reached. So to-day there is no set rule as to how certain desirable things shall be brought about, except that there is no power in either the individual church or in an association of members of the churches, except over the qualifications of their own members."

This is from the Journal and Messenger, the Baptist paper published in Cincinnati. It is a truthful statement that the polity of the churches of Christ in primitive times allowed no room for associations such as now exist among Baptists. The associations among Baptists now take supervision of the faith and practice of the churches, and exclude or reject them as they approve or disapprove of their faith and practice. It is adding a controlling factor to the polity given by God and is a violation of the rule the Baptists claim to walk by—the word of God. The case referred to, the sending of Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem, was an appeal to the apostles, the primarily inspired men of God, to settle a question of authority. It was not an appeal to sister churches or to brethren uninspired to settle a point of doubt.
D. L.

There are a number of good preachers who, without attracting much attention, are doing a glorious work in the cause of Christ. They are doing this work largely at their own charges. The churches where they live, while recognizing them as good men, never seem to realize that they should have fellowship with them in this most noble work. They will send far away from home for a preacher and pay him for doing no better work than the home preacher has been doing for a long time. This is not right. It offers preachers a premium to neglect the work at home and go abroad. Brethren, think about this.

Brother Cawthon's Articles.

I desire to notice Brother Cawthon's two articles briefly, as he seems not to understand me. In his first article he says: "The raising up of the baptized is the act that brings them into the church." In his second article he says: "Brother Walling's trouble seems to be that there is a difference between the birth and the time of entrance into the kingdom, or church." Here is Brother Walling's statement, which appeared in both of his articles: "The Bible plainly teaches that whoever enters the body of Christ enters by a birth, yet the Bible plainly teaches that no unclean person can enter the church; then the cleansing must take place before the birth." Brother Walling's trouble is not "that there is a difference between the birth and the time of entrance into the kingdom, or church," but that there is a difference in the cleansing and "the time of entrance into the kingdom, or church."

My contention has been that "none but the cleansed can enter the kingdom of God." All who are born into the kingdom receive the Spirit of God the Father, because they are sons. "God's Holy Spirit will not take up his abode in an unclean heart. No unclean or unsaved man can be built into God's building." What do you say to this, Brother Cawthon? Salvation from past sins, cleansing, pardon, and remission of sins—all take place before one can enter God's kingdom. What do you say, Brother Cawthon? You say: "We all understand that when a man is born of water and of the Spirit, he does enter the church." The Bible teaches that. Now, when does the cleansing take place, since it is the blood of Christ that cleanses from all sin? You say: "There are three considerations—(1) adoption, (2) forgiveness of past sins, and (3) gift of the Spirit." Then a man born of the Spirit does not receive the Spirit until some time after his birth; as the body without the spirit is dead, you have a dead body in the church; as you have the pardon to take place after the birth, you have an unpardoned man in the church. This will not do. Ananias said to Saul: "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) Was Saul baptized, adopted into the family of God, and his sins then washed away? This would necessarily be true, if your position is true, but this is at war with the truth. Saul's sins were washed away in the baptismal tomb by the blood of Christ. Are there not two considerations—faith and obedience and the attendant blessings, forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit?

I desire now to call attention to Brother Cawthon's objections to my first article; he has them numbered one, two, and three: "(1) I cannot find where the Book says that the blood of Christ makes us alive." I used this in the sense that the blood cleanses from sin, and so stated in my first article. Read Lev. 17: 11, and you have this: "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." "(2) That an unbaptized man dies to sin." "We who died to sin, how shall we any longer live therein?" (Rom. 6: 2, 3, R. V.) Death means separation. I understand that the sinner is separated from an unholy love or impure motives by faith, that he is separated from unholy acts by repentance, that he is separated from the skeptical world by a confession of Christ, that he is separated from his past sins by a burial into the baptismal tomb, where he comes in contact with the blood of Christ. Now, made free from sin, he is raised up into the family of God and receives the Spirit. "(3) That we baptize a sinner." As every man is a debtor until his debts are paid, so I understand that every man is a sinner until his sins are forgiven. Rom. 6: 17, 18, R. V., says: "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." Brother Cawthon says: "Our differences arise mainly from not making ourselves clearly understood." Please allow me to suggest that another reason is that people do not always give what you do say a careful consideration.

Whole amount, $30.38. I forwarded the same on August 25, 1900, to C. C. Drummond, Hurda, C. P., India.

For my own use I received the following amounts during August: Church of Christ at Salem, Tenn., $24.15; second church of Christ at Union City, Tenn., $10.50; Brother M., $2; Sister A., Dickson, Tenn., $10; A sister, 50 cents; Brother N., $1.25. Whole amount, $48.30.

PRACTICAL painters say that when they come to repaint a house which has been painted with ready-mixed paint or combination White Lead (so-called), it costs more to prepare the surface than to apply the paint.

The moral is to use only Pure White Lead, because it is not only more durable, but is always in good condition for repainting. These brands are genuine.

"The Relations of God to the World."

I have recently received a copy of a book published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, entitled, "The Relations of God to the World," by H. Christopher, A.M., M.D., of St. Joseph, Mo. I have now read it more than once; have read it with interest and with that careful attention necessary to a fair and critical opinion of the work. While the author does not claim to have discovered new facts, yet in the conduct of the one main argument it is evident on almost every page that the use of facts is made to serve a new purpose by the character of the argument pursued; and this gives an originality to which he may justly lay claim and which others must accord.

The immanency of God in his work has been heretofore suggested, but never before, so far as known to me, have the facts and phenomena of nature been so arranged and combined in an argument of this kind as to make the conclusion a demonstration. The thought that force is God here finds a new dress, with a cogency of reasoning that compels assent. There seems, the premises being admitted, to be no way of escaping the conclusion that all kinds of force are a unit, and that unit the simple exertion of omnipotent will. From force in the movement of plants and suns and all cosmic bodies to force binding atoms together and thence to the phenomena of the vital and physical force of animals, there appear in the argument points of connection and transference that oblige the conclusion that force is a unit, and physical in nature or essence and source and origin. The demonstration establishes the immanency of God in matter, whether organic or inorganic. This solves many difficulties; this solves the nature of the vital force in a clear and convincing manner.

The line of demarcation between the animal and man, though attempted by many, has not been so clearly made out before. That man is the incarnation of a finite spirit being in a living animal organism is so forcibly presented that it cannot escape the attention of an interested reader. Many disputed questions of so-called "science" and "religion" are satisfactorily settled. The consequences of these demonstrations are very far-reaching.

The question of divine intervention in the affairs of the race, argued in the second part of the book, is a second and logical step in the demonstration. It finds a strong presumptive argument in God's immanency in matter. The reasoning proves that miracles have no connection, relation, or dependence on any fact or law of the material world. In the will of the Creator must be found their only cause—a source wholly outside the field of the so-called "physical laws of nature." The argument of God's intervention is conclusive. Here the Christian will feel that a bulwark unassailable strengthens and defends his faith.

The mysterious connection of force with matter, as well as its power and control over matter, as shown in Part I., and in the power of the divine will over man, as shown by the miracle of the flood, the cure of leprosy, and the resurrection of Lazarus, paves the way for the climax—argument for God's personal intervention for the salvation of man from all the consequences of sin. The use to which some facts are put in discussing the incarnation of the Logos is intensely interesting.

The unbeliever is forced upon one of the horns of a dilemma; he must become an atheist or a Christian.

The Christian will have his views of God's intervention enlarged, and his faith, consequently, strengthened. The humiliation of the Divine Logos, or the nature and extent of his Kenosis, as here portrayed, may excite discussion, but only to fortify truth and one's faith. To the argument as a whole; I offer no objection; with me, it is sufficient. I can but express the wish that this excellent thought-awakening and faith-inspiring work may find many appreciative readers, and enjoy it as I have.

Jottings.

"Nonprogressive," when applied to religion, represents the character of a certain class of people who are not progressing in the practice of changing God's rules.

The least thing done, if it is all one can do, is more than any one else is doing. The widow who cast in the mite cast in more than they all.

Some people complain because they are not able to do a good part by their children. Poverty is favorable to Christianity, and does not interfere with bringing a child up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

What does an easy time here amount to after one is dead?

Probably of all the souls that are lost one-half is the result of parents not planting the word of God in the hearts of their children while they are young and tender.

Generally speaking, a mean man was a bad child.

It is not a good example to set for children for one to leave a spiritually-neglected place and move to where there is a strong congregation and a

Symbols of Success

A vacant chair and a portrait on the wall—strange symbols of success! Yet, in many a home these are the symbols of the success of the man who did not find time to care for his health, or neglected the increasing warnings of disease which Nature gave him. When the stomach is "weak" and food is imperfectly digested and assimilated, it is only a question of time until the break-down comes. The stomach is the very center of vital power and must be kept in health if sickness is to be avoided. Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It increases the supply of pure, rich blood, and gives the body strength to withstand the strain put upon it by the struggle for success.

"I was a sufferer from what the doctors called indigestion, but after trying several eminent physicians failed to get a cure," writes Mr. Frank Mericle, of Independence, Jackson Co., Mo., Box 473. "Some of my symptoms were soreness in pit of stomach, fullness, tired feeling, constipation; sometimes soreness would extend to bowels. Some one recommended me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which I did, and after taking only a few bottles of 'Discovery' and your 'Pleasant Pellets' can say I derived more benefit from them than any other medicine I ever tried. I began to gain flesh from the start. Have recommended it to others and will continue to do so."

The sluggish liver made active by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

fine preacher to do the drudgery for him. It is too much like the Levite who shied around the wounded man on the Jericho road. What this wounded and half-dead man was physically nearly all neighbors are spiritually.

People never get too poor or too few to worship God.

A man's soul who follows sin will be as black as night by the time he is old enough to die.

Too much "cheek" keeps one from being meek.

When some of us get sick, nigh unto death, we act like we had not been living right. Paul says the crown is laid up for those who love the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Who is anxious for the passage to the great beyond? J. G. ORSBURN.

My Purpose.

Omitting name and place, I ask permission to publish the following letter for the purpose of correcting a very common error. In all the churches I have visited thus far not one have I asked for a contribution. There is a greater need in missionary work. Churches frequently write as this brother has, but I hope that henceforth no congregation will discourage my coming because they do not feel disposed to give me something. What I ask is a hearty reception and a good hearing. The money question will take care of itself, if all go forward and do their duty. I am anxious to visit every church possible before I return to Japan and get before them more prominently the missionary question. "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest." Here is the letter: "Brother McCaleb: Your card was handed me a few days ago and I reply now—as soon as I got time. I am ready to say you may have the church house; but I hardly think it would pay you, as our people attend only regular appointments, and on Monday night they sleep to make up the loss of sleep on Lord's day night, and more: our people have had many calls recently for money for so many purposes that they are tired and are seeking rest for a short time. Our church is short of money and has some few little debts owing; so, if you come, come as a missionary, with money to pay your expenses." J. M. M'CALEB.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO SUFFERERS FROM CANCER.

The Disease is Curable.

"Editor of the Gospel Advocate: I had a cancer or an ulcer—the most eminent physicians pronounced it a cancer. My father, a fine physician, did not relieve my sufferings. I had two brothers, both very fine physicians; neither could relieve me. After untold sufferings, with no relief, using eight or nine doctors, some kind friend sent me a bottle of B. B. B. After taking the first bottle I felt entirely easy, and it has been the only remedy that has given me permanent relief, so many times I have been exhausted and collapsed from weakening. I have got a great many people to take B. B. B. A lady living near me had an eating cancer, and the bones in her nose or upper part of her mouth were eaten entirely out. She could eat nothing but strained soup. She was entirely cured by using B. B. B., when she was given up to die by three doctors. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) healed my whole body, gave me energy, cured my low spirits, and, I think, saved me to rear my children; or, at least, B. B. B. was the only earthly remedy, with God's help. B. B. B. is the best blood purifier in the whole world.

A strike of the anthracite coal miners has been ordered, and 142,000 men are expected to stop work. The following statement of the grievances of the miners is given: "The average wages of the anthracite miner for many years has been less than $250 annually. During that period of time the cost of many of the necessaries of life has been increased over twenty per cent. An increase in the cost of living without a corresponding increase of wages is equivalent to a reduction in wages. The laws of the State of Pennsylvania make 2,400 pounds a ton of anthracite coal, yet anthracite miners are compelled to mine from 2,700 to 4,000 pounds for a ton, and, in addition to that, are docked exorbitant amounts, often reaching twelve per cent of their daily earnings, for any impurities which may be sent out with their coal. Where they are paid by the car, instead of being required to furnish a well-rounded heap on the car at the breakers, as was originally agreed to, they have gradually been compelled to increase the amount of coal in each car by building the same perpendicularly from six inches to eighteen inches above the edge. They are compelled to purchase the powder used in mining from their employers, paying $2.75 per keg for a grade of powder that they can get elsewhere for $1.50 per keg and which sells at wholesale for about $1 per keg. They are required by many of the companies to deal in 'pluck-me' stores or leave their employment. They must pay to the company $1 per month for a doctor, whether they need him or not, and have no voice in saying who the doctor shall be. The smallness of their earnings, together with the great cost of living, has compelled them to take their children from school before they reached the age prescribed by law and place them at work in the breakers, in order to keep the family from starvation."

The man who has not decided convictions is a very weak character. This thought is tersely expressed by the Louisville Evening Post: "No man can serve two masters, nor a single master with two minds, neither of which he himself knows."

Supreme love for God begets love for our neighbor. If one loves God with all his heart, nothing that any human being can do can make him unhappy. Sinners are unhappy, but never the man who loves God supremely. "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous."

Holy souls love retirement. It will do us good to be often left alone; and if we have the art of improving solitude, we shall find that we are never less alone than when alone.—Matthew Henry.

Preachers are not accomplishing the good they should, because many of them are failing to declare all the counsel of God. The man who earnestly and clearly preaches the word is sure to do much good. "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4: 12.) John Scott, in the Commonwealth, quotes from a judge of the United States Supreme Court: "You ministers are making a fatal mistake in not holding forth before men, as prominently as the previous generation did, the retributive justice of God. You have fallen into a sentimental style of rhapsodizing over the love of God, and you are not appealing to that fear of future punishment which your Lord and Master made such a prominent element in his preaching; and we are seeing the effects of it in the widespread demoralization of private virtue and corruption of public conscience throughout the land." Preachers should talk about everlasting punishment as the Bible does. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever." (Rev. 14: 11.) God is a God of justice and vengeance as well as of love and mercy. The good of humanity demands that sin be punished. "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (2 Thess. 1: 7-9.) "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." The same God that made heaven made hell, and it is not possible for preachers to get rid of it. The wise thing for ministers and all other men to do is to make their arrangements to go to heaven, and not perdition. Smoothing over the rough places will not make the plan of salvation easier for one single soul, while it will endanger the salvation of many. With Paul, "knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." (2 Cor. 5: 11.)

"When George K. Morris, now pastor of the Mt. Lookout Church, had ceased speaking at the meeting of the Methodist ministers at the Book Concern on a recent morning, the silence was so eloquent that one could hear a pin-drop. The popular young pastor, who two weeks ago had one of the richest pulpits in the city, and who is now relegated to the backwoods of Mt. Lookout, to a church young and struggling, with not a few bumps in its financial road, thought that he had, to use a vulgar phrase, 'a kick coming' over the actions of the last conference, and said so in no measured terms. He severely arraigned Methodist methods of transferring pastors in conferences and districts. The welfare of churches, he alleged, is often sacrificed to that of pastors. There is a dangerous tendency among presiding elders to keep ministers in their district from being transferred, and also a disposition to classify pastors and keep young men from rising; in short, Mr. Morris was very 'hot under the collar,' with justice, some seem to think, and 'roasted' things generally in unmistakable language. The trouble all comes out of the fact that when the last conference at Hillsboro had appointed Dr. Davis W. Clark, of Columbia, to succeed Dr. R. S. Rust, the then presiding elder of the Cincinnati District, they found themselves with a duty on their hands. Something must be done for Dr. Rust, for the Methodist conferences are obliged to take care of their pastors. The bishop looked about and decided that George Morris, of Clifton, would have to be led to the altar. He was accordingly transferred to Mt. Lookout and Dr. Rust given the plum. The affair caused considerable comment after the meeting. In view of the fact that several other pulpits are to be filled by Presiding Elder Clark this week, more developments of a lively nature are to be expected." (Cincinnati Enquirer.) The difficulty would be avoided if ministers would preach by divine, instead of human, authority. The Lord Jesus Christ has said: "Go." Men should go in obedience to this command, and not wait for some human organization to say: "Go." They should live and labor under "the perfect law of liberty," enjoying the freedom that this gives. Those who are content to "preach the word" shall be blessed in this most glorious work. Human systems of religion, substitutes for Christianity, are systems of slavery, and those who support them should neither murmur nor complain when bosses apply the lash. Only the divine is free. To be free we must accept the truth and continue in it, come to the light and walk in it. "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.) "The truth" is the word of God. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." (John 17: 17.) "Preach the word" and fear not what man can do unto you. "Not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men: knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free." (Eph. 6: 6-8.) The Lord always rewards a man, and never disappoints him; but often, how sadly are those disappointed who work for men!

Of the notice that J. N. Hall made on the death of Brother Srygley, Brother William B. Noe says of its reproduction in the Gospel Advocate: "I do regret, however, that the Gospel Advocate saw fit to reproduce what was said of him by one who, without a single expression of sympathy for his loved ones and without a single intimation that he believed him to be a Christian, treads upon his grave, like a ghoul, and calls him a 'Campbellite.'" Doubtless we would not have reproduced the notice from the American Baptist Flag had we expected any better from its editor. He has been lacking in courtesy so long that we had come to look on his bad manners as second nature with him; besides, because he says a thing it does not follow that it is so. But we are frank to admit that the insulting notice to which Brother Noe refers should not have been published in the Gospel Advocate or anywhere else. The result was not for the dead, but for the living. It was for the bereaved wife, the fatherless children, and a million other men, women, and children who dare to do the right.

Whenever a man comes to Christ, the first desire of the converted soul is to lead some one else to him. When one learns how precious Jesus is to the soul, he seeks others to share that enjoyment with him. When Andrew had found the Lord, he went straight for Peter, his brother, and brought him to Jesus. Philip finds Nathanael and induces him to go to Jesus. You should doubt your conversion if you are not hungering and thirsting to lead others to Christ. Forward gives us this interesting incident bearing on this point: "An eminent minister and teacher has thus told the story of his first convert. He was a mere lad himself when he gave his heart to Christ. Then he looked about for some one, in the little community where he lived, whom he might win for the gospel. It was a discouraging search. Everybody seemed to be beyond the reach of such a young evangelist. At length he bethought himself of a poor, half-witted boy, whom everybody seemed to pass by. Day after day he sat down to talk to this feeble intellect, and at length the light seemed to dawn. Feeble as he was, his poor wit did not prevent him from becoming a useful Christian. Ever afterwards when he would meet his young instructor on the street or elsewhere, he greeted him with the same words: 'Thanky, Johnny; thanky, Johnny.' In after years the minister was accustomed to say: 'When I get to heaven, the first greeting I expect to hear will be the unforgotten gratitude of my first convert: "Thanky, Johnny."'"

John Wesley was a man of one book. He loved the Bible. Men who would influence others to be good must make the Bible their daily companion. The preacher who reveres the word of God, who studies it daily and seeks to profit thereby, is a power for good in any community. "To candid, reasonable men I am not afraid to lay open what have been the inmost thoughts of my heart. I have thought, I am a creature of a day, passing through life as an arrow through the air; I am a spirit come from God and returning to God—just hovering over the great gulf, till, a few moments hence, I am no more seen; I drop into an unchangeable eternity. I want to know one thing, the way to heaven; how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way; for this very end he came from heaven. He hath written it down in a book. O, give me that book! At any price, give me the Book of God. I have it: here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be homo unius libri (a man of one book). Here, then, I am, far from the busy ways of men. I sit down alone: only God is here. In his presence I open, I read this book; for this end, to find the way to heaven. Is there a doubt concerning the meaning of what I read? Does anything appear dark or intricate? I lift up my heart to the Father of lights, Lord, is it not thy word, 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God?' Thou 'givest liberally and upbraidest not.' Thou hast said: 'If any man will do his will, he shall know.' I am willing to do; let me know thy will. I then search after and consider parallel passages of scripture, 'comparing spiritual things with spiritual.' I meditate thereon with all the attention and earnestness of which my mind is capable. . . . And what I thus learn, that I teach."

tidings from Brother Paul.

Brother Lipscomb: I received a letter from my father recently, and, translating it, I send it to you, Here it is:

"My work here is getting along well day by day. People are interested in Christianity more than ever. They search the Scriptures earnestly and honestly. I preach and persuade them in season and out of season, guided by the Spirit. Harpoot is a fertile field. The only thing we need is more laborers, and I think we are obliged to raise new shepherds, for many denominational wolves, calling themselves missionaries, have entered the field and are killing the innocent lambs. Let us pray to the Lord of the harvest, that he may raise shepherds as soon as possible. Recently I baptized one person, and there are many who are almost persuaded to be Christians. Give my regards to the household of faith. I hope that you will not forget this field.

"ASADOOR PAUL."

I think what the dream at Troas was to Paul this letter is to the American brethren. In these days God does not reveal his will in dreams, but through the letters of such men. We must hear this call, for there are many households at Harpoot who are ready, like Lydia, to hear the word. I will be glad to hear about the arrangements of the Bible School.

G. PAUL.

The Scriptures speak of the various relations which men may sustain to Jesus Christ. They may be out of Christ, in Christ, like Christ, or with Christ. The first describes the natural condition of all men, the second expresses the believer's standing in Christ, the third indicates the ideal of life and character for the Christian, and the last forecasts the happy destiny of the people of God. To be out of Christ is to be without hope and lost; to be in Christ is to be accepted and saved; to be like Christ is to have the image of God restored; to be with Christ is to be forever with the Lord.—Exchange.

Dr. A. K. Fuller asks in the Examiner: "May we not be in danger from our clever devices? Is it not possible for a church to become so entangled in its own machinery as to lose its power for good? One has recently well said: 'Many a man who has in him the elements of imagination and of insight may lose all these out of himself by going over at once and thoughtlessly to the general vogue of organization, machinery, and the various ingenuities of religious service.'"—Western Recorder.

For and Against.

This passage needs no explanation; it needs only to be impressed. How many are serving God on the halfway plan? How many are halting between two opinions? How many are neither hot nor cold? Let them consider this. You are either his soldier or his enemy. If you are not flying his banner, you are against him; if you do not serve him with all your soul, you are serving the powers of darkness. Christ will not go into partnership with the world and the devil in the possession of a heart. Either it belongs all to God or all to Satan. You cannot be devoted to both, and anything else but complete devotion is not accepted. If Christ and his kingdom are your primary considerations, it is well; if he comes in the second place, he doesn't come at all. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness;" he will then add everything else you need. "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." It is not simply inconvenient or difficult, but it simply cannot be done.

A Christian has turned his back upon the world; he has no abiding city here; he is a stranger and a pilgrim; he is no longer of the world. He works—digs up stumps, perhaps; splits rails, plows, merchandises, teaches, preaches—but not for himself, for the Lord; and he looks for support, not to his work and its result, although he does it well and faithfully, but to his Lord whom he serves day by day. He says: "Give us this day our daily bread." If he is Christ's, he has crucified the flesh, with all the affections and lusts thereof. In faith that the Almighty has some better thing in store for him, he forsakes the world, with all its inducements and advantages and its glory, and reaches after the unseen things within the veil. He walks by faith, not by sight.

Such service is impossible if the man does not first cleanse his heart and make Christianity the business of his life. But the half-hearted, weak, wavering, lukewarm man that professes to serve God, but keeps his eye on earthly glory and pleasure and riches, may gain to himself among men a name that he lives, but in the sight of God he is dead. A man that comes to Christ, in effect forsakes all he has. If there is anybody or anything he holds above Christ, he cannot be his disciple; and if he takes hold on the plow and looks back, he is not fit for the kingdom of God. Remember Lot's wife.

In the light of these truths, the big iceberg of much so-called "Christianity" must melt away; and although the number of the professed spiritual Israel is like the sand of the sea, a remnant only may be found to be "with Christ." What becomes of the others? Ask Christ. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." There will be only friends and enemies, lovers and haters, subjects and rebels, children and aliens.

It is preposterous how so many say, "Lord, Lord," and do not follow him. The words "religion" and "Christianity" cover a world of absurdities. There are Noahs that are afraid to build the ark, lest it should prove a bad investment and they could not get their money back on it; Abrahams that have no faith, that are afraid to leave their home and their kindred on uncertainties, or "mindful of the country from whence they came out; Moseses that esteem the treasures of Egypt greater riches than the reproach of Christ, and are rather willing to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season than to suffer affliction with the people of God. There are religious people like the man who said he had been a Christian "off and on for ten years." But they are not with him. Brethren, let us watch our hearts and consecrate them wholly to the service of Christ. Of all men most abominable is he who lingers between Christ and the devil. Let us work for Christ in all things. Then will our daily labor, whatever it may be, be laid to our credit in heaven. Whether the man splits wood or the woman burdened with the household duties that come daily upon her toils, bending over the hot stove, watching by the bedside of a sick child, or bearing whatever load there may be for her, if it is done in the name of Christ, God takes account of it. Then we can justly claim to be with him, for our whole life becomes a continual service, and everything we do, we do it with a reference to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. (Col. 3: 17.) We then grow more and more out of imperfection into that resplendence of heroism, self-denial, meekness, obedience, and righteousness which the Lord has, for we shall be like him.

But this passage (Matt. 12: 30) is not only applicable to the Christian life, but equally strong does it refer to the teaching—that is, Christ's doctrine. Even here he that is not with Christ is against him. Zeal, honesty, good conscience, and good intentions can never become substitutes for the true doctrine. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," said Jesus to his disciples. No error can make the man that believes it free from sin, no matter how firmly he may believe it. But to them that received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (2 Thess. 2: 11, 12.) Jesus had unbounded respect for the word of God. He did not presume to add to that word, nor to take from it. His own ideas of expediency, his own opinions on unrevealed things, were never set forth. He believed that the Father's commandment, just as it stood, was life everlasting, and he did not undertake to improve on it. "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." (John 12: 49, 50.) Now, brother, are you with Christ there? Does your religious teaching confine itself to the revealed word of God? If not, you are not with Christ, you are against him. I read the other day where a great man said: "The religion of Christ has probably suffered more from them that misunderstood it than from its enemies." Well said; and every false doctrine is a blow at the cross of Christ, whether we so intend it or not. How careful we ought to be, how we ought to tremble, lest we go outside of the oracles of God and teach the baneful wisdom of men! "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9, 10, R. V.) "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." (Matt. 15: 9.)

The above two passages will brand a multitude of religious people as "against Christ." But is this so very strange? Who persecuted the prophets? Religious people. Who withstood the Son of God? Religious people. Who sought to entrap him and kill him? Who hunted him unto death? Religious people. Who nailed him to the cross? Religious people, by the hand of wicked men. Who persecuted his apostles, beat them, imprisoned them, and killed them? Religious people. Would it be an unprecedented thing if some of the bitterest enemies of the cross of Christ were found among the religious people of to-day? "Ah, but they would not persecute Christ if he walked here now, or if they lived in his time," you say. That is what the Pharisees said. They built the tombs of the prophets and garnished the sepulchers of the righteous, and said: "If we had been in the days of the fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Then they went and filled up the measure of their fathers in killing the greatest of all, Jesus the Lord. And religious people would persecute Christ now. His doctrine of the narrow way would be hated by the disciples of the sweet, spooney school of latitudinarianism. He would be narrow, cranky, an enthusiast, a literalist, a fanatic, and what not; for so they call them that are now trying to follow him. Be not deceived; he that is not with Christ is against him, whether he be present or absent in person.

This calls for an old, well-worn objection, or excuse, whatever you may call it. "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us: and we forbade him, because he followeth not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not: for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part." This passage has been held out as excuse and pretext by people who departed and went beyond the teaching of Christ. "We are doing a great work," they say. "We are fighting for the spread of the gospel; we are marching under the banner of the cross. What right have you to stop us?" Then they quote the above passage. For good works we would condemn no one; but for forsaking God's plan and pattern, God will condemn.

But let us look carefully at that quotation (Mark 9: 38-40). Does it excuse any departure from God's word?

1. The man was doing a good thing; he was casting out devils. Nothing in the record implies that he did not cast them out by God's approbation, or in God's way.

2. The disciples blamed him only because he did not follow with them. Let us not apply that figuratively to "following with the disciples" at the present day. The fact was simply, he did not stay in the immediate vicinity of Jesus. This does not say that in point of doctrine or faith he differed in the least from those who were continually in Christ's presence, or that he disregarded the teaching of the Lord in any way. All the disciples of the Lord were not walking around with him; in fact, we have an instance where a man, anxious to follow with Christ, received commission to stay at home and tell his people of the Lord's power. (Mark 5: 18-20.)

3. Supposing, for argument's sake, that the man who followed not with them had departed from the Lord and from his teaching, would his casting out devils guarantee his salvation? Perhaps people who live in error and teach it have been able to do mighty, wonderful works in his name, and Christ may have been glorified by their deeds, for he can overrule. "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

What support and what hope can be found, then, in that passage—viz., Mark 9: 38-40—for those who have left the teaching of Christ and are serving and worshiping him after their own wisdom, who are ignorant of God's righteousness and in going about to establish their own righteousness have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God? None, none.

Let us with meekness follow God's word, and be with Christ in doctrine and in doing, lest in the end we may be found against. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Breaking Bread. No. 5.

The duty of worthy disciples to meet on the first day of the week and eat the Lord's Supper at supper time is sufficiently plain for all practical purposes, and is not difficult to carry out. The duty of these disciples to dissociate themselves from unworthy disciples in such a way as to at least not unite with them in eating the Lord's Supper is equally clear in God's revelation on the subject, but more difficult of practical observance. Especially is this true from the point of view of the modern method of observance which universally prevails. In these times the appointment and management of the meeting to keep the feast are in special hands, which was not the case in the apostolic age. It is now kept at a fixed place in the bounds of a church, at the place, or the house of worship, for that church. Of this there is no trace in the New Testament. It is now kept in an assembly where are all sorts of people and all sorts of Christians. The New Testament in its examples and statements on the subject points to the contrary of this, as we have seen. It is now observed in an assembly where many other things are carried on which in the popular mind are more attractive, if not actually considered more important. Of this God's word presents no account.

Let us suppose a complete return to the New Testament on the subject. Then every Christian will have the right to get up a meeting to break bread, and of course to provide a place. The special religious house, founded and kept up at great expense, will give place to the original "house-to-house" observance. The multiplicity of designs, the medley of operations, as well as the mixed multitude of attendants interested in the various performances of the hour, characteristic of a modern assembly when the Lord's Supper is kept, will give place to a singleness of design which will in itself tend to shut out all not interested in the one thing to be done.

To separate from odious characters in the formation of the assembly to which the guests have been exhorted to come is difficult enough to try the patience, courage, loyalty, and diligence of the most devout saints; but to separate from them after the assembly, to which all stood equally invited, is formed, is something people rarely think of doing. Especially is this difficulty increased when the meeting abounds in exercises in which the worst may claim an interest. How can you put them "away from among yourselves" when you are carrying on exercises that they need to attend and which you have invited them to attend?

It only strengthens the force of the prohibition to eat with unworthy brethren to assume that eating a common meal is referred to by Paul in 1 Cor. 5: 11. That assumption sets up an insurmountable a fortiori against eating the Lord's Supper with them; for if forbidden to eat even a common meal with them, we are doubly forbidden to join them in eating the body of our Lord, the most sacred eating in which God's children ever engaged.

The common, eleven-o'clock meeting at a meetinghouse appears to me to be unfavorable for the carrying out of the prohibition couched in 1 Cor. 5: 11, and the purging of the assembly enjoined in other parts of that chapter. Candor and conviction require me to say that I have difficulties in eating in such a meeting. Often I do not know all there and do not know whether they are of the "old leaven," which should be purged out; or of the "new lump," which should be kept in. I am placed in unfavorable position to "judge them that are within" when I do not know them. In some places I see some who are accused of drunkenness; others, of covetousness; others, of extortion; others, of fornication or some other sin made a bar to eating; and no effort is made to put them away, but all go on and eat. With many I want to eat; with some I feel prohibited to eat.

Some brethren, to whom I have named these difficulties, have kindly labored to show me how I could eat in the mixed, self-judged assembly, convened in the house of worship, the advertised place of meeting for almost every church work and worship, without violating the teaching of Paul above presented. I am exhorted by them to disavow all connection, or part, or fellowship with these characters, and thus eating do not eat with them. I am told to examine myself—only myself—and leave others to do the same for themselves; not to judge others at all. But if eating of the same loaf and drinking of the same cup in the same meeting is not eating with them, I do not see how I could eat with them. Nor can I see how judging myself alone, and not others, can meet the divine requirements. Self-examination is enjoined, but that is not all that is enjoined. "Let a man examine himself." (1 Cor. 11: 28.) "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." (Verses 31, 32.) "Do not ye judge them that are within?" (1 Cor. 5: 12.) "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump." (Verse 7.)

How can I "judge them that are within" without judging anybody but myself? How can I judge myself to keep from being judged in a kindly way by others to save me from being condemned with the world, if every one can only judge himself, and nobody else? How can I "purge out . . . the old leaven," if not allowed to judge leaven and decide which is old and which is not? How can I refuse to eat with "a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner," if not allowed to judge and decide who is that character? So it seems to me self-examination is necessary to keep me from the judgment of others; but if I fail to keep myself right, it is their duty to see my error and admonish me; and if I go on in wickedness till not worthy to mix and eat with the saints, their duty is to put me away from among themselves, and not eat with me. This is judgment of me, because I failed to judge myself. So the effort to show how I can scripturally eat in the meetinghouse where all sorts are mixed together and any who decide to eat can do so is not satisfactory to me.

In the meetinghouse observance of the Lord's memorial feast I do not see a carrying out of the duty to "judge them that are within," "put away from among yourselves wicked persons," "purge out . . . the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump," "keep the feast not with old leaven," and not keep company or eat with a brother who is covetous, etc.; nor do I see how this duty can be observed properly under the meetinghouse dispensation. Let it be borne in mind that in the apostolic age Christians had no such fixed centers as meetinghouses, nor were there special administrators of the Lord's Supper from whose hands the sacred emblems were ministered. Any Christian could make ready the feast at a place of his choosing, and "where two or three are gathered together" in the name of the Lord the feast might be kept. Where any number too great for them to know and judge and purge out the old leaven came together the assembly was unfit to observe the feast. They tarried for one another; they judged one another; they were not strangers to each other. As it was in the passover, so in this antitypical feast.

Meetinghouse observance, indeed! Christ set it up in a private house in the city of Jerusalem, where were four hundred and eighty synagogues and the greatest temple of history. If the meetinghouse is the best place for keeping it, then either Jesus Christ did not know that to be true, or, knowing it, deliberately refused to show us what is best. The meetinghouse was never adopted in Christian service until the man of sin had established his reign over the saints and usurped the administration of affairs. The meetinghouse and the dispensation peculiar to it never got a flourishing start until the emperor became episcopus toon hexo tæs ecclesias, which, being interpreted, means bishop of the externals of the church. The thing ran to externals so rapidly that the emperor soon had the lion's share of ecclesiastical affairs. From then till now the externals of religion have with most people held the balance of power. The bishop of externals suppressed the house-to-house meeting by decree, and all service was made more magnificent by reason of its externals. It is no great wonder that many of these externals are handed down to our time. The meetinghouse was the threshold of the dark ages, and will be, perhaps, the last stronghold of the man of sin to fall under the light of truth. Some people pay thousands of dollars to rear a "splendid church," which they use on an average about one hour in a week, and let Jesus Christ sit under a leaky roof and by a smoky chimney one hundred and sixty-seven hours in a week. How? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Do not fear to turn from human works. Those who have the "finest churches" are farthest from the New Testament.

Needs of the Hour. No. 2.

I believe in people reasoning together on any point of difference that is of importance. If it is done for the right motive and in the right spirit, good will come of it; but there is great danger of allowing such reasoning together to degenerate into a mere wrangle, generating prejudice and ill feeling—a mere "talk back" at each other with cutting remarks, witty sayings, and traps laid to ensnare the other party. The result is that the two debaters go away with each his constituency more firmly attached to him than ever, because they remember what a "good 'un" he got off on the other fellow. I met some brethren on the crowded street not long ago. "Have you heard that Brother B— was eaten up alive up the country here the other day?" they asked. They had just attended the debate. The next thing was to show that really it was the other fellow that got swallowed alive. Then they proceeded to tell me what a "good 'un" Brother B— got off on him as proof of it, and there was not in the "good 'un" got off even the spice of a story first told, as it was only an old saw that had been "got off" perhaps a hundred times before. Brethren who leave such debates filled with only a few anecdotes not always of the highest order, to repeat in the churchyard while Sunday school is going on and on all other occasions when politics does not wholly absorb the mind, with no effort at a holier life and more Christian activity, need not be disappointed if they find an element in the church that wants to be "progressive."

There is a crisis upon the churches. Their only safety is to awake to righteousness and sin not. The most effective way to impress a truth and lead people in the right is to set the example. People read our faith by our walk. If they do not see us practicing what we argue, the argument has but little effect. The only way to show that you believe a thing is to do it. The churches will never be induced to maintain the integrity of the faith by the hedge-in, shut-off, and throw-on-the-brakes methods. The deficiency of the first covenant was that it said with too much emphasis, "Thou shalt not," with not enough emphasis on the motives for "Thou shalt." The gospel is positive rather than negative. We are to abstain from the wrong by doing the right. The best way to show a wrong is to do the right. Just here the churches, as a rule, break down and their argument fails. They point out the right way, but fail to walk in it themselves. It is hard for people to see a church believes its own teaching when it makes no effort to put it into practice. It is a waste of time to show up the wrong while no effort is made at the right. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." Many by their lives have made Jesus say: "If you show up the wrong, then are you loyal."

I fear many simply assent to missionary work, and they do this with a kind of "mental reservation." We are living in an age when the very air is permeated with missionary activity. When there is so much talk about it, we feel some hesitancy in lifting our voices against it; but really there is an undercurrent away deep down in our hearts that is running very strongly in the other direction. This makes us go on in silence. We look on in distrust and without sympathy. We say nothing in "meetin'." I go home with you, however, for dinner. When the dinner is ended and a few commonplace remarks have been gone over and we bring up the subject again, you feel obliged to explain. The sentiments of the "meetin'" were not your sentiments. You do not want to be held responsible for anything that was said or done. It was not by your consent; you never did believe in it. We have plenty of heathen at home if we would help them. A man must provide for his own house, and charity begins at home. Yet, my brother, you feel aggrieved that the church does not listen to you; that you have lost your influence, especially over the young; and that all seem to be going to the bad.

He who opposes or even discourages the preaching of the gospel to all the nations puts himself squarely in the road with a drawn sword against the Lord. If the Bible teaches any one truth very clearly, it teaches that the gospel must be preached to all nations, without reference to race or color.

As to the Origin of Baptists.

Brother Lipscomb: I have recently been to hear a Primitive Baptist preach. He said all the religious orders—Methodists, Cumberland Presbyterians, Missionary Baptists, and Campbellites—sprang from the Primitive Baptists; that the Primitive Baptists had been ever since the apostolic time, and the so-called "Christians" were once all Primitive Baptists. He said he could give the history—page and chapter—from which he learned it, that the Primitive Baptist Church is the church of Christ. He also said if any one would show him where there was any "Christian Church," so-called, before Alexander Campbell, he would quit his church and join the Christian Church. He said Alexander Campbell was its author. Please answer these questions through the Gospel Advocate, for the benefit of myself and others: When did we split off from the Primitive Baptists? Where was the church of Christ before Brother Campbell? When was the first Primitive Baptist Church set up—in what year? In what year before Brother Campbell was the church of Christ set up? MARTHA BILLS.

Our Primitive Baptist friends frequently pride themselves on lack of learning; they show this in the history of their church. They learn of what has occurred within the last one hundred or two hundred years, and they think because they existed then they had so existed from the beginning. But a people that called themselves "Baptists" are entirely unknown to history before the year 1600. Then almost all had come to practice sprinkling and infant baptism. Some held to immersion, and they called themselves "the baptized Christians, of churches," to distinguish themselves from the sprinkled, whom they denied had been baptized. But in all ages of the church, from the days of the apostles to the present time, churches and Christians have existed who practiced immersion and held to believer's baptism. When either the Primitive Baptists or the Missionary Baptists undertake to trace their lineage back to the beginning, they claim these people as Baptists, although they refuse to own now as Christians those who teach and practice the same things. In giving account of them in the first century, they are thus described: "As proof of their sincerity and the submissive state of their minds to his commands, they arose, were baptized, and washed away their sins, and the same day were added unto the church." (Orchard's "History of Baptists," page 6.) "This Christian assembly, as it was the first, so it is the mother church in the Christian dispensation." (Page 7.) This he says of the church at Jerusalem.

On page 12 he tells of division in the churches, but says: "Each party tenaciously held the name 'Christian,' and had strong aversion to any other." On the same page he says: "This worthy minister says on baptism: 'Consider how he hath joined both the cross and the water together, for thus he saith, 'Blessed are they who, putting their trust in the cross, descend into the water.' . . . Again, we go down into the water, full of sin and pollutions, but come up again bringing forth fruit.'" On page 13 he says in the year 195 Hermes said: "Before a man receives the name of the Son of God, he is ordained to death, but when he receives the seal, he is freed from death and delivered unto life. Now that seal is water, into which men descend under an obligation to death, but ascend out of it, being appointed unto life." On page 24 he quotes from Justin Martyr: "We bring them to some place where there is water, and they are regenerated by the same way of regeneration by which we were regenerated, for they are washed in the name of the Father." On the same page we read: "Only such as are true believers and have been baptized in the laver of regeneration for the remission of sins and live according to the precepts of Christ." On page 34 he gives the teachings of Tertullian and Origen, who lived in the first half of the third century. The former says: "The eunuch whom Philip dipped in the water obtained more or less of salvation." The latter says: "They are rightly baptized who are washed unto salvation."

The historian follows this down, showing that in all the centuries up to the seventeenth century, while there was a great falling away, in almost every country there were persons holding such faith and practice as this.

On page 167 he is giving account of these same people, A.D. 500, and says: "These Baptists of France and Spain called themselves 'Christians,' and censured the fraud of those who imposed on the world by calling themselves 'Catholics.' . . . They took the New Testament for their rule of faith." On page 132, A.D. 680, he says: "They called themselves 'Christians,' but the Catholics they called 'Romans,' as if they had been leaders." On page 135 he says: "The great instrument of this people's multiplication was the alone use of the New Testament." On page 142 he says: "A church had no power to frame any constitutions—i. e., to make laws."

"They constantly avowed the sufficiency of the Scriptures." (Page 156.) "In conformity with their declaration of the sufficiency of the Scriptures to regulate a Christian church, they had," etc. (Page 157.) "They owned the Scriptures as a rule of conduct and administered the ordinance of baptism to believers by one immersion." (Page 160.) "They admitted of nothing in the affairs of religion but the Bible." (Page 239.) I could multiply quotations almost indefinitely from this and other histories that these ancient Christians taught baptism as the act of faith in which sins were forgiven and they were received as children of God. They rejected all creeds and confessions of faith, save the Bible; they refused to be called by any name, save "Christians," or a scriptural name. Such people existed. Were they Baptists? Do Baptists of this day, Primitive or Missionary, teach such things? What do they think of those who now hold these truths? These persons existed for fifteen hundred years in different countries, holding these positions with a greater or less degree of purity.

In England there existed persons who dissented from the Church of Rome, and held the doctrines of Augustine and Calvin, that God from eternity had elected a specified number of angels and men to salvation and the remainder he had ordained to eternal ruin. Generally these believed in infant baptism and affusion. During the earlier years of the seventeenth century some of these dissenters from the established church came to believe the Bible taught believer's baptism and that only immersion is baptism. They formed themselves into a church in England. The beginning of this was a book translated in 1618 from the Dutch language and published, entitled "A Plain and Well-grounded Treatise Concerning Baptism." In 1633 they sent some of their members to Holland to get a regular baptism. Those in England holding to believer's immersion had increased in 1643 to seven congregations in London and forty-seven congregations in the country. Contention had grown up among them on the questions of Calvinism and these churches adopted a Calvinistic creed that afterwards, with slight changes, was readopted as the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith," and is still regarded as defining the Baptist faith, especially in the Southern States. These churches and people first called themselves "the baptized" to distinguish themselves from others who were sprinkled. Then it was contracted to "Baptists." Before the formation of these churches, there were no people called "Baptists" in the world, nor before about this time were there churches that held believer's baptism who had a Calvinistic or any human creed. There were people called by their enemies "Anabaptists," or rebaptizers, because they insisted those sprinkled or baptized in infancy had not been baptized scripturally, and must be baptized again. But while in different countries these people ran into greater or less degrees of error, they called themselves "Christians."

This is a fair and true statement of the origin of the Baptists, as they publish themselves. I have quoted from Orchard's "History of the Baptists," because I had these points all marked years ago. All Baptist historians state the same facts. Orchard was an English Baptist, and wrote his history. It was republished in this country by J. R. Graves. After he saw the use disciples could make of it, its publication was discontinued. But Armitage's history, more recent, presents the same facts. D. L.

Singing Away the Pain.

A party of tourists were driving along the country road leading to Killarney, that fine old town among the Irish lakes. As they came within sight of a cottage standing back from the road, with a lovely garden of flowers in front, there reached them the sound of singing.

The voice was full of sweetness, rich and strong, now and then rising into such lofty strains it seemed like an angel's song, then dropping to the mellow softness of a mother soothing her babe to sleep.

The little company was entranced. What genius in obscurity was here? Some one, surely, born to win fame and fortune when brought forward and trained by suitable teachers.

"If I could ever hope to sing like that!" exclaimed the young man who was driving, himself a student of music. Then, stopping his horses, he said, "Let us find who he is; perhaps I might be of help;" but here he paused as a young girl came out of the garden gate toward them. She had a basket on her arm, as if going to market. As she was passing, dropping a slight courtesy as she did so, he asked: "Will you please tell me who is singing so sweetly in the cottage?"

"Yes, indeed," said the girl, turning a bright face toward them. "It is only my Uncle Tim., sir; he's after having a bad turn with his leg, and so he's just singing the pain away the while."

For an instant the company was speechless; then the young man asked: "Is he young? Can he ever get over the trouble? Tell these ladies about it, please."

"O, he is getting a bit old now," was the answer. "No; the doctors say he will never be the better of it in this world, but"—and her voice dropped into tender pathos—"he's that heavenly good, it would come nigh to making you cry sometimes to see him, with the tears running down his cheeks with the pain, and then it is that he sings the loudest."

"Amen!" said the young man, reverently; and with a "Thank you, dear," from the ladies, they drove slowly on.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more . . . pain," said Aunt Myra, softly.—Christian Life.

Brother L. M. Jackson's meeting at Sycamore, in Cheatham County, Tenn., resulted in fifteen additions.

A number of students of the Nashville Bible School have been in the office during the past few days. The school opened on the 25th inst.

Brother Paul Slayden, of Columbia, Tenn., closed a good meeting at McBurg, Tenn., on the 13th inst., resulting in nineteen baptisms, one of whom came from the Cumberland Presbyterians.

Brother P. H. Hooten recently closed a twelve-days' meeting at Berea, Tenn., resulting in three additions; at Petway, Tenn., he preached six nights, baptizing seven persons; at Paradise Ridge, Tenn., he preached one week, with three additions.

We are advised that the George Robertson Christian College, of Henderson, Tenn., of which Brother A. G. Freed is president, has opened with the best attendance ever known, about three hundred pupils having already been enrolled, with many more to come. The students now represent twelve States.

