All true conception of providence leads man to faithfully and perseveringly use all the means and comply with all the laws God has provided for man's helping himself. God has never promised to help or bless the idle, slothful, or indifferent man, either in the material or spiritual world. God abundantly blesses him who is diligent in business and who prays without ceasing. We should work as though all depended on our labor and pray as though all depended upon God. Both are true. All blessings come from God. They come only in response to the faithful and diligent effort of men to obtain them in God's appointed way. D. I.

Brother Lipscomb: I have just returned home and find your letters. In regard to famine money, I am receiving money from parties just as you say you desire to send. Money so sent to me is sent on to India, and the society has nothing to do with it in any way, and knows nothing of it. In this way I deem it my duty to respect every one's conscience. I send the money to our missionaries in India because I know of no one else who would use it as faithfully, unless it would be missionaries of the denominations with whom I am not in correspondence. The reason I think it better to send money than provisions is this: There is food stuff in India and the adjoining countries better adapted to them than our Western grains. Rice and millets and other small grains constitute the principal food, but it is so high in price that famine people who have no money are unable to touch it. Of course, provisions sent in are good, but from my experience in the last famine, I believe that money is better.

All money or food distributed by me is given not in my name nor the name of the mission, society, or government, but invariably in the name of Christ, whose name we should honor in everything we do.

G. L. WHARTON.

The South College Street church of Christ raised eighty-five dollars and twenty-five cents for the India famine sufferers. I knew of no one through whom it could be better distributed than the missionaries at work there. G. L. Wharton is in this country, raising money for them, and I wrote him, telling him we did not wish it sent as society money, but, as disciples of Christ, would like for it to be sent only in his name and in the way it would do most good. We asked whether it was best to send money or provisions. His answer we publish for the information of others on this subject. His address is Hiram, O. D. I.

There is no truly Christian man who keeps an unconverted pocketbook. No man has the slightest right to say of his wealth: "It is mine; I may use it selfishly if I will." No man is free to make an option as to whether he or his property shall come under God's law of service. He and his property are of necessity under that law.—Our Young Folks.

The success of battle depends quite as much on the courage and obedience of the soldiers as on the wisdom and generalship of the officers; and so the welfare of the world is more concerned in the faithful discharge of duty by the thousands who lead quiet and obscure lives than by the great achievements of the few gifted ones.—Boys' Lantern.

Touch thou mine eyes, that I may see What thou wouldst have me do and be.

—Helen E. Brown.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. S. Ward preached at Foster Street church of Christ last Lord's day.

Brother Larimore is booked to hold a protracted meeting at Tracy City some time in June.

Brother T. Q. Martin preached at Hille's Chapel, in Hopkinsville, Ky., last Lord's day. He reports the little band as doing very well.

We have received from the church of Christ, at Horse Cave, Ky., a check for one hundred dollars for building fund for the Fanning Orphan School. Who will be next?

Brother R. H. McLaurine left us last Saturday to take a month's vacation and recreation. He will spend the time with his relatives, near Lynnville, Tenn.

The Hille's Chapel church of Christ, of Hopkinsville, Ky., has suffered a great loss in the death of Brother Güm Adams. He was an earnest worker and one who loved the truth of the Lord.

Brother H. F. Williams has just returned home from a tour through Hickman and Lewis Counties. He was gone twenty-four days and preached nineteen sermons, besides introducing much good reading among the people.

Brother R. T. Sisco, of Palestine, Tenn., has our sympathy in the death of his wife. She passed away after a long and lingering illness. May the God of all comfort sustain and strengthen our dear brother in this dark hour.

Brother H. Lipscomb is having some interest in preaching to the inmates of the State Prison. There have been several baptisms of late. An interesting Sunday school in the chapel and also in the woman's building is held every Sunday afternoon.

Brother J. D. Tant continues the meeting in West Nashville with a growing interest. He is preaching to large and attentive audiences. From all sources, twenty-five have been added to the congregation. The meeting will continue indefinitely.

Brother Lipscomb: I have noticed that you write of William Sewell's first wife as if you did not know her maiden name. Sister McDonald, formerly of Monroe, Overton County, Tenn., says that her (Mrs. Sewell's) name was Sallie Turner, and that she was a teacher. She is as worthy of a place in history as any of whom I ever heard.—G. F. Martin, Lawrence, Tex.

Brother E. G. Sewell did not fill his appointment at Thompson's Station last Lord's day on account of smallpox being there. The brethren wrote him that a crowd could not be collected. He closed the meeting at the Bible School last Wednesday night, with four additions. On Friday, June 1, Brother Sewell expects to leave for Bonham, Tex., to engage in protracted meeting work.

EDITORIAL.

Christ is our truest friend.

Christ is the true bread of life.

God's way is a highway of holiness.

God has the right to direct our lives.

Please God and we seldom please men.

A true friend will stand the strain of adversity.

People may be very religious, and yet not be Christians.

Whatever you think would not please Christ, do not do.

Every man is responsible for the condition of his own heart.

God calls his children his temple and declares he will destroy those who defile it.

Be what God would have you be, do what he would have you do, and be blessed of him.

The hireling flees when danger comes, but the good shepherd never deserts his sheep.

Rest that strengthens unto virtuous deeds

Is one with prayer.

Too many of us have our affections centered on the things of earth, and not on the treasures of heaven.

Pointing out the faults of our neighbors is not near so profitable to ourselves as finding out our own faults.

Christ's soldiers fight not with the sword of steel, but with the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

No earthly shepherd was ever so solicitous for his sheep as the great Shepherd is for those who follow him.

As the stream flows from the fountain and is pure only as the fountain is pure, so do our deeds flow from the heart and are pure only as the heart is pure.

The pope says: "Whoso removes himself from Rome removes himself from Jesus." He means by this that as the professed "vicar of Christ on earth" all must bow before him.

The Bereans were commended because they searched the Scriptures daily. We cannot serve God without knowing his will and we cannot know his will without searching the Scriptures.

As a religious system Mormonism is young, but it has made rapid strides. The country is full of Mormon missionaries, and their teaching is an "ism" that will have to be met and overcome by the word of God.

"Apostle" Orson Hyde is reported to have said in a sermon: "If at a marriage in Cana of Galilee, Jesus was the bridegroom and took unto him Mary, Martha, and the other Mary whom Jesus loved, it shocks not our nerves. If there was not attachment and familiarity between our Savior and these women highly improper only in the relation of husband and wife, then we have no sense of propriety. We say it was Jesus Christ who was married, whereby he could see his seed before he was crucified. I shall say here that before the Savior died he looked upon his own natural children as we look upon ours. When Mary came to the sepulcher she saw two angels and they said unto her: 'Woman, why weepest thou?' She said unto them: 'Because they have taken away my Lord [or husband].'" This is some of the blasphemy of Mormonism, and as an "apostle and revelator" of the Mormon Church the utterances of Orson Hyde are as good to Mormons as those of the apostle Paul. In fact, they aver that their "apostles" can "make scriptures as good as those in the Bible." Not even a flag of truce should be respected from a Mormon elder, but there should be unremitting war to the death of their corrupt and corrupting doctrine.

It is asserted that every man has a right to his opinion. While this may be true, no man has the right, the divine right, to preach that opinion. God has never called or licensed any man to preach his "views." Christ commanded his apostles to "preach the gospel." Paul exhorted Timothy to "preach the word." He told the Corinthians that he "came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom," declaring unto them "the testimony of God," but that he "determined not to know anything" among them "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." He said he wanted their faith to stand "in the power of God," and not "in the wisdom of men." Paul, therefore, did not preach "his views." Common sense would teach the servant who had been given wheat, with instructions to sow it in a certain field, that his master did not expect him to procure, nor would he approve of his procuring, other seed and sowing them with, or to the neglect of, the seed provided. In the spiritual world "the seed is the word of God" (Luke 8: 11), and "the sower soweth the word." Sowing "the word of God" is simply preaching "the gospel of Christ," which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." To the Galatians Paul wrote: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 8.) But what gospel had Paul preached unto them? "The gospel of Christ." These are but a tithe of the passages that might be adduced in proof of the proposition that whoever assumes to teach God's word must teach it faithfully—all of it, and nothing more. Having, therefore, this great ocean of truth from which to draw, why should the preacher attempt to draw from any other? Why offer his audiences "boiled peas" (this was the subject of a discourse preached in Nashville some time ago), instead of "the sincere milk of the word?" What connection has the subject, "Two Great Americans, Washington and Lincoln," with "Jesus Christ, and him crucified?" Why offer dross for gold? The "wisdom of the wise" for "the foolishness of God?" "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

Letter heads, note heads, billheads, statements, envelopes, etc., made by us in best style and on good material at prices that are right. Write to us for samples and prices.

Send us the names and addresses of any nonsubscribers whom you think sample copies might induce to become regular subscribers. We will send the paper one month free, and discontinue at close of the month unless they subscribe during that time.

Last Saturday's mail brought us orders for sixty-one copies of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." We anticipate a large sale for this book. Applications are coming in for agencies, and those who want counties to canvass should write at once, stating their choice of territory.

Give us your order for an American Revised Version Reference Bible. We have the following numbers: No. 3750, cloth, round corners, red edges, $1.50; No. 3752, French Morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges, $2.75; No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $4; also, beautifully printed on "Oxford India Paper," No. 3763, Alaska seal, divinity circuit, leather lined to edge, silk-sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $6.25. All of the above have 12 maps each, are printed from bourgeois type (large), and are 8x5½ inches.

Send us $2 for Smith-Peloubet's Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. It has over 800 pages, with 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. It is a valuable work of reference. Brother J. C. McQuiddy used this book for a long time in connection with his work on the Gospel Quarterlies and found it more helpful than any reference work used by him. "The chronological tables are very full, and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and their History' being added."

"The Relations of God to the World," by Hiram Christopher, A.M., M.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., was recently issued from our press. We quote the following from the author's preface: "It is the object of the author in the following pages to present some evidence, derived from certain facts and phenomena of the material universe and the life kingdom of the earth, in support of the thought that the forces operating in these departments of nature are but phases or different manifestations of one and the same force—namely, the power of the Creator which he has exerted in effecting special and general purposes which find their realization in the object for which the whole scheme of nature was devised and completed." This book is neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and contains 192 pages. It will be sent, postpaid, for $1.

We have decided to grant agencies for "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, to agents by counties. This book will be sure to sell and will do great good. It consists of twelve sermons preached in the long meeting which recently closed in Nashville, interspersed with quotations from his private and personal letters, and selections—both prose and poetry—made from books and papers in promiscuous reading during a long period of years. The editor says: "I know it will be ornamental, and I believe it will be both interesting and wholesome reading." In granting territory to agents we of course reserve the right to fill all orders sent direct to us, and orders sent now will be filled in their order as soon as books are ready for delivery, which will be about the first of June. We want earnest, working agents all over the country. Apply at once for terms.

"Gospel Praise" is the name of a new hymn book edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell. We think this will prove to be the best and most popular hymn book we have ever published. It is copyrighted this year, will contain three hundred and twenty pages, and will, we think, be ready for delivery by the last of this month. The Armstrong Company, of Philadelphia, music typographers, write: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise." Brother Boyd, of Donelson, Tenn., says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received." Advance orders will be filled just as soon as books are ready for delivery.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I inclose a clipping from Dallas News of April 1, 1900, giving report of the annual election of officers for the Third Christian Church of Fort Worth, Tex. It will be seen from the report that the church did not elect any elders. I am told that it is a fact that the church has never set apart or elected elders, it being the policy of the church to discard altogether what they call "lay elders," the "pastor" and deacons comprising the officary of the church. It seems to me to be the policy of the so-called progressive churches to eliminate altogether the eldership and to confer upon the "pastor" the duties that belong to the eldership. In my opinion, such a position is in violation of the plain teaching of the Scriptures and is giving up one of the strong positions we have always held in regard to church government.

BEN. E. SMITH.

I rather honor this church for its open course. They do not pretend to follow the Bible. The church at Fort Worth affords an example from which others may learn a lesson. The conservative brethren have kept preachers that did not oppose bringing in things not appointed by the Lord, on the ground of policy, until they have all been swept away from fidelity to the Bible. Christians are sewed to the Lord with a chain stitch. You cannot cut loose in one point but it ravel loose all around.

Brother Lipscomb: Please publish in the Gospel Advocate an article on "Man's Duty to His Family and Neighbor." What condition is a man in when he will not speak a kind word to any of the family—that is, he is a very good man on Sunday, but on Monday or any other day except Sunday he is rash? Please answer this, that we may learn our duty.

Lockney, Tex.

A READER.

The best way is to read how the Bible teaches men to treat their wives and children. (Eph. 5: 22-33; Col. 3: 18-21.) A paper is not the place or method to admonish and expose brethren for their personal faults nor to gratify feelings toward them. The way to admonish them is to do it first privately, teach them and show them they are wrong. The Holy Spirit says you must "restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1.) The object of a paper is not to administer personal proofs or to make exposure of personal delinquencies, but to aid in the elucidation and application of truths taught in the Bible. Let us keep it to that end and correct personal faults as the Scriptures direct, and our work will do more good, because better pleasing to the Lord. The private admonition and the reproof in the church of God are God's means for doing this work, and that is always the best way.

Brother Lipscomb: I indorse what you say in the Gospel Advocate of May 3, 1900, in answer to Brother J. H. Williams, about joining the Odd Fellows and neglecting church duties; but is it right for the Gospel Advocate to oppose secret orders and at the same time advertise the emblems and badges of these orders for sale? Please explain this in the Gospel Advocate; it will profit much.

Whitewright, Tex.

JAMES F. ANDERSON.

I did not know they had been advertised. I have not time to read the advertisements in the Gospel Advocate even. Our business manager has just notified me that the advertising agents decline to continue their contracts with the Gospel Advocate because so many advertisements they send are rejected. We try to keep all advertisements out of the Gospel Advocate that have evil influence or immoral tendency, and we ought to try to be consistent; but there is nothing immoral in the buttons and insignia of these organizations. The advertisement is to let people know where they can be obtained, if wanted. The failure to advertise discourages the buying of them by keeping people in ignorance of where they can be found. A virtue that is maintained only by ignorance of where to find or how to get into vice is a very weak and sickly type of virtue. If virtue, fidelity to God, does not stand upon a more solid footing than ignorance of where or how to find opportunities to disobey him, it will not avail at the last day. Only tried and tested fidelity will be accepted of God. It is good to pick at the motes, it is better to call attention to the beams.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain, in the Gospel Advocate, Thess. 2: 3-13, and oblige.

Trezevant, Tenn.

CORA WILLIAMSON.

I suppose the second letter to Thessalonians is meant. It is universally agreed that it means an apostasy in the church would take place before the day of the Lord, or the judgment of the world, should come. A power would arise in the church that would turn away from the law of God, that would exalt itself into the place of God. God's place is to make laws for his people. This power would take this authority on itself and change and modify the laws of God. So it is said to sit in the temple of God, to exalt and oppose God as the only ruler and lawgiver, and set itself forth as the rival of God. Paul tells them he had warned them of this when he was with them. Paul said that power was beginning to work in his day, but was restrained, for the time, by a power which I believe was himself; that when that power was taken out of the way—when Paul should die—then he would be revealed; that power would come, according to the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceit of unrighteousness for those who refuse to receive the truth in the love of it. That power Jesus will destroy with the breath of his mouth and bring it to naught by the manifestation of his presence. God permits this delusion to come upon his people, that they might believe a lie and be damned, because they did not believe his truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. The Holy Spirit tells this would come to pass. The question of difficulty is: When it did come to pass, and what are the manifestations of it? This power was to rise in the church, be of a religious character, set aside the law of God, and make laws to take the place of these laws of God. Protestants generally say the Roman Catholics constitute this growth that began in the days of Paul, but was hindered in development until his death; then professed Christians began to meet to consider the general welfare, and, through delegates, to form organizations that by degrees grew into the papacy. I think there is but little doubt this is true; but this is only one development of the principle. All dissatisfaction among Christians with the laws and appointments as God gave them is a manifestation of this spirit of lawlessness or rebellion against God, and all organizations growing out of this spirit of dissatisfaction are manifestations of the man of sin. Roman Catholicism, I do not doubt, is the highest manifestation of the spirit of the man of sin. But every time we manifest a dissatisfaction with the laws and appointments of God we show this spirit, and every law adopted or organization made is an embodiment and manifestation of the spirit of lawlessness. Lyman Coleman, an eminent Presbyterian historian, voices the unanimous decision of church historians when he says: "They instituted no external form of union or confederation between those of different towns or provinces; nor within the first century of the Christian era can any trace of such a confederacy, whether diocesan or conventional, be detected on the page of history." ("Presbyterian Church," page 47.) "It is not until the second century that any traces of that sort of association from whence councils took their origin are to be perceived, when we found them accruing here and there. Some of them were tolerably clear and distinct; others, again, but slight and faint; which seems plainly to prove that the practice arose subsequently to the times of the apostles." These councils to consult for the good of all sprang up after the death of Paul and through successive stages culminated in the papacy in the sixth century; but if the papacy is the grown man of sin, these converts in their successive stages represent him in his childhood and youth. All similar organizations are of the same character, although external surroundings may hinder a growth into the same form and character. All substitutions of human order for God's appointments are phases of the development of the mystery of iniquity that began to work in Paul's day. Jesus will destroy all these developments when he appears.

Will of I. C. Sewell.

(Published by request of the executor.)

In the name of God, Amen. I, I. C. Sewell, of the town of Wilsonville, in the county of Obion and State of Tennessee, being of sound mind and memory, and considering the uncertainty of this frail and transitory life, do therefore make, ordain, publish, and declare this to be my last will and testament—that is to say, first, after all my lawful debts are paid and discharged, the residue of my real estate I give, bequeath, and dispose of as follows—to wit: To the Fanning Orphan School, located at Hope Institute, five miles east of Nashville, Tenn.—that is, the trustees of said school for the benefit of said school upon the conditions and specifications hereinafter mentioned—my tract of land and appurtenances situated thereon, known and described as the Isaac Sewell farm, lying on and under the bluff of Reelfoot Lake, in Civil District No. 5, Obion County, Tenn. The deed to said land was decreed to me by decree of the Circuit Court for Obion County, at Troy, Tenn., in November term, 1870. For a more specific description and calls of said land, see Circuit Court Clerk's book at Troy, November term, 1870. Since the above decree was made I have sold off one hundred and twenty-five acres out of the northwest corner of said tract, leaving six hundred and seventy-five acres now belonging to me.

1. Within twelve months after my death said land to be sold in a body or cut up in lots to suit purchasers, and to the best advantage to bring the most money, and to be sold upon the following terms—to wit: One third cash in hand, to be paid by purchaser; remainder, in one and two years; notes to be executed by purchaser, with two approved securities and a lien retained upon said land for the unpaid purchase money.

2. Said money, as paid in, shall be placed in bank or safe hands at lawful interest.

3. Said interest shall be collected annually and paid over to the trustees of said Fanning Orphan School; provided, always, that said trustees are members of the church of Christ.

4. If said school should cease to exist or for any purpose be discontinued, then the remainder of my estate left to go to my lawful heirs. Likewise I make, constitute, and appoint J. R. Williams to be executor of this, my last will and testament, upon condition he execute a good and lawful bond, not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars, for the purpose of carrying into effect this, my last will and testament, upon the conditions hereinbefore mentioned.

And I further hereby revoke all former wills by me made.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal on January 21, 1886.

[Seal]

I. C. SEWELL.

Witnesses: A. M. Moultrie and J. D. Ott.

Be it known unto all men by these presents, I, the said I. C. Sewell, of the town of Wilsonville, county of Obion, and State of Tennessee, have made and declared my last will and testament, bearing date of January 21, 1886. I, the said I. C. Sewell, by this present codicil, do ratify and confirm my last will and testament, and in addition to said will and testament do hereby instruct that if at my death my farm should be rented out to any party or parties for one or a number of years, the executor of my last will and testament is to first carry out the conditions and limit for rent as may be specified in contract with tenant, either by myself or agent, and, at the expiration of said contract for rent, then to carry out my will and testament according to specifications; and that this codicil be adjudged to be a part of my last will and testament.

Witness my hand this 25th day of March, 1898.

I. C. SEWELL.

Witnesses: J. W. Darnall and A. M. Moultrie.

Let us endeavor to the last hour. It is the end that determines everything.—Joseph Parker.

Home Reading.

SHOWING LIGHT.

"Yes," said Mr. Akers, "I did advertise for a smart, industrious boy; but, you see, he mustn't be too smart. The last one was, altogether, and I had to ship him two or three days ago, and for anybody as old and stiff and baldheaded as I am to be his own boy is too hard work, a great deal too hard!"

Billy Harmer looked puzzled. Somebody once said to Billy, "You're a good boy, but you'll never set the river on fire;" and Billy had answered, gravely: "Nobody could set a river on fire; water won't burn." And he does not know to this day why they laughed.

So now he said: "But, Mr. Akers, how could a boy be too smart? I thought we all ought to be just as smart as we could be."

"Well," said Mr. Akers, slowly, "if you don't know yet how a boy could be too smart; perhaps I'd better not tell you; we'll just see about the rest of it."

So then Billy was asked a number of questions, and Mr. Akers saw that he was trying to answer them all with perfect truthfulness. No, he had never "worked out" anywhere before. Yes, he did forget things, quite often. No, he didn't know how to sweep and dust, but he thought it would not take him long to learn.

"All the rest of them," said Mr. Akers, as if he were speaking to himself, "knew everything about everything; also, they asked me what wages I gave, before I had a chance to ask them anything. What wages do you expect?" he inquired, turning suddenly to Billy.

"Mother said she thought I couldn't expect more than two dollars a week and my board just at first; she said she thought I was worth that much," said Billy.

"Now, I'll tell you what," said Mr. Akers, "it wouldn't suit me to board a boy; I know too much about them; so what do you say to three dollars a week, and board yourself?"

"Then do you mean to take me?" asked Billy, eagerly.

"Yes," replied Mr. Akers, "for a month on trial; most anybody can behave himself for a week, but a month settles it."

"If mother is willing," said Billy, "I'll be glad to come for that; and I think she will be. I'll go and ask her, sir, and come right back and tell you."

Mrs. Harmer was quite willing. Her home was near Mr. Akers' shop, and she was very glad that she could still have Billy with her at mealtime, for they two were all alone. So the next Monday morning at seven o'clock, Billy reported at the shop door, and was met there by his new employer, who set him at once to work, sweeping and dusting, and putting to rights his queer collection of goods and chattels.

He had really two shops in one. The building had once been a schoolhouse, and the room was a large one. On one side were two counters—one for dry goods; the other, for groceries—and on the opposite side was one long counter, overhung and underhung, and often loaded down with all sorts of second-hand things, from quaint, beautiful cut glass to cracked earthenware. There was never a sale of household goods which occurred within half a day's drive from that old shop which Mr. Akers did not attend; and as things were often sold in "lots," he sometimes bought what he called "trash" for the sake of one or two things in the lot that he really wanted. Summer boarders in the town had a great liking for that shop and had so spread its fame that sometimes visitors from far-distant places came to see it or to hunt for some old-time article of China, glass, or furniture.

Billy found the second-hand side of the shop deeply interesting, and was never tired of dusting, polishing, and rearranging the "stock" on that side; but he tried to be just as faithful with the less interesting dry goods and grocery department, and at the end of the week Mr. Akers said he had done very well for a beginner. "But then," he added, "anybody can keep it up for a week."

One thing had troubled Mrs. Harmer about letting Billy take this situation. Mr. Akers had a very good reputation for honesty and fair dealing, but he took pains to let people know that, as he said, he was "not religious," and to explain that while so many people who professed religion did tricks that he would scorn to do, he had "no use for it." Mr. Kirkpatrick, the minister of the parish to which Mrs. Harmer and Billy belonged, liked the old man and also felt very sorry for him, and lost no opportunity for having a talk with him and trying to convince him that the people of whom he talked so much did not go wrong because they were religious and to make him see what a real and mighty force genuine religion is.

Billy's mother told him that in his new position she wanted him to remember: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "You are only a little boy, Billy," she said, the night before Billy began his new work, "but even a child is known by his doings, and while I wouldn't for the world have you setting yourself up to teach your elders and betters, it's just this way: Mr. Akers knows that you are a Christian, and if you are not completely honest and faithful, he will think to himself: 'Here's another of those Christians who preach what they don't practice.' So you watch yourself, my dear, and don't you ever hide anything or try to screen yourself if you've done the least little thing amiss."

It was toward the end of the second week that Billy's courage was sorely tried. He was gently dusting and arranging some very beautiful old cut glass which Mr. Akers had exultingly brought home the day before, when, as he lifted a dainty little cruet, which he especially admired, the handle literally "came off in his hand," although he was sure that he had used no needless force in picking it up. Mr. Akers was behind his desk, quite at the other end of the shop; he could not possibly have seen what had happened; and for a dreadful moment Billy was tempted to fit the handle into its place again and leave it as he had found it:

"For I couldn't have broken it, just picking it up," he said to himself, "and yet I know he won't believe me when I tell him it was all I did; and if he makes me pay for it, I'll not have any wages for ever so long; and the rent isn't ready for next time, I know it isn't. But that would be great 'shining,' you coward!" he added, suddenly facing himself, and he picked up first the handle and then the cruet, one in each hand, and marched to the desk. Mr. Akers was busy with his books and he said, "Well?" as if he did not like being interrupted.

"I don't suppose you'll believe me, sir," said Billy, in an unsteady voice, "but I was dusting those cut-glass things you got yesterday, and I took hold of the handle of this and it really and truly did come off in my hand."

"And what made you tell me?" asked Mr. Akers, calmly. "Why didn't you just stick it back the way you found it and leave it to come off in my hand?"

Billy felt his face turn fiery red. "I very nearly did, sir," he said in a low voice, "but I remembered something mother told me the night before I came here."

"What was that?"

Billy repeated as nearly as he could remember them the words his mother had given him to keep, while Mr. Akers looked at him keenly, and when he stopped the old man said: "You'll be a dreadful little scoundrel, young man, if you don't turn out well, with a mother like that; and now you can be easy about that cruet. It was broken when I took it out of the basket yesterday and it struck me as a good chance to set my favorite boy trap, and you're the first boy in half a dozen that it hasn't caught."

Mr. Akers chuckled, but Billy felt a sudden rush of angry tears to his eyes. "Do you think that was fair, sir?" he asked indignantly.

"Well, no, come to think of it, I don't suppose it was," said Mr. Akers, thoughtfully; "but I never saw it in just that light before. If you keep on behaving yourself and minding your mother, maybe I'll see some more things. I'm going to see your mother. Shake hands, Billy, and we'll make a fresh start. I promise not to set any more boy traps for you, and I know quite a number."

So Mr. Akers and Billy shook hands, and as Billy went back to his work he remembered a certain story, in which the king asked, "Who are the parents of this young man?" and he resolved once more that "the Lord being his helper," that mother of his should never, never have any reason to be ashamed of him.—Margaret Vandegrift, in the Young Christian Soldier.

For the structure that we raise,
Time is with materials filled;
Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.

—Longfellow.

The glory of a life is in the quantity of devotedness to God, in the fidelity with which the aimless thing is done, in the quantity of the higher life that can be thrown into the lowliest duty or the humblest position.—Boys' Lantern.

THE WORD TO AGATHA.

The room was in the daintiest order, even to the plants on the little stand by the window. The fire in the open grate blazed cheerily, a cozy work table stood beside it, and books and papers lay invitingly near; but Agatha, who had slowly arranged it all, turned listlessly away from the offered occupations.

"I might write letters or sew, I suppose, like other women; it is all there is left for me now," she said, bitterly. "O, dear, how can I ever feel interested in such things?"

She had loved music. Her voice had been her treasure, and she had made everything else subservient to it and had availed herself of every opportunity for its culture. She had used it mercilessly, indeed, in her eager haste for success, and it had failed her just when she was most anxious to press forward. "Rest" the physicians had prescribed, "time and rest," which meant that there must be months, perhaps years, of waiting, even if she ever fully regained what she had lost.

Meanwhile she had her pleasant home—a home that did not need her earnings and that was very glad of her presence. Some of her friends had suggested that fact as a bit of consolation, but she had refused to accept it.

"As if my art could be any less to me because I do not need to support myself by it!" she said to herself, scornfully repudiating a thought so mercenary.

Her father and the boys were unquestionably glad to have her at home again; indeed, she thought the latter unsympathetic and almost selfish in their pleasure, after she heard Willie say to a friend: "O, a sister at home, if she can't only whisper, is worth a dozen fine singers that are always away!"

That was when she first came home, however. He might have changed his opinion afterwards, when she moved about, day after day, in a spiritless, moody way, interested in nothing but the occupation that had been taken away from her. Outside the pretty room was an autumn morning, crisp and bright, but Agatha, pausing by the window, only looked out drearily. Up the street came a little newsboy, whistling merrily between his cries of "'Ere's yer Tribune!"

A brown-faced, black-eyed little fellow he was, with a wondrously businesslike air, as if a weight of responsibility rested on his small shoulders. Agatha recognized him as a boy whom she had often seen, and she noticed his costume, from his battered and rimless hat to the miserable remnants of shoes he wore.

"But he is happy enough," mused the girl, half enviously, as the whistled notes met her ear. "He has known nothing better; he has planned for nothing higher; and so there is no disappointment or heartache about it."

Just then came a sudden break in the cry of "Tribune." Jimmy's treacherous old shoes slipped on the frosty sidewalk and he fell at full length, a part of his papers flying into the road. There the mischievous wind caught them and whirled them this way and that, sending two or three into a little pool that ruined them. Jimmy gained his feet and limped after his papers, picked up those that were not spoiled, and, straightening his package, started on. Agatha had opened her window and leaned out to speak to him.

"Did you get hurt, Jimmy?"

"O, a little—twisted my leg and sort o' skinned my back."

"Are you going right on? I thought perhaps you would like to stop and rest a little," she suggested, kindly.

"Go'n' right on?" repeated Jimmy, rolling up his black eyes in quizzical amazement. "Why, you don't think a fellow can waste his time a-settin' down to pity hisself? There's too many other folks to look after, and this 'ere world ain't long enough."

He scurried on, giving the bruised back a rub now and then, but calling out his papers as vigorously as ever. Agatha looked after the sturdy little figure, with an odd expression growing in her face. She laughed, though the tears came to her eyes.

"Thank you, Jimmy—unconscious little preacher! Sitting down to pity oneself isn't a very useful or elevating employment. I believe I will begin to look after the other folks," she said.—Kate W. Hamilton, in Forward.

No cheating or bargaining will ever get a single thing out of nature's "establishment" at half price. Do we want to be strong? We must work. To be hungry? We must starve. To be happy? We must be kind. To be wise? We must look and think.—Maskin.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., MAY 24, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

FOUNDATION FOR HIGHER CRITICISM AND INFIDELITY.

There is at the present time an extensive run of what is called higher criticism and infidelity. There are doubtless many things that had their share in bringing this state of things about; hence, it is useless to mention any one thing as the sole cause. But often we can see things that are very prominent as causes for such results. I have been observing the general run of things in religious affairs for half a century and there are two things that in my judgment are very prominent as causes for the ruthless disregard of the word of God at the present time. One of these is the doctrine of abstract spiritual influence that has been the very life and soul of the whole matter of conversion in the denominational world for a long while past; the other is the matter of the government of the church, which is carried on by creeds, confessions of faith, councils, synods, associations, and such like.

Regarding the first, the people under its influence have for many generations regarded their conversion as having been accomplished, not by the word of God, but by an inward, secret-working power that they have been led to believe to be the Spirit of God. Hence, they have not at all regarded their religious status as the result of God's word, and do not feel any dependence upon the Bible in their conversion. Consequently, they feel under no obligations to the Bible in this matter. They may regard it as good history, good morals, and such like, but do not regard it as having made them Christians. Very many of them have even been taught that the word of God is a dead letter and utterly unable to produce any such result as the conversion and salvation of the soul, and of course such an idea of the word of God as that is not calculated to inspire any confidence in or respect for the divine record. They do not look upon it as the cause of their conversion or as having had anything to do with it. In fact, very many have been taught that a conversion based upon the written word is no religion at all, but a mere outward form, without any life in it in any way.

Many indeed, in my early remembrance, derided and sneered at the idea of a mere book religion, calling it a cold, lifeless, and powerless religion. These opinions regarding the word of God were not merely in the backwoods and dark corners of the earth, but were in the best and most advanced and refined communities; they prevailed in the towns, cities, centers, and most enlightened parts of the world; they were in the schools, colleges, universities, and everywhere; they were proclaimed from the pulpits and published from the press; they were read in religious papers and in commentaries; they were read in sermon books and all kinds of religious literature from my earliest remembrance. This state of things has been going on for generations, almost without a break or hindrance of any kind, in the denominational world. Its power and influence have been taking deeper and deeper hold upon the hearts and minds of the people, and all this time, when the thought of their conversion would come up, they attributed it not to the word of God, but to an inner, secret-working power of the Holy Spirit upon their hearts, separate and apart from the word of God, and, as many of them expressed it, independent of the word of God. The whole tendency of such a feeling is to cast a shadow upon the Bible as the word of God, and is utterly against it.

If a secret, inner working power can convert the soul, why may it not lead and develop the soul in all things? There is but a step between this and placing man's reason upon the throne, making his own intuition his guiding star, and placing that as the standard, instead of the Bible and its sacred truths. The natural result of this would be that whenever there is a conflict between man's reason or inner light and the word of God, reason or "inner lightism" prevails, and the word of God is set aside, is repudiated as uninspired, and as nothing more than the words of men in expressing their own opinions and as simply expressing things as they appeared to them in a dark, in an unenlightened age. That is exactly what higher criticism, so-called, is doing to-day with the Bible. It is no more in their estimation than the opinions of other men who lived in the dark ages and before man's reason had been brought to the front by education and refinement. This is but a very natural sort of an outcome of such causes.

Suppose, on the other hand, that during all these generations the people had been led in their conversion by the word of the Lord, by what the apostles preached to the people, and which stands recorded in the New Testament, so that they could, any day, read precisely what they had done in becoming Christians; and that when any one called in question their claim to be children of God they could have turned to the New Testament and read to them what they had done—then their confidence would have been in the truth, in the word of God, and they would have learned to lean upon that and to depend upon it for assurance that they were right in the sight of the Lord, and would never have thought for a moment that the book upon which they relied was not inspired. In this way confidence in and respect for the word of God would have increased with their age and there would have been no effort to find some other guidance than that contained in the Bible; but when they think they have received everything valuable to them, even the salvation of their souls, from outside of the Bible, then they are sure to discount the Bible and to exalt that something else as their standard, in disregard of God's word. In this way, to-day, very many people are regarding the Bible as an antiquated book, as something only suitable for the ignorant of the dark ages, as but a yoke of bondage to the élite of this advancing age; and surely we need not wonder at this when we consider the extent to which this abstract spiritual influence idea has been carried. If the Bible be not the only light to man regarding salvation, then it is worth nothing to man at all, for it not only fails to reveal any other source of light, but condemns every other claim of light from heaven as false and ruinous to the interests of man.

One of the leading writers of the New Testament says: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Hence, if the Bible be an inspired book, all claims of light from heaven from every other source in the world are false.

The claim of abstract spiritual influence to convert men is utterly false if the Bible is the book of God; for if that claim be true, then that is another source of light from heaven. It is a matter of glad tidings, proposing to bring salvation to man upon wholly different principles from the New Testament. With such a conflict as this, one or the other is bound to be false; and as we have undoubted evidences that the New Testament is true, then the claim of abstract spiritual influence is false, and equally so all this matter of higher criticism and claim of light outside and independent of the Bible, built upon or rising out of it, is false. It is a dream, a delusion built upon another delusion as false as itself.

No matter how well the higher criticism, therefore, may appear nor how much of reason may be offered in its defense, it is a false system, built upon false premises, and can bring no possible benefit to any human being; but that this matter has had much to do in bringing these modern departures from and repudiations of the Bible, we have not a doubt. It is, therefore, the duty of every child of God on earth to stand for the defense of the Bible and against everything that would undermine and set it aside.

In addition to the abstract influence idea the creed business comes in for its share in the mischief done. If men can come into the church and be saved without the word of God, then the conclusion that they can be governed without it and make their own way to heaven without it is certainly very easy; and so the matter goes. And why not? It is certainly as easy to find a plan for the work and worship of the church as it is to find a way to come into the church without the Book. Many have made that step. Now, if they could withstand the Lord and carry their point at the judgment seat, they would be all right; but the trouble is that when they are called to the judgment seat the books will be opened and they will be judged by the things written in books, according to their works; and they will stand or fall, according as they have done or have not done the things that are written in God's book, not their own.

The people that have been for all these years advocating abstract influence in conversion, making and advocating creeds and confessions of faith, arranging for the government of the church by councils and synods, and such like evidently did not realize the mischief they were stirring up, both for themselves and future generations; but they have done the work, and all the advocates of these things on earth cannot now undo the mischief these things have done nor stop their destructive tide. It is easy enough to start trouble, but sometimes very hard to stop it after it once gets under way. When people get headed away from God, and especially when they go away from him because they do not like his way, they seldom ever stop till ruin overtakes them. The only way there was to stop the antediluvian world from its wickedness was ruin by a flood of waters, and hence that was brought upon them. When the ancient Jewish people started away from God they grew worse and worse until the whole nation was carried into captivity and their whole religious order of things was brought to an end. With me it is very probable that some of the very darkest pictures of the book of Revelation are yet to burst upon this world on account of these sad departures from the word of God in Bible lands and the attempt to run the religion of Jesus by human wisdom instead of divine wisdom. The darkest clouds that are hanging over Bible lands to-day are on account of the treatment of the word of God by those that are themselves making high pretensions to the religion of Jesus. No higher offense against God has ever been committed than setting his word aside and the attempt to serve him by human wisdom. This is certainly being done all the time by those teaching and practicing the abstract spiritual influence idea and pushing the authority of creeds, councils, and such like, all of which are by human wisdom, and to perish with the using and to bring ruin upon their originators. As to this higher criticism, infidel business, no man can tell the extent to which it may yet go. These are the very things that are paving the way for the ruin of this world, and it is certain to come, unless men turn from them; but the Lord's people should prayerfully and earnestly strive to put a stop to these things and to lead people to believe in and obey the word of God.

We are satisfied that this whole business of abstract spiritual influence, creed making, the authority of councils, higher criticism, and everything of that character, all of which set the word aside and substitute something else in its place, are developments of the man of sin, as spoken of in the New Testament. When that power is destroyed, as it will be, all those that act in such a way as to be component parts of it will be destroyed. E. G. S.

MEETING AT THE NASHVILLE BIBLE SCHOOL.

This meeting began on Lord's day, April 29, 1900, and closed on Wednesday night, May 16, 1900. The meetings were at four o'clock in the afternoon and at night through the week and at eleven o'clock and at night on Lord's days. The meeting was held in a tent and was well attended throughout. The members attended remarkably well, day and night, throughout the meeting, and many others with them at night, closing with a good audience the last night. There were three additions by baptism and one restored during the meeting. The meeting was indeed a pleasant one. The afternoon preaching was chiefly for the edification of Christians, while at night the effort was to sow the seed of the kingdom chiefly on the line of first principles. The interest manifested was good throughout the meeting, and we trust much and lasting good was accomplished through the truth.

The pupils of the Bible School manifested a lively interest in the meeting, showing the interest they feel in the study of the Bible. Brother Harding and Brother Lipscomb and the other teachers are certainly accomplishing much good in teaching the Bible, thus affording the young such an excellent opportunity of learning the Scriptures and qualifying themselves for usefulness in the church, in whatever capacity their services may be needed. This is the chief design of the Bible School: to qualify the young for the general work of the church, whether it be preaching or general home work. The study of the Bible is the great need of the church at the present time. They need to study the Bible, not to make what the world would call "polished preachers," but to do the work the Lord wants done in the church, in any and every capacity required. The church needs better qualified elders, better qualified teachers in the Bible classes, in the public services, in the home, and everywhere that Christian work is to be done; the church needs men that understand the Bible and that will stick to the book of God alone for all the work and worship of the church, as against human wisdom and innovations of every shape and form.

We do hope the brethren everywhere will take a lively interest in it and work for it and thus enable those engaged in it to do still greater good. Besides the Bible, they teach the different branches of literature, like other schools, thus affording the young every opportunity to prepare themselves for usefulness. But all are expected to do some studying in the Bible, which gives a superior opportunity for all to learn the teaching of the greatest book the world holds. We would rejoice to see a larger number than ever attending this school in the future, and see them going out with the love of God in their hearts, a more extensive knowledge of his word and a general qualification for usefulness. E. G. S.

Believe me, the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well.—Selected.

PERPETUATION OF ERROR.

A naked evil of party organization is, they perpetuate and entail the errors and partisanship of one age to succeeding ones. The introduction of untaught questions into religious teachings creates divisions and parties among the followers of Christ. These divisions and parties are organized into denominations with these divisive questions formulated into a creed as their basis. The perpetuation of the party perpetuates the creed and transmits its errors and divisive questions from one generation and century to another. Take, for example, the Calvinistic creed. It was advocated by Calvin in an age and country lacking in biblical learning and moved by strong party feelings. By virtue of his talent and position as a man, and the general lack of intelligence of the people generally, especially in biblical learning, the extreme statement concerning nonelect angels, men and infants, was adopted as a part of the creed and it has been handed down through that party creed until the present day. Were they starting anew, the churches would not adopt it. But it comes down as an heirloom of strife from the fathers. Denominational pride, the indisposition to change, and the uncertainty if the change is once started as to where it will stop cause them to hold to the statements of dogmas, while many bitterly oppose them and comparatively few really approve them as now stated. The evil of this state of affairs is the more apparent if we consider the elements that enter into a man's faith. The condition of the soil and the culture given the plant enter almost as much into the quality of the fruit produced as does the seed planted. The condition of a man's heart and the circumstances surrounding him have as much to do with his religious faith and life as the truths he believes. Only the seed sown into a good and understanding heart produces the true, good fruit. Many who heard the gospel were embittered by it and gnashed on the teachers. Those who saw Lazarus raised from the dead, instead of being moved by the manifestation of divine power and love to honor the Savior, sought to slay both Lazarus and Jesus to destroy the evidence of his power.

The days of Calvin were days of bitter and fierce partisan strife. Religion and politics were in alliance. Religion has always added intensity to the fierceness of political strife when entering into it. When the religious feelings are excited by political rivalries they add intensity and bitterness to the strife. Leading religionists thirsted for the blood of those who did not believe as they did. Calvin had Servetus burned because he did not believe in the Trinity. It does not help the matter to be told that the Catholics were seeking to catch him to burn him or that Luther and Zwingli relied upon the kings for support and in turn supported them in their wars, so they were all practical persecutors; it only shows the age had a low and imperfect estimate of Christianity and were unfitted for formulating creed statements of what the Bible teaches. If it were ever allowable, who now would think of intrusting a man who would burn another for disagreeing with him in religious faith, with the work of formulating a creed for the church for present and future generations? Yet the creeds of Christendom were formulated in an age and by men that relied on the civil law to suppress heresy and to convert sinners to Christ.

There can be but little doubt that the bitterness of Calvin's party feelings toward those who opposed him tinged the ideas he held of God's character and his feelings toward men and angels, and stripped God's character of the tone of love and mercy so rightly manifested in the gospel. The gospel plainly teaches that God is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" and live. The bitter party feeling of Calvin gave tone to the character of God as represented in the Presbyterian "Confession of Faith." None believe it now, save as they try to believe it because it is written in the creed of their fathers and they are required to subscribe to it or leave that church in which they were reared and give up other doctrines they hold dear.

The same bitterness of feeling warped the judgment and perverted the teachings of the Bible on the subject of the guilt and condemnation of infants, and on this misconception baptism as the act in which God promised to forgive sins was applied to infants. Infant baptism by Calvin, Luther, and Wesley was based on the belief that infants are guilty of original sin and subject to condemnation. With this belief, coupled with the idea that sins are forgiven in baptism, infant baptism was established. Now, no one believes infants are guilty of sin or under condemnation, yet the practice based on it remains as a ground of strife and division. So of other theories and inventions of men. Except for the creeds containing these divisive theories, the doctrine of election and infant damnation would not trouble this age. The denominations and creeds hand down the strifes and contentions of one age to succeeding ones. The Bible contains the full will of God to man. This can need no change. But if we adopt it as we learn it, there are no hindrances in the way of parties and creeds of past generations to hinder the conformity to the will of God. But to adopt this binds all to conform to that will as they learn it, caution being given that those who have learned the more should forbear with those who have learned less; but that all, whereto they have attained, should walk by the same rule and mind the same things.

The only trouble about the sufficiency of the word of God is, men think they are wiser than God and undertake to add to, take from, and amend the word of God to make it more effective. This is presumptuous in men and is the besetting sin of men that has from the beginning led men away from God. But all the additions of human hands must be burned up. Jesus will deliver to his Father the kingdom free from all additions of man. Man may do as he will; it will not alter the course and purpose of God. He will accept no service except that ordained by himself, and the kingdom the Father accepts will not be mutilated by human hands.

D. L.

The Fanning Orphan School acknowledges the following donations received since September 1, 1899: From Phillips & Buttorff Manufacturing Company, one National Steel Range, worth $100, price to us, $40; W. G. Sadler, one ton of wheat fertilizer, worth $15; McCormick Machine Company, one hay rake, worth $25; Deering Harvester Company, one new truck binder, worth $125.

D. L.

If religious excitement is used as a source of pleasurable thrills, it is as destructive to the nervous system as any other form of stimulus that may be forced upon it. The religion that shows itself in trances, catalepsy, and hysteria is not religion at all, but mania. It is the sign of the palsy of the brain, not the salvation of the soul.—President Jordan, of Leland Stanford University.

With most men and in most cases sin comes not as the result of strong passion, ungovernable impulses, and revolt against convictions. It is an outcome of weak will, scanty brains, and unchecked selfishness, brought in contact with constant and petty temptation of corrosion.—President Jordan, of Leland Stanford University.

When you come down from the summits you do not come away from God. There is no task in life in which you do not need him. The work hence needs his light as truly as the cloister.—Boys' Lantern.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one-cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

GORMAN.

Mrs. Mary A. Gorman, aged eighty-five years and five months, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Fannie E. Bell, on April 20, 1900. She was a faithful member of the church of Christ for fifty-five years, always advocating the right and pleading for the plain word of God. Three children survive her, two daughters and one son, James O. Gorman. She died in the full triumph of faith, ready to meet the Lord whom she had so faithfully tried to serve. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

(Mrs.) A. C. ATCHISON.

Stewart, Tenn.

WYATTE.

Sister Mary Wyattte was born on March 24, 1863; obeyed the gospel in August, 1884, under the preaching of Brother C. N. Sparkman; and lived a consistent Christian life till the time of her death—January 17, 1900. Sister Wyattte leaves a husband and three children to mourn their loss. We know, dear father and children, that it is hard to give up loved ones, but we remember that John says: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." So be faithful in this world, and you will meet the wife and mother in a world of bliss and glory, where sad partings cannot come.

R. A. L.

RILEY.

William Taylor Riley was born on August 5, 1833, and departed this life on April 15, 1900, being sixteen years, eight months, and ten days old. He was a kind-hearted boy, always sympathizing with those who were poorer in this world's goods than himself. He was the youngest child of his parents and the pet of the whole family. He was loved by all his schoolmates and by his teacher, who said that he had some of the noblest traits of any boy he ever met. We were all sorry to give him up, but the Lord's will must be done, and not ours. He died with that terrible disease, pneumonia; he also had congestion of the lungs. He had never obeyed the gospel, but he is in the hands of a merciful God, who is too wise and too good to do wrong and who does all things right. If it were not for the rich promises in God's word to those who trust him, we could not bear our troubles, but God never puts any more on his children than he gives them strength and grace to bear. He leaves a father, mother, and sister, together with other relatives and many friends, to mourn their loss. DELA RILEY.

CORLEY.

Barbara Jane Corley, daughter of James and Ann McMurphy, was born on June 11, 1832; was married to L. S. Corley on March 13, 1852; and died on March 31, 1900. Sister Corley united with the Baptists in early life; but in 1868 she became a member of the church of Christ, since which time I have been intimately acquainted with her, and through all these years she has brought forth abundantly the fruits of a humble, devout Christian. She leaves a husband, one daughter, fourteen grandchildren, and many sorrow-

ROYAL

Absolutely Pure BAKING-POWDER

No inferior or impure ingredients are used in Royal for the purpose of cheapening its cost; only the most highly refined and healthful.

Royal Baking Powder imparts that peculiar sweetness, flavor and delicacy noticed in the finest cake, biscuit, rolls, etc., which expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

Alum is used in making cheap baking powders. If you want to know the effect of alum upon the tender linings of the stomach, touch a piece to your tongue. You can raise biscuit with alum baking powder, but at what a cost to health!

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

ing friends and relatives to mourn their irreparable loss—two daughters two sons, and several grandchildren having preceded her to that city which lies beyond the dark, cold grave. Though she was a feeble, delicate woman for many years, her indomitable energy tided her over all obstacles. She made her home cheerful, her friends happy, and the church of Christ to feel the invigorating warmth of her devout Christian life. The afflicted family have my profoundest sympathy in their sad bereavement. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." (1 Thess. 4: 13.) "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.) DAVID ADAMS.

Pineapple, Ala.

KILBY.

Susan Emeline Harmon Kilby was born on March 24, 1833, in Watauga County, N. C.; was married to A. E. Kilby on March 4, 1854; was baptized into Christ on September 22, 1880, by Brother E. H. Rodgers, at New Roe, Ky.; and on April 11, 1900, she fell asleep in Jesus in the hope of the eternal reward. Thus ended the life of a humble, faithful child of God. She, her husband, and their respective families were sectarians up to the time of their obedience to Christ. At this time most of her children were grown, and some of them were married. The entire family were deeply religious and they were earnestly endeavoring to live up to what they believed to be their duty. When Brother Rodgers went into their community, preaching the simple story of Christ and telling sinners what to do to be saved, they heard him patiently, searching the Scriptures daily to learn the truth; and as soon as they became convinced of their duty, she, her husband, two daughters, and one son-in-law obeyed the gospel of Christ. Sister Kilby was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, and a true Christian. She was one of those meek, quiet, unassuming women whose greatest influence was in her home. She was a woman whose adorning was that of "a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Her influence over her family and intimate associates was wonderful. She died without a murmur or a struggle. On the morning of April 12 she was gently laid to rest by the hands of loving friends in the village graveyard at Gurley, Ala. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

JOHN E. DUNN.

SNOW.

Owen D. Snow was born in Upshur County, Tex., on December 15, 1855. He was reared to manhood in the same community. His parents and early surroundings were of Primitive Baptist faith. He was married to Miss Cynthia Louisa White on March 25, 1878. Brother Snow was early led into the light of the truth, and obeyed the gospel soon after his marriage. A strong congregation of Christians has grown up at Shady Grove, Tex., his home, and I know not just how many years he has been acting as elder; but I know that, since I became acquainted with Brother Snow and this congregation, four years ago, his vigilance, consecration, and untiring labors have been such that the church there is now laboring under the deep and heavy gloom of an irreparable loss. Brother Snow was stricken with pneumonia about the last of March, and his frail frame was only able to battle with the grim monster about one week. He died a little after 11 o'clock on the evening of April 8, just as his day of most active service (Lord's day) was drawing to a close. The heavenly vision of the New Jerusalem that appeared to him in his illness, of which he said it was impossible to describe the beauty, only showed the bent of his mind and the absorbing theme of his thoughts. His labors and trials on earth are done. He left a faithful wife and seven children to battle with the stern realities of life in the flesh. At the time of his death Sister Snow was in almost a hopeless condition with that same dread pneumonia. She is slowly recovering now, and we hope and pray she may be spared to watch over and train those dear children in the ways of usefulness.

L. M. OWEN.

TENISON.

F. J. Tenison, son of J. B. and H. C. Tenison, was born on May 24, 1858; was married to Miss E. J. McMahan on November 21, 1880; obeyed the gospel in 1881; and died on January 17, 1900, at his home, near Valley Springs, Ark., of that dreadful disease, consumption, from which he had suffered for two years. He was well and favorably known in Tennessee, Texas, and Arkansas. He bore his afflictions with great patience and talked freely of his departure, without fear; but often wept that he should have to leave his devoted wife and children, and would call his dear ones around him and sing "Over Jordan We Shall Meet By and By." He was endowed with a brilliant intellect and his kind and gentle disposition won the hearts of all who knew him. The poor, the friendless, and the orphan all found in him a friend indeed. He delighted in his work, that his light might shine to brighten the lives of his fellow-creatures; and we see the reflection now in column after column written by his friends in his home paper, lamenting the friend they have lost. An all-wise Father has called him to his reward, and we find great consolation in the words of him "who doeth all things well." He leaves a wife and five children, three boys and two girls, and three sisters with sad and lonely hearts as they journey on "the pilgrim's way." Our hearts are made sore by this trial; but O, the anguish we were yet to endure! Just one month later our younger and only brother, T. W. Tenison, bade us adieu and joined Brother Joe, "just over the river." He died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Kate Brannan, near Hico, Tex., of that same dreadful disease, consumption. He was thirty years, four months, and four days old. He obeyed the gospel at the age of twenty-one. He had no family, but his life was one of continual sacrifice. He was generous almost to a fault. He always found some one to whom he could lend a helping hand, and was always happy in his labors of love. Truly, he was one who followed the scriptural injunction to "let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Little children all knew him to be their friend, and in their childish griefs they had only to go to "Uncle Tom" to receive aid and sympathy. Truly, his sisters will miss this devoted brother, but as they stood by him in that sad hour of death and witnessed his recognition that the end was near and heard him lift his feeble voice and try to sing and then calmly bid them "Farewell," while his gentle spirit took its flight, they know that their loss is his eternal gain.

SISTERS.

In the Spring

When we would like to feel strong, vigorous and ambitious, we are weak, tired and dull; appetite is poor, food is not relished, sleep does not seem to refresh, we go to bed tired and get up tired. This condition is because of thin, impure, sluggish blood which is unequal to the demands of the body for more life, vigor, energy, strength. Nature cries for help, and it is to be found in Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, blood enricher, blood vitalizer.

Take

America's

Greatest

Spring

Medicine

Be sure to get Hood's, because it is Peculiar to Itself—and remember, also,

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Double-minded. No. 3.

Jesus presents himself to the world as the Messiah—the only begotten Son of God—and as such we must either receive him or reject him. He allows no rival. The system of religion he brought to the world is all-exclusive. If we receive it, we must receive it as the only system given by the Lord, and, once received by us, every other system falls lifeless at the door of our heart while pleading for admittance. We cannot accept Christ's religion and at the same time be a Mohammedan or a Buddhist; we cannot even accept with it the law of Moses, with its ordinances and ceremonies, because Christianity forbids that, excluding even its possibility, not to speak of its advisability.

To enter into Christ one must accept and love him with the whole heart; and those who are in him must recognize him as the only Savior, his body as the only one in which his spirit dwells, and, consequently, his church as the only church in which salvation is promised and may be found. His authority also must be recognized as supreme. We are not permitted to hearken even to Moses and Elijah when their teachings differ from the Savior, for on the holy mount, the mountain of transfiguration, the apostles heard the voice from the cloud saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." At this time the authority had been taken from Moses and Elijah and given unto Jesus, so that, just previous to his ascension he said to his apostles: "All power [authority] is given unto me in heaven and in earth." If we accept Jesus as divine and with our whole heart, we must believe this statement, and, believing it, receive the authority as supreme. If we do not accept his authority as supreme, we do not, with the whole heart, receive him as divine or as the Christ, the Son of the living God.

In view of these things, how extremely foolish, how exceedingly dangerous, this double-mindedness when found in members of the church! If one cannot succeed in dividing one's affections between two masters, neither can one succeed in dividing the manifestations of love and devotion between them. Jesus said: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. . . . He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." (John 14: 15-21.) Again, John writes: "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous." (1 John 5: 3.) In harmony with the foregoing, John also wrote: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Those who profess to be Christians, and yet love the world and the ways and practices of the world, make God a liar, and his word is not in them. "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." We cannot love God and the world. The "carnal mind . . . is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Here lies the cause of so much lukewarmness, double-mindedness, and love of the world and its ways by members of the church. Many such persons ask: "May I be a Christian and dance?" "Is it wrong to play cards?" "Can I attend the theater?" To my mind such questions betray either ignorance of the teaching of the Bible or a corrupt, degraded, carnal mind, not subject to the law of God. Dancing, cards, and the theater will not make you a better Christian; they will not assist you in the least in following Him who was meek and lowly in heart and went about doing good. On the other hand, they claim your time, your attention, your energy, your love, your money, and your influence. Have you any more time, energy, love, or influence than could be profitably spent in service of Christ and of humanity?

Jesus said: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5: 16.) When you are in the theater, in the parlor sociable, at the card table, or engaged in the dance, are you letting your light so shine that others seeing it would glorify God? Are you setting the example? Is not the world setting the example, and are you not following it?

Is there any appearance of evil in the theater, the dance, or the card games? The Christian's duty is, and his pleasure should be, to "abstain from all appearance of evil." (1 Thess. 5: 22.) "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded." (James 4: 8.) T. E. WINTER.

Fayette City, Pa.

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, and and white. Price 25 cents. Samples JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

THE BEST PLACE

to buy your Suit, Hat, and Shirt for yourself and the boys is

Abernathy, Langham & Shook,

205-207 PUBLIC SQUARE.

SUCCESSORS TO W. A. LANNOM.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Letters and Sermons of

T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY.

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price $1.50

Confederate Veteran Reunion, Louisville, Ky., May 30-June 3, 1900—Reduced Rates via Southern Railway.

For the occasion of the annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans, at Louisville, Ky., on May 30-June 3, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to Louisville, Ky., at very low rates. These tickets will be sold from points in Tennessee on May 28, 29, and 30, and from other points on May 27, 28, and 29, limited to return until June 10, 1900. An additional extension of the final limit until June 25, 1900, may be secured, provided tickets are deposited with joint agent of the terminal lines at Louisville on or before June 4, and on payment of fee of fifty cents.

The Southern Railway offers excellent service en route to Louisville, and those contemplating the trip should communicate with nearest ticket agent of the Southern Railway for sleeping car reservations and any information they desire.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, • OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Tonight

Just before retiring, if your liver is sluggish, out of tune and you feel dull, bilious, constipated, take a dose of

Hood's Pills

And you'll be all right in the morning.

General News.

The Hotel Helene, in Chicago, was destroyed by fire. Two persons were killed and fifteen injured.

The United States Supreme Court has decided that it has no authority in the Kentucky governorship case, and has dismissed the petition.

The Carr gun is the newest arrival among the rapid firers. It weighs but twelve pounds and has a capacity for throwing four hundred and fifty shots a minute.

Under Spanish rule in Cuba elections were always held on Sunday. The elections to be held on Saturday, June 16, mark a departure from the established custom.

The Supreme Court decided the inheritance tax law to be constitutional and valid, but held that it applied to the amount of the legacy, and not to the estate as a whole.

Every street car in the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., has a letter box, and every car is expected to slow up at all crossings in order to permit persons to deposit mail matter.

Norwegian legislators propose that girls who do not know how to knit, sew, wash, and cook shall be refused permission to marry. Daughters of wealthy men are not to be excepted.

Over one hundred thousand incandescent lamps and a great number of arc lamps will be used in the illumination of the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., next year.

In his efforts to devise some system of long-distance signaling at night, William A. Eddy, of Bayonne, N. J., has sent a small search light some distance above the earth's surface suspended by kites and flashed by means of a key on the ground. The scheme is said to be very successful.

The House bill relating to game birds was favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. The purpose of the bill is to preserve, distribute, introduce, and restore wild birds in the United States, and the question is placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Through the efforts of Senator Bate a bill passed the Senate appropriating $200,000 to establish a branch soldiers' home at Johnson City, Tenn. General Bate had not hoped to get the bill passed this session. The Johnson City branch home will differ from all others in that it will admit soldiers of the Mexican and Spanish wars.

The system of printing without ink, the impression being made by the electric current, is being put into practical operation in London, where an energetic company has been formed to exploit the new process. It is said to be possible to get sixty thousand impressions an hour by this method and at a cost much less than with the use of ink.

American wooden ware is in great demand in England and Germany and is now finding its way into Russia. It is also exported to the West Indies, South America, China, Australia, New Zealand, India, and South Africa. The articles which find a most ready market abroad are clothespins, pails, chopping bowls, folding chairs, refrigerators, ice cream freezers, washtubs, and churns:

Mrs. Betsy Cole, a white woman, who resided at McHoney, in the First District of Henderson County, Tenn., died recently at the age of one hundred and sixteen years. She was born in North Carolina in 1784, came to Tennessee when quite young, and has resided in the same neighborhood for about ninety-eight years. She was the oldest person in the county and probably in the State.

If every community had a few hundred citizens like Henry C. Bliss, of West Springfield, Mass., there would be little need to worry about the prospective exhaustion of the timber supply. During the past twenty years Mr. Bliss has planted over one thousand trees. The work has been done systematically, and the effect has been to greatly beautify the streets and public places of the town.

Czar Nicholas II. proposes to commemorate the completion of the Siberian Railway by the erection in front of the Nicolai Railway station—the starting point of the road—of a monument to the late Alexander III., on whose initiative the work was undertaken. The monument will be executed according to the designs of Prince Trubetzkoi, the sculptor, and M. Schaechtel, the architect.

Twenty-five hundred barrels of apples, of the choicest quality, and of long keeping varieties, were shipped from New York to be exhibited at the Paris Exposition. In addition to this, the State of California will send, weekly, a car load of miscellaneous fruit during the whole period of the Exposition. The fruit will cross the continent in refrigerator cars and will be shipped in cold storage vessels from the Atlantic seaboard.

Governor Roosevelt signed the Hallock bill. The new law makes it a misdemeanor to sell or possess for sale the plumage of wild birds and songsters. Under the law the plumage of these birds can be worn: Sparrows, crows, hawks, gulls, crow blackbirds, common blackbirds, cranes, ravens, and kingfishers. The plumage of these cannot be worn: Quail, partridge, pheasants, wild duck, pigeons, meadow larks, grouse, woodcock, orioles, robins, bluebirds, and woodpeckers.

The rise in the cost of building materials and in the wages of labor has led to the suspension of work on thirty government buildings which are in various stages of erection in different parts of the United States. The appropriations for these structures were made when materials were cheaper and the amount of money at the command of the government officials is not sufficient to permit the completion of the work without further appropriations to meet the deficiency.

The government has sent four postal inspectors to Havana to investigate the fraud in the post office there. The gentlemen sent are: Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow; F. M. Hamilton, of the New Orleans division; J. R. Harrison, of the St. Louis division; and W. R. Keys, of the Chattanooga division. Postmaster E. H. Thompson, of Havana, local office, has signed a sworn statement in which he tells of his irregularities in office. He used the government's money for his own purposes and changed figures.

The commercial cotton crop of last year, the cotton year ending on August 31, last, was the largest in the history of American commerce. Our home consumption amounted to 3,550,000

600 bales, of 500 pounds each, an increase of 1,056,00 bales over the previous year. It is estimated that the total crop in the United States was 11,189,205 bales and the world's total consumption was 13,932,000 bales. The value of our export cotton for the year ending June 30, last, is given as $209,564,774, representing 7,456,821 bales.

The dairy industry in South Dakota has had a phenomenal development. Seven years ago there was not a creamery in the State; to-day there are one hundred and seventy-nine running every day and doing a business of more than four million five hundred thousand dollars a year; and the industry is only in its infancy. Thousands of farmers who for years tried to raise wheat and were able to harvest only half a crop every other year are now receiving from sixty to three hundred dollars a month each from their creameries.

The Senate Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, though its chairman, Senator Morgan, presented its written report upon the Nicaragua Canal bill. The report includes the statements of Admiral Walker and other members of the committee appointed to investigate the various routes for an inter-oceanic canal and also the conclusions of the committee with reference to both the Nicaragua and the Panama routes. The committee reports in favor of the Nicaragua route. On the general question of a canal the committee takes the position that whatever canal is constructed its ownership must be American.

The State of Pennsylvania produces more coal than any State or country in the world, with the exception of Great Britain. By the returns received from James Roderick, Chief of the Bureau of Mines, interesting facts and figures are gathered in connection with this important industry. He says that there were 73,066,943 tons of bituminous coal mined last year, these tons being 2,000 pounds, while there were also 54,034,224 tons of anthracite of 2,240 pounds produced there last year. Of course, a great deal of the bituminous coal was made into coke, so that 12,196,570 tons of coke were produced and 52,895,383 tons were shipped to market.

The Southern Industrial Convention was held in Chattanooga, Tenn. The sessions were held in the Auditorium, which has a seating capacity of four thousand five hundred, and the decorations that were made, both in this building and in the business portions of the city, for the spring carnival, just closed, were left undisturbed for the convention. The exhibit of the University of Tennessee, the commercial museums of Philadelphia, and the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Normal, Ala., were placed in the Auditorium and formed a most unique and attractive feature of the convention. Secretary Nelson delivered an address on agriculture. The next meeting will be held in New Orleans.

The new Iowa school library law provides that every school district must annually set aside from five to fifteen cents for each child of school age, the money to go toward the purchase of books for the library. During the academic year the books are to be kept in the schoolhouse, but during vacation time they are to be kept for the use of the pupils in the house of some one selected by the board. As the books may be loaned to persons not pupils, it is suggested that the country stores be used as vacation quarters for the library, and the proprietors of those places, in view of the additional trade which the presence of the books would bring, are eager to comply. The books to be purchased are limited to a list which the State Board of Education is to make out. At present nearly all the Iowa cities and towns are availing themselves of the law permitting school directors to spend twenty-five dollars a year on books. Women's clubs are aiding largely in the work, and in the rural districts the new regulations will probably do as much.

For Sleeplessness, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. Patrick Booth, Oxford, N. C., says: "It acts admirably in insomnia, especially of old people and convalescents."

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

ASTHMA

FREE. If you suffer from any form of Asthma we want to send you free by mail, prepaid, a Bottle of the famous Kola Plant Compound. It is Nature's Sure Botanic Cure for the disease, and we guarantee that it will forever stop all your suffering. We are sending out 50,000 Bottles free by mail to sufferers, to prove the wonderful power of this New Discovery, and we will be pleased to send one to you. Send your name and address on postal card. Address, The KOLA IMPORTING CO., No. 1164 Broadway, New York.

The Mormon-Christian War.

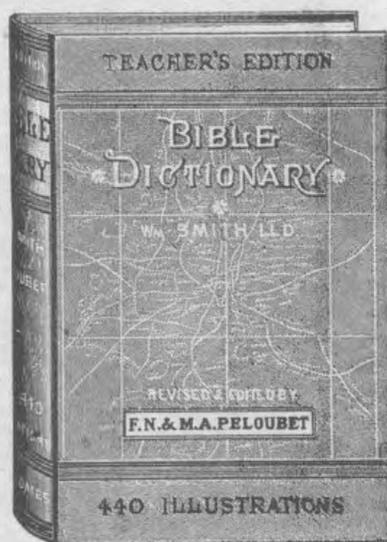

For years I have been hunting for a book printed in 1834 that gave a full exposé of the "Golden Bible," alias "Book of Mormon," fraud.

Neighbors of the Smiths were examined and affidavits made. A thorough investigation of the fraud was made while it was fresh.

Recently I got hold of a copy of this rare and valuable old book. I hand out a sample of it below. I desire to have it republished in cheapest form and scatter it by the tens of thousands. It ought to be scattered all over Utah, scattered wherever Mormons have a "stake" or a camp. I desire "one-dollar pledges" for this purpose to republish this book. This amount will secure each donor a copy and enable me to give some others copies who need them. Who and how many readers of this paper will respond? Do not send money now; simply send in name. I will call for money when a sufficient amount to pay the printer has been promised. Read the following affidavit of William Stafford:

"Manchester, N. Y., December 8, 1833.—I, William Stafford, having been called upon to give a true statement of my knowledge concerning the character and conduct of the family of Smiths known to the world as the founders of the Mormon sect, do say that I first became acquainted with Joseph Smith, Sr., and his family in the year 1820. They lived, at that time, in Palmyra, about one mile and a half from my residence. A great part of their time was devoted to digging for money, especially in the nighttime, when, they said, the money could be most easily obtained. I have heard them tell marvelous tales respecting the discoveries they had made in their peculiar occupation of money digging. They would say, for instance, that in such a place, in such a hill, on a certain man's farm, there were deposited kegs, barrels, and hogsheds of coined silver and gold; bars of gold, golden images, brass kettles filled with gold and silver, gold candlesticks, swords, etc. They would say, also, that nearly all the hills in this part of New York were thrown up by human hands and in them were large caves which Joseph Smith, Jr., could see by placing a stone of singular appearance in his hat in such a manner as to exclude all light, at which time they pretended he could see all things within and under the earth; that he could see within the above-mentioned caves large gold bars and silver plates; that he could also discover the spirits in whose charge these treasures were, clothed in ancient dress. At certain times these treasures could be obtained very easily; at other times the obtaining of them was difficult. The facility of approaching them depended, in a great measure, on the state of the moon. New moon and good Friday, I believe, were regarded as the most favorable times for obtaining these treasures. These tales I regarded as visionary. However, being prompted by curiosity, I at length accepted their invitations to join them in their nocturnal excursions. I will now relate a few incidents attending these excursions: Joseph Smith, Sr., came to me one night and told me that Joseph Smith, Jr., had been looking in his glass, and had seen, not many rods from his house, two or three kegs of gold and silver, some feet under the surface of the earth, and that none others but the elder Joseph and myself could get them. I accordingly consented to go and early in the evening repaired to the place of deposit. Joseph Smith, Sr., first made a circle twelve or fourteen feet in diameter. 'This circle,' said he, 'contains the treasure.' He then stuck in the ground a row of witch-hazel sticks, around the said circle, for the purpose of keeping off the evil spirits. Within this circle he made another circle about eight or ten feet in diameter. He walked around three times on the periphery of this last circle, muttering to himself something which I could not understand. He next stuck a steel rod in the center of the circles and then enjoined profound silence upon us, lest we should arouse the evil spirit who had the charge of these treasures. After we had dug a trench about five feet in depth around the rod, the old man, by signs and motions, asked leave of absence, and went to the house to inquire of young Joseph the cause of our disappointment. He soon returned and said that Joseph had remained all this time in the house, looking in his stone and watching the motions of the evil spirit; that he saw the spirit come up to the ring and as soon as it beheld the cone which we had formed around the rod it caused the money to sink. We then went into the house and the old man observed that we had made a mistake in the commencement of the operations. 'If it had not been for that,' said he, 'we should have got the money.' At another time they devised a scheme by which they might satiate their hunger with the mutton of one of my sheep. They had seen in my flock of sheep a large, fat, black weather. Old Joseph and one of the boys came to me one day and said young Joseph had discovered some very remarkable and valuable treasures which could be procured only in one way. That way was as follows: That a black sheep should be taken on the ground where the treasures were concealed; that after cutting its throat it should be led around a circle while bleeding. This being done, the wrath of the evil spirit would be appeased and the treasures could then be obtained, and my share of them was to be fourfold. To gratify my curiosity, I let them have a large, fat sheep. They afterwards informed me that the sheep was killed pursuant to commandment; but as there was some mistake in the process, it did not have the desired effect. This, I believe, is the only time they ever made money digging a profitable business. They, however, had around them constantly a worthless gang, whose employment it was to dig money at night, and who in daytime had more to do with mutton than money. When they found that the people of this vicinity would no longer put any faith in their schemes for digging money, they then pretended to find a gold Bible, of which they said the 'Book of Mormon' was only an introduction. This latter book was at length fitted for the press. No means were taken by any individual to suppress its publication. No one apprehended any danger from a book originating with individuals who had neither influence, honesty, nor honor. The two Josephs and Hiram promised to show me the plates, after the 'Book of Mormon' was translated; but, afterwards, they pretended to have received an express commandment forbidding them to show the plates. Respecting the manner of receiving and translating the 'Book of Mormon' their statements were always discordant. The elder Joseph would say that he had seen the plates and that he knew them to be gold; at other times he would say that they looked like gold, and at other times comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

he would say he had not seen the plates at all. I have thus briefly stated a few of the facts in relation to the conduct and character of this family of Smiths. Probably sufficient has been stated without my going into details. WILLIAM STAFFORD."

"State of New York. } s. s.
"Wayne County. }

"I certify that on this 9th day of December, 1833, personally appeared before me, William Stafford, to me known, and made oath to the truth of the above statement, and signed the same. TH. P. BALDWIN,

"Judge Wayne County Court."

The affidavit of Joseph Smith's father-in-law, Mr. Isaac Hule, is worth the price of the book. Address me at Grayson, Carter County, Ky. Remember the elders are in the field, and the King's business requireth haste.

R. B. NEAL.

List of Appointments.

Will the Gospel Advocate kindly announce the following appointments and oblige? On June 1, at 7:30 P.M., I shall be at Rich Pond, Ky.; June 2, 7:30 P.M., at Fanklin, Ky. Then I shall visit the following points in Tennessee: Nashville, South College Street church of Christ, June 3, 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M.; Brentwood (Owen's Chapel), June 10, 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M.; Thompson's Station, June 11, 7:30 P.M., Columbia, June 12, 7:30 P.M.; Fountain Creek, June 13, 7:30 P.M.; Stiversville, June 14, 7:30 P.M.; Yokely, June 15, 7:30 P.M.; Lynnville, June 16, 7:30 P.M., June 17, 11 A.M.; Robersons Fork, same day, 7:30 P.M.; Pulaski, June 18, 7:30 P.M.; Fayetteville, June 21, 7:30 P.M.; Howell Station, June 22, 7:30 P.M.; Petersburg, June 23, 7:30 P.M., and June 24, 11 A.M.; Ostella, same day, 7:30 P.M.; Cornersville, June 25, 7:30 P.M.; Yell, June 26, 7:30 P.M.; Lewisburg, June 26, 7:30 P.M., and June 27, 7:30 P.M.; Verona, June 28, 7:30 P.M.; Thick (Cedar Dell church of Christ), June 29, 7:30 P.M.; Hardison's Mills (Old Lasea church of Christ), June 30, 7:30 P.M.; and New Lasea, July 1, 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M.

I have made out the above list without being very well acquainted with the relative positions of many of the places. If any of the neighboring churches should see it would be convenient for me, in getting from one place to another, by exchanging appointments, they will kindly let me know. I would be very thankful if some one from each church would drop me a card, stating whether it suits to have the appointment and that it has been announced. From Pulaski to Fayetteville is about thirty miles. I have left open the nights of June 19 and 20 for two appointments between these two points. Any churches on the road from Pulaski to Fayetteville desiring these two appointments will kindly let me know.

My purpose, while at home, in making these visits to the churches, is to induce men and women to more fully consecrate themselves to God in Christian living and in carrying God's power to salvation unto those who have not yet heard. J. M. M'CALEB.

Bad Case of Eczema.

"My youngest daughter had an eruption on her skin which almost set her wild at times. Medicines were prescribed, but they did not do her any good. I called the trouble eczema. I saw Hood's Sarsaparilla advertised so much that I concluded to give it a trial. I got a bottle of it and a box of Hood Olive Ointment. They did the work thoroughly and permanently. I always keep Hood's Sarsaparilla on hand and take it every spring when I have that tired feeling. I have persuaded many of my friends to try it and all think it an excellent medicine.

"(Mrs.) P. J. WHITE.
"227 Spring street, Nashville, Tenn."

Quick and Convenient Schedules East via Southern Railway.

Passengers from Middle and West Tennessee points will find the Southern Railway to be the most convenient and desirable route to all Eastern cities. Double daily service is afforded from Nashville on following schedule: Leave Nashville at 9:30 P.M., arrive at Washington on second morning at 6:42 A.M.; Baltimore, 8 A.M.; Philadelphia, 10:15 A.M.; New York, 12:43 P.M. This train is operated via Chattanooga and Asheville, and passes through that beautiful and scenic portion of North Carolina poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." Elegant Pullman drawing-room sleeping car is operated from Nashville to New York without change, and dining car service is afforded east of Salisbury. Another train leaves Nashville at 3:30 P.M., connecting at Chattanooga with train leaving Chattanooga at 10 P.M., arriving at Washington at 8:50 P.M.; Baltimore, 11:35 P.M.; Philadelphia, 2:56 A.M.; and New York, 6:23 A.M., and carries Pullman sleeping car and day coaches from Chattanooga to Salisbury, and from Salisbury to New York. For further information, apply to your nearest ticket agent.

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail, free and
$2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE
to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. J. H. KLINE, L.D.
931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

Some sinners would confess their meanness if they were not afraid they would believe their confession.

Are We Married to Christ?

"Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." (Rom. 7: 4.) Does this scripture teach that individuals are married to Christ by obedience to the gospel? "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church. . . . Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." (Eph. 5: 23-25.) This teaches that Christ is the head of the one body—the church—composed of all Christians; but it does not teach that individuals are married to Christ by obedience to the gospel.

The Bible teaches that Christ is the bridegroom and the church as a whole (not each individual) is the bride. Now, is Christ married to the church? If so, when did the marriage take place? Marriage presupposes an engagement. "For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." (2 Cor. 11: 2.) What does Paul mean by "espoused?" Webster says it means to be promised in marriage, or what we commonly call "engaged."

"Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 1: 18.) This says Mary was espoused to Joseph." (Luke 1: 26, 27.) Mary was at this time engaged to Joseph to be married at some future time. So the church is espoused, or engaged, to Christ to be married at some future time.

Paul says he desires to present the church as a chaste virgin to Christ. What is a virgin? The word is sometimes used to indicate purity and is used with reference to either male or female. But Paul did not mean to convey this idea, for he modified the word "virgin" by the word "chaste," showing that the church is not only to be a virgin, but a pure virgin. "And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph." (Luke 1: 26, 27.) Mary was a virgin, an unmarried woman, espoused, or engaged, to Joseph. So the church is a virgin espoused, or engaged, to Christ.

If individuals are married to Christ by obedience to the gospel, when did they put on the wedding garment? In Rev. 19: 8 we learn that the wedding garment is the "righteousness of saints." Can one put this on before baptism? If we are married to Christ, why does he not take us to his home? Does the wife not come into possession of her husband's home when they are married?

It is customary for the husband to go and prepare a home for his bride, after which he comes and receives her to himself. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." (John 14: 2, 3.)

When will Christ be married to the church? "And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God. . . . Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made self ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." (Rev. 19: 1-9.)

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish." (Matt. 25: 1, 2.) Here we have two classes—the wise and the foolish. The wise entered into the marriage because they made preparation before they fell asleep. The foolish were shut out, not because they were not invited, not because they did not accept the invitation, not because they slept (for all slept), but because they failed to be ready when the bridegroom came. Jesus says the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto these ten virgins. In the kingdom, or church, to-day are these two classes—wise and foolish.

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock. . . . And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand." (Matt. 7: 24-26.) "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 22, 23.)

Jesus has gone to prepare a home for his people. He is coming again to receive his own. Only those who have made themselves ready by building on the one solid rock will enter into the wedding supper and live with the Lamb forever and ever.

Hornbeak, Tenn. G. D. SMITH.

Bed-Time.

Going to bed to tumble and toss and dream; to pursue in vain the phantom sleep through long weary hours and rise to a new day unrested and unrefreshed. That is the way with many a woman, who is tormented by the aches and pains resulting from female weakness, and other diseases of the delicate organs of woman. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was made to cure just such cases and it does what it was made for. It heals ulceration and inflammation, dries debilitating drains, cures female weakness, strengthens the body, soothes the nerves and enriches the blood. It gives lasting strength for the day and sound sleep for the night.

"For three years I suffered continually," writes Mrs. L. J. Dennis, of 828 East College St., Jacksonville, Ills. "I sought relief among the medical profession and found none, until induced to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When I commenced taking this medicine I weighed ninety-five pounds. It built me up until now I weigh one hundred and fifty-six pounds—more than I ever weighed before. I was so bad I would lie from day to day and long for death to come and relieve my suffering. I had internal inflammation, a disagreeable drain, bearing down pains and such distress every month. But now I never have a pain—do all my own work and am a strong and healthy woman. Thanks to your medicine."

Biliousness is banished by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

- ARMSTRONG & McKEELY Pittsburgh.
- BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
- DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
- FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
- ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
- EOKSTEIN }
- ATLANTIC }
- BRADLEY }
- BROOKLYN } New York.
- JEWETT }
- ULSTER }
- UNION }
- SOUTHERN } Chicago.
- SHIPMAN }
- COLLIER }
- MISSOURI } St. Louis.
- OLD SEAL }
- SOUTHERN }
- JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
- MORLEY Cleveland.
- SALEM Salem, Mass.
- CORNELL Buffalo.
- KENTUCKY Louisville.

EMPLY a practical painter. There's no economy in buying ready-mixed paint and employing a tramp to slather it on. The experienced painter will tell you that if you want paint which lasts you must use Pure White Lead. To be sure that it is pure, see that the packages bear one of the brands named in margin.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.

MR. JOHN T. McQUIDDY

IS NOW WITH

The Castner-Knott Dry Goods Co.

NASHVILLE'S LEADING STORE.

Nos. 203-211 NORTH SUMMER ST.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

YOU would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass"—they don't break from heat, not one in a hundred; a chimney lasts for years sometimes.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Virginia Jottings.

A brother wrote me as follows: "Dear Brother Showalter: I received your tracts, in due time. I am more than pleased with them. May God bless and spare you to battle for the truth. We have some brethren here who fight it worse than they would Roman Catholicism. One brother challenges you on the words 'be subject.' (Rom. 13: 1.) He says that in this you betray your ignorance and show that you are not competent to write on the subject. I would be pleased if you will give this some notice, either by private letter or in the Gospel Advocate. If in the Gospel Advocate, withhold name and place."

Complying with the brother's request, this is published in the Gospel Advocate as my choice between the two, of so doing or answering by "private letter." On page 9 of tract, entitled, "The Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War," is found what I said in reference to Rom. 13: 1 and kindred scriptures, to which, no doubt, reference is made. The language used reads thus: "These scriptures teach, beyond a doubt, two things—first, that Christians are not the powers; and second, that the Christian souls, to a certain extent, must 'be subject to the powers that be.' Nothing could be plainer than that, from the language used." This is the first criticism that has been written to me concerning the tract, and needs but little notice. The tract is so cheap—single copy, six cents, by mail; two for ten cents; and one dozen for fifty cents—that any one interested can see for himself; and if the "one brother" critic is so wise that he has no "ignorance," let him come out and "say his piece," so that others may be profited.

As one of many complimentary notices, I give the following from another "brother:" "Mr. J. T. Showalter, Snowville, Va.—Dear Brother: I received two copies of the tract, 'The Relation of Christians to Civil Governments and War,' that I sent to you for, and they are good. I do not believe a Christian can enter into politics and be a Christian very long. I have been studying along that line for some time, but your tract has brought me to a decision that a disciple of Christ must shun politics. Inclosed find one dollar ($1) in paper, for which please send me as many of the above-named tracts as you can. I want to distribute them. Yours truly, L. O. HINTON."

This brother's post office is Spencer, Ind. Let others do like this one, even if a "brother" (?) is found occasionally who says hard things about the tract. I do not know of any more "notice" to "give" than to say: Let the "brother" (?) say something that has argument in it, and a reply will be forthcoming.

As several times, even in the Gospel Advocate, some things have been written which are neither logical nor scriptural upon the subject of divorce and marriage, a few lines are herein devoted to the subject. A recent article is from the pen of a brother, John T. Poe, in the Gospel Advocate of May 3, 1900. The granting of a divorce upon just grounds necessarily implies the right to marry again. There is under the gospel only one cause for a divorce, and upon that all seem to be agreed. That one cause is adultery. But it seems that John T. Poe and some others hold that when a man is divorced by divine authority he is not at liberty to marry again, neither is the woman, under the same circumstances. There is nothing in logic or scripture to justify such a conclusion. God said in the beginning: "It is not good that the man should be alone." It would be unreasonable, then, to set one at liberty from one companion and restrict the same from another. Even in the Jewish age, when, for the hardness of their hearts, Moses granted the children of Israel divorces, not allowed under the gospel, they were always allowed to marry again. So, then, in the very nature of the case, marriage again, or the liberty to marry again, is implied in a law for a divorce. The Scriptures also are in harmony with the same. "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery." (Matt. 19: 9.) That which is necessarily implied in a divorce is here clearly stated in connection with it. These few lines are dropped for the purpose of throwing the light of God's holy word upon this divorce business, which is allowed for only one cause under the gospel.

J. T. SHOWALTER.
Snowville, Va.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for Refined Paraffine Wax in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Reduced Rates via Southern Railway.

The Southern Railway announces reduced rates from points on its line for the following occasions:

General Assembly, Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., May 17-24, 1900. Tickets will be sold at one fare for the round trip; selling dates, May 15-18, inclusive, with final limit to return on May 26, 1900.

General Assembly, Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga., May 17-26, 1900. Tickets will be sold on May 15, 16, and 17, limited to return on May 29, 1900, at rate of one fare for the round trip.

General Assembly, Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo., May 17-31, 1900. Tickets will be sold on May 15, 16, and 17, with final limit to return on June 3, 1900, at rate of one fare for the round trip, plus $8. For further information regarding these occasions, apply to nearest Southern Ry. ticket agent.

We would be glad for every subscriber to the paper to send us at least one new subscriber.

WHY PAY $60.00 MORE for a surrey than is actually necessary. If you buy a job as good as good from a dealer or agent he will charge you about that amount in commission. Buy direct from our factory and save it. We are the largest manufacturers of Vehicles and Harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively.

No. 77—Single Surrey Harness. Price, $17.50. Equal to those selling for $10 more.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS.

We make 178 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness and ship anywhere for examination, guaranteeing safe delivery. You take no risk, as all our work is guaranteed as to quality, style and finish. You have the advantage of the largest stock in the country to select from. Don't buy a vehicle or harness of any kind until you get a free copy of our large illustrated catalogue.

Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., W. B. PRATT, Sec'y, Elkhart, Ind.

No. 911—Canopy-top Surrey, has long-distance axles, open rubber head springs and Bradley quick couplers. Price, complete with curtains, storm apron, sun shade and fine lamps $125. As good as others sell for $50 more than our price.

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

1850 1900 John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS —OF— EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES. TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL. HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES. Mail orders will meet prompt attention. Telephone 1047.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address Fanning Orphan School, GLENCLIFF, TENN.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY

F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,

232 N. Market Street, NASHVILLE, TENN.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE

Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197 Chicago, Illinois

DIVINITY SCHOOL

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

AN UNDENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

Announcement for 1900-01, Now Ready.

OLYMYER BELL'S UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Items from the Indian Territory.

I have been absent from the Indian Territory during the principal part of the present year, perpetuating my practice since entering the ministry.

have labored with the view of evangelizing during the months of the year best suited for that service and to put myself in condition to use the remaining months to the very best advantage to myself and to those I should be cast with. So, in deciding how I could do this, I thought to keep myself in college during the cold winter months and on until the time the brethren look for protracted meetings, when everything looks encouraging for good meetings. However, I was not idle during my confinement in college, but busy all the time. I remember but two Lord's days on which I failed to minister in sowing the seed of the kingdom, and I think one of these days was so stormy that few would venture out of doors.

Dawson, Tex., is the point where I attended school, under the supervision and instruction of Prof. G. W. Farmer. Dawson has much better school facilities than church facilities. Of course, I do not refer to the denominations, for they are all fairly represented. The loyal brethren are few and seem to be discouraged. The digressives worked a division in the congregation there some time since; and the result of the division was, several members of the congregation were driven from the house of worship, and now they have not a house of worship in which to invite the public to attend for instruction which not a few of the members are able to impart, especially Professor Farmer.

I met with and preached for a few brethren at Corbet, Tex., at a time satisfactory to myself and to those concerned. Brother W. J. Weeks is a prominent member at that place. Several times I had the opportunity and pleasure of preaching for the congregation at Corsicana, Tex., while at Dawson. The congregation at Corsicana is moving along, I think, fairly well. There is a large membership at that place and several of them are prominent business men in that city, but doubtless they are capable of doing more than they have done toward the spread of the gospel and the conversion of sinners in Navarro County.

I think their intentions are to put an evangelist out in the field for all his time. They are able to do this, and it should be done by every congregation in the State of Texas that can possibly support one or more in such service. The people, the Christian people, need a general awakening to their duty and to service; indeed, they will never recover from the lethargic swoon they have fallen into until this is done. "Service, service! Duty, duty!" should be our watchword and our constant guide.

The condition the churches are in now is, I think, attributable to the fact the church has educated the taste of the church attendants to expect some kind of theatrical entertainment instead of a spiritual feast for the edification of the soul. This is a disgrace the modern church has brought on itself for which it must suffer and pay the penalty, even though its life is involved. Some one has said: "At one time the church triumphed by her faith, by her holiness, and by her courage; and by these high virtues she must stand in this age also. She is the witness of immortality, the spiritual home of souls, the servant of the poor, and the protector of the friendless. If she sinks into a place of second-rate entertainment, then it were better that her history should cease; for without her spiritual visions and austere ideals the church is not worth preserving."

The great, essential mission of the church is to give a home for the souls of those who are without hope and without God in the world, to preserve her holy ordinance from pollution and corruption, to wave the banners of salvation and truth over the hovels of sin, and to give life to the dead, food to the hungry, and hope to the hopeless.

God help us to do our whole duty, all that is in our power toward the dissemination of truth and the suppression of error, until we shall have conquered the foe. J. B. ASKEW. Marietta, I. T.

Our Martin Meeting.

I recently held a meeting at Martin, Tenn., with several baptized. Elder Tom Moore, a Baptist minister and debater of note, attended the meeting and asked some questions which gave a number of people a desire to hear a debate at Martin between the Baptists and Christians, and in a letter to me from J. N. Hall about the matter, he states that in a letter to him from J. N. Penick, pastor of the Baptist Church at Martin, Penick states that there is a standing challenge on the Baptist Church book at Martin to meet my brethren in debate and that he considers me one of the parties challenged. In reply, I beg to state in behalf of myself and brethren at Martin, we cheerfully accept the challenge and suggest the time for debate to commence on Monday, October 8, 1900, and continue six days. For three days I will affirm that the church with which I stand identified is scriptural in origin, faith, and practice, and the Baptists can for three days affirm the same about their church.

Inasmuch as Elder Penick is pastor of the Baptist Church at Martin and many there have opportunities of hearing him almost any time, and as many there seldom have opportunity to hear Elder J. N. Hall preach or debate, if it is agreeable with our Baptist friends, we prefer them to be represented by Elder Hall. If such arrangements do not suit, of course, they are to get the man they desire. Inasmuch as I am to hold a meeting at Martin after the debate, I hope our Methodist and Baptist friends will note the time and arrange their meetings so as not to conflict.

I hope that all things are now understood for the debate to commence on October 8, 1900, or near that time, and that all things may be ready, and that truth, not victory, will be the great desire of all. J. D. TANT. Hamilton, Tex.

Some Facts for Serious Reflection.

A man who is unwilling to become unpopular with men or to suffer persecution for Christ's sake can never accomplish anything for his cause. All his apostles, except one, were put to death by men, and that one was cast into a caldron of boiling oil, but was, miraculously, saved from death. Paul said to Timothy, his son in the gospel, after making mention of his own great persecutions: "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." (2 Tim. 3: 12.)

The preacher, in the eyes of the Lord, is worse than a failure who loves his salary and the applause of men better than the gospel of Christ, in its purity, and the approval of God.

If popularity, worldly honors, and money were God's power unto salvation, many would be on their way to glory; but "the gospel of Christ" being "the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1: 16), few are making progress in that direction. Hence, the Savior's language, in Matt. 7: 13, 14, in regard to the broad way to death, which many travel, and the "strait and narrow way" of "life" which "few find."

There will be many surprises in the judgment of the great day. Many who now substitute their own ways, wisdom, and devices for the will of God, as it is revealed in his word, will think they have "prophesied, cast out devils," and "done many wonderful works" in the name of Christ, and will ask him if they have not done these things; but his answer will be: "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. 7: 23.)

The Lord has ordained only one way by which men can be saved or enter into life, and that is "the strait and narrow way" which "few find." (Matt. 7: 13, 14.) But men have devised many ways by which they contend that men can enter into life and salvation. Friendly reader, may the Lord help you to choose the way he has ordained.

Thousands of preachers, for the sake of money and popularity, set aside the laws and wisdom of God, as revealed in his word, and substitute their own laws and wisdom, and the awful anathemas threatened them in Rev. 22: 18, 19 and Gal. 1: 8, 9 have no weight with them. Many people obey the commands and precepts of this class of preachers and that clear warning of Paul, in Col. 2: 21, 22—"Touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using; after the commandments and doctrines of men"—has no weight with them. Alas! many will be disappointed when they are called to judgment to be judged by that Book that they shall have had but little regard for.

One day we must all stand before a holy, pure, and just God to give account of our deeds. Are you prepared for the solemn trial? When the writer was a very small boy he heard old Brother G. B. Stone, in preaching, say that the comrades of a man who was mortally wounded in battle gathered around him, and he was asked if he was afraid to die. "O, no," said he, "I am not afraid to die, but I fear to meet God after death." Let us love and serve God while we have time and opportunity, that we may not fear this inevitable meeting.

This life is filled with vexations, disappointments, and sorrows (Job 14: 1; 5: 7; Eccles. 1: 1-16; 2: 1-23), beyond which there shall be nothing but the hopelessness of irrevocable despair for the unrighteous. (Heb. 9: 27; Matt. 25: 31-46.) Therefore man's existence is a miserable failure if he fails to make preparation while in this life to live with God in the eternal home which he has prepared for his people. Lockett, Ga. FLAVIL HALL.

Send us the names and addresses of any nonsubscribers whom you think sample copies might induce to become regular subscribers. We will send the paper one month free, and discontinue at close of the month unless they subscribe during that time.

JESSE FRENCH PIANO & ORGAN CO. MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN PIANOS & ORGANS WE MANUFACTURE Starr, Jesse French, and Richmond Pianos, AND HAVE EXCLUSIVE SALE FOR Steinway and Knabe Pianos, and Jesse French and Packard Organs. PIANOS FOR RENT. 240 & 242 N. Summer Street, NASHVILLE, - TENNESSEE

Southern Railway 6888 MILES ONE MANAGEMENT Penetrating Eight Southern States. Reaching Principal Cities of the South with its own Lines. Solid Vestibuled Trains. Unexcelled Equipment. Fast Schedules. DINING CARS are operated on Southern Ry. Trains. OBSERVATION CARS on Washington and Southwestern Vestibuled Limited; Washington and Chattanooga Limited, via Lynchburg. ELEGANT PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS of the Latest Pattern on All Through Trains. J. M. CULP, Traffic Manager, WASHINGTON, D. C. W. A. TURK, Gen. Passenger Agent, WASHINGTON, D. C. C. A. BENSCHOTER, Assistant General Passenger Agent, CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

If You Are Going North, If You Are Going South, If You Are Going East, If You Are Going West; PURCHASE TICKETS VIA THE L&N LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. AND SO SECURE The Maximum of Safety, The Maximum of Speed, The Maximum of Comfort, The Minimum of Rates. Rates, Time and all other information will be cheerfully furnished by C. P. ATMORE, G. P. A., LOUISVILLE, KY.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation. DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS. Colleges St. Louis; Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any time. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 22.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, MAY 31, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Henry Hardshell's Difficulty Removed	338
How Shall We Co-operate in Preaching the Gospel	338
For a Morsel of Meat.....	339
Love, Grace, and Obedience.....	340
Miscellany.....	341
Evangelizing—New Testament Words for Preaching in Their Bearing on Lay Members.....	342
Circumcision.....	343
Home Reading.....	343
Church Divisions.....	344
The Price of a Religious Paper.....	345
Queries.....	345
Obituaries.....	346
Brother M'Caleb's Report for April.....	347
Things with the Lord.....	347
General News.....	348
The Famine in India.....	349
Double-minded. No. 4.....	349
A Visit to Florida.....	350
Kansas Notes.....	351
Field Gleanings.....	351
Apostolic Christianity.....	352

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The new book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, will probably be ready to deliver by the time this notice reaches the public. While I have no financial interest in it, I am anxious that it be extensively circulated for several reasons: (1) The Gospel Advocate Publishing Company has gone to considerable expense to bring out the book, and I hope that enough copies will be sold promptly to save them from financial loss or embarrassment, though I have no financial interest in the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. (2) If there is any profit from the sale of the book, Brother Larimore will receive it, and I hope it will be a source of financial assistance to him. (3) I believe it is a good book and that it will do much good wherever it is circulated. I say this frankly and freely because my work on it was purely editorial. It is Brother Larimore's book, so far as authorship is concerned, and in praising it I am not eulogizing myself. The readers can form an opinion of the merits of the book from the following quotations:

"The design of the book is to do good. He has never consented for it to be published except on condition that 'good can come of it.' In passing upon everything that is in the book, I have been guided by my own desire as well as by his wish that nothing but that which will do good be allowed to appear in it. Christianity in theory and in practice is what does good. The plan on which the book is arranged is to exhibit the theory of Christianity, as far as he is competent to teach it, in his sermons; the practice, as far as his life exhibits it, in his letters. The clearest revelation of a man's real life and character is his confidential, private correspondence; the best expositions of a preacher's ideals of Christianity are his sermons. This book, then, is the best exposition of Christianity in theory and practice that has been exemplified to the world in the life and sermons of T. B. Larimore. It is not my province to express an opinion as to the merits of either the man or his sermons. I believe they will do good, else I could not publish this book under his instructions; further than this, I venture neither criticism nor eulogy. I have tried to let him fairly represent himself, both in his sermons and in his letters, and I believe he has done it. Whatever estimate a discriminating public may form of him, either as a man or as a preacher, I believe those who study this book carefully will know him exactly as I have known him, both as a confidential friend and as a noted preacher, for more than thirty years. While I had unlimited permission to publish any or all of his private letters which in my judgment would do good, regardless of consequences to himself, I have not used that liberty to gratify the reader's curiosity, or to create sensations, or to make a hero of T. B. Larimore. I have simply tried by quotations from his letters to exemplify in his life, as he has tried to teach in his sermons, that which will help sinners to become Christians, encourage Christians to live godly in Christ Jesus, and stimulate preachers to labor earnestly and abundantly to convert sinners and save souls. It may be said that the letters quoted in this book do not fairly represent the man, because they all indicate virtues and reveal no faults in him. In some of the letters quoted he frankly admits that his 'mistakes have been many and marvelous,' but says he has always done what he believed was right when he did it. This is enough to show that he would not have any one consider him perfect. It is well for every one to remember always that there has been but one perfect life in the whole history of the human race; that was the life of Jesus of Nazareth. All other lives are imperfect. Even when a man's motives are always good and his purpose is always to do right, his judgment is not infallible, and he is liable at any time to do wrong unawares and unintentionally. For this reason every one should take Christ as a model and try to be like him; no one should try to be like any other man. It is well to copy the virtues of all men as far as possible, but it is equally important to remember that every man has faults which ought to be avoided and corrected.

The sermons were delivered during a protracted meeting in Nashville, Tenn., the first weeks of the year 1900, and reported by Miss Emma Page, a competent stenographer. The quotations from his letters are just as he wrote them, barring such corrections as would naturally be necessary to prepare hurried, confidential, private correspondence for publication in a book. The corrections were all made by his permission and with his approval, and the book as a whole was read to him and approved by him in manuscript before it went into the hands of the printers."

From another chapter of the book I quote as follows:

"The world is slow to learn that Christianity is a workingman's religion. Most of the apostles were fishermen, Paul was a tentmaker, and Jesus was a carpenter. No man can walk in 'the footsteps' of Jesus without making a few tracks in a carpenter shop or some other place of honest labor. Of all the men Jesus selected for special work and important positions in the kingdom of heaven, he never chose a gentleman of wealth and leisure for anything. The following newspaper clipping inclosed in one of his letters is in point in this connection:

"Ralph Waldo Emerson once said: 'The men in cities who are the centers of energy, the driving wheels of trade, politics, or practical arts, and the women of beauty and genius, are the children or grandchildren of farmers, and are spending the energies which their fathers' hardy, silent life accumulated in frosty furrows, in poverty, necessity, and darkness.'"

"There is no idle time in the life that is photographed by private letters in this volume. When he closes a meeting at one place, he begins another one immediately somewhere else; when he goes home to rest, he preaches day and night 'to the home folks' and works 'between meals; when too sick to work or preach, he writes encouraging letters to other workers every moment he is able to sit up between spells of 'heart failure' and 'extreme weakness.' Several years ago he wrote from home as follows:

"My work is to 'preach the word;' the wide, wide world is my field. My commission from Jesus reads: 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.'" (Mark 16: 15.) How I have endured what I have endured, I do not know. I have worked constantly, under heavy pressure, with all my might all my life, a very few years, beginning with the cradle, excepted. People think I come home to rest when I leave some distant field—well, I am going home to rest by and by. For weeks we have scarcely seen the sun here. Rain, rain, rain! During all this time I have preached two sermons per day in Florence, four miles from home, and gone into the water to baptize, usually, once per day. We leave home, rain or no rain, but nearly always rain, at 9 A.M. and 7 P.M.; return at 1 and 11 P.M. After we get home at night, we sit up and talk about what we have done, and said, and heard, and seen, and thought, and felt, till about midnight. Thus far the Lord has sustained me. I am driving four times four miles through the rain, preaching twice and baptizing once every day; but so far as I can see, I am holding up in all respects as well as usual. Health good, voice perfect, no cold, never hoarse; always happy in the work. I hope they will let me quit this week. Other places are pressing me for meetings."

"At another time, while at home resting and preaching every day in Florence, he wrote:

"I am gaining strength every day; preaching day and night, and driving four miles every night after preaching. I thought I was sick when I came home, but I believe I simply needed the remedy I am taking in this meeting. Weather cloudy and rainy much of the time. I am certainly testing my powers of endurance in this meeting. Voice good. 'Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name.'"

"Once, when he was ready to leave home, he wrote: "I expect to be gone nine months on this trip, and do my very best all the time. Nothing suits me, nothing is endurable for me, but constant work for the Lord."

"Every preacher, and especially every preacher's wife, will know what burdens weary hearts had to bear during these long trips from home. Others besides preachers, whose duties demand long periods from home, will read between the lines here their own experience in homesick longings for the dear ones far away. On the principle that 'misery loves company,' there will be consolation to many readers in the following scrap of poetry inclosed in one of his letters while he was in a meeting in the far West on a long trip from home:

"WHEN YOU COME HOME AGAIN.

"It comes to me often in silence,
When the firelight sputters low,
When the black, uncertain shadows
Seem wreaths of the long ago;
Ever with a throb of heartache
That thrills each pulsing vein
Comes the old, unquiet longing
To have you home again.

"I feel that you are sick of the cities
And of faces cold and strange;
But you know where there is ever a welcome,
So allow your yearning fancies range
Back to the dear old homestead
Without an aching sense of pain,
For there'll be joy in the coming
When you come home again.

"When you come home—why, there's music
That may never die away;
And it seems the hands of angels
On a mystic harp at play
Have touched with a yearning sadness
On a beautiful, broken strain,
To which my fond heart is wording,
"When you come home again."

"Outside of your darkened windows
Is the great world's crash and din,
And slowly the autumn shadows
Will come drifting, drifting in;
Slowly and sobbing, the night winds murmur
To the splash of the summer rain,
While I dream of the glorious greeting
When you come home again.

"On the margin of this clipping he wrote:
"Mrs. Larimore sends this to me."

"One of the hardest parts a preacher has to play is to be cheerful in his work, entertain and be entertained, visit and be visited, take an interest in everything and everybody around him, nor show by word, look, laugh, or melancholy abstraction any sign of the burden on his heart he cannot help but feel, if he is any part of a man, for the loved ones in loneliness at home. O yes, 'preachers have a good time,' if it is 'a good time' to play a part in home pleasures and enjoyments, and then hide away in hearing of music and laughter to read a letter from a wife and mother who tries to be brave and cheerful and encouraging, but breaks down in the effort and lets her heart talk in a waif of poetry clipped from a newspaper. Others besides preachers have the same kind of good times. Many a soul in this world has mastered the art of manufacturing pleasure for others out of its own sorrows as raw material. Who ever can do this is a philosopher and philanthropist, and whoever tries to do it is a hero, whether he succeeds or fails in the effort.

"Inclosed in one of his letters, a clipping from a local paper in Arkansas was introduced with the following words by the editor:

"The two pretty stanzas below are from the pen of our friend, L. Stevens, of Mill Creek, a gentleman whose sparkling wit, expressed in rhyme, has created so much merriment around Pope County fire-sides."

"The two stanzas are as follows:

"TROUBLE'S WINE.

"At trouble's table I have dined,
And drank the dregs of trouble's wine;
Misfortune held it to my lips
Until I sipped it sip by sip;
And when I think the glass to drain,
It seems some power hidden
Does replenish it again,
As though I am forbidden
To empty it, and thus I find Another cup of trouble's wine.

"And thus it's been my whole life through—
My troubles great, my pleasures few;
With all mankind I laugh and jest,
And none of them have ever guessed
That, with all my mirth, I hide a heart
That's filled with deepest sorrow;
That in this life I act a part,
My mirth I only borrow;
Nor have they ever yet divined
That I am drunk on trouble's wine.

"His idea of 'the best things' is expressed in the following newspaper clipping which he inclosed in one of his letters:

"The best law is the Golden Rule; the best philosophy, a contented mind; the best statesmanship, self-government; the best war, that against one's weaknesses; the best medicine, cheerfulness and temperance in all things; the best music, the laughter of an innocent soul; the best science, the extracting of sunshine from gloom; the best art, painting a smile upon the brow of childhood; the best biography, the life which writes charity in the largest letters; the best telegraphing, flashing a ray of light into a gloomy heart; the best engineering, building a bridge of faith over the river of death; the best diplomacy, effecting a treaty of peace with one's own conscience; the best journalism, printing only the good and the true; the best navigation, steering clear of the rocks of personal contention; the best mathematics, that which doubles the most joys, subtracts the most sorrows, divides the gulf of misery, adds to the sum of human pleasure, and cancels all selfishness."

Once more I quote from the book, as follows:

"No matter how much work he does, or what success attends his labors, he is never satisfied. He wants to do more every year than he has ever done in one year before. There is a uniformity in his letters at the close of one year and the beginning of another, during his whole life as a preacher, which would be monotonous to the reader. It will save space to publish the following letter and ask the readers to read it one time for the beginning of each year he has been preaching, if they want a complete record of his correspondence on that subject:

"I am exceedingly anxious to do more for Christ this year than I have ever done in one year; but I have scarcely begun yet. My vow for this year is: Be better—do more, pray and labor for better results—than in any previous year of my life. So far as work and results are concerned, I have only eleven months in which to break my record for any previous year. Well, beginning, 'the Lord willing,' January 31, I am determined to try."

"Whatever else may be thought of him or said about him, no one can successfully deny that he works. It is doubtful whether any man, living or dead, has preached more sermons under more different circumstances in more different places than T. D. Larimore during the same number of years he has been preaching. Preaching twice every day and three times every Sunday, besides business cares, correspondence, baptizing, visiting, attending weddings and funerals, and worrying over other people's troubles, can hardly be counted the hardest part of his work. Perhaps his hardest labors are the discomforts, exposures, loss of sleep, irregular meals, excitement, dangers, and general inconveniences of travel in long trips on scant time between meetings.

"When in a Western city, ready to begin a meeting, he wrote:

"Just reached here this morning. From Monday noon till Sunday morning coming from Florence, Ala. Worn out. Wrecks, washouts, bad connections, etc. Hope to be in good shape for work to-morrow. Sorry I cannot write you to-day."

"Think of going into a city Sunday morning on a belated train after such a trip, and then undertake to preach three times to a strange audience that day, and still 'hope to be in good fix for work to-morrow.' Think, also, of keeping this up continuously, without a break, for more than thirty years."

If my judgment is not at fault, no one can read the book and not have a greater desire, when he finishes the reading of it, to be better and to do more good and less evil than he had when he began reading it. If I am correct in this opinion, it goes without saying that the book ought to be extensively circulated for the good it will do. Address all communications to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn. F. D. SRYGLEY.

Our Contributors.

Henry Hardshell's Difficulty Removed.

Henry Hardshell: "Good morning, friend Faithful. I am expecting to have you tell me of the case in the Scriptures which was hedged about with more difficulties than any case that could happen in our day and time and which, as you may remember, you promised to tell me of when we met again. I fear, friend Faithful, my many troubles will remind you of the saying of the wise man in Prov. 17: 12: 'Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man, rather than a fool in his folly.'"

Frank Faithful: "I will admit, Henry, that I have been disappointed in you in some things, but I have not yet lost interest in you. At any rate, I do not look upon you as a fierce wild beast who is a terror to every one that may chance to meet such. I feel it my duty to labor on with patience. I had rather think of you as the 'wise man' referred to in the same chapter."

Henry H.: "What is said of him?"

Frank F.: "A reproof entereth more into a wise man than a hundred stripes into a fool."

Henry H.: "I know I have been benefited by the conversations I have held with you, but not to the extent I should have been. But I am anxious to hear of that man under great difficulties who nevertheless was obedient to Christ."

Frank F.: "I refer to Saul of Tarsus when he was told to arise and go into Damascus and there it would be told him what he 'must' do. If he had had within him a disinclination to obey, which is really the spirit of excuse making, he had more reason and ground to plead a man under hard conditions than any man in this free country ever had to say, he could not obey God in baptism because, forsooth, a tree might fall upon him or some enemy might, in taking vengeance, shoot the life out of him, or perchance the horse or mule might throw him on the way to the water, or a thousand and one other things might happen—which indeed never did happen to prevent a truly penitent believer from obeying Christ in baptism."

Henry H.: "What difficulties confronted Saul after he believed in Christ and prior to his baptism?"

Frank F.: "None indeed, so far as heard from, but we can easily imagine what they were if Saul had been disinclined to obey Christ or had within him the spirit of excuse making. When he asked the question, 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?' and Christ said, 'Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do,' Saul, had he desired an excuse for failing to obey, might have said: 'Why, Lord, I am blind! I have been from the earth and bleared open my eyes, but I can see no man. How can I go when I am blind? You do not lead me, you send no saint to lead me, but stand there in that light which is above the brightness of the sun and tell me to go!' Saul might have truly said: 'O Lord Jesus, all the angels in heaven bow down and worship; they go and come at your command. You send none of these to lead this poor, blind, convicted sinner. O Lord,' he might have continued, 'you sent angels to make revelations to father Abraham; you sent heavenly messengers to rescue just Lot from the doomed cities of the plains; you send none to lead me. O Lord Jesus, you sent an angel to comfort Joshua, who led the hosts of Israel unarmed against the strong city of Jericho. Lord Jesus, you sent an angel to shut the mouths of the lions, that they hurt not Daniel, your servant. Yea, Lord, one like unto yourself walked with the three Hebrew children in the midst of that fiery furnace made seven times hotter than usual, and they walked with that divine companion safely in the midst of that maelstrom of fire. O Lord Jesus, you took pity on disconsolate Elijah and sent for him the chariot of the Lord drawn by fiery steeds, which at one bound leaped the chasm of death and safely transported Elijah where there is no pain, neither sorrow nor crying. O Lord, you send me no chariot, no guardian angel to lead me, no friendly disciple, but in your matchless glory command me to go! Lord, how can I go? I am blind and one hundred and forty miles from where I started.' All these and more complaints he might have made if he had had half the inclination some in our day and time have to make or receive excuses. The man who asks, 'What will become of me if a tree falls on me before I get to the water?' needs faith in God and Christ more than he does baptism. He needs faith which works, and works by love. Perfect love will cast out fear of trees, horses, mules, or anything and everything that men or demons may put in the way."

Henry H.: "Well, how did blinded Saul get into Damascus? I disremember how it was."

Frank F.: "O, he was led by the hand of his comrades, who understood not the words of Christ spoken to Saul!"

Henry H.: "I will admit the case of Saul and his difficulties makes all these supposed cases of extreme difficulty look very pitiful indeed. I will be able to answer any of them. Singular to state, Saul, though having more ground to make excuses, seems to have made none."

Frank F.: "That is what I am trying to show you, that when a person earnestly desires to obey Christ he will not be kept back by excuses; when he wants an excuse he will surely find one, though all he has ever heard of may have been explained out of the way. The excuse factory, far beneath us, is yet in operation and can fill the demand of any poor soul that wants one. There are some other cases in the Bible to which I may at some time refer."

Henry H.: "I shall be glad to hear more on this line, but for the present I must be going. My wife told me she would have lamb and peas for dinner to-day, so good-by."

Frank F.: "With one word more: 'Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life.'" G. LIPSCOMB.

How Shall We Cooperate in Preaching the Gospel?

[A discourse by O. A. Carr at the "Fifth Sunday Meeting," April 27, 1900.]

If there could be a spiritual photography that would present the image of each of us and show nothing but that which makes us Christians, we would all look alike—there would be oneness, sameness. So, too, if the image of each local church could be presented and only that which constitutes a church of Christ, each would look like the other, and the name for one would be the name for every one and for all. All peculiarities and distinctive differences are to be excluded, for they destroy the unity and are contrary to the oneness for which our Savior prayed. Any church that presumes to introduce into itself any peculiarity, anything which the Lord did not put there, makes a sad figure, makes difference, makes division. When the church at Corinth began to put on airs and presume to introduce that which did not belong to the church, Paul rebuked it.

Again: "The husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." Do you ask which wife the husband is the head of? I answer: His own. You do not try to think of some large somebody who would be the sum and substance of all wives and thus constitute a body and then try to think of a head to it or for it. Why should we have such thoughts concerning the church, that there must be some large "representative body," inclusive of all churches, in order to form the conception of Christ's being the head of the church, and that said "representative body" must represent us or we stand for nothing? No; "the husband is the head of the wife" expresses relationship and is just as broad and as comprehensive as is the idea conveyed in the term "wife." So, too, the "church of Christ" is just as broad and as comprehensive as is the relationship into which persons enter by becoming Christians; and there is nothing narrow, partial, or restricted in the scriptural use of the word "church."

Instruction to one church is instruction to every church, and the very idea of differences, of peculiarities to distinguish the one from the other is excluded from the scriptural conception of "church." If it be objected that the church is not individual and not to be thought of as acting as an individual and the objection be based on the premise that "you cannot tell when a thing is done as a church, because all the members do not do it," I answer: This mistakes the point. The expression "done as a church" means what is right for the church to do; what the church approves and teaches should be done, whether each member does it or not; what each member ought to do.

Now, are the individual churches to cooperate in anything? Since the responsibility to preach the gospel is placed alike on each church, are they to work together? I hold that this is answered for us in the Scriptures, and the "how" shall we cooperate we can learn from what is stated of the churches of which we read in the New Testament. In Macedonia, whence the cry once came, "Come over . . . and help us!" the grace of God was bestowed upon the churches; so "that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality." I pray you, notice the pronouns here: "They," "their," "them," and "themselves." There is everything to show their cooperation—their united effort—and not a single thing to indicate that there was anything in the way of joint participation. It was the "fellowship of the ministering to the saints." Paul calls it "grace;" amazing grace it would be in this our day.

We have all admitted that the obligation to preach the gospel rests on the church, that the church is individual, and that what is true of one is true of every one. Is this obligation less weighty than the obligation to support the needy? The fact that the churches cooperated under the apostle's instruction, guidance, and exhortation in support of the needy is what I emphasize. They acted together. It was not it (the church that did) and it (the church that did not), but the words are "they," "their," and "themselves," just like you would speak of a number of men acting together in the discharge of a duty. Here is instruction on the subject of cooperation and on how we should cooperate, and I claim this is sufficient. For any one to say that I should not teach it and urge the brethren to act on this instruction would be like saying to me that I should not teach one of the plainest lessons of God's word and one of the most important lessons that was ever given to the churches. Then, too, there is the obligation resting on the churches equally, according to ability. Listen: "I say not this," says Paul, "that others may be eased, and ye distressed: but by equality; your abundance being a supply at this present time for their want, that their abundance also may become a supply for your want; that there may be equality." What care for each other! What fellowship!

If it be objected that the instruction is how to raise means, how to cooperate in raising contributions for the poor saints, and not how to raise money to support the preacher, I answer: This is the only instruction on the subject of joint participation in contributing, and the laying in store on the first day of the week is the way the apostle says it was to be gathered; and if the objection is to stand, we should cease to give to the preacher anything that is contributed on the first day of the week, for the instruction on that subject had reference to the collection for the poor saints.

Let us gather up the facts given in 2 Cor. 8, R. V.: "Thanks be to God, which putteth the same earnest care for you into the heart of Titus. For indeed he accepted our exhortation; but being himself very earnest, he went forth unto you of his own accord. And we have sent together with him the brother whose praise in the gospel is spread through all the churches; and not only so, but who was also appointed by the churches [mark that, by the churches] to travel with us in the matter of this grace, which is ministered by us to the glory of the Lord, and to show our readiness. . . . And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have many times proved earnest in many things, but now much more earnest, by reason of the great confidence which he hath in you. Whether any inquire about Titus, he is my partner and my fellow-worker to you-ward; or our brethren, they are the messengers of the churches, they are the glory of Christ. Show ye therefore unto them in the face of the churches the proof of your love, and of our glorying on your behalf." Here it is plainly stated as to how the church acted; it was through their "messengers." Are we doing anything that requires "messengers?" The very fact that there were messengers shows that these churches acted conjointly. Not only so, but it is plainly stated that Achaia hath been prepared for a year past (note the statement—not the churches, but Achaia, in the aggregate and as one man), is ready, waiting for you to do your work, not acting without you; but is ready to act when you come up with your part, and we will then act together.

Think of it! Do we have the idea that there is no mutual dependence in the most important work—that of preaching the gospel? Does any church say to another: "You go on and act for yourself, and by yourself, and do not pay any attention to whether I act or not?" Is such talk speaking as the oracles of God speak?

Think of the prevailing unconcern among the churches as to each other, and say: Is this Christianity as it is taught in the New Testament? Why, not only are churches unacquainted with each other and have but little care for each other, but the individual members, though living not far apart for years, are not acquainted with each other. Brethren sit on the jury bench together and do not know that they are members of the church. Perhaps this is not the place to find it out, but it looks to me that a decent regard for each other's welfare would cause us to find it out in some place—even if it be the meetinghouse.

What have we now as a conclusion? I answer: We have the case made out by the facts recorded in the New Testament that the early churches did cooperate in supporting the poor, and since the obligation to support the gospel rests on each church, just like the obligation to care for the poor, the "how" they acted in that case is how we are to act in any case where the obligation to do a given thing rests upon all alike, according to ability, as certainly as does the preaching or the support of those who do preach. Then the "how" is this:

1. Let the preacher, the Titus, or the brother whose praise is in all the churches where he is known, go to the churches and get a promise; and if that promise is not paid promptly, do as Paul instructed: Send "the brethren [collectors, financial agents], that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your aforepromised bounty."

2. Have some brother hold that money collected for the support of the work.

3. Pay the expenses for collecting this out of the sum now on hand.

4. Let the churches understand that this very preacher, this Titus, is the very one to whose support as to a preacher in the county they are asked to give, that the matter may be definitely understood as a cooperation with him in the work.

5. Let this Titus be a man who can preach, not only one who is trying to learn how to preach.

6. When all the churches in the county have been visited and the contribution of each secured, let the time be set when this brother, this Titus, is to begin his labors, and let him so announce.

7. Then at a season of the year favorable for such meeting let there be a mass meeting.

8. Let each church be ready to say through its messenger what it will do, what it can be depended on for, from one mass meeting to another.

9. Let the brethren themselves in this mass meeting select their own president, secretary, and treasurer.

10. Let the elders and deacons of all the churches in the county select the preacher, from time to time, and take charge of him and of the work.

I think, brethren, I have answered the question sufficiently: "How Shall We Cooperate in Preaching the Gospel?" This is no fancy sketch, but it is the statement of what is my experience in the work contemplated. I went among the churches, told them what they were glad to hear—namely, no opportunity was then and there presented for them to cooperate with me in preaching the gospel. They responded, and in Boone, Callaway, Chariton, and other counties in Central and Northwest Missouri the churches cooperated, having no organization except that of the elders and deacons of the church.

I am sure the same could be done in Grayson County. It would require a Titus to begin the work, and I wish to say, as my last word, I know Titus.

For a Morsel of Meat.

There are characters on the stage of inspired history that rise, and for their one brief moment live and figure, then despair, for evermore swallowed up in the silence of the forgotten. They go without leaving a trace; they are suddenly blotted out. Sometimes the reason of this is that their history is unnecessary, for the holy Scriptures do not deal with every man; but sometimes, too, there is a deeper cause. The Bible dismisses them with contempt. They played a small part, and the space allotted to them is quite enough; it is in proportion to the men. Abraham's name echoes from Genesis to Revelation, Abel lives, Noah lives, David lives, and Paul lives; but those ephemeral flies of holy writ have once for all departed.

Among them is Esau. He was not a bad man, as we use the term; he was not utterly corrupt nor rebellious against God. On the contrary, he was kind-hearted, good-natured, and is never mentioned as having done any positive harm to any one. You cannot but feel kindly toward him when you read how freely and generously he forgave Jacob, his brother, at the time of their meeting. But there is one fact that exposed and marked his character: he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.

This describes the man. Actions are not loopholes by which we may look into the soul; for the soul is responsible for the deed. This man's soul was of small caliber. Without other standards we are always able to gauge the minds and hearts of men. We know them by their views of the relative value of things. Every man, as some one has said, has an idea according to which his world is classified. Reform this idea and you have reformed the man, for man always seeks that which is most precious in his eyes.

I once read how a little boy in playing had slaughtered his brother, as he had seen his father kill calves and sheep. The matter was brought before the courts. The courts were perplexed, for they knew not whether to hold the little boy accountable or not. Finally, a judge went to the little boy, and spoke to him, kindly: "My little fellow, they have locked you up in the jail and treated you badly. I will give you something to make up for your troubles. Here is a gold piece and here is an apple. Take whichever you want." The child looked at the gold piece a moment, and then took the apple. The judge turned to the court and said: "Not guilty!"

The wisdom of this verdict is apparent. Any one that, under common circumstances, would prefer an apple to a gold piece is unaccountable; his mind is undeveloped and his understanding small. The Indian whose "untutored mind" leads him to exchange diamonds for strips of red cloth stands low on the scale of humanity. Before he can be on a level with civilized men his mind must be reformed; his classification of the world must be revolutionized; his ideas regarding the relative value of things must undergo a thorough change. He must learn the value of quiet industry, of a settled home, of knowledge, and of civilization. When he understands this he makes his choice. If he accepts the new truth, he will turn his course; if he does not accept, the man is worthless.

What we understand by a "trifling" fellow is a man who cannot or does not appreciate what is really good. He holds the present pleasure above the future good; he sacrifices his hopes and aspirations to the comfort of the hour. Benjamin Franklin relates of his boyhood days that at the time of the annual fair his kinsfolk and friends would fill his pockets with small coins. At one such occasion he sallied forth with light heart to take in the fair. On the way he met a peddler who sold an unusually noisy sort of whistle. Young Benjamin admired the whistle much, and finally ventured to ask the price of it. The peddler eyed him, and proposed to sell him the coveted article "for all the money he had," and the boy gladly made the purchase. Proudly blowing his whistle, he went back home and told the home folks what he had done. Benjamin met with sore disappointment, for instead of being praised he was laughed at. He was not so much elated as before, and the whistle sank considerably in his estimation.

Finally, he did away with it altogether, for it was a reproach to him whenever he laid his eyes on it. It was a bitter experience for the little fellow, but it became a help to him. The moral of it, to him, was: Never pay too much for your whistle. Often in later life he found place to apply it. When, for instance, he saw one striving to make an empty show while poverty was undermining his house, he said to himself: "Here is a man who is paying too much for his whistle."

I have not time to tell more of this; the principle is plain. The great man never despises a really good thing. He knows the value of the good. He does not only know, he also exchanges what he has for the better. He knows how to endure pain and hardship for the true gold. To attain it he undergoes privation and tramples under foot the pleasures that would hinder him in his pursuit. He has found a pearl of great price and "goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth" it. Woe to him that prefers sleep! Woe to him that wanders from the road to gather flowers! He pays too much for his whistle. He exchanges success, fame, and riches for a few moments of pleasure, for the indifferent bliss of idleness.

Esau knew what the birthright amounted to, he understood its blessings; but his world was not classified "the best first," but "my present comfort first"—pleasure first. All such men are utterly worthless. The world is full of them; hell is full of them. They cannot be farmers; they will not keep their ground clean. They cannot be tradesmen; sleep and pleasures are too sweet. They cannot be Christians; at the first opportunity they will sell out to the devil for a mess of pottage.

I am not speaking of earthly success only. A man may heap up money and then be a failure in God's sight. "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," may God say to him. "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Nothing. He has paid too much for his whistle.

Here is the record of a man who was wonderfully successful—one of the greatest heroes that ever walked under heaven. Listen: "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

What a strange classification! He could have had treasures, belonged to the royal family, and enjoyed the pleasures of sin. Instead, it stood written in his heart: Affliction first, poverty first, God first! "For he had respect unto the recompense of reward."

This was the very thing Esau had not. He was unfit for salvation and for life eternal, so is every one like him. Hence, with solemn voice the apostle of Christ warns the wavering followers, lest there be among them "any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. For ye know how that afterwards, when he should have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears." (Heb. 12: 16, 17.)

ROBERT H. BOLL.

LOVE, GRACE, AND OBEDIENCE.

"If a man love me, he will keep my words," is what Jesus says about it, and he knew what he was talking about; and this was a plain, unequivocal statement, about which there could be no mistake, and no possibility of placing any other construction upon it. It means exactly what it says, or it means nothing at all. Hence, when a man claims he wants to be saved and go to heaven and you read to him just what the Lord tells people in his condition to do and he turns away from it and does something else, then you may know of a certainty that that man does not love Jesus. He may want to be saved by him, but he loves his own way and his own preference as to how he is to be saved more than he loves Jesus and his way. Men often do not realize the extent to which they are inclined to go their own way in religion rather than go the Lord's way. A man, for example, wants to become a Christian, and you read to him what he is to do—that he must believe the gospel, repent of his sins, confess Christ, and be buried with him in baptism. He is willing to believe, to repent, and confess Jesus as Lord, but he is not willing to be immersed. He, by his own wisdom and choice, draws the line between God's positive commands, does those things which suit him and leaves out those things which do not suit him, and does something else that suits him better; takes sprinkling or pouring instead, as it is more convenient and more pleasant for him every way; and thus he goes his own way. In so doing, he shows plainly that if faith or repentance had not suited him, he would have turned away from them also. This is why James says: "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

Whenever a man turns from any one command of God because something else suits him better, he would turn from the whole of it if he could find something else that suited him better. Hence, all such men make their own wisdom and their own preference the standard, instead of the word of God. When they do this they virtually say: "We know better what we ought to do than God, and we will go our way." They demonstrate that they do not love Jesus, for Jesus says: "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." So the man that does not observe what Jesus says does not love him. He not only rejects Jesus in rejecting what he says, but he also rejects God the Father and his words, for Jesus spoke only the words of his Father.

Again, Paul says: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." In other words, let him be accursed when the Lord comes. It is therefore perfectly clear that the man that turns away from the words of Jesus and does something else instead does not love him, and therefore cannot be saved, but will be accursed when the Lord comes to judge the world.

It all comes to this at last: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." It is very sad to think of the number that will be deceived in these matters until the last day, when it will be too late to change. Jesus says many will be there in that condition. How much better, then, to love Jesus and do his bidding in this life! Then all will be well when he comes again.

MAN'S WORKS VS. GOD'S WORKS.

Many are afraid to do what the word of God says and depend on that for salvation, because they say it will be an effort to be saved by our own works, by our own good doing. Because God's commands require something to be done by them they imagine it will be man's works and that it will be insufficient to save. They have an idea that they are to be saved by grace and that doing the commandments of God has no grace in it. They fail to distinguish between man's works and God's works. If men, instead of doing what God says, turn aside and do something God did not command, then they are doing their works, man's works, and not God's; but if they do what God says do, they are then doing God's works, and not man's.

"Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." (John 6: 28, 29.) When God commands a thing to be done, and we do it because God commands us to, then we are doing God's work, and not ours. He commands us to believe, and when we do that we do his work; he commands us to repent, and when we do that it is God's work, because he ordains it to be done; he commands people to be baptized, and when they submit to it they do God's work. But if one turns away from what God commands, does something else, then he does man's work, no matter what it is. Here is where thousands make mistakes that will cause the loss of their souls. As an example, Jesus tells the believing penitent to be baptized; but instead of doing that, he prays God to pardon him where he is, and will not submit to baptism, but takes it out in praying God to speak peace to his soul, without being baptized. Then such are turning away from God's work and doing man's work; for while God requires prayer, he does not require it at that place and for that end at all. Therefore, when man puts prayer where God put baptism, and instead of baptism, it becomes a work of man and a rejection of God. But if he will go on and be baptized as God bids him do and then pray where God bids him pray, he will be doing the work of God in both; while if he changes the places and designs of both and does one at the rejection of the other, he is then depending upon his own work to save him, and the work and power of God will have nothing to do in it. There is wonderful power and influence in prayer, if done where, when, by whom, and as God has ordained it to be done. God's power is altogether lacking in it when we put it where and for what God never appointed it. It is then only man's work and man's power, and can bring good to no one. God commands his people to sing and to make melody in their hearts to him; but when they delegate this work to a select or salaried choir or put in an organ by which to run their music instead of doing just what God said do, then they turn away from God's works and do their own works.

People will do these things right along and at the same time have a perfect horror at the idea of being saved by man's works. Yet they are doing the very thing they have a holy horror for. Consistency is a jewel. God requires his children to meet on the first day of the week to break bread and to do it in memory of Jesus. If they make arrangements to have preaching every first day and they go to hear the preaching and do not take the Lord's Supper, in this also they are doing their work, not God's, and there is no promise of any blessing in it. God has ordained all the work his people can do; and if they faithfully do that, all will be well with them.

GRACE AND WORKS GO TOGETHER.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 8-10.) "For we are laborers together with God." (1 Cor. 3: 9.) Through grace God provided the plan of salvation, which could not possibly have been done by man's works. When grace opened up the way man was required to accept it by obeying the gospel; and when we have become Christians we are then created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God has appointed, ordained, for his children to do as sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Thus we are workers together with God—that is, we are workers together with God so long as we go his way and do what he says do; but if we pull loose from God's work and get up works of our own, which he never ordained, never commanded, that very moment we cease to be coworkers with God and are simply working our own way. So long as we do the things God commanded we are working and cooperating, with his grace for our salvation. In that case we are working in the church and through the church for our own salvation, and that of others, and for the honor and glory of God. But if we begin to organize societies by human wisdom, which God never ordained, God has no part with us, nor we with him. We separate from him whenever we cease to work his way.

Jesus said: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." (Matt. 12: 30.) Every man, therefore, that fails to work by God's wisdom, but works by man's wisdom, parts company with Jesus and begins the work of scattering abroad. It is therefore impossible for us to be coworkers with God, unless we work his way, for he will not work our way. The moment we refuse to work his way and work our own way we are not only not with him, but against him; and no man can succeed in a conflict against Christ. He has conquered death and the grave, has triumphed over Satan, and will reign as King of kings and Lord of lords till all enemies are put under his feet. We may run for a while our own way, but the day of reckoning will surely come; and then our knees will have to bow before him and our tongues confess that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. It is therefore exceedingly dangerous to be against Christ, which every man is that does not work with him, that does not work the way God ordains.

"If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1: 6, 7.) To walk in darkness is to walk in man's wisdom; to walk in the light, as God is light (and with him is no darkness at all), is to walk with God, to walk by his truth. In so doing, we have fellowship, have partnership with him. So long as we have fellowship with him we are safe; but whenever we break up that fellowship by walking in darkness we thereby cut loose from God and start our own way. God will never break loose from us if we will stay with him and work with him, by doing his will. It is only when we forsake him that he forsakes us. So, then, none are saved by God's grace except those who walk in the way the grace of God has taught us to walk. In doing that we walk in the light. If we turn from it, we walk in darkness. E. G. S.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother G. A. Dunn is holding an interesting meeting at Waverly Place, a suburb of this city.

Brother A. P. Johnson has changed his address from Cades, Tenn., to Huntingdon, Tenn.

Brother H. F. Williams left last week for a tour among the churches. He will neglect no opportunity to edify saints and to teach sinners the way of life.

Brother G. W. Myers, colored, writes us that Brother A. C. Campbell preached an interesting sermon at Wartrace, Tenn., on last Lord's day. He speaks very encouragingly of Brother Campbell's work in the gospel.

Brother F. W. Smith has recently closed a good meeting at Tullahoma, Tenn. There were two additions during the meeting and much good otherwise accomplished. His next protracted meeting will be in Bowling Green, Ky.

At this writing Brother John E. Dunn is in a good meeting at Rhome, Tex. Next week he will be in a meeting at Mangum, O. T. In the headline to Brother Dunn's article which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, which reads "To the churches at Murfreesboro," it should read "To the church at Murfreesboro."

Brother J. D. Tant is having a lively meeting in West Nashville. He has so stirred up the controversial spirit of the Baptists that John T. Oakley has challenged him for a debate. The challenge has been accepted. We suppose the debate will take place after the meeting has been closed. We are not informed as to the time the debate will occur.

Brother A. Elmore will assist the church of Christ in a meeting at Litsy, Ky., the last half of June. He would be glad to spend the first half of July in Tennessee. Brother Elmore is a strong gospel preacher and we take pleasure in commending him to our readers. He says: "Some good mission point would be acceptable." His address is A. Elmore, Covington, Ind.

To all whom it may concern: Brother E. J. Griffin, who was published in the Gospel Advocate in 1898, by some of the disciples of Lowndes and Brooks Counties, Ga., as a minister from whom they had withdrawn fellowship, has set himself right, and now stands fully restored to the fellowship and confidence of the brethren.—B. F. Boyd, Newton McLeod, J. J. Howell, J. W. Fletcher, and S. L. Dowling, Valdosta, Ga.

We enjoyed a visit from Brother Larimore last week. He preached at the South College Street church of Christ on the night of the 23d inst. The meeting closed in Fayetteville with thirty baptisms and three took membership. The meeting was a very interesting one throughout and the church was greatly strengthened. His next meeting will be at Senatobia, Miss. His address will be T. B. Larimore, Senatobia, Miss., until June 3, 1900.

"Brother G. Lipscomb: I like your dialogue that is now being published in the Gospel Advocate. I wish you would put it in cheap tract form. I could use one hundred copies.—J. W. Atkisson, St. Louis, Mo." Those who would pay for a hundred or more copies of the above-mentioned dialogue should notify the writer. If enough orders guaranteed to pay for the printing, paper, and mailing expenses, the tract will be published. Address G. Lipscomb, Rural Delivery No. 3, Nashville, Tenn.

Brother J. E. Dunn writes a word of encouragement: "I was glad to see you come out in your article on 'The Modern Pastor System.' I would be more than glad to see this subject vigorously discussed before the readers of the Gospel Advocate. In my judgment, 'The Modern Pastor System' lies at the very foundation of modern innovations. The Gospel Advocate has some very fine articles in it of late; in fact, it gets better every day. The editors of the Gospel Advocate have my heart and hand in their noble work of teaching primitive Christianity."

We were pleased last week to have a visit from Brother A. Foster, of Manitoba, Canada. He reports his work there as doing well. There have been ten additions to the church of Christ in Manitoba since his work began there. This result has been accomplished without any protracted meeting. Brother Foster has established a Bible School in Manitoba, with an attendance of twenty-eight pupils. He is in need of another teacher and hopes to secure some one in this country to join him in the work. The church of Christ at Manitoba has three mission points and through these is doing much to advance the cause of Christ. Brother Foster thinks Northwestern Canada is a very fine mission field.

EDITORIAL.

We magnify the faults of our neighbors and minimize their virtues.

Each of us has a place to fill in life, and no one else can fill it for us.

The way to all that is really worth attaining in life is a narrow one.

The man truly great does not live for himself alone, but for others.

Whoever is disloyal to Christ is disloyal to the truest Friend of life.

Whoever needs my love, my sympathy, and my help is my neighbor.

The world generally gives one credit for being just about what he really is.

Though it rains without, the day is pleasant that is spent in honest, earnest work.

Making the best use of every opportunity, no matter how trivial, is sometimes called "luck."

The foundation stone of character should be a solid one, because character endures for all time.

The rich can no more afford to be idle than the poor. An unemployed mind is an open door to evil.

A minute is a little thing, but whoever does not appreciate its value cannot appreciate the value of an hour.

In our search for earthly treasures we may wander so far into the wilderness of sin that it will be impossible to return.

Descartes laid down as one of the rules of his life: "I must not seek to gratify my desires so much as to restrain them."

We sympathize more with the man who receives injury to his body than the one who receives injury to his character, yet character is of the greater value.

God's vineyard is never full. There is always room for more laborers, the gate to the vineyard is always open, and the invitation to enter and work is a standing one.

"For he was a good man" is the compliment bestowed upon Barnabas. A good man is a godly one, and a godly man is one who fears God and keeps his commandments.

Life's sea is often tempest tossed, and we always need the great Pilot who knows all the shoals and hidden rocks. He alone can guide us safely into the haven of rest.

Abraham Lincoln said: "If you intend to go to work, there is no better place than right where you are; if you do not intend to go to work, you cannot get along anywhere."

The world can get along without us, but better with us—that is, if we are living right. Every one should feel that he is a factor in the progress and development of the world's best interests and should labor faithfully to that end.

As respects our relationship to God, there is no neutral ground. John says: "Ye are of God. . . . They are of the world." The Savior says that all who are not for him are against him, and those that gather not with him scatter abroad.

Sam. Jones once said: "I believe in the omnipotence and omniscience of God with all my heart and mind, but from facts laid down in the Bible I declare to you that God is utterly powerless to save men without some man helps him in the work."

We are told that God sent his children, out to fight under Moses and helped them in their battles; therefore, God's children may fight to-day. But, while God ordered their battles, he has not told us to fight, but, on the contrary, has forbidden it. The same argument used to prove that Christians may fight now, because God ordered the battles of Israel under Moses, will also prove that Christian parents may now have a rebellious son stoned to death, because this was also the law of God under Moses. (Deut. 21: 18-21.)

Dickens tells of a mythical race of people—the Skitzlanders—who, being born perfect in body, at a certain age lost all their unused members and became great deformities. One was "a head without a heart;" another, "a pair of eyes and a bundle of nerves." Only a few of them were perfect. God gives us opportunities of doing good; we waste them, and they soon cease to present themselves. He gives us talents; we do not improve them, and they become dormant and die. The failure to use these gifts aright makes more moral and mental deformities than lack of use of members of our bodies makes physical ones.

Everything is made to help something or some one. Each planet helps in a greater or less degree to keep every other planet in its orbit; each grain of sand helps every other grain in building the seashore; springs unite to make creeks, creeks to make rivers, and rivers to swell the volume of the ocean. Do you realize that a great part of your mission in life is to help others? Helping others, our own sorrows are forgotten, our own burdens lightened, and the pathway of life blooms and becomes fragrant with the flowers of service, luring us on to the valley of happiness, which glistens and sparkles with the dews of God's eternal love.

The following is from the Christian Standard, under the head, "Biblical Criticism," which department is edited by Prof. J. W. McGarvey: "Some of the most obscure passages in all the Bible—obscure to some persons—are expressed in the simplest possible terms. For example, how obscure to some are the words, 'They both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him!' And how inscrutable the words: 'Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins!' Another example is found in the following query: 'I would like to know, through the columns of the Christian Standard, what is taught by 1 Cor. 14: 34: "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law." Also 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12: "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." I am not seeking a discussion. I am asking for information. I want to know if the apostle meant to teach the idea of silence on the part of women or not. In short, I want to know what the texts are for, and what construction to put on them.' If the brother will take Paul to mean just what he says, he will pay proper respect to the apostle, and reflect credit on his own common sense."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

If you wish first-class helps to Bible study, send us your orders for our quarterlies and Little Jewels.

The "Gospel Plan of Salvation" is a book that does not wear out with age. It should be in every home. Price, $2.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Do you need any first-class printing? We are prepared to please you and save you money on letter heads, bill-headers, envelopes, blank books, or anything you may need. Engraved and embossed work receives special attention.

By the time this issue of the paper reaches our subscribers we will be ready to supply our readers with the very useful and valuable book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." The way the orders are coming in, the first edition will soon be exhausted. A careful perusal of this book will do any one much good. Parents should place a copy in the hands of their children. It cannot fail to incite them to a nobler life. It is good for our children to reflect on such a life. The book contains about 420 large pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. Price, $1.50. Orders will be promptly filled.

Are you in need of good music books? If so, we are sure we can please you. Our new book, "Gospel Praise," will be ready for distribution on June 1, or almost by the time this reaches our subscribers. The indications are that the demand for this book will be very heavy. Many have been very anxious to receive it. It has been prepared at very great expense and labor. A. J. Showalter, the music editor, thinks it the best book of his life; excellent musicians whom we have had to pass on the merits of the music pronounce it very fine. Brother Sewell has edited the sentiment of the songs with very great care. Prices of this book will be found elsewhere in this paper. See advertisement of "Gospel Praise." It is needless for us to write here of the merits of "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," and "Voice of Praise." These books have always delighted and pleased the people.

Evangelizing—New Testament Words for Preaching in Their Bearing on Lay Evangelism.

[Without indorsing all that is in this, it is worthy the study of all.—D. L.]

There are some ten words in the New Testament to designate what we consider the preaching function of the gospel minister. Of these, four alone are important: (1) "kerusso," which, in its several forms, is found seventy-four times; (2) "euaggelizo," its root forms found one hundred and thirty-six times; (3) "propheteuo," found one hundred and ninety-nine times; and (4) "didasko," found two hundred and eleven times.

The simplest of these is the second, which merely means to tell good news; and, as applied to preaching, to tell of Christ, the Savior. The first comes next in importance and means to herald, to announce formally a person or message; as preaching, formally, by divine authority, to announce Christ as the Savior. The third, to prophesy, is next, and means to speak for or in the place of another; as preaching, in God's name, to declare his will. The last and highest is to teach, to set forth facts and truths; religiously, to teach the doctrines of redemption.

Every one of these terms is applied in the New Testament to Christ. He is said to evangelize (Luke 3: 18), to herald (Matt. 4: 1-7), to prophesy (Matt. 21: 11), and to teach (Matt. 5: 8). They are all applied to the apostles and elders—to evangelize and teach (Acts 5: 42), to herald (Matt. 10: 7), and to prophesy (Acts 13: 1).

Every one of these terms is applied to laymen. It is admitted by those who deny the right of laymen to preach that they are allowed to evangelize; we shall, therefore, refer to but one passage—Acts 8: 1-4.

THE AUTHORITY FOR LAY EVANGELISM.

As it is affirmed that the word "kerusso," to herald, is limited to official preaching and denied that it is ever used of laymen, we shall examine this word more carefully. In the first place, however, we have no need for our purpose to dispute these statements of the opposers of lay evangelism. They may be entirely right, and yet lay evangelism may be proper:

1. Because, as is clear from the parallel cases of the official deacons, official singers, and official officers of prayer, a duty may be discharged by regularly appointed officers and yet be entirely proper for others. Every one may care for the poor, publicly sing and pray, as well as the deacons, choir, and pastor.

2. Again, the issue is not whether the lay evangelist is an official herald or may act as a kerux, but is he an evangelist? May he be allowed to evangelize? Those who insist upon the distinction between "euaggelizo" and "kerusso" admit, in making that distinction, that the layman is properly an evangelist and that lay evangelism is scriptural. According to their teaching, "Philip the evangelist" was a layman, as, indeed, he probably was; and Timothy, when exhorted to "do the work of an evangelist," was directed to do lay, as distinct from official, work.

3. Still again, we are indifferent to this distinction and we do not need at all to show that the Bible applies "kerusso" to laymen, because the stronger terms "propheteuo" and "didasko" are applied to laymen. Surely, if laymen may prophesy and teach, they may also herald, or at least evangelize.

Not, therefore, that the issue at all depends upon it, let us now see whether the Bible ever uses "kerusso" of laymen or whether it is exclusively used as an official term. The leper whom Jesus cleansed, though commanded not to do so, "went out, and began to publish it [kerusso] much." (Mark 1: 45.) The Gadarene demoniac, after his healing, "departed, and began to publish [kerusso] in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him." (Mark 5: 20; see also Luke 8: 39.) The people of Decapolis, when they had witnessed the healing of the man deaf and dumb, were so moved by it that, contrary to the wish of Jesus, and "the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it [kerusso]." (Mark 7: 36.)

In Acts 8: 1-4 we are told that all the disciples were so disturbed by the martyrdom of Stephen that they were scattered abroad, and went everywhere preaching (euaggelizo) the word. Then, in verse 5, it is said that Philip went down to Samaria "and preached [kerusso] Christ unto them." Manifestly this is given as a first and remarkable instance of what was stated generally in verse 4. Philip was one of the disciples, or lay believers, who went everywhere preaching the word; but it may be said that

Philip was an evangelist. He is so called in Acts 21: 8. This, however, was at least twenty-five years after his preaching in Samaria; whereas the preaching (kerusso) in Samaria was directly after his appointment as one of the seven deacons. If the Samaria preaching was official, it was as a deacon; and this is confirmed by the case of Stephen, who lost his life by his public preaching of the gospel immediately after he was made a deacon. Moreover, even if Philip was an evangelist at this time, it does not help the case; for, according to those who make the distinction between "euaggelizo" and "kerusso," the former is unofficial, and therefore the evangelist Philip was an unofficial layman. This case of Philip seems to upset completely the argument founded on the distinction between "euaggelizo" and "kerusso."

Speaking of the Jews, Paul says: "Thou that preachest [kerusso] a man should not steal." (Rom. 2: 21.) Finally, it is said of the false teachers: "For if he that cometh preacheth [kerusso] another Jesus, whom we have not preached [kerusso]." (2 Cor. 11: 4.) "Some indeed preach [kerusso] Christ even of envy and strife." (Phil. 1: 15.) It is manifest from these passages that "kerusso" is not in the Bible confined to official preaching; and a careful examination discloses that it is as freely used of unofficial or laymen's work as is the term "euaggelizo."

As we pass from this disputed territory, we may notice the word "parakaleo," which is alleged to be an official term, separating the exhorting of Barnabas (Acts 11: 23) from the lay preaching (euaggelizo) of verse 20. Barnabas, an officer, could alone exhort (parakaleo); laymen can only evangelize (euaggelizo). Unfortunately for this alleged distinction, the Scriptures say that a Roman centurion besought (parakaleo)—Matt. 8: 5; that devils besought (parakaleo)—Matt. 8: 31-34; and that a leper besought (parakaleo)—Mark 1: 40; etc.

We pass on to our third word and refer to several instances where laymen are said to prophesy: "Anna, a prophetess" (Luke 2: 36); "Your daughters shall prophesy" (Acts 2: 17); John's disciples, directly after their baptism, "prophesied" (Acts 19: 6); Philip's daughters "did prophesy" (Acts 21: 9); "Every woman that . . . propheseth with her head uncovered" (1 Cor. 11: 5); and "Ye may all prophesy one by one." (1 Cor. 14: 31.)

Finally, laymen are said to teach: "Certain men . . . taught the brethren" (Acts 15: 1); Apollos, before he had received Christian baptism, "taught diligently the things of the Lord" (Acts 18: 25). Addressing the congregation of the church at Rome, Paul exhorts the people; "He that teacheth, let him wait on teaching" (Rom. 12: 7); similarly, in his letter to the saints at Corinth, he writes, "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine" (1 Cor. 14: 26); and, addressing the faithful brethren in Christ at Colosse, Paul exhorts them: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another." (Col. 3: 16.)

We emphasize the fact that laymen are said to prophesy and teach, as well as herald and evangelize; for surely if there are functions of the gospel ministry which are exclusive, for which laymen are least fitted, these are they. If laymen may herald, prophesy, and teach, then, a fortiori, they may evangelize; and we are contending, not for their right to herald, prophesy, or teach, but for the humbler, simpler right to evangelize.

BIBLE VIEW OF ORDINATION.

We propose to ascertain what the Bible teaches as to ordination, being satisfied that vague and unscriptural notions prevail with respect to it.

I. The Word.—There are eleven words in the original Greek that are translated "ordain" in the Authorized Version of the New Testament. Of these, only four refer to officers in the church. They are: "Kathistemi" (Titus 1: 5; Heb. 5: 1; 8: 3); "poieo" (Mark 3: 14); "tithemi" (John 15: 16 and 1 Tim. 2: 7); and "cheirotoneo" (Acts 14: 23). In the Revised Version all these words are changed in their translation to "appoint." There is a fifth word, which seems to refer to the setting apart of an officer, "ginomai" (Acts 1: 22); properly translated, however, in the Revised Version: "Of these must one become a witness with us of his resurrection." The word "ordination" does not occur in the New Testament; nor is the word "ordain," referring to church officers, found in the Revised Version. The four Greek words have no allusion to any rite or ceremony of ordination, but merely to selection or appointment.

II. The Action.—It is taught that the Scriptures authorize and require the "laying on of hands" as the symbolic act of ordination to church office.

1. There are four cases recorded in the New Testament in which hands are said to have been laid on officers: (a) On the seven supposed deacons by the apostles (Acts 6: 6); (b) on Saul by Ananias (Acts 9: 12-17); (c) on Paul and Barnabas by four prophets and teachers (Acts 13: 3); and (d) on Timothy by the presbytery (1 Tim. 4: 14) and by Paul (2 Tim. 1: 6).

2. This would seem sufficient to establish the fact that the laying on of hands was and is to be regarded an ordaining or inaugurating act for a church officer. But as many as ten or a dozen times hands are laid on those who are not church officers. There are four classes of such cases: (a) On the sick—the ruler's daughter (Matt. 9: 18; Mark 5: 23); on a few sick folk (Mark 6: 5); on a deaf and dumb man (Mark 7: 32); on a blind man (Mark 8: 23); on the sick (Mark 16: 18); on the sick with divers diseases (Luke 4: 40); on a bent woman (Luke 13: 13); on Publius (Acts 28: 8); (b) on little children (Matt. 19: 13-15); (c) on Philip's converts in Samaria (Acts 8: 17-19); and (d) on John the Baptist's disciples (Acts 19: 6).

3. It is manifest that this act was not an ordination to office, because hands were laid on Paul at least twice: (a) By Ananias (Acts 9: 17) and (b) by four prophets and teachers at Antioch (Acts 13: 3). Was Paul ordained to the ministry twice?

4. If Barnabas was ordained to the ministry by the laying on of hands (Acts 13: 3), how is it that we are told of his preaching several years before this? (Acts 11: 23-26.)

5. In appointing the apostles nothing is said of Christ laying his hands upon them. (Matt. 10: 1; Mark 3: 13, 14; 6: 7; Luke 6: 13; 9: 3.)

6. In the selection of Matthias there is a like absence of any allusion to laying on of the hands. (Acts 1: 23-26.) Indeed, Paul, Barnabas, and Timothy were the only preachers on whom hands were laid, so far as we are told.

7. There is no recorded case of the laying on of the hands of such a presbytery as our modern form of government calls for, whether for ordination or for other purpose, unless the case of Timothy (1 Tim. 4: 14) be such, where the record is silent and we are left to conjecture. It is most probable that Timothy's presbytery was, like that of Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13: 3), composed of the local elders of a single church, or was apostolic, consisting of Paul and Silas. The strong probability is that it was the latter, as is shown by 2 Tim. 1: 6.

8. It seems clear that this scriptural laying on of hands was not a rite ordaining to office, but that it merely symbolized the general conferring of a blessing.

III. The Blessing Bestowed.—According to 1 Tim. 4: 14, the blessing bestowed by the laying on of hands is called a "gift;" in Greek, "charisma." If in Timothy's case it refers to his ordination to the ministry, then it is construed to mean authority to preach. The word "charisma" is found some seventeen times in the New Testament, and is always translated "gift" or "free gift" in our Old Version.

1. In a majority of cases it is used of blessings conferred on unofficial persons. (Rom. 1: 11; 5: 15, 16; 6: 23; 11: 29; 1 Cor. 1: 7; 7: 7; 12: 4-31; 2 Cor. 1: 11; and 1 Pet. 4: 10.)

2. In other cases it refers to the power of working miracles. (1 Cor. 12: 9, 28-30.)

3. In one instance it is applied to the graces of the Spirit as conferred on officers and private persons. (Rom. 12: 6.)

The fair inference is that in the two cases of Timothy (1 Tim. 4: 14 and 2 Tim. 1: 6) it means either the ordinary graces of the Spirit, or, more probably, the power of working miracles. This latter conclusion is strengthened by Acts 8: 17-19 and 19: 6, where the laying on of hands is connected with miraculous bestowment. At any rate, by the analogy of scripture, "charisma" does not mean authority.

It is clear, therefore, that there is no scripture warrant for requiring men to be ordained by the imposition of the hands of a presbytery composed of ministers and elders from a group of churches. There is no instance given in the Bible of such a presbytery. So far as the New Testament teaches, there is not a case in which any preacher received authority to preach from any court of the church, or from any human being, or by any rite or ceremony. Their authority came from the divine command to the church, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," impressed upon them by the Holy Spirit.

Shall we, therefore, not have a regular ministry, authorized to preach and to represent the church and set apart for the work by a rite of ordination? Yes, by all means; but purely on the . . . and of expediency, and not at all because the Scriptures command it. Lay preaching supposes official preaching, does not interfere with it, supplements it, and, properly used, has been and will be an invaluable aid to it.

THE WORK OF THE LAY PREACHER.

It is probable that the prejudice against lay preachers arises chiefly from a misapprehension as to their proper work. They are not to supplant the regular ministry, but to supplement its work. They are indeed to do one thing that the ordained preacher also does, and, so far, their work is the same. But, in the first place, this is but a small and comparatively easy part of the regular preacher's functions; it is the simplest kind of preaching—a kind that requires the least general or special talent or preparation. At the same time it is a work that many educated and otherwise forceful men are unable to do, from lack either of time or of fitness. It is a humble, but a useful work; not only in the conducting of protracted meetings, but in supplying destitutions in our mission fields. A layman may have only ten or twenty talks, his whole stock, and these not of a high intellectual order; but with them he may do great good in special meetings or in schoolhouse gatherings.

The ordained preacher has a much higher and more difficult work to do in the pulpit. He must, week after week, year after year, teach the gospel to his people. I know no profession which makes such a demand on the mental resources. In addition to this, and more important than the simple preaching of lay evangelists, is the pastoral work of the regular ministry, the care of souls, than which no greater burden can be laid on any earnest man. Still again, the official preacher is a presbyter, a ruler in God's house; and as such, in the parochial, provincial and general presbyteries, has functions of the highest responsibility to discharge.

It is thus clear that the lay preacher is not to usurp the functions of his official brother, but to help him do the simplest, easiest part of his work, for which the pastor may not have sufficient time, and possibly no special fitness.—Prof. James A. Quarles, in Homiletic Review.

CIRCUMCISION.

A brother states a Presbyterian preacher said a male child must be circumcised on the eighth day or it could not be saved, and asks an explanation of "circumcision." Our brother misunderstands the Presbyterian preacher. Abraham was required to circumcise male children when eight days old. One not circumcised could not come into the congregation of Israel.

The law was: "And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee in their generations. This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant." (Gen. 17: 9-14.)

This law was perpetuated among the descendants of Abraham, and none of their children could come into the congregation or participate in the worship of God who were uncircumcised. Our Presbyterian friends claim baptism came in the place of circumcision and that children should be baptized at eight days old. The Bible nowhere intimates that baptism came in place of circumcision. This is conjecture without a word of foundation; for, first, none but males were circumcised, and both males and females are required to be baptized. The Jews who had been circumcised were required to be baptized also, so this did not come in the place of that. The Bible speaks of the circumcision not made with hands, the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh. Circumcision is made to typify forgiveness of sins, but not baptism. Only believers are commanded to be baptized; children were required to be circumcised.

D. L.

Each life begins and ends with a moment.—Selected.

Home Reading.

A BOY THAT WAS WANTED.

"O, say, Mr. Bradford, are you in a hurry?" panted bright, rosy-cheeked George Ellis, running up to the sleigh from which that gentleman was alighting.

"In too much of a hurry to stand long in this snowy air. Come into the store if you wish to speak to me."

"Thank you, sir;" and picking up a basket the driver had set upon the curb, he opened the door of the large general store and held it for the proprietor to pass through.

"Thank you," said the gentleman. "Now, what is it?"

"My mother slipped and broke her ankle—"

"Yes, sir, I heard of it. Very sorry! Hope she is doing well."

"It takes time, of course, sir, and it is so hard for her to lie on the sofa all day. I came to ask if you would allow her to use that wheel chair in the back store for a few weeks, and let me work for you to pay for it."

"Did she send you to ask for this?"

"O, no sir! I thought of it myself."

"What could you do? I have never had a boy about the place."

"I know it, sir, but I can see things that might be done. The plants there in the front window will lose their leaves if they are not watered pretty soon."

The gentleman stepped to the window and glanced at the plants before he replied: "How did you happen to notice them?"

"Mother taught me. Every time I pass the window I wish I could arrange them so that they would show better."

"I dare say they have been neglected. I bought them to make up an assortment. Fix up the window to suit yourself. I will send up the chair the first time the delivery wagon goes that way."

"O, thank you, sir!" and the lad's mittens and coat were off and he was at the other side of the large store after water before Mr. Bradford had even turned toward his desk.

He found real delight, as a genuine plant lover does, in seeing the thirsty green things drink up the needed refreshment and noting how quickly they responded by an added appearance of freshness and luxuriance.

He then polished the plate-glass window, spread down green straw carriage mats to resemble grass, grouped the plants tastefully upon them, and then pushed a green-covered lounge around so it had the effect of a mound of moss, and disposed a large landscape upon an easel as a background.

Being near the entrance, he politely opened the door for every lady who came up the steps, and when Mrs. Nevers drove up with a portfolio of pictures to be framed he stepped out and brought them in for her as politely as could be.

Mr. Bradford from his desk could not help noticing this spontaneous anticipatory service, and was interested when the lady said: "I am so glad you have George Ellis here; I am afraid he and his mother are having a hard time to get along. He is in my Sunday school class and the brightest, most obliging lad I know. Did he arrange that window? I might have known it. It is a perfect picture, or, what is better, a bit of summer. No wonder that every passer-by stops to take a look at such a delightful contrast to the world outside. It is very refreshing this dreary day."

Mr. Bradford, whose store was known as the "Old Curiosity Shop" or "The Museum," had never felt so complacent over his surroundings in his life, and was now most pleasantly surprised by an acquaintance coming in to ask the price of the landscape in the window, and by his purchasing it at once, saying: "My shut-in sister has been asking for a picture of green fields, but I didn't suppose I could find one in town."

"That picture has stood near that window all winter."

"Well, I never looked in your window; if I had, I could have seen nothing for the dust; but your show this cold morning would attract any one. What's up?" and the man went off laughing.

"Where is George? He must find another picture to replace that one," said Mr. Bradford.

"And what then, sir?" asked the boy, respectfully.

"Anything that suggests itself to you."

"O, thank you, sir! There are so many nice things here; your store should be the prettiest in the village."

"And it is only a lumber room; but I give you the liberty to make whatever you can out of it."

At the end of a week the front of the store was so pleasantly and artistically arranged that every customer had some complimentary remarks to make. Two drummers came in, and one of them exclaimed: "I thought I was in the wrong store! I have been describing your 'Old Curiosity Shop' to my friend here and telling him he could buy anything from a humming bird's nest to a second-hand pulpit, but—"

"But, although order is being brought out of chaos, I have the same variety," and he told the story of how it all happened, adding: "I have not the least particle of order about me, and I never yet employed a clerk who had interest enough in the business to do anything except what he was told, until this lad came in."

"That is just the kind of a boy we are looking for. There is always a place for that kind of a boy. You'll have to pay him well, or you won't keep him long. There's our train. I'll run in on my way back and have a talk with the fine little fellow."

"Fine little fellow, indeed!" said Mr. Bradford to himself. "Think they can get him away from me, do they? I guess not!" and calling to George, he said: "Here is the balance of what you have earned over and above paying for the rent of the chair, and tell your mother I am coming in this evening to see about your staying on with me for a year out of school hours. A lad with your head for business mustn't neglect school."

"My head for business is following mother's ways—doing whatever is to be done, and doing it well. You are very kind, Mr. Bradford;" and the boy's feet kept pace with the wind as he flew up the street to tell his mother the good news—that he was sure now of steady work and she needn't worry any more, for he could take care of them both.

It is Bradford & Ellis now, and you wouldn't know the place; but there are always picturesque effects in the windows, and Mr. Bradford is never weary of telling how his young partner made himself a necessity in the business.—Zion's Herald.

IGNORANCE OF THE BIBLE.

Never were there so many persons engaged in the study of the Bible as to-day; and yet there exists a great degree of ignorance of the Bible among people whom one would not at first suspect of such ignorance.

A member of the faculty of Northwestern University (Professor Coe) not long since put a few simple queries about the Bible to nearly a hundred college students, presumably brought up in Christian homes and enjoying such instruction as the average Sunday school and pulpit of the day afford. These were the questions:

1. What is the Pentateuch?
2. What is the higher criticism of the Scriptures?
3. Does the book of Jude belong to the New Testament or to the Old Testament?
4. Name one of the patriarchs of the Old Testament.
5. Name one of the judges of the Old Testament.
6. Name three of the kings of Israel.
7. Name three prophets.
8. Give one of the beatitudes.
9. Quote a verse from the letter to the Romans.

The answers were made in writing. Ninety-six papers were returned. It must be confessed that the questions are sufficiently easy, though one might be pardoned for not being very high up on the second question. Professor Coe says that only eight persons answered the nine questions. Only thirteen answered eight questions correctly. The average student was able to answer only about one-half the questions. Among the judges were named Solomon, Jeremiah, Daniel (doubtless "a Daniel come to judgment!"), and Leviticus; among the prophets, Matthew, Luke, and John. Herod and Ananias appeared as kings of Israel. Nebuchadnezzar figured as both judge and king of Israel. The Pentateuch was confused with the Gospels, and in one case with "the seven Gospels." Among the beatitudes were the following: "Blessed are the poor in heart: for they shall see God;" "Blessed are the lawgivers;" and "Blessed are the hungry, for they shall be fed." "The recital of these things," says Professor Coe, "is painful, not to say humiliating. But if the facts indicate what they seem to, then the time has come for plain speech."—Our Young Folks.

Conscience is a sort of alarm clock to keep the soul from sleeping too long. Some of us grow so accustomed to its sound that we do not heed it.—Exchange.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., MAY 31, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

CHURCH DIVISIONS.

Christians are to constitute one body in Christ. "For we being many are one bread, and one body. for we are all partakers of that one bread." (1 Cor. 10: 17.) "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." (1 Cor. 12: 13.) "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind." (2 Cor. 13: 11.) "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3: 28; see also Phil. 2; 1 Pet. 3: 8.) That "he might gather together in one all things in Christ." (Eph. 1: 10.) "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition . . . to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." (Eph. 2: 14, 15.) "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." (Verses 21, 22.) "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." (Eph. 4: 3-6.) "That ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." (Phil. 1: 27.) "Till we all come in the unity of the faith." (Eph. 4: 13.) The dying prayer of Jesus was: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me; . . . that they may be one, even as we are one; . . . that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

Individual Christians were to be one, as the members of the body, while performing different offices, constitute one undivided and indivisible body. They are to work together as parts of the same body, not as distinct, separate, and rival bodies. The separate and distinct bodies of Christendom, no matter how friendly they become, can never fill the demands of Jesus and the Holy Spirit for unity. To maintain separate parties is to fight against Christ and the Holy Spirit and to throw stumbling-blocks and hindrances in the way of the world believing in Jesus Christ. No truth is more clearly and constantly enforced in the Bible than this. Nor does the Bible leave any doubt how this unity is to be brought about and maintained. It is by doing the will of God as revealed in the Bible, adding nothing thereto, taking nothing therefrom. Jesus Christ is the head in heaven; the Holy Spirit dwells in the body and through the word he has given in the Bible guides that body.

"Church" means called out, separated from the world. The church of God is composed of worshippers of God, separated from others, and ruled and governed by God as the only lawmaker. The distinguishing feature of the church of God is that God is its only lawmaker. God has reserved to himself this prerogative, that he only can make laws for his kingdom or his church; and he is jealous of this reserved right. When a church accepts another lawmaker than God, whether it be itself or another power that makes laws, in that act it rejects God as the only lawmaker, and ceases to be an accepted church of God. It shows disloyalty to God. This can be done in what man regards as small matters as well as in what seems to be greater ones. The eating the forbidden fruit has always seemed to man to be a small matter, but it was sufficient to show our first parents chose another lawmaker than God.

"Church" is used in a general and universal sense, also in a specific and local one. In its universal sense it embraces all the spirits of the universe that obey God as the ruler and the lawmaker. (Heb. 12: 22-29.) In its local sense it embraces all persons in a locality who are separated from the world by obedience to God's laws. While we are in the world we can know and approach this church only in its local manifestations. There is one universal church, with many local manifestations. So far as this church is composed of spirits that are invisible, the church is invisible; so far as it is composed of visible men and women, it is a visible body. No visible being can be a part or a member of an invisible church, any more than visible arms and legs can compose an invisible body. If a visible, material person is a member of the church, he is a member of the visible local church where he lives. All Christians in Scripture times were members of these local churches. They became so by obedience to God. These local churches were bodies distinct and separate, without any organic connection with one another. Each was a complete body within itself. The members of these local assemblies, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, chose their own rulers and workers. The local congregation was the highest and only manifestation of the church. Each congregation stood on perfect equality with all others. The officers of the local congregation were the highest dignitaries of the church, and they were chief servants and ruled by example rather than by authority.

Church historians agree in describing these primitive churches. Mosheim says: "Whoever acknowledged that Christ is the Savior of mankind, and made a solemn profession of his faith in him, was immediately baptized and received into the church."

"The churches which were established by the apostles and their disciples exhibit a remarkable degree of unanimity: one in faith and the fellowship of love, they were united in spirit as different members of one body, or as brethren of the same family. This union and fellowship of spirit the apostles carefully promoted among all the churches. But they instituted no external form of union or confederation between those of the different towns or provinces; nor within the first century of the Christian era can any trace of such a confederacy, whether diocesan or conventional, be detected on the page of history. The diocesan, metropolitan, and patriarchal forms of organization belong to a later age. The idea of a holy catholic church had not yet arisen in the church, nor had it assumed any outward form. Wherever converts to Christianity were multiplied they formed themselves into a church, under the guidance of their religious teachers, for the enjoyment of the Christian ordinances; but each individual church constituted an independent and separate community."

"Let none confound the bishops of this primitive and golden period of the church with those of whom we read in the following ages, for though they were both distinguished by the same name, yet they differed in many respects. A bishop during the first and second centuries was a person who had the care of one assembly, which was at that time, generally speaking, small enough to be contained in a private house. In this assembly he acted not so much with the authority of a master as with the zeal and diligence of a faithful servant."

"It was only in the second century that the custom of holding councils commenced in Greece, whence it spread through the other provinces."

"During the greater part of this century the churches were independent with respect to each other, nor were they joined by association, confederacy, or any other bond than that of charity; . . . but in process of time all the Christian churches of a province were formed into one large ecclesiastical body, which, like confederate States, assembled at certain times in order to deliberate about the common interests of the whole."

"This institution had its origin among the Greeks, . . . but these ecclesiastical associations were not long confined to the Greeks. . . . To these assemblies . . . the names of 'synods' were appropriated by the Greeks, and that of 'councils,' by the Latins; and the laws that were enacted in these general meetings were called 'canons'—i. e., rules. These councils, of which we find not the slightest trace before the middle of this century, changed the whole face of the church and gave it a new form, for by them the ancient privileges of the people were diminished and the power and authority of the bishops greatly augmented; . . . they imperceptibly extended the limits of their authority, turned their influence into dominion and their counsel into laws, and openly asserted at length that Christ empowered them to prescribe to his people authoritative rules of faith and manners."

These are quotations chiefly from Mosheim and from Lyman Coleman, a Presbyterian, the author of a "History of the Apostolic and Primitive Church." He quotes largely from Mosheim, Neander, Dr. Barrow, Burton, Riddle, Archbishop Whately, Episcopalians, to the same effect. Gibbon, in his "History of the Roman Empire," gives the same description of the churches. So do Schaff, Armitage, and all church historians known to me.

No student of the Bible will say that the Scriptures make any provisions for denominational organizations. The churches were local churches, united by one faith in the bonds of love and sympathy, without any connectional or general organizations. All combining churches into general or denominational organizations is the work of man. These organizations are the result of man's legislation where God only has the right to make laws. Man in forming these general organizations made laws to regulate the churches of God. Mosheim testifies these organizations diminished the power of the people, increased that of the prelates, and changed the whole face of the churches. The teaching of the Holy Spirit through the apostles formed local organizations, all alike in faith, love, and work, united by ties of love and sympathy, without any general organization. The same teaching of the Holy Spirit is found now in the word of God. If followed, it will produce the same results, congregations of Christ, without general organization or societies other than the local churches of Christ. Those who so legislate assume the prerogatives that God has reserved to himself and reject God as the only lawgiver.

Then all denominational bodies and general organizations are additions to the order and law of God. They show disloyalty to God. A union in Christ and under his law cannot take place in a general or denominational body. These general bodies embrace and control the congregations. God left the congregations with Christ as the only head. These denominations came between them and Christ and weakened their loyalty to Christ. The average church member looks more to the denominational teaching and interest than to the teaching of Christ and obedience to his will. These denominations are formed on human creeds and confessions of faith which are based on the assumed insufficiency of the word of God, on the assumption that man can form a better statement of truth than God has formed.

These denominations perpetuate the errors and strifes of the ignorant ages to succeeding ages. Calvin was the victim of an age of bitterness and strife, ignorant of the spirit of the gospel. His religion required him to burn those who dissented from him. His own feelings tinged his conceptions of the character of God. God, in his esteem, doomed certain angels and men, including infants, to eternal damnation, regardless of their character or life. This was embodied in a creed, and by the denominational organization has been transmitted to succeeding generations as a bone of discord. Save for those denominations originating in a dark age, these questions would not trouble Christendom to-day. Increased knowledge and influence of the Bible on human character have given a better understanding of God's character and work. Without general organizations divisions could not spread wide or continue long among Christians.

In religion the appreciation of one truth prepares for the reception of higher ones. These creeds bind Christians of this age to the conclusions of the dark ages. If the Bible was accepted as the only and all-sufficient creed of Christendom, it would lead man upward with succeeding ages from one degree of truth to a higher and purer one, as he is capacitated to receive it. The Bible provides for different degrees of knowledge of the divine will, and commands: "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." (Phil. 3: 16.) Human creeds assume to contain all truth, and make no provision for growth in Scripture knowledge of the people of God. To take the word of God as the only rule of faith and practice binds man as he learns more truth to conform his faith to the increased knowledge of the will of God. The evils of denominations would be aggravated rather than cured by uniting all parties into one. Denominations are not of God, and God's Spirit cannot animate them. To the extent one drinks into the Spirit of Christ, he loses the denominational spirit, he gains a corresponding zeal for the truth of God. The Spirit of Christ cherished will disintegrate all denominations. General organization comes between man and his Maker, weakens his feelings of responsibility to Christ, and destroys his zeal.

God's order is wisest and best. He ordained local churches governed by his word without any bonds of union other than those of faith and love. Christians grew and multiplied in this condition as they have never done since. In all ages of the world Christians have maintained purity in life and devotion as they have preserved God's order. Personal responsibility to God keeps one close to him, promotes holiness, and quickens zeal. "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." He works through his own appointments. Man receives God's strength in walking in God's ways. D. L.

THE PRICE OF A RELIGIOUS PAPER.

"Prices on almost everything have increased from twenty-five to one hundred per cent, yet people are wanting a reduction on the price of their religious paper. It costs about twenty-five per cent more to buy the paper on which our papers are printed this year than it did last year, and our subscribers ought to be willing to bear a part of the burden. In every other business, when prices advance, the consumer has to pay the advance, but in the newspaper business the publisher has all the burden." (Christian Guide.)

The above states a truth that needs to be emphasized. Our experience has been the same as that of the Christian Guide. The advance on the grade of paper used in the publication of religious journals has been even more than twenty-five per cent. Nearly everything used by the publisher has advanced. Leather, cloth, and bookbinders' boards are much higher than at this time last year. The farmer is getting higher prices for produce than he has for years. Stock is selling at a good price. Here in Nashville a steak that formerly cost twenty-five cents is now costing thirty-five cents. Almost everything the religious publisher buys for himself and family is higher, still the price of his paper is the same. He might be able to stand this without great inconvenience if he had been making great sums of money on his publication at old prices; but facts and past experience show to the contrary. Running a religious journal is not a lucrative business. None of us would publish a paper in the advocacy of truth if we expected to get rich thereby. Men prompted by a desire to do good and to extend the cause of Jesus Christ may enter such a work. Our object in living is not simply to make money. Every man should desire to make the world better from his having lived in it, and the publisher of a religious paper should especially strive to appreciate the truth of this scripture: "But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (1 Tim. 6: 6-10.) The man who lives simply to make money must think meanly of himself. He is prostituting his talents. When the devil suggested to Jesus to make the stones into bread to feed himself, Jesus would not entertain the proposition for one moment. Such prostitution—all a man's talents and energies given simply to feeding self! Better heed the admonition of Paul: "But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses." When any man turns away from that calling in which he can accomplish the most good to a more lucrative position, he is prostituting his talents and doing the very thing the devil tempted Jesus to do.

It is a mistake to imagine that the religious publishing business is a lucrative one. Still every religious paper has some few subscribers who are never satisfied, who complain that the paper is too high. Some have offered to take the Gospel Advocate at one dollar per year who will not take it at one dollar and fifty cents per year. Now, we believe if we could let them have the paper at one dollar per year, it would not be long until they would want it at fifty cents per year. But it takes a very little good reading to satisfy some. It seems that the least they get, the better satisfied they are. Such prefer to read the political gossip and sensational trash of the day. They delight to feed on the reports of the foulest murders and blackest crimes that curse our land. Seemingly they place a higher value on this than on good, pure, and wholesome reading; for when asked to subscribe for the religious weekly, at once the cry is heard: "Too high!" It should be as cheap as the political weekly." They forget that the political weekly is printed on the same type as the daily, which has already been paid for, and that the paper is much cheaper than that used in religious journals. With our type paid for, and the paper costing much less, we could better afford to publish the Gospel Advocate for one dollar than at one dollar and fifty cents.