On the 5th inst., at 5 P.M., Brother S. Keffer officiating, Miss Ida Culp, of Beamsville, Canada, was married to Brother S. M. Jones. It is as true now as when God said so in the beginning: "It is not good that man should be alone," and to Brother Jones we offer our congratulations, wishing for him and his bride many years of happiness and usefulness in the service of the Lord.

On the 10th inst., at 4 o'clock P.M., at the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, J. B. McCanless, in this city, Sister Mamie Gentry was married to Brother A. Foster; Brother Lipscomb officiating. Brother Foster and his bride left at once for their home at Carmen, Canada, where he has, with the help of brethren there, established a Bible school. We wish them bon voyage over life's sea, with a happy and peaceful entrance into the haven of rest at its close.

I began mission work for the church of Christ at Spencer, Tenn., on the fourth Sunday in August at Cave Ridge Schoolhouse, near Rocky River, Tenn., and continued there and at the Moxee Schoolhouse until the second Sunday in September. The results were twenty-one persons were added to the one body and arrangements were made to build a house of worship and to go to work for the Lord. I will begin a meeting at Spencer, Tenn., after taking a few days' needed rest.—L. R. Sewell.

Mr. Clyde Potter and Miss Matilda Gillentine were married on Wednesday, September 5, 1900, at the home of the bride's father, at Spencer, Tenn. Both are members of the church of Christ and are the children of preachers. Young Brother Potter is the son of Brother Potter, of Dibrell, Tenn.; the bride is the daughter of Brother Richard Gillentine, of Spencer, Tenn. These young people have the confidence of all who know them and their

to have seen a couple married that seemed to be more perfectly suited to each other than were these. May the richest blessings of Heaven rest upon and abide with them.—T. W. Brents.

Brother L. S. White was in the office last week. He had just closed a good meeting at Burnett's Chapel, near Lavergne, Tenn., resulting in ten additions. He is now in a meeting at Berea, Warren County, Ky. Beginning on Thursday, December 6, 1900, Brother White will engage in six-days' debate with A. Malone (Baptist), of Franklin, Ky. The debate will be held at Hebron, Tenn., which is about eight miles from this city, on the Murfreesboro pike. Brother White will for three days affirm: "The church of God, of which I, L. S. White, am a member, is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Brother Malone will then for three days affirm: "The church of which I, A. Malone, am a member is evangelical in origin, doctrine, and practice."

EDITORIAL.

The church is the light of the world, and it is by earnest, consecrated living that the mass of the people must be won to Christ.

No one is converted until he is saved from selfishness. When thus saved, he goes to work to save others. No one can go to heaven alone; he must take as many as possible along with him.

A shanty does not need a foundation; a palace does. Education is, to life what a foundation is to a building. The greater the building, the deeper and wider and stronger must be the foundation. If you mean to be a man of great usefulness and influence, you must lay well the foundation. A season of comparative obscurity, of self-denial, and of serious meditation is needed as a preparation to life's work.

We cannot afford to have any but the best associates, for the standard of our best friends inevitably becomes our standard, too. Just as some birds assume the color of their surroundings, so the life of a young person is tinged by the lives of those with whom he closely associates. It is said that husband and wife become like each other by long association. No one can be too careful in selecting his companions.

He is the Head of the body, the church. Jesus and his church are represented as constituting one person: Jesus, the Head; the church, the body. The head thinks and directs; the body acts and works. The head works through the body; the body does nothing, save as directed by the head. Jesus, as the Head, designs and directs; he has work to do here on earth; he works through the church as his body. The church, as the body of Christ, must recognize him as her Head, and must work only as her Head directs—must do his work, not that of another; for the church must do the work of Christ, must do it as he wishes it done.

The manner in which we treat those who are poor and have no way of repaying us for our kindness shows the true condition of our heart. It is said that Gen. Robert E. Lee was in the car going to Richmond, and was seated at the end of the coach the farthest from the door. The other seats were filled with officers and soldiers. An seat. There was plenty of room then; all were ready to give him a seat, but he would not take it from one who would not give it to the old lady. Soon the General and the aged woman had the whole coach to themselves. The little acts of life show our real characters.

We have been told that two artists were once called upon, in competition, each to paint a picture illustrating rest. The first one portrayed on the canvas a placid lake, whose unruffled surface was surrounded by peaceful meadows and everything suggestive of quiet and solitude. That was his conception of rest. The other produced a picture of a roaring, foaming cataract. By its side he placed a firmly-rooted, sturdy oak, which sent out a strong bough until it hung over the very center of the noisy cataract. On the end of that branch he placed a nest, with a bird calmly brooding over her young. That was his idea of rest. Surely this, rather than the other, represents the true rest of the soul. God's abounding grace has provided a Savior, who stretches out his hands and says: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He places underneath us the everlasting arms, and, right in the midst of the rush of this world's difficulties and trials and temptations, we enter into this true soul rest which hath been provided for the people of God, whose sustaining grace is given, "without prescribing how much."

The woman of Canaan who came to Jesus had very great faith. She came to a stranger. Her early training was not to believe in the true God, Jesus belonged to a nation that thought there was nothing good in the Gentiles. This woman surmounted all these obstacles, came to Jesus, and pleaded for mercy for her daughter, who was badly demonized. At this point another barrier must be overcome. Jesus, seemingly, treated her with indifference. "He answered her not a word." Her faith is such as will take no denial. She does not appear in the least discouraged. A faith like she had would remove mountains of difficulty out of the way. She goes right forward and "worshiped him, saying, Lord, help me. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." How many would have given up in despair! But she snared the Lord in his own words. She admitted the truth of his statement, but, in humility, would gladly receive the crumbs of blessings. She did not plead for the best. Her faith was, indeed, great. Such faith and humility as she exhibited are worthy of the highest admiration. We are ready to laud intellect and deeds of daring, but such beautiful humility and sublime trust as were displayed by her are worthy of the imitation of all ages.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I have read with interest your and Brother Ambrose's discussion on the kingdom. It appears to me that the following scriptures show plainly that the kingdom began, or was set up, on Pentecost—viz.: Luke 1: 32, 33; Acts 2: 29-36; 15: 13-17. Now, Brother Lipscomb, I hope you will examine these passages and answer through the Gospel Advocate, as I have never noticed their being used by any of the brethren to prove the above.

Scott's Hill, Tenn.

W. A. AUSTIN.

These passages all have a bearing on the subject, and, in connection with the others quoted, make it certain; indeed, there is no question, it seems to me, more fully settled in the Bible than this question, that Jesus came to build up his church, and that his church was recognized by the Holy Spirit as his kingdom upon earth, which was to pass through the vicissitudes of weakness and almost destruction, to end in final and everlasting triumph.

Brother Lipscomb: I ask this question for information. I am a member of a congregation of disciples where we meet on the first day of the week to break bread. We use blackberry wine, and, according to the way I understand the Bible, the brier or thorn represents sin, and I do not think it is right to use blackberry wine. Please give me all the information on this subject you can.

Atlanta, Ga.

J. L. THOMASON.

The Bible says "the fruit of the vine"—i. e., grape juice—was what was used. I do not think blackberry wine or anything else than what was ordained by God should be used. The grape is in the reach of all, and there is no kind of excuse for not using what God ordained. This tendency to make substitutes for the appointments of God has been the besetting sin of humanity, and should be guarded against. It seems to me there was a special appointing of the fruit of the vine as the memorial of the blood of Jesus. If so, it is a sin to substitute anything in lieu of it.

Brother Lipscomb: I would like to have you explain, through the Gospel Advocate, James 5: 14-16. The point I want explained is as to confessing faults; when and where should we confess our faults? I would have written an article myself, but think it would do more good for you to write on the subject. I find a great deal of comment on this subject among the churches.

R. F. DUCKWORTH.

A man ought to be ready to confess his sin anywhere and everywhere it comes up. David and Paul confessed their sins before the world and for all time. Their name and example were to last for all time and to be known everywhere; so it was right their confession should go everywhere. Wherever a man is known, his confession of his sin should be known. For a man to draw back and refuse to confess his sin is a sign he has not repented from a godly sorrow. It is not well to tell it in a boastful style and spirit, as some preachers do, for the remembrance of the sin will always be a matter of sorrow and humiliation, but in a humble spirit he should be ready to confess his sins everywhere and always.

Brother Lipscomb: I propound the following for your consideration and solution, if your time and space in the Gospel Advocate will admit, for the benefit of all that may be interested. A member of the church of Christ, a lady of good standing and good graces, intelligent and reputable, taking part in the protracted services held here, contributing to the expenses of that meeting, and participating in all of its appointments, has since signified her willingness to abandon her first love and enter into fellowship with the Baptists for the sake of conciliating her husband in his bias toward that denomination. I understand they will shortly take that step. Will you please show this resolution of hers up in the States probably a combination of weaknesses pointed out by Jesus. It means the person is lacking in depth and strength of character and conviction. In the parable of the sower, Jesus pointed out some who were very zealous and ran well for a while, but when opposition and difficulties came, they walked with God no more. This is a very common character now, as it was in the days of Jesus. Thousands started out to follow him, but when trials came, they turned back and followed him no more. The opposition of the husband here overcame the love for God and truth. It is an example, too, of one loving husband or wife better than God. She obeys her husband rather than God. We know what God says of such. Or it may be a case of zeal without knowledge. When one is thrown or reared with disciples, the emotional feelings are easily excited, but they do not understand the truth. They have a zeal, but not according to knowledge. Knowledge ought to precede and guide emotion, else the emotions will lead them in any direction in which they may be excited. All of these may enter more or less into the case. There is another side of it, too. A husband's love of authority may be gratified for a time at the wife's yielding to his wishes, but when he comes to think of her giving up her convictions of right and duty to God to comply with his wishes, he cannot respect her. He must regard her as a weak child, instead of an earnest, true woman that respects her own convictions of right and truth. This respect is the basis of all true and abiding love: A true man does not want a wife that is without convictions, or, having them, is ready to yield them to please him or any one else. A true woman so situated will honor and respect her husband's preferences and convictions, so that she will not interfere with them, but she will respect and honor her own. Unless she does this, she cannot command the respect of her husband or any one else. The Holy Spirit says love is the fulfilling of the law—that is, if we fulfill what the law requires, we do to all what true love requires. A wife shows her true love for her husband by doing what the law of God requires. The law of God requires she should love God first, be true to his teaching, and so please him rather than her husband. In doing this, she brings to bear on her husband the truths of God in her own life. This is to do him the greatest good. If anything will save him, this will. The more firmly she stands for the truth, while showing all kindness and respect for her husband, the more he will respect and honor and love her, and the more apt she will be to save him. We should love God first and highest, be true to him in all things; then God will use us to help and bless those near to us.

Brother Lipscomb: Please comment on Rom. 14 for the benefit of the brotherhood at Corinth. Our elder commented on this scripture some two weeks past, and said Paul spoke this over eighteen hundred years ago and that it was not applicable to this progressive age; that we must conform to the world and do in our worship as the majority do. He stated that if Paul were here now and dressed as he did then, he would be put in jail in less than three days. Please comment on Eph. 5: 19. Our elder said Paul's language was not applicable in Paul's day at all, as it has not been long over two hundred years since the notes and hymn books were introduced; before that it was a chant. He said Paul meant to use any means—the organ or anything—to make the music more enticing. He said it would make melody in your heart. May the editors of the Gospel Advocate live long to sound the word. J. S. NEWMAN.

I do not see what comment is needed on Rom. 14 or why the teaching should be applicable to one age above another. All the scripture we have was written eighteen hundred years ago, and if one portion is set aside on account of age, all must go. The lesson taught in this chapter is that the Christian

It means we are not to look to or seek our own selfish interests, but the good of others. Christ pleased not himself. That principle was taught under the Mosaic law, when men were required to help the helpless and the needy. It is under a multiplicity of forms and precepts taught in the New Testament. All scriptures that teach self-denial for the good of others teach this. The example of Christ, who pleased not himself, but gave himself to die for others, teaches the same principle. When we are admonished to cherish the spirit that was in Christ, to follow his example, and do good to others, the same principle is taught that is presented in Rom. 14. This is one application of a principle that pervades the whole teaching of God to the world. 1 Cor. 5 gives the same application of this principle. It runs through the whole Bible. The verse from Ephesians has often been commented on. This scripture tells the purpose of singing is to speak "to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Speaking is what is to be done in this service. Instruments cannot speak. Col. 3: 16 says: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." As a means of this world's dwelling richly, they were to teach and admonish "one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Words were to be spoken in the psalms and hymns and songs by which the hearts were to be filled richly, or abundantly, with the word of God. Then in these psalms they were to exhort and admonish one another. Instrumental music does not speak words, nor does it teach, exhort, or admonish one another. It hinders all these; it prevents the hearing the words spoken in song, so subverts scriptural ends of singing; it prevents many from singing; it hinders the hearing of what is sung. To make melody in the heart is certainly not to make it on an instrument; to bring the heart into sympathy with the sentiment sung is to make melody in the hearts. The idea that Paul dressed so that he would be imprisoned in this or any country is absurd. He did not dress as we do, but it was no more offensive to good taste than the dress of the Chinese or Japanese that come among us. They are not imprisoned for their dress. Nor do the Scriptures teach that Christians are to conform to the customs of the world where they go in any other sense than Jesus conformed to the conditions of men in coming to the earth that he might save souls. We are to put ourselves in their surroundings, that we may appreciate their trials and temptations, that we may be touched with a sense of their trials, and may lead them out, just as Jesus took our infirmities, and was tempted in all things as we are, that he might lead us out of our sins. God gave us an order of worship; Jesus sealed this order with his blood. If we turn from that order to follow the ways of the world, we forsake and trample under foot the Lord Jesus, and count his blood an unholy thing. We are to follow Christ, and not conform to the world. These things are true; but these questions have been often discussed at length and fully in tracts. Professor McGarvey published an excellent tract on this subject that I presume is yet in print. Dr. Herndon and Dr. Rufus have each published tracts on this subject that can be had for a nickel or two. It is better to get these fuller discussions than to depend upon short items, as they must be in the query columns of the paper.

When Christ was dying on the cross, he made a will. Perhaps you have thought that no one ever remembered you in a will. If you are in the kingdom, Christ did, for it was to his disciples he said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." They say a man cannot make a will now that lawyers cannot break and drive a four-in-hand straight through. I challenge them to break this one. Let them try it. PERSONAL.

Brother F. B. Srygley is engaged in a meeting at Lewisburg, Tenn.

Brother R. W. Officer is in a meeting at Marlow, on the west border of the Chickasaw Nation, I. T.

Brother L. M. Jackson's meeting at Sycamore, in Cheatham County, Tenn., resulted in fifteen additions.

A number of students of the Nashville Bible School have been in the office during the past few days. The school opened on the 25th inst.

Brother Paul Slayden, of Columbia, Tenn., closed a good meeting at McBurg, Tenn., on the 13th inst., resulting in nineteen baptisms, one of whom came from the Cumberland Presbyterians.

Brother P. H. Hooten recently closed a twelve-days' meeting at Berea, Tenn., resulting in three additions; at Petway, Tenn., he preached six nights, baptizing seven persons; at Paradise Ridge, Tenn., he preached one week, with three additions.

We are advised that the Georgie Robertson Christian College, of Henderson, Tenn., of which Brother A. G. Freed is president, has opened with the best attendance ever known, about three hundred pupils having already been enrolled, with many more to come. The students now represent twelve States.

On the 5th inst., at 5 P.M., Brother S. Keffer officiating, Miss Ida Culp, of Beamsville, Canada, was married to Brother S. M. Jones. It is as true now as when God said so in the beginning: "It is not good that man should be alone," and to Brother Jones we offer our congratulation, wishing for him and his bride many years of happiness and usefulness in the service of the Lord.

On the 10th inst., at 4 o'clock P.M., at the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, J. B. McCanness, in this city, Sister Mamie Gentry was married to Brother A. Foster, Brother Lipscomb officiating. Brother Foster and his bride left at once for their home at Carmen, Canada, where he has, with the help of brethren there, established a Bible school. We wish them bon voyage over life's sea, with a happy and peaceful entrance into the haven of rest at its close.

I began mission work for the church of Christ at Spencer, Tenn., on the fourth Sunday in August at Cave Ridge Schoolhouse, near Rocky River, Tenn., and continued there and at the Mozee Schoolhouse until the second Sunday in September. The results were twenty-one persons were added to the one body and arrangements were made to build a house of worship and to go to work for the Lord. I will begin a meeting at Spencer, Tenn., after taking a few days' needed rest.—L. R. Sewell.

Mr. Clyde Potter and Miss Matilda Gillentine were married on Wednesday, September 5, 1900, at the home of the bride's father, at Spencer, Tenn. Both are members of the church of Christ and are the children of preachers. Young Brother Potter is the son of Brother Potter, of Dibrell, Tenn.; the bride is the daughter of Brother Richard Gillentine, of Spencer, Tenn. These young people have the confidence of all who know them, and their friends predict for them a happy future. I officiated at the marriage, and I do not remember ever to have seen a couple married that seemed to be more perfectly suited to each other than were these. May the richest blessings of Heaven rest upon and abide with them.—T. W. Brents.

Brother L. S. White was in the office last week. He had just closed a good meeting at Burnett's Chapel, near Lavergne, Tenn., resulting in ten additions. He is now in a meeting at Berea, Warren County, Ky. Beginning on Thursday, December 6, 1900, Brother White will engage in a six-days' debate with A. Malone (Baptist), of Franklin, Ky. The debate will be held at Hebron, Tenn., which is about eight miles from this city, on the Murfreesboro' pike. Brother White will for three days affirm: "The church of God, of which I, L. S. White, am a member, is apostolic in origin, doctrine, and practice." Brother Malone will then for three days affirm: "The church of which I, A. Malone, am a member is evangelical in origin, doctrine, and practice."

EDITORIAL.

The church is the light of the world, and it is by earnest, consecrated living that the mass of the people must be won to Christ.

No one is converted until he is saved from selfishness. When thus saved, he goes to work to save others. No one can go to heaven alone; he must take as many as possible along with him.

A shanty does not need a foundation; a palace does. Education is to life what a foundation is to a building. The greater the building, the deeper and wider and stronger must be the foundation. If you mean to be a man of great usefulness and influence, you must lay well the foundation. A season of comparative obscurity, of self-denial, and of serious meditation is needed as a preparation to life's work.

We cannot afford to have any but the best associates, for the standard of our best friends inevitably becomes our standard, too. Just as some birds assume the color of their surroundings, so the life of a young person is tinged by the lives of those with whom he closely associates. It is said that husband and wife become like each other by long association. No one can be too careful in selecting his companions.

He is the Head of the body, the church. Jesus and his church are represented as constituting one person: Jesus, the Head; the church, the body. The head thinks and directs; the body acts and works. The head works through the body; the body does nothing, save as directed by the head. Jesus, as the Head, designs and directs; he has work to do here on earth; he works through the church as his body. The church, as the body of Christ, must recognize him as her Head, and must work only as her Head directs—must do his work, not that of another; for the church must do the work of Christ, must do it as he wishes it done.

The manner in which we treat those who are poor and have no way of repaying us for our kindness shows the true condition of our heart. It is said that Gen. Robert E. Lee was in the car going to Richmond, and was seated at the end of the coach the farthest from the door. The other seats were filled with officers and soldiers. An old lady entered, being poorly dressed, and walked to the rear end of the coach, when General Lee gave her his seat. There was plenty of room then; all were ready to give him a seat, but he would not take it from one who would not give it to the old lady. Soon the General and the aged woman had the whole coach to themselves. The little acts of life show our real characters.

We have been told that two artists were once called upon, in competition, each to paint a picture illustrating rest. The first one portrayed on the canvas a placid lake, whose unruffled surface was surrounded by peaceful meadows and everything suggestive of quiet and solitude. That was his conception of rest. The other produced a picture of a roaring, foaming cataract. By its side he placed a firmly-rooted, sturdy oak, which sent out a strong bough until it hung over the very center of the noisy cataract. On the end of that branch he placed a nest, with a bird calmly sitting on her young. That was his conception of rest. Surely this, rather than the first, represents the true rest of the soul. The abounding grace has prepared the laborer, who stretches out his hands and says: "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." He placed us the everlasting arms, in the midst of the rush of difficulties and trials and we enter into this true rest which hath been provided for us by God, whose sustaining grace is "without prescribing his law."

The woman of Canaan who followed Jesus had very great faith. She did not believe in the truth until she belonged to a nation where there was nothing good. This woman surmounting all obstacles, came to Jesus for mercy for her daughter who was badly demonized. Another barrier must be broken down. Jesus, seemingly, treated her with no difference. "He answered her not a word." Her faith is such as will take no denial. She does not appear in the least discouraged. A faith like she had would remove mountains of difficulty out of the way. She goes right forward and "worshiped him, saying, Lord, help me. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." How many would have given up in despair! But she snared the Lord in his own words. She admitted the truth of his statement, but, in humility, would gladly receive the crumbs of blessings. She did not plead for the best. Her faith was, indeed, great. Such faith and humility as she exhibited are worthy of the highest admiration. We are ready to laud intellect and deeds of daring, but such beautiful humility and sublime trust as were displayed by her are worthy of the imitation of all ages.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Of course every one who uses office stationery wants it to be neat and attractive. This is just the kind we make. Write to us for prices and samples.

Persons sending remittances intended for the house should always have their checks, money orders, or express orders made payable to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company and address their letters to Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. Frequently letters containing remittances are addressed to some member of the firm, and, being out of the city when it is received, the order is delayed and the house is censured for being tardy.

We have for a limited time reduced the price of "Sweeney's Sermons;" "Sewell's Sermons;" "Gospel Sermons," by Brents; "Civil Government" and "Commentary on Acts," by D. Lipscomb; "Live Religious Issues of the Day," by Carroll Kendrick; and "The Jerusalem Tragedy," by Stout. See advertisement on another page of this issue. These are all splendid books, and, while the price is reduced, you should place them in your library. Let us have your order for the whole list or any part of it.

If you have not yet bought "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Brother Srygley's last book, you should by all means have a copy. "It is a precious treasure;" "A rich legacy to bequeath to your children;" "We especially commend it to the young;" "Every home in the land should have it;" "The Bible..."

readers will call the attention of their friends to this liberal offer and seek to induce them to give us a trial subscription. Our friends and readers can help us very much and can be of great service to their acquaintances by getting them to read the Gospel Advocate. We hope to add several thousand new names to our list in the next thirty days. Who will help us do it?

"Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and "Gospel Praise" are the names of our hymn books, catalogue of which will be sent on application. "Gospel Praise" is our new book, copyrighted this year and edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell. It is a book of 320 pages, containing 322 songs arranged by subjects. All who have examined it pronounce it good. We will be glad to send sample sheets of this book to any address on application for same. Referring to "Gospel Praise," we quote the following taken from letters written to us: "I am very much pleased with it;" "All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production;" "I am more than pleased with it;" "The price is within reach of all;" "The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul-stirring;" "I can heartily recommend it to all;" "The price is within reach of all, and the book should have a circulation second to none extant;" "It is an all-purpose book;" "I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received." Send for sample sheets and give them a careful and impartial examination.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I have read with interest your and Brother Ambrose's discussion on the kingdom. It appears to me that the following scriptures show plainly that the kingdom began, or was set up, on Pentecost—viz.: Luke 1: 32, 33; Acts 2: 29-36; 15: 13-17. Now, Brother Lipscomb, I hope you will examine these passages and answer through the Gospel Advocate, as I have never noticed their being used by any of the brethren to prove the above.

Scott's Hill, Tenn.

W. A. AUSTIN.

These passages all have a bearing on the subject, and, in connection with the others quoted, make it certain; indeed, there is no question, it seems to me, more fully settled in the Bible than this question, that Jesus came to build up his church, and that his church was recognized by the Holy Spirit as his kingdom upon earth, which was to pass through the vicissitudes of weakness and almost dest in zeal and overlooking the

probably a combination of weaknesses pointed out by Jesus. It means the person is lacking in depth and strength of character and conviction. In the parable of the sower, Jesus pointed out some who were very zealous and ran well for a while, but when opposition and difficulties came, they walked with God no more. This is a very common character now, as it was in the days of Jesus. Thousands started out to follow him, but when trials came, they turned back and followed him no more. The opposition of the husband here overcame the love for God and truth. It is an example, too, of one loving husband or wife better than God. She obeys her husband rather than God. We know what God says of such. Or it may be a case of zeal without knowledge. When one is thrown or reared with disciples, the emotional feelings are easily excited, but they do not understand the truth. They have a zeal, but not according to knowledge. Knowledge ought to pre-empt and guide emotion, else the emotions will lead them in any direction in which they may be excited. All of these may enter more or less into the case. There is another side of it, too. A husband's love of authority may be gratified for a time at the wife's yielding to his wishes, but when he comes to think of her giving up her convictions of right and duty to God to comply with his wishes, he cannot respect her. He must regard her as a weak child, instead of an earnest, true woman that respects her own convictions of right and truth. This respect is the basis of all true and abiding love. A true man does not want a wife that is without convictions, or, having them, is ready to yield them to please him or any one else. A true woman so situated will honor and respect her husband's preferences and convictions, so that she will not interfere with them, but she will respect and honor her own. Unless she does this, he cannot command the respect of her husband or any one else. The Holy Spirit says love is the fulfilling of the law—that is, if we fulfill what the law requires, we do to all what true love requires.

A wife shows her true love for her husband by doing what the law of God requires. The law of God requires she should love God first, be true to his teaching, and so please him rather than her husband. In doing this, she brings to bear on her husband the truths of God in her own life. This is to do him the greatest good. If anything will save him, this will. The more firmly she stands for the truth, while showing all kindness and respect for her husband, the more he will respect and honor and love her, and the more apt she will be to save him. We should love God first and highest, be true to him in all things; then God will use us to help and bless those near to us.

Brother Lipscomb: Please comment on Rom. 14 for the benefit of the brotherhood at Corinth. Our elder commented on this scripture some two weeks past, and said Paul spoke this over eighteen hundred years ago and that it was not applicable to this progressive age; that we must conform to the world and do in our worship as the majority do. He stated that if Paul were here now and dressed as he did then, he would be put in jail in less than three days. Please comment on Eph. 5: 19. Our elder said Paul's language was not applicable in Paul's day at all, as it has not been long over two hundred years since the notes and hymn books were introduced; before that it was a chant. He said Paul meant to use any means—the organ or anything—to make the music more enticing. He said it would make melody in your heart. May the editors of the Gospel Advocate live long to sound the word. J. S. NEWMAN.

I do not see what comment is needed on Rom. 14 or why the teaching should be applicable to one age above another. All the scripture we have was written eighteen hundred years ago, and if one portion is set aside on account of age, all must go. The lesson taught in this chapter is that the Christian must forego his rights and privileges when to use them would lead others into sin. That principle is taught all through the Bible under various forms.

It means we are not to look to or seek our own selfish interests, but the good of others. Christ pleased not himself. That principle was taught under the Mosaic law, when men were required to help the helpless and the needy. It is under a multiplicity of forms and precepts taught in the New Testament. All scriptures that teach self-denial for the good of others teach this. The example of Christ, who pleased not himself, but gave himself to die for others, teaches the same principle. When we are admonished to cherish the spirit that was in Christ, to follow his example, and do good to others, the same principle is taught that is presented in Rom. 14. This is one application of a principle that pervades the whole teaching of God to the world. 1 Cor. 5 gives the same application of this principle. It runs through the whole Bible. The verse from Ephesians has often been commented on. This scripture tells the purpose of singing is to speak "to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Speaking is what is to be done in this service. Instruments cannot speak. Col. 3: 16 says: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly." As a means of this word's dwelling richly, they were to teach and admonish "one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Words were to be spoken in the psalms and hymns and songs by which the hearts were to be filled richly, or abundantly, with the word of God. Then in these psalms they were to exhort and admonish one another. Instrumental music does not speak words, nor does it teach, exhort, or admonish one another. It hinders all these; it prevents the hearing the words spoken in song, so subverts scriptural ends of singing; it prevents many from singing; it hinders the hearing of what is sung. To make melody in the heart is certainly not to make it on an instrument; to bring the heart into sympathy with the sentiment sung is to make melody in the hearts. The idea that Paul dressed so that he would be imprisoned in this or any country is absurd. He did not dress as we do, but it was no more offensive to good taste than the dress of the Chinese or Japanese that come among us. They are not imprisoned for their dress. Nor do the Scriptures teach that Christians are to conform to the customs of the world where they go in any other sense than Jesus conformed to the conditions of men in coming to the earth that he might save souls. We are to put ourselves in their surroundings, that we may appreciate their trials and temptations, that we may be touched with a sense of their trials, and may lead them out, just as Jesus took our infirmities and was tempted in all things as we are, that he might lead us out of our sins. God gave us an order of worship; Jesus sealed this order with his blood. If we turn from that order to follow the ways of the world, we forsake and trample under foot the Lord Jesus, and count his blood an unholy thing. We are to follow Christ, and not conform to the world. These things are true; but these questions have been often discussed at length and fully in tracts. Professor McGarvey published an excellent tract on this subject that I presume is yet in print. No judge or jury can set Christ's will aside, for he rose to execute it himself. If he had left us a lot of gold, we should never have got it, for thieves would have stolen it in the first century. But he left his peace and his joy for every true believer.—D. L. Moody.

Brother Lipscomb: I would like to have you explain, through the Gospel Advocate, James 5: 14-16. The point I want explained is as to confessing faults; when and where should we confess our faults? I would have written an article myself, but think it would do more good for you to write on the subject. I find a great deal of comment on this subject among the churches.

R. F. DUCKWORTH.

A man ought to be ready to confess his sin anywhere and everywhere it comes up. David and Paul confessed their sins before the world and for all time. Their name and example were to last for all time and to be known everywhere; so it was right their confession should go everywhere. Wherever a man is known, his confession of his sin should be known. For a man to draw back and refuse to confess his sin is a sign he has not repented from a godly sorrow. It is not well to tell it in a boastful style and spirit, as some preachers do, for the remembrance of the sin will always be a matter of sorrow and humiliation, but in a humble spirit he should be ready to confess his sins everywhere and always.

Brother Lipscomb: I propound the following for your consideration and solution, if your time and space in the Gospel Advocate will admit, for the benefit of all that may be interested. A member of the church of Christ, a lady of good standing and good graces, intelligent and reputable, taking part in the protracted services held here, contributing to the expenses of that meeting, and participating in all of its appointments, has since signified her willingness to abandon her first love and enter into fellowship with the Baptists for the sake of conciliating her husband in his bias toward that denomination. I understand they will shortly take that step. Will you please show this resolution of hers up in the light of the truth, that it may be a warning to her as well as to others?

A BROTHER.

This is not an uncommon character that involves

Home Reading.

"SHE."

She is away—absent. When a man says "she," he is understood. To every "he" there is but one "she," or should be. And "she" is away, leaving us to thought and good resolutions. Like Hawthorne, we have been washing dishes. Says he:

"The washing of dishes does seem to me the most absurd and unsatisfactory business that I ever undertook. If, when once washed, they would remain clean forever and ever (which they ought in all reason to do, considering how much trouble it is), there would be less occasion to grumble, but no sooner is it done than it requires to be done again. On the whole, I have come to the resolution not to use more than one dish at each meal."

The quiet fidelity with which "she" will dish-wash her life away for "him" is a marvel of endurance and grace. Just here is the servitude of woman heaviest: no sooner is her work done than it requires to be done again. Man works up jobs, ends them, and takes his pay. The pay can be translated into something else desirable. A man works all day and draws pay for his day's work. This pay allures him, as oats allure a ho se homeward bound. Thus men work by terms and jobs, and, although the work is endless as to quantity, yet, when cut up thus into terms and jobs, we men go heartily on our journey, and count the milestones.

Not so with our mate. "She" mends our socks, and we put our irrepressible toe through the darned spot, and she darns it again; "she" washes for the family, and the family makes haste to send back the same garments to be washed again; "she" puts the room in order, and we get it ready to be "rid up" again—the same socks, the same washing, the same room every time. She has no successive jobs, no terms, no pay day, no tally stick of life. She washes the same dish three hundred and sixty-five—yes, three times three hundred and sixty-five—times every year. No wonder she breaks it and is glad of it. What a relief to say: "I've done that dish!"

Not only have we, like Hawthorne, washed dishes, but also we cooked and served and helped eat a meal (with bated appetite because of cooking), and now we are astonished at the number of thoughts, and steps, and acts, and processes involved in a very plain supper. There were only two of us, jolly cronies, caring nothing for style, and needing only a very plain supper; and we had it, and with it came wisdom.

Gentlemen, all! We go into a room and see a table ready set. It seems to us one thing—a supper. It is, in fact, from fifty to two hundred separate things, taken down one by one for us to use, and for "her" to wash and put back whence they came. There is a plate of biscuits. To that plate of simplicity we, with our own hands and feet, brought together a new, quick fire for baking—viz., kindling wood, raking out stove, and hod of coal; flour from the bin, shortening from the gravy-dip down cellar, salt from one box, sugar from another, soda from the jar, acid (tartaric) from a bottle, a spoon, a pitcher of water, a dripping pan, and a tin pan for mixing up these ingredients, and, after all, happening to forget the things for ten minutes, we burned the biscuits half through in a way which we men reckon quite unparadonable in a cook. Meanwhile that one plate of biscuits added to the eternal dish wash two spoons, two pans, one plate, and a little cup; just a little piece of steak contributed eight pieces to the dish wash; a few strawberries sent in six pieces to be got ready to soil again; four eggs impressed themselves on six separate articles.

Gentlemen, we began at ten minutes of six o'clock and at a quarter to eight o'clock we found ourselves triumphant—everything cleared away except the dishcloth. You see, we washed up the bread pan, the dish pan, and the sink, scalding them all (and our fingers, too), and dried them off with the dishcloth. Now, where on earth can we go to wash out that dish rag? Not in the clean pan; not over the clean, dry sink. We stood aghast for five minutes, and then wadded up the rag, round like a snowball, and tucked it into the far corner of the sink, and shut down the cover. Our sink has a cover. But that rag, though hidden, was heavy on our conscience. "She" never would have done so. We have seen clean dishcloths, but how they wash them passes our skill.

And so, as we said, "she" is away, leaving us to thought and good resolutions. We shall be a wiser and a better man for at least two days after her return; and, whenever we stop to think, shall rank a successful housekeeper and home maker as a worker second to none on the scale of achievement and deserving. Her services are—like the air, the rain, and the sunshine—indispensable, yet too often enjoyed without thanksgiving.—Thomas K. Beecher, reprinted in Boston Transcript.

HOW FRANK WON.

A prize of one hundred dollars, to be used for educational purposes, was offered in a school for boys. Among the contestants was a boy of seventeen years, named Frank Harlow. He did not succeed in winning the prize money. A day or two later one of his schoolmates, named Harry Murks, said to him: "Didn't get the prize, did you, Frank?"

"No, I did not," replied Frank, cheerfully.

"Feel kind of cut up over it, don't you?"

"No, not particularly."

"Well, I'd hate to make as hard a fight as you made to win that prize, and then fail."

"I don't think that I have failed, Harry."

"Well, I'd like to know why you haven't failed. Didn't George Dayton win the prize?"

"Yes, I know that he won the money; but I won just as much as George in that which comes from hard study. But you know, Harry, if you will excuse me for saying it, your failure has been most marked."

"My failure! Why, what do you mean? I didn't go in for the prize at all. I made no attempt to win it."

"I know it," replied Frank, and then he added: "They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."

"O, I see what you mean!" replied Harry, rather soberly. "I suppose that there is something in that."

"There is a good deal in it," replied Frank. "It is so true that not one of the eighteen boys who competed for the prize may be said to have failed. All of us won the prize that comes from honest effort, and it was a pretty big prize for most of us. I thought at first that I would not compete for the money, for I felt quite confident that some of the other boys were so much further advanced than I was that I had very little chance of winning in the contest. But one day I came across this verse:

"Straight from the mighty bow this truth is driven:

They fail, and they alone, who have not striven.

"That's a fact," I said to myself, and I went straight to work and did my very best."

"You stood next to George Dayton at the examination, too," said Harry. "No, Frank, you did not fail, after all."

Harry was right. How could Frank fail to be a winner, after the honest effort he had put forth?

High heaven's evangel be, gospel God given:

They fail, and they alone, who have not striven.

SHUT UP WITH A BIBLE.

When Nicholas I. became emperor of Russia, his first task was to put down a formidable sedition among the aristocracy of his realm. Many nobles, detected in guilt, and many who were simply suspected, were thrown into prison. One, who was innocent, was by nature a man of fiery temper; his wrongful arrest infuriated him, and he raved like a wild animal. Day after day, brooding over his treatment, he would stamp, shrieking, through his cell, and curse the emperor and curse God. Why did not he prevent this injustice?

No quiet came to him, save in the intervals of exhaustion that followed his fits of rage. A visit from a venerable clergyman, on the ninth day of his confinement; produced no softening effect. The good man's prayer was heard with sullen contempt. The divine words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," sounded like mockery to the embittered prisoner. The aged minister went away, leaving a Bible in the cell, which he begged the prisoner to read.

As soon as his visitor was gone, the angry nobleman kicked the Bible into a corner. What to him was the word of a God who let tyrants abuse him?

But when the terrible loneliness of succeeding days had nearly crazed him, he caught up the volume and opened it, and his first glance fell on the middle of Ps. 50: "Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee." The text surprised and touched him, but his pride resented the feeling, and he dropped the book.

The next day desperation drove him again to the only companion of his solitude, and from that time he read the Bible constantly. Then he began to study, and commit whole chapters to memory. The story of the Savior's life and death totally changed him. He saw himself a fellow-sufferer with the Christ who was unjustly accused and slain.

Revengeful rage gave way, and the spirit of a martyr took its place. Like the persecuted Christians shut up in the Roman Catacombs, he forgave his enemies. An unworldly joy took up the time he had once spent in harsh thoughts and words. The shadows of wrong and death vanished in the new light that shone upon him from beyond.

The company of a book—the one Book in all the world that could have done it—had given the proud noble another heart.

Madame Dubois, once a beloved prison missionary in New York, from whose writings this story is taken, was in Russia when the condemned man's aunt and sister, with whom she was visiting, received a letter which was believed to be his last. It was the outpouring of an exalted soul superior to fate.

He had undergone his trial, and, unable to prove his innocence, had been sentenced to death. On the day set for his execution, while the ladies of his mansion walked in tears through the crape-hung parlors, suddenly the sight of their doomed kinsman himself astonished them at the door.

It was an unhopèd-for deliverance at the last moment. When the jailer's key unlocked the prisoner's cell, instead of the messenger of death, the czar of Russia stood before him. A conspirator's intercepted letter had placed the innocence of the suspected nobleman beyond question, and the czar made what amends he could by bestowing on him a splendid castle and a general's commission.

Seventy-five years have passed since then, and with them the life of the almost-martyred Russian, but the fruits of his devout fidelity and kindness among his fellowmen, the hospital he built for the sick and friendless, and the very Bible he was shut up with in his own distress still bear witness to a consecration that was worth all its personal cost.—Youth's Companion.

POULTICES.

The application of heat is often extremely useful in the relief of pain and of inflammation, or in hastening the maturing of a boil or felon.

The most usual way of making such an application is by means of poultices. These retain the heat much longer than hot cloths, and have an advantage over a hot-water bag when moist heat is required.

The making of poultices is an art which can be learned only by practice, and unfortunately for many poor sufferers few persons ever master the art.

A good poultice should be perfectly smooth, moist, but not dripping, as light as possible, and as hot as it can be made without burning the patient.

A poultice of flaxseed is perhaps the most common, but poultices may be made of ground slippery elm, corn meal, bread, starch, or any other material that will make a smooth paste with hot water, and will not dry too rapidly and become caked and hard.

In making a flaxseed poultice, the flaxseed meal, the bowl, and the spoon for stirring should be previously warmed, and everything should be ready to the hand before a start is made. Boiling water is poured into the bowl, and then the meal is added gradually, with constant stirring. This is better than adding the water to the meal, for then it is very difficult to prevent lumping.

As soon as the paste is of the proper consistency—two parts of meal to five parts of water being about the right proportion—it should be spread an inch or so thick upon a piece of muslin, leaving an uncovered margin of two inches. Then on the face of the poultice is placed a piece of flannel of the same size as the muslin. The edges are now quickly turned over and fastened with safety pins or basted, and the poultice is ready.

The flannel side goes against the skin, a layer of cotton is placed over the poultice, and the whole is covered with rubber tissue or oil silk.

If it is necessary to repeat the poultice often, it is well to make bags of the right size, sewed on three sides and with two-inch flaps on the end, which can be rapidly pinned after the bag is filled.

If applied to a commencing boil, it should be only a little larger than the inflamed part.

Generally it makes little difference what material is used, the virtue being in the heat and moisture; but sometimes flaxseed irritates a very tender skin, and then starch or bread should be substituted.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT IF IT IS SO?

Some charge the presence of the missionaries in China is the cause of the war; others deny it and seek to disprove it, as though it would be a crime. Of course missionaries may be guilty of wrongs that needlessly stir up opposition to them and to all foreigners. This course would be wrong and sinful, whether it stirred up strife and excited war or not. I think it is true that the preaching of the gospel, introducing the Christian religion, exciting new habits of thought, and converting some of the people from the idolatry of their fathers have had much to do in stirring up the people to make war on foreigners; it would be strange if it did not; but if it is true, what shall be done about it? Shall the missionaries cease to go and preach among them because it arouses their animosity and causes them to persecute, kill, and drive the missionaries and their countrymen away?

This is usually the effect of preaching the gospel among idolaters. The preaching of Jesus stirred up opposition and persecution that resulted in his crucifixion. Did he cease to preach on this account? He told his disciples that his mission and their preaching would stir up strife, excite bitterness, and kindle a fire upon earth. He told his disciples: "I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. . . . The brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another. . . . Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." (Matt. 10: 16-36.)

The preaching both of Christ and his apostles, although he was meek and unresisting as a lamb, did stir up opposition and persecution; but they did not cease to preach in his name on this account, although they sometimes fled from one city to another to avoid persecution. Sometimes they refused to flee, but when imprisoned and beaten, they counted it all joy and rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. None have the right to expect the gospel will have other effect when preached to those in the valley and the shadow of death, and none should desist from preaching because of persecution. The Christian religion has enjoyed so long a season of peace and popularity that it has become effeminate and we think we should not suffer for it. It would doubtless give a robust vigor and renewed life and energy to the religion of Christ if it were brought face to face with more and greater difficulties and trials.

The only fear about the missionaries in China is that they have more of the characteristics of the wolf than the lamb, or that they were in too close fellowship and too ready to call upon the wolves of evil governments to avenge their persecutions. In the days of Jesus and the apostles there was no human government to avenge their wrongs or to demand restitution for the destruction of their property or lives. These things really weaken, instead of strengthen, the cause of God in China and other heathen lands. Absolute trust in God, with the meekness of the lamb and harmlessness of the dove, not reliance upon the arm of the civil power, is what will give spiritual power to the work of converting the world. Christians in this land need the same trust and reliance. Christians in our day rely much more upon the arm of the civil law to correct evils and banish wrong and sin from among men than they do upon the spiritual weapons God has furnished his children to use. So long as this is true the efforts to reform men will be weak and futile. A closer walk with God, a more earnest trust of him, and reliance upon the weapons of his warfare, which are not carnal, but spiritual and mighty, alone can convert and save the world or the church. D. L.

CHRISTIAN LIFE AND ACTIVITY.

It ought to be kept before the people and impressed on their minds that the end of church service is to make every member an efficient worker in the church of God—an efficient or an active participant in both the worship and the work of the church. There is no such thing as proxy service either in the work or worship of Christians. Each must cultivate his own talents and use them in the service of the Lord. A man cannot pay a man to do his praying for him. No; God will not accept the prayers of another in lieu of mine. While the reflex influence of prayer is not its chief influence or end, it is an important one. Praying molds the heart that prays into the likeness of God and fits it to receive the blessings of God. Others may pray for us, but unless we pray ourselves, we are not fitted and prepared, and cannot receive and use the blessings if bestowed in answer to another's prayer. God cannot accept another's prayer as mine. The great burden of prayer is, and must ever be, in secret; but the heart that prays in secret, as it should, will express itself openly at times, and generally we may safely conclude that one who never will pray in the congregation or lead others in prayer does not pray much in secret. There may be exceptions to this. A Christian cannot maintain his character and even his life as a Christian without constant and devout prayer to God for blessings and help from God. One who does not pray is not prepared to appropriate or use the blessings if they were bestowed. One cannot teach or preach by proxy. This does not mean that a man cannot aid others by his means in preaching. He can and must do this as he is able. But this does not in any measure relieve him from the responsibility of using his talent and opportunities for teaching others the way of truth. He must do this that he may understand and appreciate the truth himself and that it may have its influence on his heart and character.

Knowing a truth never helps unless it is taken into the heart, practiced in the life, and molds the character. Let us not deceive ourselves. Unless we use our knowledge faithfully and earnestly to teach, help, and save others, we will lose it ourselves and we will be barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of the truth, will forget that we were purged from our old sins, and will fail of an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There is some person, or there may be many, that each one can reach and teach better than any one else. He should seek all such as he can reach and humbly, but earnestly, strive to save them. Without this there is no growth or life to the Christian. The man that seeks to work by proxy will die spiritually. I am sure this is one cause of the lifelessness of the churches at this time. We pay some one else to do the praying and working for us and give ourselves to business and pleasure and die to all true spiritual interests.

As necessary to keep alive and active this interest in the churches and among Christians, the worship of the churches was ordained as a place and time of mutual edification, exhortation, and training. To keep this properly alive and active has been found a difficult matter in practice. The elders should be the leaders and directors in all these services of the church. As a rule, they fail to study and are incompetent to lead or interest others in this work. No man can interest others who is not earnestly and intensely interested himself. Uninterested leaders and members cannot make an interesting meeting. Bringing frozen sticks together cannot produce warmth. Every Christian ought to daily study the word of God, think over its teachings, ponder its lessons in the heart, until they become part and parcel of his feelings and his life. Without this persons cannot be fitted for heaven, and they cannot interest others. We are fitted for heaven by having our feelings, life, and whole character permeated and molded by the word of God. A cold and lifeless meeting means cold and lifeless members composing the meeting. The same meeting is often warm and enjoyable and stimulating and improving to one member, but cold, lifeless, and uninteresting to another. The one is warm and earnest himself; the other is cold and indifferent and lifeless, and closes his heart against the good influences. Generally we can tell a man's spiritual state by his failure to enjoy the meeting, whether it be preaching or mutual prayer and exhortation. One anxious to receive truth and be benefited can always find some inspiration and help from any and every meeting of Christians. Placing cold sticks together will not produce warmth or heat, but rubbing them together will. If all are cold, each may warm himself trying to warm another. We receive spiritual life by imparting of what we have to others. The more we give of spirituality, the more we have. Spiritual life and warmth are increased and multiplied by division. The way to increase our own is to divide with others. If we undertake to save all to ourselves, we lose all. He that will save his life will lose it. Give and it shall be given.

Spirituality and life must be diffused through the members. The teacher, elder, or preacher must have it, but the church can have no life unless it can be diffused through the members; but they must themselves work and worship to maintain this. Paying others, whether it be elder or preacher, will not accomplish this. Good teachers must exist in every congregation, but a man is a good teacher only as he teaches others how to teach and work in the vineyard of the Lord. The whole body active workers, every member doing his part under the supervision of the head, is the model of the true congregation of Christ that ought to be aimed at. Unless this be diligently and faithfully aimed at, all orders or methods will fail, and this spirit pervading the body would go far toward correcting any violations or perversions of the order of God. D. L.

THE POOR IN SPIRIT TREMBLE AT GOD'S WORD.

The greatest trouble with humanity in all ages of the world has been a disposition to disregard the word of God and go their own way in his service. This disposition began in the garden of Eden and has been in the world from then till now; there has never been a period when all were willing to accept the word of God just as he gave it, and follow it. Disregard of God and his word was what brought confusion of tongues and dispersion upon the Babel builders soon after the flood. They said: "Go to, let us" do so and so. These consulted only their own wisdom, not the wisdom of God, and defeat and ruin was the result. The Jewish people grew tired of the government of God in the days of the judges, and said: "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." They had been under the government of God through judges until they had grown tired of it and had become disobedient and were so infatuated by the governments of the heathen around them that they preferred the way of the heathen in these matters to the righteous government of God. He allowed them to make their own experiments along this line; but instead of doing better and living nearer to God, they went farther and farther from him and grew worse and worse, till they brought ruin and captivity upon themselves.

In the time of Isaiah and near the close of his prophetic life, at the time of the iniquity, the Jews were ripening for the power of God's anger to burst upon them. God, through this old prophet, in view of their rebellious practices and their own inventions, said: "Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest? For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." (Isa. 66: 1, 2.) In view of the many inventions and departures from the word of God these Jews had made, he challenges them along this line, telling them that the heaven is his throne and the earth is his footstool. What can you add to all this? What sort of addition can you make to what I already have? For he says: "All those things hath mine hand made." I have already created all these things, and now what can you add to them? Thus he shows them their weakness and their inability to add one single thing to God's great work, that they could add nothing to his greatness and glory in all the universe he had made. Man may pervert and destroy the good things God has provided for him on this earth, but he can add nothing to them. Man that will use this material world as not abusing it can find all the blessings he needs to help him through life; but when he begins to pervert and misapply the things God has given him here, he only brings his own ruin. If man perverts the use of food, fire, water, air, or any other of the great blessings God has provided for him in this life, he turns them to his ruin, instead of a blessing.

Then, in the next place, the Lord shows the Jews, through this prophet, the utter ruin they were bringing upon themselves in the perversions they were making of his word, of his divine requisitions; for he says to them in verse 3: "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol." This verse pictures a fearful condition of those Jewish people. They had so perverted and misapplied the word of God that even when they did some things that God commanded, it was of no service to him, did not in any sense honor him, and only amounted to rebellion on their part. "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man." This indicates a terrible condition. Killing oxen was a part of the law of Moses, and, when done as God directed, was an item of acceptable service to him. But those Jews had so far perverted the law and had made so many additions to and subtractions from it—had made so many inventions of their own—that nothing they could do was honoring to God. James says: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Whenever men reject one point in God's law and set up something else in its place that they like better, they at once show a disposition to make themselves wiser than God, to set his authority at naught and set up for themselves. When men put themselves in this attitude, as those Jewish people had done, it is but an insult to God; for it is an insult to God to pretend to do anything he says do. It amounts to saying to God: "You have ordained some things that we like, and these we will do; on the other hand, you have ordained some things that are not the right things, and these we will not do." I do not know what could be a higher insult to God than such a course as this. It is really setting God's wisdom and authority aside and going by their own wisdom and their own authority. In this view of the subject, we cannot wonder that he should say: "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man." This was an awful attitude to be in; and, as it put the Jews in that attitude to do that way then, will it not put us in the same attitude to act upon that same principle now? If not, why not? It is a matter of certainty that men are to-day doing the very same things those Jewish people did. They are both adding to and taking from the word of God; they also still do some things just as the word of God says do, but they will get no credit for this while they are making so many changes in God's divine arrangements. Killing, sacrificing, oxen was part of God's law to the Jews, while killing a man has always been an awful crime, ever since Cain killed Abel; and willful, premeditated murder has never admitted of pardon. Even human governments have no law to forgive such murder.

The condition of those Jews, therefore, was awful. That they had put themselves into that condition by the way they had interfered with and changed the work of God is evident from what he says to them in the concluding part of verse 3: "Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations." That is just what put those Jews in the awful condition described in the first part of verse 3. They had chosen their ways and delighted in their own inventions and ways, which are abominations in the sight of the Lord.

Storms and dark clouds of ruin were already gathering around those doomed people. Hence, God says next to them: "I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not." When people, therefore, begin to mangle and change the word of God—add to or diminish from it to get it in shape to suit them—they are choosing their own ways in which to serve him. They want to be religious, for they want to be saved, but they will not do the Lord's way. The Pharisees were very religious in the days of the Savior, and ready to compass sea and land to make one disciple to their way of thinking; they were willing to do and dare anything for their cause. But the Savior told them that when they made a disciple, he was twofold more the child of hell than themselves. Such is precisely the trouble with religious parties and denominations to-day. When they make converts at all, they generally make them to all their peculiar views and ways; and then these new converts generally add more of these human ways, and thus become even more corrupt in the sight of the Lord than those that converted them. So these things grow worse and worse.

Shall we learn nothing from the example of the Jews, and shall we go right on and repeat their sins and bring ruin also upon ourselves as they did? If we do the same way they did, our end is certain to be no better than theirs. Let us be warned of the awful danger of perverting the gospel of Christ by the terrible fate that befell the Jews. In less than a hundred years from the time of this prophecy the things foretold began to be fulfilled; and there was no let-up till Jerusalem was destroyed, the people slain and carried into captivity, and that once lovely country laid in ruins. But there is much encouragement to those who will do the will of God in faithfulness. In the passage quoted is this beautiful expression: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." A man that is poor in a scriptural sense knows that he has no resources of wisdom or power from which he can draw that will aid him in his soul's salvation, and that he is entirely dependent upon the Lord for everything pertaining to salvation. All such as these tremble at God's word. They believe, approve, obey, and trust the word and promises of God, and in so doing have every assurance that God will tenderly regard and bless all that do that way.

It is a fact that very much of the religion of this world to-day is made up of the inventions, innovations, and changes that have been made upon the word of God, while the pure word of God, as he gave it, has very little to do in the matter at all. Creeds, confessions of faith, the action of synods, councils, conventions, conferences, and associations of men are devising the religion of this age. Societies and human inventions of one sort and another are supplanting the church, and so far as anything is being done these are doing it, and not the church of God. If the religious world is not in about as bad a condition to-day spiritually as the Jews were in the days of Isaiah, it will certainly be hard for one to tell wherein it lacks. It is high time for all to awake out of their slumbers, take their bearings, see their danger, and get out of it before it shall be too late and their ruin is brought upon them. There is the most perfect safety for all those that will be poor in spirit and tremble at God's word, and just simply do what the word of God requires, no more and no less, and trust God for the outcome. It may cause persecution, unpopularity with the masses, with all those following human wisdom, and all that; but why care for that, if the eyes of the Lord are over us and his ears are open unto our prayers? "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" Those have nothing to fear that will learn and follow the word of the Lord while they live, and the Lord will take care of them when they die.

E. G. S.

Jesus is the brightness of the Father's glory, the light that shows us God. He was the Angel of the ancient covenant. The voice that promised to fallen Adam in the garden of Eden that the seed of his wife should bruise the serpent's head revealed God's mercy; the angel that visited Abram told that God answers prayer; the "I am" that spoke in the burning bush to Moses said that God sympathizes with the oppressed; and the pillar of cloud and fire told that his sympathy is effective. All his dealings with Israel showed God's hatred of sin and his compassion toward penitent sinners; but in Immanuel, God incarnate, the Nazarene, is the clearest revelation of God. Jesus reveals God as a child, as a teacher of men, as a healer, as a persecuted and reviled man, as a sacrificial victim. He displays God when blessing the children, when weeping at the grave of Lazarus, when condemning the Pharisees, when helping all who ever asked his help. As he fed the hungry multitude, so God feeds all; as he brought the dead to life, so God gives life to all the living; as he healed the sick, so God gives health and strength; as he denounced the hypocrites, so will God punish the wicked.—Christian Observer.

Old Favorites Recalled.

It has long been a custom peculiar to German schools to make lessons in morality a part of the regular course where pupils are required to perform definite acts illustrative of desirable moral qualities and habits; but, since it is possible for this object-lesson work to awaken the understanding only, by way of fixing definitions or giving fuller content to mere words, and yet not move the heart to the adoption of right principles, the influence of good literature, through all the formative periods of a child's tastes and habits, must continue to rank with environment as one of the two most potent factors in the establishment of correct modes of thought and feeling.

That the New Testament embraces the highest and best motives for inculcating active knowledge of man's obligations to God and society is an almost universal concession, and it is pleasant to note the extent to which the Bible is steadily and rapidly gaining ground as a text-book in private and State institutions. Now, while this book must stand preëminent, all other books which young people so indefatigably devour should be examined carefully and deliberately before permitting them to tincture the life and trend of the prospective heirs of the realm.

While I have no desire to declare against the large preponderance of modern writers which so absorb the attention of the children of to-day, because they do tend toward raising continually the mental status of successive generations by keeping our youth in touch with the latest and best human achievements, I do plead for a restoration to favor of some of the old standard works whose influence may be seen, if not measured, in the sturdy, forceful, upright character of our English ancestors whose mental pabulum they were. In the survival of the fittest, for the children's sake, I hope that such books as "Pilgrim's Progress," "Telemaque," "Paul and Virginia," Miss Edgeworth's works, "Elizabeth of Siberia," "Æsop's Fables," and "Rasselas" will never know the shades of oblivion; and I—who am prejudiced, perhaps, in favor of my own youthful diet—may be pardoned if, on comparing the old with the new, I pronounce the old as the better.

Doubtless there is no more efficient manner to revert attention to these old favorites than by short reviews, and, therefore, I would consider here, first of all, "Pilgrim's Progress," the selection being based upon its intimate connection with the holy Scriptures and its corresponding high value.

If there is not, there should be a modern edition brought out, with notes and comments of a technical and critical character, the former calling attention to the grammatical inaccuracies resulting from Bunyan's educational deficiencies; the latter, corrective of doctrine wherever the full light of interpretation seems obscure or perverted.

The book is divided into two parts, and, of these, the second is wanting in some of the strong features which distinguish the first, it being neither so original, well conceived, or executed. Doubtless the nature of the situation precludes any great range of originality, and his standpoint as a man distorts, to some extent, his perspective. It might seem that he himself scarcely realized that there is but one path to heaven for both men and women, and that Christiana must needs go the same way as her husband.

No other aid so great to the housewife, no other agent so useful and certain in making delicious, pure and wholesome foods, has ever been devised.

He appears to imagine that the path is infinitely smoother for the gentler sex, for whom conductors and guides are always ready to offer stout arms and great hearts to vanquish foes, ease difficulties, and protect from besetting sins. Yet what woman in reading does not recognize in Christian's progress the clearer counterpart of her own life as a disciple than in that of Christiana?

Nevertheless, all sympathetic readers of Part I. need scarcely restrain their desire to follow the pilgrimage of Christiana, and should feel repaid by the many excellent touches it contains.

The book is throughout marked by deep piety, strong, reasonable common sense, thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, and large views. Its simplicity of style opens a wide avenue for effectiveness with even the minds of young children; yet it is subtle enough in wisdom to win the admiration and excite the curiosity of those who delight to delve in the mysteries of an extended allegory, if the very vivacity of its movement did not win and sustain the interest.

To those who have even the least feeling toward the good it acts as magnet upon steel, not only charming unto its own appreciation, but assimilating unto its own sensitive condition. Therefore is its fitness proven to rank among the leading classics for children, closely akin to the Bible in its forceful power to develop character, establish right-mindedness, inculcate true religion by elevating God and his Son above all, by emphasizing the attainment of pardon and acceptance of God as the greatest goal for humanity's striving, and by putting forward the best motives as a basis for moral rectitude, with a merited scorn for hypocrisy prompted by worldly policy. In short, it reflects naught but purity, strength, nobility, honor, and gratitude toward God; charity, faithfulness, sincerity, and good will toward all mankind; a bold, uncompromising hatred toward sin and everything inimical to unsullied Christianity. Its faults are rather those of omission than commission.

There is either a powerful element of selfishness or a great poverty of religious conviction in the life of any one whose whole energies seem to be required to work out his own salvation without the missionary spirit being strongly in evidence for the salvation of those around him; hence, we are forced to conclude from his silence upon this subject that the parting admonition of Christ, to go preach, baptize, and teach the nations, did not make very much impression upon Bunyan.

If there is any expressed feature to criticize or at least that demands us to stand and consider ere we approve and appropriate, it is the aggressive attitude, the laissez-faire policy with which it proposes to deal with and handle sin at all points of contact. Cowardice and present ease find no place in the contest, and war is unhesitatingly and relentlessly carried into the enemy's camp whenever he shrinks from drawing up his forces in battle array, since it is impossible that righteousness and unrighteousness should dwell together in unity.

Finally, "Pilgrim's Progress," as a literary composition, both in its contents and history—the product of a student of just one book—remains to the present day with a long lease in the future, highly desirable, and of deep interest to study; above all, as an invaluable aid to the religious instruction and growth of the young, it can scarcely meet with adequate appreciation or claim less than its right to rank along with the most important text-books in common school curricula. As a reader, I believe it might be most advantageously placed in the lower grades to be taken up and carefully examined later on.

New Truth.

Do not understand me to mean by the above caption that the truth which I shall present is new or just revealed, for, if it is true, it is as old as the New Testament. I simply mean it is new to this generation. I know it is hard to yield what we have taught for years and acknowledge that we were wrong and taught error, especially if we stand in the front rank as one wise in God's word. How manly, honest, pure, and Christlike to admit error and give honor to whom honor is due! This with me is not such a trial, as I am isolated and poor and have never won any distinction. So when I see an error in my teaching, I correct it at once, tell the people of the mistake, and strive to grow in grace and a knowledge of the truth, and I am fully persuaded that in order for us to ask acceptably for wisdom from above, we must fully overcome egotism, and be perfectly willing and anxious to accept the truth from the humblest source, and correct previous error and give honor to whom honor is due.

What I wish to present to the reader for study is 1 John 3: 9: "Whoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed [God's word] remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." I have read with interest many explanations of the above, only to be confused and not get one single ray of light. Not a single exegetist has ever attempted to quote scripture to sustain his exposition, but simply draws upon his imagination and leaves the field with the scripture contradicting itself, if his idea be correct. I have made it a rule for several years to teach nothing that did not harmonize and agree with the word of God. The first ray of light that I received upon 1 John 3: 9 was given to me by Brother Robert Turner; he caught it from a Methodist preacher. Brother Turner has passed over the river and rests under the shade of the tree of life.

1 John is one letter, and when we read the letter carefully, we notice that he starts out affirming a proposition to the close of verse 5. That is the sonship of Christ. Why should he make this affirmation and so strongly urge its truthfulness? Only because it had been denied to those to whom he is writing. Then he begins to deny three propositions. (1 John 1: 5-10.) Why? Because some one had affirmed them. Now read 1 John 2: 3; 18-26. In verse 26 he says some one had seduced them. How? By denying the things that he affirmed and affirming the things that he denied. To my way of understanding, this is plain. In the three last verses of chapter 2 and throughout chapter 3 he assures, strengthens, and encourages them, and in verses 9 and 10 of the latter chapter he makes an explanation and refutes the seducer.

Baptism was a new law. It required more than the law of Moses; hence, the Jew could say with force that a Jew who would submit to it sinned, for there was nothing to be added to and nothing taken away from the law. (Deut. 4: 2.) To do either you could not serve God. Hence, for a Jew to be born of water was a sin. John meets this by telling them that they could not sin doing what God required of them, for they were taught the word of God, and the word (seed) demanded it, and they had the word in their hearts. In verse 10 he explains what this birth was for. It drew the line between God's family and the devil's family. Be it remembered that John is the only apostle that represents baptism as a birth. (John 1: 12, 13; 3: 3-5.) This view explains 1 John 1: 8-10. The seducers claimed that they had no sin that was not provided for by Moses, and consequently they had not sinned, and demanded this birth. For them to say they had not sinned made Christ a liar. In chapter 4 he cautions them not to receive the teaching of any one without trying him, and gives the rule how they were to try teachers or seducers. (Verse 6.) Then on to the close of chapter 5 he exhorts them to abide in what he had taught them. This is the way I see it. S. I. S. CAWTHON.

Church News.

ALABAMA.

Valhermoso Springs, September 11.—First, thanking Brother D. Lipscomb for being instrumental in sending our brother, G. W. Riggs, to the church of Christ at this place, I wish to state that he is doing a good work both for saints and sinners. Upon his arrival here, on the first Lord's day in July, he commenced to meet with the brethren and found many of them lukewarm and indifferent, having neglected for many months their Lord's day duty of partaking of the memorial supper. By Brother Riggs' exhortations and appeals, forty persons pledged themselves to commence anew and be more faithful and consecrated. Brother Riggs commenced a meeting at this place on the second Lord's day in August and during the week's services there were seventeen additions—nine reclaimed, three from the sects, and five by baptism. He is at present holding a meeting near Hartsells, which I hope to be able to report favorably.

M. L. GIERS.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Rush, Springs, September 12.—My meeting at this place has just come to a close, after two weeks' duration. As a result of the meeting, there were forty-two additions to the church. I will begin a meeting at Clipper, Tex., on September 22, and hope to have a glorious meeting. My health is better than it was this time last year.

J. M. AUSTIN.

Marietta, September 18.—I am at the mines in a very interesting meeting. Brother Gilbert Sawyers, an old war horse, is with me. Since his voice has failed him he has been unable to do any public speaking, but he is strong in the one faith of God's word. Brother Sawyers is very old and poor, comparatively speaking, in this world's goods, and is dependent on his own efforts for a livelihood. He would be pleased to take subscriptions for a good paper, canvass, and sell Bibles and New Testaments for a reliable book concern, and I judge him quite capable of making a success in that line of business. He would be much pleased to have any books, tracts, or leaflets the brethren at large may have to offer. He can no doubt distribute them in a better way than not a few of us can. Send them to him, brethren, at Ardmore. My meeting at Sulphur Springs, Hopkins County, Tex., was in some measure a success. Our efforts put forth there resulted in establishing a congregation of about twenty-five lively, working members to keep house for the Lord. I am ready now to accept calls from Northern Texas. Who wants my service? Write at once.

J. B. ASKEW.

KENTUCKY.

Delaware, September 20.—Brother I. H. Teel, of Paducah, held a ten-days' meeting at Shady Grove Schoolhouse, in McLean County. He was rained out two nights. The results of his strong effort to do good were two additions by baptism and one reclaimed. Brother Teel did not fail to declare the whole counsel of God.

J. H. MACKEY.

Tompkinsville, September 19.—I began a meeting at Vernon on the second Lord's day in July and closed on the third Lord's day in July, I was assisted by Brother Luther Moore. The results of the meeting were sixty-four additions to the church—forty-five by immersion and nineteen reclaimed. I began a meeting at Beech Bethany, Tenn., on the fifth Lord's day in July and continued four days. There were nineteen additions to the church—fifteen by immersion and four reclaimed. I assisted Brother J. E. Lyon in a meeting which he began at Philippi on the fourth Sunday in August and continued eight days. There were five additions and the church much encouraged. I also held a meeting at Germany, beginning on the first Lord's day in September and continuing over the second Lord's day in September. There were nine persons added to the church. At each of the above-named places the crowds were large and attentive. I also found at each church a number of earnest workers for Christ.

SAM. J. WHITE.

TENNESSEE.

Palmer'sville, September 20.—Our meeting at this place began on the fourth Lord's day in July and continued twelve days, resulting in eight additions—seven obeyed the gospel and one prodigal returned. Brother A. P. Johnson did all the preaching, and he did it well. This was a splendid meeting. Brother Johnson is quite a young man, but he knows how to wield the gospel sword.

J. W. WESCOAT.

Bluff City, September 9.—Brother Bynum Black, of Ravenden Springs, Ark., commenced a meeting at this place on Saturday night before the first Lord's day in September. Brother Black is a good, sound, gospel preacher and an able defender of the truth. We had the pleasure of hearing him preach sixteen gospel sermons and witnessed the baptism of eleven persons into the one body.

WARREN STARNES.

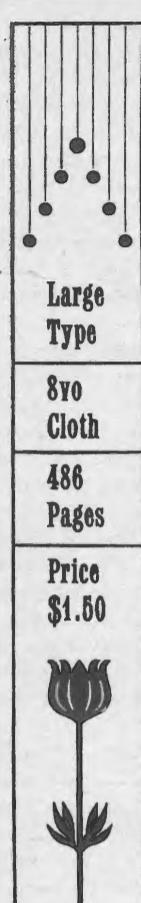

Jasper, September 14.—I am just home from a meeting at Garth, Ala., where I preached sixteen sermons and baptized seventeen persons upon a confession of their faith in Christ. Our young brother, Luther Jones, was with me all the time (this being his home), and he, in connection with others, led the song service. The meeting was regarded as one of the best in the history of this congregation, and the good that it will accomplish eternity alone can reveal.

E. H. BOYD.

McMinnville, September 18.—I began a meeting at West Riverside, one mile from McMinnville, on the first Lord's day in September and continued fifteen days. The crowds increased from the beginning and the visible results were: Twenty-six persons were added to the saved. These brethren are going to build a house to worship in, located one mile from McMinnville, on the Winchester road. They have subscribed over one hundred dollars already toward this house. Brother F. W. Smith was with us at several of our day meetings and kindly assisted us in song and prayer; also Brother Stubblefield, of Viola, was with us.

S. F. HARRIS.

Bellbuckle, September 17.—I began a meeting at a schoolhouse four miles north of this place on the first Sunday in September and continued until the following Friday night, during which time there were four additions. The little congregation there is meeting regularly and the members seem to be in the narrow way. I went from there to Dillton, in Rutherford County, and began a meeting on the second Lord's day in September and continued eight days, in which time there were eight additions. That is the place where Brother H. G. Fleming and J. N. Hall held a discussion several years ago. The church is not very strong numerically, but the brethren are faithful. I am to go next to a destitute place in Coffee County to preach several days. I will report when the meeting closes.

F. F. DEARING.

Prairie Plains, September 8.—Brother J. R. Hill, of Lebanon, began a meeting at this place on the fourth Lord's day in August and closed on September 7, 1900. The meeting was a glorious one, the visible results being twelve persons added to the one body by baptism into death, two of whom were Baptists and one a Presbyterian. Brother Hill came to this place last summer and found two or three brethren and a community filled with prejudice; but after a three-weeks' meeting, the results were twenty additions to the one body, many of whom were heads of families. The brethren at once erected a nice house of worship and are continuing in apostolic practice. Prejudice has been broken down, and the glorious light of the truth so ably taught by Brother Hill is now beginning to dawn upon the community in general. Such are the fruits of his labors wherever he goes. Brother Hill is a young man of extraordinary ability. His heart and mind are filled with "the seed of the kingdom," even the word of truth, and so eloquent, powerful, and logical are his efforts in the proclamation of the same that he has become a leader of the souls of men from the power of darkness into the marvelous light of the Son of God.

CLYDE GLEAVES.

Milan, September 14.—I will now send in a short report of my work for this year. The meeting at Blood River began on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July and continued over the fifth Sunday in July, resulting in eleven additions to the church by confession and baptism, one of whom was from the Methodists. I next began a meeting at Union Grove, Ky., on Saturday evening before the first Sunday in August and continued until the next Saturday night—one week. At that place there were four additions by primary obedience. I had no help in that meeting, except the cooperation of the brethren, which was cordially given. On the second Sunday in August I began a meeting at Green Plains, Ky., and continued until the following Sunday. I was assisted in this meeting by Brother Gus. Brown and Brother J. R. Hill. Brother Brown preached once and Brother Hill preached three times. I closed the meeting with nine additions to the church, eight of whom were by confession and baptism and one came from the Methodists. I began a meeting at Conyersville on the third Sunday night in August and continued till Monday night after the fourth Sunday in August, closing with twenty-one additions by confession and baptism. Brother Gus. Brown assisted me at nights in this meeting. He is teaching school two miles from Conyersville. He preached four times. This was a good and victorious meeting, the church being greatly strengthened. I commenced a meeting at Buena Vista on the first Sunday in September and continued over the following Sunday, closing with one baptism. This was a good and enjoyable meeting; the Christians were much strengthened and encouraged by it. I give the Lord all praise and glory for these meetings.

E. C. L. DENTON.

TEXAS.

Gindale, September 18.—Our meeting at this place began on Friday night before the first Lord's day in September and continued until Saturday night before the following Lord's day, with six additions. Brother Spivey did the preaching. This is a new place and there is a great deal of opposition here. There are about twenty members here and we meet every Lord's day, but have preaching only once or twice a month.

S. Z. FOX.

Little Elm, September 11.—The Cottonwood church of Christ, at this place, has just closed a week's grand and glorious meeting. The preaching was done by Brother E. H. Rogers, of Collinsville, and Brother Ben. Taughtner, of Wiley. The song service was conducted by Brother H. H. Thomason. The preaching and singing were splendid. The visible results were twenty-eight persons added to the one body. Brother Rogers and Brother Taughtner are both able gospel preachers. The brethren and sisters were greatly strengthened. May the Lord bless those brethren in the grand work for the Master.

R. H. CLARK.

Saralva, September 11.—The meeting at Patrick Chapel resulted in five baptisms and one restoration. The brethren generally were strengthened. Brother J. A. Harding did the preaching. The meeting began on the night of August 4, 1900, and continued ten days. I was present during the greater part of the meeting, but left before the close to begin a meeting with the Sylvona church of Christ. This meeting lasted fifteen days and resulted in six baptisms. The Sylvona church of Christ is an old congregation, having continued since 1859, and it is a good church. Brother H. G. Orr, one of the elders, said to me: "There is not an unkind feeling between any of the members of this church." This was a very pleasant meeting. During the first week in this month I preached at nights at Gertie. There are a few members there, but that was the first meeting ever held at that place, I think. There were no additions, but the few scattered brethren promised to meet as taught in the Scriptures. The Lord willing, I will help them more in the future.

ROBERTSON WHITESIDE.

Greenville, September 10.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting in West Dallas yesterday. There were four confessions during the meeting. I have labored with these brethren in four protracted meetings. They have the elements of strength in their midst—able men as teachers and counselors, young men for enthusiastic work, and noble women, not a few, to give sympathy and encouragement to all. Brother Barcus and Brother Grasty, able preachers of the word, are members of this congregation; also Brother Campbell Carnes, a teacher of experience and able in the Scriptures, lives and labors with these people. I spent one day with Brother J. S. Dunn, who labors with the First Church. If Brother Dunn is not doing the work of the Lord in the Lord's way, I am very much mistaken. What Paul did at Antioch and other places where he labored so long, Brother Dunn is trying to do in Dallas. He is developing the church, so they will not use the food masticated by a modern pastor. Brother Dunn does not stop here, but, every night in the week, under a tent owned by the church, he preaches the gospel to those who would never enter a meetinghouse. Would to God that all faithful preachers would do more of this kind of work! It solves the problem of how to reach the masses. F. L. YOUNG.

Mineola, September 18.—I wish to say to the brethren in East Texas that I am now a fixture in their beloved country. I have exchanged my little property in Mineola for a fifty-acre farm which belonged to Brother Ben. Reed. It is located five miles west of Mineola and two miles south of Golden. This is the best poor man's country I ever saw. Good homes can be had for from five to ten dollars per acre, but they will not be this cheap long. We come nearer having a good, general fruit crop here than any place. My purpose in locating in this country is to preach the gospel to the poor and those who are without it. In preaching to the poor who have not heard the truth, I will use every opportunity to edify the churches and exhort them to cooperate in the work. We have but few churches in this (Wood) county and adjoining counties. Do not take up the idea that I need your personal or financial aid, or that you need my help, or that the Lord needs the help of any of us, but that we need to do the work, that the Lord may help us, and that a united effort gives strength. Then let us continue our moral, mental, physical, and financial labors in order to extend the kingdom of Christ in this field. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation," but it "is within you." (Luke 17: 20, 21.) Hence, the quiet life we live and the unassuming work that we do by God's authority is the best way to extend his kingdom. I have been here nearly a year this time and have been preaching as opportunity afforded.

Kansas Notes.

Brother C. M. Johnson preached at Peck on the second Lord's day in this month. He will soon be busy in the field; he makes a good impression as an earnest young man. Earnestness is a very necessary qualification for a preacher; he cannot succeed without it.

Brother B. F. Martin, of Winfield, has recently assisted the brethren in a good meeting at Eatonville.

A letter from Brother B. S. Wright, of Douglass, tells of his labors in the vineyard. He is doing a good work in Butler County. He recently baptized three ladies at one of his regular appointments. I am glad to hear of such good work. May the Lord bless his labors wherever he goes.

Brother J. E. Cain is now in Oklahoma Territory, and will remain there for some time, at different points.

Brother B. F. Rhodes had a successful meeting at Shelby, Mo.; nine persons became obedient to the gospel. His next meeting will be near Galatin, Mo.

Brother O. M. Thomason was at Clements the last report I had from him. He was in a good meeting. He will probably go to Strong City next.

A letter from Brother W. W. Carter, formerly of Orangeville, Tex., informs me that he is now a citizen of Hepler. I am glad to hear from him. He does not give a very favorable report of the spiritual condition in that part of the State. I will be glad to meet Brother Carter, as his letter has the right "sound" to it.

Uncle Minor's Stories

A book of real incidents selected from the author's experience and observation. Uncle Minor's life was devoted to the young, and everywhere he went the children became attached to him. He thought there was too much reality in life to spend his time in writing fiction, so in this book he confines himself to real incidents and true stories which point the mind to "some virtue to practice or vice to shun." It is an exceedingly appropriate gift for the young. Sent post-paid. 256 pages, 6½ x 9½; bound in cloth.

some time preaching. Whatever he does in the line of Christian work is well done. He is careful and considerate, and there is nothing unstable in his dealings with questions that he must meet.

The meeting at Palestine closed on the second Lord's day in September. They have some faithful brethren and more faithful sisters. They have had much to discourage them; many removals from the community and the lukewarm condition of some have hindered the work. It will require strong faith and perseverance to keep the work moving and advancing there, but there is hope of much improvement soon. May the Lord bless them in their noble efforts. Trust in the Lord and do the right, and all will be well; success will crown your efforts.

How many count the cost before they begin their work? How many professed Christians have sufficient faith to lead them to do all the Lord requires? How many have sufficient faith to perform their whole duty under all circumstances? How many talk to your face exactly as they talk to your back? How many act in your absence as they do in your presence? What will become of Christians who preach against backbiting and then follow it between sermons? What will the Lord do with the man who claims to be your friend and is your enemy? How many of us realize that our responsibilities are largely of an individual nature? We look for too much to grow out of our labors immediately that show what we have done. If we cannot have a large congregation with which to worship, we feel as though we are doing nothing. We forget individual responsibility and duty. It is commendable in us to greatly desire the salvation of others, and we must labor to that end; but we must not lay the armor down because we are few in a place, but buckle it the closer, and, as individuals, go into the field to win. The battle is the Lord's, and we will win if we trust him, instead of self or other men. It requires steadfastness to the end. When Columbus made up his mind to sail to the new world, he let nothing daunt him. Because he did not have an "Atlantic liner," he did not say, "I will not go," but he launched the crude old vessel available and got here. We must determine to sail to the new world, Holy of holies, and if our surroundings do not appear as encouraging as we think they ought, we must not give up, but continue the line of march, though it leads through marshes and over stony places. The surroundings may present a somber hue, the circumstances may appear unfavorable, the prospect may seem gloomy; notwithstanding all this, we must set sail, unfurl our banner, buckle on the armor, unsheathe the sword, observe the orders of the Captain, keep step to the music, face the foe, and move on to victory. Jesus never lost a battle; he is our Captain. Do we trust him or self? Have we our armor or the Lord's? Is our sword man made or God made? Is our help within self or the Lord? Are we listening for man's eulogy or the Lord's approval? Are we giving the glory to the Lord or to self? Is vanity or humility on the throne of our hearts? Are we boastful or meek, like the Lord? Are we destined to ride over the men and surroundings, or is it the Lord to whom the Christian's success belongs? Is it "big I," any way you take me, or do we give ourselves wholly to the Lord? It is best to exercise a little care here.

The New England Conservatory of Music is about to take another forward step in its development. Nearly an acre of land has already been bought on Huntington Avenue, in the aristocratic Back Bay district of Boston, and only one block from the new music hall which is in process of erection. Within a year the trustees hope to be able to make the transfer from the old home on Washington street to the new home. Instead of one large building, two, and possibly three, will be constructed, one containing class rooms and a large hall for the concerts and recitals, which are of almost daily occurrence in such an institution, and the other for the Conservatory Home. More structures will be built as needed on the ample grounds. In its new home it will be in the center of the most interesting section of Greater Boston. Amid these surroundings and in the closest relations with Music Hall, the Art Museum, and the various musical and art societies with which Back Bay abounds, the New England Conservatory gives promise of a future which may well eclipse the splendor of its past history, and make it in the truest sense a University of Music to which the lesser schools all over the country may send their graduates to receive the training and advantages which only a great university in a great musical center can bestow.

Field Findings.

At this writing I am at Cuthbert, Mitchell County, Tex., in a few-days' meeting. I have had very good audiences and fine attention for this Western country. There have been two confessions to date and I look for others. I will remain here only a short time, when I shall return home and join Brother J. S. Dunn in a meeting with my home congregation.

The meeting at Dunn, Scurry County, Tex., is now a thing of the past, and the results were far better than any one expected. The attendance was very large all the time, especially for Western Texas, and the attention was all that could be asked for. There were sixteen additions to the church of Christ there, and among the number baptized was a Baptist preacher by the name of Jordan. Many brethren and friends say he is one of the best men in all the country. Dunn is the home of Brother R. H. Howard, formerly of Arkansas, and to his work there we attribute much of the success of the meeting. Brother Howard is a true man of God and a man of fine ability. One year ago he met J. J. F. Lockhart in a fourteen-days' debate at Dunn, and, during the debate, crippled the Baptist preacher that I baptized. Brother Howard is just such a man as is badly needed in West Texas and will surely do much good, unless he entangles himself too much with the affairs of this life. I have been intimately acquainted with Brother Howard and his work for eight years and I know him to be true to the word of God and a friend to gospel preachers. The members of the church of Christ at Dunn contemplate a camp meeting next year, and if they decide to have it, they will make a success of it. They paid me well for my labor among them.

At Bluff Creek, Tex., twelve miles west of Dunn, there is a congregation of loyal Christians, and by invitation of the church of Christ there Brother Howard and the writer agreed to hold a short meeting for them. Brother Howard began the meeting on Saturday night and I joined him on Monday and preached three sermons, with thirteen additions. There were two additions before I arrived, making fifteen additions to the time I left, and others were almost persuaded. Brother Howard has the confidence of these brethren and had prepared material, hence the success.

Thirty-one additions have been the results of my twelve-days' labor in Scurry and Mitchell Counties. This Western country is peculiar in many respects, but the people are as honest and upright as can be found anywhere. Many of them live in "dug-outs," but the latchstring hangs on the outside and a hearty welcome is extended. The young ladies will catch up a broncho, mount it, and run cattle or horses about as well as the men. Many are excellent riders, and there are but few horses that can buck them off. Large herds of cattle and horses are to be found all over this West Texas country, and many say the worst curse of the country is the cow man. I shall ever remember this trip with gladness and pray that much good has been done that will be gathered up many days hence.

My heart was filled with sadness when I read of the death of Brother Srygley. I had met Brother Srygley several years ago, while he was visiting his parents at Coal Hill, Ark., and was impressed with him as a gospel preacher. His writings I consider among the very best, and while his body is now in the grave, truly can it be said: "His works do follow him." Brother Srygley will continue to live in the hearts of God's people for many years to come, and his books be read when those who now live on the earth will be numbered with the dead. May the Lord bless and comfort his bereaved family.

Virginia Jottings.

On the afternoon of the fourth Lord's day in August, I preached at Laurel Hill, took the confession of two little girls (aged ten years and thirteen years, respectively), and baptized them the same hour of the afternoon in the creek near the meetinghouse. The younger was my granddaughter. May the Lord bless them both.

On the morning of August 19, 1900, about 5 o'clock, Mrs. Sallie P. Hawley, wife of Mr. Frank Hawley, departed this life. Mrs. Hawley was born on December 30, 1875. She came into the church when young, and remained a member of the church at New Salem till the time of her death. She left a boy babe, about six months old; also a husband, father, mother, one sister, and five brothers are left to mourn her early demise. Such is the condition of affairs in this world. Those that we least think of being called away are frequently taken hence. The funeral services were conducted by the writer (her uncle) at her father's house, assisted by a Mr. Mitchell, in the presence of a large company of friends and relatives. May God comfort the living ones.

MEETING AT LIBERTY, TENN.

There are a few members living at or near Liberty, Tenn., and some time since they set to work to build a house of worship at this place, having some preaching done in the meantime; but when they had got their house well under way, a storm came along and blew it down. This upset their arrangements for a time, but they went to work again with renewed energy, and put up their house, and now they have a very neat and comfortable house that will comfortably seat a good-sized audience. They received assistance from neighboring brethren and congregations, and have their house paid for. They have done well in this matter, and now have a house into which they can invite their neighbors and friends to hear the gospel and make them comfortable.

Our meeting began on the second Lord's day in September and closed on the third Lord's day night in September, continuing day and night, except one daytime appointment was rained out. For the first few days a Baptist revival was in progress, and we had small audiences; but after they closed, we had very good and attentive audiences to the close of our meeting. There were no additions, but the seed of the kingdom was liberally sown, and we are confident good will result from it. The brethren seemed much strengthened and encouraged through the truth, and more than ever determined to persevere in the good work of the Lord. I am sure the truth will have its effect in that community in process of time. The meeting was a very pleasant and enjoyable one, both to myself and the brethren, and it is hoped much good may flow out from it. E. G. S.

Boaz-Mayo Debate.

I have a card, found in Middle Tennessee, on which I find this statement: "Tell Boaz to hush about the Old Baptists, or else, meet Elder G. T. Mayo and defend the doctrine he advocated at Palmersville, Tenn." In justice to myself and the cause, I will give the history of this "talked-of debate."

On the fourth Sunday in July, 1898, I began a meeting at Palmersville, Tenn., and preached about ten days. While there I preached on the church question, showing it to be "the body of Christ," "the house of the Lord," and that the "Spirit dwells in the body;" also that "all Christians are in the body," but that no one can "join this body, or church."

After leaving Palmersville, Mr. G. T. Mayo, of Dresden, Tenn., belonging to the new wing of the Old Baptist Church, came to Palmersville and preached a sermon, trying to reply to what had been preached, and made many reckless statements. I was told that he made a challenge for a debate. I at once wrote him that I would accept. He replied by saying that he made no challenge, but if I challenged him, he would then meet me. Time passed on, and the talk got out that I would not meet Mr. Mayo. I then sent a challenge to him in order to stop such talk. He replied, sending me two propositions, neither of which expressed the issue. The one he wanted me to affirm was: "The Bible teaches that the unregenerate sinner must join the church and be baptized in order to obtain eternal salvation." I replied at once, stating that I did not believe the proposition, therefore I would not defend it. I sent to him this proposition, "The Bible teaches that the eternal salvation of the sinner is dependent upon conditions with which he is able to comply," offering to affirm the same. This he has never offered to deny. The one I asked him to affirm was: "The Bible teaches that the heirs of eternal salvation were chosen in Christ personally and unconditionally before the foundation of the world, and that these, and these only, will be finally saved." Mr. Mayo has never said whether he believes or disbelieves the proposition, and I predict he never will. I have offered everything that is fair and reasonable, and yet he continues saying that I will not meet him.

I repeat the challenge and defy Mr. Mayo to meet me on the propositions offered above, or I will meet him on these propositions: "(1) The Bible teaches that Christ Jesus died on the cross for all of Adam's posterity;" this I will affirm. "(2) The Bible teaches that the Holy Spirit operates on the sinner's heart in conviction and conversion immediately;" this I will deny. I hope the next time Mr. Mayo speaks of my "backing out" that he will read this article—not part, but all.

I positively deny ever having taught that "man has to join the church and be baptized in order to obtain eternal salvation." Neither have I at any time taught that man can join the church of God. I remain ever ready to meet Mr. Mayo on the propositions presented in this article.

SUNNY WOMEN.

Who has not known the woman whose disposition is described by that one word "sunny?" There's always a laugh lurking on her lips. Her cheeks are ever ready to dimple in smiles. Her household influence is as brightening and stimulating as the sunshine. Nothing can be crueller than to have this sunshine blotted out by disease. But this is a common cruelty. The young wife who was the sunshine of the home becomes its shadow. Every young wife should know the value of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in the protection and preservation of the health. It promotes regularity, dries the drains which enfeeble body and mind, and cures inflammation, ulceration and female weakness. It nourishes the nervous system and gives to the body the balance and buoyancy of perfect health. It is a strictly temperance medicine.

"I can say that your medicine cured me," writes Mrs. Maud Pearce, of Stoutsville, Fairfield Co., Ohio. "I had suffered about twelve years from female weakness and I had almost given up, thinking there was no cure for me. Then I heard about Dr. Pierce's medicine and thought I would try it, and can say that seven bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' made me well. I am now able to do my own housework. I took about twelve bottles in all of Dr. Pierce's medicines. Took some of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' 'Favorite Prescription' and some of the 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation.

Do your duty, and do not worry over what belongs to God.

"Gospel Praise" is a new book of song, edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell and published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. It is a book of 320 pages, containing 322 songs. While I am no judge of the music, this book commends itself very strongly to me in the hymns, psalms, and spiritual songs it presents. It contains more hymns of earnest and true praise to God than any recent book I have seen. There has been in the modern books of song a tendency to neglect hymns of praise to God and to run into light and flippant songs of what we will and want to be. This latter is right in a measure, and this book does not neglect admonitions and exhortations to activity and zeal in the Master's work; but the foundation of all true service is reverence for God. This is encouraged and increased by singing hymns of solid and earnest praise to him, by which we magnify and exalt him in our hearts. The worship of modern times has had a tendency to neglect the magnifying, the reverencing and hallowing of his name in our hearts and lives. Yet that we may do this is the first and foundation prayer taught by Christ to his disciples. We must exalt and honor God and his holy name or we can never serve him acceptably or enjoy his favor. We commend this book of song as a return to this order, and it rightly gives the songs of praise precedence in place in the book. D. L.

A number of mills in South Carolina have declared that they cannot run on full time with cotton at its present price. These mills all manufacture almost exclusively for foreign consumption, and their trade has been crippled by high prices. However, the majority of the mills in the State manufacture for home consumption, and they are running on full time. Although the crop in South Carolina is only a little more than half, the price is proportionately advanced, and farmers are trying to hold for still better prices.

Maj. H. C. Bate has the following to say of conditions of crops in Tennessee: "Warm, dry weather prevailed during the early part of the week, followed by generous rains, which fell from September 13, 1900, to September 15, 1900, in various sections. Many of the rains were very local in character, but in the eastern division they were heaviest and more of a general nature. These rains, while they came rather late to be of material benefit to late corn and other maturing crops, were greatly reviving to late planted crops and pastures, also facilitating the work of plowing for the fall seedings. In many sections, however, mostly in the middle and western divisions, the rains, if any, were light and insufficient, and reports from these districts are not at all encouraging as to the condition of crops, except that the work of saving hay and fodder and peas; also of making sorghum, progressed favorably. Early corn is drying rapidly; the late crop has been greatly shortened by the severe drought. Cotton is opening fast, and picking is now in full progress; the crop promises to be quite short.

Tobacco is about all cut, and the condition of the crop, both as to quality and quantity, is reported excellent; the latter cuttings were damaged to some extent by worms. Pastures dried up rapidly until the rains fell, and stock began to show the effects of the drought. In Coffee County there is considerable excitement regarding the Texas tick, and cattle are being quarantined, which will, of course, necessitate more or less feeding. Sweet potatoes are doing fairly well; second crop Irish potatoes and late sown turnips are generally failures. Fruit prospects remain about the same: apples mostly dropped off, and but few are fit to pick up; peaches are mostly inferior in quality."

"Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of the Christian Advocate, says: 'If the Methodists should ever put us out of the synagogue—which God forbid!—we shall be compelled to seek for shelter in a quiet corner of some good old Presbyterian congregation.' Why not in the Baptist Church, Doctor? You came of good old Baptist stock, anyhow, did you not? It would be a great pleasure to us to baptize you in the Cumberland River." (Baptist and Reflector.) If the Doctor should ever be put out of "the synagogue," for him "to seek for shelter in a quiet corner of some good old Presbyterian congregation," or to accept Mr. Folk's suggestion and become a Baptist, would be akin to "jumping out of the frying pan into the fire." Why not become and be simply and only a member of the body of Christ, which is "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth?" Certainly there can be no objection to this, either in reason or revelation. But why should Mr. Folk take pleasure in immersing any one, since he repudiates the design and makes the action an initiatory rite into an institution for which there is no divine warrant?

"'Confession of Faith,' Chapter 10, Section 3, says: 'Elect infants dying in infancy are saved by Christ, through the Spirit.' The last Assembly said: 'This language cannot by fair interpretation be construed to teach that any who die in infancy are lost.' It has always seemed to me that a fair and necessary inference from the language of the 'Confession of Faith' is that 'nonelect infants dying in infancy' are lost. The matter at issue here and now is a fair interpretation of the language of the 'Confession of Faith.' Mr. Smith went into his orchard and gathered the ripe apples; it is a fair interpretation of this language that some of his apples were not ripe. Mr. Smith went into his flock and removed the fat sheep; then some of his sheep were not fat. Mr. Smith sold his choice wheat at a fair price; then he had some wheat that was not choice. The language of the 'Confession of Faith' is justly liable to the interpretation so uniformly placed upon it, and will be so construed so long as it remains. The true remedy is not to insert a footnote which is not true in itself, but to strike out the word 'elect.' If the Assembly really believed that the 'Confession of Faith' teaches that all infants dying in infancy are elect and saved, it had a perfect right so to enter on its minutes; but it had no right to amend the 'Confession of Faith' itself by the addition of a footnote as an authoritative interpretation of said 'Confession of Faith.' If the Assembly of 1900 is allowed this right, then any and all subsequent Assemblies may add footnotes at will, and it will not be long before there is more footnote than 'Confession of Faith.' The statement of this footnote is not true in fact, and if it were true, it has no right to a place in the 'Confession of Faith.'" (A. W. Pitzer, in Christian Observer.) We agree with Mr. Pitzer that "the language of the 'Confession of Faith' is justly liable to the interpretation so uniformly placed upon it, and will be so construed so long as it remains." If language has any meaning at all, then certainly this section means that some infants dying in infancy are "nonelect," and hence are lost. Revisions of "Confessions of Faith" and footnotes explaining certain sections, which frequently do not explain, but contradict, the plain language of the same, appear to be becoming quite popular. If all the "Confessions of Faith" were revised out of existence, perhaps those who have followed them so long could see "the way of the Lord more perfectly" and would stand therein and walk thereby, and thus help to promote that perfect unity for which the Savior prayed and which would cause the world to believe that God had sent him to redeem it from sin and iniquity.

Replying to a querist who claimed to be "antagonized" with "Campbellism," and wanted the editor to give "some short, concise defense" in his columns "against their most popular quotations on water regeneration," the Baptist and Reflector answers: "As we have already announced, we expect to begin a series of articles in the Baptist and Reflector some time soon on 'The Plan of Salvation.' In these articles we do not know that we shall call the name 'Campbellite' a single time, but we shall try to show as plainly and strongly as possible what is the gospel plan of salvation, and in doing so we shall have to run counter to Campbellism at every turn." A series of articles on "Physics" by one who knows practically nothing of the laws and properties of matter would not be very instructive to the student of natural philosophy, and we presume to say that with his knowledge of the plan of salvation, Editor Folk will not very "plainly and strongly" show "what is the gospel plan of salvation," even though he should "try" ever so hard. What Mr. Folk means to say, however, is he will write a series of articles on Baptistism, and, judging from some of his recent utterances, he will not likely very clearly present even Baptistism. If he does, he "shall have to run counter" to the New Testament "at every turn"—a more serious thing than running "counter to Campbellism." Of course Baptists teach some things taught in the New Testament, but these doctrines do not in whole or in part constitute Baptistism. The distinct marks of Baptistism, "Campbellism," and all other "isms" are the speculations, the conceits, and the doctrines of men, all of which the Lord severely condemns, and which can never make "the comers thereunto perfect."