It would be suicidal to reduce the price of the Gospel Advocate to one dollar per year. The expense of publishing the paper is greater than ever before. As already stated, the blank paper is higher; besides, we are giving our readers more reading matter and fewer advertisements than ever before. For advertising we are receiving much less cash than we have for years. When I began work with the paper, over fifteen years ago, the paper carried some seven pages of advertisements, while now there are three, perhaps a little over, on an average. Merchants travel men more than in years gone by, so they do not advertise in papers so much. Thus it will be seen, as our expenses are greatly increased and our receipts must be less, it would not be wise to reduce the subscription price. The paper has never made great profits. Some years it has lost money, and some it has shown only a slight profit. If our list would be increased about three times what it is now, by reducing to one dollar, we would then be able to stand the reduction. It costs as much to set the type for one paper as for one hundred thousand copies. We did not find that our list was increased any when we reduced the paper from two dollars to one dollar and fifty cents.

In view of these facts, we believe that all our subscribers will agree with us in saying we cannot reduce the price of the paper. A wiser and safer policy would be to advance the price, as nearly everything else has advanced.

But some think that we reduce the price of the paper when we send them a Bible as a premium. This is a mistake. We buy these Bibles in large quantities at wholesale prices and make the saving to our subscriber on the Bible, and not on the paper. We give him nearly all the profit which he would have to pay other dealers. When a brother gives his time and labor to work up subscribers for us we compensate him for that labor by giving him a good Bible. It is not intended as a reduction in the price of the paper, for the subscriber is required to pay one dollar and fifty cents, as all other subscribers.

If the Gospel Advocate is contending for God's eternal truth and you love that truth, we would certainly appreciate your cooperation in this blessed work. This world, with all its beauty and glory, will soon fade from our view, but the truth shall live forever. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please tell in the Gospel Advocate who the ungodly man is.

The godly man is one who lives a godly life; the ungodly man is one who fails to live a godly life. It is generally explained that the sinner is one who makes no pretension to serve God. The ungodly is one who, while professing to serve God, yet fails to live as God directs.

Brother Lipscomb: I thought I would write and see if there is a young preacher, single preferred, that would like to come West. There are so few preachers of the church of Christ in the West. There are about twelve members here and some scattered around, and we need a preacher. We are in a place where he can take a ranch, if he should want one.

If you know of one, please let me know, and I will see what the brethren will do for him.

Dyer, Wash.

D. TIERNEY.

Brother Lipscomb: I love the Gospel Advocate next to the Bible and hope you may live long to publish the good sermons that you are publishing; that is all the preaching that we have now. If you know of any preacher that wants a location, send him to Pinkney, Tenn., to look around. It might please one to stop with us a while. We want a sound gospel preacher. I think he might do some good here. We are few in number and need some one to help us. We will do all we can to help him in the way of support. We know our duty and are willing to do it. ELITIA WELCH.

Pinkney, Tenn.

Brother Sewell: I desire to ask you some questions about the missionary work, as I am very much troubled over the matter. We have some brethren here who say there is not a specific rule in the Bible as to how to do missionary work. They say we have got a command to do the work, but the Bible does not say fully how to do it. They say we then have to use our best judgment when it says do a thing and does not tell how to do it. Now, I know if there is a way in the Bible how to do missionary work, you can find it. A common mind, as mine, is not able to find it. Please give me chapters and verses how to do missionary work in full. A. C. CARTER.

Wenasoga, Miss.

The trouble in this case is simply in the fact that the people are not satisfied with the New Testament as it is. They want something else, and because that something else that they want is not written there they claim that there is nothing on the subject. This is exactly the trouble in the case. We all know there is no missionary society written in the New Testament. That is perfectly plain. But shall we say that therefore there is no way of spreading the gospel revealed? It is exceedingly rash to say so. Jesus said to the apostles: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This is plain, and it stands on record in the book. Jesus also said, regarding the disciples the apostles made: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This includes all disciples, all Christians, through all time; hence, includes us to-day, and means we shall go and preach the gospel. This is plain, and is in the New Testament. In this immediate connection there is nothing said about the support of those who go and preach, but elsewhere it is said: "They that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." We are informed that the church at Philippi sent once and again to Paul's necessities. In another place it is said Paul made tents, and preached, sustaining himself. These things are all laid down in the New Testament, and that is the way the gospel was spread then. So, if anybody wants to sound out the gospel, let him go and preach, as they did; and let some church or churches that know of his going send once and again to his necessities, as we read it in the word of God. That is the way we read it, as done in the days of the apostles; but that simple, earnest, and self-sacrificing way does not suit people now. They want societies and boards to send out preachers, and to pay them for their services. Nothing like this is found in the Bible. The way of spreading the gospel in New Testament times is plain enough to those who are willing to go by it; but those not willing to go by it will never see it, and will still contend there is no way or plan revealed. Such men as these never do as Paul did when a prisoner in Rome—preach to the people in his own hired house. Preachers in these days never think of such a thing, but they will go to the ends of the earth if the board of some rich society will send them and pledge them a support. Let all learn to be satisfied with what is written, and then all is as plain as it needs to be.

Happiness is nothing but that sweet delight which will arise from the harmonious agreement between our wills and the will of God.—Ralph Cudworth.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

FORRESTER.

The angel of death visited the home of Sam. and Minnie Forrester and took from them their little darling, Georgie Bessie. She was born on May 14, 1898, and died on April 22, 1900, being one year, eleven months, and twenty-two days old. Although her stay on earth was short, it was long enough to cause all who knew her to love her. She was just beginning to learn to talk so all could understand her sweet baby prattle. She was so much company to her father and mother, as she was their only child, the joy and pride of their lives. 'Tis hard—O, so hard—to give her up; but perhaps 'tis better thus, for never again will her poor little body suffer pain, and her soul rests with Him who said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." May we all strive to meet little Georgie Bessie where sin, sorrow, and death never enter.

ZONA FORRESTER.

BARBER.

Again has death invaded our young and little flock at this place and robbed us of one of our most earnest and best beloved workers, in the person of Sister E. C. Barber, wife of Brother Samuel Barber, who, after an illness of about ten days, died on April 19, 1900, at the age of thirty years, four months, and two days. Sister Barber came to us from the Palmersville congregation when this church was organized, two years ago, and has been a consistent and valuable member. We shall miss her in the meetings and work of the church, the community will miss her as a member of its society, but it is at the home and on our sorrowing brother and his little boy and girl that the burden bears hardest. May the hope of a family reunion be unto them a source of strength and comfort until its happy consummation.

Boydsville, Ky. J. T. CABE.

COOK.

On October 23, 1899, the death angel visited the home of Brother T. Cook, of Rush Creek congregation, Cannon County, Tenn., and took from him his loving wife, Mary E. Cook. Sister Cook was born on March 11, 1858; became a member of the church of Christ in her eleventh year, and lived a devoted Christian life until the Lord, in his wisdom, saw fit to take her to her reward. When I was called upon to conduct the funeral service I thought of the testimony of the Spirit: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." She labored faithfully as a wife and mother in the cares and toils of her home. She loved and rejoiced in work for the Lord. Sister Cook leaves a husband and four children to mourn her absence. These have our prayers and should ever have the fellowship in brotherly love of all who know them. W. T. TRACY.

Woodbury, Tenn.

STEVENS.

David Hubbard, only child of John B. and Annie Hubbard Stevens, was born on July 15, 1896, and died on November 22, 1898. For more than

ROYAL

The absolutely pure

BAKING POWDER

ROYAL—the most celebrated of all the baking powders in the world—celebrated for its great leavening strength and purity. It makes your cakes, biscuit, bread, etc., healthful; it assures you against alum and all forms of adulteration that go with the cheap brands.

Alum baking powders are low priced, as alum costs but two cents a pound; but alum is a corrosive poison and it renders the baking powder dangerous to use in food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

two years this little pilgrim cheered life's way for us, scattering love and joy and sweet content, but soon growing weary, he put by his playthings and laid him down to rest. Who can estimate the influence of a little child? Jesus said: "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." Doubtless he thought of his own childhood and the consecrated pair who received him as the gift of God; and we, too, may be sure that with every babe that is welcomed in the name of Jesus we have both the Father and the Son to dwell with us. Brother and Sister Stevens will be nobler and better all their lives for the presence of this little child in their home, for to those who have loved and lost a child, all children are sacred. In the bright hereafter little Hubbard will be glad to know that his influence, through the Lord Jesus, prompted his bereaved father and mother to care for some homeless and friendless child, and to other deeds of self-sacrifice and devotion.

NELLIE P. SEWELL.

WARD.

Sister Jennie Ward, the wedded companion of Mr. Willis Ward, of Cooper, Tex., and the daughter of Brother F. G. and Sister M. A. Cross, sweetly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus on May 7, 1900; aged thirty-one years, three months, and sixteen days. She was born on February 21, 1869; married on June 14, 1900; and, in the language of her devoted husband, "has ever been a true, devoted wife and Christian lady." Sister Ward obeyed the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in her seventeenth year, and lived a consistent Christian life until her Father called her home. In her fourteenth year she became afflicted with a disease peculiar to her sex and lived a life of pain and anxiety for relief. For five long years she was confined to her bed, and was finally taken to St. Joseph's Infirmary. On the twenty-eighth day after her arrival there a surgical operation was performed on her and she died of blood poison resulting therefrom. On account of Sister Ward's consistent Christian life and suffering, she begat a profound sympathy from husband, relatives, and acquaintances, who now elect her to a place where there is no more pain and death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Commerce, Tex. H. C. BOOTH.

GIDDENS.

Brother E. P. Giddens, of Knox Point, Bossier Parish, La., was hurt while working with some cattle and died two days later—on April 9, 1900. He was born in Jackson County, Ga., on December 28, 1837; moved to Claiborne Parish, La., in 1867, and to Bossier Parish in 1887. He obeyed the gospel about 1874, and immediately began preaching the word; but owing to the ill health of his companion, he abandoned that work for a while. Later, he began the good work again and preached in destitute fields in Northwest Louisiana, as he had opportunity, and almost at his own expense. He would work on his little farm until he could spare the time, and then get on his horse and go to some place to tell sinners of the Savior of souls, and many times to places where we had no church. Eternity alone can reveal the good he has done. Many a time has the writer been edified by sweet association with that man of God. He was kind, gentle, and benevolent, always ready to help the needy. Words of sympathy are as empty sounds to the aged Christian companion and the son and daughter he leaves behind; but we can exhort them to press onward and ere many more fleeting years shall pass they can find rest and peace in that sweet home of the soul, in the bright beyond.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

Plain Dealing, La.

ROACH.

Brother John R. Roach was born in North Carolina on October 16, 1845. In his early life his father moved and located in Mississippi. He was married on August 31, 1865, to Catherine Jernegan. To them were born ten children, seven of whom are living and mourn with their mother the untimely death of an affectionate father, a faithful, devoted, and loving husband. Brother Roach was reared under Methodist teaching, and became a member of the Methodist Church while young in years; but after developing into manhood and hearing the gospel as preached by W. B. Lauderdale, Tom Caskey, and others, his investigating mind led him to throw off sectarian shackles and simply be a Christian. He was baptized by Brother Lauderdale about the year 1880. He was ardent in his devotions and zealous in good work. Nearly ten years ago he began the preaching of the gospel in its primitive purity, rigidly adhering to the old Christian motto: "Speak where the Bible speaks, and be silent where the Bible is silent." He strenuously opposed every modern claptrap innovation which in the least was calculated to despoil and mar the peace and unity of the people of God. Brother Roach will be greatly missed in the Bardwell vicinity and its surrounding country. He was kind in disposition and courteous to all. He was specially devoted to his wife and children; therefore his absence makes a vacuum in their hearts which the things of earth can never fill. Yet the bright angel, Hope, points them to a reunion, another meeting, which will know no parting, where a triumphant song will continue throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. What a consolation! Brother Roach was engaged in the grocery business at Bardwell. On the morning of April 19, 1900, he drove a pair of gentle horses to Ennis for supplies. After having loaded his wagon and while turning in the street to go home the team became frightened and unmanageable, throwing him to the ground, the heavily loaded wagon passing across his body, crushing his ribs and breast-bone, causing death in a few hours. Thus the life of a good man was taken from the earth. V. I. STIRMAN.

After a Day's Hard Work, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It is a grateful tonic, relieving fatigue and depression so common in midsummer.

Gratitude, in whatever way expressed, is of itself no mean or trifling gift. The sincere word of thanks, the honest smile of pleasure, and the real appreciation of a kindness bring a flow of joy into the heart of the giver which is worth many a material benefit.—Exchange.

Send us a new subscriber.

From Washington

How a Little Boy Was Saved.

Washington, D. C.—“When our boy was about 16 months old he broke out with a rash which was thought to be measles. In a few days he had a swelling on the left side of his neck and it was decided to be mumps. He was given medical attendance for about three weeks when the doctor said it was scrofula and ordered a salve. He wanted to lance the sore, but I would not let him and continued giving him medicine for about four months when the bunch broke in two places and became a running sore. Three doctors said it was scrofula and each ordered a blood medicine. A neighbor told me of a case somewhat like our baby's which was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I decided to give it to my boy and in a short while his health improved and his neck healed so nicely that I stopped giving him the medicine. The sore broke out again, however, whereupon I again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and its persistent use has accomplished a complete cure. I do not think there will be even a scar left. I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it everywhere I get a chance.”

MRS. NETTIE CHASE, 47 K St., N. E.

Like Magic.

“A complication of troubles, dyspepsia, chronic catarrh and inflammation of the stomach, rheumatism, etc., made me miserable. Had no appetite until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acted like magic. I am thoroughly cured.” N. B. SEELEY, 1874 West 14th Ave., Denver, Col.

If you have failed to get relief from other remedies try Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cures when all others fail, because it is Peculiar to Itself.

Brother McCaleb's Report for April.

Brother T., Bells, Tenn., 50 cents; Brother T., Bells, Tenn., $1; Brother B., Alamo, Tenn., $1; Antioch, Tenn., $1.10; Dry Fork, Tenn., $1.10; Miller's Chapel, $1.25; from churches, by Brother Smith, $2.50; church of Christ, Salem, Tenn., $3.99; Brother N., $2; church of Christ, Dyersburg, Tenn., $1.50; church of Christ, Halls, Tenn., $1; church of Christ, Gates, Tenn., $1.25; church of Christ, Curve, Tenn., $1.25; Sister M., Gallatin, Tenn., $5; Brother S., Henning, Tenn., $5; A Sister, Henning, Tenn., 50 cents; Mr. W., $5; church of Christ, Ripley, Tenn., $2; other churches, by Brother Smith, $3.35; church of Christ, Jackson, Tenn., $5.20; and Brother and Sister F., Henderson, Tenn., $1. Total for the month, $47.50.

It will be noted that Brother T. A. Smith and myself have been laboring together during the month of April and up to May 2. The above amounts do not include offerings the churches made to him, save such as are indicated. Brother Smith hauled me around over the country for a month at his own charges. We divided the offerings, half and half, between us, save the last week, when he gave $8.32 in my favor.

We decided to set apart the offerings of the churches during the second week of April for the suffering in India. The following are the amounts received: Church of Christ, Crockett Mills, Tenn., $12.36; Bethel, Tenn., $3.85; Bethany, Tenn., $2.45; Trenton, Tenn., 35 cents; Laura M., 50 cents; church of Christ, Dyer, Tenn., $1.75; Brother S., $1; Brother and Sister W., $3; LeMalsamac, 50 cents; Union City, Tenn., $3.67. Whole amount for the week, $29.43. In addition, we have received up to date (May 4), for the same purpose, the following amounts: Sister M., Gallatin, Tenn., $10; Sister R., Gallatin, Tenn., $2; church of Christ, Horse Cave, Ky., $5; Brother S., 57 cents; Sister P., Coldwater, Miss., $1; A Sister, $1; A Sister, Spencer, Tenn., $2; Mrs. G. and daughters, $3; church of Christ, Rocky Spring, Ala., $2.80; “Yours in Christ,” Fosterville, Tenn., $1; church of Christ, Hess, O. T., $1.70; church of Christ, Beech Bethany, Clay County, Tenn., $2.50; P. E. S., Weimar, Tex., $2; church of Christ, Valdosta, Ga., $14.72; church of Christ, Allensville, Ky., $12.77; John C. L., $1; J. C. A., Grant, I. T., 50 cents; Mrs. B. D. J., Elkton, Ky., $25; church of Christ, South Bolinger, Tex., $5; church of Christ, Bear Creek, Tenn., $4; J. B. K., Irby, Tenn., $3; Brother H., California, $4; and Sister W., by Brother Klingman, 50 cents. Total amount to date (May 4), $134.49.

We have forwarded of this amount to India as follows (less cost of sending): W. E. Rambo, Damoh, C. P., India, $25.71; M. D. Adams, Bilaspur, C. P., India, $49.99; and Dr. C. C. Drummond, Hurda, C. P., India, $49.99.

All these are missionaries of one of the mission boards operating in India (the Foreign Christian Missionary Society); but, as we know of none that are laboring there independent of denominational affiliations, this is the only door open to us at present. Money could be sent to the government officials for distribution, but my experience in Japan teaches me that the most reliable parties in a case of relieving the distressed are the missionaries. I am personally acquainted with one of them, being a classmate. Of the three mentioned, one from that mission, now in America, says: “Our mission stations are all in the heart of the famine district, but some are affected more than others. Of the missionaries you mention—W. E. Rambo, C. C. Drummond, and M. D. Adams—the famine is equally severe in all their stations, from all we can hear. Money is sorely needed to help people that are starving, and all money sent for that purpose is expended under the direct supervision of the missionary.”

Accompanying the amount I have also sent letters asking the respective missionaries to send statements concerning the distribution of the money, the severity of the famine, and so on, which will be published in due time.

I feel very grateful for this liberal and hearty response of the brethren, and will forward again soon.

Louisville, Ky. J. M. McCALEB.
P.S. Brethren who still desire to send offerings can do so through me or send directly to the above parties.
J. M. McC.

Things with the Lord.

“One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.” (2 Pet. 3: 8.)
“One day . . . as a thousand years.” This would mean that the Lord can look into the incidents of one minute as if it were nearly one whole year transpiring. Things cannot take place too fast for him to take complete cognizance of them.

He is able to look after the delicate organism of the smallest insect as perfectly as though it were as large as an elephant. Into a spider the size of a pin head he puts enough brains, industry, and will power to weave a web with geometrical precision.

“A thousand years as one day.” In this sense a life of sixty years would be about an hour and a half to the Lord. His supervision of the children of Israel while they were four hundred years in Egyptian bondage would be like our managing some work of about nine hours' duration. His care of the world since Adam has taken up about a week of his time. The six days in which he was creating the heavens and the earth may have been this kind of days. However, this is immaterial, since it is the greatest of foolishness to work after something of no benefit to us. We can well afford to believe every word of a being like he is. If we could look into the heavens with the astronomical eye, we would at once perceive that the whole earth and the time it has run are as a sand on the seashore. The heavens are so great that there is room for millions of worlds like ours, and then not begin to occupy the space. The beauty of God's handiwork and the appalling magnitude of the heavens are enough to make a man determine to trust the Lord, though he slay him. No wonder we cannot conceive of the glories of heaven!

God forbid that we love this world or the praise of men, but chastise us every day if it is necessary to bring us safely to the heavenly mansions! “For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?” J. G. ORSBORN.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Birmingham, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous “Dixie Flyer” train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the “Quickstep” sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE
EDITED BY
F. D. SRYGLEY
HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
232 N. Market Street,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

BLMYER BELL'S CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICES. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

Her Face His Face

Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with

Holskell's Ointment
the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.

Holskell's Soap
Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.

Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Non-Irritating Cathartic

Easy to take, easy to operate—

Hood's Pills

General News.

The bill appropriating $70,000 for a public building at Florence, Ala., was passed by the Senate.

The plant of the Macon (Ga.) Agricultural Company was destroyed by fire. Loss, fifty thousand dollars.

The British army have been successful in South Africa and are now in possession of much of the Transvaal country.

Representative George B. McClellan, son of General McClellan, of the Civil War, is announced as a candidate for the Vice Presidency on the Democratic ticket.

The Weather Office records in Chicago show that April 25 has been clear in that city for twenty-five years past, not a drop of rain having fallen there on that day since 1875.

The United States Fish Commission has shipped seven hundred thousand shad eggs to Ireland, where there will be an effort made to propagate the fish in the river Shannon.

The State Department has met the issue raised by the coming to Washington of the Boer delegation by declining to interfere in behalf of the South African republics in the present struggle.

United States Minister Loomis, at Caracas, has cabled the Department of State that an official census just taken fixes the population of Venezuela at two million two hundred and twenty-three thousand five hundred and twenty-seven persons.

There is no change in the strike situation in St. Louis. Rioting and bloodshed mark each day's record. No effort is made to run cars at night. It is said there is no prospect of a settlement of differences between the transit company and the union.

The Methodist Episcopal Conference elected two bishops, abolished the time limit of service at one church or circuit; passed a law admitting lay members, including women, to the Conference; and refused to abolish the article condemning amusements.

A New York dealer recently received a consignment of lumber which is said to be the first ever shipped to the United States from Manilla. The wood was mahogany of the finest quality, and was sold to a firm of piano manufacturers to be made into piano cases.

The Associated Jewish Charities, of Chicago, have abolished all balls, fairs, and charity bazaars, as methods of raising money. They have resolved to give of their means, according to their ability, and promise that their philanthropies shall not suffer by the change.

Hiram Cronk, of Dunn Brook, Oneida County, N. Y., is said to be the sole survivor of the War of 1812 on the pension rolls of the United States. Mr. Cronk is one hundred years old and was under fifteen years of age when he enlisted with his father and brothers.

The Governor of Indiana refused to issue an order for the return of Finley, indicted as accessory to the murder of Goebel, on a requisition of Governor Beckham, of Kentucky. Former Governor Taylor, of Kentucky, is in Indiana to avoid arrest on the same charge.

Twenty-two miners—ten white men and twelve negroes—lost their lives in an explosion at the Cumnock coal mines, Chatham County, N. C. The explosion occurred at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon; and is supposed to have been caused by a broken gauze in a safety lamp.

The amount of the defalcation in Havana post office is said to be more than $100,000. W. H. Reeves, Deputy Auditor of the island, made a confession and gave up $4,500 given to him by C. F. W. Neely, the arrested financial agent of posts, to perform certain services the day he left.

Price, McCormick & Co., one of the largest brokerage houses in New York, has failed, with liabilities estimated at $13,000,000. The firm is a member of the Stock, Cotton, and Produce Exchanges and of the Chicago Stock Exchange, and has branch offices in about thirty cities throughout the United States.

The manager of a company which operates many cotton factories in Japan said a few days ago, while making inquiries in New Orleans, that his company had decided to buy during the coming twelve months not less than one million bales of American cotton, which will be shipped to Japan from that city.

An English school board has prepared a circular on the evils of cigarette smoking, which is to be distributed among the parents of the school children. It points out that smoking by boys impairs the eyesight and upsets and stunts growth. Local doctors are to be asked to go to the schools and address the boys on the evils of smoking.

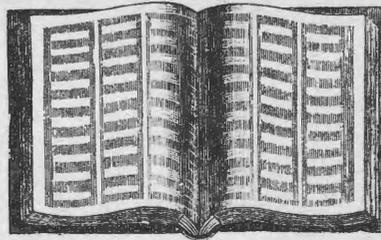

The Baldwin Locomotive Works have received from the Egyptian Government an order for twenty locomotives, to be used on the Egyptian railroads. The Egyptian Government explains to inquiring persons in England that it can obtain locomotives in this country at lower prices and in less time than elsewhere.

The largest smokestacks which have ever been manufactured in the United States are now being built in St. Louis. They will be seventy feet in circumference at the base and gradually taper to forty feet in circumference at the top. They will be two hundred feet high and will cost about twenty thousand dollars apiece.

Unsatisfactory reports of the wheat crop were received from the following Tennessee Counties: Hancock, Monroe, Jefferson, Sequatchie, Cocke, Claiborne, Rutherford, and Coffee. The farmers in East Tennessee and Middle Tennessee will suffer. As yet all reports from West Tennessee have been satisfactory, and it is believed the crop in that section will escape the fly.

After a spirited debate, the Senate, by the decisive vote of thirty-two to sixteen, laid on the table the whole proposition relating to the transportation of mail by the pneumatic tube system. An effort was made to secure the adoption of an amendment to appropriate two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars to carry out existing contracts for the service in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia, but no action was taken upon it.

The United States Supreme Court has finally decided the Kentucky governorship case in favor of Governor Beckham, dismissing the writ of error from the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

The opinion was handed down by Chief Justice Fuller, and a vigorous dissenting opinion was delivered by Justice Harlan. Justice Brewer, Justice Brown, and Justice McKenna also dissented from portions of the opinion. Beckham is now acknowledged as Governor of Kentucky.

The fiscal year 1900 continues to break all records in the matter of exportations. April is an example of this fact. The total exports in April, as just announced by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, are $118,926,507, which is twenty million dollars more than in any preceding year, thirty million dollars more than in April of last year, and double that of April, 1893. Never before has April, which is usually a light export month, reached the one-hundred-million-dollar mark.

The immense smokestack of the Merrimack Mills, at Huntsville, Ala., has been completed, after four months' work. The stack is probably the largest in Alabama, standing two hundred feet high. It is designed to furnish draught for four mills of twenty-five thousand spindles each, the size of the present Merrimack Mill. The big reservoir of the company on Russell Hill is nearing completion. The reservoir was blasted out of solid rock and will hold one million gallons of water.

The reports as to the conditions of the Tennessee wheat crop continue to pour in at the office of Commissioner of Agriculture Paine. Captain Paine states that reports indicate a loss of at least fifty per cent of the wheat crop over East Tennessee and Middle Tennessee, while in certain localities the farmers have plowed up their fields and planted corn instead. The damaging Hessian fly has not, so far as known, reached the wheat fields of West Tennessee.

The Department of State warns the public against the swindling advertisements and other publications of schemers relating to pretended estates in England, and cautions the people against remitting money in view of such advertisements to any strangers under any circumstances. Upon inquiry at the State Department it is learned that there are no great estates unclaimed in England. It is also said at the State Department that there are no large deposits awaiting claimants in the Bank of England.

The announcement will be made to the United Confederate Veterans at their Louisville reunion this week that the Confederate memorial, a magnificent museum for perpetuating the history of the lost cause, its relics and memories, is now an assured fact. When Charles Broadway Rouss, of New York, offered one hundred thousand dollars to be used in erecting such a memorial, it was with the understanding that another one hundred thousand dollars was to be raised by the United Confederate Veterans. The work of getting together this additional one hundred thousand dollars was placed in the hands of former Lieut. Gov. John C. Underwood, of Kentucky, and at the meeting of the trustees of the memorial fund in Louisville, he will announce the welcome fact that he has not only raised the additional one hundred thousand dollars, but twenty-three thousand dollars more than that. Governor Underwood has notified Mr. Rouss of his success in collecting the additional money, and has been instructed by the New York millionaire to draw on him for the original donation of one hundred thousand dollars.

Asheville, N. C.

Few regions have been more richly endowed by nature than that famous section of Western North Carolina, poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." It has a climate so dry and health giving that it has become known the world over as a natural sanitarium for the cure of all troubles of a pulmonary or bronchial nature.

Asheville, the center of this beautiful mountain-hemmed plateau, is the highest city east of Denver, Col., and is a busy, thriving place of twelve thousand inhabitants, with all the modernisms of city life. The city lies just at the point where the beautiful French Broad and Swannanoa Rivers join their crystal waters.

Within the city or in its suburbs many people of wealth have built beautiful and expensive homes, the most notable among them being the chateau of Mr. George W. Vanderbilt, which, with its great estate, has cost upward of four million dollars.

Asheville is an all-the-year resort, for the great mountains protect it in the winter from the cold winds, and its summer climate is made delightful because of its altitude.

For descriptive matter of Asheville and vicinity, call on any Southern Railway agent, or write Mr. C. A. Bencoter, A. G. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Famine in India.

"The Interdenominational Committee of Missionaries, on which Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Disciples, and Friends are all represented, will take charge of any funds forwarded; and being in India, with perfect knowledge of the needs of the various localities, will intelligently distribute all gifts. Bishop M. Thoburn is president of the committee and Rev. E. S. Hume, the American Board's missionary at Bombay, is secretary. This organization will be of immense service, because it will insure the money going to the districts which most need it, and will prevent gifts being duplicated. The care and faithfulness displayed by its members in 1897 (when $189,000 and ninety thousand bushels of grain were sent to them for distribution) is a pledge of like fidelity now. No charge or deduction is made for expenses of distribution, the missionary committee giving their services freely, as they did in the former famine. Contributors may therefore rest assured that every cent given to feed the starving people will be applied to the purpose for which it is given. Our readers may forward money direct to Mr. F. H. Wiggin, treasurer of the American Board, Boston, stating that the sums sent are 'to be used by the Interdenominational Missionary Famine Relief Committee of which Edward S. Hume, of Bombay, is secretary.'

The above is taken from the Christian, published at Boston. I have no doubt the committee mentioned is perfectly reliable and will use the means put into its hands as indicated, for the relief of the suffering in India. I might suggest further that money could be sent, without the mediation at Boston, direct to Edward S. Hume, Bombay, India, with safety, and it would be faithfully distributed. Also of the "Disciples" there are three missionaries right in the midst of the famine-stricken district (it is said to cover an area of fifty million of people) that are engaged personally in relieving the suffering. Their names and addresses are as follows: W. E. Rambo, Dumoh, C. P., India; M. D. Adams, Bilaspur, C. P., India; and Dr. C. C. Drummond, Hurda, C. P., India. Money can be sent by New York bank note or by international money order. The latter is preferable.

There are some things that, in the present situation, are unsatisfactory, inasmuch as all the parties named are denominationally affiliated. It would be better to send "to the elders of the church" in India if such were there; but as yet I have heard of none. But on the principle that I would throw a rope to a Baptist, Methodist, Disciple, Catholic, Buddhist—anybody engaged in rescuing unfortunates from a burning house—I feel it our duty to throw the rope of financial aid to save the famishing millions of India. If we do not want the various "missions" represented there to make their ministrations in saving the body an occasion for leading souls into denominational channels, the best way to prevent it is to send laborers there who will preach a full gospel and leave believers where the New Testament leaves them. While we are giving liberally of our means to save natural life, ought we not also to give of our sons and daughters to save the soul? I am glad that many are so liberally responding to the one; I should also be glad to see many respond to the latter.

So long as the famine continues I will continue to forward offerings sent me. Any one, however, can send directly to India to such parties as are mentioned above as well as I can. It takes five cents to send a letter there, instead of two cents.

Louisville, Ky. J. M. M'CALEB.

Double-minded. No. 4.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1: 8.)

We cannot, with success, divide our affections; neither can we, with good results, divide our manifestations or expressions of them. What would you think of one who professed to belong to the church of the New Testament who would work and worship one week with the Methodist denomination, the next week with the Baptist denomination, and the next week with the Catholics; then Presbyterians, United Brethren, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, etc., clear round the denominational circle?

Such a person would be of very, very little use or benefit to any one of these bodies, on account of division of love, time, energy, influence, and money. He is a double-minded man and is unstable in all his ways. His double-mindedness is readily apparent in his manner of life; but, even granting, as above, that the various denominations constitute the church of the New Testament (which I do not believe), this man's life would contribute more to the church if he would work in one of the denominations, devoting his heart, time, energy, influence, and money to it, than if he would work with and support each successively. This argues that one denomination would be better for man, in work and worship, than a dozen.

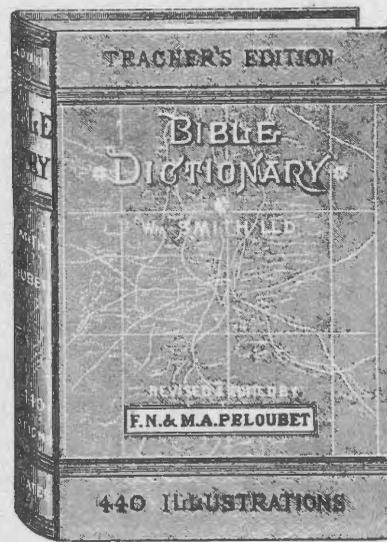

Again: Suppose we say that these various denominations as such are no part of the New Testament church and do not constitute it. This we sustain by saying that the church of Christ, as set forth in the New Testament, never was a denomination, never was composed of denominations. Its members were a unit in faith or doctrine, polity and work, and worship. The various denominations in the religious world to-day are not a unit in doctrine, polity, and practice, and therefore do not constitute the church of Christ as set forth in the New Testament.

This conclusion being true, then when the man in the above illustration was working and worshipping, first in one of the denominations and then in another until he completed the denominational circle, was not working and worshipping in the New Testament church, but in something outside of it. From this we draw the conclusion that one institution is better for man, in work and worship, than a dozen.

We have now shown, first, that even if all the denominations were right and constituted the church of the New Testament, it would be better for a man to select some one church and devote all his time, energy, influence, and money to it than to attempt to work and worship in each, successively, because he would accomplish more; second, that the various denominations not being parts of, or constituting, the true church, one working or worshipping in one of them is not working in the New Testament church.

Denominationalism is not wrong simply because we cannot accomplish as much by dividing our time and powers among the denominations, but also because it does not constitute the New Testament church.

But many disciples are double-minded in that they divide their time and

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

energies between the church and societies, just as the man in our illustration divided his time and powers between what he supposed to be the true church and the denominations. If he can accomplish more by working in one denomination, then we can accomplish more in one organization; but, granting that all the modern religious societies are in the church and constitute it, then, as we have shown before, we should select some one and give it all our time, energy, influence, and money, and in so doing we would be doing more good than we would be doing in trying to work in all of them. Are the society churches ready to act on this basis? I trust not. But the various societies—such as Missionary Society, Christian Endeavor Society, Ladies' Aid Society, Women's Board of Missions, etc.—are no part of and do not constitute the New Testament church, for we know that in the apostles' time the church was perfect and had none of these societies. Therefore, one can work in any one or all of them and not work in the New Testament church. They accomplish certain things by this labor that are beneficial; but, not having been accomplished by and in the church, these things will not procure for them heavenly recognition or reward.

Let us not be double-minded in these matters. Are these Missionary Societies, Christian Endeavor Societies, and Ladies' Aid Societies better than the church? Can you accomplish more in them than in the church? If so, then the church is worse than a human institution and weaker than creations of finite mind. Are you willing to accept such conclusions? If not, then why should we give them our time, energy, influence, and money?

Have you love in your heart, give it to Christ and the church; have you time, devote it to the church; have you influence, throw it all with the church; have you money, give it to the church. Be not double-minded, unstable in all your ways.

Fayette City, Pa. T. E. WINTER.

Summer Resorts.

Many delightful summer resorts are situated on and reached via Southern Railway. Whether one desires the seaside or the mountain, the fashionable hotels or country homes, they can be reached via this magnificent highway of travel.

Asheville, N. C.; Hot Springs, N. C.; Hale Springs, Tenn.; Roan Mountain, Tenn.; and the mountain resorts of East Tennessee and Western North Carolina—"The Land of the Sky;" Tate Springs, Tenn.; Oliver Springs, Tenn.; Lookout Mountain, Tenn.; Monte Sano, Huntsville, Ala.; Lithia Springs, Ga.; and various Virginia springs; also the seashore resorts, are reached by the Southern Railway on convenient schedules and at very low rates.

The Southern Railway has issued a handsome folder, entitled, "Summer Homes and Resorts," descriptive of nearly one thousand summer resorts, hotels, and boarding houses, including information regarding rates for board at the different places.

Write to C. A. Bensecoter, A. G. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn., for a copy of this folder.

For the first time since the rebellion the House has passed a measure to pay Confederate soldiers for losses growing out of the Civil War. It was a bill introduced by Mr. Cox, of Tennessee, to pay the Confederate soldiers who surrendered at Appomattox Court-house for the loss of horses and other personal effects taken from them in violation of Lee's capitulation to Grant, by which officers and men of Lee's army were allowed to retain their baggage, side arms, and horses. The bill originally carried $200,000, but the specific sum was stricken out, and the appropriation was made indefinite. The bill was passed out of its order as a special compliment to Mr. Cox, who, after ten years' service in the House, is to retire at the end of the present year.

"The Land of the Sky."

In Western North Carolina, between the Blue Ridge on the east and the Alleghanies on the west, in the beautiful valley of the French Broad, two thousand feet above the sea, lies Asheville, beautiful, picturesque, and world-famed as one of the most pleasant resorts in America. It is a land of bright skies and incomparable climate, whose praises have been sung by poets and whose beauties of stream, valley, and mountain height have furnished subject and inspiration for the painter's brush. This is truly "The Land of the Sky," and there is perhaps no more beautiful region on the continent to attract pleasure tourists or health seekers. Convenient schedules and very low rates to Asheville, via Southern Railway.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 14 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required. BLAINE CO. Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by his old friend and pupil, F. D. Srygley, will be sure to be a popular book and do great good. Send in your orders now, and books will be sent you as soon as ready for delivery.

A Visit to Florida.

I intended to write a report of my trip to Florida some weeks ago, but my engagement to visit the churches with Brother McCaleb came up just after I reached home; hence, I have not had time. I have been going day and night since my return, and sickness in my father's family and the death of my dear father, which occurred on April 16, 1900—all three causes have delayed this report.

I left home on January 15, 1900, and made a direct trip to Leesburg, my stopping place for several weeks. There were once fifteen or twenty disciples in and around Lesburg, but they have all gone to the denominations except three or four. I preached three times while there in the Presbyterian and Baptist meetinghouses. Some came up that had once been members of the church of Christ, expressing their appreciation of the preaching, saying they had joined the Methodist Church because there was no church of Christ there, having been taught by the society brethren that one church was as good as another; that if they had faith, repentance, and baptism, the all-sufficient things, as they thought, they did not need to follow the Bible any further. This is easily done by mixing in the societies composed of the various religious organizations of to-day. This evil can only be overcome by abolishing all human machinery.

I went from Leesburg to Tampa, and from there to St. Petersburg. I found a number who were once disciples of Christ. Quite a number had gone into the Congregational Church and they had combined with the Presbyterians and hired a Presbyterian preacher to preach for them; the balance were meeting in the Methodist Episcopal Church in the afternoon. I preached there once and visited among them. Some were in favor of human societies, some were not, and those who favored those things had never known anything else. They were at peace among themselves and seemed willing to be taught. I believe a faithful preacher, true to God's truth, would do them a great deal of good. A committee was appointed the day I was there to purchase a lot to build a meetinghouse on. St. Petersburg is a nice town of about two thousand inhabitants, full of energy. I learned at Tampa there were a few disciples there of the digressive order, doing absolutely nothing.

Before I went on this trip I had received several letters from Brother Bowers, of Bartow, inviting me there to hold a meeting, saying they had a church house there, but the society brethren had control of it, but he thought they would let us have the house to hold the meeting in; but when the question came up before the church the digressives inquired as to who I was, and, being informed that I preached along the same line that John R. Williams preached (he having held a meeting there the year before), they unanimously decided I could not preach in the house. They were in trouble over the innovations before Brother Williams went there, and he showed the plain road to peace and prosperity to them in his preaching. The friends of the truth were so anxious for peace they asked Brother Williams to write out an article, stating it just as he had preached it. He taught that nothing should be introduced or contended for in the worship that was not plainly taught in the New Testament.

A number agreed to this statement. There was a woman appointed by the society to lead in the worship. When she saw the statement she said at once: "This will not do, because the organ goes out; the Missionary Society, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Ladies' Aid Society, Sewing Society—all our societies go. The sacrifice will be too great; we cannot do it." She influenced two or three men to stand with her. The difficulties increased and the faithful to God's truth could not meet and worship with them. Brother Bowers sent to Nashville for a tent; it was put up about March 1, 1900. I preached over two weeks and urged everybody to take a firm stand for the Bible as the infallible and only rule of faith and practice. The meeting was fairly well attended. It was said by many that more men attended this meeting than were ever seen before at a church service in Bartow. Thirteen took the stand upon the Bible. A congregation was set in order, they rented a hall to meet in, and went to work. We negotiated with the Baptists for a meetinghouse. I have since had a letter from Sister Bowers saying they had bought the house, were meeting in it regularly every Lord's day, and that a good deal of zeal was being manifested, especially by the young men.

I made my home with Brother Bowers. He and his good wife made my stay just as pleasant as they possibly could, and their home is an ideal Christian home. The father, mother, and children are all controlled by the Spirit of Christ, loving and helping each other; not keeping all the good for themselves, but shedding its radiance in the homes and lives around them. The greatest need of to-day is wise parents to guide the children in the right way. I visited other homes in the town and everywhere I met the greatest kindness and Christian love.

This little band of disciples is anxious for a young preacher to come among them, to live and labor with them. I am sure he would be made stronger spiritually and could do a

"A Bit Shaky."

A man looks at his trembling hands and says: "I feel a bit shaky this morning, and shall need a brace." His real need is not nerve stimulant, but nerve strength. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery gives strength to the nervous system. It does not brace up, but builds up. It is entirely free from alcohol and from opium, cocaine, and other narcotics usually found in so-called nerve medicines.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." It cures.

David Duggins, Esq., of Jones, Ohio Co., Ky., writes: "When I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I think I had nervous or general debility of three years' duration. I took three bottles of the 'Discovery.' During the time I was taking it my sleep became more refreshing and I gained fifteen pounds weight, and also gained strength every day."

Free. Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for book bound in paper, or 31 stamps for cloth binding. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

great deal of good. The brethren would do all they could for him. They demand that he shall be loyal to God's truth, and not come as a hired pastor, but one willing to work with his hands, if necessary, for his own necessities. T. A. SMITH. Chestnut Bluff, Tenn.

The race of mankind would perish did they cease to help each other. We cannot exist without mutual help. All, therefore, that need aid have a right to ask it from their fellow-men, and no one who has the power of granting it can refuse without guilt.—Boys' Lantern.

- ARMSTRONG & McKEEVEY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN New York.
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

IT IS easier to imitate than to originate. In White Lead the standard brands only are imitated. The "so-called" White Leads, — mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, etc., are branded "Pure White Lead," "Strictly Pure White Lead," etc., in imitation of the genuine; otherwise these misleading brands could not be so readily sold. The brands in the margin are genuine.

FREE For Colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

JESSE FRENCH PIANOS

AND ORGANS HAVE BEEN RECOGNIZED AS THE MOST POPULAR INSTRUMENTS IN THE WHOLE SOUTHWEST FOR NEARLY THIRTY YEARS.

Our FACTORIES are among the LARGEST in the U.S. CATALOGS FREE

HOME OFFICE ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
Branches, Agents & Representatives in all LARGE CITIES.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes is at Strong City in a meeting. Success to all concerned.

I was called on Lord's day morning, not long since, to attend the funeral of Brother "Danny" Hukle, of Hukle, Kan. The dread disease, consumption, sapped the life of this young brother, who was delivered from his suffering on May 5, 1900. He was twenty-seven years old. He had been afflicted for several years, but was patient and realized that he must go. He was faithful to the Master who suffered that he might live on the other side of the dark river. His father, one sister, two brothers, and a kind step-mother mourn his departure. This life's fitful scene is over with him; shadows have changed to sunshine; the cross has been exchanged for a crown; and earthly and transitory things have changed to heavenly and enduring ones.

Brother David Demuth and Sister Bertha Trekel were united in the bonds of matrimony on May 6, 1900, at 5 P.M. The writer performed the ceremony.

I have not seen the result of the Methodist Episcopal Conference, recently held in Chicago. I do not know what disposition they made of the dancing, card playing, and theater questions.

The inclination to loosen the reins shows the drift of things. The Methodist Episcopal Church is not what it was once; the sweeping tide of worldliness is having its effect. Are we drifting toward Jerusalem or Babylon?

Dr. Reed, of New York, said: "It should be discretionary with the church members as to whether they engage in these amusements." If it were wrong when those rules were made, it is wrong yet. I am not now discussing the right of the Methodist Episcopal Conference to make rules to govern men, but it is certainly not in harmony with the teaching of the Bible to engage in such things. Such practices as card playing, dancing, and theater going are wrong, and they should be left off, no matter what the Methodist Episcopal Conference says.

Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn.

There is much truth in this statement. Sometimes the more favors bestowed, the less the gratitude expressed. God's love for man should call forth much gratitude from him. Many are grateful, others are not. There is much good in the world yet, much gratitude upon the part of man. We can behold a very dark cloud by viewing the dark side, but there is much brightness on the sunny side. The love of God and the friendship of man are ever before us to help bear the burdens of life. The bright spots in life afford us much pleasure, and they should overbalance the dark ones with us. If we begin to think that our burdens are heavy, let us look around and see if some others are not bearing much heavier ones. If we will take hold and help them bear their burdens, it will lighten ours. "Bear ye one another's burdens."

D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

Field Gleanings.

I am now in a meeting with the church of Christ at Denton, Tex., with a good attendance and fine attention. The meeting will continue about two weeks yet. There have been five additions to date. We hope for others.

I have just received a letter from Donelton, Tex., saying that Brother Young had just closed a successful meeting there, with eight additions to the church and a general revival among the members. Brother Young has held quite a number of meetings at Donelton and is held in high esteem by the faithful there. Brother Young is a true man of God and a safe teacher.

My meetings for the summer are as follows: Blue Grove, Clay County, Tex., June 8; Una, Miss., June 22; Rienzi, Hill County, Tex., July 6; Rockwood, Coleman County, Tex., July 17 (Brother J. C. White will begin the meeting on July 13 and I will join him on July 16); Italy, Ellis County, Tex., August 10; and Dunn, Tex., August 24. I hope the brethren at all these places will be ready for the meetings, with plenty of good lights, song books, and the meeting well known. I hope and pray for success.

I have recently received a letter from Brother J. R. Bradley, of Alabama, asking some questions relative to the eldership, and especially to the appointment or ordination of elders. Brother Bradley, I know but little, comparatively, with reference to the ordination of elders. I have studied the subject for several years, but must confess that I am not settled in regard to it.

The protracted meeting season is now on, and what will the harvest be?

Brother W. N. Carter has moved to Hepler, Kan., and is devoting his time to the evangelistic work. Brother Carter is "true blue" and the cause of Christ has in Brother Carter a faithful and successful minister. Let the brethren of Kansas and Missouri call him out, for he will do them good. I predict success for Brother Willie, for he is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Brother J. A. Harding is to spend vacation in Texas.

Brother Thomason, of Oklahoma, will spend some time in Texas this summer.

May God's blessings attend the faithful.
J. H. LAWSON.
Denton, Tex.

1850 1900 John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF

SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

—OF—
EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.

TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.

HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES.

Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

THE BEST PLACE

to buy your Suit, Hat, and Shirt for yourself and the boys is

Abernathy, Langham & Shook,

205-207 PUBLIC SQUARE.

SUCCESSORS TO W. A. LANNOM.

MR. JOHN T. McQUIDDY

IS NOW WITH

The Castner-Knott Dry Goods Co.

NASHVILLE'S LEADING STORE.

Nos. 203-211 NORTH SUMMER ST.

SEED ONION SETS

WRITE US

FRITH & CO.

147 NORTH MARKET ST.

NASHVILLE TENN.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

Quick and Convenient Schedules East via Southern Railway.

Passengers from Middle and West Tennessee points will find the Southern Railway to be the most convenient and desirable route to all Eastern cities. Double daily service is afforded from Nashville on following schedule: Leave Nashville at 9:30 P.M., arrive at Washington on second morning at 6:42 A.M.; Baltimore, 8 A.M.; Philadelphia, 10:15 A.M.; New York, 12:43 P.M. This train is operated via Chattanooga and Asheville, and passes through that beautiful and scenic portion of North Carolina poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." Elegant Pullman drawing-room sleeping car is operated from Nashville to New York without change, and dining car service is afforded east of Salisbury. Another train leaves Nashville at 3:30 P.M., connecting at Chattanooga with train leaving Chattanooga at 10 P.M., arriving at Washington at 8:50 P.M.; Baltimore, 11:35 P.M.; Philadelphia, 2:56 A.M.; and New York, 6:23 A.M., and carries Pullman sleeping car and day coaches from Chattanooga to Salisbury, and from Salisbury to New York. For further information, apply to your nearest ticket agent.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
GLENCLIFF, TENN.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

CHEAP
Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.
in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row
Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation.

DRAGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS.
St. Louis, Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any time. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

We want the Gospel Advocate to go into every home in the country. We are endeavoring to make it what it should be as a religious journal and teacher. We will send it one month free to addresses furnished us of those who are nonsubscribers, and discontinue at the end of the month to all who do not become regular subscribers during the time.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 23.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JUNE 7, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Henry Hardshell on Flowers and Creeds.....	354
Providing for Our Families.....	354
The Sphere of Christianity.....	355
Brother John E. Dunn's Article.....	355
Signs of the Times.....	356
Miscellany.....	357
Queries.....	358
Home Reading.....	359
I John 2.....	360
Did Elders Belong to the Gifted and Inspired Class of Teachers?.....	360
Fanning Orphan School.....	361
Nashville Bible School.....	361
Obituaries.....	362
Higher Criticism.....	363
General News.....	364
Church News.....	365
Field Gleanings.....	365
"Life was Lent for Noble Deeds".....	366
Kansas Notes.....	367
Virginia Jottings.....	367
Transformation.....	368
A Prophet's Prayers.....	368

HAVE YOU PAID YOUR SUBSCRIPTION?

The dull season for religious papers has come. At this season of the year we do not receive enough to pay for the blank paper on which the paper is printed. We will appreciate your paying your subscription which is past due. Just now we need every dollar due us, and you can help us wonderfully in this matter by remitting at once the amount you are due. It is true the amount you owe may be small, but many small amounts make a large one. Doubtless your failure to pay in advance has been an oversight on your part, and so soon as your attention is called to the fact you will be glad to remit the full amount by post office money order or check. If this article is stamped on your paper, it is to call your attention to the fact that your subscription has expired, and that your renewal is needed and would be appreciated. Promptness on the part of our subscribers enables us to furnish them a good paper. Look at the date on the little yellow slip, and pay from that time at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per year. If there should be any mistake in the date, please call our attention to it, and we will gladly make correction. We wish to extend to you our thanks in advance for your prompt remittance.

PUBLISHERS.

Brother Srygley: The manuscript herewith inclosed does not suit me; and, still, I do not think I can improve it. Thinking of the old Rock Creek home almost paralyzes me—makes me feel like dropping my pen and beginning to tramp back to the past. While trying to write these inclosed pages, your mother, at the breakfast table, with the glow of health and motherly beauty on her rosy face, has been constantly before me. Somehow, I can see her no other place or way. I see her, as we gather around the table, wait for one more a few moments, and she says something sweet, pleasant, or amusing about it, as a smile lights up her pretty, rosy face, and she takes her place. Then, a little later, as she goes to get up to get something for the table, I can hear your father say, as he gets up to get it: "Sit right down, now, and behave yourself." Talk about unselfishness! Go back to then and there if you want to see it. Happiness, too—I have never seen a happier home. It's gone, now, though; gone forever. Life—the life that now is, this life—is not worth living. Selfishness helps to make it so. Then we know not our joys and opportunities till they are gone forever. I must go back to Rock Creek one time more. I feel like I want to simply go back to my birthplace; tramp over the ground my feet have trod; come on down, via Rock Creek and many other places, to where I find myself at the end of that journey; then lay me down and die.

T. B. LARIMORE.

"Friends that have loved me are slipping away." To-day, as in spirit I live in the past, I am requested to write of the departure from the land of the dying, of death, and of graves, of two of the purest, sweetest, and best of consecrated Christian women, who were my friends, faithful and true, for more than thirty years: Sister Srygley and her daughter, Sister Wallis.

Sarah Jane Coats was born on November 7, 1831. Her father, Benjamin Coats, was a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher. She, being perfectly satisfied with the word, the will, and the way of the Lord, content to "walk in the light" and believing "the church of God" to be not a human, but a divine, institution; never belonged to any denomination. She was simply a pure, prayerful, pious, devout, consecrated Christian—"only this, and nothing more"—believing God, had he willed us to be something else or something more, would certainly have told us so, and told us what and how—if not, indeed, why and when. She was married to James H. Srygley on October 28, 1844. To them were born eleven children, two of whom they buried in early childhood. The others all lived until they reached the period of manhood and womanhood, and were married. Seven of them still live. Two of them are gospel preachers. Those that have gone into the boundless beyond were prepared to go. Those that linger in this land of toil and tears yet are all faithful, useful men and women—consecrated Christian men and women—prepared for life and usefulness, prepared for death and everlasting happiness. She was baptized by our talented and long-lamented brother, J. M. Pickens, in August, 1866. Immediately after her baptism she and her husband and four others established, at her home, Rock Creek, Ala., the church of Christ of which she was an active and faithful member till she moved to Coal Hill, Ark., in October, 1887. Immediately after she reached Coal Hill, she encouraged and constrained the few Christians there to begin to work and worship publicly in the name of Christ, and to build "a meetinghouse"—all of which they did. The house still stands; the work and worship continue; the cause still prospers there. Noted for modesty, industry, and loving helpfulness to all whom she could help—especially to those in trouble or in need of a friend—she was "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," till the sweetly solemn summons came for her to cease to toil and begin to rest. She was never absent from "the assembly of the saints" if able to be there, for she believed what she professed to believe, and appreciated her privileges. A constant reader and student of the sacred Scriptures, she was intensely religious, prayerful, and joyous, blessing all with whom she was permitted to associate. Not only all her children and grandchildren who reached the years of accountability, but a very large majority of her other relatives, friends, and associates, became Christians before her departure. Indeed, few responsible souls were ever long under her Christian influence without themselves being Christians. Her home was always the preachers' home of the community in which she lived. Love, liberality, industry, neatness, and purity made her home just such a home as any worthy gospel preacher might well be loath to leave. The Bible was the family book, and its light was always shining there. When I heard that she and her devoted daughter had gone beyond the reach of human love and sympathy, I, almost involuntarily, wrote her son, Fletcher, the following:

"My Dear Friend and Brother: I have just now heard of the death of your mother and sister—which sister, I do not know, but, of course, sad and sorrowful loved ones left behind say: 'The sweetest one.' When Death invades our homes, he seems to those he spares to select the sweetest and the best. Of course, you know my soul sincerely sympathizes with you all. It is not possible for it to be otherwise. Your father cannot long survive. The shock is too severe. I have rarely seen such sublime devotion as that of your father and mother to each other; nor have I often witnessed such devotion to the cause of Christ. If this world were full of such love, fidelity, and devotion as theirs, heaven and earth would be very much alike. All that has ever emanated from their home has emanated from a home of purity, devotion, fidelity, and love. That peaceful, happy, humble, Rock Creek home has ceased to be, those who lived and loved and labored there being there no more; but its benign and blessed influence shall be felt forever."

Sister Srygley always claimed and enjoyed the privilege of preparing the emblems for the Lord's table, and many times, both at Rock Creek and at Coal Hill, her faith and zeal, strengthened by the fidelity of her husband, kept the weekly meetings of the church from being temporarily discontinued. She confidently believed, from the beginning of her last illness, that it was "unto death." She tried to get well, because, she said, everybody seemed so anxious for her to live; but she always said her own preference was to depart and be with the Lord. Sister Srygley prepared for death as for a journey, giving instructions as to how she should be dressed, selecting something of apparel given her at different times by different ones of her children. She talked about all those things not only cheerfully, but often with smiles and joyous expressions in anticipation of the happiness to which she was going. As the time of her departure drew near she read the New Testament and the Gospel Advocate as usual, and all the friends and loved ones near her believed she was better; but she confidently assured them that she was nearing the end. It was such an end as might have been expected to such a life. Her devoted daughter, Mrs. Hill, who lovingly and tenderly ministered to her till the end came, says: "She was careful to call my name when speaking to me, as long as she could talk. She evidently wished me to know she knew me and appreciated all I did for her. I asked her on Saturday evening if she wanted anything. She said: 'Yes; I want to die.' Late Saturday evening, when we thought she could not live many minutes, she said: 'Mother, home, and heaven. That is all there is.' At 2 o'clock that evening we all thought she was dead, and, sobbing, gathered around her. Hearing us, she opened her eyes. She knew us, but could not speak. She never spoke after midnight Saturday. At 11 A.M. on Sunday, August 20, 1899, she ceased to breathe."

T. B. LARIMORE.

Danie Ann Srygley, the firstborn of James H. and Sarah Jane Srygley, was born on March 23, 1846; was married to John W. Wallis on January 1, 1866; was baptized by T. B. Larimore in July, 1868; and completed her career on earth on July 23, 1899. She was the mother of five children, and lived to see all of them become and be consistent Christian men and women. Three of her children now deplore the death of a devoted, fond, and faithful mother; the other two passed to the eternal shore before their mother went away. Sister Wallis was an obedient, affectionate child; a true and faithful wife; a discreet, patient mother; a devout, consecrated Christian; and a sympathetic friend and neighbor, who never failed to discharge her Christian duty as faithfully, wisely, and well as she could. By nature, training, and practice especially efficient and helpful in song service, in which she delighted and of which she never tired, she rarely failed to fill her place and do her part in the work and worship of the saints with whom she worked and worshipped. Where she lived the cause of Christ prospered. Her influence on all with whom she associated tended to convert them to Christ, if they were not Christians; to confirm them "in Christ," if they were Christians. Her last illness was brief, and her death was unexpected; but she was ready. She had been ready, had death come at any moment after she was born into the family of God.

T. B. LARIMORE.

He who is faithful over a few things is a lord of cities. It does not matter whether you preach in Westminster Abbey or teach a ragged class, so you be faithful. The faithfulness is all.—George MacDonald.

In a word, trust that man in nothing
Who has not a conscience in everything.

—Laurence Sterne.

Humility is the most admired virtue, yet the least practiced.—Selected.

Our Contributors.

Henry Hardshell on Flowers and Creeds.

Frank Faithful: "Henry, that is a lovely bouquet of roses you have. They call up cherished memories, reminding me of my mother, who loved flowers for their purity and native loveliness, and of others who loved them, who, like her, have passed into that land where they fade not. With flowers are associated thoughts of those we most esteem in this world and the world to come."

Henry Hardshell: "Now, friend Faithful, there is more of that sentiment of yours, concerning which I have told you before. Some of your friends think you have a superabundance. These roses are not mine; I care nothing for them. They are sent by my sister to a friend of hers. Why, a sow and pigs look a heap nicer to me than all the roses! But at present I would rather hear you talk of something that is in the Bible."

Frank F.: "Well, if you should prefer the subject of swine, there is much in the Bible about them. They were among the unclean animals forbidden as food or sacrifices. There is the mention of the great herd stampeded by the devils into the sea, and the poor prodigal's humiliating task to feed them in the fields, besides some figurative references about a jewel in a swine's snout, casting pearls before swine, and the sow (no mention of the pigs) which, having been washed, returned to her wallowing in the mire. These are about all the references to swine I can now remember. Though instructive, they are not very pleasing."

Henry H.: "I guess there is precious little in the Bible about flowers. I don't remember a single passage that mentions them."

Frank F.: "You forget. It would be easy to talk about flowers and yet keep within the bounds of the Bible. There is the rose of Sharon (Cant. 2: 1), which, though called a 'rose,' is said to have been a bulbous plant which abounds in the vale of Sharon. From the comparison made of this, the only mention of it, it must have been as sweet as the tube roses of our time, which are cultivated in fields for the sweet perfume made from them. The 'camphire' flower (Cant. 1: 14), resembling the lilac, with its clusters of white and yellow bloom, must have been beautiful, as well as fragrant. The cotton flower (Esth. 1: 6), with its white and violet blossoms, is mentioned among the decorations at the feast of the great king, Ahasuerus. It was akin to that changeable-hued staple, our own Southern king cotton, which, but for its great abundance, would be now highly esteemed for its varied beauty—first, in its squares like unto an imperial, Napoleonic hat; then into a bell shape, which may well remind us of old Liberty Bell; its bloom then changing into colors of red, white, and blue remind the patriot of the hues in Old Glory, which floats above the free and the brave. These changes taking place in so short a period as one day and suggesting the rapid increase of our wealth and population, and its fleecy product clothing in comfort the many billions of earth's population, are pleasant to think about. Then there was the staete, a beautiful and fragrant shrub, whose sweet perfume was mingled with the holy anointing oil. Its blossoms were like unto the orange bloom of our own Southland. There is the mention of the pure lilies (I have heard my mother say they were my father's favorite flowers). Christ, you know, spoke of them and said that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these; yet by a tasteful arrangement their beauty may be enhanced in endless variety. Of course, it is clearly implied that Christ admired them or he would never have thus spoken of them. The native growths of that land warrant the conclusion that thickets of oleander fringed the banks of brook and stream, as mentioned by J. W. McGarvey, in his 'Lands of the Bible.' Flowers in their best and purest state we may well regard as reminding us of the sinless summer land; in fading and dying we have a striking scriptural emblem of the frailty of mortal life, for, as the flower of the grass, we all do fade away. Henry, you may not be conscious of the fact, but you yourself are more favorably impressed concerning the inmates of a stranger's home where you see flowers than where you see nothing of the kind."

Henry H.: "I believe you are right, friend Faithful. That is all true, no doubt, but I desire to hear more of the Bible on the subject we have been discussing—that is to say, some instances where God gave commands to obey when the circumstances were adverse and difficult, yet a way was found for the obedient hearer."

Frank F.: "We will leave, then, the subject of flowers for the present, yet you must remember we can talk about them and keep within the Bible. Before leaving the subject, however, allow me to mention the lesson Christ drew from considering the lilies—viz., that his disciples, while walking in the path of faith and obedience, should be content and believe that God and Christ will care for them, since he cares for the lilies and other things which are of far less value than his children. Now to a subject more to your liking. I have a mind to present a lesson from the Old Testament which will embody the point you desire proven and illustrated."

Henry H.: "Why, I thought the New Testament alone contained the commandments of God to us in this, the gospel age. What use have we for the Old Testament?"

Frank F.: "It is of much value. It is true, the New Testament, or gospel covenant, is now in force; but no one can have a proper understanding of the New Testament unless he studies it in the light of the Old Testament. They should be studied together. Like the sights of your rifle, you need them both to draw a fine bead and shoot accurately. Indeed, the Old Testament within itself cannot be dispensed with. The accounts of creation, the history of man's fall, and many important subsequent events, all referred to as matters of fact in themselves, are the only reliable accounts men have of these things. The origin of the human species and their primitive relation to the Creator are fundamental truths which we find first mentioned in the Old Testament. We can never throw away the Old Testament."

Henry H.: "I have lately read in the papers that many of the statements about man, the decrees of God, and some marvelous Old Testament accounts were to be taken from the creed or brought more within the reasonable belief of men. Do you think they ought to change these old, time-honored creeds of the fathers?"

Frank F.: "It was unwise ever to have made a creed separate and apart from the Bible; but if the things in the creed which are now objected to are also in the Bible, will the Bible not also be rejected? All this unrest about the doctrine of the creed, unless it results in a hearty and reverent return to the Bible alone, is an alarming symptom of widespread skepticism and will result in rank infidelity. For myself, I must say that I have much more respect for those who made the creed, believing they copied the teaching of the Bible, than I have for those who kick against the creed and will for the same reason kick against the Bible."

Henry H.: "We are burning daylight here. I want to hear what is in the Bible along the line we have been talking on. I care nothing for the creeds of men. What case did you have in mind from the Old Testament?"

Frank F.: "The day grows warm. You had better hurry along with those flowers before they wither, and you will then remind your sister and her friend of Prov. 10: 26."

Henry H.: "What does that say? I do not remember."

Frank F.: "As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them that send him."

G. LIPSCOMB.

Rural Delivery No. 3, Nashville, Tenn.

Providing for Our Families.

Brother Butler: Being very anxious to know my whole duty and to be on the safe side, I write you, asking your honest and humble judgment on some questions for the good of myself and others that may be interested.

You know Paul says that "if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he . . . is worse than an infidel." Now, in the light of this, is it wrong for a poor man to try, by following some honest calling, to save something in order that his wife and little ones may have the actual necessities of life without having to look to some one else for them in case of his death? I am a poor man, farming on rented land, and have not much hope of ever being able to own much of a farm of my own, but believe I can pay the premiums on a life insurance policy. Would it be wrong for me to have my life insured, that my family may have funds to support and educate them? Is there any difference in the two ways? If one is lawful, is not the other? If not, why not? About your article in the Gospel Advocate concerning the contribution and the church treasurer, notice Brother Lawson's point in the Gospel Advocate of April 12, 1900.

Please answer as soon as you possibly can, privately or through the Gospel Advocate.

INQUIRER.

Brother Inquirer: Yours of the 13th is duly received. It is clearly in accord with the teaching of the New Testament for a Christian man, rich or poor, to follow some honest calling and thereby provide for his own family and others he may find in need while he is living. This much he is required to do. But there is certainly no requirement that he accumulate means to supply his wife and little ones after his death, nor do I find any teaching that would encourage him to assume the care of providing for them in such a way as to prevent them from looking to others after his death. I am not willing to undertake to defend such a course by inferences, for it seems to me that our Lord discourages it. The Christian who faithfully does his duty in supplying his wife and little ones while living, working with his hands the thing that is good that he may have to give to him that needs, will succeed in this way in making the amplest and best provision for wife and little ones after his death that it is possible to make. His example will encourage all to work and be self-reliant, which is far better than money laid up for them. They had better be poor and have to look to others through industry and economy than to be rich and idle. The poor, honest, laboring boy or girl is not so exposed to vicious habits as those rich and idle.

It is the duty of every Christian to work, and not idle; to save, and not waste; to give to those now in need of help, and not hoard up supplies for the unknown future. I see nothing against a farmer owning a farm, a merchant owning a store, a mechanic owning tools, or a student owning books. The more a Christian can use to advantage in the production of the necessities of life for himself, wife and little ones, and others that need help, the better; but to hold property just to be rich, avoid labor, and entail estates on posterity is both unscriptural and irrational and fraught with many dangers to its possessor and those who may await its entailment. I encourage Christians to own homes. It is generally best for them to do so; and where failure to do so comes from extravagance or neglect of business it is wrong not to do so. A rich Christian is not required to sell, give away, and abandon his riches, except where the suffering and distress of his brethren and neighbors are such as to require it all in their relief. But in the ordinary course of plenty and peace, he, as a diligent man in business, can do more giving in his life career by holding his riches as capital. The charge to the rich sustains this: "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. 6: 17-19.) If the text had charged them to lay up in store for wife and little ones against the time to come when they are dead, that they may not have to look to others, then the burden of providing for the next generation would be encouraged. I see reason in and scripture for each generation providing for itself. If for one generation to provide for the next, and the next for the third, and the third for the fourth, etc., is the theory we adopt, we are destined to be most miserable. A generation already provided for is ruined, and will do little for the next. The history of nations is, in a nutshell, about this: A republic or kingdom establishes independence by heroism and maintains it for a time through patriotism; then follows the age of moneymaking, acquirement and entailment of estates; then follows the age of luxury and selfishness, of high and low classes, of extreme wealth and extreme poverty; then follows the final age of dissolution, the age of spoils, of dishonest business, of corruptions in lawmaking bodies and in courts of justice, of internal commotions and factions, and of general disintegration, until the carcass is ready for the vultures, and the nation falls.

The store for the rich to lay up in is heaven. The thing for them to lay up there is a good foundation for themselves against the day of judgment. The method of laying up here is to distribute to the poor of this generation, to communicate with the needy, to be rich in good works. Rich Christians are not charged to abandon property, but to use it for good in this life. The successful business man of large means who knows the grace of Christ in his heart is cheerful to comply with "He that giveth, let him do it with liberality."

There is a beauty in the liberal giving of the rich, and some might want to become rich for the purpose of giving. If they become so by faithful pursuit of honest business and labor, while leading a benevolent, generous life, well for them; but where they love money and with this as a dominant passion seek wealth, they are exposed to great dangers. "But they that will be rich [desire to be rich] fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." (1 Tim. 6: 9, 10.) In the light of this, I do not see how lovers of money can seek riches without being exposed to ruin; but honest, industrious Christians who seek money only for the uses God appoints may become rich, and they are liable to err in relying too much on the power of money, hence the charge in 1 Tim. 6: 17-19. Money used as God directs may cause rich; liberal givers to assume merit that is not due them. Our Lord anticipates and corrects this in his teaching of his apostles and enforces the danger of claiming too much for what is given and suffered for Christ, in the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, showing how the first in giving and suffering for Christ shall be last, and how the last in giving and suffering for Christ shall be first. The eleventh-hour man is the man who gives and suffers least for Christ, though giving and suffering all that is required. When all give and suffer all that is required they will all enter into the eternal kingdom, though some lived in a time of persecution and poverty and needed to give much or all, and others lived in times of peace and plenty and were required to give and suffer less. To make the eleventh-hour man one who obeys the gospel late in life in this land of liberty and gospel light is simply to disregard the connection and misapprehend the lesson taught. (See Matt. 19: 27; 20: 16.)

The difference between making and saving money by farming and laying up money through life insurance is considerable:

1. Farming is a business that produces supplies for the human family. Life insurance is a business that makes no food, no raiment; it is nonproducing; it is a speculation on risks. For one set of men to hire others to assume their risks is poor business, at least to the men that do the hiring.

2. Following an honest occupation and saving money and investing in and running a farm educate men to handle money and take some care of it. Insuring one's life ends all hope of trading and running anything with the money put in insurance by the assured. Life insurance violates the injunction: "Every man shall bear his own burden." (Gal. 6: 5.)

3. Farming is certain to yield something to every one that engages in it. Life insurance makes returns to only some who enter it. I have heard that sixty-five per cent of the policies written are never carried to maturity. Life insurance fattens on men's failures.

4. The insurance company assumes the risk of paying the policy soon after it is written and before the assured has paid in much; but the assured assumes a more serious risk—the risk of being able to pay the premiums to the end of life, or term specified. Men are able to pay them when they start in, but they know not how soon they may become unable to pay them. Farming requires no such risk.

5. This speculation on risks, this illegitimate, non-producing business dishonors real, legitimate business. Men hard pressed for money will let the merchant wait, will put off the grocer's account, fail to pay the teacher who labors in the schoolroom, let the doctor go unpaid, and do nothing for the Lord's poor; but the premiums must be paid. Insurance claims the first funds of the hard-pressed man's purse. Farming dishonors no other business in such way.

6. Life insurance causes people to try to save money in policies, and thus prevent its investment in some real, producing business that would improve the country. If there were no such method by which people could lay up, or try to lay up, money, much more money would be invested in land. This would raise the price of land, and when land is high people do not buy much till they improve and put to use what they have. Life insurance debases talent and energy, stops the development of skill in individual investment, and leaves much of our fair land a waste. Farming is not guilty of these sins.

7. Life insurance is unequal and unfair. It takes the richest part of the surplus of our fair land and piles it up in the pockets of millionaires. The policy here and there paid by the insurance company is nothing to compare with the yellow stream that steadily flows to the monopolies; and the people that most need help to get along are least able to insure. A man that is able to carry a policy needs no insurance. He is able to save money and invest it himself. Farming is no such suck hole.

8. Life insurance must fail in each company. I have known men to grow old in paying on insurance and then the thing went down and they lost all. Farming will respond steadily till the judgment of God; and I would rather be it to stand before God than life insurance.

Shelbyville, Tenn.

W. L. BUTLER.

The Sphere of Christianity.

I learn from the Gospel Advocate of April 12, 1900, that the articles I wrote on the subject of practical Christianity have raised some questions in the minds of honest, thinking people. Brother Paul Hays, of California, propounds some questions of a practical nature for solution. I can answer only a few of them in one paper.

The title of this paper indicates the field in which Christianity operates. It is not function, but field, that I wish to give a passing notice. The former indicates the work of Christianity; the latter, its legitimate territory. I believe its field to be all the world of human activity. The principles embodied in the life and teachings of its author are the only sources of information as to what it should do and the place of operation. Christ's life levels all artificial and arbitrary divisions of time and labor. Paul said to the people: "Make straight paths for your feet" and level down the hills. We search in vain the life of the Christ for the distinction between the sacred and the secular. Under the reign of Christ life itself is sacred. Strangers to the ideal life, as lived and taught by Jesus, make catalogues of the virtues, and by divine grace try very hard to do the essentials of virtue and morality. The Christian is "sanctified wholly, body, soul, and spirit," and does the commands of the Lord naturally and easily. A little man cannot do a great deed; a great man cannot do a little thing. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." Make the tree good and it will be easy for it to produce good fruit. A physical body in a normal state will resist the attacks of disease. Man in a normal condition spiritually is his own defense against the attacks of evil. Jesus means to make the man proof against the enemy. Jesus lived about thirty years in private, working at his trade. Was his occupation at that time "secular?" Does he not say at the age of twelve years, while engaged in the "secular" occupations, that he "must be about" his "Father's business?" Was he doing all that kind of work solely for money? Should we not follow the avocations of life with the same spirit of devotion and for the same reason?

The physical labor of this world belongs to a pre-natural state. It has no place in the new heavens and the new earth. The sentence of doom to manual labor, pronounced on man for disobedience, implies stigma and disgrace in that kind of labor. One of the great characteristics of the new state of man in paradise restored is that he "rests from his labor." Labor belongs to a state of sin. A Savior must come to the one that is lost. Otherwise, God in heaven could save and Jesus could stay at home. But the wisdom and goodness of God are manifest in the adaptation of means to the end. God saves man from sin in harmony with his character and the laws that control his intellectual, volitional, physical, and moral nature. He could easily have destroyed rebellious man and made another, but that implies failure. He could have done no better. God always does his best. What he does is not only always well done, but it is the best that can be done. Man is made in God's own image. God cannot do better by creating man in some other image. God could destroy some of man's faculties and make new ones (I will not say "better ones"), but that would not be the salvation of man. What God does is to save man as man; hence, the first step in the restoration of man to the original likeness in which he was made was the incarnation of Jesus, and that involved becoming man in its fullest and highest sense. I do not say he became one with humanity and except sin, for sin is not a part of human nature. We say in extenuation of the faults we do not try to avoid: "It is human to err, but divine to forgive." But the aphorism does not tell the exact truth concerning human nature.

It is not human to sin. We sin because we fail to be human. Jesus did no sin. He was the only one of the race that demonstrated humanity to its utmost capacity. Adam was the untried Jesus of humanity; Jesus was the tried humanity of Adam. Sin is no part of human nature. We fail to be human just in proportion to the blunders we make. Jesus carried our humanity from the manger to the throne of the heavens without the polluting touch of sin. "Since then the children are sharers in flesh and blood, he also himself in like manner partook of the same; that through death he might bring to naught him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and might deliver all them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily not of angels doth he take hold, but he taketh hold of the seed of Abraham." (Heb. 2: 14-16, R. V.)

The terms "sacred" and "secular" can mean no more in the light of the New Testament than a distinction between individual things that bear directly and indirectly upon the restoration of man to the original likeness in which he was created. The indirect means of spiritual development may be called "carnal things" in view of their primary uses, but it does not follow from this that they have no place in man's spiritual development. "That which is first is the natural." Creation is built upon the ascending scale. It begins with the mineral and ascends by natural gradation to the highest heaven. The mineral is the basis of the vegetable, the vegetable is the basis of the animal, and the animal is the basis of the spiritual—that is, each lower in position contributes to the welfare of the other. They are mutually helpful. Hence, my point is that the "carnal" things are not to be despised as something wholly apart from Christ and his work. If God can "make the wrath of man to praise" him, we ought to make all legitimate things do him service. Hence, Jesus says: "I say unto you, Make to yourselves," not houses and stores, as most of the people understand him to mean, but "friend of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." Here we see what use of these things can be made by Christians. Eating them is only one use of them.

Coal City, Ind.

W. J. BROWN.

Brother John E. Dunn's Article.

Brother Dunn invites either approval or criticism of his article which appeared in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900. Much he says can be approved and is worthy of consideration. It is hoped that no one objects to any scriptural truth or principle presented by him; if so, so much the worse for the objector. Yet some things he says, and the apparent spirit and manner in which he says them, are subject to criticism.

Why should he beg pardon in advance for any possible offense he may have given by any "word calculated to wound the feelings of any?" One should present the truth so much in the love of the truth and so utterly devoid of any intention of wounding the feelings of others that it should never occur to him he had done so. When one apologizes beforehand it looks a little like he thought he had said things calculated to give offense; and whenever he thus apologizes he may be sure some will take offense, if for no other reason, because he has apologized and they think he expects them to take offense.

Brother Dunn's article shows a little of that of which we see a great deal in others—namely, a seeming disposition to have some churches go wrong whether they intend it or not, or to have them travel in the wrong direction much faster than they do. It is a well-known principle that the publication of scandals and crimes suggests the same or similar sins to others. This is just as true in the publication of so much trouble and so many divisions in churches. The guilty may be justly condemned and the faithful and loyal worthily praised; but others read of all this and some, it seems, unconsciously imbibe the spirit of contention, strife, and division, and make trouble and threaten division where no cause for such exists. Some boys read Indian tales and the "Life of Jesse James" until they run away from home to fight Indians or to become desperadoes. So it has occurred to me that upon the same principle some have made distinctions in religion where there are no differences and have agitated minor matters into church troubles and divisions. They have not intended to do wrong; their intention has been to do right. For this reason, as well as for others, it seems best to keep local church troubles and personalities out of the papers as much as possible. Some readers lose taste for any other kind of reading.

Brother Dunn writes Brother Logan down as "the pastor of the church of Christ at Murfreesboro," and puts the word "pastor" in quotation marks. If Brother Logan claims to be "the pastor" of the church of Christ at Murfreesboro and the church, and especially the elders, so recognize him, this is the correct way to put it; but doubtless neither Brother Logan nor the church claims this. Brother Logan is an evangelist used by the church as is deemed best. It may be admitted here that a church and an evangelist may not always work together so as to accomplish the greatest good; yet it is wrong to dub a man a "pastor" because he preaches more or less for a congregation, and especially when he disclaims to be one and the church does not so recognize him. Then why should Brother Dunn speak of Brother Logan as the "pastor?" Is the desire the father of the thought?

People go from one extreme to another. It has been wisely said that "extremes are dangerous." "The one-man pastor" and "the modern clergy" have caused some to go to the other extreme, at least so it seems to me. One is not a pastor because he preaches with some regularity for a congregation. He may do this without leading all the meetings or prayers, either; he may do this and develop the church, which he will do if he does right. The mere fact of preaching on Sunday morning when the church has met to break bread and otherwise to worship God is not wrong. Paul preached on such an occasion. Brother Dunn preaches on Sunday morning when the church has met for worship against preaching at that time. What is preached frequently does harm, but not the mere fact of preaching. If Brother Logan should act the "pastor," as described by Brother Dunn, "officiate at the table, preach a set discourse, and lead the services generally, while the members sit and listen and go through the form of worship led by the 'pastor,'" he and the church would do wrong. But we are persuaded better things of them than to think they go "through the form of worship led by the pastor." Do they not worship in spirit and truth? Neither do they depend upon the "pastor" or upon any other one man to conduct the services for them. When a church meets and worships God, preacher or no preacher, it is not dependent upon a preacher. This the church at Murfreesboro does. Several of the brethren teach the Scriptures every Sunday to different ones. The more of this, the better. To depend upon one man, whether he be the "pastor," an evangelist, or any other man, is not good, and in most cases would be wrong. For an evangelist or any preacher to lead a church into such dependence is indeed wrong. It would be more edifying and developing for more brethren to take part in the prayers, exhortations, and services generally than do. While this is true, it is not wrong for a congregation to use an evangelist in preaching the gospel at home and in waste places. E. A. ELAM.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Memphis Commercial Appeal, in describing the proceedings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which recently convened in Atlanta, Ga., gives, among other things, the following:

"The word 'rally,' in the first section of the report, was a stumbling-block in the way of its harmonious adoption. Dr. Finley said he was one of these old-fogy Presbyterians who did not believe in innovations that partook of worldliness, and he assiduously objected to calling the proposed Sunday school assembly a 'rally.' This precipitated a discussion which ran through the better part of an hour. A dozen of the brethren expressed themselves pro and con, the younger element in the convention adhering generally to the retention of the term. When the amendment offered by Dr. Finley to strike out the objectionable word was put, it carried on a division. Dr. F. W. Lewis, of Clinton, La., did not believe in multiplying special days in the church. . . . The amendment brought on a lot of talk. Elder Bridgwell, of Hope, Ark., was the first to oppose it. He was followed by Elder Leland, of McClellanville, S. C. He has no patience with young people's societies. He said: 'The multiplication of young people's societies is killing the church. These societies are causing many people to lose the respect for the church that they should have. The Presbyterian Church has too many such societies.' . . . Dr. E. C. Murray, of Orange, N. C., one of the temporary clerks of the assembly, when the report of the Committee on Publication came up for discussion, vigorously arraigned the system of international Sunday school lessons now in use in the Presbyterian Church and other churches throughout the world. He said: 'The international system of Sunday school lessons is fatally defective. It is a "hippity-hoppity" way of getting through the Bible once in seven years.' This statement was greeted with heavy 'Amens' from all over the church. The Bible, he said, in this system, is buried under a rubbish pile of human helps."

These are straws that show which way the wind blows. Even the denominations are growing weary of the fads and fancies of men. Man-made societies for doing the work of the church of God have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Instead of proving themselves helpful, societies have served only as weights to retard the onward march of the church of God. As an influential and prominent minister of the gospel recently said to me: "They are strangling the lifeblood out of the church." Still another prominent preacher said to me: "The interest in the missionary society is very rapidly dying in this State." Those who brought in the society, over the protests of some of the most godly and self-sacrificing people of the land, and thus destroyed the peace and the harmony of the churches, promised much for it. The State would be evangelized as never before, churches would spring up in all the towns, the number of churches would be greatly multiplied in the country, and great numbers of rejoicing souls would flock into the kingdom of God. If we had not known better, we might have been led to apply the language of the prophet, which applies to the reign of Christ, to this reign of the missionary society in Tennessee: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God." (Isa. 35: 1, 2.) But the promises have not been fulfilled; the era of peace, rejoicing, and triumph has not dawned. How frail and fallible is man, and how uncertain are his promises! All the enthusiasm that he can arouse in works of his own creation is but fleeting at best. It speeds away like the bird on the wing. "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever."

Jesus sacrificed heaven, was born in a manger, reared in the midst of infantile privations, became a homeless wanderer, and at last died the cruel death of the cross in order that he might found a church, a kingdom, that would stand forever and which would be adapted to all ages, conditions, and temperaments of mankind. Man may esteem this church lightly and count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, but God will never so regard it. For this church he gave his own precious Son. "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph. 5: 25-27.) Christ did not fail in his work. His kingdom, the church, is perfect for its purposes. It was organized by him for the evangelization, elevation, and salvation of the world. There is no good work under the sun that a man can do as a Christian that he cannot do in the church of God. When man can do one good work as a disciple of Jesus in some human organization that he cannot do in the church of God, he will demonstrate thereby that the church which Christ founded is a failure. To turn from the divine to the human is a very grave reflection on the church of Christ. Why do people enter human organizations, if they do not imagine they can do some good work there which they cannot do in the church of God as such? No other reason can be given for entering man-made societies. There is not a tear that I can shed, a sigh that I can heave, a prayer that I can offer, a cup of cold water that I can give, one good deed that I can do, that I cannot do simply as a Christian and in the church which my dear Savior purchased with his own precious blood.

It is the occasion of much rejoicing to see that many among the denominations are tiring of man's wisdom and are turning in some things to the wisdom and power of God. May all who love the Lord continue to grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth until, with Paul, we can truly say: "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (1 Cor. 2: 1-5.)

With no organization but the church, the gospel was preached to every creature under heaven. The gospel soon spread throughout the Roman Empire. Believers were multiplied with a marvelous rapidity. In Paul's day the church did not groan under the heavy burden that man's wisdom had laid upon it. We should rise in the strength and with the wisdom that God gives and throw off the shackles of this human bondage. The church is the light of the world, the pillar and support of the truth, and is to break in pieces all other kingdoms. It shall grow until it covers the earth as the waters cover the sea. As she rolls onward and upward in her mighty revolutions, human presumption may retard her speed, but not stop her wheels. God would fall as soon as his church. I would as soon imagine that man could blot out the sun as think for one moment that the church will not at last triumph in the midst of waving banners and loud halleluiahs.

But our joy cannot be perfect. A feeling of sadness steals over me when I think of the coldness, stinginess, and lack of zeal that characterize many of those who claim to be loyal to the church and the word of God. With the blessed truths of God's word filling our minds, and the fires of a holy zeal burning on the altars of our hearts, there would hardly be one presumptuous enough to dare to organize a human society to do the work of the church of God. Individual Christians fail to do the work they should, they neglect to do their ordained work through the church. Some man imagines the fault is with the organization. He goes to work to make an improvement. He only makes matters worse. Let every Christian walk in the good works which God hath before ordained that he should walk in them. It is not enough to criticize departures from the truth. Each Christian is responsible to the extent of his ability to see that the gospel is preached throughout the wide world. Christianity is positive. The doors of the word are justified. With a heart filled with the love of souls, and with a spirit that will deny itself and take up the cross, let us lead the way in this most grand and glorious work.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Prompt Decision.

Sir Arthur Helps has said: "The great labor of life, that which tends more to exhaust men than anything else, is deciding. There are people who will suffer any pain readily, but shrink from the pain of coming to a decision."

But on this power of speedy and correct decision peace and success largely depend.

Daniel Webster used to speak of one who lacked both precision and decision as a man who went neither forward nor backward, but simply "hovered;" and the "hoverers" are always a band of peevish, disappointed men.

It is far otherwise with the men who rise to the height of a great occasion, either public or private. These are prepared men, prompt men; men of the single, watchful eye and the quick and steady hand.

Young Astley Cooper saw a lad fall from a cart and wound his thigh in such a manner as to sever the femoral artery. The spectator—only a boy himself—immediately took his handkerchief, and in a good, workmanlike fashion applied it so as to successfully control the bleeding. The opportunity brought out the genius which was soon to make Astley Cooper a great surgeon.

The power of swift decision must be part of the outfit which makes a man equal to the occasion. It does not do to waver before odds on the field of enterprise. Gen. Von Moltke's motto—"First weigh, then venture"—is the one to adopt.—Selected.

A quaint writer says: "If my friends have alabaster boxes full of the fragrant perfume of sympathy and affection laid away which they intend to break over my body, I would rather they would bring them out in my weary and troubled hours, and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy, than life without the sweetness of love and sympathy. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward on the weary road."

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

We enjoyed a visit from Brother J. M. Blakéy, of Allensville, Ky., last Thursday. He reports the church of Christ as doing well in Allensville.

A pleasant event of last week was the call of Brother Ed. Meacham. He had just closed an interesting meeting at Wilmington, O., with one addition.

Sister Anna Campbell Smith died at her home, near Lynnville, Tenn., on June 1, 1900. She was a noble Christian woman. The bereaved ones have our sympathy in their great loss.

Brother E. A. Elam left last week for Canada. He will remain in Canada one month or six weeks. He will hold a short meeting at Smithville and then go to Meaford. Canada is fortunate in securing his services.

The debate between J. D. Tant and John T. Oakley will begin on June 11. It will be held in West Nashville (New Town). Brother Tant is now holding a meeting with the church of Christ which meets on North Spruce street. The meeting will continue until the debate begins.

Brother James E. Scobey was among our visitors last week. He came to Nashville to see his son, Robert Scobey, graduate (Robert graduated with honors at the Peabody Normal College). Brother Scobey is teaching at Leftwich, Maury County, Tenn. In a short time he expects to go to Arkansas to hold a number of meetings.

Brother Larimore had a good meeting at Senatobia, Miss. On the night of May 29 there were four conversions. Brother Larimore began a meeting at Tracy City, Tenn., on June 3, 1900, which will continue until June 24, 1900; he will then go to Woodbury, Tenn., where he will conduct a meeting from June 24, 1900, to July 15, 1900.

"Weeping Joe" Harding, after hustling around in Middle Tennessee and begging enough money, wheat, corn, potatoes, etc., to build about twenty-eight churches, migrated to Texas, worked there for years, and has now located in West Nashville. Though manufacturing the best felt beds on the market, he does not propose to let the people rest on them; for he is yet abroad in the land, preaching as he has opportunity. There is but one "Weeping Joe" Harding, though many Brethren Harding.

Brother E. G. Sewell and granddaughter, Miss Lucy Dodd, left last Friday morning for Bonham, Tex. Brother Sewell began a meeting there on the first Lord's day in this month. Of the meeting Brother J. P. Sewell writes: "The meeting will continue three or four weeks. Brother Sewell will be assisted in the meeting by Brother S. P. Pittman. We extend to those who may see or hear of this notice an invitation to come and attend this meeting. All who decide to come from a distance will please write me in advance."

EDITORIAL.

The rainy day must come.

Treasures laid up in heaven are never lost.

A pure heart never laughs at a vulgar joke.

A pure heart never gets far away from God.

People who have all they need are hard to satisfy.

The man who lives close to God never falls from grace.

No man can exalt others until he humbles himself.

Good living is worth more than plausible theories.

Meanness is sure to make an enemy when it needs a friend.

The least conspicuous place is sometimes the most important.

Men who are universally truthful rarely ever need witnesses.

The man who has no purpose in life but to serve God cannot fail.

The man who devotes all his energies to feeding self prostitutes his talents.

The Christian who seeks to please the world excites the contempt of God.

There is no scriptural work that the unconverted soul can do in the church.

No one can make a faithful servant of the Lord while constantly seeking an easy way to do it.

It is far easier to criticise the mistakes of others than to show them the way that leads to victory.

The saying of Lactantius is worth treasuring in our memories: "He who imitates the bad cannot be good." To-day every one stands between good and bad examples, with virtue on one side and vice on the other. Every one must choose which to follow. Would to God that we would all follow the purest and best! Life, happiness, and joy depend on doing the will of the Lord.

One way of wasting time is in dawdling. There are some people who are continually flying from one thing to another. They do a little at this piece of work and then leave it unfinished for another; then in another minute they drop that for something else. They never do anything well and thoroughly. Thus they pass through the day, touching a score of things or more. Night finds nothing done. They imagine they are doing much and that their work is very important. How much wiser to do one thing at a time! Complete one job before turning to another. Deal with each piece of work with energy in its turn. At the end of one week you will be surprised to discover the progress you have made. Dr. William Mathews says: "Next to the youth who has no calling, he is most to be pitied who toils without heart, and is therefore forever dawdling—loitering and lingering, instead of striking with all his might."

Here is a parable Mr. Spurgeon once made: "There was a tyrant who summoned one of his subjects into his presence and ordered him to make a chain. The poor blacksmith—that was his occupation—had to go to work and forge the chain. When it was done he brought it into the presence of the tyrant, and was ordered to take it away and make it twice the length. He brought it again to the tyrant, and again he was ordered to double it. Back he came when he had obeyed this order, and the tyrant looked at it, and then commanded his servants to bind the man hand and foot with the chain he had made and cast him into prison. That is what the devil does with men; he makes them forge their own chain, and then binds them hand and foot with it, and casts them into outer darkness. That is just what every sinner is doing; that is just what drunkards, gamblers, and blasphemers are doing; but, thank God, we can tell them of a Deliverer.

The Son of God has power to break every one of their fetters if they will only come to him."

When the armies of General Lee and General Meade were confronting each other at Mine Run, Va., in November, 1863, General Lee, with his staff, was riding along his battle line, inspecting his own troops and reconnoitering the opposing lines. In the rear of A. P. Hill's corps he suddenly came upon a large number of men engaged in one of those prayer meetings which we frequently had on the eve of battle. The General at once halted, dismounted, and joined in the simple service; and when those humble private soldiers arose from their knees they found that they had been leading the devotions of their honored and beloved chief. He closed his order for the observance of the "fast day," appointed by President Davis for August 21, 1863, with these ringing words: "Soldiers, we have sinned against Almighty God; we have forgotten his signal mercies, and have cultivated a revengeful, haughty, and boastful spirit; we have not remembered that the defenders of a just cause should be pure in his eyes—that 'our times are in his hands'—and we have relied too much on our own arms for the achievement of our independence. God is our only refuge and our only strength. Let us humble ourselves before him. Let us confess our many sins and beseech him to give us a higher courage, a purer patriotism, a more determined will; that he will convert the hearts of our enemies; that he will hasten the time when war, with its sorrows and sufferings, shall cease; and that he will give us a name and place among the nations of the earth.—R. E. Lee, General." I can never forget the effect produced by the reading of this order at the solemn services of this memorable day.—Chautauquan.

The suffering in India certainly will appeal to every Christian heart. Eloquence and pathos are powerless to move the heart that will not be touched by such suffering. Jesus gave his life for them. It does seem that every heart filled with the love of God would be anxious to send a gift for the relief of these famine-stricken people. May God put it into the hearts of many to help them. Such is the religion of Christ. This paragraph is written with the prayer that it may stir up many pure minds to deeds of liberality. J. H. Bruce, who has passed through two famines in India, gives some touching incidents: "One reason why this famine is expected to be worse than the last one is that the water supply seems to be giving out in many parts of the country. Think of a dense population like that of India without an adequate supply of water! A mission school in Berar is so hard pressed that the children have to walk six miles to find water enough to wash their clothes. Many others have to buy water as they buy bread. I have passed through two dreadful famines in India, in 1877 and 1897, and have witnessed some fearful scenes. I have seen children so reduced by starvation that when food was offered to them they could not eat it, and the only way to nourish them was to rub cod liver oil over their shrunken bodies. One little fellow, in our own orphanage at Satara, was so far gone that our best efforts could not save him. He lingered along between life and death for several months, and then passed away. It seems strange to us in America that parents in India who are reduced to such extremities should be willing, and even eager, to dispose of their little children, and especially their little girls, in any way possible. In this country mothers would give their own lives to save the lives of their children; but in India we find parents selling their little girls for a rupee, or even less. Sometimes they desert their children in the streets or in the jungles, and occasionally they try to kill them outright. The last mail brought us letters from missionaries in Ahmednagar, in which the following cases are mentioned: A little girl was left by her parents behind a prickly pear hedge. They placed some of the fruit of the prickly pear (eaten only in case of desperate want) by her side, and promised to return soon and bring some more, but they never came. Another little girl, according to her own story, was taken by her mother to the edge of a pool of water. The mother was about to push her into the water, when the child begged her not to do it, but to let her go, and she would beg for bread, and not trouble her mother any more. Both of these little girls were brought to a missionary lady in Ahmednagar, and were tenderly cared for."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

If you wish first-class helps to Bible study, send us your orders for our quarterlies and Little Jewels.

The "Gospel Plan of Salvation" is a book that does not wear out with age. It should be in every home. Price, $2.

If there is any good book that you want, write to us for it, remitting the regular price for same. If we haven't it in stock, we will get it for you.

Do you need any first-class printing? We are prepared to please you and save you money on letter heads, bill-heads, envelopes, blank books, or anything you may need. Engraved and embossed work receives special attention.

By the time this issue of the paper reaches our subscribers we will be ready to supply our readers with the very useful and valuable book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." The way the orders are coming in, the first edition will soon be exhausted. A careful perusal of this book will do any one much good. Parents should place a copy in the hands of their children. It cannot fail to incite them to a nobler life. It is good for our children to reflect on such a life. The book contains about 420 large pages, with twenty full-page illustrations. Price, $1.50. Orders will be promptly filled.

Are you in need of good music books? If so, we are sure we can please you. Our new book, "Gospel Praise," will soon be ready for distribution—almost by the time this reaches our subscribers. The indications are that the demand for this book will be very heavy. Many have been very anxious to receive it. It has been prepared at very great expense and labor. A. J. Showalter, the music editor, thinks it the best book of his life; excellent musicians whom we have had to pass on the merits of the music pronounce it very fine. Brother Sewell has edited the sentiment of the songs with very great care. Prices of this book will be found elsewhere in this paper. See advertisement of "Gospel Praise." It is needless for us to write here of the merits of "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," and "Voice of Praise." These books have always delighted and pleased the people.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer through the Gospel Advocate what you think about the use of tobacco, as there is a great deal of talk about it in this country. Is it a sin? Also give a history of the Mormons, if you can give room in your columns.

Mabus, Miss.

W. E. REED.

Paul said: "Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving. I presume there is a proper and legitimate use for tobacco, if it was kept to that use. I do not know what it is. Its general use is not good, I am sure, and it is wrong to encourage what is not good. Especially if one has any doubts of its good, it is a sin for him to use or raise it. Mormonism is receiving sufficient attention in the Gospel Advocate, if you will read it.

Brother Lipscomb: I was at church on Lord's day, not long since, and one of the so-called digressive preachers preached. They used the organ and after preaching partook of the Lord's Supper. This preacher asked me to wait on the congregation, but I refused. He then waited on the congregation, but I refused to partake with them. I wish to know if I did right. Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians partook of the Lord's Supper with him.

Itasca, Tex.

F. A. SANFORD.

If you thought you would have encouraged wrong in partaking with them, you did right to decline. Congregations that add to or take from the word of God are not true congregations of Christ, and every true Christian should bear testimony against their wrong courses. Disloyalty to God can be shown in many different ways, in small things as well as great ones. The essential thing in congregations, as well as individuals, is to be faithful to God. A church that consciously adds to or takes from things ordained by God is not a church of God.

Brother Lipscomb: If a man has committed the willful sin that is spoken of in Heb. 10, will he at any time have hope? Will he have any more love for the word of the Lord? Will the gospel have any more effect on him. Will his conscience be seared?

X.

Esau committed the willful sin, and found no room for repentance, though he sought it carefully, with tears. (See Gen. 27: 25-29; Heb. 12: 16, 17.) Saul committed the presumptuous sin. (1 Sam. 15.) Saul confessed his sin and asked Samuel to forgive his sin, but he would not. Read and study the case. This sin was committed, thinking he brought honor to God in doing it. Then Judas committed the unpardonable sin. He had such remorse that he hanged himself. The willful or unpardonable sin is not a sin yielded to from overmastering passion or lust, but one that presumptuously or recklessly despises the law of God, sets it aside, and seeks to obtain good in other ways than God's ways. The most frequent manifestation of it is in setting aside the laws of God for the ways of man. The seductive idea that we can improve the appointments of God is the most dangerous to men. There are two causes in man that lead to sin. One is human weakness, or the strength of human passion, and lust; the other is human presumption, overestimate of man's wisdom that leads him to set aside the order of God. Both causes may lead to the willful sin, but the latter more frequently leads to it than the former.

Brother Lipscomb: I have been requested by some of the brethren to refer to you and Brother Sewell for a decision. The question is this: Do you understand the Savior to teach, in Matt. 13: 24-30, that the church cannot deal with offending members? It is claimed by some of the brethren that we can not exclude offending members from the body. Is it your opinion that that theory is right? I understand that the Savior did not teach that theory, from the fact that in 1 Cor. 5: 4, 5, he teaches that when they are assembled together they are to deliver such a one unto Satan. Who is this one to be delivered unto Satan? It was the fornicator, as stated in verse 1. "Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person." Verse 13.) Now, is it your opinion that this chapter teaches that it must be done in a public way—that is, the exclusion of the offending member? "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." (2 Thess. 3: 6.) Here we learn that Paul gave positive instructions to the brethren to withdraw themselves from disorderly brethren. We also learn from Tit. 3: 10, 11: "A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself." Now, is your understanding that all these scriptures have reference to the exclusion of offending members? Will you give us your understanding as to the questions I have asked, and answer through the Gospel Advocate?

W. A. TIPTON.

Fernbank, Ala.

The parable does not refer to the church dealing with members in any way. The servants that came to the Master were the angels, not the members of the church. The field was the world, not the church. The wheat represented the members of the church. The angels saw evil in the world mixed with the good. They asked if they, the angels, should root out the evil. He told them no. It teaches there will be no supernatural interference with the good and evil in the world until the end; then the angels will separate them.

Brother Lipscomb: Do elders have the right to take the evidence in regard to a disorderly member and decide as to what should be done—that is, after the trouble has come before the church—and then state to the church what has been done, giving the reasons and the scripture for the course that they have pursued? I am bothered over this matter, as to the proper course to pursue. If a brother has told lies and would not confess until it was proven on him and he saw he was going to be withdrawn from, is it sufficient then to just say that he had talked too much, or should he confess to the falsehood? For instance, if I lie on my brother until the whole church is offended, would it be enough just to say I had talked too much? Give us all the light on this subject that you can and as early as possible, for we are needing it now. I think the Gospel Advocate the best paper published.

X.

The action of the elders should be the action of the whole church—that is, the elders should take no action that is not the action of the whole church. Every member of the church should be satisfied the action taken is just and scriptural. Unless this is done there can be no harmony in the church. No member should be willing to be a partner to what he believes to be injustice and wrong toward any one. When the elders act for the church they should be certain that they truly represent the church. The steps by which this unanimity is gained are not laid down, hence are not essential; but the elders must represent the whole church. A man that does not gladly and fully and freely confess his sins has not repented of the sins. The confession is the evidence and assurance of the repentance. Unless it is fully, freely, and anxiously made, it shows the repentance is not deep and genuine. The discipline should be to bring about repentance, not to induce confession. When the repentance is from a godly sorrow, the confession will be free and hearty. It will show itself. A confession that is dragged out of a man does not show penitence. A sin that is not confessed until it is proved is not repented of. A penitent man is more anxious to confess the sin than others can be for him to do it. His soul is in danger and he is anxious to confess, that he may save his soul.

Brother Sewell: In the Gospel Advocate of February 15, 1900, in answering Brother Johnson Perry's request, you say that Christ was crucified and buried on Friday. If that be true, he was in the grave but two nights, while Christ said that he would be in the grave three nights. (See Matt. 12: 40; also Jonah 1: 17.) Will you please harmonize your position with these scriptures? Brother Sewell, I ask this question only to learn the truth. I have studied along this line a great deal, but do not understand it. Will you please harmonize Mark 15: 25 and John 19: 14? From the first it appears that he was crucified the third hour; from the second, that he was crucified the sixth hour. By answering these questions in the Gospel Advocate you will confer a great favor on one who is trying to learn the word of God.

Lockney, Tex.

ARTHUR COOPER.

I do not see that any harmonizing is needed. Truth always harmonizes with truth. The facts as recorded necessitate the matter as we stated it. Jesus was buried on the same day he was crucified, late in the afternoon; and the statement that he rose the third day requires that we count the day of his crucifixion as one. As he rose on the first day of the week, that is the day called the "third day;" and to make that the third day necessitates that you begin the count on Friday and count that as one, and Saturday two, and the first day of the week would be the third day, and no other count will fit the case. In the Bible there are many events recorded the same way, in which parts of days are counted for the whole; and the count is no doubt this way in Jonah's case. The day he was thrown overboard would count one; then the day the fish cast him out was the third. The day was partly gone when he was thrown out of the ship and the third day not closed when he was thrown out of the fish; for if it was already closed when the fish cast him out, it would have been on the fourth day, and that would not fit the facts. So it was regarding the Savior. If you have him buried earlier than Friday, then you would have him rise on the fourth day, and that spoils the statement that he rose on the third day. In the first of Genesis, in the time the six days of creation were going on, we have the statement several times, "And the evening and the morning were the first day," "And the evening and the morning were the second day," and so on. That certainly included one night and the day following, which were counted one day. The Jews generally counted their time that way. Hence, in counting time they began the day about sunset and closed it about the next sunset. So, Friday began about sunset on what we call Thursday evening, about dusk. From then till the same time Friday evening, as we would call it, would be one day in scripture language; then at dusk Saturday evening would be the second day; and dusk the evening of Lord's day would conclude the third; and from sundown, or dusk, on our Thursday evening till sundown, or dusk, on Sunday evening includes the full three days and nights. In our count the first night was out and most of the day when Jesus was buried, so that part of that period of twenty-four hours is counted for the whole, since one day and one night count a day of twenty-four hours. Then he lay in the grave all of Saturday and the night part of the first day of the week, rising early in the morning. So, part of Friday, in our count, and part of the first day of the week are counted for the whole in making out the full count of three days and three nights; and since in Bible language the word "day" frequently includes the night preceding, so it is in this case when the day of his rising is called the "third day." Counting part of Friday and part of Lord's day for the whole, you include the full time of three days and three nights and yet have him buried late on Friday afternoon, raised early on Lord's day morning, and thus fill the requirements of rising the third day and of the three days and three nights. I know of no other count that will fill the bill.

Vanity always leaves enough room in the heart for revenge.—Exchange.

The man who is truly godly never advertises it to people.—Selected.

Home Reading.

THE LITTLE STROHBACHS' CHRISTMAS.

It was the first winter the little Strohbachs had spent in America, and a bitterly cold winter it was. They had not minded it so much with their thick woolen stockings and mittens that their mother knit whenever she sat down to rest for a few minutes. They liked to play out in the snow, making images of chubby little German children like themselves.

But it had been a hard winter for their parents. Mr. Strohbach had been ill for a long time, and all their little money that they had saved up to settle them in their new home had been used up. It was December now, and Mr. Strohbach had gone to work again, but pay day would not come until the first of the month, and here was Christmas coming in three days. Mrs. Strohbach heard the children talking eagerly about the coming Christmas—"Weihnachtstag," they called it—and her heart ached. How could they get the things to which the children had been accustomed in their old home?

She had seen some beautiful little Christmas trees on the street, and the little Strohbachs had always had a Christmas tree ever since they could remember, but this year there was no use thinking of it. She told the children so, and that they must not expect any presents for this one time, but that they must be very glad and thankful to have their papa well and working again. She promised to make them some cooly dolls and animals, but that was all she could promise.

It was very hard for them all, and especially as the children could not understand why good old Kris Kringle could not find them in their new home. In spite of what their mother said they could not help hoping that, after all, he would find and surprise them.

Christmas was coming on Wednesday this year. On Sunday evening the children wanted their father to tell them stories. After he had finished "Hans In Luck," which they liked very much, he said to his wife: "I think I will read them the story of the Christ child. It is near Christmas."

Mr. Strohbach was a good, kind man, but he did not often read his Bible. He had one that his mother had given him a good many years before, and which he had brought out to America with him when he came ahead of his family, for he was here six months before the rest of them came.

He took down this old Bible and read the beautiful story of the first Christmas. After he had finished he closed the book and held it loosely on his knee. As he did so the leaves parted of their own accord near the middle, and there before their astonished eyes lay two crisp ten-dollar bills.

"It's old Kriss Kringle," shouted little Luther, and the children capered around the room for joy.

"I thought they were lost," explained Mr. Strohbach to his wife. "I put them in there one time before you came, and I had forgotten all about putting them there and thought I had lost them. Now we can have a Christmas for the children."

The mother's face brightened at these words, for it was very hard to disappoint the children.

The next two days were very busy ones for the little Strohbachs and their mother. They had yards of white pop corn rope and chains of colored paper to make with which to trim the wonderful little Christmas tree, and Mrs. Strohbach had a great deal of shopping to do, trying to buy a great many nice things with a very few dollars.

So it was a very happy Christmas for the little Strohbachs, after all—this first Christmas in the new country—and their parents' hearts were so softened that they said to each other they would read more from God's word and learn more of him who never forsook his children.

"For it may have been to teach us," said Mr. Strohbach, "that there are further riches in his word which we miss by letting it lie neglected."—Elizabeth M. Griswold, in the Sunday School Advocate.

THE GOLDEN RULE IN BUSINESS.

There is in Cape Colony at the present time a gentleman who has been extremely successful in the timber trade, and he has gained by his superior ability a large proportion of the great contracts of the colony. But a short time ago one of the men employed by him left the firm and set up an opposition business. In some way or other he managed to draw to himself many of the contracts which had formerly gone to his employer. Just at the time when he was most engaged in contracts which admitted of no delay the whole of his timber yard was burned, and ruin stared him in the face, because no insurance could produce the actual material which was required to fill the contracts.

On the day after the fire the man of whom I speak walked quietly into the office of his former employee, and that employee said to my informant that when he saw him coming he felt he could have killed him coming to gloat over his ruin. The former employer came very quietly up to him, wasted no words in sympathy or comment, but quietly said: "I know your position and the contracts that are due, and I wish to put at your disposal the timber in my yard, so that you may save your position."

Now, according to all the laws of political economy, as Adam Smith understood it, the man behaved absurdly. According to true political economy, as John Ruskin has taught us, that man behaved wisely and well; he followed the instincts of a higher truth than the competition for contracts, and he found his reward in the lasting blessings of the young man whom he had saved, and in that peaceful conscience which will stand him in good stead when all the wealth of the world has been consumed by moth and rust, and only the treasures that last are remaining.—R. F. Horton, in the Classmate.

A CHRISTIAN CASTLE.

There is a fine old house in Northamptonshire, England, which has been occupied nearly four hundred years by the Earls of Northampton. It is a great and princely mansion of stone, and is well worth a visit. In some ways it is one of the most remarkable houses in the world. As you approach it you will notice what appear to be immense signboards running around the eaves. You think it strange that an earl should advertise his business like a butcher or let other people put advertising signs on his castle. But coming closer, you will discover that these letters are a part of the house, and that they spell out words in an unfamiliar language. They are verses from the Latin Bible, and they say: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." That on the north front and partly on the west side reads thus: "Blessed are all they who fear the Lord and walk in his ways." Over the facade of the entrance is: "The Lord guard thy entering in." Then around the wall, dividing the gardens from the park, are texts in English, constructed in the masonry. These are, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand forever," and the oft-quoted text: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow." Visitors, who are admitted on certain days of the week, cannot but be impressed by these "sermons in stones." They have been gazed upon by many thousands; such inscriptions, once seen, must linger long in the mind.—Sunday School Advocate.

LOVE'S SPELLING BOOK.

Harry found an old spelling book about the house which his grandmother had once used in school, and which gave a very curious way of spelling many words. He was laughing over some of the funny spelling when his mother called him to her.

"How many ways of spelling 'love' have you found, Harry?" she asked.

"Only one," he replied. "It is just the same in this book as it is in my spelling book at school."

"Why," said his mother, "I know of more than one way. I think there must be at least a dozen ways—possibly a hundred or more."

Harry opened his eyes wide in surprise.

"Just now," said his mother, "you gave up a part of your dinner that the poor Jackson boy might have a good meal. You did not send a word in the basket, because you did not want to let your right hand know what your left hand did; but nevertheless there was one word in the basket spelled out in very large letters. Can you guess what that was?"

"Was it 'love?'" asked Harry.

"Yes," answered his mother. "And last week when you put your dime into the missionary bank you did not say anything, but as it rattled down among the other coins I heard it speak very distinctly a word which you did not catch. Do you know what it was?"

"It must have been 'love,'" again answered Harry.

"Yes," said his mother, "that was another way of spelling 'love;' and a little while ago, as I was watching you play your games out in the yard, I saw you step out to make room for James Marshall. Why was that?"

"Why," explained Harry, "that was because he thought it was his turn, although I was sure it was mine, and so were all the rest of the boys; but I gave up to him just because I wanted him to have a good time."

"And you spelled our word in another way," said his mother.

"Well, I declare," said Harry, "it is such a wonderful word that it ought to have a spelling book all to itself."

"It has," answered his mother. "Our whole lives were intended to be primers of love, in which we should be constantly spelling out the word by kind, thoughtful actions, so as to make the world a beautiful, happy place in which to live."—Selected.

PERSISTENCY WINS.

Persistency is characteristic of all men who have accomplished anything great. They may lack in some other particular, may have many weaknesses and eccentricities, but the quality of persistence is never absent in a successful man. No matter what opposition he meets or what discouragements overtake him, he is always persistent. Drudgery cannot disgust him, labor cannot weary him. He will persist, no matter what comes or what goes; it is a part of his nature; he could almost as easily stop breathing. It is not so much brilliancy of intellect or fertility of resource as persistency of effort, constancy of purpose, that gives success. Persistency always inspires confidence. Everybody believes in the man who persists. He may meet misfortunes, sorrows, and reverses, but everybody believes that he will ultimately triumph, because they know there is no keeping him down. "Does he keep at it? Is he persistent?" This is the question which the world asks about a man. Even a man with small ability will often succeed if he has the quality of persistence, where a genius without it would fail.—Success.

THE WHY OF WORK.

"Work," says Prof. Henry Drummond, "is given men not only, nor so much perhaps, because the world needs it, but because the workmen need it. Men make work, but work makes men. An office is not a place for making money; it is a place for making men. A workshop is not a place for making machinery; it is a place for making souls; for fitting in the virtues to one's life; for turning out honest, modest, and good-natured men. So it is with the work of the State and of the church. This is why it never hurries—because it is as much for the worker as for the work. For Providence cares less for winning causes than that men, whether winning or losing, should be great and true; cares nothing that reforms should drag their course, from year to year, bewilderingly, but that men and nations, in carrying them out, should find their education, discipline, unselfishness, and growth in grace. These lessons learned, the workers may be retired—not because the cause is won, but because it is not won; because he has other servants, some at lesser tasks, some half employed or unemployed, whom he must needs call into the field."—Christian Observer.

AN INSPIRING EXAMPLE.

Gladstone well says that advice chills, but example inspires. Who is not aroused to higher living by the example of Chrysostom when summoned before the Roman emperor?

When threatened with banishment should he persist in adhering to the Christian faith, he replied: "The world is my Father's house; thou canst not banish me."

"But I will slay thee," said the emperor.

"Thou canst not," said the heroic man, "for my life is hid with Christ in God."

"I will take away thy treasures."

"Nay," was the answer. "In the first place, I have none that thou knowest of. My treasure is in heaven, and my heart is there."

"But I will drive thee away from thy friends."

"Not so," answered Chrysostom. "I have a Friend in heaven from whom thou canst not separate me. I defy thee; there is nothing thou canst do to hurt me."—Christian Life.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JUNE 7, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

I JOHN 2.

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." The expression, "My little children," is a very tender and endearing one. It is the word in the Greek that teachers would use in addressing their pupils, whether young or old. While the word would very well apply to little children literally, the use of it is by no means confined to that. When John wrote this letter he was quite old, and doubtless well acquainted personally with very many of those to whom he wrote. The letter is supposed to have been written in the year 90 of the Christian era. He must have been pretty nearly as old as Jesus when he enlisted, as he was one of his early disciples. So he was well up in years, and, as a father in the gospel, he very tenderly addresses all of them as his "little children." He meant it in a tender, fatherly, and affectionate sense. He felt toward them as a father toward a child. There is nothing under the heavens that can make men so tender and so sympathetic as the gospel of Christ, the religion of Jesus. This religion was conceived in the tenderest love and affection ever known, and consummated in the purest and most unselfish sacrifice ever made, or even heard of, among men. Jesus at all times manifested this sort of a spirit, and the disciples caught it from him.

John was so full of it that he is frequently called "the loving disciple," and speaks of himself as one that Jesus loved. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." This love was wonderful, immeasurable, and toward those at enmity with him at that. Any man whose heart is touched by this love has a tender feeling in his heart toward others. Christians should especially cultivate it toward each other. John did this toward his brethren. Like Paul, he was not afraid nor ashamed to express his tenderness toward them. In these days Christians are too worldly polite to express this sort of affection toward each other. The members of churches these days address their preachers, "pastors," as "Mr. So and So," as though he were a stranger. The world, its fashions, its customs, and pride have the inside track of the churches these days. We need a little more of that old-fashioned brotherly love that existed between Christ and his apostles, and between the apostles and the churches, and among the members of those early days. The cold, fashionable formalities and customs of these days are freezing out that love and affection that the religion of Jesus is intended to foster and manifest. Christians will never be what they ought to be and what they are intended to be while they cultivate such a spirit. Paul says: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Eph. 4: 32.)

John was yearning for the well-being of his brethren, and said: "These things write I unto you, that ye sin not." So it is evident that in John's day the disciples had not advanced beyond the reach and temptation of sin. He knew that the world was full of sin all around them, and he knew, too, that while the spirit is willing, the flesh is weak and liable to fall under the power of temptation at any time. Such injunctions are timely and appropriate anywhere and everywhere; but it is possible that there were a few Pharisaical Christians among the churches, even then, that were claiming they were perfect—that they did not sin, and were beyond the reach of sin and the power of temptation. Hence, John says, in 1 John 1: 8, 9: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." According to John, therefore, when a man reaches the conclusion that he is so holy that he does not sin, and that he therefore has no sin, he deceives himself, and the truth is not in him. It is absurd for a man cumbered with all the weakness of flesh and blood to claim that he has no sin. John included himself, saying: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Thus he plainly shows that if even he, though he had been a disciple of Christ so many years, and had taught so many people, were to claim that he had no sin, he would be a deceived falsifier. Christians have the same sort of flesh and blood now that they had then; and if a man then in fifty years could not be free from the dangers of sin, how can people expect to be free now? Christians are in danger of temptations and the power of sin as long as they are in the flesh, hence the appropriateness of the divine admonition: "Sin not." These admonitions are intended to keep the Lord's people always on their guard and their eyes always open to their dangers, and to cause them to use all their efforts to avoid sin. It comes in all sorts of forms and with all conceivable inducements, so that if the holiest saints do not watch and pray continually, they will fall into temptation. This is the perfection; the holiness that Christians are to attain in this life, that they shall be always watching and always ready to resist and overcome temptation, and make this the daily and constant effort of life.

This is something Christians can do and something they must do if they would triumph over sin and come off conquerors through Jesus who loved them. But when they do their very best, sudden temptations and the weakness of the flesh will sometimes get the upper hand of them, and then they will need to repent and confess their sins and pray to God for his pardoning grace and love. Hence, he says next: "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." If any man sin—that is, if any of you sin, any of you little children—we have an advocate. This is not intended as a sort of permission to sin, but as a precious and consoling truth that if through the weakness of the flesh we sin when we do not intend to do so, we have a chance for pardon. If we sincerely repent of such sins, confess them to God, and ask him for pardon, he promises to grant it; but if we run recklessly into sin and make no effort to keep out of it, this precious promise can hardly be ours, for he first says: "Sin not." That means we must strive all the time to avoid sin, must strive at all times to do the Heavenly Father's will. If, then, these efforts sometimes fail and we find that we have fallen into sin, not run into it, then these precious provisions are for us. This character of sins can be forgiven. As for those who rush heedlessly and recklessly into sin, their chances for pardon are much more doubtful. As for those who sin willfully or presumptuously "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins;" but until a man loses respect for the word of God and sets his head to go his own way, regardless of the authority of God, he is not likely ever to commit this willful or presumptuous sin. These sins through weakness, when we do not purpose it and do not want to sin, are the sort John was talking about. Very good sort of people sometimes become criminally careless and indifferent as to sin, and this is certainly very dangerous. We may get so far that way in a little while that it will be difficult for us to get back. The farther we go into sin, the less we feel inclined to repent of it and cease from it. Hence, we should earnestly and prayerfully strive at all times to avoid sin.

To show that the blessings of pardon are not confined to Christians he adds: "And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Thus the provisions of salvation are so broad that all the world may have a chance. It seems that only a few are availing themselves of the gracious provisions that are made for them. But the apostle was determined they should understand that nothing but continued faithfulness will save even the righteous, so he says next: "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that are in him." These verses give an infallible test as to whether we know Jesus and the Father or not, and that is, that we keep his commandments. It is utterly vain for any man to talk about loving God that does not keep his word. There are many that claim to be sinlessly holy that are disregarding some of his commandments every week they live. God requires his people to meet on the first day of the week to break bread, but there are many of them that disregard this the year round. Yet they say they know God and know Jesus, and that, too, in a very tender and sacred way; but the above passage indicates very clearly that they make a false claim and that they do not know him.

"He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." Jesus always walked in his Father's will. His whole life is one grand exhibition of the Heavenly Father's will. He never was found off his guard. He was always found saying and doing the right. So he serves to us as an example of a perfect life, and we are told to follow his steps. If we will do that, we need have no fear of the result; it will be all right. If we do not continually strive to walk as Jesus walked, to be always doing what God's word bids us do, we will certainly fail in the end. At the very best, we will make many mistakes and blunders, and many times find reason for penitence and prayer. If we become careless and indifferent, the first thing we know we shall be lopped off as unfruitful branches, and wither.

The mighty tide of sin and folly is against us, as a continually flowing stream; and if we do not continually pull against this current, it will bear us along with it. It is easy enough to float with the current, but it requires continued rowing to go against it. Every time we cease our efforts the current will bear us down with it. Sin is always on the alert, and the child of God has to be always watching and praying, or lose the race. Truly, it will be an awful thing to be found falsifying, claiming to be in Christ, claiming to be with him, when in reality we are against him. Besides, a faithful life is so much happier life than an unfaithful one. No man can be happy under the goadings of a guilty conscience, knowing that he is not doing the will of God. It will be terrible to be found crying for the rocks and mountains to fall on us to hide us at last from the face of him who loved us, and died and rose again that we might live. E. G. S.

Did Elders Belong to the Gifted and Inspired Class of Teachers?

Brother Lipscomb: I beg to thank you for your reply in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, to questions propounded. I find, however, that to some of the questions you have given only a partial answer. One of them I cannot see that you have mentioned, while others you have fully answered. Then, too, in some cases your answers are very confusing to me; likely it is my fault. However, I will, for the sake of convenience, number the questions in order in which I propounded them and then briefly state what I understand your conclusions to be, also the points of confusion, and ask if you will not assist me further in the study of this, as I see it, very important subject:

1. Were the gifts in Eph. 4 and 1 Cor. 12 inspiration?
2. Why do you conclude pastors were to teach and feed the flock until characters were formed suitable for elders?
3. Were there not elders at the same time and even mentioned as being in existence prior to the mention of pastors, and was not the work of pastors and elders the same?
4. Can we now designate men by names bestowed upon inspired men, or, in other words, would it not be sinful to designate men as "pastors," when in the New Testament that term was applied to inspired men?

Now, if I correctly understand you, your answer to my first question is that "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers" were endowed by supernatural gifts, or inspired; also that "gifts of healings, helps, governments, and diversities of tongues" were supernatural, and that these gifts or endowments passed away when the complete will of God was made known. In this I think you are correct; but accepting this causes confusion, as in another place you say: "If elders were gifted persons, they would have been appointed in the beginning, when gifts were most needed." Now, this brings me to the point of a new question:

5. If the gifts of governments were not bestowed upon elders, upon whom were they bestowed? I judge it applied to elders, from Heb. 13: 7-17; 1 Thess. 5: 12, 13; 1 Tim. 5: 17; also other scriptures.

6. If elders were not gifted, how could they with inspired apostles make decrees? (Acts 15: 6; 16: 4.)

As to question No. 2, I do not find that you answer it at all. Please do so, giving the scripture upon which you base your conclusion.

You answer question No. 3 in part, giving dates when elders were first spoken of, but do not say when pastors were first mentioned, nor do you explain the difference in their work. I have always understood "pastors" (Eph. 4: 11) the same as "shepherds," agreeing with "overseers to feed [shepherd] the church of God." (Acts 20: 28.) Is this erroneous? You say that "after time had been given for the development of elders, they appointed for them elders in every church." (Acts 14: 23, R. V.) From the reading of this tour of Paul and Barnabas it seems they were the first and only preachers through that country, and after going as far as Derbe they turned back, retracing the way they had come, immediately, or at least before any great time had elapsed, confirming and exhorting the brethren and ordaining or appointing elders. Allow me here to ask another question:

7. Was not this the first visit Paul and Barnabas, or any other preacher, had ever made to Derbe, and did they establish the church there, and did they not ordain elders in this church at that time? Is this not a case of appointing elders without waiting for development? You say that "so soon as men were converted some were endowed with spiritual gifts that enabled them to perform the work of the church at once." Is this not a case in point?

Your answer to my fourth question is not clear to me. You say: "If the name was conferred to indicate the official position and work pertaining to the office, it would be wrong, sinful, to call those doing other work by it." Further, you say: "If the name was given to indicate a work that was common to others, I do not see why the same name might not be given to others who did, or do, the same work." Then you cite "teachers" as being both gifted and without gifts. But in another connection you say: "I certainly understand those enumerated in Eph. 4: 11 as being endowed by supernatural gifts of the Spirit for doing the work indicated by the name. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers were endowed with gifts of the Spirit, graded in the order given." The latter quotation does not seem to me to agree with the former, because in this most certainly it appears that these names indicated both the official position and work. Now, note you say it would be wrong, sinful, if this be the case, to call ourselves by such names now. Permit me to ask:

8. Do not the words "apostles," "prophets," "evangelists," "pastors," and "teachers" indicate the work? If they are "graded in the order given," one higher than another, does it not indicate official position? "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers," etc. (1 Cor. 12: 28.) Now, I understand this as meaning grades of official position—first, second, and third grades.

Then, again, you greatly confuse me by saying, "It is well and safe to keep the distinction between the endowed and the unendowed;" and that you could not see that it would be sinful to call men "evangelists" or "teachers," because it indicated work of both classes of men, inspired and uninspired. Now, what puzzles me is to keep the distinction between endowed and unendowed, when evangelists and teachers are both.

I understand your interpretation of Eph. 4: 11, that all "were endowed with gifts of the Spirit, graded in the order given." But in concluding your article you say: "But 'apostles,' 'prophets,' and 'pastors' are only applied to the gifted, and it is best to keep the distinction between the inspired and uninspired where the Bible makes it." Just here I will ask:

9. Why of the five enumerations of gifted positions do you class the fourth ahead of the third, pastors inspired and evangelists not? How could the evangelists be graded above the inspired class if not also inspired? Are there evangelists mentioned in the New Testament who were not gifted, inspired?

You state that "the same work must be done now" —that is, of evangelists and teachers; you also tell us the work of pastors was that of teaching and feeding the church. Do we not have to do that now?

There are many other points I would like to consult you on, but I am already taxing your time and space. Kindly answer through the Gospel Advocate. I thank you in advance for your kind consideration and assistance.

J. H. HARDEN.

Too many questions confuse, and are a noncommittal way of arguing that never struck me as fair. I think I answered fully all the questions asked. I gave my reasons for believing pastors, with others gifted, were given until time for developing elders. They were gifted from the beginning to feed the flock, until the persons had time to develop as elders, and the gifts passed away. They certainly overlapped each other, the gifts gradually passing away as gifted persons died, while elders came in as persons were fitted for the work. Paul says: "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." God gave them through the Holy Spirit. The Spirit was given at Jerusalem, on Pentecost; at Samaria, when Peter and John went down; at the house of Cornelius, when Peter preached to them; and at Ephesus, when Paul preached Christ. These are the only examples of the bestowal of the Spirit on numbers at one time. "All these [gifts] worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." The Spirit who distributed these gifts was granted when they first obeyed Christ. Elders are not mentioned at any of these places when the gifts were bestowed; at no time are they classed with gifted persons.

Our brother asks: "Why, then, did they join with the apostles in the decrees?" (Acts 15: 6.) If he will tell us why "the brethren" joined in the same decree (verse 23)—"the apostles and elders and brethren send greeting," etc.—and why Paul joined Sosthenes with him in the first letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 1: 1), and Timothy in the second letter to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 1: 1), and to the Philippians (Phil. 1: 1), and to the Colossians (Col. 1: 1), and Silas and Timothy to Thessalonians (1 Thess. 1: 1; 2 Thess. 1: 1), he can tell why the elders joined in this decree. They did not intend to say by this that all the brethren were inspired or that these others were apostles equal with Paul. The apostles honored those with them in their work, "in honor preferring one another." As elders were to succeed to positions as teachers, I can see reason why they honored them and set this example for others to follow. Elders were among the Jews uninspired, and with the same character required in the churches. To have required inspiration in the churches without distinctly telling it would have introduced confusion. No mention is made of the elders in Jerusalem for eleven years. (Acts 14.) They preached at Derbe. Many were taught, but they did not appoint elders there, but returned to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, where preaching had been done, and confirmed the souls, or taught them to be steadfast, exhorting those before converted, and established or confirmed them, and appointed elders. Gifts were given to confirm Christians. (Rom. 1: 11.) Elders were appointed after they were confirmed and established. Then Paul left Titus in Crete to set in order the things lacking and appoint elders in every city, and directs the characters to be chosen. The letters to Timothy and Titus were written near the close of Paul's life. The other apostles were all dead or old. The gifts would pass away. So he directs elders to be appointed in every city and gives the characters by which they were to be selected. Paul did not give these directions to guide "one and the self-same Spirit" to work gifts in them, "dividing to every man severally as he will," but to guide Christians for all time. Gifts are not among the qualities. Unless Titus could confer gifts, none could bestow gifts on these elders appointed when gifts were passing away. The scriptures referred to may mean either the gifted or ungifted teachers. They were to be treated alike. So these scriptures cannot have the least bearing on the question. All Christians are required to do work that apostles, prophets, and even Christ, did. What does that prove? The gifted ones taught the same things to be done that the completed Scriptures teach.

I am not able to make plainer what I said about the gifted and ungifted persons. When the same name was applied to both orders it would appear in lists of both. If persons were gifted to evangelize and teach, both names must appear in lists of gifted persons, as they do. If the ungifted did the same work, they would also be found in lists of the ungifted. When the same names are in both orders, it shows the scriptures in these cases do not preserve distinction by the names. The name came as the result of work done, not of official position. The context must show by which class it is done. The noun "evangelist" is found in the Scriptures only three times. In these cases it refers to the gifted. In the verb form it is used over fifty times. In the greater number of these cases the work was done by gifted persons, but sometimes by others. (Acts 8: 4.) The men and women scattered abroad went everywhere "evangelizing," the Greek says, and the poor are to be "evangelized."

When the Holy Spirit called ungifted preachers and evangelists by these names, it cannot be sin for us to do the same. "Apostles," "prophets," and "pastors" are not applied to the uninspired. It is safe for us to follow the same rule.

If any one believes elders belonged to the inspired class and passed away with it, the proof rests on him. To show inspired men did the same kind of work elders are required to do is no proof. The Holy Spirit through gifts taught them to do the same work he teaches through the Scriptures to be done now. So far as I know, the gifted ones were to be treated as the teachers now are to be treated in the way of support.

D. L.

FANNING ORPHAN SCHOOL.

The Fanning Orphan School closed its sixteenth annual session on May 30, 1900, with an interesting programme carried out by the pupils. Two of the pupils, Miss Ammie Taylor, of Texas, and Miss Eddie Lovell, of Dickson, Tenn., had completed the course of English, Latin, and mathematics, and received diplomas attesting this. Both of these young ladies have been diligent students in the school and have conducted themselves in such a way as to secure the esteem of their teachers and associates. The trustees take pleasure in commending them as estimable ladies and worthy scholars in the course indicated.

This session of the school has been quite a satisfactory one. The attendance was larger than hitherto and the work satisfactory, both in the domestic and literary departments. At the close of the session there were at least thirty applicants for whom there was no room. The school stands greatly in need of new and enlarged buildings. They now accommodate about forty. One hundred could be cared for and taught with but little more cost in teaching. Will not the friends of the girls without means help this work?

D. L.

NASHVILLE BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Nashville Bible School closed its ninth session on Thursday, May 31, 1900. While the attendance was not so large as during some of the former sessions, it was a very satisfactory one in the work accomplished. The students were, as a whole, more earnest and diligent and accomplished more in study than any classes heretofore in attendance. In my classes the New Testament was gone over, save the Epistles of John and Revelation, with a careful investigation and exegesis of every sentence and clause about which there could be the least difficulty.

In the Old Testament we began with Genesis and went over all the historic books, the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Hosea, studying the connections and significance of every historic character and the purport of all the laws given, facts warranted, and prophecies recorded in the Scriptures. Besides this work, some time was spent in the investigation of such questions as: Who is God? What is his character? What are his relations to the universe and to man? Who is Christ? What are his character, office, and relations to God and to man? Who is the Holy Spirit? What are his work and relations to God and to man? What is his office in the world and in the church? What are the office and work of the word of God? What is the office of the blood of Christ, and how may its efficacy and power be reached by man? What are God's works? What are man's works? How are they related to each other and to man and his salvation? What is the purpose of God's dealings with man, and how may God be acceptably served, and man be saved?

The results of the year's work were satisfactory to both teacher and pupils, as they were in all the classes. Brother L. S. Gillentine, of Spencer, Tenn., completed the prescribed course of study and received a diploma from the school attesting the fact. Brother Gillentine is a good student, thorough and critical in his studies, and has shown himself a Christian gentleman, worthy the confidence of all. D. L.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

LAWSON.

It is again by the guiding hand that doeth all things well that I am under the painful necessity of chronicling the death of our beloved sister, Mrs. Nebraska Lawson, who died at her father's home on April 17, 1900. Her husband preceded her only a few weeks. She leaves a father, mother, brothers, sisters, three little children, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. Our deceased sister gave her heart to God while young. She united with the church of Christ and lived a consistent Christian life. She was laid away in a beautiful spot beneath sighing boughs near her father's home; but, thank God, she is not dead. She still lives in the noble Christian work of her life. Her deeds of Christian love are stored up in the golden urn of heaven, in the secret chamber of the Most High, as richer treasures than gold or silver or the fleeting wealth of ten thousand worlds like this. May the grace of God sustain the bereaved parents and friends.

MARY KIRKLAND.

Spring Warrior, Fla.

BONER.

Sister Lizzie Boner passed away from this world of sorrow and pain on April 21, 1900, after several weeks of suffering with lung trouble; aged twenty-nine years. Sister Boner was a daughter of Brother Newt Clendenen, who has also been confined to his bed, most of the time, for a great number of years, bearing trouble and pain with that earnestness and faithfulness which seems to characterize him as one of the faithful. Sister Boner obeyed the gospel about ten years ago, and has ever since lived a faithful, peaceful, quiet, and obedient child of God, as much, perhaps, as the circumstances of her life would admit, and died in full triumph of a living faith. May our God remember her broken-hearted parents in their sad bereavements and console them with the thought that the trials, persecution, and disappointments of this world will soon be over. May our Heavenly Father spare her husband's life and surround him with such circumstances that he will be influenced to turn to the Lord and live more devoutly and godly the remainder of his life, so when the time comes for him to cross over the river of death he can fold his hands and close his eyes and fall asleep in the arms of a crucified Redeemer to wait the judgment morn to meet his dear companion "in the sweet by and by."

JONATHAN BARNES.

Irving College, Tenn.

HARRISON.

Brother Ed. Harrison passed over the chilly river of death in his eighty-fifth year, on March 19, 1900, at his home, near Rome, Tenn. He obeyed the gospel at Bellwood, Wilson County, Tenn., in August, 1886, and lived a consistent Christian life, ever ready to do anything for the furtherance of the gospel. Brother Harrison was faithful to attend and lead in the services on Lord's day and was appointed one of the elders of the faithful band who meet to worship at Rome, in 1898. His daily walk bore

ROYAL

Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

Makes hot breakfast-breads wholesome—no yeast germs, no alum. Makes cake, biscuit and pastry of superior fineness, flavor and delicacy. Makes food that will keep moist and sweet. Is most economical, because it is the purest and greatest in leavening strength. In the easy, expeditious preparation of the finer cakes and pastries, Royal is indispensable.

Care must be taken to avoid baking powders made from alum. Such powders are sold cheap, because they cost but a few cents per pound. Not only will they spoil the cake, but alum is a corrosive acid, which taken in food means injury to health.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

evidence of the hopes of the spiritual man. While modest and unassuming in his nature, it can truly be said of him that his right hand knew not the deeds of his left hand. His greatest delight was in reading and hearing of the sweet promises of God's Word. His death has made his Christian companions, children, and many friends sad; yet how grand and beautiful is the blessed assurance that he sleeps in Jesus! Perhaps I knew him as well as any person. We had been near neighbors and intimate friends for more than thirty years. He was one of the three persons that worked so faithfully to establish the church of Christ at Rome. He had been in feeble health for quite a while, and had often remarked that the tender nursing and watchful care of Kate (his daughter) had prolonged his life.

JOHN J. WHITEFIELD.

Rome, Tenn.

WILSON.

James M. Wilson was born on December 31, 1817, and died on February 27, 1900; aged eighty-two years, one month, and twenty-six days. Brother Wilson was one of the oldest members of the church of Christ in Obion County, Tenn., at his death. In his death the congregation at Wilsonville sustains a heavy loss. He served as elder of this congregation from its organization (1870) till his death. At one time the congregation at Wilsonville would have been led off into the wilderness of vain worship and wild speculation, if it had not been for Brother Wilson and Brother Isaac Sewell, who, by their faithfulness and loyalty to the word of God, finally succeeded in driving out the vain speculations of men. Brother Wilson's motto was, "Never give the certainty for the uncertainty;" and to this rule he strictly adhered till the day of his death. He was honest, just, truthful, and benevolent. Even after he was disabled from work and had to be carried to the church in a chair, he would give a portion of his living to the Lord's cause. He was not a theoretic, but a Christian—one that knew his duty and did it. His son, W. A. Wilson, died about one month after he did. Thus the old soldiers of the cross are passing away, leaving the work in younger hands, and it is to be hoped that the younger ones will pattern after the loyal faithfulness of the old veterans.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Hornbeak, Tenn.

CLENDENEN.

Brother Charlie Clendenen died at his home, near Irving College, Tenn., on April 15, 1900. Brother Clendenen was nearly sixty-two years old. He obeyed the gospel about thirty years ago and lived an honest, upright, Christian life, as far as I know, up to his death. Brother Clendenen had been in bad health for several years, and of such nature, as he claimed, as to deprive him of the privilege of meeting regularly with the brethren to worship on Lord's days. Brother Clendenen leaves a good wife, several grown children, and many friends to mourn his departure from this world; but the promises of a Savior to a dying Christian are sufficient to wipe all tears away from their weeping eyes and heal their broken hearts and fill their souls with great joy and happiness in these sad days of bereavement. As death and judgment are before us all, let us all live near to our Savior by keeping his commandments, and all will be peace, love, and happiness on the judgment morn, when Christ will come and give us a part in the first resurrection that is promised to those that have proved true and faithful to him in this world. There is nothing promised in the resurrection to comfort and console the wayward and disobedient children of God and those that die out of Christ, but everything is promised to those in Christ who continue to live godly and holy lives in this world until death.

JONATHAN BARNES.

Irving College, Tenn.

BARRY.

It is sad to part from those we love. But in this sorrow the bereaved have the precious consolation that the departed one was a Christian and the bright hope of meeting him in that "home where changes never come." Sidney Barry died in Nashville on April 7, 1900, a few days after an operation for appendicitis. God has given his children the victory over death. "But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not, even as the rest, which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we that are alive, that are left unto the coming of the Lord, shall in no wise precede them that are fallen asleep. . . . Wherefore comfort one another with these words." (1 Thess. 4: 13-18, R. V.) Sidney was born on September 11, 1876; became a Christian at the age of fifteen or sixteen years; and was a faithful servant of the Lord. He loved the Bible and read it daily. He was conscientious and readily confessed any fault he may have had. Unlike many young men of his age, he never formed any bad habits. Although nearly twenty-four years of age, he never left home without his mother's consent. He was an exemplary young man. As a friend, we sympathize with his mother, sisters, and relatives, and commend them to the dear consolation and cheering hope of the gospel. E. A. ELAM.

EWIN.

I am requested by those who loved him best to record the death of Brother Henry C. Ewin, of Waverly, Tenn. He was born on August 11, 1871, and died on April 13, 1900. He was a very kind-hearted boy; he loved his mother dearly and was devoted to his brothers and sisters. Henry was possessed of many noble traits of character that made him many friends wherever he was known. He had untiring energy and was in every way truthful, having no patience with any sort of dishonesty or hypocrisy. Whenever met by misfortune, he was ever ready to overcome it by honest, earnest toil. He obeyed the gospel and was baptized by Brother E. G. Sewell in 1887; and though while young he often yielded to temptation, we feel very sure that he always had great respect for Christianity and perhaps never doubted for a day the power of the gospel to save the soul. As he grew older he became more impressed that life is real and that it is important to live right, and he soon began to lay aside his youthful habits. After this marked change in his life he was only spared about three years. But as the end drew nearer his faith grew stronger and he seemed full of confidence and trust in the Lord. He was not alarmed at death, but, despite the weakness of his nature, was willing to rely on the mercy of God. With all these facts we will cherish a hope for his eternal rest. We tender our deepest sympathies to his broken-hearted mother, brothers, and sisters; and we urge them to strive for that better land, where we shall meet all the saved of earth and "God shall wipe all tears away." J. E. B. RIDLEY.

For a Nerve Tonic, Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. M. Harlow, Augusta, Me., says: "One of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully, sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for Refined Paraffine Wax in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Higher Criticism.

One of the greatest dangers menacing the church of God to-day is the so-called "higher criticism." The danger is so great because our enemies are on the inside of the fold in sheep's clothing. The church might well rejoice when her avowed enemies charge her strongholds and wage unrelenting war against her inmates; such terrors have always strengthened Zion and made her prosper; but when her pretended friends attack her very vitals from within, and Zion feels no pain, the situation is alarming.

Many churches and schools are now fostering and sending out these doctors of surgery, and many religious papers are encouraging their dissecting of divine things, as though divinity needed doctors. They call it "higher criticism." Let no man deceive you by any means. It exalts itself above God in the very temple of God.

If these higher critics do not blaspheme that holy name by which we are called, they do worse. David says: "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." But these men ruthlessly criticize the authenticity and credibility of God's word, and do not tremble. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable, . . . that the man of God may be perfect." If we accept this as true, we must be jealous of any attempt to add to or take from the Bible, just as we have it. "There is death in the pot." The spirit of higher criticism was manifest in the Revision Committee in that they read a doubt into the above passage as to whether all scripture is inspired. All versions are liable to the bias of the age that brings them forth, and this passage bears an earmark of the particular bias of this age—semiskepticism.

I think a literal rendering of this passage would be about this: "All scripture given by inspiration of God, and profitable for doctrine, reproof," etc. The Authorized Version puts an "is" after the word "scripture" and another after the word "and." This gives the sense of the Greek idiom, which often fails to express its verbs as we do, where they will be easily understood, as in this case. I protest that the Revised Version had no right to reject the first "is" and retain the other. The change of "and" to "also" is also without warrant, but does not change the meaning if "is" be rejected or retained in both places.

The committee gave as a reason for the change that all scriptures (writings) are not inspired of God—as the Apocrypha and other profane writings. The word "scripture" means writing. But that title was one peculiarly applied to Old Testament writings in Paul's time. It was, as used in a religious sense or connection, a sacred word. Let us note the word in a few passages: "Did ye never read in the Scriptures?" "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures." "How then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled?" "He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures." "Search the Scriptures." Apollos was "mighty in the Scriptures." These passages indicate clearly the sense in which Paul's readers would take the word, without any implied warning to look on some scripture with suspicion.

But to show you this idea and translation were born of the devil, their advocates not only desire to reject "the Apocrypha and other profane writings," but use this argument of their own construction to disprove "the other scriptures also, unto their own destruction."

They say: "Some of the devil's utterances are recorded, and they were not inspired of God." No; but they are recorded by inspiration of God. They say the earth was made before the six-days' creation. (Look out, Brother McCaleb!) The Book says: "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth." They say the six days were long periods of time. Why wish to think so? To shorten God's arm and avoid difficulties? What did the trees do without sunshine? Was the Sabbath also a long period of time?

The word "days" in figurative and prophetic language may mean long and indefinite periods of time; but this account is historic, not prophetic. They say the Old Testament account of the flood is fiction, but the New Testament credits it; they say the whale could not have swallowed Jonah, but Jesus says it did. Shall we deny Christ? The Old Testament and the New Testament must fall together. If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they hear him that rose from the dead; if they were punished who rejected him who spoke on earth, much more shall not we escape if we reject him who speaks from heaven, and his word.

They say some of Paul's writings were uninspired. Paul gave his judgment on the subject of marriage, because of "the present distress." On this very point Jesus says: "All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given." An inspired command must apply to all alike; "but some have not this gift" of continence, so it was "better to marry than to burn." God could give no inspired command at this point, but all other passages are inspired, so far as we know. "If it were not so, I would have told you." It is well that God allowed Paul to give this temporary "judgment" to those who could receive it. At other points Paul says: "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." Yet they blasphemously say: "Paul was a crusty old bachelor."

A recent criticism is that Jesus did not know all things; he did not know when he was coming again. It is not so much a question of how much Jesus and his apostles knew, but whether what they did know and say was true and all-sufficient. If higher critics know more, it is superfluous. But Jesus had the Spirit without measure and needed not that any one should tell him anything. He did not need to know the day of his coming, and neither do we. He confesses ignorance at no vital point. "Beware of dogs!"

PAUL HAYS.

Easton, Cal.

Do you need any first-class printing? We are prepared to please you and save you money on letter heads, bill-heads, envelopes, blank books, or anything you may need. Engraved and embossed work receives special attention.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMANN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Pittsburgh.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THROUGH all the fog of advertising, and claims of rival manufacturers, it can be plainly seen that Pure White Lead is claimed to be the base or principal pigment of all the Paints or mixtures of Zinc, Whiting and Barytes which are represented to be better (?) than White Lead.

FREE For Colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

General News.

Since April 26, 1900, gold exports from New York have amounted to ten million dollars.

Brigadier General Otis has been promoted to be major general to succeed General Merritt, who retires on June 16, 1900.

Nearly all the rope used by the United States Navy is manufactured in the government ropewalk, at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Reports from the war in South Africa are all favorable to the success of the British, and, many think, betoken to the early end of the war.

During the present century four hundred human lives, one hundred and twenty-five million dollars, and two hundred ships have been lost in fruitless efforts to find the North Pole.

W. S. Taylor, recent claimant for the governorship of Kentucky, announces that he will make the race again this fall on an anti-Goebel and anti-Goebel election law platform.

The United States transport Hancock, which left San Francisco on April 17, 1900, with the United States Philippine Commission on board, arrived at Hongkong on May 30, 1900.

Logs cut on timber lands leased from the Government of Ontario must henceforth be manufactured in that province. In consequence, many Michigan lumber mills are being moved to Canada.

Seymour, Johnson & Co., stock, cotton, and grain brokers, No. 71 Broadway, New York, announced their suspension on the New York Stock Exchange, the Cotton Exchange, and the Chicago Board of Trade.

The State Department has issued over three thousand passports to European travelers for the twenty-eight days in May. It is said that the climax has been reached, and from this point on the issues will diminish.

The Division of Customs and Insular Affairs of the War Department has given out the statement that the average annual salary per man in the United States customs service is one thousand two hundred and five dollars.

Gen. Wade Hampton was too feeble to attend the Confederate reunion, at Louisville, Ky. He is now confined to his home. General Hampton has broken much recently. His eighty-first birthday was passed some months ago.

The issuance of a bench warrant for the arrest of W. S. Taylor, former Governor of Kentucky, was the first official notice that an indictment had been returned naming Mr. Taylor as an accessory to the murder of William Goebel.

The Confederate Veterans met last week in Louisville, Ky. The attendance of both veterans and visitors was large and enthusiastic. General Gordon was again elected commander in chief by a unanimous vote.

A wind and electrical storm is reported at Mineral Wells, Tex. General property in the farming sections suffered severely. Many farms were swept clean. The academy at Missy Grove was destroyed by the wind. No persons are reported hurt.

The peach season is just opening in South Georgia. Tifton, the junction point of the Plant System and the Georgia Southern and Florida, made the first shipment to New York on May 21, 1900, and Sylvester, Ga., made the second shipment the next day.

During the first two weeks of July, next, the Shah of Persia is to make a tour through England and Scotland, visiting London, Oxford, Birmingham, Liverpool, Glasgow, and Edinburgh. For a part of the time he will be the guest of the Queen, at Buckingham Palace.

Assistant Superintendent Otto H. Tittmann, of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, has been commissioned to trace the Alaskan boundary line established by the modus vivendi of October, 1899, between the British Government and the United States.

Riots and bloodshed are of daily occurrence in St. Louis, the result of the war between the transit company and its employees. The police commissioners have ordered the sheriff to enroll two thousand five hundred additional special deputies, for the purpose of aiding the police department in preserving peace and order.

The West Virginia Pulp and Paper Mill, of Covington, Va., an antitrust mill, has begun making paper and postal cards. The mill has just been completed at a cost of three million dollars, and is now the largest plant in the country, employing twelve hundred persons. Over three hundred tons of paper will be shipped daily.

The Board of Health of San Francisco, Cal., has quarantined Chinatown, and that section of the city is now surrounded by a cordon of police, who refuse to allow any one to pass in or out of the district unless he is provided with a proper permit. The quarantine order also includes the street cars, which are not allowed to pass through the district.

The Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, telegraphs that good rains have fallen in Mysore, and that scattered showers have fallen elsewhere. The cholera in many parts of Bombay and Rajpootana has not abated, is causing much mortality, and impedes the relief work. There are now five million seven hundred and thirty thousand persons in receipt of relief.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the claims of Admiral Dewey and his sailors sustains the decision of the Court of Claims. The original claims were about four hundred thousand dollars. The Court of Claims reduced it to two hundred thousand dollars. The Admiral's personal claim is reduced from about twenty thousand dollars to about ten thousand dollars.

The Federal Government has just awarded a contract to a Massachusetts firm for ten thousand white marble headstones, at one dollar and twenty-eight cents each. These stones are to be used to mark the graves of the United States soldiers and marines, and will be distributed, upon application of Grand Army posts or of relatives of those who lie in unmarked graves, upon application to the War Department.

Ernest Kruger, a compositor employed in a printing office in Leipzig, Germany, has just completed his fiftieth year of service, and has been occupied in setting type for one book nearly all that time. The book is "Grimm's German Dictionary," and the first batch of manuscript was turned over to the compositor in 1851. Thus far thirty-two thousand pages have been printed, and the work is not yet half done.

THE BEST PLACE

to buy your Suit, Hat, and Shirt
for yourself and the boys is

Abernathy, Langham & Shook,

205-207 PUBLIC SQUARE.

SUCCESSORS TO W. A. LANNOM.

Figures from the pension rolls show that the veterans of the Civil War are dying at the rate of about 2½ per cent per annum. Commissioner Evans estimates that the average age of the veterans who still survive is about fifty-nine years. The last survivor of the War of 1812 died last summer, seventy-five years after the close of that war. At the same rate, there will probably be a few survivors of the Civil War still living in 1940.

Messrs. Fischer, Wessels, and Wolmarans, who are representing the South African republics in this country, will visit a number of the large cities before returning to their own country. The envoys regret exceedingly that they cannot meet the great numbers of people who are anxious to greet them as they would like to do. They express themselves as very grateful for the many expressions of sympathy heard upon all sides for the cause that is so dear to them, and they trust the fact that they cannot visit all who wish them to do so will in no way interfere with the full and free expression of sympathy and good will on their part.

The following proclamation by General Roberts is being distributed in the conquered territory in South Africa: "The troops of the Queen are now passing through the Transvaal. Her Majesty does not war upon individuals, but, on the contrary, she is anxious to spare them, so far as possible, the horrors of war. The quarrel which England has with the Government, and not the people, of the Transvaal. Provided they remain neutral, no attempt will be made to interfere with persons living near the line of march. Every possible protection will be given them. Any of their property which it may be necessary to take will be paid for. But, on the other hand, those thus allowed to remain near the line of march must respect and maintain neutrality. The residents of any locality will be held responsible, in both their persons and property, for any damage done to the railway or telegraph, or for violence done to any member of the British forces in the vicinity of their homes."

The Weather Bureau's weekly summary of crop conditions says: "The drought in the Dakotas and Minnesota has become most serious. Rain is also needed in portions of the Middle Atlantic and Central Gulf States. Complaints of cool nights continue from the East Gulf States and Southern Atlantic States. The general condition of corn in the principal corn States is better. Reports of damage by worms to corn in the Middle and South Atlantic States and Central Gulf States and in Kansas is reported. Winter wheat is ripening as far north as North Carolina, Tennessee, and Oklahoma, and harvesting has begun in the southern portion of the Gulf States. The reports generally indicate that wheat is heading short in Atlantic States. The northern portions of the spring wheat region have experienced very unfavorable conditions. Over the southeastern portions the crop has made satisfactory progress. Oats are progressing well in the Southern States, and are yielding well. In the Middle Atlantic States, Ohio Valley, and Tennessee the crop has suffered much from drought, and the outlook is not favorable. While cotton continues to be backward, there is a general improvement in its condition over the eastern and western portions, the least favorable reports coming from the central portion. All sections, however, continue to report the unfavorable effects of cool nights. The bulk of the tobacco crop has been planted in North Carolina, and a considerable portion has been planted in Kentucky. Planting continues in the Ohio Valley and Middle Atlantic States. Fruit reports are encouraging."

Asheville, N. C.

Few regions have been more richly endowed by nature than that famous section of Western North Carolina, poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." It has a climate so dry and health giving that it has become known the world over as a natural sanitarium for the cure of all troubles of a pulmonary or bronchial nature.

Asheville, the center of this beautiful mountain-hemmed plateau, is the highest city east of Denver, Col., and is a busy, thriving place of twelve thousand inhabitants, with all the modernisms of city life. The city lies just at the point where the beautiful French Broad and Swannanoa Rivers join their crystal waters.

Within the city or in its suburbs many people of wealth have built beautiful and expensive homes, the most notable among them being the chateau of Mr. George W. Vanderbilt, which, with its great estate, has cost upward of four million dollars.

Asheville is an all-the-year resort, for the great mountains protect it in the winter from the cold winds, and its summer climate is made delightful because of its altitude.

For descriptive matter of Asheville and vicinity, call on any Southern Railway agent, or write Mr. C. A. Benschoter, A. G. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn.

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and
$2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE
to Fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. R. H. KLINE, L.D.,
931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

YOU MAKE $5.00 A DAY EASY
Gold, Silver, Nickel and Metal Plating.
At home or traveling, taking orders, using, selling
Prof. Gray's Electrolytic Plating Solution.
Jewelry, Tableware, Toys, all metal goods. NO EXPERIENCE. Heavy plate.
Modern methods. No tools. We do plating, make outfits, all sizes. Complete, all tools, lathes, materials, etc., ready to go. THE ROYAL, new dipping process, quick, easy. We teach you the art, furnish secrets, formulas free. Write today. Pamphlet, samples, etc. FREE.
D. GRAY & CO., Plating Works, CINCINNATI, O.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Church News.

KENTUCKY.

Calhoun, May 28.—Evangelist J. V. Updike, with Prof. H. A. Easton as leader of congregational singing, has just closed a meeting of eleven days with the church of Christ, at this place, with twenty-four conversions. He is certainly a grand and good man, and preaches the word in all of its simplicity, purity, and power. If his time had not been limited here, the results would surely have been much greater. The night his meeting closed the sheriff of the county went to his room and requested him to return to the church and take his confession and baptize him. This was done. The sheriff had been a life-long Methodist. If people will give Brother Updike a candid hearing, they will be convinced, convicted, and converted. The growth of the church of Christ here has been phenomenal. A few years ago there were but three Christians in Calhoun. The congregation now numbers about one hundred. It owns the best house of worship in the town, a brick structure, costing about five thousand dollars, and which is wholly paid for. All of this has been accomplished without a regular preacher. The Sunday school is one of unusual interest.

W. B. N.

TENNESSEE.

Hornbeak, May 29.—Brother John R. Williams began a meeting at Obion, Tenn., on the second Lord's day in May, which continued ten days. The visible results as to additions were not what we hoped for (only one baptism), but the seed of the kingdom was sown, and, we trust, into good ground. The results, in reality, we may never know, unless, perhaps, in the world to come all will be made known. The church seemed to be somewhat encouraged to greater efforts. We can but hope that they may "put on the whole armor of God," that they may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. G. D. SMITH.

Field Gleanings.

In the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, appears an article from Brother Orsburn and Brother Butler in reply to my criticism of Brother Butler, with reference to the contribution.

I consider Brother Butler an able man, and he is usually in the right, but I am quite sure that he is far wrong with reference to the contribution. I suggest that either Brother Lipscomb or Brother Sewell write an article on the subject and make it as exhaustive as space will admit, for I am sure that all are and will be interested in it. I consider it at the very foundation of all church work, hence the importance of the subject.

Brother Butler says that he finds where the disciples were encouraged to give to the poor directly, and seems to think that would destroy the idea of the deacons making a distribution for them. He says the deacons were to direct the gifts for the poor—that is, to see that it was evenly distributed—but beyond that he cannot see that they had anything to do with it. I do not pretend to say that the deacons went out and gathered up contributions for the poor—that was the work of each individual disciple—but they were to distribute it, that there be an equality.

The apostles had done that work for quite a while, but on account of their ministry they could not attend to it as it should be done; hence, when the Grecians began to murmur, on account of this neglect, the apostles asked that seven good men be selected for that work, while the apostles would give themselves to prayer and the ministry of the word.

But to the point. Where were the means they were expected to use in relieving the poor? Was the contribution in the possession of each individual disciple or had it been laid by in store? I believe that it had been brought together in one place and placed under the care of the apostles for them to direct it; while Brother Butler's position would be that each individual disciple had it in his own possession and would give it direct to the needy, while the deacons selected by the multitude would only direct where it should be given by each individual Christian.

"To the law and the testimony!" I now invite your attention to Acts 4: 34-37: "Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet."

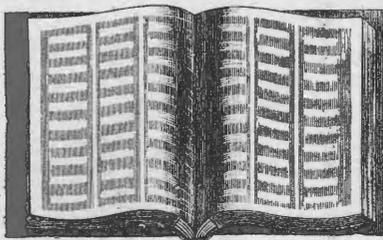

In Acts 5 we learn that Ananias sold land and kept back part of the price, and Peter rebuked him for lying about it, and asked if it was not his own before selling and if the money was not his own after selling, and said he had lied to the Holy Spirit in keeping back a part.

From these plain statements we learn, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that gifts were brought together into one place and placed under the direction of those in authority, and that, too, even when the poor were all around them and when distribution was to be made to them. This gave rise to the selection of men whose business it should be to direct that work, hence deacons and their work. They were also helpers in other things, but the special work for which they were selected was that of distributing the money and other things to those who were worthy and needed it.

Many years after this, as revealed in 1 Cor. 16: 1-4, distribution was to be made to the saints of another country, and Paul wrote to the Christians, as follows: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." You will please note carefully this expression: "Lay by him." Where? Now note as to place: "In store." Not scattered around among the disciples, but in store. Surely the disciples of Christ would understand the apostle to speak of a gathering up.

If each individual Christian should keep his own means, I see no reason for the exhortation; for unless they were wasteful, they would have had it by themselves when he came. To me, this is clear. "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages."

Let the people of God lay by in store and through the church of God make their distribution, and then people will begin to see some necessity for the church of the living God. When the people of God are thoroughly taught on this subject the church will become more active in the care of the poor and the support of those who

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Nashville, Tenn.

labor with them in word and doctrine. May God help us all to study his word.
Denton, Tex. J. H. LAWSON.

Quick and Convenient Schedules East via Southern Railway.

Passengers from Middle and West Tennessee points will find the Southern Railway to be the most convenient and desirable route to all Eastern cities. Double daily service is afforded from Nashville on following schedule: Leave Nashville at 9:30 P.M., arrive at Washington on second morning at 6:42 A.M.; Baltimore, 8 A.M.; Philadelphia, 10:15 A.M.; New York, 12:43 P.M. This train is operated via Chattanooga and Asheville, and passes through that beautiful and scenic portion of North Carolina poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." Elegant Pullman drawing-room sleeping car is operated from Nashville to New York without change, and dining car service is afforded east of Salisbury. Another train leaves Nashville at 3:30 P.M., connecting at Chattanooga with train leaving Chattanooga at 10 P.M., arriving at Washington at 8:50 P.M.; Baltimore, 11:35 P.M.; Philadelphia, 2:56 A.M.; and New York, 6:23 A.M., and carries Pullman sleeping car and day coaches from Chattanooga to Salisbury, and from Salisbury to New York. For further information, apply to your nearest ticket agent.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillabero, O.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
GLENCLIFF, TENN.

CAPABLE WOMAN WANTED for a permanent position, $20 per month and all expenses. Experience unnecessary. CLARK & CO., 234 S. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

JESSE FRENCH

PIANO & ORGAN CO.

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN

PIANOS & ORGANS

WE MANUFACTURE Starr, Jesse French, and Richmond Pianos,

AND HAVE EXCLUSIVE SALE FOR Steinway and Knabe Pianos, and Jesse French and Packard Organs.

PIANOS FOR RENT.

240 & 242 N. Summer Street, NASHVILLE, - TENNESSEE

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner
Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Laramore," edited by his old friend and pupil, F. D. Srygley, will be sure to be a popular book and do great good. Send in your orders now, and books will be sent you as soon as ready for delivery.

Letter heads, note heads, billheads, statements, envelopes, etc., made by us in best style and on good material at prices that are right. Write to us for samples and prices.

"Life was Lent for Noble Deeds."

"Life was lent for noble deeds only" is the true maxim which works out the principles of daily life. It is the motto of every true heart and noble life that no human being lives chiefly for his own selfish good. It is the law of our entire being that we promote our own real happiness in the exact proportion we contribute to the comfort and happiness of others.

God has written upon the mighty king of day, that warms and cheers the entire universe; upon the lily of the field, that perfumes the atmosphere; upon all objects of nature that have been created for the pleasure of mankind. He has written that no man was created chiefly for himself. The experience of those who live only for themselves, all oblivious to the welfare of others, is nothing worthy the name of happiness.

Many of us to-day have just taken upon us the duties and responsibilities of active life, have just begun our journey, and it is of the utmost importance that we make the journey of life a successful one. Life, with its thousand voices of reproof and exultation, wailing and exalting, is demanding our attention. "Upward and onward" should be our motto, and "vigilance" our watchword. God has given existence, with full power and grand opportunities to improve it and be happy; therefore, we should live for something worthy of life and its opportunities for noble deeds and active achievements. God has placed us in the world to make the world better, to elevate it to higher planes of enjoyment and progress, and to make the hearts of our associates brighter and happier by devoting to them our best influences, thoughts, and activities. This world is a stage, we are the actors, and the whole universe constitutes the spectators. Our words are transmitted in echoes that will never cease. We all leave a history and an influence. Our influence, whether good or bad, lives after us, and is not buried with this earthly body of ours.

Note the examples good men have set and the golden words they have uttered. They pass into the hearts and lives of their successors, cheer them on the road of life, often comfort them in their last hour, speak to them from the grave, and beckon them on in the paths which they have trod. Nobility of character lives from age to age, and is constantly tending to reproduce its like. Since we all possess that personal influence and since our words and actions leave a well-nigh indelible trace, it is our duty to make them as potential for good as is possible. It is our duty to hold the royal gifts of the soul so they may be gladness to some, music to others, and life to all; and to make that power we possess the breath of other men's joys, to scatter smiles and sunshine where only sorrow and shadows reign, and to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary pilgrims must tread with a gladness which they cannot create for themselves, but long for and appreciate.

Little kindnesses are centers of influence over our fellow-creatures which drive away sadness, cheer up the heart, and make the weighed-down spirit glad. Among little kindnesses kind words are the most precious. They fall gently upon the woeful heart, refresh its withered tendrils, and soothe its woes, as the breath of the dew upon the tender plant. They are lovely flowers of earthly existence, jewels beyond price, and powerful to heal the wounded heart.

We should leave behind us monuments of virtue which the storms of time cannot destroy, by doing noble deeds; we should "write our names in kindness, love, and mercy upon the hearts of thousands we come in contact with, year by year," and by so doing our names will be as legible on the hearts of those we leave behind as the stars on the brow of the evening. We should not forget that there is an immortal part of our being. God did not create us to live and die as the inferior animals, but we were born for a higher and nobler state, and O what a sad misfortune to live and die and not leave the world any better for having lived in it! We cannot live in a world like this, where our lives and hearts are so overlapped, without a good degree of benevolence; and in a spiritual sense we know that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Good deeds double, and the larger half comes back to the donor. How hard we should strive to imitate the words of the poet:

Do noble things, not dream them all day long;
And so make life, death, and that vast forever
One grand sweet song!

We should consider that we were not made for self alone, but for society, mankind, and for God. By acts of benevolence beautiful lives have blossomed out of the darkest places, as pure white lilies have blossomed by the slimy, stagnant waters of the deserted mill pond, while we so often, through acts of carelessness, leave the alone in the dark, chilly atmosphere, where it budded and never bloomed.

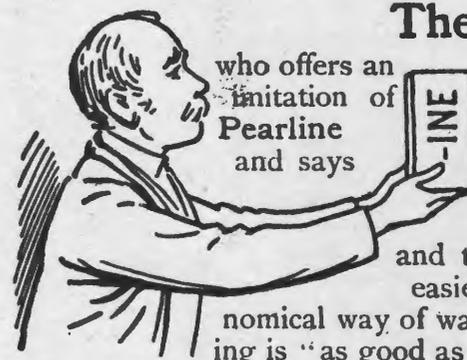

We should ever be ready to imitate the good Samaritan of old. Answer these questions: How are you spending your life? Are you living as God has ordained you should? Are you living as becomes a mortal being? Are you doing unto others the same that you would have them do to you? Are you striving to make the most of life and its possibilities? If not, be warned in time. When life is nearly ended you will wonder at your ac-

The fond mother dreams great dreams of baby's future as she holds the sleeping little one in her arms. But the dreams will never come true unless she has given him a strong body and a healthy mind. Children die in hosts, or live to struggle through life feeble of body and dull of mind because the mother was unfit physically and mentally for motherhood. Women who use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription endow their children with strong bodies and bright minds. It is every mother's duty to give her child the advantages of a healthy body and mind. A weak or sickly woman cannot do this. "Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Mrs. Orrin Stiles, of Downing, Dunn Co., Wis., writes: "I have been intending to write to you ever since my baby was born in regard to what your 'Favorite Prescription' has done for me. I cannot praise it enough, for I have not been as well for five years as I now am. In July last I had a baby boy, weight 11 pounds, and I was only sick a short time, and since I got up have not had one sick day. I have not had any womb trouble since I got up. I was not only surprised myself but all of my friends here are surprised to see me so well."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

The Grocer

it's "the same as," "as good as," etc., gives you a poor imitation of the truth. To get a little more profit he's willing to give you all the dissatisfaction and the risk. If you want an easier, less wearing, more economical way of washing than with soap, nothing is "as good as" Pearline. Twenty years of use have proved what it will do to save work—and what it won't do in the way of harm.

Don't argue the matter—use Pearline.

tions, sigh for the days of youth, and pause with long and loud lamentation over the grave of "what might have been."

It is a solemn, almost awful, thought for each individual that his influence has a beginning here which will never end throughout all time. What is done has already blended itself with the entire universe, and will work there for good or evil for all ages. The life of each individual is as the source of a stream, whose small beginning is indeed plain at first, but whose course and destination, as it winds through the expanse of infinite years, only the all-seeing God can perceive.

The influence of man, properly directed, would produce such results as would lead him in paths of benevolence and nobleness, cause him to wield a beneficent influence upon his fellow-creatures, and to leave a history that the brotherhood of humankind might see and take heart again.

Those who are successful in life are those who have a purpose in mind of accomplishing something in life to benefit man, and by so doing purchase a renown that will live after them and direct all followers to noble pursuits.

The acts of benevolence of each individual prove to him stepping-stones to success and attract a following of friends and admirers around him, such as is calculated to make life to him a pleasant journey and leave an impress upon the sands of time that will be to history what the oasis is to the desert.

We should so conduct ourselves in this earthly kingdom that when in the evening of life we are summoned to make our departure for an unseen world we will not go as the felon to his execution, but that we may see the golden light of heaven streaming down through the gathering mist of death, and have a blessed entrance into that heavenly home, where we can hear the welcome, "Well done," spoken to us by a soul redeemed and purified.

Fulton, Ky. (Mrs.) W. T. BOAZ.

Summer Resorts.

Many delightful summer resorts are situated on and reached via Southern Railway. Whether one desires the seaside or the mountain, the fashionable hotels or country homes, they can be reached via this magnificent highway of travel.

Asheville, N. C.; Hot Springs, N. C.; Hale Springs, Tenn.; Roan Mountain, Tenn.; and the mountain resorts of East Tennessee and Western North Carolina—"The Land of the Sky;" Tate Springs, Tenn.; Oliver Springs, Tenn.; Lookout Mountain, Tenn.; Monte Sano, Huntsville, Ala.; Lithia Springs, Ga.; and various Virginia springs; also the seashore resorts, are reached by the Southern Railway on convenient schedules and at very low rates.

The Southern Railway has issued a handsome folder, entitled, "Summer Homes and Resorts," descriptive of nearly one thousand summer resorts, hotels, and boarding houses, including information regarding rates for board at the different places.

Write to C. A. Benschoter, A. G. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn., for a copy of this folder.

There is no Question but that the originators of Hood's Sarsaparilla have hit upon a happy secret in the peculiar combination, proportion, and process of Hood's Sarsaparilla, for they have a medicine that cures a wide range of diseases. Their claim that this fact is due to the power of Hood's Sarsaparilla to eradicate the germs of disease from the blood and at the same time tone up and strengthen the general system through enriched and vitalized blood seems entirely reasonable. We heartily recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as a perfectly honest and reliable remedy, and we advise all who go to purchase it to be sure that they get Hood's, and not some cheap and worthless substitute.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

DIMPLES
on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes preached at Hoyle, O. T., on a recent Lord's day.

Brother A. C. Crenshaw, of Harper, has recently been on a tour through Oklahoma. He will go there for a tent meeting in July.

Brother O. M. Thomason is yet in Oklahoma, preaching at a number of points.

I spent a week at Minco, I. T., preaching and attending the closing exercises of El Meta Christian College. Notwithstanding the difficulties that have had to be overcome, the school has again demonstrated its capacity and its ability to succeed. Every department of the work shows the faculty has labored hard, and succeeded. There will be some changes in teachers this coming year. Of course, Miss Chestnut will continue at the helm. The changes will be in the music department principally. Miss Olive Baird, of Texas, will continue in the primary department. She has shown herself a very efficient teacher in that department—honorable, honest, conscientious, active—and is a faithful Christian girl. The school is deserving in general.

My enjoyment of the exercises was much marred by the very sad news of the illness and finally the death of my dear mother, at Lancaster, Ky. That mother that tenderly cared for me in infancy and helped to support me in childhood, and whose love followed me everywhere—it was sad for me to be so far away as not to be able to be with her in her last hours. I have been enabled, for most of my life, to appreciate a mother's love, care, and devotion, but I now possibly more fully realize the worth of it. She was sixty-six years of age at her last birthday—October 6, 1899. She was born, reared, lived, and died in Garrard County, Ky. She leaves a husband, two daughters, four sons, and more than a score of grandchildren, besides brothers, sisters, and friends, to deeply mourn their loss of so true and tried a friend. Many are the dark shadows that hover over our pathway in the loss of such dear ones, but, thanks to God, there is a brighter world than this. Mother's love and Christian character will yet be with us in its wonderful influence. We can trust the Father of all mercies in this hour of bereavement. I am glad that we can.

My attention was recently called to Ingersoll's creed. He speaks of "loving justice, right, and mercy," yet denies the very source of "justice, right, and mercy." Again, he speaks of "loving liberty, and waging relentless war against slavery of all forms," while all the time serving and wanting others to continue to serve the tyrant of tyrants—Satan. In fact, every thought in it, while good, is attributed to the wrong source. The Savior's teaching would bring about what is expressed in it—in fact, has brought it about, or we would not have it to-day.

I am a friend to the young man, and am not a pessimist, yet some things are self-evident facts. To illustrate: Recently, I was informed that in a town of about four hundred inhabitants there were not more than three or four young men that did not gamble; besides this, a very large majority of the older ones are engaged in the same practice. In another town of six hundred population there are probably not a half dozen young men that do not play cards—the starting point of much of the gambling. In another town of five thousand inhabitants there are a very few decent young men in it. These are only samples of what many others are. This is certainly a very sad state of affairs, but what is the cause and what is the remedy? Let us think seriously about the matter. Can we change this condition? Are we doing our part toward changing it? Some are trying; others are not. Preachers must cry out against all sin, and give the remedy for it. Too many look upon sin as a very light matter, and fail to keep the remedy for sin prominently before the people. D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

Virginia Jottings.

I see in the Primitive Christian of May 15, 1900, that J. H. D. Tomson offers Luke 22: 46 as evidence that standing on the feet in prayer as an attitude taken for prayer is authorized by Christ. Luke 22: 45, 46 reads as follows: "And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." I do not remember ever to have seen this scripture offered by any one before to prove that standing on the feet was authorized by Christ as an attitude to be taken for prayer. When the disciples were lying down asleep, as a matter of course, they would have to rise, even if they knelt and prayed. There is certainly nothing in verse 46 to teach us to stand upon our feet to offer prayer, and, for one, I am surprised at Brother Tomson for offering that as an argument in favor of a custom, which is without any authority, either in the Old Testament or New Testament Scriptures. When Jesus appeared to Saul, on the way to Damascus, and Saul had fallen to the earth, he said: "But rise, and stand upon thy feet." So, if Christ had wanted people to stand upon their feet, he would have said so. This he never said, and he never practiced along that line. While they were asleep they could neither kneel nor stand upon their feet, and would have to "rise" for either one. The truth is, there is nothing in that verse to teach attitude for prayer. Elsewhere, however, both in the Old Testament and New Testament Scriptures, there is abundance of proof in favor of kneeling before the Lord our Maker. Alas, how easy it is for the wish to become the father of a thought! All can pray in any position, whether walking or riding, lying down or standing upon the feet, nailed to a cross or stretched upon a sick bed, without taking any attitude for it, under certain circumstances; but when an attitude case be taken, or is taken, for prayer, let the party kneel down, and not only do the Scriptures sustain such a one, but the attitude is unchallenged outside of the Scriptures. The poets and all others agree that it is right. It is not in doubt, and is infallibly safe. Such is not the case when any stand upon the feet for the purpose of praying to the Almighty Father. "Stand up and

No. 606—Canopy-Top Surrey, with side curtains, fenders, lamps, storm apron, sun shade and pole or shafts. Price, $63. As good as sells for $36 more.

nation and guarantee everything. Send for our large illustrated Catalogue before buying. IT'S FREE.

Don't Take Any Chances on an inferior vehicle or harness. Your life and that of your family depends upon their quality and reliability. You can't tell very much about the quality of a vehicle by simply looking at it. The paint and varnish effectually hides the quality of material. Vehicles must be bought largely on faith—faith in the honesty of the manufacturer.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have been selling vehicles and harness direct to consumers for twenty-seven years. In fact we are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. These facts speak volumes for the quality of our goods and our method of doing business. You take no chances; we ship our vehicles and harness anywhere for examination and guarantee everything. Send for our large illustrated Catalogue before buying. IT'S FREE.

No. 75—Single collar and harness, with nickel trimmings. Price, $14. Good as usually sells for $20.

Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., W. B. PRATT, Secretary, Elkhart, Indiana.

Letters and Sermons of

T. B. Larimore

Edited by F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

Price $1.50

bless the Lord," and kneel or bow down in prayer, is in strict harmony with the Bible, with the poets, and with the very things themselves, and is also admitted to be right by all praying and thanksgiving people.

It seems to take a long time for firing to cease along the line of the debate between J. N. Hall and F. D. Srygley. Hall will not publish that letter, it seems. Please publish it, Mr. Hall. J. T. SHOWALTER. Snowville, Va.

"The Land of the Sky."

In Western North Carolina, between the Blue Ridge on the east and the Alleghenies on the west, in the beautiful valley of the French Broad, two thousand feet above the sea, lies Asheville, beautiful, picturesque, and world-famed as one of the most pleasant resorts in America. It is a land of bright skies and incomparable climate, whose praises have been sung by poets and whose beauties of stream, valley, and mountain height have furnished subject and inspiration for the painter's brush. This is truly "The Land of the Sky," and there is perhaps no more beautiful region on the continent to attract pleasure tourists or health seekers. Convenient schedules and very low rates to Asheville, via Southern Railway.