Slowly the once beautiful city of Galveston is recovering from the terrible shock of her recent appalling disaster. There was perhaps no more beautiful city in the United States. With a beach that rivaled any in the world, a salubrious climate; her orange trees and lofty palms; her broad avenues, handsome residences, and magnificent public buildings; the "Island City" was withal more beautiful than brush could paint or words describe. But the fury of the great storm that swept over her has marred her beauty and brought grief, that has aroused the sympathy of the civilized world, to hundreds of happy homes. The horrors of that afternoon and night of death and destruction will never be effaced from the memory of the survivors. With the wind blowing more than seventy-five miles an hour, and a part of the time the city wrapped in blackest black, men and women fought wind and wave endeavoring to save themselves and those they loved. When the storm had spent its fury, wreckage and the dead were seen on every side. Frantic mothers sought everywhere for their children, and sought in vain; little children wept for parents forever lost to them; and in some instances whole families were swept away. Overcome with her sorrow, the great city wept, and the world wept with her. The bread of sympathy and help that Galveston had so often cast upon the world's sea of sorrow and disaster began to return, and—lo!—it had increased manifold! To add to the horror of the situation, ghouls began to rob the wrecked homes and the bodies of the dead of everything of value. The city was at once placed under martial law and order was soon restored. Hundreds of bodies were carried out to sea and sunk beneath the waves, and hundreds more were buried with the wreckage, but for which an epidemic might have resulted. It is estimated that not less than five thousand lives were lost, but a complete count can never be made. The loss of property is estimated to be about twenty million dollars. The wharves, warehouses, grain elevators, and factories on the bay shore were completely demolished. Nor did the flood stop here. Even in the heart of the city great, strong buildings went down, burying beneath their ruins the unfortunate victims who had fled thither for safety. It is said there is hardly a building on the whole island but sustained some damage. Galveston has one of the finest harbors in the world, on which the government has in the past few years expended over six million dollars. Temporary wharves are being erected, and the immense bulk of business is being forwarded as fast as facilities will allow. Many people have left the city, but there is no danger that Galveston will be depopulated. Homes, factories, and public buildings will be rebuilt, and while the memory and the marks of her awful scourging will linger, her citizens will eventually put off their sackcloth and ashes, and will raise their brave and beautiful city to stand, as she has stood, the peer of any in the land.

There is no mystery whatever about happiness. Put in the right ingredients and it must come out. "He that abideth in me . . . bringeth forth much fruit;" and bringing forth much fruit is happiness. The infallible recipe for happiness, then, is to do good; and the infallible recipe for doing good is to abide in Christ.—Drummond.

Breaking Bread. No. 6.

Let any Christian be free to call together any number of neighboring Christians whom he knows to be living in the love and peace of divine fellowship; let it be recognized as the duty of all to judge, exhort, and call one another to the meeting for this feast, and leave uninvited all with whom eating is forbidden; let no place become the place sacredly fixed for the feast, either by dedication or custom, but let one Christian be as free as another to provide a place at which all of the faithful who have been exhorted to attend may be received and treated with impartiality (James 2: 1-4); let them sit at the table whereon are the bread and wine and wait on each other without deacons or any special ministers; let them at supper time on the first day of the week keep the feast, the meanwhile discoursing with one another on the one theme of the occasion—the death of Christ; let them eat it as a memorial of the Lord's loving sacrifice, not a feast to satisfy hunger; let them tarry for the invited guests, and not eat it in anticipation of the arrival of any of the expected number (1 Cor. 11: 33); let each Christian examine himself before he attempts to judge, exhort, and call others to the supper at his chosen place, or before he dare approach the table to which others have invited him; and the statements of the Bible on the subject will be fully met.

Objections to this must arise in the minds of those who are accustomed to breaking bread at the house of worship under the management of special administrators. I will here mention and briefly answer a few of the objections:

Objection 1: "In the above house-to-house observance, many will be left uninvited and will fail to commune for the want of a place and a table prepared."

Answer: This objection rests on the assumption that it is the duty of some to prepare and run the feast for others, but the assumption is groundless. Keeping it is the duty of all alike. I shall hold this objection to be invalid till the objector shows that the institution and management of the feast are in the hands of special ministers. So if my meeting provides only for those I invite, that is no excuse for others' nonobservance who are remote from me, since they all have the same right I have to call themselves together to keep the feast. This objection disappears with people when they learn that keeping the Lord's Supper, like keeping the passover, places each family on equal footing as to duty to observe it. In the two accounts of how it was kept, it was in meetings like passover meetings.

Objection 2: "This will leave the Christians of a town with no certain place of worship and put them at a disadvantage in going to church or attending service."

Answer: In the New Testament we find nothing of Christians going to church or attending service. They were all in the church, and could not go to a thing they were already in and formed part of. The church to which people go is a meetinghouse, which is not in the New Testament. They served the Lord and they came together. There were no special agents to run service for them to attend. I feel that it is superfluous to answer the above objection—farther than to emphasize the fact that going to church, attending the services run by the few for the many, is not in the Bible, and hence is not a duty to provide for.

Objection 3: "To do away with the church house, going to church, and attending services run in the house would ruin our churches; for out of a hundred that will attend church there are not ten that would meet without 'a church' to which to go."

Answer: Do not be alarmed. The truth on New Testament practice is not the cause of the spiritual death in the churches. It is sadly true that if it were not for human institutions in religion, the great majority of religious professors would have nothing to belong to, nothing to draw them with attractive service. A complete return of the faithful to the New Testament will leave them with nothing to hang on to; but that will not hurt them. The fresh air which caused instant decomposition of a corpse which had been interred many years in an air-tight metallic case did not cause its death. With its naturalness of appearance and well-preserved features, it was a corpse nevertheless. A Christian who has not the life to get up a meeting to keep the memorial of Christ or to cooperate with his neighbor in doing so cannot be saved by a gospel proof case in the shape of a fine meetinghouse with its attractive service run for him. The Jews tried to save the cause by human institutions, and Jesus Christ named the whole enterprise "hypocrisy." Beware of hypocrisy.

Objection 4: "But New Testament Christians met in houses, and hence it is right for Christians to build and own church houses."

Answer: The premise is correct, but the conclusion totally unnecessary. The "hence" is a gross non sequitur. They rode to their places of preaching in ships, but it does not follow hence that it is right for us to build church ships and own and use them solely for the benefit of preachers. People may meet in houses without building "church houses," and that is what New Testament Christians did; Christians may ride to a place of meeting in buggies without the necessity of building church buggies. From a biblical point of view, there is just as much authority for special church conveyance to meeting as for special church houses in which to meet. They used the methods of travel in going to meeting which they used in going anywhere else. The houses they met in were used for other things, and were not church houses, built and set apart for church services. The special house for worship originated with man about the beginning of the fourth century. It always has been of great importance to the power and glory of the clergy, but is totally unnecessary to the performance of anything Christ has appointed. His worship, unlike that of the Jews, is set free from special mountain, place, or temple, and may be performed wherever there is "spirit and truth." It is as well suited to the poor man's cabin as to the clergyman's temple, if not better.

Objection 5: "But the church at Corinth had one certain place at which to meet, which must have been prepared for the protection and comfort of the attendants."

Answer: The fact that a church came together "into one place" (1 Cor. 11: 20; 14: 23) by no means warrants the conclusion that they had any such fixed place as a house of worship. The one place of one meeting might be another place the next meeting. But the revisers very correctly leave out "one place," and the text says they assembled themselves together. Now, where is the prepared, fixed meetinghouse of this text? They assembled together is all there is of it. The Jews did that to keep the passover without any special house, and why should the antitypical feast require more?

The arguments for the meetinghouse are no better than those used for any other institution that men set up and spend money on without Christ's authority; in fact, all outside things are alike in the fact of being faithless, worthless, dead works of men; and they are alike in calling to their support the same sort of groundless, inferential reasoning in which human leaders in religion are wont to indulge. To argue in defense of one human institution in religion is to argue in defense of all. If the meetinghouse is right, the confessional is right; if one thing not in the New Testament is right in Christ's service, then every outside thing is right in his service, and the New Testament is of no account. Christ's word either settles everything or nothing. If one thing is wrong in religion because it is not authorized in the New Testament, then everything not in the New Testament is wrong in religion for the same reason.

"Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught." (Tit. 1: 9.) "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of." (2 Tim. 3: 14.) "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." (1 Tim. 4: 16.) "We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." (Heb. 2: 1.) "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." (2 John 9.) "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." The Lord's Supper.

In my last article I promised to notice some important questions concerning the Lord's Supper. We have seen that this is among the "good works" to be observed on a particular day, spoken of in Heb. 10.

Question 1: What is it? Jesus says of the loaf, "This is my body;" and of the cup: "This is my blood." The Catholic says that the loaf is the actual body of Christ and the wine is changed to his actual blood, but when put to the test, he does not have faith in his own teaching. Jesus gives us a representative of his body and of his blood in the bread and the wine. The institution is simple—just a loaf and cup—the loaf that represents the precious body of our Savior and the cup that represents his blood "shed for many for the remission of sins." He has not forbidden anything else. Why not, then, place peach pie, too, upon the table? You say the Lord has not required it. Apply this answer, my brother, to every question that has ever disturbed the peace of Zion and bleeding, broken hearts in Israel will be healed.

Question 2: Who should partake? God has settled this question as plainly as the first. It is not my table; it is not your table; but it is the Lord's table for his children. If it were my table, I could invite others to partake of its bounty; if it were your table, you could do the same. Since it is neither yours nor mine, we will give no invitation. God says: "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." (1 Cor. 11: 28.) If a child does not eat at its father's table, there is something wrong somewhere. I have no right to say who shall or who shall not eat at the Lord's table; neither have you. We are his children, and the Father says: "Let a man examine himself." But some one says: "The rules of my church will permit me to partake with only those of like faith and order." "The rules of my church" lead many a poor soul to do things contrary to the will of God. Why not say the rule of the church of God is: "Let a man examine himself?"

Question 3: When should God's children observe this institution? The Bible is still explicit: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." (Acts 20: 7.) The Bible student observes that the principal thing for which the disciples came together was not to hear preaching, but "to break bread." What is it that calls many disciples out to-day? This is answered by noticing who are present "when the preacher comes" and who are present when he does not come. A great many Christians act as if the scripture reads: "And when the disciples came together to hear preaching." If "the pastor" should not be there, they hurry through the formality of breaking bread in order to go somewhere else. "When ye come together to eat, tarry one for another." (1 Cor. 11: 33.) Sometimes we have seen Christians (?) very much disappointed because there would be no preaching, and leave the house of worship for a sectarian sermon, without commemorating the sufferings of Jesus in the emblematic loaf and cup. The time, then, is "the first day of the week." It is not Tuesday nor Wednesday, neither is it the Sabbath. Yes; the glorious "first day," the best of all days! Brother, its duties are not those by which we end a week's labors and cares, but those by which we begin a new one. Will not the memories of the toils, sufferings, and death of a blessed Savior, pictured to us in the Lord's Supper, make us stronger and better prepared for the duties of the coming week? Here the true Christian lingers near the foot of the cross. By faith he sees the body of Jesus bruised and his blood shed; he hears him, in agony, say, "It is finished;" he eats of his Savior's body and drinks of his blood. At last, the worship closing, he sings a hymn and goes out armed for the battles of the coming week. I do not believe one word of the old saying that "the prayer meeting is the spiritual thermometer of the church." We cannot measure the pulse of a divine institution by an appointment of man. If we desire to see the amount of "zeal according to knowledge" any church may have, let us notice the faithful around the Lord's table "upon the first day" of the week, pastor or no pastor. This is an appointment of God. We might stay away from prayer meeting services on "Wednesday evening" without committing sin, but we cannot forsake the assembling of ourselves together on the first day of the week without sinning willfully.

Question 4: Where is the loaf to be broken? The holy volume is still plain: "First of all, when ye come together in the church." Again: "When ye come together therefore into one place." (1 Cor. 11: 18-20.) It is plain that all Christians of a community in the days of the apostles had a certain place for assembling.

Question 5: How are we to observe this institution? We are not left in doubt here. "For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." (1 Cor. 11: 29.) Yes; "damnation to himself," not to you nor to me. "Unworthily" is an adverb of manner, having reference to the manner of eating and drinking, and not to the condition of those partaking. Sometimes we see a brother shake his head when the emblems are passed. His answer is: "I am not worthy." Brother, can you not by faith "discern the Lord's body" in that loaf and see his blood in that cup? Happy hour! A body broken! The blood of the King of kings! A crown of thorns! The cold tomb! The glad tidings of a risen and exalted Savior! All for you and me!

Question 6: Why should we observe the Lord's Supper? The Book still guides us: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." (1 Cor. 11: 26.) We are all made better by partaking of the loaf and cup, "discerning the Lord's body." But the good to ourselves alone is not the object. "Ye do show the Lord's death till he come." To whom? Evidently not to ourselves. Hence Paul says: "If we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." (Heb. 10: 26.) Again: "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." (Eph. 3: 10.) The church is God's missionary organization. It "shows the Lord's death till he come" in the sacred institution by holding before the world the great sacrifice represented by that loaf and that cup. My brother, in what other way can we show the Lord's death? Hence, "if we sin willfully," "forsake the assembling of ourselves," and fail to show to the world the great "sacrifice for sins," "there remaineth no more." The truth of this is seen in every congregation faithful in the appointments of the Lord. It is easy, then, to persuade sinners to become Christians. But how is it in that community where the church is cold and indifferent? The great work of the preacher in a series of meetings is to the church.

Question 7: What will be the result? Jesus says: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

The Lord's Supper to me is the sweetest part of the worship. How a brother can stay away is more than I can understand. We will meet some day around the table of the Master for the last time. I would be afraid to die if I had neglected to assemble to break the loaf on the first day of the week before the summons comes. The Lord will help us to be faithful.

"The Disciple whom Jesus Loved."

Human nature likes a compliment; and, when well deserved, a good name is better than great riches. No line in the Bible is to be more coveted as a biography or as an epitaph than this one: "the disciple whom Jesus loved." The original wearer of this enviable title was John, the converted fisherman; John, the apostle; John, the seer of Patmos; and the inspired writer of five wonderful books of the New Testament.

Why did our blessed Master draw so closely to this Galilean fisherman and give him the post of honor at this last paschal supper? Perhaps one reason was that he was one of Christ's earliest converts, was faithful to his Master to the last, and possessed some traits that were especially attractive. Instead of being the mild and effeminate creature that sacred art has painted, he was peculiarly bold and energetic—one of the "sons of thunder"—the most outspoken defender of his Master's divine attributes, and red-hot both in his blazing zeal and in his hatred of falsehood and iniquity. He never conceals and never compromises. With all these splendid, heroic qualities was combined that marvelous sweetness that made him the author of those three love epistles that bear his name.

Is it right that any of us humble followers of Jesus Christ should aspire to the honor which the Master put on John as "the disciple whom Jesus loved?" Most assuredly it is; and a careful study of the characteristics of the favorite apostle may be of vast service to us. John, as I have just said, was no compromiser. He had the courage of his conviction; he never lowered his colors; he never concealed an unpopular truth. His banishment to Patmos is one of the strongest evidences of his heroic fidelity to the Master. Satan has no stripes or stakes or scaffolds for cowards.

Now, just here is the sad mistake of some Christians who are continually nursing what they call their "influence." To be popular is their darling ambition; and they fancy that the surest way to obtain their end is to cross nobody's wishes, oppose nobody's opinions, and censure nobody's sins. They may fancy that they are winning affection, when they are winning only secret contempt. My friend, if you desire to be heartily loved by those whose love is worth possessing, you must be willing to be denounced by every enemy of truth and right and Jesus Christ. He whom nobody opposes nobody loves. Positive, outspoken Christians, who rise high enough to be visible must expect to be sometimes a target for the enemy. The tree that catches the most sunshine is struck by the most storms; but whether sun or storm be your lot, your only duty is to tower straight upward into Christ and for Christ.

Some may hate thee, some may love thee;
Some may flatter, some may smite.
Cease from man and look above thee,
Trust in God and do the right.

A lovable Christian is one who hits the golden mean between easy laxity of conscience, on the one hand, and a morose censoriousness, on the other. Like the Master, he can hate sin without hating sinners. He never incurs contempt by compromising with wrong, nor does he incur the antipathy of others by doing right in a bitter and bigoted way.

Jesus did not love the brave fisherman of Bethesda only on account of his fearless fidelity and loyalty. There was an inner sympathy between the Master and the leal-hearted disciple. John seems to have penetrated more deeply into Christ's divine mission, to have understood more of Christ's character and teachings, and to have partaken more of Christ's Spirit than any other of the twelve. He was the planet that rode nearest to the sun. When the darkness drew on, he reflected more of the light of his divine Savior, as the evening star gleams the most brightly after the king of day is below the horizon. John sought intimacy with his Master, and Jesus loves to be courted. It was not by accident that John's gospel embodies a richer revelation of Christ's inmost heart than any other book in the sacred canon, nor was it accidental that his three epistles are so saturated with the word "love." The author of those fragrant love letters had gone deeply into heart communion with his Lord. He knew the meaning of that profound truth, "He that abideth in me bringeth forth much fruit," and also that other truth: "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God." That recline on the breast of Jesus at the supper had a meaning; it meant that the heart of the disciple was so close to the heart of the Master that the embrace came as naturally as the warm kiss of wedlock when two hearts are one.

Ah, my fellow-Christians, if we covet John's place in our Savior's affection, we must copy John's conduct; we must imitate him who forsook his earthly all for Jesus' sake, who stood loyal to his Master beside the cross, who could not sleep on that Sabbath dawn in his eager desire to be first at the sepulcher, who consecrated his whole outer life to Christ, because his inner life was hid with Christ in God. It is a glorious thing to have Christ love us, but the price we must pay for it is to bar his rivals out of our hearts. Do not be singing, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me," unless you are sure that you can "stand fire" for him. The crucial test is: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."

After all, the one decisive conflict in which the beloved disciple came off conqueror is that battle with the "house devil" in every man's bosom—self. Selfishness is the besetting sin in some form with all of us. The first step in conversion is self-surrender; the noblest grace in Christian character is self-denial for Christ's sake and the welfare of others. "What things were gain to me I counted loss for Christ"—that is the topmost stone of the "higher life." Pure unselfishness is the sweetest and perhaps the rarest of all Christlike qualities. Nothing wins love like that. Love is the only loan for love; the truest love "seeketh not her own." Sir Phillip Sidney's unselfishness on the battlefield, when he refused the drink of water, is immortal; but it is not nobler than that of the brave lad in the coal mine, when, after a fatal accident, a man was sent down on a rope to relieve the sufferers. "Don't mind me," said the lad; "Joe Brown, who is a little lower down, is almost gone. Save him first." He was saved first, but the boy who came up last was the hero. There are always some "Joe Browns" who are lower down than we are, and if we would be Christ's beloved disciples, we must make it our first duty to save them.

Paul tells us that even Christ pleased not himself. That crowns unselfishness as the king of graces. John echoes this truth when he exclaims: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. . . . And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."—Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, in Christian Observer.

Christ the Typical Man.

Our Lord was the typical man. He was our Savior; he was also our Brother. In him we see not only God in manifestation, but also man in perfection. Looking on the human side, what are we taught? That Jesus was the type of the race. In him was revealed what the race was intended to be, and what it will be when creation is complete. The church has thought so much of the divine Christ that it has not grasped the full and glorious significance of the human Christ. He is the goal toward which humanity is tending; he is the crowning race. In him is seen the divine plan for each individual. What he was, humanity is to be. In him what is seen? A being with the animal in subservience to the spiritual; a being who had all knowledge and the wealth of the universe, whose supreme ideal was the service of humanity. A harlot went to draw water; the Son of man sat by her side and told her of the living water. A poor woman crept up behind to touch his coat, and his sympathy healed her. He was in the wilderness where there were many people without food, and he fed them, although he would not work a miracle to feed himself; he was lied about, persecuted, followed from town to town, but he never spoke an unkind or an ungenerous word. He was the friend of publicans and sinners—their friend to uplift, not the companion of their sins. He never thought or planned for self. When he found that men were thinking too much of him, he told them that it was time for him to go away. He never had an enemy and never resented an insult; he never turned from people because they were poor or disagreeable; he laid himself down and said: "Walk over me toward the Father's house and the Father's love." He died to save men who did not understand and would not appreciate. "He went about doing good." This man, who could command the universe, and yet who used all his powers to benefit and uplift humanity, is the goal of the creation. He is the one toward whom all things tend; in him is revealed the perfect race. No more inheritance of vice, disease, crime; no more the trail of the serpent staining the generations and leaving marks of sin and shame on the bodily organism. The brute inheritance eliminated; the physical universe, with her myriads of forces now unknown, waiting to do the bidding of man, and all living not to be ministered unto, but to minister—that is what the Master tells us is coming, not in some far-away heaven, but on this earth, among men who will look up into the same great and wide sky into which we look.—Dr. Armory H. Bradford, in Christian Advocate.

Go forth to meet the solemnities and to conquer the trials of existence, believing in a Shepherd of your souls. Then faith in Him will support you in your duty, and duty firmly done will strengthen faith.—Stafford S. Brooke.

Never let us be discouraged with ourselves. It is not when we are conscious of our faults that we are most wicked; on the contrary, we are less so. We see by a brighter light, and let us remember, for our consolation, that we never perceive our sins till we begin to cure them.—Fenelon.

Little obediences lead into great. The daily round of duty is full of probation and of discipline. It trains the will, heart, and conscience. We need not to be prophets or apostles. The commonest life may be full of perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the ministries of heaven.—H. E. Manning.

MANLINESS AND WOMANLINESS.

A man's strength is in his manliness; a woman's strength is in her womanliness. It is a right instinct which looks with aversion on an effeminate man or a masculine woman. Such unwholesome creatures seem to be ashamed of their sex, and do all that lies in their power to wipe out the limitations which it imposes. Of course they can never quite succeed, for Nature has a stern hand; but in the effort to become what they were never designed to be, they can both render themselves ridiculous and introduce vast elements of confusion and disorder into the social system. The statement of St. Paul that "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female" means only this: that both alike have access to God, the pardon of their sins, and the renewal of their hearts on the same conditions. In the matter of salvation, men and women occupy a common standing ground. But men are still men, and women are still women. Not one of the natural lines of distinction between them is obliterated or even obscured.—Christian Advocate.

DIG DEEP.

Dig deep into the word of God. Do not be content with the surface; sink deep your shafts into its treasure vaults.

Every spot, when properly searched, will yield fruitful results. Wheresoever the surface of God's word doth not laugh and sing with corn, the heart within is rich with mines.

It is said of some of the mines of Cornwall that the deeper they sunk, the richer they proved. Some lodes have been followed over fifteen hundred feet, and yet they came to no end. The Bible is a mine of wealth which can never be exhausted. The deeper we sink into it, the richer it becomes; the more we study the Scriptures, the more we see to learn.

A piece of glass becomes a lens by which unseen worlds are revealed. Bits of the Bible put properly together become a telescope to reveal millions of orbs of truth which revolve in God's moral and spiritual universe.

Go to the heart of a scripture. In the olden times a duke craved from a king his daughter's hand in marriage. The king answered by handing him a rough iron ball. Indignant, the duke threw it to the ground, when—lo!—a spring struck, the ball opened and displayed a silver shell; this, a golden egg; this, a marriage ring, complete and gorgeous, set with precious gems. So the Bible contains much hidden treasure. The more we study, the more we have command of these blessed treasures.

Search each flower of scripture, and go as deep as possible. Be like the honeybee which makes a point of alighting everywhere, and, wherever he alights, on the surface or deep below, finds honey. If the flower cup be deep, he goes down to the bottom; if its dragon mouth be shut, he thrusts its lips asunder; and if the nectar be recondite, he explores until, singing his way down to the luscious recesses, he discovers it. Thus going deep we may lay by of fragrant store of nectar from the flowers of God's truth to support us during days of sorrow and nights of adversity.—Earnest Worker.

STARVING INDIA.

"I was ahungered, and ye gave me meat."

Nothing in recent times has appealed to human sympathy with more thrilling effect than the present condition of the people of India. The famine which has prevailed for many months has been one of the most widespread in the history of human suffering. A population almost as large as that of our own nation at the last census has been and is still involved in this unspeakable calamity. In the present state of Indian affairs, it is impossible to ascertain just how many have perished, but there can be no doubt that the victims of hunger and the consequent diseases have run up into the millions; and still the famine sweeps on. Parents are compelled to stand for month after month and face the inevitable—to see their children slowly, but surely, sink into death for the want of the common food which their very lifeblood could not obtain. While Great Britain has by reason of the South African War been somewhat hindered in the work of helping her Indian subjects, it is fortunate that these times of scarcity in India are times of special abundance with us. Our fields everywhere have been burdened with golden harvests, while our trees are actually bending and breaking under the weight of delicious fruits. The waste from our households and granaries would make sumptuous the desolated regions of India.

Such calamities in heathen lands bring to Christian countries such opportunities as cannot otherwise be furnished for illustrating the divine doctrine of human brotherhood. The opportunity is a positively precious one which cannot be disregarded without great detriment to the cause of pure religion. Indifference to such suffering is criminal, and the disregard of such an opportunity is the height of un wisdom. Our people have already exhibited some generosity in responding to calls for help, but much yet remains to be done, and the opportunity still presses itself upon every one who is willing to save a human life at a cost of only two cents a day until the calamity be overpast.—Sunday School Magazine.

THE LUXURY OF BEING RESTED.

Have you ever had every nerve a-quiver from days and weeks of strain? Have you been to that dangerous limit of physical and mental endurance, where every breath of opposition, or criticism, or questioning, topples over your patience and paralyzes your purpose? Have you ever felt conscious that you were not yourself, but another, and that other bidding defiance to all the dictates of your intelligent will and normal self-control, being instead annoyed to the point of distraction by incidents most trivial or remarks totally unimportant? Did you ever know what it meant to grow despondent about just nothing at all, and to feel deserted and friendless in the midst of a host of sympathetic friends? Have you ever become habitually doubtful of yourself and fearful, lest your prayers might not be heard by the loving Heavenly Father? Yes?

Then you merely need rest. That is all. Do you feel so now? Go away somewhere, as far as possible away from the treadmill, and stay away until your mind is clear and your heart has laid down its imaginary burdens. Rest. Do not merely change your work; do not work at all, and resolutely quit thinking. You are not master of yourself until you can bid your mind lie down as you do your body. You can force your brain to work; surely it ought not to be harder to make it rest, and it needs rest as much as your nerves and muscles ever do. All work, and no play, makes Jack a dull boy mentally, no matter how old or wise Jack may have become. Try the simple prescription, and the result will be the luxury of being rested. If you were never tired in the way above described, you will not understand all this. There is no rest for the unwearied. Only the terribly tired can rest luxuriously, hilariously, gloriously. To the thus wearied worker real rest insures the return of proper self-appreciation and a consciousness that life is not only duty, but delightful duty, even beauty, and that labor is a privilege, and by no means the least of the gifts of God. The luxury of being rested gives the exultant consciousness that the hardest tasks are none too burdensome, and the difficulties which erstwhile hindered are now an inspiration. What in weariness seemed mountains are at last properly recognized as mere stepping-stones. To pass up and over them is an exhilarating exercise now, one to be welcomed, not dreaded. The curl of friendly lips, which seemed like scorn, is now seen to be merely a smile; and the words the fatigued intellect distorted into coldness and cruelty now assume their real forms, they are not unfriendly words at all. Then, too, you will suddenly discover that God has been listening to your prayers all the while. It was only in your disordered imagination that the all-hearing Ear was deaf.

The luxury of being rested will have but one unpleasant effect. You will be much ashamed of yourself that you were ever so weak as in your weariness, you were. Your first impulse will be to throw yourself at the Master's feet and beg him to pardon your lack of faith and courage. Yield at once to that impulse, and when you have obtained the comforting sense of the Lord's forgiveness, do you forthwith forgive yourself, and go out to a larger, worthier service than you have ever known, being careful the while that there shall be not overmuch work, and not a bit of worry.

Thank God for the luxury of being rested!—Cumberland Presbyterian.

"Take Therefore No Thought for the Morrow."

I think Brother Sewell and Brother Harding are both in a tangle about "God's care" for his people, for the reason that they both miss the application of the language of scripture; and I cannot help saying they ought to look well to that point. When Christ said to his apostles—his ambassadors—"Take therefore no thought for the morrow," and "All these things shall be added unto you," he meant the apostles, and none others. I think these scriptures cannot apply to any but ambassadors. JOHN T. POE.

It is very easy for men to say things are a certain way, but to show them to be so by the word of God is a very different thing. It is easy enough for Brother Poe to say that only the apostles—the ambassadors of Christ—were included in the language, "Take therefore no thought." This is only an opinion of Brother Poe, at best, and not a matter of revelation, so far as has ever been shown. There is no evidence that all the apostles that had been chosen up to that time were present. Matthew had not been chosen then, and it may be others were not. Neither is there any evidence that there were no other disciples besides the apostles present at that time. It is quite evident that the things taught in the Sermon on the Mount were given to all the disciples present, without distinction, and were just as applicable to one as another. Therefore, unless Brother Poe can show that no disciples except apostles were present, he cannot confine the language to the apostles. Besides, the very same things are required of Christians in the letters of the apostles to churches that were required in the above language by the Savior.

Paul said: "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." (Phil. 4: 6.) This passage applies to all Christians, and in the expression, "Be careful for nothing," the words "be careful" are from the same Greek word that the words "take therefore no thought" are from in Matt. 6: 34. The Greek word means "to be anxious, to be troubled with cares." The word "careful" is said to have meant, when it began to be used, "full of care." Hence, "careful" very correctly translates the Greek word rendered "take therefore no thought," in the Sermon on the Mount, and shows that the very same things are required of other Christians that were required in the Sermon on the Mount, even if the language was addressed to the apostles only. In both cases it means that the Lord's people shall not be so anxious, so full of the cares of this life, that they have no time or strength left to attend to the Lord's service. No man can attend acceptably to the Lord's service when his whole mind is overburdened with the exciting cares and anxieties of this life. Hence, with all, whether apostles or not, the "kingdom of God and his righteousness" must be first—first in point of time, of importance, and in every consideration that can come. The service and work of the Lord must be first, and these worldly considerations secondary.

The promise is, if Christians will do this and pray earnestly together with the use of the means through which temporal blessings come, then they will come; but they must make service to God first, if they would enjoy these promises. Paul was an apostle and an ambassador, and so far as temporal blessings were concerned, he had his trials and troubles about temporal things the same as other Christians. He made tents, suffered hunger and all sorts of privations that other Christians did, and doubtless all the apostles experienced similar troubles. Hence, I can see no reason for giving any such strained and special interpretation to such passages. E. G. S.

The blessedness of God's house is that there men praise him. This it was that made the house so precious to the psalmist; and what Christian man can climb higher than this—to find in the praise of God the greatest joy of his life?—Exchange.

PERSONAL.

Brother L. R. Sewell closed a good meeting last week, near Spencer, Tenn. There were twenty-three additions.

Brother Larimore began a meeting at Winchester, Tenn., on September 29, 1900. His meeting at Dixon Spring, Tenn., closed on September 27, 1900.

Brother J. W. Shepherd's meeting at Science Hill, Rutherford County, Tenn., resulted in seven baptisms. He is in a good meeting now at Cedar Grove, near this city.

Brother John E. Dunn had a splendid meeting at Boston, Tenn., with twenty-six additions. When last heard from, he was at Stayton, Tenn., with prospects for a good meeting there.

Brother L. M. Jackson closed a meeting at Sycamore Chapel, in Cheatham County, Tenn., on September 26, 1900, with fifteen baptisms and three brethren reclaimed. He is at present at Bethany, Ky.

Brother J. A. Harding says that the opening of the Nashville Bible School, on September 25, 1900, was the best in the history of the school, and the faculty are enthusiastic over the prospects for a splendid term.

In the Gospel Advocate of September 6, 1900, I noticed the following sentence in a report of a meeting held by Brother J. J. Castleberry, at Florence, Ala.: "Brother Castleberry is a young man, but did his work well, contending earnestly for the old apostolic doctrine, without addition or subtraction." While it is far from my intention to detract anything from Brother Castleberry, yet I happen to know that he was employed by the State Board last year, and is yet in full sympathy with it, if not actually engaged by it. I do not know that he is not engaged by it again this year. I write this that some may know how he stands. Several persons have called my attention to the article and said he was not "sound." It is but fair to us who contend for the faith once delivered to the saints and to the church of Christ that the positions of preachers be known. If you could, it would be well to always state the attitude of preachers on these questions which gender strife.—A. P. Johnson, Huntingdon, Tenn.

EDITORIAL.

Goodness needs no advertisement.

Thoughtless words may cause anxious hearts.

The approval of God is better than the praise of men.

One never loses the treasures he lays up in heaven.

Close your ears to evil and open your heart to truth.

The secret of success lies in worthy aim and continued effort.

There is but one road to heaven, and that is strait and narrow.

The man who fails to do right is guilty of the worst failure.

Men who are ready for opportunities are those who win victories.

When men begin to fear men, they begin to be disloyal to God.

The man who deliberately walks into temptation invites his own fall.

Under the flag of Christ and on board his ship there is nothing to fear.

The prosperity of the cause of Christ should be first in every Christian heart.

Men grow strong spiritually as they begin to distrust themselves and to trust God.

Never fear the reproach of the world as long as you are doing the will of God.

God's treasury would always be running over, if we would only pay him what we owe him.

What we really are is more powerful than what we say. We influence people most when we are off guard.

The illustrious witnesses of the Old Testament testify that God will never forsake those who put their trust in him.

When we have decided a course of action to be right, we should be brave enough to live up to it, regardless of public opinion.

The man who is afraid to do right because somebody will disapprove his course is a moral coward and of little consequence, anyway.

"We ought to obey God rather than men," because he tells us to do so and because in doing so we need entertain no fears as to results.

It makes no difference whether God's plan seems to be adequate to accomplish the end in view; the question is: Is it his plan? If so, it must be followed.

Rector: "I never in my life touched a congregation as I did this morning. Every eye was on me." Wife: "No wonder. When you took your hat off, your gloves remained on the top of your head."

It is a mistake to attach overmuch importance to what "they" say. This mistake has brought much sorrow into many a life. Least joy comes to him who regards most the opinions of his neighbors.

When Queen Victoria ascended the throne, more than forty per cent of the people of Great Britain could not write their names. At the present time only seven per cent of the population is illiterate.

Even in fun one should never use a doubtful expression or drop into slang. Unconsciously we fall into habits. Preachers too frequently fall into the habit of jesting and using slang. The salvation of a soul is no jesting matter. An otherwise excellent sermon is sometimes marred by slang. Entire purity of speech is a duty we owe to our mother tongue.

Why should we say, "Christian church," when God says, "church of God" and "church of Christ?" and why should we call a church house "the church," when God has not so called it? Paul wrote to Timothy, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus;" and this is just as applicable to us as it was to Timothy.

Activity is essential to spiritual growth and development; inactivity weakens physical strength, and the same is true of spiritual strength. Peter calls us "lively stones" in the "spiritual house," in contrast, no doubt, with the dead stones in the temple at Jerusalem. Paul tells us to present our bodies "a living sacrifice." We are capable of action, of service, and this God requires at our hands.

If we do not use the faculties and opportunities that God has given us, they will be withdrawn, and there will be a consequent withdrawal of spiritual strength. Strength is in our reach. We have only to appropriate it by service to God.

There is a man who owns houses and acres by the score. Unthinking neighbors envy him because he has money, but in truth he is as poor as the poorest of them, so far as capacity to live goes. He has no friends; he has no real pleasures; he does no good. All the happiness he is able to extract out of existence is a weekly spree. That was his only pleasure when he was a day laborer; it is his only pleasure at present. He has not the ability to enjoy anything else. All his wealth cannot purchase him anything better. Now, who could call that man aught but a starveling, deserving sincere pity? He is a pauper in soul, and his gold cannot make him anything else.—Forward.

We should always be ready to recognize good in any one. When we see anything to approve in those we love, we should speak of it. Honest effort, even if it fails to bring success, is worthy of our commendation. To strive hard and get no response is likely to produce a deadly reaction in spirit. Christ was ever ready to encourage all right thought and effort, and he was ever ready to tenderly seek out and magnify the least good in a person. He sought the good rather than the bad, and, knowing the stimulating and encouraging power of recognition, was always ready to speak a helpful word. He never gave a discouraging word or cold look to one struggling upward after a noble life. Would that all we, his followers, had more of that loving insight and charity which enabled him to put the strength of hope into so many disconsolate hearts!

No one is a true friend who pampers us and relieves us of all trials and hardships. A god who in our own way would answer our every cry for help and who would take away from us all pains and aches would not be a merciful and loving god. Our God loves us too well not to allow our feet at times to pass over the burning lava, our bodies to be racked with pains and aches, and our journey through life to have some thorns and thistles along the way. If he were to free us from all trouble, to move all roughness and sorrow out of the way, he would not be the wise Father that he is. He wants us at times to carry burdens, travel over rough roads, and endure great trials, that we may be strong. Jesus did not have an easy way; he was made perfect through suffering. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Our orders are increasing for "Gospel Praise." We hear only cheering words in regard to the merits of the book. The music is the best, the sentiment is scriptural, and the songs are such as stir the soul. If you are contemplating buying new music books, you should by all means examine this book.

We have for a limited time reduced the price of "Sweeney's Sermons;" "Sewell's Sermons;" "Gospel Sermons," by Brents; "Civil Government" and "Commentary on Acts," by D. Lipscomb; "Live Religious Issues of the Day," by Carroll Kendrick; and "The Jerusalem Tragedy," by Stout. See advertisement on another page of this issue. These are all splendid books, and, while the price is reduced, you should place them in your library. Let us have your order for the whole list or any part of it.

If you have not yet bought "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," Brother Srygley's last book, you should by all means have a copy. "It is a precious treasure;" "A rich legacy to bequeath to your children;" "We especially commend it to the young;" "Every home in the land should possess one;" "The Bible excepted, I believe it is the best book I have ever seen;" "His private letters and intercourse always inculcate purity and fidelity to truth and right and a constant desire to benefit others;" "The letters are gems that reflect the light of the pure spirit of the incomparable preacher so tenderly loved by all who truly know him"—these are only a few of the many complimentary things said of "Letters and Sermons." Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50.

We wish again to call the attention of our friends and readers to the offer to send the Gospel Advocate from now to the close of 1900 for twenty-five cents. Our friends should add several thousand new names to our list. We are counting on them to call the attention of their friends and neighbors to this liberal offer. We believe that the Gospel Advocate will do any one good who will read it. We would be glad to add ten thousand new readers in the next few months. Many of our friends and contributors have promised to labor to increase the list of the Gospel Advocate. The churches are getting tired of innovations. Those who were not satisfied to worship according as "it is written" promised great things when they began work in this State. Their work has been a failure, and the churches where they have had full sway are discouraged and dying. Even the church that took to itself the credit of starting the work is having hard work to hold its own. We earnestly insist that all who love the Bible way help us to circulate the Gospel Advocate. Help now will be doubly appreciated.

"Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and "Gospel Praise" are the names of our hymn books, catalogue of which will be sent on application. "Gospel Praise" is our new book, copyrighted this year and edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell. It is a book of 320 pages, containing 322 songs arranged by subjects. All who have examined it pronounce it good. We will be glad to send sample sheets of this book to any address on application for same. Referring to "Gospel Praise," we quote the following taken from letters written to us: "I am very much pleased with it;" "All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production;" "I am more than pleased with it;" "The price is within reach of all;" "The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul-stirring;" "I can heartily recommend it to all;" "The price is within reach of all, and the book should have a circulation second to none extant;" "It is an all-purpose book;" "I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received." Send for sample sheets and give them a careful and impartial examination, Attitude in Prayer.

From the earliest period of the Old Testament to the end of the New Testament, examples on this subject abound; and biblical examples, divinely approved, are a law to us. Another important fact is the wonderful harmony of example over this long period, embracing almost two thousand years and covering the institutions of both the Old Testament and the New Testament; it is the same with Hebrew and Christian. Now, what is so often repeated and so enduring and uniform in the life of piety, in the most solemn act of worship, of the soul's communion with God, illustrated in the lives of patriarchs, of the greatest of divinely chosen kings, of prophets and of apostles, and, above all, of the Son of God himself, must not be regarded and treated by us with indifference, as a matter of little value. It must teach us that there is a positive, real connection between the outward and the inner spirit, between the motions of the body and the emotions of the soul.

What, then, does the Bible teach us is the proper attitude of prayer? Let us trace its examples. At the conclusion of the prayer of King Solomon at the dedication of the temple, we read: "And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord, he arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven. And he stood, and blessed all the congregation," etc. (1 Kings 8: 54, 55.) An account of this same act is given in 2 Chron. 6: 13: "For Solomon had made a brazen scaffold, of five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of the court: and upon it he stood, and knelt down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven." This is a very circumstantial account. Solomon first ascended the scaffold or platform and stood before the people, and then knelt down to pray. He remained on his knees till the end of his prayer, which was long and fervent; and then he rose up to bless the people, for which act the attitude of standing, as described, is a proper one. Kneeling, we implore; standing, we bless. The spreading forth of his hands was very significant, and was usual among the ancients, as the hand stretched out and upturned to heaven indicated asking for a blessing which the hands were open to receive. The manus supinæ, the hands opened upward, the "palms turned toward heaven," is often referred to by the ancients in describing prayer. In blessings the hands were reversed—opened downward, as giving to others. In the description of Ezra's prayer (Ez. 9: 5), it is said: "And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my heaviness; and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the Lord my God." Daniel "knelt upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." (Dan. 6: 10.) The Lord said to Elijah: "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal." (1 Kings 19: 18.) Here the bowing of the knees is made synonymous with, and representative of, prayer, so entirely, in the Old Testament idea, did praying and kneeling coincide. The words of David, in Ps. 95: 6, are very expressive and instructive: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." In the parallelism in this passage, "kneeling before the Lord our Maker" is but a repetition and modification of "worshiping and bowing down." Note that this is David's full common picture of prayer, this was the image before his mind when he thought of prayer. Observe, moreover, the strength and poetic beauty of the language. "Kneeling before the Lord" is the embodiment of this solemn act of worship, and its full representative and synonym, again, as in the words of God to Elijah, so completely was the idea of kneeling interwoven with that of prayer and worship.

The passages we have thus quoted give us a true idea of the common practice of the Hebrews in this respect. The above instances represent both public and private prayer. This practice of Jewish piety and devotion is in harmony with the general custom of the Orient, from the oldest period to this day. Bowing down, kneeling, prostrating the body, before the Lord, were among the Jews always connected with the idea of prayer. The position of the outward body indicated the state of the soul, not by constraint, but the body readily, almost irresistibly, obeyed the strong dictates of the soul. This attitude is a true one, and one that the spirit desires and enjoys. It is not a mere arbitrary, constrained formality; it is a beautiful, necessary harmony, to break which is to disturb the natural motions and currents of devotion and to constrain and restrain the soul. How often did the adoring or contrite Israelite throw himself with his whole body prostrate before God! That, too, was in just obedience to the strong emotions of the soul; to have resisted it would have been violence to these emotions, and disturbed and weakened the tide of devotion. These attitudes of the body are sanctioned and sanctified in the Old Testament by the highest and most uniform examples of piety, and by the divine acceptance; nay, they stand before us as a command in the words of the psalmist: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker."

It may, perhaps, be urged that there is one memorable instance of sitting, and not kneeling, in worship before God: "And David the king came and sat before the Lord," etc. (1 Chron. 17: 16.) If this were to represent the common, modern mode of sitting, it would be in singular discord with all that the Old Testament teaches of Jewish devotion. The mode of sitting, however, here referred to, and which has even to this day been very common in the East, is to sit kneeling. It is referred to in 1 Kings 17: 42: "And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees." It was the attitude of kneeling when the person had to maintain the same position for a long time, and was for the sake of relief. It is a strong argument in behalf of kneeling as essential to the Hebrew idea of waiting before God in prayer, when even in the case of long-protracted worship it was not omitted.

Between the Old Testament and the New Testament there were no changes in the simple modes of worship, in the outward forms of devotion, that belonged naturally, as a beautiful harmony, to the emotions and impulses of true piety. As the fathers prayed to God; as Moses, David, the prophets, and the pious Jews; so Jesus and his disciples, before the full organization of the church of Christ, and so the Christians in the church, also prayed. Had there been any needless, merely Jewish, formality in these forms that were so restrained, they would not have been by the Lord permitted to pass from the dispensation of the letter to that of the spirit. According to the very law of the kingdom of Christ, nothing could be permitted by its Founder to enter into its constitution, in precept or practice, that is a mere useless ceremony; all in its worship and ordinances has a positive meaning and use; and whether the pride of human wisdom can understand and accept any of these forms or not is no argument against their true legitimacy and essential necessity.

We will now cite the New Testament examples. In the history of the solemn scenes of our Savior's agony in the garden, read: "And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and knelt down, and prayed." (Luke 22: 41.) This example, in such beautiful harmony with the practice of the Old Testament and so fully expressive of the state of the soul, alone is sufficient for a perpetual law to us. Will any one suppose that if this bodily act had been a mere outward formality, our Savior in this most solemn moment of his life that distanced from him all that is not most real and most true, would have conformed to it? Let all these who treat this position of the body in prayer with neglectful indifference, in the midst of the church, look upon the Savior in the agony of the garden, and repent.

Another very remarkable instance is given us in Acts 7. In the dreadful agonies of martyrdom, when the infuriated Jews were stoning him to death, Stephen, the man "full of the Holy Spirit," whose "face shone as that of an angel," "knelt down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," and then yielded up his spirit to God. Was this a moment of unmeaning, needless formality? In Acts 9: 40, we read: "But Peter put them all forth, and knelt down, and prayed." The example of Paul is also given: "And when he had thus spoken, he knelt down, and prayed with them all." (Acts 20: 36.) "And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we knelt down on the shore, and prayed." (Acts 21: 5.)

Here is as clear teaching from the New Testament practice as any man can desire. It is uniform and without controversy. In addition to all this, how very expressive are the words of Paul in Eph. 3: 13-19: "Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory. For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God!" Here, again, as in cases above cited from the Old Testament, "bowing the knees" is an equivalent for prayer, the greatest expounder of Christian doctrine and life showing that the outward and inward acts were so intimately allied that the former, in speech, represented the latter. This is a most noteworthy fact, that the greatest representatives and exponents of the piety of the Old Testament and the New Testament—the sweet psalmist of Israel, King David, and the apostle Paul—speak alike on this subject.

"O come, let us worship and bow down:

Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker!"

sings David; and so also Paul, as above: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." The emotions and manifestations of a true piety are the same in every age. There is, moreover, a peculiar force to us in the question before us in the language of Paul. The earnest, fervent, prayerful desires of Paul's soul for the spiritual joys and the salvation of his brethren were to him a cause for "bowing the knees." Make these words as symbolic as you please, they mean the same still. Why, then, is not a prayerful spirit a cause to all those who claim to imitate Paul "also to bow the knees to the Lord?" With hundreds of Christians whose special aim and pretense are to follow the "apostolic order of things in example and precept," as we have often observed in the public worship of the church, there is no cause for "bowing the knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ;" a very wide difference must subsist between them and the great man of God—Paul the aged.

From the premises before us, in the precepts and examples of the Bible, so fully and beautifully illustrative of the piety of the Bible, it seems scarcely necessary to urge the question with one word more. Could the earnest, conscientious Christian, whose great desire is to follow the letter and the spirit of the divine word in all things, ask anything more?