1850 1900
John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS
—OF—
EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.
TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES
FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.
HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES.
Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

BLMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chatsnooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

● Shackleford & Shackleford, ●
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY
F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market Street,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 24.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JUNE 14, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Words of Cheer and Hope.....	370
A Tour Around the Globe. No. 32.....	371
More on 1 John 2.....	372
Miscellany.....	373
The Modern Pastor System.....	374
Gleanings.....	374
Home Reading.....	375
The New Birth.....	376
Faithfulness.....	376
Grounds of Christian Union.....	377
Obituaries.....	378
Fayetteville or Jerusalem—Which?.....	379
Church News.....	380
The Mormon-Christian War.....	380
A Possible Danger.....	381
Sarah Freeman Farmer.....	382
The Work at Mount Pleasant.....	382
"Mode of Baptism".....	383
Help the Homeless.....	384

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

I forward by the same mail with the matter for this page, to the Gospel Advocate for publication, another article from Brother Walling and an article from Brother Cawthon on the proposition that "the same process which makes a man a Christian adds him to the one body—the church." I feel disinclined to offer any comments on what either one of these brethren say; but it seems to be necessary, by way of guarding against a misunderstanding, to say that if anything I said in the short comment on a former article from Brother Walling was in the least degree unkind or discourteous toward him, I am very sorry for it, and I beg him to forgive me. I did not mean to be flippant or frivolous, nor was it my intention to make the impression that the distinction he draws is unworthy of consideration. All I meant was that the distinction he makes had not occurred to me when I affirmed that "the same process which makes a man a Christian adds him to the one body—the church." What I affirmed and still affirm is that a man becomes a Christian and a member of the church by being born again; a man cannot be born again without being baptized; a man cannot be baptized without being both buried and raised up. When Brother Walling makes two processes out of baptism, which I have all the while regarded as only part of one process, he does not join issue with the proposition I affirmed and still affirm in the sense in which I have repeatedly defined the terms of that proposition. Even if all that he claims is true, it is still true that "the same process which makes a man a Christian adds him to the one body—the church," in the sense I understood and used the terms of that proposition.

A practical question which frequently arises is stated by one whose name is withheld by request, as follows:

"If a Christian is thrown into a community where there is a good, earnest church, with most members striving to do their duty, and it is known by such a member that the elders are not godly men, is it the duty of such a member to unite with the church? May he not, without any public act to bring himself under the oversight of such an eldership, meet with the members and do his Christian duty? Please give a Bible answer to the above, as it is asked by one who wants to know his duty."

Every Christian becomes a member of the church when he becomes a Christian. That which makes him a Christian constitutes him a member of the church. No one can be a Christian and not be a member of all the church and the only church there is in the New Testament. Once a man becomes a member of the church, he remains a member of it as long as he continues to be a Christian. The only way to cease to be a member of the church is to cease to be a Christian. One who is a member of the church at all is a member of it wherever he lives and everywhere he goes. He does not have to unite with the church at all; he is already united with it wherever he is and everywhere he goes. He united with the church when he became a Christian, and he will remain united with it as long as he continues to be a Christian. All he has to do is to worship and serve God exactly as Christians worshiped and served him in New Testament times. It is his duty to do this, and nothing else, wherever he is and everywhere he goes. The only public act necessary to bring a man "under the oversight" of an eldership, as much as any Christian can scripturally be under such "oversight," is the public act of becoming a Christian. So soon as a man becomes a Christian, he is as much under "the oversight of the eldership" as any Christian can scripturally be. If he does nothing but what the New Testament teaches, belongs to nothing but the church, and declines to be anything but a Christian, he will be under "the oversight of the eldership" as far as God wants him under such oversight, and no farther, wherever he goes and everywhere he is, without any other "public act." If a Christian knows that the elders where he lives are not godly men, it is a situation greatly to be regretted, of course; but no Christian should neglect or refuse to do anything the New Testament teaches in religious work or worship because the elders or anybody else may chance to be ungodly men.

Brother Malone takes issue with Brother Whitlock as follows:

"MY PROTEST.

"Brother Srygley: In your editorial notice in the Gospel Advocate of May 24, 1900, of my statements in the American Baptist Flag concerning J. H. Whitlock's views of spiritual influence in conversion, you seem to misunderstand me. I said that I had but little, if any, objection to Brother Whitlock's views as defined to me. How, then, did he define himself when talking to me? He said that he believed the light of the gospel necessary to the conversion of the sinner. He then added: 'I believe it just as strong as you or any Missionary Baptist preacher living.' He then went on to say that for that reason he was a Missionary Baptist, and believed the gospel mission plan. I said: 'Then, my brother, you have the wrong proposition; your proposition and your doctrine are incompatible.' This was on Saturday before the second Lord's day in July, last. On that day Brother Whitlock came to Lafayette, Tenn., and preached at 11 A.M. Then he and I drove five miles into the country, where I preached, after which we returned to Lafayette, where Brother Whitlock preached again at night. The whole of that afternoon, while not in church, was spent in talking about the points which he had discussed with F. B. Srygley in Alabama, and points which he expected to discuss with W. H. Carter, at Willette, Tenn. I told him that Missionary Baptists do not believe that the Holy Spirit operates independently of the gospel in the work of conversion, and I said: 'Neither can you prove it.' I then gave him an outline of the human mind, as taught in mental science, and its relation to truth, and urged upon him that he take up the study of mental philosophy, and then psychology, and at the same time to keep his eye on the Bible. Whether he intentionally did it or not, he left the impression on my mind that he would not affirm any more that the Holy Spirit operates in conversion independently of the gospel. But it seems that for some reason he has gone back to his old proposition. Let me say, once for all, I do not indorse his position. (1) It is unscriptural; (2) it is unphilosophical; (3) it is contrary to what Baptists have taught since the days of Charles II., to say nothing of our views farther back. J. N. Hall and J. H. Grimes can speak for themselves; but, since Brother Whitlock has gone back to his old proposition, if any one represents me as indorsing him, it will be against my most earnest protest. I stand upon the constitution of the human mind and its relation to the truth. No religion which undervalues the intellect of man can long command the respect of men; nor can any system of religion which refuses feeling a place in its fundamental conditions claim a living connection with the infinite Sufferer; nor is any act of voluntary obedience, which has not these fundamental conditions as its logical antecedents, acceptable to Him who requires that we shall seek Him with the whole heart. Now, I do hope that you will be kind enough to give this a place in the Gospel Advocate. Fraternally,

A. MALONE.
Franklin, Ky."

Brother Malone says, "once for all," that he does not indorse Brother Whitlock's position. Brother Grimes does indorse it. Very well. If Grimes and Whitlock propose to debate that proposition any more, why not get Brother Malone to debate with them? He is an experienced debater, well supplied with "the recognized authorities" of the Baptist denomination, and no doubt he would make a strong debate. Brother Malone also affirms that the church of the New Testament includes and consists of all Christians, and says "the recognized authorities" in the Baptist denomination have been teaching this for two hundred and fifty years. Brother Hall denies this. If Brother Hall proposes to debate that proposition any further, why not get Brother Malone and "the recognized authorities" in the Baptist denomination to debate with him? Really, it looks like the Baptist debaters in this country will have to debate with each other, or quit the business.

"Brother Srygley: I read with interest Brother Walling's argument, and note the fact that there is no difference between you and Brother Walling. If I understand Brother Walling, he claims that the raising up of the baptized is the act that brings them into the church, and you claim the same thing, and cite for authority John 3: 5. It seems to me that this scripture takes in every thought that Brother Walling sets forth, but three: (1) The blood of Christ makes us alive; (2) that an unbaptized man dies to sin; (3) that we baptize a sinner. I cannot find where the Book says that the blood of Christ makes us alive, neither do I find it anywhere intimated that a sinner is expected or commanded to die to sin, and there is no such idea in the Book as the baptizing of sinners. The Book sets forth all the blessings that are reached by the blood, and the sinner, by the Book, is declared dead. (Eph. 2: 15.) It appears to me unreasonable to demand a dead man to die without first giving him life. It will be admitted by Brother Walling and all others that the ability to die to sin is a spiritual blessing, and all spiritual blessings are given in (not out of) Christ. (Eph. 1: 3.) It will be noted that the persons that Paul requires to die to sin are in (not out of) Christ. (Rom. 6.) I only set this forth as food for the thoughts of the thinking ones. There is no authority in the Book for any one to baptize a sinner. Still, there is no doubt it is done often. By way of illustration, we say that a man is a drunkard so long as he drinks; but when he quits drinking, he certainly ceases getting drunk, hence he is not a drunkard. So, a man is a sinner so long as he practices sin, but when he ceases to sin, he is no longer a sinner. Paul's case is one in point. When he left Jerusalem in search of Christians, to punish he was a sinner; but when he believed upon the Christ and determined to turn from sin, he was no longer a sinner, but a servant of God. Faith in Christ is the work, or service, of God (John 6: 29); repentance also (Acts 17: 30); so with confession and baptism. Then it can be easily seen that when a person comes to baptism properly he is not a sinner, but instead is the servant of God; and his service to God in the obeying, as above, obtains the pardon of all past sins (Rom. 3: 25; Acts 2: 38)—sins committed previous to his beginning the service of God. The foregoing views are, I think, strictly scriptural, and remove the mist (to many) that surrounds your impregnable position, that the things done that make any one a Christian bring him into the church of Christ. The trouble with Brother Walling seems to be the baptizing of a sinner into Christ. This cannot be done; neither can a sinner be baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. There is no authority in the Bible for any such act. We must not lose sight of the fact that it is the man himself that we baptize into Christ, and not his sins, the acts of a life that is behind; his turning to the work, or service, of God. I hope this will remove Brother Walling's trouble, and that he will understand in the future that when he baptizes a believing penitent he is not baptizing a sinner, but that he is baptizing a servant of God, and that he baptizes this servant of God into Christ, that he may be justified by his obedience and receive forgiveness for the sins committed behind his obedience. Let the light (word) shine. (Rom. 3: 21-29.)

"S. I. S. CAWTHON."

"Brother Srygley: Your reply to my article is not altogether satisfactory; therefore I desire to call your attention to some things in regard to it, that we may elicit the truth and come to a clearer understanding of it. You say in the beginning: 'I publish the following communication with pleasure, because it calls attention to a subject that ought to be carefully studied.' From the foregoing, I had reason to believe that you would give the 'communication' something more than a passing notice, but not so. You say: 'When I baptize a man I am as careful to raise him up as I am to bury him, and if from lapse of memory or from any other cause I should leave him in the creek, under the water, I hardly think I would feel that I had baptized him.' Brother, this might possibly be regarded as an argument coming from a 'two-by-four,' but now, seriously, do you think that a man of your caliber should engage in such ridicule on so important a 'subject that ought to be carefully studied?' You say: 'Brother Walling will no doubt agree that the process which makes a man a Christian is to be born again.' Brother Walling has agreed that 'the Bible plainly teaches that whoever enters the body of Christ enters by a birth, yet the Bible plainly teaches that no unclean person can enter the church. Then the cleansing must take place before the birth.' What do you say, Brother Srygley? Answer, please. Here is the vital point—the one to be 'carefully studied.' Brother Walling further agrees that 'none but the cleansed can enter the kingdom of God. God's Holy Spirit will not take up his abode in an unclean heart. No unclean or unsaved man can be built into God's building. Salvation, cleansing, pardon, and remission of sins all take place before one can enter God's kingdom.' What do you say, Brother Srygley? Do you agree to this? If so, where and when does all this take place? 'Therefore, the same "process" that brings one into the remission of sins does not add him to the church.' What do you say, Brother Srygley? 'Since it is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin, the very moment the one dead to sin comes in contact with the blood of Christ he comes into the remission of sins.' What does Brother Srygley say? 'If we can locate the place where one comes into the blood of Christ, we have then located the place where the sinner comes into the remission of sins.' What do you say, Brother Srygley? 'And it follows that the same "process" that brings one into the blood of Christ brings him into the remission of sins.' What does Brother Srygley say? Where does one come into the blood of Christ? We found, in our former article, that Christ's blood was shed in his death, and that one comes into his blood by entering into his death where his blood is. Paul says that one enters his death by a burial into the baptismal tomb. (Rom. 6: 3, 4.) One thus buried enters the death of Christ, and thereby the blood of Christ. Has he obtained the remission of his sins? If not, why not? If he has, is he at this time a citizen in Christ's kingdom? No; a burial has not that action. A birth is necessary to a sonship. You say: 'I do not understand that he is baptized till he is buried and raised up.' Granted; but does not the one antedate the other? Is not this in harmony with God's sequence of things? Has not God, in his creation of all things, so arranged them that they have a similar order to this? For instance, in lighting the earth he created the sun for the day and the moon and stars for the night. How close does the one follow the other in its work! The sun hardly sinks in the West till the stars, one by one, shine out, and so we might follow throughout the entire realm of nature and find the same sequence of things—one thing always antedating the other, and each performing a very important work, even the work God has appointed it. Why should not baptism have this same sequence and each action its important work—the burial to bring one into the blood of Christ, and thereby into the remission of sins; the resurrection to bring one into the body of Christ, which is the church? How close did repentance follow faith in New Testament times? Did not the one follow the other as quick as it was possible for it to be done. Yet faith did antedate repentance. Suppose you take the word 'conversion.' Has it no sequence of things? We know that it has. First, faith; then repentance; then confession; and then baptism. This was all done the same hour of the night; each action had its important work. Faith cleansed the object and motive of life—the heart; repentance cleansed the acts of life—the character; and confession cleansed the believing penitent from the skeptical world. The burial of one thus prepared brings him into the death of Christ, and cleanses from all sin by his blood; the resurrection from the watery grave brings the one now cleansed from all sin into the family of God. You say: 'The process which makes a man a Christian is to be born again.' Granted; but can a man be born of something he has never been planted in? 'First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.' (Mark 4: 28.) So, first, faith; then repentance and confession; then the burial; and after that, the birth. Furthermore, Paul says: 'All our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.' (1 Cor. 10: 1, 2.) Where did the fathers leave the Egyptians? In the sea. Peter says of Noah and the ark: 'Wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us.' (1 Pet. 3: 20, 21.) Where did Noah leave and lose the antediluvian world? In the watery grave. Where do we leave and lose our sins? In the watery grave. It seems that these examples should prove to our minds that no sin ever passed beyond the confines of the tomb, and that the burial must carry with it the cleansing power, which is found only in Christ's blood. Inasmuch as many good and thoughtful brethren have considered it important to reinvestigate the different phases of baptism during the last few years, why should it be thought out of reason, unnecessary, or ridiculous for me to call respectful attention to any lack of proper division and specific application of the subject and its attendant blessings? The first specific blessing in the baptismal act is remission of sins; the second is sonship in God's kingdom, with all its attendant blessings, reception of the heavenly guest, etc. Yet the sinner is positively forbidden to expect the second until he has received the first, or the attendant blessings until he has received the first and second. JESSE D WALLING."

It is a bad sign when a person cannot be contented except in the company of other persons. Every one of us should have resources in himself. No life is complete that is not, in a sense, self-sufficient. We should seek frequent quiet times, apart from the voice of even our nearest friend, when the depths of our own character may be cultivated. Souls thrive in solitude. He is a shallow person who cannot bear to be alone.—Our Young Folks.

The man who confesses his sins grows strong.—Exchange.

Our Contributors.

Words of Cheer and Hope.

[The following is a sermon preached by Granville Lipseomb in the chapel of the Tennessee State Prison, on Sunday, May 27, 1900. The chapel is not large enough to accommodate all the prisoners (numbering 1,050) now at the main prison. There is room for 800, which includes the gallery occupied by the female prisoners. This discourse was reported in the Nashville American of May 28, 1900, but has been revised for this paper.]

The subject was "The Supremacy and Majesty of the Law," from the text: "If I be an offender, or have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die." (Acts 25: 11.)

The speaker said in part:

"This noble sentiment was uttered by St. Paul in making his appeal to the supreme court of Augustus Caesar. It embodies an excellent principle, which should be followed by every man as far as he is amenable to the laws of State or nation. It is a recognition of the great truth that it is the duty of every citizen in upholding the laws of the State to undo, as far as possible, the wrongs which he may have done, and willingly to atone for the same by suffering the penalty prescribed by the law for its violation. Zacchæus, in the day of his acceptance by Christ, said: 'If I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold.' St. Paul was so deeply impressed with this great principle of right and justice he was willing to follow it even unto death. The man who willingly and cheerfully suffers the penalty incurred by his own sins in some manner magnifies the law, and therefore of his own choice shows some good degree of respect for the law—if not as much respect for the law as the law-abiding citizen who enjoys the privileges and liberties of the law, yet much more than the violator of the law who unwillingly suffers its penalties and who seizes all opportunities to escape or thwart the purpose of punishment the law imposes.

"The light in which prisoners view this question mainly makes the difference between a good prisoner and a bad one. The good prisoner is on the road to reformation and in many instances to the privileges of full citizenship where it has been impaired.

"This noble sentiment here expressed by St. Paul should find a wholesome application in some way to every inmate of this institution. Here are many United States prisoners, who have been adjudged as having broken the laws of our Federal Government. Some of these laws have been deemed oppressive. Men, otherwise good citizens, far back in the mountain district of our country, reason this way: 'What sin or harm can there be in a hard-working, honest farmer taking the corn he has produced on his own land to his own sparkling spring in some mountain side, and there distilling, in the solitude of the mountain, his own liquor for the use and benefit of his own family and friends, when our fathers fought for and bequeathed to us these liberties?' This reason seems so patriotic and plausible that where it can be done without detection there are no conscientious scruples about it. But we should always remember every good citizen will obey and uphold the law, whether that law, in his judgment, be a wise measure or not.

"When convicted by proof which has been deemed conclusive by the courts of justice it is the part of a good prisoner to willingly and cheerfully as he may suffer the penalty imposed by the law. If the courts, lower and higher, backed by the laws of our country, say one must suffer one, two, three, or four years, as the case may be, within certain limits, it is the duty of the convict to bear it in as good spirit as possible. In some measure, it is an atonement to the State or United States for the violation of law, and upholds the dignity and majesty of the law that others may take warning; besides, such a course will lead to the benefit of the prisoner, as it leads surely, though sometimes slowly, to reformation and to the privileges of restored citizenship, as far as these can be attained.

"When a prisoner's time is out, in case he has forfeited his privilege of franchise and desires the same restored, it is safe to say it is more likely to be granted where the prisoner has shown a willing spirit to bear the just penalties of violated law, and thus has given proof of his respect for the law.

There are no courts having the power to restore a forfeited franchise but would gladly restore it where the applicant's worthiness is made plain. It is no small commendation to say in truth that a prisoner has proven himself a lover of law and order during his imprisonment. The character of a good citizen can soon be confirmed when once a man is in position to prove it before a whole community.

"For a prisoner to be always besieging the Governor and Board of Pardons for a release does not argue that the applicant is the most worthy of it; but a cheerful willingness to bear, as far as one is able, the penalty imposed by the laws of our Commonwealth, would seem to show some respect for that State or Commonwealth. This is commendable in every man. This is the idea contained in the text: 'If I be an offender, or have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die.'

"There is no case so dark but what it may be helped by looking on the bright side.

"To hope the best is pious, brave, and wise.
And may itself procure what it presumes

"A certain prince once visited a large prison. The authorities, to memorialize his visit, gave him the power to select any prisoner whom he might choose to be pardoned. The prince said that this was an unexpected privilege conferred upon him, and he deemed it his duty to use it as wisely as possible. He took time, and conversed with every prisoner about his case. The prisoners were ignorant of his object. Many were the tales of woe to which he listened. Some claimed to be entirely innocent of the charges against them; some said they were suffering in excess of the crimes laid against them; others said they were the victims of wicked neighbors who had handed themselves to cruelly prosecute them at law.

"In making the round he came to a convict bending over his task, who, when the prince asked about his case, said: 'I am guilty, and richly deserve the punishment I suffer. If I had received what I feel my crimes merit, I would have long since been broken upon the wheel.' In the greatest penitence he confessed his sins. The prince said: 'This is the one I would have pardoned.' It is said of the boy who, being punished for disobeying his mother, leaned his bared shoulders so conveniently to the switch she wielded, that she ceased to whip, and forgave him. The wise man says: 'He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.' (Prov. 28: 13.)

"We have no power to divine what would most easily win the favor of the chief executive of our State to grant pardon, but, upon general principles, those who know him best feel warranted in believing that he would be most inclined to pardon him who was truly penitent and who, though he had violated the law, gave indubitable proof that he yet loved the law, having shown during his imprisonment he upheld the dignity and majesty of the law by willingly bearing, as well as he could, the penalty imposed by the law. This sentiment, we think, would also move the chief executive of the nation if he could be brought to consider it in any particular case.

"This sentiment moved a greater Prince than any earthly potentate. That man who is truly penitent, and at the same time is a lover of right and justice, can move the heart of God himself. Proof of this is shown in the fact that Christ looked with pity and pardon on a poor sinner who rebuked his companion in crime because he showed no 'fear of God,' and was reviling him who had 'done nothing amiss,' and yet bore with them that crucifixion which was 'a due reward' for their deeds. 'Lord,' said the poor sufferer, 'remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.' His views of the kingdom may have been erroneous, but his faith in the Son of God was rewarded by the answer: 'To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.'

"But—alas!—however willing we may be to bear the penalties of violated State and national law, however much we may atone for these by long years of labor and confinement, there is one pardon for which every man must plead. God's law violated demands more than any one can ever pay.

"Could my tears forever flow,
Could my zeal no longer know,
All for sin could not atone;
Thou must save, and thou alone.

"In the eyes of the pure, just, and holy God this world is one great prison house. Every inhabitant is affected by sin, and every accountable person wears the criminal's stripes unless washed in the blood of the Lamb. The psalmist, who himself had been deep in sin and iniquity, says: 'If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? but there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared.'

"God through Christ has provided the way. The penalty is the second death. From it we all must shrink. St. Paul and every other man should refuse to die this death. Pardon through Christ we must have. To all who feel their need of him he extends this precious invitation: 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.'

A Tour Around the Globe. No. 32.

Almost opposite Beauchamp's Tower is The Green, on which so many remarkable people were beheaded. It is now a graveled space, where it is said "grass has never consented to grow since the executions." I paused here and called up some of the scenes that this spot has witnessed. In 1483 Lord Hastings was dragged from the Council Chamber in the White Tower to this spot, and, "without time for confession or repentance, his head was struck off on a log of timber." Here, in 1536, Anne Boleyn walked to her death in the calm of innocence. She was beheaded according to the French manner, by an executioner brought specially from Calais, who was sent for as more expert than any in England. With her own hands she took the coils from her head and gave them to her ladies, then, putting on a little cap of linen to cover her hair withal, she said: "Alas, poor head, in a very brief space thou wilt roll in the dust on the scaffold!" She addressed a few words to the people and to her ladies, then knelt down on both knees in the presence of the yeomen of the guard, a crowd of citizens, the Lord Mayor, the deputies of the guilds, and the aldermen, who were come to see a spectacle which England had never seen before—a head that had worn the crown falling under the sword of the executioner. At one stroke the executioner smote off her head with a sword. Just at that instant a cannon was fired which told London that all was over. Her body, with the head, was buried in a common chest made of elm to put arrows in, at St. Peter's Chapel, near by. Here the aged Countess of Salisbury, the last lineal descendant of the Plantagenets, refused to lay her head upon the block, and rushed round and round the platform, her white hair streaming in the wind, till she was hewn down by the executioner. Here died Queen Katherine Howard, the wife of Henry VIII., and her attendant, Jane Lady Rochford. Some one has described their death as "the most godly and Christian end that ever was heard tell of since the world's creation." Hither Lady Jane Grey, "the queen of nine days," came to her death on February 12, 1553, the same day that her husband was beheaded on Tower Hill. "She had the birth of a princess, the learning of a clerk, the life of a saint, yet the death of a malefactor." What shall I more say? Time would fail me to tell of the many tragedies of this place.

Near by is the Prisoner's Chapel, dedicated to "Saint Peter in chains," and to this we next repair. This chapel has always been used for the prisoners of the Tower. At the door we were met by a man in a queer costume, but his costume did not hinder our interest in the interesting story he had to tell, so we followed him with undivided attention throughout. At the left of the entrance is a memorial tablet, containing the names of thirty-four persons of historical note who were buried in this chapel. Our guide very eloquently gave a brief history of each, as he pointed to where each lies, and finally concluded in these words: "So that here lieth before the high altar two dukes between two queens—to wit, Somerset and Northumberland between Queen Anne and Queen Katherine." I could now, in a measure, to say the least, appreciate the celebrated words of Macaulay: "There is no sadder spot on earth than this little cemetery. Hither have been carried through successive ages by the rude hands of gaolers, without one mourner following, the bleeding relics of men who had been the captains of armies, the leaders of parties, the oracles of senates, and the ornaments of courts."

We now bade farewell to the Tower, to human greatness and jealousies, and made our way to Westminster Abbey. What shall I say? Indeed, what can I say? The very name of it awakens associations and reflections which it is vain to attempt to utter.

"The Abbey stands upon the site of a temple dedicated to Apollo. The first Christian church erected here was founded by Sebert, king of the East Saxons, 610, 'to the honor of God and Saint Peter.' On entering through the door in the South Transept, at Poet's Corner, the magnitude of the great building broke fully upon my mind. With wonder I gazed at clustered columns of gigantic dimensions, with arches springing from them to an amazing height. The Abbey is four hundred and sixteen feet in length, two hundred and three feet wide, one hundred and one feet high, and the height of the towers is two hundred and twenty-five feet.

In Poet's Corner I was surrounded by the memorials of the great and honored worthies of English literature. Here is the tomb of Chaucer, "the father of English poetry;" the tomb of Spenser; a statue of Shakespeare, whose remains are at Stratford-on-Avon; also memorial busts and tablets of "Rare Old Ben Jonson," Samuel Butler, William Davenant, John Milton, Cowley, Dryden, Shadwell, Phillips, Pryor, Gray, Thompson, Goldsmith, Dr. Johnson, Gay, Mason, Rowe, Sheridan, Southey, T. Campbell, Thackeray, Grote, Thirlwall, and near by repose the remains of Macaulay and Charles Dickens.

There are twelve chapels within these spacious walls, and into these we next passed. The moment I entered an awe pervaded my mind which I cannot describe. I realized that I was surrounded by the congregated bones of the great men and women of past time who have filled history with their deeds and "the earth with their renown." Yes, I was now in "the meeting place of the great dead of eight centuries." There are many monuments here in honor of those whose bones lie elsewhere, while a good number have been honored with a grave as well as a marble memento. Kings and queens, princes, lords and ladies of noble extraction and aristocratic rank, are lying in state or celebrated on sculptured walls. Archbishops, prelates, and ecclesiastical dignitaries are lauded in pompous eulogies. Men of genius, philosophers, orators, poets, inventors of useful arts, great masters of science and learning, distinguished philanthropists, and public benefactors—nature's own nobility—have a place among earth's great men.

Joseph Addison's remains lie in one of these chapels, and when walking over them one is forcibly reminded of his reflections, which I was now somewhat able to appreciate. He said: "When I am in a serious mood I often walk by myself in Westminster Abbey. . . . When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tombstone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tomb of the parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow; when I see kings lying by those who deposed them, when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind; when I read the several dates of the tombs of some that died yesterday and some six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be contemporaries and make our appearance together."

In the Chapel of Edward the Confessor is the Coronation Chair, which was to me an object of special interest. In this chair all the kings and queens of England have been crowned since the time of Edward I., 1297. Even Cromwell was installed in it, as Lord Protector of Westminster. The stone under the seat of this chair is the "Fatal Stone of Scone," or the "Stone of Destiny," with which the destinies of the Scottish rule were believed to be inwoven. The legend of this stone relates that it was the pillow on which the patriarch Jacob slept at Bethel when he saw the vision of the ladder reaching to heaven. From Bethel the sons of Jacob carried the stone to Egypt. Thither came a Greek, the builder of Athens, who married Scota, the daughter of Pharaoh; but being alarmed at the judgment pronounced against Egypt by Moses, who had not then crossed the Red Sea, he fled to Spain. With him he carried the stone of Bethel, seated upon which "he gave laws and administered justice unto his people, thereby maintaining them in wealth and quietness." In after days there was a king of Spain of Scottish origin, named Milo, and he sent one of his sons with an army to conquer Ireland, that he might reduce it to his dominion, which he did, and reigned there a long time. His prosperity was due, so the legend says, to a miracle; for when the ships first lay off Ireland, as they drew up the anchors, the famous rock was hauled up into the ship. They looked upon it as a precious boon from heaven, and placed it upon the sacred hill of Tarah. Irish antiquities assert that the real stone still remains on this hill, but others claim that Fergus, the founder of the Scottish monarchy, carried the stone across the sea to Dunstaffuage in B.C. 330. From Dunstaffuage he carried it to Iona.

The authentic history of this stone begins in the year A.D. 840, when Kenneth II. brought it to Scone and inclosed it in a chair of wood, "endeavoring to maintain his royal authority by mean, trivial things, almost bordering on superstition itself." At Scone all the succeeding sovereigns of Scotland were inaugurated till the time of John Baloil. In the year 1296 Edward I. defeated Baloil in a battle near Dunbar, and before he left Scotland was himself crowned king of Scotland, while seated upon this stone. On his return to England he carried off as trophies of his conquest the Scottish Regalia and the famous "Fatal Stone," thus creating in many of the Scotch the belief that the time had come for the dissolution of the Scotch monarchy. The stone is twenty-six inches long, sixteen inches wide, and eleven inches thick. At the coronations this old chair is covered with gold tissue, and placed before the altar in the Coronation Hall.

J. W. SHEPHERD.

MORE ON 1 JOHN 2.

"He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now." (Verse 9.) From manifestations that we sometimes see, and the way brethren sometimes talk about each other, it is easy to gather that a good many people calling themselves "Christians" hate each other. They have no kind words to say of each other; but, on the other hand, they say sharp, ill-natured, ugly things about each other, and do not like to have much to do with each other. All such are walking in darkness. To walk in darkness, as indicated by this passage, is to walk by man's wisdom and by the impulses of the flesh. These only lead along the dark paths of sin. To walk in the light is to walk in the truth. The truth imparts light, and the man that walks by the truth walks in the light. It is remarkably easy to walk by the impulses of the flesh. The difficult matter is to put down impulse, and keep it down, and do just as the word of God tells us do. But it is many times better for us in the end to do this than to continue to walk in darkness, and be lost in the end. We may see things in a brother that we know to be wrong, but that does not give us the right to hate him. A brother may treat us badly, and we may see it and know it; but instead of hating him and pulling loose from him, we should so love him as to show him his error, and try to get him out of it, and save him from the evil. The apostle does not say that if we think we have good reason for hating a brother we can do so. He simply says if we do so, we walk in darkness. There is therefore no excuse for hating a brother. We can hate his sins, but we cannot hate him. Neither can we turn him loose and give him up, so long as there is any hope of reclaiming him from his evil ways. These things were not said just to fill up space; they were said to be heeded by the Lord's people, to make them what the Lord desires them to be and what they will themselves wish to be when they come to die.

"He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him." (Verse 10.) Love worketh no ill to his neighbor. If, therefore, we love our brother, we will work no ill to him; but, then, our love for a brother should never lead us to shield or justify him in a wrong. Christianity is not like politics, or worldly parties. In politics it matters little as to what a man does, if failing to defend him will injure the party, he must be defended at all hazards. The most corrupt men in all the land are thus defended and justified in their course to save the party. It is not so in the church. No evil is to be encouraged under the cloak of brotherly love, or false love for the man. All evil, as far as possible, must be corrected; and the more we love a brother, the more anxious we should be to correct his faults. But these corrections should be made in love and meekness to save the erring one, if possible. It is as bad to defend a man in a wrong course as it is to hate him. It is always right to defend an innocent brother when falsehoods are alleged against him by the slanderer's tongue; but this should be done in the proper spirit, and not in such a way as to make bad matters worse. There is no justification anywhere along the line for one brother to hate another.

"But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." (Verse 11.) The word of God gives light; therefore, to walk in the light is to walk in the guidance of his word. To walk in darkness is to walk contrary to God's word. When a child of God indulges hatred toward a brother, he walks by impulse and fleshly passion, and not after the light of God's truth; and as long as a man follows impulse and passion he walks in darkness, and will be as certain to end in ruin as he does so. The word of God is strong and plain on this line.

"Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." (1 John 3: 15.) No man can cultivate the Spirit of Christ and hatred of a brother at the same time any more than the same fountain can send forth both salt water and fresh water. If the Spirit of Christ does not rule, the spirit of Satan will. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." "A man must be out and out for Christ, or he is with Satan; and if he is with Satan in this life, he will be with him throughout eternity. Love and mercy must rule, or else hatred and Satan will. It is a strong expression—"whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; but it is the word of God that says so, and if we fall to walk in the light of his word, then we walk in darkness; and the consequences of such sins are certain, and there is no chance to dodge. Hence, the only safety for man is to make God's word his daily guide in all things. A man feels so much better when he knows he is living as the word of God requires, and has a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man. Without this sort of a conscience no man can be truly happy. So long as a man is conscious of living in a wrong course, living contrary to the word of God, he will feel miserable till he gets out of it and into harmony with God again. The Lord knows us altogether. He searches the heart, and knows just what is in us at all times. We can hide nothing from him; and, besides, it is an awful imposition upon our own consciences to carry sin upon them, without an effort to get rid of it. If we know that by any mistake we have taken poison, we spare neither pains nor money till we get rid of it; and if at any time we find that we have hatred in our hearts toward a brother, we should rest neither day nor night till we get rid of it. Besides, we should be just as careful as to what we love as we are as to what we hate, for it is just as bad to love things that are corrupt and corrupting as to hate a brother.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." (Verses 15, 16.) These two verses teach a very important lesson. We cannot possibly carry the love of God and the love of a vain and wicked world at the same time. It may be asked: How much of the love of the world will it take to condemn us? The answer is: Enough of it to control our hearts, our affections, and lead our lives in that direction. It is just the reverse of loving God. It may be asked: How much love for God does it take to make a man a servant of God? It takes just enough to control the heart and affections, and to lead the life into God's will, into doing the things that God requires to be done. Less love than this will save no one. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." (John 14: 21.) This decides very definitely how much love it takes to serve God and be saved. It takes just enough to keep us doing his will all the time; enough to live to his honor and glory, by day and by night; enough to lead us to always turn away from sin, and do the right, to the extent of our ability. Whenever we find that there is a sort of clash, as we suppose, between our spiritual interests and the affairs of the world, and we let the spiritual go, and give our time to the worldly, then we love the world more than we love God. In that case our love is leading us astray, and if we continue on that line, it will lead us to ruin inevitable. Hence, while we are to control the objects of our hatred and never hate anything so sacred as a brother in Christ, we must also control our love, and never let it center upon anything that is evil in the sight of the Lord.

It is evil to set our affections upon anything that will lead us from God and a love for his truth. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life are all calculated to lead us from God. These, therefore, we must not love. If we love these, the love of the Father is not in us; and if the love of the Father is not in us, then we are in a lost state, no matter what our claims may be. God must be first in our hearts, or he is not with us at all. Hence, if we have enough of the love of the world in our souls to keep us from doing the will of God, we have enough to condemn us. We must therefore learn how to so use this world as not to abuse it. If we let the love of the world prevent us from serving God, then we are abusing it—that is, we are misusing it. Instead of using it to sustain the physical man and to do good, we are using it as a chief end in life. Whenever we do that we deliberately give up God for the world, and take the downward road to ruin. It must be the chief end and aim of the child of God to do his will, and if this is not the case, the world and the devil will get us, here and hereafter. There is a great conflict along this line with the children of God. Satan, through the enticements of this world, is seeking to control us; and if he succeeds in getting us to love the world more than we love God and his truth, then he has got us in his clutches. We must therefore watch and pray earnestly along this line.

"And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (Verse 17.) Surely this is reason enough why people should not love, set their affections on, things of the earth, but on things above. All things earthly are transient, pass away with the using; but the will of God will stand forever, and the man who builds on that can never fail.

"Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time." (Verse 18.) We do not understand that the apostle meant by the above the last days of time, for he used this language nearly two thousand years ago, and yet time is not ended, and no man knows when it will end. The last dispensation of God's mercy to man began when the church of God was established on earth, and will last till time shall end. There will never be another; and in that sense the last days had come, had set in, when John wrote this language, and hence the time had come for antichrists. The word "antichrist" means one opposed to Christ, one against Christ. Before Christ came and established his reign on earth there was no antichrist, for there was no Christ to be against. As soon as he came and established the truth of his mission, antichrists began to appear, and have been in the world ever since, and will be till time shall close; for Christ will reign to the end of time, and during all that time there will be antichrists, opposers of Christ, in the world. Hence, John could say: "Whereby we know that it is the last time." When Christ's reign is ended and the judgment comes, all antichrists and all that refuse Christ will be forever cast off on the left hand. Then shall the faithful realize, as never before, that "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

How grand it will be, then, to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air and to be forever with the Lord! This thought should stimulate us, every day we live, to strive most earnestly to do the Lord's will, to do it always and everywhere. The only safe thing, therefore, is to let love for God and for his truth be the ruling principle of our lives, and lead us ever near the cross, near to our dear Savior's side, that he may dwell with and help us in our weakness.

E. G. S.

"Be men," said the doctor to his class of bright-eyed students—"strong, self-controlled, manly men. Build your character up to full measure; make it such that others can rely upon it and not be disappointed. Do not be apologies for men, nor men that need apologizing for. Did you ever notice how many people there are for whom their friends are continually having to make excuses? 'That's his way, we always have to make allowance for that;' 'He is so quick tempered that it often makes him unreasonable, but he's good-hearted down under it all;' 'You can count on him if you take him in the right mood;' and so on. I charge you, boys, to be masters of your moods, your tempers, and your ways. Never let them get so strong that they shall represent you to the world, that you shall be known by them rather than by anything else that may be in you. No one has a right to do business on the patience of his friends or to expect those about him to excuse the faults and weaknesses he can remedy. What the world wants is the man who has honestly made the best of himself, and who needs no apology."—Ex.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. F. Pendleton and wife, of this city, are visiting relatives near Alexandria, Tenn.

Brother J. M. McCaleb spent several days with us last week. He is always deeply interested in the work in Japan.

The information comes to us that Brother W. H. Sutton, of Sparta, Tenn., is seriously sick. We pray he may soon be restored to health.

Brother R. H. Boll and Brother John Glenn left last week for Georgia to devote considerable time to evangelistic work in destitute fields.

Among our visitors last week was Brother M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky. It is always refreshing to meet and to talk with him of things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

Brother J. A. Harding began a meeting in Memphis, Tenn., on last Lord's day. He is holding the meeting in a tent, and hopes to create an interest in primitive Christianity in that city.

The meeting held by Brother J. D. Tant with the North Spruce Street church of Christ closed last week. Brother Tant is now engaged in a debate with John T. Oakley in West Nashville.

We enjoyed a brief visit from Brother Larimore on the 6th inst. He baptized one person in this city on that day. He is now in a meeting at Tracy City, Tenn. Brother Leon Harding is conducting the song service.

Under date of June 4, 1900, Brother John E. Dunn writes from Mangum, O. T.: "I am in the beginning of what I think will be a fine meeting here. Good audiences, fine interest, and two baptisms so far. I look for good results."

Brother Petch and wife left last week for Corinth, Miss., where they expect to spend the summer months. Brother Petch will evangelize in destitute fields. The churches should uphold the hands of those who thus devote their time, talent, and energy to preaching the gospel of Christ.

Brother Brown Godwin and family expect to locate in Columbia, Tenn., soon. Brother Godwin has had an extensive practice in osteopathy in Lebanon, Tenn. However, he has not failed to do considerable preaching all the time. He hopes to be able to do much in building up the cause of Christ in Columbia.

Sister Brown, wife of Brother J. O. Brown, of Collinsville, Ala., made us a pleasant call last week. She reports the college conducted by her husband as in a very prosperous condition, the scholastic year, which has just closed, having an enrollment of about two hundred pupils. Prospects for the next year are very fine.

The meeting at the Central church building started off very encouragingly. A good-sized audience was present at the morning service. The sermon on "The Bible, and Only That, Must be Our Guide," was very fine. At night the house was well filled with people, and all seemed to enjoy the service very much. Brother Sewell's sermon on "The Word of God is Able to Save" was most excellent. Mr. Pittman has a splendid voice, is a good leader, and the congregational singing is nice. All take part in this service. The day services will be at 3:30 P.M.; the evening services will begin promptly at 8 o'clock, and the song service will also begin at this time.—Bonham Texas Daily Favorite.

To Whom It May Concern: One T. C. Tripp, of Texas, came into our midst last October, claiming to be a Christian preacher. He has resided in this vicinity since, but as a Christian gentleman his conduct at all times has been very unbecoming; he was continually telling falsehoods and keeping up a general neighborhood trouble. These falsehoods have been proved on him; and although he has been repeatedly asked to be more careful in keeping the peace, he has succeeded, to a great extent, in injuring the church both at Prairie View and at Altus, Ark.; and from his conduct in general we believe he is a dangerous man in a Christian neighborhood. Therefore, for the protection of other congregations, we, the undersigned, preachers, members, and elders of the churches of Christ at Prairie View and Altus, Ark., recommend that the Gospel Advocate be authorized to publish this in full.—James Arnold, preacher; H. M. Towrey, J. M. Hampton, Prairie View, Ark.; F. M. Strickland, preacher; Frank Sherley, T. C. Sherley, J. J. Murray, J. M. Wilson, Z. D. Wilson, and John Wilson, Altus, Ark.

EDITORIAL.

Death is no respecter of persons.

No failure is greater than the failure to do right.

Your time is your capital. Do not squander it.

Every time a man shirks a duty he loses a blessing.

A man cannot serve God while he is a slave to himself.

Small things should be just as promptly and faithfully done as the great ones.

It has always been, is now, and always will be true that no man can serve two masters.

We should ever be as ready to commend the good we see in others as we are to condemn them for their faults.

Your motives may be impugned, but this should never deter you from going right on, if you believe you are doing right.

Whoever busies himself about doing what the Bible says to do can find no time to do what the Bible says nothing about.

Every temptation overcome and every persecution endured in the spirit of meekness add to the strength of Christian character.

It makes no difference whether God's plan seems to be adequate to meet the end in view; the question is: Is it his plan? If so, it must be followed.

We sometimes think we are earnestly contending "for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," only to find we are striving about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

There are comparatively few desertions from the army of the country; there are many from the army of the Lord. The reason is doubtless founded in the fact that men love the cause of the nation more than the cause of Christ.

Ruskin said: "Of all manner of debtors pious people building churches they cannot pay for are the most detestable nonsense to me. Can you not preach and pray behind the hedges, or in a sand pit, or in a coal hole first?"

One of the most pernicious doctrines of the age is: "No man can be counted as sinning when he is doing what he thinks he ought to do." Paul did not seem to think so. He said: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." (Acts 26: 9.) "I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief." (1 Tim. 1: 13.) What we think is not the standard of right; what God says is.

Sorrows do not always come as punishment. When the sun shines we say, "Nature is glad;" when it rains, "Nature weeps;" but would not the earth soon be parched and barren but for those gloomy, rainy days, and would not those days so bright prove a curse if continued? How much more brightly the sun seems to shine after a few days of clouds and gloom! So, I believe, God allows sorrows to come that we may the more appreciate our blessings; and, indeed, sorrows themselves are only blessings in disguise, if we would but appropriate them as such.

The life of faith is no more or less than conformity to the will of God. The life of the great example of faith, Jesus Christ, consisted in this. "I come down from heaven," said he "not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 6: 38.) It seems, then, that since God requires a service of faith, there should be some way by which we could ascertain whether we are acting by faith. "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." (2 Cor. 13: 5.) God has given us a rule by which this self-examination may be conducted and the end in view determined: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) Without testimony there can be no faith, and, consequently, no way of pleasing him.

Few of us realize the importance of listening patiently and attentively to the word of God. Peter said to the people: "Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." Through Christ God speaks to us concerning the plan of salvation and the many varied lessons of Christian conduct, giving us "the perfect law of liberty." Therefore we are to hear him. The expression, "Who hath ears to hear, let him hear," is of frequent occurrence in the Bible; but God requires discrimination in the things to be heard. Christ said: "Take heed what ye hear." James, after saying that we are begotten "with the word of truth," adds: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear," evidently, "the word of truth." We may not listen to "the traditions of the fathers" or "the commandments of men," but hearing him of whom God said, "I am well pleased," in a faithful continuance in his word, we "may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

The children of Israel might well have complained of the conduct of the sons of Samuel, because they "turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment." This they did; but they went further and complained of God's plan, saying: "Now make us a king to judge us like all the nations." Through Samuel God solemnly protested against the change, and warned them of its results; but the people said: "Nay, but we will have a king over us." God marks out the way for us to go, and warns us against going any other way. We may go the other way if we desire, but we go with the certainty of failure. So God allowed Israel to have a king. The prophecy of God was fulfilled; the project was an utter failure, bringing dire disaster upon the whole kingdom. This case has found its antitype among God's people to-day. He has legislated, and because some fail to follow him in his appointments, complaint is made of the plan itself, and such failure is made to answer as a reason for the exercise of human wisdom in providing another way and for conformity to the ways of those around us. God solemnly warns us against departure; and just as certainly as the departure of earthly Israel wrought their destruction, just so certainly will the same course work the destruction of spiritual Israel.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

Do you wish a good music book at a cheap price? Send for "Voice of Praise."

Send us one dollar and get a copy of "Larimore and His Boys." This is an excellent book.

Do you want the "Old Path Pulpit?" We have this book, and would like to mail you a copy for two dollars.

Pay your dues to the Gospel Advocate. Now is the best time in the world to renew and pay one year in advance.

One dollar and fifty cents will buy a copy of "Gospel Sermons." This is a fine book, worth a very careful and earnest perusal.

Do you want to present your friend a good book? Send us two dollars for "Gospel Plan of Salvation." The reading of this book will do you good.

Have you read "Sweeney's Sermons?" If not, you have missed a treat. If you would like to do yourself a favor, send at once one dollar for this book.

Why should you go elsewhere for your ledgers, journals, etc.? We carry a line in stock and also make them. We can please you. When you need any printing, engraving, or embossing, send us your orders.

Why not patronize us? We can print your blank books, letter heads, bill-heads, envelopes, cards—in fact, anything in the printer's line. We will treat you fairly, do you first-class work, and give your orders prompt attention.

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" has been unavoidably delayed. The orders are coming in for the book, so we must ask our friends and customers to be patient just a little while longer. We hope, however, by the time this reaches our readers that the book will be ready for distribution. Price, $1.50.

The great rush of work which has recently been pouring in upon us has delayed, a few days, the appearance of "Gospel Praise." However, the shape note edition will be ready for sale by the time this issue reaches our subscribers. We believe this the best music book that has been published. We only ask for it an impartial examination. Do not fail to send us your order.

The Modern Pastor System.

My purpose in this article is to present some ideas on a subject for the thoughtful consideration of churches of Christ and preachers of the gospel that will, I hope, cause all who may read the article to investigate the subject in the light of New Testament teaching with a view of better understanding our duty as members of the body of Christ and result in good to the cause of primitive Christianity.

Under the above heading I wish to call our attention to a number of items involved in the subject. I will therefore number the items to which I desire to call attention so as to systematically consider the subject:

1. Who is the modern pastor, and what is his line of work?
2. Has the church any authority for having such a pastor?
3. Has he any authority from God for his position in the church?
4. Evils of the modern pastor system.
5. Who is the pastor, and what is his work, according to New Testament teaching?
6. Congregational growth and work: (a) The work of elders of the church; (b) the work of the members generally.

1. I define the term "pastor" in harmony with the general use of it and in accord with the pastor's work as we observe his work. The modern pastor is a preacher whose profession is to take charge of a church, or churches, under the employment of a board of church officers for a sum of money either specified or implied in a contract which is either specified or implied. His line of work is to take charge of the church, or churches, in his charge in a similar manner to that of a school-teacher taking charge of a school. The school-teacher is employed under contract by a board of school officers, and his business is to open the school and conduct it. He looks to the board that employed him for his pay. The board turns the school over to the teacher, and expects him to run it. The pastor whose business is to run the church is employed by a church board in a similar way. He is general manager and all are to work under his direction. The pastor is present on Sunday morning to observe the work of the Sunday school, preaches a sermon at an appointed hour, directs the singing (or music), reads or has it done, leads the prayer or has it done, waits on the table or has it done, makes the appointments, and closes the meeting. On Sunday night the pastor conducts a preaching service, directs all other meetings, and is present to manage the midweek prayer meeting. The pastor is expected to visit the sick, suggest about the poor, preach funerals, perform marriage ceremonies, drum up interest in the church, and mingle with the people generally. This is a definition based on my observation of pastors generally. There are, of course, some exceptions, and in some points deviations.

2. Has the church any authority for having such a pastor? The Bible must be our only guide in learning the truth. There is authority for the modern pastor found in the wisdom of men, but none whatever in the word of God. The custom is sometimes justified on the ground that some one must do the work, and since the church will not do her duty, we are forced to get a pastor. This looks like doing evil that good may come. Paul, in writing to the saints at Rome, says: "And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just." (Rom. 3: 8.) Again: "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid." (Rom. 6: 1, 2.) "Sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3: 4), and no good can come of violating God's law. The modern pastor system is wholly unauthorized by the law of God. God will not bless any system adopted by churches which he has not authorized.

3. Has the pastor any authority from God for his position in the church? According to New Testament teaching, no church had a pastor as they are now in the churches as here outlined. We have no such line of work marked out for preachers in the New Testament. There was no such profession in the church of Christ for the Lord's preachers when the New Testament was written.

4. Evils of the modern pastor system: It takes support that ought to be given to the poor and used to sound out the word of the Lord and gives it to one man to do a work that the entire congregation ought to do. It establishes a one-man rule in the church (the modern pastor rule), which is contrary to the whole spirit and genius of the Christian religion as revealed in the word of God. The pastor monopolizes the energies and opportunities of the members of the church and crushes out the development and growth of the members. The pastor's system of work becomes a rigid, cold formality, and is death to soul-stirring, spiritual, congregational worship. The modern pastor system has established an easy, lucrative profession in the church which is an innovation upon the church of God. By it young men are led to become preachers just as they are induced to become lawyers and doctors. They do not become such preachers as Timothy was and never learn to endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross of Christ. Such preachers are simply professionals, have opened the flood gates for innovations, and are mainly responsible for all innovations upon the work and worship of the church of God. In a church that perpetuates such a system an earnest, true Christian feels tied, bound hand and foot, and his heart becomes sick and tired; he feels that his duty of usefulness in the church is ended. Thus discouraged and powerless, one loses interest in the church. God never intended such a popish system to tyrannize his children.

5. Who is the pastor, and what is his work, according to New Testament teaching? We find the English word "pastor" but one time in the New Testament. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." (Eph. 4: 11.) The Greek word "poimen," in this verse translated "pastor," is found a number of times in the New Testament. In other passages it is translated "shepherd." (Luke 2: 8; John 10: 11, 12, 14, 16; Heb. 13: 20; 1 Pet. 2: 25; 5: 4.) The word "pastor" is found a number of times in the Old Testament. I here insert a definition of "pastor," or "shepherd," as found in Cruden's Concordance: "'Pastor,' or 'shepherd,' signifies one who takes care of a flock of sheep, not only that they may feed in good pasture, but also that they be not torn by wild beasts or hurt any other way. (Gen. 47: 3; Luke 2: 8.) (1) It is spoken of God, who performed the office of a faithful shepherd to his people by leading, feeding, preserving, and healing them. (Ps. 23: 1.) (2) Of Christ, who not only exposed and ventured his life, but also willingly laid it down for his sheep, and who takes the charge, care, and oversight of them to dispense all things necessary for their welfare. (John 10: 11-16; Heb. 13: 20; 1 Pet. 2: 25, 54.)" In Acts 20: 17-35, Paul, in talking to the elders of the church at Ephesus, speaks of them as the overseers ("episcopos," bishop) of the flock. "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." (Verse 28.) From the teaching of the word of God we conclude that the elders, bishops, or overseers are the pastors of the churches. As the New Testament teaches each church had a plurality of elders—pastors (Acts 20: 28; 14: 23; Phil. 1: 1; Tit. 1: 5)—churches of Christ to-day that come up to the New Testament standard have a plurality of elders in every church.

6. Congregational growth and work. (a) The work of elders of the church. The work of elders (pastors or bishops) can easily be learned by carefully studying those scriptures which give instruction to elders. Elders are to "take heed" to themselves, to oversee, and "feed the church of God [flock]." (Acts 20: 28; see also 1 Tim. 3: 7; Tit. 1: 5.) They are to teach the word of God, "to exhort and to convince the gainsayers," and to stop the mouths of unruly and vain talkers and deceivers. "Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation." (Heb. 13: 7.) "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you." (Heb. 13: 17.) Elders are exhorted: "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 2, 3.) For their faithful service they are promised "a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (Verse 4.) (b) The work of members. In New Testament times Christians "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine." (Acts 2: 42.) "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." (Acts 8: 4.) "The hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." (Acts 11: 21.) The disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread (Acts 20: 7), and to lay by in store as God prospered them. (1 Cor. 16: 2.) In the churches the Scriptures were read (Col. 4: 16) and the members were instructed: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." (Col. 3: 16.) "And they continued steadfastly . . . in prayers, . . . praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 42-47.)

Let the churches of to-day conform to the example of the churches we read about in the New Testament in the worship and in the work of converting sinners; let every Christian be earnest to sound out the word of the Lord and edify the body of Christ; let every child of God do all he can (use his talent) to honor God, to save souls, and prepare himself in heart and life for a home in heaven, and the hand of the Lord will be with us as it was with the children of God in primitive times. JOHN E. DUNN.

Gleanings.

There is an impression among some people that a man is a better man after having tasted sin, after knowing evil experience, then repenting, being forgiven, and restored. This is a mistaken impression. Innocence is far better than penitence. Penitence is infinitely better than despair, but a life is never so beautiful after sin's fires have swept over it as it would have been if it had been kept untarnished and had realized God's first thought for it.—J. R. Miller.

Prayer is the key to open the door in the morning and the bolt to lock it at night. A young accountant in New York City got his accounts tangled. He knew he was honest, and yet he could not make his accounts come right, and he toiled at them day and night until he was nearly frenzied. It seemed by these books that something had been misappropriated, and he knew before God he was honest. The last day came. He knew that if he could not that day make his accounts come out right, he would go into disgrace, and go into banishment from the business establishment. He went over there very early, before there was anybody in the place, and he knelt down at the desk and said: "O Lord, thou knowest I have tried to be honest, but I cannot make these things come out right. Help me to-day; help me this morning!" The young man arose, and, hardly knowing why he did so, opened a book which lay on the desk, and there was a leaf containing a line of figures which explained everything. In other words, he "cast his burden upon the Lord," and the Lord sustained him.—Exchange.

The British army under General Kitchener gathered the most important experimental evidence bearing upon this military temperance question. Three regiments were selected from each of the several brigades for tests at different times, partly during maneuvers. In one every man was forbidden to drink a drop while the test lasted; in the second, malt liquor only could be purchased; in the third, a sailor's ration of whisky was given to each man. The experiment was repeated in several instances where forced marches and other hard work were required. The whisky drinkers showed more dash at first, but generally in about four days showed signs of lassitude and abnormal fatigue. Those given malt liquor displayed less dash at first, but their endurance lasted somewhat longer. The abstainers, however, are said to have increased daily in alertness and staying powers. As a result of this experiment the War Department decided that in the Sudan campaign not a single drop of stimulant should be allowed in camp, save for hospital use. The officers, including even the generals, could no longer enjoy their accustomed spirits, wines, and malt liquors at their mess tables. There must have been wry faces, especially among the Scotch laddies, when the order was published that for all hands, including even camp followers, liquid refreshments were to be limited to tea, oatmeal water, or lime juice, and Nile water. It is a great feather in the head gear of the advocates of military total abstainers that Lord Kitchener's Egyptian victory was won for him by an army of teetotalers, who made phenomenal forced marches through the desert, under a burning sun and in a climate famed for its power to kill or prematurely age the unacclimated. Indeed, 'tis said that there never was a British campaign occasioning so little sickness and profiting by so much endurance.—Washington Star.

Home Reading.

"I SHALL BE A KING."

Several hundred years ago a young prince lived in England whose name was Henry. The name of his father, the king, was Henry, too, but the king was called "Henry of Derby," while the prince was called "Henry of Monmouth," though oftener "Prince Hal." He was a wild, harum-scarum fellow, who made merry at taverns and got into all sorts of scrapes, without seeming to take any thought of his royal dignity. Nothing, indeed, could exceed the recklessness of the heir apparent. One day he took part in a street brawl; another day he aided to rob the officers of the exchequer on the highway; and again, while staying with some riotous young comrades at a country manor house, he played such outrageous pranks that he was arrested. The prospect was not very brilliant for the future of England with such a prince to succeed to the throne.

But a change was at hand. King Henry was sick and lay upon his deathbed. One day, while he was in a sort of stupor, Prince Henry chanced to enter the apartment. His father lay so motionless that he thought he was dead, and after the first shock was over, instead of calling in the attendants, he took up the royal crown and placed it upon his own head.

"I shall be king now," he said to himself; and with this thought he walked out of the room, with the crown still upon his head.

His father had been only sleeping, however, and, soon after growing better, missed his crown. From his attendants he learned who had taken it. The old king summoned his son into his presence and sternly upbraided him, both on account of the grief and shame which his life had occasioned, and because that now, as the king thought, he had shown how little filial love was in his heart by his eagerness to get possession of the crown.

The young prince, filled with remorse, knelt before his father, declaring with tears that nothing was farther from his heart than the desire to take his father's place upon the throne. He had really believed his father to be dead, he said, and had placed the crown upon his head, resolving from that hour to live a better life and to honor the memory of his beloved father. The dying king accordingly forgave his son, and Prince Henry proved his sincerity by turning from his ways of folly and sin. Not long afterwards the old king did die, and the young prince became one of England's greatest sovereigns.

Now, there is another story that I always think of in connection with this one of Prince Henry and his dying father's crown. It is that of an English nobleman, James Philip Gordon, Duke of Hamilton, who lived near the close of the last century. He was a gentle, studious boy, and from a child was remarkably serious, taking great delight in reading the Bible, whose truths made a profound impression upon him. One day when he was about nine years old, the duchess, his mother, said to him, "Philip, write me a verse of poetry and I will give you a crown," meaning a piece of money. The young heir immediately took pen and paper and wrote the following lines:

As o'er the sea-beat shore I took my way,
I met an aged man who bade me stay.
"Be wise," said he, "and mark the path you go;
This leads to heaven, and that to hell below.
The way to life is difficult and steep,
The broad and easy road leads to the deep."

This is pretty good for a boy in the primary school, so to speak, and shows the religious tendency of his mind.

When he was twelve years old his father died, and he became the fourth Duke of Hamilton, one of the greatest nobles of England, with many castles and an enormous rent roll. It is said that he could ride all day on his own lands, he owned so many acres. But he was not at all proud and haughty, as a great many young folks would have been, but was the same quiet, modest boy that he was before, only perhaps more thoughtful and serious. At the age of fourteen he gave his heart to God and became an earnest and conscientious Christian. A severe cold, caught by exposure to a storm while going to see one of his poor tenants, threw him into a decline, and before he was seventeen he lay dying under the purple canopy of his ducal couch.

As he found death approaching he called his younger brother to his bedside, and, addressing him with the deepest affection and solemnity, closed these remarkable words: "And now, Douglas, in a little time you will be a duke and I shall be a king."

He was at the point of death, and yet it was as he said. He was truly going to be a king, grander even than the great Henry Plantagenet, the mighty victor of Agincourt. He was happy to die and leave his vast possessions, for he believed he should receive a "crown of glory" in heaven. If you will read Rev. 1: 5, 6, you will learn who it is that promises to make us kings if we serve and love Him.—Fred. Myron Colby, in the Epworth Herald.

THE BOY IN THE HOGSHEAD.

A good-natured philanthropist was walking along the docks one Sunday morning when he found a boy asleep in a hogshead. He shook him until he was wide-awake and then opened the following conversation:

"What are you doing here, boy?"

"I slept here all night, sir, for I had no other place to sleep in."

"How is that? Have you no father or mother? Who takes care of you?"

"My father drinks, sir, and I don't know where he is. I have to take care of myself, for my mother is dead; she died not long ago." And at the mention of her name the boy's eyes filled with tears.

"Well, come along with me. I'll give you a home and look after you as well as I can."

The child thus adopted on the wharf was taken to a happy home. He was sent to a common school and afterwards employed as a clerk in the store of his benefactor. When he became of age his friend and benefactor said to him: "You have been a faithful and honest boy and man; and if you will make three promises, I will furnish you with letters of credit, so that you can start business in the West on your own account."

"What promises do you wish me to make?" inquired the young man.

"First, that you will not drink intoxicating liquors of any kind."

"I agree to that."

"Second, that you will not use profane speech."

"I agree to that."

"Third, that you will not become a politician."

"I agree to that."

The young man started in business in the West, and, by minding his own business, in a few years became a rich man. At the close of the war he came East and called upon his friend and accepted father. In the course of a happy interview, the philanthropist asked his adopted son if he had kept his total abstinence pledge.

"Yes, sir," was the answer.

"Have you abstained from the use of profane speech?"

"Yes, sir," said the man with emphasis.

"Have you had anything to do with politics?"

The visitor—the adopted son, perhaps I should have said—blushed, and said: "Without my consent I was nominated for Governor of my State, and elected. I am now on my way to Washington to transact important business for the State."

Did ever hogshead turn out so good a thing as a teetotal Governor before? It had to be emptied of its wine before it could be a better for the little Arab who ran wild in that shell of marble and mortar, the great city of New York.

The streets and wharves of the great metropolis of commerce invite missionary effort, and the writer hopes that the little waifs afloat on the wave of outward life will not be neglected.—Our Young Folks.

ANTS MAKE SLAVES.

The warrior ant is a slave-making species. It is a large, red kind, and it makes raids against nests of the small, yellow turf ant, a mild and docile race, large numbers of which it carries off to act as servants.

But it does not steal fully grown turf ants; their habits are formed, and they would be useless for such a purpose. What the warrior ant wants is raw material, which can be turned into thoroughly well-trained servants. So it merely kills the adult ant which strives to oppose its aggression and contents itself with trundling home to its own nest the larvæ and pupæ of the turf ants which it has put to flight and vanquished.

In time these grubs and cocoons produce full-grown yellow workers, which can be taught by the warrior ants to act as nurses and housemaids. I once saw in a garden in Algiers a great pitched battle going on between slavemakers and the family of the future slaves, in which the ground was strewn with the corpses of the vanquished. Not till the nests of the smaller ants were almost exterminated did they retire from the unequal contest and allow the proud invader to carry off their brothers and sisters in their cocoons, asleep and unconscious. Occasionally, by dint of mere numbers, they beat off the invader with heavy loss, but much oftener the large and strong-jawed warriors win the day, and destroy to a worker the opposing forces. They crush their adversaries' heads with their viselike mandibles. Meanwhile, within the nest, the other half of the workers—the division toled off as special nurses—are otherwise employed in defending and protecting the rising generation. At the first alarm, at the first watchword passed with waving antennæ through the nest, "A warrior host is attacking us!" they hurry to the chambers where the cocoons are stored and bear them off in their mouths into the recesses of the nest, the lowest and most inaccessible of all the chambers.—Grant Allen, in Strand Magazine.

"THE STONE WHICH THE BUILDERS REJECTED."

A great cathedral was being built. The most beautiful marble, exquisitely carved, made its walls. Its wood-work was like satin, and of delicate colors. The windows were like rich paintings, telling the wonderful stories of Christ's life.

The workmen had come from far and near, the most skillful only having been chosen.

For months hammers and chisels rang, till at last all but one window was finished. It was a south window, not large, where rich sunlight fell early and late.

"Strange it should have been forgotten," said the master workman. "The bishop comes to-morrow, and all should be finished."

A little, bent man, with a shrewd but kindly face, limped up. Doffing his cap, he said: "Sir, I have made a window for that space from bits of the other windows. Pray you, let it go up."

"It is the best we can do," said the master. "Put it up for to-morrow, man, but after that it must come down."

The next day the church was crowded. Just as the old bishop turned to preach the sermon, the sun burst out. It came through the south window, touching his white hair with a halo.

Every one turned to look. The stranger's window was a flashing jewel. Though it was made of bits, the colors were so blended that it seemed like one. The sunlight glittered and broke into a thousand rays.

The bishop knew about the forgotten window and the strange way one had been made. He had written a stately sermon, but he put it away and preached the thought the beautiful window gave: "The rejected stone being the head of the corner."—Epworth Herald.

VEGETABLE IVORY.

The ivory plant, we are told, is found in South America; it produces the nuts known as "marfil vegetal," or vegetable ivory. It belongs to the palm family, and has a graceful crown of leaves and beautiful, fragrant flowers.

The fruit grows in large clusters. Each fruit has six or seven compartments, and each compartment contains from six to nine seeds. In commercial parlance, the seeds are known as "vegetable ivory," and out of them are fashioned knobs, reels, toys, and many other things, both useful and ornamental.

Many of the ivory buttons and fancy boxes in daily use, which are supposed to be made from the tusks of the elephant, are the product of the ivory plant. At first the seeds contain a clear, insipid fluid; after a time this fluid becomes sweet and of a milky appearance, and then changes by degrees until it becomes as hard as ivory.

It is a singular fact that this hard, ivorylike mass returns to its former soft state in the process of germination, and the young plant is for some time dependent upon it for sustenance. If the seed be taken out of the ground after the plant has appeared, in it may be found a substance, half pulp and half milk, on which the plant lives until it is old enough to obtain nourishment for itself.—Sabbath School Visitor.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JUNE 14, 1900.

Editorial.

THE NEW BIRTH.

Brother Lipscomb: Allow me to say a few words about your recent article on the new birth. I think you should give us the proof that the Savior meant the church when he told Nicodemus that he must be born of the Spirit, or he could not see the kingdom of God. (John 3: 3.)

The apostle Paul exhorted his brethren (who were already church members) that they "must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." (Acts 14: 22.) Again: "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" (James 2: 5.) This beautifully agrees with the Savior's own words, when he said: "My kingdom is not of this world." (John 18: 36.) Then when Jesus said to Nicodemus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," what did he mean? Did he mean, as you say, that his "spirit must be born (again) of the Spirit?" I had much rather believe he meant the man, as he said, rather than that he meant some of the possessions or attributes of the man. Now, was the spirit (that you say must be born) ever born of the natural mother? If so, then it is flesh; and where is your argument? But if you say that it was not born of the flesh; that it is the God part, the immortal part of man, that part that God gives, and that it was not born of the flesh at the start—if this be true, then, it cannot be reborn, or "born again," as the Scriptures say; for a thing to be reborn must have a previous birth, as you know. Which horn of the dilemma will you take?

Again, you say, "The seed is imparted by the father to the mother," which is correct. And again: "The seed is imparted in the heart of man by the Spirit of God. Then the heart of man that receives the word of God fills the place of the mother," etc. Then the heart is the spiritual mother. Now, my brother, let us see how this agrees with your figure of the natural birth. Did you ever see a natural seed, imparted to the mother, make a new mother? I am sure you did not, for the seed imparted always makes a being separate and distinct from the mother; but in your spiritual birth you would have us believe that the mother (the heart) is made new—that is, the mother receives the seed into conditions favorable to its growth, and is born of herself, and thereby becomes a new being. Who ever heard of such logic?

Now, my dear brother, I am sure you are right when you say that the word of God is the seed of kingdom being received into the heart purifies it, ing that the heart is the mother. The seed of the kingdom being received with the heart purifies it, renovates it, thereby starting up a new life in the person (the Nicodemus), a new nature, in embryo, begotten by the Spirit through the truth, the gospel. (James 2: 18; 1 Cor. 4: 15.) So we see that the apostle addresses them as begotten children, not as born children; so this agrees most beautifully with Peter and John, as they invariably address those to whom they write as begotten children. Thus: "Having been begotten again, not of corruptible seed," etc. (1 Pet. 1: 23, R. V.) "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." (1 John 5: 1, R. V.) "Every one that loveth is begotten of God." (1 John 4: 7, R. V.; see also 1 Cor. 4: 15; James 1: 18.) Now, my brother, with these few hints I will close, wishing not to make this lengthy.

Please give special notice to the point of the spirit of man, whether or not it is to be born of the Spirit, and when and of what it was born before so that it may be born again; for the Savior said to Nicodemus that he must be born again. Is that spirit of man, of which you speak, a personality, a spirit entity, or being, separate and distinct from the body? Winchester, Tenn. G. W. WALKER.

N.B. By request I send this, hoping to see it examined through the Gospel Advocate. G. W. W.

Brother Walker does not seek to learn what the Bible teaches, but he has accepted a theory that the kingdom does not exist to man on earth, and he seeks scripture to prove this theory. He ignores nine out of ten passages of scripture on the kingdom that cannot be reconciled with his idea and parades the tenth one, because, by itself, it may be twisted to harmonize with his idea. Jesus said: "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." (Matt. 12: 28; see also Luke 10: 9-11.) "The kingdom of God is come upon you." (Luke 11: 20.) "The harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." (Matt. 21: 31.) "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you." (Verse 43.) "There be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1.) "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." (Mark 12: 34.) "Which also waited for the kingdom of God." (Mark 15: 43.) "Yours is the kingdom of God." (Luke 6: 20.) "He that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he." (Luke 7: 28.) "Shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 27; see also 12: 32.) "The prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." (Luke 16: 16.) "The kingdom of God is within you." (Luke 17: 21.) "Who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." (1 Thess. 2: 12.) "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved." (Heb. 12: 28.) "I . . . am your brother . . . in the kingdom . . . of Jesus Christ." (Rev. 1: 9.) Not one of these passages can be true if the kingdom of God is yet future. There are numerous others that would be misleading if the kingdom of God was not to be established for thousands of years after the preaching of Jesus and the apostles.

There is not the least difficulty in harmonizing the scriptures Brother Walker quotes with these; but these cannot be harmonized with the interpretation he places on them. It is taught in a number of places and in different ways that there are two divisions, or degrees, in this kingdom of God. One is on earth; the other, a higher and perfected degree of it, is in heaven. They were typified by the holy and the most holy places in the temple. One is represented as the everlasting kingdom, at the right hand of God; the other, the earthly kingdom leading up to this heavenly kingdom, and which, when it shall have completed its work here, will be swallowed up of the heavenly and eternal kingdom. Keeping this in mind, there is not the least difficulty in harmonizing every statement concerning the kingdom of God, or of heaven, in the Bible. The objections to the idea of the new birth are equally one-sided and partisan. He tries to make a figure used by the Savior to illustrate one truth apply in all of its parts. There is not an illustration in the Bible but may be made ridiculous and misleading in this way. Jesus compares his coming to that of a thief; did he mean he would come to steal as the thief does? He called Herod a fox; did he mean to say he went on all fours as a fox? One single point is usually intended to be illustrated. To apply it in other points is to do violence to the teaching. Jesus said: A man must be born again to enter the kingdom. Nicodemus said: How can he enter his mother's womb when he is old? Jesus told him: It is not the flesh to be born again of flesh; it is the spirit that is to be operated upon. The flesh is born of flesh; the spirit is now what is to be operated upon by the Spirit of God. The spirit of the child most certainly is born of the father and mother as the flesh is. The fleshly part of the child is born of the flesh of the father and mother; the spirit of the child is born of the spirit of the father and mother. Like begets its like. The word of God is the seed of the kingdom. It is planted in the heart of the person to be benefited. Out of this impregnation of the heart of man with the Spirit of God a new spiritual life comes and makes of that human spirit a new spirit or soul. As I said, the effort to make it correspond to all the features of the physical birth is to pervert the teaching of God. The same truth is presented in the parable of the sower. The seed is received into the soil. Jesus says it means the word of God is received into the heart. There is no other place than in the heart of man that the seed can be planted to produce fruit.

Man is a spirit. Adam was a living soul. Man is a spirit, but he has a body. The spirit is the essential, living being that gives personality and character to the person. The body is the material, earthly, decaying shell or machine in which the spirit dwells. The material body has no personality, save as it is inhabited and animated by the spirit; it receives all its personality from the indwelling spirit. When the spirit leaves the body, the body loses all distinctive ness and personality and molders into and mingles with other inorganic dust. The man that died was carried to Abraham's bosom, while the body returned to dust. "Immortality" does not mean simply unending existence. It means freedom from corruption and suffering. The devil has eternal existence. God only hath immortality, and imparts to those who are begotten of him; by faithful continuance in well-doing they become partakers of the divine nature. The spirit, while in the flesh, is corruptible, and suffers. It exists forever, but seeks, through obedience to God, for immortality, with which, if it is faithful unto the end, it will be clothed.

In the body—that is, in the flesh—dwells no good thing, but fleshly lusts and passions. By conflict with these the spirit is disciplined and tested and fitted to dwell with God. The real person will lay aside this earthly tabernacle and be clothed with the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Though our outward man perish, the inward man is renewed day by day. The outward or mortal man molders into dust, but the inward or renewed man is immortalized. Let us not fritter our time and talents away in questions that gender strife, but can bring no good. D. L.

FAITHFULNESS.

"Faithfulness" is one of the greatest and most important words in our language. When the assembled people of all ages and climes stand before the great Judge of all the earth their destiny will depend on whether they have been faithful. Faithfulness then will mean honor and promotion and an entrance into the joys of our Lord. Unfaithfulness will bring upon us all the woes of torment during an unending eternity. If then the blessed Master only says to us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," it means exaltation to us in the presence of the angels and the companionship of the good and pure forever.

It is encouraging to know that all can be faithful. While all cannot be great, learned, and eloquent, we all can be faithful, and an angel can do no more. God does not require greatness, but fidelity. We must be faithful in the use of that we have; and not in that we have not. "After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold, I have gained two other talents beside them. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewn; and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewn: thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Matt. 25: 19-30.)

Some people who are not faithful in little things imagine they would be faithful in great things. This is a fearful mistake. It takes the little deeds of life to make up our existence. If we are not faithful in the least, how can we be faithful in the great things? God will not trust us with great things until we have proved our faithfulness in the discharge of little duties. We cannot excuse ourselves because we are not so gifted as others. The man who has only one talent is expected to be faithful. Because our capacity is small we are prone to flatter ourselves that the Lord will deal very leniently with us while we take our ease and enjoy the pleasures of the world. But we should be undeceived by the manner in which the lord dealt with the unfaithful servant. He had only one talent, but his lord demanded the use of that one.

Faithfulness should characterize our dealings in all the walks of life. We are not only to be faithful in going to worship, in visiting the sick, in giving our means to preach the gospel, but in the everyday affairs of life. The merchant should be faithful; his light should shine as much in his store as in the prayer meeting. He should be faithful to his clerks, to his customers, and to all with whom he may deal. He is not faithful while holding back part of the wages due his employees, even if he does make liberal contributions for religious purposes. Faithfulness requires him to pay as much to his employees as they are worth, or at least as much as the profits on their labor will allow him to pay. As far as possible, he should place himself in their position, and then be true to the golden rule: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." There are some religious people who have the name of being very liberal in the use of their money for the cause of Christ, yet they pay those in their employ very scant wages, hardly enough to procure for themselves and their families the actual necessities of life. It will not be well to appear at the judgment seat of Christ with such a record. When we have been faithful to all about us, when we have kept nothing back that belongs to others, then God will bless us in the use of our money for his honor and glory. Men may hoard up money to endow colleges and to use in a way that will make a great name for themselves, but this will not be pleasing to God if they have not dealt honestly in the acquisition of their millions. James (5: 1-5) writes of this class: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter."

A life is made up of numberless acts, small and great. If the final judgment is to pronounce the whole life faithful, then the acts that compose that life, one by one, must bear the stamp of divine approval. The whole cannot be better than its parts, hence the importance of being faithful in every act of life. This must include our business, our social life, our friendships, and whatsoever we may do every day in the week. We are too prone to look upon religion as having to do only with spiritual matters, while it has to do with everything. God requires fidelity in everything. The farmer should farm to the honor and glory of God. If he should slight his work, some one is sure to suffer on account of his neglect. The shoemaker should be faithful. If his work is faulty, some one may take cold from his defective work, pneumonia may set in, and death follow as the result. A man should mend a shoe as though his salvation depended on it. Another man is a bricklayer. In building the flues in a house he gets in a hurry and does faulty work at one place. It is near the end of a wooden beam. One night, years afterwards, there is an alarm of fire in the house. Two lives are lost. It is learned on examination that the fire originated in that defective flue. A spark found its way to the beam which lay near. Who was to blame? If a man be a carpenter, it is his business to build a house just as Jesus would build it if he were here. A Christian man engaged in this business is required to do the very best work that he can do at every place. If he does loose-jointed, rough, careless work, he robs God, and cannot atone for this neglect by making beautiful talks in the prayer meeting. The servant that sweeps the floor, dusts the room, and makes the beds should do the very best possible work. God is glorified here as well as elsewhere.

The railroad engineer gets in a hurry, reads his orders carelessly, crams them into his pocket without knowing their full meaning, while away he goes, almost at lightning speed, tunneling mountains, capping rivers, his mighty engine belching fire and smoke, while those on the train, and who have trusted their lives to the faithfulness of the engineer, are entirely ignorant of the awful death that awaits them. Another lightning express, bearing its freight of human souls, is racing around the curve. Almost quicker than thought the great engines collide, a mighty crash comes, then the midnight air is pitiable with the cries for help coming from the wounded and dying. Many lives are lost, and all because one man was not faithful in obeying orders. Faithfulness is required of us all in everything and in every condition of life.

If faithfulness characterizes us in our daily work, we should never become discouraged because the results are not what we had hoped. God does not demand results of us, but fidelity. Faithfulness is ours, results belong to God. "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." The faithful minister of the gospel of Christ is sometimes prone to grow discouraged because he does not reap a harvest from his sowing. This is a mistake; we should sow the seed and leave the harvest to the Lord. The farmer never knows what seed will bring forth other seed. In faith he sows, trusting the Lord to give the genial sunshine and refreshing showers, and in due time the harvest. So it is in the spiritual realm. "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." (Eccles. 11: 1.) "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." (Ps. 126: 5, 6.) Faithfulness will be rewarded in this life and in the life to come. God can overrule evil for good, and will at last give to all the faithful a crown of fadeless glory.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

GROUNDS OF CHRISTIAN UNION.

The Nashville American kindly published several articles for us on the evils and causes of denominationalism in religion. Some of these have been copied into the Gospel Advocate, including one on "Church Divisions," of May 31, 1900, which was not credited to the American. The contention was, denominational divisions are sinful and prevent the world believing in Christ, and so cause men to stumble down to eternal ruin. I maintained that men who study the Bible to learn what it teaches do not disagree about what the Scriptures teach. To illustrate this, I took up the points over which professed Christians disagree—the subject, action, and office of baptism, and the work of the Holy Spirit—and showed that on what the Bible teaches on these subjects all students of the Bible agree. The divisions have occurred over things not taught in the Bible, but introduced as articles of faith and practice in the church of God. Over these contention, strife, and division arise. Hence, the way to bring about the union for which Jesus prayed, and without which the world cannot believe the Father sent Jesus as his beloved Son, is to reject everything from the faith and practice of the church, save what is required in the Bible. "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it." As proof of this, it was presented that the commentaries of all denominations substantially agree as to what the Scriptures teach on all practical subjects; that the lexicons agree as to the meaning of all the words over which division has arisen; that all parties, Roman, Greek, Episcopalian, and the founders of the Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Methodist Churches all held that the primitive church practiced what the lexicons say the words mean; and that for fifteen hundred years after Christ all creed statements, parties, and writers agreed that immersion was taught in the Bible and practiced by the primitive churches, and that all commentaries, so far as I had found, of any time or church, say the scriptures bearing on that subject mean that persons are to be baptized into Christ unto the remission of sins, or baptism is the act of faith in which God has promised to forgive sins and acknowledge the believer a child of God; that none doubted that a true believer in Christ is a fit subject for baptism; and that infant baptism had its origin in the idea of infant guilt and damnation. Since baptism is the act in which sins are pardoned, without baptism the infant must be lost.

These are historic truths about which there is and can be no room for doubt. Hence, we asked if any one knew of lexicon, creed, or writer that did not teach as represented. We would thank him to present it, and asked the American to publish such. Friend W. A. Turner, who is a Methodist preacher, probably a presiding elder, replied in three lengthy articles to the positions, and, while controverting some things said, did not deny the facts as pre-ented or try to find lexicon, creed, or writer, as set forth. He maintained denominations are good and desirable, since they excite competition and activity among churches in gaining members; hence these rival parties were good and desirable. We presented the teachings of Jesus and the Holy Spirit on the subject of unity in Christ, and he so far modified his position as to say in his last article: "And in talking of this, however, we speak of things as they in best conditions ought to be, but of things as they are now, if the ideal cannot be realized, bring in the next best things possible under existing circumstances." So he recognizes the present division into parties is not what God would have them, but he thinks this the best attainable now. Well, why cannot we attain to the best now? God makes the attainment of the best possible to every soul who will accept it, in every country and time. The rule is a simple one, and each person can accept and act on it for himself. It is for each to give up his own preferences and do what God commands, adding nothing thereto, taking nothing from it. The only reason friend Turner cannot attain to the very best as it should be is, he is not willing to surrender his party and associations and come to God's way. God's way always brings to the best, "in the best conditions as they ought to be." He loves fidelity to his party better than he loves implicit fidelity to the will of God.

In this last article he admitted that "the ancient heathen, in a certain sense, attached the idea of immersion to the original word 'baptize,' as used among them," but insists words sometimes change their meanings, and claims "baptize" so changed its meaning. Does he think of the position in which he places Jesus and the Holy Spirit when he says they used a common word in a sense to it different from its ordinary meaning, so that it would have been impossible for them to understand him, and so introduce confusion and division?

After his last article the editor announced that must close the discussion, as he had not room for lengthy controversies. He was right in this, because there was no adherence to the proposition—that is, people understand the Bible alike, and divide over things not taught in the Bible. In conclusion we wrote the following note:

"The editor is right in closing the discussion. It originated thus: The proposition laid down was: Men who study it understand the Bible alike. The evidence is: Commentators of all denominations agree as to Scripture teaching. The lexicons agree as to meaning of controverted words, and for fifteen hundred years after Christ all churches, creeds, and writers agreed that primitive churches practiced according to these meanings, and they claim the right of the church to change these ordinances. So these words had not changed their meanings when used in the Bible. So neither the Catholics, Episcopalians, Luther, Calvin, nor Wesley claim pouring or sprinkling to be scriptural baptism, but a substitute for it, which they claim the right to make. I said I had not found a church creed or writer for fifteen hundred years after Christ that did not teach that baptism was the act of faith in which pardon is promised. Nor have I ever seen a commentary on the Bible of any denomination that does not say the language used on this subject means this. If these things be true, the differences among Christians have arisen not over what is taught in the Bible, but over things not taught in it. Why should not Christians of this day seek "things as they in best conditions ought to be," when God offers them on terms so easy and safe to man and honorable to God? Do what God commands, add nothing to, take nothing therefrom. I thank the editor for his kindness in publishing what I have written. I trust if any one offers example of lexicon's creed or writer's teaching different from the above, he will publish it.

DAVID LIPSCOMB."

I do not understand the editor to object to the presentation of religious questions and truths in the Nashville American, but to lengthy discussions over questions not clearly defined and adhered to, which must run into endless confusion and strife. The secular papers are opening their columns to the discussion of religious questions as they have not done heretofore, which I take as an omen for good. No question ought to be tolerated that cannot bear investigation and criticism. The religious press of to-day is more given to partisanship, misrepresentation, and one-sided unfairness than the secular press. The objections of infidelity, light and serious, ought to be heard and met. The Master did this; his disciple is not greater than he,

D. L.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

SISCO.

By request, I write of the death of Sister R. T. Sisco. Sister Sisco was a daughter of J. H. and M. E. Jordan, of Lewis County, Tenn.; was born on June 22, 1871; was baptized into Christ by Brother R. W. Norwood on July 29, 1893; was married to R. T. Sisco on August 14, 1894; and departed this life on May 16, 1900, aged twenty-eight years, eleven months, and six days. Their marriage was blessed with three children, two boys and one girl. This was the saddest scene our brother has ever witnessed. He knows how to appreciate the promises of Jesus now more than ever before. Brother Sisco has made himself useful in the church of God. He has been instrumental in bringing many to Christ. Our brother has the sympathies of a friend.

Lyles, Tenn. J. P. LITTON.

CUNNINGHAM.

Sister Mabel Ethlene Cunningham, daughter of Brother J. A. and Sister Mattie Cunningham, was born on November 25, 1880, and departed this life near Mount Pleasant, Tenn., on October 20, 1899, aged eighteen years, ten months, and twenty-five days. She obeyed the gospel at Little Lot, Tenn., when about fourteen years of age, and lived a very quiet Christian life for a girl of her age. It was my pleasure to meet her a number of times after she became a Christian, and I always found her to be the same quiet Christian girl, and her spirit has gone to God who gave it. She leaves a father, mother, a number of brothers and sisters, and numerous friends to mourn her departure; but they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, for we trust she is resting in the promise of Jesus. Her remains are resting in the graveyard at Dunlap, Tenn. May God bless the sorrow-stricken relatives who mourn her departure.

E. S. B. WALDRON.

BONNER.

Brother Thomas Bonner was born near Raleigh, N. C., on May 20, 1814. His parents moved with him to Tennessee when he was about three years old. They settled on Hickory Creek, in Warren County. I do not know at what age he obeyed the gospel. My earliest recollection of him was his serving as deacon in the church of Christ. He and his brother, Redding, who preceded him a few months to the grave, served together as deacons in the old Philadelphia church of Christ, at Verville, Tenn. I was much in the families of these two godly men. No man outside of my own family had more influence for good on my early life than these two men and their families. Their family discipline was of the best. Thomas Bonner moved to Texas in the fall of 1868. Soon after coming to Texas he lost his wife. He never married again, but kept his children together till they were grown. His life was such that he left an influence for good on those with whom he came in contact. He made his home, in the last years of his life, with his son, Owen, near Durango, Tex., where he died on April 20, 1900, lacking just one month of completing his eighty-sixth year. He was buried in the old Union grave-

No other aid so great to the housewife, no other agent so useful and certain in making delicious, pure and wholesome foods, has ever been devised.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

There are imitation baking powders, sold cheap, by many grocers. They are made from alum, a poisonous drug, which renders the food injurious to health.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

yard by the side of his wife, where a vacant place had waited his coming for thirty years. For him his children and grandchildren should not grieve. His life's work was finished, and, like a well-ripened sheaf, he fell before the sickle.

C. W. SEWELL.

HENRY.

Brother A. C. Henry, Jr., son of Dr. A. C. Henry, of Athens, Ala., was born on February 10, 1868; obeyed the gospel on August 19, 1885; and died on May 2, 1900, at the home of his father. Brother Henry was an invalid for eight years, but being in possession of that love that suffers long and is kind, he bore it all with Christian resignation. To the bereaved ones let me say: Weep not as those that have no hope. God has implanted emotions in the human heart; and instead of being a weakness, they are noble attributes, being one of the great sources of all virtue. From this source springs the sorrow caused by the death of the ones we love. As we stand by the forms of our dead, faithful memory recalls many incidents of the past in those days of peace and happiness which we spent in their society. This should be a source of much comfort to the bereaved ones, that he by a life of devotion was prepared to enter into a more sacred association than earth can afford. The body was laid to rest in the Athens Cemetery.

Cullman, Ala. THOMAS C. KING.
Other Christian papers please copy.

TOTTY.

By request, I chronicle the death of Sister Mabel Lee Totty, which occurred in Totty's Bend, Hickman County, Tenn. She was born on November 14, 1873, and died on March 9, 1900, being a little over twenty-six years of age. She obeyed the gospel at Haley's Creek about ten years ago, and I have often heard her referred to as a good girl. She frequently attended church at Graytown, Tenn., where I preached last year. During that year, with her own earnings, she purchased a book of sermons, and read it through; and while on her deathbed, after she became too feeble to read, she requested her mother to read it to her, one sermon after another, until the book was read through again. The last time I saw her, before she became too ill to leave her bed she said she thought that the end was near, but did not appear to be alarmed. Before her death she frequently expressed herself as willing to go. She left a father, mother, brothers, and one sister to mourn her departure. We trust that their loss is her eternal gain. May others imitate her example of piety.

E. S. B. WALDRON.

POWERS.

Death recently visited the vicinity of Una, Tenn., and claimed for his own one of its oldest and most esteemed citizens, Brother R. F. Powers, who was born on October 17, 1817, and died on March 27, 1900, having reached his eighty-third year. About the year 1865 Brother Powers obeyed the gospel, under the preaching of Brother Tolbert Fanning. He and his wife took great interest in Christianity—so much, indeed, that they often, in an earlier day, would have preaching in their own house, through which many of their neighbors obeyed the truth. I think Brother Powers was one of the truest and best Christian men of our time, and I firmly believe that there would not have been a church of Christ in that community to-day if it had not been for his Christian influence. Brother Powers was of a very happy nature. He was not easily provoked and was very kind and pleasant to all, and everybody loved and respected him. He never allowed a little child, even in rags, to pass him unnoticed. He attended well to his own business, and never meddled with the affairs of others, and he was never heard to speak ill of his neighbors. He was truly a friend of God and man. Though he is dead, he will live long in the memory of his many friends. We greatly sympathize with all the bereaved ones. May God bless and comfort them in this great bereavement. Well done, good and faithful brother; may you rest from your loved employ.

J. E. B. RIDLEY.

PERRY.

Again the death angel has visited our midst, and has taken from our little band of disciples at Bradyville, Tenn., our beloved brother, John L. Perry. Brother Perry was born on April 16, 1858, and calmly fell asleep on January 22, 1900, being forty-one years, nine months, and six days old. He was married to Amanda J. Bush on August 28, 1877, who, with one daughter and several sons, still survives him. He obeyed the gospel in November, 1895. By his earnest endeavor to do right and by his exemplary walk he had won for himself a warm place in the hearts of this people with whom he worshiped regularly. He was a devoted husband, an affectionate father, a kind neighbor, and an earnest Christian, always to be found at his post, ready to do his duty in any of the relations of life. A large number of friends and relatives were assembled to extend their sympathy and mingle their tears with those of the bereaved ones. An appropriate sermon was delivered by Brother W. L. Logan, after which the remains were laid to rest in Thyatira churchyard. To the sorrowing ones I would say: Weep not as those who have no hope. I would point the stricken wife and daughter to the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comfort us in all our tribulations. To the sons I would say: Give your hearts to Jesus and your obedience to your Heavenly Father, so that when the final summons comes you may all meet as an unbroken family circle around the throne of God, and there sing praises to him forever and forever.

J. P. CURLEE.

For Abuse of Alcohol, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. E. B. Davis, Dayton, O., says: "Very good results in cases of nervous debility from excessive drinking, and insomnia."

There is a politeness of the heart; this is closely allied to love. Those who possess this purest fountain of natural politeness find it easy to express the same in forms of outward propriety.—Exchange.

The woman who is most admired is not always the most admirable woman.—Selected.

The time spent in giving words of cheer—or, in other words, scattering sunshine—is not wasted.—Exchange.

JESSE FRENCH PIANOS

AND ORGANS HAVE BEEN RECOGNIZED AS THE MOST POPULAR INSTRUMENTS IN THE WHOLE SOUTHWEST FOR NEARLY THIRTY YEARS.

Our FACTORIES are among the LARGEST in the U.S. CATALOGS FREE

Jesse French Pianos & Organs

HOME OFFICE ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
Branches, Agents & Representatives in all Large Cities.

Fayetteville or Jerusalem—Which?

The following directory of churches, taken from a county paper, refers to Fayetteville, Ark. The reasons for giving the readers this directory will be brought out in the comments to follow:

“CHURCHES.

“First Christian.—Elder N. M. Ragland, pastor; services at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M., Sunday school at 9:45 A.M., and Juniors' Endeavor at 3 P.M., each Lord's day; Seniors' Endeavor Friday evening at 7 o'clock; and prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

“Cumberland Presbyterian.—Rev. F. H. Ford, pastor; services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. and Sunday school at 9:30 A.M.; prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30.

“Methodist.—Rev. Henry Hanesworth, pastor; services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. and Sunday school at 9:45 A.M.; prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30.

“New M. E. Church.—Rev. A. G. Hummer, pastor; services at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. every Sunday, except the third Sunday of each month; Epworth League at 6 P.M. every Sunday and Sunday school at 9 A.M. every Sunday.

“Episcopal.—Rev. J. J. Vaulx, rector; services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 4 P.M. and Sunday school at 9:30 A.M.

“Baptist.—Rev. H. Beauchamp, pastor; services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. and Sunday school at 9:30 A.M.; prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30.

“Presbyterian.—Rev. S. W. Davies, pastor; services each Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M. and Sunday school at 9:45 A.M.; prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7:30.

“Second Christian.—Rev. J. T. Hinds, pastor; services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and Sunday school at 9:30 A.M.; prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7 o'clock.

“St. Joseph's Church.—Rev. P. Bandidi, pastor. Mass and sermon every Sunday at 10 A.M.; vespers, benediction, and sermon at 7 P.M.; and catechism at 9 A.M.”

No doubt the editor who published the foregoing thought he was correctly representing the facts in the case. In the main he has correctly stated the case, for he has given just what the most of the preachers claim to be the facts. But editors often get their information from parties who either do not know whereof they speak or who wish to misrepresent matters. Sometimes the editor himself is just such a person, and writes from ignorance or a willingness to misrepresent. At any rate, the “Second Christian (church).—Rev. J. T. Hinds, pastor,” is a clear misrepresentation. As the writer is J. T. (not “Rev.” J. T.)

Hinds, he feels at liberty to correct the misrepresentation, whether it be intentional or otherwise.

I am neither “Rev.” nor “pastor,” and did not authorize the editor to so write me down. It is strange that any man who has read the Bible and makes any pretension to follow the meek and humble Man of Galilee will accept the title “reverend,” a word only applied to God himself. As to “pastor,” it is only necessary to say that there is no such term in the Bible. I reject it, therefore, as unscriptural. The plural “pastors” (Eph. 4: 11) clearly refers to the elders, as is shown by Acts 20: 17-28. Preachers should “do the work of an evangelist,” “set in order the things that are wanting,” “preach the word,” and not try to take the position that God has given to the elders. I am simply a preacher of the gospel and a member of the church of Christ. Having shown that my own name appears in the list without my authority or consent, and that the statements do not represent me correctly, I am ready to compare the religious state of affairs in Fayetteville with those in Jerusalem. Neither are the preachers of Fayetteville sinners more than others, for the same state of affairs exists all over the land.

It will certainly be conceded by all that the apostles and early congregations were examples for us. Especially will it be granted that the teaching and practice of the apostles form the standard by which we are to be governed. Will any one dare affirm that any such condition existed under the apostles' personal teaching as now? Certainly not. Then why do preachers try to justify and perpetuate something the inspired teachers never authorized?

Do you read anything like this in the Bible: “First Christian Church in Jerusalem.—Elder Peter, pastor; Sunday school at 9:45 A.M.; Junior Endeavor 3 P.M. Lord's day; and Senior Endeavor Friday at 7 P.M.?” Well, hardly. But some one says the term “Christian Church” is all right. It may be all right if rightly understood, but it is not in the Bible. To save time in making explanations and to avoid mistakes, it is best to say “church of God” or “church of Christ.” Peter did not have any Junior Endeavor Society or Senior Endeavor Society, either. I suppose he did not think them necessary or useful, or he would have had them. “But,” says another, “he did not have any Sunday school, either.” Then there is no authority for one. The modern Sunday school is a failure. The whole congregation should meet to study the “apostles' doctrine” as a congregation, and not as a separate institution. Did you ever see anything like this in the Bible: “Cumberland Presbyterian Church.—Rev. Paul, pastor?” You know you did not; for Paul is never styled “Rev.” nor “pastor,” and no such church is mentioned in the Bible.

Again: “Methodist Church.—Rev. James, pastor; New M. E. Church.—Rev. John, pastor; Episcopal Church, Rev. Thomas, pastor; Baptist Church.—Rev. Andrew, pastor; Presbyterian Church.—Rev. Philip, pastor; St. Joseph's Church.—Rev. Bartholomew, pastor.”

Who ever read anything about the pope, the rector, the pastor, mass, vespers, catechism, and endeavor societies in the Bible? Simply nobody, for the Bible knows nothing of them. But you can find all these things in the same chapter where you find reference made to the Christian Church, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, the Baptist Church, the Episcopal Church, and St.

Joseph's Church. Any one that has ever read his Bible through knows that the church we read of in the New Testament is never mentioned in such language. While the expression “Christian Church” may be explained to mean church of Christ, yet it is better to speak as the Bible speaks. It is often spoken of as the “church of God.” The “church of the first-born” is used by Paul, who also says “the churches of Christ” when referring to local congregations. Christ says: “My church.” Peter says: “If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God.” (1 Pet. 4: 11.)

But Peter, Paul, James, John, and the rest of the apostles all preached in the church of Christ; all Christians in their times were members in that church. Will any one say they preached for different denominations, as the preachers of Fayetteville do? We know they did not, for the denominations did not exist then. They never came into existence by apostolic authority. Christ says: “Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.” (Matt. 15: 13.) O that preachers might believe what Christ here says! It is enough to make us all tremble.

Again, we all know the apostles preached the same things—were “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.” Are the preachers of Fayetteville so? Nay, verily. Did Peter preach “baptism for remission of sins,” and John deny it? Did Paul preach that baptism was a burial, and James deny it? Did Thomas preach that infants should be baptized, and Philip deny it? Did Matthew preach “once in grace, always in grace,” and Andrew deny it? Did Thomas invite them to “the anxious seat to get religion,” and Bartholomew condemn it? Then did they all ignore their differences, come together in a protracted meeting, and at its close open the doors of their respective churches for the reception of such converts as wanted a church house somewhere? To mention such things

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Home of Swamp-Root.

as existing among the apostles is enough to make a man of faith blush with shame. Will such a state of things be approved by the God of heaven? Listen to Paul: “But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.” (Gal. 1: 8.) Let us solemnly consider these things in the fear of God. Which shall it be, Fayetteville or Jerusalem, men or God? Let us all be simply Christians, members of the church of Christ, and satisfied with what is written.

JOHN T. HINDS.

Fayetteville, Ark.

THE BEST PLACE

to buy your Suit, Hat, and Shirt for yourself and the boys is

Abernathy, Langham & Shook,

205-207 PUBLIC SQUARE.

SUCCESSORS TO W. A. LANNOM.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LANSUEUR, CASHIER.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

A Possible Danger.

"There is a possible danger in the consolidation of our missionary societies which needs to be guarded against. Indeed, the danger exists as matters now stand, and it would be much greater if the societies were all under one board of direction. We refer to an undue assumption of power on the part of organization. No one can truthfully accuse us of opposition to a strong government. We believe in such a government. In the hands of good and competent managers such a government is greatly to be desired; but nearly everything depends upon these managers. It is easy enough to drift the machine into a current where it will become a destructive force. Even as things exist there is a decided feeling of unrest among some of our most thoughtful men. The suppression of liberty usually comes about by slow and almost imperceptible steps. By surrendering a little here and a little there the time will come at last when liberty is completely throttled, and then it is too late to raise the cry of danger. Our society system is all right if it is carefully watched, but it is true in religious as in political matters that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Already there are not wanting signs of a certain danger. It may be well enough to indicate to the churches what they ought to give, and no one questions the perfect sincerity and good intentions of those who issue instructions from headquarters with respect to collections, etc.; but, all the same, this is precisely the road along which despotism comes into religious life. Closely related to this is the habit of the officials to patronize the men who readily respond to calls for help. Hence, a man must be somewhere 'in the swim,' so to speak, if he is likely to receive much recognition on public occasions from those who hold the strings of power. 'You tickle me and I'll tickle you' is the law of reciprocity in nearly all coöperative work."

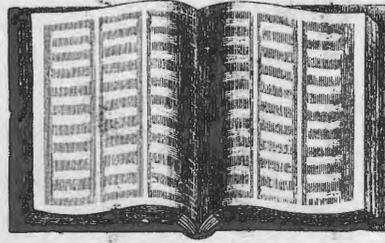

The above, taken from the October number of the Christian Quarterly, of Columbia, Mo., speaks for itself. It shows that even such a man as Dr. W. T. Moore is doing some thinking in regard to the mad rush which is being made among the "Disciples" toward combination, consolidation, and institutionism in religion. There is little need of comment on the above. Robert Southey has said: "Man is a dupable animal. Quacks in medicine, quacks in religion, and quacks in politics know this, and act upon that knowledge. There is scarcely any one who may not, like a trout, be 'taken by tickling.'" It is possible that the society managers have found this out. The writer desires to call attention to "other possible dangers" which confront the "Disciples." It will be remembered that about four years ago one of the churches in Cleveland, O., whose "pastor" was H. R. Cooley, admitted unimmersed persons to its membership. This caused a great stir among "our people." Dr. J. H. Garrison, one of "our leading men," in order to quiet the troubled waters in Zion, came forth with an editorial in his paper calling for a "suspension of judgment," as he said he did in Brother Lord's case. Why was there any need for a "suspension of judgment?" These unbaptized persons had been received by the church. This was not denied.

All this was the logical fruit of unscriptural teaching. Sowings have their reapings. As long as "our leading men" contend that the "pious unimmersed" will be saved in heaven so long will such things be likely to happen. Dr. Garrison has also taken quite an interest in what is improperly called "higher criticism," but what, in reality, is a mixture of materialistic philosophy, German rationalism, and the principles of literary and historical criticism common to all scholars. Dr. Briggs has answered, to his satisfaction, that troublesome question, "Where was higher criticism before it was?" by giving us parts of the treatise of Du Pin on criticism in general, written a hundred years before higher criticism was invented by Eichhorn. Paul says: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2: 8.)

If Dr. Garrison wants to do good, he ought to give his readers a short history of "higher criticism." Jean Astruc, a Frenchman, first published a book on the subject in 1753, but it never attracted any attention until about fifty years later, when Eichhorn, professor of theology at Gottingen, brought the matter before the public, admitting Moses as the author of the Pentateuch, but denying that he was inspired. Vater was professor at Halle, Knobel at Giessen, Rosenmuller at Leipzig, Strauss at Tubingen, Kuenen at Leyden, and De Wette at Heidelberg. All these and others became advocates of the "higher criticism," and, as a result, a large per cent of the graduates of these German universities for a hundred years left them confirmed skeptics. In these universities the professors are appointed by the secular power, the church having no voice. It matters little whether they are Christians, freethinkers, or infidels. From Germany these skeptical teachings spread into England, and Bishop Colenso and Dr. Samuel Davidson are examples of their poisonous effects there. Dr. Driver, the Hebrew professor at Oxford, England, is a German rationalist, and he long ago corrupted Dr. Briggs. Professor McGiffert, another Presbyterian, in New York, will be tried, Dr. Briggs and Dr. McGiffert are carrying the "higher criticism" to the Presbyterians; President Harper, of Chicago University, is supplying the Baptists with all they need; and Dr. J. H. Garrison and Dr. H. L. Willette are leading the movement among the "Disciples." The old devil is general manager of the entire procession. This is one of the most formidable assaults Satan has ever made against the religion of Jesus. He comes with a banner having the inscription, "Consensus Criticorum," hoping thereby to deceive even the very elect. His purpose is to rob Jesus of his divinity and destroy all the supernatural that is in the Holy Scriptures.

Paul says: "Now the natural [animal] man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged." (1 Cor. 2: 14, R. V.) He alludes to Greek infidels or agnostics here, but they are likely as capable of discerning spiritual things as German and American infidels. These "higher critics" are certainly a wise set of men. They see contradictions, impossibilities, and absurdities which they say "even the acutest reader cannot recognize." The man who is willing to set aside the authority of Jesus Christ in anything has that "skepticism of the heart" which Dr. Schaff alludes to in his church his-

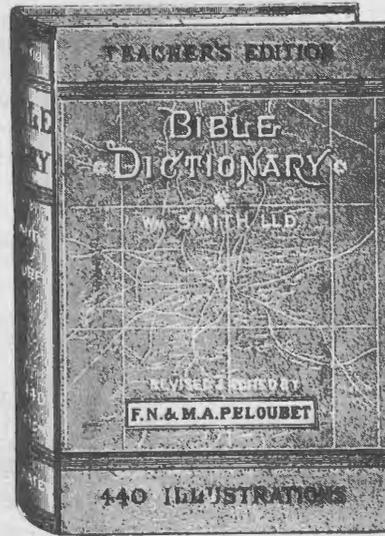

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

NO.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
33020	$ 25	Readers and Writers' Edition—
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	2	48
		Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather,
		White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather,
		White Pages Flexible	3	48
		Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography; natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

tory. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." J. M. BLAKEY.
Allensville, Ky.

Brother M'Caieb's Report for May.

Brother M., Lexington, Tenn., $2; Scott's Hill church of Christ ($9.08, less $4.71 handed to Brother S.), $4.37; Miss E. P., $1; Sister H. to my wife, $5. Total for the month, $13.37.

For India since last report to end of the month: West Union church of Christ, Monroe County, O., $10; Brother S., Phoenix, Ariz., $5; "Some Sisters," Tucker's Cross Roads, Wilson County, Tenn., $7.00; church of Christ at Smyrna, Tenn., $1.10. Whole amount from May to end of the month, $19.60. This, less twenty-six cents charges, was sent to W. E. Rambo, Dumoh, C. P., India.

The people of India are said to be starving at the rate of five hundred per hour. Letters addressed to Louisville, Ky., or Nashville, Tenn., will reach me. J. M. M'CALEB.

Southern Students' Conference of Y. M. C. A.'s, Conference of City Y. M. C. A. Workers, and Conference of Young Women's Christian Association, Asheville, N. C., June 15-25, 1900.—Reduced Rates via Southern Railway.

For the occasion of the Southern Students' Conference of the Y. M. C. A., Conference of City Y. M. C. A. Workers, and Conference of the Young Women's Christian Association, at Asheville, N.

C., on June 15-25, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from all points on its lines to Asheville, N. C., and return at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold on June 13, 14, 15, and 16, limited to return until June 28, 1900.

For further information, call on any agent of the Southern Railway.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc. SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
GLENCLIFF, TENN.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation. DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS. Colleges
St. Louis; Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any time. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

Sarah Freeman Farmer.

The Campbell Street church of Christ is called upon to mourn the loss of one of its most faithful and devoted members, in the person of Sister Sarah Freeman Farmer, who, on the morning of May 2, 1900, passed to her heavenly reward.

We are gliding away from the vale of time, We are gliding away o'er the sea, To the beautiful shore in a fairer clime,

How precious the faith, how inspiring the hope, and how enduring the love that bind Christian hearts together! Our beloved sister leaves a husband, one daughter, two sons, and one sister to mourn her departure.

The Work at Mount Pleasant.

I have been located at this place since the closing days of 1898. Business created by the phosphate interest has drawn a number of disciples here, who have been living in a scattered or unorganized state until recently.

denominations have built houses in which to meet. The Baptists secured control of the hall on Sundays, and from them we get the use of it, as stated.

There are enough persons claiming to be members of the church of Christ to accomplish much good in this community. By a faithful discharge of duty the church of Christ can be permanently planted here; but it will take courage, zeal, and hearts filled with love for the Lord and our fellowmen to succeed.

Believing that the Gospel Advocate would be of great benefit to us in stimulating us to greater efforts and in helping us to a better understanding of the truth, thereby fitting us better for the work before us, I send you a few names, some of whom, at least, I think can be induced to subscribe.

Before closing I wish to say that any preaching brother who may chance to come this way, on business or otherwise, should let himself be known to the brethren here, especially if he has time to arrange for an appointment to preach; or if any feel interest enough in the cause here, and have the time to spare from their work elsewhere, I assure them that an occasional preaching visit will be appreciated, because we feel that good can be accomplished in that way. It is our intention to arrange for a protracted meeting later in the year. J. A. CUNNINGHAM.

The boy who merely aims to get a living will never get more than that; a low aim cannot strike high.—Exchange.

- ARMSTRONG & McRELVEY Pittsburgh. BEYMER-BAUMANN Pittsburgh. DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh. FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh. ANCHOR } Cincinnati. ECKSTEIN } ATLANTIC } New York. BRADLEY } BROOKLYN } JEWETT } ULSTER } UNION } CHICAGO. SOUTHERN } SHIPMAN } COLLIER } St. Louis. MISSOURI } RED SEAL } SOUTHERN } JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia. MORLEY Cleveland. SALEM Salem, Mass. CORNELL Buffalo. KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE theorist and the advertising expert may proclaim the merits of ready-mixed paints, but the practical testimony of the men behind the brush proves that the most durable and economical paint material is Pure White Lead.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment.

Table listing prices for Music Edition (Boards and Cloth) and Word Edition (Boards and Cloth) in single and dozen quantities.

Send all orders to GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

THERE'S SAFETY FOR THE SHIPWRECKED IN HEALTH

Who trust to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures ninety-eight per cent. of all who use it. Old forms of disease, obstinate cough, weak lungs, spitting of blood, weakness and emaciation are perfectly and permanently cured by this powerful remedy.

"My wife had hemorrhage of the lungs," writes W. A. Sanders, Esq., of Hern, Mason Co., W. Va. "She had ten hemorrhages, and the people all around here said she would never be well again. But she began to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and she soon began to gain strength and flesh. After taking ten bottles she was entirely well. If any one doubts this, they may enclose self-addressed envelope with stamp, and I will answer."

Sic. persons are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free of charge. All correspondence strictly private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

1850 John Ramage & Son 1900

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES. TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL. HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES. Mail orders will meet prompt attention. Telephone 1047.

BELLS

Send for Bell Catalogue and Sample Bells. Write to Bell Foundry Co., Hillsboro, O.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED. CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING, COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

BLIMYER B. CHURCH BELL FOUNDRY CO. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

"Mode of Baptism."

On the night of April 15, 1900, Dr. J. M. Gill (Presbyterian), of Elkton, Ky., preached a sermon on the above subject at the Methodist Church in Allensville, Ky. The Methodist pastor stated that he "thought it proper to have Dr. Gill come and discuss the subject, in order that the young people might be instructed."

I believe it to be my Christian duty to correct some statements made for the further instruction of the young people. First, I will say that baptism is not a mode, but an action, and the Greek verb "baptidzo" expresses the action. This question, unlike some others, only has one side to it. The baptism which Christ commanded is an immersion, or burial, of the body in water. Sprinkling and pouring are not baptism at all. Any scholarly man knows this to be true. Jesus says: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) Dr. Wall says: "There is not any one Christian writer of any antiquity, in any language, but what understands it (John 3: 5) of baptism; and if it be not so understood, it is difficult to give an account how a person is born of water any more than born of wood." ("History of Infant Baptism," Vol. I., page 73.)

According to all laws of birth the lesser is born of the greater. Then how can a man be born of water when only a glassful is used? Dr. Gill only made two allusions to Greek literature, and they were about the mice and frogs in Homer. I suggest that he purchase Dr. Conant's book, called: "Baptidzein—Meaning and Use." In it he will find over two hundred examples of the use of the word in Greek literature. He said that "baptidzo" meant to sprinkle as well as to immerse, and the statements made by Dr. Carson, Dr. Gale, and Dr. Booth were rash statements. He quoted Dr. Carson often, but failed to tell his audience that Dr. Carson was educated at the University of Glasgow, was a profound scholar—at one time a shining light among Presbyterians, but later, on ascertaining the meaning of "baptidzo," he united with the Baptists.

He next quoted Ps. 77: 17 and 1 Cor. 10: 1, 2 to prove that the Israelites were baptized by having water "poured" on them while crossing the Red Sea. If he will examine the Hebrew word for "clouds," in Ps. 77: 17, and the Hebrew word for "cloud," in Ex. 14: 19, he will find they are different words altogether, and it may give him some trouble to prove that the cloud which rested above the Israelites was a rain cloud at all. Dr. Barnes says it was not. Josephus says this rain, thunder, lightning, and flashes of fire came down on the Egyptians, not on the Israelites. (Josephus, in "Antiquities," Book II., chapter 16.) If he had known the meaning of the middle voice in Greek and known further that "ebaptisanto" (1 Cor. 10: 2) was in that voice, I do not believe he would have made this argument at all.

I now quote from Canon Evans, in "Bible Commentary," and he will see that this eminent man differs with him: "The two phrases 'were under the cloud' and 'passed through the sea' seem to prefigure the double process of submersion and emersion in baptism. The analogue, however, is not to be pressed in the details, for neither rain from the cloud nor wave from the sea wetted the marching sons of Israel." ("Bible Commentary," 1 Cor 10: 2.) The Israelites had a cloud above them and a wall on each side. These enveloped them. To some this would look like a burial. Considered as a mere physical act, their cattle, wagons, and servants must be included. Will the Doctor contend that their cattle were baptized by pouring? Paul is viewing it as a voluntary moral and spiritual act.

He next made quite an argument on Mark 1: 9, about Jesus being baptized in the river Jordan. He said a great deal about the word "in." If he will look at the original, he will see that the preposition "eis" is used, which means "into," and then his argument is ruined. He claimed that "much water" at Enon (John 3: 23) should be rendered "many waters," and yet that does not help him; for the best commentators say there were probably many pools there, and he has to suppose that they were too shallow for immersion. He stated that Paul was baptized standing up. Paul says: "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death." (Rom. 6: 4, R. V.) The "we," of course, includes Paul. When Paul says he was "buried" I am willing to take his word and conclude that Dr. Gill is mistaken. He said a great deal about the jailer, but never mentioned his being baptized the same hour of the night. He also quoted Acts 2: 38, omitting entirely the clause "for the remission of sins." He quoted, "so shall he sprinkle many nations" (Isa. 52: 15), as part of the passage the eunuch was reading, and claimed the eunuch was sprinkled.

Dr. Gill certainly ought to know that the word for "sprinkle," in the Septuagint, means to "startle" or to "astonish." I quote his distinguished brother, Dr. Albert Barnes, and leave the issue between them: "It may be remarked that whichever of the above senses is assigned it furnishes no argument for the practice of sprinkling in baptism. It refers to the fact of his purifying or cleansing the nations, and not to the ordinance of Christian baptism; nor should it be used as an argument in reference to the mode in which that should be administered. 'The kings shall shut their mouths at him'—or, rather, 'kings;' it does not refer to any particular kings, but the idea is that he would be honored by kings." (Barnes' "Notes on Isaiah," Vol. II., page 264.)

He next endeavored to show that it was impossible for the three thousand to have been immersed on the day of Pentecost. On April 16, A.D. 404, Chrysostom immersed three thousand people in Constantinople, dipping every person three times. If one man can immerse that number in a day, certainly all the apostles could have done so.

He next quoted 1 Cor. 1: 17 and tried hard to make an argument. I suggest to him to examine the notes of Canon Evans, also A. Barnes, on this passage, and I do not believe he will try that argument again.

He next quoted Rev. 19: 13 to show that the participle "bebammenon," from "bapto," was translated "sprinkle" in the Revised Version. While "bapto" is not the word which our Savior used for baptism, he cannot prove that "bebammenon" is in the text. Does the Doctor know that Tischendorf discovered the Sinaitic Codex manuscript, at Mount Sinai, in 1859? If he does, he knows that "perinenammenon," a word that means to "sprinkle," is used, and not "bebammenon" at all. He has no argument whatever here.

I would like to quote a great many authorities, but have not the space. If the Doctor will come over and divide time with the writer some time, the young people will learn a good many things about baptism. It brings a feeling of sadness over the writer to hear the plain teaching of the Scriptures perverted in this way. May God help the man who preaches such sermons as this one was, is the sincere wish of the writer. J. M. BLAKEY, Allensville, Ky.

"The Land of the Sky."

In Western North Carolina, between the Blue Ridge on the east and the Alleghanies on the west, in the beautiful valley of the French Broad, two thousand feet above the sea, lies Asheville, beautiful, picturesque, and world-famed as one of the most pleasant resorts in America. It is a land of bright skies and incomparable climate, whose praises have been sung by poets and whose beauties of stream, valley, and mountain height have furnished subject and inspiration for the painter's brush. This is truly "The Land of the Sky," and there is perhaps no more beautiful region on the continent to attract pleasure tourists or health seekers. Convenient schedules and very low rates to Asheville, via Southern Railway.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chatsnooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville Tenn.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY

F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market Street,

NASHVILLE, - - TENN.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

JESSE FRENCH

PIANO & ORGAN CO.

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN

PIANOS & ORGANS

WE MANUFACTURE Starr, Jesse French, and Richmond Pianos,

AND HAVE EXCLUSIVE SALE FOR Steinway and Knabe Pianos, and Jesse French and Packard Organs.

PIANOS FOR RENT.

240 & 242 N. Summer Street, NASHVILLE, - TENNESSEE

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197 Chicago, Illinois

Send us a new subscriber,

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.
DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 50 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in the U. S., Canada, and Europe.

Ferd. T. Hopkins, Prop., 37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

Help the Homeless.

I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate our plan for doing a most excellent work out here in Texas, and I wish to appeal to all to cooperate with us in this work. Mr. S. D. Lary, of Texarkana, Tex., has donated to us two thousand five hundred dollars' worth of land, upon which we desire to establish an orphans' home and an industrial school, which shall be under the management of the members of the church of Christ.

One hundred acres of this land are to be given, five acres each, to twenty men who will improve their land and cooperate in maintaining an industrial school. Mr. Lary will rent or sell cheaply to these twenty men just as much land as they will utilize well. He has about twelve hundred acres of good land, in one body, at the junction of the Transcontinental and Texas and Pacific Railroads, five miles west from Texarkana, all of which he will permit us to use for this enterprise. This land will produce cotton and corn well. It is well adapted to fruit, grape, berry, and vegetable culture.

We expect to have the entire orphans' home and industrial school operated on the industrial plan. We desire this orphans' farm to contain three hundred acres. We wish to put Bermuda grass, cattle, and poultry on a part of this farm; orchards, vineyards, and berry vines on much of it; and devote considerable time to vegetable raising. In this way we open up a line of profitable work by which children soon make themselves self-supporting. This farm will be managed by a committee of suitable directors, composed of good men, practical farmers, who have the condition of homeless children at heart, whose aim will be to develop the farm well and make it produce just as much as possible.

The orphans' home shall receive all the homeless children that it can support, and while it will be supervised and managed by the members of the church of Christ, it will be open to homeless white children from all sources, regardless of whom or what their parents may have been. Should these farmers to whom Mr. Lary gives land need to employ labor, they will be expected to take poor young men who desire to work their way through school and board them for a few hours' work daily. These young men will be required to do only enough work to pay actual expenses. The children occupying the orphans' home will also be expected to work certain hours daily.

Now, brethren, we want you to help us to establish this orphans' home. We mean to erect a good, commodious school building and two good, commodious dwelling houses on the land given by Mr. Lary for the orphanage. One of these dwelling houses shall be a home for girls; the other, for boys. A good Christian family must occupy each of these homes and care for the children. We wish to keep these children in school ten months every year.

I am enlisting some good teachers for this school who favor the industrial plan, one of whom is a graduate from the Sam. Houston Normal College, of Texas; another, a graduate from a Tennessee college. Both are fine men and experienced teachers. Perhaps we may not be able to open school before next January, but by that date we hope to be able to care for one hundred orphan children. I expect, also, by that date to have located twenty farmers who will patronize the school and give board and employment to young men who wish to work their way through school. As this will all be operated on the industrial plan, perhaps school will be open only five or six hours daily; then pupils and teachers may all work or study during the balance of the day.

This plan of work came to my mind some time ago, from having seen so many children who needed a Christian home and just such environments as we hope soon to have here, and from hearing so many poor young men express anxiety to work their way through school. I am sure that this is a good, economical way to do a fine line of mission work. We expect to open a Bible department in this school for the benefit of young men who desire to preach the gospel. One of Texas' soundest and best preachers has promised to teach in this department as soon as he is needed.

All the money that you send here for this work will be devoted to establishing and maintaining this orphans' home. These farmers who purchase more land and patronize the school and the young men who attend the school will do so at their own expense. I have secured the promise of several hundred dollars, with payments to begin immediately, with which we will buy more land for the orphans' farm until it contains three hundred acres, and build these two dwelling houses and a commodious schoolhouse. All this will be property of the church of Christ, to be used permanently as a home and school for homeless children until they are reared and taught how to work, and are educated. All money will be used economically. A few thousand dollars will buy and build all that is needed at present; then we will increase the capacity of the institution as necessity demands.

I am actuated in this undertaking wholly from a philanthropic feeling, and by no personal interests whatever. I do not expect to teach in the school nor occupy a home belonging to the children, to care for them, but I have determined to sacrifice much of my time in behalf of the homeless and poor. I have a splendid executive board of noble, good brethren behind me, and some good preachers have agreed to cooperate with me in pushing this work onward. I have not the promise of one dollar as a reward for my time or services, but I shall see that the effort succeeds and that the homes are occupied by good people and the school supplied with competent teachers.

Mr. Lary makes his donation as a foundation for us to work upon, and he promises to do much more if we will take hold and move the work along. Within about thirty minutes I explained my plans to him and asked

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools.
TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

Letters and Sermons of

T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
 Nashville, Tenn.

Price $1.50

what he would donate. Without one moment's hesitation he proposed the above amount in land to the orphans' home and to those farmers who cooperate as explained. Cannot every reader of this decide to do something at once in this work? Take up a collection at your next Lord's day meeting for the East Texas Orphans' Home, and forward it immediately. Any amount will be highly appreciated.

Brother John W. Morrow, 1222 Walnut street, Texarkana, Tex., is our treasurer. Direct money orders to him or to T. E. Tatum, Texarkana, Tex. Should you send a post office money order, draw the order for Texarkana, Ark. Texarkana is in both Texas and Arkansas, with one post office built across the State line. People in Texas have mail directed to Texarkana, Tex.; those in Arkansas, to Texarkana, Ark. Post office money orders are made payable from abroad at Texarkana, Ark.

For further information concerning our work, write me. The progress of the enterprise will be reported in the Gospel Advocate often. Help us now.
T. E. TATUM.

Summer Resorts.

Many delightful summer resorts are situated on and reached via Southern Railway. Whether one desires the seaside or the mountain, the fashionable hotels or country homes, they can be reached via this magnificent highway of travel.

Asheville, N. C.; Hot Springs, N. C.; Hale Springs, Tenn.; Roan Mountain, Tenn.; and the mountain resorts of East Tennessee and Western North Carolina—"The Land of the Sky;" Tate Springs, Tenn.; Oliver Springs, Tenn.; Lookout Mountain, Tenn.; Monte Sano, Huntsville, Ala.; Lithia Springs, Ga.; and various Virginia springs; also the seashore resorts, are reached by the Southern Railway on convenient schedules and at very low rates.

The Southern Railway has issued a handsome folder, entitled, "Summer Homes and Resorts," descriptive of nearly one thousand summer resorts, hotels, and boarding houses, including information regarding rates for board at the different places.

Write to C. A. Bencoter, A. G. P. A., Chattanooga, Tenn., for a copy of this folder.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Quick and Convenient Schedules East via Southern Railway.

Passengers from Middle and West Tennessee points will find the Southern Railway to be the most convenient and desirable route to all Eastern cities. Double daily service is afforded from Nashville on following schedule: Leave Nashville at 9:30 P.M., arrive at Washington on second morning at 6:42 A.M.; Baltimore, 8 A.M.; Philadelphia, 10:15 A.M.; New York, 12:43 P.M. This train is operated via Chattanooga and Asheville, and passes through that beautiful and scenic portion of North Carolina poetically termed "The Land of the Sky." Elegant Pullman drawing-room sleeping car is operated from Nashville to New York without change, and dining car service is afforded east of Salisbury. Another train leaves Nashville at 3:30 P.M., connecting at Chattanooga with train leaving Chattanooga at 10 P.M., arriving at Washington at 8:50 P.M.; Baltimore, 11:35 P.M.; Philadelphia, 2:56 A.M.; and New York, 6:23 A.M., and carries Pullman sleeping car and day coaches from Chattanooga to Salisbury, and from Salisbury to New York. For further information, apply to your nearest ticket agent.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1/2 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.
BLAINE CO. Box 2, Concord Junction, Mass.

CAPABLE WOMAN WANTED for a permanent position, $60 per month and all expenses. Experience unnecessary.
CLARK & CO., 234 S. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 25.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JUNE 21, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.

J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.

232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

A Talk About the Old Testament	386
The Christian Race	386
Association	387
Odds and Ends	387
"Are We Married to Christ?"	388
Miscellany	389
Queries	390
Home Reading	391
Origin of the Church of Christ	392
1 John 3	392
"Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God, and His Righteousness"	393
Smithianity; or, Mormonism Refuted by Mormons	394
In West Tennessee	395
Jottings	395
General News	396
Obituaries	397
Double-minded. No. 4	398
Who Ought to Labor in China? No. 2	399
West Tennessee Notes	399
Church News	400
Kansas Notes	400
The Work in Eastern Texas	400

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR cooperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

A brother sends me a private letter from another brother in which I find these words:

"Brother Srygley's affirmation in the clipping you sent me, that the missionary societies are denominational organizations, is of no value."

Of course it is "of no value" to those who are in favor of denominations and denominational organizations; but to those who believe that all denominations and denominational organizations are unscriptural, antiscritptural, wrong, and ought to be abandoned and abolished it is of considerable consequence.

Brother H. W. Smith, of Franklin, Tenn., writes as follows:

"I have just read your article in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, called out by the extract from Brother Snodgrass' letter to Brother Klingman, and I want to say I indorse it. You say that 'independent evangelists in Tennessee, as well as in Japan, have to hustle for a living.' Yes; and one of the reasons why they have to do so is because some sound preachers and loyal congregations go at the Lord's business in the wrong way. Instead of the loyal congregations coming together on the Lord's day to edify each other, teaching and being taught, and sending the evangelist out into the regions beyond to preach the gospel to those who know it not, they substitute the Sunday school to teach children and hire a pastor to feed the flock, often on skimmed milk, diluted milk, or something like milk, but usually nothing but chalk and water, with no nutriment in it—just a make-believe—thereby starving the flock to death and paying the pastor one hundred dollars a month, more or less, for such food. Now, if the real feeders of the flock would do the work the pastor does, or, rather, the work the Lord ordained they should do, they could save the one hundred dollars per month and with it have the gospel preached in three or four different parts of the country at the same time; but instead of doing this, if those in the three or four different parts of the country get to hear the gospel, some hustling evangelist has to go at his own charges and do the best he can. If he does not get a support, he will have to make tents some way to splice out his living. The evangelist who holds meetings all of his time for old, established congregations at from eighty dollars to one hundred dollars per month says he is walking by faith when there is not one word in the New Testament to warrant it. Instead of the churches and such evangelists sounding the word out, according to the Lord's plan, they are sounding it in, according to a human plan. 'And the people love to have it so,' and the vast majority of the so-called 'sound' ones in such congregations are satisfied with such a plan, and do not want to be disturbed. Of all the things so-called 'sound' churches need to-day is to be disturbed to such an extent that they will inquire for the old paths, and walk therein. I do not believe we ought ever to be satisfied with our lives. If there is anything wrong (which there is likely to be), we should right it, and then strive day by day to be more and more like our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Modern pastors get but little of my money, but men who go at their own charges and men who have worn themselves out hustling for a living and other poor are the sort that get it. O what a fearful account I believe many of the children of God will have to meet in the judgment for paying their money to those they should not and withholding it from, or robbing, those to whom they should give it to aid in preaching the gospel to the whole world! For what is it but robbery when we take that which belongs to another and give it to those to whom it does not belong? May we all stop and think before we go farther, right about, and go to doing the Lord's will in the Lord's way. God being my helper, I intend this summer (though feeble in body) to preach and write some along this line."

There is nothing wrong about "the pastor system," so far as I can see, except that it is not in the New Testament. Anything else that is not in the New Testament is as bad as "the pastor" or "the pastor system." If people deliberately decide that they will not follow the New Testament in religion, I do not know that it makes any difference where they go or what they do. It is rebellion against God to determine not to follow the New Testament, and there is nothing worse than that. Unless the effort to follow the New Testament is entirely abandoned, there will be serious trouble in many unexpected places within the next few years.

Brother Daugherty, of Florida, sends me a copy of Present Truth, in which I find a marked article aimed at "the Campbellites" in general, the Gospel Advocate in particular, and the New Testament incidentally. After quoting several passages from the New Testament which teach that sinners are saved, or justified by faith, the belligerent article proceeds as follows:

"Thus it is clearly taught that an alien sinner becomes justified by faith. But the question arises: What shall he believe in order to be justified from all past sins? Some ministers will tell an alien sinner to 'believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God,' and if the man says, 'I do believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God,' then he is told to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Now, we boldly deny that there is any such inspired authority in the Bible. That oft-repeated passage found in Acts 8: 37, even if it belonged there, is the language of an uninspired eunuch. Philip simply said: 'If thou believest with all thine heart.' But he did not say: 'If you believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.' The eunuch knew but little of the plan of salvation, and was thus inquiring the way. But we deny the authority for this verse 37. It is not in any Greek manuscript in the world, so far as we have been able to ascertain. We have six or seven translations of the Bible in our library, and only two of them contain verse 37; the other five leave it out entirely. Even the 'Campbellite' translation of the New Testament, translated by George Campbell and Philip Doddridge, and introduced with copious notes and annotations by Alexander Campbell, and sold by their 'so-called' Gospel Advocate office in Nashville, Tenn., leaves out verse 37 entirely. One of their ministers confessed to me that he knew it is an interpolation, and still, the very next day he used it as divine authority in hearing a confession. The Revised Version leaves it out entirely, and says in a note in the margin that some ancient authorities insert verse 37 in whole or in part, but it does not intimate that a single ancient manuscript contains any part of it. Now, we ask in all candor: Is it honest to use it as divine authority when we know these facts?"

I make no issue with this brother or with anybody else on the proposition that people are saved, or justified, by faith. The New Testament plainly teaches, and I firmly believe and constantly preach, that people are saved, or justified, by faith, and that they cannot possibly be saved, or justified, any other way than by faith. The only point I make is that no one is saved, or justified, by faith that will not be baptized. Inspired men in New Testament times told people to "repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38); "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22: 16); "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Faith that will not do this will not save, or justify, any one. I never rely on Acts 8: 37 to prove anything, because that verse teaches nothing that is not taught with equal clearness in other places in the New Testament. What shall sinners believe in order to be justified from all past sins? That is a plain question, and the answer to it is plain in many places in the New Testament besides Acts 8: 37. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 15, 16.) Believeth what? The gospel, unquestionably. What is the gospel? "I declare unto you the gospel, . . . how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." (1 Cor. 15: 1-4.) Those who believe this "believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God" and those who "believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God" believe this. No one can believe either without believing both. What shall sinners believe in order to be justified from all past sins? It is easy to find a plain answer to this question without going to Acts 8: 37. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Acts 16: 31.) What is it to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." (John 20: 30, 31.) "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 9, 10.) Suppose Acts 8: 37 is an "interpolation," what then? It teaches nothing that is not taught in other places in the New Testament. To leave out that verse does not get rid of what it teaches, because it is taught in so many other places. If that verse is an "interpolation," it necessarily expressed the practice of Christians and churches at the time it was interpolated, else its insertion would have been protested as contrary to the teaching and practice of churches and Christians. An "interpolation" is nothing but a departure of a copyist from the document he is transcribing. Such departures in ancient documents, copied by hand, correspond exactly to our typographical errors. There are no doubt many typographical errors in the Methodist Discipline, for instance. Such errors attract little attention and cause no trouble so long as they teach nothing that is not taught in other places in the Discipline; but if by a typographical error a publisher of Methodist Discipline should interpolate a few vigorous passages of scripture which do not teach Methodist doctrine, there would be trouble over it. So also if a copyist had interpolated something in Acts 8: 37 that was contrary to the teaching of the rest of the New Testament and against the doctrine and practice of the early churches and Christians, it would have caused serious trouble; but the fact that it was interpolated without protest, if indeed it was interpolated at all, and suffered to remain without objection, conclusively proves that it harmonizes exactly with the rest of the New Testament and perfectly agreed with the doctrine and practice of the early churches and Christians.

Our Contributors.

A Talk About the Old Testament.

Henry Hardshell: "You promised, friend Faithful, to talk to me of some instance in the Old Testament where the commands of God were obeyed under difficulties. I was much interested in what you said of Saul of Tarsus obeying the gospel in the face of adverse circumstances. I am anxious to hear more along that line of thought. It is encouraging. I am more and more inclined to the opinion that the good Lord will always open up a way for every willing heart."

Frank Faithful: "Perhaps it were best to say something more in general about the uses of the Old Testament. You will understand, Henry, that the gospel in fact, as we have it revealed in the New Testament, is not to be found in the Old Testament, except in the promises pertaining to the coming Messiah, along with the types and shadows contained in the sacrifices and offerings of the Patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations. These all have more or less bearing upon the plan of salvation and upon the work and worship of God as it is required in the New Testament. With this understanding we may study the Old Testament with great profit. Old Brother Philip S. Fall, deceased, who was contemporary with Alexander Campbell, whose words were so precise the reporters used to say his utterances, word for word, as they fell from his lips, made the best of copy for the press, used to say: 'The Old Testament is the lexicon of humanity.' This was a wise saying because it does portray the human heart under every conceivable condition in life, from the king upon his throne to the beggar upon the streets or highways. As it takes in these two extremes, it includes between them all different shades and grades of mortals. This was indeed an apt name to give to the Old Testament. In this respect there is no book equal to it. Shakespeare comes nearer in his variety of characters than any other."

Henry H.: "I fear, friend Faithful, you are too much disposed to glory in your old Campbellite brother, Fall. I would rather hear something from old Paul."

Frank F.: "You may think more of him, Henry, when I tell you he was at one time a very prominent Baptist preacher. He showed me the license he received when ordained to preach. Giving up Baptist customs, he did not adopt the name 'Campbellite,' but accepted those names in the New Testament for the people of God which are approved of the Lord. There were objectionable names they were called even then. Paul confessed to Felix that after the way which the wicked Jews called 'heresy,' so worshiped he the God of his fathers (Acts 24: 14), but clearly disowned the name 'heretic.' So Brother Fall and others could say; 'After the way which some choose to call "Campbellism," so worship we the God of our fathers.' But let it be understood by all that I do not call it that. By the way, Henry, this good old brother was sentimental enough to be very fond of flowers. He had a well-selected variety in his small conservatory very near his private study. I remember on one occasion he gave me a few flower seeds just received from London, England, to take to my mother. The packet of seeds was inscribed with a long botanical name of the flower which, when it blossomed, was one of the largest and most beautiful morning-glories I ever saw. Just at that time our cornfields were full. No, Henry, I do not desire to glory in men, although it is a very common thing to do, and we are expressly commanded not to do it. I think it right to remember with pleasure this good man, who was social and kind and always took pleasure in expounding, in private as well as in public, the word of God, which I believe he loved. I sometimes imagine I see him, erect as an Indian, with one hand behind him, speaking of 'the tender mercies' of God. He could pronounce the word 'mercy' with extraordinary correctness, which was supported by the best dictionaries. A Virginia brother said he would willingly ride ten miles every Sunday to hear Lindsay Coleman say: 'O Lord.' The remembrance of each of these two brethren makes me think of Ps. 37: 37: 'Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.' In many ways old Brother Philip S. Fall seemed to be like his sister in the flesh, Mrs. Charlotte Fanning, who carried out the desire of her noble husband, T. Fanning, to found the Fanning Orphan School for girls, where they could learn the practical duties of life as well as literary matters."

Henry H.: "I see you like to talk about your great men and women, but I would rather hear something from old Paul on the subject."

Frank F.: "All right. Take this statement from Paul on the same subject: 'For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.' (Rom. 15: 4.) This is a very broad statement, Henry, upon the same theme. 'Whatsoever things' means anything and everything in the Old Testament was written for our learning, though we never lived under the former dispensations. The word 'aforetime' here means before the time in which Paul was then living. The reference is without doubt to the Old Testament, a right view and understanding of which have an important bearing upon that Christian quality of 'patience,' 'comfort,' and 'hope,' all of which are so essential to the formation of a true Christian character. So you see, Henry, Paul was quite as strong in his statement about the uses of the Old Testament in teaching and enforcing Christian principles as our good old brother I have mentioned. The teachings of Christ, his apostles, and evangelists abound with varied references to the events of the Old Testament for the purpose of illustrating and impressing the doctrines of the New Testament. In this respect its uses and applications are seemingly inexhaustible." G. LIPSCOMB.

The Christian Race.

"Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." (Heb. 12: 1, 2.)

In this language the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews clearly draws an analogy between the races of the Greco-Roman period and the race that Christians are to run. So popular did these races become that the emperor who did most to promote them was most beloved of his subjects. For the accommodation of the great concourse of people that witnessed these, as well as other popular sports of the same period, immense amphitheatres were erected. Gibbon tells us of the amphitheater of Titus, magnificent in its appointments, and so large that it would accommodate eighty thousand spectators who sat as a "great cloud of witnesses," looking upon the performances in the arena below. The atmosphere was freshened by numerous fountains and laden with aromatic odors that came from every clime, while overhead were hung canopies of richest cloths which sheltered them from summer's suns and angry storms. For days before the time appointed for the races the runners carried heavy weights, but when the contest began these were thrown aside, and being thus made free from every hindering cause, each ran with all his might toward the goal. Only one received a prize—he who first reached the goal. "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize?" (1 Cor. 9: 24.) No contestant for the prize could run where he pleased and as his own judgment directed, but must come within the inclosure and submit to the uniform rules and regulations governing all such races.

Heb. 11 is a great lesson on faith and graphically recites some of the wonderful achievements of ancient worthies who put their trust in God. These, whose names are so many and whose deeds are so numerous that the writer says "time would fail" him to tell of all, constitute a host of credible witnesses to the truth that God "forsaketh not his saints," but is "a shield unto them that put their trust in him." Being dead, they yet speak. "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." (Heb. 11: 7.) "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called: accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure." (Verses 17-19.) "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." (Verses 24-26.) The examples of their lives are beacon lights which illumine the pathway of our faith which is in Christ Jesus, encouraging us to "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

We enter upon the Christian race by obedience to the divine rules and regulations governing such entrance, and these rules and regulations are found in the New Testament Scriptures. The race course is in the church, outside of which no one can successfully run. Coming into this, we must "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants of sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto ye were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." (Rom. 6: 17, 18, R. V.) This, by the help and grace of God, prepares one for running, but he must run as God requires. This can only be done by faith in God, for "without faith it is impossible to please him," and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Running by faith is "looking unto Jesus," our strength and support, who is ever ready to give us help and encouragement.

It is to be run with patience. "But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." (James 1: 4.) "And to temperance [add] patience." (2 Pet. 1: 6.) "Patience" means that we are to run all the time, as best we can; not to run a while and rest a while. Who rests often cannot win the prize.

Another feature to be considered is the great sacrifice that Christ made in order that we, though unworthy, might be allowed to run upon God's highway of holiness. "Heir of all things," by whom also God "made the worlds," and without whom "was not anything made that was made," he "was made flesh, and dwelt among us." He became poorer than the foxes, for they had holes in the earth to cover them; poorer than the birds of the air, for they had nests; but he had "not where to lay his head." He was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not." Patiently he bore the cross, meekly he submitted to indignities, and so great was his love, so forgiving his spirit, that as the angry mob about the foot of the cross railed upon him, telling him, "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross," he yet prayed: "Father forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Amazing pity, grace unknown,
And love beyond degree!

It is through this poverty and suffering and death that we are made rich in the favor of God. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." (2 Cor. 8: 9.)

Only one in the Grecian races received a prize, but all the faithful in Christ Jesus will be rewarded. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2

Tim. 4: 7, 8.) The crown of righteousness is unlike the crown of olives that the Grecian victor received, in that it "fadeth not away." "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (1 Pet. 5: 4.) "Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air." (1 Cor. 9: 25, 26.) "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith," may we so run "the race that is set before us" that we may obtain the "crown of righteousness" that "the righteous Judge" will give "at that day" to all who "love his appearing."

R. H. M'LAURINE.

Association.

The subject is stale. In every reader you find stories and lectures with the moral: "Shun evil association." Everybody knows that "birds of a feather flock together," and the corollary: "Tell me with whom you go, and I will tell you what you are." Such sayings could not live on in the mouth of the people if there were no truth at the bottom of them. It is always wise, to be sure, to accept axioms with some caution, for often their generalization is imperfect; but these above mentioned hold forth a vital truth, a rule with few exceptions.

It is not my desire to write here a tiresome essay on the subject nor to treat it exhaustively. If I can make an old theme more impressive to some reader by shedding a bit of new light on it, I shall be satisfied.

The little germ in the sprouting seed draws at first on the nutritive milk of the grain for its support. Then it grows. The blade expands, the stalk shoots forth, the ear comes, and the fruit ripens. Whence did it all come? The germ of life started with nothing, but now it possesses a body more than a hundred times larger than the seed in which it formerly dwelt. Where did the body come from? Why, you say, the sunshine made it to grow, and the air and the rain, and if you pull it up, you find a bunch of roots whose special business it is to find and select nutriment from the soil. To its surroundings the plant is indebted for its body; more than that, largely, the kind of body it has. The same is true of the animal. Not long ago I read an interesting paragraph in a text-book on "Physiology." I copy as follows: "Bone, like all the other tissues of the body, is constantly undergoing a change, old material being withdrawn to make room for a fresh supply. This change has been shown conclusively by experiments. If an animal be fed with madder—a red coloring matter—for a day or two, the bones soon become tinged; then, if the madder be discontinued for a few days, the original color returns. If, however, this material be alternately given and withheld at short intervals, the bone will be marked by a succession of red and white rings. In very young animals all the bones become colored in a single day; in older ones a longer time is required. The process of waste and repair, therefore, is constantly taking place in this hard substance, and with astonishing rapidity."

It was once estimated that the whole body was thus completely renewed once in the course of seven years. Now, this change has been ascertained to occur much oftener. Look at the tiny babe and the full-grown man, and note the difference in their size. Think also of the immense amount of material that is daily used and daily discarded in the tearing down and building up of the body. Whence does it all come? From without. Of a necessity the body must in some way partake of the nature of the material of which it is built. Look once more at the babe. It is neither good nor bad, neither wise nor foolish. Its mind and soul are blank, as far as we can discern. Then look at the scholar, the giant in mind; the criminal, a giant in evil; the true Christian, a giant in spirit, in the likeness and image of his Lord. Whence did this growth, this increase, come? The answer must again be: From without. There was nothing to start with, save a germ and a principle of life. The rest has been drawn from the surroundings. The inner man partook in nature of the material with which he was fed. So do we necessarily depend on our surroundings for growth, and they make us what we are.

A young man with no evil heart leaves his home, and among the strangers he is thrown into wicked associations. It is strange, sickening food that he finds in those surroundings, and his soul refuses to touch the poison. If he is wise, he will flee to a more healthy clime. Woe to him if he sits down among them! The wickedness at first appalls; but the sin, "seen toq often face to face," he first endures, then pities, then embraces. This is an old story, and may be read in the annals of all peoples since Adam. Neither has God neglected to warn us of this reef, lest, with the best of intentions, we should make shipwreck there. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." (Ps. 1: 1, R. V.)

With more emphasis does the apostle Paul hold forth this lesson: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." (2 Cor. 6: 14-7: 1.) They must not be yoked with the children of the devil; no fellowship, communion, concord, or agreement must exist between them. Why not? Can the animal eat madder without its bones becoming tinged? Can a Christian be under the steady influence of association with sinners and his soul be not tinged?

I will not here undertake to discuss how far the passage last quoted should apply—whether or no it includes partnership in business, secret societies, and wedlock. It is plain enough; and, as to the wise, so to those anxious to obey and please their Lord, a word is sufficient. But this brings up another question: Did not Christ himself associate with sinners? How, then, did he escape the pernicious influence of such association? The same question could, with equal pertinence, be asked of all his true disciples, both now and then. If he was a friend of publicans and sinners, they that follow him must needs be the same. God never intended that Christians should be hermits; although they are not of the world, even as he is not of the world, yet they are here, and in a certain relationship to their fellow-men, which God does not mean to destroy. (1 Cor. 5: 9, 10; 7: 17-21.) These very relationships by which we are forced to come in contact with the world are made the means of the world's salvation. Every Christian is essentially a savior of his fellow-men. Salt saves. "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." Any Christian that has lost his saving influence is ready to be cast out. The leaven in the meal and the saving salt are both representative of his influence, and in each case there is direct contact with the material that is to be acted on. So the Christian enters into close contact with the world, and in so doing he must influence them unto salvation. Remember this, brother, when you deal with your fellow-man. So has God appointed it.

Strangely enough, herein lies the secret of the Christian's salvation from the contaminating influences of the world. A friend of mine was going to a strange city, in all probability to be thrown among the influences of the world, to whom I made the following speech: "You are going among the people of the world—people refined and intelligent, proud and wicked; you fancy yourself strong enough to withstand their influences, but, take my word on it, you will fall with them. There is one hope only. If you go among them intending to hold your own, you will fail and die; if you put yourself on the defensive, you are lost; but if you let your banner float and go among them as a Christian and attack them, you will be saved. In so doing 'thou shalt both save himself and them that hear thee.' They may hate you and persecute you for such work, but, for a good thing, they cannot defile you. You may not be able to convert even one, but certainly they will let you alone. If you are in earnest, they will fear you, and will not show the cloven foot in your presence." Would they sin in Christ's presence? Did they try to lead him into their ways? Nay, for he came among them to save them.

But we must live on something. If we do not draw the substance of our food from the worldly soil and atmosphere, whence shall we get it? Where is the nutriment that will build us up? Where is the source of our strength? It is God—our association with him, his words, his thoughts. Two things bring us into connection with him—his word and prayer. On his word we feed and thrive, and nothing else can build up the Christian. We must eat God's word.

I am using Christ's figure. God gave the wandering Israelites bread from heaven. But now, says Christ, "I am the bread of life." He went farther: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have not life in yourselves. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." Should we wonder that the man who lives on such food should partake of the nature of Christ? The Jews did not understand, but to his disciples Jesus gave this much explanation of his strange speech: "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life." (John 6: 63, R. V.) When many left him his apostles clung to him. "Lord to whom shall we go?" said Peter; for "thou hast the words of eternal life." (Verse 68.)

There is our food; there is our support. Let no man think he can be a Christian without it. Of all impossible things not one is so impossible as living a Christian without a continual feeding on the word of God, for we must associate either with God or the world, and if God does not influence us with his thoughts and words of truth, the falsehood of the serpent must invariably beguile us. As the food, so is the man; and this explains the downfall and eternal death of the many that began with brightest hopes, and the success of the many that began in weakness, fear, and trembling, and died triumphant, full-grown men and women in Jesus Christ. Let us live of the life-giving word that is able to save our souls and give us an inheritance among them that are sanctified. Read it, study it, meditate in it, act it out. So shall you grow and be blessed.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

Odds and Ends.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." (1 John 3: 2.)

When a house is being built the scene presented is not an attractive one. Some one might ridicule the building and builder, saying: "He promised a beautiful building. How much beauty is there in that pile of mortar, boards, and skeleton frame?" But the builder replies: "Wait until the work is finished, and then look at the completed building. It is not fair to judge the work before it is completed."

Neither is it fair to judge the Christian life by imperfect followers of the Savior. The work of grace is yet incomplete. The Spirit of God is yet at work on the structure, but it is not yet finished. Wait till God's work is complete and that imperfect life flashes back the glory and beauty of the life of God's Son, and then there will be no disposition to criticize or find fault.

"Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." (Col. 2: 2, 3.) An Arabian story tells of a young prince, who, having squandered his patrimony in dissipation, was directed in a vision to dig up the floor of his chamber, and, doing so, discovered an underground apartment. On exploring this he found an urn, and, opening the urn, discovered a key. This set him looking for the lock to which the key belonged: and, having at last discovered the lock on a secret door in the wall, he opened another chamber containing eleven statues of pure gold and a pedestal for a twelfth, with an inscription bidding him search for the remaining statue. Even so each blessing of God reveals another one beyond, by revealing the need of another. So it has been all along the course of life; one experience has led to another, and each succeeding one has developed new demands upon the "goodness laid up," and new and ever rich revelations of that goodness.

"But the very hairs of your head are all numbered." (Matt. 10: 30.) The sun—just think of it!—is eight hundred and sixty thousand miles in diameter. The weight of the sun is more than seven hundred times all the planets put together. I go to the lily and say: "Is not that great orb too much for you—seven hundred times the weight of all the planets put together?" The lily smiles me to shame. I go to the wheat, as you see it to-day on its fragile stem, trembling at every breeze, and I say: "Eight hundred and sixty thousand miles in diameter and seven hundred times the weight of all the planets put together—is not that too much for you?" And the corn sings and laughs me off the field. Then I go to the daisy and the rose, and I say: "Is not all this weight and this fierceness too much for thee?" All they say is: "Your shadow is the burden; move on!" No, no. The sun is the supreme orb, vast beyond our conception, terrible; yet it is toned down and tempered, and paints the flowers as no painter can paint, and coaxes into greatness and nourishes into perfection. It is the life of their life, and the fountain of their glory. So with the Sun of righteousness that riseth with healing in his wings. God's grace and goodness are over all of his works.

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6: 24.) You know that among Jews and heathen the altar afforded asylum to those accused of crime, so long as they clung to it. This regard for the altar prevailed in Greece as well as elsewhere. Certain Athenian conspirators fled for their lives to the temple of Minerva, where they were safe so long as they remained. Megacles persuaded them to stand trial, but to retain their right of protection by tying a string to the shrine of the goddess, and holding on to it and unwinding it as they left the temple. This they attempted to do, but as they were passing the temple of the Furies the string broke, and so, losing their connection with and privilege of asylum, the crowd, rushing upon them, cut them to pieces. In like manner perish those who seek to maintain their connection with Christ, and yet wander away from him, attempting to hold by the slightest means the blessings of Christianity, and at the same time seeking those things which pertain to the world. (See Josh. 24: 15.)

I kept my money to insure me ease,
I saved my strength for length of days,
I shunned the sad
To keep me glad,
And won some heartless praise.

My brother perished for my surplus bread,
My feeble sister fainted by the way,
As proud I strode
Along the road,
"I'm safe," I used to say.

Money has not secured me ease,
There is no joy in length of days.
Would I had fed,
Would I had led,
The weak in their hard ways!

Weights.—"Lay aside every weight." (Heb. 12: 1.) "Casting all your care upon him." (1 Pet. 5: 7.) "Cast thy burden upon the Lord." (Ps. 55: 22.) Casting away his garment, he came to Jesus. (Mark 10: 50; John 11: 44.) They left their nets and followed him. (Matt. 4: 10.) "They forsook all." (Luke 5: 11.) "He left all, rose up, and followed him." (Luke 5: 28.) "Forgetting those things which are behind." (Phil. 3: 13.) "No man that warreth entangleth himself." (2 Tim. 2: 4.) "Put off the old man." (Col. 3: 9.) "Cast off the works of darkness." (Rom. 13: 12.) "If a man . . . purge himself from these." (2 Tim. 2: 21.) "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; . . . and if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee." (Matt. 5: 29, 30.)

Why am I a Christian? (1) Because "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners"—1 Tim. 1: 15; (2) because "the Son of God . . . loved me, and gave himself for me"—Gal. 2: 20; (3) because "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin"—1 John 1: 7; (4) because "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son"—1 John 5: 11; (5) because "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"—Mark 16: 16; (6) because "God . . . hath also given unto us his holy Spirit"—1 Thess. 4: 8; (7) because "there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus"—Rom. 8: 1; (8) because "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord"—Phil. 3: 8; (9) because "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God"—Rom. 8: 28; (10) because "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me"—Phil. 4: 13; (11) because "he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee"—Heb. 13: 5; (12) because "the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen." (2 Tim. 4: 18.)

"Even As."—"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father . . . is perfect." (Matt. 5: 48.) "Forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Eph. 4: 32; Col. 3: 13.) "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church." (Eph. 5: 25.) "Walk, even as he walked." (1 John 2: 6.) "Purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3: 3.) "Righteous, even as he is righteous." (1 John 3: 7.) "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." (John 17: 14.)

Weep not for him on Calv'ry's station,
Weep only for thy sins;
View where he lay with exultation,
'Tis there our hope begins.
Yet stay not there thy sorrows feeding
Amid the scenes he trod;
Look up and see him interceding,
At the right hand of God.

Franklin, Tenn.

GEORGE GOWEN.

"ARE WE MARRIED TO CHRIST?"

A brother in Mississippi asks the following questions, and requests that they be answered through the Gospel Advocate or by letter:

Question: "If we are not married to Christ when we become Christians, what right have we to wear his name?"

Answer: We do not wear his name. His name is Jesus. "And thou shalt call his name Jesus." (Matt. 1: 21.) But why do we wear the name "Christian?" Certainly not because we are married to Christ, for the marriage of the Lamb is yet to come. (Rev. 19: 7.) The word "Christian" is a derivative word, derived from the word "Christ." Does the wife take the husband's name or a name which is derived from his name? If I were married, I should certainly expect my wife to wear the name "Smith" (as common as it is), and not "Smithian," a name derived from my name. A Christian is a follower, or disciple, of Christ. "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." (Acts 11: 26.) If we are married to Christ when we obey the gospel, and for this reason should wear the name "Christian," why were those who had obeyed the gospel from Pentecost to Antioch never so called? We should wear the name "Christian" because it is the new name given by the God of heaven which is a better name than "sons and daughters." (Isa. 56: 5; 62: 2.) A Mohammedan is a follower of Mohammed; a Christian is a follower of Christ.

Question: "What right have we to call the church by his name unless she is married to him now?"

Answer: We have no right to call the church by any name only the name given in the Bible. We read of the "church of God" (1 Cor. 1: 2), "the churches of Christ" (Rom. 16: 16), and "the church" (Acts 2: 47); but we nowhere read of a "Christian Church."

Question: "What right has she to bear fruit if not married to him? Please explain the latter part of Rom. 7: 4."

Answer: The church is represented under the figure of the vine and its branches (John 15: 1-6), and as such should bear fruit. (Gal. 5: 22, 23.) "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." (Rom. 7: 4.) Paul says that they "should be married" and that they "should bring forth fruit." If "should be married" refers to the future, then "should bring forth fruit," as a result of marriage, also refers to the future. Yet the church, as the vine and branches, is bearing fruit to-day; but as the result of marriage she is bearing no fruit, for the marriage of the Lamb is yet to come. (Rev. 19: 7.)

G. D. SMITH.

Hornbeak, Tenn.

The passage in Rom. 7: 4 shows plainly that when they died to the law they were married to Christ. They died to the law that they might be married to Christ, and that when married to Christ they might bring forth fruit to him. The church is represented as the wife and Jesus as the husband. (Eph. 5: 22.) The disciples are children of God and must have had a mother. Publishing these relations to the future is hurtful. It leads to much error, too, when a figure is used to illustrate one point of likeness to try to make the things correspond in all points. Because the union with Christ is likened to a marriage in one point, to argue it must be like it at all points is misleading. A marriage with Christ may represent the first union, and yet not represent the other relations. It might not imply we must wear the name of Christ as a wife wears her husband's name; yet it is taught by other scriptures we are to be baptized into his name, put on his name, and walk worthy of his name.

The church was married to Christ by each person entering into Christ, and so becoming a member of his body. Jesus frequently used an illustration to point out one particular quality or relation of the church or of our relations to God. To make the illustrations apply in other points is to do violence to the teaching of the Savior and lead into error. Because the acceptance of Christ in one point is likened to a marriage does not imply that the relations to Christ conform in all points to the marriage relation. The same people that are said to be married to Christ or to constitute his wife are in other places called "the children of God," "the brethren of the Lord." If the relation of children must be conformed to in all points, they could not be called brethren nor be said to be married to him. We are sons of God; we are the brethren of the Lord; we are married to him and must bear children to him. These relations are all represented in our relations to Christ, and are present, not future.

D. L.

It has been well said that the model Christian is not met every day; that, in fact, he is hard to find, as all professed followers of Christ have still lingering in them traces of imperfection, notwithstanding the claims of many to entire sanctification. If a model should be found, some unknown writer has set down the following among the traits he will probably be found to possess: (1) He avoids the appearance of evil and tries to honor God in everything he does; (2) he never says, "I pray thee have me excused," when called upon to help in Christian work; (3) he loves God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and his neighbor as himself; (4) he is a man who always tries to do his best, no matter whether he thinks he is watched or not; (5) he is never satisfied with himself, but is always satisfied with his Savior; (6) he believes in the promises of God, and when he sees trouble coming he plants his feet squarely upon them; (7) he doesn't occupy a whole seat in a railway car while a woman with a baby in her arms has to stand up; (8) he is a man who does not sit on a store box and whittle while his wife is carrying water to do a week's washing; (9) he doesn't get his back up and want to leave the church whenever he finds that he cannot have his own way about everything; and (10) when he prays for the accomplishment of a good work that it takes money to bring about, he is willing to put his hand in his pocket and pay his part of it.—Our Young Folks.

Often the dearest subject of the heart is least referred to, and stony grief is silently borne. Think not that one suffers not because his grief is not made known. The grief pangs of a broken heart are deeper and more ineradicable when such grief can not find relief in tears. The heart longs for the sympathy of companionship, which, if not forthcoming, becomes seared as if with a red-hot iron. A word of encouragement, a cheerful, kindly word, spoken to the grief-stricken one in season, may save that one for future usefulness; left unspoken, it may send that one broken-hearted to the grave. In this vale of tears human kindness to one another is as the milk from Canaan. Kind words—what a world of meaning is held in them!—Boys' Lantern.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother F. D. Srygley came home sick last week. He lacked one meeting of completing the work he had laid out to do in Arkansas.

Brother J. O. Blaine, of Portland, Tenn., was in the city last week, attending the Tant-Oakley debate. He reports the church of Christ as in fairly good condition at his place.

Brother W. L. Logan, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., was with us much last week. He moderated in the Tant-Oakley debate. He has made the reputation of being an excellent moderator.

Under date of June 12, 1900, Brother Robert H. Boll writes: "I began a meeting here (Dupont, Ga.) last Sunday. We are having rainy weather, and I know not, therefore, whether prospects are very good for a good meeting."

Brother A. G. Freed, of Henderson, Tenn., was in to see us one day last week. He has just closed a very flourishing session of his school, and reports the prospect for next session as being very fine. We are glad to note the success of the school. Brother Freed preached at Baldwyn, Miss., last Lord's day.

Brother J. M. McCaleb makes the following announcements for July: "The Lord willing, I hope to speak at the following places in Tennessee in July: Columbia, July 1 (Sunday night), 7:30 o'clock; Dark's Mill, July 3, 7:30 P.M.; Fairview, July 5-7; Carter's Creek church of Christ, July 8, 11 A.M. and 7:30 P.M.; on July 11 I will begin a meeting at Forty Thicket, Hickman County; and on the fifth Lord's day I will begin a meeting at the Salem church of Christ. I would like to hear from the brethren at these points."

Brother E. A. Elam writes from Meaford, Ontario, Canada, under date of June 9, 1900: "Brother McQuiddy: I read with interest your articles generally, but the one on capital and labor is worthy of special mention. I read it with a great deal of interest. It is true and practical. I trust it will do a great deal of good. Brother Lipscomb's article on creeds is true and worthy of a wide circulation. These are not the only good and worthy articles in the paper, by any means. I think I have never seen the Gospel Advocate better than it is now, upon the whole. The editors never wrote more vigorously and more clearly than they do now. You made a slight mistake in your notice of my trip to Canada. I only attended a 'mass meeting,' or 'June meeting,' at Smithville, during which I preached several times. Others spoke also, especially Brother W. D. Campbell, of Toronto. He is a solid, good man and a strong, clear speaker. He is doing a good work with the Brunswick Avenue church of Christ in Toronto. He is an evangelist, not a pastor. He takes his turn only in speaking for the congregation at the morning service when the church meets to break bread. Others open the meeting, read, pray, and exhort, and he with them in turn delivers a short exhortation. He preaches and works at some mission point in the afternoon and at still others through the week and preaches for the congregation on Sunday evenings. Various members from different congregations met with the Smithville congregation on June 2, 3, and 4, and sung, prayed, read the Scriptures, preached, and exhorted one another—

'only this, and nothing more.' Brother Campbell continued the meeting a few days. I went from here to St. Catharines, where Brother D. T. Sterling, one of the Nashville Bible school boys, lives and works. I preached there three nights to good audiences. On Friday night I preached at Brunswick Avenue church of Christ, Toronto, to a large audience. These are earnest and zealous congregations. With the godly elders of various congregations, Brother Keffer, and other tried ones, and the younger preachers growing up in this province, all contending for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints, it seems quite apparent to me that the humble church and gospel of Jesus, with God's own appointments, are gaining rapidly the ascendancy over what is called 'organized effort' or 'progression.' Brother S. M. Jones is much liked in this country, and is doing a good work. It is encouraging to work with these congregations because they ask for the old paths and love to hear the truth preached, without mincing. Like many in our country, some could and should do more toward spreading the gospel; but they are growing in grace in this particular as well as in other ways."

EDITORIAL.

Walking by faith excludes boasting.

One must love the truth before he can receive it.

The greatest persecutors of Christ have always been found among his professed followers.

Christ is just as much alive now as he was when he walked among men on earth. "The word of his grace" is just as much to be heeded now as when by word of mouth he said unto Peter and Andrew: "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men."

It is never too late for God to forgive. It may be too late, however, for man to be forgiven. He may move so far down the current of sin that his heart becomes hardened to every influence for good, and thus he is unable to repent and turn to God for forgiveness.

Salt water does not satisfy thirst; the more we drink of it, the thirstier we become. Neither do worldly honors gratify worldly ambition; the more received, the more wanted and sought after, until the soul becomes sick in its craving for that which never gratifies it, but only helps to hasten its destruction:

When the government sends an ambassador to another country, so long as he is faithful to his trust, so long will the government stand by and support him. Just so with those who engage in the service of Christ. He will give them strength for every battle, and sustain them in every true effort to serve him.

An old boatman called one of his oars "faith" and the other "works." When he pulled on "faith" only or "works" only the boat made no progress, but "faith" and "works" together propelled the boat across the stream. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only."

It is said that Napoleon once being exposed to great danger, a company of his soldiers rushed around him and received into their own bodies the leaden messengers intended for their general. They loved their leader enough to die for him. If in our service to Christ it should become necessary for us to lay down our lives for him, how many of us would be willing to do it?

It is a beautiful thing to know that there is room in heaven for all. "In my Father's house are many mansions." God requires, however, that we shall live in humble obedience to his divine will in order to inherit a place in "the city of our God," and there is no invitation so broad as the one which invites us into his service: "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The keeper of the lighthouse keeps the great reflectors free from dust and everything that would prevent giving the brightest light to the weary mariner as he enters the haven of home. So should the Christian keep his life bright and spotless, that his "light may so shine" that those who are adrift upon the ocean of sin may be led by that light into the safety of the church, safe from the storms that rage without.

"In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah, king of Judah, came this word from the Lord, saying, Thus saith the Lord: Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; keep not back a word." (Jer. 26: 1, 2, R. V.) No man has the right to keep back a word of God's law from the people. To do so is to steal from them the bread of eternal life.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." This is a beautiful passage. Imagine a waif, without home or friends, hungry and suffering; a good man sees his condition, adopts him, calls him his son, and makes him an heir to all his wealth. So, man, in sinning, brought death upon himself. He was without hope; none could rescue him from the depths to which he had fallen. Unworthy of consideration, God saw his pitiable condition, reached out a helping hand, and, through Christ, lifted him to the exalted position of sonship with him. Is not this wonderful love? Should it not stimulate us to purer and nobler lives, to greater zeal and service in the cause of him who hath so exalted us?

Ahab and his father's house had forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and had followed Baalim. For this they incurred the condemnation of Elijah and a manifestation of the wrath of God; yet when Elijah presented himself before Ahab, the latter asked: "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" There is also trouble in spiritual Israel, and those who trouble the church do as Ahab did—accuse God's faithful ones of causing it. It is the wedge with the force applied that splits the log; and it is the innovation with the power behind it that, driven into the church of God, dishonors his Son and disrupts the body of Christ. This self-same spirit becoming established, chafing under the reproach of the faithful, exclaims: "You have troubled Israel; you have divided God's church!"

Hezekiah, though numbered among the good kings of Judah, nevertheless at one time was lifted up with pride. He had been sick, and, in answer to his prayers, God cured him and extended his days fifteen years. Berodach-baladan, king of Babylon, heard that Hezekiah had been sick, so he sent letters and a present to the king of Judah. Hezekiah was flattered with the royal notice and showed the messengers all the wealth of his kingdom. For this Isaiah reproved him, and prophesied that not only this wealth should be carried away, but that his posterity also should be taken captive. God blesses us, the world flatters us, we are lifted up with pride; but misfortune comes and humbles us; at least we call it "misfortune," but that which humbles us before God is fortune, because it causes us to return to him.

What would you think of one who, becoming a citizen of this country, should then cease from work and expect to reap the blessings of faithful citizenship? You would not only think him to be foolish, but you would know that he could not enjoy the country's blessings. There are many who have obtained citizenship in the kingdom of Christ who by their lives seem to say: "We have nothing to do; we are saved from our sins." If you are thus living, you are deluding yourself and are making a fatal mistake. Obedience to the gospel in order to salvation from past sins is but the beginning of the Christian life in which we are to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." How may we grow in his knowledge unless we study his word? How may we grow in his favor unless we labor for him? "Wherefore, let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ, and press on unto perfection; not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the teaching of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." (Heb. 6: 1, 2, R. V.)

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

If you need anything in the way of first-class printing, we would be glad to have your orders. We are sure we can please you.

If you want first-class song books, send us your orders at once. "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Gospel Praise," and "Voice of Praise" are all first-class books. Give these books a trial.

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is not yet quite ready for delivery. Our presses have been so crowded with work that we have not been able to complete the book. We feel sure that our readers and customers will be patient with us, for we are doing our best to fill all orders. Send us your orders, so that you may receive a copy so soon as the book is out. This is a very valuable book, and promises to have a very wide circulation. Price, $1.50 per copy.

The shape note edition of "Gospel Praise" is now out and ready for delivery. All orders that we have received for the board binding, shape note edition, have been filled. This book has been very highly commended by all who have examined it. We believe it to be the best hymn and tune book on the market to-day, and only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, which are arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating the purchase of new song books, you will make a mistake if you do not examine this book.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I desire a favor of you. Will you please state through the Gospel Advocate whether or not Paul was a Roman? In so doing, give an explanation of Acts 22: 25-27; 21: 39. There is to me a seeming contradiction in these two passages. I shall appreciate your say on them.

A. O. COLLEY.

Paul says he was a Roman citizen; he also says he was a Jew, of the tribe of Benjamin, which means though of Jewish birth, he or his parents had acquired Roman citizenship, just as Jews now become citizens of England or America, but are still Jews.

Brother Lipscomb: I heard a sermon, not long since, in which the idea was advanced that Christ died of a broken heart, and that he was not slain; or, rather, that the world's burden of sin which Christ bore was so great that his heart was broken under it, and that he died from that cause, and not through the instrumentality of the Roman soldiery. This seems entirely wrong to me, as Christ himself said he was to be "slain," the apostles say so, and all prophecy points that way. The only scripture quoted to sustain the position was a passage in John to the effect that Christ was to lay down his life of himself, and that no man was to take it from him. Will you do me the favor to answer this either through the Gospel Advocate or by private letter?

Charleston, Miss.

E. D. DINKINS.

No doubt Jesus felt deeply the sorrows for the sins of the world, but he was crucified, and died of the crucifixion. He willingly gave himself to die to save man is all the passage from John. He was not compelled to die against his will.

Brother Lipscomb: I heard one of our preachers say, a few days ago, that no man was ever commanded to be baptized for anything except the remission of sins in the Bible. He referred to Acts 27: 38, and said that we must understand other scriptures by this one on the subject of what baptism is for, which I think is right; but is it so that a man is commanded to be baptized for the remission of sins, and nothing else? Did Paul command the twelve at Ephesus to be baptized for the remission of sins or for the purpose of getting into the name of Christ? (Acts 19: 4.)

Underwood, Ala.

JOHN A. BENSON.

Acts 2: 38, in the Revised Version, says: "Be baptized . . . unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The reception of the Holy Spirit is a purpose for which they were to be baptized. The commission commanded baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. "Only they had been baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 8: 16, R. V.) "They were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 19: 5, R. V.) "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." (Rom. 6: 3.) "Were ye baptized into the name of Paul?" (1 Cor. 1: 13, R. V.) "Lest any man should say that ye were baptized into my name." (Verse 15, R. V.) "Were all baptized unto Moses." (1 Cor. 10: 2.) "Were we all baptized into one body." (1 Cor. 12: 13, R. V.) "As many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27, R. V.) It will be noticed that I have quoted from the Revised Version, and it is clearly set forth that the end or office of baptism is to put the believers into Christ, and in Christ forgiveness of sins and all the blessings of the child of God are received and enjoyed. It is not scriptural to exalt one command or blessing of God above others, but to give each the place God has assigned it.

Brother Lipscomb: In 1 Cor. 12: 28, I read: "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." In Eph. 4: 11-13, I read: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith." Again, in 1 Cor. 13: 9, 10, I read: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Now, in Acts 20: 27, I read: "For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Now, I want to know if when Paul had declared all the counsel of God, or, in other words, if when the apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors had preached the gospel to every creature under heaven, if that which is perfect did not then and there come and if that which was in part was not then done away. Now, I understand "that which was in part" to be the apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors, and "that which is perfect" to be the gospel preached to every creature under heaven; and that the apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors had finished the work that God called them to do and made it perfect. So we now have only homemade evangelists and pastors, without any authority from Christ or his apostles. God, through the Holy Ghost, has made the elders of the church overseers, teachers, and feeders, and left no place for the evangelist or pastor. If I have got this down wrong, please correct me, and oblige.

Sulphur Springs, Tex.

T. J. STROTHER.

It required all the teachings of God to make that which is perfect, so that which was perfect did not come until revelation was completed. Then the miraculous gifts, which gave only a partial revelation, would be done away. Evangelists as gifted persons ceased; but uninspired persons did evangelize in the days of the apostles, and must do so yet. Every Christian in his sphere is expected to evangelize. For a more complete statement, see Gospel Advocate, of June 7; article, "Did elders belong to the Inspired Class of Teachers?"

Brother Lipscomb: I write you this letter for the purpose of soliciting your investigation and a report of the same in the Gospel Advocate of the following scriptures, which were introduced by D. A. Leak at this place in favor of instrumental music in church worship, which I regard as the strongest position taken by those who contend for the use of organs in the worship. Please investigate them at as early a time as you can conveniently. First, Leak said the temple service included instrumental music; that Christ went in there and worshiped, drove out the money changers, but said nothing about instrumental music. He also said that here would have been a fine opportunity for Christ to have condemned it. Leak said it was put into the worship by divine authority, that God approved of the same under the reign of David and Solomon, and cited Ps. 81: 1-5, 12; 87: 7; 150: 4; 2 Chron. 29: 25; 1 Cor. 14: 7; and Col. 3: 16, in which he claimed the word "psallo" carried with it the idea of an instrument. He also said that the apostles worshiped in the temple where instruments were used, and did not condemn them, therefore the authority in the New Testament for using them. I desire that you answer these scriptures in full, as at some future time it may be desirable to have them put in tract form.

Center, Tex.

J. S. STEPHENSON.

I cannot think that Leak is so ignorant of the distinction between the old dispensation and the new dispensation as to believe that because a service was commanded by God, under the Jewish law, therefore it is binding or allowable under the Christian law, and I am surprised that any Christian at all familiar with the Scriptures should be troubled by such a plea. The old covenant was done away with, taken out of the way, with all of its services, and the new covenant brought in. Nothing is done now because it was commanded under the law of Moses, but because it is required in the law of Jesus. This principle is so thoroughly discussed in every debate on infant baptism and church membership that there is no excuse for mistake about this. The chief argument in favor of infant baptism is: Infants were members of the Jewish Church, so they are members of the church of Christ. There is but one way to meet that argument. That is: Jesus took the Jewish law out of the way, nailing it to the cross; and the ministration written and engraven on stones was "done away." (Read 2 Cor. 3: 1-11.) The whole Jewish law was repealed and everything in it taken out of the way, and nothing contained in the law is binding on men unless it is repeated in the law of Christ—then not because it was in the Jewish law, but because it is in the law of Christ. If this be not true, infant church membership is binding, the incense offering of the Romish Church is binding, sacrifice and offerings of animals and the observance of the fasts are binding; loose marriage, easy divorce, and polygamy are permissible; and all the services to God must be made through the Aaronic priesthood. None of these have been done away, save by taking the law requiring them out of the way. This took all requirements of the law out of the way. We are not under the law of Moses, but the law of Christ. But under the Jewish law God did not require instrumental music. He tolerated it, as he did other things that men brought in, and he condemned David for bringing it in. (Read Amos 6.) But all this was presented in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, page 311, which read. When Christ went into the temple he found these fleshly sacrifices, incense offerings, and he said nothing about them. His mother offered two turtledoves for purification, according to the law. Why did he say nothing about them? Because the Jewish law was yet in force. He was to observe it and fulfill its requirements, then in his death take it out of the way. When the law was taken out of the way everything connected with it was taken out of the way. There would have been no more occasion for him to mention instrumental music, had it been there, than these other things. But it is not certain that instruments were in use in the days of Jesus. Intelligent Jews will tell you instruments were not used while they were in captivity or the land in bondage. Hence, no mention is made of the instrumental service in sacred or profane history for one hundred or two hundred years before the coming of Christ; nor have the Jews used instruments in their worship through ages past, because the temple is in captivity. Latterly some are using them. You will find the meaning of "psallo" given in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, page 311, under a different query. If "psallo" carries the idea of playing on an instrument, it is required, and it is a sin not to play the instrument when we worship in song. "Psallo" is never used to indicate the instrument in the Bible. The instrument is always named there to show its use. 1 Cor. 14: 7 has no reference to worship, but to the use of instruments to denote different movements of the army. To show people must understand language to be profited by it, all these points have been met time and again, and there are thousands of dust-covered tracts on the subject. People are much interested in tracts until they are printed, then they lose interest in them.

We have received from "Student's Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, No. 3, West Twenty-ninth street, New York," two suggestive and helpful publications. One of them is entitled, "New Testament Studies in Missions," embracing (1) Missions in the light of the gospels, and (2) Paul and the Gentile world. Pages, 40; price, fifteen cents. The other publication is called "Healing of the Nations," a presentation of the need for the work of physicians in heathen fields. Pages, 95, cloth; price, forty cents. An interesting but sad account is given in this of the state of medical practice in heathen lands, and the helpfulness of the knowledge of medicine to the introduction of the Bible. Both are books of interest, and will aid in arousing an interest in the work of carrying the gospel to the nations in darkness. D. L.