And yet, in this respect, too, what an abandonment of the form—and we doubt not of the spirit, too—of true piety and prayer! The church is beginning shamefully to yield to the spirit of the world. Fashion and respectability are here also triumphing over the church. It is no longer "respectable" and "in good taste" for Christian people in good society to "worship and bow down," to "kneel before the Lord our Maker," to "bow the knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." A slight elegant bowing of the head is all that fashion now allows. To kneel before God in the church is subject to too many inconveniences. It is not in good tone; would look too pious for elegant, refined people; and, above all, would greatly damage the splendid, fashionable garments of pious men and women. David, the king, could do it; Daniel, the prime minister of a mighty empire, could do it; the apostle Paul could even "kneel down on the seashore" with them all; but Christians of good tone, of these days, cannot do it. It is well that there is now no Paul here to ask so unreasonable, unrespectable a thing of our intelligent, higher-developed, fashionably-attired Christians of to-day, as to kneel down on the bare ground. What would these have done had they, unfortunately, been with Paul on that memorable occasion? It is a bitter grief to see this shameful—and, we fear, too willing—succumbing to the dictates of a carnal respectability in so many of our churches. Often has our heart sunk within us, when rising from prayer, to see the whole congregation irreverently sitting in their seats, respecting this sublime act of devotion only with an idle resting of the head on the back of the pew before them. We always feel outraged to the mournful scenes of abandonment of the beautiful and blessed form of Bible piety to the spirit of the world. Why preachers permit such things to exist without stern rebuke we cannot understand. Let others who do not feel themselves bound by Bible practice, and who think that they can change Bible usage "somewhat," do this; but they who claim, par excellence, to adopt apostolic Christianity, in spirit and form, cannot do it without a plain abandonment of their principles.—C. L. Loos, in "Millennial Harbinger."

There is always a best way of doing everything, if it be only to boil an egg. Manners are the happy ways of doing things—each one a stroke of genius or of love, now repeated and hardened into usage.—Emerson.

ENTHUSIASM AND PERSEVERANCE.

Two long words, promising a didactic article; yet do not turn away from them until you have given them a little thought. Most young people have a large share of the first quality; it belongs to the beautiful period through which their life is passing. They begin a new study, a new enterprise, a new journey, with a sort of joyous rush of keen appreciation, with zest, with eagerness, because their minds are full of enthusiasm, a real gift from God. The word carries in it that lovely suggestion. There may be difficulties at the outset, but they are not regarded as barriers; the clever and ambitious girl or the determined and earnest boy makes very light of them, and is even likely to be a wee bit impatient if older heads are shaken and older voices caution against a too rash onset. So it comes to pass that many of the world's great victories, many of the world's pioneer movements, have been gained or have been made by impetuous and fearless young people, who scorned danger and were filled with an irrepressible enthusiasm.

I was talking with a distinguished teacher one day about two of her pupils, one extremely brilliant and evidently aspiring, the other of heavier and slower make of mind, a born plodder. "Emily," said the lady, "has the greater quickness and facility; she is strong in attack, and nothing quenches her first enthusiasm, but toward the middle of a term she tires; she has little staying power. Phoebe, who is apparently dull and never showy, is so thorough, so disciplined, so persevering, that in the end she will surely surpass Emily."

"Perseverance," with its traditions of the noble Roman race from whom our English language derives its splendid Latin strain, is a word to write upon the doorways of our hearts, a word to live by. Perseverance does not disdain drudgery; perseverance keeps straight on, through the quagmire and the ditch, over the deep stretch of the mountain, down through the gloomy valley; perseverance is aware, to come to a very practical phase of the question and drop metaphor, that French and German verbs require of the student a stern and invincible courage and the grappling hooks of inflexible attention; perseverance impels one to forego outside attractions of reading and of pleasant company, which may divert one from the main issue; perseverance makes stepping-stones of its failures, and is not unduly elated by its successes.

In Christian work these two characteristics, when combined, as they often are, enable the youthful disciple to win souls for the Master. Without enthusiasm his or her efforts are cold and lack the magnetism of sympathy. Without perseverance they are soon relinquished. Inasmuch as our dear Lord encourages us to come to him and ask for whatever we need, and since we are sure of receiving it richly from his bountiful hand, we all may have enthusiasm in our toil for him and for the building up of his kingdom. The ability to persevere we may gain by seeking it as a divine gift. In those beautiful chapters of Revelation, one word recurs like the motive in music—the word "overcome." Every promise made to him that overcometh is accompanied by the mention of some beautiful reward.

Young women—perhaps more than young men—need to be advised about persevering when once they have undertaken any good work; for it is part of the feminine nature. I think, to be enthusiastic, to grasp the possibilities of a situation, and to see a lofty edifice with turrets and spires rising in the air while men are still digging the cellar to lay the foundations. We women have to guard ourselves against undue enthusiasm, to look out for our balance, lest we become too buoyant. Perseverance, hand in hand with enthusiasm, will lead us, if not swiftly, yet very surely, to whatever goal we have placed before our eyes. "Ye did run well." Let this be said of us by and by; and also let us run with patience. The figure here is very striking, combining the swift motion with the stern endurance which at last wins the race set before us by Christ.—Forward.

A MOTHER-MADE MAN.

At a large public meeting in America one of the most distinguished men of the new world was introduced as a "self-made man." Instead of appearing gratified at the tribute, it seemed to throw him for a few moments into a "brown study." Afterwards he was asked the reason for the way in which he received the announcement.

"Well," said the great man, "it set me to thinking that I was not really a self-made man."

"Why," they replied, "did you not begin to work in a store when you were ten or twelve years old?"

"Yes," said he, "but it was because my mother thought I ought early to have the educating touch of business."

"But, then," they urged, "you were always such a great reader, devouring books when a boy."

"Yes," he replied; "but it was because my mother led me to do it, and at her knee she had me give an account of the book after I had read it. I do not know about being a self-made man. I think my mother had a great deal to do with it."

"But, then," they urged again, "your integrity was your own."

"Well, I do not know about that. One day a barrel of apples had come to me to sell out by the peck, and, after the manner of some storekeepers, I put the imperfect ones at the bottom and the best ones at the top. My mother called me and asked me what I was doing. I told her, and she said: 'Tom, if you do that, you will be a cheat.' I did not do it. I think my mother had something to do with my integrity, and, on the whole, I doubt whether I am a self-made man. I think my mother had something to do with making me anything I am of any character or usefulness."—British Workman.

HAND-TO-HAND COMBAT.

On a cold winter evening, said Dr. T. L. Cuyler, recently, I made my first call on a rich merchant in New York. As I left the door and the piercing gale swept in, I said: "What an awful night for the poor!"

He went back, and, bringing to me a roll of bank bills, said: "Please hand these for me to the poorest people you know."

After a few days, I wrote to him the grateful thanks of the poor whom his bounty had relieved, and added: "How is it that a man so kind to his fellow-creatures has always been so unkind to his Savior as to refuse him his heart?"

That sentence touched him to the core. He sent for me to come and talk with him, and speedily gave himself to Christ. He has been a most useful Christian ever since. But he told me I was the first person who had talked to him about his soul in twenty years. One hour of pastoral work did more for that man than the pulpit effort of a lifetime.

Christians, do not neglect the hand-to-hand and face-to-face combat. Be diligent seekers of individual souls. Watch your opportunities.—Midland Methodist.

WHERE ARE THE YOUNG MEN?

Our cities are the fortresses of the saloons, and the young men of the cities are the food on which the monstrous system fattens. The young men of the cities in America are hopelessly beyond the church's reach. The most of them never darken the doors of any house of worship. The following statistics, gathered in several small cities, serve to illustrate the actual conditions. These figures are from a creditable exchange:

A city of 19,000 population, containing 3,500 young men; 85, or one-fortieth, are members of Protestant churches; not one received into a church during a year; 300 convicted of crime that same year.

A city of 20,000 population, 4,000 young men; 236 are church members; 39 received into churches during 1883; 1,069, over one fourth, convicted of crime that year.

A city of 32,000 population, 5,000 young men; 21 Protestant churches; 105 saloons; last year 105 young men were received into 21 churches and 222 into jail and workhouse.

A city of 38,000 population, 6,000 young men; 17 Protestant churches; 128 liquor saloons; on a pleasant Sunday morning 5 per cent of young men attended half the churches, including all the larger ones; on the previous Saturday evening, during two hours, 10 per cent of the young men were in seven out of the 128 of the saloons—6 per cent, or one-eighteenth, of the saloons.

A city of 12,000 population, 2,500 young men; on a pleasant Sunday evening in all the churches 6 per cent of the young men; in 3 per cent of the saloons 4 per cent of the young men.

These are only small cities. If we find these things in the green tree, what may we not expect in the dry?—Cumberland Presbyterian.

RICH, BUT FRUITFUL.

If a young man would contemplate an ideal of useful living, we commend to him the address delivered by Carl Schurz at the funeral of William Steinway, the head of the great house of piano manufacturers. After referring to the fact that the dead man began his active life as a simple workman, and in his success remained the ideal knight of labor, Mr. Schurz said:

"He was a pattern as a rich man. I wish I could call the millionaires of the land to this bier and say to them: 'Those among you who lament that at times poverty looks with mutterings on riches, learn from this dead man.'

"His millions were never begrudged him. The dark glance of envy never fell upon him. Covetousness itself passed him by disarmed and reconciled. Yes, every one would have rejoiced to see him still richer, for every one knew that everything he got contributed to the welfare of all.

"No one fulfilled better than he the duties of wealth. There was no puffed-up pride of possession, no extravagant prank of display. Simple as ever remained his being, modest his mode of life. But he knew one luxury, and he practiced it: that was the luxury of the liberal hand—a princely luxury that few of the world's greatest have indulged in more richly than he.

"It was not money alone that he gave; it was the hearty joy of the genuine benefactor with which he bade the worthy welcome, and often anticipated their wants; it was the bright cheerfulness of the willing giver who could conceive no abuse of his generosity.

"I have seen many men in my day; never a bigger heart. . . . Is it too much to say that in this man every human being has lost a brother?"—Selected.

OBEDIENCE.

It is one of the fine sayings of Dr. South that "though idleness be a sin which the devil loves to tempt men to, yet he is never guilty of it himself."

Whatever will make us better and happier, God has placed either openly before us or very close to us.—Seneca.

True courage is a combination of moral and physical qualities so united as to secure the noblest character. A pure conscience, a clear, intelligent mind, and a strong body are necessary to the highest forms of courageous manhood.

The bravest are the tenderest,
 The loving are the daring.
 It is moral courage that characterizes the highest order of manhood and womanhood—the courage to seek and to speak the truth; the courage to be just; the courage to be honest; the courage to resist temptation; the courage to do one's duty. If men and women do not possess this virtue, they have no security whatever for the preservation of any other.—Dr. Northrop.

Editorial.

DR. LIPSCOMB, AGAIN.

The Baptist and Reflector, under the above heading, says:

"Dr. David Lipscomb had nearly two columns in the Gospel Advocate last week in reply to us. Almost the whole of the article was taken up with complaining that we did not publish his previous article in full, but only 'scraps' from it. On this we have to say:

"1. As we stated at the time, we published about two-thirds of the article, and, in fact, nearly all of it relating to ourself. That relating to Dr. Lofton we did not think it necessary to publish.

"2. We published and answered each paragraph separately as a matter of convenience to our readers, so that they might have before them the paragraph to which we were replying and so as to save the necessity of repetition. This is frequently done.

"3. It seemed to us that each paragraph was complete in itself and contained all that was essential to express Dr. Lipscomb's meaning on that point. One of them was quite lengthy.

"4. Dr. Lipscomb, in his reply, does not quote a single paragraph from us, except the correspondence between him and ourself several years ago, and so does not give the reader the least idea of what we said. Which is fairer, to publish the article of your opponent by paragraphs and reply to each paragraph separately or to reply to him without publishing a single thing he says? It seems to us fairer to let him state his position in his own language than that you should attempt to state it for him.

"5. But if Dr. Lipscomb still wishes his article published in full, we will do so, notwithstanding the fact that we have published most of it already, if he will agree to publish our reply in full, none of which he has published. Is not this fair?

"Dr. Lipscomb says that he will accept our proposition—which was made in response to his virtual challenge—to discuss 'some questions wherein each thinks the other wrong,' and he suggests 'some points growing out of the questions he propounded to me years ago.' All right. Suppose we take this proposition: 'The plan of salvation includes only repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.' We will affirm. We presume Dr. Lipscomb will deny. Let him then formulate a proposition as to what the plan of salvation embraces, and which he is willing to affirm. If it is different from the above, we will deny it. These propositions will bring in the points growing out of the questions we asked Dr. Lipscomb several years ago, besides other points.

"As to the length and number of the articles, we will leave that for Dr. Lipscomb to suggest.

"Dr. Lipscomb says that he will 'treat him [us] courteously.' That is more than he has done in either of his other articles. But we will let that pass, and will treat him with all possible courtesy."

Two weeks ago, just as we were going to press, the Baptist and Reflector came to hand with its article in response to our comment on its course. We wrote a few sentences of reply, but now publish the article and comment on the subject of courtesy. We again say he did not reply to a sentence we wrote.

The foundation of all genuine courtesy is the royal rule: "Do unto others as ye will they should do unto you." That does not mean that we should do or wink at wrong in others or let go uncorrected errors or wrongs that affect truth and the well-being of men. Jesus carried out this principle perfectly and he corrected error and exposed those who sought to pervert truth or mislead men. I have violated no rule of true courtesy, as exemplified by the Master. Folk said I used direct, and not diplomatic, language in doing this. The Master did the same. I dislike to speak of Editor Folk in a manner that is unpleasant to him, but I have always found it difficult to correct a man in language that to him is pleasant. It is difficult to say unpleasant things in pleasant language. And Folk more habitually mistakes the teachings of those he opposes than any man of intelligence I know; yet I think personally he does not intend to tell things not true. But he is a partisan and looks at everything from the party standpoint. This will not allow him to see the truth not favorable to the party. A man to be just and fair to his opponent must try to see things from his standpoint. He must take a judicial view of all questions; he must view it from all sides, not simply as an attorney for one party.

Folk justifies himself in giving Dr. Lofton's bitter denunciations of the disciples and his replies, while refusing a word of response. The Doctor is no novice in vituperative denunciation. He has native talent and is well trained in that work. But the courage and fairness of that course are equalled by two men armed attacking an unarmed man, one holding while the other beats and abuses. It is on a par with armed soldiers abusing an unarmed prisoner. So far as the readers of the Baptist and Reflector are concerned, the disciples are unarmed, their hands are tied, and Folk and Lofton show their courage and magnanimity by abusing, denouncing, misrepresenting them, and refusing an opportunity to reply. This kind of courage would abuse prisoners. Politicians, with all the corruptions of politics, scorn this kind of unfairness. The following extracts are from an article quoted into the Nashville American recently. It is headed: "Partisanship Run Mad." It says: "The public will excuse a paper for printing editorials of a partisan nature; that is to be expected; but when the editors of reputable newspapers become so prejudiced in their opinions that they print but one side of all questions, they cease to perform their duty to the public. . . . There are a great many Republican papers in this country that will not print a speech delivered by Mr. Bryan, while there are others that will print parts of his speech, but only such parts as in the opinion of the editor are the least hurtful to the Republican party. There are also Democratic papers no worse, but just as bad, whose editors regard it as their duty to suppress everything that Republican speakers may say." That is exactly how the Baptist and Reflector treats the disciples. The American works for the success of the Democratic principles and party, but it gives President McKinley's speeches as fully as Mr. Bryan's, Mr. McCall's as fully as Governor McMillin's; it reports Mr. Hanna's speeches, and, when he claims he is misrepresented, gives his corrections in his own words. The political paper that is not thus fair is regarded as run mad—a disreputable paper. They leave that kind of work to the partisan religious papers. I can make no concessions to induce Folk to do what he was in honor bound to do. When he challenged or asked me to do a thing, his honor was pledged to give the reply to those before whom he made the challenge.

No one objects to his writing as strong articles as he can against the position of the disciples, but to refuse to give a fair statement of their position, as they make it, is unfair and unjust.

As to his reply, which he complains we did not publish, we did not reply to a word of it. Had he published our article fairly, we would have published his response, as I would have expected him to publish my reply. I am entitled to close in responding to his queries. My reply to his article would have been only to correct his mistakes and evasions. I give a sample of this. I said: "God is Spirit, not material." His response is: "We suppose that, like the Mormons, he would claim that God has a body of flesh and bones, without blood." Why should he suppose this? Does he think a spirit has flesh and bones? Jesus, after his resurrection, too, said: "Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Does he think flesh and bones are not matter? This shows, too, that Jesus between the resurrection and ascension had not assumed the spirit body.

Were he to find a thousand other points of agreement, it would not make his statement that they agreed in all but one point—laying on of hands—true. His charge means that the disciples agree with the Mormons in the belief in Joe Smith as a prophet, in continuous revelations, and in the belief in polygamy. As kindly as I knew how, I suggested that the statement had been made thoughtlessly; but he fails now to correct, and this excuse cannot be made for him. Now, will he tell me how that charge can be properly spoken of in language that he would regard courteous? Can he give diplomatic language in which it can be expressed courteously? In his further points of agreement, he generally misrepresents the position of disciples, sometimes that of Mormons, and in the article that of Baptists, if the "Philadelphia Confession" is a settled standard of Baptist faith.

This habit of calling persons or people offensive names, making odious comparisons, and charging scurrilous associations was never regarded as a mark of courtesy among any well-bred people with whom I ever associated. In the discussions between disciples and other religious people, the question of applying such names as "Campbellite" and others offensive to either party has been frequently referred to the moderators, and, so far as I know, they have always decided it was a violation of the rules of courteous discussion. Calling offensive names and making odious comparisons outside of the religious circle is called "blackguarding." It is certainly a violation of the Golden Rule to call people by names offensive to them. I think epithets merely complimentary or offensive violate true courtesy. I have no right to the title "Doctor." To bestow it so is meaningless and an injustice to those entitled to it. To call me either is unjust to me and others. All injustice is discourtesy. Judged by any correct rules of courtesy, Editor Folk is the discourteous man, and what he calls my "discourtesy" is a correction of his discourtesy.

First, and above all other things, true courtesy is just and fair. While in the discussion I shall try to be courteous; I shall expect the same of Mr. Folk in the true and best sense of that word. D. L.

WHEN IS MAN CONVERTED?

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might."

Man is recognized as being composed of heart, soul (or mind), and body. The heart is the inner spiritual nature, the soul represents here the intellectual faculties, and the might is the strength of the body. To love the Lord with all the heart, soul, and might is to devote the heart, the mind, and the body all to the service of God, as the supreme end of life. The heart, the inner man, or spiritual nature, is willing to serve God. The carnal passions and lusts abide in the body, and they are all contrary to the spirit and to all service to God. "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but to do that which is good is not. . . . For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see a different law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity under the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me out of the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord [this deliverance comes]." (Rom. 7: 18-24, R. V.)

"God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and as an offering for sin, condemned [overcame] sin in the flesh." Conversion to God consists in bringing heart, mind, and the flesh under subjection to the Spirit and the submission of all to the will of God. Faith is the medium through which the spirit is strengthened to overcome the flesh. The work of faith is to so strengthen the spirit that it can control the body. Until it does this it fails of its end. God requires faith shall show its power to control the body before he will accept it. Hence, in all the blessings bestowed in response to faith among the patriarchs and the Jews, during the personal ministry of Christ, and under the dispensation of the Spirit, the blessing in response to faith was bestowed when that faith was embodied and manifested in a bodily act. Thus it showed its strength to rule. Baptism is the expressive and significant act in which the body surrenders to God. So God has promised to forgive sins when faith declares itself in baptism.

FORMING ALLIANCES WITH SIN.

People who read the Bible but little are liable to form alliances with things that are sinful in the sight of God without realizing what they are doing—the evils they help and encourage or the extent to which they become parties to sin. The Jewish people were forbidden to form any sort of alliances with the wicked nations of Canaan, lest they should be led into the sinful ways of those wicked people and themselves be led to ruin by them. Jehoshaphat, one of the kings of Judah, formed many alliances with the wicked kings of the ten tribes of the children of Israel. The first alliance he entered into was with Ahab, one of the most corrupt men that ever reigned over the ten tribes. All the kings of the ten tribes were wicked, but Ahab was one of the worst among them. Under the pressure of Jezebel, his heathen wife, he had caused the prophets of the Lord to be slain, and had established the worship of Baal among the people of his kingdom, while the worship of God was almost put down among the ten tribes. At the time this alliance was formed, Ahab had about reached the climax of sin, and his cup of iniquity was about full, and the time for his destruction was near at hand. God had already determined upon his downfall by the king of Syria. Jehoshaphat went with Ahab to battle, the very battle in which the latter was doomed to be slain.

Up to the time of this alliance, no particular fault is mentioned against Jehoshaphat; but he had been increasing rapidly in wealth and power, and these things were having their effect upon him. He was becoming infatuated by these things, and doubtless had an eye to increasing them by this alliance. But the formation of such an alliance with such a wicked, idolatrous man as Ahab was very displeasing to God, and Jehoshaphat came near losing his life in this battle, and would have done so but for the mercies of God toward him. The Lord sent a prophet to rebuke him for his wicked course when the battle was over and Ahab had been slain. "And Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned to his house in peace to Jerusalem. And Jehu the son of Hanani the seer went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, 'Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.'" (2 Chron. 19: 1, 2.) Thus he had deliberately engaged to help an ungodly man, one that hated the Lord; and the Lord shows him that he is not to be mocked in his requirements and that he had greatly endangered himself by so doing. But the prophet added: "Nevertheless there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek God." While Jehoshaphat was weak and easily tempted and led astray, he had been very zealous to put down idolatry among his people, and had striven very earnestly to do so. He was not wholly corrupt in heart as yet, but had made a very bad compact with an exceedingly wicked and corrupt man. After being rebuked by the prophet, he set to work in great zeal to bring all his people back into the service of God. "And he set judges in the land throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city, and said to the judges, 'Take heed what ye do: for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment.'" He also charged the Levites especially about the judgments of the Lord, and to act in the fear of the Lord faithfully. Thus it seemed he was very zealous again in the Lord's service; but his faithfulness did not last very long. Jehoram, son of Ahab, became king over the ten tribes after the death of his father, and he became involved in war with the Moabites and asked Jehoshaphat to help him in the war. Jehoshaphat at once consented, and went. While Jehoram was not so wicked as Ahab was, yet he was a very corrupt man, and Jehoshaphat did himself no honor in going in with him. Yet Jehoram was not so bad as to be destroyed, and so the Lord used him as a means of destroying the wicked Moabites and their country. But all this did not excuse Jehoshaphat for this unholy alliance.

One good trait of Jehoshaphat was that when he got wrong, he was very ready to get right again; and when right, he was very zealous in doing the Lord's will. On this account the Lord bore with him, and blessed him in many ways, and prospered him much as king of Judah. Yet, after all this, he formed an alliance with Ahaziah, king of Israel, who was also a very wicked man. The purpose of this alliance was to build ships together to go to Tarshish. Another prophet was sent to rebuke him for this unholy alliance also. "Then Eliezer the son of Dodavah of Mareshah prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, 'Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish.'" (2 Chron. 20: 37.) Yet, after all this, it appears that Jehoshaphat was not entirely rejected; for, after these ships were destroyed, there is mention made of Jehoshaphat having ships to go to Ophir, and that Ahaziah wanted him to allow his servants to go with those of Jehoshaphat; but Jehoshaphat refused. Immediately after this we have an account of the death of Jehoshaphat.

From the history of Jehoshaphat, it appears that his trouble was not a purpose to do wrong, but a great weakness that he did not strive sufficiently to overcome; for the Lord showed him plainly his displeasure at his course in these evil alliances. The command of God to men in all such relationships was: "Be strong, and of a good courage." These things were said to Joshua, and were on record, and Jehoshaphat should have profited by them; but he did not. If he had read and studied such instructions, he might have avoided these sins and the troubles into which they placed him. This shows the danger of being ignorant of what the will of God is and of carelessness in regard to doing that will. Jehoshaphat was not purposely a bad man, but was very weak in the matter of yielding to temptation. If Jehoshaphat had been careful on this point and had resisted these temptations and had stood firmly aloof from all such sins, he would have left a very beautiful character on record as a heritage for future generations. As it is, he leaves a character awfully stained with mistakes and wrongdoing.

All along through the Bible are warnings against evil associations and sinful alliances. No man can participate in such things and leave an unspotted character to his posterity. These principles are no less true under Christianity than they were under the Jewish age. Christians are commanded to "abstain from all appearance of evil." "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Evil associations and wicked alliances are dangerous to any man, besides the fact that he commits actual evil to go into them. It is dangerous for any man to in any wise dally with evil in any shape or form. When a man goes into bad associations or forms evil alliances, he makes a long stride into sin; and when he has once gone into these things and becomes a party to them, he is then a party to the evil influences these associations or alliances may exert. If the alliance of which he forms a part does evil, though he may not be present, yet he shares in the responsibility of the evil done. If a young man in the church forms bad associates, enters into bad company, and runs with them, he is soon counted with them and as one of them, and whatever wrongs are done by the crowd are imputed to him, and he has to bear his share of the blame, whether he personally participated in the evil deeds or not. A man that associates with evil doers encourages them in their evil doings and aids and abets in the depredations committed by them.

There are certain human societies and human organizations, planned and run by uninspired men, connected with the church, and claimed and infended to do the work of the church, that are producing endless discord, divisions, disturbances, troubles, and heartaches among brethren. Every man that goes into these things and advocates and encourages them becomes a party to them, and is therefore a party to whatever of evil they do, whether or not he is personally present when the evil is done. When Jehoshaphat had formed alliances with Ahab, the son of Jehoshaphat married a daughter of Ahab, which resulted in immense evil long after Jehoshaphat had gone to the grave. As to the number of persons that were influenced to do evil by the fact that Jehoshaphat went into this alliance with Ahab, the world will never know this side the judgment seat of Christ. A man may live in Tennessee, and may never see Texas in his life, and may go into and aid or assist in building these societies in Tennessee, while a friend of his in Texas may hear of it and be emboldened to go into just such things in Texas, and may be instrumental in doing a world of mischief by it that would not have been thought of if he had not heard that his old friend in Tennessee was into them. So the man who lives here, and never saw Texas, becomes a party to the mischief done there. There is no such thing as placing a boundary line to the evils brought about in this way. Then when you put all these things together—the evil that a man does in forming alliances with things that are evil and the evils others are led into thereby, and remember that the tide of evil that he starts may run on indefinitely—there is scarcely a possibility to estimate the extent of the evil that results from that one man's example.

How careful should men be, therefore, to avoid every possible step into anything that is wrong and that can have an evil influence upon others! If a man will carefully and rigidly follow the word of the Lord and be always engaged in the things that are written in the word of God, he need have no uneasiness about his influence upon others; it will always be good. But if a man turns aside from the word of God to go into or build up anything not required in the Bible, he may know that his step is into evil, and that all the influence he exerts along that line is evil. Anything introduced as service to God that he has not ordained is evil, and tends to ruin, and that continually. The word of the Lord—and that, too, in its proper division and application—is the only road of safety there is for man on this earth. This is safe, and no believer in the Bible can doubt it for a moment.

E. G. S.

SOUND CAUTION.

"Every teacher of religion, in whatever capacity he labors, is honor bound to teach what he believes, but he is under no obligation to ridicule and misrepresent those who do not agree with him in doctrine and practice. The man who does so, whether editor or preacher, misunderstands the purpose of his call, else he has received 'another gospel, which is not another,' but a perversion of the truth. The thought of facing the bar of judgment and answering for such a waste of time and misuse of talent, to say nothing of the number of souls that have been misled, that will be charged to the account of some, ought to deter them and cause them to change their course. Possibly they think they are 'doing God service.' But we have not so learned Christ."

"To read through a church paper of sixteen pages and fail to find a single paragraph from editor or correspondents commending religion, or in any wise adapted to edify believers in love, but everything to strengthen prejudice and gratify denominational hobbyists, is evidence not only of a lack of knowledge and appreciation of the true mission of a religious journal, but of that charity that 'vaunteth not itself,' and is 'not puffed up.' We are bound to think that a paper destitute of brotherly love, and that never exhorts to the cultivation of the fruits of the Spirit, will, sooner or later, drive all piety from the heart of the editor and taint every family into which it enters with its degenerate spirit. The church paper ought to be an exponent of the gospel. It ought to be the cleanest periodical that finds a place in the family circle."

These two paragraphs, from the Christian Advocate, of this city, are the solemn warnings of Dr. Hess to some of his religious papers—I take it, to his neighbors. The Doctor leaves us to make the application. This is well. Each should examine himself. The admonitions are good and sound. A writer or preacher must be faithful and true to his own convictions, that God may accept him. There is no alternative. No just man ever thought less of another for being true and faithful to his convictions or for maintaining them with earnestness and devotion, even when this leads him to vigorously oppose error. But a true man cannot misrepresent the faith and teachings of others, even to make opposition to error successful. To do this is to wrong the other and to make himself a liar, and all liars shall have their part in the lake that burns. Particular election and effectual call cannot nullify this sentence of the Almighty. Many very religious people make themselves great liars by misrepresenting what they oppose. They work their own ruin by this.

Then it is true that no religious people can grow in grace, even if this grace is free and sovereign, by dwelling upon, ridiculing, and opposing the errors of others. Many disciples have been injured spiritually by this. Ridicule to expose error has the divine stamp upon it, but it must be used sparingly and with caution. It will be well for the Cumberland Presbyterian and the Christian Advocate to examine themselves and see whether they be guilty in these matters; and even though the Baptist and Reflector be sure it is the favored child of nineteenth centuries of the unbroken succession of churches, impeccable as to mortal sin, it would not make its calling and election less sure by pondering well this good advice.

Letter from India.

Brother McCaleb: I wish to acknowledge the receipt of your letter containing forty-nine dollars and forty-nine cents ($49.49) for the starving of India. I assure you that it came at a time when the need was very great. The government is doing much to relieve the suffering, and the missionaries are giving out food and clothing and giving employment as far as the money sent them will permit. Recently a ship load of corn for famine relief reached Bombay. This will supply food for a time for thousands.

In spite of all that is being done, many are dying. You doubtless read in the papers accounts of the great amount of suffering, but words cannot express the actual condition; it must be seen to be understood. It is stated on good authority that forty million people are actually famine stricken, while twenty million more are suffering to a greater or less degree from scarcity of food. The famine district embraces an area of three hundred thousand square miles.

In some cases people are trying to live on berries, roots, and even grass. As a result, their digestion in many cases is so badly impaired that if proper food is given to them, they cannot digest it. We have had cases of this character in the hospital. When they would come, we would give them food and medicine and perhaps for a short time they would improve, then all at once they would get worse and in a few days die. This has been the experience in many hospitals in India.

Not long since an old woman came to the hospital for medicine and was too weak to get away. We kept her in the hospital and gave her medicine and food, but, in spite of all we could do, she died in a short time. Sometimes parents bring their children and offer to sell them to us. One day a man offered us a girl about eight years old for eight annas (about sixteen cents). Some ask an amount equal to fifty cents or one dollar. Of course we tell them we cannot buy them, but that we will take them and give them a home and educate them. They cannot support the children, and unless something is done for them, they will likely become beggars. We have taken a number of children and sent them to orphanages, where they are clothed, fed, and educated, and of course a part of their education consists of instruction in the Bible.

From three to four cents a day will supply food enough to sustain the life of an adult. A native blanket can be purchased for about thirty-five cents and other necessary garments can be purchased for about forty or fifty cents. You may wonder why a blanket is necessary in such a warm country. The sunshine is very hot all the year around. In the cold season the nights are very cool, and in the rainy season, while the nights are not so cool, yet the change from the heat of the day is such that covering is necessary. Unless these people, who are so weak from not having sufficient food, are supplied with clothing, many will die. At Hurda we are supplying cheap grain to the people, giving out clothing, and in some cases giving work to those who want work. In the hospital many are treated for diseases caused by the famine.

The money you have sent will be used to supply food and clothing to the people. I received the amount ($49.49) in rupees, and had no trouble in drawing it. The rate of exchange varies a little, but at the present rate the amount you sent equals just one hundred and fifty one rupees and fourteen annas. The best way to send money to India is through the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. They have a bank in New York and one in Bombay, so by buying a draft of them in New York it can be cashed at their bank in Bombay.

You asked for the name of a missionary who is not connected with any mission board and is not receiving a stipulated salary. Miss Jane Wakefield Adam, of Deogarh Bhágalpur, Bengal, India, is such. Miss Adam is a very consecrated woman, and, I believe, is doing a good work. Any money sent to her will be properly used. Just at present I do not know the address of any others working in this way, but if you desire, I will inquire into the matter more fully. There are others here who are working that way—members of different denominations. To support them means, of course, supporting denominationalism. However, Miss Adam is a member of the Christian Church.

How would you like to support a native evangelist? There are plenty of villages and towns near Hurda where no one is working where he could work. These evangelists usually locate in some village, and not only preach in the village where they live, but in the surrounding villages, and in that way reach hundreds and thousands with the gospel. If you would think favorably of this, I could give you more particulars about the work. He could be independent of the mission. We could receive the money for his salary and pay it to him and see that he did the work and made reports as would be desired. A good native evangelist receives from eight dollars to ten dollars per month. Let me hear from you.

The "Shirt-waist Man."

"A lady passenger on a Southern Railway train has protested against riding in a coach with a 'shirt-waist man,' and has made complaint to the railroad officials. Superintendent Ewing has deemed it necessary to issue an order to conductors respecting the 'shirt-waist' habit, cautioning restriction of the habit to such bounds as are proper and becoming. The conductors are to be the connoisseurs on shirt waists and are at a loss to establish a standard." (Knoxville Dispatch, August 30, to Nashville American.)

Now, if all other good women will join this one in an earnest, brave, determined, fight-to-a-finish warfare against the grog habit, the tobacco habit, the profanity habit, the smutty-yarn habit, the obscene-language habit, the slang habit, the hugging-set-to-music habit, "and such like," the horrid shirt waist will need less washing, men will be cleaner, women will be better, homes will be purer, the world will be brighter, and heaven will have more inhabitants. Let the good work go on.

We cannot escape the consequences of our deeds; the brand of unforgiven sins remains forever.

Faithful service in the past prepares us for closer communion with Christ and larger spheres of usefulness.

Some people make the mistake of depending too much on their friends, and not depending enough on themselves.

Letter from Brother Bishop.

I hope this letter will be read before the churches, especially before the Owen's Chapel Church, and that they will not forget Brother Bishop, but remember him with a liberal offering and a good letter. J. M. McCALEB.

"Brother McCaleb: Your good letters came to hand in due time. I rejoice that you are doing good among the churches. I hope your wife and children are well. Give my regards to them all. Thanks for the two dollars for Brother Snodgrass and myself; I sent him two yen. Also accept my thanks for the five yen for myself. Please do not feel that you ought to send money to me because I am in your work here, for I am glad to keep up your work to the best of my ability till you wish me to cease; also I am glad to attend to your business with no thought of desire for compensation. Please call upon me freely in any matter. You, of course, know that the school is closed for the summer. Mrs. Yoko, the teacher, was faithful to the end, and the attendance averaged about thirty-two. On August 15, 1900, a son was born to Mrs. Yoko. They are proud of him. So the mission now has a baby. On August 7, 1900, I baptized the daughter (twelve years old) of Brother Tsukata, whom I suppose you know. The little girl shows much intelligence, studies her Bible, prays in the evenings, and attends services regularly. I sent you a report to date of my last letter. I will now give you a full report from beginning to date. I will write it separately on the typewriter. I think it is correct. It has been very warm and dry here, though we have had occasional showers. I feel I must get out of Tokyo for a few days. The weather depresses me. I have much to do this fall and winter and must be prepared for it. I thank you for urging the brethren at Owen's Chapel to fellowship with me; I have had no word from them. I hope you will be enabled to start for Japan early next spring and reach here safely. I will continue to do what I can in Kanda Ward, though it will necessarily be small. We have weekly meetings on Sunday mornings, but only a few attend. Miss Wirick teaches the children on Sundays, as Mrs. Yoko cannot attend now. Our day school opened on September 10, 1900. I paid Mrs. Yoko salary for August. She said you do that way—do not suspend her salary during vacation. If you disapprove my action, I am willing to pay it myself. Mrs. Yoko has been very kind, patient, and faithful. I have written a good deal to the papers since my wife's death. I do not get the papers, hence I do not know whether all my items appeared. I prefer not to publish reports of money received in papers. My little paper was mailed to all of those who have helped me whose addresses I knew. I mean to reach the people through this medium. My articles to the papers will be mainly reports of results of work here, interesting incidents, etc., and articles on various subjects not directly related to foreign work. I found I could influence the churches much while in America by articles, etc. Jesse P. Sewell found the same to result from his articles. You can reach the people better now that you are among them. During my vacation, which I am to spend in Kamiyawa, I hope to write several articles. I cannot write much here this warm weather. I have written my first tract and have had it translated, and I hope to begin publishing it next month. I will write another immediately. My press will arrive in September. I will have Chinese characters to print anything I can issue in a small office. I need about fifty dollars for additional materials. I am putting most of my funds into my own work of issuing literature, etc., for teachers, and am not earning anything. I have nothing ahead, except what must be paid on my press when it comes, but I have no fears for the future. I take no anxious thought, and pray for more laborers. WILLIAM J. BISHOP.

RIDLEY.

On April 4, 1900, death visited the home of Brother and Sister W. B. Ridley and took from them their infant son, Henry Beasley Ridley, aged nine months. Christ said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." We say to the sorrowing family: Weep not, for we know Beasley was without sin; therefore he is safe in the arms of Jesus. May the bereaved parents, sisters, and brother strive to live so that they may meet Beasley in heaven, where there are no more partings, sorrows, or death. Donelson, Tenn. LYDIA BAKER.

SMITH.

Rachel E. Richardson was born on September 7, 1866. At the age of fifteen years she entered Burritt College, where she remained for several terms, cultivating and training those excellent powers of mind and heart that fitted her for the duties of wife and mother and neighbor, which she performed so faithfully and nobly in after life. While at school she was noted for her gentle manners, her obedient spirit, her bright mind, and her loving heart, which made her popular with the teachers and pupils. During the first term, at the age of fifteen years, she confessed the Lord and was baptized by Professor J. R. Hoover. To her splendid natural endowments were soon added the beauty and charm of the Christ life, which made her a power for good in all the circle of her acquaintance. She was married to James A. Smith on December 19, 1889, and became the mother of two interesting children—a son and a daughter. She lost her health in early life and suffered a great deal, but manifested in it all a sweet spirit of Christian resignation and fortitude, thus demonstrating the power of the Christian faith and hope to pierce the clouds and dispel the gloom that would otherwise overwhelm us in earth's pilgrimage. On April 8, 1900, the summons came, and found her ready to lay aside the frail earthly tabernacle, that she might find sweet rest in the presence of the dear Lord whom she trusted and loved so well. May her precious life and character ever remain fresh and green in the hearts of her loved ones as an inspiration to faithfulness in all life's duties, preparing them to meet her in the sweet by and by. W. H. SUTTON.

VAUGHAN.

Little David Lee Vaughan, son of Dr. and Kittle Vaughan, of Foster-ville, Tenn., was born on March 15, 1896, and died on August 2, 1900. The tender, loving Savior, who was once a child on earth, said: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 19: 14.) There is nothing more beautiful and attractive than sweet, innocent, and harmless childhood, and nothing which so fitly represents the condition of heart necessary in order to enter heaven. All children dying in infancy are certainly gathered into the heavenly fold, like tender lambs, and saved from the trials and storms of this life; or, like budding flowers, they are transplanted from the home garden on earth to grow and blossom in the garden of God on high. Little David Vaughan was sweet and attractive, obedient to his parents, and a bright child. He was taken ill during our protracted meeting at Foster-ville. We all loved him because he was my niece's son, because of his happy disposition and sunny face, and because he was an innocent child. David was a regular attendant at Sunday school, and knew his lessons. It was sad indeed to see him die. We sympathize with his parents, his grandmother (who tenderly nursed him during his illness), and all his relatives. In the loss of his property and all his children, Job said: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God with foolishness." (Job 1: 21, 22, R. V.) His parents can say, with David of old: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." (2 Sam. 12: 23.) We are sure the child is safe with God and also that all things work together for good to those who love God.

Many of the best preachers have promised to take more interest in circulating the Gospel Advocate among the people. All speak in very complimentary terms of the work the paper is doing in advocating apostolic Christianity. With such preachers helping us in the work as Brother W. H. Sutton, Brother John R. Williams, Brother L. S. White, Brother W. M. Oldfield, Brother R. H. Boll, Brother A. G. Freed, Brother Paul Slayden, Brother F. W. Smith, Brother Dan. Gunn, Brother John Dunn, and a host of other tried and true men, we shall be disappointed if we do not do a noble work in advancing the gospel of Christ.

Trial Treatment Free.

If you have tried snuff, vapor, smoking, or internal remedies and still have a return of the catarrh symptoms, it is because these remedies were not strong enough to reach the catarrhal poison in the blood and expel it. It matters not how obstinate the case nor what other treatments or remedies have failed to do, B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) always promptly reaches the real trouble and fairly roots out and drains from the system the bad catarrhal poison in the blood which causes catarrh. Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.) alone can do this. B. B. B. is different from any other remedy, as it goes to the very seat of blood diseases. Hence the cures made by Blood Balm are permanent for the simple reason that the poison being entirely driven from the system, no return of the disease is possible; besides, B. B. B. also makes the blood pure and rich. Here is one cure of over one thousand on file: Mrs. Elizabeth Knott, of Butler street, Atlanta, had for years a very troublesome nasal catarrh. So entirely has its nature been that she frequently blew small pieces of bone from her mouth and nose. The discharge was copious and very offensive. Her general health became greatly impaired, with poor appetite and weak, thin blood. Three bottles of Botanic Blood Balm worked on her like magic. Not a symptom has returned in over three years, and she is completely restored to health. If you have any symptoms of catarrh, headache, noises in the head, dropping in the throat, bad hearing, mucous discharges, or any blood taint, a treatment with B. B. B. will cure to say cured. Try it. At drug stores, $1. To convince you, a trial treatment of B. B. B. will be sent free and prepaid by writing to BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble and free medical advice will be given.

Church News.

TENNESSEE.

Bogota, September 24.—Brother A. P. Johnson recently closed an interesting and successful meeting with the Mitchell Schoolhouse congregation. Twenty-seven persons were added to the one body by confession and baptism. Brother Johnson does not fail to declare the whole counsel of God. May he live long to preach the gospel to a sinful world. J. H. WILLIS.

Stayton, September 26.—A meeting was begun at Rock Hill, Rutherford County, Tenn., on the fourth Lord's day in August, which continued ten days. The attendance was good, there was splendid attention, and two persons were baptized. Both the church and the preacher enjoyed the meeting. The meeting at Boston, Tenn., commenced on the second Lord's day in September and continued fifteen days. This was a very enthusiastic meeting. Every one took an interest and worked for the meeting. Twenty-six persons obeyed the gospel. I am now in what promises to be a good meeting here.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Lillamay, September 23.—Brother William Anderson, of Jameson, Maury County, Tenn., began a meeting for the congregation at Sam's Creek, in Cheatham County, on September 9, and continued till September 17, with three persons added by confession and baptism. His teaching was mainly to the church and was of the very best. It was such as the church needs, and it is hoped that it will result in much good; for the indifferent and careless members, as well as the more faithful ones, expressed themselves as never better pleased, though the blows fell fast and hard, the old Jerusalem blade being in skillful hands. There were large audiences all the time, the house being filled at night.

G. F. CULLOM.

Coxburg, September 23.—Brother R. T. Sisco, of Palestine, Tenn., began a meeting at Green Hill on Thursday night before the first Lord's day in August. While only fourteen persons took a stand on the Lord's side, we think much and lasting good was accomplished during the meeting. We have long since learned that it is not always the visible results that make a good meeting, but it is the soul-inspiring word of the Lord that causes a weak brother to do his duty more faithfully in the vineyard. As to Brother Sisco, we found him to be a bold and fearless defender of the truth, ever relying upon the Word for the foundation of his arguments, seeking to become popular only with his Lord by declaring his "whole counsel." Our hearts' desire and prayer to God is that Brother Sisco may spend a long and useful life laboring for his Master.

ENOS E HATLEY.

Delina, September 24.—Brother A. B. Barret began a meeting here on the first Lord's day in August, and preached both morning and evening till Wednesday evening, August 15. Twenty-two persons were added to the church, twenty-one of whom Brother Barret baptized. One came saying she wished to lay aside all human names, to be identified with the church of Christ and be simply a Christian. Another made the confession, but has not yet been baptized. Brother Barret is an earnest preacher and fears not to preach the truth. We feel that we have been greatly helped by hearing him. He made many friends among us, and has promised to hold another meeting for us in August, 1901. The church has been strengthened and encouraged, and we hope for still greater things in the future. The church has been established here only one year, and within that time there have been over thirty additions.

REBECCA PIGG.

TEXAS.

Dallas, September 26.—Since my last report I have held two good meetings. I preached a week at Cookville, Titus County, Texas, with twenty-three additions to the congregation—thirteen baptized, six Baptists and Methodists who had been baptized, and four restored. The second meeting was at Argo, Titus County—a missionary point, where we had only one brother. This was the first Christian meeting ever held at this place, and there was considerable opposition, but we received twenty from all sources—thirteen baptized, two from the denominations who had been baptized, and five restored. Thus far I have held six meetings in eight weeks, with nearly two hundred additions from all sources—viz.: At Corinth, six; at Bethel, thirty-three; at Rocky Branch, twenty-nine; at Center Grove, eighty-one; at Cookville, twenty-three; at Argo, twenty. I have preached every night and nearly every day for two months, and have several more meetings to hold. A good deal of this work is missionary—at places where there are few brethren and the pay is small—but nearly all the brethren in this part of the country are contributing something to my support.

The extraordinary rainfall in Northern India has not ceased for four days. Half the city of Calcutta is submerged, and even in the northern part the streets are flooded to a depth of three feet. Three houses have collapsed. Thus far there has been little loss of life, but, as the rain continues very heavy, there is considerable apprehension. It is estimated that thirty-five inches of rain have fallen in Calcutta.

The Great Northern Railway tunnel under the Cascade Mountains, in Oregon, has been completed. So perfect was the engineering work and so accurate the preliminary plans and surveys that the two forces working from opposite ends in the big tunnel brought the two ends together with scarcely the variation of an inch. The length of the great bore is more than two miles, and 1,000 men have been employed on it for three years.

Why We Repudiate the Name "Campbellite."

Sermon recently delivered by G. W. McQuiddy.

I have been requested to speak to-night upon the subject: "Why We Repudiate the Name 'Campbellite.'" The remarkable disposition on the part of the people who dissent from us in their religious views to call us "Campbellites" demands the exposition of this subject. You have heard me dubbed "the Campbellite preacher" and you have heard this church spoken of as the "Campbellite Church." The discourtesy to us in the use of the name "Campbellite" by those who seek to designate us from other religious bodies, in some instances, is the outgrowth of ignorance. There are those who have been taught from infancy that "Campbellite" is the name by which to designate us. In this teaching, they have grown up into manhood and womanhood, believing they manifest no discourtesy in the employment of the term "Campbellite" to designate us from their religious neighbors. In such cases the parties are less culpable for the use of the term as applied to us, and it is these cases that are benefited by the exposition of our subject. In other instances the word "Campbellite" grows out of spite. When it originates from this cause, it shows an unchristian spirit, to say the least of it. The soul cannot give birth to the spirit of spite and nourish this spirit there and retain the peaceful spirit of Christianity in its sanctuary. Therefore, we are divinely required to lay aside all malice and all guile and hypocrisies and envies and all evil speaking. This spirit of spite arose, perchance, from our then peculiar preaching, which was widely antagonistic to the prevailing religious dogmas of the day. We held that the conditions by which people were made Christians were also the conditions by which they were added to the church. We saw no intervening condition between salvation and addition to the church. This teaching, so entirely at variance with that of the then different religious bodies, brought upon us the hatred of some of the bodies, and out of this hatred there came such expressions as "Stoneites," "Campbellites," and "Water Salvationists." It is gratifying to perceive that as civilization advances and enlightenment increases the employment of this nickname is on the decrease, and there may yet dawn a day when all the world will speak of us as "Christians," and not as "Campbellites." Just here let me say that we do not claim the word "Christian" as our particular heritage; it is the common possession of every individual who follows in the footsteps of the world's Redeemer, and nothing would rejoice us more than to see all the churches of Christendom lay aside the names that are of human origin and be simply Christians, be nothing more or nothing less in Christianity.

Now, I wish to say that we do not repudiate the name "Campbellite" on the ground that we are ashamed of Mr. Campbell. We are not ashamed of him nor the grand and brilliant record he left to the world for example. We are proud that God gave to the world such a noble, intelligent, and courageous life. In biblical knowledge this man towered like a Colossus above men, and in classical attainments he was not one whit behind the scholars of his day. The stores of his erudition were vast, his research into the difficult questions of life was immense, and his abilities have been universally spoken of. His defense of the divinity of the Son of God, which was assailed by Mr. Robert Owen, of the materialistic school of England, places him in the foremost ranks of earth's greatest sages. This event is too recent to have become blotted from the tablet of your memory. You remember how Mr. Owen first challenged the clergy of New Orleans to defend the claims of the Christ whom they preached and how they quailed before this materialistic monarch and dared not meet him in discussion; you remember how, emboldened by the failure of the clergy of New Orleans to defend the divinity of their Lord and Christ, he then issued a challenge to the clergy of the world; you remember that of all only one responded, and that was Mr. Campbell, at whose hands Mr. Owen met his Waterloo, and from the defeat of which, the saying has gone forth, he shortly after his return to England died. Whether his death was the result of his brooding over his defeat by Mr. Campbell, I cannot tell, but history bears me out that his death was rather premature, taking place shortly after his return from America to England's shores. Bishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, O., with whom Mr. Campbell once held a religious discussion, now archbishop of the Roman Catholic Church, speaks of his intellectual powers, his wonderful logical abilities in the most glowing terms, in the highest praise; and, in addition to the name of Bishop Purcell, I might add the names of others, equally as famous, who have spoken eulogistically of his abilities both as a pulpit and polemic orator. His power to hold an audience beneath the sway of his thoughts and their logical sequence was something remarkable. On one occasion a gentleman who had ridden twenty-five miles to hear him preach, and who had sat on a seat without a back to it during the discourse, declared at the end of the sermon that he had preached only thirty minutes, and was not convinced otherwise until, upon looking at his watch, he discovered he had preached three hours.

No, my friends, we are not ashamed of Mr. Campbell; we are proud of him, but do not wish to wear his name; and while you may call us after his name, we have the pleasure of knowing that no amount of nicknaming can make us that which we do not make ourselves to be. You may call a man a "sot," but your calling him a sot does not make him one. He makes himself one by the doing of those things that make sots. So you may call me a "Campbellite," but that act on your part does not and cannot make me one. The only way that I can be made one is by doing the things by which "Campbellites" are made, and I am frank to admit that I do not know the things by which Campbellites are made. If you know them, I shall be pleased to learn them of you, for it might be that such knowledge would aid me in the presentation of this subject.

Having shown the ground on which we do not repudiate the name "Campbellite," I wish now to show you the ground on which we do repudiate it. First, we have obeyed from the heart that form of the truth created in the council chamber of heaven for the release of the soul from the slavery of sin, and obedience to that law does not, has not, and will not make an individual a "Campbellite." It is designed to make Christians. Therefore, as this law does not make "Campbellites," but Christians, and as we strive to follow this law to the letter, we must and do repudiate the name "Campbellite." Now, while this law does not make "Campbellites," it should be understood it makes no parties or sects in religion. It makes every man the same thing—a Christian. Men have made other things religiously, not by virtue of their obedience to creeds and confessions of faith, which distinguish one denomination from another, and it is the belief in and obedience to these different creeds and confessions of faith that puts the religious element of the world into different religious organizations. Destroy the creeds and confessions of faith which form the distinctive features of the various religious bodies, and you remove the foundation upon which denominationalism is built; but out of this destruction the unity of the church for which Christ prayed will arise. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Secondly, we have never become the bride of Mr. Campbell, and having never entered with him into the marriage state, we have no right to claim his name, and therefore when people seek to place upon us a name to which we are not in the least entitled, we kindly decline it. Were Mr. Campbell the groom of whom we are the bride, we would have every right to his name, and we would expect to be called "Mrs. Campbellite." If we sought to wear any other name than that of the groom—it matters not how intensely we may love or how closely we shall cling to him—the act would dishonor him; yea, it would disgrace him; and there is not an individual that would hold him guilty if he should forsake us, and there is not a court in the land that would not grant him a writing of divorcement. But Mr. Campbell is not our groom, to him we have never been wedded. Like the Roman brethren, we have become married to Jesus Christ, and hence he is our groom. "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." As Christ, therefore, is our groom, we have purposed to wear his name, and we shall repudiate any name not his or of divine authority, and we shall do this on the ground that to wear any other name, save his or of divine authority, would be to practice disloyalty to Christ. Just as it would disgrace Mr. Campbell for us not to wear his name if we were his bride, so does it disgrace Christ for any Christian to wear a name of human origin in preference to his. Surely, then, you will not find fault with us because we refuse to wear the name "Campbellite," since such an act would disgrace the one to whom we are wedded. If a young lady of this town should marry a Mr. Smith, and, after marriage, should say to him and to his friends, "Mr. Smith, I love you intensely, and I shall strive to do my duties of wifeness as I see them; but I do not like your name, it is too common. I like better the name 'Jones,' so I will be your wife, but will be known as 'Mrs. Jones;'" you would find fault with her and censure her because she does not wear Mr. Smith's name. But in matters of religion you reverse it. You find fault with us because we do not wear some other name, save the name of our groom. It seems to me that you ought to be consistent and get after those fellows that would rather wear the name of Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones in preference to the name of Christ, and not all the time be trying to force upon us a man's name to whom we have never been wedded.

Thirdly, it was not the work of Mr. Campbell to found a church; that, man could not do. Such work belonged to Jesus Christ, and so it is beautifully said: "Upon this rock I [Christ] will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Mr. Campbell's work was that of restoration. He sought to restore the work and worship of God to its pristine age. In his age he found that the Christian world looked upon the word of God as a dead letter. This theory he could not harmonize with certain thoughts found in the Book of inspiration. Such thoughts as "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" and "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" kept speaking unto his soul from day to day of the fallacy of the theory that the gospel was lifeless, until at last his heart opened to the truth that the gospel was teeming with life and that it was God's communication to man in language adapted to his understanding, that he might in it see the relation of the human to the divine. When he saw this truth, and others equally as great and important, he wanted others to see them, and so he went from place to place preaching these truths as the Bible revealed them. His presentation of the gospel was so simple, so lucid, and so wondrously beautiful that the result was marvelous. People who had been wont to look upon Christianity as mystified, as abstruse, who had sought its benefits, but because of their misconception of Christianity had failed to reach them, saw in his preaching the very embodiment of simplicity and clearness, and upon comparison of it with the words of heavenly conception they perceived the most beautiful harmony to exist. Hence, they readily became obedient to the faith as he preached it, and in less than a century the number of people that are content to take the Bible and to be governed exclusively by the Bible in matters that pertain to our spiritual natures has grown to one million five hundred thousand. Now, shall we call Mr. Campbell "the founder of the church" because he wrested the truths of Heaven designed for the government of man from mysticism and made them so lucid that man could understand their relation to him? Shall we call him "the founder of the Campbellite Church" because he taught the truth that Christ conceived in a plain and intelligible way, and shall we say that all who render obedience to these truths as thus taught are Campbellites? Then we make Christ a Campbellite and his apostles the exponents of Campbellism. Further, if we call Mr. Campbell "the founder of the Campbellite Church," because he preached the truths of Heaven as the Bible reveals them, the same logic would force us to call Mr. Bryan "the founder of Democracy," because he advocates the principles of Democracy as unfolded by Mr. Jefferson. Mr. Campbell, though he taught the truth upon which the church was founded, through which it is entered, and by which it is governed, never founded the church of Christ in which we hold membership. Therefore, he not being the head of the body, which is the church, "the fullness of him that filleth all in all," we must and do repudiate the name "Campbellite," and no man will call us by this opprobrious name unless calling us "Christians" stings his conscience because he wears a name of human origin and authority to designate him as a follower of Christ. If Christ is the head or founder of the church—and this is evident from an expression couched in the letter to the Colossians (1: 18), "And he [Christ] is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preëminence"—then it were the action of sin if we desired to wear the name of Mr. Campbell. It would be substituting the name "Campbell," which is of human origin, for the name "Christ," which is of divine origin, and I would warn you that the sin of substitution is a grave and serious sin. It grows out of a feeling of presumption in the soul. No man will substitute his thoughts or actions for those of Christ until presumption reveals his thoughts and actions to be more suitable to the wants and whims of the human heart. The gravity of this sin of presumption, which gives birth to that of substitution, shows itself in some of the thoughts of the psalmist, and especially in that expression which forms the peroration of his nineteenth psalm: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression." Now, if it is sinful for us to wear the name of Mr. Campbell, because he is not the head of the church, does it not also follow that the sin is as great on all religious bodies that wear the name of some man or one given by the authority of man, unless the man whose name they wear or who gives the name is the head of the church in which they hold membership? If not, why not?

Fourthly, the Bible, which is the code of our faith and to which we seek to render implicit obedience, nowhere on its golden pages of inspiration makes mention of "Campbellism." It does not so much as speak of "Campbellite Christian," and, what is more, it does not make mention of "Christian" with a prefix or a preceding modifier; it designates all of its believers as "Christians," with nothing prefixed or suffixed, and on this ground we are forced to repudiate the name "Campbellite," or else prove disloyal to the Christ whom we worship as the Son of God and his truths which we conceive as adequate to the development of the spiritual life here and its completion hereafter. Now, if disloyalty shall grow out of our failure to repudiate the name "Campbellite," because the Bible does not make mention of it, does not disloyalty to Christ and his truths rest upon others who wear names to designate their religious belief that do not appear on the leaves of holy writ? It may be said that these prefixes to the name "Christian" are used in order to distinguish one man's particular faith from another. Well, this is just what God opposes. He is not the author of sects in religion; he would have all religious bodies to be a unit in faith, and to this end our Savior prayed that the religious world might be one, even as he and his Father were one. Moreover, he would have all Christendom wear the same name, and to this end he inspired the soul of Peter with this thought: "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." But upon what basis can we reach this union? My response is that there is only one basis, and that is the Bible. Take the Bible as our creed, the standard by which all religious thought and action shall be measured, and the names which make the distinction of religious bodies will disappear; yea, they will be swallowed up in the Heaven-given name, "Christian," and the religious world, instead of preaching opposing doctrines, will become united in the great truths of Heaven and will form a brotherhood in Christ so powerful as to reach out and, through its combined efforts, convert the world.

Fifthly, and lastly, we repudiate the name "Campbellite," because the acceptance of that name would make us a denomination and thus destroy our remarkable motto: "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; and where it is silent, we are silent." The word of God recognizes no such thing as denominationalism; therefore, to accept the name "Campbellite" and by the name be distinguished from other religious bodies would place us out of harmony with the word of God. The Bible idea is that the church is the body of Christ, is known not as the Campbellite Church, but as the church of Christ, the church of God, the church of the Firstborn; that every man becomes a member of this church by virtue of obedience to the laws created for induction into it, and is known upon entrance into this church as a Christian, nothing more or nothing less. Hence, to follow the Bible completely we must reject denominationalism, and we cannot reject denominationalism unless we reject the name "Campbellite," for that name just as certainly forms us into a sect as that the name "Quaker" forms its adherents into a sect, or denomination.

Thus I have given you five reasons why we cannot wear the name "Campbellite," and so it seems to me that if we reject this name in view of the fact that the wearing of it is a violation of the Scriptures, you ought not to be so unkind, so unchristian, as to try to make us accept it. This act on your part will not in the least conduce to your social standing, and evidently will place you under the condemnation of God as one seeking to lead a soul from the truth. To destroy one's faith in the doing of that which is right by placing upon him an opprobrious name is sinning with a high hand, and this sin of a high hand is identical with the sin against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no pardon in this world or in the world to come. Be careful, lest in your constant nicknaming of Christians as "Campbellites" you stain your soul with a sin which the tears of repentance cannot wash out. How many are there in this audience tonight that want to be simply Christians, that will take the Bible, and it alone, as their creed and confession of faith? As many as thus desire, let them come, and I will read from the Bible the things that are required of each individual to become a Christian, and nothing more.

Questions for Brother Harding and Brother Tant.

Much has been written on the question of valid baptism, but, to my mind, some phases of the subject have not been as thoroughly examined as their importance demands. Believing Brother J. A. Harding and Brother J. D. Tant to be among the ablest and most courteous writers on the subject, I submit a list of questions, asking each to answer them in the Gospel Advocate. I trust that each will give as definite and pointed answer as possible to each item of questions and follow the answer with such scriptural proof as seems necessary. The questions are as follows:

1. Is baptism "for remission of sins" a part of the gospel? If so, must it be believed before baptism (see Mark 16: 15, 16), or is it necessary to ever believe it?
2. Do those who "get religion" at the mourner's bench make the confession demanded by the Scriptures? If so, when? If not, are they scripturally baptized without making the confession?
3. Would you baptize a man upon the confession that God had already pardoned his sins? If not, is it right to accept one who has been baptized on such a confession? This question is borrowed from another writer.
4. Does not a belief that baptism is "for remission," or necessary to be saved, imply all the other purposes of baptism? Can a man understand any other purpose of baptism without understanding it to be necessary to be saved?
5. Was "for remission of sins" a part of what Peter required of the people?
6. Does Dan. 2: 44 mean that there would always be on earth a congregational existence of the church or that it would never be supplanted by another kingdom as were the kingdoms previously mentioned by Daniel? Show how the fulfillment of this prophecy affects the question of valid baptism.
7. Who are the "Lord's people in Babylon?" In what sense are they his people, and what must they do to come out of Babylon?

Ten Weeks' Labor.

I wish to report my summer's work under the above caption.

I began a meeting at Malesus, Tenn., on July 1, 1900, and continued two weeks, preaching at night only. At that place I had much opposition from several sources, still the meeting turned out pretty well, ten persons being baptized. About twenty-four members began meeting regularly, and are still at it.

After leaving Malesus, I went to Central Schoolhouse, in Shelby County, Tenn., and preached from the third Sunday in July till the fourth Sunday in July. I baptized one most excellent young lady into Christ. There were two meetings held at that place last year. I held one, having four additions, and Brother D. A. Parrish held the other; he also had four additions. Central Schoolhouse is a good opening for the cause to grow. The brethren there would be glad if the preachers would stop with them as they are passing. Write to W. J. Cherry or J. A. Manning, Raleigh Springs, Tenn.

I went home for a few days after closing the meeting at Central Schoolhouse, Tenn., and the fifth Lord's day in July found me at this place. I had come here to preach only a few times, and left on Tuesday after Lord's day and preached at Milan, Tenn., on Tuesday night.

From Milan I went to Henderson, Tenn., and thence to Delina, in Marshall County, Tenn. I began a meeting at Delina on the first Sunday in August and preached day and night for two weeks. The meeting closed with everything in fine order, and there were twenty-three additions. At Delina I found some noble workers who will carry the cause to success at that place. May God guide and bless them.

From Delina I went to Pittsburg Landing, in Hardin County, Tenn., at which place I preached a few days, without any visible results.

On the fourth Sunday in August I opened a meeting at Malesus, Tenn., which made my second meeting at that place during the summer, and preached over three Lord's days, closing with two persons being baptized. The sects were loaded for me that time and did everything possible to kill the meeting, but their efforts were a failure. The Baptists took a hand in the affair and did a good deal of fighting. I submitted four propositions to them for discussion, but have not heard what they will do about it.

I went to Polk, Tenn., after closing my work at Malesus and preached four sermons at that place, without any visible good being done.

I then went home for a few days and came from there to this place, which I shall make my home for a short while, preaching for the brethren here. God grant that all may go forth and sow the seed. A. B. BARRET.

THE RED HAND.

A RED HAND STAMPED HERE IS TO CALL YOUR ATTENTION TO THE DATE ON YOUR LABEL. YOUR TIME HAS EXPIRED. PLEASE RE-NEW.

Not long since the editor of this page had the privilege of hearing a sermon preached by the "pastor" of the Fifty-sixth Street "Christian Church" in New York. It was a sermon showing the growth of the foreign and home missionary societies and of church extension, etc. He gave especial emphasis to the amount of money raised, and particularly to the large amount raised by the Christian Women's Board of Missions. He stated that there were one hundred and thirty different societies in the "Christian Church." The work in the State of New York consumed much of his time, and I was surprised to learn that there were less than eight thousand members of the "Christian Church" in the Empire State. In the course of his sermon he made prominent the fact that the Board had more money than men. Formerly they had more men than money, but now it is different. Even now they could get plenty of men, but they were not good men for the work. He might have added, very truthfully, that good men, strong men, and men of decided convictions would not permit the Board to direct their labors. They prefer to preach by divine, rather than by human, authority; they realize that they have a work of their own to do and that woe is unto them if they preach not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Men of this stamp are needed everywhere. With the world full of such men, all the money needed for the evangelization of the whole world would be easily obtained. It is not organization that is needed for the conversion of the world, but individual effort and consecration. Furthermore, as I listened to the sermon and heard so much about the work of the societies and of the growth of "our people," I wondered what had become of the church of the living God, which is the light of the world, the pillar and support of the truth. Occasionally, through the rubbish of the societies, I could get a glimpse of the one body which is to outlive all other institutions. I could not fail to be impressed with the idea that the preacher was laboring to build up his denomination rather than to make people simply members of the one body. As he enumerated the number of societies in the "Christian Church" and drew a wall around that body of people, separating it from all other Christians, I could not see, if others were denominations who did these things, why this preacher and those associated with him in this movement were not also a denomination. If not, why not? I could not conceive of Paul and Peter or James and John preaching a sermon about the amount of money raised by "our people," by the Christian Women's Board of Missions, etc., and never telling sinners of the Lamb of God who died to take away the sins of the world. Not money nor human organization is God's power unto salvation, but the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul's charge which comes down to us through the ages is: "Preach the word." Philip preached Jesus to the Ethiopian nobleman; Paul spoke the word of the Lord to the Philippian jailer and his household; the apostles fed the soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness on the sincere milk of the word, that it should grow strong in the Lord. When preachers leave out the gospel of Christ and resort to preaching about societies and the growth of "our people," it is no wonder that they lose their power with the people. The gospel story will flood the eyes with tears and melt the stony heart as nothing else can do. The love of God and the wondrous sacrifices of a bleeding, dying Savior will fully satisfy the wants of the sin-sick soul. To love and obey the word of God is to fill our soul with an unspeakable joy. In obedience to the word of God we are begotten, instructed, quickened, purified, made free from sin, kept free, sanctified, guided, and saved. How strange that any should ever desire to preach anything else! When we obey the truth, God adds us to the church, the one body, and we become simply Christians, and nothing more.

A brother sends the clipping given below, which we publish that our readers may see the different schemes resorted to to raise money to carry on church work: "Several young women, members of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church at Crosswicks, a small hamlet near Trenton, N. J., will saw wood for a prize at a church festival to be given to-morrow. The church treasury needs replenishing, and the trustees were at a loss to find some scheme that would draw a crowd to the festival. They were opposed to wheels of fortune and lottery schemes, and were about to give up in despair, when one of the girl members of the congregation suggested that a wood-sawing contest be held. 'I have never sawed wood,' she said, 'but I have seen my brother do it, and it looks easy. I will saw a match with any girl in the church.' This wholesale challenge was more than the other girls of the congregation could wink at, and a dozen of them promptly accepted it. There was nothing objectionable in the proposed contest in the eyes of the church authorities, and they agreed to the holding of the match. The conditions are that each contestant shall be given three sticks of walnut wood four feet long. Each maiden is to have a common buck saw and a sawhorse." This match sawing or "wholesale challenge" would be considered gambling if the money raised were not to be used for church purposes. This is an old trick of Satan with which he has been deceiving the people for nearly nineteen hundred years. When tempting Jesus, he made the same argument. He said: "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." If his claim were true, he could prove it and do good while establishing his sonship. He should feed himself, be hungry no more, and thus prove his divinity. He failed to deceive the Lord Jesus Christ, but has deceived thousands of his followers since with the same temptation. Christ answered: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." So the child of God should meet the wicked suggestion with "it is written." "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." The Lord is not so in need of money that he would have his people raise it by such methods. We should do our whole duty, give as the Lord prospers us, and not bring a curse on ourselves and the church by resorting to such schemes and tricks for raising money.

From an exchange we clip the following: "Three or four hundred people are suffering from the effects of ice cream eaten at a church sociable given at Evansville, Ind., the other night. Physicians had more business than they could attend to during the early hours of the morning and all of the next day. In all of the cases so far reported the victims are out of danger, but many of them had to endure severe pain. The exact trouble with the refreshments served has not been disclosed." A few more occurrences like this may lead the people not to eat ice cream at a church sociable. While it is dangerous to disobey the Lord, the evil effects were not expected in this way. While their sickness was bad and deserving of our sympathy, yet this injury is nothing in comparison to the danger done to the cause of Christ. Placing the church before the world in the attitude of a beggar is disgraceful. Every time Christians resort to festivals to raise money for the Lord's work they proclaim their lack of love for the cause of Christ to the world and say by such acts that they are too stingy to support the church by freewill offerings. How sad!

The people are growing tired of sensational preaching. Preaching on current topics does not satisfy and feed the hungry soul. There is nothing in such preaching to save the soul. Pews will be vacant as long as preachers adopt such methods. The gospel theme is the grandest in the wide, wide world. It will stir the profoundest depths of the soul; it will arouse to the sublimest thoughts and loftiest aspirations. Preachers should not be ashamed, but always ready and anxious, to preach the gospel of Christ. Touching on this point, Ella Wheeler Wilcox says some sensible things: "God must feel that principles are at low par when clergymen and bishops spend their time and force in talking to congregations of spiritually hungry people about bonnets. If any final straw were needed to break the back of reverence for orthodoxy, it has been added by this ridiculous controversy regarding the head gear of women. With the crying need of helpful, uplifting, practical truths from the pulpit to-day to aid struggling human beings to live close to divine light, how little short of disgraceful it is for a 'man of God' to wax eloquent over the necessity of women wearing bonnets to church! Did Christ ever wear a hat? We have never seen him so attired in any painting. Did his congregation upon the Mount, when he preached his sermon, wear hats and bonnets? Did Christ's mother, or Mary, or Martha, or any of the biblical women, make bonnets a point of religion? We have no reason to think so; we have every reason to believe that if Christ came back to-day he would preach his word just as freely to bareheaded women as to those whose heads were covered. The clergyman whose heart is filled with the divine Spirit and who goes into the pulpit with the love of God and the desire of helping humanity in his heart does not notice whether women wear bonnets or not, he does not care; he only knows hungry souls are waiting for his words. This discussion is typical of the absurd material and formal fashion of much of modern orthodoxy which passes current as religion. It is no wonder that we hear a cry that church seats are empty when the pulpits are filled with men of such small mental caliber and such poor spiritual development that they must take a passing, healthful fashion for a text. I can imagine these poor, shriveled souls standing before the great Judge and hearing his query: 'What have you done in my service?' And I can hear their piping voices answer: 'We made the ladies wear bonnets to church, dear God.' And for this noble service they will expect to be seated close to the throne of glory; but after one glance of contempt from the august eyes of the Creator, these poor little souls may change their ideas of what constitutes service to God."

A faithful friend and brother sends us a little tract, entitled "Parable of the Tobacco Seed," published by Gospel Trumpet Publishing Company. We insert it here that it may speak for itself: "Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew, and became a great plant, and spread its leaves, rank and broad, so that huge and vile worms formed a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sons of man looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hands and did chew thereof. And some it made sick and others to vomit most filthily. And it further came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said, We are enslaved and cannot cease from chewing it. And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul; and they were seized with a violent spitting; and they did spit, even in the ladies' parlors, and in the house of the Lord. And the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby. And in the course of time it came also to pass that others snuffed it, and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze with a great and mighty sneeze, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears and they did look exceedingly silly. And others cunningly wrought the leaves into rolls, and did set fire to the one end thereof, and did suck vehemently at the other end thereof and did look very grave and calflike; and the smoke of their torment ascended up like a fog. And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth; and the merchants waxed rich by the commerce thereof. And it came to pass that the professed saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith; even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith and said, 'Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord.' 'Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh.' 'Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you.' But with one accord they exclaimed, We cannot cease from chewing, snuffing, and puffing! O ye professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, will ye be the slaves of a nasty, poisonous weed? 'One is your Master, even Christ.'"

The Mormon-Christian War.

The following is very timely and is thoroughly self-explaining: Sidney Rigdon, soon after his return from Palmyra, N. Y., to Kirtland, O., in some of his eloquent harangues on Mormonism, challenged the world to disprove the "Book of Mormon" and the pretensions of its supporters. Brother Thomas Campbell, of Virginia, being at Mentor, promptly picked up the gauntlet and touched Rigdon's shield with the "point of his spear," thus inviting to mortal combat. I found the text of Brother Campbell's acceptance in an old book published in 1834. I hunted for it for years before I was able to procure a copy. I doubt that it could now be duplicated. I am making arrangements to reprint it. Brother Campbell sent his letter by the hand of a trusty friend, to make sure that Rigdon received it. It is said that Rigdon read only a few lines of the letter, and then hastily committed it to the flames. This copy of the original, published in 1834, and Alexander Campbell's vigorous articles in the Millennial Harbinger of that year, show that "the Campbells led in attacks" upon the monster "ism."

"Mentor, February 4, 1831.—Mr. Sidney Rigdon—Dear Sir: It may seem strange that instead of a confidential and friendly visit, after so long an absence, I should thus address, by letter, one whom, for many years, I have considered not only as a courteous and benevolent friend, but as a beloved brother and fellow-laborer in the gospel; but—alas!—how changed, how fallen! Nevertheless, I should now have visited you as formerly could I conceive that my so doing would answer the important purpose both to ourselves, and to the public, to which we both stand pledged, from the conspicuous and important stations we occupy—you as a professed disciple and public teacher of the infernal 'Book of Mormon' and I as a professed disciple and public teacher of the supernal Book of the Old Testament and the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, which you now say is superseded by the 'Book of Mormon' and has become a dead letter, so dead that the belief and obedience of it, without the reception of the latter, is no longer available to salvation; to the disproof of this assertion I understand you defy the world. I here use the epithets 'infernal' and 'supernal' in their primary and literal meaning—the former signifying 'from beneath;' the latter, 'from above'—both of which are truly applied, if the respective authors may be accredited, of the latter of which, however, I have no doubt. But, my dear sir, supposing you as sincere in your present as in your former profession (of the truth and sufficiency of which you have frequently boasted with equal confidence), neither yourself, your friends, nor the world are therefore bound to consider you as more infallible in your latter than in your former confidence any farther than you can render good and intelligible reasons for your present certainty. This, I understand from your declaration on last Lord's day, you are abundantly prepared and ready to do. I, therefore, as in duty bound, accept the challenge, and shall hold myself in readiness, if the Lord permit, to meet you publicly in any place, either in Mentor or Kirtland, or in any of the adjoining towns that may appear most eligible for the accommodation of the public.

"The sooner the investigation takes place, the better for all concerned. Therefore, it is hoped you will not protract the time beyond what may justly be deemed necessary for giving sufficient publicity to the proposed discussion—say one week after your reception of this proposal to accept the challenge you have publicly given—for the vindication and eviction of the divine authorship of Mormonism, which, if your assertion be true, there is no salvation for any that do not embrace it; and not only so, but I am credibly informed you have asserted that even those who have lived and died in the faith and obedience of the old Book, in the triumphant assurance of a glorious resurrection and a blissful immortality, may be in hell for aught you know. Therefore, I say again, the sooner this matter is publicly settled, the better. For my part, I do cordially assure you, sir, that if I were in the possession of a nostrum upon the knowledge and belief of which the salvation of every soul of man depended, I should consider myself responsible to the whole world for the speedy and effectual confirmation and publication of it; and if it be at all a revelation from God for the salvation of man, he must be wonderfully changed since he gave the former revelation of his will for that important purpose, if he do not require you so to do, for he was then willing that all men should come to a knowledge of his will and truth and be saved; and, therefore, he not only charged all to whom he made it known by special revelation to go into all the world and declare it to every creature, but also furnished them with such potent and evincive arguments, both prophetic and miraculous, as no candid inquirer could mistake without abandoning both his senses and his reason. If, then, the 'Book of Mormon' which you assume to vindicate as a divine revelation, upon the belief and obedience of which the salvation of all men stands suspended, be such, then surely the unchanged and unchangeable author—who, it seems, has communicated it to you and others by special revelations—has furnished you with such special, intelligible, and convincing arguments as are abundantly sufficient to convince every candid inquirer, as he did the heralds of the former dispensations. Therefore, woe is unto you if you preach not your gospel. But why should I seem to doubt the philanthropy of my former friend and brother more than I do my own or that of the apostle Paul, that I should thus appear to urge his performance of a challenge which, no doubt, the purest and most benevolent motives excited him to propose for the purpose of promoting, as fast as possible, the benign intentions of his mission? Taking this for granted, I shall further add, in relation to the manner of conducting this all-important investigation, that, seeing it is purely for the discovery and confirmation of the truth upon the belief and obedience of which depends the salvation of the world, the parties realizing the deep and awful responsibility of the undertaking and having no private and personal interest at stake, separate from the rest of mankind, will not only afford each other every facility of investigating and exhibiting the truth by all manner of fairness, both of argument and concession, but also by the mutual allowance of any assistance that can be contributed by the friends on each side, either suggesting matter to the speaker or by correcting any mistakes that may occur in quotations, references, etc., in an amicable and an obliging manner, without giving or taking offense on these accounts; that for these purposes each party shall be at liberty to select as many of his intelligent friends as he pleases to assist him as prompters; and if any difficulty occur respecting time, order, etc., it shall be referred to a competent board of moderators, equally chosen by the parties, that the whole investigation may be conducted without the least shadow of disorder or partiality.

"According to the spirit and tenor of the above proposals, on my part, for the speedy and effectual determination of the momentous question at issue, I shall candidly inform you of the course I intend to take for the confirmation and defense of my side of the question, that you may be the better prepared to meet my arguments with a solid and unanswerable refutation, if possible, as I can have no wish—nor can any man in his common senses, where the salvation of the soul is at stake—but to know and embrace the saving truth. The proposition that I have assumed and which I mean to assume and defend against Mormonism and every other ism that has been assumed since the Christian era is: The all-sufficiency and the alone-sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament and the New Testament, vulgarly called the 'Bible,' to make every intelligent believer wise to salvation, thoroughly furnished for any good work. This proposition, clearly and fully established, as I believe it most certainly can be, we have no more need for Quakerism, Shakerism, Wilkinsonianism, Buchanism, Mormonism, or any other ism than we have for three eyes, three ears, three hands, or three feet in order to see, hear, work, or walk. This proposition I will illustrate and confirm by showing:

- "1. That the declarations, invitations, and promises of the gospel go to confer upon the obedient believer the greatest possible privileges, both here and hereafter, that our nature is capable of enjoying.
- "2. That there is not a virtue which can happily or adorn the human character nor a vice that can abase or dishappify, which human heart can conceive or human language can express, that is not most clearly commanded or forbidden in the Holy Scriptures.
- "3. That there are no greater motives that can possibly be expressed or conceived to enforce obedience or discouragement and prevent disobedience than the Scriptures most clearly and unequivocally exhibit.

"These propositions being proved, everything is proved that can affect our happiness, either here or hereafter.

"We shall, however, if deemed necessary, next proceed to expose the blasphemous pretensions of Mormonism by examining both its external and internal evidences:

"1. By examining the character of its author and his accomplices, as far as documents for that purpose may have come to hand.

"2. Their feigned pretensions to miraculous gifts, the gift of tongues, etc. A specimen of the latter we shall afford them an opportunity of exhibiting in three or four foreign languages.

"3. We shall next proceed to expose the anti-scriptural assertion that there has been none duly authorized to administer baptism for the space of fourteen hundred years up to the present time by showing that the church, or kingdom, of Christ must have been totally extinct during that period, provided its visible administration had actually ceased during that time, is an express contradiction of the testimony of Jesus. (Matt. 16: 18.)

"4. We are prepared to show that the pretended duty of common property among Christians is anti-scriptural, being subversive of the law of Christ and inimical to the just rights of human society.

"5. We shall next proceed to show that rebaptizing believers is making void the law of Christ, and that the imposition of hands for communicating the Holy Spirit is an unscriptural intrusion upon the exclusive prerogative of the primary apostles.

"6. We shall also show that the pretensions of Mormonism, as far as it has yet been developed, are in no wise superior to the pretensions of the first Quakers, of the French prophets, of the Shakers, of Jemima Wilkinson, etc.; that all these pretended to as high degrees of inspiration, to prophesying, to visions, to as great humility, self-denial, devotion to God, moral purity, and spiritual perfection; declaimed as much against sin, denounced as heavy judgments against their neighbors, and against the professing world at large, for their corruptions of Christianity, etc., as the Mormons have done or can do; the two latter have also insisted as much upon the supposed duty of common property and have spoken as certainly of the near approach of the millennium and of their relation to that happy state as any of the Mormonite prophets, especially the Shakers, who pretend to be living subjects of that happy period and who have also given us an attested record of their miraculous operations.

"The obvious conclusion of this sixth argument is evident: that if the Mormonite prophets and teachers can show no better authority for their pretended mission and revelations than these impostors have done, we have no better authority to believe them than we have to believe their predecessors in imposition. But the dilemma is, we cannot believe all, for each was exclusively right in his day, and those of them that remain are still exclusively right to this day; and if the Shakers be right, the whole world, the Mormons themselves not excepted, are in the gall of bitterness and bonds of iniquity, quite as far from salvation as you yourself have pronounced all the sectarians on earth to be—namely, in a state of absolute damnation.

"In the last place, we shall examine the internal evidence of the 'Book of Mormon' itself, pointing out its evident contradictions, foolish absurdities, shameless pretensions to antiquity, restore it to the rightful claimant as a production beneath contempt and utterly unworthy the reception of a schoolboy.

"Thus, my dear sir, I have given you a fair and full statement of my intended method of defense and attack; of the principal topics of argument, proof and con, which I shall use, provided you stand to your proposed challenge. I have also used great plainness of speech and spoken of things just as I believe they deserve, as you yourself are in the habit of doing; and who can do otherwise upon a subject of such vast importance, if he duly realize them? Nevertheless, I would not have you think, although I consider things just as I have spoken, that I suppose myself more infallible than you do yourself; but I should blush to fall short of any one, of any sect whatever, in my expressions of confident certainty of the truth of my profession, which has stood the test of most rigorous investigation for nearly eighteen hundred years, and which I have scrupulously examined for upward of forty years, especially when the investigation is with sectarians of little more than three months' standing.

"But though I have spoken as positively as you have done, and we have both spoken positively enough, I will yet venture to assure you that you will find me as changeable as yourself, provided you afford me evidence paramount to the evidence which I have proposed to produce for the ground which I at present occupy, for it has ever been with me a fixed principle that the less should give way to the greater. But in case I should fail to convince you or that you should fail to convince me, others may be benefited, and we shall have the consolation of having discharged our duty both to each other and to the public, for no man can do more to himself.

"In the meantime I wait for your reply, which you will please to forward per bearer. I hope you will be as candid and plain with me as I have been with you. My best respects to Mrs. Rigdon, and sincerest wish for the happiness of your family.

"I remain, with grateful remembrances of the past and best wishes for the future,

"Your sincere friend and humble servant,

"THOMAS CAMPBELL."

I trust the above article will be widely copied by exchanges. It is a model now for all who would battle the advocates of the false prophet of the nineteenth century. I desire a prompt correspondence with all who desire to lend a helping hand in battling Mormonism. The Mormon elders are on the warpath everywhere. I have other rare old documents that ought to be put on the wings of the wind and proclaimed in every tongue.

R. B. NEAL.

Let Them Measure the Pattern.

Man cannot live without God. Aside from the fact that from God we draw our physical life and strength, that "in him we live, and move, and have our being," man's moral nature could never advance one step without God's help. Some connection must exist between us and the Father of spirits. It is essential to spiritual and moral life, to our growth and happiness in every way. He is not far from every one of us, and we may draw yet nearer to him and stand in the full sunshine of him, the source of all life, the Father of light and joy. He will be found of them that seek after him.

At all times God made an avenue of approach by which men could draw near unto him. In the old covenant it was in specially designated places that he would communicate the blessing of his presence. "In every place where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee," he said to his people from Mount Sinai. Shortly after, under the direction of Moses, the servant of God, a strange building was begun. A call for freewill offerings went through the camp, and the people came with treasures—gold, silver, brass; blue, purple, scarlet, fine linen; goat's hair; ram's skins dyed red, seal skins, and acacia wood; oil, spices, and sweet incense; onyx stones, jewels, and gems. It was the material for the building and service of God's tabernacle—the place where he would record his name. Everything in connection with it was holy. God appointed it, and it was for his exclusive service. Neither did God consult any man in regard to its plan or the expediency of its form. In the height of Mount Sinai God showed Moses a mysterious pattern from heaven, explained to him the parts of it, and then put him under most solemn obligations to make all things according to the pattern. To insure this, God gave Moses inspired workmen—Bezaleel, of Judah, and Aholiab, of Dan, who knew how to fashion the materials according to God's will. (Ex. 35: 30; 36: 1.) Thus the tabernacle went up, a representation of the heavenly thing which Moses had seen in the mount—the court, with its sockets and pillars; the holy place and the most holy place, with their boards and curtains, with their furniture—all, even as the Lord commanded Moses.

It is remarkable what stress is laid upon the fact that it was all done "as the Lord commanded Moses." This expression is repeated about eighteen times in the last two chapters of Exodus. What significance lies in that? That Moses was faithful in carrying out God's word? Yes; but more than that. It demonstrated how necessary it was that God's house should be built as God wills it. What man could of his own wisdom have built a house acceptable to him? Could human ingenuity devise a building fit for a dwelling place of the Almighty? No. God alone could tell how his house should be made; he alone could give directions for a service suitable and worthy of the Creator of all. The efficiency, then, of the tabernacle, its fitness for the very object for which it was built, depended on whether it was constructed "as the Lord commanded Moses." Had Moses placed doors and pillars as seemed best to him, he would have made the plan of God of none effect and brought wrath upon his own head; but Moses, meek and humble, held God's wisdom above all else, and faithfully built according to the pattern he saw in the mount. So God promised to meet with them there and commune with them from the mercy seat, between the two cherubim on the ark of the covenant, in the most holy place.

Later Solomon built a temple to Jehovah, having parts analogous to the tabernacle. "And the word of the Lord came to Solomon, saying, Concerning this house which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; then will I establish my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father. And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will not forsake my people Israel." (1 Kings 6: 11-13, R. V.)

"Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked." With much love God dealt with the Israelites, and when they had rest on every side, and plenty, they forgot God and committed abomination in his sight, and defiled his holy place. The prophets warned and pleaded to deaf ears. The catastrophe which unavoidably follows such a course overtook them. They were driven away from their homes and the land of promise, and by the rivers of Babylon they sat and bewailed their folly and the fate which they had brought upon themselves and their beloved city, the holy Jerusalem. It was there that Ezekiel, the prophet of the Lord, saw a vision—a house of peculiar form; a man with a line of flax and a measuring reed stood in the gate. "Son of man," said he, "behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee." Then he stepped and measured gate and porch and post and threshold. The form of the house was described most accurately, and its service and ordinances. A voice out of the house, and, behold, a man stood by him and said to him: "Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel forever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places. In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger. Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcasses of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them forever." (Ezek. 43: 7-9.)

The great lesson in all this is yet to be learned. Were not those things written for our learning? Were not the Israelites our example? And God's dealings with them—were they not the foreshadowing of his dealings with us, who are the spiritual Israel? The tabernacle and the temple were only the shadows and copies of heavenly things, types of a temple greater than those made with hands, where God has now recorded his name. In this new temple we are built up as lively stones, a spiritual house, "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone; in whom each several building, fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God in the Spirit." We serve in a holier tabernacle than the priests "who serve that which is a copy and shadow of the heavenly things, even as Moses is warned of God when he is about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern that was showed thee in the mount." Throughout all those ages God was working to prepare the people for the great thing that was to come "to the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Eph. 3: 10, 11, R. V.)

But if the tabernacle, which was but a shadow, must be built exactly according to God's command, shall not much more the church be made as God directed? Look about you and see. Where is that simplicity? Where is that humble service portrayed in the New Testament? Whence that carnal splendor in the meetinghouse? Whence that strange service, those imposing ceremonies; long robes, holy water, wax candles; that liturgy, that instrumental music; those operatic performances, drawing cards, festivals, societies; ear-tickling, eye-pleasing worship? Did the Lord order them there? Were they placed into his temple "as the Lord commanded his apostles?" Or have men put their thresholds beside the Lord's thresholds and their doorposts beside the Lord's doorposts? O, listen to the prophet: "Thou son of man, show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern. And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them. This is the law of the house; Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house." (Ezek. 43: 10-12.)

Go measure the pattern, if you are ashamed; and begin at Jerusalem. Behold God's will and serve him as he directs—humbly, faithfully. Let the professed followers of Christ return to God's pattern and become imitators of those God-approved churches in Judea. Let them continue "steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers," as when they obeyed God; let them sound out the word in God's way; let them consecrate themselves in the holy mountain of God. Then will glory and success attend them as of yore; then will God's favor and blessing rest upon them, if they "measure the pattern" and follow it.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

CORRECTION.

We do not, as a rule, complain of or correct typographical errors in our articles. The printers are frequently not to blame for them; and when they occasionally make us say nonsensical things, we let them pass; but when they make us say things not true that affect others, we correct them. In response to Mr. Folk's article, I wrote: "We again say we did not reply to a sentence he wrote." The printers transposed that "he" and "we" in the sentence and made it read: "He did not reply to a sentence we wrote." I am quoted as saying: "Folk said I used direct, and not diplomatic, language in this." I aimed to write: "If it be said," etc. In commending the articles from the Christian Advocate, I am made to say: "It will be well for the Cumberland Presbyterian and Christian Advocate ["Advocate" meaning the Gospel Advocate] to heed the advice." While it might be well, I was not commending the Christian Advocate to take its own medicine.

Mr. Folk claims he published a long extract from my article and that it contained all that was necessary to express my meaning on the point. He so mutilated that long article that no one can see the meaning or purpose of it. He says of me: "He entered into a long and labored argument to prove the Baptists are more like the Mormons than the Campbellites are." So far from this being true, I would not give a fig to prove it, because it settles nothing. Had he given the next sentence after his extract, his readers would see my purpose, if he could not. It was: "I have not presented these agreements between Mormons and Baptists as an argument against Baptist teaching nor as a reproach to Baptists. It is neither in itself; it is no evidence of error or a reproach to hold a truth in common with Mormons or any one else. I am anxious to agree with Mormons, Romanists, infidels, or even men as bitter and ready to misrepresent as Folk and Lofton, in every truth they hold or tell. I have mentioned these agreements of Baptists with Mormons only to show Mr. Folk how reckless he is, and how curses must come home to roost. . . . Why did Mr. Folk make this comparison with Mormons? He did not think there was any agreement in it. He thought he would insult and revile disciples with odious comparisons and scurrilous epithets that excite prejudice." He suppressed this statement of my purpose and evaded the issue by presenting what he claims to be other points of agreement between the disciples and Mormons. In these he misrepresents the teaching of both as well as the point of my article. I am willing to leave the question as to who has been just and courteous in this matter to any fair-minded and intelligent man. What do you say to this?

I am not writing these things because I am hurt or to gratify ill feelings. I would prefer not to do it. But I am trying to lift this matter of religious discussion and representation up to a plane that will not disgrace the Christian religion. I am glad to see Mr. Folk now say each should be allowed to express his own position in his own language. This is what I have been pleading for and which he has been refusing for years. It was the reason I declined answering his queries years ago and why I declined to publish and respond to his reply to my article which he had so mutilated that it was not my statement of my faith. He has published his own and Dr. Lofton's one-sided statements and denunciations of disciples and refuses responses in a way that ought to put to shame even a partisan sense of fairness and justice. I have no apologies to make for denouncing this course as a shame to all fairness and justice.

Our Exchanges.

BLESSINGS ARE NOT APPRECIATED UNTIL GONE.

Those who have a perfect use of all their faculties are not able to appreciate them. It is only when the eyes fail that good eyesight goes for its worth in one's esteem, and it is only when the ears grow dull that a perfect sense of hearing finds just appreciation. It is so in all the interests of life. Many a husband wakes up to the love he bore his wife when she lies cold and dead and is wrapt in the ceremonies of the grave; many a wife wakes up to what her husband was to her after God has taken her husband home; and so it goes through the long catalogue of our best and sweetest blessings. We could wish that every one of us would rightly appreciate the blessings and the loved ones that are with us day by day. The time is hastening on when all of them will have gone out of our life forever.—Baptist Standard.

THE ATTITUDE OF GERMANY.

Germany has at last spoken in reply to Russia's proposal that the allied forces should withdraw from China. Her answer is a decided negative. She declines to take the proposed step until certain conditions have been met. The circular letter which she has sent to the powers is a very able one. It insists that not the common people of China, who were led or driven into committing the outrages against foreigners, but the leaders who instigated these outrages, should be punished, and demands that the chief of these agitators—a list to be furnished by the allies—be handed over for trial. From our standpoint, such proposals seem to be wholly just. To rob China of her territory would be very wrong; to impose on her an enormous money indemnity, which in the end would be paid, not by the richer classes, but by exactions from the starving millions of common people, would be utterly inhuman. The men who stirred up the agitation are the ones that ought to be punished. Unfortunately the most of them are at the very head of affairs, and it is not likely that they will be given up. The whole situation is greatly mixed.—Christian Advocate.

IT WASN'T.

A laughable, but rather embarrassing, case of mistaken identity occurred the other day in a large dry goods store, according to an exchange.

A gentleman, who is a little too fond of joking, entered the store for the purpose of meeting his wife at a certain counter.

Sure enough, there stood a lady dressed, to his eye, at least, just like the woman he was after.

Her back was turned, so he quietly approached, took her by the arm, and said in a voice of stimulated severity: "Well, here you are, spending my money, as usual, eh?"

The face turned quickly toward him was not his wife's; it was that of an acrid, angry, keen-eyed woman of about fifty years, who attracted the attention of everybody in that part of the store by saying in a loud, shrill voice: "No; I ain't spending your money, nor no other man's money, and I will—"

"I beg your pardon, madam," cried the confused gentleman. "I supposed you were my wife, and—"

"Well, I am not your wife, nor no other man's wife, thank fortune, to be scolded at!"

The chagrined joker waited to hear no more, but made his way out of the store.

AN IMPORTANT LESSON.

The magnificent giving which the American people have been doing within the past two weeks for the relief of the stricken city of Galveston, Tex., has its lesson for the church. It reveals the fact that a great cause rightly presented always provokes a response from the human heart. There is something absolutely glorious in the spontaneous flow of benevolent sentiment which has characterized the recent contributions. Shall we not learn that if we wish for money with which to support the institutions of religion we must make our appeal to the commanding motives? We have not done this as consistently and uniformly as we ought. Very often we have left the highest considerations out of sight, and have put the emphasis on minor and trivial things. No wonder that we have succeeded so poorly. Let us learn wisdom for the future. Just in proportion as we address ourselves to what is deepest and most fundamental in human nature are we likely to get what we ask for. Any other policy belittles us and our cause, and is doomed to fail. As we have said before, it is absurd that the church, while proposing nothing less than the conquest of the world, should deliberately adopt the business methods of a junk shop or a peaput stand.—Christian Advocate.

THE REOPENING OF SCHOOL.

The month of September brings mothers and school children back to their homes, and again the girls and boys go trooping past, through city streets and along country roads.