Boys are like sheep: one finds a path and leads the way, the others follow. The one strong, resolute, masterful boy that thinks for himself and has a way of his own can be trained into a leader of men. The weak who are led, who always copy their fellows and follow others, are not worth drilling or training. D. L.

Home Reading.

THE MAJOR'S BOY.

The weather was growing colder, and the loungers had left their summer benches in front of the only hotel the little town boasted and were collected about the barroom stove.

Hastings was like a hundred other towns on the prairies, or what was called the frontier less than twenty years ago, when the railroad was building westward and stations were erected a few miles apart, although at some of these the passenger train only stopped when a flag was raised to show a traveler was waiting.

In a short time an elevator was built to receive the grain from the surrounding country; then a store or two, a hotel, a blacksmith shop, and numerous saloons followed; then most of these young cities were content with their condition, and ceased to grow.

In the Hastings hotel before the barroom fire and appropriating most of its heat stood a tall, portly man, discoursing of politics to an attentive audience. The man's face would have been rather fine, but that it was reddened and made coarse by drink; but his language was that of an educated man.

The Major had come to the town with the advent of the railroad; he believed in the town almost as much as he believed in himself (which was no very moderate belief). He often said to Mrs. Swift, the wife of the hotel keeper, "The greatest proof of a man's confidence in a town is to cast his lot therein, which I have done," he would add, with a gracious sweep of his hand toward a little shanty opposite, where swung the sign: "Major Overly, Attorney at Law. Collections a Specialty."

A party of duck hunters at a lake near the town, who had known of the Major in New York, had told something of his story. He had been a man of wealth and influence, but an appetite for drink had grown upon him, and gradually his business had fallen away, as his fine intellect had become impaired; then his wife died, and, placing his only son in the home of the lad's grandparents, the Major had come West, intending to start life anew, and had finally drifted into Hastings.

The one daily train was nearly due, and the listening loungers slipped away by twos and threes to collect about the station.

Among the half dozen passengers who alighted from the train was a boy of about thirteen, with a fine, resolute face and manly bearing, who asked if any one could tell him where Major Overly lived. On being directed to the hotel, he walked quickly toward it. Very soon all the town knew that the Major's boy had arrived.

At first the Major had said that Hal must return to his grandfather's, that Hastings was no place for him; but Hal pleaded so earnestly to stay that day after day passed, and he still remained.

To Hal Overly his father had always seemed the bravest and best of men, for his mother's great love had carefully guarded from him all knowledge of his father's faults, and the lad had patiently borne the separation for a time; but now that his father was permanently settled he wished to be with him.

For a short time after Hal's arrival the Major kept much in his office, attending to business, but as days passed he returned to his old habits. One evening it had grown very late, and as his father did not come, Hal went out to look for him. In passing a saloon he heard, with surprise, his father's voice within. He stopped and waited outside the door.

The nights were growing cold, the freshly burned prairie stretched away on either hand, while far along the horizon the prairie fires still burned; everything looked bare and desolate.

From the little brown station across the street Hal caught the glint of the steel rails reaching out toward his old home; he thought if he could only be there, with his father, he would be happy.

Suddenly the door near which he stood opened, and the Major staggered out. He would have fallen had not Hal caught him and sorrowfully led him home.

Poor boy! He had little sleep that night, and after his hours of reflection morning found him no longer a boy, but a man in his determination to save his father from this terrible habit; for he now understood many things which had before been incomprehensible to him.

The Major could hardly look his boy in the face the next morning, and determined to send him back at once to his grandfather; but Hal's pleading again prevailed, for the Major had grown very fond of the lad.

The Major resolved to break off his association with the people who, he knew, made it harder for him to keep the resolve of abstinence which he had made, but his weakness was so great that the good resolutions were soon forgotten; and soon it became customary for Hal to go to the doors of the various saloons until he found where his father was, and then wait outside in the cold and darkness until the Major came stumbling out, when he would see him safely home, and the Major soon ceased to feel the disgrace and grew to depend on having the sturdy little fellow to care for him.

So winter settled down at Hastings. Blizzard after blizzard swept over the prairie. The winter was an exceptionally severe one, and the trains seldom came on regular time. They were lonely days for Hal Overly, who day after day looked at the little half-buried houses in the village, or off on the white expanse of unbroken glittering snow, and wistfully thought of his old home and the long hill down which he knew his old companions were speeding.

Christmas had been a strangely dreary time for him, and now it was the middle of February; but Hal had no heart to remind his father that to-morrow would be his birthday—a day always made bright for him while his mother lived, and his grandparents, too, had made much of the anniversary. He had half expected a box from them, but the storms had delayed the train, and so he sat dozing and dreaming by the fire in the little hotel parlor, when the clock struck twelve.

Midnight, and his father had not yet returned! He aroused with a start, and, hastily putting on his overcoat and drawing his cap well down over his ears, went to the door and peered out.

It was a fearful night, and he hesitated, as well he might, at venturing out; but a thought of his father's possible condition urged him on, so, closing his lips firmly, he stepped out into the storm.

As long as he remained on the walk and close to the house he found he got on very well. He looked into every saloon he passed, but his father was in none of them. There was only one other, a little place across the railroad track.

He was already tired from fighting his way through the wind and snow, and as he leaned breathlessly against a building for a moment he could not keep back a few boyish tears.

But in a few minutes he turned resolutely away from the sheltering building, and plunged into the drifted snow in the direction of the track. He did not realize his danger; through the swirling snow and darkness he could see nothing.

The sharp, compact snow blowing for miles across the prairie is a terrible thing to encounter; it beat against his face like needles. He seemed to be suffocating. Gasping and bewildered, he turned to go back; but where was the street? The buildings with their flickering lights had disappeared.

He felt sure it could not be far; and he struggled on in the darkness, while the sharp, beating storm whirled about him, seeming to mock his efforts. Now a fearful sense of his danger came to him. He tore wildly at his collar for relief, for just one full breath in quiet, for one second of calm from this awful tumult.

He called out wildly for help, but his only reply was the shriek of the storm.

Then by a mighty effort he calmed himself and staggered on, believing he must reach a house soon. That fearful thought of his danger he put from him resolutely, that he might not be unnerved by it again.

He struggled courageously on through the cold and snow. By and by the cold seemed to be less bitter, but he stumbled often and at last fell. He lay still for a moment to rest; he felt sleepy, too. Then he thought he heard some one calling him; it seemed like a voice from his old home, and he was suddenly wide awake and hopeful. What it was that really aroused him—who can say? But in God's great world Hal Overly's work was not yet done.

He rose up wearily and took a few stiff and painful steps, then stumbled forward and fell again, not into the cold, drifted snow this time, but into a straw stack, and just within a hollow formed by cattle where they had burrowed into the stack for shelter and warmth as well as food. He lay there somewhat sheltered from the storm which raged without.

In the morning the storm had ceased; the sun shone on miles of dazzling white prairie, dotted here and there by sod barns and board cabins banked nearly to their eaves.

The freakish wind had swept in some places bare spots, and in others curved huge white drifts. On the roof of an empty cabin sat a great white owl sulking in the sunshine, and scarcely to be distinguished from the snow, over which rabbits in their white winter coats scurried.

Silence rested over the scene, and nowhere does silence seem so awesome as on the prairie after a winter's storm.

Out from the little village, where the smoke was just rising into the clear, blue sky, a party of men were plowing their way through the drifts.

Major Overly, white and conscience smitten, was leading them in the search for his boy; but another search party, with a dog which Hal had often petted, found the lad.

Very tenderly they carried him into the town, just as the little church bell was calling the people for the Sabbath morning service.

It was a long time before Hal could be restored and the doctor could say he would live, but his right arm was so badly frozen that amputation finally became necessary.

Major Overly hardly moved from his son's bedside during the long illness which followed. On that morning after the storm the Major had seen a vision of his past life, and made a vow which he never broke in all the following years.

The Major's sign still swings in the breeze on Main street, but now from a larger office; comfortable farmhouses dot the prairie; but still the winter comes back with all its fury, and the life of the settler has many hardships.

There is a young man with an empty sleeve, but a strong, resolute face, who is giving the best years of his life to the people of this little village and the region around, and giving it cheerfully and gladly. He is known and loved for miles about, and everywhere his face brings comfort. Whether he is preaching in some little schoolhouse, or cheering some despondent farmer during a bad season, or standing by a lonely grave where the winter wind sweeps over the prairie, his words have the power to help the hearers on to a higher and better standard of life, and lift them to a higher spiritual plane.

If you ask who he is, they will tell you: "He is Hal Overly, the Major's boy."—Jessie Alice Haskins, in the Classmate.

THE SOLDIER'S TESTAMENT.

A colporteur was distributing Bibles and Testaments to the soldiers who were about to embark for the Crimea. He offered a Testament to a soldier, who asked him what book it might be.

"The word of God," was the reply.

"Let me have it, then," said the man. But when he had received it, he added, laughingly: "Now, it will do very well to light my pipe."

The following year that same colporteur found himself in the center of France. He sought lodgings at an inn, the people who kept it being in great distress at the death of their son. The mother explained that her son had gone to the Crimea, and returned to die of his wounds. "But I have such consolation," she said; "he was so peaceful and happy, and he brought comfort to me."

"How was this?" asked the colporteur.

"O," said she, "he found all his comfort in one little book which he had always with him."

The colporteur begged to see the book, and she brought him a copy of the New Testament, of which the first fifteen or twenty pages had been torn out. But on the inside of the cover was written: "Received at Toulon [with the date]—despised, neglected, read, believed, and found salvation." The place and date were recognized by the colporteur, and thus he reaped the seed he had sown.—Sabbath School Visitor.

Do not think that charity consists alone in contributing material things to the needy. The greatest needs of many in this world to-day are love, sympathy, and kindness. A charitable nature will bestow these whenever they find the opportunity. But none are so blind as they who will not see. The seeing eye and seeking soul will find opportunity to comfort those in distress. Then, indeed, will they be rich in good works.—Exchange.

If a young man is going to avoid evil habits, he must first have some good ones to hold him.—William B. Campbell.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JUNE 21, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

ORIGIN OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Brother Lipscomb: I wish you would write an article in your valuable paper in regard to the setting up of the church of Christ and state what and how much A. Campbell had to do with it. Of course, I understand all about it, but I had an old gentleman to say to me on Lord's day, not long since, that he thought A. Campbell was the founder of the so-called "Campbellites," and for the benefit of this old gentleman and others, I ask you to do this. If you do write it, send me some sample copies and I will hand them out where I think they will do the most good.

J. H. MACKEY.

Delaware, Ky.

The church of Christ was fully established on the day of Pentecost, fifty days after the resurrection of Christ. Alexander Campbell did not live until eighteen hundred years after this. All A. Campbell did was to call men's attention to the fact that the religious people generally had departed from the order of God as laid down in the Scriptures, and to urge a return to that order. Many have made an honest effort to do this, and this effort has been called "Campbellism." A. Campbell did not formulate a creed for the church or make an effort to build a new church. He urged all the existing churches to drop their human creeds and additions to the church of God and to return to the order given by God. This was not to establish a new church, but to return to the church of God as he established it. To call an honest effort to return to the order of God "Campbellism" or by any other name of reproach is akin to calling the Master "Beelzebub." A. Campbell disavowed favoring a denomination. A denomination as applied to religious bodies is a number of congregations and individuals separate and distinct from other religious people, with a common faith on certain central points, connected by a general organization for uniting and perpetuating the party and the points of faith to which the party is devoted. Calvin, Luther, and Wesley each formed a party or denomination with a human creed or confession, defining the faith and general organization to confine the churches and people into the one party for perpetuating and spreading the faith of that party.

Mr. Campbell started out on a wholly different basis. He started out to eschew all human creeds and confessions of faith, to reject all human organizations and institutions from the service of God, to take the word of God as the only rule of faith and practice, and to rely solely upon the churches as God ordained them as the only organizations for the propagation of the truth. No matter how far men may be from the truth when they start, if they will be true to this position, it will bring them to the truth of God. It is the only principle of action that can do it. To adopt a human creed is to assume the full truth is known on the matter of religion and is to tie those who adopt the creed to whatever errors and limitations of truth may be in the creed. It cuts the devotees of that creed off from any further knowledge of the truth that may be gained by study of God's word.

On the other hand, to take the word of God as the only and all-sufficient rule of faith is to bind those who so adopt it to a diligent and faithful study of that word, and it further binds them to change and modify their faith as they learn the truths of the Bible. All the truths of the Bible are not yet learned. Its depths of divine truth are not yet fully explored, and man ought not to be tied back from learning all the truth of the Bible. To adopt a human creed is to honor the author of that creed and to become his disciple. To adopt the Bible as the only and all-sufficient creed is to honor God and become his disciple. This is to bind him to follow the Bible as he learns it.

No matter whether Brother Campbell and those acting with him understood the truth or not, they adopted the only foundation and true starting point and the only rule that can lead to all truth. It is the only position that honors God, and it will lead men to union with God. It is a slander to call such a position after any man. D. L.

I JOHN 3.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." People are proud to be sons of great men and rich men on earth. They love to see their fathers become great leaders, as a matter of family pride and because this advances their own prospects and helps to give them an introduction to society and position. But what are these relations compared with being sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty? The highest relation that it is possible for humanity to reach on this earth is to be a child of God; the highest and purest love ever exercised on this earth is the love that made it possible for poor, sinful mortals of earth to become children of God. In order to provide for this, God so loved the world that he gave his own beloved Son that he might die for sinners and thus provide a way for their salvation—provide for them to become sons of God. In carrying out this love, Jesus became poor that through his poverty men might become rich. He was so poor that when he entered upon his personal ministry he had not where to lay his head. He was scoffed at and rejected of men; the very people that should have been his best friends became his bitterest enemies and persecutors. What wonderful forbearance he manifested in enduring these miserable persecutions at the hands of those he came to die for! They spit upon him and struck him with the palms of their hands to gratify their fiendish rage upon the purest and loveliest personage that ever walked the earth. Finally, in the wicked rage of religious persecution, they nailed him to the cross. The heavens were darkened, the earth trembled, the rocks were rent asunder, and the graves were opened when the Lord of glory died that poor sinners might become children of God, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. What a precious and wonderful sacrifice, and all for the elevation and salvation of men! Surely this should be a wonderful incentive to the children of God to be ready to sacrifice anything and everything that may be demanded to make us worthy of such a sacrifice as was made for us when Jesus suffered and died to open the way for such a wonderful elevation of our race. Surely, as a rule, Christians do not appreciate the blessings thus secured for them; for not only was all this suffering undergone that sinners might live, might be saved from wrath and ruin, but untold and innumerable blessings were thereby secured for God's children, even in this life. The children of God have the promise of the life that now is as well as promise of the life that is to come. All men love help in times of need, and love to have some one to look to that is both able and willing to help them. Earthly children love to have parents that are able and willing to help them in times of need and distress. God's children have just such a Father as this.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and he will withhold no good thing from his faithful children. "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers." "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled." "Consider the ravens: for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?" "If God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" These are a few of the precious promises that are given to the faithful children of God in this life. Such promises are truly encouraging. All that we need to do to enjoy these rich promises is to be truly faithful to the Lord in all that he has required of us. These promises do not mean that the children of God are to fold their hands and wait for all these blessings to come to them without an effort on their part. People that would do this way are not worthy of such blessings if they were to come, and would not appreciate them if they had them. God feeds the fowls, but how? Does he pour down their feed in one place and let them lounge around and eat? Far from it. There is no better example of industry and activity than is manifested by the fowls in securing their food. All day long, from morning till night, they may be seen industriously hunting and gathering their food. Never are their wings too weary to fly nor their feet too tired to scratch the soil for needed supplies. The children of God are required to do likewise. They must be industrious and labor honestly and earnestly with their hands. The meaning of these precious promises is that when they thus seek for the necessities of life they will find them. The child of God that is faithfully honest and industrious in seeking food and raiment and trusts in God's promises and prays earnestly to him for the blessings will find them. A wicked man may strive and yet not find them. But God's children are promised all these things, if they diligently seek for them. The Lord's people in their zeal to help the needy frequently do them an injury. They sometimes feed and clothe and provide for them without arranging for corresponding industry on their part to secure the things they need. The better way is to place the things they need where they can, by honest labor, secure them, just as the little birds that are daily hopping around gather the food the Lord has provided for them. If the Lord's people wish to educate a young man for usefulness, it is far better, if possible, to furnish him something to do by which he can at least in part pay his own way, so that he may come out with some independence and feel that he has done something toward making his own way. A young man that would not gladly take hold of such opportunities to help himself would be of but little account if he were educated. Eminence and usefulness are to be purchased by labor to be profitable. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" is a principle true in everything. I would not give much for the future prospects of any young man that would not gladly work at any honorable calling to get an education rather than accept it as a matter of charity. But to be a child of God and be entitled to all the blessings promised to such is a wonderful blessing.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Blessed assurance that we shall be like Jesus over on the other shore! Such will be the outcome of a faithful life as children of God to all that sufficiently appreciate the relationship they enjoy to prove themselves worthy of the precious promises the Lord has made.

"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Hope has a wonderful influence over people, even in this world's affairs. Even if a man's condition is bad, if he has hope that it will be better soon, he can bear the evil, looking for a better condition; but if hope is all blighted and there is no possible prospect of anything better, there is nothing left to bring relief. Dark indeed is this world to a man that has no hope, that looks for nothing that can bring cheer and consolation; but no matter what the lot of a faithful child of God may be in this life, he can always be looking for something better and at the same time be thanking God that things are no worse with him. Such a one can say, though the clouds be dark: "There is a brighter day coming by and by." A man that is really enjoying such a hope as this is always striving to live a purer and better life. He wants to be more and more like Jesus, as he thinks of living with him for evermore. A child of God that is not striving, day by day, for a holier life surely does not think much about being with Jesus and seeing him as he is. If a man is going to visit a nice and beautiful home in this life, where everything is clean and bright, he will take much more pains to look neat himself than he would if he were going to a place where he knew all would be in confusion and where the people did not care whether things looked neat or not. When we think of heaven, where Jesus is, and where all the blood-washed throng will be, with robes pure and white, made white in the blood of the Lamb, we shall certainly want to be clean and white when we enter that lovely home, with its pearly gates, jasper walls, and golden streets. Truly, everything will be nice in that home. If we do not purify ourselves, so that when we go there we also shall have on robes pure and white and thus be like others there, we could not be happy, even if we were there. Besides, we are to be like Jesus there, and he will be beautiful beyond description. The short description given of him in Rev. 1 is simply grand. The man that hopes to be like him will most assuredly strive to be pure, as he is pure; and we shall not be done with this striving to be pure till we step out of this earthly tabernacle, for so long as we are in the flesh we shall have fleshly propensities to contend with and overcome. If we will be faithful in this work to the end, we need have no fears about the outcome. Surely we ought to do this, stimulated by the exalted thought of being sons of God here and of being like Jesus "over there."

"Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law." This is certainly a very significant passage. The Revised Version has it: "Every one that doeth sin doeth also lawlessness: and sin is lawlessness." The word "lawlessness" is quite as strong as the word "transgression." It means not subject to law, not willing to be governed by law, but disposed to go his own way. This is one of the leading characteristics of the man of sin. He was to be a lawless one. "Lawlessness" signifies something exceedingly bad. In religion it signifies one that wants to be religious, wants to appear devout, and to be on the road to heaven, but wants to have his own way about what he is to do and how it is to be done—one, indeed, that wants to be saved and expects to be saved, but will say at any time of any command that does not suit him: "It is a nonessential." The devil is utterly lawless, an out-and-out rebel against the government of God. He is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can he be. From the garden of Eden until now he has been trying to lead man in the same channel and thus accomplish his ruin. He persuaded Eve in the garden of Eden that another way was better than God's way, and she unfortunately accepted it, and she led her husband along with her. This was lawlessness, and brought ruin upon them and upon Eden and a blight and a curse upon the whole world. When Jesus came, Satan tried all his arts and devices to make him lawless and thus defeat man's redemption; but in this he utterly failed. But to this day he has been trying his hand on men, and that, too, with wonderful success.

He has been especially busy in the church, so called, and has been leading millions into lawlessness all along the line. Every man that turns away from anything God requires, and does something else in its stead, at once becomes a lawless one. It is a species of lawlessness that leads many calling themselves the Lord's people to go to meeting on the first day of the week to hear preaching, but do not remember the Savior's death; do not come together to break bread, as the word of the Lord requires. They are wholly indisposed to be governed by the word of the Lord in this matter. Putting organs into the worship and building up human societies through which to do the work of the church and such like—in fact, all sorts of changes and innovations that are made upon God's order of things—arise from the same source. What a wonderful change there would be in the religious world to-day if all would resolve to do just what the word of God requires to be done, and leave off everything else! Nothing short of this can bring them out of lawlessness.

E. G. S.

An exchange utters a most profound truth in the following: "Teach self-denial in your homes. It is not kind to the child to allow him everything he asks. Teach him that the truest and greatest happiness is to be found in denying himself and helping others."—Selected.

"SEEK YE FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD, AND HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS."

This admonition was given by Jesus Christ to his disciples and those present in the Sermon on the Mount. It was spoken as a conclusion growing out of the statement that "no man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon"—the God of heaven and the god of this world. Inasmuch as man cannot serve these two persons, do ye first seek the kingdom of God. To seek his kingdom was to become his servant and seek to promote his rule. At that time it likely had direct reference to looking forward to the kingdom Jesus came to set up on earth. Jesus by his teaching was preparing subjects for that kingdom. He was training persons that they might be fitted for citizenship in that kingdom. They sought it by getting themselves ready for it; but if has an application now. To seek the kingdom now is to seek an entrance into it, and after entering it to seek a constant obedience to its laws, a drinking into the Spirit of Christ and conformity to the will of the Ruler. This will constitute a life work. There is an outward obedience of the body. There is also a conformity of the purposes, feelings, desires, and thoughts of the heart to the will of God. This is a work that can be accomplished only gradually. It is a growth of the character in conformity to the character of God. The bringing the thoughts of the heart in subjection to the will of God seems to be the last act in this process of conformity to the will of God. The thoughts will wander and refuse subjection to the will of God, but these may finally be regulated by, and be brought into subjection to, the will of God. "Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." (2 Cor. 10: 5.) This is involved in seeking the kingdom of God. The kingdom has differing degrees in it. Practice in one degree or stage of it fits for a higher one. So the growth is from one degree of conformity to the will of God to a higher and more perfect one. The admonition, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God"—seek obedience to his will, conformity to the character of God—is a perpetual one suited to all ages and characters, and can be perfected and completed only when we see him as he is in the eternal world, when we shall be like him in his glorified body. The hope of becoming this leads us to purify ourselves "as he is pure." (John 3: 2, 3.)

We are not only told to seek the kingdom of God, but we are also told to seek his righteousness—the righteousness of God. This is but another form of expressing the thought: Seek the kingdom of God. The righteousness of God is constituted a feature of the kingdom of God. It is the outgrowth and fruit of seeking the kingdom. "Righteousness" means right doing. The righteousness of God means the right doing of God. Seek the right doing of God. Seek to do right as God does right. Seek then to make God's ways our ways. This will make his character our character. It will make his standard of right our standard of right. God loves justice. "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face." (Ps. 89: 14.) That means justice and judgment, according to justice, are the foundation qualities of the throne of God, and mercy and truthfulness shall find favor in the sight of God. God's laws and his dealings with men have always been in harmony with these truths and characteristics of God. God's laws are founded in justice. "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." (Ps. 19: 9.) Under the law of Moses justice, honesty, and righteousness were required. The man who defrauded another must pay fourfold as the penalty for his wrongdoing. God spurned the rewards of iniquity brought into his sanctuary. The price of things unclean or of wrongdoing could not be brought into the service of God. Only one condition was given in which the rewards of wrong could be brought into the temple of God; that was, when a person wronged another and he and all his kindred were dead, so restitution could not be made to him or his family, then the guilty one might bring the offering to the house of God, confess his wrong, and state the injured one and all his family were dead, so he could not make restitution, then he could make it to the Lord. God's love of justice was shown in his requirement that the wrongdoer should in all circumstances make restitution before he could be forgiven. It was shown in that the debtor, his wife, and children could be sold for debt. His love of mercy was shown in that the creditor must be merciful to the debtor, charge no usury if he was poor, let him go free, restore his possessions to him in the year of jubilee, and deal liberally with him when he went forth from his slavery. His love of justice demanded the debtor should pay, even if he and his family must be sold into slavery to do this. His love of mercy is shown in requiring the creditor to be merciful to the debtor. This is more distinctly emphasized by Christ by telling his disciples that unless they showed mercy they could not obtain mercy. Christ would mete to them as they measured to others.

The reformation that is demanded in the churches at this day is along these lines. Men are so one-sided that reformation takes place along only one line at a time. They move in one line at a time. While watchful as to one point, an evil grows at another, on a different side. It becomes so aggravated the attention is called to it, and reformation is made vigorously at that point. In this way the denominations have chiefly arisen. Nearly every denomination has been built in the effort to reform in one line. A neglected truth is emphasized and taught, and persons crystallize around that truth to the neglect of other truths, and a party is formed around that truth. So, almost every party has one central truth. What is needed is that all truths should be alike maintained, then all parties would vanish.

But the crying need among all religious parties of to-day is a reformation in practical honesty and uprightness. The uprightness of God must be honored and worshiped as his other qualities. There is no real worship that does not conform the worshiper to the object of worship. If we realize God is just and upright, if we worship him in truth, we will be honest, upright, and faithful in the discharge of all obligations as God is. Professed Christians lay but little stress on honesty, purity, and truthfulness. What church lays stress on these qualities as essential to Christian character? Yet no one can be a true worshiper of God that does not hold in high esteem these qualities and seek to conform his character to the divine character. The reformation must begin with individuals. Christians, each for himself, must cultivate a feeling of honesty, integrity, and uprightness.

A Christian ought to feel it a stain on his personal character and a reproach upon the cause of God that he fail to fulfill his obligations and discharge his promises to his fellow-men and to God. God is righteous, holy, upright, just, and pure. He demands that his servants, his children, be like him. God will judge the world in righteousness. "He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." (Acts 17: 31.) Jesus Christ is the model of righteousness of God that we are to seek, and the judgment will be rendered, making Jesus Christ the model or standard by which men are to be judged. Jesus is the perfect righteousness of God in the flesh, and the efforts of the Christian must be to attain to his righteousness. He must cultivate a love and admiration for this righteousness and strive to practice it in his life. "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." (1 John 2: 29.) "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous." D. L.

We miss not our loved ones so much as when they are gone from us forever. They are dearer to us then. We then think of the many opportunities we neglected to brighten their lives, of the many words we have spoken in a harsh voice, of the many unkind acts that were full of bitter feeling. Then we regret them all. O, friends, young and old, if you have any love to bestow, then bestow it while the loved one lives; if you have a gentle word to speak, speak it ere it be too late; if you have a deed of kindness to perform, perform it now. Wait not till the friend is gone, and then mourn over lost opportunities.—Boys' Lantern.

A strong, upright character is not built up in a day, but a single moment of idle folly may tear down that which took years to build.—Exchange.

It is not so much what others say of you that hurts, but it is what you are; a defective character is the friend that wounds.—Selected.

Smithianity; or, Mormonism Refuted by Mormons.

As thousands of Mormon elders are in the field, pressing the claims of Joseph Smith, Jr., as a prophet of God and the "Book of Mormon" as divine, we must "arm and equip to meet them."

Last year their increase was about one hundred and seventy per cent. Think of that, ye religious orders that decreased!

The question, "What shall we do with Mormonism?" is rapidly changing to: "What will Mormonism do with us?" It is evident, on the very threshold of investigation of this "ism," that there are "Mormons" and "Mormons," hence the heading to this article.

The largest and by far the best known and the most active body or denomination among Mormons is known as "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." This church has headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is pronounced by the highest dead and living authorities that I can find among Mormons, a "bastard church." As the "Utah elders" are the most numerous and active, especially in Kentucky and the South, the first thing to do is to prepare to "spike their guns."

The next largest and perhaps the most aggressive denomination of the Mormons is known as "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." This sect has headquarters in Lamoni, Ia., and a son of Joseph Smith, Jr., sits as seer, prophet, and revelator. He is sometimes called Joseph III.

A "Josephite" will debate with a "Brighamite" any time and any place with a relish. These agree on:

1. Joseph Smith, Jr., was a prophet of God.
 2. The "Book of Mormon" is of divine authority.
 3. The "Book of Doctrine and Covenants" is also of divine authority.
- They differ, or fail to agree, on:
1. What Joseph Smith said and wrote.
 2. To what extent the "Book of Mormon" must be received as authority.
 3. As to both the "doctrine" and "covenants" in their book so called.

These are vital differences, and it will be easy to show that each destroys the other.

David Whitmer stands prominent in the hosts of Mormonism. He was one of the three witnesses to the divinity of the "Book of Mormon." He was the third person baptized into the Mormon Church. He was appointed by Joseph Smith himself to succeed him "as prophet, seer, and revelator of the church."

In 1887, in the sunset of his life, David Whitmer issued "An Address to All Believers in Christ." His statement on the vital point to Mormonism is clear as a noontide sun, and settles the issue as to the succession:

"To show you that Brother Joseph and myself still loved each other as brethren after this, I will tell you that he had so much confidence in me that in July, 1834, he ordained me his successor as 'prophet, seer, and revelator' to the church. He did this of his own free will, and not at any solicitation whatever on my part. I did not know what he was going to do until he laid his hands upon me and ordained me. Now, bear in mind, brethren, that I am not claiming this office; as I have told you, I do not believe in any such an office in the church. I was then in error in believing that there was such an office in the church of Christ. I suppose this is news to many of you—that Brother Joseph ordained me his successor—but it is in your records, and there are men now living who were present in that council of elders when he did it, in the camp of Zion, on Fishing River, Mo., in July, 1834. This is why many of the brethren came to me after Brother Joseph was killed, and importuned me to come out and lead the church. I refused to do so. Christ is the only leader and head of his church." (Page 55.)

Thus the claims of Brigham Young and Joseph III. are entirely swept away as "successor to Joseph Smith, Jr., as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church." I have yet to learn of the least shadow of a doubt thrown by "Brighamite" or "Josephite" on this declaration of David Whitmer. He declares a fact about which he could not have been mistaken. This is a vital stab to the claims of both the Salt Lake and Lamoni churches.

To deny the testimony of Whitmer would be to saw the limb off between them and the trunk of the tree of Mormonism. He not only states that Joseph Smith, Jr., ordained him as "prophet, seer, and revelator to the church," but he denies that there ever was or ever can be such an office in the church.

This is the office that has held and now holds the Utah and Iowa churches together. None will deny this. Whitmer says (pages 46, 47): "There is nothing in the New Testament part of either the Bible or 'Book of Mormon' concerning a one-man leader or head to the church. Whoever claims that such an office should be in the church to-day goes beyond the teachings which Christ has given us. As I have stated, we were strictly commanded in the beginning to rely upon that which was written; and he who goes beyond that which was then written, to the revelations of Joseph Smith, to establish any order or doc-

The Jolly Girl

Often changes to the jaded woman. "I can't see what's come over Mary; she used to be such a jolly girl," was the remark of a young woman visiting a married school-mate. Marriage changes a woman. The drains and pains which are so often the sequence of marriage rob her of all vitality. Give her back her former strength and she'll be as "jolly" a wife as she was a maid. Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription gives back the lost strength by re-establishing the health of the delicate womanly organs. It dries the drains and stops the pains. It cures ulceration, inflammation and female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well. "For two years I had been a sufferer from chronic diseases and female weakness," writes Mrs. Allen A. Bobson, of 1123 Rodman Street, Philadelphia, Pa. "I had two different doctors, and they gave me medicine which only relieved me for a time. My niece advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I concluded that to open a correspondence with you for your advice would be safest, so I did, and have been highly benefited. I find that after taking six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and five of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and following your advice in regard to local treatment, I am now a strong woman. Accept my sincere thanks for the interest manifested in my case and the happy results obtained."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. Correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

trine in the church, must come under the head of those whom Christ spoke of when he said: 'Whosoever teaches more or less, . . . is not of me.' This alone should satisfy any one who is not trusting in an arm of flesh. Who was 'prophet, seer, and revelator' to the church at Jerusalem? They had none. Who was 'prophet, seer, and revelator' to the church upon this land? They had none. And we had no such an office in the church in these last days for the first eight months of its existence, until Brother Joseph went into this error on April 6, 1830, and, after unwittingly breaking a command of God by taking upon himself such an office, in a few years those revelations were changed to admit this high office, which otherwise would have condemned it. They were changed to mean something entirely different from the way they were first given and printed in the 'Book of Commandments,' as if God had not thought of this great and important office when he gave those revelations. Yet in the face of the written word of God, and in the face of all this evidence, the majority of the Latter-day Saints will still cling to the revelations of Joseph Smith, and measure the written word of God by them, instead of measuring Joseph Smith and his revelations by the written word. Speaking after the manner of Paul to the Galatians, so say I unto you: 'O foolish Latter-day Saints, . . . I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another gospel; which is not another, but the same gospel which some have perverted; and though we, or an angel from heaven, or Joseph Smith, preach any other gospel unto you than that which Christ gave us in the beginning, receive it not.' (See Gal. 1: 6-9.)"

This is certainly a solar plexus blow, a Joab thrust. Reread and ponder the weight of the charges he makes against Smith and the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants." We have use for this hereafter.

To all except "a Josephite"—and they try to fasten the stigma on Brigham Young—it is as clear as an unclouded sky that he not only received that revelation on polygamy and gave it to the church, but that he also practiced it in the closing years of his life.

Whitmer was convinced against his will of it. He says, on page 38: "I now have as much evidence to believe that Brother Joseph received the revelation on polygamy and gave it to the church as I have to believe that such a man as George Washington ever lived. I never saw General Washington, but, from reliable testimony, I believe that he did live." That settles that point; the "Josephites" reject the prophecy and accept the prophet.

Whitmer has something higher than the laying on of hands of Joseph Smith, Jr., the seer; something higher than the Bible or "Book of Mormon" upon which to base his authority to speak and act:

"Then let no man judge hastily as to my authority, lest he judge wrongly and continue in error; but go to God in prayer and fasting, and find out the truth, for the Holy Ghost will guide you into all truth. If you believe my testimony to the 'Book of Mormon;' if you believe that God spake to us three witnesses by his own voice, then I tell you that in June, 1838, God spake to me again by his own voice from the heavens, and told me to 'separate myself from among the Latter-day Saints, for as they sought to do unto me, so should it be done unto them.' In the spring

Her Face

Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with

Heiskell's Ointment

the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.

Heiskell's Soap

Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.

Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

of 1838 the heads of the church and many of the members had gone deep into error and blindness. I had been striving with them for a long time to show them the errors into which they were drifting, and for my labors I received only persecutions. In June, 1838, at Far West, Mo., a secret organization was formed, Doctor Avar being put in as the leader of the band. A certain oath was to be administered to all the brethren to bind them to support the heads of the church in everything they should teach. All who refused to take this oath were considered dissenters from the church, and certain things were to be done, concerning these dissenters, by Dr. Avar's secret band. I make no further statements now; but suffice it to say that my persecutions, for trying to show them their errors, became of such a nature that I had to leave the Latter-day Saints; and, as I rode on horseback out of Far West, in June, 1838, the voice of God from heaven spake to me as I have stated above. I was called out to hold the authority which God gave to me." (Pages 27, 28.)

When God condemns the Latter-day Saints, and he did (you cannot deny it without denying Whitmer's testimony to the "Book of Mormon"), according to Whitmer, then all good men must condemn them.

Whitmer refutes, in a way and after the kind of testimony upon which the whole system is built, both "Brighamite" and "Josephite" Mormonism, and they refute each other; hence Mormonism is refuted by Mormonism. Grayson, Ky. R. B. NEAL.

JESSE FRENCH

PIANO & ORGAN CO.

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN

PIANOS & ORGANS

WE MANUFACTURE Starr, Jesse French, and Richmond Pianos,

AND HAVE EXCLUSIVE SALE FOR Steinway and Knabe Pianos, and Jesse French and Packard Organs.

PIANOS FOR RENT.

240 & 242 N. Summer Street, NASHVILLE, - TENNESSEE

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School, GLENCLIFF, TENN.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for

Refined Paraffine Wax

in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

In West Tennessee.

The soil is of a sandy nature, generally speaking, and much of it is rich and productive. The people are plain and simple in their habits, manifesting many of the old-time habits and customs. They are kind-hearted and hospitable—except sometimes when one wants to get to stay all night. The tables are generally well spread with good substantial food, and plenty of it.

West Tennessee naturally divides itself into two parts—the highlands and the "bottoms." The bottoms are heavily timbered where this has not been cut away, and very fertile where they can be reclaimed from the water. Some as fine stretches of country can be seen here as in almost any place one may go. Wheat, corn, and cotton are common, but probably wheat is the most extensively grown of any, and the acreage is increasing every year, I am told.

In the richer sections of country there is a kind of loose-end, torn-down appearance about the plantations, and even the towns. The latter seem to have grown up promiscuously, without any particular design or concert of action. True to the independent disposition of the American people, each seems to have built to suit his own notion, and allowed his neighbor to do the same. As a result, the towns are considerably scattered and the streets far from uniform.

All of the land in West Tennessee is not rich. Almost entire counties sometimes consist of rolling lands, red, sandy soil, and scrub-oak timber. We traveled for two or three days in sections like this. Naturally one would expect to see signs of poverty about the homes of the people, especially when compared with the rich lands down in the more level sections. In this I was mistaken. In these poorer sections, where grew the green briars and wild honeysuckles, and in places where whole sections had washed away, leaving only the barren little sand hills, standing up in miniature mountain ranges, there were more signs of thrift than in the richer sections. The farmhouses were neat and substantial and the surrounding fences were neat and well built. The town of Lexington is in one of the poorest-looking sections I ever saw, yet it is a thrifty, prosperous town, with well-stocked business houses, showing a good trade. From Lexington to Scott's Hill is fifteen miles, over a very hilly, rough road. I said to Brother Smith on the way: "If the people at Scott's Hill do not appreciate our visit, they ought to." Around Scott's Hill would be very poor encouragement to one seeking a place to make a living. It is only a little village of four or five business houses and a blacksmith shop or two, and one wonders how there can be even this many. But at Scott's Hill they have a prosperous school of two hundred children. We had the largest audience here of any place in all West Tennessee, indicative of more intelligence and good sound worth than usual. We found no place where the people talked more intelligently on religious matters and the questions of the day than here. These things set us to thinking. The people in these hilly, poor sections of country are not able to farm by proxy, but must labor with their own hands. They build their own fences and plow their own soil; they make the cracks to keep out the pigs, and plow to the best advantage. What they make they save.

On the rich farms the land is let to renters. The owner of the lands lives in town, and trusts the farm to others, while he chews tobacco and talks politics. The implements of the farm take the weather from one crop to another, and frequently must be replaced by new ones by the second or third season. This, together with a heavy toll for labor, a liberal allowance for dishonesty, a margin for family style, and a supply of tobacco, makes the expenses run up considerably. The farm must finally be mortgaged to make ends meet, and farming is then considered as a failure.

Just so with many in regard to spiritual matters. They try to serve God by proxy. They let out the business of the salvation of the soul to others, while they live in town, superintend from a distance, and give themselves to other matters. The devil gets such heavy claims upon them that he finally takes a mortgage. They get deeper and deeper in debt, and finally die spiritually bankrupt. This is because the opportunities for Christian living are too favorable. Men conclude that so little effort is necessary in order to receive large returns that they can let it out to others and then be blessed sufficiently for both parties. The Lord has never placed man in such favorable surroundings that he could successfully let the work of Christian duty out to other people. In order to prosper, service to God must be personal. J. M. M'CALEB.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

IT'S WORTH YOUR WHILE....

to investigate the difference between our prices and those of agents and dealers for the same grade of work.

...WE DO NOT SELL...

No. 47½—Single Strap Harness. Price with nickel trimmings, $9.50. As good as sells for $6.00 more.

through agents or dealers, therefore we do not have them to protect, and in making our prices are enabled to figure them as low as the grade of work we manufacture can be sold. We save you the profits that are added between the manufacturer and the consumer, by selling direct to you from our factory. This has been our method of selling for the past twenty-seven years, and we are today the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling direct to the user exclusively. We make 178 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness and ship anywhere for examination, guaranteeing safe arrival. Send for free catalogue showing all of our different styles.

No. 191—Buggy, with leather quarter top. Price with shafts, $53.00. Guaranteed as good as others, sell for $25 more than our price.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MANUFACTURING CO., W. B. PRATT, Secretary, Elkhart, Indiana.

MONTEAGLE

The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools.
TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

Jottings.

A fool may profit by his own experience, but a wise man will profit by the experience of others. For this cause God records the experiences of persons from one lid of the Bible to the other, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. There is one remedy to keep from being deceived by Satan, and that is God's remedy, love of the truth—not loving it in word, but obeying it.

Solomon was wise, but he did not love that part of God's truth that told him not to take unto himself strange wives, and he was deceived as a consequence.

There are numbers of men worshipping the devil who can never be made to see the difference until that wicked one be revealed "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." (2 Thess. 2: 8.) The devil shows himself up to be God, and will continue to do so until the proper time. (2 Thess. 2: 4-7.)

When God says he will send strong delusion, that those who love not the truth might believe a lie and be damned (2 Thess. 2: 11, 12), he does not make any exceptions for big, smart men. Is any man a king? The Lord is King of kings. Is any man a lord? He is Lord of lords. "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice."

There is only one safe way and that is to love the truth so dearly that we can give up any kind of doctrine we have heretofore been married to for it.

May the Lord help us to cling to his word, though it tear us from society and the praise of men and put us in chains as it did Paul—anything to reach heaven. J. G. ORSBURN. Bordley, Ky.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY

F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market Street,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

1850 1900 John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES. TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL. HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES. Mail orders will meet prompt attention. Telephone 1047.

BELLS

Alloy Church and School Bells. The C. S. BELL CO. Philadelphia, Pa.

CAPABLE WOMAN WANTED for a permanent position, $60 per month and all expenses. Experience unnecessary. CLARK & CO., 234 S. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

General News.

The new capitol of New Mexico at Santa Fé was dedicated with imposing ceremonies.

Rafael Zaldivar, the new minister to this country from Salvador, has arrived in Washington.

The President has appointed Gen. Joseph Wheeler a brigadier general in the regular army.

The French Panama Canal Company has received orders from Paris to resume work on a large scale.

The total appropriations of the late session of Congress amount to about eight hundred million dollars.

Mrs. Gladstone, the widow of William E. Gladstone, the English statesman, died at Hawarden, Wales.

The wife of former Governor R. L. Taylor, the lecturer, died at her home, at Knoxville, Tenn., on June 4, 1900.

The strike in St. Louis has not yet ended, after a month of riotous mob rule, though many cars are being run by nonunion men.

The formal inauguration of President Dole and the territorial government of Hawaii took place on June 14, 1900, at Honolulu.

Of the total area of the Japanese Empire one hundred and seventeen thousand square miles—hardly 12 per cent—is cultivable.

There are at present fifty-five thousand effective troops in the Philip pines. General Otis reports the health of the soldiers as exceedingly good.

Under orders from the Navy Department, the battle ships Massachusetts and Indiana at the League Island Navy Yard are being prepared for sea.

Robert S. Brookings and Samuel S. Cupples, of St. Louis, have transferred property valued at five million dollars to Washington University, of that city.

The Chicago India Famine Relief Committee has cabled one thousand pounds sterling to Lady Curzon, wife of the Viceroy, to be used in the famine district.

The Boers met with some success in South Africa, but the British troops continue to advance and occupy the country. The contest seems to be becoming a guerrilla war.

The risks voluntarily taken by war correspondents are illustrated by the fact that up to the last of May twenty-one correspondents were either killed or died from disease in South Africa.

Official dispatches from Pekin aver that the sect of Boxers is more powerful than any political party in China, embracing no less than four million, and manipulated by zealous and adroit men.

The closing days of Congress were marked by especially bitter debate and disagreements between the two houses. The last half hour was spent in singing patriotic songs and a general political love feast.

A statement from the Treasury Department shows that the money in circulation in the United States outside of the Treasury, on June 1, 1900, amounted to $2,074,687,781, against $1,955,501,009 one year ago.

The Republican National Convention will have met in Philadelphia and adjourned before this paper reaches its readers. The only action of the convention that seems to be in doubt is the nomination for Vice President.

The gunboat Nashville has been sent to China with a force of marines aboard. She is a light draught gunboat of the same type as the Helena. The Monocacy, at Shanghai, has also been ordered to join Admiral Kempff at Taku.

The Republicans won a complete victory at the election in Oregon, carrying the State by eight thousand plurality, electing members of Congress in both districts, and securing in the Legislature a majority of twenty-two on joint ballot.

In Chattanooga and Memphis, Tenn., the use of cocaine among the lower class of whites and negroes has increased to such an extent that the city governments in both places have passed ordinances prohibiting the sale of the drug within the corporate limits.

The receipts at fifty large post offices during the past month were $294,496 in excess of May, 1899. The largest increases in percentages were at Nashville, Tenn., 27.9; Milwaukee, Wis., 23.7; Des Moines, Ia., 21.4; and Jersey City, N. J., 21.2.

A frightful accident, resulting in the loss of four lives and the injuring of twenty-six persons, occurred on the Oakland Beach Electric Road. Two cars met in a head-on collision on a sharp curve. The car coming toward the city telescoped the down-trip car, crashing its way through to the fifth seat.

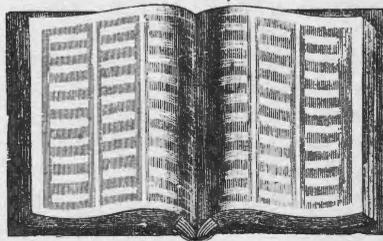

A formal requisition has been made by the Governor of Kentucky on Governor Mount, of Indiana, for the surrender of former Governor Taylor as accessory to the murder of Goebel. Governor Mount, in a lengthy communication, gives reasons for refusing. He believes Taylor could not receive a fair trial.

Japan is seeking American and European cattle to introduce among the native herds and improve the general stock on the islands. Four Japan Government officials, especially commissioned to select and purchase fine stock, have arrived at San Francisco. They will inspect the herds of California before going East and to Europe.

The army worm has made its appearance in great numbers in many parts of Oklahoma Territory. Most of the wheat is too hard for these worms to work on, but they are damaging oats considerably, and reports from Wood and Grant Counties state the worms are devastating many fields of corn, stripping the ground of every green blade.

The exact number of census enumerators now at work is 52,631. Pennsylvania leads the list, with 4,676; New York comes next, with 3,492. Among the numbers assigned to the different States and Territories are the following: Alabama, 1,211; Arkansas, 921; Georgia, 1,258; Indian Territory, 186; Kentucky, 1,318; Louisiana, 717; Mississippi, 842; Missouri, 2,262; New Mexico, 179; North Carolina, 1,226; South Carolina, 378; Tennessee, 1,482; Texas, 1,806.

The California Miners' Association has recently published a treatise on the mineral wealth of that State which brings out some facts that are not generally known. Gold, of course, holds the lead, but it will probably surprise many to learn that the value of the quicksilver annually produced in California is 50 per cent greater than the value of the silver found there, and that even the petroleum output of the State exceeds the silver production in value. Copper and borax

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

NO.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

rank among the important minerals of California.

A Mexican cable company is arranging to lay a cable to connect the mainland of Sonora through Guaymas with Santa Rosalia, on the eastern coast of Lower California. It will be the first Pacific cable to Mexico, one hundred miles in length, and will cost two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. British steamship companies, aided by Sir Alfred Milner, British High Commissioner for Cape Colony, are preparing to carry many English, Irish, and Scotch emigrants into the Orange Free State and the Transvaal as soon as peace is restored.

The Viceroy, Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, telegraphs that cholera continues in many of the Bombay districts. The condition of the people there is deplorable, as a number of large works are deserted. The Bombay Government has authorized the opening of scattered village works, but it is reported that the situation is very difficult to deal with. Elsewhere the relief measures are sufficient, generally, in British India, and are improving in the native States. About five million seven hundred and seventy thousand people are now receiving relief.

Dr. John Braden, president of Central Tennessee College, Nashville, died in his seventy-fourth year. Dr. Braden came to Nashville from Cincinnati. He had been closely identified with the Central Tennessee College. He made his life work the education and the uplifting of the colored race, and in his particular field achieved notable success. As monuments to his efforts he leaves the college and Meharry Medical School, one of the departments of the institution, with a reputation extended over the entire South.

The situation in China grows worse. The railway between Pekin and Tientsin has been torn up in many places by the Boxers. The disturbance is spreading to other provinces, even to Canton and Yunnan. The foreign governments have landed troops for the protection of the legations. The report of the burning of the Japanese legation has been confirmed. The wildest reports are spread as to murders of missionaries at various places and the destruction of buildings and other property. There is no doubt that many native Christians have been put to death.

The number and amount of liabilities of all commercial failures in May, compared with last year, are given below: May, 1900, 947; May, 1899, 581; liabilities, May, 1900, $23,771,151; May, 1899, $3,820,686. The returns show an unusually large number of small failures. This is readily traceable to the manufacturers, for with the surprising increase in number the smaller failures in trading show lower liabilities than in any other year except two. Manufacturing liabilities have much increased, however, the average for those small firms running close to twelve thousand dollars.

M. Daniel Osiris, the Greek millionaire, of Paris, has instituted a perpetual prize, to be awarded every three years, by the judgment of the Institute of France, to the discoverer, inventor, or producer during the period of the most noteworthy idea or object for the benefit of humanity. This prize is to be never less than one hundred thousand francs, and may be nearly double that amount. It is to be awarded to Frenchmen only, except when it falls due at the same period as a world's exposition in Paris, when it becomes a universal prize. The prize will be awarded for the first time at the exhibition of 1900.

If You Lack Energy, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It vitalizes the nerves, helps digestion, and relieves fatigue so common in midsummer.

WERNICKE
"ELASTIC"
BOOK-CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

THOMPSON.

Sister Janie Thompson, wife of Brother Dr. H. M. Thompson and daughter of Brother R. W. Locke, of Thyatira, Miss., died at her home, Marvell, Ark., on March 15, 1900, at the age of forty-two years. Sister Thompson obeyed the gospel when only seven years of age, and was a faithful and devoted Christian to the end. Memories of her beautiful earth life will continue as blessings to all who knew her, and will help the bereaved husband and relatives to bear this burden of sorrow.

Barton, Ark. T. F. PATTERSON.

COOKE.

Sister Jennie, wife of Brother Tom Cooke, was born on April 30, 1859; obeyed the gospel in 1885; and died at her home, Marvell, Ark., on April 8, 1900. She lingered in painful illness for a long time, but she bore her sufferings in gentle submission, and her faith and hope appeared stronger and brighter when the hour of her departure was at hand. Several little children had gone on before, and now the heartbroken husband is left alone. Our sympathy goes out to him and to her brother and aged mother in this sad bereavement.

Barton, Ark. T. F. PATTERSON.

ALDERSON.

Mrs. Nancy Jane Alderson was born in November, 1836, and died on May 19, 1900, being a little more than sixty-three years of age at the time of her death. In 1886 she heard the gospel, believed, and obeyed. While she was not situated, as she thought, to meet regularly, still she manifested great interest in Christianity otherwise. Like many others, she did not appreciate the importance of meeting upon the first day of the week. She has lived her life, finished her career, and gone into the beyond. May her sons and relatives—all of us—prepare to cross over.

W. ANDERSON.

Jameson, Tenn.

DAVIDSON.

Harriet Eliza Davidson was born on March 28, 1854, and was married to Joseph B. Kerr on October 21, 1875. She united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in her early youth, of which she lived a consistent member until September, 1890, when she was baptized into Christ during a meeting conducted at Campbell's Station, Tenn., by Brother E. G. Sewell. She was faithful to her duty until suddenly called away on May 20, 1900, being forty-six years, one month, and twenty-two days of age. Sister Kerr was the mother of fourteen children, two of whom preceded her to the grave. The opinion of all who knew her is, she was a good woman. May her companion and children be comforted by God's promises. W. ANDERSON.

Jameson, Tenn.

NEWSOM.

James Hooper Newsom, son of Joseph M. and Tabitha Newsom, was born on December 1, 1877, and was instantly killed by a live wire, at San Antonio, Tex., on May 22, 1900; aged twenty-two years, five months, and twenty days. He had been in Texas only six or eight weeks. Jimmie was a noble young man, moral, upright, and scrupulously exact in all his dealings; but he was not a Christian. His remains were shipped to the home of his childhood, and in the presence of a vast assembly of relatives and friends were laid to rest in the family burying ground. The family were heartbroken, especially his mother, who loved him so dearly. It is to be hoped that all may take warning from this sudden death. -W. ANDERSON.

Jameson, Tenn.

GARRETT.

Mrs. Malinda E. Garrett, wife of Mr. Matthew Garrett, was born on October 5, 1829, and departed this life on May 26, 1900, being seventy years, seven months, and twenty-one days old. She had been a member of the Christian Church for about fifty years. She was afflicted for some time with the dropsy. During that time she suffered a great deal. She leaves a husband, six children, and several grandchildren, together with numerous friends, to mourn their loss. We would say to the bereaved ones: Weep not as those who have no hope, for if she has been faithful to her duty, and we all do our duty, we will meet on the other side of the river of death. The funeral services were conducted by Brother Sammie Sewell, after which her remains were placed to rest in the Berea graveyard. DELA RILEY.

NETTERVILLE.

Mrs. Tereza Netterville, our faithful sister in Christ, passed to her reward on March 8, 1900. For more than fifty years she lived as the devoted wife of Brother J. T. Netterville, and only a little more than two months after his decease she was laid to rest beside his sleeping form. Like the true woman that she was, she was ever faithful in the performance of the duties within the circle of her home, and her children, grandchildren, neighbors, and many friends all rise up to bless her memory. Such devotion and untiring watch care as she manifested for her afflicted husband during his long illness is seldom seen. Her place in the home and in the church is now vacant, but the celestial city has become the place of her abode, and the memory of her many deeds of kindness will ever remain fresh in the hearts of those who loved her. LEE JACKSON.

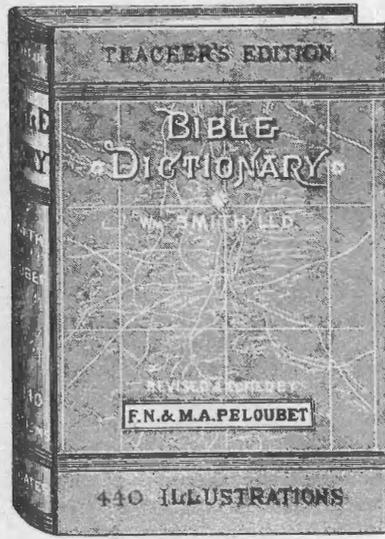

DORRIS.

Martha Jane Purcell was born on February 21, 1830; was married to Ira Dorris in 1853; became a Christian about twenty-five years ago; and died on March 25, 1900. At her marriage, she became the stepmother of several small children, and they all speak in the highest terms of her devotion to them and her tender care in rearing them. Her aged husband, who is left behind, speaks of her in words full of love, and seems to love to talk about what a faithful helpmeet she was to him. She also leaves three sons and one daughter of her own children to mourn their loss. Her neighbors speak of her as a good woman. A large number of her relatives and friends were present at her burial, at which the writer conducted the services. She lived and died in Sumner County, about five miles from Gallatin. L. S. WHITE.

Gallatin, Tenn.

WILLIAMS.

Brother John T. Williams died at Hollow Springs, Tenn., on May 24,

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

1900. Brother Williams was a member, in good standing, of the Christian Church at this place. He had suffered many years with rheumatism, which had so drawn his limbs out of shape that he was known, generally, as "Crippled John." Last fall his daughter, an only child, a beautiful girl of eighteen years, also a member of the church of Christ, was burned to death by her clothing catching fire. After this sad occurrence, the health of Brother Williams failed rapidly, the disease finally developing into something like consumption, from which he was prostrated and entirely helpless for several months before he died. He leaves an aged mother and two brothers to mourn their loss. Brother Williams was very poor as to worldly possessions, but was honest and a Christian, and well loved by all who were acquainted with him.

SAMUEL ESTEP.

Hollow Springs, Tenn.

M'CORKLE.

Nancy E. McCorkle, wife of A. F. McCorkle, died at Newbern, Tenn., on March 9, 1900. Sister McCorkle was near seventy years of age at her death. When quite young she became a member of the Baptist Church, of which she lived a consistent member till after her marriage to A. F. McCorkle. By the preaching of Brother J. S. Haskins and the teaching of her husband she was led into the glorious light of the gospel of Christ, and forthwith renounced all allegiance to the Baptist Church for the purpose of living a Christian only. She always afterwards rejoiced that she had been led from a human to a divine institution in which she could worship God without the dictations of human creeds, etc. She was a true and devoted wife, always looking after the comforts of husband and home. She was loved by all who knew her, and her friends were many. Thus life's curtain falls, and another loved one passes into the beyond, where, one day, all the faithful can meet to part no more.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

NORTHINGTON.

Dr. C. J. Northington was born near Hopkinsville, Christian County, Ky., on March 11, 1828, and lived to the ripe old age of seventy-three years, two months, and three days, when death came and relieved him of earthly cares on May 14, 1900. He served the Lord for fifty-eight years. During all these years his faith in the promises of God was something beautiful. He settled down to the practice of medicine, at Lafayette, Ky., at the age of twenty-eight years, and immediately took the lead in his chosen profession, and for forty-five years was the recognized head of his profession in his and the adjoining counties. He was large and commanding in his physical proportions; grand, stately, and dignified in his appearance; elegant, refined, and courteous in his manners; as stern as Stonewall Jackson where principle was involved, yet at all times as gentle and tender as a woman. The sight of sorrow, suffering, or death always touched his great soul and met with the most hearty and genuine response of sympathy. Being easily moved to tears, he mingled unbidden tears with all who sorrowed and wept. He was indeed the preachers' friend, and under his hospitable roof they always found a hearty welcome. In 1857 he married Miss Susan Hester, of Lafayette, Ky., a beautiful and strong-minded Christian girl, and to this union were born two beautiful daughters, who both became Christians early in life. The elder one a few years ago passed on to the shining shores of the shadowless clime. The younger one married Brother H. C. Crenshaw, of Roaring Springs, Ky. She and her mother still survive to mourn the loss of father and husband; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. Weep not, dear sisters, for "blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The dear Doctor is resting from the toil and strife of this life. How sweet and comforting is the thought that, like the beloved disciple of old, he is calmly and sweetly resting on the dear Savior's breast! R. E. M'CORKLE.

Jasper, Ala.

There is no mission work doing more good nor any one that ought to receive more encouragement than the Moody Free Colportage Publication, which sends Bibles and good books to every cell in our jails and prisons in every State free of any expense. Our own jail in Davidson County has received hundreds of books a year, and also our State prison. While Mr. Moody was in our city many gave liberally. Miss Berta Pate has been appointed to receive donations from this county and State. We hope God will open the hearts of people that they may give liberally to the recent announcement of need by Mr. A. C. Filt, superintendent of this work. Send all money to Miss Berta Pate, 319 Russell street, Nashville, Tenn.

A young man can pay his board and tuition in the Nashville Bible School next session for ninety-nine dollars ($99). He can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. The charges for young ladies are but little more. Send to the school for catalogue.

Remember "Ailenroc's Book."

Double-minded. No. 4.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1: 8.)

This language implies that a single-minded man is stable in all his ways. Hence, when we see a man who in life was stable in all his ways, we will conclude that he was a single-minded man. In all the history of the New Testament times we can find but one man who approached near unto the Man of Galilee. This one was the illustrious Paul, the apostle unto the Gentiles. His life was and is truly an epistle known and read of all men—not only known, but admired. This series of articles would be incomplete did it not treat of the life of this great man in all its self-denial, self-abasement, and its exaltation of the Christ of God and of men.

In his letter to the Philippians, he wrote: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3: 13, 14.) This example is worthy of our closest imitation. "This one thing I do." What is it? "I press toward the mark for the prize." Under the figure of a foot race the apostle here sets forth the duty of the earnest and hopeful Christian. We should receive, with all emphasis possible to it, his statement: "Forgetting those things which are behind." What things were behind? Every hope for and every avenue leading to self-advancement, self-enrichment, and laying up of wealth—a man of scholarship, with all the opportunities and temptations common to such, yet casting all aside, forgetting all that he might press onward to the prize. He did not try to be a man of letters, a philosopher, a doctor of law (Jewish), a Roman senator, and an apostle all at once. No; "this one thing I do." He gave himself wholly unto the great work before him; he had a single mind, and that was the mind of Christ; he gave up all for his work. Though great, he became small; though rich, poor; though learned, simple; that he might bring others to his joy and his hope which were in Christ Jesus.

So we, as Christians, must not attempt to be famous, honored, or rich; but, denying all these things and forgetting them, let the mind of Christ be in us, and, reaching forth unto the things in the future, press eagerly on for the prize. Until we give up every ambition, every earthly yearning and desire, every honor, and every opportunity for self-advancement, and make the aim and object of our course here the living of the pure, Christ life, and bringing everything into subservience to this, even "bringing into captivity every thought unto the obedience of Christ"—until we do this we will be "double-minded and unstable" in all our ways. Nothing is so dear, so precious unto us but that we should be willing to give it up for Christ; and until we are of this mind and spirit we are not fully consecrated, but are "double-minded" and will be "unstable" in all our ways. The apostle was steadfast and single-minded, because he had the mind of Christ; and if we have the mind of Christ, we will be single-minded and "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

We look out over the religious world to-day and are forced to conclude of its people, as did Paul of the people in his day: "For all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's." (Phil. 2: 21.) How sad, and yet how true! In the mad rush, close competition, and intense strain men forget their Lord, seeking worldly honor, fame, position, and popularity; seeking riches, the accumulation of wealth; entering into and laboring in all kinds of societies, associations, companies, and corporations. What for? For the spiritual enlightenment and conversion of their fellow-men and fellow-laborers? For the advancement and exaltation of the church and the strengthening of their spiritual nature? Ah, no! As a rule, such matters are not even secondary. They should be first and foremost. "Forgetting those things which are behind," they should "press toward the mark for the prize."

Brother, sister, friend, let us forget the world and its honors and riches and callings and let the mind of the blessed Christ be our mind. "Seek the things which are above." "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." Be not double-minded, but, understanding what the will of the Lord is, diligently "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." (Phil. 4: 7.) T. E. WINTER.

Fayette City, Pa.

Good books of good print and substantial binding may be had very cheaply these days. Even if good literature were costly, one could not afford to have anything else. Wholesome literature conduces to the strength of the mind. As wholesome food does to the strength of the body. The value of reading one good book cannot be estimated; neither can you estimate the harmful results of reading a trashy one. One may be known by the books he reads just as easily as he may be judged by his associates. They portray not only your intellectual character, but are also an index to your moral worth. One should be just as careful in selecting his books as in choosing his friends. The first book you should own is, of course, the Bible. Read it, study it, be guided by it, and do not be afraid to mark its pages. No man can be truly educated who is ignorant of its truths. Let your next book be a standard dictionary, that you may know not only how to spell the words you use, but their true meaning and proper place in the language. A few books, well read and understood, are of far greater value to you than many shelves of unread ones.

- ARMSTRONG & McKEEVEY Pittsburgh.
- BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
- DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
- FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
- ANCHOR Cincinnati.
- ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
- ATLANTIC New York.
- BRADLEY New York.
- BROOKLYN New York.
- JEWETT New York.
- ULSTER New York.
- UNION New York.
- SOUTHERN Chicago.
- SHIPMAN Chicago.
- COLLIER St. Louis.
- MISSOURI St. Louis.
- RED SEAL St. Louis.
- SOUTHERN Louisville.
- JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
- MORLEY Cleveland.
- SALEM Salem, Mass.
- CORNELL Buffalo.
- KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE testimony of 600 years' experience cannot be gainsaid by the unsupported statements of interested manufacturers.

Records show the use of White Lead since 1292, and in all that time it has proved itself the most durable paint. Why not be guided by the light of experience? The brands in margin are pure "old Dutch process" White Lead, the old-fashioned, honest kind that lasts.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid$ 50
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid..... 60
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid..... 6 00
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid..... 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

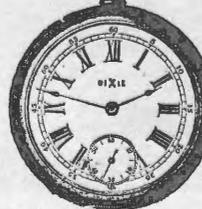

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid..... 20
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

- Single copy, by mail, prepaid..... 25
- Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
- Per dozen, by mail, prepaid..... 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

No. 30001G.

Large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
BUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery. Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasm, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. R. H. KLINE, L.D., 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

Send us a new subscriber.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

Who Ought to Labor in China?
No. 2.

In my former letter I wrote about the single and married. Much more might be said pro and con among the which is that the single man, if his mind is entirely free, can learn the Chinese language quicker. Married people need more help, as all know. Notwithstanding this, unless the man is an exception and a Paullike individual, better by far have the married man. In having the married, while the two ought to be patterns of married life, yet they should have the love of Christ consuming them to such an extent that while it becomes a cross and a heavy one to be parted every now and again, yet they will take up this cross cheerfully and thus accomplish more good as well as become better men and women of faith in the living God.

Leaving the above questions, no one should come here merely from a notion. Once I heard something which shocked me when I lived in Japan. A missionary spoke of men being sent to the foreign field in order to find work for them. This may be true or may not. I trust not. But as regards China, no man ought to come unless he really believes the Lord wants to take him in as a coworker in this part of his blessed work—none but persons of good, robust health, able to endure hardness and not afraid of real hard work, as first the language must be battled with; and before you hardly get a start, this demands attention and that demands attention; and before you realize it, your hands are full. Of course, only persons who have the Spirit of Christ—such as humble, prudent, earnest, devoted men and women who are not afraid to set themselves aside in order to benefit others—should come; yet they shall be persons who are by no means careless about taking care of the body, but who gladly take care of it for Jesus. In addition to the above, from what I read in the Gospel Advocate, they should be persons who have undoubted trust or faith in our Heavenly Father and are fully confident he wishes them here, and, like my friend, Mr. McCaleb, who was satisfied God wanted him in Japan and to Japan he came, so they, in like manner being satisfied as before God, know him in whom they trust; and whether this one helps or does not, still trusting in God, they go forward.

Coupled with the above qualifications, persons going to China to engage in the work should be persons who have been proved at home; for, as a rule, those who cannot work with Jesus at home are not likely to do much abroad. They should be persons who have true love to God and man, workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of life, ready for every good word and work, and who have entered the battle for life, determined, if God will, to live and die at their post. Finally, they should be persons who know how and can turn their hand to anything, and, if necessary, turn it, thus saving themselves indigestion, much trouble, vexation, and expenses.

D. F. JONES.

West Tennessee Notes.

The outlook for the cause of Christ is not what it should be. At this time we have three, if not more, hindering causes to the progress of Christianity: (1) War, (2) an election year, and (3) prospects for a bountiful crop. These things cause many to forget their obligations to God, and thus Christianity is weakened. In times of plenty people seem to think, or act, as though they were independent and had no need of divine help.

Another great trouble grows out of the deficiency of the eldership in the congregations. In West Tennessee a great many elders of congregations have wives that belong to some sectarian body, and, as a matter of fact, their influence is greatly impaired.

Again, I know of some elders whose wives never attend the church on Lord's day; in fact, you would not know they were members of the church unless some one tells you they are.

Another serious drawback is stinginess. I know of one young preacher, and a good one, too, who has preached for a certain congregation once a month since last fall, and they have paid him seven dollars and fifty cents. This same congregation has one member, at least, worth several thousand dollars. Another young preacher, godly and devoted, went into a neighborhood where there were several brethren who own their farms, and preached a week, baptized seven, and received thirty-five cents for that work, and that was paid by a very poor sister.

The congregations of West Tennessee are doing comparatively nothing in the way of sounding out the word in regions where the gospel has never been preached. Some of them in this (Obion) county have regular monthly preaching, and seem to think that is all that is required.

This being election year, and a great many members of the church being candidates for offices, of course it would not do for them to say anything in support of Christianity on account of rendering them unpopular and thereby losing a few votes. So we can expect nothing helpful from that source.

Another cause of disintegration in many congregations when they meet for worship on the first day of the week is that the only scriptural lesson read or studied is the Sunday school lesson; and, worse still, they never see this lesson from one Lord's day till the next. The teacher will ask the questions as laid down and the members of the class read the answer from their quarterlies. When this is through some of the sisters will sing a song (men cannot sing, you know), and one of the elders advances to the table and says: "Well, brethren and sisters, you all understand the design of this institution, and, as it is getting late and some of our young members want to go to hear some one preach, or go to a picnic, let us stand and give thanks for the loaf." Perhaps while he is thus devoutly and eloquently addressing them some of the members are whispering, loud enough to be distinctly heard: "I wish he would quit."

Brethren, in many places in Obion County you can see and hear things as herein described, but not in all the congregations. Some other evils I will mention later.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Hornbeak, Tenn.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation.
DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS.
St. Louis; Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Book-keeping, Shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any day. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

OLYMER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. SEE FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

Pearline

Save time - Not dirt

Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore

Edited by F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.50

Consultation Meeting at Montgomery, Ala.

On May 29, 1900, in Montgomery, Ala., representative brethren on each side of the leading questions that have hitherto so much hindered the progress and cooperation of the brotherhood of the church of Christ in Alabama met and spent three days in discussing differences of opinions and practices that have proved so detrimental to the peace, sweet communion, and cooperation of our Alabama brotherhood.

Such questions as the following were more or less fully discussed:

1. What are the obligations of unity?
2. What are the dangers of divisions?
3. Is there a basis of union upon which we should agree?
4. The proper method of raising funds for the spread of the gospel, by whom dispensed, and how.
5. The laying on of hands.
6. The use of instrumental music in the worship, as well as in the family.
7. Tolerance of covetousness, fornication, and other evil practices.

On some of these questions all were happily agreed; in others, some differences prevailed. All were discussed with sweetness of temper and in the spirit of love. The organ question, perhaps, came in for the greatest share of discussion. One singular feature in the discussion of the organ question was that not a single person present seemed to heartily indorse it, but only pleaded for tolerance, that it should not be made a test of fellowship.

It was claimed by our brethren who were supposed to represent the society in Alabama that it had practically ceased to exist, so that called for but little discussion.

The discussion was conducted mainly by O. P. Speigel and E. V. Spicer on one side and by J. M. Barnes, Samuel Jordan, J. T. J. Watson, and Willie Haynes, with a moiety from the writer, on the other side. The whole discussion was conducted with so much sweetness of temper and brotherly love that it was really a feast of the soul to be there.

Hope was inspired in almost every interested person who attended the meeting that a brighter future was awakened there that would probably spread throughout Alabama, tending to a more sacred oneness and peaceful cooperation of all the lovers of truth, a more united effort for the spread of the gospel and for the prosperity of Zion than has hitherto existed.

We were so confident of good results following that another meeting of similar character was appointed to convene a year hence, in Birmingham, Ala. Hoping the same sweet spirit may prevail there as presided over our meeting in Montgomery, we will rejoice to meet in Birmingham many interested Christians in the great work of the Master from all parts of Alabama and elsewhere.

The exact time of the meeting at Birmingham will be announced later. Let all lovers of peace, truth, and the absolute reign of Jesus the Christ be there. May the God of peace and love go with them. DAVID ADAMS. Pineapple, Ala.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.
CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

● Shackleford & Shackleford, ●
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps
E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner
Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

Church News.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Lebanon, June 9.—I am at home again from a trip down the Red River Valley, and I am nearly worn out. I preached at some new points. At Willis I found some of the peculiar people, and, judging by their fruits, I realized that I was near holy ground, where God's Spirit dwells. As I stood upon a high bank, with the water to my back and the people to my face, I thought of the famous baptism in the Jordan and that memorable circumstance when the Son of God was manifest to Israel and said it was becoming to do right (be baptized), though some people say it is vulgar. I will hold a meeting at Willis, beginning about the last of June. I anticipate a good meeting.

W. D. INGRAM.

TENNESSEE.

Beersheba, June 10.—As we are endeavoring to build a church house, we feel that we will have to ask the dear brethren and sisters for help. There is no church of Christ within eighteen miles of this place. The doors of the churches here are being closed against the ministers who come here to preach the gospel. We feel that we can stand it no longer. The place where the house is now being erected is two and one-half miles from here, at Tarlton, and a Brother Tate has given the lot. There are only three members at Tarlton and two here, so you may see that we are laboring under many difficulties in trying to build the church. We feel that the gospel should reach us, and I feel it my duty to put forth my every effort in the cause of Christ. We beg you to help us; and though it be ever so little, we shall appreciate it fully, and God will bless you in your effort. We hope to receive aid from the dear brethren and sisters at an early date. For further particulars about the church, I will refer you to Mr. Bob Tate, of Tarlton; Dr. W. C. Barnes and Mr. P. Woodlee, of Beersheba.

MINNIE MORRIS.

TEXAS.

Emory, June 9.—I began a meeting here ten or twelve days ago. I am preaching in the courthouse. I have found three or four members here battling for the truth against great odds. I baptized one yesterday, and shall stay a few days longer, then I will go to Hamilton for a three-weeks' siege. Work is abundant, but laborers that will endure affliction are few.

F. L. YOUNG.

Wimberley, June 11.—I have made a preaching tour in Caldwell, Travis, and Hays Counties since my return from Mexico and Arizona; four were added to the one body on said round. I find on my return quite a number of letters, wanting information as to Arizona and Mexico. You can raise almost anything you want. Land is selling at from twenty-five dollars to two hundred dollars per acre. The Gila Valley is very thickly settled in places. From Solomonville to Safford, on down for thirty miles, there are not less than ten towns. I think Safford has about twenty-five hundred population. I could hear of but one Christian in the place. What a grand field for mission work! I have two letters from two preachers wanting locations. If you are able to live for two or three years or can get the church willing to support you there for a while, I am satisfied a grand work can be done there. Where is the good, sound gospel preacher that will locate there? Now, as I will be very busy evangelizing for two or three months, I would advise hereafter that you write to Brother J. T. Jeffrey, Pima, Ariz., or Brother Alex. Nichols, Safford, Ariz., and, if possible, let us locate you and have the gospel preached to that people. "Covetousness, which is idolatry," is killing the church, while thousands are perishing for the bread of life. I meet brethren every day who never contributed a cent in their lives to the cause of Christ. Shame on such brethren! Do you think that God will save you in idleness and selfishness? Nay, verily.

H. H. TURNER.

Kansas Notes.

I had the pleasure of again meeting that old soldier of the cross, P. W. Shick, on May 27, 1900. He was with me at Kellogg, at a basket meeting. He had spent the week previous with the brethren at Winfield. The brethren enjoyed his visit and his thoughtful sermons. He has recently engaged in his sixty-first debate. He is ever ready and anxious to defend the truth. His last debate was with a Latter-day Saint, or Mormon. I enjoyed his association, sermon, and private Bible investigation. He says it is much more difficult to induce people to become Christians than formerly. He says he used to have ten additions to the church where he has one now. That is the experience of some other preachers with whom I have talked. Brother Shick appears to be good for a few more years yet. He is now seventy-three years of age. May he be spared for much usefulness yet. Such men are needed in the Master's vineyard—men of conviction and devotion to the truth, men whose characters have stood the test of the age through which they have passed. May the Lord bless him in his old age.

Brother C. C. Houston preached at Peck on Lord's day, not long since. The brethren are pleased with him and his work.

I have been informed that Brother O. M. Thomason will be with the brethren at Peck on the fourth Lord's day in this month.

Brother J. E. Cain baptized a young person at a mission point, near Caldwell, on May 28, 1900. Much mission work needs to be done in the part of the world that is not called "heathen."

Brother I. D. Moffit was with us in our Kellogg meeting. We enjoyed his presence and assistance very much.

We were glad to learn that Brother J. H. Irvin, of Winfield, who has had quite a siege with rheumatism, was able to visit his daughters, at Blackwell. May he soon recover entirely and be himself again in physical as well as mental activities. He is much missed in the congregation when not able to meet with them. He is always needed in Winfield.

Amidst all the allurements of this life many stand the test, while others are engulfed, as the onward tide is sweeping by. It requires much faith, courage, and devotion to stem the current and pull against the tide. All along some fall, while others pull on and keep their hearts on the Lord and his goodness and justice, their lives modeled after the life of the perfect One. Many who have had good intentions and have done good work have been caught in the snares of Satan. Many of them need much sympathy and assistance. Many preachers have been caught in the traps of Satan when they did not intend to. They need to be assisted to keep in the right way. Many of them have been helped, others have not. Many have been indulged to such an extent that the cause has suffered. It is a question that needs to be carefully considered, that error may not be committed. Prayer, love, and devotion to truth should guide us aright in dealing with such problems.

D. T. BROADUS.

The Work in Eastern Texas.

I have now been in this field three months, and am becoming somewhat familiar with the duties of a circuit rider in the post-oak woods. At all my regular preaching places the audiences are on the increase, and at the destitute points which I visit between Sundays there is a good interest. I pierce out into corners where a preacher of the ancient order has never been heard. I have already held one protracted meeting in a town where there were not enough saints to stay all night with, and drove from three to six miles in the country to find lodgment after the sermon. The main thought of the churches in this section is, not to have the gospel preached to them at home, but to send it to those who have never heard it. I am endeavoring to preach more to people outside the churches than inside them. If all churches that have monthly preachers would select mission points near by and send their preacher to them on Sunday afternoon and Sunday night and during the week following, there would not be much complaint at monthly preaching.

This is not a rich country, but I think the half dozen little churches in Titus and Morris Counties will give me a fair support. There are brethren and churches here that contribute to my support that do not hear me preach a single sermon. Two men have thus far contributed fifty dollars, and to this date they have not been near enough to my work to get the benefit of a single sermon. How is that for missionary work? One church assists in the work, and does not ask a sermon in its own house, but that I shall hold a protracted meeting in a place selected where there are no members.

On June 30 we will commence the regular protracted meeting work, and continue without cessation till cold weather. As far as announced, meetings will be held as follows: Omaha, Morris County, first and second Sundays in July; Cookville, Titus County, third Sunday in July; Rocky Branch, Morris County, fourth and fifth Sundays in July; Center Grove, Titus County, first and second Sundays in August; Argo, Titus County, third and fourth Sundays in August; Marshall Springs, first and second Sundays in September; Hughes Springs, Cass County, third and fourth Sundays in September. At one of these places there is not a single brother; at another, there is one; at another, one. But we are going to establish churches at some of them.

I have not written much for the papers of late. It is not because I have lost interest in papers or have forgotten how to write, but because I have been very busy. This is the first year of my life that I have devoted all my time to preaching. Before this I have divided between papers and preaching. I pray God this may be my best year's work. It is not unusual for me to baptize one hundred persons during a summer's work, but I hope to exceed that figure the present year. If you do not hear from me through the papers, do not forget that I am in the front of the battle.

T. R. BURNETT.

ECZEMA, ITCHING HUMORS, PIMPLES—CURED BY B. B. B.

Bottle Free to Sufferers.

Does your skin itch and burn? Distressing eruptions on the skin so you feel ashamed to be seen in company? Do scabs and scales form on the skin, hair, or scalp? Have you eczema? Skin sore and cracked? Rash form on the skin? Prickling pain in the skin? Boils? Pimples? Bone pains? Swollen joints? Falling hair? All run down? Skin pale? Old sores? Eating sores? Ulcers? To cure to stay cured, take B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), which makes the blood pure and rich. B. B. B. will cause the sores to heal, itching of eczema to stop forever, the skin to become clear, and the breath sweet. Mr. David Thurman, a well-known citizen of Atlanta, was a constant sufferer with eczema and scrofula for many years. Various medicines and prescriptions were resorted to without any perceptible relief, until he used Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.), a few bottles of which effected an entire cure. B. B. B. is just the remedy you have been looking for. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. For sale by druggists at $1 per large bottle. Complete directions with each bottle. So sufferers may test B. B. B., trial bottle is given away. Write for it. Address Blood Balm Company, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble and free personal medical advice will be given. B. B. B. cures deep-seated obstinate cases after all else fails. We have over three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using Blood Balm.

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

Send us your orders for nicely engraved cards, invitations, etc.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.

Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.

SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.)
Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

*If You Are Going North,
If You Are Going South,
If You Are Going East,
If You Are Going West;*

PURCHASE TICKETS VIA THE

AND SO SECURE

*The Maximum of Safety,
The Maximum of Speed,
The Maximum of Comfort,
The Minimum of Rates.*

Rates, Time and all other information will be cheerfully furnished by

C. P. ATMORE, G. P. A.,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLIII. NUMBER 26.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JUNE 28, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB, E. G. SEWELL, F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Frank Faithful and Henry Hardshell.....	402
Speaking where the Bible Speaks. No. 1.....	403
More on 1 John 3.....	404
Miscellany.....	405
Queries.....	406
Double-minded. No. 5.....	406
Home Reading.....	407
Hindrances in Investigation.....	408
Pastors and Evangelists.....	408
The Work of an Evangelist.....	410
Put to an Open Shame.....	410
Kansas Notes.....	411
A Good Meeting at Smithville, Canada.....	411
General News.....	412
Obituaries.....	413
Southwest Texas.....	413
Length of Creative Days.....	414
Acknowledgment.....	414
Brother Baumann's Work in Germany.....	415
"Let Your Light Shine".....	416
For India.....	416

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

As an evidence of the interest the people of China are now taking in Christianity, and of the opportunities in that country and other foreign lands for successful evangelization, Brother Wilson, of Kentucky, sends me a clipping from the Western Christian Advocate which he thinks it would be well to publish in these columns with appropriate comments on the subject of missions and mission work at home and abroad. The church referred to in the clipping receives assistance direct from people in this country who are in sympathy and close touch with it. Of course there are many things preached as doctrine and practiced as religious ordinances and requirements in that church which the New Testament does not authorize; but the people are evidently interested in the subject of Christianity, and they would no doubt receive with gladness the teaching of the New Testament unmixed with the traditions and commandments of men if their attention was called to it. The clipping is as follows:

"It has been impossible, in the multitude of other duties, to write personal letters to each one who gave a chair to this church; but they will be interested to learn of the success of this church and the prominent place given to it in the work in this great city. The week of prayer is always observed by the churches in Peking, but of late years the number of native Christians has been so large that no church edifice in the city would hold them, and it became necessary to meet in two or more places at the same time. In this way the Christians would lose much of the enthusiasm and inspiration that come from large gatherings. This year the committee having the matter in charge decided to hold all the services of the week in one place. Asbury Church was the only building to be thought of under the circumstances, and so it was decided to meet here every day. Yesterday, the first day, was a beautiful, bright Sabbath, and at 9:30 our Sunday school met, as usual, with an enrollment of about three hundred and fifty. The union preaching service was to be held at eleven o'clock, but long before that time the congregation began to assemble. Every seat in the large auditorium was soon filled, and benches were brought in and placed around the room. The sliding doors into the Sunday school room were thrown up, and that large room was filled almost to its full capacity. There were between thirteen and fourteen hundred persons present, undoubtedly the largest audience of Christians in China. Dr. Ament, of the American Board Mission, was the preacher, who used the text and theme suggested by the Committee of the Evangelical Alliance; and though the discourse was an hour long, that immense audience paid the closest attention to the close. The speaker's voice could be distinctly heard in all parts of the church. At the close of the sermon the Lord's Supper was celebrated, members of the London, Presbyterian, Congregational, and Methodist missions assisting in the distribution of the elements. A choir from the Peking University led the singing. In the afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock, the Sunday school for non-Christian children assembled. When the bell rang and the gates were opened, they literally came pouring in, until eleven hundred and ten had taken their places. After two hymns had been sung, and a prayer offered, the work of the classes began. The teachers had from four to eight in a class, and it was interesting to watch the eagerness with which the little children listened to the simple gospel lesson that was being taught. Several classes of men were taught by the theological students, while over a hundred women gathered in the Sunday school room under the instruction of Mrs. Gamewell and her Bible women. The United States Minister, Mr. Conger, with his wife and niece, besides several missionaries from other missions, were among the visitors, and all expressed their warmest appreciation of the work being done in this school. At the close of the school each child is given one of the picture cards which have been so generously contributed by friends in the home land. One can scarcely imagine the amount of pleasure that is given by these cards to these children gathered as they are from homes where squalor and destitution abound. The attention they receive, the hymns they learn, and (not least) these bright picture cards remind them that there are those who are interested in them and who are seeking to bring a little sunshine into their lives. A great harvest in future years will result from this faithful sowing. The impressions made upon these young minds will not be lost. The services of the day closed by an Epworth League meeting in the evening. Counting all who attended the various services, there must have been nearly three thousand who heard the gospel in this one church during the day. Surely this thought will be an encouragement to those who may properly feel that they have made this result possible by their contributions."

As I understand the matter, Dr. Crawford, of the Baptist denomination, who was a missionary of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society for several years in China, abandoned the society as unscriptural and impracticable several years ago and went to work on an independent basis. He is still working on that basis, and many Baptists in this country heartily indorse his work and his methods. This is the basis Brother Azbill and Brother McCaleb have worked on from the first in Japan. What is still more to the point, this is the way Paul and others worked in New Testament times. The scripturalness and superior advantages, from a purely practical point of view, of this method over cumbersome society organizations, are recognized by many good and great men in all denominations. It is no longer an experiment, and the indications are that there will probably be something of a revolution in missionary methods in all denominations within the next few decades. Just at this time all missionary operations in China are hindered by political complications and prospects of war; but this state of things will hardly last long, and each change in the political and military situation will no doubt improve the outlook for New Testament Christianity.

I publish the following communication here because it refers to an important question which has been discussed to some extent on this page:

"Brother Srygley: I have just read your comment on Brother Snodgrass' letter which is called out by Brother Klingman, and I want to give it my hearty indorsement. The churches in our home State (Tennessee) are largely at fault when they secure preachers to preach to them and neglect sounding out the word in the regions beyond. Preachers are as much at fault, if not more so, when they inaugurate and perpetuate such a course. Churches of Christ should carry on their own work at home and send the preachers out into the highways and byways to convert the world, and they should support the preacher in such work. But the discouraging feature is that churches generally love to be entertained rather than work; and preachers love ease, and thus many fail to heed Paul's injunction to Timothy: "Endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Both church and preacher have so far gone wrong on this point that I cannot at all give my home congregation my weekly contribution. I cannot support anything out of harmony with the word of God. I have been pressing this lesson on the churches where I have gone, and I am glad to note that in several instances the churches have gladly received the lesson and are obeying it. Most of my work for this year is in schoolhouses, court-houses, under arbors, and in tents. I enjoy this work, and have no cause to complain of my support. There are still some true, noble disciples who are faithful. In this work of reformation preachers who are supposed to make the Bible their daily study ought to set the example. By the way, my good brother, your stirring editorials do more good, perhaps, than you think. Do not be discouraged, but, if possible, be more vigorous in your work of faith and labor of love. In this connection let me say, since the Baptists want J. N. Hall as their man for a 'representative' debate, let us have Brother F. B. Srygley meet him. I would rather see Brother F. B. Srygley meet him (Hall) than any man I know. A brother at Scottsboro, Ala., and another at Gurley, Ala., say they will give five dollars each to help pay a good stenographer to take the debate down and have it published in a book. I say let us seek to have Hall meet F. B. Srygley, and, besides, have it published. JOHN E. DUNN.

"Rhome, Tex."

Brother Dunn is clearly correct in the position he has taken as to the work and worship of the church. He has, however, a hard fight before him if he holds this position. In almost every church there are members who want a preacher and who think the work and worship of the church cannot be properly conducted without a preacher. There are also many preachers who want places and who do not think a man can ever amount to much as a preacher without a place in some church. The members who want preachers and the preachers who want churches to preach to make a formidable opposition to any man who undertakes to stand up like Brother Dunn for the New Testament order of religious work and worship. I do not say this to discourage him, but rather to exhort him to contend earnestly for the truth once for all delivered to the saints. The preacher mistake is almost always the first step a church takes in apostasy from the New Testament. Once this step is taken, the usual route is from bad to worse. If New Testament ground cannot be held at this point, it cannot be held at any point.

Brother Larimore has sent me from Tracy City, Tenn., where he is now in a meeting, the following leaflet, entitled, "A Sermon On Baptism: "

"'If ye love me, keep my commandments.' (John 14: 15.)

"'Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.' (Matt. 16: 24.)

"'Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.' (Matt. 3: 13-17.)

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.' (Matt. 28: 19, 20.)

"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.' (Mark 1: 4, 5.)

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.' (Mark 16: 15, 16.)

"And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.' (Luke 3: 3.)

"And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.' (Luke 7: 29, 30.)

"After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized. For John was not yet cast into prison.' (John 3: 22-24.)

"When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,) he left Judea, and departed again into Galilee.' (John 4: 1-3.)

"Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.' (Acts 2: 38.)

"For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.' (Matt. 26: 28.)

"Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.' (Acts 2: 41.)

"But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.' (Acts 8: 12.)

"Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest; and he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.' (Acts 8: 35-39.)

"And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.' (Acts 16: 30-34.)

"And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.' (Acts 22: 16.)

"And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.' (Acts 22: 16.)

"What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.' (Rom. 6: 1-5.)

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.' (Gal. 3: 27.)

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.' (Col. 2: 8-12.)

"Which some time were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.' (1 Pet. 3: 20-22.)

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.' (John 17: 3.)

"And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.' (1 John 2: 3-5.)

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.' (Rev. 22: 14.)

Accompanying the foregoing leaflet, Brother Larimore sends the following letter:

"Tracy City, Tenn., June 18, 1900.—Last night we distributed about five hundred copies of 'Sermon On Baptism,' herewith inclosed, giving one to each person present who extended a hand to receive it. This was done to meet a demand for a sermon setting forth 'our views' on the subject. I did not tell them it is one of my original sermons; I simply informed them that 'it is a clear statement of "our views" on the subject of baptism.' It may 'hurt somebody's feelings,' be considered a thrust at the Campbellites or somebody else not mentioned in the Bible, and break up our meeting; but some of 'us' deemed it our duty to give them 'our views' on the subject, regardless of probable results. Responsible people can understand what the Bible says about baptism, if they are willing to understand it. It is not so much a question of understanding as of faith. We know what the Bible says on the subject. The question is: Do we believe it? This is my first—but not last, I hope—meeting on Cumberland Mountain, on whose broad, breezy bosom many of the days of my childhood and youth were spent. This is not a 'battle above the clouds,' however. Weeping clouds have obscured the sky, the stars, and the sun almost continuously from the day of my advent here until now. 'The signs' seem to indicate an indefinite continuation of showers. 'Andy' Lockhart—'Long Andy,' friends affectionately call him—who slept with me under the same blanket in the same starlight, snow, and rain when we wore 'the gray,' and fearlessly (he did) followed the fortunes of 'the lost cause,' is attending the meeting. When we were Confederate soldiers together, Andy was a man—a giant—absolutely fearless; I was only a boy; but it would have been a Corbett or a Sullivan who could have imposed on me much when Andy was there, and he was usually there. He tells some good, unwritten war jokes. He says I aroused him from his slumbers one night to keep him from freezing. Finding that our blankets had both silently stolen, or been stolen, away, he quietly 'walked in his sleep,' appropriating top blankets till he thought he had enough to keep us alive till morning. He then returned to our freezing place, tenderly spread the five blankets over me, then took me into his arms, and we slept till the bugle sounded. I do not believe Andy has ever known how a scared man feels. He says: 'I would hear every word you say, if I could; but I am a Hardshell Baptist, and you know they never change.' He has been my friend for forty years; in that he has never changed. Nor has he ever changed so far as his Southern sentiments are concerned. Albert Sidney Johnston, Frank Cheatham, and Dixie are samples of the names of his children. T. B. LARIMORE."

Our Contributors.

Frank Faithful and Henry Hardshell.

Frank Faithful: "To begin where we left off at our last interview, Henry, I will say that Naaman, the Syrian, of whom we read in 2 Kings, is a fine illustration of obeying God under unfavorable surroundings. His case comes to mind whenever I hear one trying to excuse himself from obedience because of difficulties in the way."

Henry Hardshell: "I must ask you to state those difficulties; I fail to remember them distinctly."

Frank F.: "Well, they were about these: Naaman had made a considerable journey from Syria to Palestine for the purpose of being healed of the leprosy by Elisha, the prophet of God. After some delay and trouble, on account of making application for cure to the king of Israel, at length he appeared at the humble home of Elisha, the prophet of the Lord in Israel. Elisha told him to go and wash in Jordan seven times and he would be cured of the leprosy. This not only astounded Naaman (who had supposed a different plan would be followed), but it enraged him, because he thought such a thing was too small for an officer of his rank. He scornfully refused to obey until reasoned with by his more thoughtful servants."

Henry H.: "O yes, now, since you mention that much, I recall the circumstances. I remember, friend Faithful, you said in our last conversation that everything written in the Old Testament was written for our learning, and when properly understood and applied had a bearing upon our comfort and hope. How can we learn anything from this account of Naaman which will give us at this age comfort and hope?"

Frank F.: "Allow me to correct you in one statement that you have just made. It was Paul, the inspired apostle, who said that about the Old Testament. I was just quoting Paul's language, which you can read in Rom. 15: 4. I have thought how easy it would have been for Naaman to have offered some difficulties besides those he mentioned if he had been disposed to continue in that mood, which, happily for him, he did not."

Henry H.: "I am not certain that I understand your application of this case to any one in difficult circumstances at this time."

Frank F.: "Well, you know, Henry, you have been a little troubled in mind over some extreme cases where persons desirous to obey God have been supposed to be surrounded with difficulties which to human minds seemed impossible to overcome. I have been trying to show you that God in his providence can open ways and means which we know not of, and that, all things considered, we have great reason to hope that an honest and sincere prayer to know and do the right will be rewarded by the Lord. Now, you will observe that Naaman, when told to go and wash seven times in Jordan, found difficulties in the way; but they were difficulties which grew out of his prejudices and ignorance. He seems to have first thought the God of Israel was about as some heathen god who would be moved by the loud cries and gesticulations of those who worshiped him. The idea of water to be used in being healed called to his mind the pure streams of Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel, which prompted the incredulous question: 'May I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.' But this objection was overcome by his more credulous servants, who supposed that a more imposing duty would have received more reverent attention. I have sometimes thought if he had lived in our time there are those who would have supplied him with more objections."

Henry H.: "What other objections could he have made, I wonder?"

Frank F.: "If he had been as anxious as some I know to find difficulties in the way of obeying a command of God, he, seeing that Elisha meant what he said, and said what he meant when he said, 'Go and wash in Jordan seven times,' might have said: 'Elisha, how far is it to the Jordan?' Taking for granted that he was then at or near the city of Samaria, Elisha would have said: 'If you go a directly straight course, you will have to travel at least twenty miles; counting the meanders of the road, you will probably travel twenty-five miles before you reach the nearest point on the river.' To this Naaman might have replied: 'Why does not your God cure me here? Why do you command me to go so far away? Do you not know, Elisha, that your command must be an unreasonable one when I have not yet taken time to alight from my chariot and rest myself, my men, or my horses? You know that my presence here in the land of Israel is regarded with great suspicion. I may be attacked by a superior force and be slain. Why require me to go so great a distance when there may be in ambush some band of soldiers who will swoop down upon me and my little company? Why, Elisha, have you forgotten that I am afflicted with the leprosy, an incurable disease, and may die before I get to the waters of Jordan? Why—just think of it!—these spirited Arabian horses may take fright, run away with the chariot, and dash me to death before I can possibly obey this command to wash in Jordan. Why does not your God cure me here where I am? Are you, Elisha, so foolish as to believe in water salvation? Why does not your God cure me here, in this chariot, or on dry land?' he might have again asked in thundering tones. These and other objections he might have made if he had been prompted by some I have heard who see many difficulties in the way of obeying the Lord simply because they want to see them."

Henry H.: "I realize more than ever the truth of what St. Paul said of the Old Testament—that it was written for our learning."

Frank F.: "You can begin to see men as trees walking, but, Henry, you have not yet seen all the lessons this bit of Old Testament history furnishes us in the way of illustration and suggestion, for every fact and every word and turn of the way in this account to my mind is running over with profit if we will rightly consider them."

Henry H.: "I believe it, and I believe he had more grounds to utter these complaints than any person I know now who dares to offer an excuse for disobeying God at this day and time."

Frank F.: "Are you really in earnest, Henry, in this statement, and do you realize in uttering this truth that you have become the judge of your own case and have even now condemned yourself? God plainly calls upon you, as well as the rest of us, to obey his commands, but for some reason or the lack of reason you have not done so."

Henry H.: "Well, friend Faithful, I intend to be a Christian, but just now I am powerfully anxious to learn more of Naaman. I am getting powerfully interested in that Old Testament history."

Frank F.: "We have talked enough on the subject for this time. We may follow it with further benefit hereafter. Speaking of your interest in it, I will say, after your manner of speech, your interest must be 'powerfully' weak. Contradictory as it may sound, I fear it is true, as it is so weak as to prevent you from obeying what you have admitted to be your duty and for which disobedience you have no excuse. I commend to you the old stanza:

God calling yet! And shall I give
No heed, but still in bondage live?
I wait, but he does not forsake;
He calls me still; my heart, awake!

G. LIPSCOMB.

Speaking where the Bible Speaks.

No. I.

I am frequently asked whether I will preach where the organ and its concomitants are used in the public worship of God. My answer is always in the affirmative. I can stand these things as long as the innovating church can stand my preaching. I have frequently been condemned by those who do not know the course I always pursue for doing so. That others may judge of my soundness in this particular, I will give as nearly as possible a verbatim report of a sermon I preached some time ago at the Christian Church in Spencer, Ind. It is hardly necessary for me to add that I have not been asked to preach there since. Of course the organ and choir performed their part as usual. The "pastor" prayed that I might "speak as the oracles of God speak;" and the choir sung, "How firm a foundation," etc. The circumstances suggested to my mind a different line of thought from that which I had previously thought of presenting. The following is what I said on the occasion:

"I shall attempt, so far as in me lieth, to answer a part of the brother's prayer and to emphasize one stanza of the choir's last song:

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word!
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?

The request of God in the prayer that was offered, that I might 'speak as the oracles of God speak,' is in line with what the Bible teaches. It seems from the way in which we often treat prayers and songs in the affairs of practical life that they are not meant to be taken seriously. Any earnest effort upon our part to realize the substance of our prayers and songs in the various avocations of life would result in (1) a great change in the latter, or (2) a modification of the former.

"To my way of thinking, the Bible as a whole, the New Testament in particular, authorizes us to affirm, with the greatest degree of certainty, that the way of God, mapped out in his word, is sufficient for all practicable purposes. My contention is that the word of God is a sufficient rule to govern the Christian in both faith and practice. I mean by 'rule' not a stiff, unyielding, inflexible copy of every detail in the affairs of private and public life, but I mean by the use of the term that it contains an embodiment of the principles, directions, and instructions in all the details of public and private life. I contend that it is sufficient for both—that it is an infallible guide in both faith and worship. I mean by the use of the word 'faith,' in this connection, what Jesus and inspired men require of all sinners in coming to Christ for the forgiveness of sin. It includes all that the New Testament requires of men as sinners. The word 'worship' I use in the comprehensive sense of all that pertains to the duties of both the individual and the church as a body. Whatever belongs to the individual as a Christian, as a member of Christ's body, is furnished in specific commands, direct teachings, exemplary examples, and necessary inferences. He is not left to guess at anything pertaining to his work or the Lord's will. The church, as a body, requires for its perfection in work and public worship commands, examples, principles, directions, and instructions in all the essential details of its responsible activities.

"The mission of the church naturally and scripturally divides itself into two distinct departments of activity. This distinction begins with the commission and is kept before us in all the apostles said and did. The first we may designate as the 'missionary department' of the Christian system. The apostles were charged with the conversion of the world. They were thoroughly equipped with all the means and organization needed in the work of evangelization. They were commanded by the Head of the church to 'go into all the world, and make disciples of all the nations.' This was as far as the first department of their work extended. It was carried out to the letter by those to whom it was committed. The success was phenomenal and without a parallel in the history of Christianity. The obstacles that confronted the first preachers of the gospel have not been equaled since the devil had an existence. The difficulties of reaching 'the masses' to-day will not extenuate in the least the guilt of those who modify in the least degree the organization and methods inaugurated and directed by the wisdom of the Almighty. In this department we are thoroughly furnished with all things pertaining to the conversion of the world to Christ. The church itself is an organized missionary society for the extension of the kingdom of the heavens to the ends of the earth. The church, as a body, has a place and an important work in bringing sinners to Christ. It may work to this end in several ways. First, by example, keeping the ordinances. (1 Cor. 11: 2.) 'If therefore the whole church be assembled together, and all speak with tongues, and there come in men unlearned or unbelieving, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one unbelieving or unlearned, he is reproved by all, he is judged by all; . . . and so he will fall down on his face and worship God, declaring that God is among you indeed.' (1 Cor. 14: 23-25, R. V.) 'For from you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord . . . in Macedonia.' (1 Thess. 1: 8, R. V.) A congregation that neglects not the assembling of itself together on the first day of the week, other things being equal, will have great influence in the work of Christ. Then by doing as the first churches did, sending men out into the field and supporting them in the work of preaching, the church may act as a body. The individual may contribute to the work by living as required to do by the Christ, by helping to support others in preaching the gospel, and by cooperating with the church to the extent of his ability. This is how the gospel was preached in the beginning.

"But do we find in this department an infallible rule of faith? Is it sufficient for the sinner to believe just what we find in the missionary department? It tells him all that he must believe and do in order to come to the Christ. It tells those who would become the disciples of Christ what to do, how to do what he commands, and gives the reason for obedience to the commandments of the Lord. The divine command that tells us what to do in order to secure the forgiveness of sin forbids our doing something else instead of what he has commanded. If it can be proved that he has prescribed the manner in which man shall render obedience to the Lord's commands, all other ways of doing what he has ordered are necessarily and emphatically excluded; and the reasons given by divine authority for obeying him forbid in the strongest terms of implication doing what he commands for any other reason. I desire to impress the fact that a command of God preoccupies the entire grounds of faith, work, and worship, and excludes all others.

"Let me make an effort to illustrate this already luminous truth. Jones sends his son to the city of Indianapolis to buy a buggy. He does not tell the boy where he shall not go and what he shall not buy in specific prohibitions, but it is easily read between the lines of what he has commanded. The boy, if disposed to disregard his father's wishes, deals with him as the latitudinarian does with the commands, examples, and spirit of Christ's teaching. He does what the father says, and more. He goes to many other places and buys many other things at his father's expense. Upon what grounds could the father condemn the course of the son? He had given him sufficient instructions in the matter. Was not his duty sufficiently plain? Was there any room for doubt as to the proper course to pursue? The father of young Jones would say, if he be wise and good: 'It is unreasonable that I should have told you what I did not want you to buy and where I did not mean for you to go; the matter of duty was made plain by telling you what I wanted and where it was to be had. The information that I gave you concerning what I meant for you to get and the place where I wanted you to get it covers the entire grounds of your duty, and by implication forbade your going elsewhere and making other purchases.' But for the habit of some people in religious matters which throws light on the idiosyncrasies of all others we cannot imagine him setting up the plea that his father did not say for him 'not to go to other places and buy other things.' This seems to be the best argument adducible by those who are not contented with what God has commanded. 'He does not forbid it' is the argument for justification of all things human in the system of Christianity.

"We are told that Luther desired to retain in the pale of the church everything not forbidden or condemned by the authority of God, while Zwingli was intent on abolishing all that could not be proved by the Scriptures. 'The German reformer wished to remain a member of the Catholic Church, and sought to purify it from all that was repugnant to the word of God. Zwingli passed back over every intervening age until he reached the times of the apostles, and wanted to bring the church to entire subjugation to divine authority, and labored to restore it to its primitive condition.' (D'Aubigné.) Which is the safer rule of interpreting the word of God—to retain in faith and worship what it does not in specific terms forbid, or to reject from its fellowship everything that it does not require, either by precept, example, principle, or necessary implication? If we admit one thing without divine authority, by what authority can the practice of adding to the work and worship of God be limited?

"God has the happy faculty, so to speak, of condensing a vast amount of truth and principle into the small compass of a specific rule. He deals summarily with the gigantic evils of the world. He compresses enough of the vitality of truth into one maxim to last a poor, weak sinner months. Jesus could preach more truth in one sermon than all his people have practiced in the history of Christianity. He does not go into details when dealing with the sins of men. The truth properly embodied in the heart will work itself into life in harmony with itself. Trifling with the word of God will prove equally as fatal to the interests of the soul as the ignorant man tampering with electricity. Let us never 'handle the word of God deceitfully.'" W. J. BROWN.

MORE ON 1 JOHN 3.

My last article closed with 1 John 3: 4. "And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him." (Verses 5, 6.) "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." "Abideth in him!" What is it to abide in him? Verse 6 is the key to the whole connection, and especially several verses that follow. It is no mere matter of sentiment to abide in Christ; neither is it any mere matter of profession or claim. It is an active, earnest, and working life that abides in Christ, and no other kind does. "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." (John 15: 2.) To abide in Christ is to bear fruit, and no man can truthfully claim that he abides in him that does not bear fruit. To bear fruit for Christ is to live as he requires his followers to live; in other words, it is to live as the word of God requires people to live. A man that claims to be in Christ, and does not bear fruit, does not live as the word of Christ requires, and will be cut off as an unfruitful branch, and wither and die. In this matter we cannot deceive the Lord; we may deceive our fellow-men, but we cannot deceive God. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." (John 15: 3.) It took the word of Christ to make his disciples clean, and it takes that to keep them clean. Hence, it is folly for any one to claim that he abides in Christ that does not live in him by doing continually as the word of God requires; and since it takes the word of God to make men clean, it follows as a certainty that none are clean that refuse the word or neglect its divine requirements. Hence, to abide in Christ is to abide in his word, and to abide in his word is to continue all the time doing the things the word of the Lord directs to be done. So long as a man continues to live thus he is living a righteous life. This sort of life demands all the time that a man has in doing God's will; therefore the man that abides in Christ in this sense is striving all of his time to put down sin. It is plain to see why the apostle says that he that abides in him sins not. No man can do both of these things at the same time. A man that loves the ways of righteousness and truth loves to live out those principles, and will do it at all hazards. On the other hand, the man that loves sin more than he loves righteousness will live in sin, and will not abide in Christ. It is as impossible for a man that loves and practices sin to abide in Christ as it would be for a man reared and trained in the English tongue to speak French when he had never learned a word of it; hence, the Lord uses strong terms along this line. "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." You might just as well expect water to run upstream by its own weight as to expect a man that abides in Christ to lead a life of sin or for a man that daily lives in sin to abide in Christ. Either one would be utterly contrary to everything taught in the Bible.

"Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous." (Verse 7.) It therefore takes a righteous life to make a righteous man, and a man that will not live a righteous life cannot be a righteous man; no man can hold with Christ and run with sin. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." We are either actually with Christ, working with him and by his directions, or we are scattering people away from him.

"He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." (Verse 8.) Thus the apostle again turns the scale, and shows what a man is that is not trying to serve God, but yielding his life to sin. Such a one is a sinner, out and out; is of the devil; is led and controlled by the devil, and not by the Lord; and is in no sense a servant of God. If a man is going to be for the Lord, he must be for him all over, both in heart and in life. The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil. He overcame Satan in every conflict, even conquering him in death and the grave, bringing life and immortality to light. In the establishment of his religion he has made it possible for man to live always in the service of God, and to resist and overcome Satan—not in the modern way of holiness, or sanctification, by all at once getting beyond the reach of either sin or Satan, but by so thoroughly consecrating the whole heart and life to doing the will of God that he has neither time nor desire to do Satan's work. Yet even this man may sometimes make mistakes and missteps and do and say wrong things; but it is only for a moment, under strong temptation and the weakness of humanity. So soon as he sees and realizes that he has done wrong he repents, gets right again, gets on the right way, and rejoices that he is on the Lord's side and a righteous man.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." (Verse 9.) "Doth not commit sin." When a man has become a child of God by obeying the gospel and retains the word of God in his heart and is anxious to do God's will beyond everything else, he will not go into sin. If he does, then he ceases to be God's child. No man can serve God and sin at the same time, and need not try. God will not be second; he must be first or not at all. This passage never was intended to mean that a child of God cannot turn from him and sin; it means he cannot do both of these things at the same time. If he deliberately turns into sin, he deliberately forsakes God, and a faithful child cannot afford to do that. No man whose heart is set on honoring God and on being a pure, good man can afford to leave God and his truth to go into sin. A man that has for a time been a pure, good man might abandon this pure, good life and take up with some wicked, heartless course of sin; but everybody knows that in so doing he ceases to be a pure, good man. You might as well ask a pure, devoted Christian to put his hand into the fire as to ask him to leave a pure, virtuous, devoted life for some mean, wicked, and degrading life. He will not do it; he cannot afford to do it, for when he does he gives up all respectability among his neighbors and becomes an outcast and a byword. Who that is married to Christ and wants to dwell with Christ, and Christ with him, and aspires to be so pure and holy as to secure with him a home of everlasting bliss, can afford to forsake Christ and take up with sin and folly in this life? No man can do it till he ceases to love Christ and falls in love again with sin and folly. The man that does it deliberately gives up his own soul, gives up all for sin. This is the sense in which a man born of God cannot sin. A pure-hearted young person and one that wishes to stand well with good people cannot and will not give up the sweets of a pure Christian home and leave a Christian father and mother to become a member of a wicked, godless, corrupt family. No more can a pure, faithful child of God afford to turn away from the family of God and the service of God for a life with the wicked and depraved of earth. These are some of the grand lessons the apostle is giving in these strong and beautiful verses.

"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." (Verse 10.) This whole connection shows that no one man can serve two opposing masters at the same time. God is urging men to be good, pure, and holy, and cannot be pleased with evil of any sort. Satan, the opposing master, is urging upon men to live in sin, to do evil, and only evil, continually. If a man goes a single step after Satan, he goes just that far away from God. While a man remains loyal to God, therefore, he cannot be loyal to Satan. No man can be loyal to Great Britain and the South African republics at the same time. If these verses in 1 John 3 be viewed in this light, they are as plain as any in the New Testament. God does not force any one to be righteous, nor does he force any one to be wicked. He gives all their choice to be righteous or wicked whichever they prefer; but he lets them know plainly that they cannot be both at the same time. He also teaches them plainly that whatever they are in this life fixes their eternal destinies, and these things are so plain that all may understand who will.

"Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." (Verses 13, 14.) Love for God and for things that are good makes up in large measure the difference between the righteous and the wicked. A man that loves God and loves righteousness loves the Lord's people, who are his brethren. A man that claims to be a child of God and does not love the children of God makes a false claim, and is not of God. A wicked man loves sin and sinful ways, and loves the men that help him along in his sinful ways; but he only loves those that love and help him. A righteous man loves everything and everybody that is pure and good, loves everything that is in harmony with God, and even so loves the souls of the wicked as to lead him to work for their salvation.

"Hereby know we love, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." (Verse 16, R. V.) God proved his love for the world by giving his Son to die for them, and Jesus proved his love by submitting to his Father's will, even to the death of the cross. Upon the same principle we have to prove our love. We prove our love to God by doing his will, and can prove it in no other way. A part of his will is that we love the brethren. This passage shows that, if need be, we should go so far as to lay down our lives for the brethren.

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." (Verse 18.) Love is like faith. Faith has to manifest itself in action, and when it refuses to do so it is dead; and so love is dead if it refuses to manifest itself when the word of God calls. We must work while it is day. "The night cometh, when no man can work." Any man, therefore, that loves God well enough to go to heaven loves him well enough to read and study his word, loves him well enough to meet with the disciples on the first day of the week to break bread, loves him well enough to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and loves him well enough to keep himself unspotted from the world; and when a man loves God well enough to keep him doing these things for a lifetime, all the love of this whole world proves utterly unavailing to turn him from Christ and cause the loss of his soul. E. G. S.

The coward hesitates in the face of duty, and men of ordinary size appear to him as giants. He never enters any field of difficulty or danger, and flees when no man pursues; and, as a result of his unbelief and cowardice, he is doomed to live in the wilderness of sin and disappointment, and then die in shame.—Our Young Folks.

Says an exchange: "The bad boy is always looking for a good time." Yes; but the good boy is not always out for merely his own personal pleasure, and yet he is generally happier for it.—Boys' Lantern.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. D. Floyd preached at Normandy, Tenn., last Sunday.

Brother W. J. Brown, of Coal City, Ind., will be with the church of Christ at Guthrie, Ky., on the second Lord's day in July.

I preached at Los Angeles not long since. I will spend about six weeks in California. I will write a letter soon. Christian love to all the readers of the Gospel Advocate.—Strother M. Cook, Los Angeles, Cal.

I want to say the following to Brother Walling: We reach the blood of Christ in him (Col. 1: 14); by faith we are baptized into him (Gal. 1: 26, 27); when we are in him, we are in his body, the church.—E. A. Elam, Meaford, Ont., Canada.

Brother J. S. Dunn closed a week's meeting at this place on June 11, 1900, with five additions and four reclaimed, who confessed their faults and promised to live better in the future. We had a good meeting, and enjoyed it very much. Pray for us.—H. N. Mann, Riverside, Tenn.

Brother John E. Dunn, writing from Mangum, O. T., under date of June 15, 1900, says: "My meeting here is a good one. There have been four baptized so far, one took membership, and the church seems to be much strengthened." Brother Dunn keeps busy in the Master's vineyard. He will not return to Tennessee before some time in August.

Brother J. W. Grant announces to the Gospel Advocate readers that he has received $50.75 in response to his call for contributions for Brother Yohannan and the work in Persia, and that he forwarded the same on June 20, 1900. He also forwarded $8.10 that had been sent to the Gospel Advocate office for Brother Yohannan, but not sent to Brother Grant. This, added to what he had received, makes the remittance (less exchange) $58.75. He expresses many thanks to those who have contributed to the work.

On his journey to Texas, Brother L. S. Gillentine stopped over with us the first night in June, remaining until the following Thursday. He preached several discourses in Luxora and Osceola, where good crowds came out to hear him, considering the inclemency of the weather. He won the esteem and admiration of all who heard him, and was urged by many to remain longer. He is truly an earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord, and we trust that he will come again, for we are sure he can do much good here.—Jennie May Nicholson, Luxora, Ark.

My meeting with the church of Christ at Fort Worth, Tex., resulted in nineteen additions to the church there. Some were baptized, some restored, and others were added by letter. The brethren said the meeting was a success. Brother Larimore is expected to hold a meeting there next year and Brother Richardson will hold a meeting there in September. I am to begin a meeting at Rienzi, Hill County, Tex., on Friday night before the second Lord's day in July, and at Rockwood, Coleman County, Tex., on July 17, 1900 (Brother White will begin the meeting on July 13). Brethren from the surrounding country are invited to attend.—J. H. Lawson, Denton, Tex.

Please announce that there will be a religious discussion at Curve, Tenn., beginning on July 3, 1900, and continuing four days, between A. P. Johnson (Christian) and T. P. Clark (Methodist). Four propositions will be debated, as follows: (1) The Scriptures teach that the immersion of a believing penitent in water is scriptural baptism; (2) the Scriptures teach that infants are proper subjects of baptism; (3) the Scriptures teach that baptism is one of the conditions of pardon from past sins; (4) the Scriptures teach that sprinkling and pouring water upon a person is scriptural baptism. A. P. Johnson affirms the first and third propositions, and T. P. Clark affirms the second and fourth propositions. The place is on the Illinois Central Railroad, and all are invited to attend.—A. P. Johnson, Huntingdon, Tenn.

EDITORIAL.

No one loves God who disregards his law.

"Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

It is a sign of weakness to boast of strength.

Satan may promise good, but he can only give evil.

If you please to do right, you may do as you please.

"The servant of the Lord must be gentle unto all men."

We thank men who grant us favors, and forget God, who gives us all.

The only way to escape persecution is to cease living "godly in Christ Jesus."

Dr. Miller says: "There is a beautiful legend of the sweet-toned bell of the angels in heaven which softly rings at twilight. Its notes make a music supremely entrancing; but none can hear it, save those only whose hearts are free from passion and clear of unlovingness and all sin. This is only a legend; no one on earth can hear the ringing of the bells of heaven; but there is a sweeter music which the lowliest may hear—those who live the gentle life of a patient, selfless love."

One of the surest ways of bringing happiness into our own lives is to bring it into the lives of others. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." A kind word, a noble deed, will bring a rich return. The brightest and happiest days are those spent in service for the comfort and welfare of others. One of the highest compliments ever paid a father was the one of a little son, who being asked where his father was, replied: "Well, I do not know exactly; but if you find any one sick or suffering, I think father will be there. He is always at such places."

What a gentleness there is in our loving Master's touch when he lays his hand on the sore, aching heart! He knows just where it hurts and what balm to lay next the bleeding spot. In that poor creature that crouched at his feet and bathed them with her tears the sore spot was the sense of her guilt. "Thy sins be forgiven thee," was the healing balm. My suffering friend, can you not trust that hand? It may cast you down, but you may be sure that it will never cast you off. When his wisely loving hand uses the lancet or the pruning knife, it is unflinching love that holds the instrument. Not one cruel blow has our Savior's hand ever yet given you or me, and never will.—Exchange.

Some seem to think that the only thing needful in their opposition to the so-called "organized effort" is simply to talk against it. It seems never to occur to them that they ought to do something along the line they so eloquently assert the New Testament teaches. If they recognize any individual obligation, they appear to want to pay it in talk. But talk will not discharge this obligation. God requires work. The Master of the vineyard did not say, "Go talk in my vineyard," but: "Go work to-day in my vineyard." Jesus, in referring to the scribes and Pharisees, said: "They say, and do not." Christianity is not merely a negative life, but a positive one. It is not only refraining from evil, but also following God's will in the matter of doing good. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

The devil is a power to be shunned, and the devil is a power to be resisted. We are told to pray our Heavenly Father to "bring us not into temptation," and we are told to "count it all joy . . . when" we "fall into manifold temptations." When we can follow the path of duty without being troubled, or met by his interfering presence, let us thank God and press on. When, in the line of duty, we can take our choice of two courses, one of which would seem to be free from any special temptation, and the other sure to confront us with his tempting presence, there is no call for us to choose the devil-beset course merely for the sake of meeting him and resisting him. When we can shun him altogether, that is the best and safest thing to do. But when we are squarely met by him, let us then as squarely resist him, that he may flee from us. Only as a man is willing to resist the devil when he ought to resist him, and shun him when he ought to shun him, will he make the best use of his own powers and strength in the service of his Master.—Sunday School Times.

"Enduring the Sermon" is the title of a good article found in one of our exchanges. It deals with the cry for short sermons, alleging that "it is not a sign of spiritual appetite and vigor." We concur with the opinion here expressed, and deplore the spiritual degeneracy that makes such demand. Men and women who complain so bitterly when the preacher claims their attention longer than forty minutes, listen patiently for two hours, or longer, to a lecture on a subject that only entertains them for the time. They complain about his talking so long, and then almost talk him to death the first opportunity that presents itself, and are generally the last to leave after the benediction has been pronounced. We can account for this only in one way: that they love the gospel less than they do the lectures or their own selfish pleasure. Of course preachers should condense their sermons, presenting gospel truths in short and simple sentences, but not at the expense of the truth itself. Truth is too priceless, and human souls too precious, for truth to suffer haste in too short sermons. There is such thing, however, as preaching too long, and this should be carefully avoided. Every preacher should prayerfully and assiduously study his Bible, that he may in a reasonable length of time present an instructive and edifying lesson to his hearers, even if some of them do grow restless and murmur that he preaches too long.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

We are now publishing four hymn books: "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and our new book, "Gospel Praise." We are confident that four better books cannot be found. Our hymn book catalogue and price list will be sent to any address on application.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is not yet quite ready for delivery. Our presses have been so crowded with work that we have not been able to complete the book. We feel sure that our readers and customers will be patient with us, for we are doing our best to fill all orders. Send us your orders, so that you may receive a copy so soon as the book is out. This is a very valuable book, and promises to have a very wide circulation. Price, $1.50 per copy.

Carefully examine the following list of tracts and send us your order: The Sabbath—Which Day Shall We Observe? by D. Lipscomb. . . 2c

- Out of Darkness into Light, by Z. T. Winfree. 5c
- Prayer, by Hiram Pharris. 10c
- Pump Reset, by J. M. Kidwill. 10c
- The New Name, by J. M. Kidwill. 10c
- Acts of Apostles, by E. G. Sewell. 10c
- Proper Division of the Word of God, by E. G. Sewell. 10c
- Theological Grub Ax, by W. L. Butler. 10c
- Bible Geology, by I. N. Jones. 10c
- Review of L. W. Bates on Water Baptism, by R. H. Bonham. 10c
- Methods of Work and Worship in the Church, by James E. Scobey. 10c
- The New Birth, by James A. Harding. 1c
- Justification, by T. W. Brents. 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by O. A. Carr. 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by E. A. Elam. 10c
- Hezekiah Jones—A Dialogue Between a Methodist and a Christian. 10c
- Woman's Work in the Church, by G. G. Taylor. 10c
- Walking by Faith: Origin of Instrumental Music in Christian Worship, by M. C. Kurfees. 5c
- Instrumental Music in Public Worship, by E. W. Herndon. 5c
- Church Organization, by E. G. Sewell. 10c
- Sincerity Seeking the Way to Heaven, by Benjamin Franklin. 5c
- How to Study the Bible, by J. D. Tant. 10c
- J. N. Hall's Questions Answered, by T. R. Burnett. 5c
- A Chart Study of the Great Commission, by R. H. McLaurine. 10c
- Per dozen. 10c
- Truth Seeking, by D. Lipscomb. 10c
- Christian Unity, by D. Lipscomb. 10c
- Establishment of the Kingdom, by L. R. Sewell. 10c
- Ray-Burnett Debate—A Discussion of the Doctrine and Practices of the Missionary Baptist Church. 25c
- Valid Baptism—A Discussion: A. McGary and T. R. Burnett. 10c
- Dalton-Burnett Debate. 25c
- The Holy Spirit's Work—Third Proposition of Moody-Harding Debate. 25c

Address all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
Nashville, Tenn.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain 2 John 1: 10. Does it mean for us to shut the door of the meeting-house or the dwelling house against the false teacher? Booneville, Tenn. A. H. RANZAR.

It means the private house. This letter was written to a woman, and women did not control the meetinghouses, if they had any. I take it, if one was not worthy to be entertained in their private houses, he was not worthy to be received in the meeting-house or encouraged at church.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain through the Gospel Advocate what Paul means in 1 Tim. 3: 2, when he says, "A bishop . . . must be blameless;" also, verse 4, about one ruling his own house. We are having some trouble here, on these two points, about getting officers to rule in the congregation. Van Alstyne, Tex. J. B. BUFORD.

"Blameless" means innocent, not worthy of censure; one who is innocent of wrongdoing and so cannot be censured or blamed. This does not mean perfect; such are never found in this world. To rule his own house means to have his family so they will mind and honor him as the head.

Brother Lipscomb: Who was Cain's wife? Please answer fully the above question through the columns of the Gospel Advocate for the benefit of myself and doubtless many others. Referring to the Gospel Advocate of April 19, 1900, you will find this question embodied in a query about Cain, simply signed "A Sister." As near as you came to touching the question in your reply is the following: "Of course when there was but one family, brothers married their sisters." Please cite me to the book, chapter, and verse (or verses) in the Bible that teach that Cain married his sister. If he did not marry his sister, whom did he marry? J. T. CHENAULT.

We said all we knew about the matter then, and we have not learned anything more since.

Brother Lipscomb: If I believe it wrong, sinful, to use an organ in the worship of God, is it safe, wise, and best for me to encourage others to use it by giving of my means, attending, or taking part in anything given to make money to buy an organ? If I believe it wrong, sinful, to use an organ in the worship of God, is it safe, wise, and best for me to go into a choir and help in the singing? If I am fully satisfied that there is but "one body, which is the church," and that Christ is the head, would it be safe, wise, and best for me to give my time, talent, presence, or means to build up an institution that I honestly believe to be unscriptural and that Christ says "shall be rooted up?" If the Greek word for "reveling" means "dancing," will those who continue to dance and give dances fail to enter the kingdom of heaven? If I have a dear friend who is addicted to strong drink and who thinks it all right to drink and encourages others to drink by inviting them to his home for the purpose of "setting up the drinks," shall I tell him of the wrong he is doing to himself and others? But if after telling and admonishing him I find that it is useless, or, rather, becomes unpleasant to him, can I still retain the high name of a Christian and make such a dear friend an associate? If we continually go with those where the plain teaching of Christ is not wanted, will we not lose some of the zeal and luster of the bright and beautiful life of a priest and king unto God? (I mean by the last question, if we go with them and keep our mouths closed and say nothing because we know it is unpleasant.) The soldier's blade is brightest who uses it most. Now, if the above be true, I wish to know if for pleasure, outing, music, scenery, or companionship we as Christians may go where we know dancing will be the chief attraction and where the young men (and some girls) go to one side and take a social drink. If I have dear friends who not only believe there is no harm in dancing, but encourage others by giving dances, is it my duty to tell them of the wrong? If I am satisfied they will not stop such, must I still associate with them and keep my mouth closed in regard to the sins they practice? Will the truth presented by Paul in reference to eating meat in an idol's temple be equally true in our weak (untaught) brethren seeing us at church fairs, in choirs where the organ is used, at dances, etc.? Will a preacher be doing his whole duty if he keeps himself pure, but fails to tell his brethren (in love and gentleness) their faults? If the elders of the church ask a preacher to conduct services and he selects a lesson from God's word and in the lesson is something for all, must he pass it by for fear of making some one mad or because it does some no good? Can one be a true, faithful child of God and please all who are members of the church? Do I ask unnecessary questions? If so, cut them out, and write an article along the line of our duty, and oblige. X.

I do not think any of these questions need answering or that the asker has any doubt as to what is right in the premises. A man ought to teach the whole Scriptures. All scripture is profitable for all. To say some scripture is not profitable and does no good to anybody is to accuse God and the Holy Spirit of folly. Paul kept his hands clean from the blood of all men by declaring the whole counsel of God, and men should by no act or deed encourage what they regard as wrong. In teaching, admonishing, and reproving it should be done not in a querulous or fault-finding spirit, but "in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Much of the teaching and admonition fails in its effect because it is done in a fault-finding, complaining spirit. We should also try to cast the beams out of our own eyes, that we may see clearly to pluck the motes out of the eyes of our brethren. Much of our teaching loses its effect because we do it in a wrong, fault-finding, complaining spirit, and fail to try to correct our own faults. Let us try to drink into the true Spirit ourselves, then others will heed us more readily.

Double-minded. No. 5.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1: 8.)

The one who tries to live the Christ life and to engage in all the worldly amusements—such as cards, dancing, and the theater—is double-minded, and of such a one James' statement, as quoted above, is true—"unstable in all his ways." The one who tries to live the Christ life and to enter into and work in the different church societies is double-minded. To these two classes of people we will add those church members who divide their love, time, energy, influence, and money between the church and secret orders. On this question I submit but one inquiry—viz.: Has the Christian more love, time, energy, influence, or money than he should devote to the church and its advancement?

But, again, I want to submit that the man who allows his work, trade, or profession to come between him and the church is a double-minded man. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." (Matt. 6: 19-21.) "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed." (John 6: 27.) "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9: 62.) These and kindred passages teach that we are to give our whole being and powers unto the service of Christ and of God; but instead of such being the case, there are so many whose religious life—church work and worship—is interfered with by the work, trade, or profession in which they are engaged. We ought not to allow any of these things to prevent us from serving and worshipping God. There are many ways, however, in which our progress in the divine life is hindered by them. A man may love his farm, office, or professional work to such an extent that a distaste for the church and spiritual things forms in his mind and heart and then he becomes simply a nominal Christian. He may attend church services, sing, pray, and support church work in a financial way, but he is "a double-minded man;" he has divided his affections between his Redeemer and the weak, beggarly, and perishable things of this world. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." (1 John 2: 15, 16.)

Again, one may so spend one's time and strength as to unfit oneself for the service of God and of Christ. We ought not to devote so much of our time and energy to earthly pursuits during the week that we will be exhausted on the Lord's day—unable to meet with the disciples "to break bread," remembering the death of our Lord. To do this is to sin—to divide our mind and heart and service. "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? . . . And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? . . . But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 25-33.)

We do not discourage honest and diligent labor, in prosecution of which the aim is to serve and glorify God and Christ; such labor we rather urge. But labor having for its end self-advancement, self-enrichment, or the accumulation of carnal riches—such labor is condemned by God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, and by the inspired writing of the apostles. "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." (Heb. 4: 1.) T. E. WINTER.

Fayette City, Pa.

The People Who are Loved.

The people who win their way into the inmost recesses of others' hearts are not usually the most brilliant and gifted, but those who have sympathy, patience, self-forgetfulness, and that indefinable faculty of eliciting the better natures of others. Most of us know of persons who have appealed to us in this way. We have many friends who are most beautiful and gifted, but there is not one or them whose companionship we enjoy better than that of the plain-faced man or woman who never makes a witty or profound remark, but whose simple quality of human goodness makes up for every other deficiency. If it came to a time of real stress, when we felt that we needed the support of real friendship, we should choose above all to go to this plain-faced man or woman, certain that we should find intelligent sympathy, a charitable construction of our position and difficulties, and a readiness to assist us beyond what we ought to take. If you could look into human hearts, you would be surprised at the faces they enshrine there, because beauty of spirit is more than beauty of face or form, and remarkable intellectual qualities are not to be compared with unaffected human goodness and sympathy.—Watchman.

Did you ever notice how Nature covers her scars? Whatever has caused the wound, she sets to work promptly, persistently, effectively, to hide or heal it. Dig a turf from the green of your lawn, leave the spot brown and bare, and every contiguous grass blade and underlying rootlet will begin at once its marvelous weaving to cover the spot with verdure again. Cut into a hillside to make room for a road or railway, leave the place to itself for a time, and you will find the uneven bank dotted with wild flowers and its roughness concealed by running vines. It is one of Nature's many sermons. Hurts must needs come, change will tear away the pleasant growth of years, but hide the wounds and cover the scars with new blossoms. If slight misunderstanding or wrong wound friendship, cover the place with new kindnesses, and let it be buried and forgotten. If earth's inevitable changes, if loss, or even death, rob us of that which made life beautiful, still let us bind the rent as best we may with what is left. Let us draw closer the ties that remain, cover the grave with tender memories, and always and everywhere let the heavenly flowers of love and faith take root.—Forward.

Home Reading.

A HARD TRAMP.

"Twenty cents a day is a lot of money," said Caleb, looking up at his mother with a bright smile.

Mother's face was not a bright one, for she—poor Sully!—had enough care and sorrow to sadden it. But she always had an answering smile for Caleb.

"Yes, indeed; twenty cents a day for thirty days in the month makes up six dollars, and that pays the rent; and I could not have it if it were not for this brave little man of mine who carries the milk so far."

Caleb smiled harder than ever. It was a long way, but it was a fine chance for his mother to sell so much milk to one family, and he felt sure he would never mind the long tug.

"We could not keep the cow if we could not sell the best part of the milk," went on his mother.

"And then what would Sissy do?" asked Caleb, going to kiss the dear little sister he loved so well. She was a frail mite of a thing, and he would have done anything to help her.

He went out to feed the cow. She was the one that paid the rent and gave the nice, rich milk which was to make Sissy strong. Caleb loved her for it, and always gave her his best care.

"You poor old Mulley," he said, as he waited on her. "If I had my way, you should have the finest stable in town, instead of this old shed. But never mind, Mulley, spring will soon come, and then you won't mind. Then I will cut nice, fresh hay and bunches of clover for you. Only give plenty of good milk for Sissy and Mrs. Rande."

"It is a cold evening," said his mother, two or three days later, as she gave him the pail of milk to carry.

"O, no, I guess not," said Caleb. "It is nice and bright."

So nice and bright it looked as to thoroughly deceive him. Spring was coming on and already the sun had beamed out so warmly as to start the buds on the trees into life, and encourage the earliest flowers to show a bit of green just at the surface of the ground. The boys and girls had rejoiced in the balmy days and the thought of wild flowers soon to come.

Then came a change. We all know that Madame Spring is fickle, and that old Jack Frost is always watching for a chance to get in a little late spring mischief. Just as everybody believed that the good lady had settled down to work in earnest she turned her back, and Jack Frost returned, as vigorous as if he had not been completely discouraged by the few warm days.

It was just about this time that the brightness of the evening tempted Caleb to start on the three-quarters-of-a-mile walk with his pail of milk, without his overcoat and mittens.

"It does feel a little coolish," he admitted to himself before he had gone far. "But—pshaw!—it is spring, and I am not going to bundle up like winter, I hope."

He struck into a stretch of road along which there were no houses. The sun had set and with the twilight had come a bitter wind which cut through and through him. It took away his breath, so that he set down his pail to rest.

"Well, which way do you come, anyway, Mr. Wind?" he said. "I thought you were right in my face, and now I have turned round, you are at me again; and you are as mean as any winter wind I ever felt."

That was so. Jack Frost must have felt that this was his last chance, for he was doing his best to give an iceberg flavor to the wind. As Caleb stumbled along it seemed to slap him in the face, and whistle first in one ear and then the other.

And O, how heavy that pail was! The handle cut into his uncovered hand. As he changed it from one hand to the other, the hand which he tucked into the breast of his coat had not time to get warm before the other was benumbed. When he set down the pail for a rest he dreaded taking it up again.

He was now coming to the worst bit of ground, in which his way lay over a high ridge. Very well he knew how cruelly the wind would howl and roar about him.

"I cannot do it," he said, out of breath and half crying. He stood for a moment in a fence corner, and a new thought came to him: "If I should pour this out on the ground, and then go home, no one would know it."

How that wind beat against the side of him which was not protected by the fence!

"No; they would not know. Mrs. Rande would think it was too bad for me to come, and mother would never think to ask about it, and when Mrs. Rande paid up at the end of the month she would not remember about it. It is awful heavy!"

As Caleb communed with himself a glow had been widening in the sky, and now rising over the tree tops he saw the face of the full new moon. How bright and cold it looked! As the small boy gazed it appeared to look straight at him.

"Looks 'most as if it knew what I am thinking of."

As he still gazed, he thought of the One who surely did look down on him—who saw not only what he did, but could read his very thoughts.

"I have never done such a wicked thing yet, and I am not going to now."

With a firm foot he struck across the ridge, resolutely facing the wind.

"Look-a-here, Mr. Wind," at length he said, "if you think you are going to get the better of a boy like me, you are mistaken!"

Caleb was right. It takes a pretty strong wind, or anything else that is strong, to get the better of a boy who sets himself against the doing of a mean thing.

At last he turned into the shelter of Mrs. Rande's home. How good it seemed to see the friendly light and to feel the warmth of the cheerful room!

"O, Caleb," said Mrs. Rande, "I was so afraid you would not get here to-night; and I do not know what I should have done if you had not come, for my sister came this afternoon, before it turned cold, and brought her baby. The little thing is so delicate, and I have just been longing for some nice, fresh milk for her."

Caleb went to look at the baby, and his whole heart seemed to go out to her when he saw how much she was like his own little sister at home. As he stroked her pretty hair, how glad he was that he had come!

Mrs. Rande gave him some tea and some warm doughnuts, and when he started home he did not care whether it was windy or not.

"Come on, Mr. Wind!" he cried. "I am equal to you now. I have not got a full pail to carry. I can move as fast as you can."

The moon seemed to smile on him now.

"You and me knows how cold 'tis to-night, don't we?" he said, nodding to her. "I'm glad I don't have to stay out all night, as you do."

Before he went to sleep that night Caleb told his mother what he had thought of doing, adding: "Why, if I'd 'a' spilled out that milk, it would 'a' been stealing—stealing Mrs. Rande's milk!"

"Yes, indeed," said his mother; "you will find that in most of the things which we may think only mean and tricky there is a real sin somewhere."

"I'm going to let the mean, tricky things alone," said Caleb.

It is a wise resolve—for him and for every other boy. Don't you think so?—Sidney Dayre, in Sunday School Advocate.

THE DEEP-SEA GULL.

The deep-sea gulls which follow the steamers across the Atlantic are always an interesting feature of the voyage. They glide along on steady wing which no steam engine can tire. The bits of grease and fat which go overboard from the cook's galley are what they are after. A naval officer who has watched these beautiful fellow-travelers many an hour tells some interesting things about them:

"When one considers the absolutely unsheltered condition in which these birds spend their ocean existence—exposed to rain, hail, frost, and the hardest gales that the North Atlantic can produce (and it can produce some pretty hard ones)—one may understand a little why they are so partial to fat, which supplies bodily warmth, and also that greasiness of feather which saves them from ever getting wet through. I think it is highly probable that if you caught one of these birds and trained him to live respectably in a cage, with a tea cozy over it every night, he would learn to eat canary seed, and like it; but the training would be the difficult part. He would certainly die, like a horse on one straw per day.

"It is very funny to see a gull poised on outstretched wings, somewhere about the level of the mastheads, trying to brush himself and arrange his tail feathers without losing control of his navigation. Scratching the side of his head with his foot is comparatively easy and soon accomplished, but a more difficult problem is presented when he essays to explore for an insect under his armpit and keep to windward at the same time. You may see one spend two or three minutes poking and prodding away with his beak under his wing, all the while lying hove-to head to wind, but sagging to leeward considerably. Every now and then out will come his head, and he will dodge along up to windward again, making up for lost ground, and then have another poke after the insect.

"When by any mischance one of these gulls finds himself on the deck of a ship, he immediately becomes a particularly helpless and undignified bird. He waddles a few paces with his wings stretched out, and vainly endeavors to fly. Then he sits down and looks round him, and begins to feel seasick, or, it may be, sick with apprehension of an evil fate; at any rate, he will be sick soon after coming aboard.

"A short time ago one of these gray-backed North Atlantic gulls flew against the rail and stranded himself on our deck forward of the bridge, and I ran along, cap in hand, to secure him, butterfly fashion. The ship was rolling considerably, and the gull, though sick, was defiant, and used a good deal of bad language between bites at my cap. We slipped and waddled about together for a minute, and then he was checkmated. He seized the rim of my cap, and I seized his beak and gently disengaged it. Then with his beak closed in one hand and his feet in the other, I walked him off in triumph, he making frantic efforts to fly away with me all the while. Should I put him in a salt-water bath to swim about in sorrowful gloom, with scarcely room to open his wings; or should I put him down in the refrigerator to soil his beautiful, clean feathers on bags of potatoes; or should I stick a sail needle into his little brain with the vague intention of stuffing him? Happily for him, I am a lazy man, and did not even go to the trouble of tying a label round his neck, with my name and address upon it. I just took him to the ship's side, still holding his very untrustworthy beak in my left hand, and begging him to remember me to his mother and sisters, I tossed him up in the air. He said nothing. He just flapped his wings a little to get his balance, shook himself all over to get rid of the contamination of humanity, and was lost among the other gulls."

ON THE KONGO.

"The river that swallows all other rivers" is the name that the negro tribes of Central Africa have given to the Kongo, and it is certainly a splendid stream. At one place, called "The Narrows" (because the water is hemmed into a channel only five hundred yards wide, from a width of from one to four miles everywhere else), the river swallows up men and boats, too, whenever any band of explorers are daring enough to venture upon it. In these Narrows Stanley, the great African traveler, lost one of his boats, while trying to keep close along the bank, and so escape the mad rush of the current. Fifty men, on the bank, pulled hard at the ropes which held the boat, but in vain; for it was swept like a toy out of their hands.

Along the rest of its course, above and below The Narrows, the Kongo flows peacefully enough, and is a big, broad river, where native trading canoes come and go. These boats are from twenty to sixty feet long, and have a crew of from twelve to twenty men, according to their size. The trader fills his canoe with tropical fruits, ostrich feathers, oil, dates, grain, gold dust, and—alas!—sometimes slaves, who have been taken prisoners in battle by some warlike tribe and sold to him afterwards. He paddles down the Kongo with his cargo, and sells or barter with the different tribes along the shore, and if he is a shrewd bargainer, he can make a great deal of money out of his voyages. In some parts of the country, however, the slave trade has swept away nearly all the people, so that the trader by this wicked business loses more customers than he gains. They believe in fetich worship—that is, they worship trees, animals, and stones. Then they have a great fear of witchcraft, and believe firmly that a witch, whether man or woman, can injure and even kill other people by charms and spells. In order to prevent this, each tribe has a "witch doctor," whose business it is to find and punish witches; and very often the "witch doctor" will pick out some innocent person against whom he has a grudge, accuse her of being a witch, and have her killed without further trouble.

Slavery must perish when the gospel of Christ conquers the Dark Continent. Let us hope it will not be long before the gifts and the prayers of our Christian churches will send the gospel into every village of Central Africa, and all these people that now sit in darkness shall see a great light shining into the heart of their superstitious heathenism.—Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JUNE 28, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

HINDRANCES IN INVESTIGATION.

One great difficulty in arriving at truth in the discussion of questions is in not defining the terms used clearly. I think much of the differences on the various subjects of discussion arises from a failure to define terms clearly, and different persons use the same terms in different senses. As an example of this, there is a discussion in the religious world as to which comes first, faith or repentance. I am sure the difference arises from the different senses in which the words "faith" and "repentance" are used. As I have gained experience I have learned more and more the necessity of defining clearly the simplest terms by telling in what sense I use them. One who believes repentance precedes faith does not use the word "faith" as the simple belief on evidence, but of a matured trust; those who say faith precedes repentance do not mean a perfected faith. When careful to explain the use of terms, I have been so often told by persons who I thought understood the questions that they had been helped so much by the definition of terms; it had made the matter plain to them. Keep a dictionary by you, not a large one, but a small one (the large one is too unhandy to use as much as it ought to be used), and define your terms, even common ones, in clear and simple language, so that you and your hearers or readers will alike understand what you affirm or deny.

The brethren seem to be disposed to discuss the question of the pastor. Have they clear ideas of what they mean by the pastor? If they have, have their readers? Much of discussion is a war of words without meaning. Will the brethren define what they mean by the pastor, and what in his work is scriptural and what unscriptural, or is it merely the name that is objected to? Some brethren lay much greater stress on names than others. I lay but little stress on names so the right idea goes with the name. I have long held that for one man to do all the teaching, praying, and preaching, and to fail to call out and arouse the interest and develop the talent and ability of the members, is hurtful. People cannot be interested in hearing alone, while doing no work or teaching themselves. The Bible speaks always of "elders of the church"—more than one. All did not labor in word and doctrine; some did. What is meant by this? If the teacher is called "elder," "evangelist," or "minister" and does all the talking, but does not call out the activity and interest of the members, is he better than the pastor? Is not the work fully as important as the name?

While I have bated not one jot or tittle of my faith that the members generally should engage in the work and exhortation and edification of the church, I have never been able to draw the line as to how much a teacher may do in the way of preaching or teaching in the church. Because I am not able to do this, some have denounced me as betraying the truth, but I have not seen it clearly drawn by others. Will the brethren tell us when regular preaching is right and when wrong with a congregation?

A great hindrance to proper investigation of truth is the disposition to call names that will wound and bring reproach upon those we ought to try to convince of the truth; but to do this is to make the impression of unkind feeling and to destroy our power of doing them good. There is another reason why on this as on other questions kindness and forbearance ought to be exercised in the discussion of it. Some one asked me last year why we did not get some one to hold a meeting in South Nashville that had not been a pastor. I replied: "I do not know where to find such. If you will point him out, I will try to get him." He has not yet been pointed out. I mean by this that when a man has been in an error and has found his way out he ought to have forbearance and kindness toward those that have not yet got out of the brush. It is not always so. New converts are most zealous, it is said; they are sometimes most bitter, too. This is wrong. Now, a full presentation of the Scripture teaching on this subject is desirable, but let us have it in a spirit of kindness for one another, and of love for the truth of God.

D. L.

PASTORS AND EVANGELISTS.

Brother Lipscomb: I beg to thank you for the consideration of my questions, as appeared in the Gospel Advocate of June 7, 1900, and regret that I should have propounded so many and that you considered it unfair to argue in this manner. I can assure you it was not so intended. These questions have often presented themselves to my mind, and I have been unable to answer them in any other way than that elders were gifted or endowed. I also regret to say that if you have fully answered the questions asked, I am unable to comprehend your answers; of course that may be on account of my obtuseness. For instance, as to my second question, pertaining to pastors teaching and feeding the flock until characters were formed suitable for elders, I do not find that you have quoted a single passage of scripture in answer to this or the third question, as to their work differing. You say they certainly overlapped each other, but do not give us any reference in the Scriptures to show this. Along this line I referred to Eph. 4: 11 and Acts 20: 28, showing that pastors and elders, or overseers, occupied the same position, or office, in the church and that the terms applied to the same person. Quite a number of our most talented brethren take this position, and I am unable to see that it is erroneous; consequently I want your opinion—of course, based upon the word of God. If this position be true, then, according to your interpretation of Eph. 4: 11, elders are mentioned in the class of gifted persons. Your understanding of 1 Cor. 12, in reference to various gifts, among them that of governments, belonging to the endowed class, seems to be correct; hence, if my interpretation of the scriptures quoted in my fifth question be true—and you do not question it—it is another proof of their being gifted teachers.

You say: "Our brother asks: 'Why, then, did they join with the apostles in the decrees?'" (Acts 15: 6.) In this you are mistaken. My question, No. 6, reads: "If elders were not gifted, how could they with inspired apostles make decrees?" (Acts 15: 6; 16: 4.) There is, according to my idea, quite a difference. To make a decree is one thing, and to join or concur after the decree or law is made is another thing. I understand "decree" to mean law or final edict. From a careful study of Acts 15, 16, and especially the passage referred to, it seems to me the proof is conclusive that the apostles and elders made the decrees and that the brethren sanctioned or approved them, hence with the apostles and elders sent greetings to the brethren at Antioch. The passages you refer to as to Sosthenes, Timothy, and others joining with Paul in his letters to the churches bear the same relationship as that of the brethren at Jerusalem to the decrees made by the apostles and elders. We know that Paul wrote or dictated the letters—hence they were his own production, guided by the Spirit of God—admonishing, encouraging, etc., the churches that had previously accepted the gospel, and that these brethren approved or concurred with him; therefore I conclude that neither the brethren at Jerusalem nor the brethren with Paul took any part in originating the doctrines as put forth.

I think you are mistaken in reference to your interpretation of Acts 14: 23, as answer to my seventh question, for this reason: We are told that they made disciples at Derbe, hence established a church there, or we must conclude that there can be disciples in a town or community worshipping God, without its being a church. If we say that there was a church at Derbe, and this reference says they ordained elders in every church, the result is inevitable that he ordained elders in Derbe. In other words, Paul and Barnabas made disciples at the four places mentioned—Lystra, Iconium, Antioch, and Derbe—and that these disciples constituted the church at these places, and they ordained them elders in every church, seems clear to me, at least a necessary inference, that elders were appointed in Derbe. Will you kindly tell us some of the persons to whom you refer when you say: "So soon as men were converted some were endowed with spiritual gifts that enabled them to perform the work of the church at once?" It seems to me that it is applicable to this church at Derbe, if anywhere in the New Testament.

Your reasoning on the gifted and ungifted brings me to a different conclusion to that at which you arrive; however, I may misconstrue your argument. Allow me to call your attention to it. You say "apostles," "prophets," "evangelists," "pastors," and "teachers," as enumerated in Eph. 4: 11, were gifted or endowed; also that "evangelists" and "teachers" are names applied to the inspired and uninspired, but "'apostles,' 'prophets,' and 'pastors' are not applied to the uninspired." To illustrate: You cite "Acts 8: 4: The men and women 'scattered abroad went everywhere preaching ['evangelizing,' the Greek says]." Hence, I understand you to say they who evangelized were "evangelists." By the same reasoning can we not conclude Titus and others were apostles? (See 2 Cor. 8: 23.) "Messengers" in the Greek is "apostles." So also in Phil. 2: 25 Epaphroditus was a "messenger;" the Greek has it "apostle." Now, I feel sure if I were to call either of these an "apostle," you would censure me for it.

Just here I would like to mention another point wherein I cannot comprehend you. "Pastors" or "shepherds" mentioned in the New Testament were the same; you agree to this, I know. Now, then, if this term "pastors" is never applied to the uninspired, and I agree with you, must I not conclude from your premises that the elders of Ephesus were inspired? For if I understand you, you say: "The name came as a result of work done, not of official position." This being so, can we not find the name of these elders by the work which they did? Paul commands them "to feed [shepherd] the church [flock] of God." (Acts 20: 28.) Hence, their work was to pastor, or shepherd, the flock, and as a result of this work their names should be "pastors." But allow me to go back a little and take up the "evangelists." You say that "the noun 'evangelist' is found in the Scriptures only three times. In these cases it refers to the gifted. In the verb form it is used over fifty times." This being true, which I doubt not, would it not be wrong to call Brother A "Evangelist A," for the reason that wherever used in the New Testament it is designating a person in the noun form and refers to gifted persons? To illustrate: A president is one who presides, manages, or controls; yet if a brother should preside at the Lord's table and occupy a presiding position, we would not call him a "president." Again, an apostle is one sent forth. So if one is sent forth now to preach, by another, could we call him an "apostle?" I am sure you will answer in the negative to these last two propositions, so why not in the first? The question arises in my mind why you say that "the name came as the result of work done, not official position," when Paul says: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers," etc. (1 Cor. 12: 28.) If God set them in the church, giving the names, how could the work be the result of bestowing the name?

I might extend these inquiries to a much greater extent, but for the present I will conclude by asking you to kindly consider the questions asked, especially give a scriptural reason for concluding that "pastors" (Eph. 4: 11) differed from "shepherds," "overseers," or "bishops," mentioned in other places; also if positions were graded, as you say, in the order named, why you can say that pastors were inspired and evangelists not, regardless of the fact that in this list evangelists are named above pastors.

Memphis, Tenn.

J. H. HARDEN.

If the interpretation Brother Harden places on every one of these scriptures to which he refers be correct, it would not prove his proposition nor have the least bearing upon it. The point he makes is that the Scriptures say the pastors, or inspired men, taught, or shepherded, the flock; therefore he argues all who teach, or shepherd, the flock in every age must be gifted or inspired. Put in syllogistic form, his reasoning is: All, in all ages, who do similar work must be alike inspired; elders taught as the inspired pastors did; therefore elders must be inspired as were the first pastors or teachers. Unless the first or major premise be true, the conclusion is false. But the major premise is not true, because if similar work necessitated similar gifts, all who do any work that Jesus or the apostles did must be inspired and gifted equally with them. But Jesus came to give an example to all men to walk in his steps, and Paul told his brethren to follow him as he followed Christ. All work, save the miracles performed by Jesus and the apostles, was to be performed by the disciples of Christ for all time. I have never doubted that the work done by the gifted teachers was performed by the uninspired teachers who succeeded them; but it proves nothing as to this question. The Scriptures teach the elders did the same work as the gifted pastors, and, so far as I know, they were supported alike by the disciples. Nor is it at all necessary to discuss all the points he raises to show they are alike gifted, when it is easily determined they were not so gifted. The reasons clearly are these:

1. Elders with similar qualifications and work had been known in the Jewish dispensation from their journey from Egypt, that we know were not inspired. From this they were transferred to the Christian dispensation, without an intimation that they were to be inspired; and while under the Christian dispensation their qualifications are fully and minutely given, inspiration is not once referred to as one of these. To fail to tell this, if they were to be inspired, would have been a willful misleading and would have involved the matter in confusion on the part of Jesus and the Holy Spirit. One who believes this was done may readily believe Christ and the Holy Spirit commanded baptism with a new and unknown meaning attached to a word in common use, without giving any intimation of the change.

2. The Holy Spirit twice particularly points out the characteristics of elders and often refers to them and their work, but never intimates inspiration as one of them. For men to say they were or must be inspired when the Scriptures say nothing of it, but address them as uninspired, is to add to the things written in the Scriptures. The qualifications of gifted persons are never laid down, because the Holy Spirit himself chose them and divided "to every man severally as he will." (1 Cor. 12: 11.) When he laid down the qualifications of elders, he clearly did it to instruct the disciples in selecting elders. As God gave the gifts to whom he will, he never instructed the disciples as to the qualifications for gifts.

3. It is generally held that none but apostles could bestow spiritual gifts. While I doubt this, as I remember, Brother Parker, of Ocala, Fla.—who, so far as I know, is the author of this idea of gifted elders—held that none but apostles could bestow gifts. Brother Parker, Brother Pitman (reared with Brother Parker), and Brother Harden are the only brethren known to me as holding elders were all inspired.

They are all good brethren, and talented. I do not know whether Brother Harden holds apostles alone could bestow gifts; but Paul, when old and about to leave this world, and the other apostles were all dead or about to depart, wrote to Titus; then in Crete, telling him to appoint elders in every city. It is possible, and even probable, that Titus was gifted with the evangelistic gift; but this would not enable him to bestow gifts. Yet Titus was to appoint elders in every city. How could these elders receive the gifts with none to bestow them? Is it possible Titus was to select and prove persons for the Lord before he would bestow gifts? Paul, in his last letter, when about to be delivered up, and his departure was at hand, told Timothy to commit what he had heard of him "to faithful [not gifted] men, . . . able to teach others." (2 Tim. 2: 2.)

In a trial for murder a great many incidents were proven to show the accused had committed the murder. The accused presented the man alive in court. The court decided it was not necessary to disprove all the incidents to clear him of the murder. The application can be made. On all the points raised I am correct, but I pass them for this reason: I have twice discussed this question with Brother Parker. All the scriptures presented by Brother Harden were presented by him. I answered them, but I never could get Brother Parker to see the plain proof made in the foregoing. Brother Harden seems to be afflicted with the same optic trouble. So I leave these alone, lest if too many incidents be presented, he should fail to see these main points, should be blinded to the fact that the man is in court alive, and since he is alive, it is unnecessary to disprove he was murdered with an ax. Prophecies and tongues and all gifts failed, but the uninspired elders have continued at all times in the churches until this day.

D. L.

A brother has asked us to give him an exegesis of 1 Cor. 16: 2. The Greek words in the passage are: kata mian sabbatoon ekastos umoon para eautoo On the first of the week each of you, by itself tithetoo, thesaurizoon o ti [or himself] place, putting into the treasury as euodootai, ina me otan elthoo tote he shall be prospered, that not when I come then logiai ginoontai. gatherings be.

Transposing it as the English idiom requires, it would read: "On the first of the week each of you place by itself [himself] what he has prospered, putting it into the treasury, that when I come there may be no gatherings." The only trouble in the sentence is over "para eautoo" and "thesaurizoon." "Para eautoo" may mean by himself or by itself, as the context demands. It seems to me as all the man had was his and in his possession, it cannot mean to place it by himself, but it must mean to divide it and place the Lord's part by itself—after it is separated, (thesaurizoon) putting it into the treasury, that there be no gatherings when I come.

MacKnight translates it: "On the first day of every week let each one of you lay somewhat by itself, according as he may have prospered, putting it into the treasury, that when I come there may be no gatherings." "Thesauron" (the noun) is used in the Old Testament Greek for public treasury. (Josh. 6: 24.) "Gave them to the treasury of the house of the Lord." (See Ez. 2: 69; Neh. 7: 70, 71.)

"Thesaurizoon" is used in the verb form eight times in the New Testament. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." (Matt. 6: 19.) "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." (Verse 20.) "He that layeth up treasure for himself." (Luke 12: 21.) "Treasurist up unto thyself wrath." (Rom. 2: 5.) Then it is used in this passage—1 Cor. 16: 2. "He that layeth up treasure for himself." (Luke 12: 21.) "Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." (James 5: 3.) "Are kept in store." (2 Pet. 3: 7.) In every case it refers to treasuring it up for the future. In the noun form it is used eighteen times, and every time it is translated "treasure," something stored up. The sentence without "thesaurizoon" directs to place it by itself or divide it. After it is separated he directs "thesaurizoon" placing it in the treasury. Take these words literally and they can mean nothing else than the separation is first to be made. This is done at home. Then that separated to the Lord is to be placed in the treasury. Into whose treasury is the Lord's part to be placed? It was in the man's treasury before it was separated. "That there be no gatherings when I come" and that it was to be done on the first day of the week, when they all came together to worship, ought to settle this question.

Sometimes persons say the church had no treasury. The typical institution of Judaism had a treasury. Jesus and his apostles had a treasury, and Judas carried the bag. They bought things needed for themselves, and gave to the poor out of this treasury. (John 12: 6; 13: 29.) Soon after Pentecost the Christians made their offerings, laid them at the feet of the apostles. It was too much for the apostles to keep and disburse these gifts, so they caused the brethren to select seven men to take charge of this work. They kept and distributed this fund, the treasury.

D. L.

A brother writes to know why there was no mention of the Tant-Oakley debate in the Gospel Advocate last week, while the Baptist and Reflector crowed so lustily over it. These debates with Oakley, Whitlock, Estes, and others have become so frequent of late that we could only announce them. Brother Srygley, Brother White, Brother Pullias, Brother Byrd, and others have frequently met them in discussion within the last few months. This discussion, as the others, was several times announced in the Gospel Advocate. None of the writers for the Gospel Advocate attended the discussion. Most of them were away from home. The debate was held at night, six miles from my home. I have not been out at night for several months. Brother Tant or any of these brethren mentioned can easily maintain the truth with these men. Indeed, in the discussions, these men really make no effort to maintain Bible truth, but to trap their opponents and create a laugh. Numbers attend, and a preacher of the gospel who will not be led off by them has an opportunity to teach the truth to those willing to learn it.

The first man attending this debate that spoke to me of it is a Baptist. He said Oakley was not meeting Tant's arguments. He noted the scriptures quoted by each, and, after attending through the debate, still says Tant "downed" Oakley. Some brethren who heard him did not approve of some of Tant's positions. He took the rebaptism position, which they think a partisan view, and that he suffered from it in debate. All whom I have heard speak of it condemn severely the personalities and coarseness brought into the discussion. So far as I have learned, Oakley led, but both indulged in it. This tends to bring discussions and the Christian religion itself into reproach.

As to the statements made in the Baptist and Reflector, I am sorry to say I long since learned that its statements concerning the disciples or their teachings could not be relied upon. I do not believe there is a political editor in the State that would so grossly misrepresent the positions of its opponents and refuse a correction as the editor of the Baptist and Reflector does. In this notice he says Tant took the position God is a material being, and that Tant claimed to be perfect. I have not a doubt they are both the opposite of the truth. I am sorry to have to say these things, but this is the effect of party spirit on the editor.

D. L.

Ready for Christ, ready for anything.—Selected.

The Work of an Evangelist.

After reading Brother McQuiddy's two articles of recent date, on "The Pastor System," and Brother John E. Dunn's "Talk Made to the Church at Murfreesboro, Tenn.," in the Gospel Advocate of May 17, 1900, I thought it might add a little to the interesting subject to copy an article from the Gospel Echo of April 15, 1900, on "The Work of an Evangelist."

"Paul tells Timothy to 'do the work of an evangelist.' Now, I would like to ask a very pertinent question: What is the work of an evangelist? If I have studied my Bible to any profit, about all an evangelist is to do, besides saving himself (and he does this in part by trying to save others), is to 'preach the gospel where Christ is not named' and to 'set in order the things which are wanting.' To be more explicit, he is to go, preach the gospel in destitute places, and either stay there long enough to set things in order, or, if he cannot stay long enough for this, to visit them occasionally to see how they do; and if his services are needed in some congregation which is not in order, he is to go (if he can be spared from where he is) and set things in order. I understand that his work is not done until he has accomplished this. How long should an evangelist stay in one place, or with one congregation? Long enough to set things in order. Then he should go to some other field. None of the apostles or early preachers, so far as we know, stayed in one place longer than three and one-half years, and my judgment is that if a preacher cannot get things in order in that length of time, he never can. But let us see how some of the modern evangelists will go about setting things in order. They will accept a call from some congregation which has had regular preaching for years and is still very much out of order, and they will find among the first things figureheads called 'elders,' who rarely ever teach, but leave all of this to the preacher, and they do not rule well the flock. About all the qualification they have is age. They will meet once a month to attend, as they say, to the Lord's business, and that business is nearly always something in regard to the preacher or raising money for current expenses, and this is principally to pay the 'pastor's' salary. Those elders are allowed to occupy the position they do and rarely ever so much as wait on the Lord's table, pray, or do anything else but sit and listen and look on and see the one-hundred-dollar-per-month 'pastor' do and direct matters. If there are other preachers present, they are always called on to officiate rather than the elders. The 'pastor' selects, announces, and generally leads the songs; does all the scripture reading and leading in prayer (and why not? he is paid to do this); and often waits on the table without even consulting the so-called elders, and he is sure to say his little speech at the hour of worship; and we go away from the 'house of God' and say we have worshiped scripturally. Where in the New Testament did any preacher ever preach to a congregation of the saved at the hour of worship on the first day of the week? Where? Some one will say Paul preached to the church at Troas, found in Acts 20. King James' translators say so, but the late revisers do not; they say Paul discoursed with them. There is a vast difference between preaching to and discoursing with. If there is anything farther from scripture teaching

The Saving of Money

by the use of Royal Baking Powder is considerable. Royal is economical, because it possesses more leavening power and goes further.

Royal saves also because it always makes fine, light, sweet food; never wastes good flour; butter and eggs.

More important still is the saving in health. Royal Baking Powder adds anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

There is no baking powder so economical in practical use, no matter how little others may cost, as the Royal

Imitation baking powders almost invariably contain alum. Alum makes the food unwholesome.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

than this, I think it would be hard to find. Now, this same evangelist will continue to preach and preach until he preaches the church to death (and it is good preaching, too) or runs himself out of a job, and then he hunts other pastures. 'Now, the way to do away with the name "pastor" is to do away with the thing.' (Srygley.) As to getting these elders to do their scriptural duty or to publicly withdraw from a disorderly member, it is rarely ever done; for members are allowed to go on in sins of various kinds from year to year until the church becomes a stench in the nostrils of honest, decent sectarians, who will point the finger of scorn at the church, and say: 'You folks claim to be governed by the Bible alone, and you have more disorderly walkers and works than anybody else.' How can we brethren make such a boast with such facts staring us in the face? The crying evil of the nineteenth century, in the church as well as out of it, is the inordinate love of money. We are running wild for it, and disregarding all rules of honor and honesty in the effort to get it. Solomon told his son that wisdom was the principal thing, and admonished him in all his getting to get understanding; but we have changed the proverb and made money the principal thing, and would have it read this way: 'In all thy getting get money.' O, it is fearful to think of what the love of money is doing for this nation! Unfortunately it has crept into the church. Brethren, 'let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith.' H. W. SMITH.

Put to an Open Shame.

In the June number of the Ladies' Home Journal are pictures and comments on "The Passion Play"—that is, the death play, representing the crucifixion of our Lord. Among all that I have ever seen in print, of an improper kind, this to me is the most shocking. When we consider that this is to be given as a respectable play on the public stage and is written up by one of the leading popular magazines of America, having a circulation of some five hundred thousand, and largely patronized by Christian people, and supposed to be under Christian influence in its management, it appears all the more unaccountable. One is led to ask: What have the American people come to? Is there nothing sacred? Has life become so empty and destitute of that sense of spiritual things that man will venture into the most sacred precincts of the divine to get material for a theatrical performance?

In order to see the heinousness of the crime, think of your departed mother. You stood by her bed, saw the contortions of her face, and listened to her death groans. These things you hold sacred, and every one in common holds them sacred with you. But you pick up a paper some time afterwards with pictures and a lengthy description of a popular play to be acted upon the stage before a gazing public. The materials for the play are taken from the death scenes of your sainted mother, or an elder brother, it may be. A man is selected resembling your brother as much as may be; he allows his hair to grow long like your brother wore his; then he goes through the mimicry of the death struggles you witnessed in the sacred bedchamber of death when your brother passed away. Who is there who would not be pained out of measure and horror-stricken beyond description at such an outrage on the sacredness of the dead?

Admitting Jesus to be only a man, a common regard for human feelings and respect for the sacred precincts of the dead ought to make men shrink from the very thought of such a thing. I consider the man who hangs in cruel mimicry of our Savior upon the cross more contemptible and mean than those who drove the nails in his feet and in his hands. If there ever was an instance where men have crucified the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame, this seems to me to be one.

Such is the fruit of the stage. It educates men and women out of all things natural, real, or holy. They become mere mimickers, as destitute of the natural sentiments and true feelings of the heart as the background and trappings of the stage upon which they play, and they are willing to enter into the most sacred precincts of things, human or divine, if only thereby they can be successful in the performance. Then, do you tell me there is no harm in the theater?

J. M. M'CALEB.

The Nashville American says of the late session of Congress: "The session of Congress just closed lasted six months, and beyond appropriating $709,727,476 for government expenses and passing a bill placing the country firmly on a gold standard basis, which also provides for refunding the public debt, accomplished little. Aside from the currency bill the most important legislation enacted by Congress was the formation of a complete territorial government for the Hawaiian Islands, the passage of a bill providing for a territorial government for Alaska, and the passage of the famous Puerto Rican tariff bill."

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation.
DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS. Colleges
St. Louis; Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Bookkeeping, shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any time. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

Kansas Notes.

Brother B. F. Rhodes spent the third and fourth Lord's days in June in Ness County. His work for the summer will be principally in Oklahoma Territory. He goes to Hoyle, O. T., every second Lord's day. We expect the work at Hoyle to get along in good shape. They have had good work done by Brother R. W. Turner, of Hennessey, O. T., and now Brother Rhodes will continue the good work. He will need faithful collaborators while there. The preacher can do but little alone; the congregation must cooperate, or the work will not prosper.

Brother J. E. Cain attended the annual basket meeting at Bethel. He has labored for this congregation for a number of years.

Brother C. C. Houston will be at Peck on the first Lord's day in July. He will be with the brethren at Bitter Creek, O. T., soon. Brother Houston is a promising young man. His deportment is always becoming that of a preacher, which is a very necessary qualification. He will have the respect of true brethren in the Lord wherever he goes. He is studious and energetic, and is anxious to continue his school work in order to be better prepared for the preaching of the gospel. His desire is to do all the good possible.

Brother A. C. Crenshaw is doing some work for the brethren at Bitter Creek, O. T. He thinks the work there will move along nicely, if they are not preached to death. It may be true that some people hear too much preaching. They may become hardened, or they may become dependent upon the preacher, but not necessarily so. Much depends upon how the work is managed. The talent of a congregation needs to be developed, but the preacher should not hinder that, but assist in it.

I recently read of a preacher who assisted in starting seventeen young men to preaching in seventeen years. A preacher can do much of that kind of work. Each member of the church needs to be impressed with the fact of his individual responsibility and that he has something to do privately and publicly, if he has the ability in that direction. We must improve the talent; if it is only one, we must use it properly. D. T. BROADUS.

Belle Plaine, Kan.

A Good Meeting at Smithville, Canada.

It has been the custom of the disciples of Christ in the Niagara Peninsula, Ontario, for many, many years to have an annual meeting, beginning on Saturday before the first Sunday in June, of three or four days' duration, at some appointed place, to which all the congregations in the peninsula are invited, and many others from the surrounding country. The meeting this year was held at Smithville.

The object of these meetings is not to formulate plans and devise means to carry on the work of the Lord, but, as well as I can understand, it is to urge each other on to greater activity and usefulness in the service of our Master. No sentiment finds more prominence in these meetings than the one used by Paul to the Colossians (2: 10): "And ye are complete in him."

As a rule, they endeavor to secure some good talent in the way of speakers. Brother E. A. Elam, of Bellwood, Tenn., and Brother W. D. Campbell, of Toronto, Ont., were the chief speakers. Brother S. Keffer, of Fenwick, Ont., assisted by Brother George Barclay, of Toronto, Ont., presided at all the meetings. At the first meeting, which commenced on June 2, 1900, at 2:30 P.M., a number of thrilling and instructive speeches, from five to ten minutes long, were made by the brethren from the various congregations. At 8 P.M. Brother Campbell delivered an excellent discourse on the characters of Abraham and Lot. He emphasized very forcibly that too many, like Lot, were pitching their tents toward "Sodom."

On Lord's day, at 11 A.M., Brother Elam spoke. His theme was "The Gospel." It was simply grand. He compared people who are crying and clamoring for "aids and helps" in the service of the Lord to men walking about with common tallow candles at noon of a blazing sunny day, trying to aid and help the sun to light the world. There was not a thoughtful person present that did not feel the force of the argument. At 3 P.M. Brother Campbell spoke on "Identity of the Church." One lady confessed her faith in Christ. At 8 P.M. Brother Elam spoke on, as he called it, "the biggest subject in the world: "The Commission." While many had heard this spoken on before, yet they felt that it was more forcibly presented than ever before.

On Monday, at 10 A.M., the meeting was similarly conducted to the one on Saturday afternoon, short talks being made by a number of brethren (similar to Monday evening meetings of the Nashville Bible School). At 3 P.M. Brother Elam spoke on "The Model Church and the Model Preacher." At 8 P.M. he spoke on "The Pleasures of Sin." Brother Campbell spoke on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, while Brother Elam spoke at St. Catharines on the same evenings.

On Lord's day the Agricultural Hall, in which the meetings were held, was full to overflowing. Brethren from the following congregations were present: Meaford, Toronto, Hamilton, Beamsville, Jordan, Tintern, Fenwick, St. Catharines, Attercliffe, and Selkirk, Ont.; and Pekin, N. Y. I am sure I voice the sentiment of all when I say that much good was done in the name of our Master. S. M. JONES.

Selkirk, Ont.

There has recently come to light an apron—probably the most exquisite example of needlework extant—that beset the fingers of the hapless Mary, Queen of Scots, during her long imprisonment, and served to divert her mind from her impending doom at the block. The fallen sovereign, all hope gone, centered her interest upon it during the latter part of her long confinement, and created the masterpiece of needlework. By strange chance the apron came into possession of an American, who has refused $50,000 for it and has also declined $5,000 for the privilege of unraveling a single stitch to learn its secret, which is a mystery to all the experts.

The official figures of the Agricultural Department give the value of the country's live stock as $2,483,506,681 on January 1, 1893, which will be remembered as the year when the dark wave of depression first set in strongly over the country. For the next four years there seems to have been a constantly downward trend in the value of American live stock; for on January 1, 1897, the figures stood at $1,655,414,612, or at a value of about 33 per cent less than in 1893. But the tide turned at that point and each succeeding January 1 registered a marked rise for the preceding twelve months, as shown by the following: January 1, 1898, $1,888,654,925; January 1, 1899, $1,997,010,407; January 1, 1900, $2,042,650,713.

1850 1900
John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

—OF—
EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.
TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.
HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES.

Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

BELLS

PLYMER B. CHURCH UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
(Mention this paper.)

LETTERS AND SERMONS

—OF—
T. B. LARIMORE
EDITED BY
F. D. SRYGLEY
HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
232 N. Market Street,
NASHVILLE, - - TENN.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in 50c. and $1. sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1747; Residence, 1570.

WILCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
GLENCLIFF, TENN.

CAPABLE WOMAN WANTED for a permanent position, $60 per month and all expenses. Experience unnecessary. CLARK & CO., 234 S. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHEAP
Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps
E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner
Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

What Is It?

A man who has been running a race with steam and electricity for years, finds himself suddenly stopped. It seems as if a cold hand clutched his heart. His brain whirls; he can hardly see. "What is it?" he asks himself as the attack passes. If his question meets a right answer, he'll be told that his seizure is a warning to pay more attention to his stomach, which is already deranged by irregular meals and rich foods.

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. It eliminates from the blood disease breeding poisons. It makes the blood rich and pure, and furnishes a foundation for sound, physical health.

"About ten years ago I began to have trouble with my stomach," writes Mr. Wm. Connolly, of 535 Walnut Street, Lorain, Ohio. "It got so bad that I had to lay off quite often—two and three days in a week. I have been treated by the best doctors in this city, but got no help. Some said I had cancer of the stomach, others sarrrh, others dyspepsia. Then I wrote to you for advice. You advised the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets.' These medicines I have taken as directed. I commenced to get better from the start, and have not lost a day this summer on account of my stomach. I feel tip-top, and better than I have for ten years."

Keep the bowels healthy by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets. They don't gripe.

General News.

Mr. Gladstone's statue is to be set up at Athens in the gardens of the Zappeion in recognition of his services to Greek independence.

Many cities are protesting against the census list of their population. Each one claims a larger number of people than the census taker gives it.

The reports of the receipts of customs from Cuba for the last four months show a great increase over those of a corresponding period a year ago.

The estimate of the population of the Indian Territory is placed at four hundred thousand, based on returns received at the headquarters of the Census Supervisor, William H. Danaugh.

Gen. Alejandro Rodriguez, Nationalist, was elected Mayor of Havana, polling 13,073 votes against 6,034 cast for Señor Estrada Mora, Independent. The total vote fell about 4,500 below the registration.

Mr. Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese Minister to Washington, was a visitor at the Republican Convention in Philadelphia. He wanted to see how the American people select their candidates for the presidency.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that Admiral Sampson was in command of the naval battle off Santiago, and awards to him the share of prize money belonging to the commander of the fleet.

The number of foreigners in China is supposed to be about twelve thousand. Of these about sixteen hundred are Americans. It is thought that there could not have been more than six hundred foreigners in Peking.

The latest news from China at this writing is a dispatch from Admiral Kempf, dated Chifu, June 21, 1900, saying that Tien-tsin was being bombarded and that part of the American consulate, as well as other property of foreigners, was destroyed.

General Macabulos, the most influential and last insurgent leader in Tarlac and Pangasinan, with eight officers, one hundred and twenty-four men, and one hundred and twenty-four rifles, surrendered to Col. E. H. Liscum, of the Ninth Infantry.

The Texas State Democratic Convention adopted an antiexpansion platform, after a prolonged contest. The vote when taken resulted in seven hundred and seven votes for the majority platform report as against one hundred and six for the minority.

President McKinley has accepted an invitation to attend the reunion and banquet of the "Iron Brigade of the Army of the Potomac," to be held in Chicago on August 27, 1900. Gen. Edward S. Bragg, the last living commander of the brigade, will be present.

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, by decision, enjoined the State Board of Health from interfering with physicians of the osteopathy school in their practice. The court ruled that the practice of osteopathy is not a violation of the statute in regard to the practice of medicine.

There is great excitement at Cleburne, forty miles south of Fort Worth, Tex., over the discovery of a rich vein of gold quartz, found while digging a well on the place of Joseph Stockett, in the incorporated limits of the town. People are flocking to the town, and lands are selling at a heavy advance.

Milwaukee has prohibited the use of cannon firecrackers on July 4. Every city should take prompt action in this direction. The number of accidents on Independence Day is large. Boys go through life maimed because of fireworks, and innocent people are often severely injured. The cannon cracker is a dangerous explosive.

Many varieties of the cactus plant are put to commercial uses in Mexico. The spines of the hedgehog cactus are sold as toothpicks, a single plant sometimes producing as many as fifty thousand. The cochineal insect, from which coloring matter is obtained, is found on cactus plants. The organ cactus is used in the erection of fences, its sharp spines making it an effectual barrier; it resembles barbed wire.

The Division of Customs and Insular Affairs of the War Department has made public its monthly bulletin, treating of the trade of Puerto Rico for the period of eight months, ending on February 28, 1900. During the period named merchandise to the amount of $6,793,575 was imported into the island. The total exportation of merchandise amounted to $3,198,396, products of agriculture predominating.

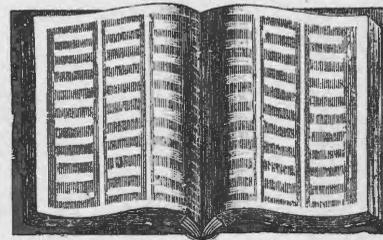

The early peach crop about Chattanooga, Tenn., is almost ruined by continued rain, not a day having passed since May 31, 1900, that there has not been more or less precipitation. There was the greatest abundance of fruit on the trees, but it is rotting before ripening and falling off. Grapes are also seriously threatened. The latter crop is second in importance only to strawberries in that section.

General Roberts sent a communication to General Botha, suggesting disarmament of the Boers. General Botha asked for six days' armistice to consider. General Roberts granted five days, but at the end of the time Botha declined, and hostilities were renewed. The Boer commands are retiring on Middelburg, burning the veldt, destroying bridges, carrying off all provisions, driving off the stock, and leaving the country bare.

Gen. Joe Wheeler has received his commission as brigadier general in the army of the United States from President McKinley. By direction of the President, General Wheeler was assigned to the command of the Department of the Lakes, with headquarters at Chicago. He relieves Brig. Gen. James F. Wade, who has held that command temporarily in conjunction with his regular command, the Department of the Dakotas.

Abbe Mareux, the astronomer, has discovered and sketched through the big telescope in the optic palace of the Paris Exposition a remarkable spot on the sun forming a part of an extensive group and having a diameter of nearly forty kilometers. This spot, he says, will remain for seven days and become visible to the naked eye. He predicts the appearance of other spots in July, August, and September, inferring that the heat during those months will be very great.

The Mexican Government, following the example set by Texas, has quarantined against San Francisco, and until notice to the contrary is given all persons who have been in San Francisco within a period of fifteen days will not be allowed to pass the border until they have remained in quarantine for a sufficient length of time to make up the fifteen days. The Mexican quarantine relates to passengers only, no action having been taken

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Nashville, Tenn.

In regard to freight. The border authorities have the matter in hand.

The largest wheat crop in the history of the State is now being harvested in Kansas. Secretary Coburn, of the State Board of Agriculture, says: "The crop this year will be the heaviest ever known. In 1892 Kansas had 3,800,000 acres of wheat and raised 70,000,000 bushels, an average of eighteen bushels to the acre. This year the winter wheat acreage is 4,685,819, as estimated by the growers, and the average yield will be larger than that of 1892. If the yield per acre is only the same as in 1892, the aggregate yield will be 86,000,000 bushels."

Peking, the capital of the Chinese Empire, is situated about one hundred miles northwest of the mouth of the Pei Ho River, which empties into the Gulf of Pechili at the northwest portion of the Yellow Sea. At the mouth of the Pei Ho River is the port of Taku. The Pei Ho is not a large river and is navigable for vessels of moderate size for twenty-seven miles, up to Tien-tsin, which is a treaty port and the port of Peking. It is about eighty miles, by land, from this port to the capital. There is a railroad from Peking to Tien-tsin, and thence twenty-seven miles to Taku, the mouth of the river and the ocean port for large vessels.

Pension Commissioner Evans says there are nine hundred and twenty-five thousand men still alive whose names were borne on the muster rolls of the Union armies. With respect to the male survivors of the war, of whom he is in receipt of information, Commissioner Evans gives the number at 742,467 Union soldiers and sailors who were on the pension list a year ago. Of this array 24,787, or about 3 1-3 per cent, died during the twelvemonth that has ended. This would make the total count of deaths among all the veterans somewhat in excess of thirty thousand, an entire army in itself. The veterans are rapidly passing away to the last review.

The Philippines, Guam, and Tutuila are to be known in the Post Office Department as "Our Island Possessions," and an order extends the postal rates of the United States to them. Between Cuba and the United States, however, international rates of postage will be charged, the same as with other countries in the Postal Union. Government employees, members of the army, navy, and civil service of the United States residing in Cuba are, however, entitled to receive mail at the same rate of postage as if in the United States. Our postal laws are extended to Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and for postal purposes these islands will be included in the designation "United States," the same as Alaska and the Territories.

The Republican National Convention in Philadelphia nominated, by a unanimous vote, William McKinley for President and Theodore Roosevelt for Vice President. Governor Roosevelt had earnestly protested that he did not desire the nomination. He was not Senator Hanna's choice, but the voice of the convention was so strong for him that he yielded, and all other candidates were withdrawn, and he, by a unanimous vote, was accorded the nomination. Senator Hanna was chosen as chairman of the Republican National Committee. The Brownlow Convention in Tennessee was recognized as the regular one, and the delegates appointed by it were admitted to seats in the general convention.

A meeting was held in Manila by two hundred of the leading men of the revolutionists to consider honorable methods of securing peace. Thirty political prisoners were released from jail in order to attend. Señor Paterno presided, and Señor Ruencamino (the originator of the movement), Señor Flores, Gen. Pio Del Pilar, General Garcia, General Macabulos, and prominent revolutionists were present. The following conditions were formulated as compatible with an honorable peace: (1) Amnesty; (2) the return by the Americans to the Filipinos of confiscated property; (3) employment for the revolutionary generals in the navy and militia when established; (4) the application of the Filipino revenues to succor needy Filipino soldiers; (5) a guarantee to the Filipinos of the exercise of personal rights accorded to Americans by their examination; (6) establishment of civil government at Manila and in the provinces; and (7) expulsion of the friars.

If You Have Smoked Too Much, Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. H. Fisher, Le Sueur, Minn., says: "It is a grand remedy in excessive use of tobacco." Relieves the depression caused thereby, and induces refreshing sleep.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

COOK.

Sister Nancy C. Cook, wife of W. H. Cook, was born on October 30, 1873, and died on May 6, 1900, with that dreaded disease—consumption. She became religiously impressed at the age of fifteen years, and joined the Missionary Baptist Church, and lived a consistent life in that body for six years, when she became a member of the church of Christ and remained faithful to the end of her life. She leaves her husband, four small children, and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but we do not mourn as those that have no hope, for Sister Cook left many evidences of her Christianity, her godly walk and conversation showing that she was thoroughly consecrated to the Master's cause. I thank God for such bright Christian lives as she lived in our midst. J. B. MATTHEWS.
Hammons ville, Ark.

BLACKMAN.

"Angeline Jane Osborn Blackman was born on February 1, 1825; died at 1:20 A.M. on June 4, 1900; aged seventy-five years, four months, and three days. In early life she united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; but, hearing the gospel at Beech Grove, Tenn., she became convinced of the truth as taught in the Bible, and entered the church of Christ, of which she remained a member until her death. Having no children, her heart's love was given to those of her brothers and sisters, and she was ever a kind friend and benefactor to all of them, and they have ever regarded her with affection. Her care of orphan children has been unusual. When comparatively young, a sister died and left two boys, of whom she took charge, and filled a mother's place, as best she could, until they were grown. She again took two nieces and a nephew and cared for them for some time." The above is the reading of a note handed me. These traits of character are certainly worthy of imitation. After a long siege of suffering, she has gone to her reward. W. ANDERSON.
Jameson, Tenn.

SMITH.

Sister Anna Smith, wife of Brother C. V. Smith, of Lynnville, Tenn., departed this life on June 1, 1900. Truly can it be said that a noble Christian woman has gone from this earth home to brighter climes. It was my pleasure to know her for at least fifteen years, and during all this time she was the same faithful, loyal, and devoted servant of God. I have never known one stronger in the faith or more loyal to the church. She contended earnestly for the faith, and yet with it all was gentle and kind toward those who differed with her. Her home life was beautiful in the highest degree. Never was a mother more solicitous regarding the moral and spiritual welfare of her children. Her greatest desire was to live to rear her little ones for the kingdom. But—alas!—that mysterious thing we call "death" has laid her low. She leaves a devoted husband, an affectionate niece, and six children to mourn their loss. In Sister Smith's death a great loss is sustained by the family, church, and community. O how we all miss her! Farewell, dear sister; it will not be long before we, too, will leave this world.

F. W. SMITH.

WEBB.

Ida A. Webb, wife of W. O. Webb, was born in Union County, Ark., on March 28, 1871, and died at her home, near Wesson, Ark., on March 29, 1900, making her stay on earth twenty-nine years and one day. The deceased was the daughter of William Hogg. Her husband mourns the loss of an obedient and loving companion; her children, a kind and affectionate mother, one whose presence diffused a glow of love around the family circle and rendered her home pleasant and happy; and each member of her family could say: "I am always glad to meet her and have her company." She was a very industrious woman, ever ready to aid in promoting the interest and happiness of her family. To do good to those around her seemed to be a prominent characteristic of her nature. Therefore, she was always cheerful and happy in the discharge of her duty. She united herself with the Christian Church at Antioch, Ark., in 1889, and lived a consistent member up to the time of her death. As a neighbor I can say that she was a flower in our neighborhood, having acquired, by dint of hard study, a good, practical education. I will say, in conclusion, let us all try to follow the good example she has set before us. May God bless the bereaved family, and give them all things needful for time and eternity. L. C. TRULL.
Wesson, Ark.

DERRYBERRY.

An old veteran of the cross passed away when Brother J. T. Derryberry died on March 4, 1900. He was born on February 27, 1820; was married to Phebe C. Speer, daughter of Joshua K. Speer, on February 10, 1842; and became a Christian in 1845. He was a member of the New Lasea congregation in Maury County, Tenn., from its beginning. He was conscientious and true to his convictions. He was one of Israel's sweet singers, and we all know the talent of his family in that direction. The singing in his congregation has always been good. He was interested in the great cause of his Master and the progress of his home congregation. We have great respect and admiration for such old soldiers in the army of the Lord. He and his good wife lived together over fifty-eight years, and in the same house for fifty-six years. They were the parents of fourteen children, ten sons and four daughters, all of whom are now living, except a son who died a prisoner of war at Chicago. He now sleeps in the old orchard which he planted and cultivated with his own hands. He lived fourscore years, fifty of which were spent in God's service, and was then gathered like a ripe sheaf into the eternal harvest. He certainly rests from his labors, while he lives embalmed in the memory of his neighbors, the love and esteem of the church, and the tender affection of his family. His loved ones sorrow not as those who have no hope, for the consolation of the gospel is theirs. May God bless and sustain his aged companion in her loneliness, while she patiently awaits her summons to go hence. E. A. ELAM.

MERIDETH.

Mrs. Frances A. E. Merideth died very suddenly at her home, near this place. The deceased was born in Franklin County, Tenn., on December 25, 1832. In 1850 she came with her father and mother, William and Mary A. Breeden, to Texas, and in 1851 she was married to William Strumler, and to them were born five children: Mrs. John Wrae, of Winchester, Tex.; Mrs. John Robinson, near Giddings; and Walker, Ben., and William Strumler. Several years after the death of her husband she was married to Mr. Charles Merideth, and to them was born a daughter, now Mrs. William Simpson. It is so hard to see a kind and loving mother taken away so suddenly, but the angel of death came and, almost without warning, carried her away. Yes, she has gone to dwell with the blessed of the Savior. She was a member of the Christian Church, earnest and faithful always, and a noble character. She had many devoted relatives and friends, in whose hearts her death leaves a void that naught on earth can ever fill. Company, either kindred or friends, never kept her from religious duties. She was always anxious to meet with her class at church and Sunday school, the members of which, though mere children, are all members of the Christian Church. Mr. Baker, the kind superintendent, with the little band of children, and many friends and relatives, paid the last tribute of love to one who was so devoted to them. Bright is the sunlight over her resting place, deep is the sorrow in our hearts, and sad are the tears that fall for her. May God be with her children and keep them in the shelter of his love till they meet her again. L. A. P.
Nechantz, Tex.

Southwest Texas.

On account of continued rains my trip to East Texas has occupied already twice the time I had planned to be away. The people generally where I have visited were demoralized in consequence of the unprecedented rains, and the conditions were against any protracted efforts. However, I preached from one to three times each Lord's day at points where I have labored formerly in the interest of the Master's kingdom. I took up no collections to aid in our Southwest Texas work. At most places I simply made a modest statement concerning our efforts in that field, and left the brethren to act as they were disposed. Contributions have about covered expenses en route. For this and the hospitality shown I am grateful indeed.

Brother C. W. Sewell writes me that his brother, L. R. Sewell, of Nashville, Tenn., is assisting him in the meetings which began at Beeville on June 8. Let the good work go on. Berclair, Tex. G. W. BONHAM.

Send us your orders for nicely engraved cards, invitations, etc.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO SUFFERERS FROM CANCER.

The Disease is Curable.

"Editor of the Gospel Advocate: I had a cancer or an ulcer—the most eminent physicians pronounced it a cancer. My father, a fine physician, did not relieve my sufferings. I had two brothers, both very fine physicians; neither could relieve me. After untold sufferings, with no relief, using eight or nine doctors, some kind friend sent me a bottle of B. B. B. After taking the first bottle I felt entirely easy, and it has been the only remedy that has given me permanent relief, so many times I have been exhausted and collapsed from weakening. I have got a great many people to take B. B. B. A lady living near me had an eating cancer, and the bones in her nose or upper part of her mouth were eaten entirely out. She could eat nothing but strained soup. She was entirely cured by using B. B. B., when she was given up to die by three doctors. B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm) healed my whole body, gave me energy, cured my low spirits, and, I think, saved me to rear my children; or, at least, B. B. B. was the only earthly remedy, with God's help. B. B. B. is the best blood purifier in the whole world.

(Mrs.) M. L. ADAMS.

"Fredonia, Ala."

Deep-seated cases of blood and skin diseases, like ulcers, cancer, eating sores, painful swellings, and blood poison, are quickly cured by B. B. B., made especially for all obstinate blood and skin troubles. B. B. B. drains the poison and humors out of the blood and entire system, healing every sore and making the blood pure and rich. Give it a trial. It cures when all else fails. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. Sold at drug stores at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. Be sure the bottle reads "Botanic Blood Balm." So sufferers may test it, a trial bottle is given away absolutely free. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Write to-day. Describe your trouble and free medical advice will be given. Do not despair of a cure, as we have three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using B. B. B.

PIMPLES
on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

JESSE FRENCH
PIANO & ORGAN CO.
MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS IN PIANOS & ORGANS
WE MANUFACTURE
Starr, Jesse French, and Richmond
Pianos,
AND HAVE EXCLUSIVE SALE FOR Steinway and Knabe Pianos, and Jesse French and Packard
Organs.
PIANOS FOR RENT.
240 & 242 N. Summer Street,
NASHVILLE, - TENNESSEE

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.
Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1¢ doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.
BLAINE CO. Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

The Marvel of The ...Age...

THE RELIABLE, NONPAREIL, LONG-STAPLE COTTON FELT ELASTIC

..MATTRESS..

Manufactured on the Morgan Machine.

It Possesses Many Advantages Over Other Mattresses, Among Which Are:

It is much cleaner than hair; it will never mat or pack; it will never become uneven or lumpy; it will wear for years; it is nontacked and absolutely vermin proof; it requires no renovating; should the ticking become soiled, it may be easily removed and washed.

OUR GUARANTEE.

Sleep on our bed ninety nights, and if you are not thoroughly satisfied that it is superior to any Hair Mattress, costing four times the amount, in cleanliness, comfort, and durability, return it through whom you bought it, and get your money.

Prices and Terms to Suit Every One. We Want Agents Everywhere to Handle Our Beds.

Address all orders to

TENNESSEE FELT MANUFACTURING CO.,

First street and Alabama avenue, West Nashville, Tenn.

TELEPHONE 856.

Call on Greenfield & Talbot Furniture Co., 209 N. College street, and examine the beds, as they handle our beds.

Length of Creative Days.

A better knowledge of the world does not change the Bible, but it sometimes changes our mistaken views concerning it. When Columbus said the earth was round, for example, he came near being tried for heresy, for denying the Bible. People thought the Bible taught that the earth was flat, but it did not; they were mistaken about it. The most devoted Bible student now believes the earth is round, and the Bible itself really teaches this.

Now, there is no more necessity for believing that the six days of creation were periods of twenty-four hours than to believe that the Bible teaches the earth is flat. I do not believe the Bible teaches the earth is flat, nor do I believe it teaches that the six days of creation were periods of twenty-four hours each. A careful study of Heb. 4, together with the account of creation in Genesis, will clearly show. I believe, that the reverse is true. God rested on the seventh day, not because he was tired, as I understand; but from the necessity of the case. He rested in the sense of ceasing from labor because his work of creation was finished. When one finishes a work, a ceasing to labor, or rest, necessarily follows, since there is nothing else to do. When Christ finished his work of redemption he necessarily ceased from it and entered into his rest; so when God finished his work of creation it was a completed work and the rest of the seventh day necessarily followed. In connection with this thought it will be noted, too, that the seventh day has no morning nor evening, and there is no account of God having ever resumed his work of creation. It must be borne in mind that it was in reference to this work of creation alone that God is said to have rested. The rest of the seventh day, then, is a rest forever, being a rest from a completed work. Science also declares this seventh-day rest to still be continuing, as no orders of beings apart from those mentioned in Moses' account of creation have ever been found in her domain. If the seventh period is called a day, "the seventh day," and is at least six thousand years long already, why conclude that the other six are only twenty-four hours long?

In Gen. 2: 4 all the six days are included in one, and the time represented by "day" (the same word, "yorn"), then, means at least one hundred and forty-four hours; nor is this a prophetic meaning. If the word "day," right in the very account of creation, is made to span the entire period of creation, why say that these six periods must mean just twenty-four hours? When Jesus said, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day," did he mean a day of twenty-four hours, or was it a long period of time, covering that period of redemption and grace in which we now live? It is not a question of "higher criticism," my dearly beloved Brother Paul, of California, but a correct exegesis of just what the Bible teaches; and if this correct understanding of the Bible uproots the theory of a perpetual, unbroken, unchangeable, twenty-four-hour seventh day from creation down and disarms the objection that the Bible makes unscientific statements, we should not feel grieved, but rejoice. Nor should we feel that the Father must be put to needless acts in creation in order to manifest his power.

J. M. M'CALEB.

Acknowledgment.

I want to acknowledge through the Gospel Advocate the receipt of money for repairs on the church house at this place. The following amounts were received: Brother and Sister Pyrant, Aultman, Ariz. (five dollars each), $10; Sister Marietta Waters, Horse Cave, Ky., $1; Brother M. Sanders, Phoenix, Ariz., $5; Brother Flavil Hall, for church of Christ at Lockett, Ga., $3.14. Total, $19.14.

I am very thankful to them for their contributions. I hope others will assist me in this work. Brethren, you must remember that Arizona is not full of preachers like the Eastern States, but that you could count them all on one hand and then have a finger or two left; but sinners are numerous, and there are but few here to help the preachers. We need more preachers, and if we had them, we would soon be self-supporting. We are getting along very well here for a new field. We have had five additions in the last six months. Brother J. M. Austin, who has been here for a few months for his health, has gone back East. He helped me very much in the work while here.

I must say before closing that I have been a reader of the Gospel Advocate ever since it has been published, and have always thought it one of the best papers published by the brethren; I now think it better than ever before. I hope its present editors may live long and continue in the good work.

E. B. KETCHERSIDE.

Camp Verde, Ariz.

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE to fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. R. H. KLINE, M.D.
931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1872.

Remember "Allenroo's Book."

Ward Seminary For Young Ladies.

Nashville, Tennessee. 35th year begins September 20. "An Ideal Christian Home." Courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Certification to Wellesley and Balt. Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Full Literary Course with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. Catalogue.

Letters and Sermons of

T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.50

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools.

TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

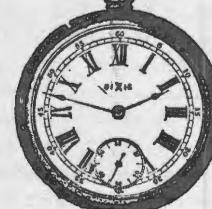

WERNICKE "ELASTIC" BOOK-CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

No. 30001G.

large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.

Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.

SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.)
Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

Send us a new subscriber.

JESSE FRENCH PIANOS

AND ORGANS HAVE BEEN RECOGNIZED AS THE MOST POPULAR INSTRUMENTS IN THE WHOLE SOUTHWEST FOR NEARLY THIRTY YEARS.

Our FACTORIES are among the LARGEST in the U.S. CATALOGS FREE

HOME OFFICE ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
Branches, Agents & Representatives in all Large Cities.

Brother Baumann's Work in Germany.

Brother Baumann writes as follows: "This is the Lord's day, and God only knows how I long to be with some one to commemorate the death and resurrection of my Savior. More than ever before I realize what it means to become 'all things to all men' and at the same time be loyal to the church of God. My first teaching was by example. To drink, and having to ask for, water, when they would think more of you if you would drink beer or wine is not as easy as one might imagine. But Jesus gives us the sword of the Spirit: 'Take heed, . . . lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness.' (Luke 21: 34.) This morning, about an hour ago, came opportunity to use the sword. Yesterday my half-brother would have me go with him to what they call the 'mission'—a kind of revival. I believe this is the first one I have heard of around here since 1868. I heard three priests (Roman Catholic) preach. The first one, on 'Stealing and Defrauding,' preached the word, excepting that he made a distinction between sins. The second, on 'Bridling the Tongue,' preached truth, but error when he came to 'false swearing.' He condemned it, but left off 'swear not at all.' The third priest had this theme: 'Jesus, . . . having loved his own, . . . he loved them unto the end.' The perversion I cannot describe, yet I must become 'all things to all men, that I might . . . save some.' I complied with their wishes, and went and did, so far as I know, all I could consistently with God's truth. But doing nothing without a 'thus saith the Lord' is what provokes them to battle here. This morning my brother and his wife took me to task. First, they showed me mother's grave, and there, after talking of the beloved dead, asked me why I did not make the 'sign of the cross' and use 'holy water,' as mother taught. My answer was, in substance, that God or Jesus never said do it. Next, they asked: 'Do you pray for the dead?' I answered: 'No; God nowhere authorizes such.' Then: 'Do you pray the "prayer?"' (Matt. 6: 9-13.) I answered: 'Yes; but never the "Hail Mary" after it.' I told them that I believed Mary was the best woman, perhaps, that ever lived, but prayer to her was not authorized. Next, they brought up the confessing of sins. I said to them: 'I confess my sins every day, and turn away from all evil, and pray for forgiveness.' Lastly, they spoke of the communion. A great many were going to what they called 'communion' on Saturday. I made my defense on this wise: (1) To show they communed on the wrong day I gave Acts 20: 7; (2) that 'they all [the Roman Catholics do not give the wine to the 'lay member'] drank of it' I gave Mark 14: 23; (3) about transubstantiation I told them that Jesus said what he meant and meant what he said, and that I believed every word of holy writ. I said that I would be willing for any of their priests or bishops to meet me, also to take their own translations of the Scriptures. I am weak, but I can do all things through him that strengthens me. I need the prayers of all the saints. I write this in tears and in love to God and my countrymen."

Full well do I understand the enormity of the task Brother Baumann has undertaken; and this very letter shows that he is beset and pressed on every side. But, brethren, let us see the outcome. A man of faith has gone forth with the Bible alone, and as surely as God's word stands, the principalities and powers that oppose it shall come to naught.

Like Paul, with much sorrow and under a heavy burden our dear brother has written this. Lutheran, Catholic, and infidel—every hand in that erring land is raised against him. Now he knows what it is to endure afflictions and to enter through much tribulation into the kingdom of God; and this will also be his salvation. His letter bears evidence that he is fleeing ever nearer to God, for there he has no friendly heart nor help in which he may trust. Let us pray for him that God, who is able to comfort, may strengthen and help him in his glorious work.

ROBERT H. BOLL.

Bible Student and Firm Foundation please copy.

In the recent automobile show at Agricultural Hall, London, there were more than one hundred exhibitors and a great variety of styles. The interesting facts about the show were the appearance of only three electric vehicles and three steam-driven ones. The steam machines were of American make, and concerning them a report in the London Graphic says: "If appearances were everything, the light steam car might be regarded as the motor vehicle of the future, for this American product glides about the arena with almost swanlike grace, and as silently as an electric launch. Its performances are very captivating." Then follows this remarkable statement: "It must be pointed out, however, that to produce the steam three times as much petrol is required as would alone drive the vehicle, and that from twenty-five to thirty miles is the limit of its journey without refilling of the boiler." All the machines excepting the six mentioned were driven by gasoline motors.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

If you need anything in the way of first-class printing, we would be glad to have your orders. We are sure we can please you.

- ARMSTRONG & McKEEVEY Pittsburgh.
- BEYMER-BAUMANN Pittsburgh.
- DAVIS-CEAMBERS Pittsburgh.
- FARNSTOCK Pittsburgh.
- ANCHOR Cincinnati.
- ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
- ATLANTIC
- BRADLEY New York.
- BROOKLYN New York.
- JEWETT New York.
- ULSTER New York.
- UNION New York.
- SOUTHERN Chicago.
- SHIPMAN Chicago.
- COLLIER St. Louis.
- MISSOURI St. Louis.
- RED SEAL St. Louis.
- SOUTHERN St. Louis.
- JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
- MORLEY Cleveland.
- SALEM Salem, Mass.
- CORNELL Buffalo.
- KENTUCKY Louisville.

DOES the difficulty of getting a tint or shade induce you to buy prepared paint whose composition is a mystery?

Our Pure White Lead Tinting Colors make it easy to obtain any desired shade of Pure White Lead Paint, proved by the experience of over 600 years to be the most durable. The brands in margin are genuine "old Dutch process" White Lead.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 100 William Street, New York.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,
531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 50 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in the U. S., Canadas, and Europe.

Ferd. T. Hopkins, Prop., 37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

"Let Your Light Shine."

"Ye are the light of the world." Christ is speaking to his disciples. If we are his disciples, he speaks to us. We are the lights by which the world views the religion of our Master.

"A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." A life of godliness and righteousness cannot be hid. It may be lived in all lowliness, those who are jealous of it may make every effort to keep others from seeing its beauty, but it will be seen. Can you call to memory one life of true devotion to God that is not seen by all those who are associated with it? The man who lives it is not self-righteous; he is humble; he makes no boasts of holiness; he realizes that he is simply a weak man. But the pure beauty of his life is seen by his associates. It has an influence upon their lives; this influence will live on with the generations of the future.

David says: "The faith of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The light of dawn grows brighter and brighter until the perfect brilliancy of the full day is reached. So the life of the just—the man who closely follows the Lord Jesus Christ—grows more beautiful day by day till at last it puts off all that is corruptible and puts on incorruption, leaves behind all that is mortal and is clothed upon with immortality. That life then forever brightens heaven itself with a soul redeemed by the blood of Jesus. Can such a life fail to shed forth upon its pathway a light that will show forth the true beauty of the Master and his religion?

But the city that is built in the valley may be hidden. So may all the light of the Christian life that is lived in sinful worldliness be hidden. Our lives may descend from the heights of righteousness and holiness and remain in the lowlands of worldliness till every particle of the light within us be destroyed. We may fail to show forth the true beauty of the Master's religion by failing to devotedly live it in our lives; we may fail to draw all men unto him by failing to closely follow him.

"Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." When men light candles they light them for the purpose of making light where darkness is. This is accomplished if the lighted candles are put upon the candlestick. All darkness is driven out. The same place is filled with light by which we can clearly see. But if the lighted candle is taken from the candlestick and placed beneath a measure, the very opposite of the desired effect is the result. Though the power to make light remains with the candle, it is hidden beneath the measure.

The lighted candle, then, instead of filling the room with light by which we may see, becomes a stumbling-block over which we fall. The light remains with the candle, but we stumble and fall over the measure by which it is hidden. So Christ gives to us (his disciples) the power to show forth the true beauty of his religion and to cause men to glorify our Father which is in heaven. This is accomplished if our lives are kept pure and holy and we closely follow the Master; but if our lives are covered over with worldly wickedness, the very opposite of the desired effect is the result. We then become stumbling-blocks over which men fall. The light remains with us, but men stumble and fall over the wickedness by which it is hidden. Ah, how many the bushels by which our lights are hidden! How sad the fact that our influence for good is so often completely destroyed by the sinfulness of our lives! We should be careful that every measure of sin is kept from over our lives, that they may shine brightly, showing men the way that leads to a better world.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." The Master gives us no choice in this matter. We have no right to keep our lights covered with bushels; we must not keep our lives covered with wickedness; we must keep them pure and clean. Our lights must be kept burning. The Master commands, we must obey. Sin, wickedness, must be so kept from our lives and the religion of the Master must be so kept in them that men may see our good works. Showing to them the beautiful purity of our lives, we show not what we are ourselves, but what Christ is in us. Thus we cause others to glorify our Father which is in heaven.

O that we—children of God—would thus keep ourselves unspotted from the world and live the pure religion of our Master! What a power unto the salvation of the world we would be!

J. P. SEWELL.

Bonham, Tex.

For India.

Since my last report I have received the following amounts for the sufferers of India: Brother R. R. O., Brentwood, Tenn., $5; "A Brother," Hickory Flat, Miss., $3; "A Sister," Nashville, Tenn., $5; J. B., $1; Bethel church of Christ, Southport, Tenn., $15; Mrs. J. H. G., Slaughter, Tenn., $2; St. Bethlehem church of Christ, $5; "A Brother," Nashville, Tenn., $2; A. T. M., New Columbia, Ill., $1; "A Sister" (sent the silver dollar in a registered letter), $1. Total amount from last report up to June 9, 1900, $40. This amount, less forty cents for purchase of money order, was forwarded on the 9th inst. to M. D. Adams, Bilaspur, C. P., India. J. M. M'CALEB.

It is said the United States Navy is to build warships aggregating over one hundred million dollars in cost as soon as builders are prepared to undertake this great programme, which calls for eleven armored ships, practically doubling the present American sea power in this class, and for three highly improved Olympia type of cruisers. The five battle ships, for whose hulls and machinery Congress has appropriated eighteen million dollars, are ready for the builders to bid upon. Plans for the six great armored cruisers, more powerful than any ship at present in service and to cost for hulls and machinery alone over twenty-five million dollars, are well advanced and should be finally approved next month.

BIBLE LESSON PAPERS

PRICES OF HELPS:

- Gospel Quarterly. Lessons for Advanced Classes, per quarter....6c
Gospel Quarterly. Lessons for Intermediate Classes, per quarter 3c
Gospel Quarterly. Lessons for Primary Classes, per quarter... 2c
Little Jewels. In colors, per quarter. 6c
Lesson Leaves. Single sheets, per quarter..... 3c
Bible Lesson Picture Cards. Per quarter..... 2 1/2c
Bible Lesson Pictures. Chart, per quarter .. 75c

THE series of Helps prepared by the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY has no superior. Much time, labor, and thought are bestowed on the entire series. The Quarterlies all abound in SCRIPTURAL TEACHING and are full of WHOLE-SOME DOCTRINE. The man that is not interested in the Bible will not take any interest in the investigation of these. A good way to use these Helps is to study them carefully at home during the week and leave them there when you go to the class on Lord's day. Helps thus used cannot prove otherwise than very beneficial.

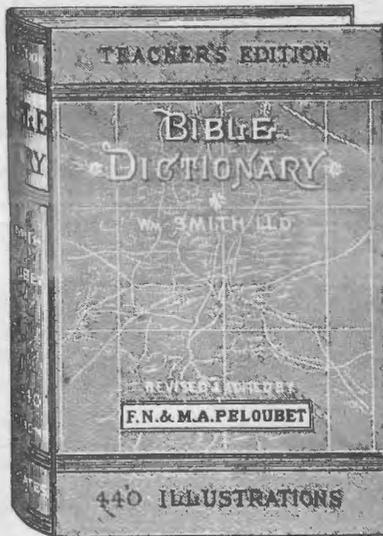

Address GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING CO.

SAMPLES Cheerfully Furnished on Application.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co., NASHVILLE, TENN.

FACTS ABOUT PAINT When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

The seclusion of a home gives to a man a certain freedom and attendant privileges which no other place in the world affords, and it is right that it should; but it is not right that this freedom and those privileges should be abused to the disadvantage of the wife. Too many men seem to have the idea that they can drop into constant disconsolate and churlish moods at home with their wives, which in any other place and by any other person would not be tolerated. It is when a man is within the walls of his home that he is himself. Then it is that he should be at his best. When a man gives the best that is within him to those closest to him, his home will be the ideal place that he wishes it to be. No man has a right to expect from his wife what he on his part does not give her. If he wants her sympathy, he must give her his consideration. If a man lacks the element of consideration, he should cultivate it, and cultivate it not for the benefit of his friends, but for those in and of his home. Consideration should begin at home; not in the homes of friends, as it often does—and ends there, too. The atmosphere which a man creates in his home by example becomes the rule by which his children live. The husband and father strikes the keynote for right or wrong living.—Ladies' Home Journal.

The shape note edition of "Gospel Praise" is now out and ready for delivery. All orders that we have received for the board binding, shape note edition, have been filled. This book has been very highly commended by all who have examined it. We believe it to be the best hymn and tune book on the market to-day, and only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, which are arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating the purchase of new song books, you will make a mistake if you do not examine this book. Brother M. H. Northcross writes: "After a careful examination of 'Gospel Praise,' I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I think it is the best arranged work and finest music extant; in fact, it is an 'all-purpose book,' 'worth its weight in gold.' All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production."

If you need anything in the way of first-class printing, we would be glad to supply you.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 27.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JULY 5, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

The Captive Hebrew Girl.....	418
What Does It Mean?.....	418
Names and Ideas.....	420
"Preach the Word".....	420
Miscellany.....	421
Can God Save All?.....	422
Home Reading.....	423
The Gospel is God's Power to Save.....	424
The Congregational Churches.....	424
Is the Body or the Spirit the Man?.....	425
My Purpose.....	426
The Mormon-Christian War.....	426
Saving the Lost.....	427
General News.....	428
Obituaries.....	429
Brother Elam's Criticism.....	430
"Be Not Ye Called Rabbi".....	431
Church News.....	432
Brother Scooby's Reply to an Inquirer.....	432

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red ~~mark~~ at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

The following question is from one whose name is withheld:

"If a person makes a good confession, is he in possession of eternal life? If not, tell us at what time that person will possess eternal life."

"And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." (Mark 10: 29, 30.) The idea of Jesus seems to be that "that person will possess eternal life" "in the world to come."

"Was Lazarus, the beggar, immersed? It is known that he went to heaven."

I do not know whether Lazarus was immersed or not. It is known that many people have gone to heaven who were not immersed and who did not need to be, because they died before any one was ever commanded to be baptized, but it is not known that any man who loves God and has a proper regard for divine authority has ever tried to keep people from obeying any plain command of God by arguing that people have been saved without obeying such command.

"I am a man who just wants to be a Christian, and nothing more. Is water baptism a commandment of God or an ordinance of God? What law was it instituted under, the law of Moses or the law of Christ?"

It is both a commandment and an ordinance of God. It is a commandment of God because God, speaking by the Holy Spirit through inspired men, commanded people to be baptized: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 48.) It is an ordinance of God because God ordained it. There is no baptism such as John preached and Jesus practiced in the law of Moses in the Old Testament. Baptism is peculiarly a New Testament institution. We have no account of any one being baptized till John preached in the wilderness and baptized the Lord Jesus Christ.

The following questions come from Waterloo, Ala.:

"Brother Srygley: Is it right for members of the church of Christ to commune with other churches? Is there anything wrong in our holding Sunday school when we meet on the first day of the week to break bread?"

R. HIGGINS."

The church of Christ is the body of Christ. "Head over all things to the church, which is his body." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) "Even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body." (Eph. 5: 23.) "And he is the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18.) "For his body's sake, which is the church." (Col. 1: 24.) There is but one such body, hence but one church. This is all the church of Christ there is, and every Christian is a member of it because he is a Christian. No one can be a Christian and not be a member of the church of Christ any more than he can be a Christian and not be a member of the body of Christ, because the church is the body of Christ. There are no "other churches" in the New Testament any more than there are other Christs or other bodies of Christ. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." (Eph. 4: 4.) "But now are they many members, yet but one body." (1 Cor. 12: 20.) "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." (1 Cor. 12: 27.) "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many." (1 Cor. 12: 12-14.) "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." (Rom. 12: 4, 5.) The plain meaning of these and other passages of the same import is that there is only one church, which is the body of Christ, and every Christian is a member of it. No Christian has any scriptural right to be a member of any other church, because no other church has any scriptural right to exist. God's church is God's people; simply this, and nothing more. It takes all of God's people to constitute God's church, and none of God's people have any scriptural right to constitute, belong to, encourage, or support anything else than God's church in the way of a religious institution. In New Testament times "the disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread" and engage in other acts of public worship and service of God. (Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 11: 17-34; 1 Cor. 14: 1-40.) A careful study of these and other scriptures convinces me that they taught and admonished one another unto edification when they met on the first day of the week. I do not believe disciples can fulfill the requirement of God in the meeting on the first day of the week without teaching and admonishing one another. The word of the Lord must be read, studied, and taught when the disciples come together on the first day of the week to break bread, else the meeting does not fulfill the requirements of the Scriptures. If the disciples ever held Sunday school when they met on the first day of the week to break bread or at any other time in apostolic days, we have no account of it in the New Testament. Nor do I see how the disciples or anybody else can possibly hold Sunday school at any place where Christians meet on the first day of the week and conduct meetings as meetings were conducted in New Testament times. Such thing as a Sunday school was never heard of till Christians ceased to conduct meetings on the first day of the week as they were conducted in New Testament times. When the method of teaching and studying the Scriptures unto edification, which prevailed in New Testament times, was abandoned and sermons alone came to be relied upon for instruction in the meetings on the first day of the week, the whole system was unscientific, antiscriptural, and a disappointment. The religious world recognized the failure of the system, and tried various expedients to remedy the situation. Among such expedients may be mentioned Methodist class meetings, Sunday schools, Young Men's Christian Association, Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, midweek prayer meetings, etc. Really, all that is needed is a return to the ways and wisdom of God in methods of religious work, "publicly and from house to house," which prevailed among the disciples under the leadership of inspired men in New Testament times. Nothing short of this will please God or satisfy those who wish to follow the New Testament; but it is exceedingly problematical whether all people who are disposed to be religious will ever yield their preferences and prejudices far enough to come to this scriptural basis of religious work and worship. If Christians all determine to preach and practice exactly what the New Testament teaches, and nothing else, it will be easy for them to understand and agree exactly what the New Testament teaches.

I publish the following letter here because of the good news it contains and of the opportunity it affords to say a few words which I wish to say:

"Brother Srygley: This leaves all the kin well. This (June 18) is the beginning of the second week of our meeting. I am preaching to the church all the time. I do not know how long I will continue. One brother came back and took connection with the congregation. Brother Ferrel, the preacher here, has yielded to the teaching of the word, and he authorized me to say for him to the congregation that he would forsake all things not plainly taught in the word and work with the disciples, and be limited in word and worship to the Spirit's teaching. I may continue here until the third week in July. I will then go to the southern part of the State to build up a congregation. There is only one brother in the community where I am going. The interest is on the increase here. Pray for us.

Coal Hill, Ark.

R. W. OFFICER."

Brother Officer came into Coal Hill by the same train on which I left. I had only time to shake hands with him as the train pulled out. I preached a few times, as I always do, while there, and announced his meeting to begin on Sunday after I left. I regretted that I could not stay longer and see more of him. I rejoice in the good results and hopeful prospect of his meeting. Brother Ferrel is a preacher of experience and ability who has lived at Coal Hill several years. He has always treated me kindly and heard me patiently when I go to Coal Hill, and I have never doubted but that the desire of his heart is to do good, serve the Lord, and go to heaven; but he has very earnestly argued that he believes God authorizes Christians to form organizations which I cannot find authority for in the New Testament. We have talked over all this ground freely, but never an unchristian spirit. On my last visit our re-relationship and association were especially pleasant. My prayer and hope is that they will all "strive together for the faith of the gospel," and that each will try to be better and do more for the glory of God, the salvation of souls, and the help of suffering humanity than any one else in the service of the Lord.

Our Contributors.

The Captive Hebrew Girl.

Henry Hardshell: "Good morning, friend Faithful. I am glad to meet you again. I am much interested in that Old Testament narrative of the cure of Naaman. I supposed I had learned all it contained before we discussed it, but in this I was mistaken. It seems we are ever learning, even from the most familiar texts of the Bible."

Frank Faithful: "To be in itself inexhaustible is characteristic of the Bible. In this respect it is unlike any other book. When once we read and understand the books of men they fail to interest us afterwards, but by prayerful and earnest study of the Bible we take renewed and increased delight in its pages. Like its divine Author, it is never failing in its resources. The love of the word of God is the measure of our love for God. To despise or disregard the word of God is to despise God himself. Men seem slow to learn this plain lesson: that the estimate we place upon the word of God indicates the love we have for God himself."

Henry H.: "Is not the same true in reference to receiving and loving the Christ?"

Frank F.: "Exactly so, and the same is true of the Holy Spirit. If we disobey the word of Christ, we disobey him; if we resist the Spirit's teaching, we resist the Holy Spirit. It seems strange there are those who claim to be Christians who know nothing and care nothing of the Bible, when our faith in Christ, our guidance by the Holy Spirit, and our love for God are made dependent upon the revelation of all these contained in the Scriptures. It strikes me, Henry, your admission of this truth condemns yourself. 'To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.'"

Henry H.: "Why, friend Faithful, I have heard you say a man could be a real, genuine Christian who could not read a word in the Bible. Now you say our faith in Christ, God, and the Holy Spirit is dependent upon the words contained in the Bible. How do you explain that?"

Frank F.: "It is true, Henry, our becoming Christians does not depend upon any literary qualification that we may have, but others can read the Bible and preach it by word of mouth. It was in this manner the Gentiles first believed. Peter says: 'God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.' (Acts 15: 7.) Faith cometh by hearing the word preached, and it has pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. This is the plain truth on this subject and well sustained by many scripture proofs."

Henry H.: "What do you mean by 'foolishness of preaching?' Is the gospel idiotic nonsense in any right view of it?"

Frank F.: "By no means. The expression of St. Paul, 'foolishness of preaching,' means that by the simple process of telling a man about Christ with the living voice man can believe and obey Christ, whether he be able to read or not. You will remember we have discussed this before, and you have admitted its truth. This question of human instrumentality in the salvation of man is very strongly objected to by some religionists, yet it is one of the grandest truths pertaining to the gospel, and should cause every heart to rejoice in the hope of doing something to save others. This, by the way, is well illustrated in the history of that Jewish maiden mentioned in 2 Kings 5."

Henry H.: "In what way? Please explain."

Frank F.: "Well, it is plain enough. It was the little captive girl who told of the prophet in Samaria who would cure her master, Naaman, of the leprosy. This she said to her mistress, but the words were brought to the knowledge of the great general, Naaman, who was influenced by them to seek the cure."

Henry H.: "Do you not believe that was all ordained of God?"

Frank F.: "I do not doubt that God overruled all that had been done to carry out his purposes, but this should make it only more interesting to us. We are all the creatures of his hand. He can use us, whether we be good or bad, to carry out his will. But we should desire to be used for our own good as well as the glory of God; therefore we should always be on the alert, that we may do all the good we can."

Henry H.: "Well, well! I declare! That Old Testament is rich in suggesting good lessons to us."

Frank F.: "Yes, indeed, it is. This thing of human instrumentality in carrying forward the purposes of God is abundantly taught and illustrated in the Old Testament. Very frequently the persons used were poor and to the world unknown or insignificant in themselves, as in this case—a little maid, and she a captive in a strange land, among foreign people; but the life of the great general of the hosts of Syria, as well as that which was a greater blessing to him, his conversion to the knowledge and worship of the true God—all were in the hands of the little maid."

Henry H.: "It seems to me she must have been a lovely child. I would like to have your opinion of her character."

Frank F.: "I have thought there is much to admire in her history, short though it is. She had knowledge of the true and living God, and in her beautiful child faith spoke of Israel's prophet and Israel's God. Many Christians, were they surrounded by ignorant heathen, as she was, would not have uttered a word; they would think it would be useless; yet this child had faith in God, and it bore good fruit. I have admired what seems to have been a very tender and unselfish sympathy she bestowed on Naaman. She had been made a slave, who had been a loving child torn from the embrace of her parents, perhaps, or friends; yet in her heart she pitied the man who held her in captivity, and wished him well. Yea, she prayed for him; for, under the circumstances, her words, 'Would God my Lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy,' can mean nothing but a child's prayer to God, which, though made in heathen Syria, was heard in heaven. The result was the healing in body and soul of Naaman, the captain general of the Syrian hosts. Despise not the day of small things. Look not with scorn upon the poor or oppressed; thou knowest how high God may exalt them. Remember thou art poor and dependent, or can be made so in an hour, as was the proud king of Babylon. Pray God to open effectual doors for thy willing heart. Can we not hope God will find acceptable work for all such willing workers? That child of faith in heathen Syria was in reality a queen directing Naaman to health and salvation. God made her so."

Henry H.: "Now, friend Faithful, let us suppose a case. Suppose that had been a boy instead of a girl, what do you think would have been the result?"

Frank F.: "You have asked me a hard question. Girls, we think, are more sympathetic and tender-hearted than boys; but all boys are not rough and hard-hearted. There are some who are kind and gentle, true and noble; but, somehow, I think they are not so generally so as girls. Had that been a boy, just such a boy as you and I have been and some others I have known, instead of wishing and praying that Naaman could be cured, he would have secretly hoped the leprosy would take his life. Could one have been near his bedroom when he retired, and pulled the cover well up over his head, he might have heard him whisper to himself something like this: 'Old General Naaman has got the leprosy; I am so glad. I do hope to God it'll kill him.' But happily, we will say, for General Naaman, this captive was a girl. By the way, God's own chosen emblem of gentleness, purity, and loveliness is a 'chaste virgin.' For the other sex, let us also remember that Isaiah, seven hundred and forty-two years before the advent of the Messiah, sung of the Virgin's son, Immanuel: 'For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.'"

G. LIPSCOMB.

Flat Rock, Tenn., Rural Route No. 3.

If things do not go to suit you, it is better to say so, instead of muttering under breath. Be open and aboveboard; do not hit under cover, do not sneak in the dark. It is contemptible.—Boys' Lantern.

What Does It Mean?

For the past forty years the Gospel Advocate has been looked upon as a sound paper, and Gospel Advocate lovers and supporters are looked upon throughout the Union as those who love God and are striving to keep his commandments. In some particulars I have thought D. Lipscomb and the Gospel Advocate off on Bible doctrine, and on the same items they have thought me the same way; but, notwithstanding these differences, I have always been treated with love and kindness by the Gospel Advocate, and cannot keep from being its friend, and desire to see it circulate a hundredfold more than at the present. Yet I must confess the Gospel Advocate of late is bringing some strange things to my ears. Among the things that divide the churches, the Gospel Advocate has always placed societies, instrumental music, and the pastor as the greatest sins on the human side. Yet of late I find such notes as these in the Gospel Advocate: "Hall Calhoun, former pastor at Franklin;" "George Gowen, pastor at Franklin;" "Brother Paul Sladen, pastor at Columbia;" "W. L. Logan, pastor at Murfreesboro;" "L. S. White, pastor at Gallatin;" also do I hear some of the Gospel Advocate staff claiming this pastor business is the foundation of all our troubles. As I am seeking for truth on this question, and know that sometimes we differ on words without a distinction of principles, I come seeking information on this subject and ask for help to understand the same.

1. What is a pastor?
2. In what particulars is his work unscriptural?
3. Are there any scriptural pastors? If true, what is their work?
4. Is it unscriptural for a preacher to spend all his time under the instruction and support of one congregation?
5. If such makes him a whole pastor and makes his congregation believers in the pastor system; if said preacher preaches for them only one fourth of his time, does such make him a fourth of a pastor? If not, why not?

I find Brother Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky.; Brother Moore, of the South College Street church of Christ; Brother Jackson, of the Line Street church of Christ; and Brother A. C. Jackson, of West Nashville, being directed all the time by their congregations and preaching under their instruction. Are these brethren pastors? Are they violating God's law? I also find a number of other congregations in Nashville having regular preaching each Sunday by a different man. What is the difference in their work in having four men than the other congregations in having one man to preach all his time? As to Moore, Kurfees, and the Jacksons, I am acquainted with them all, and recognize them as being earnest, devoted, godly men.

At this time I am preaching for the West Nashville church of Christ, where young Brother A. C. Jackson has been preaching for two years. I find him one of the most devoted, consecrated young men I ever met, whose only desire seems to be to do his Master's will; and if I condemn him for being pastor, he can look up such men as Kurfees, claiming he is only doing as he does and his work is scriptural. To my mind there seem to be some complicated questions with this pastor business, and it is sometimes hard to tell where God's work ceases and man's work begins. I have long since learned it is much harder to kill error by condemning it than it is to substitute it with truth. If these brethren I have mentioned are practicing error, I have too much confidence in them to think they will continue to practice it if we can show them the Bible on this subject.

This letter is only written for information. Is the evangelist an independent factor in the churches, or is he only a member subject to elders, as other men are? If the evangelist is subject to the congregation, will it not be well for each of the ten scriptural churches in Nashville to select an evangelist as their pastor, build him a home among them if they are able, said home to belong to the congregation, and let said congregation release said preacher of all responsibility of rustling to make a living for himself and family, but let him give himself wholly to the work of an evangelist, the congregation receiving all calls for outside help, sending him from place to place, all the time holding meetings, and every three or four months have him to hold a meeting for them to stir up their minds in all good works and educate them to help him in all things? My usefulness in past life would have been far greater if I had not been forced to spend so much time in thinking how to make a living. If some congregation in past years had said, "Go, Brother Tant; when you are not supported, we will make up the deficiency and care for your family," I would have been able to have done much more good and would have gone to many places I could not go to because of the fact that I was not financially able.

If each community can support a doctor to visit them while sick, a lawyer to help them out of meanness, and a teacher to teach their children, why cannot each congregation select and support an evangelist all the time to preach the gospel to men? This letter is only written along the line of suggestion. I ask for information to learn where the divine side ceases and the human side begins in a congregation supporting a man all his time for his work. Will not Brother Gowen, Brother Kurfees, and others give us some Bible information on this subject? May God help all to come to a knowledge of the truth, that we may be of the same mind and speak the same thing on this subject, is my prayer. J. D. TANT.

COMMENTS.

The foregoing article has been placed in my hands by the editors of the Gospel Advocate, with the request that I accompany its publication with such comments as may seem necessary. The task thus assigned me is accepted in the hope that good may grow out of the investigation.

It gives me pleasure, first of all, to note the kind and courteous spirit which breathes through the article of Brother Tant. Whatever else may or may not be lacking, this is one merit which any and all investigations of religious truth should possess; and I most heartily commend, and shall strive to emulate, the good example he has placed before us.

The reader will observe that Brother Tant does not dogmatically take any position on the issue involved, but writes rather in the nature of an inquiry after truth, declining, at least for the time being, to assert or defend any specific position. In my comments on the matters he has presented I shall endeavor to put forth only such statements as are within the record of inspired teaching; and, for the sake of order, I have decided to consider, in the first place, the questions propounded in his article; and, secondly, to present a statement of Bible facts concerning the work of preachers and their support by churches.

I. Brother Tant's Questions.—I do not accept the arrangement of his questions as the most logical, but I shall, nevertheless, consider them in the order and manner in which they appear in his article:

"1. What is a pastor?" The term itself is Latin, and both it and the Greek word ("poimeen") of which it is a translation in the English version mean a shepherd; and it would be proper to answer, in general terms, that a pastor is a shepherd. (See Matt. 9: 36; 25: 32.) But our brother means to ask, of course, for its metaphorical meaning, and in this sense it is used of one, as Thayer observes on John 10: 11-14, "to whose care and control others have committed themselves, and whose precepts they follow;" and it is thus applied to Christ himself (John 10: 16; Heb. 13: 20; 1 Pet. 2: 25), and to elders, who are overseers in the churches of Christ (Acts 20: 17, 28; 1 Pet. 5: 1-4). The term for "feed," in Acts 20: 28, means to be a shepherd or pastor, and thus we see that Paul told the elders of Ephesus, whom the Holy Spirit had made overseers, to be shepherds or pastors to the flock; and if our brother means to ask what is such a pastor, he will find the answer in 1 Tim. 3: 1-7; Tit. 1: 5-9, where, in plain and specific terms, we are told what he "must be."

"2. In what particulars is his work unscriptural?" The work of such a pastor is not unscriptural in any "particulars" at all. He, no doubt, means to ask in what particulars the work of the modern pastor is unscriptural, to which attention will be given farther on.

"3. Are there any scriptural pastors? If true, what is their work?" If by this he means to ask whether there are any scriptural pastors to-day, I answer: There can be none, of course, except those who have the qualifications prescribed in the Scriptures; and the work they were designed to do is indicated, in part, by the qualifications themselves, and, in part, by specific directions. (Acts 20: 28.) There are intelligent and devout students of the Bible who believe that this order was restricted to the period of inspiration between the time the church was established and the completion of the New Testament, after which the church, with the inspired and completed word of God, was to be a self-edifying body. I do not take this position, but whatever may or may not be true about it, we cannot have "scriptural pastors" to-day without the qualifications which the Scriptures plainly prescribe. It does not follow, nor is it here contended, that such qualifications must exist in perfection, but they must exist, each and all of them, or the divine requirement is not met.

"4. Is it unscriptural for a preacher to spend all his time under the instruction and support of one congregation?" Certainly not; for we have a clear example of it in the case of Paul, whom the church at Philippi, without the help of any other church, sustained while he preached the gospel in Thessalonica. (Phil. 4: 15.) Of course the principle which would allow the church to sustain him, even only in part, would allow it to sustain him wholly, which latter it may have done, so far as the record goes, and the principle which would allow it to sustain him for a part of his time in Thessalonica would allow it to sustain him at other places and for all his time. If not, why not?

"5. If such makes him a whole pastor, and makes his congregation a believer in the pastor system; if said preacher preaches for them only one-fourth of his time, does such make him a fourth of a pastor?" This reasoning, I beg to submit, is not correct. If such work made him a pastor, it would make him, not a "whole pastor," but a pastor for the whole time; and the same work one-fourth of his time would make him a pastor one-fourth of his time. Our querist evidently has the modern pastor constantly before his mind, and the work of this extra biblical functionary is identical with that of the ancient located preacher only in a very few particulars. He is neither like the pastor nor the located preacher of primitive times in all respects, and is compelled to go elsewhere than to the Book for his prototype.

Brother Tant asks two other questions, which he does not number, and for convenience I will designate them, respectively, 6 and 7:

6. He wants to know what is the difference in a church having four men one-fourth of the time each and a church having one man all the time. None, that I can see, if the same kind of work is done by all.

7. "Will it not be well for each church to select an evangelist as its pastor and send him from place to place, all the time holding meetings, and every three or four months have him hold a meeting for them and stir them up?" This is coming in the direction of New Testament teaching, but why say "select an evangelist as its pastor?" Why not simply say "select an evangelist" and sustain him while he preaches the word wherever there is an open door? On this point the Scriptures speak out plainly. Paul and Barnabas were sent away from the church at Antioch to preach in regions that were calling for the bread of life (Acts 13: 1-3), and the Philippian church set the example of sustaining a preacher while engaged in such work. (Phil. 4: 15.) From these premises the conclusion follows that a church may use a preacher in preaching the gospel wherever the way is open to reach the people and establish churches. If preachers were once more willing thus to go and churches were willing to send to and sustain them in the work, the waters of salvation would flow to the ends of the earth.

The wrong in the modern pastor system does not consist in the fact that a preacher is located at one place for an indefinite length of time nor in the fact that a church sustains him for such a time, but it does consist in the relation he occupies to the church and in the work he does. The modern pastor differs from the preacher of primitive times in the fact that he largely stands in the way of the activity and growth of the church by doing nearly everything himself. He usually reads the Scriptures, leads the prayers, announces the songs; does the preaching, the teaching, and the exhorting; presides at the Lord's table, leads all the meetings, makes all the announcements, does all the visiting, and, in short, he is a sort of "hired substitute" for the church in the army of the Lord. Of course a church cannot grow much under such an arrangement, nor will there likely be many teachers developed among its members. The divine arrangement contemplates all as becoming teachers. (Heb. 5: 12.) There is not an instance known to me in the word of God where any one man occupied the relation to a church that is occupied by the modern pastor.

II. Bible Facts Concerning the Work of Preachers and Their Support by Churches.—On this point I must be brief, and shall, in the main, simply state the facts, without enlarging upon them:

1. Preachers were sometimes located for an indefinite period of time at one place. (Acts 11: 26; 18: 11; 20: 31.)

2. During such time they taught the word of God among the people. (Acts 18: 11.)

3. They taught both the church and the world. (Acts 20: 21, 31.)

4. They did this work publicly and from house to house. (Acts 20: 20.)

5. While thus located and at work a single church sometimes supported a preacher. (Phil. 4: 15.)

6. A church could sustain a preacher in such work in its own immediate field or at some remote point. (Phil. 4: 16.)

Now, if preachers and churches everywhere would set their hearts on learning and carrying out in practice the lessons contained in these six facts and in other passages bearing on the subject, there would be a mighty revolution in the country and a long stride toward the primitive order of things. The divine order is that a church shall be a self-edifying body, and not depend on importing some one to edify it. (Eph. 4: 16.) No evangelist should ever labor with a church for any length of time without teaching and training it with this end in view. Would it be wrong, then, for a church to support Brother Tant, and thus untie his hands, as he suggests? Certainly not, provided it supports him to do the work which preachers did in primitive times; but it would be wrong for a church to support him to do what God has ordained it shall do for itself. Let a church use him and work through him in its own immediate field, or anywhere else where there is an open door, just as work was done through Paul, Timothy, Titus, and other preachers in primitive times, and both he and the church can find authority in the New Testament for what each is doing. As to the Campbell Street church and myself, both were working through the society and other denominational machinery when I was called to the city, and my relation to the church at that time was, practically, that of the modern pastor; but a careful study of the New Testament has led us both to see and to correct many evils. In addition to a complete revolution from all human organizations to the divine one in all work and worship, the church in recent years has sustained both myself, and sometimes other evangelists, in preaching the word in destitute places both here in the city and elsewhere, and it is more of a self-edifying body to-day than ever before in its history. If some one is expected to be present to preach on the Lord's day, the crowd is no larger than when it is known there will be no preaching. The church has sent me in response to many calls from other fields in recent years, and it contemplates doing still more work of this kind hereafter. Any church of medium size and financial ability could sustain from one to two or three or more preachers in such work, and if both churches and preachers would thus go to work, the modern pastor would be abolished and the problem of mission work would be solved. May the Lord help both to wake up and go to work.

I must leave to the Gospel Advocate itself to explain the particular use it has recently made of the term "pastor," and I feel confident that its explanation will fully sustain its reputation for loyalty to the Book, which it has won during "the past forty years."

M. C. KURFEES.

Louisville, Ky.

It is not wise or just or beneficial to substitute falsehood for truth. Be truthful in all things, even though you suffer for truth's sake.—Boys' Lantern.

To receive much and give out little is to die of obesity. An engine that will pull only itself is thrown into the scrap pile.—Exchange.

The loud-mouthed saith much, but doeth little. It is the deeds that tell what kind of a character one possesses.—Boys' Lantern.

The admonition to bridle the tongue may be old, but because it is old does not relieve the necessity of its practice.—Selected.

No knowledge is gained without effort. Flowery beds of ease are only for the genius, but his name is not legion.—Exchange.

NAMES AND IDEAS.

Brother Harden, in last week's Gospel Advocate, asked if I would not think it a sin to call a person sent by a church an "apostle." It was not a sin in the days of the apostles to call others than the twelve sent by Jesus "apostles." Barnabas is called an "apostle." (Acts 14: 14.) Those sent by the churches that went with Titus to Corinth are called "apostles of the churches." The word in Greek is "apostotus." It is translated "messengers." But in the Revision "apostles" is in the margin. Paul calls Epaphroditus, whom the Philippians sent with help to Paul, "your apostle," translated "messenger," but with "apostle" in the margin of the Revision. Christ used "apostle" in a general sense of any one sent. (John 13: 16.) It was no sin for others to be called "apostles" then; it would not be now, but in the translation the word "apostle" was applied only to the twelve and Paul, save when applied to Barnabas in connection with Paul. Indeed, "apostle" is a transference of the Greek word to the English, and not a translation, as is "baptism."

So in English "apostle" applies only to the apostles of Jesus. If "apostle" had been translated "messenger," a common English word, I would think there would be no wrong in calling other persons "messengers," as well as these. It would have been proper to call others by the same term that these sent by Jesus are called. The exclusiveness of the term to the apostles has been made by the translators and the custom of the people, not by God. God used a common term applied to others sent. I think it best not to call other dippings or immersions "baptism" for the same reason—people would understand both as applying to the divine Persons and act; it would not convey the right idea. But if "baptism" had been translated "immerse" and "apostle" "messenger," as I think they should have been, it would be no wrong to call common immersions and messengers by the same names of the divine ones, because God chose to call them by common names. So I think of "pastor" and "evangelist." "Pastor" means a feeder of the flock. The translators confined the word to the gifted feeders. The ungifted feeders were designated by other names. I do not think there is sin in calling the pastors by other names, further than it seems to me, as it did to the translators, safe to keep the distinction between the gifted and the ungifted. But "evangelist" has been applied by the translators and by custom to both the gifted and ungifted evangelists. So we must so use them or undertake to change the uses of the word. If Brother Harden will look at the article in the Gospel Advocate of April 19, 1900, that he criticised, he will see that I there laid the stress of the evil not on the name "pastor" but on its application to one man doing all the service.

The names by which things and offices in the Bible are called are not those chosen by the Holy Spirit, but those chosen by the translators and the uses of language concerning religious customs. I think while they generally did well, they sometimes did not choose most wisely. So it would be no sin to use these names to give the more correct idea, but we must be exercised in using them, that we speak so the people understand us. This explains all the points propounded by Brother Harden, if any wish to apply them. Whether I am always consistent in the use of the terms is not a matter of great importance to me, less to others. iv L.

"PREACH THE WORD."

The necessity for heeding Paul's admonition to Timothy was never, perhaps, greater than now. Paul fully realized that his earthly pilgrimage was rapidly drawing to a close. He was a ripe sheaf, ready to be gathered into the Master's garner above. He could, without vain regrets, look back over a life of usefulness, and victory accomplished in the midst of great difficulties. He looked forward to the glories and sweet joys awaiting him at the right hand of God and said: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." With his work completed, his course run, and knowing that his head would soon be severed from his body by the bloodthirsty Nero, the noblest and best thing he could do was to charge his son in the gospel, Timothy, to "preach the word." He would have the blessed work which he had so nobly begun carried forward until the whole world was redeemed. He said of his work of preaching: "Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual." (1 Cor. 2: 13.)

When preachers preach the gospel they preach something that will save people. In obedience to it people are freed from their sins. "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.) Again Paul charged Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." (1 Tim. 4: 16.) Preaching is ordained as a means through which men are led to believe the gospel; but it must be the preaching of the gospel of Christ. "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness [simplicity] of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.) Still we hear that grand man of God, the apostle Paul, say: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." (Rom. 1: 16.)

The story of the cross is the grandest theme that ever engaged the mind of mortal. It will touch and mellow the heart as nothing else can do. Our highest ambition should be to preach Jesus to a lost and ruined race. It is the only theme that has in it any power to save. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." To faithfully preach Jesus to the multitude will result in the salvation of many souls and will bring peace and joy to the heart of the faithful minister. Philip preached Jesus to the eunuch. As he listened to the story of the cross, believed in Jesus, and obeyed the truth, a joy unspeakable filled his soul. We should not only preach Jesus from the pulpit, but by our daily words and deeds. We cannot all astonish the world with our eloquence in preaching Jesus, but we can give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple. We can sympathize with the sad and despondent, we can give them a hearty hand shake and a smile, and thus bring a little sunshine and joy into their souls. By some little word in kindness spoken, some deed of sacrifice or love, we may all ever preach Jesus to a sinful world. There is ever an open door to preach Jesus. Sigh not to do some mighty deed, but be content to do the little deeds that are ever at your very doors, "gather up the fragments" that others have left, and soon you will find yourself loved and admired by many, and, best of all, your course will be approved by Jehovah.

At midnight's holy hour Paul spoke the word of the Lord to the Philippian jailer and his household. As in this case, so it is always that such preaching is always blessed with glorious results. God has ordained it so, and it must be so. God's word is food for the soul, and it is remarkably strange that preachers will turn away from the pure word of God and preach man's wisdom instead. But this is only a fulfillment of prophecy: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." The average church member is worldly and seeks to be entertained by the preaching. Instead of seeking instruction and edification, he seeks entertainment.

The preacher that cannot entertain such is regarded as fearfully dull. Such would-be Christians are not entertained by a gospel sermon, but are actually bored. The simple worship of God has no charms for them. The modern "pastor" seeks to entertain them by quoting poetry and by preaching some pretty nothing. When the "pastor" has exhausted his supply of such things, he can no longer entertain his flock and must seek a new field of labor. Spiritually-minded people will starve to death on such preaching. Those who cannot be entertained on strong gospel preaching need conversion. There is something radically wrong with the church member who does not find entertainment in the worship itself. To the consecrated soul that loves the Lord Jesus Christ with all the heart the worship of God brings a peace and joy unknown to the man of the world. He delights to meet with the saints on the first day of the week to sing, pray, contribute, break bread, and study the word of God. On the first day of the week he does not enjoy himself elsewhere. He does not stay at home if the preacher whom he delights to hear is not going to preach. He goes to worship, preacher or no preacher, and expects to meet Jesus there to own and to bless. All preaching should be for teaching, edifying, and exhorting. The true disciple will be delighted to hear such preaching.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

"Obedience is Better than Sacrifice."

Has the Lord ever required any to do what they could not, and yet held them responsible? In other words, does the Lord ever place such environments around us that we cannot obey his every command? To accuse God thus would be to charge him with folly; yet he has been so charged. Some people say that a man may be in such a place or condition that he cannot comply with God's command to be baptized, for he might be in the middle of a desert at the time he concluded to obey the Lord, and no water there to baptize him in, and no one to do the baptizing. Therefore, if baptism is essential to salvation, the man must be lost because he cannot comply with the conditions essential to his salvation. So they conclude that faith only will save him. Well, the fellow may be in this fix, but the Lord did not place him there; he put himself there, so he is responsible for his lost condition. They also conclude that if a man is sick, nigh unto death, he cannot be immersed, for it would kill him to take him out of his bed and put him into water; therefore they will sprinkle a little water on him and call it "baptism." But who was responsible for the person's not obeying the Lord before he got into this condition? The person himself, and not God. So we see if we fail to obey the Lord when we can, we need not think that he will forgive us; for God never has promised to forgive any one in an emergency for doing anything he has not commanded when such a one has had the opportunity of doing what he commanded, but would not.

We have been led to these reflections by recent occurrences here. Two weeks ago the "pastors" of the various religious bodies of this place signed an agreement to keep the doors of the church houses closed and have no public gatherings until the so-called "smallpox scare" should blow over, therefore there have been no public gatherings of this kind since. It seems to me that these conditions are brought about by the false idea that Christians cannot serve the Lord unless they have a church house where the congregation meets regularly to hear preaching, and that generally done by one man selected and paid to do the work. I do not so understand my Bible to teach. I find that the early Christians did at times all meet or come together in one place; but when they could not do this, they met at the private house of some brother or sister, and therein worshiped the Lord; and this was the church, for Jesus says: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." We find several such family churches; for instance, the church in the house of Aquila and Priscilla (Rom. 16: 1-5; 1 Cor. 16: 19); the church in the house of Archippus. (Philem. 2.) Paul addresses the church in their houses. Brethren, if we would have more of these private house church meetings, I believe we would be better Christians. It is more like a family gathering; we get closer to each other; there is more warmth of feeling toward each other, and not that cold, stiff formalism that is usually in the church house meeting.

A few of the members of the church of Christ here, parts of three families, seven in all, acting upon the knowledge of the above Scriptures, met at the house of a brother and worshiped the Lord; and there was a yellow flag just opposite the house where we were. So we see it is not necessary to have a church house to meet in, but we can meet in private houses and worship the Lord. Jesus says: "Do this in remembrance of me." Paul, in Hebrews, says: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." We ought to obey God rather than men. Submitted in love.

Franklin, Tenn.

H. W. SMITH.

Do unto others as you would have them do unto you, and you will be doing yourself good.—Exchange.

Life is too short to waste the moments. Idle minutes can never be recalled.—Boys' Lantern.

The road to the city of Failure begins at Disobedient lane.—Selected.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother W. J. Brown, of Coal City, Ind., was at Allensville, Ky., last Lord's day.

Please announce that I am not able to meet my appointments. I am very sick.—R. W. Officer, Atoka, I. T.

Brother J. N. Armstrong's meeting at Rich Pond, Ky., resulted in two additions. He is now visiting his mother in West Tennessee.

Brother Larimore was in to see us a few minutes last Friday afternoon. He began a meeting at Woodbury, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother J. M. McCaleb was in to see us last Monday. He is spending his time among the churches, seeking to stir up a lively interest in missionary work.

Brother P. H. Hooten left Nashville last Friday morning for Texas. He will be engaged in meetings there and will be gone from four to six weeks.

Brother James E. Scobey was to have spent the month of July in Arkansas; but the rains and high waters preclude the possibility of his holding the meetings anticipated, therefore he will not now go to Arkansas.

Brother Gus. Dunn closed a two-weeks' meeting at Prospect, Tenn., with four additions. He is a true and earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord, and we trust that he will come again, for we are sure he can do much good here.—Argie Womack.

Brother James T. Harris and Sister Lulu L. Hicks were married at Hebron church of Christ, near Una, Tenn., on Tuesday, June 26, 1900. Brother Harris is a young preacher, living near Godwin, Tenn., and the bride is an earnest Christian lady. We wish for them much happiness and success in their work for the Lord.

There will be a debate at Friendship, Tenn., between A. G. Freed (Christian) and T. P. Clark (Methodist), beginning on July 10, 1900, and continuing four days. The debate will embrace the action, design, and subject of baptism. The nearest railroad points are Bells, Tenn., on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, twenty miles; Dyersburg, Tenn., on the Illinois Central Railroad, fourteen miles; and Fowkes, Tenn., on the Illinois Central Railroad, ten miles. All are invited to attend.—T. A. Smith, Chestnut Bluff, Tenn.

Brother McQuiddy: Inasmuch as a notice of my illness has appeared in the Gospel Advocate, I will give a statement of my trouble and present condition. I had my left arm injured when a boy; it gave me much trouble for years, but finally seemed to get well. I was in Georgia holding a meeting about four weeks ago, when it began to pain me. Considerable inflammation set in, and I have suffered a great deal with it. The condition of the arm is improved and I am now suffering but little. The doctors think an operation will be necessary, but anticipate no serious consequences. I hope to be at work again in a few weeks. A great deal of sympathy and interest has been manifested, for which I feel so thankful. May the Lord ever bless the dear old Gospel Advocate in its great and increasing power for good.—W. H. Sutton, Sparta, Tenn.

EDITORIAL.

Rarely are hasty words fitly spoken.

It softens sorrow to mix smiles with your tears.

The man who is a slave to himself cannot serve God.

When we do wrong it is a hard matter to feel right.

Idle words often do a large business in evil consequences.

Moderate drinkers are the best teachers of intemperance.

God delights to give liberally to the man who earnestly prays.

The man who always does his duty will not fail to receive his dues.

A hard time is really the best blessing oftentimes that God can send us.

Misfortune is a blessing whenever it drives us nearer the cross of Christ.

It is not hard to trust the Lord when we are continually working for him.

A wise man never rejects the truth because he does not like the man who tells it.

People who compromise the truth for the sake of pernicious peace are moral cowards.

A wise man never refuses to take what he needs because he cannot get all he wants.

The man who rejoices to be called the greatest sinner in the country is in a bad way.

When a man loses the favor of God it is very hard for him to hold the confidence of men.

The tongue would not be so hard to control if there were not so many bad things in the heart.

God never offers an opportunity to do good without placing along with it a chance to do evil.

The lack of faith on the part of men often causes God's richest blessings to be taken for calamities.

It is better to remember the Lord in our sorrow than to forget God while enjoying the pleasures of this world.

If rich people would retain the favor of the Lord, they must often carry joy and gladness into the homes of the poor.

The church never prospers much under the ministry of a man who delights more to hear the people praise the sermons than to hear them praise the Lord.

The sons of rich men really deserve our sympathy more than the sons of the poor. The hardships that come with poverty fit and qualify one to bravely meet the duties of life.

It is beautiful to hear the man who has grown old in the service of God talking continually about the glories of heaven. He is a ripe sheaf waiting for the angel reapers to come.

Scientists say that "nothing has been created in vain." Without entering into a discussion of this question, it is certainly true that every human being has a mission to perform in this life. We all were born for a purpose, and for something nobler, higher, and better than sitting and holding our hands while we build air castles and spend our years in a dreamy, unreal existence. All can do much good. We are so created that we can be helpful to others. We need not spend life to no purpose. Opportunities for doing good are all about us. We can help the poor, we can feed the hungry or clothe the naked. A word of encouragement will do much good. If we fail to do much good, we have failed to accomplish our mission in life.

Boys who grow to a useful manhood usually are taught self-reliance and dependence in their boyhood days. They are brought up to labor and toil for their daily bread. They work from early morn till late at night. Such labor and discipline is a blessing to them, and not a curse. They learn for themselves that no excellence comes without great labor; they are prepared to meet the conflicts and realities of life. When trials come they know how to conquer them; they do not grow faint-hearted at every obstacle to be overcome. Boys should rejoice who have parents that bring them up on hard toil. Those boys are to be pitied who have parents that imagine they are too good to work. Some day these very boys will not be too good for the gallows. It will be a surprise if a wretched life does not await all such.

We hope all our readers will read carefully the following on making men: "We are in this world to grow. A gentleman was once addressing a school and asked what boys were good for. One little fellow answered promptly: 'To make men, sir.' No better answer could have been given. A boy is of great use as a boy, if he be a good one—manly, noble, pure-minded, true, and diligent. He may do a great deal of good while he is growing up. Many boys live a beautiful life and do things which give comfort and cheer in their homes; many do heroic things and kindly things. The years while a boy is waiting to become a man need not be lost or wasted. Yet boyhood is not the end; it is only the period of growth and of training. The purpose of a boy is to become a man. St. Paul tells us that the church was instituted, with its apostles and prophets and pastors and teachers, its services and all its ministries, to make men of us—'till we all attain unto . . . a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.' All schools and books and all home instruction and whatever affects our life and character have the same object—to train us into manhood. There is need for men everywhere. There are plenty of people, but not every one who wears the form of a man is a man. The old books tell of a singular philosopher of ancient days who used to go about with a lantern in broad daylight holding up the lantern and peering into people's faces when he met them, as if he were looking for some one. He said he was trying to find a man. He meant that while there were many human beings everywhere there were few true men, men worthy the name. It is to be hoped that if this philosopher were among us now he would not have so much trouble in finding what he sought. We have Christianity now, the gospel, and the story of Christ's blessed life and redemption. We ought to be better than were the people of Greece in the days of Diogenes. Yet even now, with all our privileges, our churches and colleges and schools, our books and refined homes, and all our Christian civilization, it must be confessed that too many who have the name of men are not the kind of men Christ would have them to be. Some one suggests that Jesus did not look at men as the old cynic philosopher did. He saw not the worst that was in men, but the best. He did not look for blemishes and faults, but for beautiful qualities. He saw people not merely as they were at the time but as they might become; he saw the possibilities that were in them. Then his mission was to bring out these possibilities. He showed men in his own life a pattern of what they might become, and then offered to help them to get away from their sins and failures, their old self, and to reach up to the lofty ideal which he revealed to them. That is the way Christ would help all of us. He does not flatter us to make us satisfied with our poor, unworthy state. He shows us the beauty of true manliness to make us long for it, and then helps us to reach it. What is it to be a man? There are three pictures of manly character in the New Testament. One is Peter's: 'Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.' Another is Paul's: 'Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report.' The other is the Master's; we have it in the beatitudes. Every one who will study these three scriptural portraits will get a clear idea of what it is to be a man according to the divine conception of manhood. How to grow up into the kind of man Christ wants us to be is a question every young person should want to have answered. There are many temptations to low standards. We should never be satisfied with anything lower than the highest, any ideal below the perfect one. Some one says: 'It were better for the sun and moon to drop from heaven, for the earth to fail, and for all the many millions on it to die of starvation, in extremest agony, so far as temporal affliction goes, than that one soul should commit a single venial sin—should tell one willful untruth, or should steal one poor farthing, without excuse.' That is the standard for Christian manhood. It is the same in all phases of morality as with truth and honesty. Its demands are inflexible and unalterable, the same whether one is among good people or whether one is among those who are indifferent to moral duties. This is a time which calls for good men, brave men, true men. It calls, also, for men with a heart—men who love their neighbor as themselves, men who have the sympathy and gentleness of Christ, men who are ready to serve others, even to the uttermost of cost and sacrifice.

"God give us men. A time like this demands Clear minds, pure hearts, true faith, and ready hands—
Men who possess opinions and a will,
Men whom desire for office does not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who have honor, men who will not lie,
Tall men, sun-crowned men, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking."

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS.

After a careful examination of your new book, "Gospel Praise," I can cheerfully say that I am more than pleased with it. The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul stirring, while the mechanical appearance of the work does great credit to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The brethren should all buy this book and learn these beautiful songs, and thus be able to comply with the heavenly admonition to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs while they sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord.—J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.

Can God Save All?

An idea is abroad that God will receive some sinners and reject others, and that "without foresight of faith and good works" on their part some are seized by the mysterious power of God and saved, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, while others go unheeded to damnation. The mourner's bench illustrates that doctrine. There you see them in tears praying the Father to save them, for Christ's sake; and some announce themselves as saved, while the rest vainly plead with the Savior not to pass them by. They seek for weeks, for months, for years, and at last the dark certainty fastens itself upon them that Christ has passed them by.

O God, is it thus that thou dealest with thy helpless creatures? Nay; let us thank him for the word of his grace which scatters the clouds of human errors in which as in a mirror we may behold his goodness, his love, his glory.

Is God willing to save all? Let Paul answer: "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved." (1 Tim. 2: 3, 4.) What, then, is God's will concerning men? He wills, absolutely wills, that they be saved. Go to now, you that say that God by the counsel of his will predestinated even as much as one man to go to hell; the counsel of his will is that all be saved. Go to, ye that say that he will save some at the anxious seat and slight others who seek him as sincerely, for his will is to save men—yea, even all men. Never has a poor soul tasted of the flames of hell but that it was against God's will. "For he doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men." (Lam. 3: 33.)

Yes, God is willing to save all. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Pet. 3: 9.) Then if he wills to save all, how much more does he not want to save those that seek him! Indeed, the fundamental requirement is that we "must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.)

But you say: Is he not almighty? Does he not work all things after the counsel of his will? Then why does he not save everybody, if it is his will that all should be saved? For who hath resisted his will? As long as it is a question of physical force there can be nothing impossible to God, for he hath all might and power; as long as it is a question of wealth there can be no obstacles to him, for all things are his—heaven, earth, and universe. If the accomplishment of a work depends upon wisdom, we know that he can do it, for all wisdom cometh from him.

There is but one thing that can possibly affect God's omnipotence and that is a boundary which he himself may have set to his power. Truly, we learn from his word that God has hedged himself in with certain moral laws which he never can nor will transgress, laws by which he governs himself and which make him the character he is, laws eternal as God himself. Thus it is that God cannot lie. There is no physical hindrance, but it is a moral impossibility; it is contrary to his very nature and being.

Here let me state, if you will allow the digression, that God wants us to be governed by the same moral laws that govern him, and this fact is sometimes used as a motive to urge us on. "It hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Thus we are to love our enemies because God so does. As Paul says: "For when we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. . . . But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another," says John. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5: 48.) "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children." (Eph. 5: 1.) "Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy." (1 Pet. 1: 16.)

There are, of course, moral laws which arise from the peculiar circumstances in which we live, and cannot apply to God. God cannot commit murder, because he is the author of all life and has a right to take it whenever he sees fit. He cannot steal, because all things belong to him. But were God in our condition, precisely the same code of morals would govern him that he has given us, as Jesus exemplified by the life he led. So he now wants us to show by our life "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." (Rom. 12: 2.)

But to return. We have seen that God cannot lie. It is equally impossible for him to be unjust. He cannot relinquish his justice long enough to pass judgment in favor of one single man that is guilty. He "will by no means clear the guilty." (Ex. 34: 7.) Man sinned. God loves him yet with that boundless love which the poor human mind never shall fully comprehend. As he is, God cannot save him. God cannot be unjust. Never can he compromise with sin. Though his love would save man, his justice never can allow it. Then in his infinite wisdom the Almighty stretches forth his hand to prepare the only way possible to man's salvation, a way which alike satisfies the demands of justice and the longings of that love that passeth all knowledge.

Will you have me tell you a story? Then listen to the story of "The Merciful Father."

There lived, long years ago, a man named Zaleucus, who was judge supreme over all his country. Firm like a rock stood his integrity, and his justice was known unto all men. This judge had a son, an only son, whom he loved dearly; for, although he was a judge and must daily condemn evil doers, his occupation had not robbed his heart of its finer sensibilities of kindness, sympathy, and love. Now, it came to pass, in the course of time, that the judge's son was caught in the act of committing a crime, and was brought before his father's judgment seat. The court halls were crowded, and every eye hung in silence and sadness upon the face of that noble man that sat pale and mournful upon the throne. For long years he dealt out justice and integrity; will he now falter? Some wished that he would; they would have gladly saved the old man the pain of condemning his only son. Everybody wondered, hoped, feared. What will he do? The witnesses came; the young man was found guilty. "Turn to the law," the judge said, sternly; "what saith it?" "The loss of two eyes is the penalty." "Let the executor come." The old judge stood erect in his throne. With trembling finger he pointed at the culprit. "Take out one of the young man's eyes." A groan, and the deed was done. Then the father descended the marble steps. His features had relaxed from their strictness and his stern eye had become soft. The judge had melted away, and it was the father that pressed himself between the executor and the young man. "I have determined to fulfill the law and remain just even now. Two eyes requires the law. One has been taken, and now take the other from me."

Thus justice and mercy went there hand in hand. The law was fulfilled, the son was saved from lifelong darkness, and the old judge never felt the pain of the loss he sustained, for love makes strong.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; . . . that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." (Rom. 3: 25, 26.) Could God find no other way but that Christ must die? Was his justice so inexorable? That was the only way. Jesus in agony prayed the Father to let the cup pass if it were possible, but it was not possible.

God, then, has demonstrated his love to men and his willingness to save them all, for Jesus died for every man. (Heb. 2: 9.) Now, if Jesus died for all, all have the privilege of accepting his salvation. We know that the Bible sometimes uses the word "all" figuratively to mean a large part, but here the terms are so explicit as to forbid a figurative rendering. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." (John 3: 16.) When he came the angels brought the glad tidings which shall be to all the people. (Luke 2: 10.) God sent him that the world through him might be saved, not those who (according to the human creed) were always predestinated to eternal life, for they never were lost, but the world, the unsaved, that they might be saved. "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19: 10.) "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." (1 Tim. 1: 15.) "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1: 29.) "And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2: 2.)

If God has done as much as this for the human family, it appears that he would have given them every other means they needed to complete their redemption. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. 8: 32.) Which he surely did, for, says Peter: "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." (2 Pet. 1: 3.) "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.) The word of God, then, is the means of our salvation. By it men are quickened (Ps. 119: 50, 93; John 6: 63); by it they are begotten (James 1: 18), born again (1 Pet. 1: 23-25); by it they are saved (Acts 11: 14; James 1: 21). How?

In the first place, without God's word we would know nothing of him, nothing of his goodness and love, nothing of Jesus and his death to save men. Man has rebelled against God. God loves him still, but as long as he remains in that frame of mind God cannot save him and be just, even though Christ has died. Therefore, God places motives before men. He tells men of his love, his willingness to save them, and the sacrifice of his Son. He shows them how without Christ they are lost; that, although he does not willingly afflict men, he must nevertheless, according to his eternal justice, consign them to everlasting punishment. On the other hand, if they will turn to him and take the avenue of escape he has prepared, they shall forever dwell with him in bliss and joys eternal. He pleads with them, beseeches them to be reconciled to him. In his anxiety to save the poor children of men he gives vent to even passionate exclamations. To Israel he said: "O that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children forever!" (Deut. 5: 29.) Yes; he wanted them to be saved, and wishes only that they had a heart to obey him, for without that he cannot save them in justice.

Why does he not give them such a heart if he wants them to have it? Does not the Bible speak of his giving "a new heart and a new spirit?" Yes; it says that. It says also he gives faith and gives repentance. How does he give it? By furnishing the means. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10: 17.) So, in giving us the word he gave us faith. He gives repentance, and still we must come to repentance. (2 Pet. 3: 9.) It is his goodness that leads us to repentance. (Rom. 2: 4.) He gives us bread; still we must toil for it to make it. Even so it is with the new heart and the new spirit. When the Israelites had failed to keep God's commandments he still pleaded with them to return, saying: "Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." Surely you cannot listen to these words of love and still believe that God has condemned some before they were born, or was willingly withholding his grace from them, although they sought and wanted it. See the Savior as he looks down upon the royal city, Jerusalem, with its walls, its palaces, its magnificent temple, and the bustling crowd of men and women in its market place. His face bears the marks of sadness and tears fall slowly from his eyes. What a picture!

The Son of God in tears
The wond'ring angels see.

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

Still does his Spirit strive with men; still the words of the humble, loving Savior are heard among the din of a sinful world; still his messengers plead with and beseech men: "Be ye reconciled to God." (2 Cor. 5: 20.) "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock." Will we open to him? The eyes of a heavenly multitude are resting upon us, and there shall be joy in heaven if one sinner repents. Dare we reject the Savior's call? "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." R. H. BOLL.

Home Reading.

JEFF'S ORATION.

"Jeff!"

May was standing in the library door with her hat on and a troubled look on her pretty face. Her tone was hesitating and anxious.

"It is too bad to bother you, Jeff, but can you possibly spare me ten minutes? I promised to take some things over to the Settlement this morning, and I cannot find any one to help me with the basket. I hate to trouble you, but I thought if you could just carry it to the car for me, I could manage it at the other end myself; the trolley runs quite near to the door."

Jeff lifted his eyes reluctantly. He had planned to spend the whole of this Saturday morning "reading up" for his prize oration for the junior exercises, and the interruption was, to say the least, unwelcome.

He had stayed at home from the ball game to-day to get an early start with it, and it was just as he was becoming absorbed in the books and newspapers, with which he had surrounded himself directly after breakfast, that May came with her request. For a moment Jeff wished the basket and the Settlement together at the antipodes; but, then, it was May who asked the favor.

It was a little more than eight months now since Jeff had come up from his own home in the country to spend the winter in his uncle's family and attend the institute with his cousins; and although he had been treated with the utmost kindness by the whole household, he knew quite well that it was Cousin May's girlish tact and thoughtfulness which more than anything else during all these months had smoothed his way through the difficulties and embarrassments that lie in wait for a country-bred lad in his first experience of city life. There are so many little things that a girl—the right kind of a girl—seems to understand so much better than a boy. To refuse her anything, however inconvenient, would have been to make him despise himself. He picked up the basket promptly and cheerfully.

"Phew, but it is heavy!" he said, with a comical grimace. "Gold?"

May laughed.

"I wish it were. No; it is only some books, with a few pictures and little things for the children."

"I can get along all right now, thank you," she said gratefully, a few minutes later, as Jeff slung the basket on the platform and helped her on the car.

But Jeff was taking a seat beside her.

"I will just set this down at its destination while I am about it," he said good-naturedly.

"But your oration?" May's eyes were troubled. "Really, Jeff, I can get along very well, with the conductor's help. I know you have counted on this morning's work—staying at home to study and write, instead of going to the match with George and Don."

But Jeff shook his head. What he did he did generously.

"If you are going to empty the basket now, I will take it back for you," he said, as he set it inside the hall of the Settlement House.

May looked her thanks and slipped away to find some one to take charge of the things.

Jeff had never been in the Settlement before, though he knew that May came here often and was enthusiastically interested in the work among the poor. It was natural for girls to go in for that sort of thing.

As he sat glancing around the hall, where May had left him sitting, there was a sound of hurrying, shuffling feet, and a little army of boys trooped by into one of the rooms opening at the side.

Rough and ragged little urchins they were, for the most part—genuine street boys of the city's east end. As they disappeared through the doorway there was a sudden scuffle, followed by a loud, angry word, the sharp sound of a blow, and a general tumult of boyish voices.

Jeff hastened to the scene of what was rapidly becoming a lively disturbance.

"Halloo! What's the row?"

The boys turned quickly, eying him with the alert shrewdness of their class. Then a dozen began to speak at once.

"It's Dinny McCaughan!"

"That Dago began it!"

"He stole Checksy's nickel!"

Out of it all Jeff's ready wits soon gathered a fairly correct view of the situation. He constituted himself arbiter of the difficulty and won the admiration of the youngsters by the prompt way in which he singled out the chief offenders, administered vigorous and wholesome rebuke, and restored peace and the disputed nickel together.

Jeff himself found it amusing.

"What are you doing here, anyway?" he asked, looking about the big and somewhat bare, but not unattractive, room. "Anything going on?"

"Boys' Club," said one, laconically.

"What's it for?"

"O, we do things"—vaguely—"games, an' readin'—there's the papers an' magazines—an' singin' an' the band. Sometimes we have debates, an' treats. An' there's the Boys' Bank."

"Want to jine?" asked a wizened little fellow, with a sly wink.

"Maybe," said Jeff, laughing. "Is it any good?"

"Some," said a precocious-looking child with a scar on his cheek. "Debates is good, an' so's the treats. An' it's dandy when the young lady toffs come, if they don't put on the lugs. To-day it's the preach."

"The what?"

"The preach. He adn't bad, but the girls are the best—specially the red-haired one, with the blue flowers in her hat. She's tiptop; that's her now."

Jeff had caught sight of May at the door, with the superintendent of the Settlement. The faces of both appeared anxious.

"O, Jeff, I am so sorry to have kept you waiting," said May, coming up to him quickly. "Here is the basket; I am going to stay and help Miss Gould this morning. There is so much to do—the Sewing Circle, the flowers for distribution, the book lending, and"—despairingly—"this Boys' Club! Mr. Jarvis, the minister, who was to have been here to-day, has just sent word that he cannot come. What we are to do with them I do not know. But never mind; I am just keeping you waiting with my chatter. Good-by, and thank you ever so much, Jeff, for carrying the basket."

But Jeff seemed in no hurry.

"Is there anything I could do to help you out? Anything for these little chaps, for instance?"

A look of grateful relief sprang to May's eyes. Then she shook her head, with its pretty auburn braids. The little rascals—to call her hair red!

"No, thank you, Jeff. You have helped me a great deal already; and there is your oration, you know."

"I will find time for the oration," said Jeff. And he stayed.

The experience was a novel one. With no definite idea of what he ought to do, Jeff merely set about drawing the boys out and getting acquainted with them. It was not difficult. His downright boyish manner won their admiring confidence, and they were soon on excellent terms.

It was astonishing how much these street urchins knew about some matters in which Jeff himself was interested, dense as was their ignorance of others. They did not live in the streets of a great city for nothing, and it was not many minutes before they were expressing their "views" on expansion and the Cuban situation with quite as much confidence as he expected to do in his prize oration. Jeff groaned inwardly when he thought of that oration.

But from being merely amused and curious, Jeff soon became keenly interested in the little fellows and the thoughts they suggested. The moral sense of many of them was pitifully warped, and they were full of narrow and ignorant prejudices; yet these were embryo citizens, representing an important factor in present and future American conditions.

But Jeff was not philosophizing in this way while he was talking with the boys. Many of these thoughts only came to him as he was riding home with May, who, taking for granted that he was thinking about his oration, did not talk much. That was one thing Jeff liked about May: she knew when "not to bother."

He did think about his oration, however, and think to some purpose, although that evening he replaced his books on the library shelves and the newspapers, with their brilliant leaders, on the files.

Monday morning he sought the first opportunity to speak with the principal of the institute.

"I would like to change my subject for the junior oration, if you are willing, sir," he said straightforwardly.

"Indeed? Why? if I may ask."

Jeff hesitated.

"I—I do not think I am equal to it. It is a pretty big subject for as young a fellow as I am to tackle in public; do you not think so, sir?"

"Ah!" The principal smiled, a trifle inscrutably, but his eye was kindly. "What do you think of taking?"

"I have not thought much yet about the wording of it," said Jeff, slowly. "It sounds clumsy and pretentious, but it is something like 'The Opportunities and Obligations of the Rising Citizen.'"

"Ahem! What suggested this to you?"

Jeff told him about his morning at the Settlement and all that it had suggested to him.

"They are sharp little fellows," he said, earnestly. "They do not know much about the things that we do, but they know a lot more about some things; and they are going to count before long. I think it would be better all around if we fellows knew more about them and the way they look at things. Of course," he added, "I will have to give up thinking about the prize; but—excuse me, sir—do you not think it might be worth while, all the same?"

That evening Jeff told his Cousin Donald, who was in the same class, that he might have "Expansion" if he wanted it. Don wondered what on earth Jeff could be thinking of, but he accepted the offer eagerly and was glad he had gone to the ball match on Saturday.

It was only when the evening of the junior exercises and prize contest came around that Jeff began fairly to realize how much he had given up. It would have been glorious to carry off the honors of the occasion before all those people.

But the Boys' Club, with the widening interests and opportunities that the Settlement opened to him, had taken nearly all his spare time and left but little for special preparation. He did his best, but the very afternoon that he had set apart for copying his paper a messenger came to summon him to the hospital. "Checksy" had been hurt in saving a little newsgirl, Dinny McCaughan's sister, from being run over, and wanted to see him. As for practice in the delivery of his oration, there was absolutely no time for it.

When his turn came on the programme, Jeff took his place on the platform with painful misgiving. Consciousness of his insufficient preparation made him awkward and embarrassed at the beginning, but in a moment or two the absorbing interest of his theme again took possession of him. With boyish earnestness, as if talking directly to the audience, he told of what he had seen in the east end of the city and the conclusions he had drawn regarding the rights and duties of the younger generation of citizens. It was far from being a model prize oration, but the people became interested. The story of "Checksy's" chivalry brought forth a round of applause for the little hero, while more than one dainty handkerchief stole furtively into sight. When Jeff sat down he knew at least that his effort had not been a total failure.

Donald took the prize. He had worked with diligence and enthusiasm, and his essay, delivered with force and spirit, was not unfairly judged the best.

But Jeff did not envy him. At the close of the exercises, when he was congratulating Don on his success, a gentleman came toward him.

Jeff knew him by sight. It was Mr. Dalton, the most famous and successful advocate in the State, and the man whose character and career had long been the model upon which Jeff's own ambitions were formed; and this great man was actually speaking to him.

"You did well, sir," said Mr. Dalton, cordially. "The subject is an important one; and I am glad to see a young fellow take an interest in it." Then, in the most genial and friendly way, he asked a question or two about Jeff's plans and purposes and gave him a few words of encouragement that made Jeff tingle with pleasure.

"The boy has the makings of a splendid advocate in him, if I am any judge," he said to the principal, a few minutes later. "I would rather have a hand in the career of such a lad than win the Besson case."

May was standing near, so near that she could not help hearing it all. She was radiant with delight.

"O, Jeff, you splendid fellow!" she said, eagerly, hastening to tell what she had heard. "I am so proud and thankful. It is better than the prize."

And Jeff thought so, too.—Mary S. Daniels, in Classmate.

The person who is true to God does not fear the scrutiny of the world.—Selected.

Life's shadows are not long. The life of eternity has no end.—Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JULY 5, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

THE GOSPEL IS GOD'S POWER TO SAVE.

When the inspired apostle said of the gospel that "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," he spoke a truth that is in reality an end to all controversy; and, that being true, no man need try to bring anything else to take its place, for nothing else can possibly do so. It is worthy of note that even the gospel has no power to save those that will not believe it, for Jesus says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." When he says "to every one that believeth," the word "believeth" includes all that is required to be done in order to reach the promise of pardon, if you have reference to an alien; but if you have reference to eternal life to the Christian, then he must be faithful in his service to God to the end of life before he can have the promise of everlasting life. When the above passage, therefore, is applied to the alien sinner, the word "believeth" includes not only faith, but repentance and baptism, for Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." No sinner can be scripturally baptized till he repents. Any sinner, therefore, that expects to be saved without faith, repentance, and baptism will find, when perhaps too late for recovery, that he has been following man's wisdom, instead of God's word.

The gospel is not a power to save men just any way; it only promises to save the obedient. An impenitent sinner, therefore, cannot be saved, because God commands all men, everywhere, to repent. Jesus says, in case they refuse: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Neither can an unfaithful child of God be saved, for only those that hold out to the end in the service of God have the promise of eternal life. Hence, the apostle Paul says of Jesus that when he is revealed from heaven it will be "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Thess. 1: 8.) This takes in the whole life from the time a man begins his obedience to God till his life on earth is ended. Nothing, therefore, can be sufficient for man's salvation except that which God has ordained in the gospel plan of salvation. The sinner must become a Christian as the gospel directs, and the Christian must live as the gospel directs, or there is no promise of salvation in either case.

Men may get up what they choose in place of these things, but there is no power in them to save. They may say as much as they please that baptism is a nonessential, yet every time they look at the commission they will hear Jesus say, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," while not one time does he or the apostles say you can be saved as well without baptism as with it. This is only what men say. Men may say as often as they please that it does not matter whether you are immersed or have the water sprinkled or poured upon you, yet Jesus was down in the water when he was baptized and then came up out of the water. Paul also represents baptism as a burial more than once, and these things will be standing on record at the last day; and all will have to be judged by what God says, and not by what men say. Men may pray God with all the earnestness of their souls to pardon sinners before baptism, but there is not the shadow of a promise in the word of God that it will be done; for it is not he that says, "Lord, Lord," or for whom others say, "Lord, Lord," that will enter the kingdom of heaven, "but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." There is, therefore, no possible safety to man to risk anything else. Men may think and say as much as they please that if a man does what he thinks is right, he will be saved, yet the word of God will still be ringing through the ages: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Awful is the doom that hangs over the man that adds to or takes from the word of God and thus leads men away from it! If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch, and there will certainly be an immense falling of such at the last day. Neither is it proper to use any sort of means to induce men to become Christians that in any way overshadows the gospel or in any way sets aside the true motives of the gospel that should always be the prompting principle in leading men to obey. Any preacher that puts anything whatever between the sinner and the gospel of Christ and the motives God has placed before him to lead him to obey it becomes a hindrance to the gospel and to the salvation of souls. If he draws simply on the passions or sympathies of the sinner so that he is moved almost or entirely by emotion, it is doubtful if he is benefited by such action when he takes the step; for even if he does the things the gospel requires, he did not appreciate the gospel nor its motives, and will likely be carried away from it by some counter emotion. When a man obeys the gospel for the sake of obeying and honoring God, and because he realizes that nothing short of obeying God will save him, then he will be more likely to stick to it, and make a faithful servant of God. The best preachers on earth to-day are those who in the Spirit of Christ and through love to God present in the plainest possible way the gospel of Christ just as it stands revealed in the New Testament and rely upon it and its motives to move them to obey it.

When churches go to work to attract sinners by some external display—such as costly, attractive houses of worship, organs, choirs, fashionable music, and such like things—they generally fail in their desired end, and make themselves guilty before God in the effort. Those that think they will reach sinners better by building up large, wealthy, and popular congregations find in the end they were mistaken. A number of small, earnest congregations that will be loyal and faithful to the word of God will do immensely more good in converting and saving souls than one large, popular congregation could do. Besides, these wealthy, large, and popular congregations generally side track before they run long; and if they do not, they become formal, inactive, almost fossilized, and only influence a small circle of people. Small congregations have nothing to depend upon but the truth and their work in harmony with the truth and the Lord's blessings through the truth for their success. A very much larger proportion of the members of small congregations become earnest workers in the church than they would if they were thrown together in one large one; yet old congregations generally oppose the establishment of new ones, because they say it will weaken them. I know many instances, both in cities and in the country, where new congregations have been started near old ones, and although they were opposed in the effort, it was found after a while that the new, small ones were doing twice the work, in proportion to their number and strength, that the mother church was doing. The success of churches depends upon individual effort, and not upon large numbers and claim of strength through numbers. The more localities these members work in, the more people they will reach, and the better and more zealous they will be themselves, and the more they will depend upon the gospel for success. There are various things that justify these multiplying efforts. These old congregations may introduce innovations and force them in against the convictions of a number of the members; and it is a principle that no child of God is bound to remain where he has to acquiesce in and partake of things that he conscientiously believes to be contrary to the word of God. In all such cases it is far better for the loyal members to begin to meet and worship somewhere else, where they can do all things as the word of God directs; and at the same time it is their duty to interest and convert others to Christ, if they can, and thus enlarge the number of the saved. In this way many new congregations have sprung up.

People may live some distance away from the old congregation and the roads may be bad or waters in the way, so they cannot always attend, if they desired it ever so much. At the same time, people may live in the neighborhood of these members who seldom or never go to meeting, and who might be benefited by having meetings and preaching close to them. Then it would be the duty of such members, if possible, to teach their neighbors the way of salvation by having the gospel preached to them. If in this way they can enlist some of their neighbors until they have enough to carry on the regular service of God, it is their duty to do so.

There may be cases in which the leading members of old congregations conduct themselves and run things in a way that is detrimental to the cause of truth, and yet it may be impossible, under the circumstances, for others to correct the defects. Then, if circumstances and all the surroundings seem to plainly indicate to the members that are truly loyal that they could do much greater good to start up at another place, where they will be untrammelled by these opposing influences and have an opening to do good for others also, it would be right to make the effort. But the one sole desire to honor God and to follow his word should be the prompting principle in all such cases. Personal feeling should never enter into the account, and no separation should ever be made merely on personal differences or animosities; new congregations started merely on such grounds would hardly prosper; but when the work and influence of loyal, good members is counteracted by leading men, with no means or ability to correct the trouble, and they see their way clear to meet where they will be free from such hindrances, it is certainly their duty to do so.

Finally, I do not know a large and wealthy congregation that is doing anything like the amount of work that their numbers and ability would enable them to do. The word of God does not encourage any large concentrations of men, money, and worldly popularity of any sort whatever. The nearer we can get to an individual basis, the more work will be done and the greater the amount of good. A number of small congregations in a given locality approach much nearer the individual principle of work than the large, popular ones. In these small congregations they are much more likely to trust alone to the pure gospel of Christ, the word of God, to move people than large and fashionable ones. When the disciples were scattered from Jerusalem and went everywhere preaching the word, there was certainly more in it than merely the wickedness of their persecutors. An amount of good was done as the result, incalculably greater than could have been done by all remaining in Jerusalem. Christians should work for the greatest amount of good and use only the gospel, the truth of God's word, as the means of accomplishing it. E. G. S.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

The yearbook of the Congregational Church is out, and furnishes some interesting facts. The entire membership of the denomination is 629,874. There are 5,604 churches, with 5,614 ministers. The Sunday school membership is 682,907. The Young People's Societies number 3,696, with a membership of 191,753. The benevolent contributions make a total of $2,110,413, while the home expenses are $7,023,124. Home missions lead, with $477,852; foreign missions come next, $445,508; the Education Society, $193,376; American Missionary Association, $141,022. The interest, however, attaches less to the absolute figures than to the comparisons, indicating the changes that have taken place and the features that make up these figures. The church membership shows an increase of 1,640 during the year, or a trifle over one-quarter of one per cent. In thirty-one States there was a gain of 4,088, but in nineteen States there was a loss of 2,448. If we examine the different States, we find that the heaviest loss was in Massachusetts—578. Then come Connecticut, 264; Maine, 236; New Hampshire, 174; Vermont, 82; Rhode Island alone of the New England States showing a gain—56. The largest gain was in Wisconsin—908; then come Colorado, 366; Illinois, 309; Ohio, Minnesota, Michigan, and others. Of the 5,614 ministers, 1,559 are without charge, leaving 3,655 to care for the churches, of which 1,011 are not supplied, while 361 are cared for by licentiate. In the Indian Territory the four churches are all vacant. The largest number of vacant churches is in Michigan—108, almost one in three. Massachusetts has the smallest proportional number of vacant churches—58 out of 60. The net gain in the Sunday school membership only 294, twenty-seven States showing a gain and twenty-four showing a loss. The benevolent contributions show a gain of $217,494, thirty States increasing their donations and twenty decreasing them. The record of ministers shows a gain of twenty-five.

According to that rate of increase it would take the Congregationalists four hundred years to double their numbers. The Congregationalists are the Puritans, who once constituted the citizenship of New England. They embody the wealth and learning of Boston and New England. It will be noted there are more preachers than churches. These are all well educated and trained preachers. But the fact that the preachers build up no churches, but minister to one alone, shows personally a lack of the missionary spirit. The immense amount of money given, with the small results, shows the rule is to pay others to work, and do not much personal service in the church.

The Congregationalists have been the originators of all the societies and organizations to help the church in its work, and New England has been the birthplace of the Young Men's Christian Association, Christian Endeavor, and other societies to help the church. All these human equipments and these immense sums of money fail to build up and multiply the churches. Money and human organizations in religion cannot give life and activity to the churches. They destroy personal zeal and activity.

Massachusetts, with Boston the home of Father Clark and of all the human organizations for religious service, is losing ground, and itself becoming missionary ground. These facts emphasize the truth that money and organizations cannot convert the world. They cannot do it because they drive out and destroy the true spirit of personal devotion and zeal which alone can save sinners. They wean men from the church of God and his appointments, which alone can excite and keep alive the Spirit of Christ. They exemplify the truth, too, that the rich cannot convert the world. God did not intrust them with this work. Riches unfit them for the work. He committed the work to the poor. They alone can do it. Any provision that looks to the work being done by the rich and by riches will fail. Money and donations have a part to perform in the salvation of the world, but the chief end in the giving is to save the giver. A man with money cannot be saved without giving his money; but God can save the world without money. Those who have money should give it to save themselves, not to help God. D. L.

IS THE BODY OR THE SPIRIT THE MAN?

Brother Lipscomb: If the spirit of the child is born of the spirit of the father and mother, as the fleshly part of the child is, by what right is the infant an heir of the kingdom of heaven until it has been regenerated by the Spirit of God? Seeing many children are born of unconverted parents, and must of necessity inherit unregenerate spirits, as you say, "like begets its like." What do you mean by the human spirit being made a new spirit, or soul? Is human spirit mortal or immortal? Who gave it, God or man? If man imparts spirit to his own natural offspring, by what law of reproduction is mankind the offspring of God? You say: "Man is a spirit, and Adam was a living soul." Do you intend to convey the idea that all men living in the fleshly body are not living souls in the same sense that Adam was when God created him and pronounced him such? Brother Lipscomb, please answer these questions for me, and do not say "she does not seek to know what the Bible teaches, but has accepted a theory," etc. I have been a constant reader of the Gospel Advocate for thirty years, and have found it more in harmony with the word of truth than any paper I have ever read; but I find some things written there which I cannot harmonize with the teaching of the inspired volume, and nothing prompts me to ask these questions but a desire to see the true light dispelling the darkness from the nations.

Glass, Tenn.

NANNIE TIMMONS.

If I should see our sister ignore a dozen passages of scripture that teach a truth and seek out one that may be twisted into a different meaning, I certainly think, if I loved her as a sister, I would warn her that she was not using the Scriptures to find what they teach, but to prove a preconceived theory. We often deceive ourselves as to what we do.

The Bible says God created the herbs and trees each to bear fruit after his kind, and the living creatures each after his kind; and then "God created man in his own image. . . . And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it." This meant he was to multiply beings like themselves; and whatever parts and faculties the parents have are transmitted to the child. If the parents have souls, or spirits, above that of beasts, the children are begotten with the same spirits, or souls. It would not be a multiplication of men and women if this were not so. The child is born, not with the faculties of the brute, the pig or the cattle, but with those of its parents. The child inherits from its parents a mental and spiritual likeness, as well as a bodily likeness.

The souls, or spirits, of the first parents were not guilty or under condemnation until they sinned; neither are those of the children. The soul of the child, like those of the first parents, is overcome and brought in bondage of the flesh. "For the flesh . . . and the Spirit . . . are contrary the one to the other." So the spirit is overcome by the flesh, is in a body of death, from which it then must be delivered in order that it may be saved. "What the law [of Moses] could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned [or overcame] sin in the flesh." The belief of the gospel of the Son of God renews this spirit in man that has been defiled by sin, and makes it a new heart and a new spirit. Ezekiel says: "I will put a new spirit within you" (Ezek. 11: 19; 36: 26); "And make you a new heart and a new spirit." (Ezek. 18: 31.) Jesus says: "Except a man be born again, . . . be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3-5.) The word of God, the seed of the kingdom, is received into the heart of man, and so strengthens it as to transform it from a soul dominated by the flesh into a soul led by the Spirit of God. God gives the human spirit just as he gives the human life and the human body through the father and mother; he gives the divine Spirit through the word in which he dwells. So the heart that hears the word, and cherishes it, brings forth fruit, "some a hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold." So the human spirit comes from God through the parents. The Bible says Adam was the son of God. Perhaps he became such by God breathing into him the breath of life by which he became a living soul. He forfeited the rights of sonship through sin. His children do the same. As Adam polluted his life and cut himself off from the blessing of immortality through sin, his children do like him. They are born sinless beings. As such they are entitled to all the privileges of spiritual life. They inherit mortal bodies from Adam. They forfeit spiritual life, as he did, through sin. All sin, and all who sin need the atoning blood of Jesus to save them. This blood is appropriated through walking "in the light, as he is in the light." (1 John 1: 7.) Eternal existence is not immortality. The devil will exist forever, but God only hath immortality. Man will exist forever, but he seeks for immortality by well-doing.

The Gospel Advocate, no doubt, errs sometimes; it claims no exemption from this; but sometimes the error is in the standpoint of the reader. Many confound eternal existence with immortality. Another error I was trying to correct and guard against is, they make the material body the man and the spirit, or soul, an appurtenance or faculty of the body. The Bible clearly makes the spirit, or soul, the man, the part that lives and endures, while the body is but its temporary home in which the real man dwells. When the man dies, the body is buried and molds into dust; the man is carried to Abraham's bosom or is found in hell. To mistake the nature, the essential being of man, and to make him simply a material animal, is an error, surpassed only by mistaking who God is, and what his character. God is a Spirit, and only spiritual beings who serve him in spirit and truth can dwell with him. As the outer man decays, the inner man is renewed day by day. The man which is seen is temporal; the man which is unseen is eternal. One of the old philosophers—Plato, I believe it was—trying to teach this truth to his pupils, took a hammer, struck a fragile piece of ware, and broke it in many pieces. He asked:

"Who did that?" The answer was: "You did it." "What office did the hammer serve?" The reply was: "It was the instrument you used in breaking it." He then took a piece of the same substance, struck it with his fist, and broke it. He asked: "Who did that?" The answer again was: "You did it." "What office did the fist perform?" Then the answer was: "Your fist was the instrument you used." This brought out the thought that there is an internal man that directs and uses the hand, the foot, the eye, the ear, and all the organs of the body as material instruments for the use of the man.

After a while the internal man will have accomplished its work on earth, and, like the butterfly, it will lay aside the external shell which henceforward would be a hindrance, and not a help. The spirit, freed from its earthly encumbrances, enters a new and higher stage of existence. It is henceforth a spirit without flesh and blood or body. D. L.

Brother Lipscomb: Please answer the following questions:

1. Was Saul of Tarsus an inspired and chosen apostle of Christ before he was a Christian?
2. Was he a Christian before Ananias immersed him?
3. Was Saul a member of the body of Christ before he was an apostle?
4. Was he a member of that body before Ananias immersed him?
5. Is an individual a child of God as soon as he believes Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of the living God?

JEAN TEREVE.

1. Paul was called to be an apostle before his baptism or before he believed in Christ. God saw his sincerity, his fidelity to his convictions, and his earnestness and willingness to suffer for what he believed to be right; so he chose him and sent the gospel to him, that he might believe and become a child of God. (See Acts 9: 15; 26: 16-18; Gal. 1: 15.) But he was not a believer, but, as he says, was the chief of sinners. (1 Tim. 1: 15.)

2. He was a believer in Christ, and for three days he was so sorrowful over his sinful course that he neither ate nor drank for three days. When Ananias came to him and found him believing in Christ and penitent of his sins, he asked him: "Why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) He was not a Christian while in his sins. No one after the resurrection of Christ was recognized as a Christian until he had believed in Christ, repented of his sins, and had been baptized into Christ.

3. He was a member of the body of Christ from the time he was baptized into Christ. He at once began to teach the gospel of Christ. Ten years afterwards at Antioch he was mentioned among the prophets and teachers. (Acts 13: 1.) He had the spiritual gift that inspired him to teach, but was not a fully inspired apostle until at this time or later. Paul was called to be an apostle, but was not at once intrusted with the full apostolic measure of the Spirit, but was intrusted with smaller measures at first. When he had in the use of these proved his worthiness, he was intrusted with the highest apostolic measure of the Spirit.

4, 5. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 26, 27.) Faith makes a man a child of God by leading him to be baptized into Christ and so put him on. Jesus said: "He that believeth on me hath eternal life." The Holy Spirit says: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." (Rom. 5: 1.) But in Gal. 3: 26, 27, he tells how and when faith makes a man a child of God. Faith leads one to be baptized into Christ, and so he puts on Christ. So with this explanation of how faith makes a man a child of God, we know that to be justified by faith and to be baptized into Christ is one and the same thing. When a man believes, he has received the word of God into the heart, but the seed must sprout and produce life by obedience before he is recognized as a Christian. Jesus was not recognized as the Son of God until he had fulfilled the righteousness of God by being baptized. This was an example that seems to have been followed. No one in the days of the apostles was recognized as a child of God until he had put on Christ by being baptized into him. D. L.

He who greets life with a purpose will leave it with a palm.—Selected.

My Purpose.

It is not to canvass the churches for money. Though I have stated this before, yet the general impression seems to be that my chief purpose in making this tour of the churches is to collect money for the work in Japan. I have not at any time since entering upon the work there made money the burden of my labors, and yet we have lacked nothing. So far as I can see, there is no urgency demanding that I make all this tour among the churches just to collect money. I have in some instances where the brethren were acquainted with certain missionaries encouraged their liberality by way of contributions to them; but this was incidental.

So far as my own labors are concerned, I cannot feel the necessity for making appeals for money. Have we not been supported these eight years? We have a sufficiency for our daily needs here. The work we left in Japan, which is now being carried forward by Brother Bishop till our return, is not suffering for money to support it, I think. Our home, being in a favorable locality for that purpose, rents for twenty-five dollars per month. Of course it takes some money to keep up taxes and repairs, but there is enough left above such expenses to keep up the church and school expenses and still have some left to pay on what remains behind on the home. The church and school expenses together amount to about twelve dollars per month. Sometimes we get out of means and feel that we are in need, but I believe the greatest need at such times is the need of a closer walk with God, and not to turn beggar among the churches.

Such a course is an injury both to oneself and the churches of God. They get tired of being begged and would rather such men would not come into their midst than otherwise. Everywhere I go they tell me this has been the custom of missionaries when visiting them, and I feel that in some instances the churches would act differently were it not that they think I am also coming to beg for a collection. Let me mention an instance which, if not true in that particular case, yet serves to illustrate the point, and is often true: A congregation has just had a protracted meeting which cost them pretty heavily. On the heels of this they must pay for new seats, and then something to the famine sufferers in India; then come some charities for some of their own members. Now comes Brother McCaleb's appointment, and we are just not able to "help" him any at this time; and since, of course, that is what he wants, it will be a trip for nothing, and we will just send him word he need not come.

In this money-loving age it is not an easy thing to believe one when he says that money is not his object, and really it is not a very easy thing to tell the truth and say it; but one ought to be able to tell the truth and yet say he is not seeking money. In the face of all the modern work and worry for money to carry on various missionary enterprises, let us all turn and read Matt. 6: 30-34, and see how refreshing it is. Then let us turn and read Matt. 9: 38, and see what Jesus taught his disciples to pray concerning missionary work: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." The prayer is for laborers, and this is the great need of the hour. The Lord will not send a laborer into his harvest and let him starve. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his right-

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness, and flavor noticed in the finest cake, short cake, biscuit, rolls, crusts, etc., which expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

Made from pure, grape cream of tartar.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

eousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

There are comparatively few people that have really given themselves to God. They try to substitute and condone for this by giving a little money they can spare, and missionaries, evangelists, and preachers make too much of the money question in a way. Not that they ought not to be paid or neglected, but if a brother feels that he can do his duty in every department of Christian living and keep his money, I do not want him to give it to me just because he thinks I may be in need. Giving is a Christian duty just as much as telling the truth, visiting the sick, or being honest, and Christians should be just as constant and diligent in the one as the other. I cannot go around and plead with the people to tell the truth, be honest and so on, to assist me, nor can I ask the churches to give because they think it may help me or others. The first duty of every Christian is to offer himself unreservedly to God, and then all that is best for him will be given.

If I can induce the churches to cease to look at missionary work as a thing afar off and make it a part of their own Christian life and activity, I will feel that a good work has been done; but if they continue to look at it as an outside matter and that what they do in mission work is just that much extra which they could omit and yet get to heaven, I will feel that my labors have been without effect. The time has come when the churches must either go forward or go backward and die. J. M. M'CALEB.

For Nervous Exhaustion, Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. A. L. Turner, Bloomsburg Sanitarium, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "As an adjunct to the recuperative powers of the nervous system, I know of nothing equal to it."

We want the Gospel Advocate to go into every home in the country. We are endeavoring to make it what it should be as a religious journal and teacher. We will send it one month free to addresses furnished us of those who are nonsubscribers, and discontinue at the end of the month to all who do not become regular subscribers during the time.

Send us your orders for nicely engraved cards, invitations, etc.

The Mormon-Christian War.

The following from Brother C. S. Towne, Cobden, Ill., is worth a second reading and much thought. The "Book of Mormon" I sent him was a reprint of the Palmyra edition, the first edition published. I have about one dozen more copies of that rare and valuable book on hand. First come, first served. Here is Brother Towne's letter:

"Brother Neal: I received the 'Book of Mormon' which you sent me in due time, but the 'Two Thousand Changes of the Book of Mormon' has never come, and that is what I specially want. I have read the book twice and was surprised to find that it pointedly condemned polygamy, and also surprised to find no teaching of any distinctive Mormon doctrines, such as I read of elsewhere. After reading it, I am not at all surprised that sectarian preachers cannot meet the Mormon elders. Taking the 'Book of Mormon' as the objective point of attack, the same evidence and argument that will condemn a Mormon will equally condemn every sectarian organization in point of doctrine. The more I study the whole subject, the more firmly I am convinced that the Protestant religion of Christendom is a false religion—a counterfeit of the apostolic Christian religion. It is idle for these organizations to claim the Christian name, and a foolish weakness in us to allow that claim, as so many among us do. Blood will tell, and there is a strain of plebeian, alien blood, descending from the apostate mother, running throughout the veins of all these religious bodies, proving them lineal descendants of the papacy. The fact of the protest against some of the corruptions of the papacy is in itself no proof that they are not her children. There is a broad basis of human doctrines everywhere underlying all these organizations which continually antagonizes the true doctrine of the apostolic Christianity. I still think I shall go to Tennessee before long."

Brother A. L. DeArmond, Otto, Ark., "a reader of the dear old Gospel Advocate," and specially interested in the articles on the Mormon-Christian war, wants more and more along that line. He lives "near a Mormon State, and meets them often." He makes a "one-dollar pledge," and sends for tracts.

Brother J. E. Pearson, of Spencer, Tenn., takes the right course. He says: "I see in the Gospel Advocate of May 24, 1900, that you propose republishing an exposé of Mormonism in its early days, if you can get the proper support. I have consulted with some of our brethren here and we agree to take as many as five copies at one dollar each. You may consider this a pledge, if the book is out in a reasonable time."

This is the way to go at it. Two hundred more like pledges would enable me to get out a large edition and pay for the plates. Then in the future the cost would be simply press-work and paper. I will get the edition out in cheapest form, tough Manila binding. To stimulate a rapid response I will give two copies to each one pledging and paying, when called upon, one dollar cash, or I will send the donor one copy and send free another copy to some Mormon in Utah. The exposé is a war weapon. I have heard that there are only four copies of the book known to be in existence. In any event, I have a copy, whether it is one of four or all by itself. I got it from the daughter of Mr. Howe, the publisher.

The Gospel Advocate readers alone ought to send in pledges enough in two weeks to enable me to put this book in the printer's hands.

Grayson, Ky. R. B. NEAL.

Roanoke College.

The forty-seventh year of Roanoke College was a successful one. Last year students from ten Southern and eight Northern States, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Japan, and Korea attended Roanoke. The college has a curriculum with eleven studies, well adapted to suit the wants of all students. The instruction is thorough and the standard high. The faculty is composed of men of liberal scholarship and successful experience. Few institutions offer so much at so little expense. The Roanoke Valley is famous for its beautiful mountain scenery and healthful climate. The moral, social, and religious advantages of Salem are unsurpassed. The catalogue of sixty-two pages shows that Roanoke is abreast of the times in its facilities and methods. For a copy of the catalogue, with the June Collegian, address the president, Dr. Julius D. Dreher, Salem, Va.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

POSITIONS GUARANTEED under reasonable conditions; car fare paid; board, $10-$11; catalog free; no vacation. DRAUGHON'S PRACTICAL BUS. St. Louis; Nashville, Tenn.; Savannah, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Galveston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La. Indorsed by merchants and bankers. Best patronized in South. Book-keeping, shorthand, etc., taught by mail. Begin any time. Address (at either place) Draughon's College.

Saving the Lost.

A common interest in humanity would of itself tell us that we ought to do something for those who are without the special benefits of the gospel; but the duty to evangelize the world is put on higher grounds than a common humanity by the consideration of the relation that the saved sustain to the Christ. Paul, the man whose nature was keyed to the divine, was quick to perceive the twofold relation of Christians to both God and the lost, and was equally honest to confess the obligation to serve Christ in saving the lost. He says that he is "debtor to all men." This indebtedness was not owing to what he had received of man, but was due to what he had received of the Christ. To receive of God the full blessings of the gospel is to accept the obligation to extend it to others, unless it is meant for the good that God does for the individual to be lavished upon the recipient. This is true so far as the salvation of the receiver from all sin is concerned, but that is not the full extent of the blessings of personal salvation.

It is no small part of the plan of him who does all things after the counsel of his own wisdom to extend his blessings to the remotest circumference of lost humanity through the avenue of saved human agencies. Destroy all forms of vegetable life and all vegetation will cease. God could create another seed of each species of the vegetable, but he would not. Leave a helpless infant where no human being will ever find it and it will inevitably perish. Destroy the gospel, the church, and the Christian, with all the other influences and agencies through which God works, and there will be no more Christians while the world stands. These facts ought to impress upon us the imperative obligations to do our part in evangelizing the world.

The thought of our personal responsibility in the matter of saving souls, if duly apprehended in all of its magnitude, will haunt us with vivid visions of the agony of the lost in hell. The condition of men out of Christ is so appalling to me that I cannot rest with a feeling of composure and satisfaction in the attainments of this life. The assurance of my own salvation enhances my anxiety for that of others. I love to tell sinners of the Christ, the enormity of sin, and an open heaven; but I am frank to confess that that alone does not sever home associations and drive me into the world of sinners. Somehow I cannot find any satisfaction in staying at home in view of the inevitable doom of the world of sinners. I think I have something of the symptoms of those who hunger and thirst for the salvation of men. We ought to feel grieved when we see "sinners transgress the law" of God, and that other scripture ought to be true of every Christian: "The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me." I often think: O, if I could just keep my thoughts at home with my family, with the assurance of a family title to "mansions in the skies." I could enjoy so much more of the good things of this life! But somehow my thoughts will go far beyond the circle of my own family, personal acquaintances, and friends, and my heart goes with my thoughts to weep with those that weep and to mourn with those who are sad. I have tried to sound the depths of my own heart in this matter as perhaps in no other particular phase of my checkered life in order to ascertain my own motives in preaching the gospel. The conviction has fastened itself on my mind that I must do all that I can consistently with the obligation to my family to save men from sin and hell. I do not think that I am actuated by selfish motives in going to the world with the message of Jesus, but that is just what all would expect me to say in this connection, and what all would say.

Men tax their ingenuity to the utmost extent in vindication of their righteous motives in preaching the gospel of him who never took enough money from sinners to buy a home. Such arguments as this are pressed into the service of men who make the message of Jesus to sinners involved in helpless ruin a profession to prove their fellowship with the Christ in his suffering for the redemption of humanity. That we are not preaching for the money is apparent upon a little reflection. We would rather lose our salary and save the people than to save our salary and lose the people. Is that the best vindication of preaching the gospel to sinners? It would require the worst man living to say the converse of that. The men engaged in selling liquor, as a rule, could say that they would rather the whisky would do their patrons good than harm, but what they want is the money. So it is with many that preach the gospel, they would rather do good and save men; but in the last analysis money is what they want, and men will be rewarded by the motive that prompts them to action, not by what they would rather not do.

No one, perhaps, deploras the mistakes and sins of his past life more than I do, but as dark as the record of personal sin may be—and we cannot paint it too dark when serving as the background of what God is in character and requires of us in life—that is not what gives me the most concern. It is not what I have done, but what I have not done, that fills my soul with misgivings and evil fore-

The Bridal Feast

Is not infrequently followed by a long, lenten period of enforced fasting and fleshly mortification. The cheek grows hollow, the eyes are dull and deep ringed, and the step is slow and languid. There is an "all dragged-out feeling" which makes life an utter burden. The great functional changes which follow marriage are not usually anticipated, or the wife suffering might be avoided.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best friend of weak and sickly women. It cures the womanly diseases that rob the eye of brightness and the step of lightness. It tones up the system and establishes the womanly organism on a basis of sound health.

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotics. Accept no substitute. There is no other medicine "just as good" for weak and sickly women.

"I had been a great sufferer from female weakness for about two years," writes Mrs. Emma Richardson, of Goss, Wayne Co., Ky. "Could not do my work part of the time. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and felt as well as I ever did."

Young married women will find a lasting friend in Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser. It contains 1008 pages and is sent free (in paper cover), on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Cloth binding, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

bodings. In the account rendered in the end of time, the grounds of approbation and condemnation are, on the one hand, the good things done; and on the other, the good things not done. The wicked things that we have done do not appear in Christ's picture of the judgment. It would appear from this mention of the good neglected and the wickedness omitted that refusal to do what Christ has commanded is a greater sin than the worst forms of doing evil. Jesus said of the Jews who turned a deaf ear to his teaching: "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin." It is not what we do before we have the light that God looks at, but what we refuse to do after we receive the light. "If we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth [light], there remaineth no more a sacrifice for sins." Coal City, Ind. W. J. BROWN.

Orders have been issued by Quarantine Health Officer Kinyoun, of San Francisco, to search all east-bound trains for passengers from San Francisco at State lines. These are to be required to show certificates signed by United States Marine Hospital officers. In the event of the failure to produce this document they are to be turned back. Dr. C. A. McQuestin, government sanitary inspector, has gone to Truckee, Cal., under instructions to allow no passengers from San Francisco traveling East to pass that station without presenting a clean certificate of health. Two United States officers will be at Truckee to assist in carrying out the orders.

1850 1900
John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF
SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.
TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.
HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES.
Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

BLYMYER BELL UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
BCHURCH BELLS. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY

F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market Street,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

FITS STOPPED FREE Permanently Cured by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Pain after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatment and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE to Fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery. Permanent Cure, not on temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Rheumatism, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion. DR. H. H. KLINE, Ltd., 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Founded 1872.

FREE BLOOD CURE.

An Offer Proving Faith to Sufferers.

Ulcers, cancers, eating sores, painful swellings, effects of blood poison, and persistent eruptions that refuse to heal under ordinary treatment are quickly cured by B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm). Is your blood thin? Are you pale? All run down? Have you eczema? Pimples? Blotches and bumps? Skin or scalp humors? Boils? Eruptions? Skin itching and swollen? Aching bones? Rheumatism? Scrofula? Catarrh? Then you need B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), because it drains from the blood and entire system all the poisons and humors which cause all these troubles, and, the cause being removed, a permanent cure follows. All the sores heal and the blood is made pure and rich. B. B. B. is for sale by druggists at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. To prove our faith in B. B. B., we will give a trial bottle free to sufferers, so they may test the remedy at our expense. For trial bottle, address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe trouble and free personal medical advice will be given. Do not despair, as B. B. B. cures where all else fails. We have over three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by B. B. B.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING, COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School, ROUTE NO. 1, NASHVILLE, TENN.

CAPABLE WOMAN WANTED for a permanent position, $50 per month and all expenses. Experience unnecessary. CLARK & CO., 234 S. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE
Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197
Chicago, Illinois

General News.

While the British forces meet with some severe fighting in the Transvaal, they are gradually taking possession of the country.

The steamship Quito, laden with two hundred thousand bushels of American corn, sent by the Famine Relief Committee, of New York, arrived safely at Bombay.

The first new Tennessee wheat was brought into Union City by W. Z. Massengill, and sold to the Union City Rolling Mills. It was third grade, and brought sixty cents a bushel.

The world's supply of wool seems to be declining under the invasion of cotton. Last year the supply from Australia fell off three hundred thousand bales from the previous year.

The conference of Southern Manufacturing Confectioners, recently held in Montgomery, Ala., decided to advance the price of candies to meet the advance in sugar and glucose.

The net earnings of the Tennessee State prison for the half year amounted to the sum of $118,832.08. Every convict averaged his or her forty-six and one-third cents per day profit to the State.

A passenger train on the Chicago and Northwestern Road, loaded with excursionists, collided with a freight train at Depere, Wis. Eight persons were killed, one is missing, and thirty-four were injured.

The Department of State is advised by Minister Powell, at Port Au Prince, that he has been informed that the Government of Hayti has adopted the gold standard and that the unit of value is the American gold dollar.

The unusually heavy rains that have been falling throughout Cuba have caused yellow fever in places where it has been unknown for several years. Fortunately, except at Santa Clara and Quemados, the United States troops have escaped.

Gen. Adna R. Chaffee has been appointed by the President to take command of the American troops in China. General Chaffee will sail from San Francisco on the steamer Grant, which will carry nine hundred soldiers. The Ninth Infantry has been ordered from Manila to China.

The Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon, of Kedelston, cables that frequent showers of rain have fallen in the Deccan and elsewhere, but that copious rains are wanted in order to enable the natives to engage in plowing and sowing the autumn crops. The famine situation is unaltered.

Oliver Dalrymple, the big wheat grower of North Dakota, writes of the wheat prospect: "Ten days ago I thought that one-third of the spring wheat crop had been destroyed by drought; I am now of the opinion that two-thirds of the crop is killed beyond redemption."

The weather in North Dakota was reported distressingly hot on June 25, 1900, registering 104 degrees in the shade. Crops are in a parched condition, indications pointing to a decrease of fifteen to twenty per cent since June 23. Hay that was selling at that time for $4.50 is now worth $16.

Two hundred and fifty Cuban teachers sailed on the McPherson from Manzanilla, bound for Boston. This is the first contingent of twenty-five hundred teachers from Cuban ports to Boston, where they are to receive a general course of instruction during the summer under the auspices of Harvard University.

The Prohibitionists held their National Convention at Chicago and nominated John G. Woolley, of Illinois, for President, and H. B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island, for Vice President. Resolutions severely condemning President McKinley and his Cabinet for maintaining the canteen at the army posts were passed.

Indians are making rapid strides in the paths of education. The Chickasaws have five colleges and the Creeks have ten colleges. The Choctaws have no colleges, but have one hundred and sixty common schools in which the higher branches are taught. The expenses of educating the Indians are being borne by the government.

The wheat crop in Manitoba is reported very much injured by drought. Of one million eight hundred thousand acres under wheat one million acres will never be cut. Rains cannot now change a stunted crop six to eight inches high and a small head into even a fair crop. The best authorities hope for seed and feed, but this is doubtful.

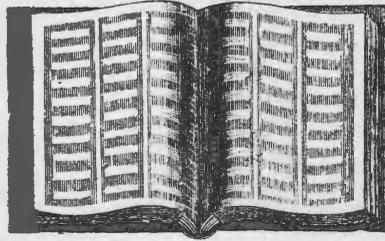

Bavaria boasts that it has the longest lightning conductor in the world. It rises some yards above the top of the meteorological station on the Zugspitze, the highest point in the German Empire, and runs down the side of the mountain to the bottom of the Hollenthal, where there is running water all the year round. The length of the rod is five and a half kilometers, nearly three and one-half miles.

On June 23 a passenger train on the Macon Branch of the Southern Railway ran into a washout one and a half miles north of McDonough, Ga., and was completely wrecked. The wreck caught fire and the entire train, with the exception of the sleeper, was destroyed. Every person on the train, except the occupants of the Pullman car, perished. Not a member of the train crew escaped. Thirty-five people in all were killed.

A special to the Chicago Tribune from Denver, Ida., gives an account of a destructive hailstorm which visited that section of Idaho. Wheat fields and orchards were destroyed and small pigs and chickens were killed by the hailstones. The hail was driven by a heavy windstorm with terrific force, and horses were knocked down. Damage to grain and fruit crops is estimated at $50,000. Reports from other points indicate much damage to grain.

An armed band of thirty-two men from South Dakota cut a channel through Hininger's Neck, in the Missouri River. The bend is twenty-five miles around and not more than a quarter of a mile across its neck. Residents of the bottoms say this will prevent the recurrence of the inundation of their lands. Another result is to throw thousands of acres of excellent farming land into South Dakota which has previously been a part of Nebraska.

A cyclone passed over Beaver County, O. T. Henry Bardwell, Steve Bird,

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

and Abe Weightman were killed and William Hamberger and Paul Rhodes were fatally injured. The storm swept the country for sixty miles. Thousands of cattle were stampeded and many killed and injured. Several houses were destroyed. The home of George Nebb, a ranchman, was carried two hundred yards, and several ranchmen who were taking refuge in the house were injured.

The reports of murder of missionaries and destruction of property by the "Boxers" in China have been much exaggerated. There is a widespread feeling of enmity toward foreigners. Some property of the missionaries and the foreign consulates have been destroyed. The Chinese are reported to have been supplying themselves with modern arms and preparing for a conflict. The Queen is suspected of having encouraged the war. The union of the forces of the other nations and their prompt action in marching to the scene of trouble seem to promise a termination of the difficulties. China disciplined in modern tactics and armed with modern arms would be a great power in the world.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow, who for the past five weeks has been in Havana investigating the Cuban postal service frauds and initiating reforms in the administration of the Cuban postal service, has returned to Washington. Concerning the reductions he had effected in the administration of postal affairs, he says: "The amount of money saved by the reduction in the salaries of employees and the abolition of unnecessary offices aggregates over $100,000, or about 38 per cent of the total. There will also be a considerable saving in the administrative branches of the service. The reductions contemplated will in no wise impair the efficiency of the postal service of the island."

Maj. H. C. Bate issued the following crop bulletin for the week ending on June 25, 1900: "Generally favorable weather prevailed during the early part of the week, and the work of plowing out the grassy crop of corn and cotton and of cutting wheat was pushed forward with vigor; but on June 22 heavy, damaging rains fell over the western half of the State, which not only stopped all outside work, but injured the growing crops to a very serious extent in many localities. In the eastern division and in the eastern portion of the middle division the rains were lighter, and the damage consisted mostly in delaying the progress of outdoor work. Wheat is nearly all in shock, and much loss by sprouting is imminent. Oats are improving and nearly ready for harvest. Upland corn and cotton are in fairly good condition, considering the amount of rain, but the lowland crops are practically ruined by the overflow and the impossibility of cultivation. Many fields will have to be abandoned to the weeds and grass. Tobacco is in a good state of growth, except where excessive rains have caused stalk rotting. Irish potatoes and gardens are doing well. Young clover and meadow grass are growing finely. Peanuts are suffering for want of cultivation. Fruit prospects are fine, except as to apples, which have mostly dropped off the trees, leaving a short and inferior crop. The blackberry crop is large and beginning to ripen."

B. Y. P. U. Convention, Cincinnati, O., July 12-15, 1900. Reduced Rates via Southern Railway.

On account of the Annual Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, to be held in Cincinnati, O., on July 12-15, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to Cincinnati and return at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold on July 10, 11, and 12, 1900, with final limit to return until July 18, 1900, and by depositing these tickets with joint agent at Cincinnati on or before July 14, 1900, and upon payment of a fee of fifty cents, the final limit may be extended until August 1, 1900. The schedules and sleeping car service afforded by the Southern Railway en route to Cincinnati are unexcelled. For further information, call on Southern Railway ticket agent.

FACTS ABOUT PAINT When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

$5.00 A DAY EASY FOR ALL WILLING TO WORK Gold, Silver, Nickel, Metal Plating. At home or traveling, taking orders, using and selling Frost Gray's Machines. Piston Wrenches, Jewelry, Tableware, Bicycles and all metal goods. No experience. Heavy plate. Modern methods. We do plating, manufacture outfits, all sizes. Guaranteed. Only outfit complete, all tools, lathes, materials, etc., ready for work. We teach you the art, furnish contracts and furnish FREE. Write today. Pamphlet, samples, etc., FREE. D. GRAY & CO., Plating Works, CINCINNATI, O.

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for

Refined Paraffine Wax

in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

MANNING.

Sister Mary J. Manning departed this life on May 9, 1900. She was born in Nacogdoches County, Tex., on April 10, 1852, and was forty-eight years, two months, and twenty-nine days old at the time of her death. She became obedient to the law of the Spirit and was baptized by John F. Brill, Christian evangelist, on July 13, 1887. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." Sister Manning leaves her companion in life, Brother R. S. Manning, Sr., and eleven children to mourn their loss; but they are assured that their loss is her eternal gain. She enjoyed the best of health up to sixteen months before her death. She bore her affliction calmly, and assured the family that she was ready to go whenever called for. J. H. MILLER.
Libby, Tex.

FRALEY.

Sister Rachel Elizabeth Fraley, who had for a long time lived with her son, her only child living, Brother J. D. Fraley, of Ladonia, Tex., departed this life on June 14, 1900, in the seventy-first year of her age, having been born on October 4, 1829. She was the sister of D. Sharp, Kendrick, Miss.; Ed. Sharp, Mount Calm, Tex.; Jennie Walker, Ladonia, Tex.; and Mary Fraley, Hamburg, Tenn. She married John L. Fraley on February 11, 1857, who died in prison, away from home, in 1862, in time of the Civil War. She had her troubles. When at the funeral of her eldest brother the sad news came that her husband was dead. Sister Fraley obeyed the gospel in the eighteenth year of her age, and ever lived a consistent Christian life. We sympathize with the many bereaved ones. H. L. BOOTH.
Commerce, Tex.

CLAYTON.

On the eve of April 6, 1900, that dread monster, death, came into the home of Brother Bruce and Sister Etna Clayton, and claimed for its victim Ozias, the precious little infant of Brother and Sister Clayton. Ozias was born on February 27, 1900, and lived just forty-one days. How sad it is to bid farewell to your sweet little babe, never again in time to behold its sweet face or press its precious lips with a mother's caressing kiss! But, again, with some reflection, parents and friends are made to rejoice when they think of the glorious saying of Jesus: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." Let the bereaved parents trust in God and follow our dear Savior, and let us all live Christian lives while we walk among men; then death will be to us as it was to your little babe—only a true friend, opening up to us the way to immortal glory. IRENE G. BURKE.
Blue Bank, Tenn.

ASKEW.

I feel to-day as I have never felt before. Sorrow fills me to overflowing. This world is less valuable to me. Heaven seems now a brighter place for me to strive for than it has at any other time in my life. God called my grandmother, Eliza Askew, away from the toils and cares of this world on Friday evening, June 15, 1900, to that home where only the faithful are permitted to go. She seemed to me to be the dearest friend on earth, and God only knows how very sad and lonely I am. However, God might have had a better use for her over where she has gone than he did for her services here in this dark, unpleasant home of the body. She was the comfort of my life, the stay of my father's home; beside her to me there was none other. For weeks and months she would travel with me, leaving her pleasant home to hear the word of God and to assist in saving wicked, rebellious sinners. She departed this life at the ripe age of seventy-eight years, having spent nearly fifty years in the glorious service of her Lord and Master. J. B. ASKEW.

Marietta, I. T.

ALLISON.

Sister Martha Allison, of Lebanon, Tenn., died on March 1, 1900. She was sixty-seven years of age, and had been in the service of God for forty years. She was a faithful and regular attendant upon the services of the church of Christ in Lebanon. I have known her and her sister for nearly twenty years. Many are the times I have spoken of their faithful attendance at church and service of God at home. They have had to struggle hard for a living, but by industry and economy they have succeeded. I never called to see them that they were not always busy at work, cheerful and contented, and therefore happy. They were truly "workers at home," neat and orderly. Our Sister Martha, with her sisters, manifested no spirit of pride or of jealousy. In her modest, humble way she lived free from envy, scorn, and covetousness in the service of the Master. We confidently believe she rests from her labors, and that her works follow her; that she sleeps in Jesus and that her loved ones sorrow not as the rest who have no hope. We sympathize with the bereaved in their loss of a true, devoted, and tried sister, but we also rejoice with them in the hope of the glory of God. The Christian's greatest triumph is over death at last through the Lord Jesus Christ. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." E. A. ELAM.

SMALLWOOD.

Sister Elizabeth Smallwood was born on September 27, 1859, and departed this life on April 29, 1900. Her maiden name was Williams. She was married to Brother James Smallwood on February 16, 1879, who survives her. Their union was blessed with seven children, three sons and four daughters, five of whom survive her. Sister Smallwood was reared under circumstances which deprived her of opportunities to hear the truth of God in its purity and simplicity, and, being unwilling to accept the devices of men, she never embraced any system of religion until about three years ago, when she had opportunities to hear the gospel of Christ, unmixed with the creeds and opinions of men, and she and her husband joyfully accepted it, and were baptized into Christ by the writer. Those of their children who had arrived at the age of accountability soon followed their examples. Our dear sister was one of the most earnest and consecrated Christians the writer ever saw from

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies

EDUCATIONAL AIM The policy of the School is to do serious, honest work. It makes no display to deceive, no extravagant promises that it cannot fulfill. Catalogues are published to give definite, trustworthy information, and every announcement is regarded as an agreement. The purpose is by quiet, earnest effort to make of pupils cultured Christian women.

ADVANTAGES OF LOCATION Nashville excels in climate, healthfulness, and social culture, and is the educational center of the South. It is widely and favorably known for its numerous schools, colleges, and universities, which have developed at home and attracted from abroad teachers of ripe scholarship, fully abreast of the times.

COURSES OF STUDY College Preparatory, Seminary, and Special Courses are offered. Certificate admits to Wellesley and to the Woman's College of Baltimore.

OPINION OF PATRONS "The work done in Ward Seminary is of an unusually high order, the home life of the institution is sweet and considerate, and the religious tone the best. The teachers are more than professional instructors; they are earnest Christian workers, striving to build character. The School is not sectarian, but pronouncedly Christian. Parents sending their daughters to Ward Seminary may know that they are under the best influences."

35TH SESSION will open September 20. Full Literary Course, with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. For catalogue, address J. D. BLANTON, PRESIDENT, NASHVILLE, TENN.

ATTENTION, FARMERS!

Wanted to exchange Stock Peas, Millet, Hungarian Corn, and Feed Stuffs for Wheat, or buy Wheat for cash.

P. W. HARSH,

TELEPHONE 1228. 207 BROAD ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

the time of her obedience to the gospel until her Heavenly Father called her to his eternal embrace. It gave the writer much spiritual strength to visit her Christian home. May her devoted husband and motherless children be as faithful to the cause of the great and loving Master while they sojourn here as was she, that they may meet her again around the throne of God. May they be borne up in their sad bereavement by the "exceeding great and precious promises of God." LOCKETT, GA. FLAVIL HALL.

MASON.

R. M. Mason died at his home on Cavender's Branch, near Woodbury, Tenn., on May 4, 1900. He was born on December 8, 1848, and was reared on the farm on which he died—at the old Mason homestead. He obeyed the gospel in September, 1866, and was an earnest, zealous Christian up to the time of his death. His life was one that was marked at every period by high and noble motives and an integrity of purpose that should be a lesson to us all. He was a good boy and a good man. He filled all the relations of life, domestic and civil, up to the measure of an excellent standard, and always kept before him an earnest regard for the cause of the Master. He was modest, gentle, and kind, yet strong and unflinching where duty called. He was the schoolmate, companion, and friend of the writer of this notice from his boyhood, and I have known few men who commanded my respect and love as did Robt. Mason. To his bereaved wife and children I can say nothing to clear away the clouds that hover over them here, but they can look beyond these to a reunion where clouds do not come. Brother Mason was my friend, and I loved him, and I bow my head with his loved ones in their great sorrow. His beloved wife obeyed the gospel, as did the writer of this notice, at the same time he did. She is a noble Christian woman, and was a helpmeet indeed to the dear, departed brother, and we commend her in deepest reverence to the grace of Him who doeth all things well and who alone can bring comfort to her bleeding heart. HIS FRIEND.

TUNE.

At 2 o'clock on the morning of April 9, 1900, the angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Tune, and took from them their beloved son, Joe, who was eighteen years, six months, and twenty-four days old. He was ill of pneumonia six days, and meekly bore his suffering with Christian fortitude. He confessed faith in his Savior at the early age of thirteen years, under the preaching of Brother J. A. Harding. A truer boy is seldom found. He was gifted with a bright mind, a genial, affectionate nature, and was loved by all who knew him. He was kind and loving to each member of the family. He leaves a father, mother, five brothers, three sisters, and a number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. We humbly trust that our loss is his eternal gain. It is hard to understand why one should be taken away who was so greatly loved by the family; he is so sadly missed. His remains were laid to rest in Mount Olivet Cemetery to await the resurrection morn. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Harding at the home of his parents on the Lebanon pike. He was conscious to the last, and, realizing that he must go, he bade farewell to his earthly home, and in a tender, feeble voice he called the family, one by one, to his side, assuring them his way was bright and told them he was going to a better land. He said to each one: "I would like to stay with you, but God has called me and I must go. He told them to live pure, Christian lives, and left his dying request indelibly inscribed upon their hearts: "Meet me in heaven." ENOLA TUNE.

We Manufacture ..Pianos..

OVER 6,000 PER YEAR. THREE DIFFERENT NAMES. THREE DIFFERENT GRADES. GOOD, BETTER, BEST!

"Richmond," "Jesse French" AND "Starr."

Send for Catalogues and for Easy Payment Plan.

Jesse French Piano & Organ Co.,
240-242 Summer street,
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

We do all kinds of printing. Write for prices.

Brother Elam's Criticism.

I am glad Brother Elam wrote as he did. I know Brother Elam would deal with me as if I were his son and as he believed God would have him do. Brother W. L. Logan and I are also the best of friends. There never was a jar personally between us, and I have no cause to believe there ever will be. Still, Brother Logan and I disagree on some points in our teaching and practice on the subject of church worship and practice.

On the subjects, "The Lord's Day Worship" and "The Modern Pastor System," we are having quite a good deal written of late in the Gospel Advocate, and these subjects are being preached on and discussed just now extensively, and my desire is that all of us may thoughtfully study the subjects in the light of New Testament teaching. For brethren to discuss Bible questions with the loving desire to know and do the Master's will will always result in good. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." (Matt. 5: 6.) "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.)

As to the spirit in which one should speak and write—in fact, the spirit that should characterize all our deeds and words—I appreciate all Brother Elam says. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." (Gal. 5: 22, 23.) To so teach as to be able to say, "I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" (Acts 20: 26, 27), and to so live as to "come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4: 13), is indeed a coveted ideal of life.

As to how far from the divine model of church worship and work the church of Christ at Murfreesboro is it may not be wise to discuss, still I know my desire is to do all the good there and elsewhere I can, and as little harm. I have written recently an article on "The Modern Pastor System," which I trust all will read solely for the purpose of learning the truth. What I do and teach I aim to do for the purpose alone of pleasing our God. If I could know that when I die it could be truthfully said, "There lies a man who in his life work pleased God in his teaching and practice," I should be indeed satisfied. This, by the help of God, it seems to me we should strive to do.

I shall not write more just now on the "pastor," believing it to be unnecessary on my part. Now, I desire to call attention to one of Brother Elam's statements concerning my preaching, in which he is mistaken: "Brother Dunn preaches on Sunday morning when the church has met for worship against preaching at that time." Here Brother Elam is misinformed. Could I be a true man and preach against that which I am intentionally doing at the very time I am preaching? In every talk I have made on this subject I have read Acts 20: 7. I have also said that it is right to preach publicly and from house to house (privately) whenever an opportunity is offered. This should be done on Sunday and on all other days of the week, and the more the word of

The Marvel of The ...Age...

THE RELIABLE, NONFAREIL, LONG-STAPLE COTTON FELT ELASTIC

..MATTRESS..

Manufactured on the Morgan Machine.

It Possesses Many Advantages Over Other Mattresses, Among Which Are:

It is much cleaner than hair; it will never mat or pack; it will never become uneven or lumpy; it will wear for years; it is nontacked and absolutely vermin proof; it requires no renovating; should the ticking become soiled, it may be easily removed and washed.

OUR GUARANTEE.

Sleep on our bed ninety nights, and if you are not thoroughly satisfied that it is superior to any Hair Mattress, costing four times the amount, in cleanliness, comfort, and durability, return it through whom you bought it, and get your money.

Prices and Terms to Suit Every One. We Want Agents Everywhere to Handle Our Beds.

Address all orders to

TENNESSEE FELT MANUFACTURING CO.,

First street and Alabama avenue, West Nashville, Tenn.

TELEPHONE 856.

Call on Greenfield & Talbot Furniture Co., 209 N. College street, and examine the beds, as they handle our beds.

God is taught, the better. I have only tried to impress in my teaching the idea that churches should not depend on and look to preachers to conduct the worship on Lord's day. We should not allow the Lord's day service to become chiefly a preaching service in which we regard the sermon the most important part of the service. I fear this is the case in some instances. I know many churches that have preaching only occasionally on Lord's days, and I am informed that one of the churches in Nashville has decided not to have a sermon on Sunday morning when they meet to break bread; yet in these churches there is much valuable teaching done by the elders and other members of the church. I preach from two to three times every Sunday in the year. I also teach churches not to depend on preachers to conduct their service, not to look to the preaching of a preacher as the principal item of the Lord's day service; still, preaching was sometimes done on Sunday in apostolic times (Acts 20: 7), and is now often done acceptably with God. I believe Brother Elam will approve this line of teaching. I am inclined to think some one has misinformed Brother Elam on my preaching. I have never opposed preaching on Sunday at Murfreesboro or anywhere else, but have tried to do there and elsewhere just what I understand Brother Elam also to teach: "To depend upon one man, whether he be the 'pastor,' an evangelist, or any other man is not good, and in most cases would be wrong. For an evangelist or any preacher to lead a church into such dependence is indeed wrong. It would be more edifying and developing for more brethren to take a part in the prayers, exhortations, and services generally than do. While this is true, it is not wrong for a congregation to use an evangelist in preaching the gospel at home and in waste places." So I also believe and teach.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.50

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools.

TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

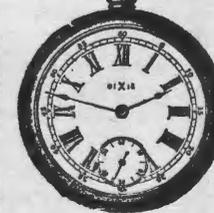

WERNICKE "ELASTIC" BOOK-CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, post-paid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc. BUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

Good at All Seasons

but invaluable during Spring and Summer. Renowned as a system cleanser and blood purifier for 56 years. It regulates and refreshes the stomach, liver and bowels, and is taken with pleasure by both children and adults. 50c. and $1. Trial, 25c.

Tarrant's "Dermal," a dainty anti-septic powder for nursery, toilet, after shaving, cures chafing, best foot powder, 25c. At druggists, or mailed on receipt of price by TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York, Est. 1854.

"Be Not Ye Called Rabbi."

"Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your teacher, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father on the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters: for one is your master, even the Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be humbled; and whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted." (Matt. 23: 8-12, R. V.)

What Jesus prohibits here should be avoided. Moreover, it is my faith that I should avoid it, and not simply my taste or my opinion; and I should avoid it, no matter if it should seem to make me ridiculous in the estimation of well-meaning people and polite people who wish to bestow honor by using titles. It is true that we may not be able to prevent people from calling us what they wish to call us, but, still, Christians are to control themselves in the use of titles.

"But," says one, "why not use the name 'Rabbi?' Is it because it is not popular (it was popular at the time of the prohibition)? Did not the Jews use the names 'rabbi,' 'master,' and 'teacher' with divine approval? Then, too, so far as we know, our Lord himself did not disown the titles when the people called him 'Rabbi,' 'Master,' 'Teacher.'" My answer to these queries is: The Lord forbids. What is it that the Lord forbids? Are we to understand that nothing is forbidden in the New Testament unless it is named specifically, and since the word "Rev." is not found in the New Testament, it is not, therefore, forbidden? That would be to shamefully abuse the New Testament. Such legalism does not belong to Christianity. The New Testament sets forth principles that cover this case and that without specifying them; but we must be sure to make out the case, and this is done by examining the Scriptures on the subject.

In the scripture quoted we have what our Savior says on the subject of "ecclesiastical titles." We are sure of this because he does not forbid the child to call the parent "father" or the teacher "master." Shall we say, then, that the religious use of the word "father," as applied to any one on earth, is what the Lord forbids? How is it, then, that Paul taught that he stood in the relation of "father" to the Corinthians? "I have begotten you through the truth." Is not this a religious sense of the word "father?" Does not John call Christians his "children?" It seems that we have not yet found what the Savior prohibited when he said: "Call no man your father on the earth." It is the religious use of the word, to be sure; but not any and all religious uses. That religious use of the term—figurative, to be sure, but plain—which tells the relation of Paul to the Corinthians, was certainly approved.

It seems that the reason Jesus gave for the prohibition makes plain the sense in which he used the words "father," "master," "teacher," and "rabbi." "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your teacher, and all ye are brethren." "All ye are brethren." That is the idea, and the use of the term "rabbi," so as to be against that idea, is what is prohibited. So, too, the use of any other term, as "Rev." or "Dr.," or what not, which separates God's children into classes, placing the titled above the others, is what the Lord here condemns, or forbids. Moreover, it is impossible to use "ecclesiastical titles" without doing this very thing; for if there should be the same honor, or distinction, bestowed upon all, then there would be no titled ones, and no title.

The papacy persistently uses the term "father" in the very sense our Savior forbids. "Father" this and "father" that one, even supposing these "fathers" are brothers, would make the children not brethren, but cousins. I mean to say that the use of the word "father" in a spiritual sense to designate a class, or rank, is against the idea, "All ye are brethren," and is forbidden by our Savior.

"But, then, if a brother is a teacher, can we not scripturally call him 'teacher?'" Certainly; and there were "teachers" in the early days called "teachers" by inspiration; but not with the idea that truth through those teachers is truth because they say so, or that they are teachers as a class, so that they whom they teach could never become teachers. That would be against the idea, "All ye are brethren;" that would be using the term "teacher," or "doctor," if you please (for "doctor" is one who teaches), in the sense prohibited by our Lord.

It is said: "'Reverend' means simply a preacher, and 'Doctor of Divinity' is simply a degree conferred by some theological schools, sometimes to indicate attainments in theological studies, more often as a mere compliment. The use of these titles in this way is not in itself sinful."

But the "reverends" and the "doctors of divinity" cannot put their own meaning into words. They do not have and ought not to have any such power. Nobody recognizes such power in any one, especially when the peculiar sense in which they are supposed to use the words has not been defined. The fact is that a large part of the religious world and people of the world generally use these titles in the sense that Jesus forbids; and if we use the same words, we shall be understood to use them in the sense commonly understood, and it is right that we should be so understood.

As to the "complimentary" use, that may be as wrong as any other use, and certainly is wrong when it designates class, rank, etc. When a school bestows its compliments it will have to define them, or the people, and especially the people of the world, will understand the titles as genuine, and not counterfeits. We would then have: "Rev. Josiah Jones, D.D.," according to the idea of "Rev." and of "D.D." at Yale (?) School of Divinity. Then such school ought to get up some way of speaking and of writing the words "Rev." and "D.D." so that the people can know that they are not genuine titles, but simply complimentary. Again, is it customary to compliment a person by bestowing upon him a title that is not genuine? It seems to me that is the way to make fun of him. It is certainly wrong in itself to make fun of our brethren by bestowing counterfeit titles upon them.

The rank, the class, the power, the distinction, whatever separates the brethren from each other, and which ideas "ecclesiastical titles" of necessity express—this is what Jesus forbids.

It is related that a prince was about to kneel in church in prayer. A peasant, near him, seeing that it was the prince, turned away to kneel elsewhere. The prince grasped the peasant's hand, and said: "Come, I want you to kneel right here, close by me; we are all one here." Amen.

Sherman, Tex. O. A. CARR.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,
531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

American National Bank,
OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and will be ready for delivery in May. Advance orders will be filled in the order received. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is not yet quite ready for delivery. Our presses have been so crowded with work that we have not been able to complete the book. We feel sure that our readers and customers will be patient with us, for we are doing our best to fill all orders. Send us your orders, so that you may receive a copy so soon as the book is out. This is a very valuable book, and promises to have a very wide circulation. Price, $1.50 per copy.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.

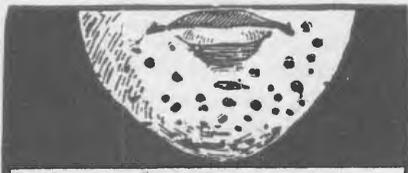

Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.

SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.)
Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Send us a new subscriber.

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

Church News.

ALABAMA.

Jasper, June 25.—The work in Northern Alabama is somewhat encouraging. I am having additions at most of my services, most of whom come from the Baptists. I have had fifteen additions from that source this spring. Most of my work is in the destitute places in the Alabama mountains. I go, and trust the Lord for a support. There is a great deal of work needed here, but it takes a man of faith and courage, and one that is willing to endure hardness, as a good soldier, to hold the field and battle with the obstacles. Pray for us.
R. E. M'CORKLE.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Atoka, June 25.—Our meeting at Coal Hill, Ark., closed last night, after continuing over three Lord's days. Only one obeyed the gospel during the meeting. I go from here to Saratoga, the southern part of Arkansas, where I will hold a meeting several days. We have one disciple to build to there.
R. W. OFFICER.

TENNESSEE.

Erin, June 25.—I have been here trying to preach for a week, but am rained out now on account of having no house. I hope some brother can come here this year with a tent and hold a meeting, as great good can be done. My annual meeting will be held at Dotsonville, commencing on July 1, 1900, this being the tenth one I have held at that place. I will start for Alabama and Florida the last of July to spend the summer and fall, holding meetings. Address me at Oakwood, Tenn., until that time.
C. PETTY.

TEXAS.

Leonard, June 21.—Our meeting at Ravenna closed on June 21, 1900, with a splendid audience and fine interest. While we had a great many things to hinder us—illness, deaths, harvest, etc.—yet the meeting was a success. Six were added to the one body. The brethren at Ravenna, have a nice house in which to worship. It is not finished inside yet, but the brethren say they will complete it this fall. I go to-morrow to Whitewright, where I will stay over Lord's day. My next meeting will be at Celeste, beginning on July 1, 1900. Love to all.
THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

Austin, June 25.—I have just closed a meeting at Corsicana, which is the county seat of Navarro County, and has a population of perhaps twelve thousand people. The church of Christ at Corsicana is a loyal band of disciples, walking in the old paths. It is a pleasure, indeed, for a preacher to hold a meeting with such brethren and sisters. Our meeting began at 11 A.M. on Lord's day, June 10, 1900, and closed on Lord's day night, June 24, 1900, lasting just two weeks. Our audiences were fair all the while, and the interest grew to the close. Four made the good confession and were baptized into Christ, two united with the congregation by letter, and one brother who had strayed from the narrow way came back and confessed, and was restored, making seven additions in all. The brethren all seemed well pleased, and rejoiced. The church of Christ at Corsicana certainly understands the meaning of 1 Tim. 5: 18. May the Lord continue to bless them in their good work, and I pray that they may ever live in peace and be satisfied with walking in the old paths.

A. J. M'CARTY.

Brother Scobey's Reply to an Inquirer.

Brother Scobey: Please answer the following questions through the Gospel Advocate:

1. Give the scriptural authority for preachers preaching and baptizing. Do they act under the commission given by Jesus?

2. Is there any law contained in the first four books of the New Testament applicable to us—that is, to the Gentiles?

J. A. B.

1. There is none other name given under heaven from whom authority to work or worship can be derived, save from the Prophet, Priest, and King—Jesus the Christ. "Whosoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) Jesus specially commissioned the apostles, ~~not only to preach and to baptize, but to teach the baptized to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them.~~ Whatsoever, therefore, I find the disciples doing, I am sure they do by the authority of Jesus, and are commissioned by him to do his work. We have many examples of those who were not apostles both preaching and baptizing, and they all acted under the commission of Jesus. Those who do so now are acting under the direction of the Master.

2. The teachings of Jesus were for all the world. He added nothing to the Jewish law. "For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." It is true Jesus, in his personal ministry, never told a single individual either what to do to become a Christian or what Christians, as such, should specifically do as citizens of the kingdom; but all that he did teach, separate and apart from the Mosaic law, is applicable and binding on all men everywhere, whether Jews or Gentiles. No man can neglect the teaching of the Master and do his will. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," etc. (Matt. 7: 24.) "Whosoever" is as broad as the race of mankind. All the sayings of Jesus uttered directing any one in any relation of life are law. Therefore, all that which is addressed to the "whomsoever" applies to all men. Surely there is much law in the first four books directed to Gentiles.
JAMES E. SCOBEY.

We are now publishing four hymn books: "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and our new book, "Gospel Praise." We are confident that four better books cannot be found. Our hymn book catalogue and price list will be sent to any address on application.

THE MOONEY SCHOOL,

FRANKLIN, TENN. W. D. MOONEY, A.M., Principal.

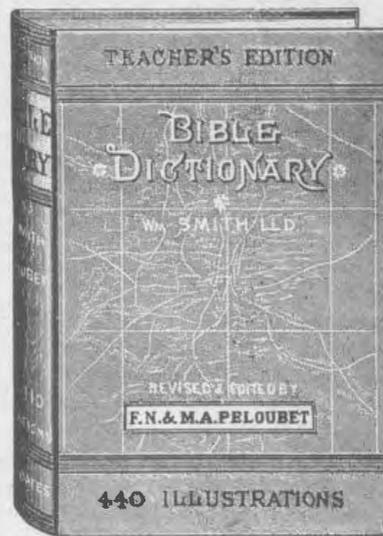

Its boys enter ten universities on certificate.

Every advantage offered. Discipline firm.

Send for catalogue before choosing your school.

Refers to any of the local pastors.

Has educated the sons of Supreme Judges, Congressmen, and many other distinguished men.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Has God Sent the Mormons?

I presume that no one denies that God overrules everything, both good and bad, to his own glory. The Lord says: "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." (Isa. 46: 10.) It has ever been, since revelation began, the purpose of the Lord to purify upo himself "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." As fire separates the dross from the good metal, so the spiritual world is purified by the fire of trial and tribulation. What seems hard when viewed from a human standpoint is that in these fiery trials the good suffer as well as the bad. But we must remember that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." (Rom. 8: 28.) Even the Savior was made perfect through sufferings. (Heb. 2: 10.) It was through suffering that he learned obedience. (Heb. 5: 8.) If it was necessary for the Son of God to suffer afflictions to crown him with perfection, certainly we can never appreciate the sweets of eternity without having tasted the bitter things of this life.

Every man is created for God's honor and glory; if he is not honored in their salvation, he will be glorified in their damnation. When individuals or nations will not serve God by obedience, he overrules their works to his own glory and their destruction. Many cases of this kind may be found in God's dealings with the Jews and the people among whom they dwelt. Balaam was a wicked prophet and endeavored to curse Israel, but God caused him to pronounce a blessing instead. (Num. 23.) This was, of course, miraculous, but who will say that God does perform his works through providence as well? Though Cyrus was a heathen king, the Lord said of him that he should perform all his pleasure. (Isa. 44: 28.) When the Jews, God's chosen people, became nationally corrupt and would not hearken to the Lord, he would deliver them into the hands of wicked nations for chastisement.

From these things we may learn a practical lesson. The church is to-day in a divided state. Christendom is organized into numerous denominations, or parties, who are at war with each other.

Pathetic is the prayer of the Savior (John 17: 20, 21), and many are the apostolic admonitions for God's people to live in unity. A few faithful are insisting on laying aside all human creeds, dissolving all human institutions in religion, accepting the New Testament as the only rule of faith and practice, and all belonging to nothing but the body of Christ, the church. Notwithstanding all this, they turn a deaf ear and "thank God that we have so many denominations that all may join the church of their choice."

Who knows but what the Mormon invasion is a fulfillment of some of the prophecies of Revelation, and is designed by the Lord to unite his people? A "house divided against itself shall not stand." (Matt. 12: 25.)

W: N. ABERNATHY.

Clarksburg, Tenn.

LEBANON LAW SCHOOL,

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY.
ESTABLISHED 1847.

TEN THOUSAND pages of living American law taught. Courses less comprehensive require two years of time and money in other law schools. In this school the entire course is accomplished in

ONE COLLEGE YEAR.

THIS IS NOT A LECTURE SCHOOL. The student reads the law in the text-book and recites daily. One additional year for review is given FREE to all graduates desiring it. Diploma and license conferred. Next term begins September 3, 1900. Catalogues free. Address

LAW SCHOOL,

LEBANON, TENN.

ROANOKE COLLEGE,

SALEM, VA.

Courses for Degrees, with Electives; high standard. Also Com'l and Prep'y Courses. Library 23,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline; six Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Aid scholarships. Special terms to clergymen's sons and candidates for ministry. Students from 23 States and countries. Catalogue, with views, free. Address JULIUS D. DREHER, President.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 28.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JULY 12, 1900

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Go to the Right Man.....	434
Preparation.....	434
Forty Questions, with Answers.....	435
Wars.....	436
A Word of Correction—By Geo. Gowen.....	436
Personal.....	437
Our Duty to Study and Teach the Scriptures.....	437
Speaking Where the Bible Speaks.....	438
Home Reading.....	439
The Faith of the Centurion.....	440
Christian Edification.....	441
Those to be Feared.....	441
Sincere Prayer.....	443
Virginia Jottings.....	442
An Industrial School for Japan.....	442
Notes from Arkansas.....	443
Necessity of Unity.....	443
For India Sufferers.....	443
India.....	443
General News.....	444
"Preaching the Word".....	445
The Boy George.....	446
White-Wakley Debate.....	447
A Wrong Statement.....	447
Church News.....	448

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Should YOU receive the Gospel Advocate marked with a red  at this place, YOU are to understand that we are sending it to YOU with the view of securing YOU as a regular subscriber. We are indebted to a mutual friend for YOUR address. We desire that YOU carefully consider the merits of the paper. We want YOU on our list. We are endeavoring to make this the best year in the history of the Gospel Advocate, and we desire YOUR coöperation. The numbers sent YOU marked as indicated are free.

"Brother Srygley: Is it right for a Christian to attend church and commune with those that are not Christians according to the New Testament?"

If a man is not a Christian according to the New Testament, he is not a Christian at all. All the worship and service of the church are intended for Christians, and no one else, because the church includes and consists of all who are Christians, and no one else. There is no such expression in the New Testament as "attend church." The New Testament way of expressing the idea is to say the disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread. (Acts 20: 7.) The disciples were Christians, and Christians were the church. Owing to man's power to deceive man, no man can ever know beyond all doubt who are Christians and who are not Christians. For this reason no precaution could possibly keep any Christian from occasionally worshiping with those who are not Christians. The Lord holds every one, therefore, to a strict account for himself, and condemns no one because some one else with whom he worships is not a Christian. To this general principle or rule there is, as I understand it, the following exception: No Christian should so act as to encourage those who are not Christians to continue in their sins, or so as to make the impression upon others that he approves the wickedness.

The following extract from a private letter, written by a brother in Kentucky, is worthy of publication:

"I do not think you ought to do as I have done—do all your work in weak places—but I believe the strong men ought to work some in weak places. It is better for the men and the places; then, above all, it is better for the cause of Christ that we all are working for. Quite a while ago I was impressed with what a town preacher said to me. I was at a new place in the country trying to help, and needed another preacher; so early one morning I started to the county seat of a blue grass county to get the preacher that was hired to preach in a fine, new, big meetinghouse. I arrived at the preacher's house before breakfast and told him my business. I was acquainted with him, but I surprised him, and he surprised me by expressing a willingness to go. Had he begun to make excuses by asking about the pay or distance or something else, I would not have been surprised, but he seemed glad, and said: 'I get so tired and worn out here—one thing over and over so much.' This was what impressed me. He went and did some good preaching and seemed to enjoy it so much himself; in fact, he was benefited himself, besides benefiting others. He told the brethren about my coming after him before breakfast. He seemed to enjoy this, to my surprise, as town people, as a rule, do not like to get out early. Brother J. A. Harding surprised me once when I asked him to go to a far-off new place to preach. He readily agreed to go, and said: 'Soon preach there as anywhere.' We, the little country people, misjudge the big town preachers (sometimes, at any rate) about not wanting to preach at weak places."

I do not think any preacher should spend all of his time in destitute places—that is, in places where there are no churches and where the gospel has never been preached; nor do I think any preacher should spend all his time in places that are not destitute—that is, in places where the gospel has been preached and where there are Christians and churches. This modern classification of preachers into missionaries who preach all the time in destitute places, and preachers who are not missionaries, who preach all the time where there are Christians and churches, is not scriptural. In New Testament times all preachers were alike in that they all sometimes visited the churches and sometimes went into the regions beyond. It ought to be that way yet. Christians sometimes censure preachers for not going into destitute places, when perhaps the preachers are not wholly to blame. The case cited in the above extract from a private letter will illustrate. Perhaps many preachers would really enjoy such work, but do not get into it because their attention is not properly called to it by isolated Christians who know of it. Much preaching could no doubt be done in destitute places this year if Christians who live in such places and see the opportunity would write to godly men and ask them to come and do the work; and such work will probably not be done because the Christians who live in such places will not exert themselves sufficiently to even ask any one to come over and help us.

Brother M. H. Northcross sends me the following letter, with permission to publish, if, in my judgment, the publication of it will accomplish any good. In order to strip it of all personalities that may give offense and do harm, and publish simply the clear statement of the evil principle in it, I carefully erase dates, names, places, etc.:

"My Dear Brother Northcross: I am at a loss this afternoon to know how to write you. I urged the brethren who are old settlers here to see if we could secure the courthouse, but they 'seemed' dilatory; so I have looked into the matter myself, and think it doubtful about getting the use of it. Furthermore, a committee called on me and the following conversation followed:

"Committee: 'If Brother Northcross comes, will he use the organ in the meeting?'

"Answer: 'If Paul should come here to hold a meeting, would you expect him to use an organ?'

"Committee: 'If he should come in this age, he would.'

"Answer: 'Who told you so?'

"Committee: 'The fact that other churches use them and we have it to do to get hearers is proof.'

"Answer: 'Then the fact that there were false teachers in Paul's day is proof that he should have fallen from grace, too.'

"Committee: 'Brother — is in line with the "progressives," and he has success.'

"Answer: 'The Methodists have all these side shows and are in line with the "digressives," and they have what you call "success."'

"Committee: 'If Brother Northcross will not use the organ, we are sure he can do no good here.'

"Answer: 'Then I am sure he will do no good here.'

"My dear brother, I give you a short sketch of the conversation, that you may know just how the matter stands. I am thoroughly disgusted. I am very much disappointed in this matter, for I am sick to hear you; but it looks gloomy now. They never introduced this matter till yesterday. Please let me hear from you at once. May God bless you. Love to all."

The use of the organ here is not on the tuning-fork theory to "pitch the tune," nor is it put on the basis of an expedient to aid the singing. The ground on which it is demanded is that the gospel will not succeed without it. I suspect that this is rather a frank and advance statement of the real inwardness of all departures from New Testament order in religious work and worship. I have an idea that lack of faith in "God and the word of his grace" is the real foundation of the whole trouble. The idea that God, by the power of the gospel, can convert sinners, edify saints, and save souls is a back number with many people in many places. To the extent such an idea prevails preachers who will not depart from the New Testament are not wanted, and they will not be allowed to go and preach if those who have turned away from the Lord can prevent it. I have long regarded the organ craze as of little consequence, one way or another, in itself. It is only because it is a symptom of declining faith in God and growing love of the world and the ways of the world that it is of weighty moment.

I have no suggestion or comment which I care to offer on the following communication:

"Dear Brother Srygley: Brother Walling's trouble is that he fails to see that your position embraces his. Brother Walling's last article manifests an earnest desire for truth and to keep the word in harmony at all points. This is commendable and should be the spirit of all Christians. Brother Walling's trouble seems to be that there is a difference between the birth and the time of entrance into the kingdom, or church. In this I think he is wrong, as the Master says: 'Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom [church] of God.' We all understand that when a man is born of water and of the Spirit, he does enter the church; so his faith, repentance, confession, and baptism must make him a Christian, a child of God. So being born of God, he is entitled to the Spirit, which imparts spiritual life. 'Because ye are sons [born]' (Gal. 4: 6), the Spirit quickens, or makes alive (2 Cor. 3: 6; 1 Pet. 3: 18). So the man who turns from sin to the service of God by faith, repentance, confession, and baptism is dead until he receives the Spirit. (Acts 2: 38.) Then we notice that baptism consummated brings remission, and not the burial in water. The command is, Be baptized for the remission, or pardon, of all past sins; and Brother Walling will admit that it takes a burial in water and a raising up out of the water to constitute a baptism. When the baptism is completed, a child is born of God. As a child, God pardons his rebellion and gives him the Spirit, who quickens him, or makes him alive to God. Up to that time he is dead. Being free from death in trespasses and sin (Eph. 2: 1, 5), he is alive unto God, and can now die to sin and at the same time live to God. So we can, by laying aside the traditions of the fathers, see clearly that a bondman cannot die to sin; it is the man that has been made free in Christ. Paul says: 'Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth [after the destruction] we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin.' (Rom. 6: 6, 7.) This language is addressed to Christians, and so with the entire chapter.