The restraint of the schoolroom, the confinement of position, and the sudden change from outdoor life and exercise through the school hours are sure to be felt more or less by every child during the first week or so.

School days bring duties for the mother as well as the children. There are the clothes to be put in readiness and the school lunches to be prepared each day. The personal inspection of hands and finger nails, with the brushing of hair to be looked after, is something of a tax for the mother, although the hours that follow enable her to accomplish other work, uninterrupted by the children.

A little more attention might well be paid to the children's school clothes by some mothers, for the mental effect of clothes reaches far, and every mother knows she could herself appear to better advantage in a dress that is whole and tidy looking than she could with her sleeves out at elbows and her waist soiled. There is a happy medium between dress that encourages vanity and dress that encourages self-respect, and it is the latter that should clothe every child when she appears before her teachers and among her school friends.

The kind of food that is given growing children has much to do with the building of a healthy body. Stock raisers understand the importance of this for young cattle and horses sometimes better than mothers do. The school lunch may arrest digestion for the remainder of the day, causing the child to seem dull and lacking in attention, or it may stimulate the mind by supplying nourishment to brain cells that have been taxed by school work.

There is still another duty for the mothers of school children, and that is to take interest in their school life; and this does not end with the hearing of the home lessons or with encouragement to study. The school should be visited often and the teacher invited to the home. She will the better understand the requirements of the children if she knows something about their home life.

Keep your child's confidence; interest yourself in the pleasures and trials of his school life; encourage him to invite his school friends to the home, and you will have a better chance to shield him from evil associates and to strengthen the bond of sympathy between yourself and him, which too often is weakened when the child begins to mix with the world outside his home.—Household.

PERSONAL.

Brother M. C. Kurfees began a meeting at Schochoh, Ky., last Monday night.

Brother W. E. Daugherty's address is changed from Hampton, Fla., to Athens, Tenn.

Brother F. W. Smith was in the office last Saturday. He preached at Lynnville, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached at the Foster Street church of Christ last Sunday. At the night service there was one addition from the Baptists.

Brother Gus. Dunn and Brother Jasper Dunn were in the office last Saturday. These young brethren keep busy in the Lord's service, and much of their work is in destitute fields.

Brother F. B. Srygley had a good meeting at Lewisburg, Tenn., closing last Thursday night, with eleven additions. He went to Portland, Tenn., last Saturday to hold a meeting there.

Writing from Lyles, Tenn., under date of October 3, 1900, Brother J. W. Grant says: "I am preaching here, with good attendance and interest and one confession and baptism to date. The meeting began last Saturday night."

Please announce that I will begin a meeting at Una, Miss., on Friday night before the second Lord's day in October. My post office will be McCondy, Miss., for ten days. I would be glad to hold another meeting while east, either in Mississippi or Tennessee.—J. H. Lawson, Denton, Tex.

In the last issue of the Gospel Advocate I saw a mistake in regard to my work. My entire work for the Spencer church of Christ resulted in twenty-three additions, a part of which had been reported. I have baptized two persons at this place.—L. R. Sewell, Whitwell, Tenn.

On Sunday, September 30, 1900, I saddled up Daisy, rode to "The Curve" (about six and one-half miles) of Little Sandy River, and baptized eight persons—four young men and four women. At 11 o'clock I preached at Anglin Schoolhouse. The assembly could not near all get into the house. We are building a church house near that point; it is a church-houseless neighborhood. I left young Brother Flynn there to preach at night. I took dinner about two miles from the schoolhouse. I pushed on home to the "bungalow" for supper. After supper I saddled up and went to Pope's Hollow to begin a series of meetings. A mountain preacher is kept busy.—R. B. Neal, Grayson, Ky.

The busy men are the useful men. Men who cannot find time to do the work allotted to them are usually worthless.

The way to be forgiven for a malicious piece of conduct is to confess the wrong, turn from it, and pray God's forgiveness.

The man who has never denied himself some cherished plan in order that he may bless another has as yet missed the sweetest joy of life.

The man who expects to go to heaven without overcoming difficulties will surely be disappointed. A man must agonize to enter through the gates into the city. "Strait and narrow is the way." Trials, tribulations, and persecutions must be endured; the world, the flesh, and the devil must be overcome. The Christian can never cease to fight the good fight of faith until God calls him home.

It is folly to look back; it is dangerous. "Remember Lot's wife." No grief for the past can change it. All the tears that can be shed are unavailing; they cannot undo the evil that is done. By the help of God turn from it, and never be guilty of the wrong again. Profit by the mistakes of the past. Bring forth better fruit to-day than yesterday. With Paul say: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

It is a blessed thing for the soul to realize that it can be what it will; and if it will to live nobly, all the forces of circumstances cannot deny it. No adversity can sour the sweet, contented soul; no poverty can make the generous soul small, for, though money be lacking, he can give service, time, and sympathy. Those who are anxious to have a conscience void of offense both toward God and man have no time to listen to small voices that condemn or approve; their faces are always turned toward God. So far is the one perfect example above them that they may seem to themselves to be failures, but all the time their earnestness, their loyalty, their zeal, their courage is becoming a part of the world's life and is lifting all mankind. We fashion our lives after our own choosing. It is left to us to fill them with joy or sadness, sunshine or shade.

Life contains some bitterness for us all, but self-pity is a deadly thing. Whatever burdens life has in store for us, whatever trials and afflictions cross our pathway, we should not conclude that ours is the hardest lot of all. Our crosses, our griefs, our unwelcome tasks and burdens may be many, but we should never fall into the habit of self-commiseration. It is a habit so easily, almost unconsciously, formed; but when once formed, it grows until it crowds out courage, usefulness, and sometimes even reason itself. It is a mistake for the soul to brood over its own bitterness. It is so easy to imagine that troubles which are "the common lot of all" are unique and unbearable; it is noble and manly to face your troubles bravely, and, while the heart may be filled with sadness, give your friends a smile. Give a helping hand to others, help them fight their battles, but put forth every exertion against the luxury of self-pity.

How many of us imagine that we are our own masters, when in truth we are perfect slaves to our passions! A young man, speaking boastfully to a companion, said: "No, sir, I come and go as I please; I am my own master." How greatly mistaken was he! Doubtless a few moments' observation would have convinced any one that he was a perfect slave to his passions. He was smoking a cigarette, and when he and his friend compared notes on the subject, he confessed that he "could not get along with less than half a dozen a day." He complained of making his allowance meet his wants, and wished he had some easy way of raising funds. He was also a slave to debt, for he boasted of his skill in dodging a collector. His companion was urging him to some project or place to which he was evidently disinclined. He urged weak objections until the other grew impatient and twitted him with being "goody-goody and afraid of any fun." Then he hesitated a little and yielded; he was a slave to other people's opinions. He certainly did not control himself. The voices of appetite, vanity, passion, or cowardly fear spoke and he obeyed. Reason, conscience, and manliness were dominated by the lowest passions. While he boasted of liberty, he was a perfect slave.

"Government trains always have the right of way," said the old railroad man, as he stood looking out over the network of tracks. He was explaining the many kinds of trains, their rate of speed, time, and the rules that controlled their running. "But government business makes everything else stand aside. Freight, passengers, private interests—all have to give up if Uncle Sam needs the road. He has the right of way." We thought of the clear brain required to keep watch of all these rushing trains, to know where they should wait for others, and where go forward; of all the varied interests, important, impatient, that must sometimes be side-tracked, while a superior power-claimed precedence. A tyrannical claim? Not at all. What gives security to our roads, stability to business, protection to person and property, but the strength of the general government? It is above all individual rights for the sake of each individual's rights; it needs must come first. Is not the truth much the same with the tangled life tracks along which our human hopes and purposes are speeding? We work, we plan, and then our projects and wishes are suddenly set aside by some unwelcome providence; yet it is the will of the Love that rules the world and in which all our power and safety lie. Can we not loyally give our King the right of way?—Forward.

Brother Lipscomb: I am reading a tract on "Baptism," by S. C. Littlepage, of the Northwest Texas Conference. In this he says: "Pedobaptist churches are not disposed to boast of such things, but this foolish boast of the proselyter deserves to be rebuked, and for this reason I mention . . . the case of J. R. Collinsworth, who, for fifteen years, was the champion of Campbellism in Tennessee, but becoming convinced of the errors of the whole system, embraced pedobaptist views, published one of the most powerful books against Campbellism I have ever read, and became a leading minister in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for about thirty years." What of this case? I would be glad for you to give what you know of Collinsworth and his conversion. It is through no idle curiosity that I ask for this information; I need it. ROBERTSON WHITESIDE.

Collinsworth has gone to his final account. I do not care to stir up the matters connected with his change, so I only say: He was excluded from the church of Christ before he ever sought membership with others, and, after he had applied for membership, sought restoration to the church of Christ, expressing preference to remain with them.

Brother Lipscomb: In answering what I wrote you with reference to the Graves-Burruss debate, you made the point that "aioon" sometimes means endless duration, but not always; but that "aionions" always means endless duration in the New Testament. Some say that "aionions" cannot mean more than "aioon," the noun from which it comes. How would you answer this position? Please answer at once in the Gospel Advocate. FLAVIL HALL.

"Aioon" alone never means endless duration; in combination or by multiplying upon itself, as "a century of centuries," it expresses the idea of endless duration or time indefinite. "Aioonas" always means time without end. I would tell the man every one familiar with language knows words do not always or hardly generally retain their etymological or derivative meaning. I could take any dictionary in English, Latin, Greek, or any other language and show this. "Edify" means to build, as a house. Its derivatives have a wholly different meaning. "Prevent" means to go before, lead the way. It, with its derivatives, has acquired almost the opposite meaning. "Candid" means pure, white, clean; "candidate" has a wholly different meaning. "Cancer" means a crab fish; "cancerous," a morbid eating sore. I would show him the dictionaries define "aioon" a period or definite space of time, a lifetime; "aioonas," "lasting, eternal." If he knows anything of such matters, he knows lexicons define words from their use by the best speakers and writers. When a lexicon defines "aioonas" eternal, but not a limited time, it is because they find the word always used to denote eternal, never to denote limited time. If he has sense and candor, this will satisfy him; if he is lacking in these, I would give up as hopeless and spend my time on a more promising subject.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain Acts 7: 38. Who is this "that was in the church in the wilderness?" If it was Christ, did not his church exist before Pentecost, and even before John the Baptist? In what sense did the church exist at that time?

Hornbeak, Tenn.

J. V. MOULTRIE.

This says Moses was with the church in the wilderness. But Christ was with them, too, just as through Noah he preached to the spirits in prison. The word "church" did not in primitive times have as specific meaning as we give it. The word "ekklesia," which is translated "church," came nearer corresponding to the word "assembly," or "congregation." It applied to any assembly or separating of one class of people from another, no matter whether the separation was for religious purposes or not. In Acts 19: 32-41, we have an account of an unlawful assembly in Ephesus that sought to kill Paul. It is called in the original tongue "ekklesia," and is translated "assembly" in English. The word "church" then meant an assembly or a body or class of people separated from others. The children of Israel, separated from all other people called out of Egypt, were an ekklesia, and it is translated "church." It would have been just as proper to have called it the "assembly," or "congregation." The translators called only those separated to the service of God "church;" others, "assemblies." It only means that the people in the wilderness, of whom Moses was the leader, were an assembly separated for the service of God. There was probably then a Jewish church, or assembly, and a Christian church. One was regulated by the law of Moses, the other was regulated by the law of Jesus Christ. One was in many respects an earthly type of the other, but a type and the thing typified are not one and the same; so while there was a church in the days of Moses and one in the days of Christ, they were not the same church. One prepared for the other and is typical of the other.

Brother Lipscomb: You do me an injustice in your comments on my article. You make me say and teach what I do not. I am sure it is unintentional, but at the same time you put me in a very bad light before the casual reader. I trust that you will bear with me and allow me to set forth what I teach and why I teach it. You know that there is a controversy over the question as to whether God will or will not hear sinners. The Book teaches in both covenants that God will not hear sinners. Then it stands to reason and logic that before God will hear a man the man must cease to be a sinner. If God hears the prayer of any one while he is a sinner, then the Book is untrue and misrepresents God. I am one that cannot accept this, for the reason that the Book furnishes the light. The position is not a theory of mine, but is of divine origin. It appears to me and many others that you have allowed your prejudices, begotten by preconceived ideas, to control you, and you enter into a denial without knowing what is claimed or affirmed.

My contention is that when a man ceases to sin and turns to God by faith, he is no longer a sinner, but a servant of God, doing God's will. (John 6: 29; Rom. 6: 16; 1 John 3: 23.) We have a case in point that ought to settle the matter forever. Were the Thessalonians idol worshipers when they ceased, or quit, worshipping idols? (1 Thess. 1: 9.) Certainly not. (1 Cor. 12: 2; Gal. 4: 8.) Paul plainly says they turned from idol worship to serve the living and true God. (Gal. 4: 8.) Here, he says, before knowing God, they served idols; but when they were taught of God, they turned from idol service to the service of God. Hence when they turned from idol service, they ceased to be idol servants. When they began to serve God by faith, they became the servants of God. (Rom. 6: 16.) They could not serve two masters. (Luke 16: 13.) You insist that I teach that when they turned from idol service to the service of God they were then made free from sin, or that when a sinner ceases to sin and turns to God by faith he is a servant of God and free from sin. I insist that you read my articles of July 12 and July 30, and you will see that I neither say nor teach such a doctrine. You will find this language in my article of July 30: "This man, though a servant of God, is not relieved of the penalty of the sins committed previous to his turning to God." Now, what I believe and teach is this: When a sinner turns from the service of sin to the service of God, he is no longer a sinner, but, instead, is the servant of God; yet the penalty due the sins of his past life is held against him till he reaches the point in his service to God that God can be just in justifying him, or remitting his past sins; and he reaches this in his obeying baptism, when he is made free from the sins committed previous to his turning to the service of God. (Rom. 3: 23-27; Eph. 1: 3.) "Justification," "redemption," "remission," and "being made free from past sins" are synonymous terms, and are only reached in, not out of, Christ. So you see that I understand it is one thing to be the servant of God and quite another thing to be made free from past sins in Christ; that a man can be the servant of God out of Christ by faith, repentance, and confession, and the justified, redeemed, sins-remitted servant in Christ when he obeys baptism. So I teach and insist that nothing short of faith, repentance (reparation), confession, and baptism can reach remission of past sins or will free a man from his past sins, but an earnest obedience to the above statutes. I do not encourage any one in hoping for salvation through any other means, as there are none. So when we baptize a man who believes with all his heart, repents, and confesses Christ, we baptize a servant of God, but not a servant free from sin. He is made free from sin only in Christ. (Acts 2: 38; Rom. 6: 17, 18; Gal. 3: 26, 27.)

I hope you understand me. I am not theorizing, but endeavoring to teach and harmonize the word of God, and thus have brethren agreed. (1 Cor. 1: 10; 1 Pet. 4: 11.)

Your scripture quotations in reference to a Christian being a sinner when he sins do not make him a sinner, but simply a transgressor, or ungodly man; but when he corrects his error, he is neither a transgressor nor ungodly, but is again godly. Should he continue in his ungodliness, or transgressions, till his death, he will be lost—not as a sinner, but as an ungodly man. (1 Pet. 4: 18.) None but the Christian can transgress God's law. A man must first be a subject of a law before he can transgress. The sinner (alien) can only trespass, he not being a subject. (Eph. 2: 1-5.) You have a son and an orchard. You point out to your boy from which trees he may pluck fruit and from which he must not pluck. Should he pluck from the forbidden trees, he would be a transgressor, and not a trespasser. Should your neighbor's boy enter your orchard and pluck without authority, he would be a trespasser.

I hope that this will enable us to be one in Christ.

S. I. S. CAWTHON.

I think yet I understood Brother Cawthon, and I think he makes distinctions that are not made in the Bible, and, in doing this, confuses and divides instead of unites. We find nothing of these distinctions in the Bible. Had they been essential to understand the way of salvation or to promote unity, they would have been given. Brother Cawthon claims that those in Christ, or in covenant with God, are not sinners. When the blind man said, "We know that God heareth not sinners," he meant that a man among the Jews, in covenant with God, that sinned or rebelled against his law, God would not hear while refusing to obey that law. The controversy was about Jesus, whence he received his power to open the eyes of the blind. They all knew he was a Jew. Some claimed he was a sinner because he had healed on the Sabbath and broken the Sabbath law. The blind man replied that if he was a sinner, breaking the law of God, as they charged, God would not hear him to enable him to open the eyes of the blind. Any who will read the context must see this. Then Solomon (Prov. 28: 9) says: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." He refers to Jews, professed servants of God, who, having had or known the law, turn from it and refuse to walk by it. A dozen other passages in Proverbs all refer to the same class. The writers of the Scriptures call this class of people "sinners." I recollect no passage that teaches that God will not hear those who have not hitherto worshiped him, but turn to him and desire to serve him. Under the Mosaic dispensation Solomon prayed that "the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy great name's sake; . . . if they come and pray in this house; then hear thou from the heavens, . . . and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee." (2 Chron. 6: 32, 33; see also 1 Kings 8: 42.) Under the ministration of the Spirit the prayers and alms of Cornelius were heard and came up for a memorial before God.

The trouble is, we make a mistake and try to make the Bible justify it. The better way is to correct the mistake, and then these distinctions foreign to the Bible are not needed. The Bible nowhere says on one side a line God will hear people; on the other side he will not. Men desirous of knowing and doing God's will, will be heard by him, whether in the church or out of it, whether Jews or Gentiles. He will not hear those refusing to do his will, whether in the church or out of it. The sects teach that God will forgive sins in answer to prayer without the sinner's compliance with the law he has given for pardon. In opposing this, many run to the extreme of saying God will not hear a man unless he is in covenant with him, which is not true, nor does it in any way affect the question of pardon; for God will hear and forgive neither those in nor out of the church who refuse to hear and obey him. BURYING THE HATCHET.

Rob., with a box in his arms and a spade over his shoulder, had slipped quietly around the house and into the garden. He hoped Dot would not discover him until her unfortunate chicken, which lay in the box covered with roses and clover blossoms, was safely buried. The chicken, during its brief life, had not been a source of unmixed joy to any one but Dot, for it was a motherless chick that she found and brought into the house; and as soon as it was old enough to run about it followed her everywhere with its ceaseless "chirp, chirp!" in a way that was very inconvenient. It was constantly under foot, endangering its own neck and making people uncomfortable; but, as Dot's pet, it was tolerated by everybody but the cat. Tabby failed to see any reason for treating it with respect, and so one day she pounced upon it and choked it out of existence. Dot had covered her favorite with tears and flowers, and Rob., at his mother's suggestion, had tried to spare the small maiden the grief of witnessing the burial; but the attempt was vain. A shrill voice called: "Rob., what are you doing?" In a moment Dot's inquisitive eyes were taking in the whole scene. Fortunately, she found it so interesting as to lighten in some degree its mournfulness.

"I'm glad you're making it in such a pretty place, Robby," she said. "I s'pose Chicky was a good deal in the way. Mother says so. Anyway, she'd have been a big hen pretty soon, and that wouldn't have been so nice; but I'll never like Tabby again, not one bit."

"O, see here now, sis.; Tabby didn't know any better!" said Rob., in good-natured expostulation. "She's only a cat, and she didn't know you'd made a pet of this particular bunch of feathers. Being cross at her will not bring Chicky back again. So you'd better bury the hatchet and be friends."

"What would I bury a hatchet for?" asked Dot, more impressed by that strange advice than by her brother's reasoning.

Rob. laughed. "That means to stop quarreling, not to be angry any more. When Indians have been at war with each other and are ready to be friends, they bury a hatchet. That's a sign that they're willing to stop fighting."

"Do folks always stop fussing after the hatchet is buried?" asked Dot.

"Of course; that's what it means."

Dot watched the smoothing of the ground with thoughtful face, and walked back to the house by Rob.'s side in unusual silence.

The family had finished dinner when Fred., Rob.'s senior by two years, came to the door with a sharp call: "Rob., where have you put the ax?"

"Nowhere; I haven't had it," answered Rob., promptly; but the reply did not satisfy Fred.

"Yes, you have. You must have had it, if you'd only take the trouble to think. You're always carrying things off and forgetting where you put them. Come out and hunt it up."

Fred. was in a hurry, and decidedly impatient, and Rob.'s face flushed at the order.

"Hunt it up yourself if you want it. I tell you I haven't had it, and I do not know anything about it."

"But you must have done something with it," persisted Fred.; "for it isn't in the tool house, and I know I left it there."

"You know a good many things that you aren't sure of," retorted Rob.

This sort of jarring was far from uncommon. Fred. was inclined to be dictatorial on the ground of being the elder, and Rob. was so determined not to be imposed upon that he was often irritating and disobliging by way of showing his independence.

"Boys!" interposed the mother's grieved, reproofing voice; but anything more that she might have said was drowned in a wail from Dot.

"I didn't do it. I tried, and it isn't true. Rob. said if you buried a hatchet, folks wouldn't quarrel any more. I couldn't find any hatchet; so I dragged the ax down and buried it 'side of Chicky, and you boys fuss worse'n ever."

The boys looked at each other, with a shamefaced smile gradually displacing the flush of anger.

"Where did she put it?" asked Fred., in a tone that had lost its sharpness.

"I'll show you," Rob. answered.

There was very little trouble in finding the missing implement, for Dot was not a success at digging. Then Fred. met his brother's eyes and laughed.

"I'm afraid she didn't get it deep enough for a lasting peace; but I say, Rob., we might be a little better tempered without hurting ourselves. I'll try it if you will."

"Agreed," said Rob.

And to this day, when clouds arise in the Lincoln household, some one is sure to ask: "Isn't it about time to drag the ax into the garden?"—Kate W. Hamilton, in Uplook.

BEAR NATURE.

A little Tam O'Shanter cap afforded the text for a discourse which interested a number of visitors to Forest Park the other afternoon. It belonged to a golden-haired little girl. With the buoyancy of childhood, she twirled the cap about her fingers, and laughed gleefully at the antics of the bears until, in her excitement, the Tam O'Shanter escaped her and went flying into the cage. A black paw was upon it the instant it struck the stone floor of the pit. Two black eyes surveyed it critically, and then the owner of the paws and eyes rolled it over, like a football player scoring a touchdown. Miss Columbia lay in a corner of the pit and let Uncle Sam have all the fun. Suddenly the little black ball of fur unfolded. One black paw grasped the cap, and Bruin advanced to the iron bars, outside of which many grown persons and children, one of them a crying little girl, stood watching him. His next move was surprising. He threw the cap through the bars at the very feet of its golden-haired owner.

"Well, that beats anything I ever saw!" exclaimed a young man, who had witnessed the whole performance.

"That observation, my boy, shows how little you know about bear nature."

It was a gray-bearded man, bent with age, and leaning on a cane, who spoke.

"If you knew bears as I do," he continued, "you would not marvel. The black bear is the best-natured fellow on earth. He is mean only when self-preservation demands it. Now if that little girl's cap had fallen in the cage of that old grizzly over there, there would not be enough of it left to cover a safe cracker's conscience. The grizzly is a confirmed pessimist. He would have taken that cap as a personal insult. He would have jumped to the conclusion that that little girl there was trying to worry him, and he'd have got even good and strong. The black bear, on the other hand, is a sunny-natured optimist. He was sorry for the little girl, and when he saw her crying, he just couldn't help handing back the cap. Now watch this."

The old man picked up a piece of paper, rolled it into a wad, and threw it into the cage containing the black bears. It was Miss Columbia who came to the front this time. She seemed delighted beyond expression, and played with the piece of paper, knocking it about from one end of the cage to the other. The gray-whiskered man had meantime prepared another paper ball. This he tossed into the grizzly's pit. The big fellow hit at it viciously as it flew past him. With grunts of rage, he pursued it and tore it into a thousand fragments. Then he leaped toward the bars, saying plainly in bear language that he could eat the fellow who had insulted him.—Selected.

THE SWORD OF DAMOCLES.

There was once a king whose name was Dionysius. He was so unjust and cruel that he won for himself the name "Tyrant." He knew that almost everybody hated him, and so he was always in dread lest somebody should take his life; but he was very rich, and he lived in a fine palace, where there were many costly and beautiful things, and he was waited on by a host of servants who were always ready to do his bidding. One day a friend of his, whose name was Damocles, said to him: "How happy you must be! You have everything that any man could wish."

"Perhaps you would like to change places with me," said the tyrant.

"No; not that, O King," said Damocles; "but I think that if I could only have your riches and your pleasures for one day—I should not want any greater happiness."

"Very well," said the tyrant; "you shall have them."

So the next day Damocles was led into the palace, and all the servants were bidden to treat him as their master. He sat down at a table in the banquet hall, and rich foods were placed before him. Nothing was wanting that could give him pleasure. There were costly wines and beautiful flowers and rare perfumes and delightful music. He rested himself among soft cushions, and felt that he was the happiest man in all the world.

Then he chanced to raise his eyes toward the ceiling. What was it that was dangling above him, with its point almost touching his head? It was a sharp sword, and it was hung only by a single horsehair. What if the hair should break? There was danger every moment that it would do so. The smile faded from the lips of Damocles. His face became ashy pale; his hands trembled; he wanted no more food; he could drink no more wine; he took no more delight in the music; he longed to be out of the place and away, he cared not where.

"What is the matter?" said the tyrant.

"That sword, that sword!" cried Damocles.

He was so badly frightened that he dared not move.

"Yes," said Dionysius, "I know there is a sword above your head, and that it may fall at any moment; but why should that trouble you? I have a sword over my head all the time. I am every moment in dread lest something may cause me to lose my life."

"Let me go," said Damocles. "I now see that I was mistaken, and that the rich and the powerful are not so happy as they seem. Let me go back to my old home in the poor little cottage among the mountains."

And so long as he lived he never again wanted to be rich or to change places, even for a moment, with the king.—Selected.

UNANIMITY OF FATHER AND MOTHER.

Many of us have experienced a surprising sensation of relief when the fretful babe, that has become infected by our own nervousness and weariness, is soothed as if by magic in the strong arms of its father and falls asleep under the spell of his deep, magnetic tones. A little later on the naughty child becomes suddenly and refreshingly good again as a result of his mild, but prompt and effective, discipline; and the problems that have burdened and distracted us as we turned them over and over are solved by the vigorous use of a little masculine common sense. That mother is indeed to be pitied who has not the moral support of her husband just as surely as she has his financial backing, who cannot take counsel with him upon every matter of importance to the family or individual welfare, and who is not able to appreciate the tonic of his kindly criticism, and even the force of certain views which may differ from her own. This brings us to what is undoubtedly a fruitful source of family trouble, and that is a difference of opinion between parents in regard to the management of children. When this difference takes the form of a revoked command or a disputed case of discipline, it is a serious wrong to the child, who is at least entitled to a consistent and unvarying form of government. It is essential to his moral well-being not only that each parent should sustain the other outwardly in particular instances, but there should be a substantial unanimity between them in matters of principle. Let us seriously ask ourselves how this unanimity is to be attained. Only the most inexperienced of young married people expect always to think alike upon all questions that may arise. They presently learn, if they are wise, the little niceties of personal adjustment, the habit of studying one another's point of view, and the difficult art of recognizing that although we may believe ourselves in the right, that does not necessarily put another in the wrong. Right has many sides, and we should be thankful to one who has disclosed to us some phase of it which we were hindered from seeing by the limitations of our own personality. It would be a startling revelation of many parents to themselves if they could know how often they contend for a cherished opinion—not so much for the opinion's sake, but that they may have the selfish, personal satisfaction of seeing the child obedient to their own particular commands. To sacrifice one's personal preference is the most refining influence of the bond of parenthood, a bond that Felix Adler holds "is the great means of stimulating and preserving unselfishness in the world, while the love of children is the great balance wheel that counteracts the strong tendency toward egotism."—Elaine Goodale Eastman, in Woman's Home Companion.

INFLUENCE OF THE PROMISES OF GOD.

It would be very hard to estimate the power and influence that promises have over the people of this world. The child is wonderfully influenced by the promises of its parents. There are, however, several things that greatly modify the influence of promises. When the promise is unconditional, then its fulfillment depends upon the veracity and fidelity of the one who makes the promise; if conditional, it depends also upon compliance with the conditions on the part of the one to whom the promise is made. Most of God's promises to men are conditional, but God is always certain to comply with his promises if men will comply with the conditions. Promises were made to Abraham upon certain conditions. These conditions were that he should get out from his country, from his kindred, from his father's house, and go into a land that he would show him. The promises were: "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 12: 2, 3.) These were very precious promises to Abraham. God would make of him a great nation, make his name great, and make him a blessing; would bless them that would bless Abraham, and curse him that would curse Abraham, and that in him all families of the earth should be blessed. These promises, coming as they did from God, were enough to thrill the very soul of Abraham; and he began compliance on his part with the conditions. He started out as God bade him do. He left his country also, but he did not leave his kindred and his father's people as the Lord had told him. His father went with him, and also Lot, his nephew. Somehow they stopped in Haran on their way to Canaan and dwelt there. They continued there until his father died. The Lord did not direct his way into Canaan till after his father's death. Then he went on into the land of Canaan, but he still had Lot with him. He was now away from his country and from his own father's house, but one of his kindred was yet with him; and so Abraham wandered about in Canaan and down into Egypt and back until Lot separated from him. When he had got into the land of Canaan, the Lord appeared to him and said to him: "Unto thy seed will I give this land." As yet Abraham had no seed; but when Lot had separated from Abraham, the Lord appeared again to Abraham and said to him: "Look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." Thus God's promises are becoming more definite since Lot has departed and Abraham and his wife are alone. He is now getting well into the conditions God had placed upon him, but it was still some time after Lot had departed before any promise of seed or posterity was fulfilled to Abraham. During this time Abraham and his wife began to be impatient, and sought to bring about a fulfillment of the promise through Hagar, Sarah's maid. Ishmael was born through this union; but God would not accept this as a fulfillment of his promise, and so they had to wait yet longer. Finally, however, a special promise of a son through Sarah was made, and Isaac was born. Abraham was a hundred years old when Isaac was born.

This history of Abraham shows plainly that when God makes promises to men upon certain conditions to be complied with by them they cannot reach the promises till the conditions have been complied with, also that no sort of planning or scheming or inventions of men can secure the blessing. Hence the plan of Abraham and Sarah to hasten the blessing only hindered and put the real fulfillment farther in the future. But Abraham persevered in his efforts to do God's will; and though he blundered, he never gave up. He continued to walk by faith more and more; and so soon as he himself was ready for the fulfillment, the blessing came. It is a principle always true that when men do God's will and show themselves worthy of his promised blessings they are bestowed upon them. God never fails, unless men fail on their part to get ready by faithfully doing his will; and it is equally true that when men try to reach God's blessings by doing something he has not ordained they will fail. No man can show up a better general character than did Abraham; yet when he went to work some other way than God had appointed for him, he failed. While his father and Lot were with him, the blessing could not come; and when he and Sarah sought to reach it by a device of their own, they still failed; but when Abraham fully followed God, trusting his precious promises and relying only upon the Lord's way, the blessing came in all its fullness, and Abraham was repaid a hundredfold for his faithfulness. He came to be one of the grandest and best men of his time, even to be called the "friend of God" and the "father of the faithful."

The history of Abraham is especially valuable to us, because it shows us so clearly that no sort of disobedience to God can be tolerated so as to bring the divine blessing, and that no invention or device of men can bring it. Only doing God's will can bless man. When men will do God's will and fully trust his promise, it brings a world of joy and happiness all along the line. The happiest men of this world are the men who do God's will and fully confide in his promises.

Many are the promises made to the children of God under the New Testament age. Peter says, when referring to God's revealed will: "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." (2 Pet. 1: 4.) These precious promises which God has made for his children accomplish a very important part in the redemption of man. They encourage men to labor on with devotion and with courage and cheer, assured all the time the blessing will be theirs in due time. Two of the promises are that "the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous," and that "his ears are open unto their cry." These promises require conditions upon our part, being made in behalf of the righteous. The word "righteous" means those that are doing the Lord's will. None have a right to these promises that are not all the time striving to do God's will, for the same passage also says: "But the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." To reject God's will is to do evil, and the face of the Lord is against all such. Therefore none but the righteous have any right to expect the eyes of the Lord to be over them or for his ears to be open to their prayers. Very many no doubt are claiming these blessings that are not entitled to them. They may be very zealous and earnest in doing something they claim to be service to God which in reality is not. They do things he has not required and leave undone things he has required. Many that are claiming to be disciples of Christ are spending their time and energies in building up and carrying out things that God never said anything about. Hence they will get no credit from him for doing these things. The church, the kingdom of God, and its appointments are not before them. What they do that God has commanded they do through and in the name of their societies, and not in the name of Christ, and Christ is not honored. Paul says: "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." People cannot do things in the name and by the authority of Christ and in the name of these societies at the same time, cannot follow the wisdom and authority of men and follow Christ at the same time. To follow the societies and wisdom of men is to follow worldly wisdom; to follow worldly wisdom is to be in that sense a friend of the world; and to be a friend of the world is to be the enemy of God. All such are certainly deceived when they are looking for these blessings promised to the righteous, to those doing the will of God. Jesus also said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Those, therefore, that will not do the will of God are not his, not among the righteous, not in the kingdom of heaven, and have no right to promises made to those that are.

Another one of the precious promises of Jesus is: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.) The Father's house to which Jesus was going means the heavenly home, where all the righteous are going and where they will dwell for evermore. Many mansions, plenty of room for all the righteous! Jesus will dwell there, and all his faithful followers will dwell with him there. I go to prepare a place for you; I will see that you all have a home there; and I will come again and receive you to myself, that you may be where I am. This is truly precious to the Lord's people. Certainly all ought to be encouraged by such a promise to hold out in faithfulness to the end. People that have such a hope, such assurance of a happy home in heaven, think about it in the daily walks of life and constantly strive to so live as to honor God and be worthy of such honors. Christians that thus strive and pray and meditate upon the glories that await them partake more and more of the spirit of Christ and of the truth. They partake more and more of the divine nature, and in this way these precious promises lead and prompt us day by day to be more spiritually-minded, to be more like Jesus, to live more like he did, to crucify the flesh more, to be less selfish, to purify the heart and life more and more every day. It is in this way that "we are saved by hope." The hope, the sweet anticipation of such a home, keeps Christians awake to their duties, that they may triumph over sin; that they may do good and be good and be worthy of such inestimable blessings. Such an assurance, such a hope as this ought to lighten all the burdens, all the disappointments, and all the sorrows of life. Surely no Christian with such divine assurance for the future can afford to go through life in gloom and sadness or allow himself to pine and give up under trials and difficulties. The child of God should so consider these things as to follow Paul when he says to Christians: "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say Rejoice."

These precious promises are intended to give us courage and to keep us in the right way and to enable us at all times to rejoice in hope of the glory of God, that we may be found in him without spot or stain when Jesus comes again. E. G. S.

CHRISTIAN PURITY AND CONSECRATION.

It is not the strong church numerically, financially, or intellectually that does the most work. It all depends upon the zeal of the members. It does not require a man of great ability or learning to do good; it does not require great ability to understand the Scriptures in their practical truths. A man must understand the leading principles and be familiar with the facts and commandments of the Bible to teach them. For the teacher to make himself a child and present the truths with the simplicity and directness of a child is the method that is effective. Learning is not incompatible with simplicity of manner or language. True learning, or learning combined with wisdom, studies to make truth simple and plain to the commonest understanding. The most profound truths can be presented in simplest language and brought within the comprehension of the unlearned. The best example of this is found in the Scriptures. The most profound truths ever made known to man, the most far-reaching principles that shape the course and mold the destiny of every human being for time and eternity, are revealed in language so simple and so common that the humblest minds may grasp them so as to be led and saved by them. True wisdom and true learning tend to simplify and make plain all truth. Learning is helpful only as it makes plain truth and brings it within the apprehension of little children. Jesus used the simplest words and brought truth down to the comprehension of the unlearned. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight."

A truly wise and godly teacher will use whatever of learning he may possess to present to the world truth in the simplest terms possible. He follows the wisdom of God in doing this. Jesus and the Holy Spirit were the most perfect models of simplicity and directness of speech found in the world.

The things needed to reach men are sincerity, purity, and earnestness of life. Man may be sinful and corrupt in his life and depraved in his own heart, but there is something in every one that responds to a sincere, pure, and earnest life. "To will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not." A man, to reach others, must know the truth and then so live that others will believe he is sincere, pure in life, and earnest in seeking to save men from sin. This earnestness is not shown by emotional excitement, but by lives of consecration for the good of others. Emotional excitement is contagious, and one with strong emotions can excite corresponding excitement in others; but this is temporary and must soon pass away. The true, earnest spirit of devotion and consecration will not produce the emotional excitement, but will bear its fruits in the lives of others, and men will be influenced by the lifelong devotion and earnestness of determined men and women. Then the effective means of reaching men is by living and pleading for purity in life, unselfish efforts to save men from sin, and earnestness in doing what our hands find to do. Numbers, wealth, learning in a church or in a preacher cannot save without these other qualities. A church weak in wealth, numbers, and learning, if it seeks to be and to maintain purity, is zealous of benefiting others, and consecrated to the work, will reach and help others. The same is true of men. A man may be learned, eloquent, and occupy a high position; he may attract and entertain audiences; but he will never really move and uplift men unless he is pure in heart and clean in his life, devoted, consecrated, willing to sacrifice his own comfort, time, and labors for the good of others. One willing to do this, no matter how humble his position, how limited his learning, or how lowly his position in society, will lift up and benefit the world. Purity of life, consecration to the good of others, and zeal and earnestness in the work of saving souls will meet with success. God has chosen such churches and such persons to carry forward the work of bringing the world to God and to complete the work Jesus came to earth to do.

One earnest, consecrated man can overturn the whole fabric of society, it matters not how humble in life he be. The work of overturning must always begin at the foundation, among those in the humbler walks of life, among those that lie at the foundation of society. He is best fitted for the work that can most readily adapt himself to these people. Those raised among them can most readily do this. This all accords with the provisions of God for converting the world. It is wonderful what one man who is earnest can do. We often see a church of poor and unimportant people who are seemingly dead. An earnest man, himself like them in all, save his earnestness, goes among them, and in a little while they are a live, an earnest, aggressive church; instead of dying themselves, sending life and joy to others. A rich, learned church of influential members can seldom be so aroused from their lethargy and indifference as to become active.

Thirty years ago there were activity and zeal among the disciples. Success crowned their efforts and work. They became indifferent, cold, and mechanical in their work, and they ceased to spread the truth. Indications now point to a revival of interest. It is coming where it ought to be expected—among the weak churches, the poorer people, and by young and unknown men willing to go among all classes and labor to save souls, and who are pleading for a purity of life and consecration on the part of Christians that has been heretofore unknown.

Whenever a church or a preacher sets out to be respectable and influential by its worldly possessions and surroundings, or when a preacher is intent on using his position as a preacher to gain worldly position or influence, they bid farewell to true usefulness to the world and would do well to cease to be churches or preachers of Christ. "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" (John 5: 44.) The honor of the world is incompatible with honor from God, and he who seeks the one will forfeit the other.

These things are written to plead that the revival that comes, be it much or little, may be directed along proper lines and confined to the true channels, and so continue to grow. This movement for a better life begins with the young men and with the churches that are regarded as weak. To them it must look and among them find its growth and development. We older men, who have well-nigh run our course, can do but little else than point to our own mistakes and failures as warnings and helps to the young. Our habits and surroundings are fixed, and we cannot enter as fully into the newer and better life to which God invites his children as the younger can; but the foundation of it all is purity of life, fidelity to God and his word, and zeal for the good of others.

D. L.

SILENCE, WHEN WE OUGHT TO SPEAK, IS SIN.

It is possible to sin in thought, in word, in deed, and in silence. True it is that the tongue "is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." The tongue uncontrolled stirs up contention and strife, "defleth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." In spite of ourselves and of our noble resolves to the contrary, we find our tongues wagging, wagging, and saying hateful, hurtful things. "For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame." If there is nothing impure in the heart, we can throw the bridle off the tongue and let her wag, and she will be found ever singing the praises of God and hymning those things which are sweet music in the ears of the Almighty; but, with all the mischief the tongue does in destroying the peace and concord of families, of communities, of churches, and of nations, still it is by no means self-evident that by remaining silent when we should speak out in defense of the right we do not sin as often as in speaking the wrong thing. It is so hard to antagonize people in popular errors and sins and so easy to sit silently by while they trample under their unhallowed feet the blood-bought church which Jesus died to establish.

On one occasion, when Jesus went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day, the wicked, proud, and haughty Pharisees watched him, that they might accuse him. There was no sin in watching the Savior if their motive had not been an evil one. So the Christian will be watched everywhere; and if through cowardice he should fail to speak out for the right, he will bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. Those wicked men were condemning Jesus in their hearts for doing good on the Sabbath day—healing a man who was afflicted with the dropsy. Jesus, for the sake of popularity, did not remain silent and sneak away as a moral coward. Out of their own law he condemned them and made them blush in silence. "And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees; saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go; and answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath day? And they could not answer him again to these things."

If we are ashamed to defend the truth and practice the truth when among those who are in darkness and superstition, we sin most grievously and stab Christianity to the heart. As Christians are the light of the world, the salt of the earth, they cannot be too careful in defending the truth and in practicing as they preach. The pernicious doctrine of being a Roman in Rome is not one to be followed by Christians. A contemporary periodical gives this example, a striking proof of this:

"A Japanese Senator got hold of a Bible with expositions. Reading it attentively, he pronounced Christianity a fine thing in theory; but the question was: Could it be lived? While in this state, he took an ocean trip. On the same steamer was a lady, pointed out to him as a Christian. He watched her closely, and was convinced she practiced her Christian faith. Returning home, he went to a missionary and made a public profession of faith. This lady did not know what was depending on her faithfulness. Had she behaved as some professed Christians do while traveling, the Japanese Senator would not have been led to the light."

We should be aggressive in contending with error. We should boldly declare all the counsel of God and oppose all adulteration of the truth, even though we should imagine, as did Elijah, that we are standing alone. With the truth, all the world cannot harm us. It is so easy to drift with the popular tide, even though the truth is sacrificed little by little. Silence! Be silent for the sake of peace! The old prophet remained silent while Jeroboam pulled down God's altars, established his own, and led the people to worship idols. It was easy, it was popular, to remain silent. To speak out for the truth and right, he would cause somebody to call him "an old foggy," "a crank." He played mum; he sold out the truth for the sake of popularity and lost his soul. Perish the hand that writes these lines and may this tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth before I ever shall thus be ashamed of God's eternal truth!

The crowd has ever drifted away from the Lord Jesus Christ. Noah was wonderfully in the minority. Money, ease, popularity, all whisper: "Go with the crowd and smother out your convictions. When you are in Rome, do as Rome does." It is not popular to contend earnestly for the action of baptism as taught in the Scriptures. While the Bible clearly teaches that in baptism they came unto the water, went down into the water, after baptism came up out of the water, and that in baptism the body is buried in and born of the water, yet many professed Christians pass by these scriptures in silence and allow people to deceive themselves with the thought that affusion is baptism. It is wicked to remain silent under such circumstances. Because somebody frowns, many are ready to say nothing about baptism as a condition of salvation, notwithstanding Jesus has said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." They fail to speak through the apostles: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." "Baptism doth also now save us." We should always be brave enough to allow God to speak through us on this subject; we should ever be ready to boldly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. It is a sin to remain silent when people are turning away from God's eternal truth and being turned unto fables.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

"One of our Landmark contemporaries has received the following question, 'If a church should ordain an unbaptized man to the ministry, would his work be valid?' and its answer is, 'Yes, to this extent: when acting for the church; for instance, in baptizing'—that is to say, a Baptist Church of ten or a thousand members is able to make scriptural, and consequently valid, what would not be either scriptural or valid without the authority of such church. In other words, according to our contemporary, a church action overrides and transcends all other authority, not excepting God's word. That is Romanism pure and simple, and goes to show what is so earnestly contended—that Landmarkism and Romanism are of the same essence."

This is from the Journal and Messenger, the Baptist paper published in Cincinnati. We have said the Baptist Churches approximate in some respects in their claims a greater nearness to the Roman Catholics than any other churches. They claim a continuous and unbroken line of descent of churches from the days of the apostles; they claim that through their hands descends the official virtue and no church act is valid unless performed by their officials; they claim the members cannot apostatize from Christ; and if the members cannot, it is difficult to see how a church composed of these members can apostatize. A good orthodox Baptist paper of the same faith and order now says they claim the sanction of a Baptist Church can render that acceptable and right which God has condemned. A decision of a Baptist Church makes right what God's law makes wrong. The pope does not make much higher claims than this. D. L.

COLMAN.

Brother John Wiley Colman was born in Logan County, Ark., in 1862, and died at his home, in Grayson County, Tex., on August 24, 1900, being thirty-eight years and twenty-one days old. Early in life Brother Colman professed his faith in Christ and was baptized into the one body. He was a true disciple of Christ, always contending for the truth. All who knew him know he was a kind-hearted and devoted Christian, kind to all he met in the walks of life. He leaves a wife, three children, three brothers, a sister, and an aged mother to mourn their loss. Still, their loss is his eternal gain; and though his place in the family circle will never be filled to them, yet if his family and friends will follow his example and serve the Lord faithfully and earnestly as he did, they may meet him where disappointment, sorrow, and sad farewells are no more.

YOUREE.

Brother Francis Hardeman Youree was born on August 17, 1823, and died at his residence, near Donnels, Tenn., on July 22, 1900. Brother Youree was one of the pioneers among the disciples in this community, having been a devout member of the church of Christ for fifty-three years, and during all that time he was the same faithful, loyal, and devout servant of God. His home life was exceedingly exemplary, and truly can it be said of him that he was a devoted husband and a good and loving father. He leaves a good wife and five children, besides relatives and friends, to mourn his death. A great vacancy is left in the community, especially in the congregation at the Rock Hill church of Christ, where he worshiped. Brother Youree lived to a good old age, being seventy-six years, eleven months, and five days old. As the ripened fruit is ready for the harvest, so he was ready for the judgment, having expressed himself that, let the resurrection morn be soon or late, he expected to come forth on that day. If we who are left will live as good and true as he, we can meet him in heaven.

A SISTER.

BOYD.

Leeta, our darling little sunbeam, was taken from us on April 29, 1900, leaving a home desolate that before had known no sorrow. Leeta, only daughter of Brother and Sister E. Boyd, was born at Junction City, Ore., on June 21, 1893, being six years, ten months, and eight days old at the time of her death. The cause of her death was consumption of the brain; the frail little body could no longer support the brain. She seemed to realize that she would never get well, and would express her feelings and wishes concerning her home with Jesus. Ever sacred we hold the memory of our darling, with her golden hair and laughing blue eyes. Like a pure-white broken lily, she has gone to her sweet rest. In the home where her sweet voice sung and where she was so joyous and busy, her little form lay lifeless in the casket, and instead of the joyous song there were sighs, tears, and silence; but she lies asleep in the Father's care to await the resurrection morn. Though our tears fall fast, for we loved her so, our grief we will forbear; for we know there is a glorious dawn to this night of sorrow which seems so dark. Leeta was loved by all who knew her for her sweet and gracious ways. She leaves a father, mother, two brothers, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss, who will strive to meet her in her bright and happy home.

LUCY LILES.

SMITH.

Mrs. P. W. Smith was born on December 25, 1837, and died on July 20, 1900. It was with sadness and sorrow to the family and friends that we followed the remains of the one we so loved to their last resting place at Hart's Chapel, on July 21, 1900. O how hard it is to realize that she is gone! But she has left us and gone to be with Jesus, whom she loved and served from childhood. She united with the Methodist Church when very young, and lived a devoted member of that church until 1891, when she joined the church of Christ. After that she never missed an opportunity of attending worship until the Lord saw fit to lay the hand of affliction upon her, and for five long years she was a great sufferer; but she bore her suffering with greatest patience, and would often say that it was the Lord's will for her to suffer so, and she was willing to bear it. She was always cheerful and happy, notwithstanding the great pain she endured; and when the Lord called her home, she called to her the feeble husband who had sat and watched over her for days and nights, and her loving children, and blessed them and begged them to so live on earth as to meet her in heaven. Then, lifting her smiling eyes to heaven, she said, "Lord, I am ready. Halleluia! Halleluia!" and left this sorrowful life to join loved ones in heaven. We feel the loss of wife and mother, but know it is our loss and her gain, and by God's help we will try to say, as she did: "Lord, thy will be done."