I hope this is clear and that all can see that only the man who has been baptized into Christ and made free from sin and alive unto God by the Spirit can die to sin. (Eph. 1: 3.) If Brother Walling will study carefully the Master's language, he will see that it implies an active, working existence in the kingdom, or church. 'He cannot enter into the kingdom of God'—the man cannot enter. If we say that the man is not born of God till he receives the Spirit, then we contradict Gal. 4: 6. This will not do. Suppose we say that he is born of God when he has been baptized, then we admit that he is a member of God's family—the church, or kingdom. This is true (John 1: 12, 13) and your position is clearly sustained. Now we inquire: Why does God pardon him and give him the Spirit? Because he is a son. (Gal. 4: 6; Rom. 5: 5; 8: 15.) God has no right to pardon the children of Satan; but when they accept by obedience the terms of adoption, God is then justified in forgiving all past sins. (Rom. 3: 23-31.) There are three considerations—(1) adoption, (2) forgiveness of past sins, and (3) gift of the Spirit. We see, first, that a man must be adopted as a child before parental authority can be exercised in the pardon of sin; secondly, sin must be remitted, or the temple (body) made clean (Acts 2: 38; Tit. 3: 5); thirdly, then the Spirit is given to occupy the temple, or body (Acts 5: 32; 1 Cor. 3: 16, 17: 6: 19). So here we learn that in order that the Spirit remain, the temple must be kept holy. Then in order that the Spirit enter the temple, or body, as a dwelling place, it must first be cleansed. (Acts 2: 38; Tit. 3: 5.) I hope the above will enable Brother Walling to see that you and he are agreed, and that his difference was in reference to terms that do not exist. As Brother David Lipscomb says, our differences arise mainly from not making ourselves clearly understood. Some of us cannot do this, perhaps, and I may be one; then it is best not to discuss the difference. It is frequently the case that a man understands clearly a truth that he cannot impart to others. I call to mind a case of this kind in my own experience. I was discussing Rom. 8: 7. There was a Primitive Baptist preacher present. At the close he arose and asked permission to speak, which I freely granted. He told the people that he was glad that he was there, as he had been trying for seven years to tell them what they had just heard, but could not. He could see and understand the meaning of the apostle, but could not tell it to others. This sincerity and manliness on his part worked a radical change in me. I have ever since looked at the sects through different glasses. How often do they agree with us, if we could make ourselves clearly understood to each other! Men often disagree and become enemies when, if they could clearly set their views before each other, they are perfectly agreed and would be drawn closer together. Christians have less excuse than all other people to disagree. In my next article I desire, with your permission, to make myself clear on the subject of who is the sinner and why brethren differ in reference to God's hearing sinners, etc. I fear lest the length of this article will carry it to the wastebasket. God bless you and the 'old reliable's' corps in disseminating the truth. S. I. S. CAWTHON."

Our Contributors.

Go to the Right Man.

Frank Faithful: "Henry, you remember in studying the history of Naaman, in 2 Kings 5, he was so impressed with the words of the Hebrew maid as to go to the land of Israel, seeking the cure of his leprosy. He made great preparations for the journey. He traveled in his chariot, drawn by his splendid horses, escorted by chosen men, some to ride in front, others to come on in the rear, thus to clear the track and guard the way for the great General who commanded all the hosts of the king of Syria. He provided for traveling expenses and to pay for doctor bills ten talents of silver, six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment."

Henry Hardshell: "Now, friend Faithful, you are drawing on your imagination for the facts in the story, and you know we ought to be careful about that, lest we give it a false gloss, either add to or take from the word of God."

Frank F.: "True, we ought to be careful; but I have in my own words mentioned what is substantially taught in the narrative. There are mentioned Naaman, captain of the hosts of the king of Syria; the servants, all his company; the chariot, the horses, ten talents of silver (one talent is estimated at fifteen hundred dollars in value), and six thousand pieces of gold (one piece was worth eight dollars and seventy-six cents). Besides all this, there were the ten changes of raiment, doubtless of best make and texture."

Henry H.: "But hold on, friend Faithful! Why, the very weight of all that silver, gold, and ready-made clothing would have been too heavy for the chariot; besides, General Naaman rode in the chariot."

Frank F.: "The Revised Version reads 'chariots.' Naaman was able to provide any number requisite for the journey. The tenor of the whole story indicates the equipage was splendid and well becoming the rank and dignity of Naaman, who was so distinguished a military chieftain as to have won the love of his king and countrymen and the admiration of the surrounding nations. By his courage and skill the boundary of the Syrian domain had been extended far and wide. On this occasion he was the ambassador of his king, and bore a requisition impressed with the royal stamp. This letter required the king of Israel, Jehoram by name, to cure Naaman of the leprosy."

Henry H.: "I withdraw my objection to your description, as I perceive your account could scarcely be overdrawn, considering the rank and circumstances of this great military leader."

Frank F.: "No; we in this land of individual liberty can scarcely exaggerate the pomp and power of this Oriental prince and his retinue as they appeared before the frightened king of Israel, who became so terribly alarmed at the signs of the times, which, as he thought, clearly indicated war between Syria and Israel. He rent his garments in outward token of his great fears of open war."

Henry H.: "You have more than once quoted St. Paul's saying that whatsoever things were written in the Old Testament were written for our learning. I am at a loss to know what lesson we could derive from Naaman's application for a cure of the leprosy to King Jehoram."

Frank F.: "To my mind there is no part of the story more suggestive of benefit to us than that."

Henry H.: "In what way, pray? I can think of nothing we may learn from that bit of history."

Frank F.: "I will call it a lesson of warning to us. You note the fact that Naaman in making application to the king of Israel went to the wrong man for information?"

Henry H.: "Yes, I see that, but why did Naaman make this mistake?"

Frank F.: "We may never know why, but it is a fact that he did. We may suppose the Syrian king thought the king's order for the cure would be required, or that a man possessed of power to cure the incurable disease of leprosy would be king of his people; we may suppose many reasons, but we do not positively know any reason. The little girl said the prophet in Israel would cure the leprosy, but Naaman went to the king of Israel. This caused the king to think the intention of Naaman was to provoke a quarrel between the nations of Syria and Israel. His forebodings of evil he showed by the outward sign of rending his garments. The best of circumstantial evidence is often misleading. The king of Israel supposed any one might clearly 'see' the wicked design of the Syrian king; but there was no evil design."

Henry H.: "Pardon me, but where is there any lesson here for us, save to beware of coming to conclusions from purely circumstantial proof?"

Frank F.: "O, that was only by the way! I will explain further. As little as we may think of it, Henry, we who are without Christ are afflicted with a much worse disease than the leprosy."

Henry H.: "Why, what is the matter with you or me? I have reasonably good health, except I have an occasional twinge of the rheumatism, which goes and comes with the weather. I have been wanting to go to Hot Springs, in old Arkansas; they tell me the water there is a sure cure for rheumatism, if the lungs are not involved."

Frank F.: "O, I am not speaking of bodily ailment, but of sin, the leprosy of the soul, which in some degree has contaminated all our race. We realize it sometimes, and then, instead of going to that great Prophet whom God has raised up to cure that disease, we go to the writings of John Wesley, John Calvin, Martin Luther, Alexander Campbell, or some one else who never assumed such authority as many people would desire to give them when they would go to them or their writings for information on that subject. In other words, we are liable to commit a blunder similar to Naaman's—going to the wrong man for information. Christ never committed authority to any great reformer in our time to fix the terms of salvation from sin. He gave this power to his holy apostles, and they, as apostles, never had any successors. To them he gave the power to remit and retain sins. As recorded by John, he said: 'Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.' To Peter, whose name always occurs first on the roll of the apostles, Christ said: 'I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.' Instead of going to any uninspired teacher, however learned and wise, go to the teaching of the holy apostles. Keep your eye on the man with the keys, for whatever terms Peter announced for salvation from sin, these terms are fixed in heaven; what he required in the name of Christ is forever fixed on earth and in heaven."

G. LIPSCOMB.

Flat Rock, Tenn., Rural Route No. 3.

Preparation.

Some Japanese street artists, I have heard, glory much in their skill of painting pictures of objects, animals, or men so that the looker-on can never tell what the picture is to represent until the last touch of the brush has finished it. He paints a queer-looking spot here, makes a blot there, a line here, and a curve yonder, until at last a few bold strokes connect the spots and blots and lines and there is a fine picture of a horse. That is very amusing.

But I know of an Artist who performs his works in a similar manner—the Builder of the universe. Let a man who has not looked into that more perfect revelation of God behold the wonders of the world around him. He stands awe-struck. There system takes hold on system. From the smallest atom to the stupendous worlds which human eye has never reached all things work together, under the same laws, mutually, helping one another. His horizon is small; he cannot look unto the end. "I see the use of this thing," he says, "and of that, but what is the purpose of the whole? Here is a building raised by a skillful architect. Stone fits to stone. Arches and angles, lines and corners are measured and laid with wonderful exactness. But what does it mean? Is it a monument? Is it a dwelling? Where is the completing crown of it? I can see a magnificent piece of machinery—springs and joints and levers, cog wheels driving one another backward and forward; and all is made to work with a skill and wisdom that passes all comprehension. But what is the machine for?"

God's ways are higher than ours, even as the heavens are higher than the earth. We cannot understand them any more than a child understands why its father winds up the clock or blacks his boots. But some time, when the end has come, we shall have the privilege of looking back through the ages of time and studying in their completion the wonderful works of God. Then we may see the reason and wisdom in many things that now appear aimless and foolish, and shall perceive how the laws and facts of the world have dovetailed and united to bring about the will of God. Even now God declares the end from the beginning, and the man of faith knows that in all things the hand of the Father overrules to bring it to pass. He sees the machinery and notes its working and knows that even to the fall of a sparrow God controls it all. While he may not perceive the immediate result of present events and circumstances, he knows they all tend toward the end which God has foretold. He knows more. He understands that the epochs and convulsions through which the world has been, and is even now, passing are necessary to the accomplishment of God's objects. The world is hustling and working and changing, but all this means only preparation for a future age. We speak of education, of growth, of development; these are but other terms for the same thing—preparation. Progress, civilization, enlightenment mean, in their wider sense, preparation.

A newborn child is nourished with milk—preparation for growth and solid food; he begins to crawl—preparation for walking; he walks—preparation for further exercise and development; he goes to school—preparation for after life, and in the after life every day is a preparation for the next. He may be a Christian; then every day is a step nearer to God, and his whole time is avowedly spent in preparation for eternity. The spiritual man is renewed day by day, and the body grows old and decays.

The scaffolding has fulfilled its mission and now it is cast aside. Shall we say that the development stops here? John says: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

Since the curse in Eden the world has been undergoing changes and purifications—preparation for the restoring of the happiness of men. The age of the patriarchs opened the way for greater things. It brought people into connection with God, and they understood that "God is." Then came the law—a fuller revelation of God and of his will. Then men learned that there is but one God, and none others beside him. They saw more clearly the character of their Creator and his will. This law was an education—a schoolmaster to bring them to a greater dispensation. Then came John the Baptist, "preparing the way of the Lord," lest at his coming he find the people unprepared, and smite the earth with a curse. Then the perfect revelation rose like a sun upon the world—Christ, God revealed in the flesh. He came in the "fullness of time," when humanity had, through processes of preparation, become ready to receive him and his words. And does it end here? By no means. The era of Christianity is itself but a preparation for the millennium and the eternal bliss of the New Jerusalem; for the Christian must strive and battle against principalities and powers, against the wiles of the devil and the temptations of the flesh. He must toil, he must suffer until, through much tribulation, he enters into the kingdom of God. But why all this? Must they all run this fiery gauntlet? Why does not God spare us all this conflict and woe?

A woman, one of our neighbors, who often visited our home when I was a child, had a standing expression which she used as a kind of sigh to fill up time. Nevertheless, it made a deep impression on me. "O," she would say, "I wish we were all in heaven!" I remember how I reflected over this saying in my childish mind. "That would be a good thing," I thought. "If we were all in heaven, it would save a lot of trouble and worry. There would be no hard lessons to get, no wood and kindling to bring in, and I could be happy and play all the time." I would gladly have gone there at once, if, as that woman wished, we could have been translated without further discommodities, and so would almost any one else; but if we could get to heaven on that plan, pray, what good would it do? Surely there, as anywhere else, the old law, "Easy comes, easy goes," would hold good. What we gain without effort we lose, for it is not ours. I do not believe that there shall ever be any falling away among those who have reached the everlasting kingdom. Likewise it would seem unreasonable that God would take away their free will from them in order to prevent their falling. So no one enters there until he has been prepared, tested and tried in the violent storms of earthly life; and if he has withstood those, then he will be loyal throughout all eternity. If the doors of heaven were flung wide open for all, prepared and unprepared, strong and weak, good and bad, multitudes would soon lose it again, as Adam lost Eden.

Another difficulty: Even if they could get there and stay there, to the unprepared heaven would not be heaven. They could no more perceive it than a donkey could perceive the beauty of a poem. No man can receive or enjoy that for which he is not prepared. In vain should we exhibit to a schoolboy the treasures of science and philosophy. In vain do we seek to thrust liberty and self-government on the Cuban or even the negro in our midst. Before we can have liberty, we must have its counterpart within us; before we can see beauty, beauty must be in our hearts, else we find ourselves like the celebrated "cow in the flower garden." These things must come by work and suffering—by preparation.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." When Julian, the Roman emperor, impatiently demanded to see the Christian's God, an old saint said: "Come with me, I will show him to you." He stepped out on the balcony, the emperor curiously following him. "There," he said, pointing at the brilliant summer sun. "look at that!" "I cannot," answered Julian, rubbing his eyes. "If you cannot look at this—one of his creatures and vassals"—replied the saint, "how could you bear to look at him in his glory?"

It was no curse which Jesus pronounced when he said: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." The striving becomes a blessing; for it is the means, and the only means, of preparing for the inexhaustible happiness of eternal life. The work we do in acquiring knowledge prepares us for the reception of it; the exercise we take in procuring food prepares us for the enjoyment of it; the labor and tribulation we endure prepare us for that perfect joy above.

Beware, then, brother, lest by neglect or shirking of your duty toward God you lose your heaven. No unprepared soul can enter there. But if you endure hardness, remember that God has so ordained it for your good; if persecution and sorrow take hold on you as consuming fire, remember it is the fire that consumes the dross, and God permits it for your purification and for your happiness, for the pure in heart shall see God. ROBERT H. BOLL.

Forty Questions, with Answers.

[The following questions and answers indicate a healthful and hopeful interest in the study of a very important subject. The answers are clear, pertinent, and scriptural, and those who are seeking light on the subject will be benefited by studying them carefully. F. D. SRYGLEY.]

Below I submit a list of forty questions submitted to me by a friend a few days ago, with the request that I answer them. I desire to make the questions and the answers public, hoping that they may be of some help to some honest, inquiring mind:

"1. Where in the Bible is there an account of the origin of the Christian Church?"

Answer: Nowhere.

"2. Where in the Bible is the name 'Christian Church' found?"

Answer: In the same chapter in which you find a church that does not include all Christians.

"3. If the origin and name of the Christian Church cannot be found in the Bible, is it a scriptural church?"

Answer: It is not; that is why I do not wish to belong to it.

"4. Can a man be saved and not be a member of the Christian Church?"

Answer: He can. The Christian Church, like all other denominational churches, does not include all Christians, and is therefore unscriptural, and it is sinful to join such institutions.

"5. Was Jesus Christ a member of any church? If so, what church?"

Answer: Jesus Christ is "the head of the body, the church." (Col. 1: 18; Eph. 1: 22.) Is your head a member of anything? If so what is it?

"6. Where in the Bible can I find the phrase 'process of saving a man'?"

Answer: You cannot find the "phrase," but you can find the process wherever you find the plan of salvation. Do you believe that God has a process of saving people, or do you believe he saves them without a process? You cannot find the phrase, "plan of salvation" in the Bible; is that any evidence that the plan cannot be found there?

"7. Are the sayings and teachings of Jesus before his death, burial, and resurrection applicable to us now at this present time?"

Answer: They are when we are surrounded by the same circumstances with which those were surrounded to whom they were addressed. "Go, . . . teach all nations, . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28: 19, 20), was a part of the world-wide commission given to the disciples.

"8. What is a disciple of Jesus Christ?"

Answer: One who does his will. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." (John 8: 31.)

"9. When did God begin making disciples by obedience?"

Answer: When they began obeying him.

"10. Does obedience make disciples of Christ, or do they obey because they are disciples?"

Answer: Does farming make a man a farmer, or does he farm because he is a farmer?

"11. Is there a single blessing that is essential to salvation that cannot be enjoyed out of the Christian Church as well as in it? If so, what is it?"

Answer: There is not. The same is true of every other church that does not include all Christians. People should be satisfied to be simply Christians, members of the body of Christ, and stay out of all ecclesiastical organizations.

"12. Can a man be saved without water baptism? If not, please give the scripture that says that he cannot."

Answer: If you wish to be saved without water baptism, you are the man to hunt for scripture. Hunt for the passage that says: "A man can be saved without water baptism." You can find it in the same chapter that says a man cannot be saved without prayer and the Holy Spirit.

"13. Are there not two baptisms spoken of in the Bible? If so, what are they, and what are they for?"

Answer: There is water baptism for the remission of sins (Mark 1: 4; Acts 2: 38) and the baptism of the Holy Spirit for miraculous purposes. (John 16: 31; Acts 2: 1-47; 10: 1-48.)

"14. Does water baptism wash away sins?"

Answer: "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." (Acts 22: 16.)

"15. When, where, and by whom was that body established to which you say all Christians belong?"

Answer: After the foundation stone was tried. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." (Isa. 28: 16.) This stone (Jesus Christ) was tried when he was crucified, buried, and resurrected. People were first commanded to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ on the first Pentecost after his resurrection. (Acts 2: 38.) The preaching of repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ began at Jerusalem. (Acts 24: 47.) It was established by Jesus Christ. (Matt. 16: 18.)

"16. How does a man get into that body to which you say all Christians belong?"

Answer: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." (1 Cor. 12: 13.) "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.)

"17. Is it a visible or an invisible body?"

Answer: "And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." (Mark 9: 1.) When the members of an institution are visible, the institution itself is visible. All Christians are members of the body of Christ, and are visible.

"18. Where does the body to which you say all Christians belong meet?"

Answer: Wherever Christians meet.

"19. Does the body to which you say all Christians belong practice just what the apostles and disciples practiced before, on, and after the day of Pentecost?"

Answer: The body is corrupted by many unscriptural practices of the different members and congregations. This was the case even during the lives of the apostles. One of the most heinous sins of the church, at present, is the formation of parties. If all Christians would get out and stay out of all ecclesiastical organizations and be simply Christians, members of the body of Christ, it would be a long step toward the millennium.

"20. Is that body to which you say all Christians belong in this country? If so, please locate it."

Answer: It is located wherever Christians are located.

"21. Does the Lord or man add man to that body to which you say all Christians belong?"

Answer: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." (Acts 2: 47.)

"22. If that body to which you say all Christians belong is visible, is the head visible?"

Answer: Christ is the head of the church, and it seems to me very impertinent to ask if he is visible.

"23. If a sinner were to ask you what he must do to be saved, what would you tell him?"

Answer: I would read to him just what the apostles told those who asked them the same question. Would you do this?

"24. Does man have anything to do with that body to which you say all Christians belong?"

Answer: Has your arm anything to do with the body of which it is a member?

"25. Where in the Bible is there an account of the apostles setting out a confessor's bench and inviting sinners to it to make the good confession?"

Answer: They made the good confession without a bench or an invitation, either. (Acts 8: 37.)

"26. Where in the Bible is there an account of the apostles preaching and inviting sinners to come forth to confess Christ, and some came, and after the confession the preacher announced that they would meet on the morrow and attend to the baptizing?"

Answer: When the apostles preached, many of those who heard them confessed and were baptized at once. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." (Acts 2: 41.) "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8: 12.) "And he took them the same hour of the night, . . . and was baptized." (Acts 16: 33.) They did not even wait to tell an "experience of grace" or for the church to vote on them.

"27. Do 'the body,' 'the church,' 'the kingdom,' 'the kingdom of God,' 'the kingdom of heaven,' 'the church of God,' and 'congregation' all mean the same thing?"

Answer: These terms have different shades of meaning, but they are all applied to the church in some sense. The church is also spoken of as "the family of God" (Eph. 3: 15) and "church of the first-born." (Heb. 12: 23.)

"28. Is the commandment to keep the seventh day, or Sabbath day, holy, essential to salvation?"

Answer: No; no more so than the commandment to keep the seventh year as a Sabbath, which was the case under the law of Moses. (See Ex. 23: 10-12.)

"29. Can we save ourselves eternally?"

Answer: In a sense we can. Man saves himself from sin like he saves himself from starvation. By complying with God's law concerning bread he saves himself from starvation; by complying with God's law concerning pardon man saves himself from sin.

"30. Have Christians any scriptural authority for a Sunday, or Lord's day, school?"

Answer: Yes; they have authority to meet to study the Bible. (1 Cor. 14: 23-40.) If they were to do this on Monday, it would be a Monday school. But there is no authority for the modern Sunday school organization that supplants the church in its work.

"31. Has a Christian any scriptural authority to publish or edit a religious paper?"

Answer: He has as much authority to print his sermons as he has to speak them.

"32. Has a Christian any scriptural authority to send his contributions for missionary or other church purposes by mail?"

Answer: The mail, in a sense, is his property, and he has the same right to send his contributions by it that he has to send them by his servant.

"33. How often did Christ tell the apostles to take the bread and wine?"

Answer: He told the apostles to teach the people to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them (Matt. 28: 20), and they taught the people to take it upon the first day of the week. (Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 1; Heb. 10: 25.)

"34. Is it essential to our eternal salvation to take the bread and wine on the first day of every week?"

Answer: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." (John 6: 53.)

"35. Where in the Bible is there an account of the women taking the bread and wine?"

Answer: Male and female have equal privileges in Christ (Gal. 3: 28), except when restricted by special commandment. (1 Tim. 2: 12.)

"36. Can a man be a servant of God one day and a servant of the devil the next day, and vice versa?"

Answer: The jailer (Acts 16: 25-34) was a servant of the devil one day and a servant of God the next. A man may be a servant of God one day and a servant of the devil the next (Ezek. 18: 24); but of course no man can serve the two at the same time.

"37. To whom do the civil governments of this world belong, to Christ or to the devil?"

Answer: The devil claimed them, and Christ did not dispute his claim. (Matt. 4: 8, 9.)

"38. Has a Christian scriptural authority to vote or participate in any way in prosecuting the affairs of the civil government?"

Answer: I seriously doubt that he has. (Matt. 17: 24-27.)

"39. If a man should fall from grace, can he be renewed?"

Answer: If not, how can the fallen sinner be renewed?

"40. Do you speak where the Bible speaks, and are you silent where the Bible is silent? You have brethren here who say they do. Will you say as much?"

Answer: This is not the issue. The issue is: When should a man speak, and when should he be silent? "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." (1 Pet. 4: 11.) W. N. ABERNATHY.

Clarksburg, Tenn.

To supply the physical wants and neglect the spiritual is to cultivate the tares to the detriment of the wheat.—Selected.

Hurry not only spoils work, but spoils life also.—Lubbock.

WARS.

War is now being prosecuted in the Philippine Islands, in South Africa, and a state of war exists in China. This is conclusive evidence that we lack much of enjoying that state of perfection which we should through Jesus Christ our Lord. The prophet sings of what shall come to pass in the last days in the following strain: "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2: 4.) The horrors of war are so terrible it is hard to imagine how any one can glory in it. When we read of the killed and wounded in a bloody battle we think we realize the full extent of the horrors of war, but not so. In after years we must look in upon the homes wrecked by war and behold the widows weeping over the companions who are no more and the orphans who need a father's love and protection sighing for the necessities of life. But this is not all. Those engaged in war, many of them, are often hurried into eternity unprepared. If we could only hear the sighs of the doomed throughout the countless ages of eternity, if we could hear them pleading for mercy when it is forever too late, and could experience but a little of the aches and pains to which they are subject, we would then realize something of the cruelty of war. It is no wonder that the Savior taught: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. . . . Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

When we see the large standing armies and navies of the most Christianized and civilized nations, we can but confess with humility that as nations we have not imbibed very freely of the spirit of the meek and lowly Nazarene who resisted not evil.

While war is evil, God can bring good out of it. We believe that through the providence of God good will grow out of the war with China. That vast empire, with her millions of human beings, has not been favorable to the reception of truth. This empire is holding a very large portion of the human family in heathenish darkness and superstition. China has not been willing to receive the light as was Japan. Japan threw wide open her doors to the reception of Christianity some time ago. Since that time she has made very rapid progress in civilization and learning. To-day she is admitted as one of the civilized nations. But while Japan has made such rapid strides in the right direction, China has clung tenaciously to ignorance and superstition. She has been and is still opposed to letting in the light of Christianity. The Christian Guide says of this people:

"The Chinamen have all kinds of superstitious ideas about any improvements in their country and imagine that all the evils of their land are brought about by foreigners who have taken some little civilization with them into that superstitious country. They will not dig for coal, lest they disturb the wicked spirits that would at once bring about some pestilence; they will not dig wells for the same reason, as they seem to fear they will come in contact with spirits more wicked than themselves; they are not at all in sympathy with any Western ideas of civilization, and hence desire to remove all foreigners from their country. By so doing they hope to get rid of all wicked spirits that have so molested them during the last few years."

They will not be led to the reception of the truth by mild means; they are slaughtering and murdering those who, filled with love and a consuming earnestness for them, are seeking to lead them out of darkness into light. As no argument, no reasoning will reach them, God, for their good, will use violence to prepare their minds for the reception of Christianity. As it has been, so it will be again: "The blood of the martyr is the seed of the church." This war will open the way in China for God's people to go "everywhere preaching the word." We believe the day is not far distant when the truth will prevail there as never before.

But with China open to the gospel, a new responsibility comes to us. The church is the light of the world, the pillar and support of the truth. But we should not civilize them, as we are seeking to do with the Filipinos, by sending the whisky bottle along with the Bible. The Bible does not need such a companion. The Filipinos knew nothing of the American drink habit. Mr. Schurman, chairman of the commission sent to the Philippine Islands, says: "I regret that the Americans allowed the saloon to get a foothold on the island. That has hurt the Americans more than anything else, and the spectacle of the Americans drunk awakens disgust in the Filipinos. We suppressed the cockfight there and permitted the taverns to flourish. One emphasized the Filipino frailty; the other, the American vice. I have never seen a Filipino drunkard."

The saloon is a curse to all. How fearful is the responsibility for carrying this curse to those who knew not of it! God expects better things of us.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

A Word of Correction—By Geo. Gowen.

To Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that we, the members of the Board of Health of Franklin, Tenn., acting in our official capacity, and for what we deemed the best interests of the town and county, forbade all public gatherings and ordered all churches closed for a few Sundays and Sunday nights. As law-abiding citizens, all the preachers, with their congregations, submitted to this order.

(Signed) JOHN B. WHITE, M.D., Health Officer;
F. C. RUSSELL, Judge;
T. J. WALLACE, Clerk.

It certainly is not necessary to have a meeting-house in order to worship God acceptably. Christians can meet in groves, in caves, in rented halls, and wherever they can come together for the purpose of worshiping God. Brother H. W. Smith makes this statement: "It seems to me that these conditions are brought about by the false idea that Christians cannot serve the Lord unless they have a church house where the congregation meets regularly to hear preaching, and that generally done by one man selected and paid to do the work."

If the brethren at Franklin so understand the Scriptures to teach, he should encourage the Board of Health to close the meetinghouses and keep them closed. This would give him and those brethren who do not so think a fine opportunity to meet from house to house, and thus convince those who are in error that a meetinghouse is not essential to the worship, but serves only for the convenience and comfort of those worshiping God. A godly example is by far the most effective way of teaching. Brethren sometimes damage the cause that they love by finding fault with almost everything and everybody.

It is hardly fair to assume that those who did not meet with the seven (the number, as we learn from Brother Smith's article of last week, that met in a private house) felt they could not worship God without a meetinghouse, for many do not meet "to break bread" when the meetinghouse is in use. It makes the heart ache that so many are indifferent to the worship, regardless of where the church assembles to honor Christ.

The example of those who met at the "private house" to serve the Savior is to be commended. It was a splendid opportunity of showing all that a meetinghouse is not necessary to the service of God.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Personal.

Brother Joe McPherson, of this city, is in a good meeting at Epley Station, Ky.

Brother J. E. B. Ridley was in the office last Thursday. He began a meeting at Bakerville, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother A. Foster closed his meeting with the church of Christ worshipping on Scoville street, this city, last Sunday night.

We enjoyed a visit last Monday from Brother S. M. Jones, who has for several years been preaching "the power of God unto salvation" in Canada. We sympathize with him in the recent loss of his father. He will return to Canada in a few days to resume his work there.

We are in receipt of a card from Brother and Sister H. L. Calhoun, announcing the birth, on June 22, 1900, of a son, James Edwin. That they may be given strength to train him up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord" and that he may be a blessing and comfort to them all their days is our sincere wish.

Our good friend, Mr. W. S. Riddle, of the firm of W. S. Riddle & Co., this city, rejoices because of the partial restoration of his eyesight, which is due to the skill of Dr. L. B. Graddy, also of Nashville. We rejoice with him. He has been totally blind, so that he had to be led; but now he can go about alone, is able to distinguish objects and to recognize his friends.

Dr. W. Ammerman, of Madisonville, Ky., has bought the practice of osteopathy from Dr. Brown Godwin, of Lebanon, Tenn., where he and his wife will succeed Dr. Godwin and wife in their infirmary work at the latter place. Dr. Ammerman is well known to all the Gospel Advocate readers, as it was under him that Brother R. W. Norwood recovered from his long spell of paralysis. Dr. Godwin will go to Columbia, Tenn., and resume practice there.

We have received a note from Brother M. C. Kurfees, bearing date of July 5, 1900, written on the train, near Knoxville, Tenn., saying that he is on his way to North Carolina to begin a debate with the Mormons on July 12, 1900. The debate will be held at King, N. C. Brother Kurfees knows how to use "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," and this he will use to the utter defeat in that section of the heinous and diabolical "ism" that would invade the sanctity of home, rob womanhood of all that is lovely, and place a premium upon licentiousness and crime.

As I have changed my address, I will write a few lines. I have not seen a copy of the Gospel Advocate or The Way since I left Nashville. I will be pleased for Brother Shepherd to know about my change from Osterburken to Karlsruhe, Bismark Str. 45. At Osterburken, the home of my childhood, they rejected the good news as it is in Christ Jesus. My brother in the flesh abused me for trying to come and teach, comparing me to Judas. I am glad I came over here, for now I have, at least, the consolation of trying to do the Lord's will. I thank the Lord for suffering for his name's sake, for Jesus promises great reward in heaven. I do not think Germany will receive the pure gospel, as both Catholics and Protestants depend on organizations—"the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." (1 John 2: 16.) I am trying to find a Baptist congregation to see how they stand, and if they will accept the pure truth. All the infants are trained not to depart from the religion of their fathers. Greeting to all the brethren. Pray for me.—Joseph Baumann, Bismark Str. 45, Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany. Brother Baumann will meet with many discouragements in his native land in preaching the gospel of the Son of God, but steadfastness and loyalty upon his part will be sure to bear fruit.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore."

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, will be ready for delivery by the time our readers see this notice. We have been very much delayed in getting out this book, but the delay has been unavoidable. All advance orders will be shipped at once. We believe this to be a good book—one calculated to do great good wherever circulated. Brother Srygley says: "The design of the book is to do good. He has never consented for it to be published except on condition that 'good can come of it.' In passing upon everything that is in the book, I have been guided by my own desire, as well as by his wish, that nothing but that which will do good be allowed to appear in it." Again: "If my judgment is not at fault, no one can read the book and not have a greater desire, when he finishes the reading of it, to be better and to do more good, and less evil, than he had when he began reading it. If I am correct in this opinion, it goes without saying that the book ought to be extensively circulated for the good it will do." The price is $1.50 by mail, postpaid. We first thought we would let out territory by counties, but we have now concluded to let agents go where they please and secure all the orders they can. Order a book, and write for terms to agents.

"Gospel Praise."

The following is the preface to our new hymn book, "Gospel Praise:"

"The selection and preparation of a song book for those who want to sing with the spirit and with the understanding, to sing songs the sentiment of which shall be in harmony with the word of God, is a work of supreme importance. It is easy to gather up enough of songs and music to make a book; but to get up a book that will suit the taste of this age, and at the same time be in harmony with the teaching of the word of God in the sentiment of its songs, is an undertaking that demands much thought and earnest care. We have sought, in this work, to present a book suitable for members of the church to sing in worshiping assemblies, in protracted meetings, in the Lord's day school, in the family—anywhere, in fact, that people want to sing songs that will not in any wise conflict with the pure teaching of the Lord's word. This age especially needs a book that shall be sound in sentiment, so as to voice the principles taught in the Holy Scriptures. The people want many good old songs that they have heard and loved from their childhood. They also want, and should have, a number of good, new songs that they have not seen in other books; and we have tried to present in this collection that which will gratify these desires. Of course we do not expect to please every one, but we do hope to please such as love good songs, with sound scriptural sentiment, and who wish to enjoy the pleasant and soul-refreshing service of song. We have striven to present songs of praise, of exhortation, of instruction, of edification, of rejoicing, and of admonition, and fondly hope many will find it what the proprietors have tried to produce, and that which will satisfy and rejoice and elevate many hearts."

"Gospel Praise" has been highly commended by all who have examined it. We only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating buying new books, you should, by all means, examine "Gospel Praise." It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment, and that the music is of that high order which marks all of Mr. Showalter's selections and compositions. Read the following complimentary notices:

"After a careful examination of 'Gospel Praise,' I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I think it is the best arranged work and finest music extant; in fact, it is an 'all-purpose book,' 'worth its weight in gold.' All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production." (M. H. Northcross, Franklin, Tenn.)

W. Boyd says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received."

The Armstrong Company, music typographers, say: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise. We shall be pleased to receive a copy of the work when printed, as we know it will adorn our library."

S. P. Pittman says: "I have examined most of the songs in 'Gospel Praise,' and am glad to say that, with but few exceptions, they are fine; and I predict that the collection will be accorded the popularity it deserves."

"After a careful examination of your new book, 'Gospel Praise,' I can cheerfully say that I am more than pleased with it. The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul stirring, while the mechanical appearance of the work does great credit to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The brethren should all buy this book and learn these beautiful songs, and thus be able to comply with the heavenly admonition to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs while they sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord." (J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.)

Published in round and shaped notes and in word edition. See price list elsewhere in this issue. You will make no mistake in ordering "Gospel Praise." Our hymn book catalogue will be sent to any address on application for same.

Our Duty to Study and Teach the Scriptures.

"It is the privilege and duty of all to study the Bible for themselves. If one is not sufficiently interested in the salvation of his soul to study the Bible for himself, he has not sufficient interest to be saved. These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Therefore many of them believed.' (Acts 17: 11, 12.) Christians delight to study the word of God because they are his children, and have the Spirit of Jesus (Rom. 8: 9), and are partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1: 4). They 'desire the sincere milk of the word' (1 Pet. 2: 2), and 'hunger and thirst after righteousness' (Matt. 5: 6). They lay up the word of God in their hearts, that they may not sin against him (Ps. 119: 11); it dwells in their hearts richly in all wisdom (Col. 3: 16), and is a lamp unto their feet and a light unto their path (Ps. 119: 105). One who does not love the word of God, and who does not delight in the practice of its principles, has great reason to be alarmed at his condition. It is also the privilege and duty of all Christians to teach the word of God to others. In fact, he who does not work for the salvation of others is himself not a Christian. The Hebrew Christians failed here. They were reproved for their slow progress and for their inability to teach others. (Heb. 5: 11-14.) Many to-day deserve the same reproof. Christians should be ready to teach the word of God at all times and wherever opportunity affords. First, they should teach it diligently every day to their own children (Deut. 6: 6-10; Eph. 6: 4), but they should teach it also to others. Christ taught one man and he taught the multitudes; he taught at night and during the day; he taught in the synagogues and in the temple; he taught on the mountain and in the plain; he taught on the land and on the sea; he taught in the homes of the people and along the dusty highway; he taught the poor and the rich; he taught saints and sinners; he contended mightily and publicly against the scribes and Pharisees, denouncing them as hypocrites; and in gentleness and mercy he taught privately a fallen woman at Jacob's well. He sent out his apostles to teach all nations. They taught wherever they could get an audience. Paul, at Ephesus, went 'into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months;' and when he left that he reasoned 'daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.' (Acts 19: 8-10.) His teaching during this time was not confined to this place, because 'all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word,' and he taught 'from house to house' as well as 'publicly,' and 'admonished every one night and day with tears.' (Acts 20: 20, 21, R. V.) He 'sat down' and taught the women at the place of prayer by the riverside at Philippi, and at midnight he taught the jailer and 'all that were in his house.' (Acts 16: 13, 32.) 'As his custom was,' he reasoned with the Jews in their synagogues on the Sabbath (Saturday), and 'in the market place every day with them that met with him,' and 'in the midst of the Areopagus' he taught the learned Athenians. (Acts 17: 17, 22, R. V.) While at Rome he 'dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.' (Acts 28: 30, 31.) Philip informally preached Jesus to one man as he journeyed in his chariot; Priscilla and Aquila took the eloquent Apollos 'unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly' (Acts 18: 26); the Christians which were scattered from Jerusalem

Speaking Where the Bible Speaks.

The following is the conclusion of a sermon on the above subject which I preached at the Christian Church in Spencer, Ind., some time ago; the first portion of the sermon was published in the Gospel Advocate of June 28, 1900:

"Now for the application of this rule—first, to the sinner in coming to the Christ for the remission of sins. The commission was given to men who were guided by the Spirit in applying it to the sinner. In it and its unfoldment, God makes the way to Christ plain. That man may make no mistake in the important matter of his salvation, God tells him what he must do, how he would have him perform that duty, and gives the design or reason for such obedience. Waiving the duties of the teachers of the word of God for the present, we will notice, first, the duties of those to whom the gospel is preached. The first thing in order is faith in Christ. In the commission, those who were taught were required to believe what was taught, and that was all the truth that concerns Christ as Prophet, Priest, and King, and man as a lost sinner and his recovery from the vortex of ruin. As to the fact and need of faith in Christ, there is no place for the wisdom of the wise to display itself in expanding or diminishing what God requires of man designated 'faith;' neither has he left it to the ingenuity of man to guess at what he means by the term 'faith,' or how the sinner comes in possession of it. Faith is 'the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen.' It follows as the result of perceiving well-attested and miraculously-confirmed truth. God presents the incarnate truth, and he expects us to believe just as one would naturally expect us to look when he held a picture before us. This faith comes by hearing or reading the word of God. The word is the seed of the kingdom; all the products come from that seed. The first in order is faith. 'Many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.' Faith is not an arbitrary appointment of God simply to show his authority, but a means adapted to the end in view. It is very appropriately called the 'hand of the soul.' If you hand one something to eat, he does not take it with his eye and put it into his ear; that would not only be an arbitrary act, but contrary to the natural order. He would take the food in the hand and put it into the mouth. The Lord himself tells the uses and the design of faith. It secures blessings that no other can. The end of all faith in Christ and belief of all truth is the salvation of the soul. 'With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.' 'Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.' We are required to believe for no other reason or end.

"The second step in coming to the Christ is repentance. Here God tells the sinner what to do. God commands all men, everywhere, to repent. 'Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.' The motives to repentance are, first, the coming judgment; second, the love of God. Repentance implies impending crisis. It is not something that can be postponed till some leisure time. Many would be mean enough to repent if it could be done in their own time. What is repentance? Would God suspend the salvation of man on something which depended on the vague guesses of fallible man? Has he not rather defined the matter of repentance for the lost sinner by telling him what it is by what it does? We know what a man is by what he does. The man that makes houses is a carpenter. Let us take one look into the Bible for a definition of repentance: 'Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye were made sorry unto repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly sort, that ye might suffer loss by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, a repentance which bringeth no regret: but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For behold, this selfsame thing, that ye were made sorry after a godly sort, what earnest care it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what longing, yea, what zeal, yea, what avenging! In everything ye approved yourselves to be pure in the matter.' (2 Cor. 7: 9-11, R. V.) Note that the apostle says that repentance does several things for the Corinthians, all marks of genuine character. That is God's definition of repentance; it is better than Webster's. The design of repentance, of course, is generally understood to be the salvation of men from sin; it cannot have, in the nature of the case, any other object. Hence, there is no room for man to enlarge here.

"The same reasoning applies with the same force to the duty of making a public confession of the Christ. That Christ requires a public confession of him is taught in many places in the Bible, and generally admitted. Here, again, we are commanded what we shall do; but the duty is no more imperative or plain than the way in which it should be done. The confession is to be 'made with the mouth.' This feature of the confession is not the silent confession of a Christian life that we are sometimes taught by our neighbors. The general tenor of a devoted life in the service of the Christ is, of course, a tacit acknowledgment of the Lordship of Christ; but the confession which we mean in this connection is the one that breaks forth from the even tenor of the life in the specific form of a verbal confession—'with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.' The best example that we have of the broad, comprehensive meaning of this confession is found in John 9. It is the confession of the man who had his sight restored by the Savior. It cannot have escaped the observation of the critical student of this narrative that the confession which we demand of the sinner at the threshold of the kingdom is only one way of making the 'good confession.' It is not like baptism in that it is made at this juncture once for all, but rather a thing of the nature of an acknowledgment of the Christ to be done whenever circumstances demand it. That it is not the silent testimony of the Christian life is seen in the place that it occupies in Paul's letter to the Roman Christians. It comes before salvation. 'If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, . . . thou shalt be saved.' On the matter of confessing the Christ, then, we have, first, the duty enjoined by divine authority upon all who would be the disciples of Christ; second, the way in which it is to be made—by the mouth; third, the design or reason for which it is to be made—unto salvation. Here, again, the legislation of God preoccupies the grounds, and there is no place for human addition.

"Baptism is the last step that the sinner takes in coming to Christ. I shall not stop to multiply commands to the believer to be baptized. All that assent to the authenticity of the Bible admit that God requires it. That is not in dispute. The questions are: How is it performed? What is it? What is it for? God answers all these questions. First, he tells us what it is by telling us how it is performed. It is administered by water, by going down into the water; by a form of burial, a form of birth, a form of planting, a form of resurrection; by coming up out of the water, by having the body washed in water. That is plainer than man apart from the Bible terms can make it. My father, mother, brothers, and sister were all baptized. Who believes that any of them were 'sprinkled?' I saw a preacher take a man down into the water, bury him with Christ in baptism, plant him in the likeness of Christ's burial, raise him up as Christ was raised up, and bring him up out of the water. Who would say that he was not 'immersed?' I saw a woman buried a few days ago. Does any one think that I mean she had only a little dirt poured or sprinkled on her? Well, we see how people are baptized, but we want to know what it is for. Some say it is for one thing, some say it is for another; the Bible says it is for the remission of sins, into the Christ. That is the reason that God gives; that is the end of legislation and controversy; that ushers into the Christ. We have seen that the first division of the subject is complete in bringing the sinner to the Christ. The missionary department is a sufficient rule of faith; it tells the sinner to come to Christ, how to come, and why to come.

"Now, we take up the other division of the commission, the pastoral department, and shall attempt to show that it is a sufficient rule, or guide, in practice and public worship. Jesus said to the apostles: 'Teaching them all things whatsoever I have commanded you.' Paul says to the elders at Ephesus: 'I have taught you publicly, and from house to house.' In regard to the public worship of God, everything necessary to the unity and harmony of the service is properly arranged by the wisdom of God. He tells us what to do and how to perform all those duties pertaining to the worship. We are told to sing songs, psalms, and spiritual songs, and to make melody unto the Lord in our hearts; we are told to read the Scriptures, to pray for all men, to exhort, to edify the body of Christ, and to remember the Lord in the communion of the bread and the fruit of the vine. In giving the items, the manner of observance, and the end in view, he necessarily excludes man from modifying, adding to, or taking from what he has thus fixed. Some would change the order of singing by human additions; the same liberty might be taken with the prayers and the Lord's Supper. If we are allowed to speak and practice, as some say we should, where the Bible is silent, we might add other mediators to the one Mediator between God and man, and pray to them. The sin of the Catholic is not denying Christ, the only Mediator, but adding other mediators, human mediators. The great presumptuous sin of many churches to-day is not denying anything that is taught in the Bible, but adding to the perfect economy of grace that which is man's. The divine instructions which govern and regulate the affairs of the Lord's Supper exclude any additions of man. Christ took bread and the fruit of the vine, and that excludes all other things from the table. Some one might say: 'That has become stale and unpalatable to improved tastes; let us have meats and condiments of various flavors.' Suppose this is forced upon the church, and results in a division. Who is responsible? The Bible does not in specific terms say we shall not add to the elements of the Lord's Supper, neither does it forbid sprinkling babies; but we are not trying to restore Christianity upon the basis of what the Bible does not forbid.

"In conclusion, let me refer to what an inspired man says of faith and practice, of preaching the word and observing the ordinances: 'If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ.' We speak where the Bible speaks; but speaking as the Bible speaks involves closer adherence to the word. The latter implies and enjoins an order of observance. We may put the Spirit before the word; that is speaking where the Bible speaks, but not as it speaks, nor does it mean what the 'fathers' meant by the use of the aphorism. We may put repentance before faith, and, in a sense, speak where the Bible speaks; but when speaking as the Bible speaks, we reverse the order. The Bible says faith comes first; if any man speak, let him say the same thing. The Bible has an order in the arrangement of the terms of salvation, and those who preach the word must observe that order. James sums the whole of both faith and practice up in one sentence: 'So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.'"

Coal City, Ind.

W. J. BROWN.

Grant as a Laundryman.

General Grant, though a quiet man, had a strong sense of humor. How he once turned the tables upon a couple of practical jokers is thus told by an old soldier in Treasure Trove:

"It was during our advance upon Corinth. Several soldiers were talking together one day. A tall, ungainly raw recruit stepped up to them with a bundle of soiled clothes in his hand. 'Do you know where I can get this washing done?' he asked.

"Two of the group were practical jokers; a bright thought flashed into their heads, and, as the sequel shows, unfortunately found expression. 'O, yes, we know; just go up there with your bundle [pointing to the headquarters, of General Grant]. You will see a short, stout man [describing the General], who does washing. Take your bundle to him.'

"The recruit thanked them, and walked off in the direction indicated. He gained entrance to headquarters, and stood in the General's presence.

"'What can I do for you?' said General Grant.

"'I was directed here by a couple of soldiers. They told me that you did washing, and I have a bundle here.'

"General Grant probably enjoyed the situation, but his imperturbable face did not relax. He simply asked the question: 'Could you identify those men again?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Very well, you shall have the chance.'

"Turning to an orderly, he directed him to call a guard, go with the recruit to where the jokers were standing, ready to enjoy his discomfiture, and let him identify them.

"'Take the men to the guardhouse, give them this man's bundle of clothing, and make them wash it thoroughly. See that the work is well done.'

"The General was obeyed to the letter, and no more bundles of soiled clothes came to General Grant's headquarters."

A boiler without water will raise no steam. So with good principles; they will amount to nothing if not practiced.—Selected.

Home Reading.

GOING AFTER MOLLY.

Among the passengers going on board is a bright, well-grown boy of fifteen or sixteen years. He has no baggage, and there are numerous patches and threadbare spots about his clothing; but he carries himself well, and his clear eyes look frankly into those of his fellow-passengers.

He lingers for a moment near the gang plank, and then goes up the stairs, through the grand saloon, and out upon the upper deck. He seems to be perfectly familiar with the steamer, as he goes forward and selects a position from which he can command a good view of the East River. A few passengers are already on the upper deck, and others appear until all the available places are taken. Now and then there is an exclamation of pleasure or recognition as the steamer rounds the Battery and passes under the great bridge and on past Blackwell's Island.

The boy watches them eagerly, admiringly, familiarly, and is presently the center of a running fire of questions. He does not seem to be at all embarrassed by his prominence, and answers the questions easily and frankly. There is scarcely a place of note that escapes his keen scrutiny, and each of them is greeted with a bright glance of recognition. Suddenly he becomes conscious of a lady and little girl standing irresolutely near one of the doors of the grand saloon. At once he is on his feet and motioning them forward.

"Here's a good seat," he urges, eagerly. "I can sit on the rail just as well."

The lady smiles and thanks him, and lifts the little girl upon her lap.

"You like the river?" she observes graciously, as she notes the pleasure in his eyes.

"Yes, indeed. It almost seems like an old friend." Then, after a moment: "My father used to be second officer on this line. He often took me with him and told me about the different places."

"Is he —?" She pauses as she notices the shadow on his face.

"Yes'm. There ain't nobody but the children and me, now."

As the shores fade into vague outlines the passengers leave the deck, one after another, and reënter the saloon. At last they three are left in a group by themselves. Around them are vessels from all parts of the world, and plying back and forth in every direction are steamers and tugs and river craft of endless variety. The little girl watches them.

"When will they stop going, mamma?" she asks.

"Never." She draws the child closer and passes her hand softly over the brown curls. "They are always in motion. Even at night they are bringing and carrying things for us—coal and wood and all kinds of merchandise; they bring our letters and magazines, and take our friends from one place to another. They are very good boats, Jessie."

The child raises one of her chubby hands to her lips and gravely throws kiss after kiss toward the unconscious boats. The lady turns to the boy with a smile: "That is what she does for her friends when they go away," she says, softly.

The boy nods and looks at the child with warm interest in his eyes.

"I have a little sister about her age. I am going after her now."

"Jessie and I would like to have you tell us about her—that is, if you are willing," says the lady, pleasantly.

"I like to talk about Molly," with ill-concealed pride in his voice. "She is just as bright and cute. She knows her letters and can sing pretty little songs, and she isn't four years old yet." Then the flush leaves his face, and he adds, gravely: "But she had a hard time of it, poor little thing! Only she's so small she doesn't realize it."

"Has she been sick?"

"No; she has been in—in—away from us," with a slight break and hesitation in his voice. "You see, I was only thirteen years old when father and mother were lost. They were both on the boat that trip, and I was at home with the children. Mother and I used to take turns going." The lady looked sympathetic, and, after a moment, the boy went on: "There were three younger than me, and we had no money; so I tried hard as ever I could to get work. But Stonington isn't a good place for steady jobs, so I had to leave the children at —, with folks who'd look out for them, and come to New York. I sold papers until I could get money enough to hire a cheap room, and then went back after Phil. He's the next oldest to me, and is awful bright and quick. We did first rate, and after a while started a paper stand on the Bowery. Last year I sent for Mary. She's only ten years old, but she's a splendid housekeeper. We've got three rooms, and she looks after them and does our cooking. Phil sells papers on the street and in the afternoons helps me at the stand. Last fall we moved our stand up to Broadway. We've got a fine place in front of a big dry goods house, and make lots of money. We have thirty dollars in the bank."

"And now you are going after Molly?"

"Yes'm. We wanted to get rooms near our business before she came. It's nicer up that way. But we've got to give it up."

"Why?" There is real concern in the lady's voice as she asks the question. Something in the bright, independent face has interested her greatly.

"We ain't sure about our business. The dry goods house is going to be repaired, and the head clerk tells us we will have to go away next month. Maybe we can't get as good a place anywhere else, and if we don't, we'll have to be careful about our expenses. I wouldn't mind so much if it wasn't for the children. The street where we live ain't very nice, and I want to get away as soon as I can."

"Wouldn't the owner let you stay if you ask him?"

"I don't know. Mr. Ross has been very kind, and has bought lots of papers from us; but I wouldn't like to ask him after his clerk has told us to go away. If we can't find another good place, we can go back to our old corner on the Bowery."

There is a peculiar smile on the lady's face as she lifts the little girl from her lap and rises to her feet.

"Well, I wouldn't worry about it," she says, smilingly. "I think it will come out all right." Then, as she is about to turn away: "Where is Molly staying? I am well acquainted with Stonington, and am going there now to visit friends. Perhaps I might call on her."

But the boy suddenly draws his hat down over his eyes and appears not to hear. He hesitates a moment, and then crosses over to the other side of the boat. The lady looks at him wonderingly.

In the saloon she meets the captain. She is a frequent passenger on his boat, and he is well acquainted with her husband.

"Good evening, Mrs. Ross," he says, cordially. "I saw you talking with my young friend Charlie just now. How do you like him?"

"What! Do you know him?" eagerly. "I think he is a splendid boy. He is so straightforward and energetic; and then he is so fond of 'his children,' as he calls them. He has been telling me about taking them to New York."

"He is a manly fellow." The captain is silent a moment, and there is a trace of sadness in his voice as he proceeds. "His father was an old friend of mine and was my second officer for many years. He died at the post of duty. Charlie is very much like him."

"He seems to have an interesting family," says the lady, smiling. "He gave a good report of each of them. But I was surprised at his manner when I spoke of going to see Molly."

"Charlie is very sensitive, and does not like to speak about some things. But all his friends know, and I do not think he would mind my telling you. His father lost considerable money through an unfortunate indorsement, and there was nothing for the children. Charlie was only thirteen years old, and, of course, could not support them. They were sent to the poor farm, and he went away in search of work. I was in hard straits myself, and could not help them. That was only about two years ago, and since then Charlie has taken two of the children from the farm, and is now going after the third."

"No, indeed." There are tears in the lady's eyes now, and she clasps her little girl more closely as she thinks of the boy on deck. "He has been telling me about his news stand in front of the dry goods store," she says, smiling through her tears. "He did not know the owner was my husband. His stand shall not be disturbed; and I will speak to my friends and acquaintances about him. There shall be no lack of patronage in the future."—Our Young Folks.

VOLUNTEERS.

When Garibaldi was going out to battle he told his troops what he wanted them to do. When he had described what he wanted them to do, they said: "Well, General, what are you going to give us for all this?"

"Well," he replied, "I do not know what else you will get; but you will get hunger and cold and wounds and death. How do you like that?"

His men stood before him a little while in silence, and then threw up their hands and cried: "We are the men! We are the men!"

The Lord Jesus Christ calls you to his service and says: "I do not promise you an easy time in this world. You may have persecutions and trials and misrepresentations; but afterwards there comes an eternal weight of glory, and you can bear the wounds and bruises and misrepresentations when you have the reward afterwards." Have you not enthusiasm to cry out: "I am the man?"—Selected.

HOW BESSIE'S LIGHT SHONE.

It was a very dismal day. The sun was hidden by clouds, and every now and then little gusts of wind blew the rain against the windows, and moaned and sighed through the pine trees.

Bessie Deane stood at the window of the old farmhouse, drumming on the pane. She looked disconsolate—yes, actually cross—and once in a while a tear stole down her cheek and fell on the glass, as if in sympathy with the storm without.

"I never saw such a dark, lonesome, gloomy day in all my life—never," she said. "Papa is gone, mamma is sick with a headache, baby is cross, and here I am all alone. There isn't a single thing bright and pleasant, and I just think it is too bad."

Bessie's tears fell fast now, and her brown curls bobbed expressively up and down among the curtains. After she had cried a long time she became thoughtful, and began looking out of the window again. Presently she began to speak her thoughts: "Grandma says when I cry and think everything is awful lonesome, it is because I have forgotten something. She says if I would read my verses in the morning and try to practice them all day, I should not have time to be lonesome. I did forget this morning, and I believe I will go and read my verses now, just to pass away the time."

She quickly ran and got her verses and sat down in the big easy-chair to read them. As she read on, her face grew very sober, and she again indulged in her habit of thinking aloud: "They are all about us being the light of the world, and letting our light shine. I wonder if the lights are all gone out, that makes this such a dark, dismal day. I remember when the teacher gave us those verses she said: 'Now, children, remember, if the day is very dark without, you can make it very bright and sunshiny within by letting your light shine all day long. I do not believe my light has shone a bit all day, and this day needs it more than most others. I am going to try, right away, and see what I can do.'"

The little girl jumped up with a face far more cheerful than it had been a half hour before. Indeed, Bessie was like an April day, so full of changes was she; but after a little shower the sun often shone the brightest.

She did not have to wait long to find something to do, for baby was crying pitifully in the sitting room. She went in and took baby in her arms and sung to her until the tired little one had fallen asleep, then she went into her mamma's room.

Mamma was wide-awake and suffering severely with her head, but her first words made Bessie glad: "It was so thoughtful of my little girl to stop baby's crying when mamma's head ached so."

Bessie said nothing, but began bathing the aching head. Her little hands grew very tired, but she would not stop until she thought her mamma was asleep; then, after pulling down the shades, she stole out of the room and down stairs.

The clock struck five just as she entered the kitchen, and, remembering that it was nearly tea time, she began setting the table for her papa's supper.

When Bessie's papa came home and called her "Little Sunshine," and her mamma awoke much refreshed, and baby laughed and crowed after her nap, Bessie thought the world seemed very different to what it had been a few hours before, and she could hardly believe it when she looked out of the window and saw the rain pouring down as steadily as it had been in the early part of the afternoon.

"I guess it is because the lights are shining again inside that makes it so bright," she softly said.—Maude Glenn Colby, in Sunday School Messenger.

You will never run across a chance to do wrong without the chance to do right being there also.—Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JULY 12, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittances made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

THE FAITH OF THE CENTURION.

The centurion was a Gentile, but had, by association with the Jews, gained a knowledge of God, and had heard so much of Christ that he had full confidence in his power to heal the sick, not only by his personal presence, but through his word, even at a distance. Hence, when Jesus had started to go to his house, at the request of the Jews, he sent out messengers to meet him and to say to him: "I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. When Jesus heard it, he marveled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." (Matt. 8: 8-10.) This was exceedingly strong faith, and especially so when contrasted with that of the scribes and Pharisees, who had every opportunity to know who he was and to test his power, but who in the very face of all this rejected him.

Yet those people were very religious, very zealous for the religion of their fathers, as they claimed; but really their religion was founded on the traditions and opinions of men, but they were just as zealous for it as if it had all been divine. They were indeed very religious in their way, and in this same way the religion of thousands is leading them to reject Christ to-day—not because they are not devoted to their religion and exceedingly in earnest, for they are. They are like Paul said of the Jews of his time: "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10: 1-3.) This is a terrible arraignment of those who follow the wisdom of men instead of the wisdom of God. Those Jews were exceedingly zealous; they were workers, earnest workers. There was no lack of zeal nor of work on their part. Their religion stimulated them to go about, to work for their cause. Their trouble was that they went about to establish their own righteousness, not God's, and would not submit themselves to the righteousness of God. The righteousness ordained by God was before them, but they would not submit to it. They preferred their way, and went by their own preference rather than by the way God had ordained for them. Yet Paul loved them, and was exceedingly anxious that they might be saved; but he was not like many are these days who claim that people with such zeal and earnestness as they had will be saved, whether they do just what the word of God says or not. He certainly made the point very clear, on the other hand, that they would be lost. He was anxious for their salvation, but he did not claim it upon their zeal. Paul never claimed that any one could be saved who would not do the will of God, and no man to-day has the right to say any such thing. Jesus himself plainly taught that none would be saved except those who do the will of God. God's will is found only in his word, and no man can tell a thing in the world about God's will, except as it stands on record. The centurion did not have the will of God through Christ as to how to be saved, and did not do anything, except believe in the power of Christ to heal; and this he did voluntarily, and not by direct command at the time. In this he did what the Jews, who had much better advantages than he had, utterly refused to do. Indeed, he believed so strongly in the power of Christ to heal that he did not think he need come to his house in order to heal his servant. All he thought he need do was to speak the word, and his servant would be at once cured.

If everybody believed the words of Jesus that way to-day, all the world might be saved; but instead of that very many of the preachers of this age have no confidence whatever in many of the words spoken by Jesus and his inspired apostles. Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But these preachers do not believe it and will not tell the alien sinner to embrace it. Much sooner would they tell him something Jesus never did tell an alien sinner to do at all than to tell him to believe and be baptized. Jesus never required an alien to pray and be prayed for in order to be saved; yet these preachers would much rather tell them to do that than to tell them to believe and be baptized. Yet Jesus has spoken the word, and it has been standing on record for near nineteen hundred years; but it goes for naught with them. So far as they are concerned, Jesus might just as well have left that command off. They do not believe it, and will not repeat it to the alien in teaching him what to do to be saved.

They treat Peter and the Holy Spirit no better. When sinners, anxious to know what to do to be saved, asked the apostles what to do, Peter—or, rather, the Holy Spirit through him—said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This answer stands on record to-day; but it counts nothing in the world with very many people. With them that much of the New Testament might just as well have been left out. They will not repeat it to inquiring sinners to-day. They have no faith in this verse, and they will not repeat it. If some one else were to repeat it to their mourners, they would denounce it as Campbellism, or legalism, or something else of that sort. If the centurion had been seeking the salvation of his soul, and had been told by Jesus to do these things, he would not have hesitated at them for a moment. All Israel combined had no such faith. Neither have very many of the preachers of to-day any such faith. They discount the above passages as being of no value in the matter of securing salvation to the sinner. Faith like the centurion had will accept and rely upon anything that stands on record regarding salvation to man. It is no part of man's business to sit in judgment upon the word of God and pronounce some of it essential and some nonessential. Whenever a man does that, he assumes to be wiser than God, sets God aside, and presumes to dictate terms of pardon for the sinner, even to the Almighty himself.

Solomon says: "Every word of God is pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." (Prov. 30: 5, 6.) "Every word of God is pure." The Revised Version says: "Every word of God is tried." God's word has from the beginning been proved to be good for all it calls for. When God told Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden not to eat the forbidden fruit, he meant it; and when he said if they did, they should die, he meant that. So when Satan changed God's word, and they accepted the change as he made it, he was proved a liar, and Adam and Eve were shut out of the garden, and the way back into it was guarded against them, and they, shut out from the tree of life, died, as the Lord had said. Thus the word of God at the very beginning was tried, was tested, and proved to have all the power connected with it that was needed to bring every word of it to pass; and there has been no change in God's power in connection with his word from then till now. When Jesus commanded evil spirits to come out of men, they came; and when he commanded the storm on the lake to be still, it was done, and there was a great calm; when he commanded Lazarus to come forth from the grave, he came, and was alive again. God's hand has never waxed short. When Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he means it, every word, and has the power to fulfill that promise to every one that will obey the expressed requirements; and when men tell the penitent believer to do something God never said do and leave out what he did say, they change the word of God as decidedly as Satan did in the garden of Eden.

As Satan was proved a liar and God's word, as spoken, was executed upon Adam and Eve, what assurance can men have that it will not be executed now, both upon those that change his word and those that accept and act upon the change presented and rely upon that to save them? For Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." People who have the word of God have no excuse for allowing themselves to be deceived. Eve had the word of God, and allowed herself to be deceived, for the word of the Lord says she was deceived; but she died, all the same. It is awful for people to allow themselves to be deceived. If they do, the fact of being deceived will not shield them. Why not, then, have faith as the centurion, and believe and obey the word of God, and not the words of men? Thousands have waited for months and years for the Lord to pardon them, and pardon never came, and they died without hope at last, when they might have complied with what the word of the Lord says any day or hour and been saved, if they would have believed the word of God instead of the words of men. It is truly a grand thing to have faith in God and in his word and be willing to do what it requires. The centurion had full faith that whatever Jesus said would be done. All men in Bible lands have salvation offered to them, and can at once obey and be saved if they will; but if they allow themselves to be deceived and rely upon something else, they have no promise.

Again, the Spirit of God speaks to men and tells them precisely what to do to be saved, and his words are found in the New Testament, in the preaching of the apostles, who spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance. When they obey what the Spirit requires them to do, they have the positive promise of pardon. But uninspired men, instead of telling sinners what the Spirit says, tell them that the Spirit will secretly enter their hearts and convert them; and when they say this, they change the word of God, as certainly as the serpent did in the garden of Eden, and as certainly turn them from the word as the serpent did Eve, for the word of God says not one single word about any such work of the Spirit nor gives one single example of such a thing ever having been done since time began. As Eve lost the garden of Eden and her life, is it not indicative that people that follow the words of men instead of the words of the Holy Spirit may fail of salvation now? It is an awful thing for men to give their own words to the people instead of the word of God. When they do so they are stealing the word of God from them and substituting their own words instead.

The disciples of Christ need just the sort of faith the centurion had, as long as they live. They need always to realize that the word of God is tried, and that it means just what it says, and that exactly what it says will be brought to pass. They should realize that if they do just what the word of God says, they are certain to be saved; but if they turn aside to something else, they will find themselves at last under the condemnation of the word, for it is by the word of God that they are to be judged at the last day, and the word will condemn all that disregard it, as it did Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. But the promise of safety and salvation is certain to all that believe the word of God and lovingly and earnestly obey it. E. G. S.

With all the appliances of our churches and modern methods of Christian activity the gospel will never reach the people until it is carried into their homes by consecrated Christian workers. It was the primitive method of reaching the masses. Paul, in Ephesus was a "house-to-house" preacher, as well as a public teacher. "Daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." "In every house." This is the distributive method of the apostles. A return to that method would be a return to primitive power. There are tens of thousands of people in the cities and the country who can be reached only by the individual finding the individual. Men are saved by the gospel, and social reforms can never rid the churches of their obligation to give the gospel to the individual. "Go" is the message to the church before she can say "come" to the soul.—Western Recorder.

CHRISTIAN EDIFICATION.

Investigation and discussion are essential to true discipleship to Christ. The Bible has milk—the sincere or pure milk of the word—for babes. It contains also stronger meat for those of maturer years in Christ. In other words, there are lessons in the Bible for beginners in Christ. There are questions continually arising in individual and church experience that require constant and earnest study. The progress of divine providence develops new questions, new phases of work, that require the constant study of the word of God to apply its teachings and wisdom to these new phases of life as they present themselves. So constant investigation and study of the Bible are needed. In these questions that arise differences among brethren will develop themselves that will require study, investigation, and comparison to come at the truth and avoid hurtful friction. These differences of apprehension will arise from different degrees of knowledge of the subject of study, the different standpoints from which each views the subject, and the different temperaments and tastes of the persons studying. It is well that these exist, so that the facts and truths, as seen by each one, may be studied, comparisons made, and so a better and fuller understanding of the subject be gained. Perfect sameness of thought between different persons would be monotonous. If every one thought and saw exactly alike, there would be no companionship. It would be as though a man were alone. If Eve had seen everything from exactly the same standpoint that Adam did, she would have been no company for him. This does not mean there may not be perfect unity in knowledge and work because there is this diversity. The diversity is an incentive and help by a comparison of what and how different persons see things to a full understanding, and in the fullness of understanding the full knowledge of and complete unity in the truth are found. Persons may be one in judgment and thought because they are ignorant of truth. This unity in ignorance is not desirable. They may be one by a full understanding of a subject viewed from every standpoint. Unity in Christ, in the knowledge of the truth, is the desirable unity, the one for which Jesus prayed.

In order that persons who see things from different standpoints may help each other, their interchange and comparison of views must be kind and with the desire to each learn how things appear to the vision and standpoint of the other. Had Adam called Eve a knave and ridiculed her as a fool because she saw things with a woman's eyes, from a woman's standpoint, and with a woman's faculties and tastes, they would not have been very helpful in their companionship. Seeing things from different standpoints and comparing views is like a man viewing an object on all sides, outside and in, to understand it. These comparisons should be kindly sought and given, not in a captious or fault-finding spirit. The great trouble in learning truth and coming to unity in the truth is an unwillingness to compare thoughts and ideas in a kindly spirit. A man sees another does not see things as he does and he concludes he is insincere or actuated by sordid motives, and he denounces him personally and cuts off his opportunity to help the other or for the other to help him.

A great trouble in arriving at truth is, we look at things so much and only from our own standpoint, we let our interests warp and blind our judgments. Preachers sometimes try a certain work and fail at it. We are naturally disposed not to blame ourselves for our failures. We look without instead of within, and we soon persuade ourselves the wrong is in others or the work. We so often see men favor certain causes so long as they can be supported in the line of work; but if they fail in it, they are so easily convinced it is wrong, and are liable to be intolerant of those who do not learn as fast as they do or see as far as they see. It is a repetition of the fable of the fox and the grapes. These are tendencies inherent in all men that need to be guarded. They of course show themselves stronger in some than in others. Often, too, the most unstable are the most dogmatic and intolerant. It is no sign of steadfastness to see a man positive and dogmatic in assertion. Dogmatic and vehement assertion is often the sign of instability, and often the more ignorant, the more certain and intolerant men are. Nine times out of ten our failures arise from ourselves, from within, not from others or from without; and when we fail at a work, that work is not necessarily unscriptural. It may be we are not suited to the work, while others are. All the apostles did not labor in the same way, but each according to his own talent. There is within the scriptural order and the scriptural work ample breadth and ample work to occupy the talent and time of all. Each should study his own talent and the work he is fitted to perform, and not oppose or complain of others who succeed in work in which we fail.

Calling persons ugly names, as a rule, does not improve them. Generally it shows an ugly spirit in those who call them, and that of itself cuts off the opportunity of helping them. To call one preaching for a church a "pastor," in an ugly sense, or the elders "figureheads" and other ugly names generally does not put them in a humor to listen profitably to him so calling them. To charge those who preach for the congregation with hunting easy and paying jobs will not be regarded as truthful by many. As a rule, successful evangelists get more money than those who preach regularly at one place, especially those who preach for old and established churches; and save for taking a man from his home, the evangelistic work requires much less study, anxiety, and care. Some accuse evangelists of following that work, and especially holding meetings at old and wealthy churches, for the sake of the money they get. It is unbrotherly and sinful to take up such reports and repeat them. If there is any appearance of ground for them, the duty is to warn the brother of this and of the danger, that he may guard against the temptation to wrong and against the very appearance of it. This should be done in love and good will, and I do not think those who preach for congregations are more liable to this than those who hold meetings. Then when we try to correct the mistakes of a brother we weaken our influence with him when we overstate his case, ridicule him or his work, or make it worse than it is, or claim superior wisdom for ourselves. "Restore such a one in a spirit of meekness; looking to thyself, lest thou also be tempted." (Gal. 6: 1, R. V.) Then this complaining and fault-finding spirit makes a bad impression for him who does it. People call him a "sorehead," and think he has a grievance.

It is just as important to have the spirit of the apostles as it is to have the forms of their service. Now, the apostles, especially the apostle Paul, had to "hustle" for a living, as it is called; but did any one ever hear of their complaining of their lot or grumbling at the brethren for not supporting them? When cast into prison, they counted it all joy to suffer shame for His name, and Paul approved the Philippians' helping: "Not that I seek for the gift; but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." (Phil. 4: 17, R. V.) Let us cultivate the apostolic spirit in these matters as well as the apostolic order in preaching.

We have written these things because we wish to strip this question of the edification of the churches of all personalities and unkindnesses, and, taking it for granted that others are as anxious to learn and do the truth as we are, so treat them, and let us examine and see what rule the Scriptures lay down for the growth and spread of the churches of Christ.

The instruction and activity of every member, male and female, is the end to be aimed at in the church work. "What rule do the Scriptures give to attain this end, especially so far as the work of a regular preacher is concerned?" is the question brethren seem now to have before them. It is one that ought to be carefully studied, and let us learn God's will. While I am sure that which will make each member feel his own responsibility and take the most active part in all the work and worship of the congregation, according to his ability, is what God desires, I have never been able to find an exact rule in scripture defining how this is to be done, how much or how little preaching is best. Too much gives no opportunity to call out the members; too little sometimes seems to leave them to die. Who can give the Bible rule? D. L.

Love to God and love to man, some one has said, transfigure the commonest service, as a gray and dreary cloud is transfigured by the rays of the setting sun. The little deeds that are done without ostentation or thought in the home circle, in the school, or on the street may seem small at the time, both to the doer and the receiver, but they may exert an influence that will be immortal. "Much that a mother does for a child, a doctor or nurse for his patients, is very lowly service that would be hard and repulsive but for love. It was such service that made the names of Florence Nightingale, John Howard, and many others shine like stars in the sky."—Our Yung Folks.

Every sin is rejection of Christ.—Selected.

THOSE TO BE FEARED.

Teachers who do not fully believe in the Bible as God's word are more to be feared than rank infidels. Those who claim to be the friends of Christ are regarded as trustworthy, so they have more influence over the people than those who are the avowed enemies of Christ. Moreover, the sapping process is more insidious and more far-reaching. Those ready to receive that part of the truth which is to their liking and ready to reject that which opposes their preconceived theories are sure to weaken, and not strengthen, the faith of others. The man who believes in the miraculous conception and resurrection of Christ should have no difficulty in accepting all miracles. To accept one miracle is to accept all, for all come to us equally accredited. A miracle is that which astonishes and is something which does not appeal to the reason. Where reason begins, faith ends. "For we walk by faith, not by sight."

* * *

The greater the influence we have, the greater is the responsibility which rests upon us. Fearful is our responsibility if we destroy the faith of any Christian in the word of God. While semi-infidels may overthrow the faith of some, they can never destroy the word of God; it will outlive the combined attacks of hell and earth; it shall live and abide forever; it is the only book that has grown more influential through all the ages. Neither higher nor lower criticism has ever been able to harm it. The professed friends of the Bible should never weaken the cause of Christianity by refusing to accept the statement of the whale swallowing Jonah. Because we cannot understand how God preserved unharmed the three Hebrew children in the burning, fiery furnace, we should not refuse to believe that he did so. We do not understand how the world came into being, but because we do not understand this, we do not say that the world does not exist. Not one of us understands his own creation, still we do not refuse to enjoy life. There is just a little that we do understand, yet we do not refuse to enjoy the many beautiful things all about us. We do not refuse to eat because we do not know all about the laws of digestion. We cannot explain how a part of the food which we eat makes hair, a part makes bone, and a part makes muscles; but no one ceases to eat because he cannot explain this. For the same reason we should not refuse to believe that "God is" because we cannot fully comprehend his wonderful being. We could not worship a God that we could fully comprehend.

* * *

But neither the higher critics nor the lower critics are the ones to be feared. Lower living is doing far more to damage the cause of Christ than all the criticisms of higher critics. The Pentateuch will live when those who have written of the mistakes of Moses are forgotten. The dishonesty, immorality, and indifference of the professed followers of Christ are doing more to injure his cause than everything else combined. They are destroying the vitality of the church. Christ is being betrayed in the house of his friends. The godly life, the sacrificing example will do far more in winning souls to Christ than beautiful words that fall from the lips of the eloquent speaker. The noble, beautiful life of the consecrated Christian is perfectly irresistible. Its influence falls as gently and softly on the tender conscience as the snowflake on the bosom of the placid river. Its influence may reach round the globe and fill the nations of earth with gladness in the years to come. Higher critics may sneer at the word of God, but with earnest, godly men and women the church will move grandly forward to victory.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Two of Life's Teachers.

Life has two teachers—Example and Experience. Experience is a most excellent instructor, but, as has been said, his school fees are very high. Example gives his lessons in less notable and perhaps less effective ways, but he is more considerate of the welfare of his scholars. Experience throws us into a deep pool of water, and says: "Now swim." Example goes along beside us, puts his hand under our shoulder, and says: "This is the way to do it." Experience may be the teacher more to be trusted, but Example is often the teacher to be the more desired. The bold man goes to the school of Experience, and if, in the end, he does not repent it, he at least appreciates his rashness. The wise man learns by Example, and his wisdom is justified of her children.—Sunday School Times,

Sincere Prayer.

There have been articles written on this subject that are worthy of our consideration, but too much cannot be said on a subject of so much importance as this. Sincere prayer is the key that unlocks the treasury of God and showers manifold blessings down upon the followers of Christ. How many Christians can speak in the language of David? "Evening and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice." (Ps. 55: 17.)

This shows that we should not neglect to pray, though we are assailed by the tempter and oppressed by the wicked; though our heartaches and troubles may be many, we should let our prayers ascend to the hill of the Lord, and he will surely hear. I am persuaded that there has never been a sin committed while the subject was engaged in earnest prayer. So if we keep earnestly engaged in the work the Lord has assigned us, we have no time to trouble our minds with evil thoughts or ungodly conversations, but will always find pleasure in his service.

We are often asked if the Lord will hear the prayer of a sinner. So long as a man continues in sin with a desire to do so and without giving any heed to the earnest invitations presented by the word of God, his prayers will not be answered; though he may oftentimes feel the need of a Savior and pray for help, he will never get it so long as he clings to the evil ways of the world. "Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." (John 9: 31.)

After a person has forsaken the ways of the wicked and turned his back on sin, with a desire to seek the ways of the righteous and follow in the footsteps of Jesus, even before he has thoroughly learned them, the Lord has promised to hear him and lead him by the hand. We find that Cornelius' prayers were heard before he knew all the ways of the Lord. Two men went up in the temple to pray. One was a Pharisee, the other was a sinner; the sinner was justified rather than the other.

Prayer elevates the soul of man from earthly things to heavenly and divine things, and steadies the feet of the wayfaring pilgrim on the Rock of eternal ages. Now, let us look at a sincere, earnest Christian. He does not stand in the way of sinners nor sit in the seat of the scornful, but his delight is in the ways of the Lord, and on his law he meditates both day and night; he is nourished and fed by the word of God; with the aid of God's Spirit, bearing witness with his spirit, he draws nigh to God in prayer, and God draws near to him, and he grows to be more and more like Jesus, being fed upon the sincere milk of the word.

Now, brother, if you want a receipt to preserve your soul and to secure the anchor both sure and steadfast, here is one that the millions of the Goulds or Rockefellers could not buy: Put yourself daily in the service of the Lord—be what God requires, do what he commands, live as he directs, and trust him for what he has promised—and the reward is yours. When your soul is shivering and your spirit is about to faint before the onset of the unfriendly host, flee to him who doeth all things well, and he will shelter you in time of storm; when you feel yourself growing cold and careless, you are getting in a serious condition and it is high time to flee from a hot

The Delicious Fragrance

Royal Baking Powder biscuit whets the appetite. The taste of such a biscuit—
sweet, creamy, delicate and crispy—is a joy to the most fastidious.

ROYAL Baking Powder improves the flavor and adds to the healthfulness of all risen flour-foods. It renders the biscuit, bread and cake more digestible and nutritious.

Royal Baking Powder makes hot breads wholesome. Food raised with Royal will not distress persons of delicate or enfeebled digestion, though eaten warm and fresh.

Imitation baking powders almost invariably contain alum. Alum makes the food unwholesome.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

to God for refuge. Read, think, study, and meditate sincerely upon God's word; pray earnestly; for these are the only links that bind and bring us into relationship with him. When these communicating lines are broken down, all communication and connection with him sinks into oblivion, and the world alone, with its great powers and temptations, influences you then; but with these you can climb to the throne of God's grace and taste the water of life, as clear as crystal. While the filthy, sin-stained world below is rolling at your feet, you breathe the pure atmosphere of his love, and the light of his face shall dawn on your pathway.

Jesus prayed in the garden, and such an earnest prayer. Can we imagine the great desire that he had for us to follow in his footsteps, ever looking unto him the author and finisher of our faith? Paul prayed three days and three nights, and did not eat nor drink. Examples are too numerous for us to mention all of them. There is that poor, sinful woman who came to Jesus in Simon's house, bowed down at his feet, and began to bathe them with her tears. The Savior said: "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven." Everything seems to praise the name of the Lord, from the smallest insect to the largest mammal of the land; even the flowers of the mountain and vale seem to be incessantly singing: "Blessed is the name of the Lord." Then why should not we who claim to be followers of him be always in his service? By continually praying we will receive such blessings as he has promised to the faithful.

Our work in sowing the seed of the kingdom causes sinners to come flocking home and makes angels rejoice. May we be one in Christ, as he prayed for us to be. Let us always watch and pray, for we know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh. C. F. GRIGGS.

Olds, Tenn.

Virginia Jottings.

Revivalism in modern times does not seem to work very much lasting good. The revivalist preacher, as a rule, is larger the first time than ever afterwards. It seems that Sam. P. Jones was not an exception to the rule in the city of Nashville, Tenn. His last visit was less praised and more censured than any preceding one of the many meetings which he had held in that city.

Mr. D. B. Strouse, a Sanctification revivalist preacher and "lawyer-evangelist," came to East Radford and pitched his tent just before the third Sunday in May, 1900, and began operations, expecting to create a sensation. When there before, some years ago, there was considerable excitement, people going ten or twelve miles to hear the new revivalist. This time, however, although he advertised as if the Holy Ghost was preaching more powerfully through him than ever before, he remained only a short time, and moved eastward.

On Saturday before the second Sunday in June I visited the church of Christ at Draper, Pulaski County, Va., where I preached on Saturday night and also on Lord's day. The church there is not doing as well as it might if all were united in their work. One cause of trouble is about the preaching. A preacher by the name of Shelburne—J. O. Shelburne, I believe—is preaching there occasionally, to whom some object. The ground of objection seems to be not on account of his preaching, but because he is identified with the organ and societyism in the worship and work of the church. Like many others, he claims that he would not favor the organ in worship if a single one objected to its use, so I was told. Of course that is only the same old song which has been sung so long. All ought to know by this time what that means. I noticed in the proceedings of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society in Richmond, Va., last fall that J. O. Shelburne was there and united with the society. He is a son of Samuel Shelburne, who was a son of Silas Shelburne, "a pioneer preacher," as some would express it, in the Old Dominion for many years. The Shelburnes are of preaching stock, but it seems that all the grandsons of the old sire belong to the organ and society side of the question. The great objection to nearly all society workers and advocates of the organ in the worship is that they do not preach what they practice, as they ought. If they would come out publicly and contend for those things, when they would very frequently be unable to get those that do not believe in them to go along with them; but instead of that, they preach very good doctrine on how to come into the church and sometimes on how to live afterwards, and then in the private circle they never let an opportunity for advocating the organ and societyism pass by unimproved. It is certainly sad to contemplate the many causes of division and consequent weakness in the church as seen at the present time. J. T. SHOWALTER.

Snowville, Va.

An Industrial School for Japan.

For a year or two we have been praying over it and thinking about it. The Lord has laid it upon the hearts of others to think of the same thing, and, without knowing our purposes, they have advised us to take up such a work.

One of the essential things in Christian character is to teach the people to be independent and to follow honest occupations for necessary uses. We would like to start a work in Japan that would enable young men and others to sustain themselves while being taught the Scriptures and some of the useful branches. We have some seven hundred dollars on hand that we are willing to devote to that end. Those who are most interested in it think we ought to have fifteen hundred dollars more.

We have been urged to solicit for this fund while among the churches. This does not commend itself to me. I can only let the matter be known, and leave it with the Lord to stir up his people to do what in his sight seems best. As has been heretofore, I desire this also to be a spontaneous and free giving. All offerings given for this purpose will be set apart to that end till the time comes to begin the work. J. M. M'CALEB.

Her Face
Her face was marred with freckles, his face was sore from shaving. Both were quickly cured with Heiskell's Ointment
the specific for all skin disorders, slight or severe. 50 cents a box.
Heiskell's Soap
Keeps the skin soft, smooth and healthy. Price 25 cents. Sample free.
Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Send us a new subscriber.

Notes from Arkansas.

We are having plenty of rain. Corn cotton, wheat, and oats are fine. The fruit crop will be a good one.

There is a large cotton seed oil mill being built at Hope.

I sold my little farm, near Hope, for six hundred dollars cash. We moved into town and went into the hotel business and are doing better than we anticipated. We keep all sound gospel preachers free of charge.

The Methodists held a regular old-fashioned, crazy, "knock-down-and-drag-out" meeting at Hope some time back.

The brethren at Nashville, Center Point, and Corinth have arranged with preaching brethren to hold their annual meetings. Brother T. R. Burnett will hold the meeting at Corinth, Brother R. W. Officer will hold the meeting at Center Point, and Brother James W. Zachary will hold the meeting at Nashville.

The writer will hold meetings at Blue Bayou, Green Plains, Billstown, and Independence Hall.

Brother John W. Denton, of Roxton, Tex., will hold meetings at Nathan and Murfreesboro.

Brother W. H. George, of Barren Fork, will hold meetings at various points in Pike County this summer.

Brother J. M. Ratliffe tells me that he will visit Northern Arkansas and Southern Missouri and spend the summer holding meetings.

Former Governor Bob Taylor, of Tennessee, delivered one of his famous lectures in the opera house at Hope. The admittance fee was one dollar per chair. The people filled the house, and Mr. Taylor carried off hundreds of dollars, and he went on his way rejoicing. A few days later Miss Lula Thomson, of Illinois, delivered a lecture in the same city on home missionary work. The house was about one-third full. At the close of the lecture the hat was passed around, and the good, free-hearted, liberal, cheerful givers of Hope "chipped in" the big sum of two dollars and fifteen cents, and the good lady went on her way weeping.

Hope, Ark. G. W. SPURLOCK.

Necessity of Unity.

One very marked characteristic of Paul's ministry was his ceaseless effort to have the churches maintain thorough unity in mind, in spirit, in doctrine, and in activity. He seems to have been in constant dread lest by some means there should arise a division of thought, of feeling, and of action in some of the churches; and whenever, in spite of his exhortations and warnings, there was a division, he was inexpressibly saddened and alarmed. He would at once hasten to heal the division. He knew that the devil was sure to take advantage of the least division that occurred, and by it weaken the church greatly, and bring a reproach upon the good cause. Paul knew that there was not only great power in a cordial brotherly unity in every church, but also that it was a supreme necessity for the highest welfare of Christ's kingdom. He regarded such a unity as being a most potent factor in Christianizing the communities in which the churches stood.

Notice his earnest words to the church at Corinth, which was then in a somewhat divided state: "I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

He pleaded for a perfect unity of mind, of purpose, of action; then the church would be a mighty power in that community. It would have a far-reaching influence. The gospel would have a blessed freedom in its God-given course. It would be a weighty argument which would convince the ungodly of the heavenliness of Christ's kingdom as represented by the believing disciples. It is patent to everybody that when a church is rent asunder by contentions and unbrotherly strife it is such a spectacle as to cause the ungodly to mock at the professions of love which are made by Christians. Whole communities have been morally blighted for many years by the miserable divisions which have occurred even in one church, and in many cases the divisions have been occasioned by some small matter, some dispute over a point of no great importance. Remember that the devil always magnifies little differences of opinion; or order, so that he can get a church sharply divided; and then is his opportunity to damn souls. O, sacrifice everything but the truth itself for the sake of a strong and advancing unity of the church!

C. H. WETHERBE.

For India Sufferers.

The following amounts were sent to Brother C. C. Drummond, Hurda, C. P., India: Church of Christ, Granville, Tenn., $13.50; Mrs. Cora Brumley, Granville, Tenn., 50 cents; "A Sister," Kelly's Ferry, Ky., 50 cents; Unknown, $5; church of Christ at Forestville, Cal., $6; church of Christ at Jericho, Tenn., $4.25; church of Christ at Onward, Tenn., $1.45; church of Christ at Quebeck, Tenn., $2; "A Sister," Bethpage, Tenn., $1; Tenth Street church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., $22.50; Unknown, Slaughtersville, Ky., $1;

Just The Blues.

Many a woman dresses to go out, feels irresolute, sits down, and falls into a fit of despondent musing. Ask her what's the matter, and she'll probably answer "just the blues." And what are the blues? Only another name, in general, for a disordered liver and a diseased stomach. Cleanse the liver, heal the stomach, purify the blood, and there'll be no more blues. It can be done by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This medicine puts the diseased organs of digestion and nutrition into a condition of sound health. It eliminates from the blood all impure and poisonous substances, and cleanses the clogged liver. It contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

"I had liver complaint for the past fifteen years, complicated with dyspepsia and gall stones," writes Mrs. N. Bernier, of 401 Elm St., Oshkosh, Wis. "I doctored with seven of our prominent doctors, and not one or all of them have done me the good, nor begun to do what your medicines have. I have used three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, one vial of his 'Pleasant Pellets,' and one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and have gained about eighteen pounds since I first began to take these remedies."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

R. A. Lowry, Florida, $3; church of Christ at Wakita, O. T., $5; Cash, 25 cents; Mrs. Eubanks, Bowling Green, Ky., 75 cents; S. F. Morrow, Kentucky, $3; church of Christ at Wier, Tenn., $7.80; C. W. Doggett, Pennsylvania, $5. Total, $82.50.

India.

Since my last report up to June 16, 1900, I have received the following amounts for India: Brother M., Nashville, Tenn., $2; church of Christ at Scott's Station, Ky., $1.50; G. D. A., Dixon Spring, Tenn., $5; church of Christ at Guthrie, Ky., $8.10; church of Christ at Fayetteville, Tenn., $10; church of Christ at Berea, near Franklin, Tenn., $6.66; New Lasea church of Christ, Maury County, Tenn., $5; John G. E. and wife, McComb, Miss., $1.50; Mrs. J. G. H., Buechel, Ky., $2; C. M. C. and certain brethren, Lockett, Ga., $4.50. Total amount up to July 2, 1900, $46.26. I forwarded the same to Dr. C. C. Drummond, Hurda, C. P., India.

I clip from the Nashville American of July 2 the following: "The prospect for India, however, is most sad. Of the two annual rains, one was due on June 15, 1900. Only slight rains have, thus far, fallen. In any event, the need of relief will be very urgent for months to come; since, even if abundant rains fall, no harvests can be gathered until next October. Accordingly, while deeply grateful for all the generous aid already given, the committee ventures, in behalf of the sufferers, to hope that the aid may be continued."

I will be glad to continue to forward the offerings of the churches so long as this great distress continues. I can be reached at any time if addressed care of Gospel Advocate Publishing Company, 232 North Market street, Nashville, Tenn. J. M. M'CALEB.

B. Y. P. U. Convention, Cincinnati, O., July 12-15, 1900. Reduced Rates via Southern Railway.

On account of the Annual Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, to be held in Cincinnati, O., on July 12-15, 1900, the Southern Railway will sell tickets from points on its lines to Cincinnati and return at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold on July 10, 11, and 12, 1900, with final limit to return until July 18, 1900, and by depositing these tickets with joint agent at Cincinnati on or before July 14, 1900, and upon payment of a fee of fifty cents, the final limit may be extended until August 1, 1900. The schedules and sleeping car service afforded by the Southern Railway en route to Cincinnati are unexcelled.

For further information, call on Southern Railway ticket agent.

FACTS ABOUT PAINT When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

BLYMYER BELL'S BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

BELLS Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

We do all kinds of printing. Write for prices.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood. If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED. CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING. COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS. NASHVILLE, TENN.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School, ROUTE NO. 1. NASHVILLE, TENN.

HUSTLING YOUNG MAN can make $60 per month and expenses. Permanent position. Experience unnecessary. Write quick for particulars. CLARK & CO., 4th and Locust Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197

Chicago, Illinois

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

General News.

More than three-fourths of the offices in Cuba are now filled by Cubans.

Col. Robert E. Coxe, a veteran of the Mexican War, died in Huntsville, Ala.

Nearly a hundred people were killed and maimed in a street car accident in Tacoma, Washington.

Thirty years ago there were only about twenty-five explosive compounds known; now there are more than eleven hundred.

Four children were killed outright and a number injured at Philadelphia by the explosion of dynamite crackers on July 4, 1900.

The production of aluminum in the United States last year did not greatly exceed that of the previous year, when the output was five million two hundred thousand pounds.

The largest nugget of gold ever found on the North American continent was recently picked up in the Klondike. It weighed seventy-seven ounces, and was valued at thirteen thousand five hundred dollars.

An agreement between the St. Louis Transit Company and its former employees was signed by the representatives of the Transit Company and by the executive committee of the employees, which ends the strike.

The United States battle ship Oregon, which ran ashore off the island of Hoo Kie in the Miao Tao group, thirty-five miles northeast of Chefu, on June 28, 1900, has been floated, and is expected to reach Port Arthur.

The phylloxera destroyed four hundred and fifty thousand acres of vineyards in Spain in 1899. Vines in Spain or France are not worth cultivating unless they are grafted with the American vine, which renders them proof against the insect.

The National Conference of Superintendents and Principals of Schools for the Deaf met in Talladega, Ala., the seat of that State's institutions for the deaf and blind. Almost every State in the Union was represented, and the discussions were very interesting.

A German authority estimates that almost a third of humanity speak the Chinese language; that the Hindoo language is spoken by more than 100,000,000; the Russian, by 89,000,000; while the German is spoken by 57,000,000 tongues; the Spanish, by 48,000,000.

Several rich deposits of pyrites, a very scarce and valuable mineral, have been discovered near Athens, Ala. An expert from the iron region of Birmingham has tested the mineral and pronounced it excellent. The outcroppings of this mineral are found in the northern part of the county.

Wheat thrashing has begun in Sumner County, Tenn., and farmers report the yield very good. A great many thought the wheat had been damaged by the wet weather, but such is not the case. The crop is very large, and prices offered are reasonably good. The potato crop is good, but prices are extremely low.

The ceremonies connected with the unveiling of the equestrian statue of Washington, the gift of the Association of American Women for the Presentation of the Statue of Washington to France, passed off according to programme and under favorable circumstances. The United States Ambassador, Gen. Horace Porter, presided and delivered an address.

The official Messenger of St. Petersburg prints an imperial ukase, providing in a large measure for the abolition of banishment to Siberia. In May, 1899, the Czar commissioned the Minister of Justice to draw up a law abolishing such banishment. The Minister's draft, as finally sanctioned by the council of the empire, has been signed by the Czar, and the law is now gazetted.

The losses sustained in the fire at the docks of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company at Hoboken, N. J., are conservatively placed at ten million dollars. The loss of life, while merely guesswork at even this late hour, will probably reach as high as two hundred, and there are more than three hundred men, badly burned, in the hospitals in New York, Hoboken, and Jersey City.

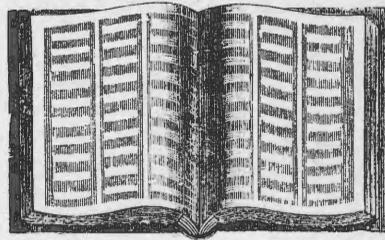

Rear Admiral John W. Philip, commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, died of heart disease. During the war with Spain Admiral Philip commanded the battle ship Texas, and participated in the destruction of Cervera's fleet, as well as in the other important naval movements in the West Indies during that war. Upon being raised to grade of rear admiral by the passage of the vaval personnel bill he became commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

"Not a single foreigner is now alive in Peking" is the latest Chinese report which has reached Shanghai. Earlier reports from the same sources describe the condition of the British legation as something awful. It is said that the rooms of the legation were filled with sick and wounded, the killed lying unburied in heaps. This report comes in different ways as yet; and as it is not confirmed by official reports, it is hoped that it may prove untrue.

The consensus of opinion among military and naval authorities is that it will require at least fifty thousand men to rescue the Europeans in Peking. The allies will have to hold Taku in strength, and the occupation of strategic points on the way to Tien-tsin will be mostly difficult. Severe fighting continues around Tien-tsin. Admiral Seymour is reported to have been wounded in a pitched battle. Reports from the surrounding country show that proclamations urging the massacre of foreigners and native Christians have been posted on the walls of missions.

As a result of recent consultations of the Secretary of War with Lieutenant General Miles, commanding the United States Army, and Major General Wood, commanding the Division of Cuba, orders have been issued for the return to the United States from Cuba, as soon as possible, of the Second, Fifth, and Eighth regiments of infantry. These regiments are scattered over the island, and probably will not be able to start home for several days. They will be brought to the port of New York, and their later stations will be determined before they reach the port.

Hurricanes, cloud-bursts, and thunderstorms are reported from a number of places in Germany. Warzenburg, Bavaria, was visited by a hurricane which destroyed a large building and killed six persons. A hurricane did great damage in the vicinity of Elberfeld, especially at Freneberg and Oligs. Several lives were lost. In the vicinity of Cassel cloud-bursts destroyed the harvests and drowned several persons and a large number of cattle. Lightning struck eighteen laborers in Krojanten, near Koenitz, and also struck and killed a whole family

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

NO.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
33020	$ 25	Readers and Writers' Edition— Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
		Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

named Mikowski, at Goose Lelearnitz, near Dantzie.

The nonsectarian college of primary and secondary education was opened in Manilla in the presence of Judge Taft, president of the civil commission, and his colleagues. Judge Taft spoke in fitting and effective terms of the significance of the event. The institution is the first educational enterprise in the Philippines that is not under the control of the priests and that looks for support to the voluntary contributions of the people. Five hundred pupils have already been enrolled and many children are leaving the schools of the priests to enter the college. The American educational department supplies text-books on the easiest possible conditions.

The Democratic National Convention to nominate candidates for President and Vice President met in Kansas City, Mo., on July 4, 1900. A platform was adopted declaring opposition to imperialism and trusts and in favor of the coinage of silver at sixteen to one, and general opposition to the Republican administration. Mr. Bryan was nominated by a unanimous vote for President, and Adlai Stevenson, who was Vice President with Cleveland, was nominated for Vice President. As it was well understood before the convention met that Bryan would be the nominee for President, the interest chiefly turned upon the nominee for Vice President. Hill, of New York, seemed to be a great favorite, but did not desire the nomination, so they finally centered upon Stevenson.

Heavy rains fell last week over a large portion of the South Atlantic, Central and Gulf States, and East Tennessee and Ohio Valleys, which districts had already suffered much from excessive moisture. In the Southern States oats in shock have sustained much damage as a result of heavy rains, which have also injured the unharvested crop in the Central Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. Over nearly the whole of the central and eastern portions of the cotton belt the weather has been unfavorable to cotton, which is largely overrun with grass and weeds, some fields in Mississippi and South Carolina having been abandoned. In North Carolina, Florida, and on uplands in Tennessee the condition of the crop is more favorable. In Texas it is generally clean and making good growth, although very irregular, and is needing rain over the central and western parts of the State,

Among the passengers on the Alki from Skaguay was Lieut. J. S. Brown, of the Eighth United States Cavalry, who, a year ago, started from Cook Inlet with a small command, and crossed a hitherto unpenetrated country, leading for hundreds of miles over mountains, valleys, and plains to the mouth of the Tanana. The expedition was deserted by the Indian guides, and for some months fears were entertained for the safety of the party, but on December 11, 1899, they reached the mouth of the Tanana, where orders were received to remain until spring. The object of the expedition was to ascertain the feasibility of a route through Alaska and to obtain information as to minerals, timber, and data of that section of Alaska and Cook Inlet between the river. For nearly a year the party was without news from the outside world.

Maj. H. C. Bate, of the Weather Bureau, in his weekly crop bulletin has the following: "As a culmination of the damage to crops by the continuous rainy and warm weather of the past month, the heaviest rains of the season fell during the latter part of June, especially on the 28th, which resulted in immense damage and loss by washing away crops and flooding lowlands. These disastrous conditions were pretty general over the State, but the loss is much more severely felt in the central basin and the western division. In the latter portion the most serious conditions confront the farmer. Thousands of acres of corn, cotton, and other products are lost on account of the causes above named, and the impossibility of cultivation in time to redeem them. Upland crops are in a more hopeful condition, but are sadly in need of attention. Wheat is greatly injured by sprouting during the wet weather. Serious loss is also noted in many sections by the washing away of the shocked grain by the sudden rise in the water courses. Oats are much damaged by rain and wind and flooding."

Overexertion of Brain or Body. Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It is a wholesome tonic for body, brain, and nerves. Wonderfully quick in its action.

If a child has a good breeding, he does not need to advertise it. Actions and behavior speak louder than words. —Boys' Lantern,

ECZEMA, ITCHING HUMORS, PIMPLES—CURED BY B. B. B.

Bottle Free to Sufferers.

Does your skin itch and burn? Dressing eruptions on the skin so you feel ashamed to be seen in company? Do scabs and scales form on the skin, hair, or scalp? Have you eczema? Skin sore and cracked? Rash form on the skin? Prickling pain in the skin? Boils? Pimples? Bone pains? Swollen joints? Falling hair? All run down? Skin pale? Old sores? Eating sores? Ulcers? To cure to stay cured, take B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), which makes the blood pure and rich. B. B. B. will cause the sores to heal, itching of eczema to stop forever, the skin to become clear, and the breath sweet.

Julia E. Johnson, Stafford's Post Office, S. C., writes: "I had suffered thirteen years with eczema, and was at times confined to my bed. The itching was terrible. My son-in-law got me one-half dozen bottles of Botanic Blood Balm, which entirely cured me, healed every sore, and made my blood pure and rich."

B. B. B. is just the remedy you have been looking for. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. For sale by druggists at $1 per large bottle. Complete directions with each bottle. So sufferers may test B. B. B., a trial bottle is given away. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble and free personal medical advice will be given. Do not despair of a cure, for B. B. B. cures all obstinate, deep-seated blood troubles that refuse to heal under ordinary treatment. We have over three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using B. B. B.

A Revelation.

If there are doubting Thomases or maidens fair, or those unfair who fain would be fair, let them use and prove the efficacy of what the proprietor has so long tried to impress on the minds of all in nearly every part of the world. As a skin purifier and beautifier it has no equal or rival. If the reader would prove the virtues of Oriental Cream, use it where a scratch or slight cut or where a black head or pimple is troubling you, then you see its healing and purifying qualities. If it does its work well, then read the advertisement again for further testimony of its virtues, and by using Oriental Cream renew both youth and beauty.

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM

"New York, November 11, 1887.

"Ferd. T. Hopkins, Esq.: I would like to know the price of one dozen bottles of your Oriental Cream, as I use it and like it. I would like to get a supply to take on my tour, as soon as possible. Answer, and oblige,
"(Mrs.) JAMES BROWN POTTER.
"Brevoort House, New York."

A $12 Bath Cabinet FOR $5.00

Our new 1902 style Square Quaker guaranteed best of all cabinets at any price. Has real door on hinges, steel frame, best materials, rubber lined, folds flat, lasts 20 years. Turkish and Vapor baths at home 5c each. Upon the millions of pores, sweats poisons out of the blood, keeps you clean and healthy, beautifies complexion. Physicians recommend it for Colds, La-Grippe, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Obesity, Female Ills, all Blood, Skin, Nerve or Kidney troubles. Money refunded after 30 days use, if not as represented. Price with heater, directions, formulas, $5.00. Face Steamer $1.00 extra. Order today. Write us. Valuable Book FREE. Big Wagon. Splendid Seller. AGENTS WANTED. World Mfg. Co., 37 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

Send us a new subscriber.

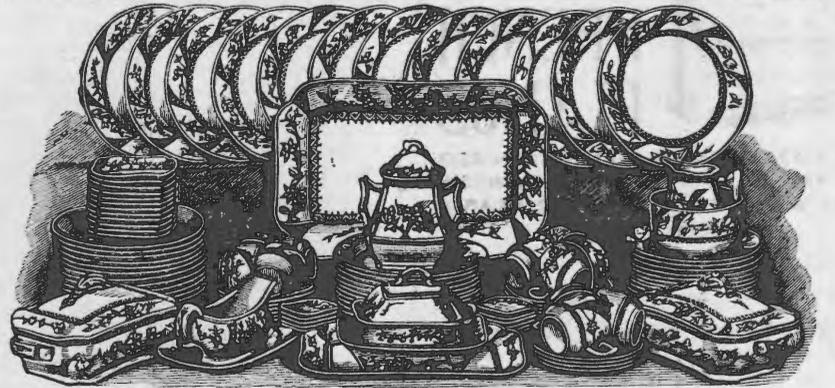

"Preaching the Word."

Recently two articles have appeared from my pen in the Gospel Advocate—one, "A Talk to the Church of Christ at Murfreesboro, Tenn.;" the other, "The Modern Pastor System." In both I have sought to call our attention to certain practices on the part of churches and preachers which, if studied, will, I believe, result in a better understanding of the truth, and I desire a more perfect obedience to the same. I have not sought to magnify mistakes nor to exalt hobbies. It appears perfectly clear to me that every Christian should daily study the Scriptures and strive with all his might to obey them and teach them to others. We should all seek to know the Master's will and do his will through life. Wherever this principle leads us we should willingly go and cheerfully labor. He who sets his heart to know and obey God will most certainly be a blessing to man and an honor to God. My motto is, "The greatest good to the greatest number," while I live; for in carrying out these principles, it seems to me that I both save myself and save others. It appears to me that it might be good to write on the above subject.

The English word "preach," as used in the New Testament, includes both public speaking and private teaching. Philip preached to the eunuch while riding along in the chariot with him; Paul preached to the church assembled for worship on the first day of the week.

On the day of Pentecost the gospel plan of salvation was first preached by the apostle Peter. The apostles continue to teach in Jerusalem until we find all the members also preaching the word. Stephen was the first whose name is mentioned. The enemies stoned Stephen to death. "And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. . . . Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." (Acts 8: 1-5.) After Philip baptized the eunuch he "was found at Azotus; and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea." (Acts 8: 40.) As a result, "the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." (Acts 11: 21.) Ananias entered into the house of Judas, and taught Saul of Tarsus what to do to be saved. Peter taught Cornelius and all his household in his house. Saul was baptized, "and straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." (Acts 9: 20.) Paul next goes into Arabia that he might preach Christ among the heathen. (Gal. 1: 16, 17.) While at Salamis, Paul and Barnabas "preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews." (Acts 13: 5.) At Antioch in Pisidia they went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and preached to the Jews. (Acts 13: 14-16.) At Ephesus Paul "went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." (Acts 19: 8.) He was "disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." (Verses 9, 10.) At Rome "Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and re-

FREE YOU CAN EARN IT IN THREE HOURS FREE
A Beautiful Dinner Set of 112 Pieces FREE

This is the handsomest DINNER-SET ever made or imported. It is daintily decorated in several colors, highly finished in gold, and is yours absolutely FREE. For the sale of only 30 one-pound packages of our Celebrated Imperial Baking Powder and to assist our Agents in making rapid sales, we allow them to give FREE with every pound, a beautiful decorated and gold-traced Cup, Saucer, seven-inch plate, Fruit Saucer and Individual Butter. 18 lb. order..... 56-piece Tea Set. 60 lb. order..... Singer Sewing Machine. 24 lb. order..... Six Pieces Furniture. 80 lb. order..... Lady's or Gent's High Grade Bicycle. We have other goods and choice premiums, in fact we have and can provide you with any premium you most desire. Don't miss this golden opportunity. If you deal with us once, you will never look elsewhere or have cause for complaint. We pay freight and allow time to deliver goods before you pay us. We will pay you liberally for assisting us to secure agents. Don't delay, write at once for circulars, order blanks, etc. P. S.—REFERENCES: Postmaster, any Mercantile Agency, Express Companies or Banks. CHARLTON A. MARSHALL, 82 West Front Street, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Vanderbilt University,

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

800 Students. 90 Teachers. 17 Buildings; value, $750,000. New Dormitory just erected at a cost of $125,000.

Expenses low. Literary courses for graduates and undergraduates. Professional courses in Engineering, Pharmacy, Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Theology. Send for catalogue, stating department in which you are interested. WILS WILLIAMS, Secretary.

ceived all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." (Acts 28: 30, 31.) At Troas "upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." (Acts 20: 7.) To the elders of the church at Ephesus Paul said: "I . . . have taught you publicly, and from house to house." (Verse 20.) While at Philippi, Paul and Silas "went out of the city by a riverside, where prayer was wont to be made, . . . and spake unto the women which resorted thither." (Acts 16: 13.) In the jail "they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." (Verse 32.)

In private circles women, as well as men, taught the word of the Lord. "They that were scattered abroad [upon the persecution that arose about Stephen] went everywhere preaching the word." "Philip the evangelist . . . had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy." (Acts 21: 8, 9.) Priscilla aided her husband in expounding unto Apollos the way of God more perfectly. (Acts 18: 26.)

"Having then gifts [in the miraculous age of the church different ones had different miraculous gifts, whereas now we all possess natural gifts or talents for the Lord's work] differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation." (Rom. 12: 6-8.) Showing that we should all teach, the Holy Spirit says: "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." (Heb. 5: 12.) Paul exhorted Timothy: "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." (2 Tim. 2: 1, 2.)

Paul further charged Timothy: "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." (2 Tim. 4: 2.) Of himself Paul said: "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" (1 Cor. 9: 16.) There should be in every Christian a burning zeal to teach Christ as opportunity is offered and to support and encourage those "who labor in the word and doctrine." "They that be wise [or teachers] shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." JOHN E. DUNN. Murfreesboro, Tenn.

The thoughtful are never troubled with the remorse of what might have been. Look before you leap.—Selected.

LEBANON LAW SCHOOL,

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY.

ESTABLISHED 1847.

TEN THOUSAND pages of living American law taught. Courses less comprehensive require two years of time and money in other law schools. In this school the entire course is accomplished in

ONE COLLEGE YEAR.

THIS IS NOT A LECTURE SCHOOL. The student reads the law in the text-book and recites daily. One additional year for review is given FREE to all graduates desiring it. Diploma and license conferred. Next term begins September 3, 1900. Catalogues free. Address

LAW SCHOOL, LEBANON, TENN.

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

JESSE FRENCH PIANOS

AND ORGANS HAVE BEEN RECOGNIZED AS THE MOST POPULAR INSTRUMENTS IN THE WHOLE SOUTHWEST FOR NEARLY THIRTY YEARS.

Our FACTORIES are among the LARGEST in the U.S. CATALOGS FREE

Jesse French Piano Organ Co.

HOME OFFICE ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI
Branches, Agents & Representatives in all Large Cities

The Boy George.

He is called "George;" at least, that is what I called him. Whether any one else ever called him that or not is an unsettled question. George works about the stable and takes people out in buggies who want to go across the country where there is no railroad. He drove up to the gate for me at the time appointed. The horse George drove this time was a nice bay, with white feet. He drew a very neat buggy, to the back of which I strapped my valise and got in. Whitefoot and George started us off from the front gate of Brother McPhearson at twenty minutes to eight o'clock. As I bade the family good-by standing on the front porch and passed out from beneath the shade of the beautiful trees of the front yard, that even spread their friendly branches out over the street, my mind began to center upon George. True, George's skin was mighty black, but he was kind and obliging and seemed to know how to drive a horse.

"Do you know where your people came from, George?" I asked.

"African—African an' sump'n else, I don't know what."

"Africa," I said.

"Yes, boss, dat's right."

"Do you know how many colored people there are over here, George?"

"Good many—'bout forty, I guess."

"But I do not mean in Pulaski, but the United States."

"No, sah."

"Do the colored people of this country have idols in their homes and bow down and worship them?"

"Yes, sah, some uv 'um does."

"Where did you ever see any?"

"Lemme see [George is now evidently in deep water]."

"What is an idol, George? Can you tell me?"

"It's kind 'uv a book."

"No, it is not a book; it is an image of a man or beast made from wood, stone, or metal of some sort. People make these images and bow down and worship before them in some countries. They do that in Africa. Can you tell me why the colored people do not do that also in this country, George?"

"No, sah. Some says dey's not able."

Well, you are pretty dull, sure enough, George (I thought to myself). People say nothing can be made out of you, and maybe you are at least one of that sort; but I noticed the boy could drive a horse as well as anybody. Maybe I have just struck him at the wrong place, I thought.

"How old are you, George?"

"Fo'teen."

"Can you read?"

"No, sah. My father an' mother died when I was little, an' I has to make my own way."

"Did you ever go to school any?"

"No, sah, I never had no time. I been workin' for de same man 'bout seben years."

"Is he good to you?"

"Yes, sah."

"How much does he pay you?"

"Two dollars and a half a week."

That is another point, by the way, said I to myself. The stableman told me last night it took seventy-five cents a day to pay the driver. Two dollars and a half a week is not seventy-five cents a day, but about thirty-five cents a day. And then he said the roads were very muddy, and he repeated it with such a contortion of the face that it was difficult to see how he would be telling anything but the truth about it; but the road was a splendid turnpike for ten miles of the way and the other four miles was along a gravelly ridge road, dry and good, with the exception of a creek or two to cross. Yet this man was an Anglo-Saxon. There isn't much in blood, after all, till the gospel puts it there.

But to return to the subject of this story. I looked at George and said to myself: You don't know a letter in the book, you are only fourteen years old, about all you ever knew was to clean buggies and drive folks around. You cannot be expected to know much. I will try you again on something else: "What is the shape of this world, George?"

"Some uv it looks flat and some hilly."

"Where do you suppose you would go if you were to start east and just keep traveling east all the time?"

"Some people says you'd go to de end uv de world."

"Do you think you could go to the end of the world, George?"

"Don't know, sah."

"Do you have any idea what it would look like when you got there?"

"No, sah."

"Well, George, the truth is, the world is not flat, but round, like a big ball; and if you were to keep going east, you would, after a while, come right back from where you started. [Here I illustrated the point by going around my fist.] How big do you suppose the world is? It is a long ways around it. Do you know how much a thousand is?"

"Yes, sah [but really he meant no]."

"A thousand is ten hundred. Here are my fingers, one hundred, two hundred, three hundred, four hundred, five hundred, six hundred, seven hundred, eight hundred, nine hundred, ten hundred; that's a thousand. Can you count a hundred, George?"

"Yes, sah."

"Well, begin."

"Do you want me to count a hundred?"

"Yes."

Here George began—"One, two, three"—and went on up without a single break till he got to sixty-nine, when he jumped to eighty.

"No, you skipped seventy."

"Did I skip sebenty? He, he!"

George then went on till he got to eighty-nine, when he jumped again, and said: "Eighty-nine and one's a hundred."

Having helped George out on his one hundred, we then proceeded to try to get some idea of the big world, after which I put the question as to who made the big world. The young son of Ham twitched Whitefoot in the flank with the whip cracker, and did not seem to know.

"What is this I have in my hand?"

"Dat's a watch."

"Do you suppose a dog or a monkey made it?"

"Yes, sah. He, he, he!"

"Eh?"

"Yes, sah. No; I understands you now, de jewelah."

"Is the jeweler a smart man?"

"Yes, sah."

"Did you ever see a foolish man?"

"Yes, sah; dey said he was weak-minded."

"Could he make a watch, you think?"

"No, sah."

"Why?"

"Didn't have sense enough."

"It takes a smart man, then, to make a watch, doesn't it?"

"Yes, sah."

"What makes the hands go round on the face of this watch, George?"

"De works inside."

"That's right; and this hand goes round just once every twelve hours, once every day and once every night. Can you tell me what makes the day?"

"The sun."

"How often does the sun come up in the east?"

"Every day."

"Isn't it an hour or two late some mornings?"

"No, sah, jes' the same every day."

"Just the same every day. How long has the sun been doing that, George?"

"Don't know, sah, ever since I can remember."

"How often must you wind a watch?"

"Some winds uv ev'nin' and some uv mornin'."

"Once a day, then?"

"Yes, sah."

"Do you have to wind up the big world to make the sun rise every morning?"

"No, sah."

"Then if the jeweler is a smart man and you must wind the watch he makes every day to make it go, who made this big watch that we live in that goes all the time without any winding at all?"

"A smarter man."

"Who is he?"

"Jesus Christ."

"Yes, or God by Jesus Christ. Well, it is a good world to live in, isn't it?"

"Yes, sah."

"Then God is surely a good being, to make such a good world for us to live in, isn't he?"

"Yes, sah."

"And if we have a good Father, we ought to obey him, oughtn't we?"

"Yes, sah, we ought that; he can take our breath away."

George has promised to begin to study and put in his odd moments about the stable learning how to read and write. It was truly gratifying to see the boy's face light up when a new thought would strike him. A boy that can skillfully drive a horse and take care of a buggy is also capable of improvement in other lines of usefulness. Shall we allow the perversity of human nature that is in ourselves to keep us from imparting light, life, and happiness to the downtrodden sons of Ham? It was for them also that Christ died.

J. M. M'CALEB.

THE MOONEY SCHOOL,

FRANKLIN, TENN.

W. D. MOONEY, A.M., Principal.

Its boys enter ten universities on certificate.

Every advantage offered. Discipline firm.

Send for catalogue before choosing your school.

Refers to any of the local pastors.

Has educated the sons of Supreme Judges, Congressmen, and many other distinguished men.

Ward Seminary For Young Ladies.

Nashville, Tennessee.

35th year begins September 20.

"An Ideal Christian Home." Courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Certification to Wellesley and Bait. Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Full Literary Course with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. Catalogue.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,

531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

American National Bank,

OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

ATTENTION, FARMERS!

Wanted to exchange Stock Peas, Millet, Hungarian Corn and Feed Stuffs for Wheat, or buy Wheat for cash.

P. W. HARSH,

TELEPHONE 1228.

207 BROAD ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

If you need anything in the way of first-class printing, we would be glad to supply you.

"A readable book is the 'Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell.' Price, $1.

Important to Mothers

A pleasant and reliable remedy for the morning sickness and constipation of pregnancy; the ideal effervescent aperient for family use. Pamphlets on request. 50c. and $1. Trial, 25c.

Tarrant's "Dermal," a dainty anti-septic powder for nursery, toilet, after shaving, cures chafing, best foot powder, 25c.

At druggists, or mailed on receipt of price by TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York. Est. 1824.

White-Oakley Debate.

This debate was held at Liberty, DeKalb County, Tenn., beginning on June 5, 1900, and continuing four days, between L. S. White (Christian) and John T. Oakley (Baptist). The Baptists tendered their house, which is a large and commodious one. It was filled to its fullest capacity and overflowing part of the time. The church question was discussed.

Liberty is a strong Baptist community, and I am confident great good will result from this discussion in that and surrounding country. I am sure many for the first time saw the weakness of the Baptist position. It appears the best way a Baptist debater can meet a scriptural argument is by ridicule and such like. Everything was tolerably pleasant.

The church of God there is small in number, but will be sure to receive the increase if the right sort of influence is exerted among its members. Opposition is strong, but that ought to strengthen the followers of Christ. He was met with opposition, so we may expect the same.

C. M. PULLIAS.

A Wrong Statement.

The question of reimmersion is usually stated in the following language: "Is belief that baptism is for the remission of sins essential to its validity?" It seems to me that this is not a fair statement of the subject.

Peter said: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you . . . for the remission of sins." (Acts 2: 38.) It would be infidelity to refuse to believe this statement, and such unbelief would render the man ineligible for baptism. Now, is it a fact that such denominations as Methodists and Baptists reject this statement as untrue? I think not. I have had an occasion recently to ask several prominent ministers and debaters if they really believed the statement of Peter in Acts 2: 38. They answered: "We do." Now, the difference is, we understand the word "for" to be prospective and to be used as expressing a condition of pardon, while they think it means "because of" and is retrospective. It, then, is not a matter of unbelief—or, rather, disbelief—upon their part, but a simple case of misunderstanding. Hence, the proposition should read: Is an understanding that baptism is in order to the remission of past sins essential to its validity upon the part of the one baptized? A proposition stated as the above would at once rid itself of all irrelative matter, and enable us to get at the facts in the case much easier than when stated in the old way.

But some one will ask: "Is it possible for a man to believe a thing which he does not understand?" I answer: "Yes." I believe many things I do not understand. This is true both physically and spiritually. Now, since these denominations believe all these statements of scripture to be true, but since they misunderstand the true import of some of them, let us ask: "Is an understanding that baptism is in order to the remission of past sins essential to its validity?" If such "an understanding is essential," then we should accept no one into fellowship who had not this understanding at the time of his baptism; but if such an understanding is not essential to its validity, then we do wrong when we reimmerse them, or at least refuse to fellowship them without a reimmersion.

I submit these thoughts with no desire to get into a controversy, but in the interest of truth and fair play.
Edmond, O. T. J. A. MINTON.

As a result of a conference between the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and Colonel Rendlet, agent for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, orders have been issued to intruders upon the lands recently ceded by the United States to the Indians that they must leave the lands mentioned. Intruders will be given ten days in which to depart, after which time United States troops will be called upon to enforce the Secretary's orders. It is said that it will be foolhardy to depend upon the Indian police to eject the trespassers. Many of the three thousand "sooners" are desperate and vicious, and would not hesitate to shoot Indians who might attempt to interfere with their movements. When it is found, however, that the United States troops are in the field, it is thought there will be no trouble.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.
Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.
SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.)
Dept. 9, Louisville, Ky.

Letters and Sermons of
T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price * $1.50

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua
Assembly and Summer Schools.
TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,
NASHVILLE, TENN.

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

WERNICKE
"ELASTIC"
BOOK - CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

$1 "DIXIE"
WATCH.

No. 30001G.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, post-paid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

1850 1900
John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF

SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.

TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.

HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES,

Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

A Skin of Beauty is a Joy Forever.

DR. T. FELIX GOUBAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 50 years, and is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend Goubaud's Cream" as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in the U. S., Canada, and Europe. Ferd. T. Hopkins, Prop. 37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

July 4.—I am engaged for a meeting at Mars' Hill, near El Paso, beginning on July 28, 1900, to continue as long as interest demands. I wish to urge the brethren now to resume their old-time zeal at Mars' Hill and begin to plan for another good meeting. Prepare to drive your wagons around among the poor and bring them all to church, and let us teach them what to "do to be saved." This is the only meeting that I can promise to conduct in that part of Arkansas this year, as I have promised much of my time elsewhere; so I wish to invite the brethren at Hammonsville, Shady Grove, Liberty, and Vilonia to come down to Mars' Hill and camp during the meeting, and let us have five meetings in one this time. There is much good camping ground and fine water convenient to Mars' Hill; so bring your wagons, tents, provisions, and families, and stay with us. Let us make this the best meeting in Mars' Hill's history. T. E. TATUM.

Rector, July 4.—Last week we closed a meeting of eight days' duration, held by Brother John R. Williams, of Hornbeak, Obion County, Tenn.; and while the limited time, unpropitious season, and the continuous bad weather were barriers to the success and pleasantness of the meeting, we look upon his effort as unparalleled in its moral and restorative effects upon this congregation and feel at the same time that impressions have been made upon the world and sects that some time may yield a harvest for good. The visible results were: Three additions by baptism, three others taking membership with us from other congregations, and a feeling of confidence and reassurance infused into an almost lifeless church. This is about the fifth meeting held by Brother Williams in the last five or six years for us, and that warm and affectionate regard that has always been felt for him seems doubly enhanced by this short stay this time. M. DONALDSON.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, June 28.—On Saturday night before the first Lord's day in June and until the following Monday night I was with the little band at Rock Hill Schoolhouse, Putnam County. The heavy rains made the audiences small. They are arranging to begin their series of meetings on the first Lord's day in September. On the night of June 6, 1900, Mr. T. J. Mc-Lemore and Miss Imita Hambrick were united in marriage at the bride's home on Wharf avenue in the presence of a large number of their friends, the writer performing the ceremony. Both are members of the church of God, and I trust they may live a quiet, peaceful life, and do much good work for the church. I am in receipt of a call to go to Pleasant Union Schoolhouse, Maury County, to preach on the fifth Lord's day in July. This is a new point. All brethren, sisters, and friends who live near this point are invited to attend and help in the work. S. W. WOMACK.

TEXAS.

Saralvo, June 28.—To-morrow night, the Lord willing, I will begin a series of meetings at Gertie. This is four or five miles east of Mansfield. I do not know that there has ever been a gospel meeting there. On Friday night before the third Sunday in July I am to begin a meeting at Johnson's Gin, six miles west of Midlothian. This is also a destitute place. Brother J. A. Harding is to begin a series of meetings for the Patrick Chapel brethren on the first Sunday in August, continuing about twelve days. The meeting will be held in a nice grove at Sardis Station (post office, Saralvo), five miles from Waxahachie, on the road to Midlothian. We have a good camping place—wood, water, and pasture—and would like for brethren to come and camp with us. There will be three services a day. Come, and you will be well paid for your trouble. ROBERTSON WHITESIDE.

Dallas, July 4.—The church of Christ worshipping at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets has been doing a great work for the past two months—a work which all the city churches would do well to imitate. I began my labors with them on the fifth Lord's day in April, with a meeting in the meetinghouse. On the following Monday my cousin, Jesse P. Sewell, of Bonham, came to make us a few days' visit, but we kept him two weeks. From that time to the close of the meeting he did the preaching in an able manner. The visible results were: Twenty were added to the church, most of them by confession and baptism. On Wednesday night following the second Lord's day in May this active, working church stretched its tent in North Dallas, a place where many had never heard the gospel. This meeting continued for seventeen days. Fourteen were added to the church, several of whom were from the denominations. A few days after the close of this meeting Brother E. G. Sewell, who was in the State, was secured for a week. He taught the church some beautiful and valuable lessons. We feel sure that we shall reap a bountiful harvest from his earnest labors. The tent work will continue in the city all the summer. This is a grand work. All the large cities should be evangelized in this way, the strong churches supporting and directing the work. W. H. SEWELL.

Our Duty to Study and Teach the Scriptures.

(Continued from page 437.)

'went everywhere preaching the word' (Acts 8: 4). With these examples of Jesus, the apostles, and the early disciples before us, and in the light of all these scriptures, it is the privilege and duty of all Christians now, according to their ability and opportunities, to teach the Bible to everybody in every place and at all times—wherever and whenever one or many are ready to learn. They should teach it Sunday morning, Sunday noon, Sunday afternoon, Sunday night, and any day through the week. All the lessons for this year embrace studies in the life of Christ, hence they afford excellent opportunities for studying his life. The story of Jesus is ever new and beautiful, because it is inexhaustible. He is the bread of heaven, the water of life, the Sun of righteousness,

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and is now ready for delivery. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

the Light of the world. Any ordinary student will learn more about Jesus from a regular and daily study of these lessons and the lesson connections than perhaps in any other way. The lessons should be studied from the Bible; they should be studied through the week. If teachers would instruct their classes and build them up in the faith of the gospel, they should be familiar with the truths and principles of the lessons. They should go before their classes with open Bibles in their hands and the love of God in their hearts. They are preparing souls for better service of God on earth and higher service in heaven."

The foregoing is from the Gospel Quarterly for advanced classes. These quarterlies are intended to be helpful and suggestive, but investigation should not stop with them. Our whole series is ably edited, and samples will be gladly sent to any address.

Pianos.

If "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," how important when buying a piano that you get one with a good name from a reliable house that will last an ordinary lifetime, and give you no trouble or expense!

As there are so many worthless makes on the market that are dear at any price, we would advise our readers, before purchasing, to investigate the merits of the Jesse French, Starr, and Richmond pianos—the three leading and most popular makes in America—made by the Jesse French Piano and Organ Company, St. Louis, Mo., one of the largest and most responsible firms in the country. Prices moderate, terms reasonable; and, best of all, you will get an instrument that will last and give satisfaction, with the privilege of seeing and testing it before any money is paid.

The Nashville Bible School.

Instruction is given in English, Latin, Greek, German, French, Mathematics, Natural and Physical Sciences, Logic, Rhetoric, etc. The School does both academic and collegiate work. Every student is required to study and recite one lesson daily in the Bible. Ninety-nine dollars will pay for board and tuition for a young man; one hundred and seventeen dollars will pay for board and tuition for a girl. One can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. Send to the School for catalogue.

We Manufacture
..Pianos..

OVER 6,000 PER YEAR.
THREE DIFFERENT NAMES.
THREE DIFFERENT GRADES.
GOOD, BETTER, BEST!

"Richmond," "Jesse French"
AND "Starr."

Send for Catalogues and for Easy Payment Plan.

Jesse French Piano & Organ Co.,
240-242 Summer street,
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK.

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plated Watch, also a Chain and Charm for selling 1 1/2 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail and we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, and a large Premium List. No money required.
BLAINE CO., Box 3, Concord Junction, Mass.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 29.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JULY 19, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

"Consider Him".....	450
How the Word "Pastor" was Used.....	450
To the Churches of Christ.....	451
Our Texas Trip.....	452
Personal.....	453
Church News.....	453
Queries.....	454
Jesus, the Friend of the Workingman.....	454
Home Reading.....	455
Editorial Notes.....	456
Christian Edification, Again.....	456
The Influence of the Religious Press.....	457
Kansas Notes.....	458
The Modern Pastor.....	458
Obituaries.....	458
Brother Dunn's Article Once More.....	459
General News.....	460
The Pastor, Edification, Etc.—An Open Letter.....	461
Brother McCaleb's Report for June.....	462
A Reply to Brother Elam.....	463
Silver Chimes.....	463

READ AND ACT.

At this season of the year our expenses are always far in excess of our receipts. As we have been at the extra expense of putting "Gospel Praise" and other new books on the market, our expenses have been very heavy, so that we are especially in need of the amounts due us. The amount that you are owing may be a very small one, but many such amounts aggregate a very large sum. It is best for the publisher and the subscriber that all pay their subscriptions promptly. It enables those looking after the affairs of the paper to devote their time and thought to making a good paper, without being worried over finances. It is hard for the man to write well who is forced to think continuously about money matters.

Many allow their subscriptions to run behind, without realizing that it is so. This notice is to remind all who are in arrears that their renewal would be very greatly appreciated. The wheat crop will put some money in circulation. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper, and pay at the rate of $1.50 per year from that time. A large hand pointing to this is to call your attention to the date. If your paper should be stamped and the date is in advance, you may know that the mistake was made by the one stamping the hand on the paper. We are always anxious to correct all mistakes. Your prompt compliance with this request will help us and will be duly appreciated. Address all checks and money orders to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Nashville, Tenn.

In delivering an opinion from the bench on a question of religion a judge is represented in the daily papers as saying he has no respect for the flimflam religion of fashionable churches, but if he knew where there is a preacher who preaches Christianity as Christ and other New Testament characters lived it and taught it, he would crawl on his knees to hear him preach. There is a suggestion worth considering in all this as to the cause of widespread and growing indifference to religion. The samples of religion on exhibition at fashionable churches do not fairly represent New Testament Christianity, and even preachers and professed Christians have but little respect for it or faith in it. As for sinners, they regard the whole religious fabric on the present basis as a delusion and a snare, and they will have none of it. In the phraseology of farmers, "the seed has run out," and if preachers and other Christians do not go back to the New Testament and start anew with divine ideas and a holy life, general religious stagnation is inevitable.

One who says he can see that all Christians are one body, and that the one body is the church, according to the New Testament, asks:

"How can we all get into one body?"

The one body is the body of Christ. To get into Christ, therefore, is to get into the one body. We can all get into one body exactly the same way we can all get into Christ. How can we all get into Christ? "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6: 3.) "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3: 27.) "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." (1 Cor. 12: 13.) From these and other passages of scripture it is perfectly clear that we are all baptized into one body. We can all get into one body by being baptized into it. There is no other way, so far as I know, whereby any one can get into this one body, which is the church of God, the kingdom of heaven. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) As many as God recognizes as baptized are in the one body. No one can be baptized without getting into the one body. If any one who is baptized into the one body should "join any other church," or get into any other body, he would violate the plain teaching of the New Testament, and his duty is to promptly get out. Every Christian should be a Christian, and nothing else; be a member of the church, which is the body of Christ, and nothing else; preach and practice exactly what is taught and practiced in the New Testament, and nothing else. This will make all Christians one body in Christ, as they were in New Testament times, and enable them to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

I am requested to answer the following questions, but not permitted to publish the name of the querist:

"Why was Christ baptized?"

"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him; but John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3: 13-17.)

"If an infant two weeks old is sprinkled and admitted into a human church, and after the child in question arrives at the age of accountability, believes on the Lord Jesus Christ, and repents of all sins, is he then in the church, without any further baptism?"

It is not a question of "any further baptism," but of baptism. Sprinkling is not baptism at all; but if it were, an infant two weeks old could not be baptized for the reason: "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.) "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." (Rom. 14: 23.) God demands a worship and service of faith, and he is not pleased with, nor will he accept, any other. An infant two weeks old cannot obey God in the matter of being baptized, because it has no faith, and an act of outward service, without faith, God neither requires nor will he accept.

"Please give us something in the New Testament on sprinkling or pouring, or how and where this idea originated instead of baptism."

There is nothing in the New Testament to give on sprinkling or pouring for baptism. The idea originated outside of the New Testament, and that is all the interest I have ever felt in "where or how it originated."

"A comes forward to-day and confesses Christ, repents, and believes, and to-morrow starts for the place of baptism, and on his way, which is two miles from where he started, he has an accident that destroys his life. Now the question: Is he dead in the church or not? Is there any salvation for this man?"

There is no such case as this in the New Testament. The church is the body of Christ, and people are baptized into Christ. (Rom. 6: 3; Gal. 3: 27; 1 Cor. 12: 13.) The church is the kingdom of heaven, and people cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven without being baptized. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.) There is no salvation, so far as I know, out of Christ, out of the kingdom of heaven, out of the church. In New Testament times people who confessed Christ were baptized "when they believed" (Acts 8: 12); "the same day" (Acts 2: 41); "as they went on their way" (Acts 8: 35-40); "by a riverside, where prayer was wont to be made" (Acts 16: 13-15); "the same hour of the night." (Acts 16: 28-35.) In one case a man who had neither eaten nor drunk for three days, and was weak from his long fast, was baptized before he "received meat," and "was strengthened." (Acts 9: 1-19.) In every case in Acts of the Apostles where people believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, if their baptism is mentioned at all, it is perfectly clear that they were baptized before they parted from the preacher by whom they were led to believe. In the hypothetical case in the question, the man believed and confessed to-day, and started to be baptized, two miles away, to-morrow. Perhaps if he had done as people did in New Testament times, he would not have met with the accident which cost him his life. It is worthy of note that there are no such querists as this one among professed Christians in New Testament times. The language of his question is not the spirit of obedience. His purpose evidently is to disparage a command of God, and, as far as possible, keep people from doing what God requires. If he should meet with an accident in this spirit of caviling disobedience which would cost him his life, what would become of him?

A New York preacher sends me a blank long enough to hold probably a hundred names, at the top of which are printed the following words:

"Each person whose name and address are subscribed hereto votes in favor of the United States offering to mediate between Great Britain and the two South African republics, for the purpose of putting a stop to the war now going on."

In the same envelope is another blank of about the same length, at the top of which are printed the following words:

"Each person whose name and address are subscribed hereto votes in favor of Great Britain in her war to conquer the two South African republics."

In the same envelope with these two blanks comes the following personal letter:

"Reverend and Dear Sir: Be so kind as to obtain the expression of opinion, the vote, of the voters of your congregation and of your acquaintance upon one side or the other of this important question, and remail both sheets to me. Whether your own views be in favor of the British or of the South African republics, please obtain as full an expression as you can of the views of your people."

This would be unworthy of notice in these columns but for the fact that every preacher in the country, whose address can be obtained, will receive such blanks and private letter. To the extent preachers allow themselves to be used in such schemes as this they divert attention of the people from the subject of religion and encourage and cultivate a spirit of indifference and lethargy, if not strife and contention, among professed Christians. Wise men of the world are recognizing more and more that religious organizations, which are largely dominated by preachers, are a great power in the affairs of men. Astute business men, far-sighted politicians, and cunning schemers of every kind are trying harder and harder each year to utilize the power of religious organizations in carrying out their plans. This explains very much of "the princely gifts" of money to various religious interests which preachers and religious papers every now and then make such an ado about. It will be well for the glory of God, the cause of pure Christianity, and the salvation of souls if preachers will steer clear of all such schemes and keep steadily to the work enjoined by Paul upon Timothy: "Preach the word."

Our Contributors.

"Consider Him."

[The following is a sermon preached by Granville Lipscomb to the inmates of the State Prison on Sunday, June 30, 1900, and published in the Nashville American of July 1, 1900; it has been revised for this paper.]

"Consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." (Heb. 12: 3.)

This is the exhortation of St. Paul to the Hebrew Christians who were almost ready to faint in their minds in consequence of their many persecutions. "Consider him"—that is, consider Christ. The word "consider" means to fix the mind on, with a view to a careful examination. This command to consider Christ reminds us that Christianity in its essence is spiritual. To consider here requires the exercise of the mind and heart upon Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith.

It is not enough to think of Jesus simply as an ideal character, however excellent, but as a grand and glorious reality, a person in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Here we are shown the importance of thinking of him personally, lest we, too, be wearied and faint in our minds. The context, in bold figure of speech, presents Christians as engaged in a race. They are exhorted to cast away every impediment, including the besetting sin of unbelief, and run with patience the race set before them. To animate them in this holy contest, St. Paul refers to a great cloud of witnesses beholding their efforts, and charges them to look unto Jesus, who would crown them at the goal.

Were we, pencil in hand, to read the New Testament through, and mark every passage where the inspired writers mention Christ as a real person, all glorious and divine, we might be surprised at the frequency of such scriptures. It is in this light he is mentioned in this text: "Consider him." This personal view of the Christ is the most helpful view. A child can appropriate this benefit, and the most learned philosopher cannot excel this method of godly edifying.

There are so many personal views of Christ. Sometimes he is represented in a sitting posture. St. Paul, writing to the church at Colosse, says: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." (Col. 3: 1.) Here you will note heaven is a real place, and Christ a real person seated on the right hand of God. The position and posture indicate the serenity, grandeur, and glory of the Son of God, to whom all the angels of heaven are subject.

Stephen, the protomartyr, was favored with a most comforting view of Christ in his glory. Looking up through the cloud of stones which his enemies hurled at him, he said: "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." To him he prayed: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." In this vision the Savior has arisen from his seat at the right hand of God to welcome home to heaven the pure spirit of the first martyr. When you welcome your dear friends to your humble home on earth, you arise and step forward to meet them and greet them. So Christ as naturally arose to welcome the spirit of Stephen to his heavenly home. Both of these visions are based upon the idea of the personal Christ.

Not only are we required to consider Christ personally, but we ourselves must personally consider him. Each for himself must consider Christ. The woman who was healed when she touched the hem of his robe saw others being healed, but she said: "If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole." She herself must act. Thus it was her personal faith in the power of the personal Christ that saved her. Let us this Lord's day morning consider Christ in his childhood. This one point will be all we can consider in the boundary of one sermon.

There is but little said of him in this period of his earthly life, but the few words we have on the subject cover volumes in meaning and valuable suggestion. Take Luke's statement: "And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them." Here is a lesson for all children. God has required obedience to parents, and the divine Son of God has set the example. This command God has given in the Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian dispensations. Other laws have been abrogated, but this law is among those which remain intact throughout all ages. It is the first command with promise. That promise is twofold: that it may be well with thee and that thou mayest live long on the earth. This is God's inducement to children to be obedient: Well in body, well in mind, well in heart and conscience, well in all things which make life useful and happy, and then to live long on the earth. It would be impossible to present to buoyant and hopeful childhood stronger incentives. It is implied in all this that parents bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. A child under ungodly parents, no matter how wealthy, is to be pitied.

The importance of this subject can scarcely be exaggerated. The family government is at the very foundation of all good State and national government; it is the foundation of all correct church government, since a New Testament bishop "must be blameless, the husband of one wife," and, further, "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." The family relation is older than church or State, and neither could exist without it.

The Bible not only requires reverence for parents, but respect for elders in general. No more beautiful precept can be found in all the Jewish economy than Levit. 19: 32: "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the Lord." Our Hebrew families deserve much praise for teaching their children to respect and honor their parents; this is no "mistake of Moses." Children thus brought up make the best citizens and the best rulers in church and State. No one knows how to command who has not learned to obey.

An admirable instance of filial obedience is furnished us in the life of James A. Garfield. On July 2, 1881, Charles Guiteau struck a blow which shocked the whole nation and was felt throughout the world. After weeks of suffering, in which his life hung in the balance, President Garfield breathed his last on September 19, 1881, by the sea. The lamentation was universal. The South forgot all his political wrongs, and sincerely deplored the loss of him who of late seemed so conciliatory. When this estimable man was en route to Washington to be inaugurated, the train had passed the night on the way, day had dawned, and the sun had risen; but the lamps in the cars were yet burning. Old Mother Garfield and some dear friends accompanied him. The useless waste of burning oil in daytime troubled his mother, for she had been accustomed to a careful and beautiful economy. She wondered aloud why they did not put out the lights. The porter passed and re-passed. No one regarded her complaint. All on board were in high glee. At last she would endure it no longer. She knew there was one on board she could command. She arose and said to the President-elect: "James, blow out the lights! There is no use burning oil in broad daylight." It is needless to add the lights were extinguished.

While we study the benefits of filial respect, we should also note the warnings against disobedience to parents. Many a man can trace crime against the State to acts of disobedience to parents. The spirit of insubordination grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength until the arrest must be made for the infraction of the law.

To a persistent disobedience to parents are annexed some fearful penalties in the word of God. "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it."

But perhaps some of us say: "I have missed right training in childhood, and learn too late the truth of the poet's words:

"For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'It might have been.'"

Despair not, thou penitent one. The limitless compassion of the great God is beyond our comprehension, although it should be a cherished item in our faith. What are we taught by the divine Son of God? "If he [thy brother] trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." St. Peter thought seven times contained the limit of mercy and compassion, but Christ made it seventy times seven, or without limit. Seventy times seven in one day! How often is that in a week? How often is that in a month? How often is that in a year? How often is that in a lifetime? O how thankful every true penitent should be of the infinite compassion of the Son of God, who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance!

How the Word "Pastor" was Used.

In the Gospel Advocate of July 5, 1900, Brother J. D. Tant, of Hamilton, Tex., propounds certain questions, which, upon request of the editors of this paper, are answered and commented upon by Brother M. C. Kurfees, of Louisville, Ky.

Among other things, Brother Tant says: "Among the things that divide the churches, the Gospel Advocate has always placed societies, instrumental music, and the pastor as the greatest sins on the human side. Yet of late I find such notes as these in the Gospel Advocate: 'Hail Calhoun, former pastor at Franklin;' 'George Gowen, pastor at Franklin;' 'Brother Paul Slayden, pastor at Columbia;' 'W. L. Logan, pastor at Murfreesboro;' 'L. S. White, pastor at Gallatin;' also do I hear some of the Gospel Advocate staff claiming this pastor business is the foundation of all our troubles." Referring to which, Brother Kurfees writes: "I must leave to the Gospel Advocate itself to explain the particular use it has recently made of the term 'pastor,' and I feel confident that its explanation will fully sustain its reputation for loyalty to the Book, which it has won during 'the past forty years.'"

Upon my own motion, I respectfully submit the following: I have been in the employ of the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company for about two years, and during this period have, the greater part of the time, written the personal matter which appears on the "Miscellany" page and edited the articles submitted for publication. For the use of the term "pastor," used in connection with the names of Brother Slayden, Brother Calhoun, and Brother Gowen, I accept the responsibility. Brother Lipscomb thought it was used so as to indicate no opposition to the "modern pastor system," but I did not so intend to use it. I intended by its use what is usually intended by people, religious and otherwise, when they use the term; or, in other words, I meant to refer to the brethren mentioned as "pastors" of the churches at the places named. I used the term advisedly, for, from the information at hand, I believed each of them to be what is commonly called a "pastor." If "pastor" is a misnomer for those brethren filling like places and doing similar work, then by what name shall we call them? It is not sufficient to say that they disclaim the name. So far as the brethren named are concerned, I do not think they would engage in what they believe to be wrong; nevertheless, I believe they sustain a relation to the churches for which there is no divine warrant, whether it be called "pastor" or something else.

Referring to Brother Dunn's article, "A Talk Made to the Church of Christ at Murfreesboro, Tenn.," in which Brother W. L. Logan is called "pastor," this also passed through my hands. I read this rather carefully before sending it up for publication, but since reading Brother Elam's criticism of same I have read it again, and cannot concur with Brother Elam in all he says. I agree with Brother Elam that one should not apologize for presenting what he believes to be the truth, but I have not yet seen in Brother's Dunn's article that of which Brother Elam says he "shows a little"—namely, "a seeming disposition to have some churches go wrong whether they intend it or not, or to have them travel in the wrong direction much faster than they do." Brother Elam also says: "It is wrong to dub a man a 'pastor' because he preaches more or less for a congregation, and especially when he disclaims to be one and the church does not so recognize him." It seems to me that the wrong consists in calling a man a "pastor" against the facts, regardless of whether "he disclaims to be one and the church does not so recognize him." One could disclaim to be a "pastor," and the church might not recognize him as one, and still be a "pastor," and both "pastor" and church be honest and conscientious in disclaiming it. He asks: "Then why should Brother Dunn speak of Brother Logan as the 'pastor'?" Is the desire the father of the thought? Would Brother Elam answer this last question affirmatively? I do not believe he would, and therefore I think his asking it is an injustice to Brother Dunn. To answer this in the affirmative, it seems to me, would be to charge Brother Dunn with the desire to find Brother Logan and the church of Christ at Murfreesboro engaged in wrong—a sin in itself of which those who know Brother Dunn would not for a moment believe him guilty. Brother Elam further says: "Brother Dunn preaches on Sunday morning when the church has met for worship against preaching at that time." Certainly Brother Elam does not mean this, or else has not carefully read Brother Dunn's sermon. Does not Brother Dunn say: "The point I want to call our attention to is churches depending on one man to conduct the services and preachers monopolizing the energies and opportunities for self-development of the members. I insist and urge upon this congregation that it is not according to New Testament teaching for the Lord's day service to become mainly a preaching service in which all the public exercises are led by a preacher who is called to the church to act as 'pastor?'" And further: "In the text before us (Acts 20: 7) we learn the custom of the church was to meet on the first day of the week to break bread. Paul did not purposely go to Troas to preach to the church on Sunday. The church was not depending on Paul. His preaching was merely an accidental part of the service." In justice to Brother Elam I wish to say I do not believe he intended to impugn Brother Dunn's motives. I have too high regard for him as a Christian to think he would intentionally do such an act.

Brother Dunn says Brother Logan is "pastor" at Murfreesboro, and I feel sure he thought so or he would not have said it. Brother Elam says he "is an evangelist used by the church as is deemed best," and I am sure he also is as conscientious in this statement as Brother Dunn is in his; but this makes an issue between these brethren. An evangelist may be "used by the church as is deemed best," provided the church deems best to use him as they were used in New Testament times. I take it that Brother Dunn thinks the church at Murfreesboro is not doing this, and Brother Elam thinks it is; hence their statements. But, really, did long-established churches or any other churches in New Testament times ever engage evangelists to come and labor with them as is being done by many of the churches to-day that are called "sound?" If so, who was the evangelist, and with what church did he thus labor? Brother Kurfees rightly says, "The divine order is that a church shall be a self-edifying body, and not depend on importing some one to edify it;" but the trouble is, most of the churches sustaining a preacher send him into waste places seldom, but keep him at home, doing in a large part what God has ordained that the church itself shall do. I am loath to believe that preachers so engaged and the churches engaging them desire to depart from the teaching of the New Testament on this subject, and I do not believe that the brethren generally would like to see them travel in the wrong direction, either fast or slow, and when they either speak or write along this line, I prefer to think they do so from best motives and because they desire to sound a warning note against a present departure or a wrong tendency. That there are churches and preachers sustaining relations each to the other for which there is no divine warrant is clear to many, and a discussion of this matter in the spirit of love and meekness can but contribute to a better understanding of the question, and so prove beneficial. Certainly all should be long-suffering, but this does not mean that we are to keep quiet while error grows and spreads. To do so would be to condone the wrong and fail to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

I most heartily concur with Brother Lipscomb in what he said last week concerning the spirit that should control in all investigation and discussion in our endeavor to arrive at truth. No reference should, of course, be made to a preacher as "pastor," or to a church so engaging him, in an ugly and unchristian spirit. While we should ever earnestly contend for the faith, a captious and fault-finding spirit should be avoided. I do not think personal mention can always be avoided, but unkindness can.

Brother Lipscomb closes his editorial with this paragraph: "The instruction and activity of every member, male and female, is the end to be aimed at in the church work. 'What rule do the Scriptures give to attain this end, especially so far as the work of a regular preacher is concerned?' is the question brethren seem now to have before them. It is one that ought to be carefully studied, and let us learn God's will. While I am sure that which will make each member feel his own responsibility and take the most active part in all the work and worship of the congregation, according to his ability, is what God desires, I have never been able to find an exact rule in scripture defining how this is to be done, how much or how little preaching is best. Too much gives no opportunity to call out the members; too little sometimes seems to leave them to die. Who can give the Bible rule?"

I do not understand Brother Lipscomb to say there is no rule by which we may be guided in this matter, but that he has never been able to find "an exact rule." If there is no rule, then there is nothing to forbid churches and preachers exercising their best judgment. If the line is so indefinite that it cannot be determined, would God hold us responsible should we be found on the wrong side of it? When physical life is endangered and duty does not demand a firm stand, wisdom calls us to retreat to safety. Though lines may be obscure, there is such thing as occupying a position and being able to know we are on the wrong side even if we cannot definitely locate the point at which we crossed.

The foregoing has been written upon my own motion, because I do not want the readers to hold the editors responsible for my use of the term "pastor," because I feel that Brother Dunn has been done some injustice, though unintentionally, and also because of the interest I feel in the subject under consideration.

R. H. M'LAURINE.

To the Churches of Christ.

A little more than a year ago I gave up my work with the church of Christ in Paris, Tex., and began to travel among the churches, preparatory to starting to Japan. It was nearly five months before sufficient funds were on hand to defray expenses to Japan. In the meantime I married. I had to meet all necessary expenses during that five months out of money received from the church, as I was traveling most of the time in the interest of foreign missions. Then there were the expenses of a trip from Tennessee to California and a transpacific voyage. Arriving here, I found it necessary to begin keeping house. My wife was not strong, was ill for one month; then she fell asleep. I have purchased some printing materials and have ordered a first-class printing press from America. The above lines explain what has been done with the money I have received since April 3, 1899.

On June 11, 1900, I mailed my first message to the churches. This little leaflet I call "The Sword," and I expect to issue it quarterly hereafter. Each issue is to contain an "epistle to the churches of Christ," a report of all money received by me, and interesting items concerning Japan. My purpose in issuing such a publication is that you may know of my efforts here and learn something of the field in which I labor; as Christ's minister and your colaborer, I will be kept in your hearts and prayers while absent from you. In the first issue of The Sword I report receipts from April 3, 1899, to May 25, 1900. The total amount received is $1,422.53. Through the Gospel Advocate I received $519.53; through the Firm Foundation, 75 cents; through Jesse P. Sewell, $68.05; and various sums through other friends. All money received by me will be acknowledged in The Sword quarterly, and a copy mailed to each contributor. I do not think it expedient to publish such reports in the religious papers in full. A summary will be sent to the papers.

Five years ago, while I was in the Nashville Bible School, I decided to come to Japan as a missionary, and to use my knowledge of the printing business in furnishing Christian literature to the Japanese people. I hoped, in part, to earn with my own hands the money necessary to meet expenses out here. During my visit among the churches I stated my plans to them. The churches contributed to help me get an office to carry out those plans. I expected to print The Voice, and do some other English printing, for which I expected to receive a fair compensation. As my own individual work I expected to issue tracts, etc., in Japanese. Since arriving in Japan, I have taken time to investigate, and have changed my plans, to some extent, for several reasons, some of which I give:

1. The type necessary to do the English printing referred to would require an outlay of money four times as great as that necessary to supply me with all the Japanese type needed to issue tracts, etc.; hence I have laid in a supply of Japanese type, and will soon begin issuing tracts.

2. The English printing would have required at least half of my time, and the compensation in prospect was insignificant—not at all commensurate with the labor I would have had to put on it; therefore I will endeavor to employ my time more profitably.

3. Of the forty-two millions of people in Japan, though many are studying it, comparatively few read English; so for a while yet I will not try to reach them through literature in English.

4. All the time I can devote to the printing office will be required in the work of publishing Christian tracts in Japanese, except a short time, once a quarter, to issue my letter to the churches in English.

Therefore I have set about carrying out the most important features of my original plans to the best of my ability. I will devote all the time possible to the writing of tracts, having them translated into Japanese, and publishing and distributing them. These tracts will be known as "The Sword Tracts," and, the Lord willing, a new one will be issued each month, the entire series covering the whole of the gospel plan of salvation. I can, at small expense and with little labor, publish about five thousand to ten thousand copies a week, two hundred and fifty thousand to five hundred thousand copies a year. The necessary expenses will be for having translations made from English into Japanese, for paper and ink, etc.—altogether about ten dollars a month. I will not waste these tracts, but will try to wisely distribute them. I expect to sell many of them, as the Japanese more readily read what they buy. A great deal of this sort of work is done by the denominational workers here. So the labor I do here with my hands, brethren, will bring me no income. I came to Japan to do the Japanese good. I must not turn back. You have stood by me to the present. May the Lord bless you for your labor of love.

I now have full control of Brother J. M. McCaleb's work in Kanda Ward, Tokyo. There are from thirty to thirty-four poor children in daily attendance. Twice a week an hour is spent in Bible study. These children are too poor to attend the public schools. Once a month their mothers are induced to lay aside their work and meet at the school for an hour's Bible lesson. On Lord's day half a dozen Christians meet and partake of the Lord's Supper. I teach a Bible class of half a dozen young men each Lord's day. Brother McCaleb has paid the expenses of this work since he left Japan. Do you not want to have fellowship with him in this work? As I learn more of the language, I will be enabled to do more in this work.

WILLIAM J. BISHOP.

27 Nakazato Machi, Ushigome Ku, Tokyo, Japan.

A poor boy with a large patch on one knee of his trousers was laughed at by a schoolmate, who called him "Old Patch." "Why don't you fight him?" cried one of the boys. "I'd give it to him if he called me so." "O," said the boy, "you don't suppose I am ashamed of my patch, do you? For my part, I'm thankful for a good mother to keep me out of rags. I'm proud of the patch for her sake." A patch is better than a hole, and patched garments which are paid for are more comfortable than new ones which make a man afraid to meet his tailor.—Exchange.

OUR TEXAS TRIP.

On June 1, last, we took the morning train for Texas, lying over some four hours at Memphis, and then some seven hours in Texarkana, waiting for trains; but we finally landed at Bonham about 9 o'clock on the evening of June 2. We began preaching in Bonham the next day, and continued fifteen days, preaching at 4 o'clock in the afternoons through the week, except Saturdays, and at night, and twice on Lord's days, at the usual hours. They are divided at Bonham on the question of societies and the organ, and have two houses of worship. Part of the members at that place adopted the societies and the organ, against the convictions and protest of others, and those who could not conscientiously worship with these innovations built them a house of worship, and have an earnest band that meets and worships in it every Lord's day. Brother C. Carlton—"Uncle Charley," as he is familiarly called—preaches for and works and worships with those who use the societies and run the organ. He was out one night, as we learned, but we did not meet him while there. In years gone by, we were told, he stood upon purely Bible ground, and fought against everything as matter of either faith or practice not found in the word of God; but when the progressive tide came, he went with it, and stands identified with those things to-day, and does not cooperate with those who stand upon the very ground he used to advocate—that is, to take the Bible, and that alone, in the entire work and worship of the church.

Similar divisions exist in a very large number of the towns in Texas, if we have been correctly informed; but we preached in only two—Bonham and Dallas. In both of these places the division exists; and so long as there are loyal, faithful members in a place where some will have these innovations, divisions are bound to come; for those who are loyal to the word of God cannot afford to become parties to such palpable disloyalty to Christ, the great head of the church. Much as division is to be deplored, it is better for those who propose to be faithful and true to the word of God to stand aloof from innovations upon the divine standard than to purchase union by submitting to and becoming parties in things that pervert and neutralize the word of the Lord. There is one thing in which I feel gratified and that is I heard very little bitterness and denunciation by those who stand by the word of the Lord against the progressives; but, on the other hand, I was delighted to see how firmly they held on to the pure, old-fashioned word of God.

Some of the society people, both at Bonham and Dallas, were frequently at our meetings, and seemed to enjoy hearing the word of the Lord preached as it stands in the Book. At the meeting in Bonham seven who had been members elsewhere agreed to meet and worship with the brethren there, and two confessed the Savior, and were baptized; while all the members seemed delighted at the presentation of the word of God as the only rule of life, instead of the opinions and inventions of men. We have reason to believe that much and lasting good was accomplished through the presentation of the word of the Lord just as the Lord has given it to us. William A. Sewell and his son, Jesse P. Sewell, live in Bonham, and are doing much good in the way of spreading the truth. W. A. Sewell is preaching round about Bonham, under direction of the congregation there, while Jesse P. Sewell is doing a more general evangelistic work in the State. The brethren and sisters of the congregation in Bonham seem deeply in earnest and have been doing, and we hope will continue to do, a good work in that community and surrounding country.

We also preached a little over a week in Dallas, at night only, except on Lord's day. The brethren there had held a protracted meeting recently, conducted by Jesse P. Sewell and W. H. Sewell, with fine interest and several additions. Hence our meeting there was not intended as a regular protracted meeting; but they wanted some more preaching done there, chiefly for the edification and benefit of the church. These brethren have begun the work of holding tent meetings in destitute portions of the city, where they have not been accustomed to hear the old-fashioned gospel of Christ, as preached by the apostles, and have been, thus far, encouraged in the work, several persons having embraced the gospel in these meetings; and they expect to continue the good work. If congregations everywhere would do more of this sort of work, they would be better Christians themselves, and would be instrumental in saving others and in extending a more general knowledge of the truth.

Brother R. M. Gano is in Dallas, and is still doing some excellent and earnest work in the Lord's vineyard. Many people in Middle Tennessee remember well the good work done by him, at a hall on Woodland street, East Nashville, and in Lebanon some thirty years ago. Age shows upon him, but his voice is still melodious and impressive, and his soul still yearns for the conversion and salvation of the people. We met some others of our Texas preachers while in the State. Brother Thomas E. Milholland, Brother E. H. Rogers (who formerly lived in Tennessee), and Brother Chisholm we met at Bonham; Brother W. H. Wright, Brother A. McGary, Brother W. F. Barcus, and Brother Lawson we met at Dallas. Brother S. P. Pittman, of the Nashville Bible School, was with us during most of the meeting at Bonham, led the singing, and endeared himself very much to the church there, and will be long remembered by them. After he left for Louisville, W. H. Sewell led the singing the rest of the time, and led it through the meeting at Dallas, and has done some very good work at Dallas, preaching in the tent and at the meetinghouse. We met also Brother A. C. Carnes and wife in Dallas. Brother Carnes is a son of the late W. D. Carnes, who was one of my teachers, part of the time, at Burritt College. He is holding up well, being quite active and vigorous for a man of his age. I also met relatives and friends from old Tennessee, too numerous to mention, whom I was very glad, indeed, to see.

My stay and work, both in Bonham and Dallas, were very pleasant and enjoyable, and I shall long remember my stay with them as a pleasant era in the memories of life. The church of Christ at Ladonia had also engaged me to hold a meeting for them, which I fully expected to do. It was to begin on the first Lord's day in July. I only went to Dallas to preach a few days to fill the time between the meeting at Bonham and the one at this place, but they, very unexpectedly to me, canceled the engagement, and so wrote me just before I closed the meeting at Bonham. As a matter of course, that ended that engagement. Such are some of the experiences of a preacher's life. While they may be for the best in the end, they do not make him feel as well as some other things would, and especially when he has paid his traveling expenses for nearly seven hundred miles, with the distinct understanding that he is to do the work. But preachers need not dream that they will be free from disappointments, trials, and tribulations any more than others.

TEXAS AS A COUNTRY.

I would hardly be satisfied to close this without giving some of my impressions of Texas as a dwelling place. As a farming country, I think it one of the finest I ever saw. This is especially true of what is called the "Black Belt." This belt is large, several hundred miles in extent; and then there is much very fine country not in the black land. Texas is a very large State; it is more than eight hundred miles from Texarkana, in the northeast corner, to El Paso, in the extreme western portion, as measured by railroads. The country, especially along the railroads, is getting to be filled up with people and farms. You may travel for miles at a time and see nothing but beautiful farms as far as the eye can reach. These farms were well laden with corn, wheat, oats, and cotton, all looking well, except that the dry weather was beginning to affect the corn and cotton some. The wheat was already mostly cut and shocked when I reached the State, and is very fine. They were busy thrashing most of the time I was in the State, and had not finished when I left there on July 3, 1900. They were reporting the wheat as running from twenty to forty bushels per acre in some sections, and the grain very large and heavy. They are rushing to market with so much of it that they are blocking the railroads and elevators, and cannot find cars enough to carry it to market as fast as they want to send it. So they are well fixed for bread, whether they make much corn or not. The land generally lies well, but some of it is rolling and much of it a little undulating, sufficiently so to drain itself. This is the case with much of the black land, so far as I saw it; but while this is generally true in the black lands that I passed through, there are breaks in it occasionally of poorer lands, rough and scrubby timber, and in a few places a sort of white rock cropping out. Then after a short distance of this the fine lands will set in again and extend for miles.

Although we traveled over two hundred miles in the State, we saw very little of Texas, and only speak of what we saw. If I were a young man and expected to follow farming, I should feel much inclined to go to Texas; but as it is, I do not expect to go to Texas to farm. While these things are true, Texas is not a garden of Eden restored. It takes work, industry, and economy to live and prosper on Texas lands, if they are rich. The black mud in the best lands is something very unpleasant when it rains. It loads your feet and your wagon wheels, and makes traveling a terror; but when it clears up, the land soon becomes dry again, and the roads do not become dusty, as in other lands. However, some of the lands in Texas get exceedingly dusty and disagreeable to be out in, while the breezes, which are such a relief in that climate, keep it whirling about in good style.

Almost all of Texas is farther south than Tennessee and the climate milder and warmer, and the crops can be planted and matured much earlier in the year than in Tennessee. I was surprised to see how much farther advanced the crops were there than in Tennessee when I got into that country. Of course, in so large a State, there is almost every variety of soil and diversity of climate; but there is an immense quantity of rich, fine land in Texas; then some of this rich, fine land is not good for vegetables and fruits, while some other portions of it are remarkably fine for them. As to water, if you ask Texas people what sort of water they have, they say it is good, but if you go there from Tennessee and drink the water, you do not agree with them, unless it is cistern water. But those who live there become accustomed to it, and like it very well, and they are generally healthy.

Another drawback that I observed is the fact that very many of the landowners do not live on their lands, and do not, therefore, build up permanent homes in the country. The tendency of the landowners is to live in the towns and cities. They build small houses on their farms for their renters, and these come and go, and that makes it difficult to build up society, churches, or schools permanently where this is the case. But in spite of these drawbacks, Texas is a great country, and is bound to become one of much wealth, if time goes on there as heretofore. But the increase of wealth will be only the worse for pure, genuine, old-fashioned Christianity, as has always been the case in the midst of large wealth. So you never find all the good things together in one place. The good lands in Texas have so advanced in price that it is no easy matter for a poor man to own a home on them; but renters that are industrious and economical do well there and may, after a while, own a home. But people that are comfortably situated elsewhere, as a rule, will do well to be contented where they are.

Lot sought a rich country, but in the end lost all. Christianity does not flourish well in the greedy pursuit of wealth that is going on almost everywhere these days; and, anyway, there is much coldness already among the churches, whatever may be the cause. It would be well for the Lord's people everywhere to call a halt, look well to the New Testament, take their bearings, and turn their faces more thoroughly Zionward.

E. G. S.

Pray and Work.

When the chances are few for private devotion, with little ones chatting and playing around you, busy mothers, why not try silently talking to Jesus while washing the dishes and doing other household work? I have practiced this way for years, especially when anything perplexed or worried me, and have been greatly helped thereby. A snatch of a poem came to me one day with great force before I began this practice. It is something like this:

And if 'tis e'er denied thee
In solitude to pray,
Should holy thoughts come o'er thee,
While friends are round thy way,
E'en then the silent breathing
Of thy spirit raised above
Will reach his home in glory,
Who is Mercy, Truth, and Love.

Busy mothers, pray while you work. Our kind Father will never turn a deaf ear to us when we tell him how much we need him.—Christian Guide.

The idle man has an endless job; he will never be through doing nothing.—Exchange.

If you cannot get what you want, be satisfied with what you get.—Selected.

Personal.

Brother E. G. Sewell preached at Foster Street church of Christ last Sunday.

Brother John R. Aust, of Carthage, Tenn., made us a pleasant call one day last week.

Brother "Weeping" Joe Harding left the city last Saturday for a meeting at Cotton Town, Sumner County, Tenn.

Brother E. A. Elam stopped in to see us last week on his return from Canada. He will begin a meeting next Lord's day at Foster ville, Tenn.

Brother F. W. Smith has been in a meeting at Huntsville, Ala. There had been nineteen additions when we last heard from there, which was on the 13th inst.

Brother E. T. Grigg, of this city, is our duly authorized agent for the sale of "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore." He has already sold quite a number, and now that the book is ready for delivery, orders can be more easily secured.

President A. C. Kuykendall, of South Kentucky College, at Hopkinsville, Ky., was in Nashville last week, and, while here, gave the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company the contract to publish his catalogue. The term just closed has been a most prosperous one, and the management confidently expect a larger attendance at the opening of the fall term than they have ever had before.

At the request of Brother W. F. Armstrong, I write to ask the whereabouts of Brother Jasper Armstrong, who was a Christian preacher and a Christian gentleman. When last heard from he was at Terrell, Tex. Any information concerning his whereabouts, condition, etc., will be appreciated by his brother as well as our brotherhood. I ask the Texas papers to copy this notice.—Sam. H. Boll, Ravenden, Ark.

I thank the brethren for their kind remembrance of me once and again. I am in excellent health and am devoting myself to the Japanese language now. We have had delightful weather till the present. Brother McCaleb's work in Kanda Ward is doing nicely. The day school has from thirty to thirty-four children in daily attendance. The Japanese woman who teaches them is a faithful Christian and gives her pupils wholesome lessons. Sundays and Thursdays she gives a Bible lesson. Visits are made to the homes of these children to put a little sunshine into the lives of their toiling mothers, and once in a while their mothers are induced to lay aside their work for an hour and come to the school and listen to a simple Bible lesson. On Lord's days the Sunday school has a good attendance—usually about thirty children—and the Lord's Supper is taken by about half a dozen Christians. Pray for us.—William J. Bishop, 27 Nakazato Machi, Ushigome Ku, Tokyo, Japan.

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Ravenden Springs, July 13.—Bynum Black preached six sermons last week in one mile of the place where he was born, and baptized nineteen persons. He was born and reared on Martin's Creek, and this work speaks loud of the confidence reposed in him by those people.—Ravenden Springs Hustler.

KENTUCKY.

Winchester, July 7.—I closed a meeting at Wades Mill, Clark County, on Wednesday night, July 4, 1900, with seventeen additions, fifteen of whom made the good confession and were buried with Christ in baptism. My next meeting will be at Fisherville. I go there to assist Brother J. W. Harding. We hope for a good meeting.
T. Q. MARTIN.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Lebanon, July 11.—Our meeting at Teller, on the Washita River, was a grand success. The meeting closed with a large attendance and fine interest. Five were baptized, six restored, and much prejudice removed. I set the church to keeping house. This was a destitute field.
W. D. INGRAM.

TENNESSEE.

Cottage Grove, July 5.—On the third Lord's day in June I began a meeting with the church of Christ at Pleasant Valley, and continued preaching, day and night, for six days. Six persons became obedient to the faith during my short stay. Others seemed to be very much interested, but did not obey. I found that this place has been very much neglected by our preaching brethren. They had not had a sermon in over two years, and were in a very bad condition—were not having their regular Lord's day meetings; and as a consequence, they were very cold, and some, having been overcome by the world, "made shipwreck of the faith." They promised to do better from now on. May the Lord help them to return to their "first love."
A. O. COLLEY.

TEXAS.

Leonard, July 10.—Our meeting at Celeste closed on Saturday, July 7, 1900, at the water. Only two obeyed the gospel; however, the interest was good, and increased. Our audiences grew larger all the while. One thing was sadly wanting in this meeting, and that was some one to lead the singing. "Brethren, these things ought not so to be." Our meeting at Blue Ridge begins next Saturday night. We are expecting a good meeting there, because the brethren work and the Lord never fails.
THOMAS E. MILHOLLAND.

Dallas, July 7.—Our meeting at McEwen, Tenn., lasted ten days, and we had large audiences. We are confident good seed was sown and can be reaped at an early date if some good preacher will go there for another meeting. This meeting should not have closed so soon, but I was due in Texas on July 1, 1900, and had to close there. I reached Dallas on June 30, 1900, and began a meeting on the next day. Pearl and Bryan Street church of Christ bought me a tent this spring, and I am using it in tent work during the week, and then preach at the church house on Sundays. Pearl and Bryan Street church of Christ is "sounding out the word," and many other churches could do the same if they would only try. This church supports a preacher all the time in mission work. One year ago I came to this church and began work with them, and since that time the church has had about two hundred additions. Besides this, they have held five missionary meetings, and in these five meetings about fifty were added to the saved. It will do any one good to mix and mingle with these good people. I am, at this writing, in another tent meeting. The meeting began on last Tuesday night, and there have been nine additions up to date. We expect to carry the gospel into every nook and corner of this city and preach the good news to those who are laboring for a living and who feel unable to go to the "upper ten" churches.

J. S. DUNN.

Longview, July 11.—On last Lord's day evening we closed a glorious week's meeting at the water three miles from Grand Saline, Van Zandt County, with nineteen baptisms for the week. We also set in order at this mission point a congregation numbering thirty-seven members, who promise henceforth to meet and keep house for the Lord. The meeting was held in what was termed a "tough" settlement, but I never had better attention nor better success in a week's meeting. When told I was going to a tough place, I said I was all the more anxious to go, for they needed the gospel more. My blessed Savior seems to have had a peculiar faculty for finding tough places and tough people, and if I have his Spirit, I must find them, too. I stopped most of the time with Brother W. P. Bratcher. I baptized two of his children and hope he will be careful, with his good wife, to train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The following preachers were in attendance on the meeting: S. K. Marksberry, E. R. Kurkendall, — Baldwin, and a Methodist preacher named Methvin. Brother Kurkendall did the baptizing, and D. T. Wheeler led the singing. The following officers, or leaders, were appointed in the congregation set in order: D. T. Wheeler and Dan. Vincent, elders; W. P. Bratcher and — Baldwin, a son of the old preacher, deacons. We baptized some orphans whom I exhorted the church to make a special charge, which I trust they will do. To care for these orphans properly will rebound more to the glory of God in the community than any preaching they may ever do. The Lord help them to be strong. The brethren were not able to support me much financially, but I am able to rejoice in the fact that nineteen souls were born to God through Christ, and I can meet my work in the glory world.
JOHN T. POE.

Publishers' Items.

We do all kinds of printing. Write for prices.

Send us your orders for nicely engraved cards, invitations, etc.

We are now publishing four hymn books: "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and our new book, "Gospel Praise." We are confident that four better books cannot be found. Our hymn book catalogue and price list will be sent to any address on application.

We want the Gospel Advocate to go into every home in the country. We are endeavoring to make it what it should be as a religious journal and teacher. We will send it one month free to addresses furnished us of those who are nonsubscribers, and discontinue at the end of the month to all who do not become regular subscribers during the time.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," edited by F. D. Srygley, will be ready for delivery by the time our readers see this notice. We have been very much delayed in getting out this book, but the delay has been unavoidable. All advance orders will be shipped at once. We believe this to be a good book—one calculated to do great good wherever circulated. Brother Srygley says: "The design of the book is to do good. He has never consented for it to be published except on condition that 'good can come of it.' In passing upon everything that is in the book, I have been guided by my own desire, as well as by his wish, that nothing but that which will do good be allowed to appear in it." Again: "If my judgment is not at fault, no one can read the book and not have a greater desire, when he finishes the reading of it, to be better and to do more good, and less evil, than he had when he began reading it. If I am correct in this opinion, it goes without saying that the book ought to be extensively circulated for the good it will do." The price is $1.50 by mail, postpaid. We first thought we would let out territory by counties, but we have now concluded to let agents go where they please and secure all the orders they can. Order a book, and write for terms to agents.

Carefully examine the following list of tracts and send us your order:

- The Sabbath—Which Day Shall We Observe? by D. Lipscomb.. 2c
- Out of Darkness into Light, by Z. T. Winfree..... 5c
- Prayer, by Hiram Pharris..... 10c
- Pump Reset, by J. M. Kidwill.... 10c
- The New Name, by J. M. Kidwill.. 10c
- Acts of Apostles, by E. G. Sewell.. 10c
- Proper Division of the Word of God, by E. G. Sewell..... 10c
- Theological Grub Ax, by W. L. Butler 10c
- Bible Geology, by I. N. Jones.... 10c
- Review of L. W. Bates on Water Baptism, by R. H. Bonham..... 10c
- Methods of Work and Worship in the Church, by James E. Scobey 10c
- The New Birth, by James A. Harding 1c
- Justification, by T. W. Brents.... 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by O. A. Carr..... 10c
- The Bible Doctrine of Sanctification, by E. A. Elam..... 10c
- Hezekiah Jones—A Dialogue Between a Methodist and a Christian 10c
- Woman's Work in the Church, by G. G. Taylor..... 10c
- Walking by Faith: Origin of Instrumental Music in Christian Worship, by M. C. Kurfees..... 5c
- Instrumental Music in Public Worship, by E. W. Herndon.... 5c
- Church Organization, by E. G. Sewell 10c
- Sincerity Seeking the Way to Heaven, by Benjamin Franklin.. 5c
- How to Study the Bible, by J. D. Tant 10c
- J. N. Hall's Questions Answered, by T. R. Burnett..... 5c
- A Chart Study of the Great Commission, by R. H. McLaurine. Per dozen..... 10c
- Truth Seeking, by D. Lipscomb.. 10c
- Christian Unity, by D. Lipscomb.. 10c
- Establishment of the Kingdom, by L. R. Sewell..... 10c
- Ray-Burnett Debate—A Discussion of the Doctrine and Practices of the Missionary Baptist Church 25c
- Valid Baptism—A Discussion: A. McGary and T. R. Burnett..... 10c
- Dalton-Burnett Debate..... 25c
- The Holy Spirit's Work—Third Proposition of Moody-Harding Debate 25c

Address all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.,
Nashville, Tenn.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: Why was Saul of Tarsus' name changed to "Paul?"
L. ALVER.
Fort Worth, Tex.

"Saul" was the Hebrew name; "Paul" was the Greek name. When among the Jews he was called "Saul;" when he went among the Greek and Roman speaking people he was called "Paul."

Brother Lipscomb: When a member strays from the church of Christ and returns, is it right for him to confess his faults? A preacher passed through here who says it is not right for a member to make his confession. The preacher here agrees with him, and they have been teaching it is not right to make a confession.
A SISTER.
Blackton, Ark.

"Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." All faults or omissions of which we are guilty are to be confessed, and he who refuses to confess his wrongs or shortcomings shows he has not repented.

Brother Lipscomb: In what sense do you understand that the saints are to judge the world? (1 Cor. 6: 2.)
W. N. ABERNATHY.
Clarksburg, Tenn.

This is one of the difficult passages of the Scriptures. MacKnight makes the saints refer to the inspired teachers; and paraphrases it: "Do ye not know that the inspired teachers among you judge the world by the laws of the gospel which they promulgate?" If this be the meaning of it, all Christians may be included, since they all maintain and spread these laws. I do not know what better to give, though this seems strained. The next verse is as difficult. MacKnight gives that: "Do ye not know that we shall declare the judgment of evil angels," or demons? It may mean that they will be associated with Jesus when he sits upon his throne. But I have no clear idea of the meaning. The commentators seem to be at a loss, too.

Brother Lipscomb: Can a Christian take life insurance and not disobey the laws of God? If not, why not? I ask this for my own benefit, and perhaps others may be interested.
A BROTHER.

Life insurance has come to be an investment of moneys, like any other business, and has become a popular business because it is frequently very profitable. All business is to be judged by its workings, whether good or not. In life insurance many are induced to engage and pay their money, with the confidence that many will fail and lose all they pay in, while the others will be the beneficiaries of their failures. The poorer, more needy, and unfortunate persons fail. They lose all, the others get what these lose; they get more than legitimate returns for their investment. I do not think this legitimate business. In all legitimate business all parties to the business in its successful operations are benefited. In life insurance the more thrifless, needy, and helpless lose all; the wealthy and shrewd gain all. I do not think that a business for a Christian to become a partner in.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain 2 Kings 8: 26 and 2 Chron. 26: 2. Why is it that there are twenty years' difference as to the time Ahaziah, king of Judah, began to reign, as recorded in these two books? Were there two kings Ahaziah, with father and mother of the same name, or is it a mistake in the one or the other? I will be very thankful for an explanation of the above scriptures.
J. H. GUIN.

Our brother has confused his references somewhat; 2 Chron. 22: 2 gives account of Ahaziah. There is no doubt but a mistake has been made in Chronicles, for this would make Ahaziah older than his father by two years. The mistakes in these numbers were liable to be made because the marks or figures in the Hebrew were so minute and so similar. I do not know how or when the mistake was made. There is much more uncertainty about the numbers in the Old Testament than about any other portion of the record for the reason above given. Spots are found on the face of the sun that we cannot account for; the sun shines and gives light and heat to the world in spite of the spots.

Brother Lipscomb: I am glad to say, as a worker for Christ and doing all I can to save souls, I have started a Bible class which meets every Sunday evening. My class numbers forty people, young and old, and I must say that the Spirit of the Lord is with us in these meetings. I think that every church of Christ ought to have Bible reading. I think there can be much good done in this way. Please publish this, so that other churches can see what Mount Pleasant church of Christ is doing at Mathews Station, Ala. I hope other churches of Christ may be led to do the same work. We, as preachers of Christ and teachers, have no time to waste, but must seek opportunity to do something for Christ, to do the whole duty of man; there is no rest for us. Much success to you and the Gospel Advocate.
J. H. WILLIAMS.

It is the duty of every member of the church to collect together any number he can, and with them study the Bible. This is the true work for every Christian to do. If there is only one that will study with him, it is his duty to do it. Private, personal work is the most effective work.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain Heb. 7: 1-3. Who was this Melchisedec who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings? Was he an earthly king, or was he God? Please answer through the Gospel Advocate.
A.

We know nothing of who Melchisedec was, save what is given in Heb. 6, 7, and Gen. 14. He is called the "priest of the most high God." He was "King of righteousness; . . . King of Salem, which is, King of peace;" was "without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually." He was so much greater than Abraham that Abraham paid him tithes, as to a superior being. None of these things could be said of any human being. None of the patriarchs are represented as greater than Abraham, the friend of God. So we think Melchisedec was a superior being and was Christ in this state before he was incarnated and born of the Virgin Mary. That is given as an opinion. Others hold that he was Shem, or some of the old patriarchs, and much has been written on the subject. I dislike to give this opinion, as there is nothing practical to us in it, and it is so liable to stir up unprofitable controversy. Nothing can be determined with certainty concerning the question. For this reason, the more is written on it.

Brother Lipscomb: Please explain through the Gospel Advocate 1 Cor. 3: 15: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." This scripture came up in our Bible lesson some time ago, and could not be satisfactorily explained by any one in our class.
TENA CLARK.
New Liberty, Ky.

On February 8, 1900, we published the following on this scripture: "Verse 10 means that Paul had taught that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, as the only foundation on which persons can be builded into the temple or church of God. He had first preached that truth in Corinth, others came after him to build upon the foundation he had laid, and (verse 11) he warns them to be careful as to how they build on this foundation, for there is no other foundation than this can be laid. He says (verse 12) in building on this foundation it may be done with gold, silver, precious stones, or with wood, hay, stubble as the material; but he says (verse 13) every man's work will be tried with fire, and so its character will be revealed, or made known. If tried by fire, the wood, hay, stubble will be burned up, so must represent the false teachings; the gold, silver, and precious stones are purged of their dross by passing through the fire. This must, then, represent the teaching of God's word. If the teaching he does stands the test, he will be rewarded for it (verse 14); if it does not stand the test of fire, but is burned up, then he will suffer loss; but while he suffers loss, he will be saved, 'so as by fire.' (Verse 15.) This last clause gives the only trouble—that is, his work is destroyed, he suffers loss; yet he is saved, 'so as by fire.' It seems to me here is a provision that a man teaching a congregation may possibly do some false teaching, yet, doing it thinking he is teaching the truth, may himself be saved, while the teaching is destroyed. When this test by fire is made has been a question of some doubt. Some think it was made by the persecutions in this world; others, that it applies to the final judgment of God. It likely embraces both. This teaching of Paul was clearly intended to warn the church he planted and taught and among whom he had determined to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified, against teachers who would come in and teach the commandments of men, that would corrupt and defile the temple of God. Some think the wood, hay, stubble brought in are the unworthy persons brought into the church; but no teacher is responsible for this if he declares the whole counsel of God. This would free him from the blood of all men. While there is difficulty about the clause mentioned, I can reach no other conclusion from the context."

Jesus, the Friend of the Workingman.

In a sermon addressed to workingmen, Dr. Garrett, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., said:

"The tendency of modern socialism is to deal with the church as an enemy to labor, with the gospel as a minor theory, and with Christ as an ideal of a past age. Nothing is more fatally false than this. The Bible is a workingman's book, the church is a workingman's church, and Christ is the workingman's Christ. If the laws of the Bible had been observed, there never would have been a strike or cause for one. Notice its laws regulating the relations between capital and labor. Deut. 24: 14 says: 'Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates.' In the following verse directions are given as to the payment of wages, requiring that they be promptly paid. So throughout the Old Testament strict injunctions are given as to the hiring and paying of wage earners. In James 5: 4 is a stern rebuke for withholding hard-earned wages.

"Jesus Christ exemplified and applied these laws in his own teaching. He was himself a workingman. He might have sat on a throne and ruled the world, but he came to be one of you. His parents were working people. His life was a life of toil. The hands nailed to Calvary's cross were hands hardened by honest toil. His followers were workingmen. He might have gathered kings and priests and scholars about him and had armies and navies to carry his gospel to the ends of the earth, but he went down on Galilee's shore and gathered a lot of men like you, and sent them.

"He was always the champion of the workingman. The bitterest words he ever used were spoken to the oppressors of the laboring men. The sweetest words he ever used were: 'Come unto me, all ye that labor.' He worked with you, he lived with you, he lived for you, he died for you. He stood by you all his earthly life; he has stood by you all the ages since. Will you stand by him, for he was one of you?"

Francis Asbury, the great leader of the pioneer forces of American Methodism, was the son of a gardener, and himself served the apprenticeship of a saddler.

The sweetest sleep in the world is enjoyed by the worker resting from honest toil.—Selected.

The best man makes the best neighbor.—Exchange.

Home Reading.

"LOVE YE THEREFORE THE STRANGER."

When Cousin Blanche came to breakfast the day after her arrival at her uncle's house, she heard a clamor of young voices.

"O, Cousin Blanche, see the new kitty! She just came, and she is as tame as anything!" exclaimed Mildred, as her cousin opened the door.

The new kitty was standing on her hind legs beside Roger's chair, being fed with scraps from father's plate by Gladys.

"Father has just gone to town, but he said we might keep her. He believes in being good to stray animals," explained George, the eldest of the Fielding children.

Cousin Blanche felt sure that her new cousins were very lovable, and she petted the kitty kindly.

"We have a dog that came with a broken paw," said Mildred. "It was he that barked when you came, but he did not mean to be rough."

"And we have a lamb that we bought out of Flick's wagon. He was going to take it to the butcher's, but it was so weak and miserable that the butcher would not have it; so we petted it, and it got well, and it has a house next to the pony's," said George.

"Why, the Ridge must be a paradise for poor, forlorn creatures," said Cousin Blanche; but she thought differently a day or two later.

The Ridge was a hilly part of Morton Falls, where the richest people lived. It was covered with fine houses, and had a pretty church in its prettiest part, so that "the Ridgers" did not go down town on Sundays. Very recently a small house on the edge of the Ridge, just where the road wound around and descended to the main town, had been bought by a rather poor man. He had several children, and was glad to get them even that far out of the smoky town; but very soon they complained of being lonely.

They had entered a small private school on the Ridge, where the rich people's children went—for Mr. Forsyth did not wish them to go far down to the public school—and, to their surprise, they found that not one of their schoolmates spoke to them or invited them to play. Susan, Mowbray, and Bertha were left to go home as soon as school closed, and they had to play by themselves. "They do not want us; that is all there is about," said Mowbray; and they made the best of their loneliness.

Now, why was this? Cousin Blanche soon noticed the three Forsyths, for never a child escaped her notice. "Those are nice-looking children at the bend of the road," said she, waiting for information. "O, those Forsyths! They are just common," was Mildred's description.

"Some common things are nice. Bread, for instance, and kittens," suggested Cousin Blanche.

"They go to our school, and their father is clerk in Babbitt's grocery store," said George.

"Well, what of that?" replied Cousin Blanche. "There is a grocer in London who is Sir Thomas, a man of rank. I think Mr. Forsyth shows refinement and good sense in sending his young people to this excellent school so near his home."

Nothing further was said at this time; but some days later, hearing that there was illness in the Forsyth family, Cousin Blanche called, and found Mrs. Forsyth very pleasant. "There is not much the matter with Susan. The doctor says she stays in the house too much," she explained.

"I wonder at her doing that," said Cousin Blanche. "This is such a delightful place to play out of doors."

Mrs. Forsyth looked at her visitor keenly; then, seeing only the kindest interest, she said: "The children here have taken no notice of mine, any more than their mothers have taken of me. There is not a foot of ground here to play on, except the school yard and our own, without trespassing on some rich person's property; so Susan stays in the house and reads, Mowbray goes down town to find boys, and Bertha is so young that she can amuse herself very well in the yard."

"I trust this is only for a short time; the Ridge children are rather slow in making acquaintances," said Cousin Blanche.

"We have lived here more than a year," said Mrs. Forsyth, and then changed the subject, talking pleasantly about books, pictures, and music.

After this the young lady took pains to be seen with the Forsyths. She took them driving and walking, and sat in their garden in full view of all the neighbors. She could not invite them to her uncle's house, as she was only a visitor; but as she was a young lady with a fine position in society, and plenty of money, her example had influence, and after a while some of the Ridge ladies called on Mrs. Forsyth. They learned that her father was a clergyman, and her uncle a college president—things they could have learned a year before—and then their children began to be friendly with hers.

At last, toward the close of her visit, when Mildred and Gladys and George were going out to spend the evening with the Forsyths, Cousin Blanche said: "I am glad to see that stray cats and dogs and lambs and chickens are not the only creatures you feel bound to be kind to. There is a command in the Bible that you will hear read aloud in the lesson in church some day, which says: 'Love ye therefore the stranger.' Have you not found that the Forsyths are worth as much love as the stray cat you were petting and feeding the day after I came here?"

Mildred looked a little ashamed; then she said: "But, Cousin Blanche, the Forsyths were not hungry and homeless, and the cats and dogs were."

"Mildred, dear, people who are not loved by their neighbors are hungry and homeless. I hope you may never know the feeling of being neglected and left outside of things. Suppose your father lost all his money, and had to go and live in a strange town in a small house, and had to take a clerkship in any store he could find," said Cousin Blanche.

"O, I never thought of such a thing!" exclaimed Mildred; and indeed too many people do not think, and are unkind and give pain to schoolmates and neighbors, while they are friendly and charitable to beggars and animals. "Love ye therefore the stranger" means all of God's creatures who need our love.—E. T. M., in Young Christian Soldier.

AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE.

"Mamma, where's my shoes?"

"I put them in their place in your closet, dear. Make haste; we're at breakfast," called mamma from the dining room.

"I'll be late to school just because folks don't leave my things alone," scowled Jack, hurrying in with his shoe strings dangling and a scowl on his face.

Mamma was discreetly busy with her coffee cups.

"Hominy, Jack?" asked papa, cheerily.

"O dear! I don't like hominy. Why don't we always have oatmeal?"

"Papa likes hominy best, so we take turns," explained mamma, trying to avert the storm.

"Might have 'em both," muttered Jack, his voice muffled by a large mouthful of the despised cereal.

"Is there griddle cakes, then?" he demanded, presently.

"This is ironing morning. Katie couldn't fry cakes to-day," answered the mother, gently.

"What else is she made for?" he said, savagely.

"Jack!" Papa looked suddenly up from his paper. His son subsided for a few moments, and table talk went pleasantly on.

"It looks like the beginning of a bad storm," papa said, glancing at the raindrops on the pane. "The youngsters had better go to school prepared for wet weather."

"Yes; the rubbers-and-umbrella brigade to-day," smiled mamma.

"O, need I wear rubbers?" complained Jack. "Nobody but little kids wear 'em a day like this. I won't get wet. Need I?"

"O, yes, dear. You always walk through all the puddles, you know, and you have a cold already."

"I think it's mean, I do! None of the other big fellows have to wear rubbers like babies. Got my thick boots all on. I think you're real mean, so there!" with a burst of angry tears.

"Jack, leave the table!" said his father, sternly. "Go, and put on your rubbers, without a word, and then come and apologize to mamma for your rudeness. It's too bad, dear," looking at mamma's sad face. "Your meals are spoiled continually by such tantrums. I will put a stop to them if I have to whip Jack twice a day."

"But the whipping would only make his temper worse; you've tried that. I've another idea simmering. We'll talk of it to-night"—as Jack came sulkily back.

"Good morning!" cried Jack, dashing into the dining room, next day.

"Morning!" returned papa, gruffly. "What's this, Evelyn—oatmeal? Haven't you learned yet that I don't like oatmeal? I want hominy."

"We had it yesterday, John, if you remember; but I'll see that it is made to-morrow."

"That won't feed me to-day," pushing away his saucer. "Well what next? Fish balls? Humph!"

"I thought you liked them," said mamma, anxiously.

"Plenty of things I like better. Have you mended those gloves of mine, Evelyn?"

"Why, no, John; you didn't ask me to. I'll do it now."

"No; I can't wait. I should think you might keep my things in better order. I'm behind time for the train, anyway; breakfast was so late."

Jack's papa rushed off without saying good-by slamming the door angrily, and leaving a dark shadow behind him. It had not lifted at dinner that night. Jack's papa grumbled at the cooking, found fault with everything, and was so ill-tempered that the meal, usually accompanied by much fun and pleasantness, was more dismal than breakfast had been. Jack held his breath in dismay.

"Don't you know where the key of my desk is, Evelyn; and what am I to do now without it? You must have mislaid it. Strange you can't leave my things alone. I think it's a shame—"

But mamma had suddenly covered her face with her handkerchief and left the table.

"Mamma," whispered Jack, stealing into her room and lap in the dark.

"Well, dear?" Her arms closed around him.

"Mamma, what ailed papa? If I was a man, I'd—"

"Perhaps papa didn't think; perhaps he was just cross at everything. Papa is naturally impatient, Jack, and if one lets his temper get out from under control, it is hard stopping it. It grows worse every day until it becomes stronger than a man himself, and makes life miserable to him and every one about him. Can't you see for yourself how it would be?"

Jack meditated a while. "Mamma, did papa ever have a temper like mine?"

"Very like, he says, though we can hardly believe it, he controls it so well. Perhaps he was willing for you to see to-day what your temper might become if you let it grow worse, as you are doing now. Do you think we have had a pleasant day, Jack?"

"I guess not; it's been awful."

"And it all came from the unpleasantness of one person, Jack."

There was a long pause; then Jack suddenly announced, with conviction: "Mamma, I believe papa was just putting his temper on, and I know what for; but if I'm as ugly usually as he has been to-day, I guess I'd better begin to stop."

And he did.—Congregationalist.

THE COST OF ONE DRINK.

Some men are so made that the mere taste of liquor will kindle in them a raging thirst for more.

A doctor and his friend were once talking together in front of a saloon, when a master mechanic, a man of amiable and excellent character, a first-class workman, full of business, with an interesting family, respected by everybody, and who bade fair to be one of the leading men of the city, came up to him and laughingly said: "Well, I have just done what I never did before in my life."

"Ah, what was that?"

"Why, Mr. — has owed me a bill for work for a long time, and I dunned him for the money till I was tired, but a minute ago I caught him out here and asked him for the money. 'Well,' he said, 'I will pay it to you if you will step in here and get a drink with me.' 'No,' said I, 'I never drink; I never drank in my life.' 'Well,' he replied, 'do as you please; if you will not drink with me, I will not pay your bill—that is all.' But I told him I could not do that. However, finding he would not pay the bill, rather than lose the money, I just went in and got a drink." And he laughed at the strange occurrence as he concluded.

As soon as he had finished the story, the physician's companion, an old, discreet, shrewd man, turned to him and in a most impressive tone said: "Sir, that was the dearest drink that ever crossed your lips, and the worst bill you ever collected."

And terribly did time verify that prediction. In less than twelve months he was a confirmed, disgraced sot, a vagabond in society, a curse to those who loved him, a loathing and a shame wherever he went. At last he died a horrible death in an infirmary from a disease produced solely by intoxication.—Ches-ter County Times.

To excel is to live.—Beranger.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JULY 19, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The church will never attain to that state of perfection which is pleasing to our Heavenly Father until each member of the body realizes he has a work to do and that there is a grave responsibility resting on him. All agree in church work that every member should be made to feel this responsibility and encouraged to labor actively for the spread of the gospel of Christ. It is true that this end will not be attained by one man doing all the preaching, but this method serves to develop the talent of one man for teaching, while the same talent in others is not cultivated, but left to die. With Christ as our head, the whole body fitly joined together is to edify itself in love. Every joint, every fiber, and every band is to supply its portion, "according to the effectual working in the measure of every part." It is a fact that churches that depend on one man to do all the preaching do not usually send out other preachers. Oftentimes the church becomes so helpless that it cannot conduct the song service or a prayer meeting unless the regular preacher is present. Then, as it is best to develop the talent of every member of the body, and this is in harmony with the teaching of God's word, we certainly are not looking after the best interest of the church when we have one man to do practically all the teaching of the congregation. We should rather encourage the developing, the feeding, and the edifying of the whole body.

As a rule, people who favor the modern "pastor" are free to admit that the sermonic style is not the way to teach the Scriptures. The method of asking and answering questions is far more effective. A free exchange of ideas, when each can frankly make his wants known and each seek to be helpful to others, will educate the members of the body in a knowledge of God's word far quicker than any regular preaching will do. While preaching has its proper place, we should see that it does not drive out all other methods of teaching; further, that an undue importance should not be given to it to the neglect of other teaching. The elders should not only be apt to teach themselves, but they should be able to guide and direct the members in that way that will best develop and make them strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. For one of the elders to do all the teaching would not strengthen the talents of the different members of the body. The good overseer does not do all the work, but sees that it is wisely done and that each one works where he can accomplish the most good.

The Christian Guide, after giving some wise and helpful admonitions in regard to Christian activity and zeal, suggests: "It would be well not to attempt any protracted meetings in November, as the country will be in such an excitement that but little good will be accomplished; but we should bend every energy until a few days before the election to try to save the lost." It seems unwise to abandon the work of trying to save souls even for one month. Many people will die in the month of November. God does not hold us responsible for results, but for the work we do. Paul charges Timothy: "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." Life is too fleeting, souls are too precious, for us to be idle one month, while the devil, as a roaring lion, is going about seeking whom he may devour.

It is with pleasure that we note a tendency to attach less importance to human creeds than formerly. The Christian Advocate says editorially: "We have been criticised by some severely orthodox brethren for insisting that the crossing of all the t's and the dotting of all the i's in one's creed is not a necessary condition of salvation, but at the risk of going through a similar experience a second time we venture to repeat the assertion here. It is not our desire to say a word in disparagement of creeds. They serve a most useful function. As an expression of the organized beliefs of the church, they can hardly be dispensed with. But at best they are only approximate statements of the truth. No one of them exhausts the meaning of the word of God, nor all of them put together. To insist on treating them as if they were of divine authority is to depart from the whole spirit of our religion." When men make a creed they place an interpretation on the Bible for others. If the Bible must be interpreted, better allow people to interpret it for themselves. God can reveal himself to man more clearly than man can for him. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus."

Singing is a part of the worship. Christians are admonished by Paul to speak to one another "in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, and to sing and make melody in their hearts unto the Lord." The Bible nowhere gives an intimation that this part of the worship should be turned over to salaried choirs and high-priced soloists. Oftentimes these professionals are wicked and immoral and care nothing for the religion of Jesus Christ. Such singing as they do only tends to corrupt the church. There is nothing elevating, spiritual, or heavenly about it. Sometimes Protestants sing in the choirs of Roman Catholics. They do so for the money that is in it. This is a prostitution of their talents for which fearful is the responsibility. The man to whom God has given the talent to sing is under obligation to use that gift to the honor and glory of God. Men do not all have the same talents, but God requires each to be faithful in the use of that which he has given to him.

CHRISTIAN EDIFICATION, AGAIN.

The Bible teaches that the good of the congregation and the salvation of souls demand the use and development of the talents of all the members. How this is best brought about is the question to decide. I have seen some congregations that developed and grew strong with but little preaching from without. I have often referred to two congregations which grew and developed greater strength than any two known to me in Middle Tennessee. They were in McMinnville and Lewisburg. I spent a year, when I first began to preach, in McMinnville. They were then very weak, and the outlook of the church was unpromising. But a number of the members had a mind to work, and they developed quite a number of members that not only spoke at home, but went out into the surrounding country and taught the Bible to the people; so there was growth through the country as well as in town. I do not believe a church or a Christian will prosper which does not try to help the poorest and most needy, both of persons and communities.

These two churches, from some cause, have each sought a preacher to come and settle with them and give more of his time to teaching and looking after them and their growth. Two causes, I think, have brought about this desire: First, the elders, or teachers, let their business grow upon them, so as to engross their time and attention and so engross their feelings that they have not given the attention to the church they formerly did. The other members followed the example of the elders. The younger ones did not become so much interested as the older members in studying and teaching the word of God; so, secondly, the younger members, as the church increased in numbers, saw other churches around them with their regular pastor to speak for and visit among them, and they wanted to be in the fashion. In other words, the current was in that direction, and it is difficult for old or young to avoid floating with the current. It is proper to state that during the growth of the church at McMinnville they usually had preaching on Saturday and Sunday, once per month, by Brother Jesse Sewell. Christian merchants then, when preaching hour on Saturday came, would kindly tell their customers it was preaching hour, ask them to go with them to church, and would lock the stores until preaching was over. When business increased they ceased to do this, and, in the hurry of the world, the Saturday preaching became obsolete. I have mentioned McMinnville and Lewisburg because I have had more personal knowledge of the churches at these places than at others. The same condition has largely prevailed in Sparta, Manchester, Winchester, Lebanon, and Gallatin, and for a time in Franklin. The churches of Christ in a number of these places grew to be the strongest churches in the places without a regular preacher; indeed, they were not able to obtain a regular preacher until they had grown in numbers. We sometimes think the fewer in number the congregation is, the greater need for a preacher. This may be true, and it seems it should be; but the larger the congregation, the more time and attention is needed from the elders, or teachers, and in the failure of the elders to do the work, the regular preacher is brought in to supplement their failure. Here, it seems to me, the evil of the one-man pastor, or ruler, is brought in.

The elders, who are the scriptural teachers of the congregation, do not give the needed attention to study to make them competent teachers, nor do they spare the time to look after the members of the congregation and do the private work needed for the welfare of the congregation. The private work, we must learn, is the more effective work, both with those within and those without. Paul's work at Ephesus during his years of stay there was from house to house, with those not Christians as well as with those who were Christians. "Ye know . . . how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." This testifying to them of the necessity of repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ was to the unbelievers, yet it was done from house to house, as well as publicly, both day and night. This spirit and this earnest labor of the apostle are as needful as the forms of his work. He exhorts the elders to "watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears. And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." This is Paul's testimony as to the character and manner of his work at Ephesus, and his earnestness for the three years of his stay among them. One great cause of the failure of the elders and teachers is their lack of earnestness and devotion in their work. A man imbued with Paul's earnestness and zeal could not avoid house-to-house and private work; he would boil over, and talk to his neighbors and all he met of the great concerns of Christ; and this zeal would go a long way toward curing the evils complained of. If the elders were full of zeal and devotion, so as to teach and instruct others in the way of truth, as did Paul, their zeal would inspire the zeal and activity of all the members and keep it alive. So there would be a continued "revival," as we call it, in the churches.

Much of the evil complained of originates in the lukewarmness of the churches—elders in common with the church. This may have its origin greatly with the preachers, those who first teach the truth. They greatly set the step, so far as zeal and devotion are concerned. The converts look to the preachers as the models in this way. The preachers do only public work, as a rule. Having no real, earnest, personal interest in the salvation of souls, they rely on public and eloquent speaking; and if they are required to make some sacrifice in this work, they murmur and complain that they are neglected, and make the impression they are working for the rewards they get. Let us not overlook the spirit and devotion of the apostles in seeking to follow the apostolic example. I believe a restoration of the spirit and devotion of the apostles would go far in restoring apostolic order throughout, because the changes from the order have been brought about by the lack of the spirit to furnish substitutes for it.

Some of the elders in primitive times labored in word and doctrine, and were to be esteemed worthy of double honor in the way of support. Many think these devoted their time to public preaching. They did devote their time to teaching and preaching, but not necessarily to public preaching. Some of the most effective preachers do but little public speaking. Some good women are most effective preachers who never speak in public. The Adventists frequently have effective men and women preachers who do but little public speaking; the Mormons do their work chiefly by house-to-house visitations. Now, if we begin at this foundation of substituting the spirit of earnestness and devotion, the forms of work will greatly correct themselves.

In this work at Ephesus three years of teaching by Paul had been given them. The work of teaching and instruction was then committed by him to the elders, and this seems to have been the permanent order. They must be earnest, zealous, and devoted, giving time and talent to study and the instruction of the members; and in this work they were to call out and encourage the activity and zeal of every member. Elders as frequently fail to call out this activity and zeal of the members as the preacher does. The elders do all the talking and working, and the members do nothing. This result is just as hurtful to the congregation when brought about by the elders as when brought about by the preachers. Paul taught by example. The elders are to be examples to the flock, and they are to lead the younger members in the work. This true spirit of zeal and devotion is a point that needs to be watched, because, without this, true Christian work will not be performed by elders or preachers, nor by the flocks of God; and it seems to me, in any change for the better, this must not be neglected, and that it is the starting point for improvement in all other lines. When a true spirit of devotion is aroused, the elders will give their time and attention to the work of God, and the members will help them and the preachers, too, in their work. D. L.

Note from Brother Paul.

Here is a note from Brother G. Paul (who has been in the Nashville Bible School for two or three years, but is now in West Pullman, Chicago), giving information of the acknowledgment by his father of the fifty dollars sent him a couple of months since. I asked for a report of his work, what he had done. He gives the response below:

"Brother Lipscomb: I received a letter from my father in which he informs me that he has received that brotherly gift which you sent him some time ago, and he expresses his thanks for it. He informs me that he continues in the good work from a high and spiritual motive and that there have been twenty-two additions to the church of God, baptized by his own hands. He tells me that he lives within the loving limits of 1 Cor. 13, the which chapter the great apostle gives as the end of Christian religion, for I regard the remainder part of the Bible as a means to bring men to this grand end. The motive or the incentive power of the Old Testament was fear, but in the New Testament the great apostle makes love. The child first obeys through fear, but there comes a time when love causes him to obey. Fear is necessary, but if it does not lead at last to love, it becomes a failure. I divide mankind into three classes: (1) those who do kind acts through fear, (2) those who do kind acts for reward, (3) those who do kind acts through love. This last class has reached the end. Under the second class you may put hypocrites, for there are many in the church.

"As to my state of being, I am at West Pullman, Chicago, but I intend to come again to school, if you have so arranged as to have a factory to help the poor boys to pay their way through. Write to me, if you please. G. PAUL.

"West Pullman, Chicago, Ill."

"The highest purpose of education is not so much to know, to think, or to argue, as it is to travel the right road. It is a matter of no consequence for a man to speak correctly, if he does not speak the truth.—Selected.

Do not be ornamental, boys; see that your deeds bring forth good fruit.—Exchange.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The impression seems to be growing, and not without good reason, that the religious press is not as potent a factor in molding the sentiments of the people as it has been. Granting the truth of this impression, we would say most emphatically that this does not speak well for the best interests of our people.

The hope of the nation is in the religious and God-fearing people who are the salt of the earth to purify and save it, and the light of the world to disperse its darkness and gloom. A few righteous people would have saved Sodom from its doom, and a very few really pious, determined souls may save a community or the whole nation to-day. We may boast of the grandeur, glory, and greatness of our nation, but it is only great as it is good. Our wealth, our farm products, our manufactures, and a great population do not really make us great. The righteous nation is the truly great one. When Babylon, Greece, and Rome sank into rebellion against God, they soon lost their influence and power; whenever we set ourselves up against God, we will travel in the same way.

No man can find any fault with the religious press, the pulpit, or the church that boldly, fearlessly, and tenderly teaches the principles taught and practiced by the despised and lowly Nazarene. The religious paper that teaches most faithfully the truth given by our Lord and Master, that is ever seeking to please him, and not the world, can never fail to do much good. It will be sought after by all the truly spiritually-minded. On the other hand, when the editor seeks to pander to the world and the lusts of the flesh, his paper is sure to fail to accomplish any good and will lose the respect of all right-thinking people. Jesus did not seek to obtain the good will of the people by compromising with error, but boldly antagonized error with the truth. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." (Matt. 10: 34-36.)

There can be no union between truth and error, between the church and the world. They are antagonistic, and between them there must be a ceaseless warfare. Christ came to give a perfect peace by destroying error with the truth. Hence, he says: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Every time the religious editor seeks to make the truth palatable to the worldly, he betrays Jesus, as did Judas, and does an injury to the cause of Christ the extent of which we can hardly conceive. The world rightly despises such sycophancy and has no respect for the man who is guilty of it. The man who sets himself up for a teacher should know the truth, and then should have the manhood and bravery to teach it, regardless of the consequences. If the Gospel Advocate were a paper that pleased the worldly, the light, and frivolous, I would feel sure that its editors were not doing their duty in teaching the whole counsel of God. While regretting exceedingly that we have such people, yet when I find such almost universally speaking against the Gospel Advocate, it is ground for encouragement and rejoicing rather than discouragement and gloom. "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you!" We should not be surprised nor grow weary of well-doing when we find that the harder some church members seek to please and be like the world, the more bitter and intense is their opposition to those who seek to walk after the Spirit, and not after the world.

It is impossible for the religious press to exert the influence that it should as long as any professed Christians read the daily, secular papers, give them their support and influence, rather than read and use their influence to extend the circulation of the Christian journal. If Christians do not feel an interest in reading Christian papers and in distributing them among those of the world, we could hardly expect any one else to take an interest in so doing. Still, how many of the professed followers of Christ find time enough to read accounts of murders, thefts, and almost every crime conceivable, and yet they have not time to read a first-class religious paper! Shame on their zeal and love for the truth! If Christians do not take an interest in their literature, can we expect the world to do so? Hardly. Every lover of the Lord should feel a deep interest in placing the best reading matter in the hands of the people. The books and papers we read have a great influence in molding our sentiments; unconsciously we find ourselves thinking as they think and taking the positions they take.

Another reason for the decline in the influence of the religious weekly may be found in the fact that those who control and write for them do not always manifest the Spirit of Christ. Some editors of religious journals are so narrow, partisan, and bigoted that they cannot, or will not, fairly represent those who do not agree with them. They show more prejudice than the politician and stoop to things that ought to disgrace any man. This not only damages their cause, but is also hurtful to the cause of Christ. There are some religious editors, that I never read what they write of those with whom they do not agree, for past experience with their writings has taught me that they do not represent them fairly nor truthfully. When religious people discuss a subject either orally or through a paper, they should be prompted by the desire to know the whole truth. They should see how nearly they agree, and not strive to magnify their differences. It would be hard to find a man that does not hold some truth. Yet when religious partisans discuss religious subjects they are more for victory than truth, more for the glory of self than Christ. Such discussions magnify differences, arouse prejudice, and always do much harm. Still it is true that discussions for the love of truth and with a desire of coming into the full light of truth are always helpful. But the partisan spirit should be discouraged through the press and everywhere else. J. C. M'QUIDDY.

Cost of a Church Carpet.

A church bought a carpet for eight hundred dollars. The women raised the fund by entertainments. The preacher said: "This carpet cost, not eight hundred dollars, but four thousand dollars. To the bill must be added the incidentals, work, worry, nervous strain, bodily weariness, and heartaches of one hundred women. Add, also, the colds, fevers, doctors' bills, and what you have paid to other churches; for when they come to your sociables, you must go to theirs. A man buys groceries. His wife, at the expense of fuel, strength, and time, makes a cake and gives it to the sociable; then the man, his wife, and children go to the sociable and eat the cake and pay for it. Suppers have been given that cost ten dollars, and only netted five dollars. Demoralization of church, society, a curtailment of legitimate giving, and other things follow in the train. I am opposed to any more sociables as revenue producers. 'Yet show I unto you a more excellent way.' It is the way of Paul. 'Now, concerning the collection, . . . upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.'—The Christian.

A Fortune in Manners.

"His manner is worth a hundred thousand dollars to him." That is what one of the chief men of the nation lately said about a boy. "It would not be worth so much to one who meant to be a farmer, or who had no opportunities; but to a young college student with ambition it is worth at least a hundred thousand dollars."

The boy was a distant relative of the man, and had been brought up by careful parents in a far-off city. Among other things, he had been taught to be friendly and to think of other persons before himself. Therefore he soon acquired a cheery, helpful, and affable manner that won for him an entrance into the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. His attractive address and quiet consideration made friends for him on every hand. A score of small courtesies every day unconsciously called attention to his value. That is why the shrewd man of the world ventured the foregoing opinion.—Forward.

"I have no mission," said Clara Barton, years ago, "but I have always had more work lying round my feet than I could do." If we would do the work we find lying round our feet, instead of dreaming over what our mission in life was meant to be, we would more quickly find out what that mission is.—Selected.

Because the saloon is a murderer it should die.—Forward.

Kansas Notes.

Brother I. D. Moffitt is giving most of his time to work in Coffey County. If all other preachers in the county are similar to Brother Moffitt, the work of Coffey County is in good hands.

Brother O. M. Thomason is now in Colorado. He may locate there and work in a field in which he is much needed. Brother Thomason is capable of accomplishing much, and is doing some good work.

Brother B. F. Rhodes was with the brethren at Hoyle, O. T., on the second Lord's day in this month. I expected to be with him on the train, but my work called me a day earlier.

Brother J. E. Cain filled his regular appointment at Richland on the first Lord's day in this month.

I had the pleasure of meeting Brother David Rhodes and wife, of Alabama, on the first Lord's day in July. They attended the meeting at Belle Plaine, and visited the writer. Brother Rhodes is the father of Brother B. F. Rhodes. While Brother David does not claim to be a preacher, he is accomplishing much in his Alabama home. He went there a few years ago and found the community very rough. Many of his new neighbors were fond of "tripping the light fantastic toe" and many other things that were contrary to what Brother Rhodes had learned from the Bible. Many of them have been induced to obey the gospel, and a material change has been wrought in the community. Every community needs faithful workers like Brother and Sister Rhodes.

I am now with the brethren at Minco, I. T. A young lady who had obeyed the gospel at another place, a few years ago, but had failed to be as faithful as she should, came forward and acknowledged her wrongs and expressed a determination to live faithfully in the future. There has been one baptism. I shall remain here as long as the interest demands. This field that once appeared so hard is not so hard now. It was next to an impossibility to get them to listen to the gospel eight or nine years ago. Much has been accomplished since that time. The difficulties to surmount have been many, and some of them of a peculiar nature, but there are some faithful workers in the congregation that never cease to labor. This again reminds me of how much can be accomplished by a few who "continue steadfastly." We can go into many communities and find such work has been and is being accomplished. We ought not to become discouraged because we are few in number. Remember, there is much to be done and much that can be done if we faithfully perform our part. Trust in the Lord and do the right. He will bless our labors some time. Do it all in the name of the Lord. Small beginnings, large difficulties, and many disappointments have been the mountains that most of our congregations have climbed. Sufficient confidence in God, faith in Christ, and devotion to the truth, coupled with patience and perseverance growing out of them, will overcome difficulties that at first appear almost insurmountable. The example of Paul is always beneficial to us, and his teaching will lead us aright. Peter's instruction, "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness love." is a tower of strength to us, and, if fully heeded, will lead us to victory.

Minco, I. T. D. T. BROADUS.

ALUM BAKING POWDERS IN CONGRESS.

Report that Evidence of Their Harmfulness is Overwhelming.

The Committee on Manufactures of the Senate were some time ago directed to investigate food adulterations, and accumulated a volume of testimony upon the subject from the best-informed parties and highest scientific authorities in the country.

One of the greatest sources of danger to our foods, the committee state in their report, exists in alum baking powders. The committee found the testimony, they say, overwhelmingly condemnatory of the use of alum in baking powders, and recommended that such use be prohibited by law.

Senator Mason, discussing in the Senate the report of the committee and the several bills introduced to carry the recommendations of the committee into effect, said:

"When we made this report we made it based on the evidence before us, and the evidence is simply overwhelming. I do not care how big a lobby there may be here for the alum baking powder, I do not care how many memorials they publish, there is no place in the human economy of human food for this thing called 'alum.' The overwhelming evidence of the leading physicians and scientists of this country is that it is absolutely unfit to go into human food, and that in many cases—if the gentleman will read the evidence, some of the physicians say they can trace cases in their own practice—there are diseases of the kidney due to the perpetual use of alum in their daily bread.

"When you mix a mineral poison, as they all say that alum is, it is impossible to mix it always to such a degree that there will not be a residuum left of alum, which produces alumina, and which contributes largely to the diseases of the people in this country.

"I want to give the Senate an idea of the class of men we have called. They are the leading scientists from every college of the United States that we could get hold of."

Senator Mason, from a long list of scientists who had testified as to the hurtfulness of alum baking powders and as to the healthfulness of cream of tartar powders, mentioned the following:

Appleton, John Howard, professor of chemistry, Brown University, Providence, R. I.

Arnold, J. W. S., professor, University of New York.

Atwater, W. O., professor and director, Government Experimental Station, Washington, D. C.

Barker, George F., professor, University of Pennsylvania.

Caldwell, G. C., professor, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.

Chandler, C. F., professor, Columbia University, New York.

Chittenden, Russell H., professor, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

Cornwall, H. B., professor, University of Princeton, New Jersey.

Crampton, C. A., professor, Division of Chemistry, Washington, D. C.

Fairhurst, Alfred, professor, chemist, University of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.

Frear, William, professor, State College, Pennsylvania.

Jenkins, Edward H., professor, Department of Agriculture, State of Connecticut.

Johnson, S. W., professor, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

Mallet, John William, professor, University of Virginia.

Mew, W. M., professor, Army and Medical Department, United States Government.

Morton, Henry, president of Stevens Institute, Hoboken, N. J.

Munroe, Charles Edward, professor of chemistry, Columbian University, Washington, D. C.

Prescott, Albert B., professor, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Price, A. F., medical director, United States Naval Hospital, Washington, D. C.

Smart, Charles, lieutenant colonel, assistant surgeon general, United States Army.

Sternberg, George M., surgeon general, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

Tucker, Willis G., professor of chemistry and chemist of State Board of Health, State of New York.

Vaughan, Victor C., professor, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Van Reypen, W. K., surgeon general, United States Navy, Washington, D. C.

Wiley, Prof. H. W., chief chemist, Department of Agriculture, United States, Washington, D. C.

Wyman, Walter, surgeon general, United States Marine Hospital, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Pettigrew: "Was there any testimony which showed that there were cases of injury to health as a result of constant use of alum?"

Mr. Mason: "Yes; I can turn you to the testimony."

Mr. Pettigrew: "I do not care to have the Senator turn to it. I simply want to emphasize the point. I agree with the Senator. It has always been my own impression that alum baking powder is injurious, but I wanted to bring it out and make it emphatic, if the proof sustains that position."

Mr. Mason: "I quite agree with the Senator. It is claimed that there is not a country in Europe that does not prohibit the use of alum. Certainly three or four of the leading countries of Europe to which I have had my attention called prohibit the use of alum in baking powder."

Mr. Pettigrew: "Did the chemists who came before the committee, these professors, generally testify—was it the result of their evidence—that the cream of tartar baking powder is healthy, and does not leave a residuum which is injurious to health?"

Mr. Mason: "Yes; I say emphatically, yes; that the weight of the evidence is that whenever any of these distinguished men, who have a national reputation, the leading chemists of the colleges, were interrogated upon the point, they stated that fact, every one of them, to my recollection."

The Modern Pastor.

I see Brother J. E. Dunn's article in the Gospel Advocate of June 14, 1900, and it is good. I was told, not long since, that there is a sign sticking up on the church of Christ at the corner of Pearl and Bryan streets, Dallas, Tex., which reads thus: "J. E. Dunn, Pastor." As Brother Dunn was the preacher in that church recently, perhaps he can explain why the advertisement is stuck on the church building. But in view of what he now writes, he must have been a different pastor from the "modern pastor," or possibly the sign was put there and remained there without his knowledge.

JOHN T. POE.

Kindness and patience are a powerful combination. They succeed where brute force fails.—Selected.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

LOCKHART.

Sister Lockhart died at Leesdale, Ala., on May 29, 1900. She was a noble Christian woman, a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a living example of many Christian graces. She loved primitive Christianity, and through patience and comfort of the Scriptures had hope.

THOMAS C. KING.

RICHARDSON.

Sister Richardson fell asleep in Jesus on June 30, 1900, at her home in Cullman, Ala. She had been an invalid for seven years. I baptized her six years ago. We thought at that time that the end would be soon, but her health improved for several years. Her desire to make others better, her loving conversation, and her patience in severe suffering were very remarkable. May her loving example live in the hearts of others.

THOMAS C. KING.

MOFFET.

Sister Maggie Moffet, daughter of Elder John Carnduff (deceased), an able minister in the church of Christ, and the wife of Mr. John Moffet, late of Chicago, departed this life at their beautiful home at Vinemont, Ala., on June 30, 1900. In all the walks of life she was a woman of power, but she especially excelled as a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a kind neighbor. Her remains were laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Cullman, Ala. Sister Moffet is the third sister our congregation has lost within one month.

THOMAS C. KING.

HURT.

Sister Dallye, wife of Brother Alex. Hurt, was born on June 16, 1847; obeyed the gospel in 1866, under the preaching of Brother Trimble; and died on June 25, 1900, being fifty-three years and nine days old. Sister Hurt had been afflicted for about twelve years, and she bore her affliction with patience. She leaves a husband and a number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. To the bereaved ones we would say: Weep not for her, only be faithful and trust in the rich promises of God's word. May God help all of us to live nearer to him, that we may be prepared to meet all of our loved ones after death.

Leftwich, Tenn. S. T. SEWELL.

DREDDEN.

Sister Tishie A. Dredde, daughter of Brother W. and Sister M. L. Dredde, departed this life on August 18, 1896, near Cuba Landing, Tenn. Sister Dredde was born on February 26, 1880, being sixteen years, five months, and twelve days old at the time of her death. She obeyed the gospel at Bakerville, Tenn., under the preaching of E. G. Sewell, while very young, being in her thirteenth year. It was my pleasure to meet her a number of times after she obeyed the gospel, and frequently she would manifest her interest in church work. I always found her to be a good girl, full of religious zeal, and anxious to attend church service when convenient to do so. Seldom do I find one so young filled with faith and religious zeal as she was. She was cheerful at home, as well as elsewhere, and always treated her friends and associates with courtesy. I have never heard any one speak of her disrespectfully. She left a vacancy in the family which can never be filled. She left a father, mother, sister, and two brothers to mourn her departure; but they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, for the Bible teaches there remains a rest for the people of God, and I am sure she was one of his children. May God bless the sorrow-stricken friends and relatives.

E. S. B. WALDRON.

LITTLE.

On the night of May 6, 1900, at her home in Chapel Hill, Marshall County, Tenn., Mrs. Eula, wife of Mile Little, and daughter of Ned and E. J. Neil, fell asleep in Jesus. She was born on December 13, 1870, being twenty-nine years, four months, and twenty-three days old at the time of her death. She obeyed the gospel at Old Lasea, Maury County, Tenn., under the preaching of Brother Frank Davis, on August 30, 1885; was baptized by Brother T. H. Mills; and was married on July 9, 1896. She leaves a husband, one little girl, father, mother, two brothers, one sister, and many other friends and relatives to mourn their loss; but we mourn not as those who have no hope. She was an affectionate daughter, a loving sister, and a devoted wife and mother. She was a member of Cedar Dell congregation, and was appreciated by every one as a faithful Christian. She has gone to her reward, we trust, to that city which hath foundations, whose Maker and Builder is God. Our heartfelt sympathies are with the bereaved ones, and may the all-powerful, yet unseen, hand of Him who doeth all things well lead her sweet little girl in the path of rectitude and Christian duty, and may she so live that she will meet her mamma in that bright and beautiful home where sickness, sadness, sorrow, pain, and death are felt and feared no more.

Thick, Tenn. J. M. T. WHITE.

LYLE.

Brother W. W. Lyle departed this life at his residence, near Lyle Station, Tenn., on July 22, 1899. He was born on August 22, 1840; was, therefore, fifty-eight years and eleven months old at the time of his death. He obeyed the gospel about twenty years ago at Cedar Hill, Tenn., under the preaching of Brother Williams and Brother Nicks, and was faithful in the discharge of his duty as a Christian. I was acquainted with him about eighteen years, and during that time, when I was at his place of worship, he was almost always present. If he failed to come to church on Lord's day, it was generally understood that something was in his way. He was a very industrious man, and worked very hard to support his family. He was kind and generous, and tried to bear his part in church work. He gave liberally for the support of the gospel. The church of Christ at Lyle Station has lost one of its most influential members, but we trust that our loss is his eternal gain. He leaves a wife, eleven children, and other relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but they should not sorrow as those who have no hope, for he was a faithful Christian, and they are the ones who can enjoy the promise of eternal life. Our Savior said: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Brother Lyle showed by his daily walk that he was as faithful as any one with whom I am acquainted. May God bless his sorrow-stricken family and numerous relatives.

E. S. B. WALDRON.

Brother Dunn's Article Once More.

Brother Dunn is a conscientious, good man and a good preacher. We bid him Godspeed in all his efforts to contend for "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." In reply to his kind, Christian article in the Gospel Advocate of July 5, 1900, I wish to say only one thing. He says: "I am inclined to think some one has misinformed Brother Elam on my preaching." No; I received from Brother Dunn's article itself whatever impressions I have. No one said anything to me in regard to his sermon. I never knew he preached it until I saw it in the paper. If Brother Dunn does not oppose preaching on Sunday morning by an evangelist in order to edify, teach, and encourage the true worshiper, then one good man as well as another may do it. My article was not written to justify anything wrong any evangelist or any church may do, or any unscriptural use a church may make of an evangelist.

In reply to Brother McLaurine's article I wish to say: I had no thought of impugning Brother Dunn's or any one's motive. I would not intentionally do such a thing. I simply meant to ask the brethren (not Brother Dunn any more than others) to stop and be sure that nothing but the pure desire to have truth prevail animate them. It would help us all to study carefully what is being said in the Gospel Advocate on this subject, and especially what Brother Lipscomb and Brother Kurfees have said.

E. A. ELAM.

DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION

MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG AND SICK WOMEN WELL

WE GIVE HERE A FEW OF THE MANY LETTERS WE RECEIVE TELLING ABOUT CURES THAT B. B. B. HAS MADE.

Three Large Ulcers, Also Cancer of the Mouth, Cured by B. B. B.

"Fredonia, Ala., October 15, 1898.

"About twenty years ago I was cured of a bad eating ulcer by taking B. B. B. Three large ulcers broke out on my collar bone. I cured these with B. B. B. Lately a cancer broke out in my head and ears and ate all the small bones out of my mouth, and I could scarcely eat and talk. I could eat a little strained soup; that was all. I tried nine doctors, but none could cure me, my case was pronounced hopeless; so I tried B. B. B. again, and was cured once more. I am now sixty-three years old and am able to walk a mile any time, am strong and healthy. I use a bottle of B. B. B. sometimes, not often—don't need it. The disease made me almost deaf. B. B. B. helped my hearing. Respectfully,

(Mrs.) S. STORY."

Scrofula Attended with Blindness, Loss of Hair, Great Emaciation, yet Cured by B. B. B.

"My six-year-old son has had a terrible sloughing scrofula ulcer of the neck for three years, attended with blindness, loss of hair, great emaciation, and general prostration. Physicians and various blood remedies were resorted to, without benefit. I was urged to try the efficacy of Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.), and, to the astonishment of myself, friends, and neighbors, one single bottle effected an entire cure. The ulcers of the neck were entirely healed, the eyesight was restored, and the hair commenced growing on his head again. FRANK JOSEPH.

"Atlanta, Ga."

Give B. B. B. a trial; it cures when all else fails. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. Sold at drug stores at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. Be sure the bottle reads Botanic Blood Balm. So sufferers may test it, a trial bottle is given away absolutely free. Write for it. Address BLOOD BALM COMPANY, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Write to-day. Describe trouble and free medical advice will be given. Do not despair of a cure, as Blood Balm cures all blood and skin trouble when all else fails. We have over three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using B. B. B.

Roanoke College.

The forty-seventh year of Roanoke College was a successful one. Last year students from ten Southern States and eight Northern States, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Japan, and Korea attended Roanoke. The college has a curriculum with elective studies, well adapted to suit the wants of all students. The instruction is thorough and the standard high. The faculty is composed of men of liberal scholarship and successful experience. Few institutions offer so much at so little expense. The Roanoke Valley is famous for its beautiful mountain scenery and healthful climate. The moral, social, and religious advantages of Salem are unsurpassed. The catalogue of sixty-two pages shows that Roanoke is abreast of the times in its faculties and methods. For a copy of the catalogue, with the June Collegian, address the president, Dr. Julius D. Dreher, Salem, Va.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

The Nashville Bible School.

Instruction is given in English, Latin, Greek, German, French, Mathematics, Natural and Physical Sciences, Logic, Rhetoric, etc. The School does both academic and collegiate work. Every student is required to study and recite one lesson daily in the Bible. Ninety-nine dollars will pay for board and tuition for a young man; one hundred and seventeen dollars will pay for board and tuition for a girl. One can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. Send to the School for catalogue.

We Manufacture ..Pianos..

OVER 6,000 PER YEAR. THREE DIFFERENT NAMES. THREE DIFFERENT GRADES. GOOD, BETTER, BEST!

"Richmond," "Jesse French" AND "Starr."

Send for Catalogues and for Easy Payment Plan.

Jesse French Piano & Organ Co., 240-242 Summer street, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197 Chicago, Illinois

Pearline

-better
-handier than Soap

General News.

The entire plant of the Birmingham Cement Company, at Ensley, Ala., built last winter at a cost of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, was destroyed by fire.

The schooner yacht Idler was lost in a terrific storm sixteen miles off Cleveland, O., with six persons, all members of the family of James Corrigan, a wealthy vessel owner of Cleveland. All were lost.

The British have had some reverses in South Africa. Lord Roberts reports an attack on the garrison at Nitrals Nek, in which the Boer forces were victorious after an all-day fight, taking many prisoners.

The price of structural steel will remain at its present figure, about thirty-eight dollars per ton. This was decided upon at a meeting recently held in New York by members of the structural association.

The strike against the St. Louis Transit Company by its former employees, which was declared off on July 2, 1900, was ordered renewed at a meeting of the Street Railway Men's Union at the West End Coliseum.

Judge Cantrill overruled the motion for a continuance in the case of the former Secretary of State of Kentucky, Caleb Powers, arraigned for complicity in the murder of Governor Goebel, and the trial is now in progress.

The force of miners employed in the Tennessee phosphate fields within the past few weeks has been very largely increased, and consequently the movement of rock is heavy—greater, in fact, than at any period during the past year.

The Treasury Department received a telegram from Lieutenant Jarvis, of the Revenue Cutter Service, saying that there had been twenty cases of smallpox up to July 2, 1900, at Cape Nome, and asking for medical officers and supplies.

The National Educational Association is in session at Charleston, S. C. About two thousand delegates were present in the Thompson Auditorium when Chairman Welch, of the local Executive Committee, called the convention to order.

Among the graduates from Yale University this year was Miss Selichi Yamaguchi, of Tokyo, Japan, who won the degree of bachelor of arts. The dark little woman received her diploma bareheaded and in her native costume, her black hair lying smooth and shiny, fastened by a colossal stick pin.

Mrs. Kate Smith, of Texas, is visiting her sister, Grannie England, of Sparta, Tenn., who is ninety-four years of age. Mrs. Smith is eighty years old. Both are in good health. Mrs. Smith had not visited Sparta since she left there, forty-three years ago. She has found but one building that was standing at that time.

The situation in China is reflected in the export trade in American "brown goods," or cotton manufactures, such as sheetings, drills, flannels, and jeans, sent to Shanghai to be distributed to the ports of the Manchuria District. Practically this trade, which means about ten million dollars annually to Southern cotton mills, is at a standstill.

The orders for the removal of a large number of troops from Cuba, recently issued, have been gladly welcomed by the Cubans, and General Wood is in receipt of many letters from various municipalities offering thanks for what they call his disposition to trust the Cubans and declaring that the entire island is in a state of absolute tranquillity.

Fighting continues between the international forces and the Chinese at Tien-tsin, with the balance in favor of the Chinese. The allied forces number about ten thousand, while the Chinese have between thirty and forty thousand. An imperial decree was received by the Chinese Minister at Washington, giving assurance of the safety of foreign ministers in Peking, and the dispersion of the mob that has so long surrounded the legations. The fact that no communication from any of the ministers has reached their governments causes doubt as to the truthfulness of this statement. Many rumors are reported from Shanghai, confirming the account not long since given of the murder of all the foreigners in Peking.

The Semet-Solvay Company, which three years ago built a five-hundred-thousand-dollar by-product coke plant at Ensley, near Birmingham, Ala., has decided to double the plant by the erection of another by-product coke oven, with auxiliary plants to extract the by-products from the coke oven gas. The plant is adjacent to the five blast furnaces of the Tennessee Coal, Iron, and Railroad Company, which the coke ovens furnish with gas after the by-products have been extracted. The coke is also used in the furnaces. The Semet-Solvay Company is content with the profits arising out of the extraction of the by-products, such as tar, ammonia, etc. The completion of the addition will make the entire plant represent an investment of one million dollars.

On July 24-27, 1900, at Mont-eagle, Tenn., the Tennessee State Teachers' Association will meet in its thirty-second annual session. The meeting promises to be one of the best that the organization has ever held. Superintendent Fitzpatrick is sending out circulars to his county superintendents, urging them to attend and inform the teachers in their vicinity. There will be representatives from other States, too, some noteworthy ones—namely, the Governor and State Superintendent of Alabama, the Governor and State Superintendent of Georgia, and the Governor and State Superintendent of Mississippi. Tennessee will be officially represented by Governor McMillin and Superintendent Fitzpatrick. A very interesting programme has been arranged, consisting of addresses and discussions, music and recitations.

Western railroads have practically agreed to raise the rates on grain and grain products between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers and between Kansas City, New Orleans, and Galveston. It was agreed at the meeting held in Chicago that the agreed rate of nine cents between the rivers should hereafter be maintained, and all the

Vanderbilt University,

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

800 Students. 90 Teachers. 17 Buildings; value, $750,000. New Dormitory just erected at a cost of $125,000.

Expenses low. Literary courses for graduates and undergraduates. Professional courses in Engineering, Pharmacy, Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Theology. Send for catalogue, stating department in which you are interested.

WILS WILLIAMS, Secretary.

Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn.

Regent—Rev. R. A. Young, D.D., LL.D.

Principals { MISS HOOD,
MISS HERON.

"The Ideal College Home of the South."

Suburban and city life combined. Electric cars to north entrance. Attractions of park persuade to outdoor exercise. Eight schools in the hands of skilled specialists. Schools of music, art, and elocution employ methods of best Conservatories in this country and abroad. Diplomas conferred by schools. Lecture courses studiously selected. Best lectures, concerts, recitals, etc., in city, liberally patronized. Christian influences. Students attend church of choice in city. Send for handsomely illustrated blue and bronze catalogue, and other college literature. Students from thirty-six States.

lines pledged themselves not to carry grain or its products any cheaper. For some time there has existed a rate of five cents, which was not a published rate, but which nearly all the roads granted. In order to maintain the proper relation between the shipping interests West and South, the rate between Kansas City and the Gulf, which is now fifteen cents, will be raised accordingly. It is understood that as soon as lake competition closes the rates will be further raised between the rivers and from the Mississippi River and to the seaboard. The rate on export grain is now fifteen and one-half cents; on grain products, seventeen and one-half cents. Formerly the rate was as high as twenty-three and one-half cents, and it is said to be the purpose of the roads to finally restore this rate.

Maj. H. C. Bate, of the Weather Bureau, has issued the following bulletin for the week ending July 9, 1900: "Marked improvement is noted in weather conditions and consequently in condition of growing crops and the progress of outdoor farm work, such as the final cultivation of corn and cotton and the cleaning out of these crops, which has been so long neglected on account of the long rainy season which ended about the close of the last report. The warm, dry weather, with sunshine and moist soil, promoted healthy growth of vegetation, and at the same time facilitated the necessary work of plowing, also of thrashing wheat, which is now in full progress; aside from the loss by floods, the injury by sprouting is less than was at first expected, and the yield is developing better results than estimated. Oats, as a rule, will make a fair average yield, although there is much loss by tangling, caused by wind and rain; the crop is now being harvested. Some haying was done, but on account of the unfavorable weather at the proper time for cutting, much has been lost, especially clover. Upland corn and cotton, where fairly worked, are in fair condition, and, with favorable conditions following, will make nearly average crops; but in lowlands many fields are absolutely lost. This is largely the case in the western division, where, in many sections, the prospect is indeed gloomy. In the middle and eastern divisions, on uplands, crops, as a rule, are rather promising. Tobacco is being worked out and is growing well, as a rule; some of it is ready for topping. Large areas are being planted in peas and millet. Irish potatoes are yielding well, sweet potatoes are in a fine state of growth, and garden products are in good condition. Meadows and pastures are fine. Fruit prospects are good, except as to apples, which are still dropping off in numbers; only in a few localities does this important fruit product indicate a satisfactory yield. Blackberries are fine and plentiful."

LEBANON LAW SCHOOL,

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY.

ESTABLISHED 1847.

TEN THOUSAND pages of living American law taught. Courses less comprehensive require two years of time and money in other law schools. In this school the entire course is accomplished in

ONE COLLEGE YEAR.

THIS IS NOT A LECTURE SCHOOL. The student reads the law in the text-book and recites daily. One additional year for review is given FREE to all graduates desiring it. Diploma and license conferred. Next term begins September 3, 1900. Catalogues free. Address

LAW SCHOOL,
LEBANON, TENN.

ROANOKE COLLEGE,

SALEM, VA.

Courses for Degrees, with Electives; high standard. Also Com'l and Prep'y Courses. Library 22,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline; six Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Aid scholarships. Special terms to clergymen's sons and candidates for ministry. Students from 22 States and countries. Catalogue, with views, free. Address JULIUS D. DREHER, President.

"New England Conservatory of Music" The leading musical institution of America. Founded 1863. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

POTTER COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Bowling Green, Kentucky.

One of the most beautiful places in the world. High, healthful, and inspiring. The finest accommodations. Thorough and progressive. Pupils from twenty-seven States. Twenty teachers.

Come and see, or send for Catalogue.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School,
ROUTE NO. 1. NASHVILLE, TENN.

FACTS ABOUT PAINT When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Preserves

—fruits, jellies, pickles or catsup are more easily, more quickly, more healthfully sealed with Refined Paraffine Wax than by any other method. Dozens of other uses will be found for

Refined Paraffine Wax

in every household. It is clean, tasteless and odorless—air, water and acid proof. Get a pound cake of it with a list of its many uses from your druggist or grocer. Sold everywhere. Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

The Pastor, Edification, Etc.—An Open Letter.

Brother Blank, Sulphur Springs, Ark.—Dear Brother: Your kind letter of inquiry and suggestions as to some points in my article in the Gospel Advocate of May 10, 1900, came duly to hand; but, as you failed to sign your name, I will answer through the Gospel Advocate, with the permission of the editors, and in a way to interest and benefit the general readers.

Now, let me say, without taking time to quote your questions, suggestions, etc., that in reference to the preaching, teaching, organization, government, edification, etc., we have now, as they had in the first churches, all things that pertain to life and godliness, only more fully and in greater perfection, for the written word has taken the place of verbal inspiration, and this must be better for us, or the other would have been continued to us. But nothing is lacking, since that which is perfect has come and the things of the child have passed away. We are not at the beginning now, as they were then, and the inspiration and other things that were only needed in the starting of the work have accomplished their purpose and passed away; but the work and all that is necessary to the continuance of that work are with us still. The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, and we are under as much obligation to preach and teach it now as at the beginning. As obedience to the preaching of the gospel saves the sinner, so obedience to the teaching of the commands of Christ saves the Christian.

The apostles were inspired to show and teach us how to build up, govern, and extend the kingdom of God. This simplifies the whole problem wonderfully, and we have now only to preach as they preached, baptize as they baptized, teach as they taught, organize as they organized, govern as they governed, etc. We must obey their teaching, and they taught both by word and by example. We have, then, but to obey their word and follow their example. Paul said: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." In following the Lord and his apostles we are safe; but if at a single point we follow our own judgment as to what and how we should do in these things, we are not safe.

I am glad you emphasize teaching as you do. It is of immense importance, but is much neglected in these days; and the churches are in sad condition because of this disobedient neglect of our evangelists to do the teaching that the commission requires, and afterwards to go in order, strengthening all the disciples. Going more into detail, we find it to be the apostles' custom to teach "publicly, and from house to house," and it is our duty to consider the apostles our examples as to what we should teach and how we should do it. Teaching publicly alone will not do, and the private teaching alone is not sufficient; for Paul would not have used both methods of teaching if only one was needed.

In the public worship of the primitive church a general privilege was given by the apostles for all to prophesy, and this was so beneficial to the church that it was urged on the brethren as the best means within their reach for the edifying of the church. Yes; but this was a miraculous gift, and so was knowledge. (See 1 Cor. 13: 8-13.) If, then, ordinary prophesying was to be done away, then was ordinary knowledge to be done away, and we are to become a set of idiots, and dumb also; for the same unmerciful stroke that would deprive the church of all prophesying (speaking to edification, exhortation, and comfort) would also deprive us of all tongues and all knowledge, for they are all classed together. Most preachers, elders, and private members fail to teach "publicly, and from house to house," as Paul showed and taught us to do, and we have no good reason to believe that we have made any improvements on the methods of the apostle Paul. But I wish to admonish all who are parents to be in no haste about criticising anybody's teaching or want of teaching if your own children are growing up godless and your nearest friends are little better off for your being a Christian. One of the most repulsive things that I ever heard of a good preacher saying was that he could afford to lose one son to save twenty. This is a fearful mistake. It is not so written. We cannot promote obedience in others by being disobedient ourselves, nor hope to please God with human sacrifices which stop not at the sacrifice of the sons and daughters of the preacher to the god of this world; but the preachers of to-day sacrifice the converts already made that they may make more, and then sacrifice them in their turn, leaving them untaught, unloved, and uncared for, to perish. "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!"

Yes; if the pastor, or preacher, method of teaching by oration alone were adopted in our common schools, it would be bad for the schools; but the teaching in the church should be more like that in a good, well-regulated Christian home where the development of character is one of the chief things sought, and so essential is the public worship in this work of character building and in the development of scriptural teachers, preachers, and workers that it is of the utmost importance that evangelists be both willing and able to establish and maintain it just as it was set in order in the first church. Nor may this order be changed for a single day; but most of our preachers allow a part of the worship to be wholly set aside when they are present. Following their own judgment and yielding to the wishes of the people, as King Saul did, they try, when present, to do all the edifying themselves—they can do it so much better, you know—but whose fault is it that the churches are so poorly developed that they are so ready to shirk this and all other Christian duties? They do not wholly follow the Lord, and a rank and deadly fungus, called "the pastor system," fastens itself on them; and it grows green and greener still as the life of the church slowly expires under this wasting decay caused by duties neglected and the famishing of souls unbled.

No Jerusalem church of preachers ever was or ever will be developed under the dozy pastor system—the system of hiring a preacher to do the edifying of the church for them. Untaught converts, undeveloped elders, uncared-for, scattered work, and churches neglected and dying are signs that mark the track of a defeated army; nor were such ever found in the track of the apostles, who waged a systematic and relentless war against sin and Satan so long ago. But where are the men of God now who are to restore the purity of the worship, revive and strengthen the churches, and turn disastrous defeat into glorious victory? "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Colleges and Bible schools have sent forth men who have wasted us; and now we should turn our eyes to the Lord of the harvest and pray him to raise up for us faithful men of his own choosing and preparing to bring order out of disorder, unity out of division, and victory out of defeat.

As you have used the school as a figure of the church, it is certainly right in that figure to have the scholars study the lessons and recite the same, instead of the teacher (pastor, or preacher) doing it for them; but there are many good preachers who do this studying and reciting for the members who would be shocked to be reckoned among the pastors. Well, if they are not regular pastors, the effect of their labors is very much the same on the members, and the full-fledged pastor system rapidly develops out of the bias they give the churches, and the preacher readily changes by easy stages into the regular pastor. But if we all "consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works," then we will not only do the best possible Christian teaching for the edifying of the church, but we will be doing the best thing possible for our own edification and development in the divine life, Christian activity, and general usefulness; nor do I believe it possible to build a good, strong, aggressive, apostolic church without training them to be steadfast in the observance of every part of the worship.

But all this will be as only a lecture to you and all who read it, if you do not feed on the bread of life for yourselves. Let me interest all who love the truth to study up. "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom" and spiritual understanding. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Why should we not be rich in heavenly wisdom, and out of our abundance make many around us rich also? Most of us need what we might call "devotional reading of the word of God"—a chewing of the word of life, so to speak; a nourishing of the spiritual nature by feeding on the word of God. It is sweet to those who have learned to love and ponder it," but those who study it for controversy grow poor and starve amid the greatest abundance. I would we might have shepherds who could contrive to get the flock to eat, not forgetting that the doing of the will of God is a very important part of the eating, for Jesus said: "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." Again: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Men of God, sent of God, will get the flock to eat, according to the latter part of the commission: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

H. H. HAWLEY.

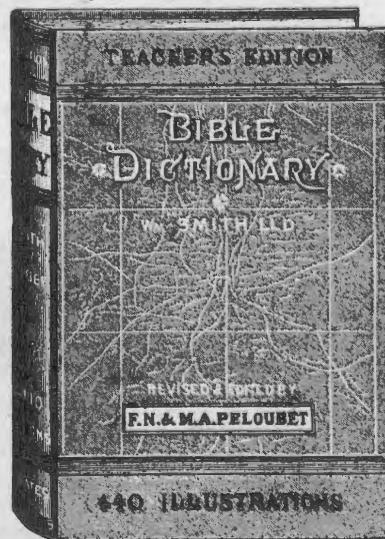

The fire which destroyed the immense Swamp-Root medicine plant of Dr. Kilmer & Co., on July 1, 1900, was the most disastrous which has ever occurred in Binghamton. However, the Kilmers resumed business next morning, though not at the old stand, which is a heap of smoldered ashes. While the firemen were yet pouring water on the burning Chenango street establishment, the Kilmers were arranging to do business somewhere else.

That this great industry might not be crippled for a moment, through the courtesy of other prominent firms and citizens, the large factory and adjoining buildings on South street were vacated for the benefit of the Swamp-Root-people, and possession was taken immediately, and here, by Monday, July 8, this new, temporary factory was turning out Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, in quantities of about sixty thousand bottles per day, and in two or three weeks' time the full capacity of more than four times that amount will be produced. The immense demand for Swamp-Root will thus in no way be interfered with.

On the old site, with adjoining property which has just been purchased, will be erected immediately an absolutely fireproof, six-story structure, plans for which have been nearly completed.

HUSTLING YOUNG MAN can make $60 per month and expenses. Permanent position. Experience unnecessary. Write quick for particulars. CLARK & CO., 4th and Locust Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

FITS STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER
No Fits after first day's use.
Consultation, personal or by mail; treatise and $2 TRIAL BOTTLE FREE
to Fit patients who pay expressage only on delivery.
Permanent Cure, not only temporary relief, for all Nervous Disorders, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance, Debility, Exhaustion, etc. DR. H. H. KLINE, M.D., 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Founded 1871.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

PIMPLES
on the face, eczema, tetter, freckles, blackheads, ring worm, blotches, and all skin disorders can be cured with
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
Price 50 Cents a Box.
HEISKELL'S BLOOD AND LIVER PILLS
Purify the blood and tone the system.
Price 25 Cents per Bottle.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philadelphia.

Brother McCaleb's Report for June.

"A Brother," Nashville, Tenn., $1; Brother K., $1; South College Street church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., $20; "A Sister," Owens Chapel, Tenn., $1; church of Christ at Thompson's Station, Tenn., $5; Brother B., $1; church of Christ at Scott's Station, Ky., by J. S. Wilson, $1.50; church of Christ at Lynnville, Tenn., $30; Roberson Fork, Tenn., $1.12; Pulaski, Tenn., $1.04; church of Christ at McBurg, Tenn., 63 cents; Brother D., $1; Brother H., $1; Sister Mc., $2; church of Christ at Petersburg, Tenn., $1.65; H. B. R., $1; Chesley Robison, 10 cents; church of Christ at Cornersville, Tenn., $1; Dr. H., $2; Brother Mc., $2.50. In addition to this I have received for tracts sold ("Going and Sending") during the month, $5.23. I also received by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company on June 9, 1900, the following amounts: Church of Christ at Neeley's Bend, Davidson County, Tenn., $4; church of Christ at Era, Tex., $6.75; Firm Foundation, Austin, Tex., $6.25; "A Brother," Santa Anna, Tex., for Japan children, $5; "A Brother," Santa Anna, Tex., for Japan missions, 10 cents; Sister L., $1.70; L. A. R., Ashland City, Tenn., $1; Spruce Street church of Christ, Nashville, Tenn., $3.30; "A Brother," Sparta, Tenn., $5; "A Sister," Nashville, Tenn., $5; Owens Chapel, Tenn., $25; A. P. M., New Columbus, Ill., $1; "A Sister," Greenville, Tex., $5. Total amount for the month, $142.77.

Out of this I have paid to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company for tracts, etc., fifteen dollars and fifty cents; family expenses, above thirty dollars; for self, about seventeen dollars; some railroad fare and other incidental expenses; and room rent for our rooms in Louisville, Ky., six dollars. I have now in hand (July 3, 1900) fifty-four dollars and eighty-four cents. Thus far in all of my travels among them the churches are my witnesses that I have not at the close of any of my talks made an appeal for money. Sometimes when I find a church that knows personally some worker in the field, whether at home or abroad, I have encouraged them to enlarge their liberality toward him; but the chief thing in missionary work is not money, but laborers. But few can be found in the churches now poorer than Christ and his disciples, and Tennessee alone probably has more wealth than all Palestine had at that time; but in looking over the field and seeing the need Jesus did not suggest that they ought to raise funds, but said, "The laborers are few." They prayed for more laborers. That is the need now. The Lord has pledged himself to see to the needs of every true laborer.

The church of Christ at Scott's Station, Ky., sent me two dollars—one for Brother Snodgrass and one for Brother Bishop; the same has been forwarded.

Our work in Japan from January 1, 1900, to June 7, 1900, is as follows: Balance from last year, 44,483 yen (a yen is fifty cents); six months' rent on house, 300 yen. Whole amount, 344,483 yen. Expenses for same length of time: Church expenses, 9.53 yen; school, 43,854 yen; myself, 44,711 yen; repairs, 39.84 yen; payment on home, 119.82 yen. Total amount, 257,755 yen. Balance on hand, 86,728 yen. Amount shown by bank book, 71,16 yen. Amount on hand in Japan on June 7, 1900, 157.88 yen.

It is our hope that the rent on our home may, above expenses, pay the three hundred dollars that yet remains unpaid on the same. We are contemplating to return to Japan next spring, if the Lord permit. The condition of our little one and its mother will prevent our trying to return sooner. We think now we will start next March.

"Avoiding this, that any man should blame us in the matter of this bounty which is ministered by us: for we take thought for things honorable, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men." J. M. M'CALEB.

P.S. I suppose that it is generally understood that Brother William J. Bishop is now in Japan, conducting the same work I was doing when there. In addition to this, Brother Bishop is studying the language and doing some literary work. J. M. M'C.

Items from the Nashville Bible School Catalogue.

The next will be the tenth year of the school.

It is for both males and females.

It has nine men and two ladies in its faculty.

Its motto is: "Thorough Work." We doubt if there is a school in the world in which better or more thorough work is done by the students in the preparation and recitation of lessons.

It teaches the Bible, English, German, French, Latin, Greek, Mathematics, the Natural Sciences, Philosophy, Belles-lettres, Instrumental and Vocal Music, and Elocution.

It is situated in a city renowned for its churches and schools. Nashville is called the "City of Churches," the "Athens of the South;" and for educational institutions it is the leading city of the South, and one of the leading cities of the nation.

Its students nearly all belong to the church of God. Those who are not members of the church at the beginning of the session become so, as a rule, before it closes. The leading objects of the School are to develop its students in intellectual vigor and in moral and spiritual power, that they may become more pleasing in the sight of God and man every day.

To help in this work, at least two or three series of lectures are delivered each session, and the best talent that can be secured in the brotherhood is sought to deliver them.

In the Bible classes no text-book is used but the Bible. It is studied not only in English, but in the ancient tongues also. It is constantly held up as an all-sufficient guide for the children of God in their work and worship. It is not the object of this department to teach about the Bible, but to teach the Bible. All of the students, male and female, those who are members of the church and those who are not, are required to study the Bible. Every student must take at least one daily study in this noblest of books. Numbers of them take more, some of them devoting most of their time to it. In this department the instruction is free. The teachers in it receive nothing from the tuition fund for their work.

MONTEAGLE

The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools.
TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,

NASHVILLE, TENN

(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

Letters and Sermons of

T. B. Larimore

Edited by
F. D. SRYGLEY

Agents wanted. Write for terms. We will grant territory to agents by counties. The book will be sure to sell and will do great good.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

Price $1.50

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

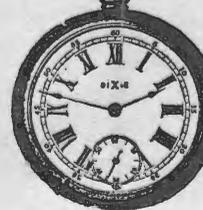

WERNICKE "ELASTIC" BOOK-CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, post-paid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc.
BUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

1850 1900 John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

—OF—
EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES.
TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL.
HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES.

Mail orders will meet prompt attention.
Telephone 1047.

Stomach Headache

is always accompanied by a coated tongue, and often by a foul breath. Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient promptly relieves all headaches by removing offensive matters from the system. It cleanses and settles sick stomachs in the most refreshing way. 50c. and $1. Trial, 25c. Pamphlets on request.

Tarrant's "Dermal," a dainty, anti-septic powder for nursery, toilet, after shaving, cares chafing, best foot powder, 25c. At druggists, or mailed on receipt of price by TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York. Est. 1884.

A Reply to Brother Elam.

Brother Elam says: "We reach the blood of Christ in him (Col. 1: 14); by faith we are baptized into him (Gal. 2: 26, 27); when we are in him, we are in his body, the church." Let us see how this will do. It is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin (Matt. 26: 28), "and without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.) If "we reach the blood of Christ in him," we do not reach the blood till we come into him, and as there is no remission without the blood, why does this not bring a sinner, one unforgiven, into the church where the blood is? If he is in the church, he has all the blessings of a son, hence the Holy Spirit. The very first breath a child born into Brother Elam's family breathes is an Elam breath, so the very first breath one breathes who is born into the family of God is the Spirit of God. Will God give his Spirit to an unpardoned man? No; then the cleansing must take place before the birth.

Again, we do not reach the blood of Christ in him for the very good reason that the blood is not in him. It is the blood that was shed. (Matt. 26: 28.) It was the blood of the Lamb that caused the destroying angel to pass over the houses of the children of Israel, but it was the blood of the Lamb that was shed and applied to the doorpost, so it is the blood of Christ that was shed and applied to the hearts of men that cleanses from all sin. Christ's blood was shed in his death (John 19: 33, 34); we enter his death where his blood is by a burial, not a birth; when we enter his death, we come in contact with his blood, and it is the blood that cleanses from sin.

In view of the fact that all things which God does, or commands man to do, have a significance, please point to the significance of a burial into the baptismal tomb, if it is not to bring one thus buried into the blood of Christ and thereby into the remission of sins. The birth is to bring one thus prepared into the family of God, and not into the remission of sins. Moreover, "in him," or in Christ, does not invariably mean "in his body, which is the church." "So that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, and in all other places." (Phil. 1: 13.) "In Christ" here means for Christ. Again, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 2: 5.) "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins: who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature." (Col. 1: 14, 15.) Is Paul speaking of the church? Is the church "the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature?"

Were all things created that are in heaven and that are on earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers—were all things created by the church? No; and just so does Col. 1: 14 not have reference to the church, but to Christ, by whose shed blood we have redemption, even the forgiveness of sins.

In the same connection, "in whom ye also trusted" means in Christ, the foundation and builder of the church, and not in the church.

JESSE D. WALLING.

Silver Chimes.

Many talk of the coming of Christ, but few are anxious to meet him.

Drunken rowdies often break up a dance, but they seldom interfere with a prayer meeting.

If our home be a heaven here, heaven may be our home hereafter.

It is better to cross the street to avoid a cross dog than to pass his place and get into a fight with him.

Christians should leave their cares behind them, send their treasures on before them, and carry their religion along with them.

The first glass may roll the man into the gutter, and the last glass may roll him into his grave.

In prosperity we may have too many friends for our comfort, in deep adversity we may have too few; but all along life's journey, if we will be faithful, we shall have one Friend who will never leave us nor forsake us.

In thirty-one years the apostles reached the whole world with the gospel, and this they did without the aid of an Endeavor Society, Young Men's Christian Association, or Women's Board of Missions. If the gospel did succeed without those things then, will it not succeed without them now?

If each congregation would support an evangelist for all or for even one-half of his time, and send him into the hedges and highways, the churches in so doing would save the world and in turn the world (people from) would build up the churches. See?

If all men were born sinners and it requires baptism to take that original sin away, then the idiot who was born a sinner and whose parents neglected to have him baptized is yet in a lost condition, and he must be baptized, or be lost forever. Now, what would even the pedo preacher say if he were to see another taking an idiot of forty years down and baptizing him in order to save him?

I am now in Portland, Tenn., making my first effort in this State. I will remain here until the middle of July. I earnestly desire an interest in the prayers of those in the South who are striving to be faithful to just what is enjoined in the New Testament, no more nor less.

ALFRED ELMORE.

For Seasickness,

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. Fourness-Brice, of S. S. Teutonic, says: "I have prescribed it among the passengers traveling to and from Europe, and am satisfied that if taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

The wise will profit from the mistakes and failures of the past, but the foolish will "seek it yet again."—Exchange.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

THE MOONEY SCHOOL,

FRANKLIN, TENN.

W. D. MOONEY, A.M., Principal.

Its boys enter ten universities on certificate.

Every advantage offered. Discipline firm.

Send for catalogue before choosing your school.

Refers to any of the local pastors.

Has educated the sons of Supreme Judges, Congressmen, and many other distinguished men.

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies

EDUCATIONAL AIM The policy of the School is to do serious, honest work. It makes no display to deceive, no extravagant promises that it cannot fulfill. Catalogues are published to give definite, trustworthy information, and every announcement is regarded as an agreement. The purpose is by quiet, earnest effort to make of pupils cultured Christian women.

ADVANTAGES OF LOCATION Nashville excels in climate, healthfulness, and social culture, and is the educational center of the South. It is widely and favorably known for its numerous schools, colleges, and universities, which have developed at home and attracted from abroad teachers of ripe scholarship, fully abreast of the times.

COURSES OF STUDY College Preparatory, Seminary, and Special Courses are offered. Certificate admits to Wellesley and to the Woman's College of Baltimore.

OPINION OF PATRONS "The work done in Ward Seminary is of an unusually high order, the home life of the institution is sweet and considerate, and the religious tone the best. The teachers are more than professional instructors; they are earnest Christian workers, striving to build character. The School is not sectarian, but pronouncedly Christian. Parents sending their daughters to Ward Seminary may know that they are under the best influence."

35TH SESSION will open September 20. Full Literary Course, with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. For catalogue, address

J. D. BLANTON, PRESIDENT, NASHVILLE, TENN.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,
531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

ATTENTION, FARMERS!

Wanted to exchange Stock Peas, Millet, Hungarian Corn and Feed Stuffs for Wheat, or buy Wheat for cash.

P. W. HARSH,

TELEPHONE 1228.

207 BROAD ST., NASHVILLE, TENN.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1747; Residence, 1370.

WILLCOX BUILDING. COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS. NASHVILLE, TENN.

BLIMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. SEE FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.

Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.

SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.) Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

LETTERS AND SERMONS

T. B. LARIMORE

EDITED BY

F. D. SRYGLEY

HIS INTIMATE FRIEND.

Agents wanted. Territory will be granted by counties. Address, at once,

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.

232 N. Market Street,

NASHVILLE, - - TENN.

Gospel Praise.

OPENING.

No. 1. IN THY NAME, O LORD! ASSEMBLING.

THOS. KELLY.

A. J. SHOWALTER.

1. In Thy name, O Lord! as-sembling, We, Thy peo - ple, now draw near;
 2. While our days on earth are lengthen'd, May we give them, Lord, to Thee;
 3. There, in wor-ship pur - er, sweet - er, Thee Thy peo - ple shall a - dore;

Teach us to re-joyce with trembling; Speak, and let Thy servants hear,— Cheered by hope, and dai - ly strengthened, May we run, nor wea - ry be,
 Tast - ing of en - joy - ment great - er Than we could con - ceive be - fore;

Hear with meekness, hear with meekness,—Hear Thy word with god - ly fear.
 Till Thy glo - ry, till Thy glo - ry, Without clouds in heav'n we see.
 Full en - joyment, full en - joyment, Full, unmixed, and ev - er - more.

Copyright, 1900, by Gospel Advocate Pub. Co.

3

INVITATION.

No. 227. BEHOLD A STRANGER.

JOSEPH GRIGG.

M. E. GRIMES.

1. Be-hold a stran-ger at the door! He gent-ly knocks—has knocked before,
 2. O love-ly at - ti - tude! He stands With melting heart and loaded hands;
 3. But will He prove a Friend in-deed? He will, the ver - y friend, you need;
 4. Ad-mit Him, ere His an - ger burn, His feet, de-part - ed, ne'er re - turn;

Has wait - ed long—is wait - ing still; You treat no oth - er friend so ill.
 O match-less kindness! and He shows This matchless kindness to His foes!
 The Friend of sin - ners—yes, 'tis He With garments dyed on Cal - va - ry.
 Ad-mit Him, or the hours' at hand, You'll at His door re - ject - ed stand.

REFRAIN.

O let Him in, O let Him in, O let Him in,
 O let Him in, O let Him in, O let Him in,

He'll cleanse thy heart from ev - 'ry sin;
 He'll cleanse thy heart, from ev - 'ry sin;

He'll make you free, yes, free in - deed,
 He'll make you free, yes, free in - deed,

Copyright, 1900, by Gospel Advocate Pub. Co.

222

OUR NEW HYMN BOOK . . .

"GOSPEL PRAISE,"

4,000 . . .

ordered in ONE DAY.

READ WHAT IS SAID OF IT.

Some Testimonials.

"After a careful examination of 'Gospel Praise,' I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I think it is the best arranged work and finest music extant; in fact, it is an 'all-purpose book,' 'worth its weight in gold.' All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production." (M. H. Northross, Franklin, Tenn.)

W. Boyd says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received."

The Armstrong Company, music typographers, say: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise. We shall be pleased to receive a copy of the work when printed, as we know it will adorn our library."

S. P. Pittman says: "I have examined most of the songs in 'Gospel Praise,' and am glad to say that, with but few exceptions, they are fine; and I predict that the collection will be accorded the popularity it deserves."

"After a careful examination of your new book, 'Gospel Praise,' I can cheerfully say that I am more than pleased with it. The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul stirring, while the mechanical appearance of the work does great credit to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The brethren should all buy this book and learn these beautiful songs, and thus be able to comply with the heavenly admonition to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs while they sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord." (J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.)

Published in round and shaped notes and in word edition. See price list elsewhere in this issue. You will make no mistake in ordering "Gospel Praise." Our hymn book catalogue will be sent to any address on application for same.

Preface to "Gospel Praise."

"The selection and preparation of a song book for those who want to sing with the spirit and with the understanding, to sing songs the sentiment of which shall be in harmony with the word of God, is a work of supreme importance. It is easy to gather up enough of songs and music to make a book; but to get up a book that will suit the taste of this age, and at the same time be in harmony with the teaching of the word of God in the sentiment of its songs, is an undertaking that demands much thought and earnest care. We have sought, in this work, to present a book suitable for members of the church to sing in worshiping assemblies, in protracted meetings, in the Lord's day school, in the family—anywhere, in fact, that people want to sing songs that will not in any wise conflict with the pure teaching of the Lord's word. This age especially needs a book that shall be sound in sentiment, so as to voice the principles taught in the Holy Scriptures. The people want many good old songs that they have heard and loved from their childhood; they also want, and should have, a number of good, new songs that they have not seen in other books; and we have tried to present in this collection that which will gratify these desires. Of course we do not expect to please every one, but we do hope to please such as love good songs, with sound scriptural sentiment, and who wish to enjoy the pleasant and soul-refreshing service of song. We have striven to present songs of praise, of exhortation, of instruction, of edification, of rejoicing, and of admonition, and fondly hope many will find it what the proprietors have tried to produce, and that which will satisfy and rejoice and elevate many hearts."

"Gospel Praise" has been highly commended by all who have examined it. We only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating buying new books, you should, by all means, examine "Gospel Praise." It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment, and that the music is of that high order which marks all of Mr. Showalter's selections and compositions.

Published in round and shaped notes and in word edition. See price list elsewhere in this issue. You will make no mistake in ordering "Gospel Praise." Our hymn book catalogue will be sent to any address on application for same.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 30.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, JULY 26, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

What Virtue is there in Water?.....	466
Exousia.....	466
The Elders and the Evangelists.....	467
Eternal Punishment.....	468
Miscellany.....	469
Queries.....	470
Pastors and Elders, Again.....	470
Home Reading.....	471
Editorial Notes.....	472
The Oakley-Tant Debate, Again.....	472
Field Gleanings.....	474
True Faith.....	474
For the Sufferers in India.....	475
What Shall We Do for the Heathen?.....	475
General News.....	476
Church News.....	477
A Note of Explanation from Brother Dunn.....	477
Length of Creative Days.....	478
Odds and Ends.....	479
Notes from Arkansas.....	480
Acknowledgment from India—Letter to Brother McCaleb.....	480
Facts.....	480
Organizing.....	480

READ AND ACT.

At this season of the year our expenses are always far in excess of our receipts. As we have been at the extra expense of putting "Gospel Praise" and other new books on the market, our expenses have been very heavy, so that we are especially in need of the amounts due us. The amount that you are owing may be a very small one, but many such amounts aggregate a very large sum. It is best for the publisher and the subscriber that all pay their subscriptions promptly. It enables those looking after the affairs of the paper to devote their time and thought to making a good paper, without being worried over finances. It is hard for the man to write well who is forced to think continuously about money matters.

Many allow their subscriptions to run behind, without realizing that it is so. This notice is to remind all who are in arrears that their renewal would be very greatly appreciated. The wheat crop will put some money in circulation. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper, and pay at the rate of $1.50 per year from that time. A large hand pointing to this is to call your attention to the date. If your paper should be stamped and the date is in advance, you may know that the mistake was made by the one stamping the hand on the paper. We are always anxious to correct all mistakes. Your prompt compliance with this request will help us and will be duly appreciated. Address all checks and money orders to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Nashville, Tenn.

Miss Helen Clarke, an independent and undenominational religious worker, recently delivered a speech in New York City which contained sensational facts and startling assertions. The salient points, as given in the secular daily papers, are as follows:

"New York is one of the greatest heathen cities in the world. It is, in fact, the second largest heathen city, if nonaffiliation with Christian churches means anything. Tokyo, Japan, has hitherto occupied that unenviable position, but New York has one million three hundred thousand people who are not connected with any church and care nothing about churches, and this is one hundred thousand more people than Tokyo has altogether. The wickedness of New York probably outdoes that of any other city in the United States. In one ward the arrests made in a year are one-third as many as the entire population."

"These astonishing assertions are made by Miss Helen F. Clarke, director of the Evangel Band at 21 Mott street. Miss Clarke astonished the Methodist preachers' meeting at 150 Fifth avenue when she told them of New York's condition. To back up her statements she produced figures and facts that could not be gainsaid. Miss Clarke's subject was: 'The Religious Condition of New York City.' When she got down to the churchgoing statistics she made the eyes of the preachers open.

"On Manhattan Island," she said, "there are nearly fifty-five hundred people to every Protestant church. Only about seven per cent of the population are members of Protestant churches, and that is a loss of about one per cent since the census of 1890. There has not been an actual loss in numbers, but the difference in percentage is due to the steady stream of foreigners, three thousand a week, who keep rushing in. Only nineteen per cent of our population in Manhattan had even one parent born in this country. In Greater New York there are one million three hundred thousand persons without any religious affiliation at all. In making this calculation I exclude those who have affiliated with any religious body—Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Buddhist, or what not. In one neighborhood there are fifty thousand Italians, and statistics show only five thousand go to church. In one former ward in Brooklyn there is a population of twenty-three thousand, and not a single Protestant church or mission. In our east side Hebrew quarter, in a population of more than two hundred thousand, only nine-tenths of one per cent are members of Protestant churches. In one of the lower east side wards the arrests made in a year are one-third as many as the number of people there."

"Miss Clarke advocated outdoor preaching, as described in the New Testament, and seemed to have little hope in church buildings."

Sister Clarke probably does not understand New Testament Christianity in many respects as I understand it, but the fact that she "advocates outdoor preaching, as described in the New Testament, and seems to have little hope in church buildings," indicates that she is headed in the right direction; and if she will continue to push her investigations of the New Testament with the view to understand and practice the simplicity that is in Christ Jesus, she will soon derive light more clearly on many other points.

As to the original cause of the situation in China, which now seems likely to result in a general war, involving many strong powers of the civilized world, the Chinese Minister at San Francisco, Cal., says:

"The origin of the whole trouble is interference with our religion in China. I do not question the worthy intentions of the missionaries who have gone there, but they have made the mistake of trying to convert a people who are not educated, as a race, even to the point of religious toleration. Good missionaries merely waste their energies and incense the people. Studying the history of the world, we find that almost every great war has been brought on by differences in religion. There is another cause for the present uprising aside from the religious work of missionaries in proselyting China to their faith: It has so happened in China that whenever a missionary has been killed in the country the nation which he represented has made the tragedy the occasion for asking grants of lands from the Chinese Government. I do not mean to say that they were not right in demanding indemnity for such misdeeds, but this course, in the eyes of many of our people, who are extremely suspicious, has been misconstrued and misrepresented. I am positive, from the dispatches I have received, that it was the intention of both the government and the Boxers to respect the Peking legations; otherwise it would have been easy to attack them before June 20, 1900. I am sure the government was ready to put forth every effort to protect them. To-day I cannot speak so confidently. The bombardment of the Taku forts has changed the whole aspect of the situation. As soon as the tidings of that act of hostility reached Peking I fear that the forces, which up to that moment had been held in control by the government, may have become frenzied and beyond its control, for they would reason that they were to be punished anyway, and all reason for restraint would then have been gone."

It is a sad truth "that almost every great war has been brought on by differences in religion." The spirit and genius of Christianity are the exact opposite of the spirit of war; but the trouble is that a large minority, if not a majority, of professed Christians have scarcely a flavoring of genuine Christianity at this particular point. In the present strained situation in China, for instance, some of the most inflammable utterances I have read from the seat of disturbances were sent out by men high in authority in religious organizations.

I publish the following letter as the basis of a few suggestions which to me seem timely and important:

"Brother Srygley: As you know, I never do anything for show or sensation, but sometimes some things somewhat out of the usual order, or current, of events occur in my work. When we met this morning on the bank of the beautiful little 'river' that flows at the foot of the hill on which Woodbury stands to baptize some penitent believers, two sweet little girls—Mary Stephens and Mattie Lefevers—requested me, as 'they went both down into the water,' to baptize them together—a thought that had not occurred to them till they were 'waiting by the river' for their time to be baptized to come. The bank of the river where we stood is covered with sand and pebbles; the bottom of the beautiful, natural baptistery is firm and gently sloping; the water is cold and clear; the current is swift and strong. One in love, one in sympathy, one in fearless faith sublime, and locked in each other's fond embrace, so that they were as nearly one in very person as possible, Mary and Mattie were in the same grave, at the same time, 'buried with him by baptism into death' and raised up 'to walk in newness of life.' These precious little treasures were bosom friends before; now, friends who love them call them 'twins.' This is not the only time I have buried two penitent believers in the same grave at the same time, but I have never prepared a case for such an occasion. The very thought of resorting to sensational schemes and tricks and traps in Christian work or worship is as revolting to me as the thought of fun at a funeral. I have baptized at different times and places in the Pacific Ocean, that being my mission when first I saw that broad expanse of briny waves; but never have I been or baptized there, save by special request—never to create a sensation or that I might say: 'I have baptized in the Pacific Ocean.' T. B. LARIMORE."

All this was, no doubt, a very pretty performance, and when every other element is present the "beauty of holiness" is not to be despised. I am glad, however, that Brother Larimore, in reporting this, has spoken timely words of warning against sensational tricks in connection with religious work and worship. I have known much of this baptizing "two-at-once" performance, and in one case a real sensational evangelist went beyond all precedent and baptized "three at once;" but somehow it has always seemed to lower an act of obedience to God to the level of a trick performance for the entertainment of the people. I have known Brother Larimore too long and too well to doubt for a moment that in his hands this or any other performance would lack anything of devotion and reverence or that it would for a moment partake of the spirit of flippant entertainment or sensational amusement but it is well to consider what such a precedent might lead to if it should be adopted by younger preachers of less piety and greater love of notoriety than Brother Larimore possesses.

Our Contributors.

What Virtue is there in Water?

Frank Faithful: "You have often heard, Henry, the question asked with reference to baptism: 'What virtue is there in water?'"

Henry Hardshell: "O, yes; I have heard that thrown at you folks many a time! The truth is, I have used it myself sometimes when hard pressed."

Frank F.: "I supposed you had at least heard this objection. It occurs to me that now, while we are studying the history of Naaman, would be a good time to answer that objection."

Henry H.: "I would like to hear the objection answered. There is to me, anyway, a charm in studying these Old Testament stories which I do not derive from any other book."

Frank F.: "The Bible has never had one-half the credit it deserves in furnishing characters for the best literary productions extant. Milton's 'Paradise Lost' could never have been written without it, Shakespeare drew liberally from its pages; and both these taught baptism for the remission of sins—which some so seriously object to in our time. As an infallible guide to us, let us keep in mind what St. Paul says with reference to the things written 'aforetime,' or before the time in which he lived. (Rom. 15: 4.) In the application of this one point, it would almost seem the inspired historian might have anticipated the objection we are considering with reference to baptism. The adaptation is complete."

Henry H.: "Well, you believe there is virtue in water, don't you, friend Faithful?"

Frank F.: "O, yes, for many purposes! For instance, to slake thirst for man and beast there is nothing can equal its power. There is nothing in all the provisions of nature for which we should be more thankful. The sight of a bubbling fountain of pure water suggests to a Bible reader not only the fountain which flowed from Horeb's flinty side, but the water of life which should be a well of water springing up into eternal life, and numerous other emblematic statements designed to convey spiritual ideas which give comfort for this world and the world to come."

Henry H.: "You really believe, then, there is virtue in water itself for many earthly uses that may illustrate to us the uses of heavenly things?"

Frank F.: "Yes; that is as nearly as I can express my convictions on this subject. There is virtue in good rain water; with a mixture of this old-fashioned lye soap, it cleanses clothes better than any patent laundry I have ever seen. The return of the family clothing, all washed, ironed, and ruffled, is a pleasant sight. The housewife turns over piece after piece with as keen relish as if they were pictures in a new book, and the clean scent is not altogether unlike the odor of roses in her nostrils. Water did all that. There are healing properties in some waters whose medicinal powers reach and cure many diseases which flesh is heir to. That pale, delicate girl you see at the railway station, assisted on board the cars, leaving for the springs, has your sympathy. She has a tender look and cultured expression, but she lacks earth's greatest blessing—bodily strength and health. With much solicitude her father bids her good-by. After a week's sojourn at some of the fine springs of old Franklin County or Warren County she writes an affectionate letter to her mother. This letter contains, among other things, this message: 'Tell pa I have been here now one week. I am growing stronger. Why, last evening I ate a whole wing of a lark for supper, and this morning, after a long walk of a hundred yards, at breakfast I actually ate a whole biscuit. Tell pa there are virtues in these waters, and I shall stay for further benefit. Send me another check.' Her return about October 15, with the crimson hues of autumn in her cheeks, the gold of the mountain sunset in her hair, and the liquid brightness of the dewdrops in her eyes, is like the coming of an angel to her people and friends. The children shout for joy, her mother weeps for the same reason, and 'pa' feels a great lump in his throat as he tries to tell her how much she looks like her mother used to. What did all this? Water, we say. There must be virtue in water."

Henry H.: "What athletic-looking man is that I see coming toward us? He appears to be conscious of looking well."

Frank F.: "Why, that is my friend, Lum Bago, who, twelve months ago, was on crutches. He has just returned from Hot Springs, and there is another proof that there is virtue in water. But all this shall teach us here by way of antithesis. There is no efficacy in water to take away sin, nor was there any in the waters of the Jordan nor of all Israel to cure the leprosy."

Henry H.: "Did not Naaman hesitate to obey on that very ground, thinking the command of the prophet implied there was efficacy in the waters of Jordan to cure the leprosy?"

Frank F.: "Yes; but this was one of his mistakes at which we should profit. He exclaimed in angry astonishment: 'Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them, and be clean?'"

Henry H.: "What would you call his error, and wherein can we profit by it?"

Frank F.: "His error here was that he located the efficacy of his proposed healing in the water, when the prophet Elisha said no such thing. That was his own construction of his words. Wherein we should profit is to avoid ascribing the efficacy of our pardon to water or anything else that we do, quit construing the words of the gospel, and obey the God who commanded us to believe and be baptized to be saved."

Henry H.: "You do not put your faith in water, then?"

Frank F.: "No; nor faith in repentance, nor faith in baptism, nor faith in confession. Our faith must be in God and Christ, who commanded us to do these things that we may be saved through the blood of Christ. There is the efficacy. There is, per se, no efficacy in baptism, faith, or repentance. How often must I tell you that, Henry?"

Henry H.: "Just as often as you see me needing instruction. You, in these things, call my attention back to the fact that salvation from sin is conditional and that these are conditions simply, and have no power to take away sins."

Frank F.: "You seem to see this so clearly now, I wish you could never be moved away from this view. There is more to be said in answer to this objection, but for the present let your mind rest on this last truth you have noted."

"What can wash away my stain?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus.
What can make me whole again?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

"O, precious is the flow
That makes me white as snow!
No other fount I know,
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

G. LIPSCOMB.

Flat Rock, Tenn., Rural Route No. 3.

Exousia.

There are four Greek words in the New Testament that are translated "power." The word "exousia" means power in the sense of authority. Dr. Campbell, Henry T. Anderson, and the Revised Version all translate it by the English word "authority."

The pagan poet, Horace, has said: "Never introduce a god unless upon an occasion worthy of him." It seems that it was a suitable occasion when Jesus was baptized and coming up out of the waters of Jordan that he should be introduced to the world, and a voice came from heaven, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

After he arose from the dead he said: "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 18-20, R. V.) Jesus Christ, then, is the highest authority in heaven and on earth in all matters pertaining to religion. The fact that the apostles and early Christians observed the Lord's Supper on the first day of the week is proof that it was one of the "all things" which Christ commanded. We have no account of an organ being used in any of the apostolic churches, and it is certain Christ did not command its use.

No infants became members of the early churches. On the subject of infant baptism Prof. Moses Stuart says: "Commands, or plain and certain examples, in the New Testament relative to it I do not find." ("Mode of Baptism," page 190.) Henry Ward Beecher, in a sermon in 1881, asked the following questions and gave the following answers: "Is infant baptism found in the Scriptures?" "No; I do not find it there." "Then what do you practice it for?" "Because I have a mind to—authority enough, if it is good." Alexander Campbell says: "Still to the believing penitent it [baptism] is the means of receiving a formal, distinct, and specific absolution, or release from guilt." ("Christian System," page 62.) The late R. T. Mathews says: "But it is just as erroneous, scripturally, to affirm that the penitent believer, who has also confessed his Savior and Lord, has no salvation, no promise of it, no assurance of it, in any real sense, until he is baptized." ("Evangelistic Sermons," page 363.)

Dr. B. B. Tyler says: "No person is prepared for baptism who is not already saved." He also speaks of a man being prepared by a "spiritual experience for this ordinance." In the Christian-Evangelist of March 28, 1895, Dr. Tyler and Dean Mathews differ with Mr. Campbell a little. We will now hear Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, on this question: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2: 38.) The last named is the highest authority, and the one preferred by the writer. MacKnight renders "eis eistin" (Rom. 1: 17) "in order to faith." Professor Stuart renders it "in order that we may believe." The same laws of language would compel them to render "eis apesin" (Acts 2: 38) "in order to remission." Dr. Hackett renders the passage "in order to the forgiveness of sins." If all "our leading men" (like Dr. Tyler and others) would keep close to the New Testament and recognize Jesus Christ as the highest authority in religion, I believe they would get right yet.

Paul says: "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." (Gal. 5: 9.) Macknight says on this passage: "The errors of one teacher are sufficient to corrupt a whole church." The apostolic church had no such pests as missionary societies and State evangelists, and none exist now by the authority of Jesus Christ. The writer received a letter, four or five years ago, from an elder in the church of Christ at Morganfield, Ky., stating that he and some others were compelled to sever connection with the church there on account of societies and other human inventions. The same young "pastor" was next sent to Bowling Green, Ky., where he divided the church again. Still they say: "Our general evangelist is a good man." It is evident to the writer that some one must account at the judgment bar of God for dividing up these churches and all such work. He said it was a "wise thing" to have Elder T. M. Mathews, of Murray, Ky., go among the churches and give his reasons why he left the church of God and joined the South Kentucky Missionary Society. He paid Elder Mathews' expenses on this tour out of money he collected for the purpose of having Jesus Christ preached to dying men and women. One of the finest scholars who has ever been in South Kentucky (a college president at the time) was president of the "board" several years ago. He favored reducing the salary of the "general evangelist" from twelve hundred dollars per annum and expenses to eleven hundred dollars per annum and expenses and using the one hundred dollars somewhere else. When the convention met this president had the riot act read to him and was promptly removed from office. A farmer was put in his place who favored the "general evangelist." Now, some may think this is according to the authority of Jesus Christ, but—

Lord Lyttelton, by studying the history of Paul, was converted from his infidelity and wrote a great work in defense of Christianity. If he had taken a steamboat trip with "our general evangelist" and heard him say he would sooner lend aid and comfort to a Methodist preacher or a Baptist preacher than such men as Brother Harding, Brother Sewell, and others, I believe he would have remained an infidel. The writer has worked earnestly with these men to get them to repent, and he expects to remain a faithful watchman on the walls of Zion, warning them of their danger. If they turn their blind eye, as Nelson did to his admiral at Copenhagen, then there will be no responsibility on this scribe in the day of judgment.

The writer has a standing challenge against the "general evangelist" and his colleagues to meet him in joint discussion at Hopkinsville, Paducah, Mayfield, Madisonville, or Henderson, as he may choose. The disciples of South Kentucky can learn a good deal about this ecclesiastical corporation in this way. If this institution is scriptural and doing so much good, a discussion of this kind will enable it to do more good; if, on the other hand, it is a parasite on the church, controlled by designing men for filthy lucre's sake, then the churches have right to know it. Anything that is right and proper has nothing to fear by exposure to the noonday sun. This will give the "general evangelist" a fine opportunity to explain how he has accumulated property so rapidly since his connection with this institution. The writer has sent him Dr. Mosheim's account of the rise of the papal power from church councils ("Church History," Vol. I., page 117, Murdock's translation) and referred him to many passages in "Church History."

I have always admired the man who will do his duty, who can sail the storm-tossed waves of life's troubled sea, shrinking from no dangers, dreading no foes, and yielding to no superiors. Bismarck has said: "The iron will of one stout heart shall make a thousand quail." Let the "general evangelist" take courage and meet the writer in discussion or abandon his "machine," and come back to the church of God.

J. M. BLAKEY.

Allensville, Ky.

The Elders and the Evangelists.

There seems to be a diversity of opinion as to the proper place for a preacher in a church with a scriptural eldership. The Gospel Advocate, The Way, and the Echo have had quite a number of articles of late on the question of unscriptural pastors. Many things that are true have been said, and said in the interest of the church of Christ. I have no sympathy with teaching or work that will not stand the test of what God has taught and arranged in the salvation of the world from sin. God has arranged the matter of evangelizing the world and caring for the church, and it seems to me that he would have us know where he puts the evangelist and what he would have him do. Does the evangelist, or preacher, have any place in a church with a scriptural eldership, as a preacher and worker? If he does thus have a place in the work of a local congregation, what does the word of God call him while serving in that relation? Is he an evangelist, an elder, a preacher, or a pastor? If God thus has a place for the man called "evangelist," we do wrong in calling him "pastor," whether we mean it as a reproach, as is usual with those who think they are dealing with one out of his proper place, or whether we do it thinking that he is a pastor while acting in this relation. If the preacher has a work to do in a scriptural congregation, and still retains the name "preacher" while acting in that relation, it is wrong, in the estimation of God, to call him "pastor" or "bishop." I think some of the scribes are guilty of grave blunders at this point. The very tone of their writings indicates zeal and sincerity, but to my way of viewing the matter they have not learned the whole truth on this subject. What is there unscriptural in the "modern pastorate?" It is not much farther off the divine plane of church government than some of those that pose as "the church of Christ." I do not mean this as a disparagement of the church of Christ; fidelity to truth demands the disapproval of the wrong wherever found. Some are for Paul, some are for Apollos, and those who "are for Christ" may contend in the same sectarian spirit, though it be for the truth itself. If the "modern pastor" rules the congregation, to that extent he is wrong; if he takes the name "pastor," he is still farther wrong; or, if he usurps the authority or work of another while in that relation, he is wrong to the extent of the departure from the Bible. But we must not be too hasty in calling a true man of God that preaches for one or more churches once or more a month a "pastor." I am not saying this in defense of my own practice, for I have for several years refused to work in the relation of the "modern pastor." Recent investigation of this subject has resulted in a slight modification of my views of the subject. But hear me through before you pronounce me in favor of the modern pastor.

Before we can settle the relation of "evangelist" to a scriptural eldership, we must first decide as to what it is that constitutes the scriptural eldership. So I will devote the balance of my space in this paper to the discussion of the question of a scriptural eldership. In the study of this complicated and mooted question, I shall not address myself to the points of agreement; I shall content myself with the mere mention of the fundamental principles of church government, upon which the great majority of us, as a church, are a unit.

1. The eldership and deaconship are the only offices (I use the word "office" to distinguish centralized work, not in a political sense) in the New Testament church, and they are to remain until the end of time.

2. The terms "elder," "bishop," "overseer," "shepherd," and "pastor" are used interchangeably, and all belong to the incumbents of the office of the eldership. Each word in the original is different and designates a different phase of the office.

3. That the elders are chosen by the congregation of disciples. (Acts 6: 15.) As there is lack of perfect unanimity at this point, I will give Brother McGarvey's comment on this verse: "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to the apostles that the 'whole multitude of the disciples' should take part in the selection of these officers, the apostles doing no more in the matter than prescribing the qualifications. No ingenuity of argument can evade the conclusion that this gives the authority of apostolic precedent for the popular election of church officers. In what way the choice was made by the multitude, whether by balloting or by a viva voce vote, and whether with or without nominations, we are not informed; and consequently, in reference to these points, every congregation is left to its own judgment." The Holy Spirit gives the qualifications of officers and the congregation says who possesses them, or who is eligible; the statute books define crime, and by the testimony of witnesses the guilt of alleged criminals is ascertained, and the law, at the hands of men, inflicts the penalty.

4. We are all agreed that only those who possess the scriptural qualifications are eligible to the office of bishop. We ought to be a unit in saying that the aspirant to the office possesses all the qualifications. Does the full possession of them belong, as in the case of perfect Christians, to the ideal work of the elder? The qualifications are both moral and intellectual. Which are the more important? Will the lack of some of the latter render a candidate ineligible for the office?

5. That the elders are the only authorized rulers of the local congregation, I think we are agreed. Some would go so far as to say that they are the only teachers of the church. Upon reflection of a rational character, all, I think, must come to the conclusion that society must have recognized leaders. No society can exist without them; in fact, the word "society," without leaders, is a contradiction of terms. If there were no authority for elders in the church, we would have to agree on leaders, just such as the New Testament describes, in order to have society of any kind.

Without discussing further the questions of agreement, I pass to the consideration of some questions upon which there is more or less difference of opinion among us. Remember that it is not my purpose in these articles to discuss all the qualifications of elders nor to elaborate any one of the mooted questions, but simply to mention some of the fundamental points pertaining to the relation of evangelists to elders. There are a number of points on which there is a diversity of opinion. I shall touch on: "What is a scriptural eldership?"

The leading characteristic of the elder is ability to rule. He is a teacher, but that is not the chief point in the elder; he is a servant of the congregation, but his work does not derive its name from the service he renders; he may be a preacher, but he is not set apart for the work of the ministry. All the duties and work that enter the arena of the eldership are incidental and tributary to the chief characteristic of ruling. He is the ruler of the church of God. The chief characteristic of an evangelist is the work of preaching. He may be also a teacher, a worker in many other ways, but none of these is his main work. The terms "minister," "servant," "teacher," and "preacher" are predicated of the apostles, of evangelists, of Jesus, and are the chief characteristic of those called "deacons;" but I do not remember that the term "evangelist" or its equivalent is once applied to the elder. Why is this? What significance, if any, is there in this use of the term? The explanation is to be found in the fact that God gives names significant of the predominating or leading characteristic of persons or offices named. This applies to the office of elder. In the office of ruling he is preëminent. "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" The latter work requires greater discretion and skill in caring for the work of the Lord in these days of disregard of divine authority than ruling one's household. In the home the father naturally takes his place at the head and governs the family. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." Would this principle that makes of the elder the ruling leader in the church deprive him of the privilege of teaching or preaching the gospel to the world? No; certainly not. It only shows that all other work is subordinate to that of ruling. So of the preacher, whose chief work is that of preaching the gospel to the world of sinners—he is not excluded from the duty of teaching the church or doing any other work that may need to be done in the church. If the elder's chief characteristic was that of teaching, it might exclude all other teaching in the church, but not necessarily. If the Bible said that was his leading duty, and no other could take his place as teacher, it would rule out all others as teachers. The reason that some object to a preacher working regularly for a church one-fourth or all of the time is based on the supposition that the elders are not only the rulers of the church, but the only authorized teachers. They will allow that the church occasionally call in an evangelist to hold a series of meetings, and that for the benefit of the sinners. Not long since I was called to preach for a congregation that had elders. For some months there had been no preaching in the community. One of the elders announced to the people that we contemplated holding forth the word a short time for the benefit of the sinners. He said if the sinners did not seem to be interested, we would close the meeting in a few days, as the church did not need the preaching. It flashed across my mind at once that that church which does not need preaching has no ideal of either individual or church life.

But let us see whether the Bible teaches that the elders are the only teachers of the church. I will pass by the many allusions of the apostles to the work of evangelists as teachers of the church as too obvious and apparent to all Bible readers to deserve mention in this connection. I will notice another line of thought in considering the function of elders. "Let the elders that rule well." I want to use the points in this verse as we proceed to unravel it. What I have quoted implies that some of the churches in apostolic times had overseers who did not possess all the qualifications prescribed. It implies that some of them did not rule well. Why have elders, then, if their chief duty is ruling, and some have not the ability to do that? There were other duties, as I shall show in due time, which vindicate the position here taken. We have elders now that cannot rule well; but let us not decry them until we are sure that God does not want them. "Be counted worthy of double honor." Good rulers are entitled to great honor, for they are rarer than even good teachers. I have many things to say on this line yet, but the reader cannot bear it all at one time.

W. J. BROWN.

Proved by Results.

The mathematically exact man, who insists always on a demonstration, will do well to con this little anecdote told of Dr. Pentecost and the atheist who would not believe the Bible because he did not know its author:

"My friend," said Dr. Pentecost, "is not the multiplication table a work of authority with mathematicians?"

"Most certainly."

"Do you happen to know who is the author of the multiplication table?"

"No."

"Then I assume, as a matter of fact, being a scientific man and a conscientious skeptic, you never use the multiplication table?"

"O, yes," he replied; "it proves itself to be true by its work."

"Then, my friend," said the great preacher, "leaving on one side all these hairsplitting questions of academic science and criticism, shall we not be allowed to say that we know that the Bible is a work of absolute authority in religion and morals, whether we know its human authors or not, because it works well in its own sphere, just as the multiplication table works well and truly in its own sphere?"

If there is one thing more than another that brings a woman down to a level of actual coarseness and vulgarity, it is the habit of complaining about her husband to others. If there is anything that would justify a husband in rising up in open rebellion, it is to have to endure the humiliation of hearing himself thus complained of. The writer has the misfortune to know one or two women of this type, and it goes without saying that they are adherents to the belief that marriage is a failure. The angel of peace hovers not over their hearthstones, and the spirit of discontent broods over their homes.—Exchange.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Men are continually trying to get rid of the idea of the endless duration of the punishment of the wicked. It is hard to tell why men should take such an interest in trying to do away with that long-cherished belief, for it is certain that the language of the New Testament indicates that; and if a man is striving to serve God and to reach the home in glory, he need not put himself to any trouble to work the idea of future punishment out of the New Testament. He does not intend to go there, and will not, if he continues faithful to the end. As for the wicked, they are the very ones, above all others, that ought to be most interested in finding it out, if it be true; for if they continue in their wickedness, they are certainly the ones that are to suffer it.

There are but two places of abode mentioned for man in eternity. One is heaven, where all the righteous and pure will dwell; the other is hell, Tartarus; or place of punishment, where all the wicked will go. There is no intermediate place of abode that we have any knowledge of. The righteous will certainly go to heaven, while the wicked will be certain to go to hell. There is nothing more plainly revealed in the word of God than this. It is equally true that none but the righteous will be received into heaven and that all the wicked will be cast into hell, for there is no other place revealed for any of them to go to. This being true, it is especially important for the wicked to understand it as a warning against sin, against rebellion, which leads to hell. The wicked, those that refuse the gospel, are already on the broad road that leads to that awful abode. A revelation of that fact is made in the New Testament to warn men against it. Therefore, those that are trying to break down the idea of endless punishment are but hurrying and leading them on to the very place they are claiming to do away with. Hence the wicked are the very ones to suffer from this effort; and those who are striving so hard to get rid of this idea are generally those that claim to be on their journey home. They had better be careful, lest they be found taking from the word of God. If it be found that they are doing this, they are only paving the way to land themselves in eternal woe. There are few things done among men that are greater sins in the sight of the Lord than taking the word of the Lord from the people.

If the idea of endless punishment be a myth, then what is there in the Bible that we can depend upon? John the Baptist plainly taught it when he said of Christ: "He shall baptize you with ["in," Revised Version] the Holy Ghost, and with ["in," Revised Version] fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." The wheat to be gathered into the garner means the righteous that will be gathered into heaven, while the chaff means the wicked which are to be burned up with unquenchable fire; and the word "unquenchable" means "the fire that never shall be quenched," or put out. The "fire" here means the punishment of the wicked, and shows as plainly as language can express anything that this punishment will never end. If this expression concerning the endlessness of future punishment be not true, then how are we to know that anything in the New Testament is true? If this statement be not a matter of inspiration, how shall we prove that anything the Book says is inspiration?

It is said in Mark 9: 43: "And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched." The word rendered "hell" in this passage is "Gehenna," which means the place of punishment for the wicked in the unseen world; and it distinctly says this fire never shall be quenched. The word "Gehenna" is the name of a valley, or low place, near Jerusalem where all manner of filth, dead carcasses, and the like were thrown, and where fire was always kept burning to consume it. The Savior uses this word to signify hell, the place of punishment for the wicked hereafter. As that fire was kept constantly burning for the accomplishment of that end, so in eternity the fires of eternal ruin "never shall be quenched." If this expression does not express the endlessness of the punishment of the wicked, then language has no power to express such an idea; and if this "fire that never shall be quenched" means nothing, then the word "life," which here represents heaven, the home of the righteous, means nothing. The very same arguments that are used to eliminate hell from the New Testament also eliminate heaven at the same time. The trouble in this matter is that men put up their opinions against the word of the living God.

Men in these days get up the idea that there must be no punishment of any sort—that school-teachers must not punish children, that prisoners in the penitentiary must not be punished, and that parents must not punish their children; in fact, the effort is being made to completely put down punishment in every shape and form; and then they carry this idea beyond this life and conclude there should be no fixed and permanent punishment in eternity. They also conclude that God is better than men, and that they would not punish the wicked endlessly, and that, therefore, God will not. The whole thing is based upon man's reasoning and man's opinion, and not upon the word of God. Every man that says there is no eternal punishment for the wicked ignores the plainly-expressed word of God in so doing. But it is not much to be wondered at after men ignore the plain word of the Lord in the matter of becoming Christians, and upon their own opinions attribute the whole thing to an abstract operation of the Holy Spirit, and then attribute the matter of sanctification, on the part of Christians, to the direct power of the Spirit, instead of attributing it to a continued consecration of heart and life to the teaching of the word of God as the means of accomplishing it. To me it is not at all strange that men ignore the word of God anywhere that it conflicts with their favorite opinions, for this whole matter of an immediate operation of the Holy Spirit, both in conversion and sanctification, is as purely a matter of opinion as was ever invented on this earth. The trouble is, these opinions ignore and set aside some of the plainest teaching of the whole New Testament. So it is in this matter of doing away with the idea of endless punishment. In so doing they ignore some of the plainest teaching in God's word.

Jesus says again of the wicked and of the righteous: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." (Matt. 25: 46.) In the Revised Version we have the word "eternal" applied to both the righteous and the wicked—eternal punishment, eternal life. This is consistent, for the same word is applied to both in the Greek. If the word means "eternal" when applied to the righteous, so does it also when applied to the wicked; and there is no way to avoid the conclusion that if the punishment of the wicked ends, so will the happiness of the righteous come to an end, just precisely as the punishment of the wicked will end. Men who make the argument that the punishment of the wicked will not be eternal are doing just as the man does who goes up into a tree to trim off the branches and cuts off the limb between himself and the tree and tumbles down with the limb. So if the punishment of the wicked is to end, the happiness of the righteous will go down with it, and thus all light goes out, and eternity is a myth. If the word used to express endless punishment does not mean it, then the same word cannot mean endless life when applied to the righteous.

Paul also says of those who obey not the gospel: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This word "everlasting," applied here to the wicked, is the very same word in the Greek that is applied to the life of the righteous in eternity. Therefore, if one ends, so will the other. The same word cannot mean "endless" when applied to the righteous, and the very opposite when applied to the wicked. This would destroy language, and make it impossible to express anything with any sort of certainty. This same word is used about seventy-two times in the Greek Testament, interchangeably, sometimes applied to eternal life, eternal happiness, and sometimes to eternal punishment, the destruction of the wicked; and while it is used more frequently to express eternal life, it is used quite a number of times to express eternal punishment for the wicked. The trouble is, men are claiming it just as they want it and as they think it ought to be. The Bible is worth nothing whatever to such men; all such men are guided entirely by their own opinions and their own wishes, and not by what the Bible says. It is utterly inconsistent for such men to claim anything as true because the word of God says so, for whenever it says what they do not like, they utterly discount and discard it as nothing. If the things they discard are nothing, neither are the things they claim to accept anything. In reality the Bible has little to do with the religion of such men. When it teaches what they want, they go by it; when it teaches what they do not want, they discard it. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." (James 2: 10.) Man must respect all that God says. God commands men not to kill and not to steal. Now, no matter how much a man respects the command not to steal and then turns round and kills some one, he is a transgressor of God's law, and falls under its condemnation. So it is in regard to the whole matter of God's word to man. Whenever he rejects any part of it, he comes under the curse of God; for a curse is pronounced upon any man, or even an angel, that perverts the gospel of Christ, and it is certainly a perversion of the gospel to say the punishment of the wicked will not be eternal. It is also taking from the word, and the man that does it is under condemnation for that offense. In the next place, it puts a man in the company of unbelievers. The Book says the wicked shall go into everlasting punishment, and when a man says they will not, he does not believe it. When Jesus required that people shall believe the gospel, he meant all that is said in connection with and as resulting from the gospel. The gospel promises eternal life to them that obey the gospel, that believe what it says and do what it requires, and it threatens eternal punishment to them that will not believe and obey.

Jesus said: "He that believeth not shall be damned." People do not realize the enormity of disregarding the word of God, for when they disregard one part of it, it is the same as if they disregarded it all, and they will be condemned for deliberately disregarding what God says. God's word will endure when all the opinions of men will come to naught and when all who reject the word of God will also come to naught. Men might, therefore, just as well reject and discard the whole Bible as to reject and discard parts of it. The eternal punishment of the wicked will never interfere with the righteous; neither will discarding the idea of it save men from it. Believe all, or just as well reject all. E. G. S.

"Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore" is a book of 413 pages, edited by F. D. Srygley and published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. It contains twelve sermons, a number of extracts from other sermons, and numerous letters and parts of letters written by Brother Larimore, with accounts of his labors and experiences on divers occasions. It also contains quite a number of illustrations—likenesses of himself and family, his homes, Mars' Hill, etc.

The book is an interesting one and one that will do good, and no evil, it seems to me. His sermons are all pleas for purity, holiness, fidelity to God and his word in all things. No one could make a more earnest and constant plea for fidelity to God and strict adherence to his word than Brother Larimore does at all times in his preaching. I am the more anxious to impress this because at times I have thought possibly he was too noncommittal where questions of fidelity to God's order were involved and may have made that impression on others. If he was ever so, he is not so now. He does it in his own way. His manner is always meek and deferential, but his positions are decided and firm. His private letters and intercourse always inculcate purity and fidelity to truth and right and a constant desire to benefit others. The reading of these sermons and letters will do all good. We especially commend them to the young.

He laid down these rules for his life: (1) Be kind; (2) be meek; (3) be true; (4) be humble; (5) be gentle; (6) be polite; (7) be patient; (8) be earnest; (9) be careful; (10) be hopeful; (11) be faithful; (12) be cheerful; (13) be grateful; (14) be generous; (15) be prayerful; (16) be courteous; (17) be unselfish; (18) be thoughtful; (19) be industrious; (20) be consecrated; (21) be conscientious; (22) always do the right; (23) do as much good as possible; (24) do as little evil as possible; (25) eat to live, not live to eat; (26) if possible, be perfectly pure; (27) if not, be as pure as possible; (28) always make the best of the situation; (29) be clean—body, soul, and spirit—clean in thought, in word, in deed—always clean; (30) conscientiously consecrate all to Christ—head, hand, heart—body, soul, spirit—time, tongue, talent—mind, muscle, money—consecrate all to him who gave his very life to ransom a recreant, lost, and ruined race." There is an excellent likeness of T. Fanning and a picture of Franklin College and surroundings as they were about 1850; also an article on the operations of Franklin College by Brother H. R. Moore, of Huntland, Tenn., with a list of the graduates. We commend the book as one that will be helpful to all who will read it. D. L.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother J. T. Craig is at Sumac, Tenn., in a meeting.

Brother E. A. Elam began a meeting at Posterville, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Dr. C. L. Chism, of Spring Hill, Tenn., made us a pleasant call last Thursday.

Brother J. D. Floyd, of Flat Rock, Tenn., is in Indian Territory, holding a meeting.

Brother P. H. Hooten has returned from Texas, where he has been engaged in meetings.

Brother William Lipscomb preached at North Spruce Street church of Christ, this city, last Sunday.

Brother George H. Porch and son, Neely Porch, also his nephew, Willie Porch, all of Bakerville, Tenn., were in the office one day last week.

Brother Caleb Sewell, the only surviving brother of Brother E. G. Sewell, is in the city. He preached at Tenth Street church of Christ last Lord's day.

I am at the depot here, waiting for a train, on my way to Poole, Webster County, Ky., to begin a six-days' discussion with a Primitive Baptist, commencing on Monday, July 23, 1900.—L. L. Holloway, Louisville, Ky.

What congregation, or number of congregations, will unite with us to have a meeting of thirty days held at Stevenson, Ala.? Stevenson is a small town of four or five hundred inhabitants, situated at the junction of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway and the Southern Railway, where there has never been a meeting held by the church of God. This place is, I think, a fine missionary point. There is no congregation here, but a few brethren, well scattered, that think nothing can be done without a preacher. I want a meeting here some time during the fall. Who will help?—W. J. Rorex, Stevenson, Ala.

The following ominous cable message came on July 16, 1900, from the Interdenominational Committee in Bombay of which Brother M. D. Adams is a member: "No rain has fallen yet in the Guzerat and Rajputana provinces, and the rainfall has been inadequate elsewhere, absolutely destroying the hopes that were entertained of a favorable harvest. The prospects are now adverse to any improvement in the suffering, and the situation has become a terrible one. There are many thousands of orphans utterly destitute, now thrown upon our hands, who must be cared for. In their behalf we appeal to you to cable relief quickly.—G. L. Wharton, Hiram, O.

We have just closed a meeting at Hoboken, Ga., a little station on the Brunswick and Western Railroad. Hoboken had never before taken such universal interest in religion. To the surprise of the few scattered Christians in this country, the schoolhouse where we preached was full and crowded at nearly every meeting. The meeting lasted not quite two weeks. There were thirteen confessions, and one brother who had wandered off with the Congregationalist Methodists saw his error and came back. We hope, from these results, to have two little congregations worshipping in this country, in private houses, every Lord's day. Brother John Glenn led the singing, and did his work well; and it was my care to present the word of God as it is written. God be thanked for its effects.—Robert H. Roll, Schlatterville, Ga.

EDITORIAL.

The closed hand shrivels the soul.

The man who lives best lives most.

A sense of responsibility saves from selfishness.

Life without a noble purpose is not worth living.

Those who have little are usually the most liberal.

The man with a pure heart is never far from God.

Thoughts, deeds, actions, and not years, tell how long we live.

A little gift with great love is better than a great gift with little love.

Cheerful looks make every dish a feast, And 'tis that crowns a welcome.

Conscious of the approving smiles of God, life's shadows will soon disappear.

Life is too short to be lost in the pursuit of worldly pleasures and vanities.

When we open our door to the needy, we will in all probability find Christ there.

The man who does his duty to-day will not be filled with vain regrets tomorrow.

When you realize that a thing should be done, it is time you were doing it.

He who withholds more than is meet will need help that will be withheld from him.

To witness the worldliness of professed Christians is enough to make the heart sick.

We help ourselves most when we help others. "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Anything worth doing is worth doing well. Let the rule of your life be to do whatever you do well.

"In creation God shows us his hand, but in redemption God gives us his heart." (Adolphe Monod.)

So many people plume themselves in borrowed colors. With these they may deceive the world, but not God.

If we judged our neighbor as leniently as ourselves, he would be a much better man in our estimation.

The friendships of this world so often fail us, but the friendship of God is everlasting and can never fail us.

True charity gives thought, as well as money; time, as well as wealth; sympathy and wisdom, as well as things.

"God so loved that he gave." He lives to give. We are not his children if we do not, in our little degree, throw back in feeble imitation that infinite giving." (Joseph Parker.)

The man who studies only his own selfish interests is sure to be miserable; the man who looks beyond self to the good of others is sure to be happy in this life and in the life to come.

Be not discouraged in the midst of the conflicts and shadows of life. These will fit you for a nobler and purer life. God has something in store for you better than you have known.

The man who keeps close to Christ is out of danger: Peter followed the Lord from afar, was tempted, and fell; John remained close in the presence of the Lord, and there is no intimation that he was even tempted.

The man who feels that he has a mission from God to perform is a brave man; he is not afraid of the world.

Luther was bold and fearless because he was working out a plan of God; John the Baptist was sublimely fearless and courageous because he "was a man sent from God."

God denies to no one the privilege of being helpful. The treasures that really make the world richer come not from chests filled with gold, but from the storehouse of love and unselfishness. The weakest and poorest may have a high place among the helpers of men. Filled with a consuming desire to make the world better, unconsciously to ourselves while in the discharge of duty we are helpful to all about us. Cultivate an unselfish spirit, then your life will prove a benediction to many.

"Charity begins at home," but it does not end there. The home duties should be performed first. Then we should reach out a helping hand to our neighbors. The hungry suffering at our own door, on our own street, and in our own city demand our help before the foreigner. The fact that Lazarus was at the rich man's gate gave the latter a responsibility for the poor man. The calls for help are God's knocks on our door, asking us to open and let him in. The very nearness of a need makes it a special duty. Contiguity increases our responsibility.

The best help is the hardest to bestow. It is not always wisest and best to toss a dollar to a beggar without dealing with the causes that made him a beggar. It is much easier to feed the hungry tramp than to deal with the problem that made him a tramp. We can give the young man who needs it a suit of clothes with less sacrifice than we can deal with the lack of manliness that brought him to that condition. All true giving is for the purpose of elevating and ennobling and of placing the recipients of our charity in a position to help themselves. The best help is that which places a man in a condition to help himself.

There are many kinds of needs that come to us in the course of a life. The calls that come to us for money or for food are trifling in comparison with the calls for sympathy, inspiration, and encouragement. It requires more skill to lift up the cast-down spirit than to feed the hungry mouth, though it is not Christlike to refrain from the latter. How few of us understand the heart needs of our friends about us! They come to us in a starving condition, craving advice, sympathy, and comfort. Instead of feeding them on brotherly confidence and cheer, we give them a cold shoulder. We are such strangers to their real wants that we undertake to feed them on the stone of a bit of gossip. Some day, "when the mists have cleared away," we shall see the heart needs that we should have satisfied and did not.

Selfishness is the meanest sin of the age. It is the father of all other sins. Selfishness is the deadliest blight that can fall on a soul. We never think of ranking it with lying, murder, and robbery, but it is back of and the cause of all these. It led to the fall in the garden of Eden, and thereby brought sin and ruin into the world. If it be said that "the love of money is the root of all evil," it may be correctly replied that selfishness is back of the love of money. It would be hard to conceive of one sin that cannot be traced to selfishness. There is nothing meaner than the selfish life. The selfish husband makes his wife miserable and wretched, and vice versa.

There is no graver offense against God than to seek only those who may profit us, while we withhold our knowledge, our sympathy, and our means from others. If one man gets a lower place in hell than all others, it will be the selfish one.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS

"Gospel Praise" has been highly commended by all who have examined it. We only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating buying new books, you should, by all means, examine "Gospel Praise." It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment, and that the music is of that high order which marks all of Mr. Showalter's selections and compositions.

S. P. Pittman says: "I have examined most of the songs in 'Gospel Praise,' and am glad to say that, with but few exceptions, they are fine; and I predict that the collection will be accorded the popularity it deserves."

W. Boyd says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received."

The Armstrong Company, music typographers, say: "We think the book will be a success; as you have so many new compositions and by such good authors of note, we do not see how it can be otherwise. We shall be pleased to receive a copy of the work when printed, as we know it will adorn our library."

"After a careful examination of 'Gospel Praise,' I wish to state to the readers of the Gospel Advocate that I think it is the best arranged work and finest music extant; in fact, it is an 'all-purpose book,' 'worth its weight in gold.' All congregations should bountifully supply themselves with this elegant production." (M. H. Northcross, Franklin, Tenn.)

"I have examined the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company's latest book, 'Gospel Praise,' and find it a complete little gem, filled with most excellent music, both ancient and modern; neatly bound, indexed by subjects, well adapted to all sacred occasions. The price is within reach of all, and the book should have a circulation second to none extant. I can certainly recommend it to all." (R. W. Norwood.)

"After a careful examination of your new book, 'Gospel Praise,' I can cheerfully say that I am more than pleased with it. The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul stirring, while the mechanical appearance of the work does great credit to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The brethren should all buy this book and learn these beautiful songs, and thus be able to comply with the heavenly admonition to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs while they sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord." (J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.)

Published in round and shaped notes and in word edition. See price list elsewhere in this issue. You will make no mistake in ordering "Gospel Praise." Our hymn book catalogue will be sent to any address on application for same.

Queries.

Brother Sewell: Please answer the two following questions, according to the Bible, in the Gospel Advocate: (1) Why are the first five books of the Old Testament called "Pentateuch?" (2) What was the subject of Jesus Christ in preaching the Sermon on the Mount?

J. M. CARROLL.

Waynesboro, Tenn.

(1) The word "Pentateuch" is a name given to the five books of Moses, said to be from the Greek words "pente," five; and "teuchos," instrument, or book; and has been for a long time applied to the first five books of the Old Testament—Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. This name signifies five instruments, or volumes, and was evidently first applied to these five books because of its signification. (2) Christ did not announce any subject, or theme, for the Sermon on the Mount. He was a teacher, and taught the people; but not a sermonizer, as men are these days, and did not take texts and announce themes, as men do now. He simply taught things in that sermon the disciples needed to hear; but that sermon furnishes many subjects for men to preach on at the present time, and they very readily use them.

Brother Lipscomb: I hardly ever bother you with questions to answer, but I would like to have your views as to whether or not a person is a sinner after ceasing from sin. If a person is a sinner after believing and repenting, do we baptize a sinner into Christ? If a person in this condition is not a sinner—that is, after turning away from sin and doing God's will—will such a one's prayers be heard and answered?

A. W. RUNNION.

Weston, Tex.

Certainly a man is not a sinner after he ceases to sin; but when does he cease to sin? I am afraid very few of us cease to sin while we live in the flesh. There are different classes of sins—sins of weakness and sins of presumption. When we think we are strongest, then we are often in greatest danger. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." (1 Cor. 10: 12.) When a man feels most confidence in himself, then there is the greatest danger that he will be presumptuous and commit the greatest sin. Poor in spirit, contrite and humble in heart are qualities that God loves in man. With such he dwells to lift up and comfort. We sin in deed, in word, and in thought. Not often do we pass a day without sinning in some one of these ways. It is easier to control the acts than the words; it is easier to control the words than the thoughts. Then to bring the thoughts into captivity to the will of God is the highest attainment in the divine life. Hence Paul says: "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh (for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds); casting down imaginations, and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God, and bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ; and being in readiness to avenge all disobedience, when your obedience shall be fulfilled." (2 Cor. 10: 3-6, R. V.) The perfection is when the thoughts have been all brought into obedience to the will of Christ. I think there are but few of us that can keep our thoughts for one day in captivity to the obedience of Christ. Sins are of two kinds—sins of commission and sins of omission. If we commit no positive sin, we omit some positive good. This is sin. Do any of us pass a day without omitting some opportunity or means of learning more of God's will or of doing some good to our fellow-men? I have never passed the day when at its close I felt I had used every opportunity and means in my power to bring myself into closer union with God, to become more like him in my life and character, to benefit and help my fellow-men, and to honor God. That means I never, at the close of a day, felt that I had passed the day free from sin, and I have but little faith in the truthfulness of the man who claims he has passed a day without sins of omission or commission in word, thought, or deed. That sinless life would be equal to the life of the Son of God. He lived a sinless life. Who else attains to this? When a person ceases to sin, he is not a sinner; but Solomon, in his dedicatory prayer to God, says: "There is no man that sinneth not." Only Jesus lived a sinless life, and he refused to be called good until the sinful propensities had been purged out by suffering; so that he was made perfect, and became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. Paul said: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." He continually pressed forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

Pastors and Elders, Again.

Brother Lipscomb: I beg to thank you once more for the consideration of my articles, and particularly the one of June 28, 1900. However, I regret to say that I am disappointed and cast down to think that you have failed to enlighten me by the word. True, you made several statements, or arguments, on the points at issue, but no scripture. For instance, I asked in every communication why you taught that pastors were to teach, feed the flock until characters were developed suitable for elders, which you have failed to answer. You have also failed to tell me the difference between elders and pastors. To simply say there is a difference does not satisfy me, as I find no difference, as far as I can discern, in the Book of God. You say if the interpretation I placed on scripture quoted be true, it would not prove elders inspired or gifted. How this could be, I cannot understand. I used several passages to prove elders and pastors the same. Now, if you admit that the scriptures quoted make elders and pastors the same, and you have repeatedly said pastors were inspired, why isn't the elder also? Most certainly, Brother Lipscomb, if you cannot show that "pastors" and "elders" were not official positions or titles given to the same classes, then we must conclude that pastors and elders were equally inspired and bore the same relationship to the church in apostolic, or New Testament, times.

Again, in your syllogism, you get me wrong. I did not say "elders taught as the inspired pastors did." As far as I can see, the office of pastors and the office of elders were one and the same; and I say, further, we can teach what they taught, but cannot hold any such official position as pastor or elder now, any more than apostle or prophet. Your first reason to refute the idea that elders were gifted seems to me quite new; that the elders were transferred from the Jewish to the Christian dispensation I cannot accept, unless some scripture so teaches. Will you kindly point me to the scriptures from which you draw this conclusion? Your second reason I cannot see would necessarily teach that they were uninspired, because I find the qualifications of an apostle given (Acts 1: 22), also the enrollment of widows (1 Tim. 5: 9); and yet we do not attempt to follow these, so why in the case of the elders? Your third reason seems to be because few brethren believe that elders were gifted. I am sorry to admit this has a great deal of weight with many, but that should not be the test. The word of God is the only test. Another reason you produce—at least it appears so to me—is that because the supposed murdered man was alive, no proof as to who murdered him is necessary. So, as the elders are still in existence, no proof is necessary as to their having passed away. But possibly I am afflicted, as you say, with some optic trouble. I hope, however, you will still try to remove those things which obscure my vision. Possibly, however, we may account for elders being with us in the same way as many other hurtful doctrines—viz.: Through human wisdom, desire of position, etc. Speaking of Brother Parker, Brother Pittman, and myself agreeing on the eldership having belonged to the days of gifts, etc., I would be much encouraged to a fuller investigation of how they are now qualified, selected, appointed, and set apart, if such learned, true, talented, and respected brethren as yourself, Brother Harding, and Brother Sewell could agree on this subject.

I would like to refer at some length to your article in the Gospel Advocate of July 5, 1900—"Names and Ideas"—but presume, for the present, it is sufficient to say that the article is altogether too confusing for me to understand, particularly when I contrast some things you here discuss with what you state in your former articles. I will give only one or two illustrations of what I mean. In your former articles you stated clearly and distinctly that apostles, prophets, and pastors were always inspired, and that it would be sinful to so designate men now, and that evangelists and teachers were found in both lists, inspired and uninspired. In this last article you say: "It was no sin for others to be called 'apostles' then; it would not be now, but in the translation the word 'apostle' was applied only to the twelve and Paul, save when applied to Barnabas in connection with Paul." Again: "The exclusiveness of the term to the apostles has been made by the translators and the custom of the people, not by God." This leads me to understand you now to say God did not apply the name "apostle" to inspired men exclusively. Your articles before said clearly that it was. (See article in the Gospel Advocate of June 7, 1900.) "'Apostles,' 'prophets,' and 'pastors' are not applied to the uninspired."

Again, you say: "So I think of 'pastor' and 'evangelist.' 'Pastor' means a feeder of the flock. The translators confined the word to the gifted feeders. The ungifted feeders were designated by other names." Heretofore, however, you insist that "the name came as the result of work done, not official position." Now, you must agree with me that the work done by "pastors" was feeding the flock and the work done by "elders" was feeding the flock. So we have the same work, why not the same name? Your idea as above seems to be because one was inspired he was a "pastor;" if not inspired, he was an "elder." Then how could the work indicate the name when both performed the same duties? There must be some other reason, or else they were, as I claim, one and the same official position. I hope, however, you will not think it is my desire to have you contradicting your own position; I should much rather you would not do so; and possibly it is a mistake on my part in so understanding you. I do not agree with your last sentence: "Whether I am always consistent in the use of the terms is not a matter of great importance to me, less to others." Your being consistent in the use of terms is of great importance to me; because of your devotion and loyalty to God's word, I look to you for help and guidance in the study of his word, and, as a younger brother should do, honor your writings upon all Bible subjects. Hence, if you are not consistent in the use of Bible terms, we are liable to stumble and fall.

J. H. HARDEN.

I think I answered all of Brother Harden's questions, if he will read what I have written. The answers may not be satisfactory to him. They are such as fully satisfy me, and I am sorry they do not satisfy him. Repeating them would hardly satisfy him, I take it. I did not at any time refer to the elders in the churches now. We find elders in the apostolic church, and Titus down in Crete, as the apostles were disappearing, to appoint elders in every city, with none to impart spiritual gifts. We find Paul, in his last letter, telling Timothy to commit the things he has learned of him to faithful men, able to teach others. We find the qualifications of these elders laid down to guide Timothy and Titus in selecting these elders, and inspiration is not among them. On the other hand, the qualifications seem to preclude inspiration. We find elders in both the Jewish order and the Christian order, with the same general qualifications, with the approval of God; and the two classes are called, all through the New Testament, by the same name. God did not use the term "elder" to mean an uninspired person in one case, and an inspired person in the other, without notification. God is not the author of confusion. "Prophet" means the same in the Old Testament as it does in the New Testament; so does "elder." Unless doing similar work proves the same office, elders doing work done by inspired apostles could not prove they were apostles. Neither could their doing work done by inspired pastors prove they were inspired. Uninspired men must do all the work done by the inspired ones. The foundation of your reasoning is not correct. These points settle this question, regardless of whether I contradict myself or answer all your questions or not. I cannot give more time to the subject. D. L.

Home Reading.

DIDN'T BELIEVE IN CHRISTMAS.

"This is Thursday," the little girl said, "and two weeks from to-day it will be Christmas. Isn't it very strange?"

The man who lived on the top floor looked into her face and smiled.

"Is there anything strange about Christmas?" he asked. "I think it is a very ordinary day—just like other days."

The little girl was astonished. Christmas an ordinary day! To her it was the most extraordinary day in the year. Even her birthday could not compare with it. What could he mean?

"Why, Christmas," she explained to him, gravely, "is the day on which Christ was born. People have big trees—at least, people with children have—and the trees have candles and pop corn and presents on them, and everybody is happy—that is, everybody but you," she added, "for you don't seem to like Christmas."

"No," he said, "I do not like Christmas at all. I do not believe in it. People make too much fuss over it."

Then he started up stairs, leaving Florence Molloy on the stoop of the big tenement as astonished as an eight-year-old girl could be. But just then her sister Mamie, who was two years younger, came by on the sidewalk in a "wagon" (made out of a soap box), and she rushed after Jimmie Steen, the "horse," to ask him for a ride.

In her play she forgot all about the man who did not believe in Christmas, and never thought about him until a week later, when she was sitting one night on the stoop with four other girls of her age, who all lived in the tenement. They were talking about Christmas, and each girl was telling what presents she expected to receive. All manner of coveted things were mentioned—toys, dolls, dresses, and the like—and one girl was bold enough to say that she thought Santa Claus would bring her a bicycle; but this was considered impossible, for bicycles cost a lot of money, and there wasn't very much money in a block where nearly all the houses were tenements, with high rents and four large families living on each floor.

As the girls were talking, a man came down stairs so slowly and quietly that they didn't hear him. For a little while he stood listening to their chatter. It was the man who didn't believe in Christmas. Usually he thought that children were too bold and noisy, but on this night the girls had a strange interest for him. He lived in three upper rooms, with his invalid sister. His wife and children had been dead several years; and had his two daughters lived, they would have been about as old as Florence and her friends. If they had lived! And if they had, they would have made very happy a lonely man who disliked children simply because the death of his own loved ones had somehow frozen his heart.

He was thinking of his own loved ones as he stood in the dark and listened. Florence was speaking: "I don't know exactly what I'll get for Christmas," she said, "but I do know what I'd like to have, and that is one of those plaid dresses up in Harris', on Eighth avenue."

The other girls knew what she meant, for had they not stood outside the store every evening for a week past and pressed their faces against the windows? They were filled with strange longings for the beautiful dresses they had seen behind those windows, though they knew the price was far above their means.

"I wish I were rich," sighed Florence, despairingly.

The listener wondered why; for this wish, though common enough in the neighborhood where so many people were quite poor, one rarely heard spoken.

"What do you want to be rich for, Floy?" one of the girls asked.

"Well," she answered, "if I had all the money I wanted, I'd buy that dress. It costs three dollars and a half, and I've only forty cents in my bank. How I'd like to get it for Christmas! But papa didn't have work all summer and just got a job two months ago, and he won't be out of debt for a long while. So I'm afraid our Christmas will be pretty slim this year; so I might as well stop wishing, for it's a waste of time. Dear me!" And she sighed again.

For a few minutes there was silence. Perhaps each little heart was giving wings to its wishes. The man looked at the girls and sighed, even as Floence had done, though she sighed because she had no dress and he because he had no Florence.

It was Florence who spoke first. "Do you know, girls," she said, "that there is a man in this house who doesn't believe in Christmas?"

"Really and truly doesn't believe?" the girl nearest to her questioned.

"Yes; he told me that he didn't, and said that Christmas was an ordinary day—as if it could be!" And she laughed at the very idea of such an absurd thing. "Guess who it is."

"Has he any children?"

"No."

"Then it must be that Mr. Chadwick, on the top floor."

"He's the one," Florence answered. "Perhaps, after all," she continued, thoughtfully, "it isn't so strange. He mightn't have said so if he had a child to love him."

The man who didn't believe in Christmas started as if he had been spoken to. He had not expected to hear himself talked about, and he couldn't help wondering whether the girl was right.

"I don't think," Florence went on, "that Mr. Chadwick ever gives or gets Christmas presents. Now, if I had money enough, I'd give him something nice myself; but all I've got is forty cents, and that won't buy anything nice enough for a man. Besides, I don't know just what he'd like."

Forgetting what he had come down stairs for, Mr. Chadwick went up to his lonely lodgings. The words of the children had made him think more seriously about Christmas and himself—about himself most of all.

The air was filled with the snow of Christmas. The tall brick tenements looked gray through the shifting clouds of white, and the lights of the West Side street in which Florence Molloy lived were dim and dull. Even the glare of the electric globes on Eighth avenue was faint and uncertain; but the frosty shop windows in all streets and avenues gleamed gayly and were filled with the toys and the pretty things of holiday time.

If any one had stood on the fire escape outside of Florence's home, through the half-closed shutters and whitened panes could have been detected the signs of the season. There was a tree ablaze with lights and strung with pink pop corn; there was an open fire in the stove, with apples above it toasting on strings, and the air was like a clove with evergreens. To be sure, there was no plaid dress among the simple gifts on the beautiful tree. Old Santa seemed to have overlooked the one desire of Florence's heart; but had it been there, the little girl's contented face could hardly have beamed more joyously.

In the rooms overhead there were no children, no Christmas tree, and no presents, unless the plump package that lay on the table might contain a gift. A man walked nervously about the room. He wanted to do something badly, but hesitated. At last he was encouraged by the sounds of happy laughter that came up from the Molloy's, and took the package in his hand and went down stairs. Then he placed the package in the hall near the Molloy's door, rang their bell gently, and tiptoed up stairs as fast as he could.

So soft did the bell sound that its faint tinkle was heard only by Florence. She opened the door quickly and noticed the package.

"Who is there, Floy?" her mother asked.

"No one, mamma," she replied, "but there is a bundle—this one."

"Why, it's for you, Floy," her father said. "It's a present, perhaps. Look at that card."

Sure enough, on a scrap of pasteboard pinned on the package were these words: "A Merry Christmas for Florence Molloy. From the man who said that he didn't believe in Christmas."

"I don't know what that means," Mr. Molloy said, "but we'll open the package, anyway."

And when he untied the string and removed the paper, the Molloy's saw a dark-red plaid dress.

Florence's eyes sparkled with delight.

"Is it for me, papa?" she exclaimed. "Can it be for me? It is the dress I wanted, too—my dress! And did Mr. Chadwick send it? But how did he know what I wanted?"

As Florence thought of that she became very red and hid her face on her mother's shoulder, as she told what Mr. Chadwick had said about Christmas.

Florence tried on the dress, and the entire Molloy family were delighted with it. Then Florence went up to thank Mr. Chadwick, though she didn't know what to say when he opened the door.

"The thing I wished most of all for Christmas," she said, at last, "was a plaid dress, and somebody just sent me one, and it must have been you, though I can't guess how you knew I wanted it."

"Do you think I sent it?" he asked.

"Why, yes, I'm sure you sent it, because it said on the package that it was 'from the man who didn't believe in Christmas.' But did you really mean what you said that time?"

"Yes," he replied, "I meant it then, but that was two weeks ago. I've believed in Christmas ever since one night last week, when five little girls sat on a stoop and talked about it."

"O!" and Florence colored as she remembered what she had said about him. She looked at Mr. Chadwick and he smiled, and then she smiled in spite of herself. For a moment she hesitated, and then, encouraged by the kindly look in his eyes, she kissed him and ran down stairs.—Sunday School Advocate.

A MISSIONARY EXAMINATION.

Successful missionary work in heathen countries is done only by missionaries who possess a rare combination of personal traits. In too many cases the examination of the candidate fails to reveal the presence or the absence of this combination. But the following story tells how an unusual examination, a sort of X ray, made just the sort of missionary needed:

It was winter; the examiner sent the candidate word to be at his house at 3 o'clock in the morning. When the young man arrived at the appointed time, he was shown into the study, where he waited for five hours. At length the old clergyman appeared and asked the other how early he had come.

"Three o'clock, sharp."

"All right! It's breakfast time now; come in and have some breakfast."

After breakfast they went back into the room.

"Well, sir," said the old man, "I was appointed to examine you as to your fitness for the mission field. That is very important. Can you spell, sir?"

The young man thought he could.

"Spell 'baker,' then."

"B-a, ba, k-e-r, ker—'baker.'"

"All right; that will do. Now, do you know anything about figures?"

"Yes, sir; something."

"How much is twice two?"

"Four."

"All right! That's splendid; you'll do first-rate. I'll see the board."

When the board met, the old man reported: "Well, brethren, I have examined the candidate, and I recommend him for appointment. He'll make a tiptop candidate—first-class."

"First," said the old examiner, "I examined the candidate on his self-denial. I told him to be at my house at 3 o'clock in the morning. He was there. That meant getting up at 2 o'clock in the morning, or sooner, in the dark and cold. He got up; never asked me why."

"Second, I examined him on promptness. I told him to be at my house at 3 o'clock, sharp. He was there, not one minute behind time."

"Third, I examined him on patience. I let him wait five hours for me, when he might just as well have been in bed, and he waited and showed no signs of impatience when I went in."

"Fourth, I examined him on his temper. He didn't get mad; met me perfectly pleasant; didn't ask me why I had kept him waiting from 3 o'clock on a cold winter morning till 8 o'clock."

"Fifth, I examined him on humility. I asked him to spell words a five-year-old child could spell, and to do sums in arithmetic a five-year-old child could do, and he didn't show any indignation; didn't ask me why I wanted to treat him like a child or a fool."

"Brethren, the candidate is self-denying, prompt, patient, obedient, good-tempered, humble. He is just the man for a missionary, and I recommend him for your acceptance."—Kind Words.

[While we do not believe that any man, or set of men, has the divine right to say who shall or who shall not preach the gospel of the Son of God, we publish the foregoing to point out the lesson that in all service to God the attributes mentioned are those necessary to acceptable service.—Editors.]

Genuine honesty, supported by firmness, is commendable; but hard-headed stubbornness, supported by prejudice, is execrable in any man.—Exchange.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., JULY 26, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

This is the season of the year in which many Christians attend the various watering places and summer resorts. Some go for health, rest, and recuperation, while others go simply for pleasure. At these places no Christian should forget whose name he wears. It is said that on one occasion when Napoleon was about to enter what he thought would be a hard-fought battle, he called into his presence a man who bore his name and said to him: "Remember whose name you wear." He would not have him dishonor his name by cowardly conduct. Surely the Christian should ever remember that he wears the name of the purest, noblest, and best being this world has ever known. The Christian cannot be too careful not to disgrace that name, and at these fashionable resorts he cannot be too careful. Here the rich, the fashionable, and the worldly-minded assemble together. Dancing, playing cards, and billiards are all very fashionable at the popular resorts. As "an idle man tempts the devil," only those with strength of convictions and character will resist the temptations to evil. It is so easy to drift with the multitude. The old, gray-headed elder gives his influence and encouragement to such amusements. What a pity that such people cannot find enjoyment and pleasure in that which is elevating and ennobling! If we are worldly-minded, our enjoyment comes from the world; if spiritually-minded, from the higher life. At such places too many are like the little girl who became so exceedingly religious that she desired to obey the gospel at once. After crying and praying with her aunt over the matter for a time, she ran out to play with her associates. In a short time she came running back to her aunt, and said: "I have forgotten all about my religion now." Many grown-up children act as did this little girl. At summer resorts they forget all about the religion they profess to have at home. When they leave home, they put it off to await their return. Such Christians are a disgrace to the cause of Christ. If the soldiers of this country in China did not represent this nation better than these people represent Christ, the whole nation would be heartily ashamed of them. Christ will never own such disciples, but will say to them at last: "I never knew you." When visiting such places, Christians should supply themselves with wholesome reading and should read the Bible daily.

Mr. Moody had only one grandson and namesake, who was born on November 7, 1897; was taken home on November 30, 1898, while Mr. Moody was absent in Colorado. He wrote a letter to the parents from Colorado Springs on the death of the child, which is quoted in the "Life of Moody," by his son. The letter is so full of sublime confidence and trust that it is calculated to do all good. It will be especially enjoyed by all who have passed through similar experiences. He said:

"I know Dwight is having a good time, and we should rejoice with him. What would the mansions be without children? He was the last to come into our circle, and he is the first to go up there—so safe, so free from all the sorrow that we are passing through. I do thank God for such a life. It was nearly all smiles and sunshine, and what a glorified body he will have, and with what joy he will await your coming! God does not give us such strong love for each other for a few days or years, but it is going to last forever, and you will have the dear little man with you for ages and ages, and love will keep increasing. The Master had need of him, or he would not have called him; and you should feel highly honored that you had anything in your home that he wanted. I cannot think of Dwight as belonging to earth. The more I think of him, the more I think he was only sent to us to draw us all closer to each other and up to the world of light and joy. I could not wish him back, if he could have all earth could give him. Then the thought that the Savior will take such good care of him! No going astray, no sickness, no death! Dear, dear little fellow! I love to think of him—so sweet, so safe, and so lovely. His life was not only blameless, but faultless; and if his life here was so sweet, what will it be up there? I believe the only thing he took away from earth was that sweet smile, and I have no doubt that when he saw the Savior he smiled as he did when he saw you, and the word that keeps coming to my mind is this: 'It is well with the child.' Only think of his translation. Thank God, Dwight is safe at home, and we will all of us see him soon."

Henry Drummond said: "The three ingredients of a perfect life are: work, which gives opportunity; God, who gives happiness; love, that gives warmth." Often we hear people complaining that they have so much to do that they cannot lead beautiful lives. Never was a greater mistake made. While God cursed the ground, he never cursed work. Work is our best friend. Mr. Drummond also reminds us that the only perfect life the world has ever known was spent not with a book, but with a hammer and saw. There is no other way in which we can gain the approval of our Heavenly Father as in the faithful performance of our daily tasks. Ordinary work is one of the best means of grace. Household life is not merely one of drudgery, of good cooking, tidy sweeping and dusting, and the many things which it includes; it is a place, primarily, for the transforming of women's souls into radiant beauty. The shop, the store, the mill, the office, the farm, are places not simply for the making of machines, selling goods, weaving cloths, growing crops; but they are for the building of character and fitting men's souls for everlasting life. In the very heart of what some people call life's drudgery is the best place to get a transfigured character.

The whole civilized world is considerably agitated over the situation in China, which continues very acute, and no one can prophesy the outcome. Repeated rumors are in circulation that all the foreign ministers in Peking have been murdered. Some of the cablegrams claim to be official. The very fact that the different countries can get nothing direct from their Ministers makes the situation dark and gloomy and causes many to fear the worst. If the Ministers and many other foreigners have been slaughtered, all Christians should show the superiority of the Christian religion over heathenism by living in conformity with the principles of God's eternal truth. No Christian should, in a spirit of revenge, glory in the wholesale destruction of the Chinese. Christians are admonished: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." The end is not yet.

Here is a bit of history that will be of interest to our readers: Dewey captured a brass cannon from the Spanish at Manila. The government proposed to give this cannon to the city or town which proved itself the most patriotic by giving the most per capita for the erection of a monument to the memory of the Maine martyrs. In less than a week the little town of Three Oaks, Mich., with a population of 885, raised $1,132.80, or $1.28 per capita, which was far more than any other town or city did. This made Three Oaks famous. America has responded very liberally to the relief of the India sufferers, but are the Americans as humane as they are patriotic? It is well that our benefactions are not circumscribed by national boundaries; but, after all, we would show far more wisdom by spending more money in loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ and in the advancement of his reign than in spending so much to prove our patriotism.

THE OAKLEY-TANT DEBATE, AGAIN.

Some one having written to the Gospel Advocate to ask why it was that the Advocate had not a word last week about the Oakley-Tant debate, while the Baptist and Reflector "crowded so lustily over it," Dr. Lipscomb explains at some length. Among other things, he says:

"These debates with Oakley, Whitlock, Eastes, and others have become so frequent of late that we could only announce them. Brother Tant, or any of these brethren mentioned, can easily maintain the truth with these men. Indeed, in the discussions, these men really make no effort to maintain Bible truth, but to trap their opponents and create a laugh."

In another place Dr. Lipscomb says: "None of the writers for the Gospel Advocate attended the discussion." This will account both for their silence and also their ignorance in regard to it. Had they attended it, they would have seen that Brother Oakley did make a strong and successful "effort to maintain Bible truth," while it was Elder Tant who was trying continually to "trap his opponent and create a laugh." Dr. Lipscomb says:

"The first man attending this debate that spoke to me of it is a Baptist. He said Oakley was not meeting Tant's arguments. He noted the scriptures quoted by each, and, after attending through the debate, still says Tant 'downed' Oakley."

We call for the name of this Baptist. We can give Dr. Lipscomb the names of scores and hundreds of people (Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians—and Campbellites, too, if they will express their honest feelings) who will tell him that Oakley "downed" Tant, to use Dr. Lipscomb's elegant phrase. Dr. Lipscomb concludes with this remarkable paragraph:

"As to the statements made in the Baptist and Reflector, I am sorry to say I long since learned that its statements concerning the disciples or their teachings could not be relied upon. I do not believe there is a political editor in the State that would so grossly misrepresent the positions of its opponents and refuse a correction as the editor of the Baptist and Reflector does. In this notice he says Tant took the position that God is a material being, and that Tant claimed to be perfect. I have not a doubt they are both the opposite of the truth. I am sorry to have to say these things, but this is the effect of party spirit on the editor."

On this we have to say:

1. We are not accustomed to having it said about us that our statements concerning anything "cannot be relied upon." Dr. Lipscomb may think that our "statements concerning the disciples or their teachings" are not true; that is a matter of opinion; but that any statement of fact we make in regard to them cannot be relied upon we indignantly deny.

2. We call upon Dr. Lipscomb to say when we have ever misrepresented the disciples (notice that Dr. Lipscomb spells it with a little "d"), and then refused a correction. On the contrary, we have had numerous controversies with Elder F. D. Srygley and others, and in each case we have not only tried to fairly represent and then refute their position, but we have always given the substance of their arguments in the Baptist and Reflector. We did not, however, feel called upon to publish their articles in full in the Baptist and Reflector, on account of their length and because they have a paper of their own whose columns are supposed to be used for the purpose of defending their principles.

3. We stated that in the debate Mr. Tant took the position that God has a "body, parts, and passions," and that he claimed to be perfect. Dr. Lipscomb says: "I have not a doubt they are both the opposite of the truth." If Dr. Lipscomb means to apply this remark to Mr. Tant's claims, he is correct; but if he means to apply it to our statement that Mr. Tant made such claims, we have too much respect both for the age and the character of Dr. Lipscomb, as well as too much self-respect, to attempt to reply to such a remark as it would seem to deserve.

We may only say that we can bring one thousand witnesses, if necessary, including hundreds of Dr. Lipscomb's own brethren, to prove that Mr. Tant did make the remarks attributed to him. We were so surprised at the first one that we had his moderator, Elder Logan, to ask him if that was what he said, and he said it was.

4. And now, having so misrepresented us, we are sure that Dr. Lipscomb will not allow "party spirit" to so blind him to fairness as to refuse us a correction by publishing at least the substance of this editorial in the Gospel Advocate. We wait to see.—Baptist and Reflector.

I sympathize with Editor Folk in his feelings of indignation. I never read an article from him on what he calls "Campbellism" that I did not feel indignant that a man claiming to be a Christian should make such misrepresentations. While I have read but little of his writing lately, I feel safe in saying that he cannot find a column he has ever written representing what "Campbellites," as he calls them, believe that any disciple would own to be a fair representation of his faith. Folk would say they were not honest, as he intimates all attending the debate would lie about their convictions of it; but the public has long since concluded it safe to watch men so ready to accuse others of falsehood.

Editor Folk wrote a series of articles some years ago, every one of which misrepresented the teachings of the disciples. I wrote him a note asking the privilege of correcting them. He replied if I would write a short note, he would publish it, when he knew they could not be corrected in a short note. The "substance" he gives of his opponent's writing is to take a sentence or two out of their connection and likely pervert this and reply. Suppose Tant had insisted the audience should hear only the substance of Oakley's speeches as Tant saw fit to report it, what would have been thought of it? In what does Folk's course differ when he engages in discussion in his paper and refuses to let his readers see anything, save what he chooses to give as the substance of his opponent's argument? He thinks we could defend ourselves in our own paper. That would give the readers of each paper only its own party side. Justice demands the jury that hears the charges shall hear the defense. If it is right for his readers to know anything of the faith of the disciples, it is right for them to know the truth. They never get this from one-sided statements of bitter opponents. A man that makes charges concerning others before his readers and refuses to let them hear the other side is not a fair and just man, is not willing for them to know the truth. The refusal to let them hear both sides is not only unfair, but it does not indicate true courage. Much of the writing against the disciples is bitter denunciation, anathema, cursing. Using profane words is not the only or worst cursing; to indulge in bitter denunciation, misrepresentation, and injurious report is to curse them. To abuse and denounce in his own paper and allow no response is on a par with the overseer who went down into the bottom field to curse his employer. When Folk gets down in his bottom field, his own paper, where none can reply, he can breathe out curses, long and deep and loud, against these "Campbellites;" and when he gets out of breath, Dr. Lofton stands ready, his breath fierce with bitter wrath, to repeat his old, oft-told anathema of "Campbellism in its last analysis." "Sterile superficiality," "a system of ceremonialism," "discursive belief," "dead repentance," "without spiritual regeneration," "literalism and externalism," "superficial aspects of the gospel," "a hybrid of old Pelagianism and Romanism," "monstrosity of Pelagianism and Romanism combined," "a double-headed prodigy," "blind old Pharisaism," "Judaizing corrupters," "superficial legalism," "Galatianism," "and in its last analysis without Christ and the cross," are but specimens of the gall he belches forth on "Campbellism and Campbellites." The Doctor has been practicing this piece a number of years. I published it for him years ago, and pointed out for him the difference between the essence of a thing and what is essential to its enjoyment. He has added variations, multiplied with increasing bitterness his anathemas. If he will tell me when he has emptied all the vials of his wrath and distilled all of his venom into it, I will again publish and puncture it to show him that the heart that brews venom is poisoned rather than the victim at which it is aimed. However the Doctor's religion may be, he gives full proof that his hatred and cursing of "Campbellites" and "Campbellism" are heartfelt, deep-seated, and loud-mouthed—this last when under cover of Folk's bottom field.

Folk asks for examples of his misrepresentations—a disagreeable, but not difficult, task. He furnishes ample proof at hand. Read his article above. I said the Baptist man said Tant "downed" Oakley (in quotation marks). He says the "downed" is my "elegant phrase." Again, he said: "We knew that Mormonism came from Campbellism, and that their plan of salvation is exactly the same, except that Mormons added to baptism the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit; but we confess that we did not know before that Campbellites worship the same materialistic God the Mormons do." I said the charge that Tant held God to be material is "opposite the truth." Folk says I said his charge that Tant denied God is without "body, passions, or parts" is opposite the truth. I said no such thing. I believe God has "body, parts and passions" as firmly as I believe the Bible; but if you say I believe God is material, you slander me. "There is a natural [or material] body, and there is a spiritual body." God is a spirit. The Bible says God has hands, feet, eyes, ears, and hinder parts: Jesus is "the express image of his person." He has a spiritual, or glorified, body. Jesus appeared in his spiritual body on the mount of transfiguration, and again to Paul on his way to Damascus. "Who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory," or glorified body. (Phil. 3: 21, R. V.) "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." God loves, hates, is angry, is glad, rejoices, grieves, sorrows, pities. All these are passions. The body, parts, and passions mark personality. To divest him of these, it seems to me, is to deny God is a person. It would make him only an impersonal, pervading influence. Will Editor Folk tell a single quality or element of personality he possesses if he has neither body, parts, nor passions? It is not a material body, but a spiritual body, and the passions are of the spirit, not of the flesh. Folk knows the rule that deductions from a man's premises cannot be attributed to him further than he avows them. For him to make deductions from Tant's positions and say he holds them is to misrepresent him. I have asked a number of persons who heard the discussion if Tant claimed to be perfect. Every one says he did not. The thing was so unreasonable and Folk is so prone to misrepresent "Campbellites" I felt safe in denying it. All I have heard speak of it say he did not claim only those baptized by him or his brethren would be saved. On the other hand, he stated distinctly the conditions on which persons could be baptized by Baptists, Methodists, or Presbyterians and be saved. I doubt, too, Tant's saying his progressive brethren were at liberty to change the order of God. It is unlike him and his position to say this. He likely said they claimed it as a matter of liberty. To say they claim it and for him to say they have the right are very different things.

Then as to his comparison with Mormons. The fundamental point of difference between the Baptists and disciples is on the direct work and witness of the Spirit. This direct work of the Spirit is the foundation of Mormonism. A Mormon priest a few months ago smote his hand upon his bosom in good orthodox Baptist style and said: "I have the witness here that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God." The Mormons carry the doctrine to its logical result and claim tangible revelators. Out of this unscriptural idea the errors of Mormons and Baptists alike grow. Why did not Folk tell his readers that the Mormons had only revived the doctrine of laying on of hands from the Baptist "Confession of Faith," from which Baptists by apostasy had fallen? The Philadelphia "Confession of Faith," which the Western Recorder says every Baptist in Kentucky believes, says (chapter 31): "We believe that laying on of hands, with prayer, upon baptized believers, as such, is an ordinance of Christ, and ought to be submitted unto by all such persons that are permitted to partake of the Lord's Supper, and that the end of this ordinance is not for the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, but for a further reception of the Holy Spirit of promise or for the addition of the graces of the Spirit and the influences thereof to confirm, strengthen, and comfort them in Christ Jesus." According to this "Confession of Faith," no Baptist has the right to the Lord's Supper until hands are laid on him to impart the Holy Spirit. From whom did the Mormons get it? Folk knows the Mormon plan of salvation embraces the belief in Joseph Smith as a prophet of God, of direct influences of the Spirit and continuous revelations from God, belief in polygamy, the claim of miraculous powers and gifts, the preacher must have a direct call from God, the belief in the "Book of Mormon" as a revelation from God, and others. Does Folk say the disciples agree with Mormons in these and other of their teachings that might be mentioned? Mormons agree with Baptists five times where they agree with disciples once, and in fundamental principles, too. How can he expect us to have confidence in any statement he makes when so reckless of truth? I try to excuse him on the ground of thoughtlessness and perhaps lack of familiarity with the facts, but he must not expect us to keep silent under such calumnies as these. If it only affected us, I would say nothing; but it is grievous wrong to his readers to impose on them such statements as truth.

The only point of agreement between disciples and Mormons known to me, or that Folk claims, other than the general belief in God, Christ, and the Bible (and in this faith they agree more nearly with Baptists than disciples), is that they believe baptism is the act of faith in which God forgives sin. How does Folk know they did not get this from Baptists instead of disciples? He cannot find a Baptist translator or commentator that does not say the Bible teaches it. Even Dr. Lofton admits it. He and others try to explain it as symbolic, but the Bible nowhere says it is. I have asked for a single translator or commentator of the Bible of any nation or denomination who did not translate the Scriptures as so teaching, and I have never known an effort made to produce one. The whole religious world held the same position without a dissenting voice for fifteen hundred years after Christ. The Baptists organized a denomination and adopted a creed in an age when Bible truth was little known, and now party spirit prompts partisans to hold to it, despite the united testimony of their learned men and all scholars that the Bible teaches that baptism is the act of faith in which God forgives sin.

I have not presented these agreements between Mormons and Baptists as an argument against Baptist teaching or as a reproach to Baptists. It is neither in itself. It is no evidence of error or a reproach to hold a truth in common with Mormons or any one else. I am anxious to agree with Mormons, Romanists, infidels, or even with men as bitter and ready to misrepresent as Folk and Lofton, in every truth they hold or tell. I have mentioned these agreements of Baptists with Mormons only to show Mr. Folk how reckless and unfair he is and how curses must come home to roost.

Why did Mr. Folk make the comparison with Mormons? He did not think there was any argument in it. Why did he do it? He thought he would insult and revile the disciples with odious comparisons and scurrilous epithets that excite prejudice. Is that fair? Persons claiming to be Christians should hold themselves above such things. I have none but the kindest feelings toward Baptists. My forefathers preached among the Baptists in old Virginia when they were sometimes imprisoned for so preaching. I do not doubt they were true to the best light they had. I try to be worthy of the blood that courses in my veins and to be true to the teachings of Him who redeemed me. I memorized much of the New Testament at a Baptist Sunday school at Lower Gold Mine Baptist Church, in Louisa County, Va. The late Dr. Herbert Harris was one of my schoolmates. His father and my grandfather were deacons in the church. I cannot otherwise than cherish the strongest love for Baptists. It grieves me the more when I see the minds of Baptists poisoned with bitterness and perverted by the misrepresentations of mere partisans. We would be glad to see Folk fair and just in his representations, and, when he wishes his readers to know anything about the disciples, let them see both sides and know the truth. This would be fair and manly. "We wait to see." D. L.

They soon grow old who grope for gold
In marts where all is bought and sold;
Who live for self, and on some shelf
In darkened vaults hoard up their pelf,
Cankered and crusted o'er with mold;
From them their youth itself is old.

They ne'er grow old who gather gold
Where spring awakes and flowers unfold;
Where the suns arise in joyous skies
And fill the soul within their eyes;
For them the immortal bards have sung,
For them old age itself is young.

—Christopher Pearse Cranch.

Field Gleanings.

On account of the great floods in East Mississippi, my meeting at Una was postponed until fall. I hope, at that time, to meet many brethren in Mississippi. Instead of the meeting at Una, Miss., I accepted a call to the Fleming Schoolhouse, Dallas County, Tex., for a meeting which began on the fourth Lord's day in June and continued over the first Lord's day in July. On account of the presence of three thrashing machines in the settlement during the entire meeting, the attendance was not as good as we would like for it to have been; yet at times the house was crowded, and attention fine. There were three additions to the church there, and, I think, much good done otherwise. The brethren were well pleased with the meeting, and asked me to come again.

I am now at Rienzi, Hill County, Tex., in a meeting, with good interest, and the brethren say the best attendance that has yet been here. We hope and labor for a successful meeting. Brother Farmer, of Dawson, Tex., preaches here once each month, and is well received by the brethren. We expect him with us in a few days. There are doubtless more loyal congregations in Hill County than in any county in Texas. Brother Hines named twenty-three and said he was sure there were others; but there are yet many destitute places in Hill County, and much work to be done. From here I go to Coleman County, Tex., to join Brother J. C. White in a meeting at Rockwood.

Brother J. A. Harding, of Nashville, Tenn., is in a meeting at Cedar Hill, Dallas County, Tex. The brethren have made great preparations for the meeting, and I am sure success will crown the effort. When brethren work for success, success is sure. Brother Harding will also hold a meeting at Dawson, Tex.

Brother Charlie Nichol and Mr. J. H. Fisher are in a debate at Itasca, Hill County, Tex. Brother Nichol is said to be one of the best debaters in Texas, and I am sure that Mr. Fisher can say he has had a debate.

I had the pleasure of meeting, at Dallas, Tex., Brother E. G. Sewell, of the Gospel Advocate, and spent some time with him. I heard him preach one sermon, which was splendid. Brother Sewell is on the shady side of life, but seems hale and hearty. We wish him many more days to proclaim the gospel of Christ. I also met Brother Will. Sewell, Brother Jesse P. Sewell, and Brother Gano.

Brother J. S. Dunn is now in a tent meeting at Dallas, Tex.

My brother, P. D. Lawson, will assist in two meetings in Tarrant County, Tex.

Brother A. D. Rogers is in a meeting at Joshua, Tex. This makes his fourth meeting with the church of Christ at Joshua. Brother Rogers will hold meetings at Rosenthal and White Rock, Tex., but I have lost the date. May God bless all. J. H. LAWSON.
Denton, Tex.

A Fine Distinction.

"There are two sorts of preachers—those who have to say something and those who have something to say." And that is pretty neatly said, Dr. Mullins. It recalls, too, Dr. Kerr Tupper's pithy remark: "There are two sorts of books—books which are made out of other books, and books out of which other books are made." Worth remembering, both of these bright and aphoristic remarks.—Religious Herald.

ALUM BAKING POWDERS.

Congress Acting to Suppress Their Sale.

The report of the Senate Committee on Manufactures upon the subject of food adulterations and food frauds has created a sensation in Congress and awakened great interest throughout the country.

If there could be published a list of the names of all articles of food found by the committee to be adulterated or made from poisonous ingredients, it would be of inestimable value to the public.

The recommendations of the committee that the sale of alum baking powders be prohibited by law will make of special interest the following list of names of baking powders containing alum sold in this vicinity:

Baking Powders Containing Alum:
GOOD LUCK.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Southern Mfg. Co., Richmond.
K. C.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Jaques Mfg. Co., Chicago.
VISION.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by E. Metzner, St. Louis.
CALUMET.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Calumet Baking Powder Co., Chicago.
BON BON.....	Contains Alum.
HOTEL.....
Manf. by Grant Chemical Co., Chicago.
KENTON.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Potter-Parlin Co., Cincinnati.
BAIN'S.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Meyer-Bain Mfg. Co., St. Louis.
DELICATESSE.....	Contains Alum.
Manf. by Delicatesse Baking Powder Co., N. Y.
EVANS'.....	Contains Alum.
SPOT CASH.....	Contains Alum.

It is unfortunate that many manufacturers of alum baking powders, even some in the above list, falsely state that their powders do not contain alum. It is only right that consumers should have correct information as to the character of every article of food offered to them.

True Faith.