HUNTER.

Our precious little babe, W. T., son of W. T. and Hattie Hunter, was born on August 14, 1898, and died on August 18, 1900, being two years and four days old at the time of his death. W. T. was one of the dearest little boys, it seems to us, that was ever given to any home. He leaves one half-brother, one brother, and four sisters, who long for his precious face once more. Little W. T. had brain trouble, and his suffering was more than he could bear. He has gone to live with his little brother, Ernest, who died eleven months ago. W. T. was a pet with his papa. He was the greatest pleasure of our lives; he was the first we looked for when we came in; he was so bright and cheerful. It is so hard to give my little baby up, to have no little prattling tongue to say so many sweet things to make us happy. Our home seems desolate without our baby. God will love and bless him, I know. He was too precious to stay on earth; he has gone, and we can never see him any more in this world; but we have something more to make us live near to God, so we can meet with our dear children in heaven. I folded his little dresses and stroked them down with a trembling hand and laid them safe in the bureau drawer, and only a mother can understand what tears were shed over the precious things; in my fancy the little straw cap he once wore still framed his dear face. Nobody but a mother knows how I will cling to the little clothes, as a million other mothers have done.

The Stimulus of a Cheerful Woman.

Something had gone wrong, and as far down the line as one could see stood trolley cars, waiting until the blockade would be lifted and travel resumed. The men travelers anxiously consulted their watches and one by one dropped off, with the remark, "Well, I'll walk, I believe," or, "Suppose we try Market street;" but the women, with their recollection of the fare already paid, sat and waited. Being a woman, I waited, too, and occupied the time by studying my sister passengers. Some were nervous over broken engagements, some were impatient, some were peevish, and one was absolutely cross. Then I came to the woman in the corner. She was not pretty nor stylish, in fact, but was rather shabbily genteel; but her whole countenance beamed with the cheerful determination to make the best of things and not fret herself into a nervous perspiration. Pretty mouths about her might be training themselves to unlovely droopings; bright eyes might veil their beauty in sullenness; smooth foreheads might be wrinkled with worry or creased with impatience; but the sweet, homely face in the corner looked forth with a loveliness that no mere beauty of feature could give. Then I wondered by what cunning means this woman had bottled up sunshine and was carrying its brightness into the lives of strangers. From what invisible fount is she storing up those sparkling draughts that will make her ever a joy to her friends? Is it not worth seeking—this cheerful, uncomplaining disposition?

It is by no means claimed that women alone should possess this inspiring quality, but it is such a beautiful and beautifying one that we at least should strive after it. Then, too, it is indeed a rare womanly talent.

"I never could have regained my feet if it had not been for my wife," said a man who lately passed through deep business misfortune. "She was so unceasingly cheerful that she put her heart into me when I had none left. If I had not had my home as a haven to turn to every night, I believe I would never have lived through it all." This man had given up a well-appointed house, in which he had lived many years, and had taken a smaller one, the better suited to his reduced income; but the latter was the "haven" to which he turned—a home, because his wife was there.—The Presbyterian.

Boys are frequently driven away from home because of the scoldings received from mothers and fathers. Sometimes they are swept away. We do not mean that mothers should not be neat in their housekeeping, but we do mean that a boy will not stay long at home if his mother meets him at the gate and makes him stop and spend five minutes in trying to clean the mud off of his shoes, and then sends him around to the back door, and makes him come through the kitchen, for fear that he might get a speck of dirt on the front hall carpet. Boys are boys, and the only thing that will change them is time and proper treatment. Girls think more of their homes than boys, because their rooms are better furnished, and they are usually better treated by their parents. Anything will do for the boys' room, most people think. If we want children to love the home, we must be kind and gentle to them, and show them that we sympathize with them in their troubles and trials.—Christian Guide.

Encourage the Preacher.

"Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees." (Isa. 35: 3.) "Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed." (Heb. 12: 12, 13.)

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the only complete antidote for the many troubles attendant upon the children of God, and the glorious consolation therein revealed is the most powerful factor in strengthening the weak hands, confirming the feeble knees, and dispelling the discouragements that so often arise like threatening clouds to darken our moral pathway. But this does not relieve us of the duty of encouraging one another, and it is God's expressed will that the fellowship of the saints should do its part in planting hope and encouragement among its communicants. If there be any who have acquired that degree of fortitude that enables them to feel that they do not actually need the encouragement of their brethren and sisters, I have only to say that they have ascended to a height upon which I never expect to stand in this life.

Men possess different degrees of fortitude, the same as they possess different degrees of physical strength; and why should it be thought a thing incredible to find among our preaching brethren men whose brightest thoughts are darkened and whose strongest efforts are hindered simply for want of a word of approval from those with whom and for whom they labor? Yet it is sadly true that many—yes, very many—Christians seem to think that their silent presence at the house of God is all that they can offer, or are under obligations to offer, to the poor preacher for his pains and labors of love. The love of God does not dwell very richly in the heart of the preacher who seeks the applause of men, neither does it manifest itself in the conduct of those who applaud men; but it can hardly be said that a congregation is doing its duty toward strengthening the weak hands when it never offers a word of comfort or encouragement to its preacher.

It may be that this article will fall under the eye of some well-meaning child of God who has never given this subject the consideration due it; and for the benefit and admonition of such, I shall digress and speak of some of my own personal experiences. I have in mind a congregation with which I used to labor when I was very young in the cause and also in very poor health; and to be sure, at this very time, of all times, I actually needed encouragement. God knows whether or not I performed my duty, but I have always thought that I did the best I could. I can imagine I see the faces in the congregation now, as I stood before them in the love and fear of my Master and delivered to them as best I could the message I had from the Lord unto them. They all seemed to be attentive enough, but not one reason did I have for believing that they were keeping pace with the thoughts suggested by the sermon, or that they knew after the services what I had been talking about. Not a trace of enthusiasm marked their countenances, not an approving glance could I catch from one single eye; and then, when the service (if such could be called "service") was over, they were quite ready to ask after my health, the prospect for a crop, etc., or to invite me to dine with them; but they would not say one word about the sermon. There was not one to take me by the hand and say: "Brother, your sermon did me good." O, if they could only have realized how my very soul hungered for just one warm and brotherly word of encouragement! Is it any wonder that I always felt downhearted and sad as I rode wearily homeward? Is it any wonder I was disheartened and discouraged and almost concluded to give up the work altogether?

But this is not always the case in all communities, for many are the kind and brotherly hand shakes we have received, with many kind words of approval; and these often do more toward urging us onward than any contribution of money could do. Let us ponder this matter a little and see if we are doing our duty toward giving encouragement to our preacher. I once knew a good old sister who expressed her approval of her favorite preacher by saying: "I do so love to hear Brother H— preach. He talks so plain and simple." Surely, we could often say as much, and that is better than nothing. W. H. HOSKINSON. Weir, Ky.

Gained from His Loss.

To many and many a man the loss of material wealth has proved the opening of the door into a life of better and fuller achievement than would otherwise have been his. Such an instance is found in the life of a celebrated architect. He had built one of the finest railroad bridges in the world, and at a dinner in Edinburgh, where they celebrated its completion, the speaker of the evening said: "This man, who is now the architect of our magnificent bridge, was one day reduced to such poverty that the father was imprisoned for debt, and the members of the family were compelled to earn their own living. The boy was employed in running errands, and the only book he had as he sat round the office waiting to be sent on errands was an old Bible, which was out of the binding. One day he opened the book and studied about the building of Solomon's temple; he asked all kinds of questions about the length of a cubit and the measurement of the temple area, and pondered over the matter. The thought which came to him that day as he studied in that book—the only book he had in the world to study—drove him into his profession."

Whether we are rich or poor, we cannot succeed in a calling unless we have in us certain qualities; but sometimes the loss of money spurs on desires and energies that would only have smothered under the weight of wealth.—Selected.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. The census bureau has published the returns of the State of Arkansas, giving the population by counties, townships, and all incorporated towns. The population of the State in 1900 is 1,311,564, as against 1,128,179 in 1890, an increase since 1890 of 183,385, or 16.25 per cent. The total land surface of Arkansas is approximately 53,045 square miles, the average number of persons to the square mile at the censuses of 1890 and 1900 being as follows: 1890, 21.27; 1900, 24.73.

Gov. Benton McMillin, upon a request from Director General William J. Buchanan, of the Pan-American Exposition, to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., commencing in March, 1901, has appointed Maj. E. C. Lewis, of this city, as vice president of the Exposition for Tennessee. He has also appointed Mrs. John W. Thomas, of this city, and Mrs. J. Regarding the contributions for the Galveston flood sufferers, Governor Sayers gave out the following statement: "The amount of money received by me up to 12 o'clock noon of September 30, 1900, for the benefit of the storm sufferers on the Texas coast is $672,476.29. This sum includes $3,892.59 that remained in my hands of the fund contributed for the relief of the Brazos River Valley sufferers last year. It also includes all drafts and authorizations to draw and which are in transit and are yet uncollected. This statement, it must be borne in mind, embraces only moneys and remittances that have been made to me directly and also amounts for which I have been authorized to draw."

Capt. S. Taliaferro, who was appointed by Governor Sayers to take charge of the relief work for Brazoria County and Galveston County, Tex., makes the following statement in regard to the disposition of the relief fund: "I have been furnished for that territory the sum of $72,306.25. Of that amount about $35,150 has been sent to the committees organized at the different points in the territory. Supplies for these same points have been purchased and shipped to the amount of about $13,442.78, leaving a balance in my hands of about $23,000 to pay the few remaining bills still out and to be distributed to the different points in these two counties. How these people are to live during the coming winter is more than I can tell, unless further assistance is given them. I think that the territory covered by Harris County, Galveston maintained, Brazoria County, Fort Bend County, and Waller County is the territory that stands more in need of assistance than any part of the country reached by the storm." The official reports are not complete, but they place the number of people referred to by Captain Taliaferro in excess of ten thousand.

ALABAMA.

Palos, September 24.—Brother McCorkle has just closed a fine meeting at Flat Creek, with fifteen additions to the one body. Brother McCorkle is doing a grand work in North Alabama. It is a treat of a lifetime to hear him preach. He is an eloquent and finished speaker, and wins the hearts of all who hear him. He is uncompromising in his plea for a "Thus saith the Lord" in all things, and sticks close to the Book.

T. ALEXANDER.

ARKANSAS.

Hackett City, September 26.—I came to this place several days ago to help my brother in a meeting. Eleven persons obeyed the gospel during the meeting. The people here have "all things common;" they are the best of people. From here I will go to Red Oak, I. T.; to preach a few sermons. I am now sick, confined to my room, but hope to be better soon.

J. W. TOWRY.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Marlow, September 25.—This is the second week of our meeting. Only four persons have been added to the one body to date. Much rain has hindered the meeting. There are a few disciples along the line of the Kioway and Comanche reservations, hoping to get homes when the country is declared open for settlement. Along the line of the railroad there are little towns springing up. There are but few congregations able to build houses of worship who have not departed from their first love. I can say truly that with the help of the strong congregations a great work can be done here. I therefore ask that the saints remember this field in their prayers and their fellowship.

R. W. OFFICER.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, October 1.—A little more than a month ago the members of the Campbell Street and Portland churches of Christ purchased a tent to be used in the preaching of the gospel in all parts of the city. When closed, the tent measures thirty-five by fifty-six feet; with the curtains extended, it measures fifty-one by seventy-two feet, seating from five hundred to six hundred people. It cost us one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and it is waterproof and comfortable in every way. The tent was pitched for the first time on August 31, 1900, on the lot owned by the Portland church of Christ. On September 3, 1900, Brother M. C. Kurfees joined us, and for four weeks he has been boldly and lovingly proclaiming "the truth as it is in Jesus." Those who know this godly man will say: "We know that the people heard the gospel, if Brother Kurfees did the preaching." They certainly did, and, as a result, twenty-eight persons were added to the congregation. Among the number were Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, United Brethren, and some from the congregations of the "Christian Church" that had introduced innovations. Seventeen persons were baptized. Last night (the closing night) the tent was crowded, and there were five confessions. The meeting had continued one week longer than the time first announced, and we thought best to close, as opportunity had been given to all to obey the gospel and pressing duties called Brother Kurfees away. Pray for us, brethren and sisters, that we may all be "faithful unto death," that the congregation may be edified, and that many more souls may be saved. Let us thank God for such men as Brother Kurfees, who, in the spirit of Christ, fearlessly "preaches the word." May God's blessings smile upon him and his labors of love, is the sincere prayer of a congregation which has learned to know him better, and therefore to love him more, and to esteem him very highly for his work's sake. As soon as the weather is favorable we shall, the Lord willing, pitch this tent again and use it in various parts of the city, and during the summer months of next year we propose to hold meetings in it constantly. GEORGE A. KLINGMAN.

TENNESSEE.

Dibrell, September 21.—Brother A. B. Lipscomb, of Louisville, Ky., held a meeting at this place, beginning on Monday night after the first Sunday in September and continuing over the following Sunday night, with six persons added to the church and good interest throughout the meeting. There were three persons baptized last Sunday, and others may follow soon. This was a good meeting.

P. G. POTTER.

Red Boiling Springs, October 1.—I discoursed to a few disciples at this place yesterday and last night. Some say a good impression was made. I tried to have the loaf broken yesterday, but no wine could be had. The brethren have not broken bread here for some time; but one blind brother says he is going to make another effort to commence breaking bread on the first day of the week, and continue it. I called on three brethren to pray, and all begged to be excused; they had formerly led in prayer. We see by this how easy it is for brethren to get out of the habit of praying when they fail to worship on the first day of every week. This is a mission point. There are two or three small congregations within four or five miles of this place.

H. W. SMITH.

Nashville, October 4.—The meeting at Harris Chapel, Wilson County, began on the second Lord's day in September and continued over the third Lord's day night, with good interest and large, attentive crowds until the close. Four persons were added to the one body by baptism. Brother Harris, of Couchville, Rutherford County, joined me on Tuesday night after the second Lord's day, rendering me valuable assistance with his prayers and strong exhortations, and he closed the meeting. I left on Saturday before the meeting closed and went to St. John Chapel, in Wilson County. The brethren there are keeping house for the Lord, and they seemed to be much encouraged over the meeting, as the attendance was larger

THE series of Helps prepared by the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY has no superior. Much time, labor, and thought are bestowed on the entire series. The Quarterlies all abound in SCRIPTURAL TEACHING and are full of WHOLE-SOME DOCTRINE. The man that is not interested in the Bible will not take any interest in the investigation of these. A good way to use these Helps is to study them carefully at home during the week and leave them there when you go to the class on Lord's day. Helps thus used cannot prove otherwise than very beneficial.

during this meeting than at any time before. The congregations have my thanks for their fellowship. To the Lord be all the glory.

Godwin, September 22.—Brother J. A. Harding closed the meeting at Philippi last Wednesday night. The interest was unusually good. I think I am correct in stating that Philippi has never had a preacher who made more friends and who encouraged its members on to more persistent and zealous Christian work than Brother Harding did. This is what the church has been needing for years. It had got rather remiss concerning its duties and had grown somewhat lukewarm as pertaining to its love, but the spirit and earnestness with which Brother Harding presented the teachings and love of Christ seemed to remove from the brethren that indifference. Quite a number of persons were led to confess Christ, while some renewed their vows to his cause. So well pleased are all over Brother Harding's work that every one is anxious to have him visit the congregation once a month. May the Lord bless him in such work.

Longview, October 3.—Five persons were baptized during a meeting held by Brother Stirman recently, near Grand Saline. That is the mission point where I set a new congregation in order last July. There is one sectarian preacher there who is still trying to keep the people in ignorance, but their eyes are open and so are their hearts, and they are attending to what the Lord says.

Corsicana, September 21.—I wish to say to my friends and relatives that on the night of September 8, 1900, my home on the coast, with thousands of other homes, was swept away by the storm that prevailed along the coast; the storm did not leave anything standing on the place, but I am glad to say none of my family were killed. I am back at Corsicana. I am doing what preaching I can in destitute places, while I am trying to get a start in life again.

T. M. SOWELL.

Dallas, September 28.—On the night of September 10, 1900, I began a meeting with the Pearl Street church of Christ, at Denton. The meeting continued sixteen days and closed with twenty-three additions to the congregation. Denton is the home of Brother J. H. Lawson, who was with me during the meeting, leading the singing and assisting in many other ways. This was a good meeting, considering the rain, shows, fair, and theaters during the time. The church was divided here long ago over untaught things. Three of the digressives came from the disloyal band to the true body. I hope to go back soon and try another meeting. Brother Lawson is doing some good work in Denton and has some good men to assist him. I think they are going to try to do some missionary work soon. It is wrong for churches to hold meetings at home and not send the gospel to others who know it not. Just before going to Denton the church of Christ at Dallas held another missionary meeting in the city and had seven additions. I am soon to begin another tent meeting, to be held under the direction of the church of Christ at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Dallas. My work this year has mostly been missionary work, and I have enjoyed it, for it is the way the apostles did.

"About twenty years ago I was cured of a bad eating ulcer by taking B. B. B. Three large ulcers broke out on my collar bone. I cured these with B. B. B. Lately a cancer broke out in my head and ears and ate all the small bones out of my mouth, and I could scarcely eat and talk. I could eat a little strained soup; that was all. I tried nine doctors, but none could cure me, my case was pronounced hopeless; so I tried B. B. B. again, and was cured once more. I am now sixty-three years old and am able to walk a mile any time, am strong and healthy. I use a bottle of B. B. B. sometimes, not often—don't need it. The disease made me almost deaf. B. B. Field Gleanings.

The meeting with the church of Christ at Denton, Tex., was a success. Twenty-three additions to the one body were the immediate results. We should have continued at least one week longer, but Brother Dunn was anxious to get back to Dallas, Tex., to take up the work there; so we had to close. Brother Dunn is a splendid preacher and a zealous worker for the cause of Christ. It has been reported that Brother Dunn is on the digressive order, but that is a mistake. He preaches as hard against all innovations as any one I ever heard. But, doubtless, occasion has been given for such thoughts on account of a church sign that adorns the church house at Dallas, Tex., which, in part, reads: "J. S. Dunn, Pastor." Brother Dunn says it was put there by a young brother, without his knowledge or consent, and that he thinks the elders of the church should take it down or change it, and that he has preached against the "pastor system" as hard as any one. I am sure that the sign is misleading, for Brother Dunn's work is that of an evangelist, under the direction of the elders (pastors) of the church. They have a tent for city mission work, and Brother Dunn is kept busy in that work almost all of the time. The church has also sent him out to other destitute points, and through him, as evangelist, has done a splendid work in the regions beyond. Surely the work done by the church of Christ at Dallas, Tex., through Brother Dunn is a scriptural work, and I pray God's blessings to attend the brethren in it. There are many other congregations in Texas able to do such work, and I hope the day is not far distant when they will see the great importance of such work.

While in Dallas, Tex., recently, I met Brother A. M. Shelton, a loyal preacher of the gospel of Christ, and one who has sacrificed much to preach that gospel. His summer meetings in Texas were as follows: Cedar Point, eight persons baptized; The Point, one person baptized; Cotton Plant, ten persons baptized; Able Springs, four persons baptized; Willow Springs, six persons baptized.

Brother E. H. Rogers' meeting at Little Elm, Tex., resulted in twenty-eight additions.

Brother A. Alsop, of Denton, Tex., is in Kentucky, holding meetings.

I am now watching over a sick wife, and do not know when I will be able to get out, as the doctor fears she will have typhoid fever; but we hope for the best. We have had an unusual amount of sickness in our family during the past year and the way has sometimes seemed dark, but Hope is singing: "It is better further on."

There was an abbot who desired a piece of ground that lay conveniently near him. The owner refused to sell it, yet, with much persuasion, was content to let it. The abbot hired it for his rent, and covenanted to farm it with only one crop. He had his bargain and sowed it with acorns, a crop that lasted three hundred years. Thus Satan begs for the first crop. Let him sow thy youth with acorns; they will grow up with the years to sturdy oaks, so big-bulked and deep-rooted that they shall last all thy life.—Adams.

Smithianity; or, Mormonism Refuted by Mormons.

The following is a good introduction to what I wish to say. It is from Brother A. B. Wade, of Saybrook, O.:

"Dear Brother Neal: Here is my hand, my brother, in your war against the monster, Mormonism. . . . I paid an old friend—F. E. Fervis, of Painesville, O.—a flying visit, who told me that he had sent you a rare work on Mormonism. I have forgotten the name of it, but if it is the work you wish to get republished, as per your letter in the Gospel Advocate, I would suggest that you do your 'do' speedily, as I know something of the nature of Mormonism; and I believe that if the leaders find out that you contemplate such a move, they will stop at nothing to thwart your purpose. Keep a good lookout for the book itself. Mormon emissaries have been known to follow a man hundreds of miles, break into the house of friends where he was stopping, while they were away from the house, break open all the trunks in the house, but took nothing, evidently searching, as was afterwards learned, for valuable documents which he had in his possession. . . . The trunk and contents were saved by an oversight of trainmen, who carried the trunk on by, but it was returned the next day and lay in the station a day or two."

Brother Wade's warning is not the first one I have received in regard to the extreme measures Mormons take at times to thwart or get rid of a foe. Some of these warnings have come from parties who have suffered by them. While I am posted as to what was done in the past, I think the "ism" now has its teeth pulled—cannot, and dare not, bite in that way any more. All the elders I have met—some sixteen or eighteen in all—have treated me gentlemanly. I am sure I treated them that way. Still, heeding counsel of my friends, not my own fears, I have taken prudent steps in regard to my most valuable documents. The originals of the most important are in the hands of an international man, miles away, who knows what to do in any and every event.

But these "warnings" show the need of dealing promptly with a religion whose leaders made possible such scenes as the Mountain Meadow massacre, and who, no doubt, would now, if they dared, proceed to extreme measures to obtain valuable documents, such as I have, or thwart in any way the publication of them.

BOOTH'S BOMBS.

I have before me a series of letters written in 1831 by Elder Ezra Booth to Ira Eddy, a presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Booth was a Methodist minister, and was one of the earliest converts to Mormonism. He had opportunity "to know whereof he speaks;" and after a large experience, he was convinced that it was conceived in sin and born of deceit, and he renounced it. He gives a comprehensive, clear view of the whole iniquitous system. His letters are, perhaps, the first written exposé of the "ism." He says:

"If God be a God of consistency and wisdom, I now know Mormonism to be a delusion; and this knowledge is built upon the testimony of my senses. . . . When I embraced Mormonism, I conscientiously believed it to be of God. The impressions of my mind were deep and powerful, and my feelings were excited to a degree to which I had been a stranger."

He made "a journey of one thousand miles to the West;" went to Independence, Mo., "to lay the foundations of Zion."

"Since my return, I have had several interviews with Messrs. Smith, Rigdon, and Cowdery; and the various shifts and turns to which they resorted in order to obviate objections and difficulties produced in my mind additional evidence that there was nothing else than a deeply-laid plan of craft and deception."

When he went to Independence, Mo., it was "a new town, containing a courthouse, built of brick; two or three merchants' stores; and fifteen or twenty dwelling houses, built mostly of logs hewed on both sides.

"The laying of the foundation of Zion was attended with considerable parade and an ostentatious display of talents, both by Rigdon and Cowdery. The place being designated as the site where the city was to commence, on the day appointed we repaired to the spot, not only as spectators, but each one to act the part assigned him in the great work of laying the foundation of the 'glorious city of New Jerusalem.' Rigdon consecrated the ground by an address, in the first place, to the God whom the Mormons profess to worship, and, respecting the extraordinary purpose for which we were assembled, prepared the way for administering the oath of allegiance to those who were to receive their 'everlasting inheritance' in that city. He laid them under the most solemn obligations to constantly obey all the commands of Smith. . . . A shrub oak about ten inches in diameter at the butt, the best that could be obtained near at hand, was prostrated, trimmed, and cut off at a suitable length; and twelve men, answering to the twelve apostles, by means of handspikes conveyed it to the place. Cowdery craved the privilege of laying the corner stone. He selected a small, rough stone, the best he could find, carried

A Cross Clerk

Is a rarity. For the most part the young woman behind the counter is smiling and obliging, though her back hurts, her side pains, or her head throbs distractingly. The wonder is, not that a clerk is sometimes irritable, but that she so rarely shows irritation, when every nerve is quivering and she hardly knows how to hold her head up.

The nervous condition, headache and weakness, which are the results of irregularity or a diseased condition of the womanly organs, can be entirely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the functions, stops enfeebling drains, strengthens the nervous system and promotes the general health of the entire body.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free of charge. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Having used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' during the past year," writes Mrs. Mattie Long, of Pfouts Valley, Perry Co., Pa., "I can truthfully recommend the medicines for all female weakness. I have used several bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' which I consider a great blessing for weak women. I was so nervous and discouraged that I hardly knew what to do. Your kind advice for home-treatment helped me wonderfully. Thanks to Dr. Pierce."

it in one hand to the spot, removed the surface of the earth to prepare a place for its reception, and then displayed his oratorical powers in delivering an address suited to the important occasion. The stone being placed, one end of the shrub oak stick was laid upon it, and there were laid down the first stone and stick which are to form an essential part of the splendid city of Zion."

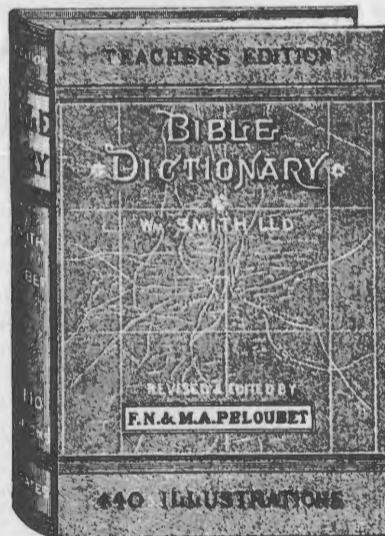

The next day the ground for the temple was consecrated, Smith himself laying the corner stone. The writer then gives directions how to find the spot destined to become famous by the infamy of these men. A sapling was selected, and they barked it on the north and east sides. He says:

"On the south side of the sapling will be found the letter 'T,' which stands for 'Temple,' and on the east side, 'ZOM,' for 'Zomas,' which Smith says is the original word for 'Zion.'"

I desire to publish these letters in tract form. Just such documents ought to be placed in the hands of the rank and file of the Mormon army. We ought to battle to win Mormons from the "ism" as well as to prevent them from winning others to it. Fifty thousand or one hundred thousand of these tracts would do a grand work. They would average about $3 per thousand for an order like that. How many individuals, how many churches, how many Sunday schools will each pay for one thousand copies of the tract? The name of donor, individual, or church or school will be placed upon the one thousand or more printed by each. The war is on.—R. B. Neal, in Christian Leader.

TRACTS.

Brother J. W. Atkisson, of 1326a Sarah street, St. Louis, Mo., has written and compiled some leaflet tracts for free distribution. The titles of the tracts are: "How Does God Pardon Sinners?" "Interpreting the Bible," "A Plea for Christian Union." The tracts are clear, pointed, and forcible. Brother Atkisson has published these tracts at his own charges. The brethren should take an interest in circulating these and other tracts. We publish the one on "Interpreting the Bible," so that our readers may be able to see for themselves that the tract is a good one:

"The Bible needs no interpretation, and no man has any divine right to accept any interpretation of it. God requires every man to accept the Bible itself without any interpretation. When men begin to interpret the Bible, they usually end by rejecting what the Bible plainly says. They have to do this to make room for their interpretation. I have never yet seen an interpretation of the Bible by any uninspired man that is as plain and as easy to understand as the Bible itself; and no marvel, for God can say things plainer than men. The right of each person to read the Bible for himself and follow its teaching, regardless of any man's interpretation or understanding, is freely granted and strongly emphasized; but this is quite a different thing from interpreting the Bible. If everybody will put aside all interpretations of the Bible and follow exactly what it says, all men will agree; for what it says to one it says to all. But how often people say, 'That's your interpretation,' when you are simply stating what the Bible says! 'The Bible is its own interpreter,' so far as any interpretation is needed. For example, if you want to know what faith is, Paul tells you it 'is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen' (Heb. 11: 1); if you want to know how it comes, he says, 'So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God' (Rom. 10: 17); if you want to know about the importance of faith, Paul answers, 'But without faith it is impossible to please him' (Heb. 11: 6); if you want to know who should be baptized, Christ will tell you, 'He that believeth and is baptized' (Mark 16: 16); if you want to learn what element should be used, Peter will inform you, 'Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?' (Acts 10: 47); if you want to know what act should be performed, Paul answers, 'Buried with him in baptism' (Col. 2: 12); if you want to know what baptism is for, Peter will tell you, 'For the remission of sins' (Acts 2: 38); or if you want to know how to wash away your sins in the blood of the Lamb, Ananias says, 'Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord' (Acts 22: 16). There is nothing man must do or know in order to pardon or eternal salvation that the Bible will not tell you. What people need is faith enough in God to take him at his word and do what he says. Interpretations are usually efforts to avoid doing what God says in plain terms.

"A white preacher asked a negro woman how she wished to be baptized. 'Jess de way dat de Savior was, sah,' were the words of her answer. 'Yes,' said the preacher, 'but there are three ways of being baptized—sprinkling, pouring, and immersion. Now which one do you choose?' 'I want to be baptized jess de way dat de Savior was, sah,' again came the answer. Once more the preacher tried to get her to say which way she wished to be baptized, and still she said: 'Jess de way dat de Savior was, sah.' The preacher turned to some of the leading members of the church and said: 'Brethren, I thjnk we shall have to take this woman to the creek. In other words, he was not willing to assume the responsibility of saying that our Savior had water sprinkled or poured upon him for baptism.' (See Mark 16: 16). That was right, too; for if we build on the 'Rock,' we must do the sayings of Jesus, not our interpretations of them, else we shall build on the sand. Dear reader, on what are you building? 'Some build their hopes on the ever-drifting sand; Some on their fame, or their treasure or their land; Mine, on the Rock that forever shall stand— Jesus, the Rock of ages.'"

J. C. McQUIDDY.

Commendation of a Great Book.

I have just finished an examination of Dr. H. Christopher's new book, "The Relations of God to the World," and I rise from its perusal with the impression that it is a most wholesome and timely book. The author presents the subject under the three-fold division of "Immanence," "Intervention," and "Incarnation," and his discussion shows wide research, accurate thinking, and rare skill in the collation and use of facts. The doctrine of "Immanence," or the all-pervading presence of God in the operation of the laws and forces of nature, is presented in choice and concise language, and its logic is clear and conclusive. In the admirable and charming discussion of matter and force, the reader will be delighted as he follows the lead of a scientific hand to the safe and irresistible conclusion that the only adequate and satisfactory source of the mysterious power that holds suns and systems in their courses in the material universe is to assume the existence of an omnipotent Being; and the section on psychic personality is no less interesting. Sixty-four pages are devoted to the subject of "Intervention," or the interposition of the miraculous element in connection with revealed religion, and the devout and thoughtful reader rises from their perusal with the profound conviction that the miracles of the Bible are as clearly within the limits of reason as are many of the seemingly contradictory, but demonstrated, facts of nature. Although many of the latter are beyond the power of the brightest and profoundest intellects to understand or explain, their acceptance is, nevertheless, forced upon us by indisputable testimony; and so the former may be accepted upon proper testimony. In the third division, "Incarnation," the author makes a fair, and conclusive argument on the most difficult problem in all the range of human thought—namely, the union of perfect divinity and perfect humanity in the person of Jesus. This part of the discussion, like all that precedes it, is fresh and attractive, and it forms a fitting conclusion to the entire argument.

I feel indebted to the author and to the publishers for their giving to the public this well-written and well-printed book; and, while a knowledge of the physical sciences is necessary to a proper appreciation of the argument in full, it may, nevertheless, be read with profit by thoughtful persons who know but little of these subjects. I pronounce it a scientific gem. Printed on good paper and bound in attractive style and form, it is worthy of a large sale. Louisville Ky. M. C. KURFEES.

Indorses Our Position.

Brother McQuiddy: I am, with the colored preacher that asked you to preach for his congregation, and I was proud to read the position you take. It is a fact that the white people and brethren of the South have done much toward educating my people, but morally and spiritually they have neglected us; but I hope, sir, you will reflect for a moment that it takes nothing but Christians in shaping a moral Christian condition pleasing in the sight of God and Christ our Savior. I am trying to preach to a little band of Christians at this place who have no place to worship; they have been closed out of every house, and there is no one to speak a word for the church of God in Christ, but many to speak against it.

I had the pleasure of hearing Brother Brygley preach when he was in Marianna, Ark., some months ago, which I enjoyed much. I loved his appearance as a preacher for Christ, and was very sorry to hear of his death. May God give to the church of Christ another great man to fill his place, for he was a battle-ax in the kingdom of Christ on earth.

We expect to build a church house here this fall; the white brethren have agreed to help us as much as they can. Three Baptists obeyed the gospel last Lord's day.

James Fenimore Cooper, the author of "Leather-Stocking Tales," writes in the preface to one of his works as follows: "There is an uneasy desire among a vast many well-disposed persons to get the fruits of the Christian faith without troubling themselves about the faith itself. This is done under the sanction of peace societies, temperance societies, and moral reform societies, in which the end is too often mistaken for the means. When the Almighty sent his Son on earth, it was to point out the way in which all this was to be brought about by means of the church; but men have so frittered away that body of divine organization through their divisions and subdivisions, all arising from human conceit, that it is no longer regarded as the agency it was so obviously intended to be, and various contrivances are to be employed as substitutes for that which proceeded directly from the Son of God." This from an author of secular writings! Truly, men of insight, who look at matters independently, and not as religious partisans, do not fail to perceive the evil of divisions and human organizations that were designed to do work which God had intended to be accomplished by the church.

Societies are not so much disease as symptom. To do away with them we must begin at home, at our own congregation, at our own hearts. Let the church rise up in its strength and glory to do its God-appointed work, and the pernicious superfluity of human societies will soon become apparent; let each member do his part, that men may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven, and the splendor of God's institution will so far outshine earth-born organizations that they will be forgotten. When Christians learn to understand what this means, "Ye are the salt of the earth" and "Ye are the light of the world," what use shall there be of "moral reform societies" and societies for the aid of orphans, of fallen women, of the poor, of the sick, of sinners and heathens? So, brother, if you dislike societies, begin to-day to remove the cause. Throw in your mite. Start out to do in the name of Christ the work of love which the societies are wrenching away from your hands and do your part toward the end that God may be glorified "in the church . . . throughout all ages, world without end." (Eph. 3: 21.)

As Cooper says, people endeavor vainly to obtain the fruits of the Christian faith without laying hold on the faith itself. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, and temperance. These things cannot be obtained in any other but God's way. Take hold of the gospel of Christ, obey it, desire the sincere milk of the word for food, and work as a lively member of Christ's body, steadfastly trusting and praying; then, by the help of God's Spirit, you will attain to this fruit as you grow up into the likeness of Christ. In him you can bring it forth, but without him you can do nothing. You will not find this fruit of truth and righteousness by way of the human society.

At the request of Brother William E. Daugherty the following letter is given, and given in his own words, as we prefer to have him speak for himself. Through pressure of business matters the letter has been overlooked and delayed:

"I would be glad to hear from churches desiring my kind of service. I also will authorize you to state that, so far as State mission boards are concerned, I work in harmony with the Florida Board of Christian Missions when at home (in Florida). As to the organ, I do not care two straws about it either way. It is simply a piece of deadwood, which is no more a part of the worship of God than the notebook is; and neither ever did or ever will divide a church unless there is an unwise and an unscriptural contention made over them (the organ and notebook). I never said a word that favored the introduction of an organ into a church, but I generally say: 'If you will spend as much to have some good singing teacher teach you to sing as an organ will cost, you will not need an organ.' I simply mention these things so that if you make a notice of my being ready to do some evangelistic work, you can also state my positions as stated here. You can thus make the notice in the Gospel Advocate consistent with your convictions and the principles of the paper and at the same time do no injustice to me as a fellow-worker in the Master's service. I do not want to deceive any individual or church. I love the gospel of Christ, the Gospel Advocate and its editors, and ever expect to."

Even the casual reader of the above letter who is acquainted with the teaching of the New Testament cannot fail to be impressed with the fact that its tone is very different from anything we read in the New Testament. In the days of the apostles there was "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," and one "kind of service." Paul did not find it necessary to explain that he worked in harmony with the "Florida Board of Christian Missions," for, being guided by the Spirit of God, he knew nothing of any board, or human organization, for doing the work that God has ordained his church to do. On this point he speaks plainly when he says: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." He did not have any fears of deceiving anybody, for he worked in harmony with nothing, save the gospel of Christ. He made mention of the Roman brethren in his prayers that he might have a prosperous journey unto them, that he might impart unto them some spiritual gift, and that they might be comforted together by mutual faith of both. "Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have some fruit among you also; even as among other Gentiles. I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." He had no message for them but the gospel, had no connection with any board, and was ready to go to Rome when God willed it so. The preacher who waits for a board to send him is not fit to preach the gospel of Christ. God demands that all preachers preach "the word," and when they do this they will find it unnecessary to stop to explain "my kind of service." "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Grant that the organ is "a piece of deadwood," it is scriptural to have no deadwood in the church. The church is composed of living material; "a peculiar people; zealous of good works." "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 2: 5.) Among the things God has commanded his people to do is singing. When God gave this command, he gave permission to use the things necessary to sing. No man can sing without a note. If God had commanded us to play in the worship, then we would have the privilege of playing on the harp, the fiddle, the organ, or any musical instrument. However, as we have neither command nor example for playing on an instrument, we must walk by sight (opinion), and not by faith, in doing so.

The extract below is taken from a private letter: "The meeting at Licking, Mo., was in full blast when I left, but I cannot say that it is or will be a success. They have an organ in the tent and are using it over the protest of some of the best members, and calling those who oppose it 'old butters, kickers, and soreheads.' I took no part in the meeting after they put the organ in. Brother Nichols took a back seat the first night and did not come back any more." This is the same old, sad story of brethren forcing their opinions to the disruption of the church of God. Men who are determined to "walk by faith, and not by sight," are either compelled to get out or do violence to their conscience by doing that which they believe to be wrong. "To him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." It is enough to grieve our hearts that the followers of Christ will not be content to worship as did the early Christians.

"If absolute orthodoxy of belief were a condition of salvation, then the trained theologian would have an advantage over everybody else; in fact, it is difficult to see how, under such circumstances, any one could be saved without first mastering the intricacies of systematic theology. But the case is far from being so. Mere orthodoxy, important as it is for many reasons, has little to do with the matter of personal acceptance in the sight of God. As Mr. Wesley aptly puts it, one may be almost as orthodox as the devil, and yet be lost; and, on the other hand, one may be terribly mixed and confused in his religious opinions, and yet be saved. The conditions of salvation, it cannot be too strongly asserted, are not intellectual, but moral. This is the whole meaning of our Lord's utterances in the Sermon on the Mount: 'Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. . . . Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.' Where the affections and the will are steadfastly set in the right direction, everything else is of secondary importance." The above is from the Christian Advocate. The "intricacies of systematic theology" are, we hope, not necessary to the salvation of the sinner, else poor Paul and Peter and Timothy and Titus and all the true, devoted followers of Christ who lived and died before the "intricacies of systematic theology" were invented could never have attained to eternal life. No, no, not the systematic theology is required to be learned; but without knowing the facts of the gospel and its conditions of salvation there can be no Christianity and no well-founded hope of salvation. True, "a man may be almost as orthodox as the devil, and yet be lost." A man may know to do right, and not do it; but, on the other hand, a man may be willing and zealous, but without the true knowledge his efforts will be misdirected, and all the superabundance of zeal and enthusiasm he may possess will serve only to carry him down the wrong road at double speed. Hence, the first command of Christ to his apostles is: "Go, teach." "No man can come to me, except the Father which sent me draw him: and I will raise him up in the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every one that hath heard from the Father, and hath learned, cometh unto me." (John 6: 44, 45, R. V.) "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 32.) "But we are bound to give thanks to God alway for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, for that God chose you from the beginning unto salvation in sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." (2 Thess. 2: 13, R. V.) "Seeing ye have purified your souls in your obedience to the truth." (1 Pet. 1: 22, R. V.) Will anything except the truth do this?

The world is cursed with the opinion that the word of God is a variable quantity—a kind of elastic band that will accommodate itself to the various peculiarities and preferences of different individuals. "Just so the heart is right." It is a small idea of that narrow way and the inexorable word that proceeded from the mouth of God. Men would save Saul, the persecutor of the church, simply because he means well and doesn't know any better and is a good fellow in other respects. The Jews were "terribly mixed and confused in their religious opinions." "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10: 1-3.) They were zealous, but they were not well enough up on New Testament theology—ignorant of God's way to obtain righteousness, which is revealed in the gospel (Rom. 1: 17), and for which we hunger and thirst. This theology can be learned from a five-cent New Testament, and it must be learned in order to salvation—part by the sinner to show him the way of salvation, part by the Christian to perfect him.

The Cumberland Presbyterian says in regard to infant baptism: "We have no quarrel with the immersionists because they do not follow the biblical example and injunction, by baptizing their infants. It would be neither convenient nor safe to do so. But we do insist that our own church, and others believing as our own believes, should give more heed to this divinely appointed duty than is being done. The infant children of believers have the right to Christian baptism, and all the sneers—sometimes misnamed 'arguments'—which immersionists hurl at this sacred rite should not keep our ministers from preaching and practicing the truth in this respect. There should be a denomination-wide revival of interest in infant baptism." It would interest us very much if the Cumberland Presbyterian would kindly tell us where that "biblical example and injunction" to baptize infants is. Of course it would be inconvenient, and perhaps unsafe, to baptize an infant, but if that "biblical example and injunction" should be found, we should try very sincerely to follow it. There may be a possibility of finding "the needle in the haystack," because, to say the least, it is there; but to endeavor to find a scriptural example and injunction for the baptism of infants is an enormous, hopeless undertaking. Men who sought for it in the interest of their own creed wearily gave up the task. Albert T. Bledsoe, one of the most candid writers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says: "It is an article of our faith that 'the baptism of young children [infants] is in any wise to be retained in the church, as most agreeable to the institution of Christ.' But yet, with all our searching, we have been unable to find, in the New Testament, a single express declaration, or word, in favor of infant baptism." Beyschlag and Bonwetsch, two German Lutheran scholars and professors of theology, failed in this enterprise; the first of whom testifies: "The New Testament contains neither command for nor example of infant baptism. The apostolic baptism in every instance requires that it be preceded by preaching and faith." Bonwetsch says: "I find no commandment for or clear example of infant baptism in the New Testament." Calvin, the real old John Calvin, says ("Harmony of the Evangelists," Vol. III., page 386): "As Christ enjoins them to teach before baptizing, and desires that none but believers shall be admitted to baptism, it would appear that baptism is not properly administered unless when preceded by faith." Thayer, author of the celebrated New Testament Lexicon, states: "I know of no explicit, indubitable precept for or example of infant baptism in the New Testament." We fear that the Cumberland Presbyterian was rhapsodizing when it called infant baptism a "divinely appointed duty." Or can it expect to do better than the candid scholars who failed to find either example or injunction in the Scriptures to baptize infants?

"And so President McKinley is an immersed Methodist. Despite that fact, however, there are few Baptist Churches in the country which would be willing to receive him into their membership without re-baptism." (Baptist and Reflector.) I am not sure that Mr. Folk is correct. The Baptists reject baptisms performed by disciples as well as those performed by Methodists. Dr. Whitsitt has been a bitter opponent of the disciples, and, to bring reproach upon them, he wrote a book to prove the Mormons sprang from them. I am not sure, but I think this book was written before the election of the late President Garfield. But when Garfield was elected, Dr. Whitsitt wrote to one of the Tylers, seeking to bring about a union between the disciples and Baptists. For the sake of a Baptist President, he was willing not only to take Garfield, with his alien baptism, but with him all of the heretical disciples, with their alien baptism. Judging from this, for the sake of a President they would take McKinley, with his Methodist baptism. When the Baptists go to trace their lineage, they claim as their ancestors those who for centuries denied that a Christian could hold a political office, but now there are no people more disposed to boast of and put forward to positions of honor in the church those who attain positions of political honor. Thus Governor Levering, and Governor Northern, and others that are honored in the political world are sure to be honored with prominent religious positions and to be bragged of in the papers. Do not be too sure you would not take President McKinley were he to offer himself for membership. Men of worldly honor now have many attractions for Baptists.

Our Exchanges.

WE WILL FIND THAT FOR WHICH WE LOOK.

Men are likely to find in the world what they are looking for. If they go forth in search of injustice, dishonesty, falsehood, and impurity, they will not be disappointed. All these hideous things are here and easy of detection. But there are also better things in abundance for such as have the eyes to discern them. Truthfulness, uprightness, manly virtue, and brotherly kindness are displayed in every age and in every country. It is well to form the habit of expecting them to come to our notice. We do not advise any one to ignore the presence of evil in the world; that would be folly; but we do insist that it is bad policy to become blind to the good that offsets and counterbalances the works of the devil and his children.—Christian Advocate.

PUNNING ON SACRED THEMES.

Do not indulge in parody of favorite and familiar hymns; do not practice or encourage punning on texts of scripture. Punning is the cheapest kind of wit. Besides, a hymn once stained by parody can never be restored to its original whiteness; it bears ever after the wrinkle and soil of parody. If it is called up in the most sacred company or on the most solemn occasion, it will come as the clown or court fool in cap and bells. The text which came as a cup of nectar to your lips, once laden with the pun's low wit, henceforth brings but the stale beer of the wayside booth. You will not hate, but you will test your grace in forgiving the thoughtless triviality which with pun or parody has spoiled for you a verse of sacred song or holy writ. For holy use it must be pure and unsoiled. A single spot or stain on the linen ephod unfits it for temple service. The sacred word must be free from low associations. Keep temple service and sacred ritual free from earthly soil.—Zion's Herald.

CONTROL YOUR THOUGHTS.

Until you have learned to control your thoughts, you will never be able to live a godly and righteous life. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he; and it is because the thoughts that we entertain in the hostility of the soul are such worthless and vain ones that our words and acts often bring so heavy a disgrace on the name we love.

Well might the wise man say: "Keep thy heart above all keeping, for out of it are the issues of life." When the heart is right, the ear and the eye and the mouth and the foot will necessarily obey its promptings; but when the heart is wrong, filled with tides of ink, like the cuttlefish, it will develop itself in the impurity to which it gives vent.

If you habitually permit evil things to have the right of way through you or lodging within you, remember that in God's sight you are held equally guilty with those that indulge in evil acts, because you are withheld, not by fear of him, but by your desire to maintain your position among men.—Reformed Church Messenger.

SUSPENSE.

There are few things that more severely test the philosophic temper than the strain of suspense. Many a man has reached the pitch at which he confessed to himself that he could more easily bear the news of the worst result he imagines than the continued uncertainty; and it is probably true that in such circumstances many have taken a decisive action, against their better judgment, in order to precipitate a conclusion because the suspense had become unbearable. But there are certain occasions when you cannot do that. You cannot, by any effort on your part, hasten the tidings of an overdue ship, nor the crisis of a fever when some one that you love lies at the point of death. You realize that human sagacity and skill and enterprise have reached their limit. The issue does not lie in your hands, but in forces that are beyond your control. The greatest comfort in these times of anxiety does not come from bracing the will against what is feared, but it comes from a calm faith in the goodness of God and the assurance that he will dispose the issue of events for our good. If this seems like cant, let us reflect that the emergencies of life often elicit a faith in Providence to which we are strangers in the times when everything is going well with us.—Watchman.