It is a sad fact that every living truth has a natural tendency in the minds of men to crystallize into the form of a dead dogma. Rationally apprehended in the first instance, it kindles enthusiasm and creates character. Afterwards it is likely to become more or less of a mere party watchword, to be repeated without any intelligent sense of its meaning or any practical discernment of its rightful functions as a shaping force upon conduct.

When, for example, St. Paul appropriated the great utterance of the prophet Habakkuk—"The just shall live by his faith"—and assigned it a central position in his system of thought, he did not mean to give expression to a barren speculative opinion, but to assert a vital moral fact. Nowadays, however, this same utterance is often used as a sort of magical formula, which is supposed to contain the essence of orthodoxy, but which has, nevertheless, largely lost its grip on the intellect and the conscience of men.

That we are saved by faith is an affirmation that cannot be made too often nor too earnestly, but it should be understood at the same time that faith is the normal, and not the arbitrary, condition of our salvation. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." There is no other way of approach into the divine presence, and there can be no other. Doubt naturally and necessarily throws up insuperable barriers between men and the Father of their spirits. Would any one be so foolish as to address himself to the King of the universe, if he supposed that there were no such King? The frank acceptance of the great utterance above quoted is the very first step in the religious life, but not the last; it is faith in its lowest form, the germ out of which a justifying confidence in the historical Christ is later to be developed.

"According to your faith be it unto you," is a law that operates with unbroken force all the way from the initial stages up to the maturest reaches of Christian experience. The moment in which faith fails is also the very moment in which the paralysis of the devout affections begins; and this is equally true, whether we regard faith as simply the act of the unaided mind or look upon it as what it truly is—the fruit of the Holy Spirit's operation. We cannot live beyond our highest beliefs. Faith pioneers the way for us into the altitudes of being, and shows us the new worlds that we are to conquer. To lag behind it is possible, but not to go ahead of it.

If this view were more generally adopted, it would prevent the spread of the silly delusion that there is any possible opposition between faith and good works. Those Christians who sing,

O to be nothing, nothing at all,
Only to lie at his feet!

have not yet learned the alphabet of biblical teaching. The first impulse of the man who really believes in God through Jesus Christ is to be something, to be everything that he can be, and to do everything that he can do. That moral slothfulness which makes one willing to lie down in a state of absolute passivity, receiving everything and giving nothing in return, comports better with skepticism than with trust.

"I believed, therefore have I spoken," said the old-time saint. He might also have added: "I believed, therefore have I acted." Faith is the breath of heroism. In that long bead roll of worthies which is recorded in Heb. 11 there is not a man but has done something fit to illuminate the pages of history. It makes the blood fairly dance in our veins to read how they "through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."

Equally true is it that the men of might in every age are the believers. It is only they that can walk at the head of the column and set the pace in the path of human progress. They are the providential guides and leaders of the church and of the race; and whenever any movement is to be made, or any fierce fighting to be done, they are always at the front waving the colors and inspiring the host. Martin Luther and John Wesley had a hold on God that nothing could shake. Therefore they were not afraid to risk everything in the interests of righteousness. One man of this kind can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight.

"All things are possible to him that believeth," and they are not possible to anybody else. Let us have done with the notion that faith is weak, indolent, unmanly, spending its days in soft ecstasies and dreamy, spiritual delights. No; it is strong, bold, active, with a heart to bear all burdens, to confront all dangers, and to discharge all duties. It knows no fear, shirks no responsibility, and seeks no rest. Borrowing the language of those pure spirits that forever burn and shine in the presence chamber of God, it cries aloud: "I delight to do thy will, O God." If any of us are weary and worn and ready to faint in the path of our pilgrimage, let us pray: "Lord, increase our faith."—Christian Advocate.

$25,000 TO BE GIVEN AWAY.

The Money is Now in Bank—Do You Want Part of It?

As you know, the United States census is now being taken, but the exact figures will not be known until the Census Office at Washington publishes them. The last official census was taken in 1890 and then we had 62,622,250 population, which was an increase of 12,466,467 over the census of 1880. It is estimated that the present census will give us about seventy million population. The Press Publishing Association, of Detroit, Mich., is offering $25,000 in prizes to the nearest guessers; $15,000 will be given to the nearest guess, $5,000 to the next nearest, $1,000 to the next, $500 to the next, and so on. There are, all told, one thousand prizes and $25,000 in cash to be given away. The money to pay these prizes has been put up in the Central Savings Bank of Detroit, and there can be no doubt but that the prizes will be awarded in the fairest manner possible. The Sunny South has made arrangements with the Press Publishing Company by which each person who sends fifty cents for a six months' subscription to the Sunny South can have one guess in this great contest. Two guesses will be allowed for one dollar for a year's subscription. A certificate of your guess will be mailed you as soon as your remittance is received, and you will have to hold this until the official announcement of the census has been made in Washington, D. C.

Remember, this contest closes one month before the official announcement is made, and you must send in your guess at once, or it may be too late. Address SUNNY SOUTH PUBLISHING COMPANY, Box 467, Atlanta, Ga.

To Florida in a Hurry.

That is the way you go on the famous "Dixie Flyer" train, which carries elegant vestibuled sleeping cars through from Nashville to Jacksonville, Fla., by Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Macon, and Tifton, leaving Nashville 7:30 A.M. daily, taking up direct connections in Union Depot, Nashville, with night trains from Western Kentucky and West Tennessee. In addition, the "Quickstep" sleeper leaves St. Louis daily at 7:20 A.M., and runs to Jacksonville, Fla., over same route without change. By this route you pass through the largest cities, grandest mountain scenery, and more points of historical interest than by any other line leading to Florida and the Southeast. Berths secured through in advance upon application. Call on or write to W. L. Danley, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

FITS permanently cured. No fits or nervousness after first day's use of Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. Send for FREE $2 trial bottle and treatise. Dr. R. H. Kline (Ltd.), 931 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

If you need anything in the way of first-class printing, we would be glad to supply you.

For the Sufferers in India.

Brother Lipscomb: I am glad to acknowledge the receipt of $10 sent through the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company for the famine sufferers in India. I will send it to its destination through the New York bank, as I have sent the other.

The latest word from India is that the rains have commenced to fall, though late in the season. That means that in three months we may expect them to have harvests. However, now is the worst time of all. Those who have pulled through these past months of starvation are weak and very poorly prepared to endure the rainy season, with its cholera and fevers. For another six weeks I think special effort should be made to do whatever we are going to do for the sufferers in this great calamity. I pray that we may never again have such an opportunity to feed the starving. That is a wonderful promise in Isa. 58: 10, and the later revelation in the New Testament leaves us in this highly favored land without doubt as to our duty and privilege.

Hiram, O. P. L. WHARTON.

What Shall We Do for the Heathen?

The heathen world lies in wickedness. No one will question that, I suppose. This is one point upon which we are all agreed. Can anything be done for them, or ought we to do anything for them if we could? Here people begin to split, and two parties are formed. These two parties differ in theory, but in practice reach the same result, which is to let the heathen alone.

The one party says he will be saved without Christ. They begin to reason thus, and it is plausible to one already inclined that way. If the heathen do not know of Christ nor ever have an opportunity of accepting him, they cannot justly be condemned for not being Christians when they never had an opportunity. "Where there is no law, neither is there transgression." Therefore, do you see the conclusion? How easy it is to reach it! How nicely it lets us out of the whole affair! We can go on at home, living in selfishness and consuming our possessions upon our lusts. Therefore, it is better not to take the gospel to them. It is better not to take the gospel to them than to take it and have them reject it, which would only increase their responsibility. And isn't this just splendid for us? We can lay out ourselves now for that other hundred acres of land over there. Our neighbor would be glad for us to give him a little lift, so he could pay out, and not have to sell; but, then, we want the farm. We will take new shares in stocks and go on increasing our business, for the heathen, all that are worth saving, are going to be saved, anyhow.

This is a strange delusion. Were it not that I frequently meet people with such opinions, I would be slow to believe there were any who had them. Of course they, to a degree, are honest in it; but honestly mistaken. If all the heathen world worthy of salvation can be saved without Christ, why could not we? If they are better off without the gospel, would not we have been? If the gospel would be a disadvantage to them, why is not the same true of ourselves and all other nations of the past? Therefore, Christ died for naught. Yea, he cursed the world, instead of blessing it; for if the world had never known of a crucified Savior, they could not have been condemned for rejecting him. There is not a single point against taking the gospel to the heathen but what can be argued against its ever having been given to us, or the Christ ever having come to the world at all. So it is apparent that the opinion that holds the heathen may be saved without Christ and are better off without the gospel is erroneous. Theoretically, Paul seems to hold that one who would live up to his conscience and never for once step aside from the path of rectitude would not be condemned; but, practically, when he comes to consider the actual condition of the heathen world he finds that none have done this, for "there is none righteous, no, not one." They were all under condemnation. That Paul did not have the erroneous view that many now have is apparent from his own life which was spent for the heathen.

The other party says the heathen cannot be saved even if they had the gospel, that they are incapable of receiving it; and so they feel excused. The one party says they will be saved without Christ; the other says they cannot be saved even if they had him. So both practically land at the same place of making no sacrifice and of putting forth no effort in behalf of those in darkness.

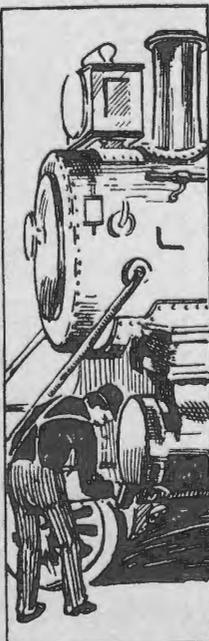

The second conclusion is as far from being correct as the first. My experience in a heathen land is that there are some who in all sincerity give themselves to Christ and try as hard as we to live a Christian life. All things considered, the outlook here is as discouraging as it is there. From all accounts, the nations are no worse now than when Jesus gave the commission. At that time he did not consider any nation so bad as to be an exception, but said: "Go, . . . teach all nations." Nor did he intimate that there would ever be a time that an entire nation would become so corrupt that his disciples must withdraw "Oiling Up."

Just a little oil on the engine at the right time may mean the difference between life and death to the passengers and crew. What oil is to the friction of the delicate parts of the engine, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is to the delicate organs of the body. It eases their labor, prevents the loss of power and waste of energy caused by friction. Many a man who was all run down, whose limbs ached when he walked, whose back ached when he laid down, who breathed with difficulty, and coughed constantly, has been perfectly cured by the use of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It purifies the blood, strengthens the stomach and heals weak lungs.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," nor any medicine called "just as good" by the dealer.

Mr. Chas. Hunwick, of Lenox, Macomb Co., Mich., writes: "I have never felt better in my life than I do now. I have taken Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery right along. I can now walk quite well with a cane, and hope to throw even that away before long, and as I have had to use crutches for nearly two years, I think I am doing fine. I do not cough now and I can sleep like a school boy. You must know that I have been treated in two hospitals and by three doctors besides, and received no benefit; so I think your medicine the only medicine for me." Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser in paper cover, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

and make no effort to gather out to the Lord those that were faithful.

That many in heathen nations will reject the gospel there is no question; but they do that here, and always have done it in all the nations. Jesus, I suppose, knew this would be the case; yet in the face of it he said: Go, and give them all a trial and gather out such as will accept. There is no escape. The work is a personal work. Every Christian must engage in it or one day be tried in the balances and found wanting. My brother, what are you doing for the salvation of others? Do you consider Christian living the one important thing in life, or is it a side issue, a secondary matter? Let us think on these things and then act. May the Lord help you and bless you abundantly in doing his will.

J. M. M'CALEB.

It may seem very strange to you that another man should differ from you on an important question of morals or religion, but it is really no stranger in his sight than that you should differ from him.—Christian Advocate.

Some men succeed in hoodwinking and deceiving themselves, and some even seem to suppose that they can deceive Almighty God.—Christian Advocate.

To accept a kindness, and then grow resentful because of the obligations which it imposes on you, is to show yourself a very little soul.—Exchange.

The fact that your neighbor is a Pharisee is no good reason why you should be a libertine.—Exchange.

FOULARD SILKS

We Will Send You Samples

of this dressy and fashionable fabric which is now so popular

24-INCH FOULARDS

in Blue and White, Black and White, Brown and Green

at 59c per Yard.

ELEGANT SATIN-FINISH FOULARDS,

75c for the $1 quality.

FOULARDS

in Light Blue and Greens, and all the Pastel Shades

75c to $1 per Yard.

WASH SILKS, 29c to 45c

FANCY SILKS FOR WAISTS, 50c to $1.

ADDRESS

TIMOTHY DRY GOODS CO.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

BELMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

We Manufacture ..Pianos..

OVER 6,000 PER YEAR. THREE DIFFERENT NAMES. THREE DIFFERENT GRADES. GOOD, BETTER, BEST!

"Richmond," "Jesse French" AND "Starr."

Send for Catalogues and for Easy Payment Plan.

Jesse French Piano & Organ Co., 240-242 Summer street, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.

Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.

SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.) Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

CHEAP Farm Lands!

Located on the ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. in

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

and also located on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. in the famous

YAZOO VALLEY

of Mississippi—specially adapted to the raising of

CORN AND HOGS

SOIL RICHEST in the WORLD

Write for Pamphlets and Maps

E. P. SKENE Land Commissioner

Illinois Central Railroad Comp'y, Park Row Room 197 Chicago, Illinois

Send us a new subscriber.

General News.

United States Senator John Henry Gear, of Burlington, Ia., died of heart failure in Washington.

Measles, typhoid fever, and small-pox are prevailing among the thousands of gold seekers at Cape Nome.

The amount sent by the New York Committee for the relief of famine sufferers in India has reached $102,530.

The battle ship Oregon has arrived at Kure, Japan, where the vessel will be repaired and proceed to Taku as soon as possible.

The Blanket Indians, at Red Lake, Minn., seriously object to any attempts at civilizing them. The government is erecting large buildings for schools, and in consequence the Indians are holding war dances. An outbreak is feared.

Charles V. Cusachs, of New Orleans, La., instructor in the French and Spanish departments of Harvard University, who has just been appointed to the chair of Spanish at the United States Naval Academy, is only twenty-one years old.

News via the Empress of India says that from all parts of China the refugees are working to the treaty points and every ship is bearing them to Japan. Nagasaki, the port at which they first arrive, is already uncomfortably crowded, and Kobé is beginning to fill up.

Dr. Kochibe, a Japanese geologist, has been investigating the phosphate fields in Tennessee. He expresses surprise at the high grade—sixty or seventy per cent—necessary to profitable working here. In Japan a stone that yields ten per cent is considered valuable.

The temperature in New York during the hot spell last week reached one hundred degrees. The fatality was very great. On July 18, 1900, seventy persons died and as many more were stricken down. More than half the deaths were of babies and small children.

A dispatch received by Chinese Minister Wu, at Washington, says that Li Hung Chang, the Viceroy at Canton, has been transferred to Chi Li, the province in which most of the disorder exists. He is expected to quell the insurrection and to make peace with the powers.

The Memphis (Tenn.) School Board in recent session reaffirmed the action of the former board in the uniform textbook matter. This is a decision against the State law and means that if it is to be applied to the Memphis public schools the State will have to enforce it through a favorable decision by the Supreme Court.

Heavy rains for several days in the vicinity of Coleman, Tex., overflowed the streams and caused much loss of property. A cloud-burst occurred on the 15th inst. Eleven people are known to have perished in the rush of waters, and it is believed that several campers in the valley below Coleman were caught in the flood and swept away.

Millet has in some parts of Russia taken the place of wheat as an article of staple food. Millet can be grown on soil unfavorable to other grains, but it cannot resist the effect of cold weather. From 1892 to 1896 the average annual production of millet seed in Russia was six million bushels, but in 1896 it ran up to nine million five hundred thousand bushels.

The annual crop of mushrooms in France is valued at two million dollars, and it is said that there are sixty wholesale firms in Paris dealing exclusively in them. In the Department of the Seine, it appears, there are some three thousand caves in which mushrooms are grown; and about three hundred persons are employed in their culture, who rarely leave these caves.

Galveston has a stock of over two million bushels of the new wheat of Texas and contingent territory. Freight rates from that port to Liverpool are quoted at twenty-two cents per one hundred pounds, and although this wheat has been offered at seventy-three cents per bushel at ship's side, it could not be sold for export, as Liverpool and other foreign markets are relatively so much lower than prices in the United States.

Diplomatists aver that the Peiping massacre does not render it necessary for the powers to abandon the position that they are not at war with China. The powers will continue to claim that their action there is in behalf of the deposed government, and only against the rebels and usurpers. There are many precedents for such a course, particularly the action of the United States Government toward the Brazilian revolutionists.

The Argentine Government has sent fifty young men from different provinces to be educated in the agricultural schools of the United States, and they are quartered at Washington for the time being until it is decided as to what schools they will attend. That will be settled by Dr. Wilde, the new minister from Argentina, after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture. The purpose of the Argentine Government is to secure a corps of teachers for their own agricultural schools educated on the American plan.

In the ten months ending on June 30, 1900, Southern cotton mills took 1,363,144 bales of cotton, or 135,539 more bales than last year. These takings represent more than thirty-eight per cent of the total number of bales taken by American cotton mills. This fact is but one of the indications of the steady progress made by the Southern textile industry, evidenced also by the awarding of a contract for a seventy-five-thousand-dollar cotton mill at Fayetteville, Tenn.; the addition of six thousand spindles, representing an investment of about one hundred thousand dollars, to the plant of the Kesler Manufacturing Company, of Salisbury, N. C.; and the formulation of plans for a one-hundred-thousand-dollar cotton mill at Hillsboro, Tex.

H. V. Jones, commercial editor of the Minneapolis Journal, and a recognized authority in the Northwest, after a visit to the wheat fields, makes the following summary of the yield in Minnesota, South Dakota, and North Dakota: Minnesota—minimum estimate, 1900, 75,000,000 bushels; possible yield, 1900, 80,000,000 bushels; yield, 1899, 95,000,000 bushels. North Dakota—minimum estimate, 1900, 30,000,000 bushels; possible yield, 1900, 35,000,000 bushels; yield, 1899, 70,000,000 bushels. South Dakota—minimum estimate, 1900, 30,000,000 bushels; possible yield, 1900, 35,000,000 bushels; yield, 1899, 38,000,000 bushels. Mr. Jones says that with favorable weather up to harvest the total yield of the three States will run close to 150,000,000 bushels.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,
531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

American National Bank,

OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

Peoples & Morgan's School,

FAYETTEVILLE, TENN.

A training school for boys. Nondenominational. Thorough preparation for college or business. Healthful location. Fine Library. Good Dormitories. Board in family, $10 per month; in dormitories, $6. Tuition, $5. Next term begins August 22. Write for circular to the principals,

R. H. PEOPLES,
R. K. MORGAN.

As a result of consideration of data supplied by its own invitation and that of the exploring parties in the field, the Isthmian Canal Commission has practically reached the conclusion that there are but two available canal routes across the Isthmus of Panama. These are the Nicaragua route and the Panama route. Though final information has not been received relative to the advantages of the Darien route, which was recently described as the best low-level route yet discovered, it is the belief of Rear Admiral Walker and members of the commission that it is not practicable. Owing to the great displacement merchant ships are now attaining, it is probable the commission will recommend a canal of greater width and depth than hitherto regarded as necessary. There will consequently be an increase in cost.

From the figures upon the last quarterly report of the Treasury, Tennessee is contributing liberally to charities and to educational interests. Her pension account to the old Confederate soldiers for the year will amount to $100,000, with $10,000 for the maintenance of the Old Soldiers' Home. To the hospitals for the insane in Middle, East, and West Tennessee the aggregate will be approximately $250,000; to the Blind School, $38,000; to the School for the Deaf and Dumb, $45,000; and to the Industrial School, $60,000. The Peabody Normal College also draws $20,000. The total is something more than a half million dollars. The allowance for a student at the Blind School is $175 per annum; for a student at the School for the Deaf and Dumb, $165; for an Industrial School student, $100; for an insane patient, $140; and for an inmate of the Old Soldiers' Home, $90.

The Cuban teachers in Cambridge have made a delightful impression upon their instructors and the people who are entertaining them. All but nine of the one hundred and twenty-nine cities, towns, and villages of Cuba are represented in this party of nearly fifteen hundred teachers, and it is announced that about three hundred from Puerto Rico will soon be added to the number. Two-thirds of the visitors are young women, who are lodged in private boarding houses; the men live in the college dormitories.

All of the forty instructors have some acquaintance with the Spanish language; and while there will be systematic training in English, which the visitors desire to learn, there will be many courses of lectures in Spanish, among the subjects thus to be treated being American history, the history of the Spanish colonies, physical geography, and education.

The allied forces, after three days' fighting, captured the walled city of Tien-tsin, with many guns. The total losses of the allies in the engagements of Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, July 12, 13, and 14, 1900, were about eight hundred killed and wounded. The casualties were greatest among the Russians and Japanese. After a day of hard fighting and having lain for hours in shallow, hastily dug trenches, full of water, and suffering from hunger and thirst, two battalions of the Ninth United States Infantry that participated in the attack on Tien-tsin retired under cover of darkness, British sailors assisting them to withdraw by firing volleys to cover their retirement. The Americans brought out all their wounded under a terrific fire. An official list of the officers wounded is as follows: Ninth Infantry—Major Regan, Captain Bookmiller, Captain Noys, Lieutenant Lawton, and Lieutenant Lang. Marine Corps—Captain Davis, killed; Leonard, Butler, Lawton, and Lemley, wounded. The total loss of the Americans was one hundred and forty.

DICKSON NORMAL COLLEGE.

BOTH SEXES.

Strong faculty. Thorough instruction. Commodious buildings. Most delightful and healthful location. Splendid advantages in the practical and Common School branches. Special advantages to young ladies and those desiring to teach. Rates lowest of any first-class school in the State. For handsome 48-page catalogue, address T. B. LOGGINS, Dickson, Tenn.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENN.

Opens its 45th session September 4, 1900. The location is beautiful, free from malaria, and beyond the yellow fever district. The buildings are large, and the campus is beautiful and shady. Fourteen American and European teachers. Unsurpassed advantages in Music, Art, Elocution, and Literary Branches. 75 boarding students last year. Write for our handsome 48-page catalogue and special rates for 1900-1901.

HUSTLING YOUNG MAN can make $60 per month and expenses. Permanent position. Experience unnecessary. Write quick for particulars. CLARK & CO., 4th and Locust Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Church News.

ALABAMA.

Guin, July 16.—The writer closed an eight-days' meeting at this place last night, with a splendid audience. The congregation at Guin has been at a standstill for quite a number of years on account of an old feud between some of the members. Several of the brethren had become indifferent on this account. At 3 o'clock on the third Lord's day in July there was a general acknowledgment of wrongdoing by sins of omission and commission and a general forgiving and asking forgiveness; in fact, it was a regular love feast of Christians who had resolved to renew their zeal for the Lord and keep his house in order. One soul was baptized into Christ Jesus, and went on his way rejoicing. The pillars of the church of Christ at this place are Brother J. H. Guin, Brother J. C. Tidwell, Brother J. G. Franks, Brother W. G. Adams, Brother Samuel Adkins, and Brother A. W. Anthony, the latter taking membership with the church yesterday. This is a noble band of brethren who will have the oversight of the church at this place. Brother Guin is a miller and keeps the Book always at hand from which he feeds his patrons while their corn is being ground. Brother Tidwell is the postmaster and also lets his light shine, regardless of public sentiment. Our heart's desire and prayer to God is that Guin may yet be captured for the Lord.

W. H. PARKER.

LOUISIANA.

Melville, July 3.—I began a meeting here on June 30, 1900. The immediate result was: On Monday night, July 2, 1900, we permanently organized a church of Christ, with twelve members. Pray for our success. We are planning to build a church house at once. The prospects for this work are bright. I will trust God for the increase; who doubts his promise? We hope to continue right on in the work of our Master.

J. R. HEWITT.

TENNESSEE.

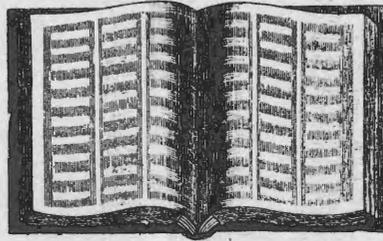

Paul, July 16.—Brother F. C. Sowell commenced a meeting for the church of Christ at Long Branch (Paul) on July 8, 1900, and closed on July 15, 1900, having preached fifteen discourses and baptized thirteen persons. Brother Sowell did some fine preaching and greatly endeared himself to the brethren here. We think much prejudice was removed and the brethren greatly strengthened and encouraged. This was Brother Sowell's second meeting in this neighborhood and the people heard him gladly. We feel very thankful to our Heavenly Father for such men to proclaim the word in its purity. I. D. SMITH.

Malesus, July 18.—For the past two weeks Brother A. B. Barrett, of Covington, Tenn., has conducted a series of night meetings at this place. Considering the population of the town, it was largely attended. Without doubt, Brother Barrett is one of the greatest preachers we have ever had with us. He is a gentleman of extensive knowledge and his genius is of a high order. His sermons are distinguished for their perspicuity, polished language, and exact logical reasoning. He has accomplished great good. We had ten additions by primary obedience, making twenty-three members in all. A Sunday school has been organized. On every Lord's day we will meet together to study God's blessed word, that we may learn more of the great and grand truths therein revealed. In making mention of the meeting Brother Kepp, of Illinois, who conducted the song service, must not be omitted. Brother Kepp is an affable gentleman, a general favorite, and a great lover of wit. Both Brother Barrett's and Brother Kepp's spotless reputation made for them many friends. X.

Ætna, July 16.—Brother G. A. Dunn began a meeting at this place on July 1, 1900, and continued till July 11, 1900. While we had some things to hinder—whooping cough, colds, and other sickness—yet we think it one of the best meetings we have ever had. Seventeen were baptized (one from the Methodists) and three reclaimed. Several of these are heads of families and will make good workers. The meeting closed with a large audience and much interest. We heard of some going home and reading their Bible till midnight, others reading to their wives before breakfast. Brother Dunn is a faithful worker, and we think much and lasting good was done by his earnest and plain preaching. We have no doubt seed have been sown in the hearts of some that will bring forth fruit to ripen in eternity. Brother Jasper Dunn accompanied his brother to assist in the singing. With such a brave defender of the truth and such help in the song service, with the assistance of the brethren and sisters, how could a meeting be anything but a success? (Mrs.) T. J. BRYAN.

Nashville, July 19.—I began a meeting at Paris, Tex., on the first Sunday in July, which lasted sixteen days. Considering everything, it was a good meeting. It rained every Sunday and several other days during the meeting. We met in the meetinghouse during the first week and then moved to the tent. All the sects seemed to work against us. The Methodist pastor advised his members not to attend our meeting, but took special pains to announce the Baptist meeting, and requested that they all attend. I baptized two of his members while there last year, and hence the cause of the opposition. But in spite of the opposition, we had a good meeting, with four additions, two of whom were from the Presbyterians. I had quite an enjoyable time, having four preachers—Carlton, Rose, Surett, and Odoneal—who assisted greatly in the meeting in the way of prayer, singing, and talking in the interest of the meeting. I go next to Gassaway for a meeting to begin on the fourth Sunday in July. I have some time yet that I would be glad to arrange for meetings. I hope to keep busy in the field henceforth, the Lord willing. P. H. HOOTEN.

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

No.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COIS.	PAGES.
33020	25	Readers and Writers' Edition— Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
33030	50	Patent Flat Backs— Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

Tennessee State Conference of Charities and Corrections.

The Board of State Charities has undertaken to initiate a movement for the organization of a Conference of Charities and Correction, designed to meet annually in this State, for the purpose of considering and discussing questions of practical importance with relation to the public and private charitable and correctional work of the State. Conferences similar in purpose have for years been organized and carried on in ten or more States, principally in the West, and those who are well informed on the subject regard them as sources of beneficent influences. In view of these circumstances, it is right that Tennessee should seek to establish a similar conference. The proposed conference should welcome to its meetings delegates from all the charitable and correctional institutions in the State, and there should be a full and free discussion of the topics selected for consideration.

A provisional committee of representative men and women from the charitable and correctional institutions of the State should be selected to undertake the organization of the conference and arrange a programme for its first session. After the organization is effected, the conference should conduct its proceedings and be free to make such plans of work as it chooses.

Although the State Board of Charities will be active in promoting this organization, it is not designed that the conference shall have any connection with the board, but rather that it shall be an independent body, which will exert a powerful influence for good in determining the great questions embraced in the philanthropic activities of the State.

The programme of the conference, with other related information, should be published in time for the conference to be held at the best season to accomplish the greatest good.

JAMES A. ORMAN, President;
CHARLES J. SAWRIE, Secretary.

A Note of Explanation from Brother Dunn.

Brother McQuiddy: Will you please give this note of explanation a place in the columns of the Gospel Advocate?

I have been informed that it is being circulated that I invited and urged Brother W. L. Logan to come to Murfreesboro to work with the church of Christ and now I am opposing him. It does not follow, because I invited him to come here, that I indorse all he has done since he came. I did invite Brother Logan to come, and when he came we talked freely over the situation. I told him if he could harmonize the church and get us in good working order, I would be very glad to have him do so. After consideration, he told me he would undertake it. I told him then I believed the modern pastor system wrong and I opposed it, but that Paul said to Titus: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." (Tit. 1: 5.) So I asked Brother Logan to act the Titus for us, and this is all I did. The character of work agreed on by us then no man can oppose without opposing the New Testament order of church work and worship. It was simply to set in order the things that were wanting. As to Brother Logan's locating there as pastor, that was not discussed. I understood him then to oppose the modern pastor.

Brother Elam seems to think I did wrong in calling Brother Logan "pastor." I simply used the word as it is used in current speech. Knowing the work and use of the word in the church of Christ at Murfreesboro, I used it correctly. I did not understand Brother Elam to accuse me of an ugly manner or bad spirit. If he does, he accuses me wrongfully; Brother Elam is too good a man to accuse me wrongfully.

JOHN E. DUNN.

Have You Eaten Too Much? Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

If your dinner distresses you, half a teaspoonful in half a glass of water gives quick relief.

There is no point in the life of a Christian man where he cannot say that it is better farther on.—Exchange.

Men should spend every day as if at the end of it they were to be called before God for judgment.—Christian Advocate.

If you will only reflect on the brevity of your earthly life, you will see how infinitely small are the most of the ambitions which you cherish.—Selected.

Chin Pimples
are local in nature. They yield readily to Common Sense Treatment.
HEISKELL'S OINTMENT
is a specific for Pimples, Freckles, Tetter, Eczema and all skin disorders. 50 cts. a box.
HEISKELL'S SOAP
clears the pores, makes the skin soft, smooth and white. Price 25 cents. Samples free.
JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Philada., Pa.

Remember "Allenroc's Book."

Improvement in Health

follows the use of

No other medicinal product can be advantageously employed in so many of the common ills of humanity; a pleasant and refreshing beverage, it effectually relieves indigestion, headache, biliousness, constipation, and eliminates uric acid. 50c. and $1. Trial, 25c. Pamphlets on request. Tarrant's "Defmal," a dainty anti-septic powder for nursery, toilet, after shaving, cures chafing, best foot powder, 25c. At druggists, or mailed on receipt of price by TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York, Est. 1834.

Length of Creative Days.

A good rule in interpreting scripture is to take the most natural and obvious meaning which the reading in its connection indicates or would indicate at the time in which it was written. We may also suppose that God addresses himself to man on the subject of creation as it would appear from an earth view point. He does not require that we should view history, with an infinite mind or read between the lines; but he does tell the truth, and aims we should believe it just as it reads.

Now, to illustrate: God does not say that the earth is flat, but he does say: "Heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is," were created in six days. Now, if the days of creation were not literal days, how may we know that any succeeding statement in the whole Bible is literal? Shall our faith be shaken at the very outset? If Moses says it rained forty days on the earth and the skeptic replies that there would not be water enough for a flood, shall I then concede that it rained forty periods?

Remember, the two statements are by the same writer, in the same book, to the same people, in the same age, with nothing in the context to make a figure obvious. But the connection in creative history clearly shows literal days. "The evening and the morning were the first day," etc. (Gen. 1: 5.) Day and night existed the first day. This sounds like a literal day. The Jews would understand this. They counted the evening first at that time. Every other creative day is modified in the same way.

God commanded the Jews to work six days and rest on the seventh day, because God had done the same. They understood that they were to work six days, not six times six thousand years. Brother McCaleb says God is resting yet, but Moses said he "had rested" on the seventh day more than four thousand years ago. (Gen. 2: 3.) He may have created a million other worlds since then, for aught I know.

But the point is made that Moses calls the whole creative period a "day" in Gen. 2: 4, thus including six days in one. Suppose I admit that it is obvious that he did not mean a literal day here; I am still sticking to my first rule of interpretation. This would not affect the meaning of the first passage. Suppose I were to tell you in the first part of this letter that I did so and so on the first day of my arrival in California, and add that that day was composed of light, called "day;" and darkness, called "night." How long would that be, if I have "seen trouble in my day?"

If Brother McCaleb were to visit six different towns in six successive and then write out a detailed account of his trip, saying, "This is an account of my successive visits in the day that I made them," would that mean he made them all the same day? No; he would mean an account of each day. So "these are the generations [day-by-day happenings] of the heavens and of the earth" in the day God made them, each in its order on its day.

Professor Stuart, of Andover Seminary, said in 1833: "The Hebrew word 'yom' does not signify an indefinite period." This quotation and others to the same effect are from Comstock's "Outlines of Geology," which holds that the six literal days are scientific. Brother McCaleb says: "It will be noted, too, that the seventh day has no morning nor evening." But the other days have, Brother McCaleb, and you could not prove the seventh day had no morning nor evening. If the seventh day has lasted six thousand years, does that prove that the other days were that long? If so, they are getting longer all the time, and twenty-four hours after creation they were only twenty-four hours long. But it is said the sun was not created until the fourth day, and there could have been no twenty-four-hour day without the sun to rule it. But there was day and night, evening and morning before that, and the sun only ruled what already existed. It is called just the same after the fourth day. Say, how did the grass grow for six thousand years without any sun? And it looks like the "waters which were above the firmament" would have cooled off and come down in a flood before eighteen thousand years without the sun to keep them warm.

Could six figurative days make one figurative day? That looks like mixing figures. If the days were each six thousand years long, how long were the seasons and years? (Gen. 1: 14.) Will this concession to infidels do them any good, or will it not lead them to make fun of the whole account and lead the church into "higher criticism?" In conclusion, I want to exhort you as one that admires and loves you: Avoid oppositions of science falsely so called.

PAUL,
Of California.

Though it is never quite safe to take a man at his own estimate, yet if you would form a correct opinion of him, you must know what he thinks of himself.—Christian Advocate.

WERNICKE
"ELASTIC"
BOOK - CASE

Small enough for ten or large enough for ten thousand books, and always just right for the library.

MARSHALL & BRUCE CO.,
NASHVILLE, AGENTS.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. See Bell Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, Tenn.

B. B. B. FOR IMPURE BLOOD.

To Prove it Cures, a Bottle is Sent Free to Sufferers.

If you have tried sarsaparilla, patent medicine, and doctored, and still have old, persistent sores, pimples, distressing eruptions of the skin; painful sores on hands, arms, or legs; itching sensation, irritating skin troubles, eczema, scrofula, ulcers, fever sores, rheumatism, catarrh, boils, face covered with little sores, cancer or any blood taint, all run down, fagged out, discouraged, pale skin, then give B. B. B. a trial, because B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm—is made for just such cases, and it cures, to stay cured, those stubborn blood diseases that other milder medicines fail even to benefit. All above-named troubles are evidence of bad, diseased blood in the body, and B. B. B. cures because it forces all the poison or impurity or blood humors out of the body, bones, and entire system. It heals every sore, and makes new, rich blood.

Cancer, Bleeding, Eating

sores, painful swellings, persistent sore mouth and throat, and sores and eruptions that refuse to heal under ordinary treatment are all cured by B. B. B., the most powerful blood purifier made. B. B. B. builds up the broken-down constitution. Druggists sell B. B. B. at $1 per large bottle, including complete directions for home treatment. So sufferers may test B. B. B., a trial bottle is given away absolutely free. For free trial bottle, address Blood Balm Company, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your symptoms and free personal medical advice will be given.

It is only when you so feel your weakness as to lean on God for strength that you are safe from the assaults of Satan.—Exchange.

$1 "DIXIE" WATCH.

Lever movement, dust-proof case, 18 size, handsomely plated, accurate timekeeper, stem wind and set, very durable. In fact, the best and smallest Gentleman's Watch for the money in the world. We send it by insured mail, post-paid, on receipt of $1.10. Money refunded if watch is returned. Watches at $1.00 and up to $150. Write for our large Catalogue of Watches, Jewelry, etc. SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.), Louisville, Ky.

1850 1900 John Ramage & Son

HAVE IN STORE A SPLENDID LINE OF SHOES, OXFORDS AND SANDALS

EVERY GRADE IN LATEST STYLES. TRUNKS IN ALL SHAPES

FOR HOME AND EUROPEAN TRAVEL. HAND BAGS, SUIT CASES AND TELESCOPES. Mail orders will meet prompt attention. Telephone 1047.

We want the Gospel Advocate to go into every home in the country. We are endeavoring to make it what it should be as a religious journal and teacher. We will send it one month free to addresses furnished us of those who are nonsubscribers, and discontinue at the end of the month to all who do not become regular subscribers during the time.

We are now publishing four hymn books: "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and our new book, "Gospel Praise." We are confident that four better books cannot be found. Our hymn book catalogue and price list will be sent to any address on application.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and is now ready for delivery. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.
Single copy, by mail, prepaid	$ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid	4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid	5 90
MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.
Single copy, by mail, prepaid	60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid	6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid	7 10
WORD EDITION—BOARDS.
Single copy, by mail, prepaid	20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid	2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid	2 30
WORD EDITION—CLOTH.
Single copy, by mail, prepaid	25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid	2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid	3 00

Send all orders to GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO. Nashville, Tenn.

Odds and Ends.

Prayer (Luke 18: 9-17): Lessons from the Pharisee and Publican.—(1) Men who know themselves never despise others—verse 9; (2) if we justify ourselves, God condemns us—verses 9-14; (3) a prayer without penitence is a bird without wings—verse 11; (4) go to the temple to pray, not to pass judgment—verse 11; (5) give a tenth, and do not brag about it—verse 12; (6) better reckon sins than to recount virtues—verse 13; (7) you can see God as a Savior when you see yourself a sinner—verse 14; (8) he who exalts himself is not worthy to be exalted—verse 17.

Instructions in Prayer (Luke 11: 9).—“Ask”—boldly, largely, intelligently, submissively; “seek”—diligently, persistently, assuredly, personally, humbly; “knock”—patiently, expectantly, earnestly.

Grace.—The difference between all forms of false religion and the Christian religion is this: The former represents man seeking after God; the latter represents God seeking after man. Hence we have: (1) The bread of life seeking the hungry; (2) the living water seeking the thirsty; (3) the garments of salvation seeking the naked; (4) the truth seeking the liar; (5) the Prince of peace seeking the weary; (6) the light seeking the darkness; (7) the pardon seeking the guilty; (8) mercy seeking the wretched; (9) life seeking death.

The Grace of God (Tit. 2: 11-14).—(1) Its manifestation—“hath appeared” to all men; (2) its work—“bringeth salvation” to all; (3) its purpose—to help us to deny “ungodliness and worldly lusts;” to “live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;” and to look “for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of . . . Jesus Christ.”

Christ's Touch.—Christ's touch was always full of blessing. Many cases are recorded in the Gospels. (1) He touched little children and blessed them—Mark 10: 13-15; (2) he touched the leper and healed him—Matt. 8: 3; (3) he touched the eyes of the blind and gave him sight—Matt. 9: 29, 30; 20: 34; Mark 8: 22-25; (4) he touched one with fever and the fever left her—Matt. 8: 14, 15; (5) he touched the tongue of a deaf man who had an impediment in his speech and he spoke plainly—Mark 7: 33; (6) he touched the coffin of the young man, the only son of his widowed mother, and he was restored to life—Luke 7: 14; (7) he touched the ear of Malchus and it was healed—Luke 22: 51. Others touched Jesus and received his healing grace—namely, the woman who was a sinner, who showed such unusual affection, and was commended by her Lord (Luke 7: 37); the woman who came behind to touch the hem of his garment, and obtained more than she sought (Mark 5: 25-34); the people that brought the sick and the diseased, that they might touch but the border of his garment (Matt. 14: 14-16); and a large multitude out of Judea and Jerusalem and Tyre and Sidon who sought to touch him and were healed. (Luke 6: 17-19.)

“Quit You Like Men” (1 Cor. 16: 13).—The man who is always talking war is a coward. The true warrior is the man who loves peace, but when war is forced upon him fights like seven men; the men who move the world are the men whom the world cannot move. Essential to Christian growth, development, and manhood are the following: A pure atmosphere (Phil. 4: 3); a good appetite (Matt. 5: 6); best food—bread (John 6: 51), milk (1 Pet. 2: 2), meat (1 Cor. 3: 2); sunshine (Mal. 4: 2); light (2 Cor. 4: 6); exercise—light (Eph. 5: 2-8); exercise—gradual (1 Cor. 9: 24); rest (Mark 6: 31).

Seasonable Fruit (Ps. 1: 3; Gal. 5: 22).—When is the “season” for the following? Love—when hated (Matt. 5: 44); joy—in trial (James 1: 2); peace—the storm (Ps. 46: 1-3); long-suffering—when injured (1 Cor. 13: 7); gentleness—when opposed (2 Tim. 2: 24); goodness—in time of need (Isa. 58: 6, 7); faithfulness—when many are failing (Matt. 24: 12, 13; John 6: 66); meekness—when reviled (1 Pet. 2: 23); self-control—when eating and drinking (1 Cor. 10: 31); temperance—in good things, and total abstinence from evil (1 Thess. 5: 22). How much fruit? (Phil. 1: 11.)

I walked through the woodland meadows,

Where sweet the thrushes sing,
And found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wound, and each morning
It sung its old sweet strain;
But the bird with the broken pinion
Never soared as high again.

I found a young life broken
By sin's seductive art,
And, touched with a Christlike pity,
I took him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the life that sin had stricken
Never soared as high again.

But the bird with the broken pinion
Kept another from the snare,
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its compensation,
There is healing for every pain;
But the bird with the broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

(Selected.)

GEORGE GOWEN.

Franklin, Tenn.

The Nashville Bible School.

Instruction is given in English, Latin, Greek, German, French, Mathematics, Natural and Physical Sciences, Logic, Rhetoric, etc. The School does both academic and collegiate work. Every student is required to study and recite one lesson daily in the Bible. Ninety-nine dollars will pay for board and tuition for a young man; one hundred and seventeen dollars will pay for board and tuition for a girl. One can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. Send to the School for catalogue.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. E. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

Send us a new subscriber.

THE MOONEY SCHOOL,
FRANKLIN, TENN. W. D. MOONEY, A.M., Principal.

Its boys enter ten universities on certificate.
Every advantage offered. Discipline firm.
Send for catalogue before choosing your school.
Refers to any of the local pastors.
Has educated the sons of Supreme Judges, Congressmen, and many other distinguished men.

Ward Seminary For Young Ladies.
Nashville, Tennessee.
35th year begins September 20.
“An Ideal Christian Home.” Courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Certification to Wellesley and Balt. Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Full Literary Course with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. Catalogue.

Vanderbilt University,
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

800 Students. 90 Teachers. 17 Buildings; value, $750,000. New Dormitory just erected at a cost of $125,000.

Expenses low. Literary courses for graduates and undergraduates. Professional courses in Engineering, Pharmacy, Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Theology. Send for catalogue, stating department in which you are interested.
WILS WILLIAMS, Secretary.

Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn.

Regent—Rev. R. A. Young, D.D., LL.D.
Principals { MISS HOOD,
MISS HERON.
“The Ideal College Home of the South.”
Suburban and city life combined. Electric cars to north entrance. Attractions of park persuade to outdoor exercise. Eight schools in the hands of skilled specialists. Schools of music, art, and elocution employ methods of best Conservatories in this country and abroad. Diplomas conferred by schools. Lecture courses studiously selected. Best lectures, concerts, recitals, etc., IN CITY, liberally patronized. Christian influences. Students attend church of choice in city. Send for handsomely illustrated blue and bronze catalogue, and other college literature. Students from thirty-six States.

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua
Assembly and Summer Schools.
TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.
OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,
for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address
W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,
NASHVILLE, TENN
(After June 1, Monteagle, Tenn.)

LEBANON LAW SCHOOL,
CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY.
ESTABLISHED 1847.

TEN THOUSAND pages of living American law taught. Courses less comprehensive require two years of time and money in other law schools. In this school the entire course is accomplished in
ONE COLLEGE YEAR.

THIS IS NOT A LECTURE SCHOOL. The student reads the law in the text-book and recites daily. One additional year for review is given FREE to all graduates desiring it. Diploma and license conferred. Next term begins September 3, 1900. Catalogues free. Address

LAW SCHOOL,
LEBANON, TENN.

THIS entire building and two annexes are devoted exclusively to the work of the New England Conservatory of Music,
Boston, Mass.
Accessible to musical events of every nature. The best masters in music, elocution and languages that money can command.
GEO. W. CHADWICK,
Musical Director.
Prospectus sent free.
Address Franklin Square, Boston, Mass.

POTTER COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.
Bowling Green, Kentucky.

One of the most beautiful places in the world. High, healthful, and inspiring. The finest accommodations. Thorough and progressive. Pupils from twenty-seven States. Twenty teachers.
Come and see, or send for Catalogue.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is designed to educate girls in the branches taught in the Common and High Schools and to train them in the domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address
Fanning Orphan School,
ROUTE NO. 1. NASHVILLE, TENN.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE.
LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

• Shackelford & Shackelford, •
OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING,
COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS.
NASHVILLE, TENN.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER.

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM, OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER.

PURIFIES AS WELL AS BEAUTIFIES the skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash, and Skin diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 52 years, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'GOURAUD'S CREAM' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations." For sale by all Druggists and Fancy-goods Dealers in the United States, Canada, and Europe.

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r,
37 Great Jones St., N. Y.

Notes from Arkansas.

The writer held a week's meeting at Green Plains, nine miles north of Center Point. Nine confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized and nine were reclaimed, making eighteen in all. I promised to return and hold them another meeting in October.

Brother T. R. Burnett held a meeting at Corinth, with six confessions and baptisms. I think that Corinth is one of the oldest congregations in the State. They are true and tried and are sound in the faith. The same can be said of the congregations at Center Point and Blue Bayou.

The writer will be busy holding meetings until October.

Brother R. W. Officer will hold the annual meeting at Center Point.

Brother James W. Zachary will hold the annual meeting at Nashville.

Brother J. W. Denton, of Roxton, Tex., was booked for meetings at Nathan and Murfreesboro, but a postal card received from Sister Denton stated that Brother Denton was very ill, and not expected to live.

Brother J. M. Ratliffe will hold meetings in North Arkansas and South Missouri. Brother Ratliffe is an able preacher and debater, and will build up the cause of Christ wherever he labors.

Wheat, oats, corn, and cotton are fine in Southwest Arkansas. The fruit crop will be a good one.

I sold my little farm, near Hope, for six hundred dollars in cash. We are now living in the town of Hope, running a hotel. We feed all sound gospel preachers free of charge.

Hope, Ark. G. W. SPURLOCK.

Acknowledgment from India - Letter to Brother McCaleb.

Brother McCaleb: The money you sent for famine relief has been thankfully received. It amounted to one hundred and fifty-one rupees and fourteen annas. We generally count three rupees to the dollar, though it is always a little more; but the exact amount depends on exchange. For small sums your way of sending money order is very satisfactory; for large amounts, buy drafts of rupees, payable in Calcutta or Bombay. These can be purchased from the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, New York. But even a hundred dollars is perhaps best sent by money order.

There are no missionaries of our people in India who are not under our boards. The people are starving by the hundreds of thousands. In Bilaspur District there are over six hundred thousand on famine relief. There are not many dying from starvation in this part, but it only needs the relaxation of the helping hand, and thousands would die. In some parts where relief is not so well organized the people are dying, and the horrors are attending famine.

The money you so graciously sent will feed one hundred and fifty persons for eight days. I have about five hundred people in my relief, and the Lord has put money in the hands of our missionaries from the New York Herald to the amount of nearly ten thousand dollars. We have work for those able to work and gratuitous aid for the disabled. In behalf of the famine-stricken many thanks are given to you and all who contributed to the forty-nine dollars and forty-nine cents.

M. D. ADAMS.

Bilaspur, C. P., India.

Facts.

There is mercy in a heaven and there is justice in a hell.

As drunkenness apparently drowns trouble, so ignorance ostensibly lessens responsibility.

To commit suicide is to demonstrate that one does not appreciate God's blessings.

There are some people who wish they had never been born.

A man can be a Christian and be happy, too.

A guilty conscience might be said to be a foretaste of hell.

Self-justification will not work where it opposes God's law.

Should a man try to conceive of a trouble paramount to all other troubles, he would never stop until he could imagine himself on his deathbed unprepared to die—everything lost.

Compare a long life here with eternity, and we cannot see where we can afford to do anything else but prepare to meet God; yet some of us make salvation a secondary matter.

"Time is money." When one servant of God is devoting all of his time, over and above that required to provide the necessaries of life, to preaching the word of God, it is equivalent to another servant using all the money not needed for a living to advance God's cause.

Everything should be free. The servant who ministers spiritually should give his time as God prospers him and the servant who ministers carnally should give his means as God prospers him.

The man who does not mistreat others, though they mistreat him, is more like Christ than the man who does not mistreat others until they mistreat him. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

Anger is valuable when we hate sin, but "whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Bordley, Ky. J. G. ORSBURN.

RARE OPPORTUNITY.

On Saturday, August 18, 1900, we will sell, at PUBLIC AUCTION,

without reserve, the Fine Farm and Beautiful Home of Henry Zellner, deceased, containing about 315 acres.

This farm, which is unsurpassed for fertility and beauty, is 12 miles from Nashville and 6 miles from Franklin, Tenn. It is divided into two tracts, about equal size, by Nashville and Franklin Turnpike, and bounded on east by Louisville and Nashville Railroad. Well fenced, well watered, well kept, and most conveniently situated. Callender's railroad station, post office, and telegraph office is only a few hundred yards from the farm.

Buyers from the North or South should take the morning train for Callender's. Lunch served on grounds. Sale called at 12:30. Terms: One-fourth cash; balance, in one, two, and three years, with notes at 6 per cent interest and usual lien. The two tracts will be sold separately and afterwards as a whole, the method realizing most determining the purchaser.

W. J. ZELLSNER, Executors.
H. G. LIPSCOMB, }

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

Smith's Bible Dictionary

comprising its antiquities, biographies, geography, natural history, and literature, with the latest researches and references to the Revised Version of the New Testament. Over 800 pages, 8 colored maps, and 440 illustrations. A valuable work of reference. "The chronological tables are very full and are very carefully arranged, a harmony of the Gospels and an outline of the 'Apostles and Their History' being added." Price, $2, by mail, postpaid.

Gospel Advocate Publishing Co.,

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Organizing.

It is no more necessary for Christians to organize a church or any other society to work in than it is necessary for children of this world to organize a family to work in.

Children of this world are born into a family that has already been organized, with all the laws and rules that are needed. So all the child has to do when it knows how and is able is to go right to work obeying the father in the work that is before it, trusting the father for care, support, and all that it needs. Just so with children of the Spirit. They are born into the kingdom (John 3), and all they have to do when they know how and are able is to go to work obeying the Heavenly Father. We would think it foolish for children of this world to talk about organizing a family because they could go to work, but we remember: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." (Luke 16: 8.)

L. H. WILSON.

King's Station, Ky.

Items from the Nashville Bible School Catalogue.

Ours is the only school in the world, so far as we know, which requires every student, in addition to his work in the literary, classical, or scientific department, to study the Bible daily with the same diligence and care that he does the other studies of the curriculum; and to this fact it attributes the splendid order, the gracious bearing, and the fraternal spirit that are displayed in the association of the students with one another and with their teachers.

We do not believe there is a school in the world whose students are more intelligent, orderly, gentle, refined, and diligent than are ours; and they are watched over and cared for as tenderly and lovingly as in the most cautious homes of our land.

No selfish ends are sought. A more self-sacrificing body of teachers cannot be found, we believe, in this or any land. They teach in the Bible School because they love it for its work's sake. They have taught for it when they had to practice the most rigid economy to live and meet their obligations, when they had been offered much more money elsewhere. They have given more to help poor students through the School than all the other friends of the School put together, much more; and there is not one of them, we believe, who would not make a heavy sacrifice before he would let a worthy student leave for want of money.

Send us a new subscriber.

Can God Trust Me?

Great emphasis is laid on the importance of trusting God. This is well. It cannot be too much emphasized. It always affords to the Christian a stronghold and hiding place. The psalmist exhorts thus: "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. . . . Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass." For a Christian to trust in the Lord is comparatively easy; in fact, it is a joy, a great privilege, consolation. At the same time, he should ask himself the question: Can God trust me? Am I so rooted and grounded in the faith that I will be true to him, to his requirements, to his truth, to his cause, under all circumstances? Can he trust me to give as liberally as I ought to give to help on his cause in the world? Can he trust me to honor him in all my business transactions? Can he trust me to reflect his image in my life before the world, before my wife, in the presence of my children? Can he trust me to do the part of the good Samaritan toward my unfortunate neighbors? Can he trust me to bear patiently the burdens of life, rejoicing that my name is written in heaven? Can he trust me to pray for those who spitefully use me and persecute me? An honest testing of oneself frequently in this way will greatly stimulate the growth of grace in the soul.—Religious Telescope.

The most contemptible creature on God's earth is he who trades on his piety and seeks to make a gain of godliness.—Selected.

A readable book is the "Life and Sermons of Jesse L. Sewell." Price, $1.

Our helps to Bible study are steadily gaining ground and growing in favor. They are packed full of Bible teaching. A careful study of them in connection with your Bible will do you great good. Will you not help us to introduce them in your church?

FACTS ABOUT PAINT When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DAY'S WORK

Boys and Girls can get a Nickel-Plat Watch, also a Chain and Charm for sale 1/2 doz. Packages of Blaine at 10 cents each. Send your full address by return mail; we will forward the Blaine, post-paid, a large Premium List. No money required.

BLAINE CO., Box 2, Concord Junction, Va.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

VOLUME XLII. NUMBER 81.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, AUGUST 2, 1900.

$1.50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE

EDITORS.

D. LIPSCOMB. E. G. SEWELL. F. D. SRYGLEY.
J. C. M'QUIDDY, Office Editor.
232 North Market Street, Nashville, Tenn.

CONTENTS.

Christ the Pattern.....	482
Odds and Ends.....	482
The Place of the Evangelist. No. 2.....	483
The Heavenly Vocation.....	484
Miscellany.....	485
Queries.....	486
Creed Revision.....	486
Home Reading.....	487
Editorial Notes.....	488
Christian and Church Growth.....	488
The One Body.....	489
Obituaries.....	490
General News.....	492
Church News.....	493
The Tant-Oakley Debate.....	493
Look to Christ for Instruction.....	493
Kansas Notes.....	494
Brother Poe's Mistake.....	495
West Texas Gleanings.....	495
The Tendency of the Times.....	495
Letter from Brother Bishop.....	496
Freed-Clark Debate.....	496

READ AND ACT.

At this season of the year our expenses are always far in excess of our receipts. As we have been at the extra expense of putting "Gospel Praise" and other new books on the market, our expenses have been very heavy, so that we are especially in need of the amounts due us. The amount that you are owing may be a very small one, but many such amounts aggregate a very large sum. It is best for the publisher and the subscriber that all pay their subscriptions promptly. It enables those looking after the affairs of the paper to devote their time and thought to making a good paper, without being worried over finances. It is hard for the man to write well who is forced to think continuously about money matters.

Many allow their subscriptions to run behind, without realizing that it is so. This notice is to remind all who are in arrears that their renewal would be very greatly appreciated. The wheat crop will put some money in circulation. Look at the date on the little yellow slip on your paper, and pay at the rate of $1.50 per year from that time. A large hand pointing to this is to call your attention to the date. If your paper should be stamped and the date is in advance, you may know that the mistake was made by the one stamping the hand on the paper. We are always anxious to correct all mistakes. Your prompt compliance with this request will help us and will be duly appreciated. Address all checks and money orders to the GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY, Nashville, Tenn.

A secular daily paper published a letter from an irreligious but wealthy young lady whose physicians have told her she has not more than three months to live. The object of her letter is to ask readers of the paper to write her suggestions as to how to spend the last three months of life. She receives hundreds of letters from all parts of the country every day advising her how to spend the few days she has to live. Many of these letters have been given to the daily papers, and, as they go before a constantly widening reading public, they of course call forth other letters. If the young lady is really an invalid, with only three months to live, she will probably spend the time reading letters; but if she is a mere fake, and not sick at all, she, and the world through her, will probably be surprised how few people there are among the reading constituency of secular papers who take life and death seriously enough to advise one who has but three months to live to occupy the time preparing to meet God in the great hereafter. Of all the letters of advice I have read in the daily papers I have not yet seen one that advises her to become a Christian.

"Brother Srygley: I would like to have five hundred copies of Brother Larimore's leaflet, 'Sermon on Baptism,' which was published in the Gospel Advocate of June 28, 1900. I want them by August 15, 1900. Now, if you cannot furnish them, please let me know; and if you can, state the price and I will send it as you direct. A. M. POWELL.
"Elliott, Ia."

Brother Larimore says he has no copies of the leaflet, and I do not suppose there are any in print. However, there is no copyright on them, and anybody who wants them may have them printed in any quantity by any printing office.

"Brother Srygley: I want to come to Tennessee to locate permanently this fall and will depend on the brethren in that State to help me obtain work. Do you know of any churches I might correspond with?"

I suppress name, date, and place in publishing this letter because I received two others like it in less than a week. An impersonal answer to this will be sufficient for all, and I have neither time nor strength to write more than I am obliged to write. I am always glad to have good men and earnest preachers locate in Tennessee or anywhere else, and I believe such men and preachers will be supported anywhere they go. The support, as in Paul's case, may have to come partly by the work of the preacher's own hands in some cases; but that will probably be all the better. I believe it is unscriptural and antiscriptural for any preacher to locate with a church or churches to preach to the church. My understanding is that every church has in itself the elements of its own growth, development, and reproduction by the help of "God and the word of his grace." When a preacher from another part of the country begins to correspond with churches with a view to locate and preach for them and be sustained by them, whatever influence I have with such churches shall be used to keep them from making any such arrangement.

The writer inclosed stamp for private answer, but as the matter is of general interest and I have several other questions covering the same point and cannot find time to answer each one privately, I will suppress names, dates, etc., to keep the matter private and write a general answer here:

"Brother Srygley: We have been having a Lord's day school at this place for some time. At the close of last quarter I was appointed superintendent. The majority of the brethren were pleased, but some few objected, claiming that the Bible positively forbids women speaking in the church. After reading and considering I am undecided as to whether it is scriptural. I feel my weakness in this place; nevertheless, if I knew it to be scriptural in the sight of God, with his guidance I would conscientiously do my very best to teach both men and girls the word. What do you believe would be the proper procedure? Will you please explain 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35 and 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12? If you will spare a few minutes of your time, I shall be very thankful. May God speed you in the work, is the prayer of your sister in Christ."

I do not know whether the New Testament authorizes women to be superintendents of Sunday schools or not, for the reason that it was written several hundred years before there was any such thing as a Sunday school, or Lord's day school. In New Testament times the disciples came together on the first day of the week "to break bread," and in those meetings they taught and admonished one another in the Holy Scriptures. The elders of the church were the superintendents of those meetings, because such meetings were the church assembled. Every member of the church took some part in the exercises of those meetings under the direction of the elders. "How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying." (1 Cor. 14: 26.) It is clear from this that every one did something, and from other passages it is also clear that the elders directed everything. Every member should recognize the elders as the overseers and be in submission to them as long as they do not require anything God does not authorize. As I understand the matter, God does not authorize women to either teach or preach publicly, but requires them to do both privately.

The new book, "Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore," has now been on the market only a few days, but it has already won its way to the hearts of the readers. I have not heard a single adverse criticism on it, but it has been spoken of in terms of high praise wherever it has been read. I am not financially interested in it, but I am anxious that it have an extensive circulation for the good it will do. I do not think I can put a small portion of space on this page to better use this week than to quote a few letters and extracts from letters commending the book:

"Brother Srygley: There can be but one opinion of the new book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore.' There is not enough of it; you come to the end too soon, and sigh for more. It takes you into his life, into his heart, into his home, into his family; and, like the wren, you want to build a nest and stay there. He is a ladder on which you climb up higher and nearer to God, an inspiration that makes you wish you had been better all your life, and the only reproach or rebuke I have ever known him to give the world is through the silent one of his exalted example. I have never looked at him without thinking of the apostle whom Jesus loved best because of his love. Even the binding of the book reminds me of its author—so clean, pure, and beautiful, just like a leaf out of springtime. He has been as a star in the midnight of my life. Our love for him is nothing; it is so natural—so impossible not to have been. This book is a rare treat to one five years confined to bed—the prisoner of my own shell.

"(Mrs.) JENNIE JONES CUNNINGHAM.

"Louisville, Ky."

"Brother Srygley: I have carefully examined the book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore.' I unhesitatingly pronounce it the best production you have ever issued. Such a work, from such a godly man, will always do good. I bespeak for it a wide circulation. R. W. NORWOOD."

"Brother Srygley: The book, 'Letters and Sermons of T. B. Larimore,' was received and has been carefully read. It is hard for me to find words to properly express my appreciation of the book. I know of no book, except the Book of books, that deserves to take higher rank in the world of letters. It is invaluable and should have a wide circulation, and it will be read wherever it goes. Unlike many books of the sort that pass their lives in a happy, peaceful repose on library shelves and go into their graves of final oblivion in spotless, unworn garments, unread or forgotten, this book is going to enjoy a less quiet, but far more useful, life; for it is going to be read and studied. Although mine has been in the house less than a week, already its garments are more or less travel stained, for it has passed from hand to hand, from one member of the family to another, until all have read and enjoyed more or less of its contents. I have heard Brother Larimore preach most of the sermons in the book. Often and often as I have listened to the beautiful thoughts that dropped from his lips, clothed in words that burn and carry conviction to the heart, I have wished that his sermons might be perpetuated; that they might be enjoyed by those who have not the privilege of hearing him, and continue to do good when his lips are dumb and silent in the grave. Many times I have resolved to take paper and pencil and take notes, as he preached, but a knowledge of how imperfect they would be, at best, deterred me. Yet scattered fragments of his sermons come to me often and often, fragrant with memories of a time of peace and happiness, when sitting under the sound of his voice and learning lessons of purity and holiness and goodness from his lips. I think no one can have heard him preach and not be better therefor. What delight, then, to me to have the sermons that have so thrilled my soul in permanent shape! The letters are fully as interesting, for throughout every sentence there breathes the spirit of a thoroughly consecrated Christian gentleman, who has only one object in life and that is to do good in the world, to serve God and keep his commandments. Will the book do good? Yes; a thousand times yes. No man can read these scattered records of a good man's life, as found in his private confidential correspondence, and not be the better for the reading. Such a record of purity and goodness, of patience and humility, of kindness and love to all mankind, of spotless integrity in every transaction in life, of a busy, happy, useful life, devoted wholly to the service of the Lord and to trying to make mankind better, will do good, much good; for its lessons will sink deep in faithful hearts and bear fruit in the making of many lives better. Brother Larimore's many friends will thank you for the thought which led you to bring out this book. May you live to bring out many more equally as good. I have also recently read your book, entitled 'Seventy Years in Dixie.' I have lived close enough to that period and have seen enough of the life, as pictured there, in back country places I have known, and have heard my grandmother, who was an early settler in this country, talk enough of those early days, to know how true a picture of the long ago it is. The reading of the book gave me great pleasure. It is a valuable record that deserves to live as long as time lasts, and I am sure that it will. I have seen no other book that covers just the ground it covers. Its humor makes one laugh one moment and its pathos the next moment brings tears to one's eyes. The interest never flags from the beginning to the end of the volume. I have not read 'Biographies and Sermons,' but hope to be able to do so some day.

"SILENA MOORE HOLMAN.

"Fayetteville, Tenn."

No women in the world stand for greater and more loving thoughtfulness for the men of their families than do the women of America. No sacrifice is too great for an American wife to make for her husband. The business men of this country must slow up, and one step in that direction is a life, after business hours, away from the places of their activities. The American country suburb can be the salvation of the American business man; and, likewise, can it give a more easily adjusted life to our women. For our children it admits of no question. Cities never were made for children.—Edward Bok, in the July Ladies' Home Journal.

Much culture is superficial. Mere acquaintance with the ways of the world is not genuine culture. On so slight a foundation as this, nevertheless, many persons adopt an air of superiority to quiet, home-keeping folks. Judged by such a standard, the flip-pant drummer, who understands all the ins and outs of travel, hotels, and city life, would generally rank above the man of great brains and character who has, almost necessarily, lived a life of seclusion, though his touch upon his time has been potent. Real culture is not a matter of surface, but of depth.—Selected.

Impatience spoils more work than inability.—Exchange.

Our Contributors.

Christ the Pattern.

[The following is a sermon delivered by Granville Lipscomb to the inmates of the State Prison in the prison chapel on Sunday, July 15, 1900.]

"I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." (John 13: 15.)

These were the words of Christ to his disciples just as he had acted the part of a servant in washing the feet of his disciples.

To wash the feet of a guest was a part of the entertainment in the East and was usually performed by a servant. On this occasion the Lord and Master acted the part of the servant to teach his followers a lesson of humility. There are numerous references to the subject of feet washing in the Bible, but in no place do we find where the disciples of Christ met in a church capacity for that purpose. Paul, in 1 Tim. 5: 10, mentions it among the good deeds that a Christian woman should have done and classes it as "a good work done in private as necessity required." "Good works," says the same apostle to Titus, must be maintained for "necessary uses." (Tit. 3: 14.) It would be useless to feed those who needed nothing to eat or to clothe those already well clad; so it would be just as useless to wash feet that did not need washing.

The person Christ, what he did, what he said, and the spirit he manifested constitute the great pattern of the Christian life. He has given us the example.

Christ is the very embodiment of his gospel and teaching. He obeyed his own gospel and practiced his own teaching. Those who study him and imitate him in this life will naturally obey his gospel and possess his spirit. This is the shortest and surest route to heaven. Taking Christ as our pattern, we can never equal him, yet cannot go very far in the wrong.

Do you ask how Christ obeyed his own gospel? We shall see. He has commanded all to whom the gospel comes to believe. His own faith in God was perfect. He was desirous to show that faith in word and deed, that others might believe. Even when he was conscious of possessing power to raise the dead at the grave of Lazarus he prayed: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always; but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me." His faith was unbounded.

Has he said that repentance and remission of sins must be preached in his name? Has he commanded that all men everywhere should repent? Has he said: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish?" Then has he set before us the example of hating sin? True, he in person could never repent of sins, since in him was no sin; neither was there guile in his mouth; but he has left us in no doubt of his abhorrence of sin. While he loved the sinner and died to redeem him, yet he detested sin. In lieu, then, of gospel repentance note in his life his estimate of sin. Copy that and we will be among the most penitent of earth.

Did he say: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven?" So did he confess before Pontius Pilate, the governor, that he was the Christ, the Son of God, when he knew that confession would bring him to the cruel and shameful death of the cross. The confession of the same great truth brings the follower of Christ "unto salvation."

Has he commanded every believer to be baptized? He has not done so without having obeyed that command himself. "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." They of Judea and Jerusalem flocked to him to be baptized, confessing their sins. "Behold, he from Nazareth came." He demands baptism; he came for that purpose; he is not fleeing the wrath to come; he has no sins to confess; he cannot be baptized for the remission of sins. For this reason John at first refused to baptize Jesus, but Jesus said: "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him." Mark the pronoun "us" in these words of Christ. He did not say thus it becometh "me" to be baptized, but thus it becometh "us" to be baptized, seeking to put himself with the obedient ones. He is not ashamed to call them "brethren." He gave this divine ordinance his own indorsement and seal by submitting to it. Every son or daughter of Adam's race who comes in a reverent and obedient spirit to this command can say in truth: "The divine Son of God, my only Redeemer and hope, has consecrated this command, so that it shall be my delight to walk in his footsteps." Here again we may say he has set us an example.

We often speak of the importance of possessing the Spirit of Christ. What was the Spirit of Christ? It was a meek and lowly spirit; it was the obedient spirit. There are many who are praying for some miraculous, Holy Ghost baptism who would be infinitely better off if they could see this plain truth: that the Spirit of Christ was a gentle, lowly, and obedient disposition—a spirit which sought to do the will of God in keeping his commandments. Let us study him, his life and character, that we may drink into his spirit, possess his holy temper, and follow him as nearly as poor, frail mortals can follow such an illustrious example.

Observe your Leader, follow him;
He through this world has been
Often reviled, but, like a lamb,
Did ne'er revile again.

To the passionate sons of Zebedee, who would call down fire from heaven to burn up the Samaritans, he said: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." The ancient bard said: "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people."

Under every shadow of your life look to him, for he is the bright and morning star. He is the hope of every invalid, for he is the "Sun of righteousness," who has arisen "with healing in his wings." He it is who in his last earthly interview says: "Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

Odds and Ends.

David said: "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me." This was certainly a wise course. How many young and ignorant Christians pursue an opposite course, undertake to understand all mysteries and explain all doubts and pass judgments upon those around them, and so dishonor the Lord, distract the church, obscure the gospel, and bring shame to themselves and trouble to others! Some, too ignorant, willful, and imprudent to be confided in, speak evil of things they know not of, pry into matters which do not concern them, mind everybody's business but their own, criticize, listen to gossip, and repeat scandal; and after sowing discord, "firebrands and arrows of death," all around, find at last that they have been ignorant, hasty, mistaken, and wrong in their judgments; have meddled with things too high for them; and have brought sorrow and difficulty for themselves and others which they can never entirely remove. When chastisement and trouble come upon them, then they think of these things and remember their hasty judgments and unkind remarks. But being sorry does not heal the wound; expressing regret does not undo the mischief; and asking forgiveness, even, does not restore matters to their former condition, nor them to that condition which they forfeited by their rash, sinful judgments and hasty words. It is better to be lowly; to watch our own ways; to keep our tongue as with a bridle; to avoid meddling and overseeing. Remember "whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles."

Souls often grow lonely in a crowd and starve in the midst of temples, worshipers, and ordinances. God would have us alone with him sometimes. Coming to church is not coming to Christ. "Enter into thy closet, and . . . shut thy door." Shut out nonsense, business, care, and pleasure; shut out flatteries and frowns; shut out strangers and acquaintances; shut out friends and foes; shut out this world and open the window that looks out on the next. Give the mind rest; give the ear quiet; give the tongue silence; give the heart meditation; give the soul communion with God. Look up, there are blessings waiting for you; listen, God speaks in his still small voice; ask, God waits to hear. See that your soul is at peace with God; see that no shade of sin hides from your sight the Heavenly Father's face. Settle the question of peace, pardon, and duty in secret before the Lord; then bring everything that concerns your heart and life, for time and for eternity, and lay it before the mercy seat. "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

* * *

Inconsistency.—There are many illustrations of this in the Bible: "Salt, . . . lost its savor," of all things the most worthless—a figure used three times by our Lord in his teaching. (Matt. 5: 13; Mark 9: 50; Luke 14: 34, 35.) "Spots in your feasts of charity." (Jude 12.) The original word refers to dangerous rocks sunken under the sea. "Spots" and "blemishes." (2 Pet. 2: 13.) The sins of teachers are the teachers of sins. (Rom. 2: 17-23.) The inconsistencies or fall of professed Christians before the wicked are like "a troubled fountain, and a corrupt [or muddy] spring." (Prov. 25: 26.) "He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls"—lying open to the attack of every enemy, who may enter without resistance the unguarded castle. (Prov. 25: 28.) "Dead flies" in the ointment are like "a little folly" to the reputation of one honored for wisdom and good character. "Shall even he that hateth right govern?" (Job. 34: 17.) "What do these Hebrews here?" (1 Sam. 29: 3.) What a reproach to be heard from Philistine lips of one like David! But what else can any Israelite expect when found in the Philistines' camp? Is the resort of the world the place for the child of God? "Art not thou also one of his disciples? . . . Did I not see thee in the garden with him?" (John 18: 25, 26.) (Peter was not at the upper end of the hall, standing by his Master, but at the lower end, among his enemies. He was warming himself at the devil's fire. He had been following Christ "afar off.") "David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, . . . save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." (1 Kings 15: 5.) "And Solomon loved the Lord, . . . only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places." (1 Kings 3: 3.) "Only," "save only." What a pity to find blots upon these escutcheons that ought to have been quite clear! An inconsistent life is not like the error of a pocket watch, which misleads one person only, but like the error of the town clock, which misleads a multitude. "Ye are read of all men." It is one of Satan's devices to blind the eyes of men by dust from the soiled garments of Christians. But these things are not to be counted against Christianity. Shall we never use money because some have counterfeited it, or medicine because some have poisoned themselves? But some do stumble. How careful we should be, therefore, in our lives! If the sun be eclipsed one day, it attracts more attention than by its shining for many years. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

* * *

Results of Obedience.—(1) Protection and healing—Ex. 23: 21-25; (2) prosperity and success—Josh. 1: 8; (3) fruitfulness and satisfaction—Isa. 1: 19; (4) fellowship with God—John 14: 21-23; 15: 10; (5) knowledge of God—1 John 2: 3-5; (6) prayer answered—John 14: 14, 15; (7) Holy Spirit given—Acts 5: 30; (8) we abide in him and he in us—1 John 3: 24; (9) eternal salvation—Heb. 5: 9.

* * *

"Partakers."—(1) "And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you."—1 Cor. 9: 23. (2) "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God."—2 Tim. 1: 8. (3) "He made known unto me the mystery . . . that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."—Eph. 3: 3-6. (4) "Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart; inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defense and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace."—Phil. 1: 7. (5) "But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons."—Heb. 12: 8. (6) "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."—1 Pet. 4: 13. (7) "For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness."—Heb. 12: 10. (8) "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light."—Col. 1: 12.

(9) "For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread."—1 Cor. 10: 17. (10) "And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort."—1 Tim. 6: 2. (11) "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."—Heb. 3: 1. (12) "For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."—Heb. 3: 14. (13) "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame."—Heb. 6: 4-6. (14) "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."—2 Pet. 1: 4. (15) "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed."—1 Pet. 5: 1. (16) "And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings; so shall ye be also of the consolation."—2 Cor. 1: 7. Because of all the foregoing: "Be not ye therefore partakers with them"—the wicked and their wickedness. (Eph. 5: 7.)

Franklin, Tenn.

GEORGE GOWEN.

The Place of the Evangelist. No. 2.

I am still considering the question: What does it take to make a scriptural elder? We must know who he is and what he has to do before we can know what is the work of those whose work, in part, is coordinate with his. The opposition to regular preaching to churches is based upon the tacit supposition that the elders are the only authorized teachers of the church. Really there is a large class among us who are opposed to all preaching and teaching to the church by competent persons, whether elder or preacher. Many churches in this country have no preaching, save as some man stops off and preaches of his own accord. In that case they do not have to pay him anything. It is not because they have competent teachers nor because they do not need it, neither is it for the reason that they have not the means to pay men for preaching the gospel, but it is because they are too covetous and stingy to have fellowship with men of God in the work; and to justify themselves in their ignorant do-nothingness they pretend to do their own preaching. They seem to have reached the ideal condition in which all the members are teachers. Not one member says to the other, "Know the Lord;" for they all know the Lord, "from the least of them unto the greatest of them."

The ideal of the New Testament Christianity may contemplate something of the nature of perfection in all the essential features of life and work, but I doubt very much whether it contemplates the high state of intellectual development in which all are competent teachers of the word of God. One trouble in many of the congregations to-day is a standard that requires comparatively little educational attainment on the part of teachers. Men that could not secure a six-months certificate to teach children in the common school are often preferred to men of the greatest proficiency in both literary and theological lore. Prejudice and ignorance keep the church in the rear of every educational enterprise that is calculated to elevate man and commend Christianity to those of the world whose reason is dominant. The abuse of education by men of classic pride in the pulpit has resulted in turning many good people against all but a "common education." Hence they glory in "self-made men," as though that relieved them of a great responsibility.

But is it true that the elder is the only teacher of the local congregation? I have observed that those who answer the question in the affirmative often insist upon all the members taking part in the public teaching. What does that have to do with the major premise? It indicates insincerity in the position that the elder is the only teacher of the church. I believe in all that can take some part in the public services of God, but I must insist upon the church having one or more competent teachers in its midst. It must, to be scriptural, have a plurality of elders.

Let us examine some of the scriptures relied upon to prove that the elders are the only teachers of the church. "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching." I want to know only what was in the mind of the apostle when he penned this language. It is not our business to read something into what the writers have said nor to read something between the lines, but to bring out what they thought when they wrote. This is the only way to get "the mind of the Spirit." "In the word and in teaching" is by common consent taken to mean preaching to the world and teaching the church. The primitive church had some elders that were able to both preach and teach, and no doubt many of them did both. The Jewish portion of the church were not novices at the time they became obedient to the faith of the gospel. They were taught in the Scriptures, and all the faithful of Israel were able to teach others also. Timothy, a typical character in this respect, was familiar with them from his childhood days. The apostles who taught not to make elders of Gentile novices did appoint many of the Jewish Christians who were novices, elders of the congregations. (Acts 14: 23.) Such men, the apostle to the Gentiles says, we must hold in high esteem. Every good elder is worthy of honor from the members of the church; every good ruler is to be considered worthy of double honor. But what shall we say of those who in addition to all the foregoing honorable attainments preach the word to sinners and teach the church in all the duties and ways of the Lord? I cannot by the means of words or otherwise indicate the obligation of the members to their faithful overseers; but we can readily perceive that this exhortation of the apostle to obey and imitate those who have the rule over us contains no ironclad, unyielding, ritualistic ecclesiasticism. It is not the endowment of elders with unlimited power over the consciences of the members of the church of Christ. They have no right to make unreasonable, inflexible, unscriptural demands of the members. It is rather the unfolding of the unique principles that belong to the ideal eldership. The modifying word "especially" indicates that the "laboring in word and in deed" is a voluntary attainment beyond the imperative demand of the eldership.

There is another passage to the same import. It is the one in which we have the familiar phrase expressing the elder's ability to teach: "Apt to teach." The original from which the translators have given us the word "apt" is difficult to translate into an exact English equivalent. The Emphatic Diaglot translates it "fit to teach." The import of the phrase does not indicate so much the inculcation of intellectual qualification as it does a moral requirement of the elder. It is something pertaining to the disposition of the person in question. The only other passage in the New Testament in which the word is used throws some light on the one used in this connection: "The Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, forbearing." (2 Tim. 2: 24, R. V.) "Apt" is here placed alongside of words which indicate disposition and in contrast with strife; hence the rendering, "fit to teach." There are many men "apt" to teach and competent to teach in a sense that are not fit to teach; they lack the character necessary to successful teaching.

We may admit, without fear of contradicting the position that the preacher has a place in the church as a teacher, that all elders must be teachers; but there is more than one way of teaching the word of God. We cannot in the light of the New Testament teaching narrow it down to public teaching. Hence we may inquire into the question: What is the nature of the teaching to be done by the elders of the church? In the commission Jesus said to the apostles: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Paul said to the elders of the church at Ephesus: "I . . . have taught you publicly, and from house to house." He gives this as an example for the elders to imitate. They must teach publicly or privately, or, if able, do both. The work of an elder, in part, is coordinate with that of apostles. The elders were to learn something of the work Christ would have them do from the example of the apostles. Elders, then, are commanded to teach from house to house, as well as from the pulpit. I have known men anxious to do all the teaching in public, yet who never thought of doing the private work of an elder. McGarvey says: "Both of these methods are indispensable for taking care of a congregation—the one, for reaching the greatest number at one time; the other, for the greatest personal effect on individuals, and especially for reaching those who neglect the public assembly. We cannot doubt that teaching in both methods was observed by the eldership of every apostolic church, and we would infer that ability to do both was a necessary qualification for every elder, but for one passage which clearly shows that this was not the case. It is the well-known passage: 'Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and in teaching.' (1 Tim. 5: 17, R. V.)"

Thus we can see, I think, that much of the elder's work is of a private nature, and the most successful work of the elder may be done by private teaching. The eldership combines the strongest traits and they unitedly work together for the cause of Christ. One may be strong in public teaching; another, in private teaching; a third, a man of great ruling and governing ability; a fourth, a great peacemaker; and thus by the union of moral and intellectual forces the work of the eldership is accomplished. That every elder should be able to fill all of the functions is desirable, but hardly conceivable. But if they are lacking in either intellectual or moral qualifications (which is certain to be the case in almost every instance), common sense would tell us to select the man with the Christian character, for that is what counts with both God and man.

These remarks pave the way for the consideration of the place for the preacher of the word. What is his place in a church thus composed of elders of diverse gifts? It will be a great help to us in our studies of this complicated question to find a typical character of this kind in the New Testament. It will be conceded by all competent Bible students who have no purpose of their own to serve that the church at Ephesus approximated the desideratum in point of scriptural elders; at any rate, it was among the best eldership that we find recorded. From what is said of them (Acts 20 and Rev. 2), I consider them among the best qualified in even apostolic times. Paul exhorted them to do several things—to guard against prowling wolves, to watch for men's souls as they that should give an account to God, to feed the flock of God. They were faithful to his instructions. Hence the supplementary account reads as we would anticipate: "Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write; . . . I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars." (Rev. 2: 1, 2.) Did that church have a pastor? No; but it had pastors, and scriptural ones, too. But did it have a monthly preacher? No; for that would not suffice for the work in that place. What need had that church for monthly preaching? It had a preacher located in its midst, anyway; but the members of the church did not call him "pastor," nor did the other preachers call him by such opprobrious epithets as we often hear from preachers and others to-day. Paul did not call him a "monthly pastor" or a "hireling," but he calls him an "evangelist," a "preacher." In our next paper we will find out something more of this man and his work with a church with a scriptural eldership. We are getting close to the point now. W. J. BROWN.

THE HEAVENLY VOCATION.

"I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." (Eph. 4: 1, 2.) To become a Christian is to step into the highest relationship that is in the reach of man on earth; to be a Christian is to be a child of God, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ. It is looked upon as being a wonderful privilege on earth to be children and heirs of kings and of great and rich men on earth, to heir their fortunes and positions and the honors and emoluments they possessed; but this is nothing compared with being children of the heavenly King. The King who sits upon the throne in heaven is heir of all things and all of God's children are joint heirs with him.

Jesus said: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3: 21.) It is indeed a grand thing to be children of God here on earth and to enjoy his smiles and precious promises here; but to at last, when life is over, sit down with Christ on his throne is inexpressibly grand. No wonder, then, that the apostle beseeches such to walk worthy of this high calling. To walk worthy of this high calling is to live as the word of the Lord directs, to form the character laid down in the word of God. This is the great work of the Christian's life, and keeps him busy to the end of life. To walk worthy of the heavenly calling is a lifetime business. No man can claim that he has overcome and is done with the struggle against sin until this earthly life is ended. King Asa walked well with God for a good while, and then became rich and proud and selfish and self-reliant, departed from the Lord, and came to a miserable end.

All the final promises and blessings of heaven are upon the condition that we hold out faithfully in the service of God to the end of life. Lowliness and meekness are qualities that must of necessity enter into the walk of the Christian. These are characteristics that the child of God must cultivate in this life if he would be prepared for the life to come. Lowliness and meekness are just the opposites of pride, selfishness, self-importance, self-reliance, and of every other characteristic that is unpleasant to men and displeasing to God. Lowliness and meekness signify those qualities that make men gentle, quiet, kind, loving, nonresistant, and regardful of the feelings and interest of others, and enable one to live in peace and harmony with others, to respect and be respected, and to shine as lights in the world. Those who are proud, quick to resent everything they do not like, always finding fault with and criticizing others, are not cultivating meekness.

No man can truly live the Christian on this earth and leave out these qualities. Long-suffering must also be cultivated and forbearance one with another. Those who are always hasty in temper and quickly impatient at the mistakes and missteps of others are not cultivating forbearance or long-suffering, and are by no means cultivating the qualities that make one worthy of the heavenly calling. All these precious and beautiful characteristics were manifested as large as life in the walk of the Savior when he was on earth. He was never hasty or rash in his replies to or treatment of those that were against him and maltreated him during his personal ministry; he suffered long, and was kind. No jealousies or unpleasant suspicions of others ever for a moment marred that beautiful life; and all the children of God on earth should strive to make their lives like his in these matters. He was meek and lowly and rode into Jerusalem in a manner that no man of pride would ever have done. He never set himself up on his dignity or separated himself from the society of the common people. He chose his apostles from this class, and when he saw they were cultivating feelings of pride and selfishness he always rebuked them in it; and yet those apostles never realized the grandeur and dignity of their vocation. They did not realize what it was to be an apostle of the Son of God, and desired different kinds of positions. They were anxious for chief positions in his kingdom, positions that would be both honorable and profitable in the sight of men. Could they have realized what it was to be an apostle of Jesus and to carry the tidings of salvation to a ruined world and thus guide men into purity of heart and life and to heaven at last, they certainly would not have had those contentions about who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven in such a sordid and worldly sense as they did. Christians now have advantages they did not have at the time they were having those strifes. They did not understand the spiritual nature of the kingdom Jesus had come to establish as we can now. If we become so gross and worldly in our notions and aspirations regarding the kingdom of Christ as they were, it will be utterly inexcusable in us; and yet thousands of those claiming to be the children of God are no better than they were in this respect; they still think there are positions of honor and profit in a worldly sense in the kingdom of God, and are aspiring to reach them.

The worldly rage to be dignitaries in the church, to stand high above others, and to reap rewards of money and honor that others cannot reach is just as rife and strong to-day in the church, so called, as among the disciples when Jesus was on earth and before the spiritual nature of his kingdom was revealed, and those engaged in it are worthy of much greater censure now than then. The greed for high and profitable positions in the churches of to-day is as great as among the people of the world and among some just as much trickery and chicanery are used as among those seeking positions in worldly governments and money is used as freely in order to succeed. Lowliness and meekness are unknown qualities among all such people and they need to study to-day the teaching and rebukes given the apostles on these lines. Jesus said to them when they were thus striving: "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Matt. 20: 25-28.) If these admonitions and requirements were heeded now, there would not be such a rush among preachers for the best places, where the most money could be secured. Even where official dignity is not sought there is just as worldly and disgusting place hunting—places where money and honor may be found—among preachers as among politicians. Meekness and lowliness have nothing whatever to do in such work. All such place hunters are unworthy of the places they are hunting, and have no proper qualification to fill them if they had them. Jesus never made one step in such direction. He spent his time hunting somebody to serve and to benefit, and not to find somebody to benefit him. He came to seek and to save the lost and to give his life a ransom for many, and not to find places of honor and profit. In these things he has given an example that all should follow. Not only that, but he forbids his disciples to be engaged in any such unholy strifes. He says: "It shall not be so among you." Greatness among the disciples of Christ is to consist in service, and not in high official positions or places of money and wealth. Lowliness and meekness will lead the children of God into homes of poverty and distress, or anywhere duty calls or where the Lord opens the way to do good.

The whole business of societies and boards to employ preachers and furnish money to pay them has a demoralizing effect, both upon preachers and churches. Churches lose interest both in preachers and their work when they have no direct connection with them, and for the same reason the preachers lose interest in the churches and look to the boards. In this way the wisdom of the world gets the upper hand, and the principle of working for the Lord, for the good of humanity, and for the salvation of souls is lost sight of.

Jesus came down from heaven to do his Father's will and to save fallen men. Every word that he spoke, as well as every act that he performed, was by his Father's will; but unfortunately there is not much of this spirit of sacrifice and devotion to the will of God now among the masses. Selfishness and self-interest rule the day in large measure, yet we rejoice to believe there are many noble exceptions to this rule; that many are ready to undergo any sort of sacrifice to advance the cause of truth and save souls. This is the kind of men that start and carry on the work of the Lord in new places, build up congregations, and feed and nourish them till they are self-sustaining. Then place-hunting preachers are always watching their chances to take hold of and run such churches; and too often by far such churches give themselves readily into the hands of these designing preachers. O for more of this lowliness and meekness that will lead men into the byways and hedges to hunt up the destitute and the lost and carry the gospel to them without waiting for some money arrangement to carry them through—men that love the Lord, love the truth and fallen humanity, and are willing to take their chances among the poor and preach the gospel to them and trust the Lord for the outcome!

The love of human wisdom and its exaltation above God's word and the love of money and high positions have carried, and will still carry, many souls down the broad and dark road to ruin. We should never forget the example of Jesus along this line and should strive to follow his steps, wherever our lot may be cast. To live thus is to carry out the principles laid down in the passage at the head of this article. Such a course is to walk worthy of the high and holy calling of Christianity, and will lead all that will walk in it through the gates into the eternal city of God. E. G. S.

There is a marvelous want of savor in our piety. It is a flower of autumn, colored as highly as it need be to the eye, but destitute of fragrance.—Horace Bushnell.

Better live straight than long.—Exchange.

Miscellany.

PERSONAL.

Brother E. A. Elam is in a meeting at Posterville, Tenn.

Brother E. G. Sewell went to Sumner County, Tenn., last Saturday for a meeting near Bethpage.

Brother A. J. Luther, of Burns, Tenn., was in the office last Saturday. He began a meeting at Antioch, Tenn., last Lord's day.

Brother F. W. Smith was in the office last Friday. He was just from Fairfield, Tenn., where he had held a good meeting, with six additions.

Brother A. Elmore closed a meeting at Buck Lodge, Tenn., on July 25, 1900. He will begin a meeting at Minor Hill, Giles County, Tenn., next Sunday.

Brother "Weeping" Joe Harding has returned from his meeting at Cotton town, Tenn. There were two baptisms and the church withdrew from one disorderly brother.

Brother G. A. Dunn and Brother J. W. Dunn began a meeting at Summertown, Tenn., on July 22, 1900, in the Methodist church house. We have not heard as yet the results of the meeting.

Mr. E. R. Massie, of Alleghany County, Va., and Miss Julia R. Showalter were united in marriage at the home of the bride's father, near Snowville, Pulaski County, Va., on May 16, 1900, the writer, the bride's father, officiating. May the Lord bless them temporally and spiritually.—J. T. Showalter.

Brother James E. Scobey recently held an eight-days' meeting at Grange Hall, in Warren County, Tenn., resulting in one baptism. He has just returned from Monteagle, Tenn., where he attended a meeting of the Educational Association. He will return to his school work in Maury County, Tenn., at an early date.

The following is from a sister at Valdosta, Ga., to Brother David Lipscomb: "I think with much interest of the work of the Nashville Bible School, for you are doing great good in spreading the gospel. In the summer the young men are scattered through the States and by that means the truth is spread like it was after the stoning of Stephen. Brother Boll and Brother Glenn have just been through here en route to Florida."

A debate on the music question will begin at India, Ellis County, Tex., on Monday, August 6, 1900, to continue two days. The proposition for discussion is: "The use of instrumental music in Christian worship is unscriptural and sinful." R. R. Stirman, of Kaufman, Tex., affirms; J. J. Hale, of the Christian Church, denies. India is three miles east of Ferris, Tex., on the Houston and Texas Central Railroad.—V. I. Stirman, Garrett, Tex.

Brother L. R. Sewell has returned from his trip to Texas. He was sick the first ten days after his arrival there. When he had sufficiently recovered, he went to Corpus Christi and preached one week; then he went to Runge, where he preached two weeks and baptized three persons. From Runge he went to Charco, remaining ten days. There were seven additions there, and he left the meeting to be continued by Brother Caleb Sewell. He left last Saturday again for a meeting in Sequatchie Valley, Tenn.

Brother J. A. Harding, writing from Dawson, Tex., says: "There has been a division at this place, and although one of the brethren who is with us paid almost wholly for the church house, we are locked out. The Baptists have granted us the use of their house. We are having fine audiences. We had three services on Sunday, July 22, 1900, and two on the following Monday. There had also been a division at Cedar Hill, Tex.; but there were fourteen additions during the meeting, and things were left, I believe, in a much better condition. They agreed to begin the Sunday school work again. I expect to get back home about the middle of August."

EDITORIAL.

In idleness you serve Satan.

The end will reveal all things.

Idleness is a foe to happiness.

Running water never stagnates.

Better unsightly than worthless.

How we live determines where we shall live.

Men who do right do not fear consequences.

If heaven is our goal, Christ will be our guide.

Honest toil is never a disgrace; idleness always is.

A fondness for work drives out the meaner passions.

The heavens and the earth were made for workers.

God's goodness made heaven; man's meanness made hell.

Sure of our future destiny, we are happy in the present.

The honest worker is never afraid to meet God or man.

The man who stands still impedes the progress of others.

The Savior's rule of judging a man is by the fruit he bears.

If we are faithful in Christ to the end, we shall be in heaven.

Christ gives a new beginning, a new life, and a new ending to life.

Heaven is a home only to those who get heaven into them while on earth.

The downward road grows harder with every step. How hard at the bottom!

The most brilliant intellect will be a failure unless steered by a noble purpose.

The man who is true to God does not feel the need of blowing his own horn.

Is it not practicing deception to put all the large apples on top of the barrel?

The world cannot be very dark when we are making sacrifices to make others happy.

In idleness metals rust; in use they shine. In idleness Christians die; in activity they grow.

Thoughtfulness must go hand in hand with love before one can be considered for others.

As long as we are true to God, we need never have any fears of what man can do unto us.

We should seek to give that fruitful love which blossoms into thoughtful kindness and wise ministry.

If the thought of death makes us uncomfortable, we should give our lives a searching examination.

In years gone by a young lady spent months in my home who was a perfect sunbeam. Not that she had more to make her happy than other people, not that she was resting in the lap of luxury and ease, for she was bravely making her own way in life. She cultivated a happy, contented spirit and had a cheerful word and pleasant smile for all about her. We were always delighted to see her come and sorry when she left us. What a pity that all girls do not cultivate the same disposition! There are girls with good intentions who are fretful and ready to find fault with everything and everybody. Instead of being sunbeams, they are whirlwinds; they keep the house in a commotion with their comings and goings; their whims and notions sweep everything else out of the way. Some of them are like a fog, and settle down over the whole household in a dull, depressing way whenever the sky is clouded. But the sunbeam girl is rare. May her number be greatly increased.

We cannot find happiness by looking backward. How often, when bearing the heat and the burdens of the day, does one feel like turning backward to the shady places! When grief, sorrow, and change come into our lives we sometimes sigh in discontent for the days of sunshine that have forever fled. But those years were full of duty and were not entirely free from care. Not backward to the noon or the morning, but forward lies the resting time; not in the task pushed aside or undone, but in the completed work. Whatever the present may hold, it is not in the turning back, but in the pressing forward, that hope, comfort, and happiness await us. Somewhere the last hurt and loss will drop away, and we, made stronger by the struggles and heartaches through which we have passed, shall rejoice in a world free from sorrow to begin all things new. Then let us, with Paul, "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, . . . press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Life's happiness or unhappiness is made up of such tiny atoms. It is not our great sorrows, disappointments, or even sins that have done most to shadow our days, but the many small clouds, forgotten as soon as past, and followed by others as small, that darken the sunlight. The word said or left unsaid; the friend to whom we turned for counsel or sympathy, and found her in no mood to share our burden; the service into which we wrought such tender thought, and which failed to receive deserved appreciation; the little plan that meant so much to us, and was carelessly pushed aside by some one's selfishness; the loving sacrifice accepted as a matter of course; the slighting mention of things dear to us—how they all hurt, and, in the aggregate, of how much of earth's sunshine have they robbed us! Knowing the pain of these things, is it not strange that we can ever neglect life's little kindnesses, ever let dear eyes seek ours in joy or grief and turn away unanswered and make our mood the excuse for withholding, as we may sadly remember some other day,

The little gifts from out our store
That might have cheered some cheerless hour
When they with earth's poor needs were poor,
But never will be needed more?

—Forward.

There is much foolishness and downright shiftlessness that call themselves

"faith." People are very much in the habit of shifting on the Lord the responsibility for their poverty and suffering. There was a family discovered by a district nurse in great want and distress. Its members were suffering for almost everything—"for the lack of common sense more than for corn bread," the nurse declared. The walls of the room were covered with devout little mottoes, and the husband and father—a strong, healthy man—sat at home all day, reading his Bible, while his family went hungry. He rebuked the stirring energy of the nurse by declaring the Lord would provide. The man needed more common sense, and not more faith. He did not understand the simplest principles of the Bible, and read the word of God to no profit. While we are taught to pray for our daily bread, we are also instructed that if we will not work neither shall we eat. While the man boasted of having great faith, his conduct proved that he had little or no faith. The root of the whole matter was that the man was lazy and lacked strength, courage, and a sense of his responsibility; yet he had the audacity to call his indolence by the name of "faith." No one should forget that the divinely ordained test of faith is works. God requires us to link with our faith energy, economy, and contentment. With these our lives cannot fail.

PUBLISHERS' ITEMS

"Gospel Praise" has been highly commended by all who have examined it. We only ask for it a careful and impartial examination. It contains three hundred and twenty-two songs, arranged by subjects. If you are contemplating buying new books, you should, by all means, examine "Gospel Praise." It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment, and that the music is of that high order which marks all of Mr. Showalter's selections and compositions.

S. P. Pittman says: "I have examined most of the songs in 'Gospel Praise,' and am glad to say that, with but few exceptions, they are fine; and I predict that the collection will be accorded the popularity it deserves."

W. Boyd says: "From even a hasty examination of the new song book, 'Gospel Praise,' I am very much pleased with it. I consider the arrangement of subjects a good feature, the music excellent, and feel quite confident it will be heartily received."

"After a careful examination of your new book, 'Gospel Praise,' I can cheerfully say that I am more than pleased with it. The sentiment of the hymns is scriptural and soul stirring, while the mechanical appearance of the work does great credit to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. The brethren should all buy this book and learn these beautiful songs, and thus be able to comply with the heavenly admonition to speak to themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs while they sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord." (J. O. Blaine, Portland, Tenn.)

Published in round and shaped notes and in word edition. See price list elsewhere in this issue. You will make no mistake in ordering "Gospel Praise." Our hymn book catalogue will be sent to any address on application for same.

Queries.

Brother Lipscomb: I desire to ask you a question: Can a man hold the office of deacon if he has no children? (1 Tim. 3: 12.) Please give your Bible understanding of it, and oblige. D. M. GREELEY.

I do not think this requires a deacon to have a wife and children; but if he does have them, he must have one wife and be faithful to her, and if he has children, they must be well trained in the Lord.

Brother Lipscomb: I had a talk with a Baptist preacher not long since. I asked him to show me one case where a person was saved before baptism and he read Acts 10: 46, 47. For the benefit of myself and others, will you please give all the light possible on the above verses through the Gospel Advocate? J. H. MACKAY.

These verses say nothing about being saved before baptism. They speak of the miraculous gifts of the Spirit. They were not given to save, but to show God's approval of the reception of the Gentiles into the church of God without circumcision. The Holy Spirit was not given to convert the persons on whom he was bestowed. On Pentecost he was given in this form to the apostles after they had been following Jesus for three years and after they had cast out devils and preached in his name. At Samaria they believed in Christ and were baptized into his name, but the Spirit was not given to them until news of their conversion had reached the apostles at Jerusalem, and they sent down Peter and John, who laid hands on them and bestowed the Holy Spirit. Here the Holy Spirit was given in this miraculous form before they were baptized to encourage and authorize Peter to receive these Gentiles. So when he saw the fruits of this reception of the Spirit, Peter asked: "Can any man forbid the water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" The miraculous gift of the Spirit did not convert them, but was a testimony that God approved what was being done, and the gifts were bestowed upon these early converts to guide them until that which is perfect is come, or until the perfect will of God was revealed.

Brother Lipscomb: I have been reading the Gospel Advocate and studying your gospel quarterlies for a long time, and have read a great many of your explanations on passages of scripture. I also read the Scriptures. I learn from the Scriptures that without faith it is impossible to please God. Now, in Luke 13: 11 I find a woman bowed together for eighteen years, could not so much as lift up herself. Jesus saw her in that condition, called her to him, and cured her. In John 5: 5 I find a man who had an infirmity thirty-eight years. Jesus saw him and cured him. Now, what do these lessons teach? I cannot see any faith, repentance, or baptism in either case; but I can see obedience, and nothing more. Now, as for what I think they teach, I will state in a few words: They are lessons to Christians, not to the world. They teach us that whenever we see suffering humanity and it is in our power to help them, we should not wait to be called upon to do it, but go at once and do all we can to relieve them. Am I correct? If not, please correct me, for I am teaching it that way. Answer by private letter or in the Gospel Advocate, as you think best. Henning, Tenn. T. F. SCOTT.

The passages teach the lesson our brother learns from them. There was no occasion for baptism. It was not ordained to cure fleshly maladies or diseases. These persons may have both been baptized by John. We cannot tell. Jesus often while here in this world bestowed temporal blessings, and even forgave sins, without baptism. As a rule, these blessings were bestowed in response to a manifestation of faith; but it was not always so. Sometimes the blessing was bestowed without faith to show God's mercy to man and his sympathy with those who suffer. In showing his mercy and readiness to help, he teaches us we must do the same way. We are to be merciful as he is merciful, and especially we cannot hope to receive mercy where we show no mercy. These persons may or may not have had faith; it is not said whether or not they had faith. Jesus, who needed not that any should tell him what was in man, knew the hearts of these persons, knew whether they would believe on him if they knew him, and acted as his pity and love dictated. God is merciful to the evil as well as to the good; but he bestows now under his law forgiveness of sins on those who show their faith by doing his will.

Brother Lipscomb: I have been reading a debate conducted by J. R. Graves (Baptist) and J. C. Burruss (Universalist), in which Graves affirms that a part of the human family will be finally lost. This discussion was published about twenty years ago. Dr. Graves, in his seventh letter, page 112, says he will submit every passage in the New Testament in which "aionios" occurs in the original. He then produces seventy-one passages. He says that "aionios" is used in fifty-three of these passages to express the duration of the happiness of the righteous; that in three of them it is applied to God and the Holy Spirit and his attributes; that in one it is applied to the everlasting covenant of grace; in one, to the kingdom of Christ; in three of them where it certainly denotes time unlimited; and that in the seven remaining passages it is applied to the punishment of the wicked. Burruss, in his reply, page 125, denies that Graves has submitted every passage in the New Testament in which "aionios" occurs, but quoted Matt. 28: 20 and Matt. 13: 39 as passages in which Christ speaks of the end of "aionios," and then speaks of a strange eternity that will end. Graves, in his next letter, without directly calling this in question, quotes these same scriptures as passages containing the Greek word "aion" instead of "aionios." In this letter he makes an argument on "aion;" and Burruss, in his reply, cites the same scriptures above cited as passages in which Christ speaks of the end of "aion." Why do you think he quotes and gives reference to these scriptures as passages in which Christ speaks of the end of "aionios" and afterwards cites the same passages to prove that Christ speaks of the end of "aion?" Please comment on this at your earliest convenience in the Gospel Advocate. FLAVIL HALL.

We are not able to say why he used "aion" as "aionios." Mr. Graves' statement, as you quote it, is correct. "Aion," not "aionios," is used in the two verses. "Aion" means an age or period, usually long; but is used to mark any defined period—as a lifetime, a century, or the existence of a nation; a period usually long, but that comes to an end. It is used as multiplied upon itself, as we say "a century of centuries," "an age of ages," meaning by it ages without limit. Examples of this use are found and translated "forever and ever;" literally, "for ages of ages." "Be honor and glory forever and ever"—for ages of ages. (1 Tim. 1: 17; 2 Tim. 4: 18; Rev. 1: 6, etc.) In this multiplication of the word signifying a period, or an age, it is made to carry the idea of infinite duration; but "aionios" always means unlimited time, or eternity. It is applied to the existence of God (Rom. 16: 26), to the duration of happiness, and of the separation of the wicked from God.

CREED REVISION.

The question of creed revision is one of interest to every believer in the Bible. The creed is the statement of the faith of the denomination when it was adopted. The creeds in force now were adopted hundreds of years ago, in an age when biblical knowledge was limited and when an intense partisan spirit prevailed. The impression Bible truth makes upon the heart depends much upon the surroundings and the state of the heart. While some hearts were softened by the gospel, others were embittered. The preaching of the gospel made some cry for mercy; it led others to gnash their teeth and to seek to destroy those who preached it.

Creeds, then, reflect the influence and the religious knowledge of the age and people by which they are adopted. The Presbyterian Confession of Faith was the expression of the faith and intelligence of those who adopted it two hundred and fifty years ago. It was the outgrowth of the teachings of John Calvin a hundred years before, or in 1550. This age was marked by intense partisanship from a combination of religious and political, or national, strife. When political and national feeling is sanctioned and intensified by religious feelings, it is most bitter and unrelenting. Calvin and the formers of these creeds would have been more than human if they had not partaken of the spirit of the age or if their ideas of God and his teaching had not been tinged with their own harsh and bitter feelings.

Calvin, the author of the Calvinistic system, burned Servetus because he was not sound in the doctrine of the Trinity. (While we may excuse Calvin and his compeers personally, as victims of the age in which they lived and of the religious darkness, it adds nothing to their fitness to formulate creeds.) Who would be willing in this age to select men to formulate creed statements for the church of this and succeeding ages who thought it right to burn heretics or convert men by the sword or the power of political governments? While the spirit of the age and country in which they lived and into which they drank may excuse them personally, it increases rather than lessens their unfitness to formulate creed statements for Christians of this and succeeding ages. Points that are controverted are greatly magnified in the minds of the parties to the controversy. The intense and embittered feelings of Calvin tinged his ideas of the character of God and of his dealings with spirits. The questions discussed in that age were magnified in importance. The doctrine of election and predestination was given an importance in his system not given it in the Bible. What is taught concerning it is given as an "obiter dictum," a by-the-way statement made in reaching the conclusions. But they do not constitute a part of the essential faith delivered to man. The circumstances that gave prominence to the questions then have passed away, and none now lay stress on the shades and varieties of the doctrine of election and predestination. No one holds the doctrine as an essential part of the faith, none are disposed to make it a test of fellowship; and if a creed for a church were now to be made, none would desire to emphasize this doctrine as a fundamental truth in the creed.

If they would not now adopt them as part of a creed, why should they perpetuate them from a dark age of the past? Persons who do not believe they are parts of the essential faith are more culpable before God and man in perpetuating them than were those who adopted them. Those who adopted them did believe them essential parts of the faith. Augustine, Calvin, and those who adopted the Westminster Confession of Faith held that those who did not believe these decrees were anathema. They believed the men who did not acknowledge infants guilty and subject to condemnation without baptism were accursed. There was consistency in those who thus believed placing these decrees of God and requiring infant baptism in a creed; but for people who do not hold the belief of those things necessary to true loyalty to God to retain them in a creed and require all teachers of the church to subscribe to them is to condemn themselves. It is to interpose what they believe an error—or, at most, non-essential truth—as a barrier to fellowship in Christ.

The differences that now exist in the theories of predestination and election, or in the meaning of the creed statements of this doctrine, show the futility of men trying to define Bible teaching in plainer language than God defines it. The Bible statements on the subject of predestination are more easily understood than the statements of Augustine, Calvin, or Stuart on the same subjects. The same is true of all creed statements of any Bible subject. Creed statements are made to define the understanding and faith of one party to a controversy. So two evils must surely follow. First, undue importance is given that subject as compared with other subjects of Bible teaching; second, one-sided and extreme views will be presented of the subject. As example of the former of these, the Apostles' Creed makes no mention of the atonement. Some have concluded from this the framers of the creed did not believe in the atonement of Christ. The real meaning is at this time no one called in question the atonement, hence there was no occasion for creed statements on the subject. To give one point of Scripture teaching a place and position above that of others is to destroy the symmetry and harmony of the faith as God has given alike to development of the faith and character of the adherents of the creed. D. L.

Home Reading.

WHAT WINS.

The world has full many a hero;
Go, read what those heroes have done,
And you'll find that though oft they were baffled,
They kept up their courage and won.
They never lost courage in failure,
Giving up, as the weak-hearted will,
But said: "We will try and keep trying,
And conquer all obstacles still."

And this they have done the world over;
Their tasks were accomplished at last
By often-repeated endeavor.
The young oak may bend to the blast,
But it springs to its place when it passes,
And grows to new strength every day,
And in time it stands firm in the tempest,
Whose wrath whirls the tall pines away.

Defeat makes a man more persistent
If the right kind of courage be his;
He determines to conquer, and does it,
And this is what heroism is.
Strive on with a patient endeavor;
The steadfast of purpose will win.
Defeat comes to-day, but to-morrow
May usher the grand triumph in.
—Our Young Folks.

LITTLE BUILDERS OF THE SEA—THE STORY OF THE WONDERFUL MACEO CORAL REEF.

Everybody has heard about coral reefs, and we have all heard their tiny builders held up as models of self-sacrificing industry, toiling away to make an island for somebody to live on. It is very fascinating to think of these little "insects" as working night and day for the good of somebody else. But as a matter of fact, corals are not insects, and they do not toil. They live and grow just as naturally as a tree does; and if they leave a big, hard reef behind them, it is for no other reason than that they could not do anything else if they chose, any more than the tree could help leaving a dead trunk standing after its leaves and fruit are gone.

This summer it was my good fortune to spend two months on the big barrier reefs of the Brazilian coast, and on the Maceo reef I camped for three weeks, studying the multitudes of animals that find their homes here with the corals. This reef is fully three miles long, and in places two-thirds of a mile wide, and all solid coral rock. The corals began their work on some convenient ledge of rock in shallow water, gradually building up to the surface, and the sand washing in behind has kept them always growing outward, where the breakers come in loaded with the little animals and plants that the corals delight in. Thus the reef has become so wide and solid that it is a splendid breakwater for the little sugar boats that run in behind it when the storms come up. My house was located right down on the beach inside the reef. Every morning my neighbors, the fishermen, went out to sea in their jangodas, or native fishing boats, and brought in loads of the fine fish that swarm about the reefs.

So if my readers will accompany me, we will hire one of these fishermen and his jangoda and take a trip out to the great reef. Our jangoda is a curious affair. It is just a narrow raft of small logs that are fastened together with big wooden plugs. There is a high-backed seat in which you sit while our jangoda fairly plows through the water in quick jerks, in response to the strokes of the boatman's pole. The reef is about half a mile off shore, and the water is shallow all the way, because the sand has filled in behind the reef at a great rate. We land on the reef near its northern end and find a firm, flat surface of rock, rising two or three feet above low water, and from one-quarter to one-half a mile wide—surely a mighty piece of work for the mite of an animal that made it.

At first we see no signs of corals. The surface is hard, worn away here and there in shallow pools, and everywhere lobed and cut and carved in little projections all over the surface, that make the reef look as if some great sculptor had been chiseling away at it for his own amusement. We break off one of these lobes and find a hard, white, solid rock that comes off in layers. This is the coralline rock, and is formed by a little incrusting seaweed, that everywhere follows in the wake of the corals, covering the coral rock with its firm, white layers as a splendid protection from the waves. Corals cannot live above the level of the low tides, and this hardy little plant, that braves the waves much higher, completes the work of the corals, and puts a solid surface on the reef high enough for us to land on.

The coralline is a seaweed that grows in the rocks like a lichen, but it takes lime out of the sea water just as the corals do, forming, like them, a hard skeleton of limestone. Underneath the layers of coralline we find cracks and hollowed-out places where curious little crabs and shellfish make their abode. Here, too, are big sea cucumbers that retreat into their well-protected burrows as soon as you disturb them, letting fly a parting shot of sea water as a warning. Everywhere, as we break off the rock, we see little holes running through it, and soon discover the little marine worms that find no rock too hard for them to bore out for their own use. They go through everything, even riddling beautiful, live coral heads, and working great havoc to the reef. Keeping company with the worms in their work of destruction, we find little, slender mollusks that are quite as bad. These little fellows get inside of a coral head when very small and remain there all their lives, eating as they grow, so that you find them completely incased in a prism of rock, with a tiny hole to the exterior, where they once came in, and through which now the waves wash their food.

The reef toward the outer edge becomes more broken, and we find great tide pools that run us away under the rock in huge halls and galleries. Little red and brown crabs scamper away ahead of us, and soon we have to step carefully to avoid crushing the beautiful brown and red sea anemones that cover the rocks in every direction. They form gorgeous linings to all the pools, and are so plentiful over the surface of the reef that it looks fairly alive with color, as if some huge velvet carpet had been let down over the bare rocks. 'Way out on the extreme outer edge of the reef, where nothing else can hang on in the pounding breakers, these little incrusting anemones flourish in the greatest profusion, and form a splendid protection to the old reef against the terrific attacks of the waves. The pools are full of brilliantly-colored fish, some striped with black and yellow, others a brilliant blue, and others as pure a gold as you ever saw in an aquarium. We make for a sheltered break in the reef where the corals thrive best, and here they are in truly tropical profusion. The edge of the reef breaks off sharply, and runs down sheer for twenty feet or more; and all along, as far down as you can see, there is a perfect forest of corals—some growing in great flowerlike clusters; others, in huge bunches of gayly-colored fans or leaves; and others still, in rounded masses, looking like boulders come to life, with a multitude of little animals all over the surface. Here you can really see the corals just as they grow, and you can see the masses of coral rock that are piled up, little by little, until a reef is formed that is worthy to do battle with the fierce Atlantic swells that drive against it unceasingly.

The most striking coral we see is a great branching fellow with enormous cells at the end of each branch, where each little coral animal lives. Its scientific name is "mussa," and one can never forget it after he has seen its magnificent clusters edging the reef all along like some curious, thick-stemmed plant. Its branches are short and very compact, all starting from a common base. They frequently rise to a height of ten feet in the protected lagoons in one great cluster, looking like some queer under-the-water bush, with the lavender-colored animals at the tips of the branches for flowers. Beautiful as it is, the skeleton of this coral is not very solid, and after a while, when the clusters grow up to the surface of the water, they gradually die out, and the waves smash the branches and scatter them over the surface of the reef. These clusters of the mussa are the hiding places of innumerable long, graceful serpent stars, and curious little variegated crabs, that keep company with all sorts of odd marine worms and sea urchins with thick, club-shaped spines. Growing on the branches like a fungus on a tree are the daintiest little corals, thin and disk-shaped. They are a pale green in life and frail and delicate.

Another coral that is a great reef builder grows in rounded, boulder-shaped masses, with very solid coral rock below and small, starlike cells above, which contain the little animals that are so small you can hardly see them, and yet they build up miles and miles of the reef. Others are boulder-shaped, with larger animals that cover the surface like sea anemones. The corals would certainly lose in their race if it were not for their faithful allies, the corallines and anemones, that follow in their path and put a covering over their remains that defies everything. Another enemy of the corals is the iron-jawed sea urchin, that everywhere within reach of the waves buries himself in the rock in neat little holes just big enough to hold him. The sea urchin, when he is so small you could hardly see him, finds some convenient place on the coral rock and settles down there, eating as he grows, until, when he is large, he has nearly buried himself in the rock. You can see that a few thousand of these rock eaters would work havoc with any reef, chewing up in a little while the work of a whole colony of corals for years. But the corals have another friend as well in the person of the little marine worm, that builds his hard, calcareous tubes over the surface of the reef, in many places on top of the coralline layers. These tubes are as hard as iron and are firmly cemented together in great masses. They grow best on the exposed places where the breakers pound the hardest, and leave their fine covering to the reef right where it is most needed.

When the tide is 'way out, crowds of people come to the reef every day for their food. Old men come wading along with fishing poles over their shoulders. They find a fine deep-tide food, and stay there until the incoming tide drives them off, hooking the many-colored fish. Crowds of chattering boys come along with all sorts of devices for luring the big reef lobsters from their cracks in the rock. All kinds and conditions of men are here, armed with long iron hooks for the capture of the savory devilfish in his holes in the rock. Woe be to him if he so much as shows the tip of an arm, for he is speedily dragged forth to make a Brazilian holiday! Then sometimes we see bands of natives chopping out blocks of the coral rock to take ashore and convert into whitewash, much prized because every house in Brazil has to be of a dazzling white.—Prof. Arthur W. Greeley, in Pets and Animals.

HOW TO STOP WORRYING.

"The usual way people set about stopping worry is a wrong one," writes Mary Boardman Page in the September Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If a doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying, the patient is likely to say, impatiently: 'O, doctor, don't I wish that I could? But I cannot. If I could have stopped worrying a year ago, I would not be ill now'—all of which is probably perfectly true. The doctor does not always know how to help him, because both doctor and patient have an idea that it is possible to repress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else.

"Let me illustrate this by a figure. Suppose you were to go into a completely dark room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in buckets and carry it out at the door? Not at all. You would just open the windows and shutters and let in the blessed sunlight. You would replace the darkness with light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worry attitude of mind with the nonworry attitude. This can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let nature have her own perfect way with him."

Discouragement is dangerous. If we begin to yield to it, we will soon become slaves to the mood, and it will bind upon us chains we cannot break. On the other hand, if we resist the feeling as we would any other temptation, we shall grow into a habit of cheerful hope which no pressure or trouble can disturb. The secret of such victoriousness is an abiding trust in God. Its value to a life is incalculable; it makes one a master of circumstances and conditions. In storm and danger, in pain and sorrow, in loss and trial, the heart of him who trusts God is ever at peace and his face ever shines with the holy light of faith.—Exchange.

God cares more for obedience than for talents.—Selected.

GOSPEL ADVOCATE.

Established 1855.

NASHVILLE, TENN., AUGUST 2, 1900.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Single Subscriber, One Year.....	$ 1 50
Single Subscriber, Six Months.....	75
Preachers and Widows, One Year.....	1 00
Sample Copies.....	Free

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Change of Address will be cheerfully made at the request of any subscriber giving post office, county, and State from which the change is to be made, and post office, county, and State to which the paper should go after the change.

Discontinuances. The greater number of subscribers desire a permanent place on our list; indeed, it is the custom of most papers to treat all subscriptions as permanent, and to continue to send the paper after the expiration of the time paid for, unless instructed to the contrary. We shall follow this custom; so if you do not want the paper longer than the time paid for, please state this when you subscribe, or at any time before your subscription expires, and we will promptly discontinue same. If you allow your subscription to fall behind, a request to discontinue must be accompanied by amount to cover arrearage.

Payment for the Advocate, when sent by mail, should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Registered Letter, New York Exchange, or Postal Note. Neither currency nor coin should be sent in a letter, unless registered, and, when so sent, is at the risk of the sender. Have your remittance made payable to the Company, and never to any member of the Company.

Renewals. In renewing, give the name just as it appears on the yellow label, unless it be incorrect, in which case please call our attention to it, and always give the name of the post office to which your paper is sent, as this is the guide by which we are enabled to find your name on our list.

The Date on the Yellow Label on your paper serves you as a receipt, and indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. When you renew, if the date is not changed within three weeks thereafter, please call our attention to it.

Letters for Publication should be addressed to the Gospel Advocate, 232 North Market street, and written on only one side of the sheet.

Editorial.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is often very seriously suggested by the most earnest Christian workers that the pulpit has lost much of its power. It is freely conceded that the world has very little respect for the preacher who seeks to preach it a palatable gospel, but the minister who, like John the Baptist, boldly and fearlessly declares all the counsel of God has as much power as ever before. He "preaches the word" which "is quick and powerful" and "which liveth and abideth forever." Preachers with characters like those of Moses, Elijah, Paul, and Peter will never lose their influence for good. The pulpit loses every time it compromises with the world. It is hardly possible for those whom he is endeavoring to please to have any respect for him. While at Tate Spring last week I had a fine opportunity of observing how many fashionable Christians passed their time at such resorts. Dancing and card playing were unquestionably the most popular amusements. Church members were as prompt in their attendance at the ballroom as were the people of the world; it was not possible to see any difference; and when it came to religious services in the parlor of the hotel on Lord's day, still the uninformed could see no difference. The leader of the ballroom forces sung a solo at the service. It occurred to the writer that the minister, R. G. Patrick, of Marion, Ala., had a very fine opportunity for showing how Christians should be separate from the world at home, abroad, on land or sea. Instead of this, however, he lost the opportunity by dealing in generalities that would not arouse the conscience of the professed follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene who does things away from home that he dare not do at home. Christ and the apostles never made any such compromises with the world. If dancing and card playing are right, then the church should encourage, and not discourage, them. No one will contend that such amusements make one more spiritually minded. To pass by such evils without laying down any principles that cut them off or offering one warning word is not calculated to increase the power of the pulpit for good. The service reminded me of children playing at worship because they could do nothing else on that day. It appeared as a big joke. May God give us all that true courage that will enable us in the fear and love of the truth to speak out firmly and clearly against sin in high places.

The preacher should not feel that he cannot live without his salary. When the preacher feels wholly dependent on the congregation to which he preaches the temptation to compromise with evil is very strong. His wife and children must be fed and clothed. When the worldly pay his salary, the preacher is tempted to pander to them. The worldly associate with him and he becomes infatuated with the vanities of wealth. It is not long until, almost unconsciously to himself, he compromises the truth to please his hearers. It would be far better to make tents, as Paul did, and preach the gospel as opportunity presents itself, than thus to be dependent on the worldly for a living. Preachers are human as are other people. Do not demand of them more than humanity can stand. The faithful ministers should go preaching the gospel and the consecrated children of God should support them as they earnestly declare all the counsel of God.

Speaking of the Mormons, the Christian Guide says: "Their per cent of increase is larger than that of any denomination, and it is due wholly to their persistent personal work. Every Mormon is a preacher and knows what Mormonism is. There are profitable lessons that we can learn from their manner of evangelizing this country. If we loved the cause as we should and were willing to go, as did the apostles, without money and without price to preach the boundless riches of Him who died for us, not many years would pass until the millennium would come. Our missionaries, before they start into the dark corners of the earth, must have a rope tied to them with the end fastened to the treasury of the missionary society, and unless they are assured of a certain amount to go, they do not feel that the Lord has called them to do the work." Our brother editor of the Christian Guide states a truth that needs to be emphasized. The Lord nowhere commands us to wait until a missionary society guarantees us a support. The Lord Jesus Christ is back of the command to go and his promises can never fail us. If the Mormons are accomplishing so much with error, what wondrous things we should accomplish with the truth!

Much has been written on the situation in China. At this writing it is impossible to know the true condition of affairs. Much is guesswork, and one guess is as likely to be correct as another. The Chinese Government has called on the United States to mediate for peace. The latest seems to indicate that the ministers are safe in Peking and are being protected by the Imperial Government. The Government of China proposes in a short time to deliver them safe in Tien-tsin. It is to be hoped that this is true and that an amicable settlement may soon be reached. While the powers should leave nothing undone to protect their citizens, yet they should do nothing from a spirit of greed or revenge. Such a course is unworthy a Christian nation. Christians should seek to free themselves from a selfish and bloodthirsty spirit. Out of all this turbulence God will doubtless bring good to his people.

It is certain that God will use the zealous Christian for the spread of the truth. A brighter day is about to dawn for the religion of Christ. While the American soldier has introduced the vice of drunkenness in the Philippine Islands, yet the active, godly Christian will doubtless soon follow who will show to them the virtues of the Christian. Christians now have an opportunity to take the pure gospel to Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and South Africa. It also seems that China will soon be open to the reception of the truth as never before. The Christian world should display more activity for the evangelization of the world than ever before. A sure sign of the decay of the church is the ceasing of individual Christians to labor for the spread of the gospel of Christ. The conception of the artist given in the story clipped from Forward is most just: "The artist was asked to paint a picture of a decaying church. To the astonishment of many, instead of putting on the canvas an old, tottering ruin, he painted a stately edifice of modern grandeur. Through the open portals could be seen the richly carved pulpit, the magnificent organ, and the beautiful stained-glass windows. Just within the grand entrance, guarded on either side by a 'pillar of the church' in spotless apparel and glittering jewelry, was an 'offering plate' of goodly workmanship for the offerings of the fashionable worshippers. Directly above the 'offering plate,' suspended from a nail in the wall, there hung a very simply-painted square box, bearing the legend: 'Collection for Foreign Missions.' But right over the slot, through which contributions ought to have gone, he had painted a huge cobweb."

CHRISTIAN AND CHURCH GROWTH.

In the consideration of the question of church and personal activity and zeal the Scriptures, as in other things, must constitute our teacher and our rule. In studying the Scriptures their silence as well as their direct teaching must be observed and respected. No one has a right to teach, either positively or negatively, what is not taught in the Scriptures. It is just as sinful to say, "Thou shalt not," where the Bible does not say it as it is to say, "Thou shalt," without Bible authority. Man has no right to give either a positive or negative command where God has given none. God lays down ends that must be attained, conditions that should exist, and he provides means to bring about these ends and conditions. He does not always lay down specific rules as to how far and where the one or the other means for bringing about these ends or for producing these conditions is to be used. The probability is full that specific rules were not given to direct all cases, because the same rules would not apply to all conditions, and applied alike to the various conditions would not produce similar results. All apostles did not follow the same order of work. The other apostles led about a believing wife with them, and some of them forbore working with their hands, I take it, but Paul and Barnabas did neither. They traveled more and Paul was more abundant in labors and sufferings than any of the other apostles. The New Testament record shows James remained long at Jerusalem and tradition says so long as he lived. Paul did not complain of this course of life in James. He seems to have been a settled teacher. Indeed, the personal temperament of the apostles very much regulated the amount of travel and their methods of work. Paul went abroad, before he was converted, to persecute Christians. After he was converted the same earnest zeal and activity caused him to go abroad, almost to the ends of the world, to preach. His temperament led him to places full of danger and difficulty where good could be done.

None of the other apostles were so active in traveling, so self-denying and laborious in their zeal, and so far-reaching in preaching the gospel to all nations as was Paul. The extent of their labors was greatly a matter of personal temperament and activity. The kind of work that Christians do now will greatly arise from natural talent, taste, and temperament. Conversion to Christianity does not change the talent, taste, or temperament; it sanctifies all to the service of God, but in that service each, to work most effectively, must work as his talent and taste lead him. In this direction of work one is not to judge another, so he works, because God has laid down no rule as to how far each shall travel or into what communities each will go. In these matters each is to stand or fall to his own Master. James did not travel far from home. He had a sister, wife, and possibly children. This is said to bring out the thought that all those competent to teach or preach did not and will not travel far from home. Their fidelity as teachers and preachers is not to be measured by the distance they go from home. It will be measured by their self-denying earnestness in teaching the word of God to all wherever they may be, to Christians and to those not Christians.

In the teaching and service of the church we often lose sight of the end. To maintain the worship is not the end. Even if every member attended regularly and punctually, this would not be the end of the teaching, the worship, the service. These are necessary, because without these the end cannot be attained. The end is to excite and secure the active and earnest labor of every member in serving God and teaching and helping humanity. One cannot serve God without helping men. He is to help them spiritually, morally, intellectually, and in a material point of view. The end of all the teaching and training of men in the church is that they may bear fruit in doing good to men. "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2: 14, R. V.) They were to cease to do evil and be zealous in good works. "Faithful is the saying, and concerning these things I will that thou affirm confidently, to the end that they which have believed God may be careful to maintain good works. . . . And let our people also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful." (Tit. 3: 8-14, R. V.) The end of the teaching and the worship is to develop the activity and direct the energies of every member in good works. The first element of true good to others is to bring them into proper spiritual relations to God, for without this no good can be enjoyed. But this spiritual harmony with God must show itself in bringing the mind and thoughts into harmony with the will of God and so direct the bodily energies and activities as to bring all good—spiritual, intellectual, and material good—to all creatures.

I think it a reproach to professing Christians that eighteen hundred years after the preaching of the gospel to the world a child in a Christian land can be unable to find a home in which its physical wants would be supplied and it would be trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If Christians were fully taught that the end of all true religion, the pure and undefiled religion of Christ, is to visit the widow and orphan in their affliction and while doing this to keep unspotted from the world, the work would be different. Churches and the services of religion are God's ordained means essential to bring about the earnest and faithful labors of all for the amelioration and elevation of every member of the human family. Work, labor, the spending of time and means to this end is the design of all the service God requires of man. In doing this service he is trained and fitted for higher and holier associations and labors himself. He is molded in character into the likeness of God and is thereby fitted to breathe the atmosphere of heaven and enjoy the companionship of God and his holy angels forever.

But the work of the church is to train its members for doing good to the world. The moral and spiritual training needed for this work is furnished in the Bible, and in this work the intellectual growth is promoted. Now, this end of the church is lost sight of in its workings. The means are substituted for the end. The effort of churches to-day is to secure a compliance with the means as the end. Where is the church that seeks to lead its members into active work in doing good to humanity, either in its united capacity or as individuals? Neither preachers nor elders direct their teachings to this end. Either class, or those that are neither that would teach along these lines and lead out into this practical work, would greatly help the church. The teachers of the churches ought to be practical men, men that have the faculty for doing the work God has laid out for them and of leading others into it. This is the only way to permanently interest men in the church. It cannot be done by theorizing. They cannot be interested in hearing and never doing. Work ought to be engaged in that will employ the talents, the means, and the time of every member. This is the only way to really and permanently interest a congregation. Preaching alone cannot do it. God never intended it should. Teaching and preaching are needed all the time, but they will become uninteresting and fruitless if they do not give practical work to employ the business faculties of men and women. Hence, the constant sermonizing by elders, pastors, or evangelists that is not combined with earnest and active work of the members will pall and grow uninteresting. It is feeding the mind and the heart without taking the exercise needed to assimilate the food to the needs of the heart. It will produce moral and spiritual dyspepsia that destroys true health of soul.

To place young and inexperienced men in the management of a congregation is folly. They, with all their capacities, must be used under the direction and guidance of older and experienced heads and trained hearts. If their activity and energy are not used in proper channels, they will be used in evil ways. It is a hopeful sign to see dissatisfaction with the present lifeless condition of the churches; but the remedy will not be found in changing forms, while the earnest, self-denying, working spirit is absent. All the evils have come through a lack of the spirit of earnest devotion and practical working interest to honor God and save man, and any effort to cure the evils without restoring the spirit must prove a failure. Every church and every member ought to have a practical, working interest in the salvation of every soul, in caring for and training every child within reach, and in caring for and helping every needy and suffering fellow-man. This is the practical work of the Christian religion, and men can only grow by practicing what they profess. "Pure religion and undefiled . . . is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Practice makes perfect. "Faith is made perfect by works." When we fail to work, faith dies and we turn back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world.

D. L.

THE ONE BODY.

As there is one body, composed of many members, so there is one church, since Paul teaches very conclusively that the body is the church and the church is the body: "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." (Eph. 1: 22, 23.) "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preëminence." (Col. 1: 18.) While many members compose this one body, all the members have not the same office: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." (Rom. 12: 4, 5.) As there are many members, so there is but one body: "But now are they many members, yet but one body." (1 Cor. 12: 20.)

In this one body the members are mutually dependent one on the other. The hand cannot get along without the foot, nor the eye without the ear. Even so the individual Christian cannot get along without the assistance of his fellow-servants in the vineyard of the Lord. It is not possible for any man to live unto himself. No matter how much he does for the church, the church gives back to him more than he gives to it. As Paul was "a debtor to all men," so every Christian is a debtor to all other Christians and to the extent of his ability to make the world better. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

No Christian has a right to be indifferent to the necessities of others. Every man should feel under obligation to the world to make it better from his having lived in it. If one Christian has the right not to "present his body a living sacrifice," then every other Christian has the same privilege. Every man is under the most lasting obligations to use the talent that God has given him in the elevation of the world. Every member of the body has its function to perform. Because a man is only one in the great ocean of humanity is no reason why he should fail to use the gift with which God has blessed him for the betterment of the human race. Because only one, no one has the liberty to lead the life of the libertine, thereby becoming so much moral poison. If the little drop of water in the ocean could reason, it might say: "I am only a little tiny drop in this great body of water, so I will convert myself into so much poison." On the same ground every other drop of water in the ocean could justify itself in becoming poison. Thus the whole ocean would become poison. So in the great surging sea of humanity no one has a right to lead a life of indifference and shame, thereby dragging others down to hell with him. If the whole Christian world should act as do some professed Christians, it would not be long till the gospel would cease to be preached and all the fountains of benevolence would be dried up. It may help us to understand how helpful we may be to one another to conceive that one stands solitary and alone in the Christian world. If all the streams of Christian influence were to cease to flow, if all the helpers in the vineyard were to cease work, if prayers should cease to rise as a sweet incense to the throne of God, how lonely and dreary one would feel! In the work of saving souls we can never fully realize just how helpful and useful our fellow-laborers are to us. As a starless night is dreary, so would this world be without any workers but self.

We should not be too ready to condemn, to pick flaws in the work of our fellow-helpers. It is easy to find fault with the best efforts of others, while we could not do half so well in the execution of Christian duties ourselves. Christian workers are too prone to criticize the efforts of their associates. Where we should expect nothing but sympathy and cooperation, too often we receive nothing but frowns and carping criticism. This is unjust and cruel. If we withhold our approval from the work of our fellow-laborers till perfect, we will never speak encouragingly of it. Where would we stand if God were to pass sentence on our work in the same manner? Only one perfect being has lived in this world: the Lord Jesus Christ lived a sinless and spotless life for about thirty years.

When the Lord sends a great man into the world to hasten on his work with greater rapidity we should rejoice greatly that we have so efficient a helper. His eloquent sermons and earnest prayers do not detract in the least from the work of others, but are the rather helpful to it. Envy and jealousy do look so little and mean in a Christian. The more helpers in the church, the more work can we do.

While no one should exalt himself by feeling that his work is so very important that God cannot do without him, yet, on the other hand, he should not depreciate his work by claiming he can do no good. God can make the work of the faithful man abound more and more. It is only those who appear little in their own estimation that the Lord can use advantageously in his work. Let no man "think of himself more highly than he ought to think." "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Little by little and step by step we make progress in the kingdom of God. We should never despise the day of small things, but ever be ready to do whatever we can, small or great, in the kingdom of God. Faithful labor will not return unto us void.

J. C. M'QUIDDY.

A brother from Kentucky has sent a check for five hundred and fifty dollars ($550) for the Fanning Orphan School, with the prayer that it will do good and the request that his name be not published. Without much effort the School has now nearly five thousand dollars in hand and promised toward the buildings. This is the way Christians ought to give, not wait to be begged. The School needs fifteen thousand dollars to put up and furnish the needed buildings. Will not brethren furnish the remainder without the expense and example of being begged personally for it? We would all feel much better if we would cheerfully and gladly do such work for the Lord.

D. L.

Growth out of self is growth toward Christ.—Selected.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries are limited to 250 words and signature. Poetry cannot be printed. Obituaries exceeding 250 words will be reduced to the limit, unless accompanied by one cent per word for the excess.—Editors.]

HARDIN.

Another lamb has been gathered into the fold; a radiant spirit given to human form has returned to the Lord. Bobbie A. Hardin, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Hardin, died on January 8, 1900, being eight years, two months, and five days old. He was a bright and intelligent little boy and was the joy and comfort of the home circle; but God, through his infinite wisdom and who doeth all things for the best, saw fit to take him above, leaving sadness and disappointment behind. Let it be a happy thought to us that Bobbie is in the hands of him who doeth all things well. We cannot call him back to us, but we may go where he has gone. O how sweet it will be to meet our loved ones when life's troubles are all over! Brother and sister, little Bobbie awaits you on the other shore. Let us all strive to gain that home. It will not be long until we meet him again at the great reunion in our Father's house. E. F.

ANDERSON.

Mrs. Mary J. Anderson, wife of J. J. Anderson, of this place, died at their home on Tuesday, July 10, 1900. Mrs. Anderson was taken ill in May, last, with la grippe, and had lingered since that time, being many times at the point of death. She united with the church of Christ four years ago and was baptized by Brother Dunn, she and her husband at the same time. She was fifty-six years of age and had lived a life which will long be remembered—full of kind words and good deeds, doing what her hands found to do for the Master. She leaves four children, three grandchildren, and a loving husband to mourn her sad departure; but they realize the fact that she has gone the way of all the earth and that all things work together for good to those who love the Lord. The entire community extend to them a sympathizing heart and a hand to help bear the burden of their sorrows in this hour of deep bereavement.

WILLIAM THURMAN.
McMinnville, Tenn.

MANSELL.

Sister Clara Mansell died on May 1, 1900. She started alone that morning to Jonesboro, Tex., a distance of twenty-five miles, to engage a school for the ensuing term. In attempting to cross a small stream which was swollen from recent rains she was drowned. Her body remained under water not more than one hour. Sister Clara was twenty-eight years old and a teacher of no mean ability. The church of Christ at Hamilton, Tex., lost one of its strongest supporters in Sister Clara's death. She often put to silence the gainsayers and heretics. She was well versed in God's word and lived up to her knowledge as much as is in mortal to do. Her quiet, unassuming, Christian character will continue to influence the world for time to come. She was my almost constant companion for three years, and without hesitation I can say I never knew one who had more faith in God's promises and who looked upon death with more resignation than she. For me she,

Quality

It is the high quality of Royal Baking Powder that has established its great and world-wide reputation.

Every housewife knows she can rely upon it; that it makes the bread and biscuit more delicious and wholesome—always the finest that can be baked.

It is economy and every way better to use the Royal, whose work is always certain, never experimental.

There are many imitation baking powders, made from alum. They may cost less per pound, but their use is at the cost of health.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

through love, has lightened many a toll and made sweet much that was bitter by her encouraging words. Her invalid mother and several brothers and sisters survive her, and may God help them and all of us to so live that we may look upon death as she did. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

NANNIE Y. TANT.
Hamilton, Tex.

WILKS.

Again death has been in our midst. On the morning of June 6, 1900, the messenger came and gently closed the eyes of Sister Nancy Elinor Wilks to earth and earthly things, that they might awake with renewed brilliancy in the eternal world beyond. Sister Wilks was the daughter of James Spivey, and was born on September 15, 1826, in Houston County, Ga., and was married on September 5, 1846, to T. D. Wilks, of Sumter County, Ga. To this union were born six sons and two daughters, all of whom survive their parents, the father and husband having died in 1887. In the year 1850 the family moved from Sumter County, Ga., to Lowndes County, Ga., where they continued to reside until death. Sister Wilks was reared by Baptist parents and united with the Baptist Church at an early age. After moving to Lowndes County she heard the gospel in its purity and in 1869 she renounced all creeds and doctrines of men and took the Bible, and it alone, for the rule of her faith and practice, and for the last thirty years she has held fast to the faith that was delivered to the saints. The loved ones left behind who are out of Christ I would admonish, Obey him, that you may have a right to the tree of life; and to those in Christ I would say: Be faithful to your trust, that you may receive the crown in the world beyond. W. A. CAMERON.

Valdosta, Ga.

YOUNG.

Oscar B. Young was born on February 12, 1858; was married on February 6, 1879; obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Brother Jesse Sewell in 1876; and died on June 14, 1900. Thus ends the life of a useful and highly respected Christian man. He died at his home, near Watertown, Tenn. It is admitted by all that the people of this community suffer a heavy loss. He leaves a wife and an adopted son of his immediate family, besides a host of relatives and numerous friends, to mourn his untimely departure. Brother Young lived a member of the church of God for a long time and died in the triumphs of a living faith, in full hope of immortality. His influence as a citizen and a Christian was and is felt by many, inasmuch as he was a "lively stone" in the temple of the Lord. All that knew him admired him for his kind words and generous deeds. He was always ready to help the poor and put sunshine into their homes. Much of his time was given in seeing that the gospel was carried to the poor—those that "hunger and thirst after righteousness." A large audience attended his burial services, thus showing their appreciation of him. I delivered a talk from 2 Cor. 5: 17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature;" and emphasized the importance of being in Christ. All that are left to mourn their loss are admonished to read God's word and shape their lives accordingly, that they may enter the glad city of God. C. M. PULLIAS.

Lebanon, Tenn.

YOUNG.

The life of another good man has been taken from the earth—that of Brother John Young. Brother Young was born on February 6, 1836; was married on February 22, 1857; obeyed the gospel about the year 1870; and died on June 27, 1900. Just two weeks from the time of the death of his son, Oscar B. Young, that dreaded disease, pneumonia, seized him and in four days proved fatal, inasmuch as it claimed its victim. He was an elder in the church of God for quite a while and an efficient teacher and instructor, as well as a God-fearing man and a humble Christian. He was also a member of the County Court. Brother Young seemed to delight in making peace with his fellow-creatures without going to law, thus relying greatly upon the Savior's promise: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." He leaves a wife, two sons, and one daughter, besides his numerous relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. His death is a loss in many ways, but we must suffer it to be so now, for we hope to meet again where we shall enjoy the haven of rest. It was my privilege to deliver a discourse at his burial to a very large audience from the text: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." (Eph. 2: 8.) The idea of faithfulness upon our part was impressed. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Again: "Sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Lebanon, Tenn. C. M. PULLIAS.

NORTHCUT.

On June 15, 1900, the home of Brother and Sister L. H. Northcut was shrouded in gloom by the death of their youngest son, Errett, who would have been twenty years old in one month. While it is so sad and disappointing to lose our loved ones when they are so young and the prospects of their future success are so bright, there is much in the life of our young brother for which we should be very thankful and that is calculated to dispel much of the sorrow from our hearts. As a son, he was devoted to his parents, loving them with the very tenderest of affection. He heeded the instruction of his superiors and grew up loyal to the truth of God's word. He obeyed the gospel when but a child and was faithful in his devotion to God. As a brother, he was kind and unselfish with the other children; as a pupil, he was studious and obedient, always gaining the love of his teacher. He was of an amiable disposition and was loved and respected by all who knew him. We cannot understand why we should have to pass under the rod of affliction that so crushes our hearts, but "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." During the day when a storm cloud obscures the sun we know the sun is still shining and that, however dark the cloud, it has a silver lining. So by faith we see beyond the darkest gloom of sorrow and affliction the sunshine of God's eternal love. "Let us not look at the things that are temporal, but at the things that are eternal." With the deepest sympathy we pray for our dear brother and sister and Brother Tom and Brother D., who mourn the loss of Errett. May God help them bear patiently the burden of grief now upon them.

J. R. STUBBLEFIELD.

ARMOR.

The subject of this sketch was born on March 20, 1813, and died at Hickory Flat, Miss., on July 8, 1900; aged eighty-seven years, three months, and eighteen days. When about fifteen years of age she became a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which communion she lived until she was twenty-seven years of age, when, that her whole family might be united in one body, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she remained a consistent member until 1880. In her sixty-first year she determined to lay aside all human names and wear only the name of that dear Savior whom she loved so well and tried so long and faithfully to serve and honor. Seventy-two years a follower of Christ and for many years an invalid, the word of the Lord was her constant companion and counselor. Of a deeply devotional nature, she communed often and earnestly with her Savior in prayer, whence she gained strength and courage for the long journey and many trials of life. She always realized that he was a "present help in every time of need." Her only child died early in life, but she became a mother to a goodly number of boys and girls, and she trained them to lives of usefulness and consecration to the service of God. She lived to see the most of them happily in the fold of Christ and leading useful and honorable lives. She was married to our beloved brother, J. B. Armor, in 1859, to whom she was truly a helpmeet, becoming a mother to his little motherless boy when he was but four years old, whom she so taught and trained in body, mind, and soul that he stands to-day one of the truest and most efficient ministers in the church of Christ in Mississippi. The tribute he paid to her memory as he stood beside her coffin, as between his choking sobs he recalled her deeds of kindness, her tender care, and her wise counsel as she led his motherless feet into the path of purity and godliness, did her memory more honor than any monument that could be erected by the hands of men. For many years she was ready and waiting for the call which would free her from the pains and ills of this life, that she might be "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Her aged husband still lingers among us, and we pray that the divine hand may sustain him in his loneliness during his remaining years and that he may continue a faithful leader among the people of God.

W. A. CRUM.

LOGUE.

The congregation at old Philadelphia, in Warren County, Tenn., was for many years one of the strongest and best-known churches in this mountain district. The influence of this congregation for good was felt in all this country and in many distant communities. This widespread influence was largely attributable to the efficiency of its eldership and the intelligence, consecration, and zeal of its membership. Brother A. G. Logue was for many years the most active elder in this congregation and contributed as much as or more than any one else to its prosperity and usefulness. I considered him as nearly the scriptural model for an elder as any I ever knew. No man, possibly, was more faithful to the word of the Lord or more devoted to his cause than he. Like all elders should do, Brother Logue gave much attention to the development of the young members. He was instrumental in starting more young men out to preach than any other man I have known. After the congregation at Philadelphia disbanded, he became an elder in the church of Christ at Morrison, Tenn., and there continued his good work until his death. This holy man of God was born on December 31, 1830. He obeyed the gospel when about seventeen years old, being the first male to confess Christ at McMinnville after the church of Christ was planted there. He was married to Mary A. Rutledge on February 25, 1857, whom he survived only four days. After a short illness he passed away from earthly labors to rest on April 16, 1900. Mary A. Rutledge was born on January 5, 1831; was married to Brother Logue on February 25, 1857; and died on April 12, 1900. She became a Christian in her girlhood and most faithfully performed her duty in the various relationships of life. She was a strong, plain, humble, sensible woman. She and Brother Logue fought the battles of life together for forty-four years. They reared only two children. Brother S. R. Logue, formerly a member of the faculty of the Nashville Bible School, was their firstborn. Their highest aspiration for him was that he might give himself wholly to the preaching of the gospel. Miss Dove, their only daughter, lived with and tenderly cared for them in their old age. These old people had a plain, humble home, but one that had a peculiar charm for the pure and pious. There was no worldly ambition there. Their citizenship was in heaven and their hearts and their treasure were there. Noble saints of God! We shall never enjoy again on earth their holy conversation and precious Christian love and hospitality, but on the eternal shores we hope to meet them and share with them the glory of God's children forevermore.

W. H. SUTTON.

The Nashville Bible School.

Instruction is given in English, Latin, Greek, German, French, Mathematics, Natural and Physical Sciences, Logic, Rhetoric, etc. The School does both academic and collegiate work. Every student is required to study and recite one lesson daily in the Bible. Ninety-nine dollars will pay for board and tuition for a young man; one hundred and seventeen dollars will pay for board and tuition for a girl. One can receive daily instruction in learning to sing from notes or in elocution by paying one dollar extra per term, two dollars per session. Send to the School for catalogue.

Has Eight Colleges.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is well known in the business college work, will on May 1 open a well-equipped business college in Montgomery, Ala. Professor Draughon already has flourishing business colleges established at Nashville, St. Louis, Savannah, Little Rock, Fort Worth, Galveston, and Shreveport. See his ad. elsewhere in this issue, and write for a catalogue at either place.

Peoples & Morgan's School,

FAYETTEVILLE, TENN.

A training school for boys. Nondenominational. Thorough preparation for college or business. Healthful location. Fine Library. Good Dormitories. Board in family, $10 per month; in dormitories, $6. Tuition, $5. Next term begins August 22. Write for circular to the principals,

R. H. PEOPLES,
R. K. MORGAN.

THE MOONEY SCHOOL,

FRANKLIN, TENN. W. D. MOONEY, A.M., Principal.

Its boys enter ten universities on certificate.

Every advantage offered. Discipline firm.

Send for catalogue before choosing your school.

Refers to any of the local pastors.

Has educated the sons of Supreme Judges, Congressmen, and many other distinguished men.

Ward Seminary For Young Ladies.

Nashville, Tennessee.

35th year begins September 20.

"An Ideal Christian Home." Courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Certification to Wellesley and Bait. Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Full Literary Course with Music, Art, Elocution, $350 to $500. Catalogue.

Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn.

Regent—Rev. R. A. Young, D.D., LL.D.

Principals } MISS HOOD,
 } MISS HERON.

"The Ideal College Home of the South."

Suburban and city life combined. Electric cars to north entrance. Attractions of park persuade to outdoor exercise. Eight schools in the hands of skilled specialists. Schools of music, art, and elocution employ methods of best Conservatories in this country and abroad. Diplomas conferred by schools. Lecture courses studiously selected. Best lectures, concerts, recitals, etc., IN CITY, liberally patronized. Christian influences. Students attend church of choice in city. Send for handsomely illustrated blue and bronze catalogue, and other college literature. Students from thirty-six States.

MONTEAGLE The Great Southern Chautauqua Assembly and Summer Schools. TOP OF THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS.

Ideal summer resort in its accessibility, inexpensiveness, wholesome surroundings, delightful days and nights. Summer Schools, under ablest professors, in almost every branch—as Bible, Music, Expression, etc. Special feature this year: a Training or Method School for Primary Sunday School Teachers, with no charge.

OVER TWO HUNDRED LECTURES, ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.,

for this summer's instruction and pleasure. For full announcements or information, address

W. R. PAYNE, MGR.,

NASHVILLE, TENN

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Though "New England" in name, it is national in reputation—yes, international, for it has proved the fallacy of the necessity for foreign study to make a finished musician or elocutionist.

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Mus. Direc.
All particulars and Catalogue will be sent by FRANK W. HALE, Gen. Man., Boston, Mass.

DICKSON NORMAL COLLEGE.

BOTH SEXES.

Strong faculty. Thorough instruction. Commemorable buildings. Most delightful and healthful location. Splendid advantages in the practical and Common School branches. Special advantages to young ladies and those desiring to teach. Rates lowest of any first-class school in the State. For handsome 48-page catalogue, address T. B. LOGGINS, Dickson, Tenn.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, FRANKLIN, TENN.,

Opens a session September 4, 1900. The location is beautiful, free from malaria, and beyond the fever district. The buildings are large, airy, and the campus is beautiful and shady. Fourteen American and European teachers. Unsurpassed advantages in Music, Art, Elocution, and Literature. Branches. 75 boarding students last year. Write for our handsome 48-page catalogue and special rates for 1900-1901.

Fanning Orphan School

was established 16 years ago by Mrs. C. Fanning, and is catered to girls in the branches taught and High Schools and to train for domestic duties. The school is five miles east of Nashville, Tenn. Pupils coming by train get off at Nashville. Terms very low. For further information, address

Fanning Orphan School, ROUTE NO. 1, NASHVILLE, TENN.

POTTER COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Bowling Green, Kentucky.

One of the most beautiful places in the world. High, healthful, and inspiring. The finest accommodations. Thorough and progressive. Pupils from twenty-seven States. Twenty teachers. Come and see, or send for Catalogue.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

Courses for Degrees, with Electives; high standard. Also Com'l and Prep' Courses. Library 22,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline; six Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Aid scholarships. Special terms to clergymen's sons and candidates for ministry. Students from 22 States and countries. Catalogue, with views, free. Address JULIUS D. DREHER, President.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

CONSULTATION FREE. LITERATURE FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Shackleford & Shackleford, OSTEOPATHS,

Graduates of the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Missouri.

Telephones: Office, 1717; Residence, 1570.

WILLCOX BUILDING. COR. CHURCH & HIGH STREETS. NASHVILLE, TENN.

BLYMNER BELL CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. (Mention this paper.)

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church and School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

General News.

A dispatch from Shanghai reports that the losses of the Chinese in the fighting at Tien-tsin were over three thousand.

Among the exhibits at the Paris Exposition is a set of teacups, the cheapest of which is valued at six hundred dollars.

The low price of wheat and the light demand for flour from Southern points have caused a reduction of twenty cents per barrel in the local market.

Heavy rains in Montgomery County, Tenn., did great damage to crops, washing the hillsides and leaving the lowlands covered with water to the depth of several feet.

Within the past twenty years the number of American and English female physicians practicing in Asiatic countries has increased from twenty to two hundred and twenty.

The President has sent Mr. W. W. Rockhill as special commissioner to China. Mr. Rockhill is familiar with the country, having formerly served in the United States Legation at Peking.

Governor McMillin has offered a reward of one hundred dollars for the arrest and conviction of Silas Bledsoe, of Shelby County, Tenn., who is charged with murdering his wife on July 12, 1900.

Continuous rain in many parts of Middle Tennessee prevents the thrashing of wheat, which is being spoiled in the shock. Much will be lost, and what is being thrashed comes to market in bad condition.

The burial of Mrs. Gladstone in Westminster Abbey recalls the fact that this national distinction has been granted in recent times to only two others of her sex—Lady Palmerston, in 1869, and Lady Augusta Stanley, in 1876.

After a long period of imprisonment, which he endured more like a ferocious beast than like a human being, Geronimo, one of the most blood-thirsty Indians that ever figured in history, has gone stark mad. He is a prisoner at Fort Sill, O. T.

The government's holdings of gold reached the highest point in its history and amounted to $427,498,482, including the lawful reserve of $150,000,000. The next highest amount was $427,238,600, which was in the government vaults on May 2, 1900.

Yellow fever has broken out in the barracks of the Seventh United States Cavalry and the First United States Infantry in Pinar del Rio, Cuba. There have been nine deaths during the present month and eleven cases are now under treatment in the hospitals.

Coal has recently been discovered in various parts of Algeria, as well as several seams of lignite, and although the quality cannot be compared to Welsh, it certainly is not inferior to some Scotch coals, which are exported there in large quantities for use in the interior.

The Chinese Minister received a dispatch from Sheng, the director of railroads and telegraphs at Shanghai, stating that the foreign ministers are to be sent from Peking to Tien-tsin under escort; also that the Imperial Government has not only been protecting them, but has supplied them with food.

The Postmaster General has made public the report of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Bristow, who investigated the Cuban postal frauds. Mr. Bristow finds that Neely's embezzlements aggregated at least $131,713, and says he was justified in recommending the removal of Director General Rathbone.

Mount Azuma, near Bandansen, Japan, which was the scene of a volcanic disaster in 1888, broke into eruption on Tuesday, July 17, 1900. Two hundred persons were killed or injured, several villages were engulfed by the streams of lava from Mount Azuma, and great damage was done in adjacent districts.

Colonel Willcocks, the commander of the relief column in Ashanti, West Africa, describes his entrance into Kumassi, on July 15, 1900, as presenting a scene of horror and desolation, burned houses and putrid bodies being visible on all sides. He adds that the native soldiers were too weak to stand and that the British officers thanked God for the relief, as a few more days, they declared, would have seen the end.

China proper is about half the size of the United States, leaving out Alaska and the Indian Territory, and has about five and one-half times the inhabitants. The Chinese Empire is about as large as the United States, including Alaska and adding Mexico. It contains close to six times as many inhabitants as the United States. It is nearly one million square miles larger than all Europe and contains about the same population.

There were but five million three hundred thousand people in America when this century opened. France had five times as many people; Germany, and even Australia, had four times America's population; Italy had three times as many, and so had Great Britain; even Spain had double our number of people, and little Portugal was almost our rival in numbers. We have more people now than any European nation except Russia, which alone leads us.

From a shrub called "yule," growing wild in Central Mexico, a new substitute for India rubber has recently been produced. The bark and wood are ground up and macerated with gasoline, oil of turpentine, naphtha, or some other hydrocarbon solvent, and the gum thus extracted resembles crude rubber. It is free from impurities and can readily be manufactured into various commercial forms. The shrub yields forty per cent of its weight in gum.

The British Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Lord Salisbury, has notified the United States Ambassador at London, Joseph H. Choate, that it is impossible to accept the evidence so far submitted by the Chinese, or that transmitted by the United States, regarding the safety of the foreign ministers at Peking, and that until their safety is thoroughly established the British Government will be unable to discuss any question of mediation or kindred measures.

In a dense fog in the Irish Channel the Cunard line steamer Campania, en route from New York for Liverpool, struck the Liverpool bark Emblem, bound for New Zealand, amidships, cutting her in twain. The Emblem sunk immediately. Seven of the crew were rescued, but it is believed the other eleven members of the ship's company, including the captain, were drowned. The Campania had her bows stove in, but she arrived at Liverpool safely, five and a half hours late.

BEHR BROTHERS' UPRIGHT PIANOS.

WITHOUT A RIVAL. THE PERFECTION OF UPRIGHT MAKES.

CHICKERING GRANDS

Are Superior to all Others. These Celebrated Makes can only be Found in the Wareroom of

FRANK G. FITE, Sole Agent,
531 & 533 Church St. NASHVILLE, TENN.

American National Bank, OF NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Capital, - $1,000,000.00.

W. W. BERRY, PRESIDENT. A. H. ROBINSON, VICE PRESIDENT. N. P. LESUEUR, CASHIER

In South Africa General Dewet has again succeeded in cutting off Lord Roberts' communication, both by rail and telegraph, and has captured one hundred of the Highlanders. The story of the Federal commander's bold raid comes in the form of a telegram from General Forester-Wilder, Cape Town, Sunday, July 22, 1900. Lord Roberts reports to the War Office that Gen. Archibald Hunter's command was heavily engaged on July 24, 25, 1900, in the hills south of Bethlehem. The Boers were strongly intrenched and fought stubbornly throughout July 24 and compelled the British to retire from some of their positions, with about fifty casualties.

Writing on the city of Peking, the London Engineer says that the walls of the Tartar City are of an average height of fifty feet, but portions of the north wall reach the height of sixty-one feet. Their average width is about forty feet, but they have been built so irregularly that in places a width of fifty-seven feet is found; in others, a width of only twenty-two feet. The outer face of the wall is perpendicular, while its inner face slopes, in some places very considerably. Parapets are erected on both inner and outer faces of the wall, that on the latter being loop-holed and crenelated. At intervals of about fifty or sixty yards are large buttresses, every sixth one being of much larger size than the others; the smaller ones are from fifteen feet to twenty feet square.

Surgeon General Sternberg received a report from Surgeon R. G. Ebert, of the United States Army, dated Nome Harbor, Alaska, June 29, 1900, which gives the details of the conditions existing at the place. He says that within two or three weeks the population had increased from twenty-seven thousand to eighty thousand, with tents and buildings irregularly located along the beach. The sanitary conditions are very crude, in the first place, and with the influx of the new population have become much worse. He describes a horrible condition existing, as there is no method of cleaning up the town and no provision for the destruction of accumulations of garbage and filth. Reports of the cases of enteric fever vary from one hundred and seventy-five to seven hundred. There have been thirteen cases of smallpox and one death.

The Department of State has made public the Chinese appeal for mediation and the President's reply. Minister Wu brought to the department a copy of the identical cablegram sent out by Sheng to the powers, repeating the Chinese assurances as to the safety of the legation up to July 18, 1900. This cablegram was at once communicated to the President at Canton, O., and the following is his reply: "The President of the United States to the Emperor of China—Greeting: I have received Your Majesty's message of July 19, 1900, and am glad to know that Your Majesty recognizes the fact that the Government and people of the United States desire of China nothing but what is just and equitable. The purpose for which we landed troops in China was the rescue of our legation from grave danger and the protection of the lives and property of Americans who were sojourning in China in the enjoyment of rights guaranteed them by treaty and by international law. The same purposes are publicly declared by all the powers which have landed military forces in Your Majesty's empire. I am to infer from Your Majesty's letter that the malefactors who have disturbed the peace of China, who have murdered the Minister of Germany and a member of the Japanese Legation, and who now hold besieged in Peking those foreign diplomats who still survive, have not only not received any favor or encouragement from Your Majesty, but are actually in rebellion against the imperial authority. If this be the case, I most solemnly urge upon Your Majesty's government (1) to give public assurance whether the foreign ministers are alive, and, if so, in what condition? (2) to put the diplomatic representatives of the powers in immediate and free communication with their respective governments and to remove all danger to their lives and liberty; (3) to place the imperial authorities of China in communication with the relief expedition, so that cooperation may be secured between them for the liberation of legationaries, the protection of foreigners, and the restoration of order. If these objects are accomplished, it is the belief of this government that no obstacles will be found to exist on the part of the powers to an amicable settlement of all the questions arising out of the recent troubles, and the friendly good offices of this government will, with the assent of the other powers, be cheerfully placed at Your Majesty's disposition for that purpose."

If You Are Tired, Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. M. H. Henry, New York, says: "When completely tired out by prolonged wakefulness and overwork, it is of the greatest value to me."

Church News.

ARKANSAS.

Chester, July 22.—I preached here last night to a very good audience. To-night I will begin a meeting at Mountainburg, and from there I will come back here and preach a few days and then go to Caulksville. On August 22, 1900, I will begin a debate with G. W. Derryberry (Adventist), at Leader, I. T. May God bless the faithful.
J. W. TOWRY.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Indianola, July 27.—The writer has just closed a six-days' discussion at Scipio, with S. B. Redwine (Missionary Baptist). The debate was well attended and everything passed off quietly. Four young people made the good confession at the close of the debate and were baptized into the one body, and two others who had previously been baptized took membership with the brethren here. Much interest seemed to be manifested in God's word by those outside the one body. Brethren, let us labor and pray for the dissemination of God's truth in destitute places. To God be all the praise.
W. P. JONES.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Hammon, July 19.—We received "Christian Hymns" just in time for our meeting. Brother John S. Barker did the preaching. He is from near Brother T. L. Weatherford's home, in Alabama, where Brother J. C. McQuiddy preached when this scribe obeyed the gospel, twenty years ago in August. Brother Barker is a true gospel preacher, not afraid to declare the whole counsel of God. It takes a brave gospel preacher to face these Western people. Many of them are kind and willing to hear the truth, but some fear neither God nor man. But our meeting was a success in many ways. We only had one baptism, but that brother's influence for good will be the means of getting his neighbors to come out and hear the truth. We organized with twenty members close enough to attend Lord's day meetings. O, if we had true preachers that would come out in this frontier country, we could take it for Christ! I have been here eighteen months and have only seen two gospel preachers; but the field is white, ready for harvest. Who will come over and help us?
S. J. TIPPENS.

TEXAS.

Sweet Home, July 27.—At this writing I am eighty miles from home in a meeting near Sweet Home, in Lavaca County. I have been troubled for more than a month with a mild form of sore eyes and have been able to write but little or do anything else with any satisfaction. Our Berclair meeting embraced the second and third Lord's days in this month. Brother C. W. Sewell, of Corpus Christi, did all the preaching, except an afternoon talk by the writer on Lord's day. Opposition has been organizing and gathering strength from the time we began meeting on Lord's days to break bread about a year ago. They have shaken hands over the organ, made it the bond of union and communion, and endeavored to boycott us in our efforts to build up the cause. The only visible result of the meeting was, considerable malicious opposition manifested itself against us. I think considerable good was accomplished by drawing the line between truth and error and between a true worship and a false worship. The meeting here (Sweet Home), now in progress, is an effort to rebuild a waste place. Some years ago there was a good congregation of working brethren here. When the digressive wave struck this country it weakened and partly disorganized the work here, as elsewhere throughout Southwest Texas. Later personal animosities and feuds sprang up which have scattered and wrecked the work. Last fall Brother Frank McMurray, who lives here, called my attention to these matters and asked my assistance in their time of need. This explains why I am here. There are only some ten or twelve of the original members left, some of whom are away from the path of duty. The Baptists are very strong and are holding a meeting two miles from us. I am furnishing my own light and song books, paid two dollars and sixty cents railroad fare to get here, and, for aught I know, will not have even this returned to me for this meeting. I would rather do this kind of work than be idle or seek work among congregations which are able to pay well for their preaching. Our audiences are small and prospects not good, but there are two or three here who "have a mind to work," and I shall stay till they are satisfied. Very little assistance is reaching me through the mail now. Gospel Advocate readers may send contributions to the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company or to me direct at Berclair, Tex. Your bounty will be used to carry on the work in this field.

G. W. BONHAM.

THE OAKLEY-TANT DEBATE.

Some brethren say Tant claimed to be perfect in the sense of having obeyed the perfect law of liberty, and, they think, left the matter not as clear as he might have done, and so laid himself open to misunderstanding on the part of his opponents. It is not my wish to defend Tant or to defend any position he took or to accuse others of injustice where none was intended, so I give this note of explanation. As I told Oakley while the debate was in progress, I had rather help him in a truth than Tant in an error.
D. L.

Look to Christ for Instruction.

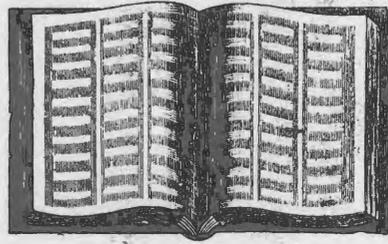

If Christians could be persuaded to look more to Christ and the inspired apostles for instruction, it would be a great blessing to the church and also to the world. God now speaks to us through his Son. (Heb. 1: 1, 2.) It is God's will that we hear his Son. (Matt. 17: 5.) When we hear Christ,

THE plague of lamps is the breaking of chimneys; but that can be avoided: Get Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass."

The funnel-shaped tops are beaded or "pearled"—a trade-mark. Cylinder tops are etched in the glass—"MACBETH PEARL GLASS"—another trade-mark.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mark Twain's Adhesive Page Scrapbook.

A great favorite, and bids fair to supersede all other scrapbooks. Its advantages are manifold. All who keep scraps should have one. No paste or mucilage needed. Pages already gummed. Buy one and paste your scraps in it. Sent, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

NO.	PRICE.	BINDING AND DESCRIPTION.	COLS.	PAGES.
Readers and Writers' Edition—
33020	$ 25	Press Board Flexible	2	48
33022	40	Press Board Flexible	3	48
33025	1 00	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	2	48
33027	1 25	Handsome Russia Leather, White Pages Flexible	3	48
Patent Flat Backs—
33030	50	Half Cloth Paper	2	64
33032	75	Half Cloth Paper	3	64
33080	75	Full Cloth Stamped	2	64
33082	1 00	Full Cloth Stamped	3	64

GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Nashville, Tenn.

we hear the Father; and when we hear the apostles, we hear Christ. (Luke 10: 16.)

It is God's will that all the world hear the gospel. (Matt. 28: 19; Mark 16: 15; Luke 24: 46, 47; Acts 1: 8; 22: 15.) But many refuse to hear it. (Matt. 13: 15; Acts 13: 46; 28: 22-31.) Then let us all strive: (1) To speak where the Bible speaks, and to be silent where the Bible is silent; (2) to restore the pure primitive gospel—its teaching, its faith, and its practice; (3) to exalt Christ above party and his word above all human creeds, disciplines, and articles of faith, for the Bible itself is as plain and as easy to understand as are the interpretations of it by uninspired men; (4) to build the church of God without denominational name, creed, or other barriers to Christian union and communion, whose terms of fellowship shall be as broad as the New Testament itself, and identical with it; (5) to lead sinners to Christ, turning them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God in the clear light of New Testament teaching and example; (6) to love our neighbors as ourselves and do unto all men as we would have them do unto us, "not rendering evil for evil, but overcoming evil with good." Amen.
J. W. ATKISSON.
St. Louis, Mo.

A Liberal Offer.

On seeing the interest recently manifested among the writers for the Gospel Advocate on the "pastor" question, I wish to announce that I will freely donate fifty of my tracts on "The Worship" as an aid to a better understanding of the question. I will also state that I have another tract nearly ready for the public, intended as a companion for the one above named, which, in fact, should precede "The Worship." Of this new tract I will donate fifty. "The Worship" contains twenty-eight pages; the new one, "Building the Church," will contain about the same. One of each will be sent to one person until the supply is exhausted. Address W. J. R. Covington, Ind.

If you want anything in the way of helps to Bible study, you should, by all means, investigate the series published by the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. They are full of scriptural teaching, and will be found very beneficial. Write for sample copy.

The Charm of Country Life.

"It is true," writes Edward Bok, in the July Ladies' Home Journal, presenting the inestimable advantages of living in the country, "that the business man cannot remain at home and do his work away from the marts. But he can do the next best thing: he can leave the marts behind him at the close of day and refresh himself by a complete change of environment. Even if he does only what some men seem to deem not worth while—that is to say, if he only sleeps in the country—he gains the advantage of sleeping in a pure atmosphere, which he never gets and cannot get in the city. That blessing alone is worth all to him that it may cost him in a little longer travel each day to and from his place of business; and with the ever-increasing extension of railroad facilities for suburban living nowadays, which condition applies to all our cities, a man can, in nearly every city, reach some suburb almost as quickly as he can go 'up town.' Because it is dark when he gets home is no reason why he should refuse to live in the country, since it is not a particle less dark when he reaches his city residence. The truth is that there is a deal of objection to suburban living in the winter which is purely fancied, a truth which thousands of men have found out for themselves when once they could make up their minds to make the experiment; for it is a singular fact that once a man moves into the country, a yoke of oxen cannot drag him back into a city life."

We are now publishing four hymn books: "Christian Hymns," "Words of Truth," "Voice of Praise," and our new book, "Gospel Praise." We are confident that four better books cannot be found. Our hymn book catalogue and price list will be sent to any address on application.

YOU MAKE $5.00 A DAY EASY
Gold, Silver, Nickel and Metal Plating.
At home or traveling, taking orders, using, selling Prof. Gray's Machines, Plates, Watches, Jewelry, Tableware, Bicycles, all metal goods. NO EXPERIENCE. Heavy plate modern methods. No toys. We do plating, make outfits, all sizes. Complete, all tools, lathers, materials, etc., ready for work. The Royal, new dipping process, quick, easy. We teach you the art, furnish secrets, formulas free. Write today. Pamphlet, samples, etc., FREE. GRAY & CO., Plating Works, CINCINNATI, O.

FACTS ABOUT PAINT
When your HOUSE, BARN, or ROOF NEEDS PAINTING, write SUTCLIFFE & CO., LOUISVILLE, KY. Ask for Book No. 54. It tells how to buy and paint to best advantage. Costs Nothing. Will Save Much.

Tired of rubbing? -Where's your Pearlline

Kansas Notes.

"We must watch as well as pray; we must vote as we pray, if we vote at all."

What has become of the smooth predictions of some of our public speakers, made a few years ago, that war was almost a thing of the past, that matters would be adjusted between nations by arbitration instead of war? It appears that about the time this was being agitated very much one of our greatest war periods came upon us. Christianity must permeate the nations to a greater extent than it does now before wars shall cease. How can such nations as China be reached by the gospel when they rebel at interference with their heathenism?

Why do the people of this nation become so indignant when some foreign nation slays a few men, when King Alcohol slays his two hundred and forty victims every day in the year, and increases as the years go by? Why do politicians and so-called "statesmen" get so enthusiastic in regard to imperialism, expansion, or what kind of money we shall have, when ninety thousand of our own people go into drunkards' graves every year and nine hundred million or more dollars are expended for strong drink in the same time? Here is a question of life and death for statesmen and a question of finance for the financier. Why not deal with them if so much interested in the welfare of the people? They certainly are of such import as to have a place among other things. I will here make a quotation from Col. George W. Bain: "If you have the license legislator, you will have the license law; if you have the license law, you will have the saloon; if you have the saloon, you will have the drunkard. Now, alone, the license legislator is what? The license vote. There you have it—the vote at one end, the drunkard at the other. Whose votes? I know a good many church people who go right along voting it, and they claim to be going right up to heaven, yet at the other end of the ladder is the drunkard, going right on down to hell. Friends, hear me! If you are linked to the drunkard in any such way as this, I implore you by all that is holy to break the bestial bond and emancipate an army of mankind from eternal ruin. I want to tell you that no financial question or question of expansion is going to save or ruin this country. There are mightier problems than that. We must begin at the home. Elevate the home and you elevate the city and county; elevate the city and county and you elevate the State; elevate the State and you elevate the nation." Consistency is much neglected everywhere, personally and generally.

Three were added to the congregation at our last appointment at Mineo, I. T.

Brother B. F. Rhodes went to Stafford County on the fifth Lord's day in July. Several other preachers went with him.

Brother J. E. Cain has begun a meeting with the brethren at Chalk.

Brother Rucker, of Oklahoma Territory, called on the writer not long since. He reports much success in his work in that country.

Many difficulties might be avoided by properly weighing all sides of a question. Why do men in discussing a religious question endeavor to broaden the chasm instead of coming to a better understanding and agreement? Why are some men always reprimanding others in such strong terms concerning the things of which they are guilty themselves? It is for self-defense, ease of conscience, or trying to make the world believe they are no worse than other men. There appears to be a disposition sometimes to bring others down with us, if we go down. If a man is a drunkard, he would have us believe there are many others of like character; if he is an adulterer, he will try to cast reflections on innocent men; if he is envious, he will try to bring a large class into the same catalogue. I do not mean here that every man is guilty of what he condemns in others. Far from it. Would it not be better for us, if we are guilty of a thing, to confess our guilt? Will it have good effect to severely reprove others for the things in which we engage so frequently? The mantle of charity is frequently needed. D. T. BROADUS.

ECZEMA, ITCHING HUMORS, PIMPLES—CURED BY B. B. B.

Bottle Free to Sufferers.

Does your skin itch and burn? Dressing eruptions on the skin so you feel ashamed to be seen in company? Do scabs and scales form on the skin, hair, or scalp? Have you eczema? Skin sore and cracked? Rash form on the skin? Prickling pain in the skin? Boils? Pimples? Bone pains? Swollen joints? Falling hair? All run down? Skin pale? Old sores? Eating sores? Ulcers? To cure to stay cured, take B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), which makes the blood pure and rich. B. B. B. will cause the sores to heal, itching of eczema to stop forever, the skin to become clear, and the breath sweet. Mr. David Thurman, a well-known citizen of Atlanta, was a constant sufferer with eczema and scrofula for many years. Various medicines and prescriptions were resorted to without any perceptible relief, until he used Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.), a few bottles of which effected an entire cure. B. B. B. is just the remedy you have been looking for. Thoroughly tested for thirty years. For sale by druggists at $1 per large bottle. Complete directions with each bottle. So sufferers may test B. B. B., a trial bottle is given away. Write for it. Address Blood Balm Company, 15 Mitchell street, Atlanta, Ga. Describe your trouble and free personal medical advice will be given. B. B. B. cures deep-seated obstinate cases after all else fails. We have over three thousand voluntary testimonials of cures by using Blood Balm.

BOOKS At Half Price, Often Less.
Our book catalogue now ready. Tells all about it. Sent FREE to any address.
SUTCLIFFE & CO. (Inc.)
Dept. G. Louisville, Ky.

HUSTLING YOUNG MAN can make $100 per month and expenses. Permanent position. Experience unnecessary. Write for particulars. CLARK & CO., 4th and Locust Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Gospel Praise

A NEW HYMN BOOK

Is the name of a new hymn book now being published by us. It is edited by A. J. Showalter and E. G. Sewell, which is a sufficient guarantee that the music is well written and that the subject-matter contains no objectionable or unscriptural sentiment. This book is copyrighted this year, will contain 320 pages, and is now ready for delivery. We expect this to be the best and most popular song book we have yet published. It may be ordered in either round or shape notes. The following is the list:

MUSIC EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid $ 50
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 4 80
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 5 90

MUSIC EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 60
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 6 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 7 10

WORD EDITION—BOARDS.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 20
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 00
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 2 30

WORD EDITION—CLOTH.

Single copy, by mail, prepaid 25
Per dozen, by express, not prepaid 2 75
Per dozen, by mail, prepaid 3 00

Send all orders to
GOSPEL ADVOCATE PUB. CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

$25,000 TO BE GIVEN AWAY.

The Money is Now in Bank—Do You Want Part of It?

